If you maintain a price freeze over an extended period, surely the wages, salaries and other benefits paid to the employees of the oil companies and the distributing system will have to suffer the same freeze. I find it strange that the NDP should be coming out in favour of a wage freeze affecting the membership of oil, atomic and chemical workers' unions in this country. I wonder what Mr. Reimer will say about that. That is the natural result of the policy proposed by the New Democratic Party, though they do not look at that side of the question when they make their ridiculous statements.

● (1700)

In discussing the whole subject of energy and the crisis facing the country today there has to be a fairly wide latitude allowed in debate, particularly in view of the speech made by the right hon. Prime Minister on December 6. The Prime Minister did not stick to the point of the bill at all but announced the formation of a national oil corporation and various other things having very little to do with Bill C-236.

I presume I am subject to the same rules as the Prime Minister, so I should like first of all to put some facts on the record concerning what happens on an average day in the petroleum industry of Canada. I speak of the average day in 1972, the latest period for which I have figures. I think it is important hon. members know the nature of the industry and the problem with which we are dealing. If there is one thing I have learned since being here, it is that there is not a wide understanding of the problems facing Canada in ensuring efficient operation of the husbanding of our natural resources.

On an average day in 1972, Canadian oil wells produced 1.5 million barrels of crude oil. Total Canadian liquid hydrocarbon production, including crude oil and natural gas liquids, was 1.8 million barrels. Canadian gas wells produced 8.2 billion cubic feet of raw gas. Canadian natural gas processors produced 18,200 long tons of elemental sulphur. Canada's inventories of elemental sulphur grew by 9,159 long tons. The petroleum industry spent $4.9 million in the search for, development and production of oil and gas in Canada.

The explorers and producers paid $1.2 million, which amounted to 24½ per cent of their expenditures, to governments in the form of royalties, bonuses and rentals, in addition to corporate income tax. Oil companies collected on behalf of federal and provincial governments $3.8 million in motor fuel taxes. Producers received $6 million for the sale of crude oil and natural gas and its by-products. Some 275,000 people were employed by the petroleum and natural gas industries and earned approximately $3.3 million. These are the 275,000 people whose incomes the members of the New Democratic Party would like to see frozen.

[Mr. Schumacher.]

I think this is a significant number of the workers of this country.

Drillers completed 10.5 wells and drilled 38,900 feet of holes in Canada. Canadian refineries processed 1.5 million barrels of refinery feedstock. Canadians consumed 1.6 million barrels of petroleum products. Canadians burned 3.1 billion cubic feet of natural gas. New motor vehicles coming on to Canadian roads numbered 2,912, and motorists used 17.6 million gallons of gasoline. Aircraft consumed 1.9 million gallons of aviation fuel. The average cost per person for all energy used in Canada for lighting, heating, transportation and production of goods was about $1. Canadian pipelines moved 2.5 million barrels of liquids and 6.3 billion cubic feet of natural gas. Canada imported energy materials worth $2.9 million. Canada exported energy materials worth $4.8 million. All of these are daily figures, Mr. Speaker, so you can see it is apparent we are dealing with large numbers.

In order to continue this rate of production, it becomes obvious that a great deal of money is going to be required. In his speech on December 6 the Prime Minister said that one of the important things that the government was going to do was to form a national oil company, which we could expect to hear about in more detail at the next session. At this stage may I point out that if this proposed national oil company operates in any way like the Panarctic oil company in which the government of Canada has a 45 per cent interest, then we might not expect very good results.

I say that for the following reasons. While Panarctic has been very successful in establishing Canadian sovereignty in the Arctic islands, which I think was the prime reason for setting up the corporation, and while it has had fairly successful experience in regard to finding natural gas, for which I suppose we have to be thankful though there is very little likelihood we will ever be able to transship this natural gas under present government policies, the company has also made bids for drilling rights off Norway in the North Sea, in the South China Sea near Viet Nam, and in Colombia, South America.

I suppose that the proposed national oil company will be called "Oil Can", in the same way that Statistics Canada is called "Stat Can", using the kind of jargon we get used to around here, though I do not know whether there will ever be any oil in the can. But I suggest that this new company will not be too successful in providing any oil reserves that might be the subject of allocation under this particular bill, if it is ever passed into law, if the company behaves in the way Panarctic has behaved.

Speaking of offshore developments, it is becoming painfully obvious that if present government policies are allowed to continue there are going to be fewer and fewer companies exploring for oil. For example, small oil companies in the province of Alberta are now deciding it is not in their interest to continue operations. I think of one particular oil company which announced during the last two weeks it was closing down operations in Alberta and in Canada at the end of the year. This company employs 28 people who reside in the city of Calgary, and these people were advised early this month that at the end of the year the company was suspending operations and they were to treat that announcement as notice.

I believe the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton) referred to the fact that certain constituents of his were revising their plans in view of the uncertainty caused by the policies of this government. These people are engaged in the petroleum industry at the very lowest levels, such as workers in the field; they feel insecure and are deciding not to proceed any further with capital spending. Entire companies are deciding to close their operations. In the past we have made reference to activities of oil companies having a multiplier effect, and I am afraid we are in for a division effect pretty soon unless some certainty can be injected into this particular area.

I was referring earlier to what will be required in the future. If we are to be concerned about a secure source of petroleum, the first thing we should consider is a pricing policy for oil in this country. That is the crux of this whole matter. Contrary to what many people believe, oil does not grow on trees like bananas and other fruit, ready to be picked when it is ripe. Oil is a hard commodity to find, exploration costs are high, and unless the price of the finished product is equated with the cost of exploration and production our problems will continue. I suggest that our problems are not related to lack of oil; most of our problems can be associated with difficulties of distribution, and those problems are not going to be solved by policies which will ensure greater expenditure in exploration.

Most of our concern is in respect of a shortage of supply in the eastern half of Canada, east of the Ottawa Valley line. I always understood that the Canadian government's point of view in respect of a pricing policy for oil is that it should be based on the price of crude landed at Montreal. It seems this policy has been changed in that the accepted price of crude will be associated with the price on the Chicago market.

When this policy was announced there was no dispute among the provinces of Canada because it was felt that in effect this pricing policy would lower the price of Alberta oil domestically and on the Chicago market. The province of Alberta, being a good Canadian corporate citizen, has and will go along with any attempt by the federal government to solve our supply problems. The first criterion expressed by the premier of that province is to make sure there is a sufficient supply of Alberta oil to offset any shortfall that might occur as a result of an interruption of offshore supplies. This is the attitude taken by the government of Alberta notwithstanding the fact that this might result in serious shortages in Alberta. In spite of that fact, Alberta is prepared to waive its conservation practices in order to provide a secure supply of oil to the rest of Canada. It bothers me very much to hear people such as the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) refer to the Premier of Alberta as "Sheik Lougheed." I can only refer to that hon. member as "Sheik Down", because that is what he has been doing in the past year or so.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Schumacher: Let me remind hon. members what has happened in the province of British Columbia which now has an NDP premier. The price of natural gas has been increased by 81 per cent, with reference to no one. There has been a discussion among officials of the province of Ontario and of the province of Alberta in respect of the price of natural gas, but we have not witnessed unilateral action on the part of Alberta increasing the price of gas by 81 per cent, as was the case in the province of British Columbia.

Let us also consider what the premier of the province of Saskatchewan has done. He has effectively kept Saskatchewan resources in the ground. This has occurred without representation to the National Energy Board; and I suggest the premier has overlooked the fact that the vast majority of petroleum in that province is sour crude and can be used only in refineries in Minnesota. The premier of that province, in deciding upon this policy, said in effect that Saskatchewan would wait until a higher price was available before making its sour crude available. That premier has taken much stronger action than the premier of Alberta in that he has counteracted the federal export tax by a provincially imposed tax.

When considering tax policy, one must remember that the National Energy Board has a statutory duty to get the best price possible for Canadian oil. I wonder why the province did not operate under the provisions of this act in order to increase the price of Alberta crude, rather than allowing the federal government to impose an export tax to equate the price of Alberta crude with the price on the Chicago market. I suggest the reason is that the provincial government did not want to impose the Chicago price on all Canadian consumers. In any event, we are still left with no clear statement by the federal government as to its oil pricing policy. The best that can be said is that the days of cheap energy have passed and we will have to make sure that the price is not higher than necessary.

We must make sure that there is continuity of supply in respect of the Alberta oil sands. The maintenance of a reasonable price for energy is difficult because no one knows what a civil servant in Ottawa might do when pressured by hungry politicians to keep prices down. I do not think this is a very strong hook on which to hang an oil pricing policy which will ensure security of supply in Canada. Surely we must ensure continuity of supply, and in this regard we are lucky to have the reserves discovered by the private industrial sector. We are fortunate to have a known source of supply, not having to be dependent upon outside sources.

There seems to be a bone-headed approach by some in respect of this crisis. I believe this debate should continue for some time in order that some light might filter down to those who take such an approach to this problem.

Mr. Gilbert: You are breaking my heart?

An hon. Member: Where is your heart?

Mr. Gilbert: You are making me laugh all the way home.

Mr. Schumacher: I think it is important to note some of the requirements of assuring security of oil supply in Canada. We cannot accomplish this with a cash position backed up by the taxpayers of this country—and a lot of people would like to see that happen. Since 1947 the petroleum industry has made expenditures of over $19.2

billion in exploration. During the same period, the extent of producers' sales was $18.3 billion. One can see from those figures that since 1947 there has been more expended in the exploration and finding of oil reserves than has been received as a result of production. While 1973 probably will see total revenues exceed expenditures, it has taken 25 years for that position to be reached. This is before taking into account significant income taxes which have been paid.

If I might digress for a moment, I would point out that when speaking about taxes, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) made some interesting comments when he testified before the committee on miscellaneous estimates on December 4 this year. Many people have said that this so-called export tax is a means of making sure that larger windfall profits do not fall into the hands of the large corporations. Of course, they conveniently forget the very efficient tax collecting machine we have in this country to make sure that these huge profits do not automatically fall into the pockets of the large oil companies, or into any other pocket for that matter. We really have quite a machine in order to make sure that there are not these huge profits. At that committee meeting the Minister of Finance was questioned by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie). He was asked about what would happen to these large windfall profits, so-called, if they were left to the companies and not taken by the government under the export tax. As reported at page 5845 of the committee proceedings, the Minister of Finance said:

> Alberta would have taken 22.5 per cent of that, and the federal government would have taken about 50 per cent; 49 or 48 per cent, or whatever it is.

So if you take 22.5 per cent off the top, and have the federal government take 50 per cent of the remainder, you have made quite a dint into this so-called huge windfall profit. The minister went on to say:

> Oh yes, we would get roughly 50 per cent corporate tax on their profit on that increase of price. Mind you, that 22.5 per cent royalty is deductible for federal corporate tax purposes. Then, of course, Alberta is entitled to 10 per cent of that corporate tax, of the corporate tax against companies with head offices and doing business in Alberta. Roughly that is how it would have worked.

Then, speaking of the fact that some of the money not used for reinvestment in exploration for more oil might end up in the hands of the shareholders by way of profits or dividends, the minister said:

> Some of it might well have gone into exploration; some of it might have gone into dividends; some of it might have been allocated as a cost factor that the parent company undergoes at its expense as opposed to the subsidiary expense, or the subsidiary might have taken some of the cost figures into its own calculating. We are dealing hypothetically here.

Mr. Speaker, it becomes quite obvious that if it did not go into exploration or otherwise it would go by way of dividends, which on the average probably would be around 33 per cent. So if the rest of it is taxed through income tax on a personal basis, there will not be much left in the form of windfall profits.

I think it is interesting to note that while the industry is just reaching a point where revenue exceeds expenditure, during this same period the taxes paid to government by way of royalties, rentals and other taxes, not including income tax, amounted to $5.5 billion. The petroleum industry has a reputation for being highly profitable. The reasons for this probably are attributed to the spectacular profits some companies make when a major pool is discovered, the volatility of petroleum stocks in the stock market due to investors speculating on prospects, the fact that the industry employs highly-paid, highly-skilled personnel and the large bonus payments made to government. But it would not appear that the market anticipated huge profits for the petroleum or energy side of our industrial endeavours, because it appears that while some oil companies have held up reasonably well, this has not been the rule. I should like to refer to an article by W. L. Dack which appeared in the Financial Post for December 8, 1973. He wrote:

> Fast-breaking energy events are keeping Canadian oil and gas investors on a perpetual hot seat. Oil stock prices tumbled almost 12 per cent during November for one of the steepest monthly declines on record by the Toronto stock exchange western oils index.
> The drop reflects the investment community's pessimistic view of government's increasing industry controls and the particularly poor performance turned in by Mackenzie delta stocks. This, plus the sweeping general market decline, has knocked the index down 35 points.

Later in the article the author quotes a Toronto oil analyst and says:

> What about government controls, the issue that stalled a strongly rising uptrend in oil share prices and now threatens to undermine what should be bright industry prospects?
> "Very soon governments are going to have to start stressing exploration and development incentives. The industry investment attractions in other parts of the world and particularly in the U.S. where sweeping new exploration incentives are being set up, are going to force such a move."

This articles depicts in graph form the performance of selected companies. It indicates that companies that are active in Canada, particularly in the Mackenzie delta frontier area where our best prospects are, suffer the greatest. Those which have a sure source of supply, like the Great Canadian Oil Sands Company or those which have North Sea interests like Home Oil, or an independent producer with refining capacity like Husky Oil, have withstood the onslaught better. There is a lesson to be learned from those people who have put us in the position of 100 per cent self-sufficiency in respect of what is going on in this country. We will not maintain that happy position unless things straighten out quickly.

I should also like to point out that a recent study has shown that if the industry stopped all exploration and merely reduced present reserves to exhaustion, the before-tax rate of return would be only 13.3 per cent, with after-tax being probably around 10 per cent. Obviously, there is not a windfall profit in this industry, particularly in view of the risk nature of the investment. All the time we hear comments from members of the NDP about the terrible collection of people who are involved in the petroleum industry and how they are making such great windfall profits at the expense of ordinary citizens. I think it is useful to put some of the facts on the record instead of listening to these irresponsible claims from people who have an axe to grind.

At this point I should like to quote from an editorial which appeared in the Financial Post of December 15, 1973:

To keep some perspective on the whole situation, it's worth taking a look at figures proffered by J. A. Armstrong, president of Imperial Oil. He doesn't pretend to be a disinterested party, but he makes his points coolly and factually, considering that he heads one of the companies whose future has been sharply affected by Ottawa's moves.

The Canadian oil industry made an after-tax profit in 1972 of 7.4 per cent on the money it used in its business. The after-tax profit in manufacturing generally that year was 7.3 per cent—essentially the same return in an industry that, by normal standards, is considered to face less risk.

In 1972, Imperial's profit on each dollar of revenue was 7.3 cents, which is just about the company's average of the past 25 years.

In October, the price of a typical Alberta crude oil—Imperial's raw material—was only 16 per cent higher than it was 25 years ago. In comparison, the composite price of industrial raw materials generally increased 58 per cent in the same period.

The price at which Imperial sells its Esso gasoline to the dealer, exclusive of federal and provincial taxes, has increased 21 per cent since 1948. In the same period, the general wholesale price index has increased about 95 per cent. Average weekly wages and salaries have increased almost 400 per cent.

I ask hon. members, where is the terrible rip-off? It just isn't there.

One of the most important of the yet-to-be-answered questions about oil is what Ottawa's on-going price freeze will do to corporate plans to explore and to develop new oil sources. Although Canada has abundant potential energy resources when the various kinds are added up, immense amounts of money will have to be forthcoming to develop them. Good profits are essential because, as Armstrong points out, it costs at least $2 million to drill an exploration well on the Arctic mainland compared to an average of $150,000 in Alberta.

The great governmental grab at oil has been engineered amidst much shouting that this is what should be done to protect the Canadian consumer. If oil companies are so circumscribed by governments that they see neither point nor profit in steeping up the hunt for oil, the Canadian taxpayer might as well brace himself to provide the billions needed to set Ottawa up in the business.

If the hon. member opposite would get up on his feet and ask a question I would be able to deal with it, Mr. Speaker, but instead he sits over there mumbling to himself. I would be very happy to allow him the floor to ask a question. Would you like to ask me a question?

Mr. Speaker: Order. We have just about reached the end of the time allocated to the hon. member, so there would be no time for the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) to ask questions.

Mr. Schumacher: Mr. Speaker, he does not have the nerve to ask a question anyway. I will not get much further in the next 30 seconds so I will just close by saying that we should get off the negative, rigid approach to this problem and start offering some incentives. Instead of putting a freeze on things, let us learn from what the United States has done.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Order. Pursuant to Standing Order 40 I must advise the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis)—Transport—Study of railway passenger service in southwestern Ontario by Transport Commission—Local consultation; the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom)—Agriculture—Increase in farm costs—Requests for investigation by Food Prices Review Board; the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn)—Unemployment Insurance—Possibility of charging employers and employees employment rated premiums.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ALLOCATION BOARD, MANDATORY ALLOCATION OF SUPPLIES AND RATIONING OF CONTROLLED PRODUCTS

The House resumed from Friday, December 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-236, to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages of market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada and to amend the National Energy Board Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my remarks in this debate on Bill C-236 will deal in part with the industrial problems which arise as a result of the lack of planning by the government. We have before us a bill that would give wide powers to the Governor in Council, powers beyond those given to the cabinet even in the War Measures Act. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) would have us believe that these extreme powers are required because, in their view, we are experiencing a crisis which calls for strong measures. We say that the so-called crisis, in large part, has been created by the government, and in our view its ministers are not competent to handle the problem so they should not be given the powers set forth in Bill C-236.

We need only read page 8671 of Hansard for December 12, and the right hon. Prime Minister's reply on a point of order raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), to be aware of the partisan, narrow view that the Prime Minister is taking of the oil supply problem. I was going to read his remarks into the record again, but other hon. members have done so. In addition, editorials in most of the leading newspapers have commented on his remarks on that occasion. Suffice it to say that his remarks were cheap, degrading and divisive. I will not read them because they have been repeated often enough.

At a time when we need a statesmanlike approach to a very complex problem we have a Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who displays all the talents of a bull in a china shop. We have a Prime Minister who takes cheap shots at the Premier of Alberta, and in general at all hon. members from Alberta.

Mr. Paproski: He wants ten barrels of oil for one French lesson.

Mr. Kempling: How can the problems we have be solved with the attitude displayed by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources? Is it any wonder that we have no confidence in them, and feel that the powers requested in this bill are too great for the meagre talents displayed by those who would be charged with implementing the legislation when enacted? But what of the industrial impact? We hear the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) stating again and again that all is well on the industrial front. But when pressed, he admits in a quiet voice that his assessment was made before the impact of the oil supply crisis became evident. Like the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources he deals in a large volume of statistics which have little relevance. Most of the replies he gives could be read from the Canada Year Book.

I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources why he felt we needed seven years to become self-sufficient in oil when, in fact, we are producing 300,000 barrels a day more than we consume. His reply had no relevance to the question. In other words, the minister waffled because he did not have an answer. From the opening of the 29th parliament numerous questions have been put to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce regarding an industrial strategy. He is contributing, as usual, with replies which range from "we are working on one" to "we are not sure an industrial strategy can be developed because of the complexities of the problem".

Can you imagine why a country like Canada, with a surplus of oil and natural gas, does not have a world-size petrochemical industry? Can you comprehend why countries like Japan and Germany, which have no domestic oil and must depend on imported feed stock, have world-size petrochemical industries. One would have thought that a minister of industry, trade and commerce who would be sharing cabinet decisions on Bill C-236, would have had the foresight to realize that the petrochemical industry in Canada depends in the main on imported feedstock from the U.S.A. and today is facing a boycott of the export of that feedstock to Canada. Would you not have thought that the minister would have foreseen that situation? The industry has foreseen its vulnerable position for some time.

I had hoped the minister would have said long ago that Canada, with its surplus of oil and gas, was going to become a world leader in petrochemicals. It is a logical move and I would have thought he would be recommending world-size plants. Instead, however, we see him playing politics along with his colleagues, playing Alberta and Saskatchewan and their oil resources against the rest of Canada. I would have thought the minister would be in the United States right now to get a supply of feedstock for our petrochemical industry. The minister, like his colleagues did not see the oil crisis in time to act. They blame it on the Israeli-Arab war, on force majeure, on clauses in contracts or anything else that comes to mind. No one in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce seems to be tuned in to the petrochemical industry to be able to foresee their problems, let alone project a world-size plant which should be part of any strategy planned for Canada.

We do not appear to have a national transportation policy, and there are those who blame the minister for this. In fact, I think the department is really too big for one minister, and I believe it could be handled more efficiently if broken down into three or four departments. Now, we are faced with the problem of wheat deliveries versus oil deliveries, and I hope the minister will not play one part of the country against the other on this issue. I have heard some questions asked in the House about this issue, and the minister's replies have implied "What do you want? Do you want oil deliveries or do you want wheat deliveries?" Let us not get into that bind, Mr. Speaker, the problem is much too serious for that. Any government consistently using this approach does not have the confidence of the people of Canada, and in our view should not be trusted with the powers they seek in Bill C-236. I can almost see the headlines. I do not like to preach gloom, as I am basically an optimistic person but the headlines next year will be something like this: "Gillespie blames energy crisis for slowdown in industrial output" or "Turner blames world inflation for high interest rates" or "P.M. says conditions beyond our control reason for slow growth". It is always something or somebody else that is responsible for our situation.

Let us look at our trade relations. As an example, we have a trade deficit with every country in the world except Britain, Mexico and the United States. We saw the headlines in the newspapers the other day regarding the deficit resulting from the autopact. Now, we see that the situation in Britain has resulted in a three-day work week, it is a real crisis situation. I can see what is going to happen to our trade in that sphere. The minister will blame it on the Arab-Israeli war, the oil crisis, world inflation but he will not tell us that autopact negotiations have been stalled for months or that he has taken no initiative to have them brought to any conclusion. We are heading into GATT discussions in 1974 in a very negative position. We are facing a balance of payments problem if the trade deficits of 1972 continue. I do not think the people of Canada will buy the current excuse being put forth by the minister. In fact, if we end up with a serious trade deficit, I do not think they will buy it at all.

In Bill C-236 the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is asking this House to give the Governor in Council wide powers to regulate the supply, distribution, allocation, pricing and consumption of all forms of energy or any byproduct of an energy source. What the minister really wants is a club. He wants to say to the meeting of first ministers in January that he has the power, passed by the parliament of Canada, to negate provincial priorities in the event of any energy crisis. The bill would, in fact, give the government so much power that it could invade areas of undisputed provincial jurisdiction. One of the most important problems facing the people of eastern Canada, the price of home heating oil, is not covered by this bill. The government's unwillingness to deal with the price to the consumer reflects its view on an incomes policy. We have heard that view many times since January. The Economic Council of Canada has stated that the major causes of inflation in Canada arise from sources within Canada, but this government refuses to look at any sort of incomes policy.

Bill C-236 implies that an energy crisis exists. Mr. Speaker, let us correct that. There is no lack of conventional energy in Canada, only the means of transporting or conveying the various forms of energy from source to the consumer. The bill should say, in effect, that an energy delivery crisis exists. We might have some confidence in the proposed energy supplies allocation board if it were an independent board, but in fact clause 10 of Bill C-236 provides:

> The board shall act under the instructions of the Governor in Council and report to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources from time to time upon its activities under this act.

As anyone can easily see, the Governor in Council, or the cabinet, has all the power. The energy supplies allocation board has no power, independent of cabinet.

This bill applies not only to petroleum or petroleum products as defined in the bill, but to products manufactured wholly or in part from petroleum, natural gas, coal and any product of natural gas or coal that can be used as fuel and also electric power. Here, we are dealing with a condition existing in Canada that is caused not from a shortage of petroleum or natural gas, or energy, but from lack of transportation facilities to enable petroleum and natural gas to be delivered to the market. Here, we have Bill C-236 containing powers away beyond the gravity of the problem. I wonder if the minister has seen the offer of the Canadian Trucking Association to deliver oil on a 24-hour around the clock basis from Sarnia to Montreal. The quantities that they would be able to deliver far exceed what a pipeline can deliver at the present time.

The other evening at about six o'clock the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources tabled a ways and means motion concerning the collection and allocation of the export tax being levied by the federal government on oil exported from Canada. The minister not only wants Bill C-236, but he wants the bill that would follow the ways and means motion so that he will have a club in either hand when dealing with the first ministers in late January. With this legislation in his hand, I wonder whether it is going to be a conference or just an academic exercise. I think it is really important, at a time of high tension like this, that the confidence of the provincial ministers is kept foremost in the minds of the federal negotiators.

You will note that the western provinces are talking about a quid pro quo as part of any agreement on oil. With a diminishing resource, the western premiers are obviously looking to the future and would like to see an industrial complex in each province, to complement industrial and technical skills developed by the oil industry. Again, we must look to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. With no industrial strategy for Canada, the prospects for agreement with first ministers in January based on any quid pro quo for industrial complexes within provinces in January is not too good at this point in time.

Another interesting aspect of this so-called energy crisis—and the government is calling it a crisis—is to be found in an article written by Dian Cohen on September 10, the headline of which reads, "Energy Crisis May Be Scapegoat". The article mentions that we can look to the energy crisis, so called, to be leaned on by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, to cover the lack of positive legislation to combat inflation and deal with serious trade problems that are ahead of us.

One of the serious problems we face in Canada, as a result of no real oil policy—and there is still time to act—concerns the future of the numerous Canadian companies engaged in drilling for oil. Those who are drilling in Canada today are doing so on blind faith and on commitments made many months ago, mostly to large oil companies. We have about 100,000 people employed in drilling for oil in Canada. Most of these crews belong to small wholly-owned Canadian companies which have contracted for drilling to the large oil companies. If we do not have a firm long-range policy, we stand a good chance of losing much of this expertise. Even now, many of these crews are moving to the United States, where the government has laid down ground rules which enable these companies to know where they are going. These companies have in their ranks some of the most experienced drilling crews in the world. It would be a shame to lose these people, their expertise and their knowledge. Canadian oil drilling crews can be found all over the world today. We stand to lose more men with such experience to Britain, the United States, Viet Nam, or other countries, because the government chooses to play constitutional power politics with the provinces.

Mr. Paproski: Because the government chooses to play Russian roulette.

Mr. Kempling: Russian roulette: call it what you will. I would have hoped that the government would make available more than $40 million for the development of the tar sands. Certainly, we have heard nothing to speak of from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce regarding this project. I would have thought there would have been negotiations with Alberta with regard to a world-sized petrochemical industry in future—

Mr. Paproski: The minister does not negotiate; he just tells.

Mr. Kempling: He tells, that is right. I should have thought that there might have been negotiations in that area, in view of future demand for the products of the petrochemical industry. I would have thought that some consideration would have been given to this as part of the quid pro quo. This could have been done, instead of engaging in ham-handed tactics such as those in which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has engaged. May I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: May I remind hon. members that there are still three minutes before six o'clock. I am in the hands of the House, if there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Kempling: That is what I call a vote of confidence. Some of the powers contained in the bill should be stated, so that we may see which of them the cabinet needs in order to overcome the so-called energy supply crisis. Clause 13 gives the cabinet power to exempt certain persons from sanctions under the Combines Investigation Act. Clause 24 overrides provincial laws and federal laws pertaining to pollution. Clauses 25 and 26—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member. Will he kindly resume his seat? I must remind hon. members that it is not competent for an hon. member on second reading to consider a bill clause by clause. There is no difficulty about making general references to specific clauses, but the hon. member is doing now what it will be the responsibility of the committee to do if and when this bill goes the committee. I ask hon. members to bear this in mind when making their contributions on second reading of the bill.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, thank you for setting me straight on that point. I was trying to point out various clauses of the bill which override certain jurisdictions of other governments in this country. One clause of the bill empowers the board to seize ships for the purpose of shipping oil. Another empowers it to seize motor trucks for interprovincial transportation of oil.

One of the great dangers is that this bill will not be a temporary measure; that it will not deal with the crisis, and then expire, but that it is intended to be permanent. It is not to come into effect by proclamation, as did the War Measures Act. It is to come into effect after royal assent, and its provisions can be used by the governor in council at any time. I am not convinced that this government, in view of its record, should have this power. This bill would give the governor in council jurisdiction over the petroleum products manufacturing industry, wholly or in part. It would give the government power over industries involved with petroleum, natural gas, coal, electrical power, and over railways, ships and pipelines as well as over interprovincial motor transport.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member will allow me at this time to interrupt him and suggest that it is now six o'clock. It being six o'clock, I will now leave the chair. The House will resume at eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[Mr. Kempling.]

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying at six o'clock, one of the greatest dangers in this bill is that it is not a temporary measure meant to deal with a crisis and then expire. It is intended to be permanent. It does not come into effect on proclamation as did the War Measures Act, but is in effect from royal assent and can be used by the governor in council at any time. I am just not convinced that this government, on its record, should be given the powers provided by the bill.

This bill, in effect, gives the governor in council jurisdiction over petroleum products manufactured in part or in whole from petroleum, natural gas or coal, as well as electrical power, railways, ships, Canadian or foreign, pipelines and interprovincial motor transport. It further gives the governor in council powers to enter the provincial constitutional field, to effect provincial energy resources, industries manufacturing products from petroleum as well as primary and secondary industries, through control of railways, pipelines, ships and interprovincial motor truck transport. The entire power is in the governor in council. The declaration of an emergency, actual or anticipated, is at the sole discretion of the governor in council.

One of the unexplained words in the bill is "region". It is not defined. It is not given a dimension. It is just stated that a region of the country can be in what the governor in council considers to be a crisis state and the powers come into effect for all of Canada. This is power which should not be blindly given to a government with such an inept record.

There is in this proposed legislation a parallel suggestion to the one the government made during the FLQ crisis, that a public order emergency act be passed. This clearly is no time to enact permanent legislation. Such a proposal should await a period of calm, and should be acted upon following full discussion with the provinces after we have had a chance to see the effects of this winter. There is adequate power for the government to act in existing legislation. We could give the government additional powers to ration energy supplies and they would have plenty of room to operate for this winter season. This bill is written on the premise that there is a serious national energy crisis and yet the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in his oil policy statement said and I quote:

> We are confident no Canadian need fear serious shortages of fuel and oil this winter providing each of us plays his part.

Mr. Alexander: The old double talk.

Mr. Kempling: The old double talk. The fact is there is no oil crisis. The government has not declared a crisis, yet it is asking for these powers.

Mr. Baldwin: The only crisis is the government.

Mr. Kempling: That is right. We have Bill C-236 thrown at us which would place in the hands of the cabinet extraordinary powers. I say we cannot grant those powers; we cannot do that with a clear conscience. We cannot place in the hands of the cabinet such extraordinary powers or we would lose the confidence of the people of Canada.

Mr. Trevor Morgan (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I rise, not armed with the notes that many members across the aisle have had when addressing Your Honour as to the problems concerning Bill C-236. I just stand here. I really cannot find a word to express the antipathy I feel towards this bill. In essence, it really heaps a hunk of horrifying humbug on the people of Canada and this parliament as has never been done before.

I am amazed that we sit here in such small numbers while this bill is being debated. It could really amount to a very horrific thing. I use the word "horrific" in terms of the annals of the government of Canada. Why horrific? It is very simple. The War Measures Act is really a game of Snakes and Ladders or Monopoly in comparison to what this bill can do. I wish some people would take cognizance of the fact that this bill gives Machiavellian powers to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald). It gives powers that are not only Machiavellian, but dictatorial and totalitarian. I could use all the adjectives in the book, but they would not begin to describe what the minister is doing to the democracy which, when I came to this House, I thought existed. I was naïve enough to think that in a democracy, the means should justify the end, but I am satisfied from this piece of so-called legislation, this evil, vindictive bit of parliamentary nonsense, that the minister does not give a damn about ensuring that the end must always justify the means. That is horrific.

I used the word "humbug". Members opposite who think of "humbug" as a Christmas expedition or as having some such connotation should look up the word in the dictionary. It seems to deceive, to mislead, to lead one person to think what is so is what is not so, and what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources proposes is sheer humbug. He is an intelligent person. I would ask him to look up the definition of humbug to see why I say that is true. It bothers me that this terrific humbug is developing because what he is doing is unbelievable, unnecessary and unconstitutional. Unbelievable, because I am convinced in my own mind that this whole bill has arisen because there is a power conflict, a real fight going on within the cabinet at the moment as to who is to achieve power. I would say there is no doubt that the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is sacrificing the best interests of the country on the cross of self-expediency and the cross of self-indulgence and the cross of what he wants, so that he can control what goes on in this country of ours.

What does the legislation call for? He can do anything he wants. We are often accused of being hewers of wood and drawers of water. We cannot even do that under this legislation because the forest industry is now caught by this bill. We cannot even draw water because that is under transportation. The provisions of this bill affect the electrical industry, the transport industry and the automotive industry yes, the automotive industry. Do members across the floor realize there are 150 parts in every automobile which are fabricated by the petrochemical industry and if you can control that industry you can control automotive manufacturing in this country? That is the power you give to the minister under the present bill. Is it comprehensible you would want one minister to have this power?

Under clause 16(1) the government is not responsible; it can pass any regulations it wishes and not be responsible to anybody. Where do they go from here? The government says it is answerable under law, but what does it do? I makes certain little rules and regulations which permit the government to say: We don't care about the three or four hundred environmental laws and regulations passed by the provinces; we don't care, out of the door they go, because this little commissar—he will be known as Commissar Macdonald before this bill is through—wants this power. I thought we got rid of all that stuff at one time or another. You look to the Combines Investigation Act and find the same results. That law is out of the window.

I thought the government was interested in doing something for the people of Canada. I thought they were interested in making sure we are all equal under the law. But they do nothing, and I point the finger at you, Mr. Minister, and I say actions speak louder than words. Do not tell me what you think about the grandiose words you may speak. I say to you, if you have any responsibility for government in Canada, actions speak louder than words and your actions belie what your words may say. We could go on and describe unto you the way you treat the laws of this country. You have no respect for the laws of this country. You defy the constitution of this country. Under section 92 of the British North America Act the provinces have certain rights and obligations, but you do not care about that. You say: if you don't agree with us about what the price of electrical energy shall be, that does not matter to us; the board will report to me and I will be answerable only to one or two members of the cabinet who are fighting for power. That is all it means, unfortunately, as I see it. There is no question about that. It is so obvious it makes my heart sick.

I think this legislation was conceived in desperation because the government had no national energy policy, so we flin and flan and wail and wassail from one end of the bill to the other without knowing where we are going. It is strictly desperation politics trying to salvage something from nothing. And all you get from that is garbage, which is all this legislation amounts to because it will not achieve anything worthwhile except give to the minister the dictatorial power to run everything within this country. Tell me of one basic industry which is not dependent on oil to do what they have to do!

If you look at the interpretation section of the bill, Mr. Speaker, you will be amazed when you realize the extent of these powers and the care the minister has taken to ensure that actions under the bill should be accountable only to the cabinet, not to parliament. Yet, surely this is our purpose in being here. Surely, we should have some responsibility. But the minister would say: I want it all myself. How totalitarian can you get? How Machiavellian can you get? Any phrase you can lay your tongue to does not describe the essence of the power the minister wants to have. If he were responsible he would never design legislation of this kind. His guts would not let him. I say the legislation was conceived in desperation. It will be pursued with the indifference the government has always shown toward parliament. They do not care what parliament does or what parliament thinks.

I often think it is our fault that the media do not realize what the government is doing, and therefore I think I am at fault I cannot get the press to understand that they are being indifferent to the causes of people. This is my fault and I accept that, but with all of the speeches I have heard in this debate I wish somebody, somewhere, sometime would influence the minister and get him to see what is happening. I refer not only to the environment and the Combines Investigation Act but to the invasion of provincial rights in the field of electrical energy. But this means nothing to them.

What do we have to do to influence the government, Mr. Speaker? Member after member has brought this matter to their attention. Have the government made any changes in the legislation? Have they made any proposals to the opposition that perhaps the bill should be altered in this way or that? Heavens no; they go on in their own arrogant way. I repeat that the legislation has been improperly conceived. It was born of indifference but is going to raise a monster, a monster who will stalk this country up and down from coast to coast and tear at the sinews and bones of the confederation, of the body politic, which is now somewhat tenuously held together. If the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is not aware of this, that is his fault; he has failed to have consultations with the provinces in this regard. I believe the things possible through this measure are so insidious that they could tear apart the sinews, bones and marrow of what we know as confederation, or this glorious and beloved country of Canada. This bill could stalk our country and tear apart as well its economic and social fabric.

I do not know why the minister feels the bill is necessary, since laws are available to him at the moment to do the very thing this legislation wants to do. I, for one, am not convinced that there is an energy crisis, though we may have some problems. But let us start to solve these problems in the proper way. Oil is going to be a diminishing resource, as we all know, and so is natural gas. Therefore, why does the government not bring in legislation to conduct research into the use of biomass or solar energy?

An hon. Member: In what year?

Mr. Morgan: Do it now. That is what the government should be doing instead of putting this kind of legislation before the House, legislation that makes use of the War Measures Act mean nothing.

One of the problems, as I see it, with this so-called piece of legislation is that it does not deal with a real emergency but with an anticipated emergency. You can anticipate anything you want. But the bill gives this horrific board, these supermen or call them what you will, power to do anything they want and makes them responsible only to the Governor in Council. In other words, if the minister gets his way, two or three people are going to control the country, and I do not think the minister should have that power; it is as simple as that. Why anticipate anything? If there is a war, a resolution is put before the House and we decide what the country should do. If there is a railway strike, we decide what the country is going to do. But this minister decides for himself which way his road will go. I remind him that the high road chooses the high way and the low road chooses the low way, and in between the misty flats rest drifting to and fro. I suggest to the House that this minister is drifting; he does not know which way to go.

I have one final comment for the minister. I understand he has left the chamber, so I hope he will read it in Hansard. Let me tell him that power corrupts, and that absolute power corrupts absolutely. He is asking this House to make power corrupt absolutely.

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, as I rise today to take part in the debate on Bill C-236, the so-called energy supplies emergency act, I want immediately to make it clear that my comments will be divided into three sections. First of all, I want to criticize the legislation itself, which I believe to be a great potential threat to the history of industrial and economic democracy this nation has known for more than one century. Second, I want to give a real outline of the so-called "energy crisis", the crisis that this country is not experiencing and which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his cabinet ministers are exaggerating for their own ends. And third, I want to talk about the great threat that the Liberal government's policies are creating to the continued unity of this great nation, a nation in confederation that I want my children's grandchildren, and their grandchildren, to enjoy for many years to come. The Prime Minister, the man who was to unify this nation, has, I am afraid, seriously undermined our nation's unity and the brotherly love of one Canadian for another, no matter what language he speaks or culture and heritage he holds dear.

Let me deal with the legislation itself, Mr. Speaker. The Liberal government freely admits it is a measure to provide for an allocation board for mandatory supplies and rationing of controlled products. The government says that this legislation and the proposed board are only an insurance. It admits that the board and these measures may not be needed. So why should we have legislation and such trimmings? Why provide the board with such awesome authority, the likes of which have rarely been seen before in peacetime Canada, except perhaps for the War Measures Act, the provisions of which were invoked to deal with the October 1970 kidnapping crisis, an action which my close colleague the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) has already said was an over-reaction.

The government has brought forward this legislation because from it it can derive more power than it can legally obtain under our great democratic parliamentary system of government. As always, and as another of my colleagues, the former Prime Minister of Canada, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), has said, the current government wants to diminish the role of parliament in this country. Parliamentary government has too many safeguards for the people, the Prime Minister and the other two of the three wise men from Quebec; the Minister of Communications (Mr. Pelletier) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), to accept. This legislation is another chop at the tree of democratic parliamentary government in this country. It will invest tremendous power in a small group of people under the utter domination and direction of the cabinet, and it will take away the authority that rightfully belongs to the provinces, placing it within the federal Cabinet.

An awesome point about the legislation is that it will allow, in its own way, almost complete power of economic dictation over most of our industrial activity. As a Canadian and a member of parliament representing the energy-rich province of Alberta, I just do not believe that the federal Cabinet ministers should be allowed to vest themselves with the authority rightfully belonging to the provinces. I can see why the Prime Minister would like to take over provincial jurisdiction, and his speech made in Vancouver a week or so ago is perfect evidence.

In that speech he scathingly attacked Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed. The Prime Minister, of all people, called Mr. Lougheed "petulant". He then followed up that comment with what has been described as the most vicious and pernicious attack ever launched by a Prime Minister of Canada against a premier of a province. This came, Mr. Speaker, from a man who was elected in 1968 with a promise to unite Canada. How times have changed; how the masks have come off and how the truth is coming out. At least the people of Canada know the truth now, and that is why the Prime Minister's smashing majority of 1968 was cut to a scant two-seat lead over the Progressive Conservatives in 1972.

Mr. Paproski: Wait until next time.

Mr. Hurlburt: Did the Prime Minister learn any lessons? A touch of humility, a bit of oil on troubled waters and then utter capitulation to his former allies, the New Democrats, in order to continue governing Canada with the aid of this party which obtained less than 18 per cent of the votes in 1972. This government party is interested in power at all costs; power and more power, and if power cannot be obtained within a parliamentary framework, then bills such as C-236 are brought forth to ensure that power in any case. I am astonished that members of parliament in any of the four parties represented in this historic House of Commons would easily support this legislation and thus force the provinces to surrender their authority. The conditions under which this authority can be invoked by the cabinet, coupled with the past performance of those who are demanding these vast powers, should give us all cause for concern. It is obvious that the government wants power far beyond its real needs. If it wants to allocate oil supplies at the wholesale level, and perhaps to ration supplies at the retail level—this is something we hope will never come to pass—then it already has legislation on the books giving it power to do these things.

Provincial rights and provincial jurisdiction are in fact a counterbalance; a democratic safeguard to federal authority. Both have their place in the Canadian constitution and both have served us well for more than 100 years. Let us not destroy those balances and safeguards now. Let us now look at the current energy crisis which the federal government suggests we face in Canada.

Let me say that in eastern Canada, in the Maritimes and in Quebec there is an energy shortage. It is simply a short-term shortage due in some small way to the international situation, but mainly due to the blindness and shortsightedness of the federal Liberal government which has repeatedly refused to build a pipeline extension from Sarnia to Montreal. Now that it realizes its mistakes it tries to cover up; it tries, through vicious attacks by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, to somehow blame the province of Alberta for the shortages. This approach will not work, as you can fool some of the people some of the time, some of the people all of the time, but you cannot fool all of the people all of the time.

Time after time Alberta government officials have gone all out in attempts to ease the energy shortage in eastern Canada. The Alberta premier, Mr. Lougheed, and his ministers, have tried and tried again to co-operate with Ottawa, but the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has refused to accept that co-operation. Instead, perhaps because Albertans refused to elect even one Liberal member to the 75-seat Provincial legislature, the Prime Minister and the minister of energy, who believe all Progressive Conservatives are "rednecks", have set out to punish Alberta, as another of my colleagues, the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie), suggested in this Chamber just a week or so ago.

One of the greatest politicians of our times, that prime minister of the mother of parliaments in Westminster, Sir Winston Churchill, gallantly set out against all odds to unite his people, get them pulling together and eventually stood up against an insidious enemy. Canada's problems compared to those faced by England in 1939 are nothing, yet we have been unable to find the will to tackle them. Our Prime Minister came into the political arena promising, like Mr. Churchill, to unite our nation and lead it to a brave, new frontier. We are now as disunited as ever, and I suggest this is an artificial disunity caused and promoted simply for partisan political gain. If the Prime Minister can turn the rest of Canada against the so-called "villain" Alberta, perhaps he can, by a hate campaign, win his party more seats in eastern Canada. What a way to run a country, and what a way to seek to govern!

We have no long-term energy crisis in this country. What we have is a crisis in transportation of energy from one part of the country to the other, brought on by the Liberal government's complete refusal to build a pipeline to Montreal. What we have is a crisis in government caused by a Prime Minister spirited suddenly into power in 1968 without knowledge of, or liking for, our system of parliamentary government. All is not lost. My fellow colleagues from Alberta have more than adequately explained the situation regarding the vast abundance of oil and gas in Canada, particularly in the Athabasca tar sands. It is true that our conventional resources are reaching their peak and within a decade will be running down at a dangerous rate, but the tar sands are just beginning to open up as are resources in the Canadian Arctic and, hopefully, in the offshore Atlantic and Pacific areas.

Now that the federal government has suddenly taken an interest in the Athabasca tar sands, after so many years, I should like to point out that it was and is private enterprise, not a socialist entity, that pioneered the development of the tar sands extraction process, and pioneered that development at tremendous cost and risk. We have now all heard of the over $1 billion Syncrude Canada

Program, an imaginative private enterprise consortium under which, by equally imaginative provincial government policy, the average Albertan will also benefit tremendously.

But we should not forget that the real commercial pioneer of this type of concept was a company called the Great Canadian Oil Sands Limited, a corporation, admittedly owned by Sun Oil, an American company, that over the past few years has lost some $90 million in pioneering oil sands extraction. That is a lot of money invested by people with imagination, ability and confidence in Canada. When we hear that the federal government intends to establish a national petroleum corporation with the Canadian taxpayers money to participate in exploration, I wonder how they will feel when, after a few years, the company might lose something like $90 million on one project. Will they get scared and back down, leaving the Canadian taxpayer to foot the losses? Quite likely.

What we should be doing, Mr. Speaker, is giving private industry and individual Canadians the incentives and encouragement they need to explore and develope new sources of energy rather than see big government grow even bigger, with the tax burden on the average Canadian becoming ever greater. Any government which gets so big that it can give you everything you want, will also be so big that it can take everything you own. Recently I saw some facts showing that within one decade under the Liberal administration the federal budget has jumped from $6 billion to $18 billion a year. And it is growing by leaps and bounds. That extra $12 billion came out of the average Canadian taxpayer's pocket, and I am not all sure the federal government is spending it to the best advantage of the people it took it from.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, might I make a plea for provincial-federal co-operation rather than confrontation, incentives and encouragement to individual Canadians rather than a "big daddy" or "big brother" government attitude, legislation which gives more rather than less freedom to the Canadian people, and a real drive toward re-establishment of a full and free parliamentary democratic government in this great country of ours. Obviously this legislation will, in one form or another, be approved. But I think it is essential, when it is considered in committee, that pressure be placed on the government to make it accede to accepting additional safeguards to the legislation, with parliamentary approval of any declaration of emergency, and some protection for provincial rights.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, like many who have preceded me, I have grave reservations about Bill C-236. Most of my concerns with the bill are similar to those already advanced by several of my colleagues. Nonetheless, this bill is of such national importance that I feel it is necessary to once again articulate these concerns. After all, history has shown this to be the only possible way to reach this government. Unlike the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), not all of us have a hot line to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). While the nature and possible ramifications of the energy crisis in Canada are far-reaching and all encompassing, I am not convinced that the broad delegation of powers provided for in the bill are at all justified. Like many other Canadians, I am curious to know how a government can possibly justify and defend a policy when it is not even sure of the exact dimension of the problem that policy purports to alleviate.

Furthermore, has the government given serious consideration to the concommitants of the bill? For example, what effect will this legislation have on domestic economic activity? How will it affect the free enterprise system? Also, one has to wonder if it was necessary for the government to propose new legislation in order to have these standby emergency powers, when these powers are already contained in the Export and Import Permits Act.

These are only a few of the questions I have with regard to this legislation. But they are questions which have not been properly answered by the Prime Minister or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald). Until these and other questions are cleared up, the people of this country will remain in the dark—they will be freezing in the dark soon anyway as long as we have this government—on the entire energy question.

As we all know, Bill C-236 would permit the creation of an allocation board with power to set prices for energy resources, to control imports and exports, to establish rationing and to take other actions should the cabinet decide that a national emergency exists because of an actual or anticipated petroleum shortage. These powers are broad and far-reaching. History has shown that powers like this once given are never easily taken back. But how can this government ask for such discretionary powers when its understanding of the energy crisis, as it affects this country, is so incredibly poor? We are bombarded daily with a plethora of conflicting statistics. What is apparent from these facts is that nobody in the cabinet seems to know the true extent of our energy crisis.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources have yet to provide information to prove that the country faces a petroleum crisis. Various statements over the past few months from government spokesmen have all been inconsistent and contradictory. An example of this is the Prime Minister's ever-changing position with regard to the Montreal pipeline. He was against it in 1969, in 1970, in 1971 and in 1972. He was even against it last spring, despite the fact that his own energy policy white paper clearly warned of the real possibility of interruptions and reduction in the supply of offshore oil. But now the Prime Minister supports and embraces what was originally a Conservative policy.

It seems to me that the government should be given powers like those in Bill C-236 only after it can be established that Canada will, in fact, face a major energy crisis. While it is undoubtedly true that Canada is experiencing regional supply shortfalls of Arab oil and imported products, it is also true that much of the country is not faced with an energy crisis similar to crises in the United States or parts of Europe. And while the Middle East dispute undoubtedly accelerated some domestic crisis characteristics, many of the aspects of Canada's crisis have their roots in long-standing domestic problems. The principal cause, therefore, of our crisis today is not Arab cut-offs or oil embargoes but the lack of federal leadership in anticipating and settling problems in an orderly and coordinated manner. This lack of knowledge and leadership on the oil issue is currently evident in the minister's futile efforts to determine whether Canada is being affected by Saudi Arabian oil embargoes. The minister maintains that we are not on Saudi Arabia's black list.

The fact is, however, that we are on their embargo list. We have been told as much by Sheik Zaki Yamani, the Saudi Arabian oil minister. On CTV's "W-5", Mr. Yamani stated that Canada has been cut off totally from Saudi Arabian oil supplies. Why then has the minister not been informed of this? While it is true that Canadians are generally confused about the energy situation, it appears that the minister may be more confused than anyone. And yet, he is asking parliament to give him these tremendous powers. How can Parliament be sure the minister will know what to do with them? I am sceptical.

The economic effects of this bill must also be examined carefully. Inasmuch as the industrial, commercial and business sectors of the economy depend upon energy products to produce output, mandatory allocation and rationing of energy and energy products suggests that domestic economic activity could be regulated under the provisions of Bill C-236. It should be remembered that control over energy resources implies economic control.

For example, clause 16(2) of the bill allows allocation to be applied selectively, if necessary, to specific areas as well as to individual consumers of energy or energy products. This could be seen as a means to achieve regional economic policy ends. If the government wanted to see the establishment of a plastics industry in say, Toronto, then it would be a simple matter to declare that a shortage of certain petroleum by-products necessary for the production of plastics exists throughout Canada, except in Ontario. Whether the shortage is actual or is declared by fiat is a matter of the opinion of the Governor in Council.

There are numerous other ways in which this bill might affect economic activity. All of them imply government control, and government control means socialism. An estimate of the industries directly affected by allocation measures contained in this bill shows that almost 20 per cent of real domestic product could conceivably be controlled by the Governor in Council. This is a potentially dangerous arrangement especially for our free enterprise system. Indirectly this control also applies to retail outlets which sell goods which are composed of an energy product.

What all of this means is economic domination by the government. This is a road toward which the government is already heading Canada. Surely, Mr. Speaker, we will get there soon enough, so the government does not have to speed up the process. This bill, and the government's proposed national energy corporation simply mean the expenditure of more money, more government, more bureaucracy, more skyscrapers in Hull and, concommitantly, less individual freedom. This I vigorously oppose.

Not only is this bill unnecessary for the reasons I have just mentioned but it is unnecessary because a statute already exists which would give the government many of the powers it is now seeking. The special provisions of the Export and Imports Permit Act provide the government with most of the authority it needs to come to grips with the current situation. For example, section 3 of the act provides in part:

> The Governor in Council may establish a list of goods to be called an export control list, including therein any article the export of which he deems it necessary to control.

However, this is not to imply that I favour exercising such powers under that act, or under any other act or bill. I believe that the government's reasons for not employing the provisions contained in Bill C-236 via the Export and Imports Permit Act are politically motivated. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources wants to give the impression that he is doing something about the situation, and that this bill is an innovative policy to deal with our energy shortages. Such is not the case. This bill merely excuses the government's inaction on the supposed crisis by implying that the government did not have the powers necessary to deal with such an event. But this fact should not come as a surprise. After all, this is the essence of the Liberal government.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, the bill is unacceptable to me. It is an unnecessary and potentially harmful piece of legislation concocted for politically expedient reasons by a government whose inability to handle the entire energy situation can only be equalled by its inability to handle the economic situation. Unfortunately, in both instances it is the Canadian people who will suffer.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) opened this debate a few days ago, the thing I remembered most about his speech was not so much what he said, as the almost matter of fact way in which he outlined what I am sure he, on another day, will call a case for granting unto this particular government extraordinary powers. I say that what he said was not too important from that point of view because if he had been making a submission to a judge to try to convince him of the points of view set forth in his argument that these powers were necessary, then I think it is fair to say that his cause failed, and his cause should have failed. But it was the unconcern that I noted with which he dealt with these extraordinary powers, these massive rights, really a theft from the legislative process that he was asking this House to agree to give him without, it seemed, any recourse whatsoever that worried me.

I want to say at the outset that it has never been the policy of this party to deprive the government, even this government which has proven itself so inept and inert, of the powers it might need to cope with a real national emergency, whether that emergency was in the field of energy or anything else over which it had jurisdiction. The one criterion we have asked for, however, is proof that the emergency is in fact a real emergency.

Having said that I want to say I do not feel I would be happy being a member of this party if it abrogated its responsibilities, whether in opposition as it is now, or in government as it soon will be—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: —by granting all these overriding powers in circumstances under which this granting or this taking of power was not warranted. I do not think the government has satisfied the burden that is on it to show beyond all reasonable doubt, and I dare say in terms of the depth and the strength of the powers that it seeks, beyond a shadow of doubt that it needs these powers to look after the national good.

As a member of this parliament, this minority parliament, I am not content with this bill as it now stands because when parliament enacts this bill, at that instant the members of parliament who represent Canadians from all walks of life in all parts of Canada will have passed their legislative responsibility to a government that has proven itself not only to be faulty in judgment but one in love with the authority of government by order in council and one which, through the fireside chats by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the statements in this House by all ministers, has shown itself to be on all sides of the energy question with respect to whether there is a crisis for Canadians this year or in the immediate future.

The burden upon the government to make out a case for these powers is even heavier in a minority parliament than it is in a parliament where a government would have a majority. It is particularly heavy on this government because the only thing that is propping it in office is a party known as the New Democratic Party, a party that left its principles a long time ago to moulder in the dust, whose members on the one hand say with all their honour that on some occasion they will oppose the government, and on the next occasion gather those incompetents opposite to their bosoms, to such an extent that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is able to announce to this House the colour of the eyes of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis).

To measure the extent of the various positions of the government over the last few weeks, and how it has moved from this side to that side as to whether or not there is a crisis, one has only to hear and see how ministers have reacted to questions in this House. This should be an indication to all members of the House, including even the ciphers who support the government, that the government is running very close to the end of its string in terms of public trust.

I would like to direct the attention of the House to the government's record of vacillation and inconsistency that it has displayed in the matter of energy. The Prime Minister said on November 22:

> Our current assessment is that oil rationing at the retail level will not be necessary. If Canadians generously support the voluntary program—and I know they will—there is every prospect that shortages can be minimized throughout this winter.

● (2100)

On September 20 of this year, on a television program, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said this:

> In a sense, this is a passing situation in Canada because we've got new refinery construction under way which will be completed in the fall of next year, and further refinery construction will be completed in the year after.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you have this kind of optimism and pessimism. I ask you whether this is the kind of statement on which to base the far reaching and extraordinary powers for which the government is now asking.

Again on October 16, 1973, the minister, when speaking to that society of which the Prime Minister is so fond, the Royal Society of Canada, said:

> Comparing this Canadian situation with that of other developed nations of the world for example, Germany and Japan, we are not on the whole in too dangerous a situation. Compared to other nations Canada is in a relatively fortunate position.

On October 7, which is not so long ago, the minister said:

> Well, Canadians have been more fortunate than many other people. In terms of shortages the government has been able to take action by way of export controls to make sure that Canadian refineries will continue to have supplies of oil to turn into gasoline, into heating oil, and also to make sure that there will be supplies of gasoline and heating oil throughout the year.

This latter statement, Mr. Speaker, was made less than two months ago by the minister who has now come here to ask this parliament to grant the government extraordinary powers to meet a crisis. I do not have to say that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) got into the act. He has been keeping a relatively low profile for some time but he got into the energy act and not too long ago he said:

> While we must be concerned . . . there is no justification at this time for panic or pessimism. Canada is in a much better position with regard to energy supplies than most other industrial countries.

There are some in this House who would say that this record of "on again off again on again Finnegan", which has characterized this government should be classed as a performance. But I think not, Mr. Speaker. What they have performed I believe is a tragedy, that is to instil in the minds of producers and consumers alike a sense of apprehensiveness and inconsistency that may or may not be justified—I do not believe this government really knows. In so doing, they have breached their public trust as a government.

It is interesting to note an article by Clyde Baxter which appeared in the Financial Post on December 15 1973 datelined Ottawa. I will quote part of the article which reads:

> One senior federal minister bet a skeptical friend in industry a steak dinner and a good bottle of wine there would not be a national petroleum corporation—protesting all the while that he, after all, had the advantage.
> Ten days later, Prime Minister Trudeau announced such an agency would be created.
> Last week, on Wednesday, Energy Minister Donald Macdonald assured a meeting of Toronto investment analysts the price freeze on domestic oil would come off as planned January 31. One day later, Trudeau announced it wouldn't.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I have written to the editor of the Financial Post pointing out that this is a false story by Mr. Baxter so far as I am concerned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: That is an issue that the minister has chosen to take up with Mr. Baxter. Nonetheless, this article has been published. The minister was quite correct in adding that it may be false as far as he is concerned, but I think there is a question of judgment as to whether the story is false at all.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I have a taped record and it is false all right. Would you care whether it is false or not?

An hon. Member: Bring in the tapes!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I will be glad to bring in the transcript.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, it really does not matter what letters the minister might write or to whom. The proof of the pudding with respect to the competency of this government will be made known in the next few months. I am prepared, no matter what the minister might have said or where he said it, to defer my judgment on that, and I am sure the Canadian people will do the same.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): You do not care whether it is true or not.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the minister has intervened at this point because he has been sitting there rather quietly. I hope he has been considering the enormity of his sins of omission and commission with respect to the energy situation in this country.

I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that by any standard this is no mean bill in terms of the power requested. There is one thing about the Liberal Party, Mr. Speaker; they are not backward when it comes to appropriating power to themselves. In some quarters, according to the way they operate, they might have been considered crude, although I would not want to put it that way tonight.

Perhaps the enormity of the power in clause 11 of this bill has been lost on many people. It gives the government the right by order in council—and just by order in council—to declare a national emergency all by themselves, perhaps to suit their political convenience.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Baker: If this parliament passes that clause in its present form it gives this government the right to bypass parliament and to pass an order in council sometime in the middle of the night—after two o'clock in the morning perhaps as has been known to happen in this country. I should like the civil libertarians on the other side who make speeches out of both sides of their mouths on this matter to think about the enormity of the power they are trying to give to this government. Some people would say that they must have it because to come to parliament would be too inflexible a procedure; that they must have this power to bypass parliament.

Mr. Speaker, if any Canadian is so foolish as to believe that kind of claptrap let me remind the House that parliament was called to settle the rail strike and came together within 48 hours. That rail strike was settled by that parliament, despite the foot dragging by the NDP. So, that procedure is not so inflexible that there would be a justification for departing from the principle that if the government is to have those powers let it come to this parliament, this public forum and discuss the necessity for these powers. If they make a case, then I am satisfied that this parliament, acting in the best interests of all Canadians, would be prepared to grant the government that kind of power. I want to make it absolutely clear to this government that we believe this arbitrary, irresponsible and undemocratic principle, this ability that they ask for to govern by order in council, is not satisfactory to this party as a matter of principle as well as by reason of the fact of this particular government's bad record or judgment.

Mr. Speaker, this is an immense bill in another way. I have dealt with the power that will be left to a group of small men who are responsible from then on to no one but themselves. They have the power to allocate and ration. These powers apply to petroleum, petroleum products, secondary petroleum products such as plastics, alternative fuels—which incidentally are not specifically defined in the bill—anything capable of being used as a fuel, any product from anything capable of being used as fuel, coal, coal products, electrical power and probably following from that, any electrical power products. This board is to be a powerful board. Perhaps in an emergency, such powers are necessary, but that emergency must be demonstrated.

The principal powers of the board will relate to dates of allocation, to apportionment of product to wholesalers, to assigning of supplies to wholesalers, to storage control and prices to wholesalers, to market area determination and so on. Then, comes this omnibus part of clause 16, which always frightens me, which says that the board may undertake any other action that "the board considers necessary for the purpose of carrying out a mandatory allocation program . . . ". That covers a whole host of actions which may or may not be justified by circumstances of the day. That is why we must be careful. It is not that the government may not need these powers at some time; rather, it is that the government ought not to have these powers all the time. That is the principle which concerns me.

Other speakers have indicated that once this declaration regarding a national emergency is made, statutes such as the Combines Investigation Act, the National Energy Board Act, environment statutes, the Transport Act, the Motor Vehicle Transport Act as well as other acts are to be superseded. The rights and duties of citizens, together with their burdens and benefits under these acts, are to be superseded by five faceless men who are not elected and who are responsible only to the minister. I think that is a lot to ask parliament to give away. For that reason, we must look carefully at the principle behind this bill.

Members have spoken about the power of the board to alter supply contracts, to impose wholesale rationing, and so on. It is important for the House and country to know the extent of these powers and the industries and people in Canada which could be directly controlled under the emergency powers conferred by this bill, emergency powers which, as I said, any government should have if there is an emergency. This government has not established that emergency.

The activities of the board could affect forestry and uranium mining, mineral fuel mines, the rubber industry, synthetic textile mills, fabric preparing mills, the carpet, mat and rug industry, linoleum and coated fabric industries, miscellaneous textile industries, paper, petroleum refineries, petroleum and coal products, manufacturers of plastics, resins, paint and varnish, plastic fabricators, all kinds of other manufacturing industries. It will affect wood industries, transportation, electric power and gas utilities, coal and coke, petroleum bulk tank stations, and many other industries.

This bill confers significant powers. I emphasize that no government, certainly not this government, which has put forward its case through the mouth of the minister who has been supported only by the acquiescence and silence of backbenchers, is entitled to these powers permanently. I submit that on the evidence presented thus far the government is not entitled to the powers it asks parliament to confer.

There is another serious ramification that flows from this bill; that is, the seeming authority that is given to the government of Canada, if there were a national emergency, to interfere in fields of legislative authority which are left to the provinces under the constitution of Canada. There are many in this country who would be inclined to argue that our constitution perhaps needs revamping and that we ought to take a long look at it from the point of view of changes and amendments, a redistribution of power and a redefinition of the objectives towards which all levels of government should aim. That may be all well and good; yet, surely there is a time and place for this, Mr. Speaker. There is a method for doing it. I suggest that the method is not the introduction of a piece of legislation which, in the hands of one government, can be used to bludgeon another. I gravely suspect that this idea is behind the haste with which this government wants to garner these powers unto itself.

Speaking as a member of parliament from Ontario, I am concerned for my own province because of the powers that would be granted to the government under this bill, particularly with respect to the field of hydroelectric energy. I am sure that this concern is shared by representatives from the province of Quebec, although some of them have sold out their principles to the extent that they probably would not voice that concern on the floor of this House. That is why they remain silent about that concept of this bill and another which has been mooted. They well know of what I speak.

Clause 14 permits the government to authorize the allocation of electric power and to establish mandatory allocations in respect thereof. This comes within the terms of the statute. Once electric power has been added to the mandatory allocation program this act will apply mutatis mutandis in respect of electric power to the same extent as if such electric power were a petroleum product. There is no mention of consultation. I think this is an omission, and perhaps indicates the way in which this government is prepared to consider relationships between the federal and provincial governments of this country.

No one would ever argue that there would never be a time in our national life when such drastic, sweeping powers which leap across sections of the British North America Act might not be necessary. In that event, I put it to you that there would not be one provincial legislator, not one provincial premier and not one provincial government in this country which, regardless of political stripe, would stand against the government of Canada if it needed these kinds of powers in a real emergency.

[Mr. Baker.]

Surely, Mr. Speaker, without such an emergency, and even if the government says that there is an anticipated emergency, in connection with energy, but has not proven it to any greater extent than it has, these clauses can only be classed as instruments of confrontation as opposed to consultation. These instruments are not unfamiliar to this government. Speaking as a member from Ontario, I think that the government has embarked upon a very dangerous course for which it has not proven the necessity. One can only speculate as to the reasons for adopting this position.

Much has been said, Mr. Speaker, about what has been generally and loosely called an energy crisis, whether in terms of supply or in terms of the transportation system. There might be a crisis relating to transportation, in that it may be difficult to supply Canadians in all parts of Canada with fuel taken from territory within their country. In the recent weeks when we have been exposed to many government inconsistencies and the general lack of leadership in the important field of energy, it has become apparent to Canadians that there is a much more important crisis facing them. That crisis is the crisis of leadership, a crisis caused by the failure of the government either to anticipate events, as reasonable men would expect them to be anticipated, or to act when these events have appeared on the horizon.

If there is a place where the crisis of leadership in this country is apparent, it is in the fact that at this late date, in 1973, the government of Canada, with all its resources and research capabilities, with the large and growing Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, cannot say to this House that it has a Montreal pipeline in the works. Oh, they have talked about the pipeline. The Prime Minister has used his prime ministerial rhetoric about the pipeline. As each day goes on, the date upon which such a pipeline would be in place fades further and further into the future. Not long ago the Prime Minister indicated that the pipeline would be ready in 1974. Everyone was prepared to cheer. Then, a few days ago we heard that the government has been told that the pipeline cannot be commenced until some time in 1975. Then, the other day, we found out that two applications to the National Energy Board would be required. The government has not even told us authoritatively what is to be the size of the pipe.

The government indicated as late as last night on the CTV network, through the mouth of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, that it was not even sure of the route that was to be taken. There is the whole question of acquiring and establishing the right of way. There is even the question of acquiring steel. This has not been dealt with authoritatively. All of these problems have been allowed to lie dormant even though we are faced with them in this usual mad scrambling of a government which scrambles to make up for its own deficiencies. This is a mad scramble which is usually fraught with futility.

All of these problems have been allowed to lie dormant. They have even been allowed to lie dormant since September 4 and, more important, well before that time. As is usual with this government, we are now faced with a last minute, too late mad scramble to make up for their deficiencies and to cover their inefficiencies, ineptitude and negligence in Prime Ministerial rhetoric. It is the usual mad scramble, the usual badge of this government. It is a course of action that we in this House have learned is fraught with futility. This fact has also been learned by the people of Canada.

The Liberal party has governed this country since 1963, a period of 10 years. The Prime Minister has been in office since 1968. Our party warned the government and the country that, as a result of the six day war and the uncertainties which it brought about, our country could not expect that forever we could have a sure supply of petroleum from the Middle East, so we ought to consider building a pipeline. Even the government's policy papers tabled last summer in the House of Commons, the so-called first energy policy which was nothing more than a discussion of various problems, pointed to why the pipeline ought not to be built. Now, today, faced with a crisis, really a crisis of leadership, abandonment of responsibility and the results of neglect, we suddenly have been talking about a pipeline, but as far as this government is concerned it is a rhetorical pipeline. The fixed objective of a national policy must be that of an assured oil supply for all of Canada. We can only have that assurance if the source of supply is Canadian.

The Progressive Conservative party believes that it is within the competence of a national policy to provide that assured supply and at a reasonable price. The Canadian objective should be self-sufficiency. Indeed the Canadian opportunity over the course of the coming decade will be self-sufficiency, not because this government acted but because this government will be horsed out of office and replaced by a government that is prepared to act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: I can understand the noise from the other side. I am glad they are awake. It is the first time since last week. I must say to you, Mr. Speaker, that that great objective of self-sufficiency is not a remote goal but one well within our grasp. The barrier between us and the attainment of that objective, the only obvious barrier, is the long-standing and continued, neglect of duty by the Trudeau government.

We are fortunate in Canada because we live in an area where we do, in fact, have self-sufficiency in terms of the amount of crude oil that we produce. I want to state that we reached this state of development only as a result of the 1961 national oil policy implemented by the government of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). That was the most significant step taken in relation to petroleum resources development in Canada. It allowed us to develop our resources. It allowed them to develop to state that they are today. I want to point out as well that since 1969 our party has been on record in support of extending the interprovincial pipeline from Ontario into Quebec. We advocated that policy not only in the interest of expanded national self-sufficiency, but because we saw in 1969 a prospect of curtailed off-shore supply from the Middle East.

I put it to you quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, that had the Progressive Conservative party the responsibility of government at that time, that pipeline would be in place today. The fact that it is not in place today is a monument to the neglect, ineptitude and the failure of initiative of this government. This, perhaps more than any other reason in this current debate, is why this government does not deserve to govern, and is not fit to govern. It ought not to be given the powers it asks for in this bill in its present form.

Now we have the Prime Minister supporting the extension of the pipeline to Montreal. What a change. He was against it in 1969. He was against it in 1970. He was against it in 1971. He was against it in 1972. He was against it even in the spring of 1973. Then, he did his usual flipflop. Now, we find him making speeches about it, telling about what a wonderful idea it is. Well, Mr. Speaker, most Canadians are not going to be fooled by that kind of nonsense. In terms of energy, this government and this Prime Minister have been like a weather vane affected by every wind that blows, not consistent as to the direction in which it would point itself. The biggest wind that affected it not too long ago was the wind from the party to my left.

Regrettable as it is for all Canadians, Mr. Speaker, the government's record of neglect in the field of Canadian self-sufficiency and in the field of security of supply for Canadians, is another example of how the Trudeau government has not come to grips with reality and has not acted. Let there be no mistake about it. We have seen nothing that indicates that our warning in 1969 was wrong then or is wrong now. In fact, events have confirmed the correctness of our view at that time. We say to his government, do not wait until 1975 but do something about building the pipeline now.

As a result of the neglect of this situation there are many Canadians in the Atlantic provinces, Quebec and perhaps in other parts of Canada who are going to suffer this winter by reason of additional costs. Eastern Canadians and others in this country are beginning to understand how barren of action and decision are the words of the Prime Minister. As a result of the neglect, many Canadians in the Atlantic provinces, Quebec and perhaps other parts of Canada are going to suffer this year. We have advocated a shelter grant system for the consumers of home heating oil because they are the ones who need the protection and assistance in a market that is rising.

There can be no doubt that because of various factors, not the least of which is the neglect of the government in terms of petroleum, there are going to be price increases to Canadians over the year. It is our view that these price increases ought to be staged. It is the hallmark of our policy with respect to oil that Canadians ought not to have to pay the world price for petroleum products. It is also the hallmark of our policy that there ought not to be two Canadas with respect to the price of petroleum products. Our party believes in a one-price system for Canada. The announcement by the Prime Minister in this debate a few days ago creates two Canadas in terms of price, creates a division in the country which has been overlooked by the Liberal members from Quebec and the Atlantic provinces who, by sitting in their places and say nothing, who by defending the government like the ciphers they are, have sold out their provinces and sold out the people that they were supposed to represent.

● (2130)

Mr. Blais: I dare the hon. member to come to my riding and talk that nonsense.

Mr. Baker: We take the position that the tax system ought to be used to provide incentives for Canadians to build storage facilities. We do not believe the government should act in such a way as to be held to be admitting that its policies are subject to the whims of the international corporations.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, a few days ago a new person strutted across the energy scene, a person called force majeure. Someone called me to ask whether he was a French-speaking army officer who was taking part in the crisis. A lot of Canadians did not know what it meant. But they got the hint when the minister told them that the largest oil shortfall could result from pro-rationing among multinational companies and that to do this the companies would have to enforce the force majeure clauses in the supply contracts. Canadians ask why should this be, and look to the government for answers. As usual, they receive none. Through subsequent questioning in the House of Commons by my leader and others, it became apparent that the Canadian government could not or would not challenge the right of the multinationals to allocate oil supplies arbitrarily. It came to light that the government was not only weak in policy but weak in resolve. When asked whether or not the minister or any of his officials had been in direct contact with these large oil companies or seen the supply contracts, the reply was: It is not our business. At this point Canadians began to think that perhaps the government was permitting a situation to develop in which the national government of Canada was subservient to the will of private international companies. Our view, Mr. Speaker, and I think it is the view of most Canadians, is that this is not a healthy situation and that the government has been derelict in its duty in this field as well.

There is to be a federal-provincial conference of first ministers on January 22, 1974. The Prime Minister has said they will be discussing the energy issue and it may well be that the conference will consider other matters affecting Canadians, such as the uncontrolled inflation which is itself causing concern and which, again, is being aggravated by the crisis in petroleum. This conference could prove to be one of the most important first ministers conferences since the practice of holding such meetings was begun. It might also be one of the most productive. It will all depend on the attitude of the participants. If the conference is to be used as an instrument to bludgeon the provincial governments it will surely fail. Although there may be a lot of strutting about and a lot of breast beating about national supremacy, our country will be the worse for that failure. Unfortunately, there is an atmosphere of confrontation in Canada and the federal government must take a substantial share of the blame for this. It should surely take a substantial share in an initiative to erase this attitude.

While it cannot be said that the ten provinces ought to regard themselves as ten sovereign states—and I do not think they do—it must be said that the federal government ought not to forget that the governments of the ten provinces are duly elected governments with mandates of their own. The people of those provinces are all Canadians and would not welcome, from either their provincial governments or from the federal government, any action, statement or position which would deprive them of the right to participate in a matter of national interest.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I am the first speaker for the New Democratic Party since early Friday morning, and I intend to be brief—

Some hon. Members: Filibuster.

Mr. Harding: —because we are hopeful that the bill may get through the House tonight. We have listened to an interesting debate on the energy supplies bill currently before us. The position taken by the NDP is that the House of Commons should give speedy passage to the legislation. The government should be given the powers required to cope with the present energy crisis but these powers should not be excessive. It would be completely irresponsible to break for a lengthy Christmas recess without dealing with this legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harding: If a crisis arises we must have the necessary measures in place to meet it and for this reason I strongly oppose the suggestion by the Conservative Party that the legislation be held up until the end of January. Why wait until the winter is half over before laying plans to forestall a possible energy crisis? The official opposition is using the same delaying tactics as it used in trying to block progressive legislation this past spring.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harding: The people of Canada brought them to their senses at that time by reflecting in the public opinion polls growing disillusionment with their stalling tactics. I predict it will happen again, for the Canadian people expect parliament to prepare plans and measures to cope with the looming energy crisis. We cannot take a chance and wait until the end of January before making plans as proposed by the Tory party. The completely irresponsible position take by the official opposition shows that their concern is for the multinational oil corporations, not for the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harding: Our group will offer some amendments to the legislation. We hope to see second reading completed quickly and the legislation sent to committee for immediate study and report. We urge the Conservative party to call off their apparent filibuster of the bill and to join with other parties in trying to set up the necessary machinery to cope with a possible energy crisis in our country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harding: The bill provides for the creation of a five-member board whose task will be to prepare, review and maintain contingency plans in readiness in the event of an energy shortage. The board will also be given power to impose mandatory allocations of energy sources, and to ration supplies. This power is contingent upon a decision by the cabinet that a national emergency exists. Such an emergency could arise as a result of actual or anticipated shortages of petroleum or disturbances in petroleum markets which affect, of might affect, the national security of Canada.

The Conservative party says these powers are excessive. They say the government has to prove there is an energy crisis to justify the legislation and that its provisions are an infringement of provincial jurisdiction. What is the solution offered by the Conservatives? It is to wait until the federal-provincial conference on January 24 and then deal with the legislation. But what would happen should a crisis develop? We cannot forecast what might happen in the tense international field to further upset our oil imports. Again, internal problems of supply might arise. The official Conservative position of delaying action is not defensible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harding: It is an indication of their inability to grasp the seriousness of the situation and of their lack of concern about preparing for an emergency which could seriously affect the nation. Their present attitude stands out in sharp contrast to their concern for the welfare of the multinational oil corporations.

• (2140)

Let us look at the events which have taken place in Canada in the energy field over the past few months and at the role played by the various parties in this House. It should give us a clear indication of who is really fighting for the best interests of Canada and Canadians. A number of Conservative members have told us that they have fought for the pipeline to Montreal for a number of years. Let the people of Canada know that it was a Conservative government which, in 1961, brought in legislation to stop the building of the pipeline from Sarnia to Montreal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Harding: And in their 1969 election literature, Mr. Speaker, they did not say that they were going to build the pipeline to Montreal; they said that they would consider the building of the pipeline to Montreal.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Harding: If it had not been for the Tory party, and for their short-sighted energy policy in 1961, we would have had the pipeline into Montreal and Quebec and would not be worrying about a shortage of oil for the people in eastern Canada. It is the official opposition that are really to blame for the energy crisis today, and they are trying to talk their way out of it by using the little gimmicks we have heard in this particular debate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Harding: There are one or two points I should like to make about the bill. One section deals with the environment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the House give the hon. member an opportunity to be heard. His voice I continue to hear but I think he has to force himself. Not everything that he says has to be greeted by applause or disapproval. The hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. Harding: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was talking about one section of the bill. There are a number of sections with regard to which our party intends to offer amendments, but one of the provisions relates to the environment. One of the members this afternoon spoke very eloquently on this matter, and I agree with many of the remarks he made concerning changing this section. I think it is foolish to pass legislation without consulting the various provinces and ministers and taking into consideration legislation which they have on their statute books. This is why consideration must be given to changing this particular section, and as I say our party is going to offer an amendment to try to improve the bill in this regard. We are going to bring in other amendments to the bill as well. I shall not discuss them at this time; the proper place to do so is in committee.

In closing, may I say that this is no time for any party to play politics since a possible energy crisis is facing Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Harding: We can sit around the committee table, and hopefully amendments will be offered by the official opposition, by our party, by the Social Credit party and indeed by government members themselves, and I hope they will be given serious consideration. I am certain that basically most members of the House are anxious to assure the Canadian people that we are really trying to set up the type of legislation that will enable us to meet the energy crisis to the best of our ability, should such a crisis eventuate. But let every one of us hope and pray that we do not have to use the emergency measures which I think we should give the government in order to plan for the crisis in the event that it hits us later on this winter.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I had very little intention of taking part in this debate, but a certain confusion exists in my mind. I am not an expert on this particular subject but I do not think that prevents me from speaking of the concern I have over the principles that I see the government accepting and which we must, of course, challenge; there is no question of that. I listened to the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) who for ten minutes carried on just in order to have an opportunity of—

An hon. Member: Filibustering.

Mr. Alexander: Well, I would not say filibustering. I do not know what he was trying to do except criticize this party because we have had the nerve to stand up when we believe something is wrong and has to be questioned. With all he had to say, he left me with but one thought, and that was that he was not happy with the bill. He said that, in view of the environment provision, which I think is clause 24, it would be foolish for us to pass the bill, keeping in mind there are provincial responsibilities one must be aware of and concerned about.

In this regard I wonder why at this particular time, a time of concern, this government cannot understand that our federal system works on the basis of co-operation and consultation rather than confrontation. If anything is clear to me, to all members of the House and the people of Canada, it is the way in which this government has projected itself into the mainstream of this very important matter without having any consideration whatever for the requirements of the provinces, without any consideration whatever for our constitution, if I may call it that, the British North America Act, in terms of provincial rights. The provinces feel their resources are of such great importance that one sees them all going in various ways trying to beat the government. When one approaches a subject of such importance in a spirit of confrontation rather than consultation, then it seems to me the provincial governments have every right to put before the House their concern and the way in which they are going to handle this very serious situation.

Having read the preamble to this bill— I do not know whether it is the preamble but those who have more expertise will correct me if I am wrong—I am of the opinion that a very heavy onus is placed on the minister to indicate to this House just what crisis we are facing in whatever terms he can divulge it to the House. I have looked for such an indication in his speech. I did not peruse his speech in its entirety, but I did read some of the statements that the minister put on the record. I should like to repeat what the minister had to say when presenting to the House the atmosphere surrounding this emergency, or as we and others have called it, this crisis. I refer to page 8442 of Hansard for December 5, where the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) said there had been established a technical advisory committee on petroleum supply and demand. Then, he went on to say this:

> That committee, composed of senior representatives of oil companies and of the various departments of government, has continued to meet every week.

What I am more concerned about is this passage.

> The recommendations prepared by that committee have been undergoing continuous review and refinement. The picture which emerges indicates clearly the possibility of shortages of middle distillates and heavy oils in the Atlantic provinces, Quebec and to some extent in Ontario. There is also the possibility of local shortages of these products in British Columbia.

I ask whether the possibility outlined there would indicate that we should be dealing with matters we might call national emergencies?

Let me move on again to quote from the minister's speech where he indicates that the province of Ontario appreciates the difficulties which may arise. On page 8445, the minister is reported as having quoted Mr. McKeough as stating:

> In other words, Canadians cannot expect to escape the effect of a Middle East embargo on the United States. As a consequence of all this, there is more than a possibility of a Canadian gasoline and heating oil shortage. We in Ontario must accept our share of the burden.

Is that the basis of the national emergency the minister has talked about? Let me quote again form the minister's statement as reported at page 8445 of Hansard. He is reported as having said:

> As for the views of another provincial government, I refer to remarks made by the Quebec minister of transport as reported in La Presse for November 30 of this year. He indicated that he felt voluntary restrictions would not be adequate for the purpose of protecting the Quebec market. I quote from his remarks in La Presse.
> "Voluntary restrictions, he explained, would not be adequate for the purpose of protecting us against a possible scarcity."

My point is that the shortage about which the minister speaks is only a possibility. Are we on this side of the House to assume that because of possibilities referred to by the minister there is a national emergency? I suggest that the answer is, of course not. Because we take this attitude we are being criticized, and the suggestion is made that we are against the national interest.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I would tell you one thing I have learned since I came to this House, ever since the War Measures Emergency Act was proclaimed, I will never again let this government or any other government railroad legislation through this House without giving us the facts upon which such legislation is based. We must be given the facts in order to come to a conclusion as to the necessity for such government action. We were fooled once, but we will not be fooled again. This government will have to give us some proof of the necessity for granting these powers.

As I understand the situation the NDP do not like this bill but feel they should rush it through in order to support this minority government. I suggest that we are entitled to some proof by this government that these extraordinary measures are necessary. I doubt that we will have the opportunity of voting on this measure tonight, Mr. Speaker, but I must repeat that we in this party are concerned about the federal government taking powers which traditionally have been provincial powers. The federal government will be meeting with representatives of the provinces on January 21 and 22 of this year, and I hope that these difficulties will be resolved as a result of consultation at that time.

I see the minister looking at me now, and I assume he is doing so because of the suggestion by other hon. members that there must be consultation with provincial authorities. I also see an hon. member who is sitting in the government front benches, although I suspect he never will sit there as a matter of right, who questions my criticisms of the Saskatchewan government in imposing a provincial tax on crude oil exported from that province. What this bill suggests is that we give this five-man board sweeping powers with the right to delegate powers to an agency. Speaking on behalf of the Canadian people, I do not think we should give up our rights as parliamentarians to a five-man board which could in turn circumnavigate, mesmerize and emasculate the powers of the governor in council.

I wish I had more time at my disposal in order to outline several other points I have in mind, but let me say in conclusion that there is no way I could support this bill in its present form. Let me refer to a brochure I have before me under the heading of "Richardson Securities of Canada" under the date of December, 1973. I am not sure whether this has been published under the authority of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson), but it states in part:

> It appears appropriate at this time to consider the need for co-operation rather than confrontation. Recent government actions, which have been based on short-term expediencies, have been disruptive enough in themselves, but the manner in which they have been handled is even more disconcerting.

I am pleased to have had the opportunity to be involved in this debate, and I conclude by suggesting that the problem facing this government is one of consultation. There are clauses in this proposed bill that need clarification, but over-all and in an overriding way there is a need for provincial consultation before going any further with this measure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

An hon. Member: Let's call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) has already spoken during this debate. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since we have wasted enough time playing this stupid game for the Progressive Conservatives who are striving for political capital, may I call it ten o'clock.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Témiscaminque (Mr. Caouette) calling it ten o'clock, or shall I put the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the motion proposed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the government House leader what the business of the House is for tomorrow?

Adjournment Motion

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will proceed to the consideration of the bill on election expenses, to be followed by the bill on export taxes and the division of profits. Hopefully, we will begin the report stage of the election expenses bill.

Mr. Bell: Do I understand that this same schedule will carry on into next week?

Mr. MacEachen: It very well might, and even next year.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Unfortunately, the leader of the Creditiste party is not in his seat. I hope he will return because I have something to say that I feel might be of interest to him. I took advantage of my allotted time to register my concern about the extremely partisan attitude taken by that hon. member who indicated a desire to call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I did not say that.

Mr. Alexander: I do not know how we play this game, and I do not suppose I should call it a game—

An hon. Member: Sit down or say something.

An hon. Member: You are ignorant.

Mr. Alexander: Notwithstanding what anyone, including my House leader might say, I do not take any instructions from anyone in respect of my concern about the measure being debated tonight, and I certainly will not take a back seat to anyone in respect of my involvement in this debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (2200)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Témiscamingue on the same point of order.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I rise on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. I did not have any objection to the member saying what he had to say, but there was an understanding between the House Leaders to the effect that the vote would be taken at 9:45. When I saw the hon. member rise after 9:45 I thought he was not respecting the word given by the House Leader of his own party.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I should not have allowed the hon. member for Hamilton West to raise the point in the first place, since it is after ten o'clock. I, therefore, suggest that if hon. members wish to pursue this point they do it after the completion of the Routine Proceedings tomorrow.

Mr. Alexander: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I must say there was no agreement whatsoever about this debate being terminated tonight.

Adjournment Motion

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. In accordance with Standing Order 40, a motion to adjourn the House is deemed to have been made and seconded at this time. Therefore, the question is that this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I have a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question of privilege may be raised on the same point tomorrow, but we are within the adjournment hour now.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

TRANSPORT—STUDY OF RAILWAY PASSENGER SERVICE IN SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO BY TRANSPORT COMMISSION—LOCAL CONSULTATION

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, for many months a number of members have been trying in vain to find out what, if anything, the Department of Transport has been doing about passenger rail service in southwestern Ontario. For many weeks the Canadian Transport Commission study of this service in that area of Canada has been shrouded in secrecy. My colleagues and I have been denied any information by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) regarding the terms of reference of the study, its progress, or its conclusions or recommendations. We were led to believe, most explicitly, by the minister that the study involved local consultation. Those of us in the area affected searched far and wide in our ridings for someone, anyone, who had been consulted by the CTC, all to no avail. This, of course, prompted my question to the minister on November 22 last.

It was not until the Commission's chairman, Hon. J. Edgar Benson, appeared before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates that I was able to determine that there was, in fact, no consultation with local people or officials. To the contrary, the CTC appears to be making two reports, the first being of an historical nature with possible solutions and recommendations and the second a survey or sampling of the needs of 1200 families in the affected area. The first study, according to my information, has been in the hands of the Minister of Transport for approximately two weeks. In response to my inquiry during the question period today, he did not deny that he had the report but he refuses to make it available to members of parliament and, even more important, to the communities of southwestern Ontario, isolated from rail transport.

If I understood him correctly today, the course of action of the minister defies reason and boggles the imagination. He seems to have adopted a four-step procedure: first, consider the CTC report; second, consult with the Province of Ontario; third, make a decision and, fourth, inform the House of Commons. This is a backwards procedure and that has been the difficulty from the very beginning of this travesty in passenger rail service. It seems to me that whenever the Department of Transport and the CTC have presented to them a reasonable course of action they consider it and then proceed to do the exact opposite. Surely, it is reasonable that the report, paid for by the taxpayers, should be made available to the taxpayers before any decision is made; indeed, I would think even before the Province of Ontario is consulted.

I know that there are circumstances where certain reports, for various good reasons, need not be made public immediately, indeed if ever. But the minister has been hiding behind this report for months. He has repeatedly used it as a crutch when I have tried to secure information or commitments. To use Mr. Benson's words, this study is "historical—poses several courses of action in a solution to the problem." If this be true what then is there to hide? Why does the minister not want the reaction of members of all parties whose ridings are in the area?

Finally, how can the minister make any valid decision based on his study of the CTC report without the benefit of the reaction of the taxpayers of southwestern Ontario? Therefore, I have two areas of concern this evening, Mr. Speaker. First, in my question of November 22 I pointed out to the minister that, despite his assurances, the CTC had not consulted any local people, and I asked him whether he approved of the study being conducted and completed without local consultation. I quote his reply:

> I think it was stated before the Standing Committee by Mr. Benson that these consultations are going to take place and that the report will likely be ready in a few weeks.

I say with respect, Mr. Speaker, that I believe all of us would interpret that answer to mean that there was to be local consultation before the completion of the report. That is not what has happened. The minister now has the report. There has been no local consultation. Not one single municipal official or representative has had any opportunity to offer advice or information. Indeed, I cannot find one single constituent who has been consulted.

In the light of these circumstances I can only accept Mr. Benson's version of what is taking place, that is, that there are two reports. The first, involving no consultation, was completed some weeks ago and, I believe, has been in the minister's hands since about December 4. The second report is to be some kind of a Gallup poll or sampling of 1,200 families in the area. This, to my knowledge, has not even been commenced.

This brings us to my second problem, and that is what the minister said today in reply to my question. If I understood him correctly, he indicated that the report had been received and was being studied. He indicated that he wanted to discuss it with the province of Ontario, and then I believe he said "even before that I hope we will reach some decision concerning this report." Does this mean a decision will be made before discussing it with the province? If so, what is the point of any discussion? When the minister says "we will reach some decision concerning the report" does he mean he will decide if it is good or bad? Does he mean he will decide whether or not he will make it public? Does he mean he will decide whether it is worth discussing with the province? Does he mean he will decide whether or not he will have any local consultation?

The unhappy history of rail passenger service in southwestern Ontario is that every time the minister purports to answer a question he in fact does not answer but instead he raises all kinds of other questions. The path to the solution of this problem has been obstructed time and time again by ministerial uncertainties, evasions and contradictions.

The following are reasonable questions which I put to the minister through you, Mr. Speaker. They are not conceived out of political partisanship but out of genuine concern for the plight of the many communities in southwestern Ontario that have been neglected, ignored and misled. I put these questions to the minister not in an atmosphere of confrontation but by way of sincere appeal for information, and with the assurance that all members representing the affected area will do all they can to assist him in finding a solution to the problem. These are my questions: One, will the minister make public immediately the CTC report that he has now in his possession? Two, will the minister agree to local consultation with municipal representatives and officials, and the public, once they have had an opportunity to consider the report? Three, will the minister then consult with the provincial authorities if he deems it advisable? Four, finally, will the minister reinstate passenger rail service in southwestern Ontario?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the question of the mid-western Ontario passenger service was actively studied by the Canadian Transport Commission in co-operation with the government of Ontario. I know that the hon. member for Perth-Wilmont (Mr. Jarvis) did not hear what I said so possibly I should repeat it.

The question of the mid-western Ontario passenger service was actively studied by the CTC in co-operation with the government of Ontario. As a result of this close co-operation with Ontario, on November 9, 1973, the CTC received certain origin/destination information which, after evaluation, indicated that public surveys were required. As a result, the CTC contracted to have public surveys carried out. These started during the last week of November and are almost finished. The surveys consist of multiple interviews with some 1,200 families.

This action by the CTC met the recommendations formulated when the mid-western development council met with myself, five other members of parliament and six government officials earlier this year to discuss the mid-western Ontario transportation problem. Notwithstanding the progress made to date in the study of this question, I should like to inform you of the reasons for the delay in producing reports on the studies and for the delay in the resolution of the question of the type and extent of public consultations required. Of course, we received the interim report on this question from the CTC over two weeks ago. The delays which occurred in producing the reports were due in large part to the departure of three transportation analysts who had been working on the study. Needless to say, the project responsibilities were immediately passed on to others, but this inevitably delayed the production of reports. In view of the importance of the study, persons from other studies were reassigned to accelerate the work.

AGRICULTURE—INCREASE IN FARM COSTS—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION BY FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, tonight I wish to pursue the question which I asked some months ago about the failure of the Prices Review Board to study farm costs when they were looking into the price of food in this country. It seems to me that the increase in cost to the farmer is a forgotten fact when looking at the cost of food to the consumer. The price that the farmer has to pay to produce a bushel of wheat or to grow a hog is increasing rapidly every year and not just the feed input but machinery, machinery repairs, fertilizer, lumber, fencing and all the other materials that the farmer needs to produce food for this country and many other countries in the world.

I thought it important that the Prices Review Board, to be effective, should analyse farm input costs as they are a large part of what the consumer pays for food. Today I looked at some figures from Statistics Canada which verify my point.

For example, in the third quarter of 1973 compared to the second quarter, that is a three month period, farm costs went up by 7.3 per cent. That is a hefty increase in a three month period. If you take the third quarter of 1973 over the third quarter of 1972, you find that farm input costs escalated by some 20.1 per cent over a one year period. When the farmer has to pay that much more for the basic necessities to produce food in this country it is no wonder that the price of food is going up. The farmer has to pass this on or be squeezed out of business.

Over the last number of years many farmers have indeed been squeezed out of business. They have been caught in the cost price squeeze and have been forced off the farm. As a matter of fact, two or three years ago, the average net income for a farmer in Saskatchewan was not much more than a thousand dollars a year, that is going back to 1970-71. Many people had to leave the farms and this led to the decay of the rural society, the small communities and towns and many of the small business enterprises that served them.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if we are to stabilize farm income, if we are to have a secure agricultural economy and a secure food base in the future for our people, we must look at the cost to the farmer. We can do that in three or four different ways. First, the Food Prices Review Board must be expanded to become a Prices Review Board that will examine farm input costs in general rather than just the cost of food after it leaves the farm gate. I think the Food Prices Review Board should have the power to control selectively the prices of commodities when it appears that those prices are unjustifiably high.

Third, and I do not see why the government should not do this, I think the government ought to expand a program of selective pricing controls, to control the pricing of commodities we produce in this country and which we can control. For example, I am thinking of energy, with respect to which there are now voluntary controls, and of other commodities which we can produce and control, such as steel, lumber, iron, copper, nickel and so on. We could effectively control such commodities. That would help the producers of this country who are farmers as well as consumers. The government ought to do these things because they would help farmers and consumers as well.

I remind the parliamentary secretary that, today, the farmer and the agricultural community are the backbone of our economy. If things go well for the farmer, the chances are that they will go well for many others in our society as well. In the future, I think we shall find that there will be shortages particularly in two fields, energy and food. There will be a real future in agriculture for the farmers of Canada if only we give the farmers a chance, give them some opportunities. There will be a snowball effect if the farmer has that opportunity; because, in the processing and growing of food and in the development of export markets, there is a tremendous growth potential.

We might begin by expanding the powers of the Food Prices Review Board and giving it power to look at farm input costs, particularly in cases where farm input costs are excessively high. It should also look into such areas as lumber, energy, iron, steel, farm machinery, and farm machinery parts and repairs. In saying this I am reflecting the views, certainly, of the rural parts of the Prairies. I urge the minister most seriously to look at the ideas put forward, as they may contain, possibly, solutions for making our country a better place in which to live.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member posed his question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) on June 12 of this year, he will recall that the minister expressed confidence that the Food Prices Review Board would be looking into farm input prices.

In its first quarterly report, published on September 26 of this year, the board did in fact devote a section of the third chapter to this very question of farmers' costs and prices. The hon. member may have noted in the report that a considerable portion of the increase in the annual rate of change in farm input price indices for the first six months of 1973, over the same period in the previous year, I would refer to hon. member to table 5, page 17 of the report, was attributable to trade in farm produce between one farmer and another. The highest increases were noted in the rate of change for feed prices, at 34.1 per cent; for seed prices, at 31.6 per cent; and in feeder cattle prices, which changed by 25.9 per cent. These increased prices were reflected in increases in farmers' incomes and generally indicated a rather buoyant situation in the farm economy.

The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) suggested that we ought to impose controls over certain commodities. He mentioned energy, steel, lumber, iron, copper, nickel and so on. I draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that, for example, the comparative increase in the price of farm machinery was only 2.4 per cent, and of petroleum products, only 2.7 per cent. I therefore fail to see any connection between the point he tried to make and the factual situation.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

While it is true that the farmer has had to bear higher prices for non-farm commodities, including farm building replacements and repairs, together with some increase in labour costs, and I would refer the hon. member again to table 5, farmers' returns on an average basis were well above farm input prices during the first half of 1973, as shown by chart 4, page 19 of the report, and they have continued to be so.

The second quarterly report of the Food Prices Review Board is expected shortly. I believe the board has also stated before the standing committee that it is doing a study on feed gains, and these additional reports may further elucidate the problem.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—POSSIBILITY OF CHARGING EMPLOYERS AND EMPLOYEES EMPLOYMENT RATED PREMIUMS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, tonight I want to refer to questions I directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras), as recorded at page 8565 of Hansard. I want to first talk about the question of topping up wages, as set out in my supplementary question. Unfortunately, industry, business and labour have to some extent got to know how to play the game with unemployment insurance. That is probably because of the rules. When you make rules or laws, people learn how to use them.

In the construction industry, there is a common practice of employees winding up a work week that is almost referable to the hours of daylight. As the season progresses, there are shorter and shorter work weeks. Indeed, throughout the fall there are periods of rain, periods where it is impossible to do anything. It has become a practice to use holiday pay to, in effect, top up wages by paying holidays for one or two days a week. The effect is that when an employee is eventually laid off because of the inclemency of the weather, he has had his holidays. When he applies for unemployment insurance, after the two week waiting period he is able to immediately claim unemployment insurance because the wages have been topped up at the maximum rate. In effect, he and his employer have used the system. Usually this is someone who does fairly highly specialized work. Because he is from an area where there is not likely to be part-time employment for him, he is able to draw unemployment insurance for the bulk of the off-season period, and that is not just winter.

I will refer to the construction industry, logging industry, the auto industry, the Great Lakes shipping industry, the farming industry and to some extent the board of education in terms of secretarial help for schools. Industry has been able to use the fund to keep its employees grouped together during the slack period or offseason. They have quite a method of doing things. I received a letter today from Hutt Fence Limited, which is in the fence construction business. It states that their employees are concerned. They want to have their holiday pay. They want it blended in with their regular payment so that when they apply for unemployment insurance, they will get it immediately after the two-week waiting period.

My constituent is a very concerned person and does not want to do that. However, if he does not do that, he will lose his help. He has contacted the Unemployment Insurance Commission to see whether it is appropriate. I will have to tell him that it probably is, that he can probably do that kind of thing. There is nothing in the act to say when a person must take his holidays. He can take them any time he wants. There is nothing to prevent an employer from paying a person two days' holiday pay a week for a number of weeks prior to a layoff. Indeed, they can give him a day's holiday a week if they want to handle it that way. Really, it is the use of the system, not the abuse of the system.

This brings me to the first question I asked in connection with merit pay, as the minister likes to call it—I prefer to call it employment rating. The Unemployment Insurance Act provides for employment rating. There are some categories of employment in which a lay-off rarely occurs. For example, the secretaries in my law office are rarely, if ever, unemployed and they probably never will be in a traditional sense. It seems to me totally unrealistic that people in a job where there is no likelihood of lay-off pay the same premium as those in an industry which by its very nature can scarcely continue during the off-season. You do not run a skidoo or a ski-lift in the summer, and schools are closed during July and August. People who take up employment of this type, employers and employees alike, have an obligation to realise that this is the name of the game. Surely, it is not the responsibility of the government of Canada to keep an employment group together under the guise of paying unemployment insurance.

The hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) has been very vocal on this subject, telling us that unemployment insurance is a form of income redistribution. He even likened it to a form of DREE grant. I want to tell him we certainly do not need social welfare programs designed for those who may well be earning $20,000 a year and living for extended periods at the expense of taxpayers such as the kids in my office who are working all the year round and paying the same amount in unemployment insurance contributions as others do.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we could discuss the question of holiday pay from a number of different viewpoints, but since the hon. member has directed his remarks to it from the viewpoint of merit pay, I should like to answer them in that context. May I say in passing that the government does not acknowledge that unemployment insurance is a form of social welfare. We think, rather, that it is a form of social insurance, and on another occasion I should be happy to explain this point to the hon. member for Peel South.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mississauga.

Mr. MacGuigan: I am sorry, Mississauga. The original question was whether the minister had received a proposal or proposition from the Unemployment Insurance Commission. While we have received no such proposition from the Commission it is relevant to note that the white paper on unemployment insurance tabled in June, 1970, proposed a form of experience rating which would relate the premium paid by employers to the experience generated in terms of benefit costs against the program. This proposal was studied in depth by the parliamentary committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration in the fall of 1970.

Many briefs were received from both employer and employee associations respecting the merits of introducing a system of experience rating in the Canadian context. The committee endorsed the principle of experience rating but recommended in its report that the subject matter be further studied with a view to determining the general structure of an appropriate rating system.

The government accepted this recommendation by the parliamentary committee and in the spring of 1971, when Bill C-229 was presented to the House, the minister of labour of that day asked the Unemployment Insurance Advisory Committee to undertake a complete review of the question of experience rating and make appropriate recommendations. The committee began the review in the fall of 1971 and a subcommittee of commission officials, management and labour was formed to examine in detail the technical aspects of any experience rating system. The committee met on a number of occasions during 1972 and it was expected that the Advisory Committee would receive a report at the beginning of 1973.

However, in the early part of 1973, when the committee would have expected to begin concluding its examination of experience rating, it was asked by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to review the benefit control operation of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. The chairman of the committee has stated that the committee expects to pursue this matter early in 1974 in the hope that some conclusion can be arrived at in the course of that year.

Due to the complexity of this matter and the generally negative reaction which this concept has aroused among both employer and employee organizations, these first findings will have a bearing on the committee's ultimate recommendation. I cannot, of course, prejudge this conclusion but we have to take into account the feelings which employers and employees generally hold.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.33 p.m.

FINANCE

TABLING OF AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT FOR YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1973

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), the report of the Auditor General for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1973.

I wonder whether on behalf of my colleague and seatmate, the President of the Treasury Board, we could not ask for the unanimous consent of the House to send the Auditor General's report to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

STATEMENT ON GUIDELINES FOR PUBLIC SERVANTS AND ORDER IN COUNCIL APPOINTEES

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in my statement on July 18, 1973, concerning conflict of interest, I outlined standards of conduct which would apply to cabinet ministers. On July 17 my colleague, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), had earlier announced government policy concerning Members of Parliament and Senators and indicated that it was his intention to refer the government's green paper to a standing committee. The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections has been heavily involved with other matters, as the House knows, until now. However, it is my understanding that the President of the Privy Council may be able to move that the green paper be referred to that committee this week. I know that members will give this matter very careful attention when the motion for the reference is taken up in the House and, later, in the committee.

In July I also indicated that the government was actively considering the proper steps to be taken with regard to the public service and those appointed to various offices by the Governor General in Council. I wish today to announce the government's policy in that regard.

Canada can take pride in her public service and in the individuals who serve within it. In any large organization, however, it may be necessary from time to time to give direction as to the manner in which people must conduct themselves in the course of their employment. In these matters it is as much a benefit to the employee as it is to the employer to have clear standards apply.

The government believes that in setting standards it is important not only to protect the public interest adequately but also to protect the rights of those who are affected by the standards. We have opted, Mr. Speaker, for a series of guidelines which have been incorporated in an Order in Council covering all employees in the public service which, with the permission of the House, I now table.

Central to our policy is the principle that it is not sufficient for a public servant merely to act within the law. We believe that there is an obligation to act in a manner so scrupulous that it will bear the closest public scrutiny. Public servants, therefore, must not place themselves in a position where they are under obligation to any person who might benefit from special consideration or favour on their part or seek in any way to gain special treatment from them. Equally, a public servant must not have a pecuniary interest that could conflict in any manner with the discharge of his official duties. Public servants will be expected, as are ministers of the Crown, upon appointment to office, to arrange their private affairs in a manner that will prevent conflicts of interest from arising if there is any risk of that occurring.

Public servants are being asked to exercise care in the management of their private affairs so as not to benefit, or appear to benefit, from the use of information acquired in the course of their official duties that is not generally available to the public. In matters of contract, public servants must not place themselves in a position where they could derive any direct or indirect benefit or interest from a government contract over which they can influence decisions. Regarding outside employment, public servants are being asked not to accept outside office or employment that could place on them demands inconsistent with their official duties or call into question their capacity to perform those duties in an objective manner. In the performance of their official duties, public servants must take great care to ensure that no preferential treatment is given to relatives or friends or to organizations in which they or their relatives or friends have an interest, financial or otherwise.

[Translation]

Our policy, Mr. Speaker, clarifies for the public service responsibilities, which although they are not new or additional to the traditional ones long understood by public servants, are being made clear and formally published at this time. In order to assist public servants in determining where areas of conflict of interest may arise, particularly in areas related to business, commercial or financial interest, we are asking that public servants disclose in confidence, all business, commercial or financial interests where such interests might conceivably be construed as being in actual or potential conflict with their official duties. The onus to disclose such interests and to determine where such interests might be construed as being in conflict with official duties, is being clearly cast upon the public servant himself. Only those matters which the public servant believes are in actual or potential conflit of interest will require disclosure.

As with public servants, it is our belief that, for their guidance and for the protection of the public interest, those appointed to office by the Governor General in Council should be provided with guidelines. Officials appointed by order in council will in general be required to adhere to standards which will approximate those which have been decided upon for Cabinet ministers. These additional standards, and indeed all standards, must be viewed not as abrogating from any specific legislative provisions, but as conplementary to them.

There is a broad range of positions to which appointments are made by order in council. Five broad groupings have been made: appointments to judicial and quasi-judicial boards, agencies and tribunals; appointments to positions where the holders report, or are directly responsible, to Parliament (servants of Parliament); appointments to senior positions in Crown corporations and autonomous agencies; appointments to the major operational and policy positions of the government; and appointments to a host of miscellaneous positions which do not clearly fit into any of the other groups.

The nature of the duties performed by these officials, with few exceptions, set this group apart from the rest of the public service and require that more stringent rules apply to them in dealing with their personal affairs. We believe, Mr. Speaker, that generally no less stringent standards than apply to Cabinet ministers should apply to this group.

In more specific terms, the servants of Parliament, and appointees to the major operational and policy positions, should have precisely the same standards apply to them. Appointees to senior positions in Crown corporations and autonomous agencies should also be the subject of the same general guidelines as for Cabinet ministers, with specific requirements to be promulgated by the ministers responsible to Parliament for a Crown corporation or agency. For miscellaneous positions, which cover a broad range of duties, functions and responsibilities, responsible ministers are being asked to examine the particular positions falling under their jurisdiction with a view to promulgating such guidelines as seen best to meet the needs of the position itself.

[English]

With regard to appointments to judicial or quasi-judicial boards, agencies and tribunals, it is our hope to extend the same general guidelines. There are, however, some legal problems. I have asked that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) review this matter with a view possibly to recommending amendments to existing legislation to bring it into conformity with established standards of conduct.

Members will recall that in my statement to the House in July I indicated that ministers would have three options open to them in dealing with property other than residences, automobiles and other things of a personal nature of that kind. These were: total divestment, the use of a frozen trust or the use of a blind trust. After further consideration, the government has decided that a fourth option should be added to the three just mentioned. This fourth option will apply to cabinet ministers and to Order in Council appointees who are being included under the ministerial guidelines.

The option will provide for the registration of a declaration of ownership of property with a registrar who will be appointed for this purpose and for the purpose of assisting ministers and others in dealing with matters covered by the government's policy on conflict of interest. It will be possible for a minister, or other persons under the same rules, to deal with property so registered. Declarations and the details of the property covered by them will be open for public inspection in the office of the registrar. The property which may be registered under this fourth option will depend on a number of factors including the nature of the property, whether its value might be affected by decisions of government policy and whether the property could even remotely give rise to a conflict of interest situation. This arrangement, and the scope for individual management it provides, will not be available for stocks and securities traded on public stock exchanges.

The government has also decided that the categories of property exempt from treatment under one of the four options should be extended to include bank balances, Canada savings bonds and securities of any level of government in Canada and agencies of any government. It is apparent that a conflict of interest cannot arise from any such holdings.

[Translation]

We have concluded, Mr. Speaker, that as a matter of policy the subject of standards and procedures for employees of Parliament should also be considered at an appropriate time. We would recommend that standards and procedures for employees of the House of Commons be referred to the Commissioners for Internal Economy and for employees of the Senate, to the Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration. It is our hope that an examination of those groups may be undertaken at an early date.

With regard to the employees of Crown corporations, whether appointed by order in council or not, we are of the view that standards similar to those which I am announcing today for the public service should be developed. Crown corporations and agencies will be urged to develop further standards and procedures within their own organizations, which in the view of the corporation or agency and the minister responsible for it, best meet the operational requirements of the corporation or agency and the employee positions within it.

These guidelines will not, of course, be any substitute for the qualities of honesty and integrity, long recognized as a hallmark of Canada's public service. But we are confident, Mr. Speaker, that they will assist public servants and officials in the performance of their official duties and in knowing with greater certainty what limits must be imposed on their private interests. Details of the administrative arrangements are currently being worked out by the President of the Treasury Board. He will shortly be sending a circular letter to all heads of departments and agencies explaining the administrative arrangements which are required to give effect to the guidelines.

[English]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, at the outset may I suggest that since the guidelines the Prime Minister has tabled are quite short they be printed in Hansard? I wonder whether this would meet the approval of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For text of Order in Council containing guidelines, see Appendix A.]

[Translation]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I welcome wholeheartedly the Prime Minister's statement. It deals with a most important subject. I recognize that it is not possible to eliminate entirely all possibilities of conflict of interest. Still, I should like to make a few comments on the Prime Minister's statement.

● (1420)

With regard to the part of the declaration related to the public service in general in which provision is made for the disclosure of conflict of interest, the Prime Minister makes it very clear that the onus to disclose such interest and to determine where such interest might be construed as being in conflict with official duties is clearly being cast upon the public servant himself.

I recognize the high quality of our public service. I recognize that ultimately, in the final resort, the elimination of conflicts of interest depends upon the exercise of our own final, fundamental judgment. Nevertheless, I recognize also that in many ways a person may be the poorest possible judge of potential conflicts of interest in his own case. Therefore I have to say I am not satisfied with leaving it entirely to the public servant himself or herself to be the sole judge whether or not there is a potential conflict of interest, since I think such a person is not a sufficiently good judge of that situation. I should like to see the appropriate committee of the House examine this problem, which I recognize is complex and difficult, to see whether or not there is not some more satisfactory way in which it can be resolved.

I must also say that, as was the case with the guidelines laid down for ministers, there is nothing concerning the spouse or minor child of a public servant. I believe a case of conflict of interest is just as likely to arise as a result of property or investments owned by one's spouse or, indeed, one's minor child or children, as in the case of an individual. Therefore I must say that this also appears to me to be another instance of gross inadequacy in the guidelines.

I note, too, that there does not seem to be any particular reference to the staffs of ministers or even to the senior staffs in the offices of ministers, though in the statement of Prime Minister Pearson in 1964 this was a matter of special concern. It may be that staff attached to a minister are intended to be covered by the rather omnibus clause under which it is to be left to the judgment of the individual minister to decide what are the appropriate guidelines. But even if such personnel were covered by this omnibus reference, I would not regard this as adequate in view of the importance of the position of those on the personal staffs of ministers. I regard this also as another defect in the guidelines put before the House today.

Since the guidelines for Order in Council appointments are the same as those for ministers, I must repeat that one of the options, that of the frozen trust, mentioned by the Prime Minister in his previous statement does not seem to me to be appropriate unless it is also associated with disclosure. In other words, I would not regard a frozen trust as an appropriate device for overcoming possible conflicts of interest unless it is also associated with disclosure. I am distinguishing in this connection between a frozen trust and a blind trust. I repeat that, since these guidelines apply to all Order in Council appointees as well as to ministers, the failure to deal with the spouses and the minor children of these appointees is a very grave shortcoming in respect of these guidelines as it was in respect of the guidelines the Prime Minister originally laid down for ministers.

While I am pleased to hear this statement and regard it as a substantial step forward in dealing with a problem of great public concern, I believe the guidelines outlined by the Prime Minister today have the substantial shortcomings I have mentioned. I should like to see these matters considered further by the appropriate committee of the House, and I would certainly be disappointed if the guidelines are left in this state which I consider quite unsatisfactory.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we welcome the concern of the government about the problem in respect of conflict of interest which has been reflected in the fact that we now have been given three statements on the subject. We had the statement and the green paper presented to the House by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) on July 17 concerning members of parliament, we had the Prime Minister's statement on July 18 concerning cabinet ministers, and now we have the Prime Minister's statement about public servants and others who are government appointees in one way or another.

We also welcome the fact that the subject, at least in general terms, is to be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. We feel that the discussions which will take place in that committee are extremely important.

I must say, however, that a word the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) used on July 18 certainly deserves to be used again today. He described the Prime Minister's statement of that day as "murky". I suggest that today we have about the murkiest Order in Council I have ever seen. When one listens to the Prime Minister and hears him say that in a moment or two he will be tabling an Order in Council, one assumes that the Order in Council will fill in the gaps, spell out the details, and that it will include some definitions, some clear principles and the means of enforcement. I was pleased that the Leader of the Opposition asked that the Order in Council tabled today be appended to Hansard in order that those who read these remarks will be able to read that Order in Council and discover that it is nothing more than a précis of the Prime Minister's statement.

Orders in Council usually provide some detail and some regulations with the force of law and, indeed, usually provide means of enforcement or penalties, but in this Order in Council, P.C. 1973-4065, December 18, 1973, there is not one word of definition, there is not one point spelled out in detail and there is no provision of any kind for enforcement. It is nothing more nor less than a statement of desires. Let me read one or two sentences:

> No conflict should exist or appear to exist between the private interests of public servants and their official duties.

Another states:

> All public servants are expected to disclose to their superiors, in a manner to be notified, all business, commercial or financial interests where such interests might conceivably be construed as being in actual or potential conflict with their official duties.

It goes on to point out that public servants should not do this and should not do that. But there is no detail, no clear definition, concerning what it is that is permitted or what it is that is prohibited. Certainly there is no suggestion of any way in which these so-called guidelines are to be enforced. I submit, therefore, that the Order in Council is of no more value than the statement the Prime Minister read to the House today.

I join with the Leader of the Opposition in expressing concern over the extent to which in the Prime Minister's statement as well as in the so-called guidelines everything seems to be left to the individual public servant. I think this is unfair to the public and also unfair to the public servant. I note this sentence in the paragraph in the Prime Minister's statement having to do with disclosure:

> Only those matters which the public servant believes are in actual or potential conflict of interest will require disclosure.

I ask frankly, of what earthly use is that kind of a guideline where in the final analysis it is left to every individual public servant to decide whether the interests he has are such that he should disclose them? As the Leader of the Opposition said, surely the poorest judge of one's own conduct is the person himself, and yet that is the way this has been drawn up. I recognize it is the Prime Minister's statement, but anyone in his position has to receive help in the drafting of such statements. I wonder what senior public servant drafted this particular statement?

It seems to me—and here I go along with the Leader of the Opposition or perhaps a little farther—that the only solution in all these areas, in respect of members of parliament, cabinet ministers or public servants, is to go for full disclosure. This so-called option of disclosure and option to register certain holdings and so on will not fill the bill. Those involved in decision-making, so far as public servants are concerned, should be required to come through with full disclosure. I hope that even yet the thinking of the government and this House on the question of conflict of interest will move in that direction.

Another criticism I offer is that this statement and the Order in Council with its guidelines draw no lines among public servants. They are all in the same basket whether they are deputy ministers or assistant deputy ministers involved in the making of policy or whether they are cleaners or helpers. Public servants across the entire spectrum are covered by one set of guidelines and one Order in Council. I think this is unfair to these public servants. Certainly the public must be protected but, as the Prime Minister says, we have to think about our public servants as well. I think we should be able to draw a line so that the most severe restrictions apply to those who are involved in the decision-making process. That does not require a set of guidelines so broad that, in order not to be hard on cleaners, helpers and stenographers, it really imposes no restrictions at all on those at the top.

The next comment I wish to make is that this statement makes no reference whatsoever to the process of hopping back and forth which goes on on the part of public servants who go out into private industry and back again and so on. It seems to me that some solution must be found to that problem. It know my friends on both sides of the House like to come out with the cliché that we need to have these people in government so that they bring to government the experience of service in the private sector. But one cannot but be concerned about conflict of interest when a senior public servant at the deputy minister level or close to that goes out into private industry and later comes back. All right, we cannot deny the right of people to look for employment when they are out of one job, but surely provision can be made that the government will not deal with firms which have in their upper echelons those who within the last year or so were in the sacred precincts of the government itself. This problem has not been touched in this statement or in either of the other statements which were given to us.

There is also no reference in this statement, as there was no reference in the statements of July 17 or July 18, to what we regard as fundamental in this whole question. In our view it is not just a case of whether a person is able to make a buck or so because of his connections; what counts to the public is the philosophy, the viewpoint, of those making the decisions, whether they be at the government level or at the public service level. I think something must be done to bring that point of view to this whole discussion of the conflict of interest. Mr. Speaker, I am about to sit down.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That kind of remark can always be counted on to draw applause, but I think it is particularly to be noted that when I complained about persons with a financial interest being in a spot to influence government policy, and then said I was about to sit down, the applause came from the Tories.

I want to associate myself with what the Leader of the Opposition said about this whole subject being considered in the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. I should like to go a little further, however. Instead of just saying it ought to be done, I would call upon the President of the Privy Council, when he presents his motion for the reference of the July 17 green paper to the standing committee, to amend that motion to include in it a reference to that committee of the statement made by the Prime Minister on July 17 regarding cabinet ministers and also the statement made and Order in Council tabled today. That committee should have the opportunity to go thoroughly into the whole subject before us today, the important question of conflict of interest and its relationship to public policy.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, we welcome the statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) concerning the conflicts of interest as well as that on the publication of guidelines which will help protect Canadian public servants against any suspicion.

Mr. Speaker, public servants must be protected against any suspicion in carrying out their duties, considering their importance. Hon. members and governments follow one another, but public servants remain. Some officials have been in the government service for 25 or 30 years irrespective of political parties. Those people are important and we must recognize it. They are not subjected to changes as we are whether we are Liberals, Progressive Conservatives, New Democrats or Social Crediters. This is why the civil service must continue to serve the country, hence the importance of its behaviour before the people of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, in the various departments where the public servants more or less rule the roost, I believe we should add another point to the eight set out by the Prime Minister, that is administrative control. For instance, because I received two rather important complaints, I am personally conducting an inquiry concerning some Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation employees who, I am told, receive bribes when they recommend the development of such and such a housing project, in two places in the province of Quebec. Mr. Speaker, when I have conclusive evidence, I shall name the persons involved on the floor of the House.

I want to draw the attention of the House to another point. The Prime Minister recommends the following, and I quote:

Local Initiatives Grants

—that standards and procedures for employees of the House of Commons be referred to the Commissioners for Internal Economy and for employees of the Senate, to the Committee on Internal Economy, Budgets and Administration.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that we are asking too much from the Internal Economy Committee. It is already bogged down in its work. Here is striking proof of it. For three years now I have been asking for a press attaché. All the other parties have one already. The committee did not have time yet to give me one because it is overworked. Mr. Speaker, I think we should set up another committee in order to relieve the one dealing with internal economy so that I too may get justice from the federal public service.

LABOUR RELATIONS

ONTARIO BILL RESPECTING SCHOOLTEACHERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I rise, pursuant to Standing Order 43, to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity and I hope all hon. members will support it. In view of the fact that teachers in Ontario are forbidden to strike for better wages and working conditions, and in view of the fact that legislation now before the Ontario legislature will deny them the right to resign, which is a clear violation of their civil rights, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That the Minister of Justice use the power of his office to urge the government of Ontario to withdraw Bill 274.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 43 I rise on a matter of urgency arising from the fact that organizations and local government authorities were required to submit applications for local initiative project grants by October 15 of this year with the understanding that the Department of Manpower and Immigration would make its decision regarding the acceptance or rejection of these grants on or before December 3. In view of the fact that many constituencies in Canada, including the northern constituency of Meadow Lake, have not had any decision made to date regarding LIP, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight):

That the Minister of Manpower and Immigration make a statement on motions tomorrow indicating, first, the reasons for the delay in announcing LIP projects in certain constituencies and, second, the date that these announcements will be made.

ENERGY

OIL—CONSIDERATION OF HIGHER COST IN FORMULATION OF INDUSTRIAL POLICIES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who has spoken about the government developing a coherent set of industrial policies. I should like to ask the minister whether a part of this set of coherent industrial policies is to keep the costs of all vital forms of energy at a level to give Canada a competitive edge in processing and manufacturing?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has identified an important part of the coherent set of strategies. We have talked about energy costs both as input and as material in the development of the industries of Canada.

An hon. Member: That is incoherent.

Mr. Stanfield: If there is a competitive edge for Canada in having lower energy costs, will not the substantially higher crude oil price in eastern Canada compared with the price of crude in the rest of Canada, possibly now different by as much as $3 a barrel, constitute a substantial disadvantage to the economy of those provinces and therefore an intensification of regional disparity? If there is a competitive edge one way, does the competitive edge not cut the other way?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question sounds rather like debate. Perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply briefly.

Mr. Gillespie: The government has made very clear, and the Prime Minister underlined this in his speech to the House the other evening, that future energy costs, particularly those related to oil, would be so organized that one would hope there would be a major advantage in terms of input and material costs to Canadian industry. In other words, prices would be allowed to rise to such a level that self-sufficiency in supply would be maintained but not to such a level as to reach the highest international prices pertaining at the time.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question following what may fairly be referred to as an irrelevant answer to my previous question.

An hon. Member: That was a debating point, not a question.

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the minister how he regards a set of industrial policies which he says is intended to fight regional disparity—he has said that is one of the set—as being coherent with a pricing policy for oil that provides a substantially higher cost for oil in the parts of Canada that suffer most from regional disparity? Will the minister reconcile those points?

Mr. Gillespie: I think that the long-term industrial development of Canada will be supported if we are able to obtain lower energy costs and lower oil costs for petrochemical industries and other energy intensive industries across this nation.

Mr. Hees: Get out your violin.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Central Nova on a supplementary and then the hon. member for Selkirk.

ACTION TO OFFSET EFFECT OF HIGHER OIL COST ON REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS IN EASTERN CANADA

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Has he a specific policy on regional development that would link energy commodity prices with regional development strategy? In other words, what initiatives has the minister taken to cope with the energy situation in eastern Canada in the context of DREE?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope the minister will be able to reply to this question briefly. It seems to me the hon. member is inviting a rather general statement which should be made on motions.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in replying as briefly as I can may I say that one of the criteria which will be definitely taken into account in the future is the whole question of operating costs in relation to the level of incentive grants and other assistance that is provided. In that context I have no doubt that this will be one of the main considerations that we will examine in cases where new applications for incentives come forward. It is quite possible that in our consultations with the provinces with regard to general help in regional development this may be one of the central considerations that they will bring forward. I am sure the Prime Minister will be doing the same at the first ministers' conference. We will consider these costs in order to keep eastern Canadian industry competitive.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NORAD—SPECIAL ALERT ORDERED BY PRESIDENT NIXON ON OCTOBER 25—DELAY IN INFORMING MINISTER

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Is the minister satisfied that the chief of the defence staff exercised good judgment in delaying for six hours informing the political authorities of the first change in alert status of a component of NORAD in 11 years, an inherently dangerous situation, and has the minister now issued new instructions to the chief of the Defence Staff and other senior officers to ensure that he will not be allowed to sleep through the next alert?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The first part of the hon. member's question is hardly in order. He is asking for an opinion. Perhaps the second part of the question might be replied to by the minister.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have every confidence in the defence chief—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Richardson: —and I think that circumstances have proven that he made the right decision.

Mr. Rowland: The minister informed us yesterday that NORAD headquarters in North Bay was notified of the American decision to go to Defcon III on October 25 about midnight and that the chief of the defence staff was not notified until about 2.18 a.m. Has the minister determined the reasons for this delay, what are those reasons, and what steps has the minister taken to ensure that such a delay does not occur in the future?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I think the verbal advice that came through to our NORAD headquarters was in advance of the main decision. It was a warning advice before the actual decision was taken. The chief of staff did in fact receive the information when the decision was taken.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will be recognized for a last supplementary and then the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

Mr. Rowland: Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that the deputy commander of NORAD is a Canadian officer and must have known almost immediately of the alert, has the minister determined why this information was not immediately transmitted to the Canadian chief of the defence staff? In effect, is our top officer in NORAD primarily accountable to the Canadian chief of the defence staff or to an American general?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I would say that the judgment made by our Canadian commander was the same one that our chief of staff made, that the information that had come to us did not relate directly to our Canadian forces.

AIR TRANSPORT

INQUIRY WHETHER NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES COMPLETED

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Transport.

Can he inform the House whether the negotiations with the United States concerning air transportation between Canada and the U.S. have been completed? If so, does he intend to make a statement in the House and to table the agreement that has been reached?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, negotiations with the United States have been completed, the document has been initialed by the head of each delegation; however, the American government and the Canadian cabinet have yet to ratify the agreement. When this is done, the agreement will become effective.

ENERGY

MEASURES TO COUNTERBALANCE HIGH PRICE OF PETROLEUM

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce regarding the situation prevailing in the province of Quebec.

Since crude oil prices are now higher in Quebec than in the provinces west of the Ottawa Valley and since those are international market prices, can the government assure the House that it is considering an industrial strategy to offset these higher prices?

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if I got the full import of the question. Perhaps the hon. member would like to restate his question.

[Translation]

Mr. Wagner: I will gladly do so, Mr. Speaker. My question concerns more particularly the situation existing in the province of Quebec.

Since the price of crude oil is now higher in Quebec than in the provinces west of the Ottawa Valley and that it is on par with world market prices, is the government in a position to give guarantees to the House concerning the establishment of an industrial strategy to counter the effects of this high price?

[English]

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, as I think my previous remarks made clear the long-term thrust is to secure for Canadian industry—

Mr. Stanfield: Long-term? We will all be dead.

Mr. Gillespie: —a cost of oil, and petroleum products that flow from oil, lower than the international price.

[Translation]

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary, because the minister addressed his answer to the long term policy. How about the short term?

What has the government done to lower Quebec oil prices below world market prices?

[English]

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the hon. member is talking about last week or the discussions that will be taking place in the near future.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for South Shore on a supplementary.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member for South Shore will allow me to interrupt for just a moment. The hon. member for Assiniboia rises on a point of order. I will return to the hon. member for South Shore.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is this. In view of the fact the Minister of Finance has tabled the Auditor General's report today, and in view of the fact it shows there has been a loss of parliamentary control over millions of dollars, I wonder whether the House would be prepared to revert to motions to allow the Treasury Board to make an explanation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for South Shore has the floor. That, of course, is not a point of order.

INQUIRY AS TO INDUSTRIAL STRATEGY TO OFFSET HIGHER OIL PRICES IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact prices for oil in the Atlantic provinces are at present higher than in the provinces west of the Ottawa Valley line, and noting also that these oil prices in Atlantic Canada are world market prices, does the government now have an industrial strategy in place aimed at offsetting these high prices and, if so, what is the general outline of this industrial strategy?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, that is entirely why the announcement was made some ten days ago by the government with respect to the elements of a national oil policy.

Mr. Crouse: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. When the Prime Minister spoke in the House on energy policy he stated:

We must in the long run allow prices to rise to a price high enough to allow development of the oil sands and other Canadian resources, but not one bit higher.

That, Mr. Speaker, is a statement of policy. We in Atlantic Canada accept the Prime Minister's word, but I should like to know what specific steps the government is now taking to bring oil price levels in the Atlantic provinces and in Quebec below world market prices, and when will these steps be implemented?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, in the last ten days I think the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has outlined a number of measures including the extension of the pipeline to Montreal—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gillespie: —to bring about self-sufficiency for the first time for Canadian users of oil.

Mr. Hees: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is rising on a point of order. This will be the third point of order within the first ten minutes of the question period. I think it is much easier to ask a question. If the hon. member has a point of order he will be recognized for that purpose. I am sure it will be a genuine point of order, after which I will see the hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, it is a genuine point of order. You have cautioned the House about spending too much time on points of order during the question period, but the reason is that ministers give no answers whatsoever. We have to ask supplementary after supplementary after supplementary and we still do not get the information that we have a right to get on behalf of the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: We are getting no information.

Mr. Lawrence: You cannot get blood out of a stone.

● (1500)

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce if he can indicate to the House how a pipeline that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has said will carry 250,000 barrels a day will take care of the price in an area of Canada that consumes about one million barrels a day?

Some hon. Members: Answer!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kootenay West. I appreciate that a number of hon. members are seeking supplementary questions. The Chair, of course, is quite prepared to return to this subject and allow further supplementaries on this matter.

REQUEST THAT EXPORT OF PROPANE BE LIMITED TO ENSURE ADEQUATE SUPPLIES FOR DOMESTIC NEEDS

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or his parliamentary secretary. In view of the fact that propane is used widely in rural homes and communities, especially in western Canada, and is becoming increasingly difficult to obtain or to afford because of unprecedented demand from United States buyers and the sharp increase in price, is the National Energy Board taking steps to limit the export of propane to ensure that there are adequate supplies to meet our domestic needs and, if not, what action is being taken by the government to ensure adequate supplies for Canadian users?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the minister I will be pleased to take note of that question and refer it to him.

EXPORT CONTROLS ON REFINED PETROLEUM PRODUCTS FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister received any information from United States authorities on two questions asked yesterday, the first whether Canada was included in the export controls banning shipment of refined petroleum products which began last Friday, as announced by the United States energy czar, Mr. William Simon, and, second, as to the possible curtailment of the shipment to B.C. of oil products from the Atlantic Richfield refinery at Cherry Point which means no shipments from December 16 to January 1 and after that date shipments cut to 80 per cent of normal flow?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think I can on behalf of the minister reply to the first part of the question. I think the minister answered that question in the House yesterday, or at the end of last week, when he said there had been discussions with the United States authorities on this particular point and, indeed, that representations had been made by Canada. I do not think the situation is fully clarified yet. As to the second part of the question, I will take it as notice.

WELFARE

DAY-CARE CENTRES—INQUIRY RESPECTING WITHDRAWAL BY QUEBEC OF VETO ON FEDERAL SUBSIDIES

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Since the Quebec Minister of Social Affairs declared before the Legislative Assembly that the Quebec government is financially helpless in the face of the day care centre problem, could the minister tell the House whether the veto of the Quebec government to prevent the federal government from subsidizing day care centres under LIP has been withdrawn?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think that the problem of the financial helplessness of provincial governments depends on the priorities established by them. As to the second part of the question, I think it concerns the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who is responsible for local initiative projects.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I would like to direct a supplementary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Could he tell whether he had discussions with his Quebec counterpart during the last six months on the veto I referred to in my previous question? If so, is there any agreement on this matter?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I think I remember I had an informal discussion on this subject during the last six months. The agreement was that the federal government would not approve local initiative projects for day care centres unless it had some guarantee that they would be financed by the provinces upon termination of the LIP financing. Quite a few projects were approved under LIP on the basis of that understanding, I believe.

ENERGY

USE OF CANADIAN SHIPS TO MOVE WESTERN OIL TO EASTERN CANADA

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to questions I have previously directed to the Minister of Transport on this subject. I thank him for the detailed information he sent me today respecting the registry of ships carrying oil from the west coast to the east coast. In view of the fact that of the 12 ships being used for this purpose none is of Canadian registry, is the minister considering any program that might be introduced rapidly to stimulate Canadian activity in the movement of oil from British Columbia to the east coast?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wrote a letter to the hon. gentleman in answer to his question yesterday about the number of ships being used to transport oil. There are only two such Canadian ships, which are not available at this time. For the future, all depends on government policy regarding a merchant marine.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PROPOSED STRIP MINING OF COAL—REQUEST THAT MEASURES BE TAKEN TO PROTECT ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the minister responsible for the Cape Breton Development Corporation. In light of reports that the Cape Breton Development Corporation is planning a strip mining venture, can the minister advise if, first, this is correct and, second, if it is, can he assure the House that no strip mining for coal will take place by Devco unless proper and adequate plans are laid down and duly announced for a program of backfilling and reforestation?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, to the extent that I am technically competent to do so, I can report to the hon. member that I understand this is in contemplation but so far as I am aware it has not reached anything close to the decision-making point. I can also assure him that the matter will be pursued much more thoroughly before anything goes ahead. I have no doubt that, should it go ahead, conservation measures will be taken. If he will permit me, I will take the balance of the question as notice and send him a written answer.

Mr. Muir: In view of the very bad experience some years ago in Cape Breton connected with strip mining—I thank the minister for his reply—will he assure me that he will bring back a report, as already intimated, affirming that no strip mining will take place unless proper measures are carried out so that the topography and the environment of the area will not be ruined?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. To repeat my earlier comment, I do not think I am competent to talk about the technical side of it, but I will provide a written answer and I hope it will be satisfactory to the hon. member.

PROVISION OF OIL SUPPLY TO INDUSTRY IN CARLETON-CHARLOTTE TO PREVENT LAY-OFF OF WORKERS

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to earlier questions by the hon. member for Central Nova and the Leader of the Opposition. Inasmuch as the international exchange of petroleum products has been interrupted by the present supply situation, and because it is estimated that some 2,500 people will be unemployed in my constituency on or about January 25 if supply cannot be renewed, does the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce have any plans to put these people back to work since there is no oil coming from Montreal?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, if the situation is as serious as the hon. member has indicated, I hope he will make every effort to see that the allocation bill is passed by the House just as fast as possible.

ALLEGED SHORTAGE OF FERTILIZER—REQUEST THAT MAJOR SUPPLIERS APPEAR BEFORE HOUSE COMMITTEE

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. As it now appears evident, according to reports from dealers across Canada, that there will be a serious shortage of all types of fertilizer, would the minister reconvene the agricultural committee of the House and request the major suppliers of fertilizer to appear before the committee, thus allowing that committee to ascertain whether a shortage faces Canadians in the coming year and what action needs to be taken?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, first I differ with the premise of the question because I do not foresee any shortage of fertilizer. In some instances over 500 per cent more fertilizer has been delivered than at any time in Canada's history to Canadian farmers. I am still optimistic that supplies will be adequate to meet the demands of the producers. We are still having ongoing meetings with fertilizer companies, suppliers, etc. The problem now mainly concerns distribution and the obtaining of some of the ingredients that go into the making of the final product.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. I ask the minister whether the industry has informed him of pending shortages, especially of nitrogen fertilizer and anhydrous ammonia, and whether some 60,000 tons of raw product are still being held back because of lack of railway cars?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt there is a transportation problem, but at this time of the year there is very little fertilizer being used; it is mostly being put in store. As far as that goes, we have asked farmers to do this. I am optimistic. Last year we asked them to do so later than this year, and they were supplied with 50 per cent more fertilizer than ever before in the nation's history. We are doing everything humanly possible to make our producers the most efficient in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Looking around the House, hon. members will notice there are about 50 members rising for supplementaries or questions. Obviously most of them will be disappointed. If members have questions that could wait until tomorrow, perhaps they would wait until tomorrow. We still have supplementaries on this matter. I will recognize the hon. member for Lisgar, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris and then the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway.

Mr. Murta: I again ask the Minister of Agriculture whether the industry has informed him of a pending shortage, especially of anhydrous ammonia and nitrogen fertilizer, and can he also tell us what magnitude of price increase the farmers can expect this coming spring?

Mr. Whelan: As hon. members know, Mr. Speaker, manufacturers of fertilizer are one of the largest users of energy. For example, one pound of fertilizer requires 60,000 Btu's, and one pound of steel requires 20,000 Btu's. I am told there may be a shortage of nitrogen, especially in British Columbia where the government of the province saw fit to raise the price of natural gas to the industrial consumer by 81 per cent. These things have to be taken into consideration. There are other forms of nitrogen. If there is a shortage of anhydrous, other forms will be available.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in connection with the answers given by the Minister of Agriculture. They were specifically non-answers. I believe the minister does not have the information.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Murta: The minister is not aware of what is going on in connection with the shortage of fertilizer for the agricultural industry.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would point out that that is not a point of order but a point of debate. If hon. members want the Chair to recognize the Minister of Agriculture to reply to the hon. member's point of order I will do so, but I am not sure what that will accomplish.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, speaking to the point of order, I challenge anyone to prove that this Minister of Agriculture has not had more conferences and deliberations with the fertilizer industry of this country in the past year than anybody in Canada and has gathered more information re the fertilizer supply situation than ever before.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: It is obvious to me that the hon. member knows a lot less about the real fertilizer situation in this country than the false one.

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO STABILIZE PRICE OF FERTILIZERS AND ENSURE ADEQUACY OF SUPPLY

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the minister's familiarity with fertilizer and all aspects of the problem, will he inform the House whether he is taking any action to deal with the inflated price across the border, that is being made available to Canadian manufacturers of fertilizer, a price that is attracting more and more Canadian production; and what action is he taking to ensure adequate supplies for Canadian farmers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): In reply to the hon. member's question, Mr. Speaker, I said a week ago that I hoped to present to the House a document or paper on the actual position of fertilizer manufacturing and the potential production in this country. I intend to do that. As far as I am concerned, what the hon. member has said is erroneous. We know that the manufacture and distribution of fertilizer is now greater in Canada than ever before. These plants were built in the first instance because of export demand. They could not have operated without exports. This government has taken action in the past to guarantee that when products are needed by Canadians they will be available.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN PRICE OF SUGAR—NEGOTIATIONS FOR WORLD AGREEMENT

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I think we have had enough fertilizer for now. My question is for the Minister of Finance or whichever minister is responsible. In view of the recent statement of the vice-president of Redpath Sugar Limited that the rise in the wholesale price of sugar of $1.15 a hundredweight reflects a jump in world sugar prices on the London commodity market, can the minister tell the House if any negotiations are in progress for a world sugar agreement?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there have been negotiations with regard to a world sugar agreement. Those negotiations were not successful and efforts are being made to get negotiations under way again. That is the current situation.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): I was afraid I would get that kind of answer. I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. What plans has the minister, in the meantime, to protect the Canadian consumer from the effects of this assault on one of the basic elements in the Canadian diet?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker—

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): I am sorry. I had better put it again.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the question has not been entirely asked. The hon. member will be given an extra few moments to complete the question.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Pending a world sugar agreement, what plans has the minister to protect the Canadian consumer from the effects of this assault on one of the basic elements in the Canadian diet?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for that useful question. I have been consulting on this matter with my colleagues, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

LABOUR RELATIONS

RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—INQUIRY WHEN ARBITRATOR'S REPORT WILL BE MADE

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that three months have already elapsed since an arbitrator was appointed to arbitrate the rail dispute, and the fact that there is extreme concern among railroaders and Canadians in general about the results of that arbitration, can the minister give us a date on which the arbitrator's decision will be tabled?

Mr. Fairweather: The papers say January 16.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think hon. members will realize that Mr. Justice Emmett Hall has had a very arduous task indeed, with about 30 volumes of evidence to study prior to making his report. I understand he will have the report ready about the middle of January.

FISHERIES

LICENSING PROGRAM FOR FISHING CRAFT—REQUEST TO DEFER IMPLEMENTATION—SCOPE OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the fact the minister's statement of November 14 with regard to the licensing of fishing craft is causing widespread concern and a lot of uneasiness and frustration among fishermen, particularly because of the fact they were not fully consulted on this matter, is the minister prepared to defer the implementation of that program until such time as the fishermen are acquainted with its implications and possibly may have some input into the regulations?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member should consult his provincial minister of fisheries who thinks that the policy and the licensing program are very good.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, I am not concerned about what the provincial minister of fisheries thinks. I am asking the federal Minister of Fisheries. In view of the fact this announced program has caused a lot of concern, will the minister agree to defer it until the fishermen are fully aware of the implications?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, teams are going around to the fishing communities and describing the assistance available to the fishing industry as well as discussing any other matters about which the fishermen are concerned.

● (1520)

Mr. Carter: Since one of the concerns expressed by the fishermen has to do with unemployment insurance benefits, and inasmuch as the minister's parliamentary secretary said a few nights ago that small boats under 35 feet in length would not have to be licensed and that these people would be allowed to fish, can the minister tell us whether the UIC plan as it refers to fishermen will be applied to those who fish from small boats, or whether it will be restricted to professional, full-time fishermen as defined by the minister?

[Mr. Gray.]

Mr. Davis: I know of no imminent change in the administration of unemployment insurance as it applies to fishermen.

AIR TRANSPORT

REFUSAL OF FUEL TO CANADIAN PLANES AT UNITED STATES AIRPORTS—REQUEST THAT CANADA TAKE SIMILAR ACTION

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that Canadian airlines are still being refused fuel at United States airports, will the government cease allowing Unites States airlines to refuel in Canada, as they seem to be doing excessively, until an agreement is reached between the two countries to solve this problem?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I doubt that in fact Canadian airlines are treated any worse in the United States than American airlines are treated here.

[English]

Mr. Reynolds: I did not get an answer to my question, Mr. Speaker. Pacific Western Airlines are being refused fuel in Hawaii. Until they are allowed to get fuel in Hawaii, will the Canadian government stop allowing United Airlines and Western Airlines to refuel in Vancouver and Calgary?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, doubtless such incidents have occurred and will still occur in the future. In fact, several American airlines are being refused fuel here in Canada.

OIL—POSITION OF SAUDI ARABIA RESPECTING SHIPMENT TO CANADA

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Since the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has stated recently that Canada was not on the list of countries penalized by Saudi Arabia, as regards our imports of oil, that the Department of External Affairs had sent Mr. Gignac as ambassador in order to clarify the problem and that importing companies state that they still face difficulties in getting oil, can the minister say whether Mr. Gignac has reached the core of the problem and knows when this question will be settled?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As my colleague said in reply to a similar question yesterday, the information we have from the government of Saudi Arabia is that Canada is not on the boycott list.

EXTENSION OF OIL PIPELINE TO MONTREAL—ROUTE TO BE FOLLOWED—POSSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources perhaps I could direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It arises from the statement yesterday by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that there is still a serious possibility that the oil pipeline extension to Montreal will follow a route through Sault Ste. Marie. Could the minister tell us today, in light of meetings which were, I understand, held yesterday, whether the Sault Ste. Marie line is still a serious possibility, or does Interprovincial Pipeline now say it is convinced that Sarnia is the only way for the line to go?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I believe the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has indicated that he will be making a statement on this matter in the near future.

Mr. Stevens: I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister. Can the right hon. gentleman inform the House whether the government of Canada has offered any financial assistance to Interprovincial to help construct the line and, if so, what is the extent of such assistance offered?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The answer to that question, Mr. Speaker, is no.

SOCIAL SECURITY

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE TO HELP PEOPLE PAY HIGHER COST OF FUEL OIL

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Can he tell us how the provinces reacted to the suggestion which he made to them three weeks ago that the federal government would share the additional welfare costs for needy persons in order to help them pay the cost of fuel oil this winter?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, only one Atlantic province, Prince Edward Island, has replied to this date and its answer was that it would increase welfare payments by 10 per cent starting on January 1.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Does he intend contacting again the provinces which have not yet replied to his first suggestion?

Mr. Lalonde: I do not think it is necessary, Mr. Speaker. I sent very explicit telegrams to my colleagues and I imagine that, as a result, they are now trying to take action especially in connection with those 175 million dollars for which the provinces will benefit through the increase in equalization payments and an increase of 115 million dollars after the taxation of family allowances.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENTS TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE REGULATIONS TO ENCOURAGE FISHERMEN TO REMAIN IN INDUSTRY

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to a question asked by the hon. member for St. John's West. It is addressed to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the fact that some of the best fishermen in the Altantic provinces are turning down the fishing industry altogether—these are men who work mainly in longliners valued up to $100,000 and carrying a crew of five or six people—can he tell us what progress has been made in connection with amendments to be brought forward to the unemployment insurance regulations as they apply to fishermen, to eliminate the disincentive which presently exists and is driving fishermen out of business?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): I am sure that if there are any amendments to be announced they will be announced by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Lundrigan: Can the minister tell us what has happened in the three years he has been studying unemployment insurance for fishermen? What about the consistent responses he and his colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, have given to the effect that they are consulting and planning to bring in changes? Next year he will not get thousands of fishermen to go fishing because of the disincentives which are presently causing so much concern. What changes does he intend to bring about?

Mr. Davis: As the hon. member knows, payments to fishermen under the act have increased substantially, as they have to other workers in Canada.

PROTECTION OF PRIVACY BILL

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT MOTION TO REJECT SENATE AMENDMENT

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): My question is directed to the Minister of Justice. In view of the minister's advice to the judicial committee of the other place that he could live with the notice provision in the wiretapping bill, and in view of the fact the other place gave this bill consideration for only 1½ days whereas this House has given it consideration over a period of years, will the minister introduce a motion calling for the rejection of the Senate amendment so that the other place might be given an opportunity to reconsider its position and also to hear witnesses other than police officers?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): There may have been a few too many "in view ofs" and "whereases" in the hon. member's question, but I can assure him I hope to see this House consider further very soon the important bill on privacy.

Mr. Leggatt: In the event this House rejects the Senate amendment, would the Minister of Justice give an assurance that he will fight for the bill and all its amendments—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's supplementary is hypothetical.

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): I have a related question for the House leader. In view of the exclusion of Bill C-176 from the shopping list which the minister gave the House last night, would he say whether or not the government has decided to scrap this important legislation? Has it fallen into the dangerous trap set by persons in the other place who are really not interested in protecting the privacy of the individual?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): I was not aware I was giving a shopping list last night. I did indicate that the bills I would call today and subsequently were the election expenses and the export tax bills. I have always included the privacy bill among the legislative items I wanted to get through this session, and I still regard it as essential even though when I gave my list last Thursday I did not expect it would be back in the House again.

Mr. Atkey: Would the government House leader indicate what priority he gives to Bill C-176 in the context of the other pieces of legislation he has mentioned? Would he undertake to consult his Liberal colleagues in the Senate to ensure that they understand the bill and that they will not blindly thwart the wishes of the majority of the members of this House?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is hardly a question. The hon. member for New Westminster is rising on a question of privilege.

● (1530)

Mr. Leggatt: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question of privilege is in response to the question of privilege that the Minister of Justice raised on December 13, in which he asked me to apologize for an allegation I had made at that time, or which could be inferred, that he had flouted the will of the House in regard to consideration of the wiretapping bill in the other place. I did not rise immediately because I had not had an opportunity to read the evidence given in the other place. I have now had an opportunity of looking at the evidence and I do tender to the minister my apology in that there was no apparent attempt to flout the will of the House in the minister's evidence before the Senate committee.

[Mr. Leggatt.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member, if he will resume his seat. The hon. member is rising on a question of privilege which relates to a statement made before the House. The hon. member says he has now had an opportunity to look at evidence or at other documents. On this basis, if he had wanted to rise on a question of privilege it would have been incumbent upon him, according to the Standing Orders, to give notice to the Chair. I have received no such notice. I hope the hon. member will not pursue the matter at this time without the notice required by the Standing Orders. Orders of the day.

The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate rises on a point of order.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, my point of order has to do with the proposed future government business. Today in the question period several questions were raised about unemployment insurance for fishermen. I wonder whether I could ask the House leader, on my point of order, if he would indicate whether there are any plans, in view of the fact that today many hundreds of fishermen, some of them professional fishermen who have maybe $100,000 invested in fishing equipment, are leaving the fishery—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member resume his seat. The hon. member seeks the floor on a point of order, but he is asking a question and making a speech or representation at the same time. If the hon. member has a point of order, he should indicate immediately what it is, and of course he will be recognized for that purpose. I will then try to ascertain whether he has a point of order on which a ruling ought to be made.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I do not have the facility to put my point of order in succinct enough terms so that it will be understood, without some preliminary introduction. There are four or five very serious aspects of the unemployment insurance regulations as they pertain to fishermen. The government has promised amendments to the act. I should like to know whether the House leader can indicate if any plans have been cogitated upon by him, the manpower minister and the Minister of Fisheries to bring in changes to the UIC regulations and amendments to the act that will enable—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member. This is obviously not a point of order. The hon. member is asking a question, and I wonder how it qualifies as a point of order. The question may be very legitimate and perhaps the hon. member could be recognized tomorrow when I will cast an eye in his direction and give him the opportunity of asking the question.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I thought it was fairly customary, based on precedent, to inquire about future government business coming before the House. This is an urgent matter since the House could rise any day now. Has the government any plans to bring forward legislation or amendments to enable the fishermen of the Atlantic region in particular to stay in their fishing boats?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ELECTION EXPENSES

PROVISION OF PAYMENTS TO CANDIDATES AND REIMBURSEMENT OF PARTIES FOR CERTAIN BROADCASTING TIME

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-203, to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order before we proceed to consider any aspects of this bill. My point of order relates to the expenditure of public funds, as provided in two places in the bill. Perhaps it is worth while to look at the recommendation of His Excellency the Governor General, which I understand is the foundation for the expenditure of public funds, to be found at the front of the bill. So far as it relates to the reimbursement of candidates' expenditures, it says that the reimbursement shall be "to the extent of 16 cents for each of the first 25,000 names appearing on the preliminary lists of electors for their electoral districts, and 14 cents for each additional name". Then there are other reimbursement provisions, but these are the ones to which I refer.

At page 25 of the bill we have the clause where an assessment is made of what the reimbursements shall be. Paragraph (b)(i), commencing at line 13, provides that the reimbursements shall be—> —the postage costs of mailing one item, not exceeding one ounce in weight, by first-class mail to each person whose name appears on the preliminary lists of electors for the candidate's electoral district,

> (ii) Eight cents for each of the first twenty-five thousand names appearing on the preliminary lists of electors for the candidate's electoral district, and
> (iii) Six cents for each name in excess of twenty-five thousand appearing on the preliminary lists of electors for the candidate's electoral district—

The complaint I have about the recommendation of His Excellency not having been followed related to subparagraph (i). True, at the moment the postage cost of mailing a piece of first-class mail not exceeding one ounce is eight cents, but there is no guarantee anywhere that it will be eight cents forever. In fact, with the escalation of various cost items, and in view of the avowed intention of the Department of the Post Office, it will not be eight cents but will increase in the future to something else.

To the extent that the charge does increase, it will then be in violation of His Excellency's recommendation concerning 16 cents for each of the first 25,000 names of the voters' list. The combination of the postage cost of mailing one item for everybody on the voters' list and the eight cents additional for the first 25,000 names on the list may well exceed, and probably will exceed, the 16 cents confinement contained in the recommendation of His Excellency. I would appreciate it if this aspect could be looked at and some determination made, not necessarily now but when we get to the appropriate stage.

The other point of order I want to raise regarding the expenditure of public funds not authorized by His Excellency relates to page 23 of the bill, where in subsection (3) of clause 9, halfway down the page, there are some words added by the committee, and it is this part that offends against the recommendation of His Excellency. The proposed subsection (7) reads as follows:

> Each auditor's report received by a returning officer from an official agent along with the summary of the return respecting election expenses to which it relates shall be published—

Now comes the part which the committee added.

> —at the expense of Chief Electoral Officer on behalf of the Crown in right of Canada in one newspaper published or circulated in the electoral district wherein the election was held.

When the bill was given first reading the words "at the expense of the Chief Electoral Officer," and so on, were not included; they were added by the committee. I think this provision has to be read in conjunction with the Canada Elections Act. The provision therein that is to remain, which is subsection (6) of section 63 at page 154 of the act, talks about the candidate's return of election expenses and provides:

> A returning officer, within ten days after he receives from an official agent any return or supplementary return respecting election expenses, shall publish at the expense of the candidate a summary thereof, in the form prescribed by the Chief Electoral Officer—

And so on. The key words there are "shall publish at the expense of the candidate a summary thereof". On first reading Bill C-203 contained a provision in respect of the auditor's report to the effect that each auditor's report received by the returning officer, from an official agent, will be published, with a summary of the return in respect of election expenses to which the return relates. I submit that there is no provision in respect of who should pay for the publication of the auditor's report and we cannot now say that this shall be made a burden on the taxpayer or on the public treasury, which are one and the same.

I suggest this partly because no reference was contained in the original bill in respect of who should pay the cost of publication, and partly because the words in the original bill suggest that the cost or the expense attached to the publication of the auditor's report shall be the candidate's. I suggest that the auditor's report is to be published along with the expense return. This argument is supported by the fact that in the recommendation of His Excellency at the front of the bill there is no reference to the payment from public funds of the cost of publishing the auditor's report in respect of a candidate's expenses.

Inasmuch as there is no reference to the payment of these expenses, I do not think it would be appropriate for us to amend the bill in order to reimburse a candidate in respect of publication expenses. I think we must consider this bill in accordance with the recommendation of His Excellency the Governor General, and it is very specific in its terms and contains no reference at all to reimbursement for publication of an auditor's report.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The point made by the hon. member is of interest and it will be considered by the Chair later today. I will look at the "blues" later this afternoon and perhaps I will look at Hansard tomorrow to determine whether the points made by the hon. member are in order. It may well be that the report received by the committee, if it is found by the Chair that there is an irregularity of such importance that would indicate the committee has gone beyond the powers granted it by the House in amending the bill as returned to the House, in that it does not conform with the recommendation, should be returned to the committee for further consideration. I should point out that it might be embarrassing if the House spent some days considering a bill in the event the Chair should rule that the bill be returned to the committee. I think it might be wise to have an early look at the points raised by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), and I can assure the hon. member that the Chair will do so later this afternoon.

For the moment the House will proceed to the consideration of motion No. 1 which stands in the name of the hon. member for Skeena and is as follows:

That Bill C-203, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, be amended by deleting the words "Election Expenses Act" in Clause 1 and substituting therefor the words:

"Election Expenses and Subsidies to Political Parties Act."

This is a motion which seeks to amend the title of the bill. The precedent for this was set, to some extent at least, when the House was considering the wiretapping bill and a similar motion to amend the title of that bill. That motion was postponed, in the same way as similar motions are postponed in the committee of the whole, for consideration at a later date. I would therefore suggest that motion No. 1 be allowed to stand in the same way as followed normally in committee.

I suggest that motions Nos. 2 and 30 could be grouped for the purpose of debate; motion No. 2 standing in the name of the hon. member for Skeena and the motion No. 30 in the name of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), both of which substitute the words "Her Majesty in right of Canada".

The next item for consideration would be motion No. 3, and I would suggest that motions Nos. 3, 4, 5, and 6 should be considered together. This is the only grouping the Chair has attempted to make, with the assistance of the gentlemen at the table, because there are so many that it is practically impossible to present a group which would be satisfactory to all hon. members, particularly those who have proposed the motions.

In view of the fact that there are 42 motions for consideration, I would invite hon. members to be as relevant as possible, keeping in mind the Standing Orders and the procedures of this House in respect of several motions. If we had a general third reading debate on each of the 42 motions, we might still be here for Christmas of 1974. Therefore, I would seek the co-operation of hon. members in respect of the relevancy of their remarks to the motions being considered by the House. I would propose, therefore, that we start with the consideration of motion No. 2, in the name of the hon. member for Skeena, and motion No. 30, in the name of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, as follows:

No. 2.

That Bill C-203, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, be amended by deleting the words "a government, Crown corporation, or any other public agency" in paragraph (h) of the definition of "election expenses" in clause 2 and substituting the words:

"Her Majesty in right of Canada."

No. 30.

That Bill C-203, to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, be amended in subclause 9(2) by deleting the word "governments" in paragraph 63(1)(e) and substituting the words:

"Her Majesty in right of Canada"

and by deleting the word "government" in paragraph 63(1)(f) and substituting therefor the words:

"Her Majesty in right of Canada".

Mr. Terry O'Connor (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I should raise this point of order now in respect of motion No. 13 in the name of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), but I would suggest that it is procedurally out of order in that it is contrary to Standing Order 22 of our rules and procedures which recognizes the constitutional right of members of the other place to amend provisions in a bill approved by the House of Commons. For that reason I suggest that the proposed motion by the hon. member is contrary to our Standing Orders.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but it is my hope that we will not take up time considering procedural matters. We have several other motions to consider in addition to the one put in question by the hon. member. While I am in sympathy with the point of order he has raised, the Chair will take the point into consideration when we reach motion No. 13. I would suggest that is the time to raise this point of order. The Chair will hear the remarks of the hon. member at that time. In the meantime, I will consider the hon. member's remarks as a caution and I will keep his objection in the back of my mind for further consideration. Is the hon. member for Skeena rising on a point of order?

Mr. Howard: Not really, Mr. Speaker. I would be prepared to go ahead with the consideration of motion No. 1, if that is the wish of the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: The suggestion of the Chair is that we proceed to consideration of motions 2 and 30.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved:

No. 2.

That Bill C-203, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, be amended by deleting the words "a government, Crown corporation, or any other public agency" in paragraph (h) of the definition of "election expenses" in clause 2 and substituting the words:

"Her Majesty in right of Canada".

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni) moved:

No. 30.

That Bill C-203, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, be amended in subclause 9(2) by deleting the word "governments" in paragraph 63(1)(e) and substituting the words:

"Her Majesty in right of Canada"

and by deleting the word "government" in paragraph 63(1)(f) and substituting therefor the words:

"Her Majesty in right of Canada".

Mr. Howard: As a preliminary, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the hon. member for Halton (Mr. O'Connor), through you, that when he comes back to his point of order he get the accurate numerical designation of the motion in question.

Dealing very briefly with motion No. 2, it arises from an amendment the committee made to clause 2 which appears first in the bill as a definition of "election expenses." Clause 2 is a very complex definition, as members of the standing committee realized because of the great deal of time spent in an effort to ascertain what exactly was meant by "election expenses" as proposed by the government. In this regard we should express our appreciation to several gentlemen of the justice department, Mr. Blue, Mr. Gibson, the Chief Electoral Officer, Jean Marc Hamel, and others for the excellent analysis they gave the committee of the meaning of the meaning of the words "election expenses" as contained in this bill.

I think the difficulty arose—and it has yet to arise for members who were not on the committee or who have not yet met that difficulty in respect of election expenses—in persons' minds as to what in any specific case is meant by or sought to be included in the question of election expenses. It is not what we normally think; it is not necessarily an election expense if one makes an expenditure of money because under this definition some moneys expended, put out, transferred or paid out of the treasury of the particular registered political party would not be classified as an election expense. It also included things to which it is difficult to attach a monetary value, such as services donated or provided.

There was a great deal of concern in the committee about what value you attach to a service that has been donated or provided to a registered party or candidate. How would one make the computation in respect of whether the services or goods provided the candidate or the political party were charged for at a rate less than what the rate would be for those particular goods or services normally or in the normal conduct of a person's business? There is the question of how one determines what the normal cost would be of goods and services that might be provided if they are provided at less than whatever the commercial value might be.

All these concepts and ideas are included in the first part of the definition of election expenses and are classified therefore as a cost. The draftsmen of the bill—and I really cannot understand why this was done—then proceeded to use this phrase of generality in legal draftsmanship, namely, "without limiting the generality of the foregoing" as meaning certain things; then they proceed to spell them out as if they were not spelled out in the first definition. They seem, then, to say that election expenses, if one did not understand it from the first part of the definition, means the cost of acquiring the right to the use of broadcasting facilities or any broadcasting undertaking and the right to run an advertisement in a publication. These are considered to be election expenses and a cost either to the party or to the candidate.

Then there is the cost of acquiring meeting space, providing light refreshment, material of a promotional nature and the normal things that take place during an election campaign in which a party or a candidate becomes involved, such as running advertising in newspapers or on radio and television, holding meetings and distributing literature in an attempt to get a point of view across to the general public. These are the normal, natural and traditional approaches which result in expenditures and I thought they were included in the earlier definition, but apparently the people who drafted the bill felt this was not the case and wanted to spell it out with more particularity and make it more clear. However, in the process I think they made it a bit more confusing. As a result, we have confusion in respect of what election expenses include, because they obviously do not include every cent of money expended and obviously do not include things which cannot be identified. This is where we get to what I would call the addition. It is paragraph (h) on page 2 of the bill as revised by the committee.

Then we come to those items which are difficult to assess in terms of value. This includes, and this is where the first amendment comes in, " 'election expenses' means" certain things. In paragraph (h) this includes the cost of goods or services provided by a government, Crown corporation or any other public agency when such costs are incurred for a purpose set out in this definition. At this stage I shall not bother reading all the parts which were added, but they were all companion to an attempt to understand what was meant by "election expenses" in the first instance.

Apart from the examination made by the special committee of this House, the only person I know of in recent time who has examined this subject matter is Professor Khayyam Z. Paltiel, of Carleton University, who delivered a paper to the Specialist Panel on Political Finance of the Ninth World Congress of the International Political Science Association in Montreal, August 19 to 25 of this year. Professor Paltiel did a tremendous amount of work in an effort to discover what election expenses registered parties have incurred, because the law up until now has not required such disclosure by political parties. I am now speaking in terms of what are referred to as registered political parties.

With the authentication of the Chief Electoral Officer, the name of a party can be listed. There is provision in the act on how one goes about this so that the name may be placed on the registry. However, up until now these groups or parties have not been required to make any report to anybody about election expenditures. In fact, in one instance a particular political party did not even make this kind of disclosure to its own membership. It did not disclose what it expended on an election campaign. We have the notable distinction of having had in office for too long in British Columbia a party under the designated label of Social Credit. I do not say that with any sense of offending any gentlemen who belong to the Social Credit party because there are two distinct types or elements involved in social credit.

This party in the province of British Columbia consistently refused to report to its own membership at its annual conventions what moneys it took in for the purpose of an election campaign and what moneys it dispensed in the pursuit of the election campaign. So political parties have not been required to disclose to their supporters, or to anybody, their election expenses and I have pointed out one instance in which a party would not even disclose what was going on to its own members. There were two sets of books involved and only the leader of their party knew where the other set of books was. Nobody else in the organization knew anything at all about it. However, Professor Paltiel, insofar as the federal parties are concerned—in fact he mentions it in his paper—wishes to express thanks and appreciation to various executive officers of the particular parties for the information with which they provided him. This is in reference No. 5 on page 34 of that paper. It is important that I quote him so that we understand what we are trying to do in terms of election expenses. He writes:

The author wishes to thank numerous Liberal, Progressive Conservative, and New Democratic Party officials for their generous help in the preparation of this paper and accompanying studies. In particular he is grateful to John M. Godfrey, QC., chairman of the treasury committee and Blair Williams, national director of the Liberal Party of Canada.

I am told by my colleagues who know that area of Canada fairly well that the name of John M. Godfrey is preceded by the title "Senator." He is in the other place, a former bagman of the Liberal Party. The Liberal collection agent is now in the Senate—being paid, incidentally, from public funds to carry on the program for a registered political party. The professor goes on to express his appreciation and thanks to Finlay MacDonald, national campaign chairman, Malcolm Wickson and Mr. Curley of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, as well as Mr. Clifford Scotton, federal secretary of the NDP for his unstinting help over the years. Professor Paltiel was able to obtain from those persons, and probably from others because he says he wishes to thank "numerous Liberal, PC and NDP officials" and bring together in one paper information about expenditures and incomes of political parties that has not until now been available to anyone.

I know that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) on a number of occasions in committee, in speaking about another aspect of the bill said that nobody knew of the financial involvement of political parties at the national level, that no one had this information and that it has never been brought together. For instance, he did not know what it was with respect to his own party. I assume that the people to whom Professor Paltiel spoke, the people to whom he gave special accolades for their help with respect to this paper, told him precisely what the truth was. They had nothing to hide. He documented it in here. His opinion—and this is the only one of which I know—is based upon a very careful analysis of the value and the impact of a federal election campaign.

It is his opinion that the value that accrues to a political party at the national level during an election campaign, the value that comes to the political party from the fact that that party forms the government, is in the neighbourhood of a quarter of a million dollars. In other words, the mere fact of being in office, with the facilities that are available—and Professor Paltiel spells them out; he talks in terms of facilities such as government aircraft and cabinet ministers travelling on government aircraft from one place to another—has a value attached to it. The government employs propagandists, loosely called speechwriters, to write speeches, to prepare press releases, to engage in assessments and in conducting polls of opinion in the country about how the party is doing.

Officials who do that sort of work are paid out of the public treasury, and Professor Paltiel puts the costs all together and concludes that they amount to something in the neighbourhood of $250,000. Perhaps it would be worth while to read what he says. The following appears on page 9:

At the very least part of the substantial differences in the cost of the leader's tour and administrative costs of the party as compared with parallel Progressive Conservative expenses may be accounted for in this manner. In all, these unrequited services probably benefited the Liberal party by a sum not far short of $250,000 which should be added to the total in the aforementioned table.

On the previous page he sets out a table of the expenditures of the Liberal Party for such things as the leader's tour and expenses for television, the printed media and the like.

This amendment which the committee made includes an amendment proposed by the Progressive Conservative Party, specifically the amendment of the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick). The amendment, which the committee accepted, said that the costs of goods and services provided by a government Crown corporation or any other public agency have to be included in what are election expenses. The amendment that I seek to make here, in so far as the first part is concerned, is to remove the words "a government Crown corporation or any other public agency" and replace them with the words "Her Majesty in right of Canada".

My reason for doing that is as follows. The word "government" has extremely broad application and includes a provincial government. It is true that some provincial governments have in the past exerted some of their energies at the federal level toward the party to which they belong. I am quite sure that that has occurred. Governments also include municipal governments and regional districts. In my estimation they include school boards, school districts and hospital districts organized under provincial law. The amendment that I propose, and the other one that is proposed which is a companion to this for a later part of the bill, seeks to narrow the interpretation of what is government from the extreme and broad down to the federal government, because it is a federal elections act, there are federal candidates involved and it is members of the House of Commons who are being elected.

It is the federal government that is being formed out of the particular election which is the one, I think properly and only, that should be accountable in making returns about what it does or what facilities it provides—to the extent that you can assess them—what facilities and services it provides toward the conduct of an election when these costs are for the purpose set out in the definition and for the purpose to which you can attach some commercial value.

I know the argument on the other side may be that provincial governments are political entities as well, and that provincial governments have engaged in federal election campaigns. Provincial governments undoubtedly have in the past, and will in the future, try to say that whatever effort they can extend will be to the benefit of the particular party running in the federal election to which they belong. I just cannot see that we would be able to make some kind of assessment. If one does make an assessment of the value of that effort, and if that assessment is considered to be inaccurate—we have to look at this matter because there is a provision later in the bill, and an excellent one, moved by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) and accepted by the committee in so far as concerns overseeing these activities or policing them—the Chief Electoral Officer is authorized to appoint a commissioner whose duty it shall be to ensure that the provisions of this act in regard to election expenses are complied with and enforced.

As I say, that is an excellent and necessary amendment. But I am very much afraid that if we extend as federal law the application of what are election expenses to a government structured under the British North America Act, a provincial government which is equal to the federal government in the area of its activities, the commissioner will oversee these matters and examine them, but if he comes upon a return of election expenses in which a party or a candidate lists an assessment of the value accruing to that party from the activities of a provincial government, upon what does he determine whether it is an accurate assessment? If he determines that it is not accurate, how does he find out what is correct? Can he bring the provincial government into his office and ask to see its books? I think he would not have the authority or power to search out these matters. Can a provincial government be arraigned in court to produce that information and make accurate what the commissioner concludes is not accurate? I doubt it very much.

A few years ago there was a case in British Columbia where the provincial government seized logs owned by a logging and sawmilling company and became the owner of them. The provincial government drove the logs from one place to another through a salmon-spawning river. No private entrepreneur or corporation could have done that because they would have been in violation of the Fisheries Act of Canada. The matter was raised right in this House. The then minister of fisheries said on a number of occasions in this House, on the advice that he got from the legal people in his department, that the federal government could not challenge the provincial government on this, even though it was de facto violation of the Fisheries Act, because the two governments were equal one with the other in their respective jurisdictions: one could not override the other. That could very easily be the case here, Mr. Speaker. We would have either a matter of great tension or a confrontation which would not satisfy the intent of the act.

I am sure, on the other hand, that if we were to accept the amendment and say that only the costs of goods and services provided by a government apply to those provided by the federal government, Her Majesty in right of Canada, which includes Crown corporations and all other public agencies, it is an all-inclusive term and that is the only one that we can, and should, tax. Naturally, the only political party at an election that would be making a return of that nature or a return on election expenses that included items referred to in the relevant section would be the party that happened to form the government. None of the other parties would be involved. I do not think any of the other parties could claim that the service provided by a federal government agency, a federal government aircraft or the speechwriter for a cabinet minister, was really an asset in the election of a candidate for some other party. It may well be, and some of them are. But that is something that is not foreseen; it is an indirect benefit to the candidate in the opposition party. I cannot see a candidate listing an assessment of value for the speechwriter of a cabinet minister whom he considered he could use to his advantage in his riding. It was not conceived to be so. There would be only one party making returns under this provision, and that would be the party in power. That is so far as the definition of election expenses is concerned.

There are other references to this question of "government" in the bill. One of them is the return which the registered party is supposed to keep, indicating how much money it obtained and the commercial value of goods and services, of individuals, corporations, governments, etc. Governments are included. Some of them were left because, as I understand the rules of procedure, if an amendment occurs to one clause of the bill, it necessitates consequential amendments to other clauses; those consequential amendments can be made without 24 hours' notice, right on the spur of the moment, and necessarily flow in order to have some continuity and some sense in the bill. They were left out of other clauses for that reason.

I understand that when the committee reported on Friday it reported amendments to the bill and the 48-hour period commenced then, as in fact it did under the rules. At that time I was unaware that some other arrangement had been made and so there was an urgency, I thought, to get amendments in by Friday at five o'clock because if the bill had been called for report stage proceedings yesterday there would have been insufficient time and the 48-hour period would have lapsed. On Friday the bill had not been reprinted, so we then did not have copies of the reprinted bill; we had only copies of the bill which had been given first reading. We had notes concerning amendments moved by members in committee and it was somewhat difficult to fit these in with copies of the bill in our possession. That is another reason we did not go exhaustively through the bill and determine to which sections the suggestions concerning "government" or "governments" would apply. We did look, however, at those parts concerning candidates' returns. We looked at the definition of "election expenses" and at what the returns should show so far as the candidate is concerned. Both these matters may be considered together. Once these matters have been considered, I think we will be able to find other references to "government" fairly easily and make the necessary consequential amendments.

Motion No. 30 seeks to remove from page 21 of the bill, line 34, the word "government" and substitute therefor the words "Her Majesty in right of Canada". Part of section 63(1) of the act is to be repealed. Section 63 deals with candidates' returns on election expenses. The legislation has always required, as everyone in this House knows, a candidate to file at least one return on election expenses. Candidates are required to work closely with an official agent in attempting to assess what expenses have been incurred. Those expenses must be compiled, and receipts and records must be kept and filed with the returning officer. We all know what that involves. The bill will impose an additional burden on candidates and official agents. That additional burden will involve greater accuracy, greater detail and greater efficiency.

I am quite sure that quite a number of candidates' election expense returns have not been completely accurate. I do not mean to say that the candidates are not honest; I merely mean that the information contained in the returns is not accurate. In some cases the candidate and official agent is not able to discover in detail exactly how much has been spent on the election campaign, especially in areas where there may be a number of subsidiary groups of the political organization. For example, in some areas inhabited communities may be 100 miles or so apart. Naturally, there will be a separate political organization in each community. The organization may use volunteers. That is where the difficulty comes in. Being volunteers, those people do not always keep track of expenditures.

I know of instances where a devout party worker will say something like, "Don't worry about the rental of the hall. If you want a public meeting, I will pay for the hall and consider that my contribution." He pays for the hall but does not keep receipts. He does not make any contribution directly, yet that is his traditional way of contributing to the campaign. That may be an expenditure of which the official agent may not be aware. Therefore the official agent, not knowing about it, cannot include it in the return.

The provisions of the bill mean that in the constituencies there will need to be a highly centralized, authoritarian bookkeeping operation to keep track of every cent of income spent. Candidates will be required to supply receipts, to keep track of all expenditures, to keep copies of bills and vouchers, and so on, and keep all these intact in one place. In some areas this will impede the traditional way of running campaigns.

We were shocked, to put it mildly, in committee on hearing the testimony of representatives of the Canadian association of chartered accountants. I think that is the correct name of the organization. They tried to assess for the committee what would be entailed if a candidate were to meet the requirements of the bill and employ an auditor to go over all expenses. They said something like this, "Suppose, for argument's sake, we see in the committee room a billboard, a sign or a poster advertising a candidate. We would want to know where that sign came from. We would want to see the receipt for the sign and know who paid for it."

We conceived that the chartered accountants might attach themselves to the candidate at the beginning of the campaign trail. They might sit in every committee room, count every sheet of paper and keep close watch over all election expenses. On being asked how much this would cost, the representatives said, having been asked in a number of different ways, that they thought the cost of an auditor would run in the neighbourhood of $5,000 for a campaign. One can see the concept involved. The accountant would be running around the country making sure the candidate had receipts for everything. If the candidate stayed overnight in a hotel, receipts covering that stay must be obtained. The provisions of this bill mean that constituency organizations must become centralized agencies and the bookkeeping requirements are more stringent than ever before. I can conceive that some requirements of the bill with regard to candidates will hinder the full and proper conduct of an election campaign.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but the 40 minutes allotted to him under the Standing Order have expired.

Mr. Terry O'Connor (Halton): Mr. Speaker, after some 50 committee meetings which closely scrutinized nearly 150 amendments, Bill C-203 has finally been returned to the House. It has perhaps received more informed, practical, experienced deliberation than any piece of legislation considered this session. We are all experts. We are all so wise on the subject of winning elections. We all have some contribution to make based upon our actual involvement in the subject matter of the bill. Thus, the quality and quantity of inspection has been significant.

The official opposition, Mr. Speaker, is now satisfied that the bill, reprinted as amended and reported by the committee, moves a long way toward achieving the goals so long sought by the several parliaments which have considered electoral reform. During the debate on second reading I stated that I did not share the optimism of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) that the bill in its then form would achieve all of the admirable purposes he said it would. I pointed out that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections appeared to have its work cut out for it. This turned out to be a prophetic understatement. I congratulate all members of the committee who, I believe, worked long and sincerely in a co-operative effort at achieving workable and responsible electoral reform.

The bill now encompasses procedures for the disclosure of the names and amounts of all donors to political parties and candidates. I emphasize the word "all" because the original bill omitted any reference to the role in an election of governments, through their publications, their facilities such as aircraft, automobiles, advertising and their public service personnel. As we are all well aware, the use, usually surreptitiously and indirectly, by the party in power of such readily available weaponry can provide a significant and unfair advantage during an election campaign. Amendments introduced by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) and accepted by the committee will require the filing by the parties of details of names and amounts of money and the commercial value of goods and services provided from all sources, including governments.

Further, the prohibition against advertising during the first four weeks after the issuance of a writ now specifically includes a prohibition against the use of government publications. For reasons that escape me, Mr. Speaker, the committee turned down a reasonably restrictive definition covering a "government publication". I suspect that government members may regret that decision when they find during the next election that the undefined term may be considerably broader than that encompassed in the definition offered by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain.

Further, the bill now sets out specific procedures permitting one party to institute negotiations which must be responded to by the other registered parties to determine the allocation of broadcast time among them. The hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) worked out a formula acceptable to a majority of the committee members. Similarly, amendments were introduced and passed to require a fairer, more even-handed adjudication by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission when deciding contentious issues between parties and broadcasters. Perhaps the most significant committee improvement was that establishing a commissioner, and I quote——whose duties, under supervision of the Chief Electoral Officer, shall be to insure that the provisions of the act in regard to election expenses, are complied with and enforced.

Although the commissioner does not take exactly the form envisaged by us, we are delighted that the important principle of his necessity was recognized by the committee and adopted. We feel the tenacious undertaking by the commissioner of his function as defined by the amendment is fundamental to the beneficial operation of many of the other sections of the act. To have left to candidates and parties a self-auditing role would have been folly. The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) deserves commendation for the introduction of this worth-while concept.

I do not wish to denigrate the work of government members who also contributed substantially to the final result by proposing nearly one-third of the amendments passed by the committee. As much as anything, this fact establishes that even the usually intransigent thinkers opposite saw the need for improvement to the original bill.

Having sat for so long and considered so many divergent aspects of the bill, one would have thought that we would have perhaps exhausted the subject beyond resuscitation. However, one need only glance at the order paper for today and yesterday to see that in the minds of some at least the debate is far from over. One wonders whether the New Democratic Party is serious about electoral reform in this country at this time. Their lack of influence over the amended bill as it emerged from committee must indeed chagrin them in light of their all-persuasive influence over the government on most other matters.

However, the fact is—virtually all the matters raised by their 42 amendments were thoroughly discussed, debated and dealt with by the committee. They, of course, have every right to reintroduce these matters at this stage. But the real world of practical politics must surely point out to them, or they are more obtuse than is generally recognized, that the only purpose that could be served by such tactics is to delay the passage of the bill. Given the lead time necessary for effective application of the provisions of the bill, if it is delayed beyond Christmas they know there is little chance that it will be in effect for the next election.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair is in difficulty. I think hon. members heard Mr. Speaker a few minutes before four o'clock dealing with allocation and relevance of the particular motions or proposed motions that would be debated. Most of the speech of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) was relevant in the sense that he dealt squarely with the deletion of certain words and substituting therefore "Her Majesty in right of Canada." The hon. member for Halton (Mr. O'Connor) has also in part dealt with that issue squarely. However, I would respectfully suggest to the hon. member that he is covering a much larger area and is really making what the Chair would have to regard as a third reading speech.

We are caught squarely within the particular motions that are being proposed. Our arguments must be directed to them. I know this will be a disappointment to hon. members. It will probably be a most frustrating exercise for the occupants of the chair if the debate is limited in this way. However, Mr. Speaker—and I certainly agree with him—suggested that we keep within the rules of relevancy because we have adopted a specific course of dealing with these particular proposals. I must ask the hon. member to consider the motion moved by the hon. member for Skeena as follows:

That Bill C-203 . . . be amended by deleting the words "a government, Crown corporation, or any other public agency." in paragraph (h) of the definition of "election expenses" in clause 2 and substituting the words:

"Her Majesty in right of Canada."

The hon. member must also consider the subsequent motion of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) which is practically to the same effect:

—deleting the word "governments" in paragraph 63(1)(e) and substituting the words: "Her Majesty in right of Canada"

That is the issue that has to be considered now. When we dispose of that we will go to other issues. There may be somewhat broader issues; however, it seems that this issue is rather precise. I hope hon. members who contribute to this debate will address themselves to whether this change should be made.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No point of order can arise from a ruling by the Chair.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, possibly my point of order could be heard before a ruling is made as to whether it is acceptable. It may well be out of order. Members of my party have discussed this matter. They want to keep the debate short and succinct, not taking 40 minutes on each amendment. It was recommended that our first speaker, the member who guided us through committee, make one general speech and the rest of us, when any other matter or any other amendment comes up, would make very short speeches, if any, because we would like to see this matter hurried through. I would ask the indulgence of the Chair so that we could co-operate in this way by having one general speech of perhaps some length, and any replies would be much shorter than would otherwise be the case. In looking after this matter for our party, this is the proposal on which a number of us decided.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the hon. member. I say God bless the hon. member for bringing in a sensible suggestion such as that. The only difficulty is that apparently it does not receive the approval of all the parties whose members will be taking part in the debate. If it were agreed that the opening speech from each of the four corners of the House would not be longer than 40 minutes, and that thereafter the rule of relevancy would be very strictly applied, the Chair would be most happy to put it to the House for acceptance. But if it is not agreed, we must follow the suggestion Mr. Speaker made. On the point of order raised by the hon. member, I will recognize the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen).

Mr. MacEachen: Your Honour, with respect to the proposal which has been made, that the first speaker for each group on this particular amendment might be given general latitude, I would certainly agree. The hon. member for Halton (Mr. O'Connor) might make a general statement on this amendment. I would, however, agree to this on the understanding that once we move from amendment No. 2 we should observe strictly the rule of relevancy as suggested by Your Honour earlier. When the third reading is before us, wider latitude will again be possible.

Mr. Brewin: As far as this party is concerned, we would agree. Our first speaker was the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). He dealt with a precise motion; he did not make a general statement. So in a sense, by agreeing to this proposal we are depriving ourselves of an opportunity. Nevertheless, we shall agree.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, we too agree to the suggestion made by the hon. member on the condition that speeches on the amendments be really limited to the motion before us.

[English]

Mr. Howard: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not see how we can make deals with respect to the rules. The rules are to be enforced, that is all.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion by the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick), that the opening speakers from the four corners of the House be allotted 40 minutes, that thereafter the speeches to motions Nos. 2 and 30 be of 20 minutes' duration, and that on subsequent items at the report stage the rule of relevancy be strictly enforced.

The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) made the point that the hon. member for Skeena's contribution had been within the rules. I think that as an element of justice some latitude might be allowed as far as time is concerned when the next member from that party speaks. Perhaps he might be allowed to go somewhat beyond 20 minutes. Apart from that is there agreement on the 40 minutes and then the 20 minutes?

[Mr. Dick.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. O'Connor: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton for his suggestion and I thank the rest of the House for accepting it. May I apologize to Your Honour for rising to make a speech of this kind, but any problem which may have arisen seems now to have been resolved.

When I was interrupted I was speaking of the attitude of the New Democratic Party toward the passage of this bill. I was about to suggest that here we see the self-proclaimed, unctuous champions of reform stonewalling for reasons of their own. Well, Mr. Speaker, if the bill is delayed, the Canadian people will know where the responsibility lies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. O'Connor: One need only peruse some of their amendments to obtain an accurate appraisal of what is being attempted. Amendment No. 34 would raise the vote qualification enabling a candidate to obtain reimbursement of a part of his election expenses from 20 per cent to 70 per cent. The amendment stands in the name of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) who attempted unsuccessfully in committee to reduce—not increase—the qualification standard to 10 per cent. He is saying, apparently, that if he cannot have his way, no one else shall have theirs. If we do not play the game his way, he will take his marbles and go home. Ironically, under the hon. member's formula, in the unlikely event of its successful passage, it would seem the only candidate he wishes to receive any reimbursement is the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) whom I am sure will be delighted with his new-found admirer. The hon. member for Crowfoot, I understand, is one of the only members who received more than 70 per cent of the votes in the last election. Politics does make the strangest bedfellows.

Amendments Nos. 8, 9, 10 and 11 deal with the same section of the bill. They would all reduce the ceiling for party election expenses to three or four varying amounts. Are the great, self-proclaimed reformers of our electoral system, so long the lonely carriers of the light of revelation, now so confused that they are stumbling over each other in the darkness, a darkness which no doubt results from the ill-conceived energy policy they forced upon the government? Can the self-proclaimed reformers of our electoral system not get together among themselves and decide on an amount, thus reducing the problems of their making which now face the House? Or perhaps they do not wish to facilitate the passage of this legislation. I expect the latter is the case.

Mr. Speaker, the measure before us gives hon. members an opportunity to substantially improve the quality of the image of politicians and political parties in Canada. The bill takes large strides toward alleviating the long and deeply-held public suspicion—in some cases it is an actuality—that politicians are crooked, that the system operates on the basis of patronage, of favours, of jobs and other amenities offered and granted in return for candidate and party funding.

The bill will open up the books and records of parties and individuals through tough auditing requirements and through the requirement that details of sources of donations must be revealed. It will allow every Canadian the opportunity to look over the shoulders of the backroom boys as they go about their often misunderstood task of raising the money necessary to convey the message of a party and its candidates. It will compel disclosure of exactly who gives what to whom. Long-held suspicions will then either be confirmed or put to rest.

Further, the bill takes steps long overdue to reduce the rapidly escalating cost of elections. Strict limitation of the amounts which may be spent by parties and candidates will ensure less waste, a more carefully budgeted and planned campaign, less inundation of the average Canadian with repetitious messages and material. Above all, these limitations will reduce the discriminatory effect of wealth on the system. The wealthy man or woman will not be permitted to spend his or her way into office, nor will he or she enjoy the substantial advantage that money formerly held over the less well-to-do candidate. This end is further advanced by a system of partial reimbursement to parties and candidates from the public treasury of the costs of a campaign. Both the expenditure limits and the reimbursement amounts are geared to the number of voters that the candidate or party is attempting to reach. Allowances are made for the additional travel costs involved in schedule III and other geographically large ridings in our far northern areas.

A calculated attempt is made, through the disclosure of donations requirements and through amendments to the Income Tax Act, to broaden the base of financial support for our system. Donors to parties and candidates will enjoy the generous tax credit provisions proposed as changes to the Income Tax Act. We believe that, in principle, the best way to finance the system is by means of a freely given private donation. That is, it is preferable to fund candidates for public office voluntarily, rather than to require all of us to support all candidates through our tax dollars. We do, however, recognize the necessity to give everyone, regardless of wealth and financial ability, an opportunity to convey his or her message to the people of Canada.

Thus we have the combination of incentives to give voluntarily, combined with some degree of public reimbursement of expenses of candidates and parties. We suggest the discriminatory effect of tax credits, as opposed to tax deductions, on the other usual recipients of voluntary donations such as churches, charitable organizations, and so forth, which permit only a tax deduction, not a credit, can be remedied by a thorough study and possible amendment of the tax laws which affect them.

The bill is not perfect, Mr. Speaker. The government recognizes this fact by the inclusion of a provision that would refer certain sections back to a parliamentary committee, presumably the privileges and elections committee, for review after the first election held following the bill's coming into effect. But it is the result of nearly ten years of study, first by a royal commission, the Barbeau commission, then by three parliamentary committees, including one special committee and a plethora of academic and public studies. Reform is vitally necessary at this time even if not given additional impetus by the odious activities of many of those involved in the American political system. I urge all members of the House to accept the work of the committee so that the bill become law as soon as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I will not try to achieve the feat that the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) has managed this afternoon, that is to speak on a motion for 40 minutes.

I would simply summarize the position that our group has taken during the debate on Bill C-203.

If you consider the number of amendments on the order paper, you realize that the bill now before us, although representing a necessary stage in the revision of the Canada Elections Act, is far from being perfect.

Unfortunately, through consideration in committee, not only could we make the government aware of the various problems but we also managed to improve the bill. Unfortunately, we have realized that the object of the bill is to guarantee to the individual the best opportunity to be well informed and to vote freely.

Reference has been made to broadcasting and to the media while the expenses of parties are allowed or restricted and some refund can be obtained from the government, all this to let the individual know what to think, how to judge such or such a proposal during an election campaign.

We also realize that Bill C-203 does not directly protect the individual by providing, for example, a fair control over information. Expenses are restricted and refunds to the various political parties are limited, but in no case is the individual allowed to obtain adequate information on the political choices which can be offered during an election campaign.

Unfortunately, in Bill C-203 one is not told how choices are made as regards television broadcasting. They are willing to say "subject to an agreement between parties", but one realizes that it has always been the same thing, that those agreements do not really represent the current election, but elections held two, three or four years ago.

We come to the discussion of the allocation of time between political parties. Nowadays, according to the new election legislation, the organization of an election campaign involves registration of parties, which respect the provisions of the law and get together in a committee meeting for the allocation of broadcasting time or of other media. Such an allocation is always done according to the number of members in each party before dissolution of Parliament.

In Bill C-203 there is no corrective measure to such irregularity as concerns the people because during an election it is not the number of elected members in the House that counts, but the number of candidates in each party.

One realizes also that expenses allowed under Bill C-203 are the result of a computation to complicate a procedure that could be quite simple. It was simply suggested, at the beginning of discussions on Bill C-203, that the government should pay the representatives of each registered party in the polls as well as the scrutineers.

That would mean amounts of money paid directly to help the voting procedure instead of money spent as one sees fit, by whoever seems to be appointed to spend them.

Many things are lacking in Bill C-203. Amendments could have been adopted, or still included much more specific clauses in the bill to give people the maximum of security and information concerning political options. But we have not been able to guarantee this to the individual except through election funds which, as we all know, always favour the strong recognized parties at the expense of the smaller ones, especially in the field of information.

On the whole, Bill C-203 is a definite improvement from an electoral standpoint. But, once again, I am waiting for the reports which will be made after the next elections concerning the application of Bill C-203 and the amended Elections Act. I await impatiently these reports to prove that Bill C-203 will not really solve the problem of dividing equitably information among all political parties, which would benefit the population during an electoral campaign.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, when the point of order was discussed it was suggested that the next speaker from our party should be given the opportunity to enter into something of a general discussion as the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), who opened for us, was speaking to his own motion No. 2. I do not intend to take advantage of that suggestion, but I want to make this contribution and all other interventions during this debate as brief and as close to the point as possible.

Speaking for the majority of my colleagues, if not all of them, I think that even though this bill has defects it is one that should be passed as soon as is reasonably possible. I do not mean that there are not reasonable amendments which could be made even following this stage: in spite of the over-all desire to get this bill passed, there may be some amendments required because in this free country and free parliament there are differences of opinion. I suggest that the majority of the members of our party will restrict their contributions to the debate in order to facilitate the early passage of this bill, and I intend to do so. Having said that, I now propose to turn to the amendment introduced by my colleague, the hon. member for Skeena.

I, personally, do not accept or agree with this particular amendment, the effect of which is, as I understand it, to limit the words in the original bill as amended by the committee regarding the definition of "election expenses" to include the cost of goods or services provided by a government, Crown corporation or any other public agency. It is true, as the hon. member for Skeena has said, that the purpose of his amendment is to change the words in respect of the source of campaign expenditures by striking out the words "a government, Crown corporation, or any other public agency" and substituting therefor the words "Her Majesty in right of Canada". In my opinion that is a limiting amendment and I, personally, do not think it is good. It has the result of enabling—the hon. member for Skeena referred to this possibility—provincial governments and agencies to contribute directly or indirectly to campaign funds. If they do, I would ask why their contributions should not be considered as part of the over-all election expenses.

I do not remember which member introduced this amendment but I think it was a useful one. It purports to suggest that if governments choose to make contributions to an election campaign, they should be subject to the regulations, limitations and accountability provided for by the act. Because this is a limiting amendment which is proposed by my colleague the hon. member for Skeena, I do not propose to vote for it and I suggest to other members that they should not vote for it.

An hon. Member: Dissension in the ranks.

Mr. Brewin: Why not?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), I do not intend to take advantage of this opportunity to make a general speech on this particular amendment. I do, however, wish to express my agreement that one of the amendments proposed to this particular clause is limiting in its effect, and therefore it would be better for us to accept the amendment adopted by the committee which expanded the definition of "election expenses" to include the cost of goods and services, I believe the expression is "provided by a government, Crown corporation or any other public agency".

We took the view originally that the general definition included this particular elaboration or clarification. However, we are pleased to accept this new clarification as part of the definition and we believe it ought to be accepted in order that the bill can be maintained as proposed by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) and as accepted by the committee as a whole.

I stated I did not intend to make a general speech, but I do wish to express my appreciation to hon. members of the committee for the very long and tough sessions they endured in discussing, analysing and dissecting this bill. As the hon. member for Halton (Mr. O'Connor) has said, probably no other bill has received greater scrutiny in any committee than this bill which was considered by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. The spirit which prevailed in the committee was almost totally non-partisan. There were occasional flashes of partisanship, but they were quickly eliminated and the discussion continued on a very objective and non-partisan basis.

I took the view when the bill was brought before the House that it was of interest to every hon. member of the House of Commons in that it affected each one of us and, therefore, it was of a type that would probably receive very careful study in the committee and would benefit from the scrutiny of hon. members. I believe that to be the case and that the general framework of the bill has been maintained. The hon. member for Halton has outlined, probably better than I could at this stage, the general framework of the bill now before the House. Undoubtedly there have been some amendments which will improve the operation of this measure and probably will improve the definition of "commercial value," and so on. This matter occupied a good deal of the time of the committee.

I may also say there were several amendments with which I did not agree, and my efforts to persuade the committee were not acceptable on a number of occasions. However, I am quite content to accept the over-all judgment of the committee and it is for that reason I did not put down any amendments to change in any way the conclusions of the committee. In all cases in respect of amendments, they were carried in the usual way by the committee. I note also that the hon. member for Halton, whose party lost some amendments, did not propose any amendment at the report stage to recover ground that might have been gained in the committee. That makes it easier for us to move ahead in dealing with this bill. It is my firm expectation that the bill can be passed and can receive royal assent before we rise, whether by adjournment or prorogation, and that this very important area of electoral reform will have been dealt with by this twenty-ninth Parliament of Canada—probably a good parliament in which to deal with it because it is a minority parliament in which no party could succeed in imposing its views on a minority. This could be the result of the deliberations in the committee and the result of the bill, hopefully accepted by all the House, having been proposed by a government which has a minority of members in the House.

I wish to say, before concluding, that I really did get an eye-opener in respect of the operation of the committee system in the House of Commons. I attended, it seemed, an endless number of meetings. I noticed that most members of the committee were very faithful in attending to their duties. It did involve an enormous amount of time and a great deal of industry on the part of members. It took them away from the House and their offices. My eye-opener leads me to conclude that in the future we ought to do two things: we ought to do something to even further systematize and reform our committee system in order to reduce the burden of members of parliament which is very great at the present time, and certainly we ought to consider in the future what additional assistance should be made available to members of parliament to allow them to operate even more effectively as members of standing committees of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: So, Mr. Speaker, I conclude by thanking those who were on the committee. I entrust the bill to the chamber in the expectation that we can make good progress quickly and give the bill third reading later.

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my contribution at this stage will be brief. I was very pleased to hear the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) speak with such pleasure of his experiences before the committee. I know all of us in every corner of the House hope to be able to arrange in the not too distant future an opportunity for the minister and several of his colleagues on the front bench to spend a great deal more time in our committees.

I want to say, also, I was very much heartened, as I believe all of us were in this House, to hear the words of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). We can only express the hope that those words will be matched by the actions of his party as this bill proceeds through the House. I think it is worth noting that the great number of amendments which appear on the order paper in two waves are sponsored by a great variety of members from his party. The name of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) is associated with a number of these amendments. Other amendments stand in the names of people who hold official positions in that party, including the whip. I do not think that should be lost sight of in proceeding with the debate. We would hope that no party would direct its attention to stonewalling this highly desirable legislation.

With regard to this particular amendment, I believe it would be a very serious limitation to exclude from the ambit of the legislation reference to contributions of goods and services of provincial governments. I think that while there may be concern, as the hon. member suggested, about the means of enforcing that particular provision relative to the provinces, it should be pointed out that there are other reasons for having penalties and prohibitions in this legislation that are not easily enforceable. While it might be difficult to prosecute a province, it certainly is a fact that this object could be achieved through the substantial weapon of publicity by publicizing that a particular government controlled by a particular party was abusing its trust in a partisan issue. I think this is a highly important addition to the bill and I say with suitable modesty that I shall vote against the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, amendment No. 30 which stands in my name is really consequential on amendment No. 2 introduced by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). Therefore I feel they quite properly can be discussed together. I think the nub of the matter has been mentioned by one or two people who spoke in disagreement of the amendment. The really important issue was raised by the hon. member for Skeena in his remarks. It seems to me that this amendment to the clause of the bill which for the first time will insert in the Elections Act a definition of what are election expenses is indicative of the fact that the thrust of this bill will result in very major changes in the whole approach to the conduct of elections in Canada.

It may surprise some people, if this discussion comes to their attention, that over these years we have managed to function successfully, more or less, in the conduct of elections and in an orderly manner without any definition of "election expenses." Our official agents have been able to file summaries, keep accounts, and so on, to the reasonable satisfaction of the general public, at least in many areas of the country. I know that over the years my returning officers have said that no one came to their door asking to see the documents filed and offering to pay the 25 cents they must pay in order to have a look at those returns.

The point which I should like to stress is that if one looks at the proposed amendment to subclause (h) which is in the definition section, it will be seen that it refers to the cost of goods or services provided by a government, and that it refers back to sub-clause (c) which says that "election expenses" means, among other things, the commercial value of goods and services donated or provided.

One could very well argue that despite the strenuous effort made by the committee, to which reference has been made—and I along with other members certainly appreciate those efforts—the introduction of this particular clause which refers to goods or services provided by a government in many ways is completely redundant. I think the hon. member for Skeena really zeroed in on the point of concern, particularly when he quoted a study made on this subject.

In practical terms, the question of government expenses in the context of a federal election is a matter of an incidental service provided to the party from which the current government has been drawn prior to the dissolution of parliament, because of the fact that even though parliament is dissolved ministers of the Crown remain in office. That, to me, is the nub of the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Skeena and by myself in the consequential amendment. Otherwise, we are dealing with a very loose term when we talk about services provided by government. I am glad to know the committee did not go along with the suggestion that would have resulted in a chartered accountant, as an official agent, having to follow a candidate every step of the way during an election, but that rather the bill would provide relatively simple and relatively inexpensive auditing procedures.

That brings me back to the fact that I have already mentioned, namely, that for the first time we are seeking to put a definition of election expenses into the Canada Elections Act, an act which many people at first blush have often considered to be a rather extensive and complicated document, and which is in reality in many respects one of the most clearly stated pieces of law that we have in this country. I say this because countless thousands of people over the years have been able to work on the basis of the Canada Elections Act and the information material that comes from the Chief Electoral Officer, and to conduct elections in most respects in accordance with the law.

I think one of our concerns at any time should be to keep the Elections Act understandable to lay people and not to have a law that can be understood only by those who are learned in the law or who sit on the bench. As I listened to the discussion this afternoon I tried to imagine the average person who is called upon to act as a candidate's official agent and who reads in this piece of legislation "the cost of goods or services provided by a government". Perhaps if one went to the absurd, one might say that every time you turn around you find goods or services being provided by a government. Every time we drive on the highway we take advantage of services provided by a government, either provincial or municipal.

So just what does the bill, as it stands, mean? What are the services provided by a government? I would suggest, with all deference to the efforts of the standing committee, that perhaps they had not sufficiently thought through what they were putting into this act from the point of view of its being readily understood when they used the general term "government". If one considers that with the fact of what is stated in subclause (c), "the commercial value of goods and services donated", one finds that if one purchases goods from a municipal government or rents a schoolroom from a school board, it is readily understandable that one pays for that service the way one would if one were renting a hall from a private organization. The rental would be based on normal commercial value. That is the way the total cost of an election is to be calculated under the Election Act if this law is put into effect.

It seems to me that the amendment which the hon. member for Skeena and I have proposed zeroes in on a specific situation which all members of the House know exists, and that is the fact that there are incidental services which are available to the political party to which the ministers of the Crown belong after a dissolution that are not available to any other political party or any other candidates. Those kinds of expenses and services, whether they be for transportation or for other reasons during an election period, should properly be included in the kinds of expenses that are calculated as being expenses of a party or expenses of candidates who happen to be ministers of the Crown or in aid of whom ministers of the Crown are working.

That is the point of the amendments which stand in the name of the hon. member for Skeena and myself. Therefore, I ask the House at this point to give serious consideration to the idea that this will provide an improvement to the act, that it will make it more clear, more readily understandable and that it will certainly not mean that services or goods which may be provided by other agencies of the government at other levels will not be within the ambit of normal election expenses. Without in any way attempting to prolong this discussion, let me say that these are the points which I would ask hon. members to consider and which I think make the amendments worthy of support.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion No. 2 (Mr. Howard) and motion No. 30 (Mr. Barnett) negatived.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

ELECTION EXPENSES

PROVISION OF PAYMENTS TO CANDIDATES AND REIMBURSEMENT OF PARTIES FOR CERTAIN BROADCASTING TIME

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-203, to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): As agreed to previously, we will now proceed to amendments Nos. 3, 4, 5 and 6. Motions Nos. 3 and 4 stand in the name of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight), Motion No. 5 stands in the name of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), Motion No. 6 stands in the name of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), and they read as follows:

No. 3.

That Bill C-203, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, be amended by adding the following definition immediately following the definition of "election expenses" in clause 2:

● (1730)

"electoral district agent" in relation to a registered party, means a person whose name is recorded in the registry of agents of registered parties maintained by the Chief Electoral Officer pursuant to subsection 13.1(1) and who is designated as such by the chief agent of the party.

No. 4.

That Bill C-203, to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, be amended by adding, at the end of the definition of "registered agent" in Clause 2, the following:

"and an electoral district agent".

No. 5.

That Bill C-203, to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, be amended by changing Sub-sections 13.1(2) of Sub-clause 4(1) to paragraph 13.1(a) and by adding the following as paragraph 13.1(2)(b):

Election Expenses

(b) An association or organization of the members of a registered party within an electoral district may choose a person or persons to be electoral district agents for the purposes of that registered party in that electoral district and may so notify the registered party who may forthwith notify the Chief Electoral Officer setting out the name and address of such persons and such information shall be recorded by the Chief Electoral Officer in the registry referred to in subsection (1).

No. 6.

That Bill C-203, to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, be amended by adding, immediately following Section 13.1(3) of Sub-clause 4(1) the following:

"(4) Forthwith after his appointment the chief agent of each registered party shall notify the Chief Electoral Officer of the name and address of any electoral district agents of the party and such information shall be recorded by the Chief Electoral Officer in the registry referred to in Sub-section (1).

(5) Where

and by re-numbering the remaining Sub-sections accordingly.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motions? I remind all hon. members that all the motions I called are to be debated together, that is Nos. 3, 4, 5 and 6. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight).

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the whip of the New Democratic Party has had honourable mention in the House already, and I appreciate that, from the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark). I wish to begin my remarks by saying that the hon. member may be the whip, but he is also the member for Assiniboia. As such he represents the people in that constituency, so is intent upon expressing his view of the election expenses bill which is going to affect the people in that constituency as well as the general taxpayers across the Dominion of Canada.

I moved a number of amendments, three in particular, related to this bill, which I believe would improve this legislation when it is put on the statute books. One of my chief concerns is that in the area of election expenses the bill designates a chief agent for the party to handle the amounts of money, the expenditures by that party. What concerns me is the role of the individual constituency in the collection of funds for the use of that particular party. What I am attempting to do in the two amendments now before the House is to establish the principle, in the best way I could, of there being an official collecting agent within the constituency who is on record with the Chief Electoral Officer. I believe if the national headquarters of any political party is to be responsible for an agent to look after the funds coming to that party from contributions, it is obligatory that the local constituency organizations have the right, clearly spelled out, of an agent as well who can be listed with the Chief Electoral Officer. That is the purpose of the two amendments I have placed before this House.

There are a number of reasons for that, Mr. Speaker. The reason that strikes me is that I view the centralizing of power in the hands of either a national office of a country as regionally diverse as ours or any other country, as suspect. I think, regardless of party, that the local riding association should have a tremendous amount of influence on the collection of funds in that area. I have no quarrel, for example, with the regulations related to disclosure. In my view, there will be avenues for working around them if political parties in this country so wish but I do not believe that is true of the local level. For example, in the Assiniboia constituency I have always had an agent of some renown, who has put in considerable time and effort, in charge of the books and the funds that are contributed, and in charge of the payment of bills. He should be able to act as the official agent of the party in the collection of funds in that area and it should be clearly spelled out.

One of the things that concerns me is the centralizing that has occurred in connection with that other parliamentary system of government, that of Great Britain, where a considerable amount of power is given to the national headquarters of the party. This power is used to bring about a situation in which often the wishes of the local organization, in respect of candidates are overruled. The headquarters of the party may have an exclusive program of what I call parachuting candidates and controlling expenditures in a given riding. I believe that would be a move in the wrong direction, regardless of party. The local organization must continue to have autonomy over the collection of its funds, expenditure of its funds and indeed, as has always been the case in our party, have complete say about the candidate involved and some of the local issues involved as well. So the amendments I have proposed, Mr. Speaker, are to strengthen that provision within the act.

The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) has moved an amendment that complements the kind of change I am trying to bring about. I think the major amendment is the one that reads:

> "electoral district agent" in relation to a registered party, means a person whose name is recorded in the registry of agents of registered parties maintained by the Chief Electoral Officer pursuant to subsection 13.1(1) and who is designated as such by the chief agent of the party.

That at least moves in the direction of maintaining local autonomy. It still gives the national party some say about a local agent. If they have an objection, at least the local constituency organization has some influence.

Questions have already arisen in the discussion of the first amendment we have dealt with today, on the workability of many aspects of this legislation in terms of the kind of bureaucracy and kind of public expenditures it entails. Anyone who has been involved in a campaign for public office would certainly be aware of the difficulties of an agent of a party sitting in Ottawa, Toronto or maybe even Regina, trying to ascertain the moneys raised in a given local electoral district. In my view it is an almost impossible job. This legislation, if it passes, provides that the only agent of a party may well be a representative of the national party. This provision will create an incredible bureaucracy, in my view, within those given parties. How it will ever be administered by the parties is beyond my understanding, and it does not matter which party.

In the last general election we ran into immense problems trying to keep track of funds, in the way the Elections Act would require. Agents in the riding ran into immense difficulties. I have the privilege of representing a riding which covers 20,000 square miles and includes two urban populated areas, Weyburn and Assiniboia. Ontario members might not consider these as large urban areas; however, in Saskatchewan, they are considered as urban areas of significant size. In the election, the opposition parties held at least one meeting in Assiniboia, as did the party I represent. They held two or more meetings in Weyburn, undoubtedly because of its population. During the campaign, which lasted between 40 and 60 days, I held public meetings in 30 or more smaller communities ranging in population from 50 to over 500.

These public meetings were attended by people of different political persuasions and, as was traditional, the hat was passed and contributions ranging from $1 to $100 were made. Sometimes people will give you $5; at other times they will give you $50, $75 or more. Some people write a cheque; others give you cash. A national agent who must keep track of funds contributed to party members will be faced with a nightmare. How can he possibly keep track of contributions made across the length and breadth of such a wide and diverse rural community as mine. I can tell you that any agent trying to keep track of donations will be faced, literally, with hundreds of hours of frustration and headache.

Even at the local constituency level it is difficult for people to keep track of donors of funds. For instance, at any one meeting 20 or 30 people might contribute money. If you hold a meeting in Weyburn, out of a crowd of 700 or 800 people you might get 400 or more contributors. Imagine trying to trace their names and give receipts for income tax purposes. The bill requires that where certain contributions are made, receipts are to be given. There is a provision with regard to the number of contributors who contribute over $100. You must find out who has given what at such meetings and provide receipts, so that people may use them for income purposes, as is their right. That being so, I suggest that an agent at the national level will have an impossible task. That is why I am bringing forward a suggestion with regard to the local electoral district agent.

There is something else with which hon. members are undoubtedly familiar. It quite often happens that people may contribute to the campaign of a candidate representing a party which they do not support. In my riding, for instance, and I am sure in the ridings of Conservatives, Liberal and Social Credit members, this kind of thing happens quite often. People who support another political party will give funds to your party, merely because you are running for parliament.

Mr. Nesdoly: Sometimes these people support two political parties.

Mr. Knight: As my colleague for Meadow Lake suggests, sometimes people support two political parties. He is well versed in Saskatchewan politics.

An hon. Member: Or, they may have supported the progressives and the conservatives.

Mr. Knight: Quite so. These people may not want to disclose their donation to another political party. The provisions of the bill in this regard may inhibit their so doing. People go to public meetings to listen to candidates; they do not always agree with the candidates, but they listen. If they give money, they do not always want it to be known. Of course, sometimes people give you $10, $20 or $30; that is how much they throw into the campaign. Some of these people want a receipt for tax purposes. If receipts must be provided, it is possible that some people will be reluctant to contribute. In any event, I suggest that a local, electoral district agent will be in a better position to make sure that people get what they are entitled to under this legislation.

A local electoral district agent undoubtedly will be able to follow more closely the views of the local riding association. He will know what priorities the association has established. Unquestionably, the local electoral district agent will be someone with whom the local candidate, party workers and members of the party executive are familiar. In a country as big as ours, an official party agent working out of the national capital will not be in a position to know the idiosyncrasies of local riding associations and local candidates. For that reason, I am strongly in favour of electoral district agents.

The local riding association, of course, knows much more about the events in a riding than any officer at the national level. For example, in my constituency there are over 200 polls, divided among at least 50 zones. Each zone has a different method of operating. Also, workers in ridings like to stick by their traditional ways of working. In the last election, for example, the official agent for my party ran into immense difficulties. For 20 years or more some of the local committees across the riding had been prepared to pay for the rental of halls out of their own funds, and not bill those rentals to the agent. They were so used to doing things this way that on being challenged to send the bill to the official agent they said, "No. We have not done this for 20 years and we are not interested in doing it now." As a result, the official agent had to make many telephone calls and many trips by car in an effort to persuade such committee members that the Elections Act required them to furnish receipts. That is what will take place in the constituencies with regard to funding. That is the essence of my suggestion. I do not believe it to be a traumatic change in the bill.

In the manner in which I worded the amendment, the agent will be in a position to recognize that he is listed with the Chief Electoral Officer through his party, that he has a commitment to follow the outline of this enormously complicated bill and that he will be obliged to a certain extent to be in touch with national headquarters as to what is taking place in his constituency.

Many of the expenses related to the operation of this provision will fall on the political parties; it will increase election expenses rather than limit them. The electoral district agent, the man who will be in charge of the collection of funds in the local area, keeping track of them and writing the official receipts for tax purposes, will become one of the most senior officials of the party in the local district. He will undoubtedly have a considerable amount of power and influence. Perhaps it is much better to have that situation at the local area than at the national level.

If we look at the urban centres, we will see there is room for a local electoral agent. In the past couple of years, we have seen the growth of a tremendous amount of community involvement in the large urban areas. That kind of involvement should also take place in the political realm. I believe the electoral district agent can be of substantial use to an urban constituency with regard to the collection of funds and ensuring that people get their receipts for income tax purposes. The great difference in the manner of gaining funds between an urban constituency and a rural constituency in the province of Saskatchewan goes without saying.

For example, I have colleagues who run in urban-rural constituencies in the cities of Saskatoon and Regina. No national agent of a party will ever be able to involve himself in the collection of funds in a constituency that is a combination of small communities, strictly farm areas and a large urban area. In that type of constituency, there are a number of factors to be considered. The first factor in the urban setting is that the collection of funds will be through direct contribution which a national agent may well be able to handle. There will also be collections at public meetings in the urban area where a considerable number of rural people, urban people and people from both urban ridings in those cities will be contributing. In the small communities in the constituency there will be the same kind of public meeting contributions, as well as in the rural area surrounding them, involving individual collections made by a local representative of the party.

All of this will complicate the role of the national party's agent. Therefore, I think it is incumbent upon the House to seriously consider the complications and administrative nightmares which can be created by the manner in which this bill is written. I have suggested these amendments which I hope will clear the air, at least in terms of the local constituencies versus the national office.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Chair might be allowed to interrupt proceedings for just one moment to refer to a point of order raised earlier today by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard).

When Bill C-203 was called on orders of the day, the hon. member for Skeena suggested that the report received from the committee was irregular in that the bill before us included amendments passed in the committee and parts of a bill which were not covered by the royal recommendation.

Since the point was raised by the hon. member for Skeena, I have taken some time, with the assistance of the Chair's colleagues at the table and in the Chair, to look at the matter very seriously. I am prepared to admit there is an interesting point which has been raised by the hon. member.

If I understand his argument, the first point clearly relates to an amendment adopted by the committee and included at page 23 of the amended bill. This is subclause (3)(7) where it is suggested that the auditor's report received by a returning officer from an official agent will be published at the expense of the Chief Electoral Officer. The amendment obviously intends to make it clear that the expenditure for the publication of these reports will be on the shoulders or the responsibility of the Chief Electoral Officer rather than the candidate.

My impression was that this amendment was intended to make clear the intent of the bill now before the House. Even if that is the case, the point of the hon. member might still be well taken in that additional expense, either provided by the amendment or the bill itself, does not appear to be covered by the recommendation. In this instance, it would not be the report of the committee or the bill as reported by the committee which would be at fault, but the recommendation which formed the basis of the original bill.

It may well be that some consideration should be given to a closer study of the recommendation to see whether it is large enough in scope to include this expense and, if not, whether with the consent of the House, I assume, an amendment might be obtained from His Excellency. I am not suggesting that is necessary, but it is a point which ought to be considered.

The second point raised by the hon. member is not quite as clear. He referred to a part of the bill at page 25 of the legislative proposal. Subclause (1)(b)(i) refers to the postal cost of mailing one item which is assumed to be eight cents under present regulations and (ii) eight cents for each of the first 25,000 names. That is a total of 16 cents under the present rules and regulations. The royal recommendation does refer to the fact there is 16 cents which is approved for payment by His Excellency.

The hon. member for Skeena suggests there may be a change in the postal rates. Perhaps next year it will be 10 cents and 20 years from now it will be 20 cents. At the same time, the hon. member will appreciate there is always the hope that instead of being eight cents next year, it will be six cents. I wonder whether it is not incumbent on the Chair, on the House, or on whoever drafts the recommendations in consultation with His Excellency to proceed on the basis of the law as it currently stands on the statute books.

At the same time, I repeat that in my view the point is interesting and well taken, though perhaps not as clear as the first one. If it were possible to change the recommendation to make sure that it covers not only the present situation but the situation as it might arise in the future, then such an amendment should be made. But I doubt that hon. members would wish to impose this very difficult task on His Excellency. I would think we should be content to look a little more closely at the first point to which I referred and consider whether it might not be possible to include a few words in the recommendation which would ease the hon. gentleman's procedural conscience so that we might go on to debate this bill and the amendments and motions related thereto in full knowledge that all the procedural niceties have been observed.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I thank the hon. member for having brought these points to the attention of the Chair. Perhaps they will be helpful not only in this present instance but in future instances when hon. members such as the hon. member for Skeena propose amendments which do not conform with His Excellency's recommendation.

It being five minutes past six o'clock, the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): When the House adjourned at six it was considering at the report stage motions Nos. 3 and 4 in the name of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight), motion No. 5 in the name of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), and motion No. 6 in the name of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters).

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak very briefly on this matter before us. If I may make a few introductory remarks, I should like to say that the reason I became a member of the committee was that this bill was referred to it. I, personally, requested that I become a member of the committee because I thought that this bill was not appropriate for Canadians or in their best interest. I felt that the principle of the bill went against the human nature of the people of this country, their traditions and a number of the institutions that we have.

However, I became involved in the debates in the committee and I can indicate, as my colleague did, that there were 51 meetings in all. This committee sat three times a day every Tuesday and Thursday, with some additional meetings added, from November 15 until last Thursday. The committee sat from eleven o'clock in the morning virtually through until eight o'clock at night. It is correct to say that there were 19 experts on the committee for whom politics was the very essence of their existence. Since they had all been successfully elected, they felt that they knew best how to frame a bill dealing with electoral expenses.

I think it would be fair to say that anyone who has worked on the committee, or anyone who was interested in the committee and expressed a belief in the various possibilities of the measures included in this bill, could advance the argument that the bill, as originally presented, was dramatically altered. Suffice it to say that the original bill had 38 pages and some 150 amendments which, worked out mathematically, amount to some 101 amendments to the original bill. I think it would be appropriate to say that this bill was changed or it was suggested that it should be changed drastically by the committee.

During the committee stage, members of the NDP party introduced a number of amendments to the bill. During the meetings of the committee we had long and serious discussions about proposed amendments put forward by members of the NDP. We now have some 42 amendments put forward by that party for consideration. These amendments were put forward by six or seven members of that party. Some of the amendments suggested were discussed during committee proceedings, and some of them were of such a nature that I would support them. I did support some of them during the committee proceedings, particularly the amendments in relation to the appointment of an electoral district agent. I supported that amendment because I felt it would increase the independence of individuals in the electoral district in this country.

It is common knowledge that the NDP is the party which has the most scandalous reputation of all parties in this country, but even that party has suggested amendments which are acceptable to many members of this Chamber. There are a number of other amendments that could be made to this government proposal and which might be acceptable to most members. In view of the fact there are now 42 amendments before the House for consideration, I hesitate to suggest additional changes, but as a member of the committee which considered this bill at some length I would suggest that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but I would remind him of the directive of Mr. Speaker earlier today in respect of the number of amendments that have been proposed to this bill. Perhaps the hon. member has not had a chance to express the view he has in mind but, in accordance with the suggestion by Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the hon. member that he refer in his remarks to the general principles of the bill as embodied in the amendment before us at this time.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I should draw your attention to the fact that the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) has moved an amendment in respect of electoral district agents, to which I feel I have the right to refer. I do not wish to become involved in an argument with the hon. member who has spoken for the NDP, but I must point out that his suggested amendment would cause a dramatic change in the operation of this proposed measure. I would perhaps support his amendment, and I did so at the committee stage, but I should point out that members of the committee dealt with this matter on a very non-partisan basis.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) has indicated that he intended to introduce a number of amendments to the bill, but decided not to do so in view of the amendments proposed by other hon. members. He indicated he was taking this attitude because of the recommendations made by the committee. For this same reason, amendments have not been proposed by several members of my party. We felt we should not spend too much time discussing this bill, but should pass it quickly. I hope the House will support the recommendations proposed by the committee, and, speaking for the party to which I belong, I suggest that we are in favour of this measure.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): It was refreshing, Mr. Speaker, to hear the comments of the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew (Mr. Dick), but unfortunately when you work with an hon. member in a committee you get to know him quite well; there is an informality and you become familiar with the hon. member to the extent that you know his first name. Perhaps that is an improper attitude to take, but the fact is that this is the basis upon which one works in committee.

Mr. Dick: Lanark, Renfrew, Carleton.

Mr. Howard: In any event, it is refreshing to hear the comments from the hon. gentleman because, earlier this afternoon I listened to the official spokesman for the Conservative Party, the hon. member for Halton (Mr. O'Connor). I received the impression from his comments that, even though the bill was defective, was incomplete, was unsatisfactory, he and the Conservative Party were going to wrap their arms around it, embrace it and say it was the best possible measure that could be obtained so they would expedite its passage. I knew, of course, that there were members of the Conservative Party who did not hold that view because they had expressed their views earlier. I thought it would be passing strange if this group which classifies itself as the official opposition, the only party with an official leader, suddenly found itself engaged in a marriage of convenience with the Liberals and received nothing in return.

My friend from Hamilton West is again assisting me tremendously in the development of my thoughts. The hon. member for Halton earlier made what I thought were some unkind comments about myself and my position in respect of this bill. He made reference to the 20 per cent feature in the bill. Twenty per cent is the percentage of votes a candidate must receive before he is entitled to get any payment from the public purse for expenses. The hon. member for Halton tried to draw some conclusion from the fact that in the committee I had moved a motion, the effect of which would reduce that to 10 per cent, which is what I did. The motion was ruled out of order because it transgressed the recommendation of the Governor General in respect of expenditures. I now have an amendment which we will consider a little later to increase that to 70 per cent. The hon. member made some comments to the effect that I should pick up my marbles and go home and inferred "if you can't play it my way don't play at all".

I cannot follow the strange approach of the hon. member for Halton in respect of this situation. He does not seem to be able to draw the distinction between a member operating in committee, moving a motion in an attempt to present the position of his party, and a member acting in his capacity as a representative of his constituency in this House, which I am attempting to do. In case there is any doubt, I am against any payments out of the federal treasury to candidates.

Mr. O'Connor: Your first amendment would have increased the payment.

Mr. Howard: The hon. member for Halton, who made that comment, will have an opportunity, if he follows the rules to take part in this debate in a formal way instead of nattering away while remaining seated. I wanted to point out that we have a situation in which the official spokesman for the official opposition said in the House that his party is in love with this bill, in love with the Liberals, and will do everything they can to expedite the passage of this bill. Therefore, anybody who disagrees with that position is somehow suspect.

I thought I would put on the record my view about these matters for the benefit of the hon. member for Halton. This is the first time in this parliament I have seen a member of the official opposition formally become an executive assistant to the President of the Privy Council and try to put a bill through the House.

An hon. Member: He is practising to take over.

Mr. Howard: If he does not have any more integrity about other matters than he has about this bill he should not take over.

Mr. O'Connor: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member has been trading jibes with me and I with him during the course of the debate this evening. Now, he has allowed me to get under his skin and accuses me of a lack of integrity. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that is not the case. I have been consistent in my view and attitude in respect of this bill. I think he should be asked by you, Mr. Speaker, to withdraw such a charge or substantiate the statement he has made.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the hon. member rising to speak on the point of order?

Mr. Howard: No, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: He should.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. So far as I am concerned it is my impression, although the feelings of the hon. member might be hurt, that this is more a question of debate than anything else. Perhaps I should take this opportunity to remind hon. members, and the hon. member who has the floor, of the view expressed by Mr. Speaker this afternoon and the direction given by him at the time of the decision to suspend the first motion and go on to the other motions. He invited hon. members to be more specific. I think the House has an opportunity on these four amendments which are before us at this time to engage in enough general discussion of the principle of this bill, so I think we should refrain as much as possible from making third reading speeches at the second reading stage. I would ask hon. members for their co-operation, and I would ask the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) to come as quickly as possible to the subject matter of the motion at this time.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I was sure you would not find a question of privilege in that statement. In any event, may I say that I did not mean to cast any asperions against the hon. member for Halton. Perhaps the words "question his integrity" were beyond what should be the decorum for debate in this House. I apologize to him for having let those words escape my lips. He is certainly guilty, however, of an indignity. He and his party certainly are guilty of an indignity, and that is their subservience to the government in legislative matters of this kind without obtaining anything in return. Perhaps they might even lose the title "official opposition" which the House Leader of the Official Opposition took solely to himself the other day.

[Mr. Howard.]

The amendments before us, which I have been leading up to in my preliminary remarks, to me at least touch upon the very core and substance of parliamentary democracy in Canada. They relate to the structure of parliamentary democracy as it pertains to a constituency and to a community. These are the amendments which would set the pattern in respect of whether or not we are to have a politically organized element in this nation, and whether or not the people in the constituencies and communities will have a say in what takes place in their political organizations.

That is the fundamental question involved in the set of amendments before us now. Some years ago this Parliament embarked upon the question of organizing more tightly the position of parties at the federal level, and the placing of the political party in a more prominent position in relation to that of the individual candidate. The very question of deciding to place the name of the political party on the ballot, which was done some years ago, was a move in that direction. It was a move in the direction of saying that a political party shall have a larger say in what happens in a constituency.

I think it was in 1970 that we made amendments to the Canada Elections Act to set up the mechanism in section 13 for the registration and authentication of political parties. This provision enabled political parties to organize themselves at the national level in such a way that they could make an application to the Chief Electoral Officer to become registered and put on his list of registered parties. If a party is not on that list maintained by the Chief Electoral Officer, then it has no position within the political spectrum in Canada in an organized way.

We are now moving from those provisions that were enacted in 1970 about registered parties in the direction of saying, in effect, that only registered political parties can run candidates and can spend money, and that an amalgam of people who may want to get together to form a new political party will not be able to run candidates and to spend any money in the conduct of the election unless they meet certain criteria, one of which is to have a certain number of members in this House. That would not apply to a new party becoming established. For that party to become an established registered party and to move against the force of the state—which is what is involved in the bill—it would have to nominate 50 candidates by the thirtieth day before election day.

This is what we are talking about in these amendments, and there are four of them in number. They seek to establish a position within the registered parties' structure for an electoral district agent, specifically named as such with a specific orientation to the home town structure, because under the bill a registered party must have a chief agent and he and others can be called registered agents. It is only through registered agents that contributions can be made to a registered political party. The only channel for campaign fund contributions or administration contributions for the party is through a chief agent who is also a registered agent.

Under the bill it becomes the prerogative of the registered party at its national headquarters, of the chief agent of that party or the leader of that party, in other words the top level portion of the registered party, to decide who will be the registered agents. What could occur in such an instance? For argument sake, let us consider that the Progressive Conservative party which is well organized in Ontario decides, if the bill passes, that it is in the best interests of that party to appoint, say, three people in Ontario as registered agents. Those three people would be the only three people in that province who would be able to collect funds for that party, organized and directed toward the top.

The party to which I belong may find it advantageous to choose one person in the province of British Columbia and, say, that person will be the registered agent of that party in B.C. for the purposes of collecting funds and for the purpose of being a registered official or designated agent of the party in the province.

The Liberals may do something else in the province of Quebec, and the constituency organizations of a particular political party will have no say whatever in the choosing of registered agents, except when there is a candidate, either declared or nominated in the official way. Then, the candidate can appoint an official agent, which he does now, and the official agent becomes the person in that constituency through whom all money is channeled for the conduct of the election in that constituency. Only during that very short period of time, not exceeding 58 days or something of that sort, can this take place.

There is a compressed minimum of time between dissolution of parliament, the issuance of the writ, and election day. Only in that period of time does the candidate of a party have the opportunity to become involved in the machinery of the party itself in terms of campaign fund contributions. Apart from that period this can only be done at the level of the national headquarters, the level of the chief agent, the level of the national leader, the level of the national president, or at whatever level is determined by the political party.

I think this is wrong in substance in relation to our sense of political values. What the amendments seek to do in one case is to say that members of a particular party in an electoral district can choose one or more people who will be called electoral district agents who are designated that way because they have only the authority to work within the electoral district which chooses them. Also, pursuant to the provisions of the bill, they will be called registered agents. There is an amendment to change the definition of registered agents to say that it shall also include, for more precision, a person who is called an electoral district agent.

It seems to me that this has nothing to do whatever with political philosophies or with the ideologies of parties. It has to do with the totality of what we want to see happen in our political institutions. If we want to see the consolidation of authority at the top and the centralization of authority in the national headquarters office, then we should go along with the concepts in the bill. If we want to see some countervailing force to that, some opportunity for people in communities and constituencies to have some involvement in a formal and direct way rather than having to rest their case upon the generosity or lack of generosity of the leader of a party or of the officers at the national level of parties or of the chief agent of the party or on the very tenuous relationship that exists sometimes between a constituency and the national office, we should accept the amendment. In other words, this responsibility should rest in the fundamental area at home, in the community consisting of members of the party who actually do the work at election time, who knock on doors, distribute literature, drive the cars and do the scrutineering.

A moment ago the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick) said that the NDP was the most centralized of parties. Immediately, I asked some of my colleagues whether they belonged to that party because I do not belong to that kind of party. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said to me as an aside that if he had relied upon a political party, the CCF at that time, to get him elected, he would only have been elected once. The number of times he was elected following that were the result of his own activity and the activities of the members of that party in Winnipeg North Centre.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, without endorsing the comments of my colleagues from the Progressive Conservative Party with regard to this bill, namely, the hon. member for Halton (Mr. O'Connor) and the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton (Mr. Dick), I am at a loss to try to follow the reasoning of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) who intends to repeat the motions that were tabled at the committee stage.

It is absolutely beyond me to understand this desire to propose new amendments which have been debated at the committee stage, for very obvious reasons at the time, and among others precisely because each party was seeking control over those allowed to submit their candidacy.

Since this legislation is aimed first at limiting expenditures of the parties and candidates and second at refunding parts of those expenses, surely each duly registered party represented by an official agent will want that the expenditures incurred by its representatives and the funds collected be spent in an acceptable manner.

The parties are entitled, at least mine is, to control the candidates which will represent it at a general election, mainly for the reasons just expressed by the hon. member and namely because of the tax deductions some adventurers might be interested in thrusting themselves forward and declaring their candidacy not for a marginal party but for a well-established party such as mine. If you consider History, you will find that in Quebec candidates have run at the provincial level under the Liberal banner and were elected by a strong majority. But a few years later they ran under another banner or as independents and were totally defeated.

Those are good reasons why the party must absolutely keep on choosing its own candidates, and controlling those it mandates to collect the money, spend it, and make commitments on its behalf.

[English]

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the desire of this House to move this bill along in view of the fact that there are 40-odd amendments on the order paper. Having been a member of the committee at the time this particular clause dealing with electoral agents was discussed and related amendments in the name of Mr. Knight, Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 and particularly No. 5 in the name of Mr. Rodriguez.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nowlan: That is the way it is on the order paper.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That does not give you the right to break the rule.

Mr. Nowlan: I am just reading the order paper, Mr. Speaker. If the man from Winnipeg North Centre wants to give some spiritual guidance to anything I have to say tonight I would be glad to sit down and let him help elucidate my very, very offhand reading of the order paper amendments Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 that are under discussion in the names of the members I cited.

In spite of that distraction from that distracting individual, I should like to go back to the merits of the amendments and deal with the merits rather than procedure, something that is fundamental rather than the rule book. I should like to deal with something that affects the rights of every member of this House rather than the dust of the parliamentary library where some members like to hibernate in season and out, and do not care about a vacation, be it Christmas or not. Let us hear some more from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to learn what he can add to these amendments Nos. 3, 4 and 5 which go to the very heart of the constituency organization which puts all the members here in this House.

There are many things I could say about this bill. All members considered it with diligence in the committee. I am going to disagree with the hon. member for Halton this time, but he and other members of my party on that committee, frankly did help the government to bring some order out of chaos to Bill C-203. I think finally the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), who has laboured long and with some hope of fulfilled expectation that this bill might move further down the sessional trail and perhaps to from conception into birth—I guess it has been conceived and it is partly in pregnancy now—perhaps wants to make sure it is not going to be stillborn or a complete abortion. This bill would have been an abortion if it were not for the members of the Conservative Party and the NDP. I guess, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre could say a ho-hum to that because we are not supposed to refer to party names in this House but to the opposition and the government, but the member for Winnipeg North Centre has to refer to party names because he and members of the government are sort of tied up in an unholy alliance!

Be that as it may, all members worked on these amendments and the government brought forth many remedial amendments. What gives me most concern, and I echo many of the remarks of the hon. member for Skeena, is that this bill is founded on the assumption that all candidates are potential frauds and that the citizens are going to be seduced by politicians. I do not like the atmosphere in which this bill is conceived. I am all for reform, I am all for disclosure and I am for the state helping to pay back the candidate after a good election. Let us go further. The Liberals will have their next leadership contest within three or four months. If they are going to be consistent, let us have public funding not just for candidates at election time but let us make sure that wealth is not a necessary ingredient to be a candidate for the leadership of any party as we tunnel along the parliamentary road in this democracy of ours.

Coming back to amendments Nos. 3, 4 and 5, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Skeena and the hon. member for Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton stressed what to me is fundamental, and what I do not think members fully appreciate is the significance of these amendments dealing with the electoral district agent. There are many things I could say if we were speaking in general terms, but since we are dealing with these motions I have to restrict myself. However, it could be said that these particular amendments start at the wrong end of the totem pole. The authority by law which has some say in the appointment of the electoral district agent, is at the top. I am against that, Mr. Speaker. I am prepared to fight it and differ with my party if my party cannot be persuaded and other members of this House cannot be encouraged to amend this clause along the lines of the amendments we are dealing with right now.

I hope members of the Social Credit Party participate in this debate because, without the amendments, the bill allows the leader of the party to pick the electoral district agent in each of the electoral district ridings. As the hon. member for Skeena said, he may pick one or five but it is the leader who picks. This is a centralizing instrument in the hands of a leader in a national party context. I do not believe national leaders should have that authority. What would the position have been with the Social Credit Party during their schism when there was a Social Credit Party and a Créditiste Party if Bill C-203 had been in operation? Just what leader and what faction would have been appointing the electoral district agent to help give the income tax returns and collect the funds between elections?

The hon. member for Skeena correctly cites the bill now in its present form in conjunction with the Elections Act when all candidates, after nomination, appoint their electoral agent. This provision opens up new territory. We had a wiretapping bill which went to the other place, was amended and perhaps it is going to be ironed out. All the members on the committee, and certainly some in the House, stressed that since the wiretapping measure was entering into the field of privacy, safeguards had to be introduced. Certain members of this House said that the name of the bill was a misnomer; it ought to have been called the invasion of privacy act under certain conditions. They said that we must make sure there are safeguards, so that the privacy of individual persons is protected. That brought on much debate.

In some ways we are doing much the same with this bill. Some members say we are moving in the direction of reform. I say that all the election reform bills you can think of will not be worth the paper they are printed on unless real reform takes place at the constituency level. I come from the Nova Scotia, as does the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). No member in this House knows more about abuses of the electoral process, and reforms which have been made without election reform bills, than the President of the Privy Council, in whose name this bill stands. He, and I, and certain other members, are aware of electoral abuses. Certainly, abuses occurred in many constituencies, but they were corrected because the people at the local level decided it was time to fight elections on a different basis. Yet there is a proposal before the House for parties to be officially registered. We are to create an agent who is to give out income tax receipts for money that is given to a registered party between elections. We are breaking new ground. Are we asking the public to pay registered parties and candidates who fight elections? As I say, we are breaking new ground but forgetting the people at the constituency level, the people who nominate and elect the candidate. Instead of working from the bottom, we are working from the top. I say that is the wrong way to begin.

How many members have looked closely at the implications of this bill, and of this part we are discussing? The Creditistes did not have a member in the committee while this part was being discussed. Do they know how the clause we are discussing would affect their problems with regard to leadership, since the leader of the party is supposed to appoint electoral agents? We have heard of individual members crossing the floor of the House. Even during the holding of conventions, some members crossed the floor. Yet, under this proposal, the national leader is given power to designate electoral district agents. I think that is wrong. I think all members want reform, but I do not see how, by changing the end of the totem pole, you will bring about reform. You will not bring about reform by ignoring people at the riding level, at the poll level. You will not bring about reform by creating a new structure which ignores them. If you call that reform, I say it is a deformed form of reform; there are many more things which could be said about it.

I hope other hon. members will address themselves to this clause. I do not think too many members are aware of the implications of these amendments, when taken together. Some members, I think, have suggested that instead of the leader designating the electoral agent, the constituency association should pick the electoral district agent who is to be appointed and send his name up to the leader for confirmation. That is the question to which we ought to address ourselves. I could say more on this point, but I had better not digress too far.

This bill will create basic deformities in our system and open up possibilities for fundamental abuse, unless we reverse the method of the appointment of electoral district agents. I hope we can do that in the spirit of Commons debate. Certainly, the bill is not perfect. One only has to see the number of amendments which were made in committee to realize that. Honestly, I do not know how many amendments were moved in committee. This is not a case of the Medes and the Persians. Amendments were proposed in committee because some clauses were impractical of application, some were plainly stupid and others incomprehensible. The bill was well amended in committee. I hope, in the spirit of Commons debates, searching attention will be given to the clauses referred to, so that the appointment of the electoral district agent can come from the people at the riding level rather than from the leader above.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I regret not having had the opportunity to attend the committee discussions on this bill. I take it that many changes were made and many worthwhile suggestions were brought forward. I should like to know exactly why it is proposed that an agent shall be appointed by a political party. Why were members interested in choosing the chief electoral officer in the manner set out in the bill? I can only surmise that much of the discussion was on a party basis, rather than on the basis on which each individually elected member could put forward his views.

It has always been fundamental in a democracy, I believe, that anyone who thinks he has a role to play in the political process of his country has the right to attempt to do so. Provincial governments, on many occasions, have dealt with this question in different ways, as have other countries. Normally, if a person in a democracy wants to become a political candidate, it is not difficult for him to do so. For example, when I was last involved in Ontario provincial politics, a man had to have only 100 signatures on a nomination form. No deposit was required, merely the signatures of 100 people who were willing to see you elected. Candidates in federal elections sometimes do not collect 100 votes. So, clearly, we have not made it too difficult for a person to participate in the political process.

I have been interested to learn that in the United States much attention has been paid to the pre-election period. I am looking at an article which deals with dollar politics, or the issue of campaign spending.

An hon. Member: Is it by Richard Nixon?

Mr. Peters: It is about Richard Nixon; I do not think he wrote it. It indicates that in the United States much of the spending begins prior to the election. The article also says that because of "Richard M. Nixon's extensive travel in 1966 on behalf of Republican Congressional candidates," he became a major presidential contender. The article goes on to say:

> The 30,000-mile tour, including the salary and expenses of one assistant, cost $90,000. The money was raised independently of the campaigns.

> Mr. Nixon's first campaign planning session for his 1968 presidential race was held in early January 1967. "Nineteen months and more than $10-million later, Richard Nixon was the Republican nominee for President," wrote Alexander in his book Financing the 1968 Election.
> Ronald Reagan's 1967-68 nationwide speaking tours contributed to his later candidacy for the Republican presidential nomination, Alexander wrote, yet at the time they were also legitimate activities of the incumbent Governor of California.

The article goes on to say he spent a very large sum of money prior to being declared a candidate. One member earlier referred to the New Democratic Party as being centrally oriented. If we are, this could be an indication of our socialist background. However, the fact is we are less centrally oriented than any other political party.

It is interesting to note a paper that was presented on politics and the last federal election by Khayyam Z. Paltiel, Professor of Political Science at Carleton. In it he refers to the Liberal party, the one which my friend across the way recently said he agreed with whatever they did and was a candidate for that party. The Liberal party of Canada collected approximately $6.5 million, some 60 per cent more than had been amassed in the 1968 election. Of this sum, $600,000 was used to discharge the accumulated overdraft incurred by national headquarters and the provincial associations; $1,322,000 was used by the national office and $3,978,000 was distributed by provincial campaign committees. The remittance to the candidates ranged from $4,000 to $7,000, averaging $6,000 in Ontario and $600,000 remained in the hands of the members of the treasury committee. No doubt this is one of the reasons members of the Liberal party have no objection to the central control of moneys being raised prior to an election and prior to the official agent taking over in the constituencies.

Those in the Conservative party who support this provision are well aware of the fact their situation is no different. The same writer goes on to say it should be noted that while constituency allocations appear to average $6,600, some provinces like Alberta and their constituencies were entirely self sustained. Where a member in a constituency, particularly a sitting member, is given a high priority, with the Liberals averaging $6,000 from the central treasury and the Conservatives $6,600, it is obvious they would be satisfied with having one chief agent to handle the collections prior to an election.

I wish to say that in my experience, that is not true. I suggest it will not be true for new developing political parties in the future. They will raise money for their election campaigns from the people in the constituencies. For this reason, it is going to be necessary for the constituency organization to appoint a constituency agent who will be responsible for collections that are made prior to the taking over of that responsibility by the official agent. I can state quite frankly that, as a member of parliament, I have never been impressed with the idea that has developed in this parliament of the individual becoming less and less important and the political party becoming more important. One does not have to go back many years to find very little consideration given in the rules of this House to the political parties, and certainly to the official function of those parties.

I suggest that the right, obligation and functions of an individual member to represent his constituency is more important to maintaining democracy than the creation of political parties and the central control they now have. I was amused when we last changed the Elections Act and eliminated the designation of a candidate's occupation, whether he be a farmer, miner, or school teacher, and whether he lived on a rural concession road, in a particular town or a particular section of the city. The name of the political party was substituted for that local identification.

The political party name can only be provided to a candidate if the party wishes to endorse him. They send the candidate a letter stating he is entitled to carry the name of that political party. This has tended to create an atmosphere of domination by political parties rather than the right of people to choose their candidate and demand that he represent them, even if it may be against the interest of some other members of his party or other members of the House. The constituents want their candidate to know their wishes and aspirations. They want to know that other members from other parts of the country are also aware of the wishes and desires of their constituents. They want their candidate to be as respectful of their wishes as he would like them to be of his.

In appointing an agent to represent a constituency, we are only extending the collective will of a group of people in a constituency to provide an agent who will obviously have to be registered with the chief agent. He will be responsible for collecting moneys prior to an election and prior to the appointment of the official agent. If it is the desire of constituents to choose their own representative, they should have the right to do so.

It is interesting to note that in Ontario 50 collectors were involved on behalf of the Liberal party as compared to 12 in 1968. The 90 largest corporations in Ontario were canvassed personally by the national chairman, the majority in the late winter and early spring of 1972, some six months prior to the election. It may be that the chief agent, where he is nominated from national headquarters, will operate fairly close to the national chairman and he can probably represent the party reasonably well.

It may well be that the national leader, the national secretary and the national financial chairman who may make collections prior to an election would be quite satisfied to make their contributions known only to an official chief agent. It may well be, as is more likely the case, that the provinces will be doing much of the collection and therefore there will be ten agents appointed. I suppose most of us can only speak for our own ridings, but in my riding I have always depended upon a committee to make a decision as to the cost of the election. I have always allowed them, with some advice, to set the budget and I am very happy to allow them to make all the collections but I believe that because those collections are made locally, we should be entitled to a constituency agent who would be responsible for reporting the contributions which are made in that area. He could make his report to the chief agent who will of course be responsible for appointing him. I think this should be true of the other political parties in my riding. It may well be they receive contributions from the national headquarters or from provincial headquarters, but I come from northern Ontario, an area where people take their politics very seriously and I am sure all political parties secure contributions locally.

I am sure other members from northern Ontario would agree that a constituency agent would be advantageous in making a report to the national agent. It may depend on how your political party is organized. It may depend in some instances on your relationship with your party. I have run in a number of elections, but I can remember only one election in which I ran where I got the total contribution from the provincial party, and that was in an election where I was a token candidate. They gave me 2,000 posters which I was asked to put up. They had my name on them. They did a very nice job of it. The art work was very good. I have been using the same type of poster ever since. That was the only time, in my experience, when the contribution came from the top.

In all other cases we raised 25 per cent of our total budget and we paid that to our provincial office. We have always made that contribution during the eight elections in which I have run. I therefore believe the series of motions which I anticipate you will be putting as one, Mr. Speaker, are motions which deserve the support of all hon. members who really do not believe that as sitting members of parliament or as members of a major party we have the God-given right always to be elected. It should be possible for a small group formed in any of the constituencies to participate in the democratic process and raise money before an election so as to run candidates who will one day, perhaps, be elected to seats in this chamber. I am opposed to any type of system which will lock in the status quo by providing a sitting member with an unreasonable advantage.

There may be one simple thing which members of this House have forgotten. Many of them have gone a long distance away from the people. If there is one thing which separates Canadians from people of other nationalities, it is the support they are willing to give to the underdog. This could have quite an effect in an election if the kind of motion we are proposing is not accepted.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the series of motions which are under debate. I think it is important to look upon these amendments as typical of the purposes behind the bill and typical of the trend the bill is taking. It is a dangerous trend. It is a trend away from participatory democracy. Before the bill passes, I hope many of these amendments will be given careful scrutiny because when we move away from participatory democracy we move toward a more bureaucratized, a more computerized and a less personal kind of society. In the long run we shall find we have left the voters out entirely. We shall be able to let machines do the job, we shall be able to let the public purse run the campaign and perhaps the Gallup poll will tell us the result.

This may be stretching the argument to some extent, nevertheless the trend is evident within the bill and the amendment is a valid attempt by some members to reverse this trend and continue to seek a meaningful participatory democracy which involves local control and local contributions. I hope all members will support this approach, an approach which would allow a local constituency association to get off the ground regardless of political views, and pick one of their own—not someone superimposed on them from above—to participate actively in the political process. Too often we find we look at the picture from Ottawa, but do not see the picture from the viewpoint of local constituents.

This bill—and this amendment is an attempt to reverse what I think is a trend in the bill—seeks to avoid that kind of depersonalization. It seeks to avoid locking us into the status quo. The thrust of the bill, in effect, will be an attempt to confirm the existing political parties in this country and will make it extremely difficult for anyone with a new idea or a new approach to fund that idea or approach and bring it forward. What we are really saying is that the political parties we have now are sufficient in terms of their political range and that we do not need any more.

The views of the public change from time to time and we in this House can very easily become out of touch with those views. I think in some areas we are already out of touch, particularly in the area of women's rights and abortion. It may be that if we continue to be out of touch, other political parties will emerge. It is most unfair that this House should see fit to try to protect existing political parties and to injure those who may try to form new political parties. In effect, we would be denying them the kind of democracy that is traditional in this country.

I have no hesitation in rising to support this amendment, which is only one of many that have been presented by this party to try to protect the principle of participatory democracy, the principle of using local citizens and having them actively involved, not merely in making contributions, but in working, knocking on doors, raising funds locally and being responsible for those funds. I would very much commend this particular amendment to the House.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The question is on motion No. 3, moved by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight), motion No. 4, moved by the hon. member for Assiniboia, motion No. 5, moved by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and motion No. 6, moved by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Election Expenses

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Pursuant to section (11) of Standing Order 75, a recorded division on the proposed motions stands deferred.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, earlier when we were discussing how the amendments were to be taken, Mr. Speaker only indicated the combinations of the first two. I wonder whether it might be appropriate at this time to suggest to the House that motions Nos. 7, 17 and 31 be taken as a group since they deal with Canadian funds and the sources of those funds as donations to campaigns. Then, following that we might take motions Nos. 8, 9, 10 and 11 as a group since they deal with limits on party expenditures. Then, motion No. 12 deals with party gifts to candidates and should probably be dealt with separately, though I should like to reserve my right to argue a point of order on its procedural acceptability.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to ask what we are voting on, motion No. 3, or motion No. 3 plus some other motions?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): We have deferred the vote on motions Nos. 3, 4, 5 and 6.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I would point out the absolute absurdity of that, because motion No. 3 is not in any way consistent with motion No. 5 as I read it, and I do not know how we could vote in that way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I understood the arrangement or suggestion was made that motions Nos. 3, 4, 5 and 6 be voted on, but if the hon. member wants to change that the Chair is ready to listen to him.

Mr. Brewin: The point I am making, Mr. Speaker, is that motion No. 3 provides for electoral district agents and refers to designation by the chief agents of the parties. That is one thing. Motion No. 5 provides for an association or organization of the members of a registered party within an electoral district choosing a person to be an electoral district agent, and so forth. It seems to me these are two quite separate proposals, and I do not understand how we can vote for or against two inconsistent motions simultaneously.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, if one checks one will find that motion No. 3 is a definition amendment. Motion No. 4 adds the words "electoral district agent" to a clause in the bill. Motion No. 5 sets out the way in which an electoral district agent is to be chosen, which is by a group in a particular riding calling itself whatever it happens to be; and motion No. 6 sets out how the agent is to be registered. As I understood Mr. Speaker's suggestion, it was to put all the items that dealt with the same subject, in this case an electoral district agent, into one package for discussion, and then have a separate vote, as it is called, at a later moment.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, the way the report stage amendments were to operate, as I understood Mr. Speaker's remarks at the commencement of the debate this afternoon, was that motions Nos. 3, 4, 5 and 6 would be lumped together for discussion purposes only, and that when the vote took place—and the vote has now been deferred—a vote will take place on each of motions Nos. 3, 4, 5 and 6. In other words, there will be four opportunities to record a vote on those motions.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger).]

I disagree with the contention of my colleague from Greenwood in regard to the inconsistency or contrariness of one to another, but assuming that is the case for the sake of argument, whether or not there is an inconsistency is not material to the vote. If there is an inconsistency, a member can vote one way on one and another way on the other. He can do that if he finds them inconsistent. However, I believe, they are companion pieces to one another. One deals with a definition; the second ensures that the definition of "registered agent" includes an electoral district agent; the third is the mechanism by which an electoral district agent may be chosen; and the fourth is a mechanism for advising the Chief Electoral Officer of any changes in the registry of electoral district agents.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Do I understand the House is unanimous that the motions will be voted on separately? If so I will put the question again.

• (2130)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt Motion No. 3?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): In my opinion the nays have it.

An more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The division on motion No. 3 is deferred. The question is now in respect of Motion No. 4. All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The division on Motion No. 4 is deferred.

The question is now in respect of Motion No. 5. All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The division on Motion No. 5 is deferred.

The question now before the House is in respect of Motion No. 6. All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The division on Motion No. 6 is deferred.

I understand it is agreed that we will now move to the consideration of Motions Nos. 7, 17 and 31. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Motion No. 7 stands in the name of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and reads as follows:

No. 7.

December 14, 1973—That Bill C-203, to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, be amended by inserting, between the words "otherwise" and "shall" in Section 13.1(5)(a) of Subclause 4(1) the following: "shall be in Canadian funds and directly from Canadian sources and"—

(b) An association or organization of the members of a registered party within an electoral district may choose a person or persons to be electoral district agents for the purposes of that registered party in that electoral district and may so notify the registered party who may forthwith notify the Chief Electoral Officer setting out the name and address of such persons and such information shall be recorded by the Chief Electoral Officer in the registry referred to in subsection (1)."

We are also considering Motions Nos. 17 and 31. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Motion No. 17 standing in the name of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) and Motion No. 31 standing in the name of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) read as follows:

No. 17.

That Bill C-203, to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, be amended by removing the comma at the end of line 4 at page 12 and adding the following:

"provided, however, that all such money shall be in Canadian funds and directly from Canadian sources."

No. 31.

That Bill C-203, to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, be amended in Sub-clause 9(2) by inserting between the words "class" and the word "and" in line 39 at page 21 the following:

"provided, however, that all such money shall be in Canadian funds and directly from Canadian sources".

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, in dealing with this motion—

An hon. Member: Are we dealing with Motion No. 7?

Mr. Howard: We are dealing with Motion No. 7 in a formal way, and we are also dealing with Motions Nos. 17 and 31, the latter being in the name of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member would like me to call all three motions so there will be no mistake. The House is now dealing with Motions Nos. 7, 17 and 31.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, there is not much to be said about Motions Nos. 7, 17 and 31, except that they express the desire of various individuals and organizations in this country in respect of the source of moneys used to finance political parties during election campaigns. I do not think anyone in this House will disagree with the suggestion that we should have a law that campaign funds should not come from outside Canada.

There is also a reference to a Canadian source. I might suggest that I have a good friend who spends the winter in Florida. He cannot get back to Canada during the wintertime but he sends a contribution to the campaign fund of the hon. member from Regina, and I should like him to continue to do so. I do not think that such a contribution should be considered as a contribution from a foreign source. In this regard, I think everyone knows what we mean, namely, that candidates should not in the normal course finance an election campaign directly or indirectly from a source outside Canada or through funds, the source of which, is other than Canadian. Surely, no one can disagree with that suggestion.

Amendments Nos. 7, 17 and 31 could be inserted in this bill without any damage to the political reputation of anyone in this country. In fact, I should think that the inclusion of these proposed amendments would enhance the reputation of any candidate taking part in a political campaign. I think I can safely assume that these three amendments will receive the unanimous support of all hon. members in this House, and that they will be accepted by hon. members of this Chamber and incorporated in our electoral laws.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member could explain to me in some detail what he means by the words in Motion No. 7 "Canadian funds", and what he means by "Canadian sources"? Perhaps there was not sufficient research in respect of this matter. I know what the principle is behind the proposed motions, but I hesitate to vote in favour of something in respect of which there has been no interpretation. While I understand the intent of the words "Canadian funds" and "Canadian sources", my point is that if we accept this amendment we will be giving our approval to a principle which suggests something which is obvious to some but not obvious to me. This principle may be obvious to many hon. members, but it is not obvious to me in respect of the reference to the phrases "Canadian funds" and "Canadian sources".

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, after listening to the remarks of my hon. friend—

Mr. Alexander: I am serious, Frank.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. member is serious as he is not subject to facetious observations. I know the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) always displays a consistent degree of seriousness in respect of everything that takes place in this House. I should like to thank him, through you, for the fact that this matter was raised in the committee. Let me suggest that I have always found that when a person is confronted with a good idea but does not want to spell it out, he can always reverse the acceptability by pleading an ignorance for—

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Alexander: No, I rise on a question of privilege, and I refer specifically to the remarks of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). All I asked for was some explanation in respect of the amendment proposed by the hon. member. He has taken the attitude that I am not serious in proposing questions in respect of this serious matter. I would hope that the motion—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I do not think the hon. member has made out a question of privilege. Certainly he is objecting to the remarks of the hon. member, but if that is the extent of his question of privilege I do not think the Chair should entertain it.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Hamilton West and I have some difficulty in understanding each other, and I know that he is laughing.

Mr. Alexander: I am laughing.

Mr. Howard: What I was putting forward was that in the committee these amendments were proposed in these words. In the committee objection was taken to them. In the committee there was advanced the thought by some hon. members, who I shall not identify, that this was a good idea but they did not understand it and therefore would vote against it. That is what I was trying to get across to the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander)—that some of his own colleagues found a refuge in ignorance. I was not trying to say to him that he was trying to find refuge in a question of misunderstanding. I was merely trying to relate what took place in the committee.

When drafting this motion I spoke to a gentleman in the Department of Justice. Perhaps I did the wrong thing. Perhaps I had too much faith in the ability of the Department of Justice to draft things to mean what they are supposed to mean. However, I called someone I knew there in respect of a lot of these amendments. I told him what our intent was. We had a conversation. This is how one goes about drafting legislation if one does not know legal phraseology. I told him what we wanted to impart in the bill. These are the words he gave me. He said that if we referred to Canadian funds that would be a designation that no one could misunderstand. Canadian funds are Canadian funds; they are not anything else. They are not United States funds, British funds or foreign currency or any other currency. I told this gentleman that we wanted to prohibit head offices of multinational corporations from making contributions to political parties, that we wanted to prohibit international unions headquartered in another country from making contributions to a political party and that we wanted to prohibit the bagman like Senator Hayes travelling to the United States, as apparently he did, seeking out contributions from headquarters offices of corporations which have subsidiaries in Canada. I told him that we wanted to knock out that possibility. These are the phrases and the words he gave me. The words "Canadian sources", "Canadian funds" and "directly from Canadian Funds" should not lend themselves to any misunderstanding unless the individual who seeks to find a misunderstanding wants to develop one for some other purpose. That is always possible in terms of statute law.

When laws have been passed, and when they have been presented before a judge for interpretation, we know how often the judge has said that surely Parliament did not mean this or something else because these words say thus and so. Sometimes when one is faced with what the court decides in a particular case and what was said in Parliament during the development of that law, one finds he is faced with two separate things. However, this is as close as it is possible to get to defining what we are talking about. I think it is completely understandable.

Another thing I was told about legislative drafting is that words are confining, restricting, and that the more words you use the more you restrict and confine what you are talking about; the more you attempt to spell out in precise detail, the more confusing and confounding you can become. This was the suggestion and advice we received in respect of our phrasing. I am sure the hon. member for Hamilton West has no difficulty in respect of understanding what we are trying to say. This is the advice I received. Even though members of the committee said this was a good idea but they do not understand it and would vote against it, I have not yet heard anyone suggest that it be phrased in some other way.

I do not think those members who said it was a good idea could phrase it in any more precise or clear way. We are trying to establish the principal point that Canadians should control Canadian policy in its domestic and industrial sense, and in its political sense as well. We know certainly that there is an attachment between money and politics. We know that if there is a political party contribution which comes from a particular source there is a tendency for the recipient thereof to lean in that direction. Perhaps he did so beforehand, but there is that tendency. There is the tendency to say that he who pays the bills will receive the prime consideration, and that he who pays the accounts will get the attention or that he who does not pay the accounts will not. We are trying to prevent the extraterritorial aspect of corporations, trade unions, individuals, associations and groups in other countries having influence, especially an undue influence, on the politics of this nation.

I know that during the course of the election campaign the party to which I belong was accused by spokesmen from other parties of being in receipt of Yankee money coming from the headquarters of international unions in the United States. Frankly, I do not know of this occurring, but that is the accusation. This statement has been denied a number of times but the accusation continues. Here is an opportunity for those in this House who want to stop this taking place, even though it never took place in the past, to put their vote where their mouth is and be counted in favour of this principle so that this source of funds will be denied this or any other party. There is an opportunity also to those in this House who want to get rid of the corporate influence in politics, the international corporation influence, to say we will deny that source of funds. ITT has caused enough difficulty and trouble in the political system of the United States of America and we sure as hell do not want it here. ITT can involve itself in the politics of this nation under this legislation unless we plug that loophole and say it cannot do it.

That is what this amendment is all about. It is an effort to ensure that Canadians will control their own politics, both in fact and in money as well, and to deny this potential intrusion of other nations in what is likely to happen in this country. When we speak in terms of financing of political parties on a year-around basis we speak in terms of quite a few million dollars. An estimate of the total expenditure by political parties and candidates who ran in the 1972 federal election is in the neighbourhood of $31 million. This includes national parties and candidates, expenditures of provincial sections of the party, and the like. That is a fair amount of money.

Let us say for argument's sake that the treasury committee of the Liberal party is the one that collects the money. Senator John Godfrey was the collector at that time and he collected something in the neighbourhood of $6.5 million in the last election. Out of that sum, $600,000 went to pay debts and accumulated overdrafts, $1,322,000 of that was used by the national office of the Liberal party, and $3,978,000 was disbursed by provincial campaign committees. There is a loophole here and let us deal with it for a moment. Although the bill speaks in terms of disclosing the source of funds, which is a companion measure to one of the amendments before us here, there is a loophole big enough to let through a fleet of trucks. The loophole was in the portion which I read which says that $3,978,000 was disbursed by provincial campaign committees.

I can see that in the next election—if it is not taking place already—the collection agents for the two old line parties will be the provincial sections of those parties. The money will be contributed for the use of the provincial sections of the parties and kept in a vault or bank account. Then, when the election is called and campaign funds are required, the provincial section of the party will drag out the $1 million or $2 million, or whatever amount of money it has accumulated, donate it to the registered party, which under this bill is the national headquarters of the party. Then, watch the source of funds that is disclosed under this bill. The source of funds as disclosed properly, legally and directly under the bill by the registered party at that time will be the provincial association of Liberals, Conservatives, or whatever the case may be, in a certain province, and the disclosure will not go beyond that.

What is the purpose of disclosure if you can hide the source in that fashion so easily? Surely, if it is possible to distribute $4 million out of $6 million during a federal election through the provincial campaign committees, then you can collect that money in the same way in periods up to and before elections. Certainly, the loophole is there. In Ontario, so far as the Liberal party was concerned, 50 collectors were involved and 90 of the largest of corporations in Ontario were canvassed personally by the national chairman, the majority of them in the late winter of 1971 and early spring of 1972, six months before the election. That is what the Liberal party did, canvass 90 of the largest corporations in Ontario to find the money. This was done personally by the national chairman who, I think, is Senator Godfrey, although I am not certain of that because he is called elsewhere chairman of the treasury committee, but all money was raised by the treasury committee and I am assuming that the national chairman is the same individual. If I am wrong, then I am wrong.

In Quebec, the situation was entirely different. It was more heinous because in Quebec the national campaign fund collector was none other than the then Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Mr. Alexander: No, I do not believe it!

Mr. Howard: On the one hand, he was giving out $6 million to IBM and the next day he went knocking on their door saying "I am collecting funds for the Liberal party". This bill will not stop that.

The Conservative party also collected money. They collected something like $3,900,000 for the national campaign.

An hon. Member: Where did you get your money?

Mr. Howard: Wait, I am speaking about the two important parties first—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard: Let me tell the House that IBM and ITT consider the Liberal party to be important, as do Imperial Oil, Gulf Oil, Texaco, and every one of these oil companies. They consider the Conservative party to be no less important.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Adjournment Motion

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

ENERGY—CONSIDERATION OF CONSTRUCTION OF PIPELINE FROM SAINT JOHN TO MONTREAL

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, hon. members can relax. I just have one brief comment which I wish to make. My contribution towards solving the problems of energy in the country goes back to December 5 when I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) if his department had under consideration the construction of a pipeline from Montreal to Saint John. Some other problems have come up since then, and I realize that the minister is busy tonight. I do not quarrel with the fact that he is not here—he has many problems in committee—but I thought it would be a good idea to raise it with him because he has a fond remembrance of Saint John and his relatives there.

In any event, the matter of a pipeline from Montreal to Saint John is current because today, according to a news report, Governor Kenneth Curtis of Maine is reported to have taken exception to the cutting off of energy to pulp mills in that state of the United States by Canada through the National Energy Board. Of course, this raises the matter of the dependency of Canada on the Portland, Maine, pipeline. Although Governor Curtis is good natured about it, and talks about problems which he knows the Maritimes have with the federal authorities, he does suggest that his state might have to get tough. This would be an interesting question of international law, whether the United States could cut off the supplies that come from Portland, Maine to Montreal. I suppose they would have the final authority to do so if they wished to exercise it.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I call to the attention of the House the unique geographical position of New Brunswick with regard to all sorts of energy development. It lies between Quebec, the New England States, Nova Scotia and the other Atlantic provinces. It has a tremendous hydro potential, although I think it is under development now. We all know that a nuclear plant has been offered to the province, under a very niggardly scheme, I might say. There is, as far as I know, good potential for a heavy water plant on the Bay of Fundy and two or three of the rivers that flow in there. The development of tidal power from the Bay of Fundy is well known and has been promoted by the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates) and others.

New Brunswick has, in my humble opinion, a very good opportunity to share in this search for self-sufficiency in energy on which Canada is embarked but it seems we are not being considered in the making of some of these decisions. The site of the deep sea port that has been talked about is now Montreal. We did not get the plant for heavy water that was announced when we thought we were being considered for it. The tidal development has been shut off because there is no interest by this government. Geography seems to be working against us and we would like to get into the picture.

The other day Premier Hatfield of New Brunswick, in assessing the problems of energy in a session of the legislature, pointed out the great need to connect Saint John with the development that has been planned. It has been suggested that a reversible pipeline to Montreal or the St. Lawrence would transport foreign crude through Saint John to Montreal or western crude could come from Montreal to the Maritimes, depending upon which price was the lowest at the time. The Board of Trade of Saint John wrote to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) pointing out that in view of this extra burden that has now been thrust upon eastern Canada by the price of oil, the availability of a pipeline would be very important in this price differential. In other words, if you are going to build a pipeline from western Canada to Montreal or from Sarnia to Montreal, why not at the same time consider a pipeline to the Maritimes?

We have a great future in our city. On the one side we have the Irving interests which have under construction and nearly completed, the largest refinery in Canada, 166,000 barrels per day. It was the largest initial phase refinery and now, of course, it will expand greatly. They have Canaport which was the first deep sea tanker port in the western hemisphere and which will take the largest tankers afloat. On the other side of Saint John is the Lorneville development which now has a thermal plant. If this project went forward, it would tie in with the development of the Maritimes. We could twin the line and it would fit into the whole picture.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I say that some consideration should be given in these grandiose energy plans of the government, even though we know they are not going to do anything for a while, to including New Brunswick in some way.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for his understanding remarks concerning the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald). As he knows, the minister is at a meeting of the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works tonight. I might also say, with regard to the remarks which have been quoted concerning the Governor of Maine, that I have been informed that his actual speech indicates that the press has misrepresented his views. Whether or not if that is so remains to be seen after further investigation. At the present time the government has under study the technical and economic feasibility of constructing a large diameter pipeline from a deep water port site in either the St. Lawrence estuary or on the eastern seaboard, to the Montreal refining centre. The crude oil throughput volumes would include supply of the St. Romuald refinery near Quebec City. Such a facility could significantly lower the cost of delivered foreign crude since it would give the new supertankers, VLCC's, access to a Canadian deepwater port. VLCC's have significantly lower unit transportation costs than do the tankers currently delivering foreign crude to Canadian ports.

Staff from several government departments are involved in the current feasibility study. A consulting firm has been retained. One consultant's report has been received with a second expected shortly. The interaction of the proposed new eastern pipeline and the existing Portland-Montreal pipeline system, as well as the proposed extension of the western crude oil supply pipeline to Montreal, is one of the important aspects of this study. There is a good possibility that at very little additional capital investment, any of these pipelines could be made reversible. In this manner, in times of emergency, the flow of oil could be reversed to supply east coast refiners with western Canadian crude oil.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—POSITION OF ARMED FORCES MEMBERS ATTACHED TO NORAD FOLLOWING SPECIAL ALERT ORDERED BY PRESIDENT NIXON ON OCTOBER 25

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, the questions asked of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) by myself and several other members yesterday and today in respect of Canadian involvement in the placing of American forces on Defence Condition III on or about midnight, October 24, and the answers given by the minister raise three important issues which are worthy of discussion. They are, first, was proper judgment exercised by senior Canadian military personnel in delaying notifying, for up to eight hours, the appropriate political authorities of the change in readiness of American forces; second, were Canadian troops actually involved in the alert without prior Canadian authorization; and, third, is NORAD an asset or a liability for Canada.

Let me deal with each of these questions in turn. First, was proper judgment exercised by the military in failing to inform the minister immediately of the change in alert status? My answer to this question is an unequivocal no. The minister, in answer to my question today, indicated that he, on the contrary, had absolute confidence in the judgment of the chief of defence staff and that events had proven that gentleman to have been right in deciding to avoid disturbing the minister's slumbers. After all, only American forces were involved.

The minister's statement was, with all due deference, patent nonsense. First of all, the general competence of the chief of defence staff has not been called into question. What has been called into question is his judgment in this particular instance.

Second, whether or not the general was proved right by events that Canadian security was not substantially affected is totally beside the point. That is a question for the democratically elected representatives of the people to decide, and not the military. I remind the House that our European allies in NATO were extremely bitter about their lack of notification regarding the American action. We received some notification, but our political leaders were not apprised of the situation until hours later and our Minister of National Defence wishes to defend the situation. Well, Mr. Speaker, either our European allies in NATO are hysterical and compulsive worriers, or our Minister of National Defence is entirely too soporific and complacent. I incline to the latter view.

Remember the situation. There was a shooting war in the Middle East. The United States and the Soviet Union were confronting each other in the area, although hidden behind their client states. Then, by executive action, American forces were placed on DEFCON III. What was the reason? Was it for fun? Was it because of a military threat? Was it to make the people of the United States forget the president's domestic political difficulties?

Should Canada be involved? Would Canada be involved, whether or not she wished to be? There is no question in my mind that the answers to those questions must be provided by the duly elected government of the country and that the answers should have been sought by the government immediately. Thus, the chief of defence staff was absolutely wrong in not advising the minister immediately he had news of the situation, which seems to have been about midnight, on October 24, and not 7.30 a.m. of October 25, when he eventually did tell the minister. The situation is this: either the general made that judgment, or the minister's instructions to the chief of defence staff about when his sleep should be disturbed are totally devoid of reality. I simply cannot believe, despite his assertions to the contrary, that the minister is happy with what happened on October 25. I would, therefore, like to know what instructions he has issued in an effort to avoid such blunders in the future.

The second major question raised by the events of October 25 is whether or not Canadian Armed Forces personnel were involved in a military alert without the knowledge or prior approval of this government. When I asked that question of the minister on October 25, his reply was, in effect, no. That answer was extremely misleading.

NORAD has a totally integrated command structure, communications network, radio network and aircraft guidance system. Canadians and Americans work together in all of the eight NORAD regions, a Canadian doing one job, an American another. Thus, the Continental Air Defence Command of the United States could not possibly have been moved to Defcon III without Canadians having been involved. It is nonsense to say otherwise and the minister as much as admitted the fact when he said yesterday at page 8793 of Hansard:

> There were some individuals in integrated staff positions who in the early stages would have been involved in the normal course of their duties, but they were not formally on alert and the country was not on alert.

That answer raises more questions than it answers. Does it mean that Canadians were relieved of their duties by Americans and that for the duration of the alert, which lasted several days, seven of the NORAD districts were manned entirely by Americans? If so, were the integrated command and direction structures of NORAD abandoned for the period of the alert and is the government happy with such a situation? If such was not the case, how much stock can we place in the minister's assertion that Canadians were not involved? Not much. Neither of the alternatives is acceptable.

The third major question raised by the events of October 25 is that of whether NORAD on balance is an advantage or a disadvantage to Canadians. I ask hon. members to remember that because of our involvement in NORAD, Canadian troops were involved in a decision which, for however brief a period, increased world tensions without our political leaders having any say in the matter. There was no consultation before the fact, only notification after and that notification did not come from the senior Canadian officer in NORAD who must have been aware of the situation almost immediately. He is a subordinate to an American general.

I think I can do no better in this regard than to cite some passages from the "Minority Report of New Democratic Party Members of Committee on External Affairs and National Defence on NORAD". In that document we said in part, and I quote:

> We do not accept the recommendation of the Committee that Canada should renew the NORAD Agreement even for a limited period of two years. In our view Canada should take advantage of the termination of the NORAD Agreement to let it die a natural death. In our opinion, for all useful purposes the NORAD Agreement is indeed dead, and it would be more fitting to bury it than to attempt to keep it alive—
> Obviously, if we withdrew from NORAD on the basis that we wanted "no truck nor trade with the Yankees" this would cause difficulties, but if we demonstrate, as we think can clearly be done, that a new framework is necessary for Canadian-American cooperation in the air defence of North America and that NORAD is outdated, we think it is insulting to Americans to assume that they would resent this and try to coerce us by denying reasonable economic cooperation with Canada on this basis.
> As we said before, we think such timidity on the part of Canada is out of place and it is a threat to the independence of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland), I wish to respond quickly to the three points he has made. The judgment of the Chief of the Defence Staff was excellent. Second, the Canadian troops were not involved in any formal way in the events we are speaking about. And, third, as I have stated here and in committee, and in conversation with the hon. member, the NORAD Agreement is an asset to Canada and the free world, not a liability. However, I agree with the hon. member that accurate, complete and timely communication between the chief of staff of the Canadian Armed Forces and me, as the Minister of National Defence, is of vital importance. I would also like to say that we are human beings, and that we are not always able to perceive all the contingencies. Each of us within his own area of responsibility must make judgments about what should be done and what should not be done. If I may philosophize for a moment, I might say it is my belief that no number of rules or regulations can ever provide a complete substitute, in advance, for personal judgment.

As the hon. member has pointed out, and as the House knows, events have clearly demonstrated that in the particular circumstances we are discussing the personal judgment of the chief of staff was excellent. I wish again to confirm my confidence in the present Chief of the Defence Staff. That confidence is undiminished. But to the extent that future events might not be so accurately assessed I have today established procedures which will in future require the chief of staff to advise me automatically and immediately whenever he receives information that the United States has changed the alert status of its armed forces, even if this does not involve any change in the alert status of the Canadian Armed Forces.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Richardson: Further, in reply to the hon. member, I also wish to confirm that the information which was received on October 24 just before midnight at the 22nd NORAD Region, North Bay, was also received simultaneously in National Defence Headquarters in Ottawa and was from there relayed to the Air Specialist Officer who immediately reported to the Operations Centre in National Defence Headquarters. This information was that the United States Continental Aerospace Defence Command Forces had been directed to move toward a state of increased alert, known as Defence Condition III.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I know this is very interesting but the hon. minister's time has expired. All I can do is ask the members—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Continue!

Mr. Richardson: Thirty seconds?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): This is a departure from the rules.

Mr. Richardson: Since our own Canadian defence units were not involved, it is my belief that in this United States alert all appropriate Canadian action was taken.

PENSION—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF PROGRAM TO INCREASE ANNUITIES TO EX-SERVICEMEN

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, may I inquire whether I still have seven minutes in which to speak?

The reason I am appearing in this debate tonight goes back to a couple of questions I placed on the order paper subsequent to the passing of Bill C-220. The first question is No. 3206, as shown on pages 8663 and 8664 of Hansard. I asked the Minister of National Defence the following question:

> 1. To how many retired servicemen are annuity payments being made as of November 15, 1973?
> 2. How many would be entitled to an adjustment pension after January 1, 1973, as a result of the amendment to the Public Service Superannuation Act and particularly to that portion known as the 85 rule?

The answer was that there are at present 40,687 ex-servicemen drawing pensions and that 1,487 of them will get the increase. It is a rather alarming piece of news, considering the publicity given to Bill C-220 and what it was going to do to combat the cost of living, to find out that it only applies to 3.6 per cent of the people for whom it purported to make life easier.

This caused me to ask another question, which is reflected at page 8798 of Hansard, in which I repeated the answer given to me by the Minister of National Defence describing this miniscule proportion of retired servicemen who would be drawing the increase. I asked the President of the Treasury Board:

Would the President of the Treasury Board now consider sponsoring further amendments to the act so that it will apply to more than a small fraction of ex-servicemen and women?

The answer was:

Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to look at that representation.

I regret that the President of the Treasury Board is not present to participate in this debate, but that was really no answer at all and that is why I am here tonight. He is living up to his tradition of non-communication with questioners. I am not at all surprised he is not here, but I am sorry that he is not here.

With the pension cheques that have gone out information was provided to the recipients on how they could qualify for the increase on January 1, and this occasioned several letters to me. I should like to go, for a moment, to Bill C-220, not the copy given general distribution but the bill presented to the House at first reading. I should like to indicate what the attitude of the government was at that time, as reflected in the explanation and in the recommendation to be found on the second page of the bill. The purpose of the bill was:

—to provide for the assumption by the government of the full cost of the escalation of pensions of persons retired before 1970 and under the conditions prescribed, the assumption of a portion of the cost of the escalation of pensions of persons retired since 1969; and to amend the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act . . . the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act—

Having read that, and read the press releases at the time, one would assume that retired servicemen, seeing their service pensions connected in some way with the increase in the cost of living, would receive an increase. This seemed fair and so the bill was passed. I am glad to see the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in the House, since he was, I suppose, one of those conned by the government, like the rest of us, into thinking that the government was going to do something for servicemen, and he, too, did not spot the fine print which excluded 96½ per cent of retired servicemen from receiving any benefit whatsoever.

On September 7, 1973 the President of the Treasury Board presented the bill for second reading, and as reported at page 6336 of Hansard he had this to say:

The principal reason for introducing this bill is to provide that increases in the consumer price index will be fully reflected in the escalation of benefits payable under this act.

So much for the dreams of retired servicemen! I should like to point out that I have received a considerable number of letters, as I stated earlier, all of the same type. A serviceman finds out, when retired and on pension, that there will be no increase for him because the famous 85 rule comes into play, which is age plus service must equal 85 before you are pensionable. Then, there is another fine print rule which says you must be 55 years of age, and this is what has excluded 96½ per cent of retired servicemen.

I hate to point this out, but this falls hardest on the service for which this government has had so little time for too long, namely the Royal Canadian Navy and its retirees. Their petty officers were not permitted to serve for more than 25 years, so there is no way that a retired petty officer can get that increase before the age of 60. I would point out that one other thing equally distasteful is that compulsory retirement age for corporals in the armed forces if 45. A corporal of that age will presumably have about 25 years of service, but he too will have to wait until the age of 60 to get the increment. However, if you are a lieutenant or captain the age rises to 47; if you are a major it is 49; a lieutenant-colonel, 51; and a colonel 55. If you have served to the age of 55 you have a very good chance of having 30 years service, and you can immediately qualify for pension. This bill as passed is unfair to the people who should be treated most fairly. I ask the President of the Treasury Board to consider bringing in amendments to make this the meaningful bill that parliament thought it would be when it was presented in the first instance.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by amplifying the answer which the Minister of National Defence gave on December 12 to the hon. member's question No. 3206, as reported in Hansard on page 8664.

As the minister stated, there were 40,787 retired members of the Canadian forces in receipt of pensions and of these 1,487 became eligible for increases in their benefits under the amendments to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act as a result of the passing of Bill C-220 on September 14, 1973. In addition, some 10,000 other retired members will receive further increases in their pensions in January, 1974 as a result of this amending legislation. In view of the hon. member's remarks this fact should be emphasized.

The original statute, in addition to providing benefits to all widows and children provided increases in the pensions of retired members of the forces, who were disabled or who were over age. Similar provisions covered members of the RCMP, members of parliament and members of the Public Service.

However, when the age at which public service employees could retire was lowered from 60 to 55 if the employees had 30 or more years of pensionable service, an anomaly was created between Public Service employees and these other groups. The recent amendments to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act provided for a lowering of the age at which escalation could commence for these groups and to correct this anomaly, the amendment was given retroactive effect to January 1, 1973, and provided new benefits immediately to these 1,487 former members of the Canadian forces, among others.

As was explained at the time Bill C-220 was introduced in the House, the formula for determining the age at which escalation of pensions commences for former members of the armed forces and the RCMP was determined after consultations with representatives of the Canadian forces and the RCMP and reflected the over-all cost considerations. However, as stated when the bill was being discussed in committee we will continue to review the experience in relation to the so-called "85" formula.

As members of the House are aware, the principal effect of the amendments to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act will be felt in January when the amount of the increases are directly related to the rises in the consumer price index. In fact, increases will be payable next month at 6.7 per cent if the retirement year was 1973, 9.3 per cent if it was 1972, and 9.8 per cent if it was 1971, and 11.9 per cent if it was 1970 or earlier, such percentages, applied to the basic pension, plus any increases previously received.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

APPENDIX "A"

PRIVY COUNCIL

18 December, 1973

HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL IN COUNCIL, on the recommendation of the Treasury Board, is pleased hereby to approve the issue of the annexed guidelines to be observed by public servants concerning conflict of interest situations.

Certified to be a true copy
R. G. Robertson
Clerk of the Privy Council

GUIDELINES TO BE OBSERVED BY PUBLIC SERVANTS CONCERNING CONFLICT OF INTEREST SITUATIONS

SHORT TITLE

1. These guidelines may be cited as the Public Servants Conflict of Interest Guidelines.

GUIDELINES

2. It is by no means sufficient for a person in a position of responsibility in the public service to act within the law. There is an obligation not simply to obey the law but to act in a manner so scrupulous that it will bear the closest public scrutiny. In order that honesty and impartiality may be beyond doubt, public servants should not place themselves in a position where they are under obligation to any person who might benefit from special consideration or favour on their part or seek in any way to gain special treatment from them. Equally, a public servant should not have a pecuniary interest that could conflict in any manner with the discharge of his official duties.

3. No conflict should exist or appear to exist between the private interests of public servants and their official duties. Upon appointment to office, public servants are expected to arrange their private affairs in a manner that will prevent conflicts of interest from arising.

4. Public servants should exercise care in the management of their private affairs so as not to benefit, or appear to benefit, from the use of information acquired during the course of their official duties, which information is not generally available to the public.

5. Public servants should not place themselves in a position where they could derive any direct or indirect benefit or interest from any government contracts over which they can influence decisions.

6. All public servants are expected to disclose to their superiors, in a manner to be notified, all business, commercial or financial interests where such interests might conceivably be construed as being in actual or potential conflict with their official duties.

7. Public servants should hold no outside office or employment that could place on them demands inconsistent with their official duties or call into question their capacity to perform those duties in an objective manner.

8. Public servants should not accord, in the performance of their official duties, preferential treatment to relatives or friends or to organizations in which they or their relatives or friends have an interest, financial or otherwise.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BALDWIN—REFUSAL OF MINISTER TO ALLOW PUBLIC OFFICIAL FREELY TO TESTIFY BEFORE HOUSE COMMITTEE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege which is of the utmost gravity. It involves the rights of members of the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works in particular, and of all members in general, to question civil servants and public officials, and the extent to which cabinet ministers may assert executive privilege in restricting and limiting the appearance of such persons as witnesses and the extent of their examination.

The particular issue revolves around the refusal of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) to allow a particular public official to freely give his testimony save under the control and direction of the minister and his assertion that this is a principle which is applicable in all such cases. The refusal of the minister involved the committee hearings on Bill C-236 which, bluntly, has the effect of giving to the government and the minister more power and authority in peace time than has been the case since Herr Schact was appointed economic Czar under the Third Reich.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: The result of the minister's prohibition will prevent hon. members on the committee from securing, probably for the first time, accurate and positive information on the facts upon which the government seeks to justify the passage of this bill, and to learn the extent of the tremendous powers that could be invoked.

In particular, the members of the NDP and Liberal coalition on the committee, in their support of this proposition, make it impossible to have an adequate and essential study of the facts.

I regret, of course, that the transcript of the proceedings of last night is not available, but there are other hon. members here who can testify as to the accuracy of this statement. If, therefore, a prima facie case is made, it would move as follows:

That, saving only questions of policy, this House reaffirm the duty of public officials and civil servants to be called as witnesses before standing and special committees and to give evidence without inhibition or restraint from cabinet ministers or others with regard to relevant facts which the committee is considering, and that, if the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources persists in interfering with this right, that the committee be authorized to exclude the minister from committee hearings at such time as such witnesses may be examined.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not want to prevent the minister from answering the statement made by the hon. member for Peace River, but the hon. member gave me notice of his intention to raise this matter by way of a question of privilege and I am now prepared to make a ruling. Perhaps it might be preferable to deal with the matter this way rather than revive the difficulties which are apparently taking place in the committee.

The hon. member for Peace River is, of course, referring to a very important principle relating to evidence given in committees or in any other circumstance. Whether the grievance the hon. member for Peace River or other hon. members may have in this respect should be considered by the House by way of a question of privilege is another matter.

I think it is a long established principle, perhaps as important as the one cited by the hon. member for Peace River, that procedural difficulties that come up in a committee, to the extent they are procedural difficulties, ought to be settled there rather than in the House. I am sure the hon. member realizes this and appreciates the difficulty procedurally to which his point has given rise. That is why, rather than suggest that a proceeding which is taking place in the committee be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, he submitted for the consideration of the House what is effectively a substantive proposal. If the hon. member has a substantive proposal, it becomes an ordinary motion which requires 48 hours notice. It cannot be taken up in the House by way of a question of privilege.

I certainly do not want to minimize in any way the importance of the matter raised by the hon. member for Peace River, but I suggest to him it is not possible for the Chair to find there is a prima facie case of privilege which would make it possible for the House to consider a substantive motion at this time. That is certainly not in accordance with long established tradition of the House relative to matters of privilege. Therefore I must find against the hon. member in respect of the very limited procedural question which is before me, namely, whether there is or is not a prima facie case of privilege. The ruling of the Chair must be in the negative.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I trust Your Honour's ruling is without prejudice to my right to bring in another motion supported by the written transcript of the evidence when it is available if there is persistence in this practice.

Privilege, Mr. Reynolds

MR. REYNOLDS—AVAILABILITY OF FUEL IN UNITED STATES TO CANADIAN AIRCRAFT—MINISTER'S ANSWER TO QUESTION

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege revolves around an answer given yesterday by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) when I asked him about the differences between Canadian and American airlines in picking up fuel. He answered that he doubted that in fact Canadian airlines are treated any worse in the United States than American airlines are in Canada.

The facts are these. Pacific Western Airlines, which travels to Hawaii, has been given a quota of 75,000 gallons of gasoline a month with no guarantee that this will be increased or decreased in the future. This means the company will be obliged to cancel close to 10,000 passenger trips in the next quarter, which will cost this country money. In the United States Canadian airlines are paying 58 cents a gallon for gasoline, an increase from 14 cents only two months ago. American airlines flying into Canada, which are loading up excessively right now, are paying only 24 cents a gallon for gasoline, less than half of what they are required to pay in their own country.

My question of privilege arises because the Minister of Transport was aware of these facts—I know he has been sent telegrams and letters by these companies. I realize that in the past Your Honour has ruled that this might be a matter of debate, but I wonder how a private member, when a minister misleads the House either as a result of carelessness in his own office or simply because he wishes to mislead hon. members, is able to seek redress. I know the minister's facts were wrong yesterday. I know he was misleading the House and I think there should be some means by which private members can have the subject discussed in the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections so that ministers will give honest answers and we can solve the problems.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has given notice of his intention to raise this matter by way of a question of privilege. The hon. member thinks there should be some way in which disputes arising as to facts can be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. For the protection of hon. members, perhaps it is fortunate that the practice of the House does not make this possible, because if it did we should have to adjourn the House and spend a great deal of time in Committee on Privileges and Elections. The essence of proceedings in this chamber is that hon. members argue and debate about facts and interpretations of facts. I have to refer the hon. member and the House again to citation 113 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition:

> Members often raise so-called "questions of privilege" on matters which should be dealt with as personal explanations or corrections, either in the debates or the proceedings of the House. A question of privilege ought rarely to come up in parliament... A dispute arising between two members, as to allegations of facts, does not fulfill the conditions of parliamentary privilege.

The hon. member claims that inaccurate information has been given to him in response to a question. That may be so. I assume that the member or the minister who gave the information must believe his facts are correct. This is a dispute as to fact between two members. I have to say there is not a prima facie case of privilege which ought to be investigated by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

RESTRICTIVE TRADE PRACTICES COMMISSION

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF OPERATIONS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the concern expressed by the Food Prices Review Board in connection with market concentration and restrictive trade practices in the food industry and in view of the fact that for the past two consecutive fiscal years 61 per cent of the operating budget of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, the agency responsible for reporting on such matters to the minister, has been allowed to lapse unexpended, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Nelson):

> That this House instruct the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs to look immediately into the operations of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission and specifically into its failure to inquire into and report upon restrictive trade practices in the food industry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

LABOUR RELATIONS

ONTARIO BILL RESPECTING SCHOOLTEACHERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise to propose a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43. The matter of urgent and pressing concern in the passage last night through second reading stage in the Ontario legislature of Bill 274. This measure, if it becomes the law of that province, will contravene basic civil liberties established in national and international law throughout the world. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

> That this House instruct the Minister of Justice to examine Ontario Bill 274, and upon confirmation of its violation of the principle that a person has the right to leave his present employment, take the appropriate steps leading to federal disallowance of the legislation.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

AGRICULTURE

FARM MACHINERY PRICES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 43 I rise on a matter of urgency—it has been a matter of urgency for a number of years—arising from the fact that farm machinery has increased exorbitantly in price, and farm machinery parts and repairs have in many instances doubled or more than doubled in price during the last 12-month period. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight):

That selective price controls be placed on the steel and farm machinery industry and that a committee be appointed to study the pricing mechanisms of these industries with the view to recommending price rollbacks if there are unconscionable profits.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

STATEMENT ON NEW BID SOLICITATION POLICIES AND GUIDELINES

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce a system for public opening of bids in the Department of Supply and Services effective immediately. This decision stems from a study which I initiated last December to review our policies, procedures and practices dealing with the solicitation, receipt, handling and opening of suppliers' bids. In my study of this whole matter I discovered that Canadian government policies and practices, which have essentially been in effect since 1941, are in the forefront by international comparison. I have no hesitation in comparing our current policies and practices with any other jurisdiction in Canada or abroad. But there is always room for improvement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Goyer: What I have done in my review is (1) to ensure that the good portions of our existing policies and practices remain in force and are respected; (2) to introduce new ones and to improve others where this could be done; (3) to provide for a uniform approach in our headquarters and field operations; and (4) to provide greater visibility as to our method of carrying on business. My aim was to accomplish balanced economy, efficiency, and the achievement of national objectives in a way that will provide fair value for the taxpayers' dollar and, at the same time, provide equity of opportunity to all qualified suppliers to compete for government contracts. In this regard, the new policies continue to support Canadian industrial and regional development while at the same time recognizing our international obligations, particularly the defence production sharing program.

Let us now look at what was done specifically. Public tender opening is not an entirely new development in the Department of Supply and Services but, truly, not much in use. Eight years ago the department, after consultation with the Canadian Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association, introduced a system of public openings for certain shipbuilding requirements and, more recently, we have had public openings for requirements of the new major postal facility in Toronto.

But even if the use of public tender opening was very limited in the past, information relating to prices of the successful and other tenderers for government requirements has always been available from my department. This information is made available after a full evaluation has been undertaken and the contract has been awarded.

What I am now introducing is a generalized system for the public opening of tenders. This decision, along with existing policies and practices dealing with the provision of information on tenders for all our requirements, either in regularly published form or as a result of special requests, provides a degree of visibility regarding Canadian government purchasing operations which, I believe, is as good or better than any system in the world. An important consideration in this regard is the fact that we are charged with the responsibility of operating a large and complex system of procurement. This involves upwards of 275,000 purchase orders per year in an amount which far exceeds a billion dollars. Some sixty thousand firms participate in this program which covers many thousands of different types of commodities and services.

It is within the context of this mass operation that one has to relate our new system for the public opening of tenders. First, the purpose of the public opening of tenders is to ensure tenderers that the prices which they have quoted are the ones which are used in the assessment of tenders. This is essential. But it must always be remembered that price is only one factor in the assessment process. Other factors, of course, include delivery time, the availability of spare parts, the financial, technical and managerial competence of the companies concerned, and the degree to which they meet all the other conditions stated in the tender. It is only after all these factors have been assessed that a decision can be taken as to what supplier will be awarded the contract.

[English]

In order to improve the system, I have now decided that effective immediately all written tenders for requirements expected to result in contracts over $10,000 will be opened publicly both in headquarters and in our regional and district offices. There will be two general exceptions to this rule: (1) confidential requirements particularly in the field of defence, and (2) cases where the tenders cover a multiplicity of items and destinations. Let me explain the latter exception, the intent of which is to avoid possible misinformation rather than to avoid public disclosure. Certain of our requirements are for multi-items going to multi-destinations; for example, 250 different types of spares to be delivered to 14 different locations. Tenderers are permitted to quote on portions of these requirements either in terms of numbers of items and/or numbers of locations. The simple reading out of a single figure at the end of a column in my judgment would do more to confuse than enlighten a tenderer. In addition, the reading out of all possibilities would be, to put it mildly, exceedingly time consuming and therefore costly for all concerned. I am exploring this particular area further to determine the means by which this kind of information could be made available at the same time of tender opening.

The threshold of $10,000 for public opening, which, by the way, compares favourably with other jurisdictions, has been chosen because it was felt that this amount was sufficient to interest suppliers in travelling to the tender opening location. In any event, for tenders whose anticipated value is likely to be under $10,000, the present highly secure system which has stood the test of time for upwards of 30 years will continue with as many improvements as we can make to it. Further, hon. members should know that the introduction of a generalized system for public openings will increase government costs due to the need for additional personnel and facilities to perform this new task. The amount of this increase depends directly on the threshold selected and therefore the number of tenders falling within this new policy. We have, therefore, tried to select a figure which in my judgment takes economy and efficiency as well as increased visibility into consideration.

I want to assure hon. members that I will be constantly reviewing this matter to determine whether this figure and our new practices should be modified in the light of experience.

I have a brief outline of the procedures which we will use regarding the receipt, handling and opening of tenders, and I would ask for the unanimous consent of the House to table this document.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, the minister was good enough to supply me with a copy of the statement he has made today. As I ran through my copy I made a mental note to underline the final sentence of the first paragraph which states: "But there is always room for improvement". Having listened to the minister and having examined the statement I think I can conclude that the keynote of my response this afternoon must be that there is much room for improvement.

The Department of Supply and Services was established some four years ago. It was brought into being by the Government Organization Act of 1969. It was a response to one of the recommendations of the Glassco Royal Commission. The main purpose of the department was to bring about efficiency, economy and decentralization in government purchasing. I think it is fair for those of us who have been following the department closely over the past few months to conclude that the department has failed to achieve any of these objectives. This is demonstrated by an examination of the figures of the annual departmental budget. Its efficiency is still to be proven. Administrative costs, as is the case with all government departments, are still going onward and upward. Indeed, the minister in his statement today indicated that the introduction of public opening of tenders will require more public servants in his department. Certainly little has been done to disperse government purchases across the country.

We in the opposition have pursued this subject for some months now both in committee and in the House of Commons. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) has been diligent in his questioning of the minister on the subject. In response to a question last May the minister declared it was his belief that the opening of tenders other than in public was illegal on the part of the government. It has required all these months to persuade the government to come to a legal position in its handling of the vast expenditures of public funds which now amount to more than $1.2 billion annually.

I should like to refer to the exceptions outlined by the minister in his statement. He points out that price is not necessarily the only criterion. In this regard I remind him I am fully aware of what has taken place with regard to the awarding of contracts in the very sophisticated area of the provision of machinery for mechanization of the postal service. I have been pursuing questions on this subject. It is obvious that price is not the sole criterion there. We will be continuing our interest in that subject in the days that lie ahead.

There is also reference to defence requirements as an exception to the principle of public opening of tenders. I remind the minister and members of the government it is in this area that the biggest scandals have arisen in government purchasing and contracting. There have been too many Come-By-Chance Bonaventure episodes. We will have to leave this subject in the capable hands of the members of the Public Accounts Committee and its chairman, the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales).

I notice that the threshold price has been set at $10,000. In view of the minister's declaration that the non-public opening of tenders is an illegal act, I wonder why it is legal below $10,000 and not legal above $10,000. Perhaps this is a subject we can pursue at a later date as well.

The minister did not indicate whether public relations contracts with public relations firms would be awarded at a public opening of tenders, nor did he indicate whether architects' fees would be covered by this principle. Indeed, the principle the minister has enunciated of giving greater visibility to the department's methods of carrying on business I am afraid will not be achieved by what we have heard in the minister's statement today. It is more like the iceberg approach to the problem. I can assure him that all hon. members on this side of the House will be following his admonition that the practices of this department will have to be modified and kept under very close scrutiny and review.

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, in listening to the minister I wondered whether the handling of public tenders involving amounts over $10,000 will be similar to the department's handling of cost claims by contractors under assistance contracts to the tune of $269,000 that his department never bothered to verify, as pointed out in the Auditor General's report tabled yesterday. I certainly hope that the handling of public tenders over $10,000 will be done in a much more judicious way than was the case with the assistance contracts where moneys were paid by the department, according to the Auditor General, without having been verified.

The principle of awarding tenders publicly for contracts over $10,000 outside the public sector is not a principle that should be adopted only in the operations of the Department of Supply and Services but one that should be extended to every department of the government. The reason this kind of change has come about in the Department of Supply and Services is related to the fact that the Auditor General has pointed out to members of the House that, for example, in the handling of the repair of aircraft engines for the Department of Transport, the very department which the minister represents, in 1971 allowed contractors to be awarded a contract for the repair of aircraft engines with no public tender. This was again carried out with the same contractor in 1972-73 and the total cost of this one item was $290,000. Therefore the principle of awarding tenders publicly for contracts over $10,000 is a good one but it should be extended to every department.

May I give one simple example of the glaring lack of the use of public tenders by another department, which justifies my position that the awarding of tenders publicly should be applied to all departments. I refer to the Post Office Department. The Auditor General states in his report that 37 contracts were awarded by the Post Office to contractors across the country without any kind of approval from Treasury Board. They amounted to some $1.6 million. Also, the Olympic coin contract was awarded without any kind of public tender.

An hon. Member: Patronage.

Mr. Knight: Let me give one final example of the ludicrous expenditure of public money by the government without the use of public tenders. Last fall the Post Office printed a calendar. The basic postal information on that calendar took a great deal of time to ascertain. The department had a private firm print one million calendars of 28 pages each. The printing cost was $174,000. There was no contract. In November that arrangement with the private company had to be scrapped because the calendar was full of errors. The calendar was then revised and cut down to 24 pages as it was going to the printing press because further errors were found in the information it contained. Because of no public tenders and the lack of guidelines regarding the expenditure by the Post Office Department in this regard, the $174,000 contained in the original agreement to print the calendar was included in the final bill given to the Post Office by the private contractor. The Auditor General has made this statement with regard to such arrangement and the importance of the principle of public tenders:

> It seems apparent that the difficulties encountered by the Post Office in administering the arrangement and controlling its cost stemmed from undertaking the project at such a late date and failure to set out in a formal manner what was required.

I believe that statement supports extention of the principle of calling for public tenders.

The final point I wish to make is that in the minister's enunciation of his position relating to public tenders for contracts over $10,000 it is glaringly apparent that one department is exempt from the requirement of calling public tenders, and I believe that this department is probably the one where there is the greatest amount of ineptitude and inefficiency in the spending of public moneys. I refer to the Department of National Defence. The Auditor General pointed out that in the agreement which the Department of National Defence has with the United States and the United Kingdom through the Department of Supply and Services in terms of the various cost-sharing contract there is no internal control within this government of these expenditures. Advances to the United States amount to $2,300,000 more than the amount reported by any department of the government, as pointed out by the Auditor General. I believe that the exemption of the Department of National Defence is merely a means of covering up the waste and ineptitude that is taking place in the operations of that department.

I hope to hear some justification from the minister with regard to the figure of $10,000 for public tenders. I should also like to see a requirement that all government departments call for public tenders relating to advertising contracts or any other aspect of business involving the private sector.

The Minister of Supply and Services has spoken about the principle of ensuring that certain supplies are purchased across the country from different regions instead of being centralized in one area. I wonder, in terms of what has been enunciated by the minister today, whether that principle will be carried out. I hope that in the coming months we will have verification that this principle is being extended and in fact carried out.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, we were very happy to receive, before today's proceedings, a French copy of the minister's statement, and I am glad to mention this as the government very rarely provides the French copy at the same time as the English version.

We are also happy to note the minister's position about calling public tenders but we are somewhat surprised to see his satisfaction since he said before that our procedures since 1941 were the best possible, and he now is the first one to suggest the corrective action required, which has been requested for many years.

By taking this attitude, the minister is providing much greater opportunity for Canadians in general or the Canadian economy and alternatives which probably did not exist before for different companies. Unfortunately the minister admits that even if procedures existed before the policy statement which he must made, they were not always followed. We certainly hope that henceforth the minister will follow the procedures that he set down today for these new public tender calls and that he will truly practice what he says.

However, even though he admits that we shall now be able to ask questions on such or such a tender call, we have noted in the past that when members of the opposition have asked questions, the departments or ministers have often refused to give specific answers, arguing that it was not in the interest of the Canadian public as a whole to obtain such and such information concerning a corporation.

In spite of the minister's intention to make tender calls universally open to the public, it is clear from his statement that he reserves the same rights as previously, namely that other deciding factors in addition to price will be taken into account when the time comes to award a contract, which is understandable.

The minister indicated that these other factors are ability to deliver, availability of parts, solvency as well as technical and administrative competence of the various corporations. I suggest that one may very well wonder if, in the future, this competence will be, as was the case in the past, that of Liberal organizations or companies.

If this fondness for Liberal business heads continues, the problem is not solved but it does enable the minister to justify himself to the House.

In another paragraph, the minister speaks of the possibility of ignoring the procedure he detailed today, this with regard to two spheres that are even more important, namely that of defence and the most significant contracts for distribution of goods in various areas. Once again, it is understood that the minister retains the authority to select the company of his own choosing, without giving out any details, while contenting himself with a statement that those purchases have been made for distribution to various regional offices.

Finally, I consider the overall statement quite good; however, the details give the minister or the government the right to continue doing what they did in the past: showing favoritism towards some industries. This time, the right to do so is more explicit. I somewhat regret those last paragraphs but, all in all, I trust the hopes expressed at the opening of the minister's statement will become reality because they are required for a better administration of public assets.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—DEMURRAGE CHARGES

Question No. 2,449— Mr. Neil (Moose Jaw):

For each of the crop years 1968-69 to 1971-72 inclusive (a) what was the total amount paid by the Canadian Wheat Board and charged as a marketing expense and paid out of the Canadian Wheat Board Pool account for demurrage for ships which were held up on the Vancouver Harbour awaiting wheat cargoes (b) was there a deficit in the Canadian Wheat Board Pool account in any of the said crop years and, if so, what was the amount paid in the deficit years by the government for demurrage for ships which were held up on the Vancouver Harbour awaiting wheat cargoes (c) what were the corresponding figures for barley?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice):

(a) Wheat

Crop Year	West Coast $	East $	Total $
1968-69	1,600,915	21,864	1,622,779
1969-70	516,903	—	516,903

NATIONAL DEFENCE—ROUND-THE-WORLD TRIP, AUGUST, 1973

Question No. 2,605—Mr. McKinnon:

1. How many passenger seats are in the normal configuration of the DND Boeing 707 that completed a round the world trip in August 1973, with the Minister of National Defence as a passenger?

2. How many passengers were carried between each of the stops on the trip?

3. How much is the estimated cost to the taxpayer for the recently completed flight?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. The normal configuration of the DND Boeing 707 for this type of trip is 120 seats.

2 and 3. These questions were answered in reply to Question No. 2,596 on December 3, 1973.

OFY ADVISORY BOARD—ROBERVAL CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 2,705—Mr. Gauthier (Roberval):

1. What are the names and addresses of the members of the advisory board for the Opportunities for Youth Program in the constituency of Roberval for 1973?

2. How many meetings did the board hold?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. There was no advisory board for the Opportunities for Youth Program in the constituency of Roberval in 1973. Because of difficulties encountered in establishing an advisory board in the Lac St-Jean region, which includes the constituency of Roberval, and in order to avoid delays in the implementation of the 1973 Opportunities for Youth Program in the region, an ad hoc committee was set up, consisting of four members and two resource persons. The members were all federal or provincial public servants, whose area of work and interest lies in eastern Quebec. The resource persons were Opportunities for Youth project officers in the Lac St-Jean region.

2. The ad hoc committee met twice.

U.S. STRATEGIC AIR COMMAND BASE, LORING, MAINE

Question No. 2,739—Mr. Corbin:

1. Since the establishment of the U.S. Strategic Air Command base at Loring, Maine, near Grand-Sault, at the Canada-United States border, how many aircraft from the base (a) crashed in or exploded over New Brunswick and at what community (b) how many lives were lost?

2. Were there any nuclear armaments on board and were all explosive devices which fell on Canadian territory recovered?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. (a) None. (b) Not applicable.

2. Not applicable.

COMPANY OF YOUNG CANADIANS—PUBLICITY EXPENDITURES

Question No. 2,855—Mr. Nystrom:

1. What were the amounts of money spent by the Company of Young Canadians on publicity and/or information in each of the fiscal years 1972-73 and 1973-74 to date?

2. What were the names and addresses of firms and individuals who received these contracts, what amounts of money were spent in each case and what was the purpose of each contract?

3. In the case of expenditures for publicity and/or information made within the Department by its publicity or information division, what was the amount in each case and the purpose of the expenditure?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Company of Young Canadians as follows: 1 and 2. 1972-73: Campbell Printing, 880 Wellington St., Ottawa, Ontario, $3,175.20; 1973-74: Ross-Ellis Limited, 300 Ann St., Montreal, Province of Quebec, $3,800.44; Purpose of contracts: Annual Report.

3. Not applicable.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS—PUBLICITY EXPENDITURES

Question No. 2,892—Mr. Nystrom:

1. What were the amounts of money spent by the Department of Veterans Affairs on publicity and/or information in each of the fiscal years 1972-73 and 1973-74 to date?

2. What were the names and addresses of firms and individuals who received these contracts, what amounts of money were spent in each case and what was the purpose of each contract?

3. In the case of expenditures for publicity and/or information made within the Department by its publicity or information division, what was the amount in each case and the purpose of the expenditure?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. 1972/73, $94,620; 1973/74, $95,568.

2. 1972/73, John Doherty & Co. Ltd., Ottawa, Ontario, $2,864; 1973/74, John Doherty & Co. Ltd., Ottawa, Ontario, $7,615. To enable Public Relations to cope with peak work load for which it would be uneconomical to provide continuing positions; to provide services such as arranging speaking engagements for minister and Veterans Affairs senior management.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES—UNIVERSITY DEGREES EARNED BY OFFICERS

Question No. 3,122—Mr. Forrestall:

1. How many officers commissioned from the ranks for each rank Lieutenant or above, have earned degrees from universities in the past three years?

2. How many of these officers have been promoted subsequent to earning these degrees expressed in an absolute and in a percentage of those who had received them?

[Mr. Nystrom.]

3. How many officers, having entered the regular forces on a full-time basis as Lieutenant or above, had degrees either at the time of entry or earned them within the past three years?

4. How many of these officers have been promoted once having earned such university degrees expressed in absolute terms and in a percentage of those who had received them?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. Lieutenant-Colonel, 1; Major, 9; Captain, 12; Lieutenant, 5.

2. Five officers have been promoted representing 18.4 per cent of those who received degrees.

3. Three hundred seventy-three officers.

4. Seven officers have been promoted representing 1.87 per cent of those who received degrees.

WIDOWS OF FORMER PUBLIC SERVANTS IN RECEIPT OF PENSIONS

Question No. 3,127—Mr. Leggatt:

How many widows of retired federal employees receive a pension of less than $100 per month?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): 1. 13,402 widows of former public servants are receiving pensions of less than $100 per month. This figure includes widows of retired public servants as well as of those who died prior to retirement.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES NADEN BAND

Question No. 3,131—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Were several members of the Canadian Forces Naden Band flown to the Hawaiian Islands on September 23, 1973, by service aircraft, returning by commercial aircraft on September 26?

2. (a) How many engagements did they play while in Hawaii and what were they (b) what was the type of aircraft that they flew out on (c) what is the cost per mile of flying such an aircraft (d) what was the cost of the return flight?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. From the Canadian Forces Naden Band, 18 members were flown to the Hawaiian Islands on September 23, 1973, by service aircraft. This aircraft was a scheduled flight to return from Hawaii support personnel who had participated in a major Australia/Canada/U.S. exercise. The flight was not scheduled for the purpose of flying the band to Hawaii. Fifteen members returned to Victoria by commercial air on September 25, 1973, in order to join up with the remainder of the Naden band to begin a band tour scheduled for September 27, 1973. The other three members returned later by service aircraft.

2. (a) The Naden Band contingent played three engagements: September 23, 1973, A special concert; September 23, 1973, A dance for personnel from the three participating countries; September 24, 1973, A Canadian reception; (b) Boeing 707. (c) The fuel cost per mile varies considerably depending upon speed and over-all aircraft weight including fuel. The cost per mile of the Boeing 707 at current fuel price varies between 65 cents and 73 cents per mile. (d) $2,448 for the 15 members.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—AVIATION FUEL REQUIREMENTS TO FERRY CANADIAN TROOPS TO CAIRO

Question No. 3,152—Mr. Dick:

1. How many millions of gallons of gas will be required to ferry Canadian troops by air to Cairo and from what source is this petroleum to come?

2. How many millions is it estimated will be required to keep our troops supplied while there and from what source is this petroleum to come?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. (a) the amount of aviation fuel required to ferry the Canadian contingent to Cairo in support of the UNEF Middle East was approximately 3,230,000 gallons. (b) The sources of the fuel were as follows: Canada, approximately 880,000 gallons; Canadian Forces Europe (Lahr, Germany), approximately 1,220,000 gallons. Refueling stops at the following airports: Reykjavik, Iceland; Prestwick, Scotland; Gatwick, England; Shannon, Ireland; Nicosia, Cyprus; Cairo, Egypt. Approximately 1,130,000 gallons.

NOTE: The gallonage supplied at each of the above airports has not yet been determined.

2. It is not possible at this time to estimate fuel requirements since the final definition of activity and duration of Canadian troop commitment has as yet not been established.

TERMS OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN SPORT CANADA AND KELLOGG COMPANY OF CANADA LIMITED

Question No. 3,170—Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway):

1. What are the terms of the agreement reached between Sport Canada of the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Kellogg Company of Canada Limited?

2. Do these terms include the expenditure of money by the government and/or the Kellogg Company of Canada Limited and, if so, how much by each?

3. What is the term of this agreement?

4. Are any other commercial products being sponsored by the Department of National Health and Welfare?

5. What are the names of the firms involved?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The terms of agreement reached between the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Kellogg Company of Canada Limited, are as follows: (a) Kellogg's will procure and during the period June 1 to October 31, 1973 will distribute free of charge in every 12-16 and 24 ounce package of its corn flakes sold in Canada one "Sport Canada Sportpatches" decal. (b) At least ten million decals will be distributed in this way.

2. The Crown paid jointly to Creative House Ltd. and Canada Decalomania $100,400 for the cost of six million decals. Kellogg's is responsible for the cost of all remaining decals. It is estimated that Kellogg's will expend over $500,000 on this program.

3. See 1(a) above.

4. No; the Department of National Health and Welfare does not sponsor commercial products.

5. (a) Canadian Decalomania; (b) Creative House Ltd.; (c) McClelland and Steward Ltd.

CANADA PENSION PLAN—STATEMENTS OF EARNINGS

Question No. 3,172—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. By year since its inception, how many requests for statements of earnings for the Canada Pension Plan were received?

2. How many disputes involving differences between contributors' records and CPP records occurred in the same period?

3. How many such disputes were refused investigation by officials of CPP for reason of expiry of the four-year deadline for corrections to such statements?

4. In how many instances were changes made to contributors' records as a result of action initiated by contributors?

5. What percentage of these disputes involved the Quebec Pension Plan records and the CPP records?

6. How much was spent by year since the inception of CPP on informing Canadians of the existence of the four-year deadline period?

7. How much money has been allocated for the 1973-74 fiscal period in order to make this policy known to the public?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. 1971 and prior, approximately 6,000; 1972, 9,453; 1973, January 1, 1973 to October 31, 1973, 10,190.

2. Statistics are not maintained in this respect. However, should such a difference arise, it is resolved in his favour, if the contributor is in a position to provide the Canada Pension Plan with acceptable evidence of valid contributory earnings and contributions under the Plan.

3. No records are kept in this regard. However, we have not refused to review any case where such a request has been forthcoming with suitable documentation indicating that there could be a possible discrepancy.

4. Statistics of these changes are not kept. However, if satisfactory evidence of valid contributory earnings and contributions are submitted or revealed in a case review to the Canada Pension Plan, the necessary changes are made to the Record of Earnings.

5. Statistics showing this breakdown are not maintained. If it is determined that the person making the inquiry also made contributions to the Quebec Pension Plan, steps are taken to ensure that the applicable changes are made. There is a close working relationship between the two jurisdictions to resolve problems of this nature.

6. It is virtually impossible to separate the cost of services that could be attributed just to information concerning the four-year deadline, from general informational services provided by the Canada Pension Plan program.

7. No specific allocation of funds has been made in this regard. The areas of general information will, of course, be maintained; the extensive network of district and local offices; the dissemination of booklets and pamphlets; the availability of staff members to explain all facets of the Canada Pension Plan legislation when further interpretation is required by individuals, groups and employers.

Order Paper Questions

STATUS OF GOVERNMENT'S CONSIDERATION TOWARDS EQUALIZING CONTRIBUTIONS AND BENEFITS UNDER PSSA

Question No. 3,178—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What is the status of the government's consideration towards equalizing the contributions and benefits receivable and payable under the Public Service Superannuation Act and eliminating the differences based on the sex of the employee?

2. On what date does the government expect to introduce legislation to this end as recommended by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): 1. The government has fully considered the recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women concerning equality of treatment of male and female employees under the Public Service Superannuation Act and legislative amendments are being prepared.

2. The government intends to introduce this legislation early in 1974.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—TRANSFER OF DND PROPERTY AT ROCKCLIFFE

Question No. 3,182—Mr. Forrestall:

Is it the intention of the Minister of National Defence to recommend that the Privy Council approve the transfer of that DND property located to the south-east of the present Rockcliffe STOL administration buildings now under construction so that planners for the National Museum of Science and Technology may proceed with plans to erect new buildings to replace the present ones which are in need of repair and replacement and, if so, on what date?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): No requests have been received for the transfer of property from DND for the utilization by the National Museum of Science and Technology other than three hangars at Rockcliffe Airport which were made available in May 1968 by DND to DPW for use of the National Museum of Science and Technology.

RIDING MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK—STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT

Question No. 3,207—Mr. Stewart (Marquette):

1. How many students were employed in Riding Mountain National Park during the summer of 1973 (a) how were they hired and were the positions advertised (b) how many of these students were from the Province of Manitoba (c) how many of these students came from each of the other provinces?

2. How many of these positions were processed by (a) the Office of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (b) the Public Service Commission (c) Manpower?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I have been given the following information by the Public Service Commission. 1. There were 26 students employed in Riding Mountain National Park during the summer of 1973. (a) The students were hired in two ways: 11 of them were recruited on university campuses via a poster-advertised competition, and 15 were recruited from Canada Manpower Centres. (b) Of these 26 students, 21 were recruited from the province of Manitoba. (c) Insofar as students from other provinces are concerned, two were from Alberta and three were from Quebec.

2. (a) None of these positions were processed by the office of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. That department, however, processed eight positions advertised by poster on campuses. (b) The Public Service Commission processed three of these 26 positions as part of its Career Oriented Summer Employment program. The three students were recruited on university campuses via a poster-advertised competition. (c) Canada Manpower Centres processed 15 positions.

RIDING MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK—PERSONNEL

Question No. 3,208—Mr. Stewart (Marquette):

1. How many people other than students were employed for summer positions in Riding Mountain National Park in 1973 (a) how were they hired and were these positions advertised (b) how many of these employees were from the Province of Manitoba (c) how many of these employees came from each of the other provinces?

2. How many of these positions were processed by (a) the Office of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (b) the Public Service Commission (c) Manpower?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I have been given the following information by the Public Service Commission. 1. Other than students, 82 people were employed in summer positions in Riding Mountain National Park. (a) Twenty-one people were hired for the summer of 1973. The other 61 were "seasonal" employees who return each summer. (b) All of these employees, 82, were from the province of Manitoba. (c) None of these employees came from the other provinces.

2. (a) None of these positions were processed by the office of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. That department, however, processed 61 positions. (b) None of these positions were processed by the Public Service Commission. (c) Manpower processed 21 of these positions.

PURPOSES OF TRIPS MADE BY T. CHASE-CASGRAIN, VICE-PRESIDENT OF EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION, 1971-72

Question No. 3,212—Mr. Knight:

1. In the fiscal year 1971-72, what were the purposes of the trips made by T. Chase-Casgrain, Vice-President of Export Development Corporation (salary range: $26,000-$32,500), to (a) Washington ($642) (b) Vienna, Munich, Lisbon, Amsterdam ($1,478)?

2. In what months of the year were these trips made?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Export Development Corporation states that: 1. The purposes of the trips made by T. Chase-Casgrain, Vice-President, for which he submitted travel expenses in the fiscal year 1971-72, were: (a) Washington, to attend the Annual General Meeting of the Union d'Assureurs des Crédits Internationaux, and meetings with the Export-Import Bank of the United States; and (b) first, Vienna, via Munich, to attend meetings with the Osterreichische Kontrollbank and with the Trade Commissioner in Vienna, and second, Lisbon, via Amsterdam, to attend the Extraordinary General Meeting of the Union d'Assureurs des Crédits Internationaux; the stop at Munich was to meet a connecting flight to Vienna, and the stop at Amsterdam, a forced one due to airline strikes, was to meet a connecting flight to Montreal.

2. The trip mentioned in (a) above was made in May 1971, and that mentioned in (b) was made during the previous fiscal year, in the month of January 1971, but expenses were submitted during the fiscal year in question.

PURPOSES OF TRIPS MADE BY V. L. CHAPIN, VICE-PRESIDENT OF EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION, 1971-72

Question No. 3,213—Mr. Knight:

1. In the fiscal year 1971-72, what were the purposes of the trips made by V. L. Chapin, Vice-President of Export Development Corporation (salary range: $26,000-$32,500), to (a) Royan, Paris ($1,076) (b) Washington ($575) (c) Paris, Rome, Athens, U.K. ($1,560) (d) New York ($245) (e) Mexico ($700) (f) Paris ($1,493) (g) London, Madrid, Athens, Rabat ($1,501) (h) London, Tel Aviv ($1,902)?

2. In what months of the year were these trips made?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Export Development Corporation states that: 1. In the fiscal year 1971-72, V. L. Chapin, Vice President, made trips to (a) Royan, via Paris, to attend a course of French language; (b) Washington, as Canadian delegate to the Annual Meeting of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund; (c) Paris, for financing negotiations regarding a sale of ships to France, and the United Kingdom, for international banking discussions; he did not travel to Rome and Athens on this occasion, although he had planned to do so and received a refundable travel advance for the purpose; thus a reference to Rome and Athens in the answer to question 928 was erroneous; (d) New York, for discussions with banks and investment houses; (e) Mexico, for negotiations with the Comision Federal de Electricidad, Nacional Financiera and private banks in Mexico regarding EDC loans; (f) Paris, as head of the Canadian delegation to the "Paris Club" meetings in connection with the Chilean debt rescheduling; (g) London, Madrid, Athens and Rabat, for discussions on financing related to the export of Canadian capital goods; and (h) London and Tel Aviv, to join the Minister of Trade and Commerce for financing talks with the government of Israel.

2. The trips mentioned in (a), (b), (c), (d) and (g) above were made in July/August, September, May, May and December, 1971, respectively; and those mentioned in (e), (f) and (h) were made in January, February and January, 1972, respectively.

CBC—FREE-TIME MINISTERIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS WITH RIGHT OF REPLY BY THE OPPOSITION

Question No. 3,337—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

For what reason or reasons does the government not intend to take any action to apply in Canada the rules applied to the BBC and independent television in Great Britain establishing a category of free-time ministerial announcements to which there is a formal right of reply by the opposition?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned: The Broadcasting Act requires that the programming of the Canadian broadcasting system should, amongst other things, provide reasonable balanced opportunity for the expression of differing views on matters of public concern. Generally, broadcasters seem to adhere in their programming to this general requirement of the act. A specific rule such as that referred to did not appear to be required when the Broadcasting Act was passed in 1968. In so far as the Department of the Secretary of State is concerned: Broadcasting policy for Canada as set out in Part I of the Broadcasting Act requires that programming provided by the Canadian broadcasting system should provide reasonable balanced opportunity for the expression of differing views on matters of public concern. For example, it is the practice of the CBC, the national broadcasting service, to provide access for matters of urgent importance to the Prime Minister and the premiers of the provinces. Should these broadcasts be viewed as not non-partisan, the CBC reserves the right to offer the combined opposition the right of reply. Opposition parties have the right to demand this free time of the CBC should it, for some reason, not be offered. The government, therefore, does not see any need to impose specific rules such as those referred to in the question.

With reference to Questions Nos. 2,316, 2,598, 2,599, 2,600 and 2,601, on what exact date and time were these received by the Privy Council Office, who received them, what are the names and job designations of those to whom they were assigned for the purpose of compiling answers, has the Privy Council Office at any time attempted to expedite the answers and, if so, on what specific dates?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): See reply to Question No. 3,366 relative to the Parliamentary Enquiries and Co-ordination Division of the P.C.O. Question No. 2,316 was referred to the appropriate official in the P.C.O. by the Parliamentary Enquiries and Co-ordination Division on June 21, 1973. The time frame in which questions are answered varies depending on workload, time involved in compiling statistics, research, etc. In each instance an endeavour is made to answer questions as expeditiously as possible. However, one must bear in mind that questions are an addition to the usual workload of divisions and sections and there are times when other duties devolving on officers responsible take priority. Questions Nos. 2,598, 2,599 and 2,600 required statistical information from D.P.W. and/or N.C.C. Question No. 2,601 required information from D.P.W., N.C.C. and P.C.O.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion for the production of papers No. 266 is acceptable to the government.

COPY OF CONTRACTUAL ARRANGEMENT BY GOVERNMENT AND EVERGREEN DEVELOPMENT LTD., WINNIPEG

Motion No. 266—Mr. Rowland:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the contractual arrangements between Evergreen Development Ltd., Winnipeg, Manitoba and the government or any of its departments or agencies.

Motion agreed to.

COPY OF ENGINEERS' REPORTS RELATING TO REHABILITATION AND/OR RECONSTRUCTION OF CAVE AND BASIN, BANFF

Motion No. 260—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all engineers' reports concerning the costs of, and need for, rehabilitation and/or reconstruction of the Cave and Basin at Banff.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion for the production of papers No. 260 is acceptable to the government subject to the usual reservations concerning confidential documents.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Under the conditions and reservations mentioned by the parliamentary secretary, is it the pleasure of the House that motion No. 260 be deemed to be made an order for return?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

COPY OF CORRESPONDENCE OVER LAST THREE YEARS RELATING TO DRUG ADVERTISING

Motion No. 239—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House to issue for a copy of all correspondence between individual doctors and/or provincial or federal medical organizations and the Minister of National Health and Welfare and/or officials of his Department, related to drug advertising in the past three years.

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this motion is not acceptable to the government in that the material requested is of a voluminous character and would require an inordinate cost and length of time to prepare. I would therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is the motion dropped? Dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ENERGY

INQUIRY WHETHER NATIONAL EMERGENCY EXISTS WITHIN TERMS OF BILL C-236

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is it the position of the minister that there now exists a national emergency within the meaning of clause 11 of Bill C-236, relating to the mandatory allocation of oil supplies in Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if I can comment on a bill which is now before a committee.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As I indicated to the committee, we anticipate that there is a possibility of an emergency occurring during the course of the current winter.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister to answer my question whether it is the position of the minister that a national emergency now exists within the meaning of that section?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, certainly grievous difficulty is being caused in many parts of the country by the shortage of supplies which, in the absence of this legislation, the government is not in a position to correct.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Stanfield: As the bill provides powers to the government for mandatory allocation only in the event of a national emergency, and since the minister is not prepared to say there is a national emergency, how does he propose to deal with these particular cases of shortage, for example, of bunker fuel in the instance of British Columbia, since there is nothing in this bill anyway which would give the minister power, short of a declaration of an emergency which the minister is not prepared to say exists?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the recognition, however belated, of the Leader of the Opposition that the procrastination of himself and his colleagues has been causing serious harm to various parts of Canada, particularly the lower mainland of British Columbia.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The minister chose to level an accusation at me instead of answering my question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I assert that the minister is not prepared to say that there is a state of national emergency within the meaning of the bill, that there are no powers within the bill short of a declaration of such emergency, and I want to know, sir, how in those circumstances the minister proposes to deal with these important but local difficulties when the minister is not prepared to say that conditions exist which will enable him to invoke these powers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I see a guilty conscience showing there. The bill provides for the creation of an energy supplies allocation board which will have the specific responsibility of examining the situation as it exists in the country and advising the government. My first step, once given the authority, would be to constitute the board and ask it to make an up to date report on all complaints received from hon. members opposite, including the hon. member for Kent-Essex and the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte, to see whether in fact such a declaration should be made.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the Leader of the Opposition, then try to complete the first round of questioning, and then return to this important and interesting subject for supplementaries.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I just want to say—

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please!

Mr. Hees: Quiet, you barbarians!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have ascertained what I wish to know. I have confirmed that there are no powers until an emergency is declared, and the minister is not prepared to say that this state exists today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Brant. May we have order, please. These exchanges across the floor make it very difficult for the hon. member who has the floor to put his question and for others to hear him.

LABOUR RELATIONS

ONTARIO BILL RESPECTING SCHOOLTEACHERS—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question relates to the question I asked the Minister of Justice on Monday. As Bill 274 has now passed second reading in the Ontario legislature and as sections of the bill are contrary to civil liberties, to be precise, forced labour, is the minister now in a position to recommend the disallowance of this provincial legislation?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the question is clearly in its terms hypothetical since disallowance can hardly apply at this stage. It is the general position of the government that the power of disallowance is a rather extraordinary one to be used in special circumstances. The ordinary remedy for dealing with laws of the provinces lies in the political processes in the provinces.

Mr. Blackburn: Has the minister been in contact with his provincial counterpart with respect to the legality of Bill 274?

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Solicitor General of Canada.

Can he tell us if the Ontario government made him a request like the one from the Quebec government concerning the reimbursement of part of the funds used by the RCMP, since Quebec and Ontario have their own police force?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): No, they have not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Has the minister advised the Quebec Minister of Justice to integrate the Quebec Police Force into the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, thus allowing the province to get back the $362 million requested from the federal government?

[English]

Mr. Allmand: No, I did not, Mr. Speaker.

ENERGY

OIL—SUGGESTED INVOKING OF CERTAIN STATUTES TO MAKE ALLOCATIONS IN CASES OF SHORT SUPPLY

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce supplementary to that asked by my leader. I would ask the minister why he and the government have not invoked the provisions of the Export and Import Permits Act, the National Energy Board Act and the authority of the Calafoil case which was decided by the Federal Court of Canada, to distribute and allocate in cases of shortages of particular commodities, which these acts and that litigation give the government the authority to do?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman will find—

Some hon. Members: Gillespie, Gillespie!

Mr. Fairweather: We want the other minister to answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman will find that there is no such authority in the Export and Import Permits Act.

● (1500)

Mr. Baldwin: Will the minister improve his very scanty knowledge of law by consulting his legal advisers? Under the authority of the Calafoil case there is such authority but this government does not have the guts to act on it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

OIL—NATIONAL SURVEY TO DETERMINE WHERE SHORTAGES EXIST—MAGNITUDE OF SHORTFALL

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has the minister undertaken a national survey to determine where local energy supply problems exist and what the magnitude of these regional supply difficulties is? If so, can he give the details of his findings?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the National Energy Board, in conjunction with the technical advisory committee on petroleum supply, has been examining the situation very closely. The hon. member will recall I gave a number of details in committee last night. I would be glad to expand on that.

Mr. Ritchie: What immediate specific steps has the government taken, and what action has the National Energy Board taken to use its considerable persuasive powers to solve local problems?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I have given a number of examples of this, for example, in response to the hon. member for Témiscamingue. However, in a fair number of instances persuasion is not enough for private parties which, subject to a change in the law, have no obligation to do what the board requests.

ASSESSMENT OF RESERVES OF CRUDE PETROLEUM—SUFFICIENCY TO MEET DOMESTIC NEEDS AND EXPORT COMMITMENTS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary arising out of the minister's recent answer. Has the federal government or the National Energy Board assessed our present reserves of crude petroleum in Canada, and have we enough for Canada's total needs and to fulfil any export commitments we have made to date?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the board has specifically delivered decisions in this regard, which were discussed very thoroughly in the standing committee. Of course, any export of petroleum which takes place on a month to month basis can only be made if the board is satisfied there is a surplus to Canadian requirements.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister will be forthright in this respect and tell us now whether, from reports of the National Energy Board, there is a sufficient supply and surplus of crude petroleum not only to supply Canada's needs—that is, our total needs everywhere—provided there is transportation but to fulfil any export commitments at this time. Surely that question is clear and we can have a yes or no answer.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, surely the answer is perfectly clear. There would have been no exports this month if the board had not been satisfied in that regard.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Portneuf wish to ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Godin: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I will see him in a few moments, after having heard some other supplementary questions.

ACTION TO ENSURE SAVINGS ON WESTERN OIL USED IN EASTERN CANADA PASSED ON TO CONSUMERS

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the minister's statement in committee last night that five million barrels of western Canadian crude oil have already been shipped to eastern Canada and that another seven million barrels will have been shipped via the Panama Canal by the end of the first quarter of 1974, what policing mechanism has the government instituted to ensure that the savings of over $25 million in lower priced Canadian crude used by eastern refineries will be passed on to the consumer?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, with regard to shipments made through the seaway there is the possibility of lower cost. This would be taken into account in any cost increases the companies sought to pass on. With regard to shipments through the Panama Canal, the estimated average freight per barrel is around $3 which at the present time would not indicate very much advantage in terms of cost savings.

REQUEST FOR GUARANTEE OIL PRODUCT PRICES IN EASTERN CANADA WILL NOT RISE THIS WINTER

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): In view of the announcement by OPEC that oil prices will go up on January 1, will the minister guarantee that prices of oil products will not rise in eastern Canada during the winter season?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry but I did not hear the first part of the hon. member's question. I cannot guarantee, if there are substantial cost increases in the eastern part of the market, that prices will not go up.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Calgary South and then the hon. member for Portneuf.

OIL—WILLINGNESS OF CANADA TO SHARE IN SHORTAGES IN OECD COUNTRIES

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Can the minister indicate to the House if the chairman of the National Energy Board is visiting Paris as the head of the Canadian delegation to the OECD oil committee and, if so, what mandate has the government given to the chairman for this visit? Will the minister say specifically whether Canada will indicate a willingness to share in OECD shortages and to what extent?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the chairman will be participating as a member of the Canadian delegation there. It is very possible that in conjunction with the discussion of the current situation there may be discussion of the possible allocation of supplies to other members of OECD who may be in short supply. Canada, of course, would be as co-operative as our situation would permit in those circumstances.

Mr. Bawden: Is the minister prepared to seek parliamentary approval for any shortfall Canada may be asked to share by the OECD before Canada makes such a commitment?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would have to take that into consideration. However, it seems to me that kind of co-operative action is something that would remain within the prerogative of the government.

OIL—AMOUNT OF POSSIBLE SHORTFALL THIS WINTER

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In light of the answer the minister gave to the last question on this subject, has he reassessed the projected shortfall of oil this winter which he indicated previously to the House might amount to some 200,000 barrels a day? If so, has this figure been raised upward or downward?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I referred at some length to this question in the committee last night.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will be allowed a supplementary following which the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo.

Mr. Stackhouse: In view of the minister's generosity to the committee, is he now prepared to inform the House whether he has asked the government's technical advisory committee on petroleum supply and demand to reassess the projected 200,000 barrels per day shortfall having regard to the fact that 65,000 barrels per day are now coming into eastern Canada from the Trans Mountain Pipe Line and having further regard to the fact that 50,000 barrels per day are expected from the Shaheen refinery?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I specifically had the opportunity of meeting with the technical advisory committee yesterday. They recommended that the government seek the authority to carry out mandatory allocation as requested in the bill.

ABORTION

SUGGESTED LEGISLATION TO ENABLE GRANTS TO GROUPS WISHING TO COUNSEL PEOPLE ON POSITIVE ALTERNATIVES

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I gave him notice of it prior to the question period. In light of the minister's recent admission that while the federal government gives money to groups facilitating the obtaining of abortions under the present very liberal law but has no program to fund groups seeking to counsel people on the positive alternatives to abortion, will the minister tell the House whether the government is prepared to introduce legislation that will allow the granting of funds to groups seeking to reduce the horrendous figure of some 40,000 abortions in this country each year by counselling people on the positive alternatives?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would not in my answer like to appear to endorse the premise of the hon. member's question. However, I have already indicated to him that I am reviewing the whole aspect of financing in this area at the present time and I will be in touch with some of the organizations concerned in the near future.

OIL—SCOPE OF SUPPLY ALLOCATION BILL—REQUEST FOR MODIFICATION

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It is supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Scarborough East. It follows on the minister's answer that the technical advisory committee advocated compulsory allocation. Having regard to Mr. Stabback's statement last night that members of the technical advisory committee are not at all unanimous in their views as to the scope of the bill, will the minister specify the nature of the criticism of the scope of the bill and will he consider reducing the scope of this bill?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister will be allowed to reply briefly to the hon. member's supplementary question, but I hope hon. members will make an effort not to bring into their questions the proceedings which are before the committee. I think the question was asked in an irregular way. The hon. member cannot refer to proceedings which are currently before the committee and base his question on those proceedings. The question might be asked directly without reference to any proceedings outside the House.

Mr. Andre: In that case I ask whether the minister will consider reducing the scope of this bill so as to cover allocation and supervision, and possibly provide a time limit?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): If the hon. member has precise suggestions to make in this regard, I would be glad to hear them in the committee. We can, of course, make amendments there.

Mr. Bell: There is lots of time.

PURCHASING CRITERIA OF DEPARTMENT—PREFERENCE FOR CANADIAN PRODUCTS

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): It is a well known fact, Mr. Speaker, that it is an important consideration in the assessment of contracts.

[English]

Mr. Paproski: If those are the criteria, can the minister tell us what formula he is using or plans to use?

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION TO ENSURE CONTROL OF GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES BY PARLIAMENT

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. Since the Auditor General has drawn attention to the use of special warrants involving several millions of dollars in circumstances where the public good did not urgently require it, can the minister inform us whether he is considering a change in the legislation, in particular amendments to the Public Administration Act and the Appropriations Act, to ensure that funds spent will have the authority of parliament behind them?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Yes, Mr. Speaker,

Mr. Knight: Since the Auditor General has proposed to the Parliament of Canada that he be given authority to carry out efficiency studies of the administration of the various departments of government as part of his duties, which would be of great assistance to individual members of parliament in reviewing public expenditures—

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Knight: —can the President of the Treasury Board tell the House whether he is prepared to allow the authority of the Auditor General to be extended in this way to ensure individual members of parliament the right to examine the books closely?

Mr. Drury: The Auditor General has proposed—and the public accounts committee concurred in his proposal—that a study committee be established to make recommendations to parliament as to precisely what his powers should be. I am heartily in favour of this study being made and of being guided by its conclusions. I do not believe, however, the Auditor General has proposed that he be made responsible for efficiency reports.

TRADE

REQUEST THAT INCREASE IN IMPORT DUTY ON WORK BOOTS AND SHOES FROM SOCIALIST BLOC COUNTRIES BE POSTPONED

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that immediate implementation of an upward valuation for duty purposes of work boots and shoes from socialist bloc countries will result in an increase of about $5 a pair at the retail level, will the minister, as a small contribution toward the containment of inflation, agree to postpone the proposed increase for a few months?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I am not sure I can give that undertaking but I will take the matter under advisement. I might add that I shall have more to say about the footwear industry of Canada later this week.

Mr. Hellyer: Since a 25 per cent increase in the price of work boots is inconsistent with any sensible industrial strategy, would the minister make an early announcement to the House that he has agreed to postpone this increase.

Mr. Gillespie: I think I have already answered that question.

Mr. Hellyer: One final supplementary. It is very simple. Will the minister guarantee an adequate supply of work boots at reasonable prices so that the working people of Canada can put the boots to the government when the election is held?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: The hon. member has overworked this subject, Mr. Speaker.

ENERGY

AMOUNT OF WESTERN OIL THAT CAN BE MOVED OVERLAND TO EASTERN CANADA THIS WINTER

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It arises from the recommendation of the government's technical advisory committee that "the movement of crude oil by unit train from Ontario to Quebec cannot be implemented this winter because of the time required to design and construct suitable and safe loading and unloading facilities". Would the minister tell us on what basis he is confident that 40,000 to 60,000 barrels a day can be moved overland this winter, which was the estimate he gave this House on November 28?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The earlier figure was suggested to me by the committee. It has now revised this estimate, noting that additional facilities would need to be constructed in order to achieve that level of movement by rail.

Mr. Jarvis: Noting that the St. Lawrence Seaway is to close tomorrow, would the minister tell us what immediate steps the government is planning with a view to increasing the movement of oil overland?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): A certain amount of oil can be moved by truck, but as the report indicates there is not sufficient capacity to move by rail within the next four months the volumes we have been talking about.

AIR TRANSPORT

INVESTIGATION OF ACCIDENT AT GASPÉ

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles de la Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

An Air Gaspé aircraft was involved in an accident December 17 in Gaspé. This aircraft was coming in from the Magdalen Islands.

Several passengers, most of them islanders, suffered serious injuries. Can the minister say whether his department has undertaken an investigation into the cause of this accident?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, investigators have immediately gone on the site to find out the cause of this unfortunate accident.

FINANCE

GOVERNMENT GUARANTEED LOANS TO SMALL BUSINESSES—REQUEST THAT MAXIMUM BE INCREASED

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

In view of the higher cost of materials and equipment in the industry, does the minister intend to act so as to enable chartered banks to increase the $25,000 maximum on loans to small businesses?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is a most interesting suggestion.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance.

Since industrialists are screaming for such services, can the minister say what is the obstacle to an increase in the $25,000 maximum for these loans? I think that it would be a great service to the industry. I ask the minister whether he can act directly and as soon as possible.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I will consider all the aspects of the question.

ENERGY

MOVEMENT OF OIL FROM WEST COAST—ALLOCATION OF DOCK SPACE AT VANCOUVER

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It arises from the statement by the minister that the government requires legislative means to deal with the allocation of dock space at the Vancouver terminal of Trans Mountain Pipe Line. I quote the minister: "Allocation of dock space is required at the Vancouver terminal of Trans Mountain Pipe Line for shipments to eastern Canada in a situation where available space appears to be overnominated"—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member ask the question instead of quoting a statement at length?

Mr. Reynolds: I just wanted to make sure the minister knew what he said yesterday. Is the minister aware that no tankers are tied up at the Vancouver terminal today? Also, has he been made aware by the port manager of Vancouver harbour that no dock space shortages are apparent?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): That is contrary to the information I have received from the oil companies which are attempting to transport the oil.

● (1520)

Mr. Reynolds: Would the minister contact the port manager at Vancouver, who was formerly a Liberal, and find out what are the true facts in regard to Vancouver harbour?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I will follow that up, but it is contrary to the information received from the shipping companies.

AIR TRANSPORT

DIVISION OF CHARTER TRAFFIC AS BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED STATES UNDER NEW AGREEMENT

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport. Yesterday the hon. member for Témiscamingue asked the minister a question about air charter and other air traffic agreements and the minister replied that the bilateral agreements had been initialed. Would the minister reveal to the House the details of how charter traffic is to be shared between the United States and Canada?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is going to be phased in over a period of a few years. For the first two years, I think, the Americans will be entitled to 10 per cent of the traffic to Florida and 10 per cent to Hawaii, with an average for all the other sun spots of, say, 15 per cent. For the two following years it will be 20 per cent to Florida and 20 per cent to Hawaii, with an average of 25 per cent. From 1978 on it will be 25 per cent for each of Florida and Hawaii, and I think a 35 per cent average.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, in view of the complexity of the agreements and their long-range effects, would the minister be agreeable, particularly in light of the fact that the United States government has to ratify the agreements, to refer the subject of these bilateral air agreements, and especially the charter arrangements, to the transport committee at an early date?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, as soon as it is signed I can refer it to the committee, yes.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may ask a further supplementary, following which the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Fraser Valley East.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is fairly simple. In the one case the United States government, which means its legislators—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member was recognized for the purpose of asking a supplementary question.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I was about to ask whether the minister would be prepared to do this prior to ratification by the cabinet and the United States government.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No, Mr. Speaker. I do not think it has ever been done in the past. We may be right or wrong in signing the agreement, and if it is not a good agreement we can be criticized. But I do not see how we can negotiate with a foreign country, reach an agreement, then refer it to a committee and then the committee says it does not agree with the agreement. In such circumstances it would be useless to enter into negotiations with any country in the world.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT DEPARTMENT INCREASE STAFF TO SPEED UP PROCESSING OF PENSION APPLICATIONS

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the continuing, long delay in the processing of applications for pensions, and the fact that many veterans will pass away before their applications are considered, does the minister propose to seek additional personnel and resources to speed up the processing of these applications, thereby alleviating the hardships that many of these veterans are presently undergoing through the effects of inflation?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to report that the processing of applications has been speeded up considerably in my department. We have taken on additional staff, commissioners, and so on. I should like to inform the House that it takes some time for people to learn to cope with medical problems and with the legislation, but we have added some back-up staff which has just about completed its work. Pretty soon I shall be able to report to the House of Commons on the situation. But we are progressing quite well.

Mr. Patterson: Would the minister advise whether his department is catching up on the backlog, and can he say why those who made application several years ago are still waiting? They are between 70 and 80 years of age now.

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, when put in those terms it does not sound very cheerful. Many of our applicants are now on pension. The 1971 legislation which was brought in by the previous government encouraged many veterans to reapply. As a result, the process is a long one; but the backlog is being decreased.

ENERGY

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ENSURE OIL SUPPLIES TO EASTERN CANADA AT LOWER THAN INTERNATIONAL PRICE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Yesterday in reply to the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe the minister said that the long-term thrust is to secure for Canadian industry oil and petroleum products that flow from oil at a price lower than the international price. Having regard to the fact that Quebec and the Atlantic provinces are now paying international prices for oil, what short-term industrial strategy does the minister have to implement the long-term objective of the government?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member should put the question in balance. For some years Quebec and the maritime provinces have had the advantage of a lower oil price than the rest of Canada. It may take some years until we have reached full self-sufficiency.

Mr. Crouse: Does the government have a short-term industrial strategy aimed at lowering domestic oil prices?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has pointed out that, as far as the Maritimes are concerned, there are more sources of energy than oil. He announced the federal government's participation in a nuclear power generating facility.

GRAIN

STEPS TO OVERCOME SHORTAGE OF FEED GRAIN IN EASTERN CANADA—PRICE LEVEL

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board.

Since feed grain reserves are now at the 430,000 bushels level in Quebec, while at this date last year they reached 3 million bushels, can the minister assure the House and eastern Canada farmers that the latter will not endure a feed grain shortage in the near future and that they will not be subject to a price increase?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there was a meeting only last Monday of the various persons interested in the movement of grain. Steps are being taken to ensure that the rail movement of grain that will be needed to augment supplies this winter will be carried out efficiently and will bring the supplies most critically needed to the right place as quickly as possible. There are, of course, adequate supplies in the west, and with the new feed grains policy there is the assurance that the same feed grain prices will apply all across the country.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe on a supplementary.

[Translation]

The hon. member may ask a supplementary question, but the oral question period is just about expired. I will then recognize the hon. member for Lévis.

[English]

Then the Chair will recognize the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the minister.

What action has the minister taken to assure eastern Canada of a stepped-up supply before the St. Lawrence Seaway closes?

[English]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, grain movement through the Lakehead and the Seaway were given very special attention to the point when the Seaway closed, and as well will be given attention so long as boats are able to move through the lakes. In addition, rail movement will be augmented this year and will no doubt be larger both for domestic and export purposes than was the case in previous years.

HARBOURS

FINANCIAL AID TO CERTAIN PORTS

Mr. Raynald Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

Since he indicated the government was considering guaranteeing a loan to the Maritime Employees' Association with respect to financial help for the port in Montreal, can the minister say if similar financial aid will be given to other ports in Canada?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. I think this problem applies only to those ports in Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec City. The only other help will be with respect to the port of Halifax that will be receiving this year a grant of $1 million for its operating expenditures and that is the only port to receive such attention from the federal government.

ENERGY

ALLOCATION OF OIL SUPPLIES—POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION TO MEET CONDITIONS NOT CONSTITUTING NATIONAL EMERGENCY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I should like to ask the minister whether he is contemplating the introduction of legislation which would authorize the government, or some agency of the government, to allocate oil supplies under conditions that do not constitute a national emergency within the meaning of clause 11 of the bill where there are difficult particular or local situations that cannot be satisfied and met by voluntary persuasion. Does the minister contemplate filing that vacuum in terms of legislation?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman will know, the constitutional jurisdiction of the government can only extend in the case of an emergency. We would, of course, have to have an emergency to find a constitutional base in that regard. The purpose would be that with widespread national evidence of the effects of disruption on people we would seek the guidance of the board, when established, for the purpose of determining whether or not the Governor in Council should make the finding provided for in the statute.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands and then call orders of the day.

Oral Questions

INDIAN AFFAIRS

YUKON NATIVE LAND CLAIMS NEGOTIATIONS—REQUEST FOR REPRESENTATION OF WHITE RESIDENTS ON FEDERAL TEAM

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the anxiety and concern expressed by many residents of the Yukon over the native land claims negotiations, would the minister give immediate consideration to representations made by members of the territorial council and members of the Yukon Council of Indians and other groups that an acceptable person or persons from the non-native community in the Yukon replace one or more members of the federal negotiating team, all of whom are appointed governmental officials?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we appointed the commissioner for the Yukon as a member of the bargaining committee. He may be replaced at times by one of the elected members of the Territorial Council sitting on the executive committee. I received requests similar to that made by the hon. member and I took good note of them. If there is reason to make any changes, we shall make them in due time.

[English]

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): In view of the fact that one-half of the negotiating team is composed of native people from the Yukon and the other half are federally appointed public servants, one of whom is the commissioner, would the minister give real consideration to having the white community in the Yukon included on the negotiating team as their interests are far more germane to the negotiations than those of the deputy minister in Ottawa?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I wish to say at the outset that there is not a single deputy minister sitting on that committee. I trust the Yukon commissioners. Another member of the team, namely the chief negotiator, is not a public servant. He is a lawyer from Victoria. Thus, I believe everybody's interests will be well safeguarded. I do not think one should stand on both sides of the fence like the hon. member.

[English]

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): He is from British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

ELECTION EXPENSES

PROVISION OF PAYMENTS TO CANDIDATES AND REIMBURSEMENT OF PARTIES FOR CERTAIN BROADCASTING TIME

The House resumed, from Tuesday, December 18, consideration of Bill C-203, to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections; motion No. 7 (Mr. Rodriguez) and motions Nos. 17 and 31 (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand).

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is the first time in eight years that I stand in this House to make such a comment. Last night, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) made in this House an assertion which I consider absolutely slanderous, unworthy of this House and probably unworthy of him. And I wish to emphasize it in this House for if I knew that such a feeling were shared by a good number of members, one can be sure that I would know what to do and that I would pull myself out very quickly.

Here is what the hon. member declared, without any reason nor any proof, nothing. He said, and I quote:

[English]

In Quebec, the situation was entirely different.

Mr. Bell: What page?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Page 8877 of Hansard for December 18, 1973. He said:

In Quebec, the situation was entirely different. It was more heinous because in Quebec the national campaign fund collector was none other than the then minister of regional economic expansion—

On the one hand, he was giving out $6 million to IBM and the next day he went knocking on their door saying, "I am collecting funds for the Liberal Party".

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I never collected or received a cent for any political party, including the Liberal party. I never went to the International Business Machines Co. Limited for any consideration, except for a visit of the plant. And I believe the words used by the hon. member are called slander. If he wants to repeat them outside this House, he will try to find evidence or even to gather some elements of evidence, that I conducted myself with public money in such an unspeakable manner as he has mentioned.

[English]

An hon. Member: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member had completed his remarks yesterday when we reached the time of adjournment and the intention is that the question should be put now, unless there is further debate.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard).

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I thought the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) had risen on a question of privilege, and if that were the case, inasmuch as it related to what I said last evening I would assume there is an obligation for some sort of response. This is not to continue debate, but if the minister wants me to reply I will gladly do so—

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Howard: —and point out that it seems passing strange to me that the same allegations were made on a number of occasions in months past when the minister held the dual position of co-chairman of the national campaign committee and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. He took no avenue whatever over the past couple of years and during the time he held dual capacities to refute any of the sort of remarks that I made last night.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Never.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I wonder why he would take this—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is a long-established and accepted practice in this House that hon. members should not refer to other hon. members using defamatory language or making personal accusations. I am sure the hon. member will appreciate this. When an accusation is made against a member and that member makes a statement as the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) has done, it is incumbent on all hon. members, including the member who made the statement, to accept the statement made by the minister.

I would caution the House against making personal attacks and allegations of a personal nature against members. I am sure hon. members would be well advised in their remarks in the consideration of the business before the House to observe the well-established and long-established practice that this kind of remark should not be indulged in.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, am I to understand that I for one am required to accept the statement that the minister just made, when it is not a factual statement?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) is subject to the rules of the House. I am sure that he, as a resident of this institution for some time, knows it is elementary that all members, including himself, are subject to the long-established rules of the House. The hon. member and all hon. members have to accept the statement made by another hon. member.

Election Expenses

The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt).

● (1540)

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to continue the debate on motion No. 7 in the name of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) which would, in effect, amend this section to require that donations be in Canadian funds and directly from Canadian sources. The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) raised what I thought was a very interesting point yesterday in which he questioned the definition of "Canadian sources". I think it was a very valid point. I had the same kind of reservation when looking at this amendment.

The question of a "Canadian source" calls for such a vague definition that, without anything further in that particular section, it would seem to me we would leave a court in a very difficult position in trying to define what is a Canadian source. There may be a corporation which is 30 per cent owned by Canadians, 5 per cent by Americans, 10 per cent by the English, and so on. Even though there may be a majority of Canadian ownership, it may represent less than 50 per cent: there may or may not be Canadian control of the corporation, and therefore we may not have a Canadian source if that particular corporation decided to make a political contribution.

So I rise really in support of the point made by the hon. member for Hamilton West. I believe his point is valid and I agree with him that this particular amendment is too vague. Merely to use the expression "Canadian sources" in an amendment would leave the courts and lawyers in terrible confusion in attempting to define what in heaven's name is a Canadian source.

My friend says that everyone would understand it except lawyers. I think that lawyers have a better understanding of these things than most people. In any event, I believe this particular clause needs clarification. I should like to make some suggestions that might be of assistance in clarifying the bill. I have in front of me a document from the Committee for an Independent Canada which was submitted to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. That committee made the following proposal which is an excellent one:

> We would propose the following criteria for distinguishing foreign from Canadian organizations. A corporation would be considered foreign for the purposes of this act if 50 per cent or more of its voting stock was owned abroad or if more than 10 per cent of its shares were held by any foreign group or individual. In other words any corporation 51 per cent of whose stock were in Canadian hands and not more than 10 per cent were held by any foreign group or individual could make donations to political parties. For trade unions, foreign union head offices would no longer be allowed to contribute to Canadian political parties. However, money collected from Canadian workers and administered by union officials elected by Canadian workers (as opposed to appointed from foreign headquarters) would be allowed to contribute.

Mr. Speaker, I would recommend that as a practical suggestion in terms of defining Canadian sources, whether corporate or union sources are involved. There are other problems in defining Canadian sources. There is the question of societies, the derivation of the funds and the question whether they were derived from a foreign source and merely funnelled through a Canadian source. I submit that would create a problem under this bill. I should also like to read into the record something else that comes from the Committee for an Independent Canada, which has carried out a very interesting and, I believe, detailed study of this problem of political donations. Their suggestion on page 5 of this document is as follows:

> On of the major reasons for a lack of public confidence in the Canadian electoral system is the suspicion that the political parties are individually influenced, if not controlled, by foreign—mainly American—forces. The implication in the public mind is that the political parties are thus not free to make policies that are in the best interest of Canada in those areas of Canadian life that are dominated by multinational corporations or American-controlled unions. To make donations to political parties from alien individuals and institutions illegal would help raise the credibility of the political system as a whole.

On that last statement I would rest my case in terms of this amendment. When I rose, I did so to criticize this amendment as being far too vague. I hope that these comments will encourage someone to introduce a subamendment to this particular clause which would perhaps better define Canadian sources. I do not have any problem in respect of Canadian funds, but I have a problem in trying to define what is a Canadian source. I think the judicial system would be caused considerable difficulty in this respect because it would be impossible to make a judgment, despite what my friends say about lawyers having difficulty here. I suggest that they have not looked carefully at this particular amendment.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, as I listened to the debate on this question I found it really quite startling that there should be opposition from any quarter of this House to the acceptance of this amendment. There may be some uncertainty in the minds of some of the legal fraternity in this House despite the explanation given by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) last night concerning the assistance he had in drafting this motion. If there is uncertainty in their minds, I am sure the House would be prepared to consider a clarifying subamendment on this point by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). If such a subamendment made sense to a layman like myself, I would be very willing to support it if it clarified the objective which I think is quite clear in the terms of the amendment as it stands.

We hear a great deal from time to time in this House about the need to retain a Canadian identity. I think it is true to say that political parties in Canada which have evolved in the now more than 100 years since confederation have been, by and large, Canadian institutions. Despite all that, when one assesses some of the statements made about the funding of political parties, and when one considers the actual facts in respect of what has happened in our economy with particular reference perhaps to the period since World War II, I think members of this House should be prepared to take a good look at what we should have, in a legislative sense, to ensure that the political parties in Canada remain in fact Canadian institutions.

It is perhaps rather unfortunate that the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) is not in his seat today to make a contribution on this question. I am sure that if he were here he could bring the issues involved in this amendment into focus for members of the House much more eloquently than I can. In fact, those of us who have been members of this House for some time recall occasions when the right hon. member for Prince Albert was at his eloquent best on this very issue.

Some hon. members may recall the political storm which developed over the suggestion that the embassy of another country in our capital was not unconnected with certain events related to an election in Canada. That incident, the full facts of which were perhaps never determined to the entire satisfaction of all members of the House at least, should cause us to think about this matter while we have a bill of this sort before us. It is not very often that the House is seized with the question of the manner in which Canadian elections are financed, and the source of the funds contributed.

I heard one hon. member interject and ask what is wrong with getting foreign money into a Canadian election. Some people might be prepared to argue that money is money and that you get it where you can. One of my colleagues suggests there have been occasions on which Canadian money has gone south of our border to assist certain elections in the country there. I suppose that is primarily a matter of concern to the people of the United States, although it is not a practice which I would encourage because in my view too much money flows out of Canada for various reasons into the coffers of various bodies in the United States.

I think my colleague who suggested that there are times when our money has gone south would probably not disagree that the potential danger to the Canadian identity is much greater than any danger which might arise from a Canadian making a contribution to an election campaign in the United States. The duty of legislators, in so far as it is possible for us frail human beings to do so, is to project our minds into the future, particularly when we are considering legislation. Although I have no indication that there has been an intervention by nationals of another country, either individual or corporate, into Canadian elections to a degree which would be disastrous to our country, nevertheless that possibility does exist. We have examples, which I think are fairly well documented, of large corporations having moved in and interfered in the internal affairs of other countries.

In this connection, reference is often made to such corporations as ITT and the kind of influence it has had in various countries, particularly in the southern part of this hemisphere. Those interventions may not have been by way of making contributions of money to election campaigns, but some of them have involved substantial sums of money. According to some information I have with regard to ITT, those funds in some cases have been spent, not on influencing the democratic process of election, but, rather, to subvert the political process and the operation of the government of the country concerned.

I well recall a situation shortly after World War II, which was during the period I first became active in politics, when a very active and well financed campaign was being conducted by a political organization known as the communist party. Although I do not have any documentary proof, it is certainly my honest judgment that at that particular period in Canadian history quite substantial sums were being provided to that organization from abroad. I have no reason to believe that that is the case at present with respect to that organization. However, during the time Stalin was the head of the government in the U.S.S.R. I am satisfied from the events that transpired in this country that there was financial intervention into the political affairs of this country through that Canadian medium which, in my view, was deleterious to the processes of democracy in Canada.

So I suggest that we are not dealing with something which is entirely hypothetical when we talk about putting into the law an inhibition against Canadian political parties receiving funding from foreign sources. Coming back to the organization which I mentioned earlier, namely ITT, it is my view that in certain parts of Canada that organization has been given great concessions in respect of jurisdiction over some of Canada's natural resources.

Having regard to the history of its operations in other parts of the world, which operations have been documented in part from time to time, I would say its very existence in Canada is perhaps reason for us taking precautionary measures in the context of this bill and to say to it and to all other foreign interests, "We neither want nor need your money in the conduct of the political affairs of Canada." It is for that reason, Mr. Speaker, that I hope this amendment; either in its present form or with clarification by some of the legal beagles in the House, will receive the support of all hon. members and that in dealing with this question of election funding we take what to me is a basic and rather elementary precaution to ensure that Canadians, in this respect at least, remain masters in their own house.

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to state for the benefit of Hansard that I am a Progressive Conservative. The last seven speakers to this bill have been members of the New Democratic Party, at least the last seven substantive speakers. Of course, it may be unfair to say that seven of them made speeches. One of them, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), took advantage of a question from the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) last night to give him a 20-minute answer which I understand does not count as speaking to the bill. But it should be clear by now that members of the NDP are determined that this bill will have very lengthy passage through the House.

As one of the charter members of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections which considered this bill at committee stage, I would like to express a few general remarks on the bill, and specifically on the amendment later.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) but I wish to point out that it was agreed yesterday—I am not sure if he was in the House at the time—that after general speeches were made, one from each particular corner of the House, the Chair was directed to ensure that remarks were strictly relevant to the bill. I think the hon. member must be bound by this agreement which was suggested by the hon. member for Renfrew-Lanark-Carleton (Mr. Dick).

Mr. McKinnon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; I shall try to abide by your direction. But I was present in the House yesterday when the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) took us through his constituency, almost town by town, describing the rallies he held and the relationships he had with his agents in the various parts of the constituency. I shall try to confine myself to amendment No. 7, although I think the second last speaker referred to it as No. 6 in error.

Perhaps I would be permitted the indulgence of the House to extend my congratulations to the committee and to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) who appeared at almost every one of its 51 meetings. I would also like to congratulate the committee chairman, the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Laflamme), who chaired the meetings with patience and fairness. The story of the number of amendments found necessary to make the bill at all acceptable has been well told. Each amendment was carefully considered and one by one we dealt with them until the bill was completed. I must admit that while there is no single section of the bill left that I cannot now live with, taken as a whole it is rather freightening. It is like building an airplane in your garage. Although put together with tender loving care, one still remains nervous about flying in it. The main concern I have about the bill is that it will add a large administrative tail to every candidate. I do not know if any candidate really wants to add more administrative structures.

Dealing specifically with amendment No. 7 and the other amendments grouped with it, it was moved by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) who unfortunately is not in the House today. This amendment is identical to one submitted, considered and rejected in committee. At that time the hon. member for Skeena mentioned, as he did yesterday, that he had consulted a lawyer concerning the wording of the amendment. After the amendment was rejected in committee, partly because of its wording, I thought the hon. member would try a new laywer, but apparently he did not. I contend that the amendment would lead to confusion. The clause, if amended, would read as follows:

—all money provided by an individual other than the candidate or by a corporation, trade union, unincorporated organization or association for any expenses incurred on account of or in respect of the conduct or management of the election, whether as a contribution, gift, loan, advance, deposit or otherwise, shall be in Canadian funds and directly from Canadian sources, and shall be paid on his or its own behalf out of moneys to which he or it is beneficially entitled to a registered agent of the party—

And so on. It is my contention that this might lead to the conclusion that as long as one dealt in non-Canadian funds, one might be exempted from the restriction to make the donation through an agent, which would defeat the purpose of the section.

A second exception I take to this amendment is its wording concerning Canadian funds. The point raised last night by the hon. member for Hamilton West was well taken. Is the wording "Canadian funds" meaningful or practicable? I phoned my bank manager this morning and asked if it would be possible to exchange $50,000 U.S. for $50,000 Canadian. He assured me that there is no restriction whatsoever, no records are kept, nor is there a requirement to keep such records. This indicated to me that the result of adding the words "Canadian funds" in this context would be meaningless.

During yesterday's debate the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) quoted Dr. Palteil of Carleton University, but he only quoted him in regard to the financing of the Liberal and Progressive Conservative parties. I would not want this House to be left with the impression that Dr. Palteil only reported upon the two major parties. In fact, I would recommend that all hon. members read Dr. Palteil's August, 1973, paper and also his book "Political Party Financing in Canada" which was published in 1970. I wish to give just a couple of quotations to balance the remarks of the hon. member for Timiskaming. The first is from Dr. Palteil's 1973 paper:

> It is clear that trade unions directly or through the Committee on Political Education of the Central Labour Organization are the prime sources of funds for the NDP party's national election fund.

The second quotation is from Palteil's book in which, when he was speaking about the NDP, he said:

> Practically all the sums spent by the federal office on the 1962 and 1963 campaigns came from labour sources. In 1965 approximately . . . 72 per cent of the expenditures of the federal party was covered by the trade unions, notably the United Steel Workers and the United Packing House Workers.

Palteil then expresses an opinion on these donors as follows:

> Trade unions are the financial foundations of the NDP. While such contributions differ qualitatively from the contributions of business corporations, it is also true that such donations are unlike the voluntary gifts of individual citizens.

I would like to read just one more quotation, this one from last night's speech by the hon. member for Skeena, as reported in Hansard at page 8877:

> We know that if there is a political party contribution which comes from a particular source there is a tendency for the recipient thereof to lean in that direction.

And later:

> There is the tendency to say that he who pays the bills will receive the prime consideration, and that he who pays the accounts will get the attention or that he who does not pay the accounts will not. We are trying to prevent the extraterritorial aspect of corporations, trade unions, individuals, associations and groups in other countries having influence, especially an undue influence, on the politics of this nation.

Mr. Speaker, I think that is a very fine statement for the hon. member for Skeena to have made and I agree entirely with it, although possibly for different reasons. I submit that the United Steel Workers, the United Packing House Workers, General Motors of Canada and Ford of Canada are all equally suspect in the minds of most Canadians in so far as foreign influence on their policy decisions is concerned. The hon. member for Skeena worries about the influence of corporations and businesses. I worry about the influence of giant, multinational unions. I hope my fears are as ill-founded as his.

I believe that the possibility of tracing the original source of funds suffered a real setback when the President of the Privy Council informed the committee that it was not the intention of the bill to trace donations back to their original sources. I am sorry that I have not had time to look up his exact words in the minutes of the committee, but doubt that he would wish to deny the inference I have drawn. Faced with this, I believe the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Nickel Belt would serve only to confuse further an already complex but well-intentioned bill, without achieving its aim. I therefore recommend that the amendments be defeated.

The NDP, as well as our party and the Liberals, submitted many amendments and many were accepted. Our party was particularly appreciative of the NDP amendment submitted by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). One of our amendments proposed that the Auditor General should supervise the act. However, our amendment was rejected. The hon. member for Greenwood suggested the appointment of a commissioner, and we welcomed his amendment.

In closing, I should like to say that I have no particular objection to the 42 amendments having been moved by one party in the House. Despite the fact that almost all the amendments were given a trial run in committee and were rejected, the NDP are within the rules in resubmitting them and that closes the matter as far as I am concerned.

Voltaire, in somewhat similar circumstances, said, "I disapprove of what you say but will defend to the death your right to say it." Well, I disagree with each of these amendments, and while I am not prepared to go to the lengths suggested by the gallant Voltaire, I certainly support their right to move these amendments. Perhaps I am willing to go along to some extent with Voltaire because it has not escaped my attention that Walpole said of Voltaire that he was "one of those heroes who liked better to excite martyrs than to be one".

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, not being a student of Voltaire in the original French, although having seen his works in translation, I do not know whether I would class myself as one who wants to be a martyr. If, however, I wanted to be a martyr, conceivably I could embrace martyrdom in connection with this particular amendment which I think is fundamental to Canadian democracy. The amendment I refer to deals with contributions to political parties being Canadian contributions made in Canadian funds by Canadian organizations.

I was pleased to hear the argument of the hon. member who preceded me. He suggested in so many words that the NDP is financed by large, American-based unions. That is not correct, Mr. Speaker. Certainly it is not true of the steelworkers with whom I held office for seven or eight years. It is not true of the IWA, with whom I spent some time as international representative for the district of eastern Canada; and it is not true, to my knowledge, of the UAW where I have had experience. However, as the previous speaker, who is an honourable man, believes what he alleges, he will wish to strengthen this clause and make it impossible for the NDP to be financed by those American unions. On the other hand, I firmly believe that the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party are to a large degree financed by multinational corporations with headquarters in the United States. For that reason I am interested in seeing a provision making it mandatory for donations to Canadian political parties to be made by Canadians in Canadian funds. Further, those donations should be made only by corporations which are controlled by Canadians.

My colleague who preceded me quoted from "Some Aspects of Campaign Finances in Canada". I should like to read something contained in that pamphlet. The heading of the part I shall read is, "Bill C-203—The latest reform proposal". Near the bottom of page 17 begins the Part I shall read, as follows:

Scandal and rumour, however, continue to beset the fund raising process at the provincial and federal levels. In Quebec there have been revelations concerning contacts between Liberal politicians including a former minister and alleged underworld characters; in Ontario sums purportedly collected by Conservative fund raisers from property developers doing business with the provincial government as in the Fidinam affair have prompted the provincial Premier William Davis to instruct the Ontario Committee on the Legislature which has been charged with proposing changes in procedures and practice to bring in a proposal for the disclosure of campaign contributions. On the federal scene the Liberals have been shown to have developed in 1972 a systematic procedure for collecting funds in the United States from the headquarters of corporate subsidiaries in Canada, including a presumably abortive approach to the heads of the giant multinational International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation. Although shrugged off by Liberal bagmen with countercharges that their Conservative counterparts were doing likewise and claims that the New Democrats received funds from international trade unions headquartered in the United States, the charges touched a sensitive nerve of an increasingly nationalistic Canadian public opinion concerned about the so-called corporate rip-off.

Although it is claimed by some that the NDP is the legislative arm of the Canadian trade movement, and although it is true that most Canadian trade unions prefer their members to participate in the political process and vote for the NDP, attempts to influence workers have been clearly unsuccessful in many areas. Further, with regard to the raising of funds there is considerable difference between the way the NDP tries to raise money in Canada from Canadian trade unions who support a political party and the way the Liberal and Conservative parties attempt to raise money, inasmuch as those parties go to headquarters of companies like the International Telephone and Telegraph Company in the United States and ask for contributions.

In Canada both the steelworkers and the auto workers participate in the decisions of their unions. Those unions enjoy the almost complete support of the various locals across Canada. Votes taken at regularly and duly constituted meetings make it possible for supporters of these unions to affiliate directly with other unions. As people who know about the Steel Workers of America will be aware, after the death of Philip Murray, a progressive man, MacDonald took charge. MacDonald decided at a convention that his organisation would not provide support for any socialistic party in Canada. It resulted in the Canadian delegation en masse threatening to walk out of the convention. In the following election, the vote was almost totally for Canada against MacDonald and he was defeated as president of that international union.

In Canada they have always exercised their right to support a political party local by local. To my knowledge that situation remains the same today. This goes on between elections as well as at elections. This is one of the reasons we pressed very hard for the idea of a constituency agent so that if a person in my constituency wanted to make a contribution to my political party and my campaign, he was able to do so. We would be able to keep control of that money in my constituency. I was surprised we were thwarted in this regard. The same can be said with regard to other segments of the American labour movement.

Some members may have heard Mr. Meany, the president of the CIO of the United States, recently recant on television what was said at their last convention. He said he no longer supported Nixon, that he thought Nixon should be impeached and that as a gentleman he should resign. He certainly backed away from the support his organization had overwhelmingly given to one of the most reactionary political parties on the North American continent. If my colleagues in the Conservative Party believe the situation should be that way in the United States, and at the same time they are going to donate money to the most left wing national party in Canada, they do not know Mr. Meany and the leaders of some of the other unions.

It is a fact that in Canada there is such autonomy. It is also a fact that autonomy does not exist in the boardrooms of Canada where votes are not taken as to who gets the donations. This was well illustrated by Palteil who did an investigation on this matter. He said if you are going to collect money from Canadian subsidiary corporations doing business in Canada, you will have to go to the head offices. I suggest in going to those head offices, both the Liberal and Conservative bagmen may have to be cleared by the CIA and other government agencies before even being allowed to make a request for that kind of money.

Anyone who believes the New Democratic Party receives contributions from the American trade union organization should be prepared to support an amendment that will make it impossible for any political party in Canada to get money for an election campaign from persons, corporations, boards of directors or any other agency not under the total control of Canadians by Canadians or those normally resident in Canada either by landed status or over a period of time.

If the Liberal Party has not yet found it out, I am sure they will very shortly find that the multinational corporations do not only play ball in the United States. It is not a case of getting a bilateral agreement. You have to go to OPEC; you have to go to corporations that may exist far from this country to find out whether money was received from Imperial Oil, Texaco or any other financial giants in the oil industry. They do not exist except on paper. The multinational corporations are like the hydra; you cut off one head and another grows. They are a financial bureaucracy that is self-supporting and self-effacing. They have no national conscience.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Like the international unions.

Mr. Peters: I have explained that, unlike shareholders in multinational corporations, shareholders in Canadian unions, international unions, the CNTU or syndicates have a vote.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Hallelujah!

Mr. Peters: They are autonomous at the bottom level. To my Bible-quoting friend I suggest this is not true of the multinational corporations. If members want clarification, I am prepared to move as follows:

That the word "sources" at the end of the three amendments be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"citizens, persons with landed immigrant status, corporations which have no less than 50 per cent of their voting stock owned by Canadian citizens and no more than 10 per cent of their voting stock owned by any foreign group or person, trade unions which are located in Canada, and associations or organizations which are established pursuant to a statute of the Parliament of Canada or of a province"

This motion will be seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member would have someone else move his motion, since he seconded the three motions that are now before us. This would clearly be out of order.

Mr. Peters: It will be seconded by the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is the moving of the subamendment that is giving the Chair difficulty, not the seconding. I understand that is being done by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight). The motion that is being put before the Chair will have to be moved by someone other than the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) because he has already moved or seconded the three motions now before us at the report stage. Perhaps this could be done by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett).

Mr. Barnett: Then I would so move, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Comox-Alberni, seconded by the hon. member for Assiniboia, moves the proposed amendment to the motion which was read by the hon. member for Timiskaming. Possibly the Chair could look at the motion for a moment, since we are dealing with three amendments. I presume it is the intention to amend each of the three motions before us. The Chair has examined the proposed amendment that has been presented to it. I find no difficulty in putting it to the House, but if there are points of order arising therefrom I will reserve decision for a few moments. It covers motions Nos. 7, 17 and 31 and reads as follows:

● (1630)

That the word "sources" at the end of the three amendments be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"citizens, persons with landed immigrant status, corporations which have no less than 50 per cent of their voting stock owned by Canadian citizens and not more than 10 per cent of their voting stock owned by any foreign group or person, trade unions which are located in Canada, and associations or organizations which are established pursuant to a statute of the Parliament of Canada or of a province".

I believe the proposed amendment is in order though it comes to us in an irregular way inasmuch as it was presented in the speech of one member and moved by another member. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Timiskiming (Mr. Peters), and since the point of order has probably taken up four minutes he will be allowed his full 20 minutes.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): He has just spoiled a good amendment by that subamendment. The bookkeeping necessary to keep track of it will be impossible.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I need 20 minutes to justify the amendment. I do know there are sincere differences of opinion as to the kinds of contribution which should be allowed. I believe there is a growing body of opinion that Canadians should pay for their own elections. This has been my view for a long time. It is obvious that money is needed to run for federal election, though I must say that I myself have never had to spend large amounts in my constituency. The people there did not supply me with very much money but instead they supplied me over the years with a great deal of assistance in other ways. They have provided me with a lot of help and have done a great deal of work to see that I was elected; and I can always be sure that the assistance I am receiving is assistance from Canadian citizens who are interested in the progress of legislation which is enacted with their interests in mind.

I am sure most Canadians will be aware, unless they live with their radios turned off, that huge sums are spent in the United States in the course of election campaigns and that the very size of these funds may lead to wrong decisions being taken. When Mr. John Dean was asked during the early, electrifying days of the Watergate hearings to tell the Senators what had gone wrong, how he as a lawyer who had taken an oath to uphold the law could have got himself into the circumstances which led to his appearance, his answer was that the Republican Party had too much money at its disposal. As I say, there has to be some money but it need not be a very large amount. I would be the first to oppose the idea of the New Democratic Party receiving large sums of money either from Canadian or foreign sources. I recall an occasion when in the province of Ontario we were offered a sum which was, for us, a very large one. I suppose it was $5,000 or $6,000—

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): All that much?

Mr. Peters: Well, in those days the party had between $15,000 and $20,000 at its disposal to run a provincial election. I was on the provincial executive, and $5,000 probably amounted to 15 per cent or 20 per cent of the total amount of money the provincial office had available to run an election. We turned this offer down. We turned it down for two reasons: first, we were dominated at that time by the teetotal element in Ontario; second, we were not sure what we would have to do in return for this donation. This was a period during which the temperance group in Ontario had the largest influence in the Ontario New Democratic Party, rather than the trade unions by which, according to most people, we have always been dominated. I believe the position has changed now with changing social attitudes.

As I say, I would be opposed to large sums of money coming into the party, simply because I do not believe large amounts of money are needed. What happened in the United States was this: the Republican Party had $3 million or $4 million left over and no place to spend it, so they looked around and set up their dirty tricks committee and appointed some bright young fellows to run it. And they came up with some lulus! It seems to me that when large contributions from outside flow into local election funds, they are a factor which distorts the ability of individuals to make a contribution to their political parties.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. It was my understanding that the hon. member was allowed an additional four minutes. He has gone well beyond those four minutes. Unless the hon. member receives unanimous consent, he will not be able to pursue his remarks. Are hon. members willing to allow the hon. member for Timiskaming to continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, before you took the chair the previous occupant allowed the hon. member 20 minutes to speak on the subamendment that he had moved, not four minutes. The four minutes came from the four-minute period that the Chair took to analyse whether the subamendment was in order. I respectfully suggest that the hon. member still has at least 12 minutes, even though he has now perhaps exceeded the four minutes, in view of the order made by the Chair when considering the subamendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I hope we do not get into a debate on this question of procedure. Actually, the House made a special case and allowed another hon. member to move the amendment of the hon. member for Timiskaming. Otherwise, if he had not been the seconder of the motion, he would have moved the amendment and been allowed the same time as any other member moving an amendment, which is 20 minutes. I think the extra four minutes allowed by the Chair was fair. But instead of going into a procedural interpretation of what was decided, there could be agreement if the hon. member wishes to ask for an extra few minutes.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to ask for an extra few minutes. I should like to thank the Speaker for his clarification because I had not understood how the extra time came about.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner).

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It arises pursuant to Standing Order 29 which provides that when two or more members rise in their place at the same time, as occurred in this case, namely, the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) a member may move that one of the members be now heard. Therefore, I move that the hon. member for Mississauga be now heard.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. Hon. members are aware of Standing Order 29 which provides that there shall be no debate of the question. I wonder whether the hon. member has a seconder for his motion.

Mr. Howard: The hon. member for Assiniboia.

An hon. Member: Let him get up himself.

Mr. Howard: Then I so move, seconded by the hon. member for Crowfoot.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I do not see a seconder at this time.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, following along the lines spoken in this House earlier today, although I may not agree with the motion I will protect the hon. member's right to move it, and I second it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), seconded by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), moves that the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) be now heard. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Call in the members. The House divided on the motion (Mr. Howard) which was negatived on the following division:

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel).

● (1710)

Mr. Olivier: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

I did not vote because I did not want to vote on foolish things like that which make the House of Commons look ridiculous.

Mr. Pelletier (Sherbrooke): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sherbrooke on a point of order.

Mr. Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I did not vote on this motion because I feel it is an abuse of the rules. In my view, the members of the House of Commons should have been reminded that it is really ridiculous to move motions of this kind.

[English]

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is quite improper for a member of the House of Commons to cast a reflection on the vote of other hon. members. It is quite improper, also, for a member to refer to any action by another member when he is casting his vote in the House as being ridiculous or otherwise. This sort of thing should not be entertained by Mr. Speaker, and if it continues it will set a precedent which I am certain this House will regret.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1720)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) has the floor.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on the three motions presently being debated with respect to Bill C-203, particularly the one providing that election campaign funds should be Canadian funds and should come directly from Canadian sources. While I realize there might be difficulty in determining what is a Canadian source, I must admit that I am inclined to support that part of the motion. It is not a question of whether it can be implemented. Quite often in politics it is not necessarily a question of what you are doing but of how the voter perceives that you have done it. We have already laid down certain laws with respect to foreign investment in Canada. We will allow only 10 per cent foreign investment in our banks, and none in our newspapers and other news media. Surely, as a parliament, we should be proud to declare that money spent on the election of members to this House should come from Canadian sources.

The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) spoke of the rumour which is often touted about his party, that it gets a great deal of money from international unions. He attempted to assure the House that, from his knowledge, this is not the case. I point out that he is not a collector for the NDP; he is not a finance man for the NDP; he does not know where the money comes from for his party. And after listening to him, I still believe that a great deal of it comes from international unions.

It is interesting to read the subamendment which has been moved. Many members were not present to hear it when it was moved. After the word "sources" it would add:

—citizens, persons with landed immigrant status, corporations which have no less than 50 per cent of their voting stock owned by Canadian citizens and no more than 10 per cent of this voting stock owned by any foreign group or person, trade unions which are located in Canada—

In other words, no political contributions should come from a corporation which has more than 50 per cent of its stock owned outside Canada. But with respect to unions, the reverse is stipulated, the figure there being 10 per cent with respect to trade unions which are located in Canada. Isn't that interesting, Mr. Speaker?

Imperial Oil of Canada is 30 per cent owned by Canadians, and 70 per cent owned in the United States; but it is located in Canada. International unions may be located in Canada, and in this part of the amendment "located" is the key word for unions. The hon. member tries to create two worlds, one for the sanctity and safety of his group and the other for those terrible giants, the corporations. He is out to get them. This is going back to the old myth that the CCF portrayed across Saskatchewan years ago when there was always somebody they had to get. The hon. member is always after the corporations while protecting the unions, which is not a very honourable thing for a member to do with regard to an election expenses act which is very important to all members of this House.

I do not want to prolong this debate, Mr. Speaker, but if this amendment is to be voted on, I would certainly give some thought to changing that figure of 10 per cent. Why allow a union 10 per cent that is located in Canada? That is the way I interpret that amendment, that if it is 10 per cent owned in Canada, it can contribute funds. I see the hon. member for Timiskaming shaking his head in a negative manner. I hope he will have somebody get up and explain this amendment, because that is the way I interpret it.

Maybe I have a suspicious mind, but I think all people should have suspicious minds when we are talking about involving the government of Canada in paying part of our election expenses. We do not have to look very far for examples. Everybody thought that control over election expense contributions would clean up the problem with elections in the United States. The Americans passed a bill, and then got into difficulty in the Watergate affair. I say that we must be very careful when passing this bill.

As I said at the beginning, there is no question in my mind that there is some merit to the amendment as it stood before the subamendment was moved, some merit to the suggestion that funds should come directly from Canadian sources. It would be very difficult to control and police, but at least it would be something which would prohibit what we saw during the last election campaign when Liberal party finance men were phoning businesses and corporations in the United States seeking donations. It would cut out that; that would be taboo.

I well remember the 1963 election when the Liberal Party accepted one of the top men in the Democratic Party in the United States to come up here and run their campaign for them in Canada. There is hidden secret about that. Money came with that man. He was one of the key advisers to the President of the United States, or his brother was a key adviser to the President of the United States. He masterminded the Liberal Party campaign in 1963 and brought money with him, and the government changed hands in Canada. I am not suggesting for a minute that it was because of this person's interference that it changed hands.

Mr. Reid: Who was he?

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): You check back in the records. Your government House leader knows who he was.

Mr. MacEachen: I would like to know.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I know his name very well.

Mr. MacEachen: Let us in on it.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): It is common knowledge. Ask one of the venerable press men for the Southam chain. Charlie Lynch knows his name.

Mr. MacEachen: Charlie isn't here. You are.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I am here and I guess, Mr. Speaker, I am going to be here next week too, and I will speak next week too and maybe I will be able to find out the exact spelling of that person's name and be able to put it on the record next week. I will have another speech on this bill ready by then. As I was saying, it is common knowledge that in 1963 a foreign government, a foreign country deliberately interfered with the elections—I might say with the free elections in Canada. It is common knowledge who the Liberal Party hired from the United States; let me put it that way. Maybe they did not send him up here, but they hired him. It is common knowledge, also, that in the last election campaign Liberal Party finance men went to the United States, to ITT and other corporations and asked for money.

Can the amendment as it was first moved be policed? I readily admit that this would be very difficult. But the moral spirit of that amendment would have to be lived up to by the parties. They would not be able openly to send their finance men into the United States to collect money. They would not be able to go down to the United States and hire men, something which is not necessarily wrong but in spirit might not be quite correct. But this subamendment, tagged on this afternoon, certainly spoiled what was a good intention. Rather than attempting to clarify and simplify the situation, it has only complicated it by creating two levels, 50 per cent for corporations and 10 per cent for unions located in Canada. An international union may have its head office in Chicago and it may locate in Canada if it so desires. Many international companies locate in Canada and international unions could locate here also if they desired to change their head offices before an election. To move from Chicago to Toronto would not be an impossible thing for the Brotherhood of Railway Engineers. That could be done in order to contribute legally to the party of hon. friends to my left.

I therefore urge the House to reject this motion as amended because it will only cloud the issue and make it more difficult for elections to be fought in the spirit of fair play. Political campaigning across the country must always be undertaken in the spirit of fair play. We have never had the political bag of dirty tricks that they have used in the United States. That sort of thing is alien to Canada; we try to fight elections in a spirit of fairmindedness.

Mr. Paproski: The government should not use Christmas holidays as a way of blackmailing members of this House.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): We must continue to fight fair and free elections. I am not enthusiastic about the concept of the government paying election expenses. I think that will only increase the cost of elections for members and will not curb expenses. However, I am not debating the matter of expenses so much as I am debating the hon. member's amendment. I am concerned about Canadian funds from Canadian sources being used to finance Canadian election campaigns.

In the last few years we have seen Canadian nationalism come to the fore. Organizations such as the Committee for an Independent Canada have been concerned about our resources; some of them have misstated facts with regard to our oil and said that international companies own our oil. I suggest that Alberta owns 80 per cent of our oil, the rest being owned by Manitoba, Saskatchewan, British Columbia, and even Ontario which owns a small part. Obviously, Canadians are interested in seeing Canadians control Canada. There is nothing wrong with that. Also, there is nothing wrong with the spirit expressed by the initial motion, which suggests that the government ought to put up a certain portion of election expenses and that the rest of the money for fighting the election should also come from Canadian sources.

As I say, there is nothing wrong with the spirit of that motion. Nevertheless, I should like to see this House vote on and defeat the subamendment and then vote on the original motion which I think has merit. Actually, we are speaking on three amendments at the same time. They are more or less the same, each dealing with money contributed directly from Canadian sources. The concept is not bad, although how the provisions of the bill are to be policed I fail to see. At any rate, the bill attempts to correct some of the abuses which we have witnessed in years gone by, specifically in 1963 and in the last election of 1972.

Having said that, I hope more members will consider this matter. If I have misinterpreted the subamendment moved this afternoon, and misinterpreted the concept with regard to unions being located in Canada, I think the matter ought to be cleared up because as it is I think the subamendment is muddy.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? He suggested that he may have misinterpreted the subamendment. He may have misread it. Admittedly, it is in handwritten form. I think the hon. member was looking at a photocopy of a handwritten amendment and it may be difficult to find the commas. If he reads it again, he will find that the 10 per cent reference is to corporations. The subamendment speaks of corporations, of which Canadian citizens own not less than 50 per cent, and of which not more than 10 per cent of the voting stock is owned by foreign groups or persons. Then comes a comma, and then you come to the words "trade unions".

[Mr. Horner (Crowfoot).]

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): The hon. member is quite correct. I was reading a photocopy of the handwritten subamendment and the writing is rather indistinct in places. Perhaps there was not enough ink in the machine. There is a comma after the word "persons". The subamendment, after the comma, reads, "trade unions which are located in Canada, and associations or organizations which are established pursuant to a statute of Parliament of Canada or of a province". That wording would make it more difficult for trade union money to move readily from one country to another, but it still can be done. I still have my doubts about the word "located". The wording should be "Canadian unions", period. There should be no reference, directly or obliquely, to international unions. These big international unions take our workers' money but do not spend it in Canada; they spend it in the country in which the union headquarters are located. That is what worries me.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on the motion which the House is now considering, which concerns Canadians investing Canadian funds in Canadian elections. First, may I say that this bill was introduced in the House on June 22. When it was considered on second reading, I and others urged that the committee continue sitting during the vacation period as we knew that the committee would need to consider many amendments. Unfortunately, the committee was not organized until after October 15. The committee worked diligently and actually rebuilt this bill from stem to gudgeon. It did a fair job of producing a fine piece of election expense legislation.

We do not know if the legislation will work. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) has suggested that all members may run into difficulty with regard to the legislation in the first election that is fought under it. At any rate, the bill represents a good effort by the committee. The committee should be recommended highly for the enormous amount of work it did, for its dedication in coming together for meeting after meeting and for really working hard to make sure this bill could be reported to the House well in time to be passed before Christmas.

Having spoken to a number of members, I can say that if there was any urgency with regard to this bill it probably could have been passed this afternoon, despite the number of amendments proposed. It is apparent, sir, that it is necessary for this House to be kept sitting in order to debate some of these amendments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I remind the hon. member that the rules are strict. The debate should be strictly on motions Nos. 7, 17 and 31; there should not be general debate on other topics. I ask the hon. member to return to the motions before the House.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for wandering from the topic. In my preliminary remarks I wanted to commend the committee for the excellent job it did. I think the whole House should commend the committee for that. If I may deal with the particular amendments before us, I suggest that they represent a deathbed repentance on the part of the NDP: suddenly they realize that their total source of funding has been international unions.

Mr. Howard: Nonsense.

Mr. Blenkarn: These unions have their head offices in the United States. The subamendment goes a bit farther and alludes to trade unions which have offices in Canada. Sir, the location of the branch office does not matter. We are concerned about head offices. The intention of the amendment is clear and I am delighted to see this deathbed repentance. We have the New Democratic Party now declaring they will no longer rely on funds extracted by compulsory methods from workmen in other countries, as well as in this country, and used by the directors and union organizers largely responsible in a foreign jurisdiction demanding that political influence be felt outside their country.

Mr. Peters: Now we will use the taxpayers' money.

Mr. Blenkarn: I therefore commend the spirit of this amendment. However, I am afraid the mover of the amendment does not really appreciate the nature of the bill as it has been put before us by the committee. Under the bill there are financial inducements to individuals to contribute to political campaigns. It should no longer be necessary for big corporations and international unions to finance political parties. The Liberal Party has obviously been the party of international financing. They even send their bagmen across the line to collect.

Mr. Brewin: You do exactly the same, and you know it.

Mr. Blenkarn: There will no longer be the necessity for this kind of large collection system that we have had in the past. In dealing with the bill, the hon. member should realize that if you pay $100, $75 is a tax allowance, and so on, up to $1,500 in personal donations. That should no longer make it necessary for us to worry about foreign control in election financing.

The amendment is really not necessary. I am sure that with a little bit of effort by the government House leader in negotiating with the movers and seconders of these amendments, they would see the reasoning behind the fact the amendments are no longer necessary because of the long and protracted committee hearings. A number of the amendments that are proposed were discussed in part in committee. Unfortunately, the mover and seconder of this amendment were not there and therefore do not understand how the whole nature of election financing was altered by the excellent work of the government House leader and the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) in the committee. If they would use their good offices and speak to the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) and others who have proposed amendments, I am sure they would understand that with the bill as now reported to the House, and the amendments and changes that the committee was able to effect after many, many hours, their amendments are no longer necessary. Unfortunately, there has not been that consultation. If there were an effort at agreement and at instructing the hon. member for Timiskaming and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) as to the nature of the bill as reported to the House, they would very quickly see that this amendment in particular is redundant.

I now wish to deal with the subamendment. I do not want to bore the House and take extra time because it is unfair that we should do that. Usually these problems can be solved by understanding and negotiation. However, dealing with this subamendment we get into the question of defining who is a Canadian. That is one of the problems we have had with many pieces of legislation which have been before this House. We then go on to those who have landed immigrant status. Would they need to have landed immigrant status and never apply for citizenship, or have landed immigrant status for six years and if they do not apply for citizenship be deemed to be foreign?

That was the problem of Bill C-132 which was before us a short time ago. There is also the matter of the percentage of share ownership—50 per cent of voting stock. Hon. members will recall that when dealing with Bill C-132 we said it was control, not a question of per centage of stock. We went into that subject rather deeply. It may be the bill should provide for the kind of funds to be donated. I do not really think it matters whether it is Canadian currency or not. I suggest that is the only kind of money that can be donated to political party. However, we have the horrendous problem with regard to election funding whereby this amendment and the subamendment once again require us to define what is Canadian and what is not. Frankly, I am tired of legislation that tries to precisely define when a person who is a Canadian is a Canadian.

We have this problem in connection with the Elections Act. There are Canadians who, like my father, have been here almost since birth. My father came here from England when he was four years old. That was a long time before 1947; it was in 1904 to be exact. He will have to prove he is a Canadian. That is a disgraceful situation. It is one of the problems this government has yet to face. People always have to prove they are Canadian. This amendment is not necessary. The committee fully analysed the kind of financing which elections require. It has made a good arrangement whereby election expenses are deductible. There will no longer be the massive need of financing from foreign corporations or trade unions.

I again commend the NDP members who have reduced these amendments to a deathbed repentance, saying they will no longer have to rely on foreign money to fight their battles in Canada. I suggest this amendment to the bill as placed before the House by the Committee is no longer necessary and is redundant.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am more amazed all the time at the gyrations which go on in the Conservative Party about this question. Last night the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) raised a query about the amendments. The question had been raised in committee by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) and others in the Conservative Party about its vagueness. Some hon. members did not see how they could support such an amendment. The members of the Conservative Party said it is a good amendment, they endorse it, they embrace it, they are Canadian, but they do not see how they can support this good amendment because it is too vague and they do not understand it.

I tried to explain to the hon. member in committee and to the hon. member for Hamilton West and others in the House last night that the original phrasing of the amendment was based on advice from lawyers who were schooled in the area of drafting legislation. However, they persisted in saying it was too vague and needed some points of clarification, expansion and interpretation. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), in consultation with other members, tried to spell out what was meant by the phrase "Canadian sources". The subamendment spells out as clearly as possible what is meant by "Canadian sources". The Conservative Party spokesmen say that is a good idea, but they do not think they can support it because it is not clear enough. They say it was better the way it was previously. In other words, we should not have moved the subamendment. They cannot have it both ways.

The indication is that hon. gentlemen in the Conservative Party are using a spurious element of ignorance, confusion and misunderstanding to cover up the fact that they wish to continue to get their funds from outside this country. They wish to continue to have their bagmen pick up Yankee dollars as in the past, but they do not want the general public to know this. So they take two stances. The amendment was good, but they could not support it because it was not clear enough. The subamendment was good but, again, they could not support it because it was too clear. We know where the Conservative Party gets its funds; they get them to the extent of about $4 million collected for the last national campaign—

Mr. Crouse: By voluntary contributions.

Mr. Howard: By voluntary contributions, that is right; and that is exactly the position with respect to the NDP.

Mr. Crouse: No way. You use coercion.

Mr. Howard: I always know when the truth bites home: the Tories start to chatter like magpies, especially the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse). But it is documented. Corporate industry and the financial community centred in Toronto is the principal source of Conservative Party funds. However, the party has the benefit of considerable help from donors in the province of Alberta. This does not surprise us, because Alberta has these links with Gulf Oil, Shell Oil, Imperial Oil, Texasgulf, and so on. Then again, the party receives some assistance from Nova Scotia, not to speak of monetary assistance from corporations in Hamilton, London and Montreal. The bagmen have moved from oil capital to insurance and trust company capital.

Conservative candidates have filed returns of election expenditures under the Elections Act. The name of one trust company comes to mind, the Victoria and Grey Trust Company, as having made a contribution to the Conservative Party. The Victoria and Grey Trust Company denied that they had made a contribution. However, the Conservative candidate, who was subsequently elected to parliament, filed a declaration saying the Victoria and Grey Trust Company had contributed to his campaign fund, and surely we must accept his statement.

The point was made clearly in an intervention by my hon. friend from Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) when the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) was talking about campaign funds from international unions and international corporations. He indicated we would not have to worry about that in future because in this bill we are embarking on a process of putting our hands into the public till and considering the payment of election expenses out of the public treasury. We are demanding that the taxpayers subsidize political parties and candidates, though not paying the whole shot, not preventing anyone else from contributing. This is the source of funds about which the Conservative Party is concerned, funds which have their origin in the United States. Those who donate these funds will now be too embarrassed to disclose them. Either the money will come in through the back door—

An hon. Member: It will to your party, through the international unions.

Mr. Howard: If the hon. member had listened to me last night, he might have some understanding of the position. I am talking about the party to which the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) belongs. That is the party which has set itself up as Mr. Clean in this debate.

An hon. Member: The only one.

Mr. Howard: The money will still come in through the back door, or it will not come in at all and the shortfall will be made up by the taxpayer. Further on in the bill there is a provision we have to consider, in terms of funds to pay 50 per cent of the shot for national advertising, national television, national radio.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock!

Mr. Bell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I first express to the government House leader and his party the fondest hope that they have a successful Christmas party tonight, as we did a short time ago. May I ask a not unrelated question? What will we be doing tomorrow?

Mr. MacEachen: I thank the hon. member for his good wishes. Maybe he will turn up; we shall be glad to see him. Tomorrow we shall continue with the same item, election expenses.

Mr. Howard: Good.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN SIXTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order: Motions:

December 13, 1973—Mr. Howard:

That the sixth report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented to the House on Thursday, December 13, 1973, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that the hon. member for Skeena seeks at this point to move concurrence in the sixth report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented to the House on Thursday, December 13, 1973.

I have already indicated to the hon. member that the Chair has reservations, not about the report itself but about the motion to concur in the report. My suggestion to the hon. member, and, of course, I will be pleased to hear him or any hon. member who would like to enlighten the Chair on the procedural aspect, is that the report itself goes beyond the committee's terms of reference in the sense that a bill was referred to the committee and what we have received from the committee is a report making a recommendation of a substantive nature. A study of the precedents indicates that although there have been a number of similar reports, which I am sure are very useful and which appear in the Journals of the House, there is no precedent to substantiate the proposition that concurrence in such a report can be moved so that it can be the subject of a debate in the House. That, basically, is the objection taken by the Chair, but I would be pleased to hear the views of hon. members and have the benefit of their guidance.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I gather from what you have just said that the substance of the report and of the recommendation, which is a very simple one, that the government consider the advisability of refusing to ratify the purchase by Air Canada of 30 per cent of the capital stock of Wardair Canada Limited, does not in itself transgress the rules in relation to the expenditure of funds or giving direction to the government. It simply adopts the usual phraseology that the government consider the advisability of doing, or not doing, a certain thing in accordance with the standard form for recommendations of this nature. I gather your concern is whether or not the subject matter of the report, namely, the agreement between Air Canada and Wardair, lends itself to being reported on because it arises out of the consideration of a particular bill which was referred to the committee, Bill C-164, to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by Canadian National Railways and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada.

In the course of the committee's deliberations in considering the extent to which the bill was acceptable. Mr. Pratte and a number of other witnesses from Air Canada went extensively, both voluntarily and in answer to questions, into aspects of the relationship between Air Canada and Wardair. Since this agreement has not yet been formally consummated, basically what was being sought in the bill was a guarantee of certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, part of the proceeds of which could go toward the purchase of a 30 per cent equity in Wardair at a cost to Air Canada of something less than $3 million. Provision for this $3 million was made in part within the bill itself.

I do not want to go into detail about the proceedings before the committee or to make any quotations therefrom. Succinctly put, there was extensive debate, examination and elaboration on the relationship between Air Canada and Wardair. Reference was made to an amount of something less than $3 million to buy an equity in Wardair, with part of the money to come from the financial authority contained in the bill in so far as Air Canada was concerned.

It seems to me quite appropriate that if the committee saw fit to make a particular report about one aspect of the bill without in itself defeating the bill, if it did not want to refuse to report the bill because it did not agree with this particular provision, the committee had no other course to take but to make a specific recommendation concerning one aspect of the provisions of the bill. As I interpret the proceedings before the committee, especially the motion moved in the committee, it was the hope and intention of the committee to ask the House to express an opinion about the agreement between Air Canada and Wardair, an agreement that was initially authorized by the Canadian Transport Commission. The decision of that commission was subsequently appealed to the cabinet. Evidence was given during the proceedings that the cabinet was, as of December 13 when the report was made, seized of the appeal of the decision of the Canadian Transport Commission to endorse the agreement between Wardair and Air Canada.

All that the motion seeks to do is to have the House express an opinion in regard to recommending to the government the advisability of not ratifying that particular agreement. If the agreement is not ratified the $3 million contemplated to be guaranteed in part by Her Majesty as set out in the bill need not be provided. To my way of thinking, it is perfectly within the ambit of the financial structure of the bill because it relates to the financing of Air Canada, and part of those moneys is to be used to buy an equity share in Wardair.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order and the question Your Honour raised as to whether or not you are convinced that the sixth report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications was a proper report for the committee to make in view of its terms of reference, I should like to say that I am sure Your Honour acknowledges the difficult position in which I, as chairman of that committee, was put.

Normally committees run rather smoothly. But in a minority House committees are nearly equally balanced, and on this occasion the vote on whether or not that amendment should carry was a tie vote and I as chairman was then called upon to make the final decision. I referred to Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, section 75, which suggests that the chairman must always protect his impartiality and that, whenever possible, he should refer such decision to another body so that that body can make the final decision.

Having well understood that the Canadian Transport Commission had made a particular ruling in regard to the purchase of 30 per cent of Wardair by Air Canada and that Canadian Pacific Airlines had appealed that decision to the Governor in Council, I thought that according to Beauchesne's Fourth Edition I, as chairman of that committee, could best maintain my impartiality by continuing to refer the final decision to the cabinet, which was already called upon to review the CTC decision.

May I refer to Votes and Proceedings for February 16, 1971. At that time the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs was studying Bill C-203, introduced in that session, which had to do with the Pensions Act. The sixth report of the committee recommended that the government consider the feasibility of taking certain actions. On that occasion in 1971 the committee took it upon itself to go outside the scope of Bill C-203. It recommended something that might not have been encompassed in the bill but nevertheless was within the financial aspects of the bill. The committee recommended that the House should consider the advisability of including merchant navy personnel and auxiliary service personnel who were prisoners of war of the Japanese in world war II under the provisions of Section 57 of the Pension Act as amended by Bill C-203. That was only one of the committee's recommendations.

May I refer Your Honour as well to Votes and Proceedings of June 22, 1971. On that occasion Mr. Gervais, for Mr. Tolmie, from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, presented the ninth report of the said committee. That committee made a recommendation to the House with regard to Bill C-243, then being considered. The committee recommended, in view of the financial implications involved, that the government should propose a series of amendments that were outlined at that stage. There are extensive precedents and I am sure Your Honour is aware of them.

On this particular occasion the committee was considering a financing bill authorizing the expenditure of $140 million in connection with capital and operating expenditures of Air Canada. I thought that the Wardair agreement fell within the area that the bill was designed to cover with regard to Air Canada. The money had actually left Air Canada and was being held in escrow until the cabinet had made a final decision. The money had actually been spent by Air Canada and was being held in escrow until the cabinet could make a final decision on the appeal by CP Air.

When the motion came before the committee I questioned it and examined it thoroughly and felt I had to rule the motion in order. I felt I had to vote to refer the matter to cabinet which was already studying the question. The motion only asks the government to consider the advisability of refusing to grant permission for Air Canada to engage in this transaction. The government can consider it. My recommendation to the government would be that it should accept the motion for concurrence and consider the advisability of doing what is proposed. Of course, the final decision is solely for the cabinet to make. I am reassured that the cabinet will consider it. That is the prerogative of the cabinet. We in this House should not trouble ourselves with that sixth report because I am certain the government is considering a lot of things at this very moment.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, in considering the question whether this motion is in order, I think one has to refer to clause 7 of Bill C-164. I think that you, in ruling, should understand it was clearly contemplated that, of the $140 million being advanced to Air Canada by debenture, $2.7 million would be for the financing of this particular transaction involving Wardair. In addition, evidence given before the committee by Air Canada officials clearly indicates that the $2.7 million to finance the Wardair transaction was part of the budget requirements in clause 7 of the bill. On that basis, Sir, the motion is clearly in order.

What we are really saying to the government is that the amount of financing required depends on whether or not the Wardair transaction is approved by the government. In the event the government should refuse to ratify this transaction, then clearly the decision as to the amount of funding Air Canada requires under the terms of this bill is altered. It is on the basis that this particular advance of funds by the government to Air Canada is affected by the exact matter now before the government that this sixth report of the standing committee is in order and I, Sir, would ask you to accept it and rule on it in that way.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the standing committee responsible for this motion I should like to submit that the argument supporting those who say that the committee did have the right to make this recommendation to the government stems from the fact that what was under consideration was not the annual report of Canadian National Railways or Air Canada but rather a financing bill to provide authority for specific capital expenditures by Air Canada so it could undertake certain projects. Among the propositions put forward by Air Canada was one that they had made an arrangement, and had evidently made application to the Air Transport Committee, to spend approximately $3 million for the purchase of a 30 per cent equity in Wardair.

As one of the members who support the motion I believe that if Air Canada wishes to buy an airline that is its right and it should have the opportunity to do so. However, this expenditure falls into line with an investment program being undertaken by Air Canada, and I think the committee was justified in making the recommendation it did, particularly in view of the fact this money was being asked for in the form of a capital allowance which parliament was being asked to advance to Air Canada and, second, Air Canada itself admitted it was embarking on this project for which it needed money. It was also indicated that this matter had been placed before the Canadian Transport Commission and that the decision of the commission had been appealed to cabinet which was considering the matter.

Without making this recommendation I submit it would have been impossible for the committee to have approved the expenditures that were being asked for in the financing bill or it would have been a fact that part of that money was earmarked by Air Canada to be used for that purpose. It appears to me, because the decision was reached after long and detailed study of the financial expenditures of Air Canada, that it was proper for the committee to come to the conclusion that this particular expenditure, within the financial terms of the bill, was not in the best interests of Canada or of Air Canada's financing. Therefore it was suggested to the government in this report that it give consideration to the recommendation made by the members after a long and detailed study of the matter that this expenditure not become part of the expenditures to be allowed Air Canada if the financing bill were passed.

The bill is available to the House today because of the decision of the committee this morning, and it is my opinion that if the sixth report is not adopted there will be considerable reluctance on the part of most members of that committee to endorse the financing bill. Therefore I think this is a point to which the government should give consideration. I submit that it was legitimately made in the committee and therefore I believe it is a legitimate point for discussion in the House.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few words to say on the matter, having been a member of the committee at that particular time. I want to say that the chairman of that committee proved to be very capable and impartial and all members of the committee appreciated it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: The fundamental point that was brought out in the committee—and I think Beauchesne, Bourinot and other authorities stress it—is that the chairman of a committee in essence acts on behalf of Mr. Speaker. The Chairman at that time had grave doubts about the acceptability of the original motion presented by the hon. member for Mississauga if I recall correctly the testimony which appears in issue No. 24 of the proceedings of the committee. It was at the request and suggestion of the chairman that the motion was reworded so as to make it acceptable in his opinion. Furthermore, he went on to point out that in effect the motion simply recommended to the government that when making a final decision on Wardair the government take into consideration the motion made before the appropriate committee.

The fundamental point which I should like to make is that if the chairman of every committee representing Mr. Speaker makes a decision indicating that a motion is in order only to find some weeks later that he is overruled in the House, it seems to me that we will be unintentionally undermining the position of chairmen for all future meetings and we could make committee hearings irrelevant.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak briefly on this matter. I am a member of that committee and I was at the meeting when the motion was first put and when it was reworded on the recommendation of the chairman. Like the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey), I am concerned about the freedom of members of committees and about the future of committees.

The difficulty that committees always face is that in order for their members to be able to discuss anything outside the narrowest of parameters they must obtain a reference from the House. What that means is permission from the minister, whether it is permission for the committee to travel or to consider certain aspects of their work. One way to make the work of committees much more successful is to give them additional freedom. I am not referring to a congressional type of committee system, but I am very concerned that if this motion is ruled out of order it will threaten the confidence that people may have in committees in the future.

I think this motion was put forward by people who tend to be philosophically opposed to public airlines. Had I been there, I would have voted against the motion. The very fact that I was not there allowed the motion to pass, and for that I am sorry. Nevertheless, it was passed and I think it is incumbent on the House to rule on the recommendation of the committee provided it is in order.

I assert again that the motion is in order. The bill was a financing bill having to do with Air Canada and the CNR, and certainly part of their financing involves their investment policy. I cannot understand why this has been questioned. I am opposed to the motion, but I am certainly philosophically at one with the members who have spoken here today and have suggested that, despite whether they are opposed to or in favour of the motion, the motion is in order and that it is the business of the committee to make such recommendations.

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I think the content of the recommendation by the committee is important when you consider the implications. It in no way states or requests that the government do anything which has already been determined by the government. I think it is important to remember that all the committee is asking the government to do is to give a little input or a little consideration to the committee's request with respect to a matter that is already before cabinet and already under consideration. It does not in any respect seek to overturn established government policy. I think this point should be taken into consideration as well.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I was not a member of the committee which considered the bill that has been reported today—

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): That will be reported.

Mr. MacEachen: —that will be reported. As I say, I was not a member of the committee that considered Bill C-164, but I am a member of the House which gave the reference to the committee. The reference given to the committee is a narrow one authorizing the standing committee to consider Bill C-164. The committee is limited by that reference and, however important other issues are, they cannot be referred back to the House for a decision when the committee itself is not authorized by the House to consider or to report upon them. The committee is obligated to consider the bill and to report the bill.

If the subject matter of the sixth report were relevant to the principle of the bill, if it were germane to the clauses or to any particular clause of the bill, then it would be possible for the committee to deal with the matter of Wardair within the confines of the bill. That would be a proper course. Indeed, when the bill comes back to the House, if the subject of Wardair is relevant to any part of the bill it is open to hon. members to amend that part of the bill in order to ensure that this particular item becomes part of the law. But I suggest it is not particularly relevant to the bill itself and that it cannot be reported in this way or dealt with in the House because the committee did not have the authority to make that decision or recommendation. I do not take issue with the hon. member's assertion about the importance of the matter or the importance of standing committees, but I do support your earlier position, Mr. Speaker, that it is quite contrary to the rules to move concurrence in this particular report at this stage.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has spoken on the point of order but I am sure the House would want to hear him again. I believe he has a further comment to make.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I have a further comment to make only because it was suggested, quite correctly and accurately, that I had advised the mover of the motion in the first instance that I felt it was out of order in the manner in which he was moving it, and I did suggest that he change it in such a way as to make it acceptable. I think the House should be made aware of the manner in which I suggested it should be changed so that we might be better able to judge the intent of the motion.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, we were dealing with a financing bill to authorize the sum of $147 million, of which $2.7 million has already been spent on Wardair, but is held in escrow until the deal is finalized. The mover of the motion first put it in this manner. "That this committee opposes the purchase of 30 per cent of Wardair stock by Air Canada." I suggested to the mover that the committee could not go on record as opposing it and that we really only had the ability to advise and ask the government, or in essence ask parliament, to consider what we had studied and what was referred to us. In essence Bill C-164 was referred to us, dealing with Air Canada financing, and part of its financing was in actual fact spent on this purchase. I advised the mover of the motion that I might find his concept in order if he could word his motion in such a way that the committee would ask the government or ask parliament—in fact the exact words I used were "the House"—to consider the advisability of refusing this. With the motion couched in those words, I was certainly under the impression, after having served for 15 years on committees, that it would fall within the terms of reference of the Committee to study CNR and Air Canada financing up until June 30, 1974, in which period this expenditure fell, and in the committee we were informed that Air Canada was in fact prepared to expend $2.7 million.

I want you to rest assured, Mr. Speaker, that no matter how you rule on this motion you will in no way inhibit my participation as chairman of the transport committee. I will continue to rule, I will continue to adjudicate or judge the actions of that committee in as fair and impartial a manner as is within my capabilities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): No matter how you rule in this instance, Mr. Speaker, I will continue to carry on and will not feel hampered or encumbered at all by your ruling. I want you to be assured of that.

I have studied the references in Votes and Proceedings of June, 1971, and of February 16, 1971, when the committee structure was somewhat different from what it is today. At that time committees were made up of an overwhelming majority of government members. Now we have a committee system that is nearly equal in balance, and I can assure you that it is sometimes difficult to wrestle with that kind of equal balance. I felt at the time that I was doing the right thing, I still do and I will continue to do so no matter how you rule.

Mr. Speaker: I see that the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge is rising to participate. It seems to me that hon. members who have spoken up to this point have greatly helped and assisted the Chair, to the point where I would be prepared to make a ruling. However, I will listen to the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge if he has comments to make additional to those already made for the guidance of the Chair.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, up until this point we have mainly heard from members who support the motion and who feel that a committee should have the right and authority to deal with matters that are usually reserved for decision by the House of Commons. May I, as a private member, protest that viewpoint. I am not prepared to be bound by decisions of committees, particularly knowing how the committees operate. I am prepared to be bound by decisions of the House. Although I do not always agree, at least there are 264 members here. I repeat that I am not prepared to have some claque on a committee decide what I am going to be in favour of.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): What did he refer to me as?

Some hon. Members: Claque.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I will quack him.

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members for their assistance to the Chair in the making of a ruling on this very important point which was brought about by the motion of the hon. member for Skeena for concurrence in the sixth report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications to the House of Commons. As I said at the outset, the fact that the motion proposed by the hon. member for Skeena is being questioned procedurally is not by any stretch of the imagination a reflection on the proceedings in the committee or the excellent work which all members agree has been done in that committee by its distinguished chairman.

• (1440)

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): That is better.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Knowing the hon. member's independence of thought I am sure he will continue to rule unhindered, as I think he said, by any decision of the Chair. In spite of this, the Chair has to make a ruling on the basis of my understanding of the Standing Orders.

The objection of the Chair is not necessarily to the report. The report came forward and appeared on the order paper. There was no objection raised although the Chair might have had the same doubts the hon. member for Crowfoot and other members of the committee obviously had when the original motion was moved or after it was amended. But the motion did come before us and appeared from day to day on the notice paper along with a number of other notices on which no motions, for concurrence, as yet have been submitted to the Chair.

I have previously indicated my difficulties in respect of these motions. The hon. member for Crowfoot has referred to the fact that in a number of instances there have been similar reports. He is quite right. There is no doubt whatsoever that this has happened before and the example he gave was "right on", as hon. members say from day to day in supporting statements by their own people. There was a report which came from the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs as reported in the Journals of the House for February 16, 1971, at page 333. This report was a substantive report. It was perhaps even more subject to question than the one now before us because it had financial provisions. The hon. member for Crowfoot and others have referred to that. But hon. members will appreciate that there was no motion for concurrence in that report. This is where the difficulty arises. The Chair would have been placed in a rather awkward position if at that time there had been a motion for concurrence in the report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs as it appears on page 333 of the Journals of the House to which I have just referred. The Chair might well have had to reach a decision and make a ruling that what those committees had before them, as this particular committee has had before it, was a bill.

The situation is quite different when a committee has before it a general reference, such as an annual report of a department, when there is greater latitude in the submitting of substantive recommendations to the House.

With respect, I suggest to hon. members there is no authority to support the contention that a committee of the House when considering a bill should report anything to the House except the bill itself. This is the difficulty that we have now. A recommendation has been made which may very well have been relevant to the bill but it has come to the House by way of a substantive recommendation.

My thought would have been, as has been suggested by hon. members and I believe by the President of the Privy Council, that if that recommendation were relevant, as it might possibly or probably should be, to one of the clauses of the bill, an amendment should have been introduced in the committee.

I refer hon. members to a few citations. Citation 304, paragraph 2, of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition reads as follows:

> A committee is bound by, and is not at liberty to depart from, the order of reference. In the case of a select committee upon a bill, the bill committed to it is itself the order of reference to the committee, who must report it with or without amendment to the House.

At page 494 of May's Eighteenth Edition it is stated:

> The function of a committee on a bill is to go through the text of the bill clause by clause and, if necessary, word by word, with a view to making such amendments in it as may seem likely to render it more generally acceptable.

If the substance of the report now before the House is founded on or related to the bill, it would follow that the bill in one form is before the committee when that question in another form is before the House. I refer hon. members to section 1 of citation 414 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition which states as follows:

> The House is not supposed to be informed of the proceedings of a committee on a bill until the bill has been reported; and discussion of the clauses, with the Speaker in the chair, when the bill is still before the committee, is consequently irregular.

I would have thought such a substantive recommendation as that contained in the report now before the House could not be proposed either in committee of the whole or at the report stage of the bill. I suggest again that what might have been proposed by the committee would have been an amendment to the bill so that the bill, once reported, would have included that amendment.

My difficulty is that what we have now before us is a substantive recommendation, with which I do not quarrel—I do not quarrel with the proceedings of the committee and I have no objection to the ruling made by the chairman of that committee in any way—but when it comes to proposing that we should consider the matter as a substantive recommendation I suggest to hon. members that there are ways and means under our Standing Orders for a substantive proposition to be considered by the House. However, this cannot be done, I suggest, by way of a recommendation from a committee studying a bill.

I would hope that hon. members who feel strongly about this matter might consider possible reconsideration of the matter in the committee itself since the bill has not yet been reported to the House. This is a point which the hon. member for Crowfoot has indicated is a possibility.

Taking all circumstances under consideration and taking into account, surely, that there is not a single precedent in the proceedings of the House to support the proposition that such a procedure is acceptable, I would find it very difficult to make an exception at this time in favour of the motion proposed by the hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order, for clarification purposes. Are you suggesting in your ruling that the committee re-examine Bill C-164 in light of your ruling? I have taken it upon myself as chairman of the committee to try to get that bill through the committee and part of that effort was passing on to the House the sixth report of that committee. I would hope you are not referring that bill back to the committee or asking us to re-examine it.

Mr. Speaker: That is the last thing I have in mind.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

STATEMENT BY MINISTER—TABLING OF PRELIMINARY GUIDELINES

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, during recent months, my departmental officials and I have received a number of inquiries from or on behalf of potential foreign investors asking what steps they should take if they were planning to establish a new business in Canada prior to second proclamation of the act or to acquire a Canadian business prior to first proclamation. Now that the foreign investment review legislation has received Royal Assent, I want to comment on that question.

[Mr. Speaker.]

The Foreign Investment Review Act is to take effect in two separate steps. From the date of the first proclamation, which I hope can be implemented within the next three to four months, the provisions relating to acquisitions of Canadian businesses will apply. After the government has had an opportunity to gain experience in administering the takeover provisions, and has consulted the provinces, the second proclamation relating to new business will be made. Although it is not possible for me, at this time, to state how soon after the first proclamation the second proclamation will occur, this period should obviously be as short as is feasible, taking account of the factors to which I have just referred.

Part of the problem which has been put to me by investors is that, in some cases, they must undertake considerable forward planning, sometimes at considerable cost, before being satisfied that the circumstances in Canada warrant their investment. By the time they are prepared to establish the new business, the second proclamation may have taken place. Similarly, firms now planning to acquire a Canadian business may find that the period required for implementing the acquisition is several months or longer and, before they are ready to conclude their transaction, the first proclamation may have occurred.

I do not believe that these factors create a serious problem. The Foreign Investment Review Act sets out the criteria for assessing significant benefit. These are known to the investor. Furthermore, it is always possible for potential investors to talk informally with my officials at a fairly early stage in the development of their plans in case any clarification of government policy is required.

Quite apart from the requests which I have received from businessmen that they have the opportunity to talk with the government about their plans during the interim period prior to the proclamations, I, too, am concerned that large new investments could take place prior to the second proclamation, without any opportunity for the government to satisfy itself that the principles in the Foreign Investment Review Act were being adhered to. I am equally aware that acquisitions of Canadian business enterprises could take place between now and the first proclamation without an opportunity for review.

For all these reasons, I want to announce that I have directed my departmental officials to be ready to discuss with potential foreign investors any plans they might have involving large new investments in Canada or involving acquisitions of large or medium-sized Canadian businesses or involving acquisitions of Canadian business in particularly sensitive areas, for example, Canadian businesses in the cultural area or owning an important technology. Indeed, I expect foreign investors making investments in any of the categories to which I have just referred to come forward readily to discuss their plans with my officials before finalizing their transactions, although I recognize that such discussions will be on a voluntary basis.

I would envisage that in the process of discussing these investments with potential investors, I and my officials will be in close contact with provincial counterparts to ensure that the perspectives of both levels of government are brought to the attention of the investor. In discussing individual cases with investors, the factors which the federal government would look at are, of course, the same ones as are specified in subsection 2(2) of the act.

There is one other matter on which I would like to comment, the question of what constitutes an "unrelated" business. With the permission of the House, I would like to table some preliminary guidelines as to when a business might be unrelated to a business already carried on in Canada. This is necessary as new investments by foreign-controlled firms now operating in Canada into unrelated lines of activity constitute a category of new investment that will be subject to review after second proclamation.

These guidelines are intended to assist investors in determining whether they should be discussing their new investment plans with the government prior to second proclamation. I want also, at this time, to invite comments and suggestions, both of a general and detailed nature, from all interested groups concerning these preliminary guidelines on related business with a view to the establishment of more definitive guidelines after the second proclamation. If I can receive all views on this subject within the next four to six months, this will provide the government with an adequate opportunity to study and evaluate all representations prior to second proclamation.

I look forward to receiving co-operation from members of the business community, both in Canada and abroad.

Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Section 41(2) I should like to table the preliminary guidelines in both official languages.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, this is a very interesting announcement. First, the minister advised he cannot say when the proclamation of Part I will take place. He then goes on to tell us he cannot tell us when the proclamation of Part II will take place. He then went on to say, at least by inference, that after years of preparation no significant guidelines are prepared and ready to release to Canadian businessmen, not even interim guidelines in many areas. It would seem that the essence of an industrial strategy is forward planning.

The minister says that the lack of guidelines is not serious because the criteria are set out in the act, but these are so vague that they could be subject to any interpretation. As everyone knows, they are totally subjective. As a matter of fact, they are so vague that one person could find any foreign investment to provide significant benefit to Canada and another would find just the contrary, depending on his personal point of view.

Finally, in desperation, the poor, confused businessman is being asked to consult with the minister's officials in respect of this matter in the interim period until the act is proclaimed. In addition, the release is so badly drafted that it is not clear whether the foreign investors are being advised to consult with the officials about their plans, the plans of the foreign investors, or whether they are to consult with the officials about the plans of the officials. This ambiguity should be cleared up at the earliest possible time.

The minister said: "... any plans they might have involving large new investments in Canada or involving acquisitions of large or medium-sized Canadian businesses or involving acquisitions of Canadian businesses in particularly sensitive areas, for example, businesses in the cultural area or owning an important technology." If the minister is referring to the plans of his officials, why did he not refer to the plans of the government? Obviously because the government has no plans.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: Obviously because the minister has no plans. Obviously because the minister gave the officials no guidelines as to how they should operate. The question now arises as to who in fact is running the department, because the guidelines are apparently to come up rather than go down from the minister and the government.

Having made the suggestion, he goes on to say that in discussing individual cases the factors to be looked at are those set out in the bill. This is passing strange when it is universally agreed that the criteria in the act are almost infinitely vague. They are like the artificial fog used by movie makers to obscure and then obliterate the silhouette of the set and the actors on it.

The minister then asks for help with guidelines to determine what in fact constitutes a related business. The minister should have done this long ago, preferably before the act was passed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: Today he asks for help in order to prepare more definite guidelines than the temporary guidelines he issued today. A quick reading of the temporary guidelines underlines how desperately the minister needs help.

Someone in the oil business could enter the coal business, the atomic energy business, the solar energy business, the tidal power business, the hydrogen fusion business or perhaps even the cattle business to produce manure from which energy could be recovered. Someone in the automobile business could enter the locomotive business, begin building ships, manufacture snowmobiles, carriages or bicycles or, as a last resort, manufacture boots and shoes, excluding work boots.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: Guideline (b) permits total vertical integration which, in the case of a number of foreign owned industries, will permit them almost total freedom of access to vaguely related fields.

In making this statement today the minister added to the confusion in a hurtful and alarming manner. If the government's energy and industrial policies are as uncertain as its foreign ownership policy, one can only say, God help Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for making a copy of his statement available to us in order to give us an opportunity to go through it. However, I must say I find it very unclear. The hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) said that when the bill was before the House a few months ago it did have very precise definitions. I find that the guidelines are not too precise either. I refer to the guidelines the minister tabled but did not read to the House. No wonder he did not read them out; they are so vague.

The guidelines deal with the definition of a related business. The foreign ownership bill is in two parts; the first deals with takeovers and the second with expansion into new areas or unrelated businesses. If a business is deemed to be related, then it will not be screened by the foreign investment agency and will be allowed to go ahead. I want, now, to show how vague and how wide open is the definition of "related business". I take here the second guideline,—it is very bureaucratic—which is as follows:

A new business may be related to another business . . . if the new business produces a product to be used as an input for an existing process or activity of the investor, provided that a substantial proportion of the output of the new business is used as an input for the existing process or activity.

What the devil does that mean? Really what it means, in layman's language, is that if a firm is large, if it is multinational or multi-industry, if it is vertically integrated, that firm can expand into almost any area it wishes and be classified as related, and it will not be screened by the foreign investment review agency. Really it means that a huge company such as Imperial Oil could expand into almost any industry in this country without being screened by the foreign investment review agency.

I will give an example of what I mean. Imperial Oil has a subsidiary called DEVCON which is involved in development and the real estate business. According to the guidelines tabled by the minister, Imperial Oil through its subsidiary could become involved in almost any aspect of real estate. They could probably get into the construction business. They could probably, because it is related, get into the land assembly business. They could get into almost any aspect of residential or commercial real estate. Imperial Oil has another subsidiary called Building Products of Canada Limited which constructs building equipment. Through this subsidiary Imperial Oil could construct the building equipment needed to build houses and apartments, commercial buildings and so on which they might be planning to construct.

Imperial Oil has a fertilizer company. It also has a transportation company and could expand in those areas because they are related and would be relevant to the activities of Imperial Oil. They have a great interest in the restaurant business through Voyageur Restaurants. They are also interested in the twine and rope business through a company called Polytwine. One can easily see that under the definition the minister has given us of "related business", international corporations, when they are multi-industry and multiproduct, can expect to get into almost any area without being screened under the provisions of the bill.

Consider a company such as Bell Canada which owns Northern Electric and Microsystems. Microsystems produces all kinds of components in the computer industry. They could expand through Microsystems into almost any aspect of computer technology and not be screened under the provisions of the legislation. Most of the large multinational corporations are concerned with thousands of products; they can claim their expansion to be in a related area and be untouched by the terms of the bill this House passed a few weeks ago.

Another point I wish to comment on is regulation (d) which the minister outlined in his guidelines. It says that a business may be related in the case of a service industry if it is complementary to the existing business of the investor. An example given is that of a wholesale business which could expand by constructing a warehouse. This would be considered related, and therefore not screenable.

I will give an example of how companies can get around this regulation. International Telephone and Telegraph manufactures telephones and telegraphic equipment. Where do people most use telephones? In a hotel. So ITT bought out the shares of the Cavalier Hotel chain. And what do hotels use to a great extent? Toilet paper. So they manufacture toilet paper. What do people who go to hotels use but cars? So they run their own rental car fleet. All this is relative and integrated toward that service industry, and therefore is not screenable.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I suggest very strongly that the guidelines do not mean anything at all. Almost any multinational corporation can get around the guidelines because they are involved in almost every product in use. There is an oil company producing toothpaste, an oil company in the rope business, and so on. The only way to stop foreign investment is to deal with existing firms as they expand their assets or their sales in this country, not as they expand into one product or another.

Parliament will have to enact really tough laws if it intends to slow down or reverse the trend of foreign ownership in our economy which is causing us to lose wealth by the exportation of capital, and to lose jobs by the exportation of processing and manufacturing into other countries around the world. All these guidelines will do is to provide 500 extra jobs for bureaucrats in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce as they try to interpret the guidelines and apply them.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, on November 26 when the House passed the legislation of foreign ownership, we had expected that it would create more confusion. Now, today the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) has made a commendable effort to enlighten the House and future investors in Canada.

I am quite disappointed when I realize, to mention one point, that one of the future guidelines which will govern investments in Canada is far from being explicit. The French and English texts of paragraph (e) in the press release are inconsistent. It shows once again that the minister with his guidelines as well as with his bill was trying to give some explanations concerning investments, but he did not succeed in doing so. Today, we are still confused, we are in the fog and note that the government is fumbling.

(e) the new business uses and existing or similar technical process to that already used by the investor in Canada—

Here is how the French text reads:

Si la nouvelle entreprise utilise un procédé technique déjà existant ou semblable à celui déjà utilisé par l'industrie au Canada . . .

Now, Mr. Speaker, referring to the Canadian industry does not in the least mean investors, In fact, the English text refers to investors, and the French text, to the Canadian industry in general. From the French text, I come to the conclusion that just about no American or other foreign investor will be able to invest in Canada. Under paragraph (e) of the French text, they are precluded from doing so because nearly all foreign investors in Canada already own Canadian companies producing goods similar to those we want to produce through new investments.

That is a new proof that our investment policy is unfortunately going nowhere and proceeds by trial and error. On one side, investments are to be encouraged and on the other, control of the Canadian economy by foreign investors is to be prevented. That is an absolute contradiction and the problem will be solved when and only when the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the government develop a truly Canadian investment policy allowing Canadian companies to produce here, with Canadian capital, and thus which would stop them from being continually exploited and calling for foreign investors and telling them: We do not want to see you, because we want to control our own economy.

Mr. Speaker, today's statement will unfortunately lead to new arbitrary decisions on the part of public servants and allow for a still greater play of influence concerning foreign investors and public servants. This will also widen the lobbying circle in Canada and give public servants more power over the development of industries and investments.

Unfortunately, I do know on which of the two texts officials of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce are going to base their decision when telling a company: You are welcome. On the other hand, when they do not want anything to do with one company or the other, they may tell it, according to the French version: You are already producing in Canada the goods that you want to produce.

GRAIN

SHORTAGE OF FEED GRAIN IN EASTERN CANADA—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a very urgent question whose importance is unquestionable as it is of national interest. It is about the shortage of oats supplies in eastern Canada which could greatly hurt the dairy industry already showing a deficit, as well as other sectors of agriculture.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that the hon. member move his motion. He is now making a speech. Standing Order 43 does not permit him to make one in support of a motion. He should state as soon as possible, and preferably immediately, the purpose of the motion that he wishes to bring to the attention of the House.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I will do it immediately.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle):

That an emergency debate be held in this House before the Christmas recess in order to study the reasons why eastern Canada farmers have difficulty obtaining feed grain supplies, especially as concerns oats, since these problems are very harmful to the dairy industry in particular and to other agricultural productions.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore the motion cannot be put.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT POLICY TO COMBAT RISING COST OF LIVING—EFFECTIVENESS OF FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the consumer price index for the regional cities of Canada shows increases in all regional cities and substantial increases in three cities, for example, Ottawa with a 10.2 per cent increase, Quebec City with an 11 per cent increase and St. John's Newfoundland, with a 10.1 per cent increase, I ask the Prime Minister whether he now intends to wait until the finance ministers' conference at the end of January, or in the face of this new evidence that inflation in Canada is out of control will he now instruct the Minister of Finance to make a policy statement before the adjournment of the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance and I have been discussing these matters. I cannot indicate that he will make such a statement before the House adjourns tomorrow. If it is going to sit some further time, of course we would want to reconsider the matter.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that three cities in Canada, as announced by Statistics Canada today, have shown a better than 2 per cent increase in the cost of food, and in view of the fact that the quarterly report of the Food Prices Review Board released at 2.30 today in Montreal makes no substantive recommendations to the government, I ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs whether he would meet with the chairman of the Food Prices Review Board to review and assess the work of the board, or is he satisfied with the functions of the board to date?

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to meet with the chairman. I might point out that the Food Prices Review Board has not adopted the practice of making specific recommendations in its quarterly reports. It has done so in other reports and these recommendations have provided a basis for policy action by the government, for example, increasing the subsidy on bread and the decision to advance the implementation of the increase in family allowances.

Mr. McGrath: Is the minister now in a position to reply to the telegram from the Consumers Association of Canada referring to the request by the Canadian Egg Marketing Board for import controls on eggs and egg products in view of the substantial increase in the cost of food and, more particularly, in view of the substantial increase in the price of eggs in Canada?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is also referring to telegrams sent to the Prime Minister and, I think, to other ministers This matter is under study by the government.

Mr. McGrath: The telegram was sent to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I ask the minister whether he agrees with the stand taken by the Consumers Association of Canada.

Mr. Nowlan: Do you know what it is?

Mr. Gray: Yes, I do. I might point out to my hon. friend that I believe the Prime Minister received the same telegram as I did and that is what I was referring to. As far as the request is concerned, I do not think there should be any action taken by the government that is not strictly necessary to help confirm that Canadians have the most adequate supply of food at the most reasonable possible prices.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A number of members are seeking supplementaries on this subject. Perhaps we might complete the first round of questions and I will return to the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton and others who have supplementaries on this subject.

INDUSTRY

PROPOSED TAKEOVER OF MACDONALD TOBACCO COMPANY BY UNITED STATES FIRM—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the recent takeover of the Macdonald Tobacco Company by R. J. Reynolds of North Carolina, and in view of the fact that the result of this sale will mean for the first time complete foreign domination of this section of the Canadian economy, clearly contrary to the intent of the Foreign Investment Review Act, would the minister advise the House what specific steps he has taken in regard to blocking that sale, stopping it from progressing any farther or even reversing it?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I was very surprised to read in the press of the proposed sale by Macdonald's to Reynolds Tobacco Company only one week after Royal Assent had been given to the bill. I met with senior members and representatives of the Reynolds Tobacco Company yesterday in Ottawa; they came to Ottawa at my request. I think it is clear that the deal has not yet gone through. I put a number of questions to them and I expect to hear from them in the very near future.

Mr. Leggatt: In view of the present hiatus in the coming into force of the bill, and in view of the fact the minister really does not have legislative tools to block or prevent interim takeovers, does the minister intend to introduce an amendment to the Foreign Investment Review Act which would have a retroactive provision requiring review of all takeovers during this interim period on a priority basis, so that the review board would consider takeovers made in the interim period first and, second—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member who has had the floor for some time would allow the minister to answer the first question. He will be recognized for a further supplementary, after which I shall see the hon. member for Bellechasse.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I am not proposing retroactive legislation to the House. I think I made clear in my statement on motions today the type of behaviour I would expect of firms contemplating a large investment for the establishment of a new business or the takeover of a large or medium-size Canadian industry.

GRAIN

IMPLEMENTATION OF NEW FEED GRAIN POLICY

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Justice.

Since the new feed grain marketing policy for the whole of Canada implemented in the middle of October and whose object was to show equity towards Quebec farmers seems to be cleverly distorted by some middlemen since barley late last week was sold at $6 per hundredweight in eastern Canada as compared with $4.35 in western Canada, does the minister intend to conduct an inquiry and take action to put an end to such exploitation?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to have an indication from the hon. member of the specific figures to which he refers. As hon. members know, the feed grains policy this year involves the determination every two weeks of the actual price at which feed grain is selling in the prairie region, as agreed upon between the Canadian Livestock Feed Board and the Canadian Wheat Board, and the selling of that grain out of Thunder Bay at a price which relates directly to that level on the prairies. This means that the grain is available to a variety of buyers at that price. The price varies every two weeks when there is a further determination.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question.

Considering the reply just given by the minister and the policy that was implemented, could the minister tell the House whether he was informed by the Association des producteurs agricoles du Québec of the present situation in the province of Quebec, taking into account the figures quoted in my previous question?

[English]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, these specific prices have not been brought to my attention, but the general supply problem which has been in existence for some time in the eastern part of the country has been brought to my attention frequently by Liberal members of parliament in this House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I see a number of hon. members seeking supplementaries on the three subjects which have been raised. We will return to the first question and the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham. I have noted hon. member who are seeking the floor for other supplementaries and they will be recognized as soon as possible.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO COMBAT DECREASING PURCHASING POWER OF INCOMES

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the undisputed fact, based on the government's own statistics, that the real purchasing power of consumers has experienced a very drastic decline this year, can the minister tell us if this represents an expected and acceptable result of government economic policies, or will the minister now be acting so as to protect consumers from further erosion of their buying power and incomes?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the statistics to which the hon. gentleman refers, and which I of course do not challenge, are not complete in the sense that they neglect to advise the House that in terms of real purchasing power this House is entitled to consider the increase in disposable income of Canadians as the result of the reduction in taxes and the increases in pensions and family allowances. This means that in terms of real disposable income in the third quarter of this year, which is the period to which the hon. gentleman refers, over the third quarter of last year the real disposable, personal per capita income in this country was 8 per cent over that of last year.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I was not referring to disposable income; I was referring to purchasing power. There is a difference. May I direct my supplementary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Because the indices covering real purchasing power show the real squeeze on the people of this country, would the minister be good enough to consider asking Statistics Canada to produce these statistics monthly instead of every six months?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would be prepared to draw to the attention of Statistics Canada the representation of the hon. member.

[Later:]

REQUEST THAT HOUSE DEBATE LOSS LEADER PRACTICE OF FOOD CHAINS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In light of continued high food costs, will the minister bring forward for debate the subject of loss leaders and the predatory behaviour of the food chain giants, as the last study for criteria in respect of loss leadering was made in the mid-1950s?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is something the House could certainly look at in the course of the debate on and consideration of the bill to implement stage one of our new policy on competition.

GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT AND RATE OF INFLATION—AVAILABILITY OF FORECASTS BY MINISTER OF FINANCE FOR 1974

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance, who I believe is to meet with the provincial Ministers of Finance on January 24 or 25, or perhaps on both days. Is it his intention to present at that meeting forecasts for the year 1974 with regard to growth in the gross national product and the consequential financial effects of this for the government of Canada and the provinces, and also with regard to the anticipated or projected rate of inflation for 1974?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, over the past two or three years, at these annual meetings of finance ministers held for the purpose of comparing the budgetary forecasts and fiscal postures of the provinces and the federal government, as well as the monetary posture of the federal government, it has been customary, and we shall again follow the practice next January, to exchange on a confidential basis views and forecasts on a number of items based on a range of probabilities. That will be done again on a frank and confidential basis.

Mr. Stanfield: Then the minister is prepared to say that he has forecasts which he will be presenting to the finance ministers of the provinces with regard to his expectations as to the GNP, the rate of inflation and related matters, but he is not prepared to make this information available to the House?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is not the way I put it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fairweather: The minister himself used the word "confidential".

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, I did. This is done by all governments in order to achieve, prior to their budgetary presentations, prior to my presentation in the House of a budget and prior to the provincial Ministers of Finance presenting their budgets, a confidential overview of the economy. That is why the information is kept confidential. We do this so as not to trespass on the rights of the respective legislatures or of parliament. One of the difficulties, of course, in forecasting inflation next year, and I have pointed this out to the House, has to do with worldwide factors which we must consider, entailing now uncertainties in the pricing of fuel, world commodities and agricultural products.

GOVERNMENT PLANS TO ENCOURAGE PRODUCTION

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. As both the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Agriculture have indicated that one of their key policies in order to stop the inflated price of food in Canada is increased Canadian production, and as it is now apparent that not only have prices not been curtailed but Canadians are producing even less than is necessary to meet domestic demand in certain products, including butter and cheese with the closing of Canadian cheese factories and creameries, can the minister indicate if the government proposes to bring forward any new initiatives in order to encourage greater domestic production?

● (1530)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the premise of the hon. member's question may be right as it pertains to some agricultural products. However, the vast bulk of agricultural production is increasing in Canada. We outlined in September to the provincial ministers and in ongoing meetings since that time—we will be meeting early in January again to finalize them—programs to stabilize agricultural income in Canada. I am sure this will guarantee an increase in production when we pass the energy allocation bill, which will enable people to plan their production because we will have energy for them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Kent-Essex and then the hon. member for Fraser Valley West.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the minister will dispense with his verbosity and give me a direct answer to this question. In view of the fact that production of all commodities in Canada is seriously affected by the increases in input costs which ultimately are passed on to the consumer, and in view of the fact that fertilizer and fuel are main components in agriculture and that fertilizer is double the price it was last season, can the minister now advise us whether the government intends to take any action to confine the increase in input costs to a reasonable range?

Mr. Whelan: I would caution the hon. member, through you, Mr. Speaker, that the very statement he is making certainly opens the doors for fertilizer companies to take advantage of the impression that is created in the minds of farmers that the price of fertilizer will go up. Our advice and information does not show anywhere near a doubling of the price. It shows some increase because fertilizers are subject to the same increases which everybody in the world faces. For instance, rock phosphate, which we import, has gone up four times in the last month over what it was the month before.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The statement made by the Minister of Agriculture is incorrect because the current posted prices to farmers of products being sold today show almost a 50 per cent increase over just four months ago.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member rose on a point of order but that is debate rather than a point of order. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Fraser Valley West.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister rises on a point of order.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that I intend to submit a paper to the House tomorrow that will put some of the facts on the record.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bell: There goes the recess.

ENERGY

OIL—PRODUCTION AND SHIPMENT BY ARAB STATES

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources of which I have given some notice. In view of reports that shipments of oil from Arab terminals are up nearly 40 per cent, does the minister have any evidence or corroboration confirming the suggestion that Arab states may not have cut production by anything like the amount first claimed?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am obliged to the hon. gentleman for reminding me of the article in the Economist. I have had inquiries made as to the facts stated therein. I think one thing is clear, that whatever the shipments out of Ras Tanura are the shipments into Portland have gone down.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I believe the minister said he intends to investigate the statistics. If he intends to do that, will he see whether the multinational companies are using events in the Middle East to justify increases in prices?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I will bear that suggestion in mind.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will be recognized for a second supplementary, after which the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Joliette and then the hon. member for Vancouver South.

Mr. Rose: Since both the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources have stated publicly that they have not seen the contracts of companies dealing in offshore oil, and in view of the fact that the oil companies have threatened to invoke force majeure to reallocate oil shipments, does the government intend to demand that these contracts be revealed before, or upon, the establishment of the national oil corporation?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No, sir.

GRAIN

FEED GRAIN—ASSURANCE THAT HIGHER TRANSPORT RATES WILL NOT LEAD TO HIGHER PRICES FOR QUEBEC CONSUMERS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister a supplementary question to those asked by the hon. member for Bellechasse.

Answering yesterday a question from the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe, the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board said that the rail movement will be augmented to ensure feed grain supplies for the province of Quebec. As this transportation will be more costly, is the Prime Minister prepared to ensure the House that Quebec producers will not have to pay increased transportation costs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will discuss the question with the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board.

INDUSTRY

REASON FOR SALE OF MACDONALD TOBACCO COMPANY TO UNITED STATES FIRM

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce following the question by the hon. member for New Westminster. Can the minister advise the reason for the proposed sale of Macdonald's and tell us whether this is in any way related to its inability to compete effectively with other foreign-controlled corporations operating in Canada?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member will understand that the whole thrust of the Foreign Investment Review Act is concerned with the actions of the purchaser and not the motivation of the vendor.

STEPS TO OVERCOME SHORTAGE OF FEED GRAIN IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that of the hon. member for Kent-Essex. I direct it to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. Because the minister was absent last Friday, the Prime Minister took as notice a question regarding persistent reports that many feed grain users in eastern Canada face severe shortages of this commodity. I should like to ask the minister what specific plans the government now has to alleviate this situation.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as was indicated to the House yesterday, and I think the day before as well, a meeting was held in Moncton on Monday of this week with the various interested parties, including the grains group, the Canadian Livestock Feed Board, the Canadian Wheat Board and the railways. As a result of that meeting, the Canadian Livestock Feed Board will be obtaining information as accurate as possible on requirements for supplies, and co-operation will be sought on all sides to see that the supplies required get to their destinations appropriately and that stocks are built up as a reserve as quickly as possible.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure we can get in all the supplementaries before the end of the question period. Perhaps hon. members would want to spend the rest of the question period on this subject. For the moment I will see the hon. member for Annapolis Valley, then the hon. member for Laval and perhaps others.

FEED GRAIN—AVAILABILITY OF SUPPLIES FROM WHEAT BOARD AND RAILWAY CARS FOR MOVEMENT TO EASTERN CANADA

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, in view of that meeting in Moncton and the fact that the minister responsible for the Wheat Board had his officials there and the further fact that all four parties did come to a consensus, has the minister received a firm commitment from the Wheat Board that stocks will be released and a commitment from the railways that rolling stock will be supplied to take the grain east that is designated by the Livestock Feed Board?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there never has been any question of any hesitation on the part of the Canadian Wheat Board in respect of the availability of stocks. As long as the shipping season was open a certain priority was being given at the terminals to the loading of vessels, including the loading of domestic grain into vessels. That is now turning very much to the loading of railway cars for the remaining movement of grain and, as far as I know there is full co-operation on all sides. Therefore I am optimistic about the situation.

REQUEST FOR EASTERN PROVINCES REPRESENTATION ON CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board.

In view of the feed grain situation in the eastern provinces, which are not represented on the Canadian Wheat Board, is the minister prepared, in connection with the implementation of the new feed grain policy, to see to it that those provinces are represented by commissioners on the wheat board?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the chief function of the Canadian Wheat Board will continue to be to act as marketing agent for exportable grain and the grain that is exported from the prairie region. The persons who are appointed to the Canadian Wheat Board as commissioners and staff are people chosen for their ability and not necessarily on a regional basis. Indeed, at the present time one of the commissioners happens to be a Canadian born in the Ottawa area. On the other hand, the Canadian Livestock Feed Board performs extremely important functions in attempting to protect the needs of the users of feed grain in all parts of Canada, and that board will be seen as having an even more important role in the future in respect of feed grain policy.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REQUEST THAT CERTAIN PROJECTS BE ANNOUNCED

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister responsible for the Local Initiatives Program, namely the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Can he give the assurance to the House that the local initiatives projects which are still to be announced in many constituencies, and mainly in Quebec and Lotbinière, will be announced tomorrow night at the latest?

Some hon. Members: As of midnight.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am hopeful that all projects that are going to be approved will carry such an announcement by this weekend.

INDUSTRY

PROVISION OF NEWSPRINT TO WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It pertains to the scarcity of newsprint being experienced by Canadian weekly newspapers. Can the minister give the House an assurance that a sufficient supply of newsprint to the weekly newspapers of Canada will be maintained?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I checked on this question as recently as two days ago, I think, and I believe that as a result of the representations that I and my officials have made I can give that assurance.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte followed by the hon. member for Trinity.

ENERGY

PROVISION BY CANADA OF BUNKER C OIL TO MAINE PULP MILLS

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, in view of the major disruption of trade and traditional employment patterns in western New Brunswick, part of Quebec and in the state of Maine which will result if the National Energy Board does not allow fulfilment of long-term Canadian contracts to provide bunker C oil to pulp mills in Maine, has the minister asked the National Energy Board to reconsider export applications for bunker C oil supply to these mills and, if so, what is their position now?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have spoken to the National Energy Board following discussions with the hon. member and with Premier Hatfield on this question. The board advises me that in their judgment there is an insufficient quantity of bunker C oil available on the east coast for them to be able to certify that these exports will be surplus to Canadian requirements. Therefore, under the authority of the statute they would be required to refuse applications. I have suggested to my department that we might explore this further with Washington to see if there might be a possible quid pro quo between the situation in Maine and that of the Lower mainland of British Columbia.

Mr. McCain: In view of the fact that according to the press—

An hon. Member: That is not a fact.

Mr. McCain: You say that to the press yourself—there has been no cutback to Canada from traditional sources of supply for the refineries in eastern Canada, and since it has been suggested that Aramco may not be delivering to Canada the supplies which are released for us, what pressure has the government exerted through the minister's department or any other department to obtain the supplies supposedly destined for Canada as they leave home?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Of course the National Energy Board does not share the opinion of the hon. gentleman with regard to available supplies. We have to make certain that all supplies continue to arrive in Canada, but the fact remains that there has been a 25 per cent production cutback by the Arab exporting states, and we have had to share that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair undertook a moment ago to see the hon. member for Trinity, following which I will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

INDUSTRY

SHORTAGE OF NEWSPRINT FOR WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS—POSSIBILITY OF TAKEOVERS BY LARGER ORGANIZATIONS

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is related to a previous question and it is in two parts. I should like to direct it to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The first part related to the shortage of newsprint for weekly newspapers which is putting pressure on them and in some cases making offers to take them over by larger organizations seem more desirable than they would be otherwise. Is the minister taking this into account in his deliberations as to how they might receive adequate supplies? The related part of my question is whether the minister is willing, during the interregnum until the foreign takeover bill is proclaimed, to give corporations which intend to make new investments in Canada or are embarking on takeovers binding rulings which would apply after the proclamation is in effect?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think those are two different questions and I will try to deal with each in turn, if you will allow. With regard to the first part with respect to newsprint, I think the hon. member may know that the Canadian industry because of strikes has suffered a loss of some 600,000 tons of newsprint production, which has created the condition of shortage in the industry. Their deliveries to their Canadian customers are up 10 per cent; their deliveries to their foreign customers are up by a smaller amount. They are making major efforts to ensure that their Canadian customers are looked after first.

With regard to the second question concerning binding rulings prior to the first proclamation, at the present time I am not contemplating that step.

Oral Questions

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ALLEGED INADEQUATE REPRESENTATION OF LABOUR, CONSUMER AND ACADEMIC GROUPS AT NATIONAL CONFERENCE ORGANIZED BY ECONOMIC COUNCIL

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I should like to ask him whether his attention has been drawn to complaints that the national economic conference organized by the Economic Council of Canada did not have adequate numbers of representatives from labour, consumer, and academic groups and, if so, whether the minister will discuss the complaints with the chairman of the Economic Council.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have read reports of the complaints, as the hon. gentleman has. I can only say to him that the conference was organized by the Economic Council of Canada, not by the government.

Mr. Orlikow: Would the minister consider discussing with the chairman of the Economic Council the complaint that virtually every study paper presented at that conference was prepared by a group which consisted almost exclusively of representatives of industry and that representatives of other groups had virtually no opportunity to see and to prepare criticisms of those papers before they were presented to the conference?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I will draw the hon. gentleman's remarks to the attention of the chairman. I must remind him, first, that the Economic Council of Canada is an independent organization, independent of government and, second, that a third of its membership is made up of representatives of the labour community.

Mr. Speaker: I have to bring to the attention of hon. members that we will be running short of time very soon and I would hope they would limit the number of supplementaries. I am counting on the co-operation of hon. members so we can see as many members as possible before we reach the end of the question period. I recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North on a supplementary.

Mr. Orlikow: My question is very simple. Would the minister discuss with the chairman of the Economic Council the possibility that, if they continue to do what they are doing, labour representatives on the Economic Council will consider resigning?

INQUIRY WHETHER DIPLOMATIC REPRISALS TAKEN AGAINST CANADA BECAUSE OF PARLIAMENT HAVING CONDEMNED BOMBING RAIDS ON NORTH VIET NAM LAST DECEMBER

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could he inform the House whether the United States took any diplomatic reprisals against Canada last winter in retaliation for parliament having condemned the December bombing raids against North Viet Nam?

[Mr. Gillespie.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Not that I am aware of, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McKinnon: Is the minister aware of the fact that during January and February Canadian diplomats were advised by the U.S. state department that no one above the level of the Canada desk officer would receive them?

PROPOSED PASSENGER HEAD TAX—CONSIDERATION OF PROBLEMS RAISED BY INTERNATIONAL AIR TRANSPORT ASSOCIATION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In light of the statement which has been made by the Director General of the International Air Transport Association to the effect that there will be very serious complications in attempting to apply the proposed head tax to international air transport, may I ask the Minister of Transport if these problems were thoroughly considered prior to his announcement? Further, was the head tax proposal discussed with any of the officials of the International Air Transport Association?

● (1550)

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, our department right now is holding discussions with the airline authorities to see what kind of administrative difficulties might be encountered. I have not received any report. As indicated in the press release, we set the date of January 1, but we said that if administrative arrangements are not arrived at there might be a delay.

PROPOSED PASSENGER HEAD TAX—POSSIBILITY OF CONTRAVENTION OF ICAO GUIDELINES

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to hear the minister indicate that he did not get a wire from the International Air Transport Association, but as a supplementary question I wish to ask if he was made aware of the fact that the proposed head tax also contravenes the guidelines established by the ICAO council, in which Canada recently concurred, namely, that such charges as the Department of Transport proposes to impose must not be introduced without prior consultation and, further, that adequate advance notice must be provided?

SUGGESTED SUMMARY OF FINAL REPORT OF LEDAIN COMMISSION TO BE DISTRIBUTED FREE OR AT SMALL COST

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I had wished to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare on the LeDain Commission report but he has just left the chamber. I will ask a related question of the Minister of Labour in his capacity as director of Information Canada. In view of the importance of the final 1,148 page LeDain report, and in view of the fact that at a price of $7.95 it is very expensive and will not reach many people, does Information Canada intend to bring out a summary that could be distributed free or inexpensively so that LeDain's significant findings can be widely studied, such as the fact that alcohol is the biggest drug problem in Canada today?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would have to consult with my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, to ascertain whether this is the plan of that department. It would then, of course, be up to Information Canada to make distribution, as it does for all publications that emanate from other departments of government.

SUGGESTED EXCESS PROFITS TAX IN LIGHT OF INCREASES IN CORPORATION PROFITS IN ORDER TO PROTECT CONSUMERS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I return to the subject of food prices and my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the quarterly report of the Food Prices Review Board states that the Canadian economy has undergone a substantial upswing in activity during the last two years, resulting in considerably increased corporation profits, including corporations in the food sector, will the minister now consider the introduction of an excess profits tax as a means of preventing the consumer from being gouged by further higher prices?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I dealt with that on an earlier occasion. This would not be the time to announce it, and I am not sure it would achieve the result that the hon. member thinks it would achieve, but I do agree with her that there has been a tremendous upswing in the economy in the last two years.

AIR TRANSPORT

REASON FOR CHOOSING PROPOSED PASSENGER HEAD TAX TO RAISE REVENUE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Vegreville of the Minister of Transport. It has to do with the strong protest sent to the minister by the Director General of IATA. Can the minister state, for the edification of the House, why he has chosen this means of a passenger head tax to raise revenue when he could have accomplished the same thing by increasing landing fees and user charges at airports for the major air carriers?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will allow the minister to reply briefly, but it seems to me that a question asked in this way is argument rather than a question. The hon. member for Vegreville.

PROPOSED PASSENGER HEAD TAX—REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT OF IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a further question to the Minister of Transport. I wonder whether in view of the obvious haste and clumsiness with which the minister has proceeded in this particular—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has been recognized for the purpose of asking a question, and I think he should ask his question. There is just one minute left before the end of the question period.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, in view of the administrative unworkability of the proposed head tax, which has been attested to by the domestic carriers and now by the international carriers, would the minister now consider postponing application of the head tax until full consultation has been had with both domestic and international air carriers?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the department's opinion is obviously that it is possible to administer this tax in an efficient manner. If by any chance it should become impossible to do so, or if it became clear that we cannot administer it, we would then reconsider the matter.

[English]

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I raise a very brief point of order so as not to rob the question period of further time. I wonder if the minister might be permitted at the conclusion of the question period to return to motions to make a short statement in order to clarify this situation in view of the very serious consequences.

Mr. Speaker: I will inquire about that shortly.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GARRISON WATER DIVERSION PROJECT, NORTH DAKOTA—REPLY TO CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs in regard to the building of the proposed Garrison Dam project in the United States and its far-reaching implications for Manitoba and part of Saskatchewan. Is the project continuing at the present time, and has the government received any word from the United States in reply to its protest against further work being carried out on the project?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As the House knows, Mr. Speaker, we have requested a moratorium on further construction until such time as the authorities of the two countries can reach an understanding that Canadian rights and interests have been fully protected. We have not yet had a response to our note.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Lisgar on a supplementary. Then I will inquire whether there is unanimous consent to return to motions and, if there is not, will call orders of the day.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he can assure the House, and more particularly the people of Manitoba and of the area affected in Saskatchewan, whether or not the federal government will keep pressing for a moratorium so far as the building and completion of this dam is concerned?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dinsdale: As a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are a number of members seeking to ask supplementaries and additional questions. We have gone about three minutes beyond the question period. I am agreeable to having more questions but this can only be done if there is unanimous consent to continue with the question period.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

Mr. Speaker: Obviously there is not unanimous consent. Earlier a suggestion was made by the hon. member for Central Nova and I will now inquire whether the Minister of Transport wishes to return to motions to make a statement. I gather there is not unanimity on this either.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the government House leader. Appreciating fully that there are still sincere and last minute negotiations taking place between leaders of all parties that might affect next week and our plans with respect thereto, may I ask the government House leader if he will now, or certainly tomorrow, establish the order of business in the usual way on the basis that we might unfortunately still be here next week?

Mr. MacEachen: I agree that—

Mr. Nowlan: You have both Grinch and Scrooge over there.

Mr. MacEachen: They are on both sides of the House.

Mr. Nowlan: No, Grinch is over there.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I agree that we are trying to work out some satisfactory solution in order to complete the business of the House in an orderly way. If that falls down, the procedure would be to continue with the election expenses bill and then take the export tax measure. However, that could also be subject to further discussion.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order based on the question asked by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway of the Minister of Finance. I notice that the Food Prices Review Board released its report in Montreal this afternoon and not to members of parliament, yet one of the members of the House has been quoting from that report. I wonder which government department, if any, leaked the report to one of the government members, namely, the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway, before other members got it?

An hon. Member: The hon. member for St. John's East had it first.

Mr. Speaker: I doubt whether that is a point of order. It is rather more like a question and there does not appear to be an answer forthcoming. Perhaps hon. members might discuss between themselves what happened, if anything. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PROVISION OF PAYMENTS TO CANDIDATES AND REIMBURSEMENT OF PARTIES FOR CERTAIN BROADCASTING TIME

The House resumed, from Wednesday, December 19, consideration of Bill C-203, to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections; motion No. 7 (Mr. Rodriguez) and motions Nos. 17 and 31 (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I ask your indulgence to consider motion No. 27, which appears in my name, as being withdrawn. Since it duplicates another motion, there is no purpose in its being on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to withdraw his motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the motion has not been moved. I do not see why it requires unanimous consent to remove it from the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the solution would be to wait until we reach that item of business, after which we might have the usual interesting procedural debate on such matters. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) had the floor and still has the floor.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, yesterday at the commencement of consideration of this bill the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) raised a question of privilege with respect to something I had said earlier in the debate. Since the Minister of Transport raised the matter I have had the opportunity to look at what he said and at what Hansard reported me as saying. I understand that the minister had an objection to the following words used by me, or the implication of them. I am quoting now from page 8908 of yesterday's Hansard, where the minister quoted the following:

> On the one hand, he was giving out $6 million to IBM and the next day he went knocking on their door saying, "I am collecting funds for the Liberal Party."

That was the end of the quotation. What occurred, obviously, was the statement I made it was a figurative or pictorial statement and not a literal declaration that the minister himself went personally as a fund collector to IBM, to Noranda or Gaspé Copper, I think it was, or any of the other companies which received grants under his name. In fact, I know the minister made the declaration that he at no time collected any money on an earlier occasion when the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) made reference to a letter that went out over the minister's signature, when he was minister of regional economic expansion, and invited people to a cocktail party partly for the purpose of cocktailing and partly for the purpose of fund raising.

I do, even though I was speaking figuratively, extend to the minister my apologies for the implication in that remark, or what he drew from it, that he went personally as a fund collector. That was not the intent of what I was getting at. What in fact I was getting at was the simple question of a conflict of interest. I will say that. If the minister so desires, I will say it outside the House so that he can proceed with a court case. I thought then, and I think now, that there was a serious conflict of interest involved in the minister of regional economic expansion being in the position of making gifts, or grants in aid to corporations which applied for them pursuant to a statute of the Parliament of Canada while at the same time he was one of two co-chairmen of the national campaign committee of the Liberal Party. That is the conflict of interest.

I see the minister is leaving, so he obviously is not interested in my going any further into that matter. Apart from the fact that many of the companies which received grants under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion while the minister was then minister of the department attended a fund raising dinner in Toronto at which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) spoke, I am sure the minister did not himself collect any money. I accept his statement on that matter, but he sure had a great deal of conflict of interest involved.

If the minister would like to sue me for saying that he did have a conflict of interest, that there was a conflict between being minister and making gifts of money to corporations while he was chairman of the national campaign committee of the Liberal Party, I will gladly make that statement outside the House and see the minister in court, if that is what he wants. He obviously does not, because he knows the truth of and the implications behind what I am saying.

Apart from that, I think the subamendment that is before us should commend itself to hon. members. I will not read it word for word because if I did I would have to make sure I got all the commas in the right places. What it says is that in so far as individual persons are concerned, they can only make contributions to a political party—there is another section of the act that says they have to be the beneficial owner of that money—or to candidates if they are Canadian citizens or people with landed immigrant status, which is entry into Canada pursuant to statute of parliament; in other words, being here in a legal way. With respect to corporations, it says quite succinctly and clearly that only corporations which are Canadian owned—and it uses percentage figures for what "Canadian ownership" means—and corporations which are not effectively controlled by a foreign group or individual in another land can make contributions to political parties or candidates.

It says that trade unions, only if they are Canadian, can make contributions to political parties or candidates, and that associations or organizations—these are all groups and classes set out in that clause of the bill—can only make contributions if they are organized and chartered as such pursuant to the law of the province.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I would be more than pleased to accommodate the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner).

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, could the hon. member explain to the House how one could accurately, from day to day, determine whether a company is more than 10 per cent owned by a foreign concern or foreign people? These shares trade every day on the market. It would be almost impossible to keep abreast of the exact percentage owned by a foreign concern.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, we manage to do it under the Bank Act and with respect to some insurance companies. Transcoastal Life was one, although I think it has since changed its name. United Investment Life was another. There are provisions in the foreign ownership bill for it. We manage to do it under other statutes, too. I am sure it would not be impossible for a corporation to make such a statement at the time it wanted to make a contribution to a political party. In any event, if it is set out in the statute, the obligation is on the group or corporations that makes the contribution to apprise itself whether it is legal to make that contribution; it is a responsibility that devolves on the particular corporation.

While we are on the subject of contributions to political parties, Mr. Speaker, a great deal has been said about the source of funds of the New Democratic Party especially as it relates to the trade union movement. Let me set it out for you, if I can, without quoting chapter and verse from our constitution. There is provision within the constitution of the New Democratic Party, as there was in the CCF as well, under which any economic or other group that wants to in Canada, but not outside Canada, can make the decision of its own volition to affiliate its members who so desire with the New Democratic Party. It agrees to pay an affiliation fee of 60 cents per year, five cents per month, for each member of the organization who may want to affiliate. That organization is then an affiliate member of the New Democratic Party. Some trade unions located in Canada have made that decision. Some I know, some I do not. Of those I know, the decision was made in Canada by members of the union who are Canadians. They pay dues to that organization. The decision is made in a democratic way; someone moves a motion, it is debated and there is a vote. There is provision for people to opt out of paying the five cents per month affiliation fee.

The entire mechanism of the decision-making is within Canada. It is made by members of organizations within Canada, not outside. As far as I know, there is in fact a prohibition; there is no mechanism within the NDP whereby organizations outside this country can establish a relationship of that nature with our party.

What we want to do is spell out in the law that if the Teamsters Union, for the sake of argument, wants to make a donation to the Liberal Party, it should do so within Canada. The same should apply to any other union or organization. In the subamendment we want to see this apply to corporations. We tried to define that a corporation shall be not less than 50 per cent Canadian owned in order to meet the criteria established by law for being classified as a Canadian corporation which is entitled to have some influence on the political process in this country.

What we disagree with most strenuously is the practice, to the extent that it exists, or the possibility of forces and elements outside Canada paying the bills for candidates running for election in order to represent Canadian interests. They already dominate our economy. Through that economic domination they have an undue, disproportionate influence on our social values and our social and educational systems. They should not be permitted to have an influence on our political system.

We deny to all except Canadian citizens the right to vote for members of parliament. We have removed the last exemption which applied to British subjects; that exemption will cease some time in 1975. The last exemption has been removed from the Elections Act. There must be the "you don't change the goalposts in the middle of the game" concept. There must be recognition of the fact that certain rules were established and existed at a certain point in time. In any event, those people could not become Canadian citizens for five years because that is what the law says. There was a five-year tolerance period beyond the last amendment in 1970. To all intents and purposes, only Canadian citizens will be able to vote in Canadian elections to elect members to this chamber. A companion to that should be the provision that only Canadian money from Canadian sources can be used.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Rod Blaker (Lachine-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to motions Nos. 7, 17 and 31 of the election expenses bill. I have a particular interest in these motions since during the committee I prepared motions with a similar intent. After giving due consideration to the mechanisms and intentions involved, I eventually withdrew my motions. These three motions and the amending motion which came up yesterday are obviously an attempt to keep Canadian elections politically financed by Canadians whether they be individuals, trade unions, organizations or whatever.

The original three motions which refer to registered parties and candidates in terms of donations and expenses all read the same provided, however, that all such money shall be in Canadian funds and collected from Canadian sources. There is not much reference to "Canadian sources" which was debated in the House yesterday. The term "sources" was not sufficiently clear. I find that the amending definition of the word "sources" is not much improved. The suggestion was made to remove the word "sources" and replace it with the following:

> "citizens, persons with landed immigrant status, corporations which have no less than 50 per cent of their voting stock owned by Canadian citizens and not more than 10 per cent of their voting stock owned by any foreign group or person, trade unions which are located in Canada, and associations or organizations"

I have some difficulty, as was expressed by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), understanding how we could keep a day-to-day record of the percentile ownership of Canadian corporations. We currently do this in terms of corporation returns and the Income Tax Act, but I do not know whether it would be a workable concept in terms of an election which could be called mid-year or at any other time. In addition, I am not happy with the expression "trade unions located in Canada". The word "located" does not seem to be particularly suitable when talking about Canadian identity. It would be possible, I think, for trade unions whose essential characteristics in some way relate to foreign trade unions to qualify under this amendment and be capable of making contributions.

We really have not gotten around the problem which I believe is intended to be resolved by this particular amendment. There is a different solution, one which I listened to with a great deal of attention when it was originally proposed in committee. As the bill now stands, it will provide in the order of $25,000 to $30,000 per candidate in the average riding. It will provide for the declaration of donors to registered parties. It will remove the anonymity of donors of amounts over $100. I suggest there is an alternative method by which interference in the Canadian political situation can be reduced. That is publicity. In the first instance, the bill clearly and extensively provides for information with respect to donations to registered parties and/or candidates and provides, as well, for publication of those amounts. I think it quite likely that the four parties now in the House, or any parties as they are currently registered, would be the first to make a great deal of noise to the news media. The news media would be willing to carry stories where contributions are, in fact, made by non-Canadian residents whether corporate, trade unions or individuals.

In the final analysis, rather than attempt to provide legal definitions covering who will have the right to make a donation, it would probably be better to rely on our opposition parties. I think we should rely on all the parties to act as watchdogs for one another in terms of relations of this kind.

As one of the members of the committee, I want to thank all members for the co-operation shown, irrespective of party. A tremendous amount of work and time was put in. As the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) mentioned the other day, this really is a committee bill, the result of an input to which everyone contributed, and I believe it will have a substantial effect upon Canadian elections in the future.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take the time of the House for long on this subject, but we are dealing here with a very important subamendment; it is not one we can gloss over lightly. I should like to congratulate the mover of the subamendment which in my view deserves to be given serious consideration. It represents a sensible change, one which seeks to introduce a definition which is clearly necessary if the purpose of the legislation is to be achieved.

I wish to comment on the remarks made by the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) who spoke on the subamendment yesterday. In the course of his speech the hon. member said, referring to the amendments:

> I suggest they represent a deathbed repentance on the part of the NDP. Suddenly they realized their total source of funding had been the international unions.

Both those statements are blatantly false and I think it proper that someone should rise to challenge that kind of sheer nonsense. The fact is, there has been no deathbed repentance but, rather, a serious attempt to improve this bill. And if there were a deathbed repentance, it is better to have some measure of repentance than none at all—and members of the Conservative party obviously do not intend to repent.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): We have nothing to repent for. We do not take money from international unions.

Mr. Leggatt: They certainly do not want to lose the funds which have been flowing to them in the past from the United States and which can continue to flow under the bill as presently drafted, the only difference being that disclosure would now be required. However, people like ITT will not let that stand in the way of supporting their political friends, I am sure. It is patent nonsense to say our major source of funding has been the international unions. In the New Democratic Party, funding for local campaigns comes almost 100 per cent from the local people. That is the difference between the NDP and the Liberals or the Conservatives.

The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) referred to a paper by Dr. Paltiel who made a careful analysis of the sources of political funds contributed to the various political parties. He pointed out, correctly, that a great deal of the money spent on the national campaign of the NDP comes from the unions. That has never been hidden.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): International unions, too.

Mr. Leggatt: But the hon. member failed to tell us that in the same paper Dr. Paltiel had this to say:

> In contrast to the major parties, the NDP is financed from the bottom up with both individual and affiliated (trade union) membership fees being paid jointly to the provincial and federal parties.

This is the second difference which the hon. member for Victoria failed to acknowledge: the NDP is financed from the bottom up, while the Liberal and the Conservative parties are financed from the top down.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): That is wrong.

Mr. Leggatt: Well, the hon. member will have to argue that with Dr. Khayyam Z. Paltiel who seems to have done a great deal of study on this subject.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Well, he is not an authority on the party to which I belong.

Mr. Leggatt: When he spoke yesterday, the hon. member for Mississauga said that seven members from the New Democratic Party had spoken on this issue during the day, implying that somehow there was an attempt being made to frustrate the wishes of parliament in connection with this legislation.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Not "implying"; it was a statement.

Mr. Leggatt: On the contrary, it represented a serious attempt to improve one of the most important provisions of the bill, and I understand that these efforts have the support of the entire caucus.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Your leader is not here.

Mr. Leggatt: I make no apology for rising to support not only the amendment but also the subamendment, which makes a significant contribution to the improvement of this legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the amendment proposed by Mr. Barnett, seconded by Mr. Knight. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the said amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The division or divisions will be held at a subsequent time.

We shall now proceed to a group of motions, Nos. 8, 9, 10 and 11. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) moves:

No. 8.

That Bill C-203, an act to amend the Canadian Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, be amended by deleting the words "thirty cents" in section 13.2(1) of subclause 4(1) and substituting therefor the following: "fifteen cents".

● (1630)

The second motion is moved by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), the third motion is moved by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) and the fourth motion is moved by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters).

No. 9.

That Bill C-203, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, be amended by deleting the words "thirty cents" where they appear in section 13.2(1) of sub-clause 4(1) and substituting therefor the following:

"twenty cents".

No. 10.

That Bill C-203, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, be amended by deleting the words "thirty cents" where they appear in section 13.2(1) of sub-clause 4(1) and substituting therefor the following:

"twenty cents".

No. 11.

That Bill C-203, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, be amended by deleting the words "thirty cents" where they appear in section 13.2(1) of sub-clause 4(1) and substituting therefor the following:

"twenty-five cents".

[Mr. Horner (Crowfoot).]

Before recognizing the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), we are faced with three different sums, and I think if any divisions are called the first positive division would mean that any subsequent motion concerning these figures would not be put by the Chair. This would arise on the day the recorded divisions are held.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might put this in context since there are a number of amendments dealing with different values. Basically, the bill contains the provision in section 13.2(1) that in order to determine what would be the limitation on expenditures made by a registered party, as distinct from a candidate's expenditures in a constituency, you multiply by 30 cents the number of names appearing for each registered party on the preliminary list of voters for all electoral districts within which that registered party is running candidates. The limitation on expenditure for a registered party may well vary from party to party, depending on how many candidates each party runs in an election.

To arrive at a very rough determination I think we should use the maximum figure, because that is the number that may well be attained. In other words, in finding out what this means one should take into account the possibility that a registered party will run a full slate of candidates. At the moment, without any alteration in the system of redistribution, there are 264 constituencies.

If I may look to the next election, there would be something in the neighbourhood of 14 million registered voters in all of Canada. The point reached in the last federal election was 13 million and some hundred thousand, I forget the exact figure. However, with the increase in population and as a result of new people coming to Canada as immigrants, I am sure 14 million registered voters will be the minimum. Multiplying 14 million by 30 cents as proposed in the bill brings us to the sum of $4.2 million, and this is the amount that must not be exceeded by a registered party running candidates in all constituencies. This is the limit on the amount it may spend for the purpose of conducting an election. To appreciate more fully what this means, we must refer to the definition of election expenses with which we dealt briefly the other day. This matter was cleared up specifically in the committee when the government moved an amendment as incorporated in subclause (1.1) on page 9 of the bill.

A registered party may expend money in addition to the $4.2 million. This additional money is in respect of contributions or gifts made by or on behalf of a registered party for the use of candidates at an election. In other words, if a registered party wants to make a donation or contribution—this is standard practice in some parties—from its central fund to one of its candidates in a federal district, this contribution or gift is not included in the computation of the 30 cents times the maximum number of voters. Therefore, in addition to the $4.2 million limitation arrived at by this provision, there are the amounts that a registered party may donate to its candidates running in ridings throughout the country. This amount will vary, I am sure, depending on the assessment made by the registered party of the chances of their candidate for any given seat.

For example, I am sure that a registered party would look at a particular seat and assess its chances. It might have a good chance of winning the seat, or perhaps it won the seat last time but by a narrow margin, and so it would decide to put in some additional money to assist its candidate. Or there might be another constituency in which the party would not appear to have the ghost of a chance because traditionally it has elected the member of another party. Therefore its contribution would be minimal or nil, or at any rate token. But whatever the aggregate of the gifts to candidates in electoral districts, they are in addition to the $4.2 million maximum.

According to Professor Paltiel, a rough average for both the old-line parties, the Liberals and Conservatives, is $5,000. Multiplying that $5,000 by 264 candidates gives you an additional $1.3 million. So that for a national party's expenditure we are really talking in terms of $5.5 million as the effective limitation imposed by this provision. Another provision of the bill puts a limitation on the amount that a candidate in a constituency can spend. This limitation fluctuates, depending on how many voters are in the constituency, and there is a formula for this further on in the bill.

Putting the limitation of 30 cents per name at the national registered party level together with the limitation imposed on expenditures in constituencies, you arrive at an approximate limitation—it will vary according to how many registered voters there are—of something in the order of $11 million for a registered party and its candidates for the conduct of a national election. The total is $11 million, of which $4.2 million is to be for direct campaign expenses at the registered party level.

You will notice, Mr. Speaker, that three figures have been mentioned in the motions moved—15 cents, which is half the proposed limitation, 20 cents and 25 cents. I hope the House will vote on these motions beginning with the motion asking for 15 cents. I hope one of these motions will pass, for obvious reasons. The purpose of the motions is to cut down the anticipated limitation contained in this clause of the bill. I put it that way because I submit that, in any factual sense, the limitation proposed in the bill is no limitation at all as the amount which can be spent at present is about 2½ times the amount spent in 1972 when a peak was reached, I believe.

We are indebted to Professor Paltiel for the analysis made of campaign spending. The professor is the only person currently analysing political party finances. That was done in 1970, and has again been done in the paper from which I shall quote. So far as I know, this is the only current material which puts these facts together. As mentioned earlier, this material was obtained as a result of extensive conversations with representatives of the various political parties.

I wish to refer to parts of this material. First, in table 1 of the paper, on page 8a, there are listed Liberal national headquarters' expenses for the 1965, 1968 and 1972 campaigns. Expenditures are broken down into ten categories: radio time, television time, print media, other advertising agency costs, printed and other material, leader's tour, other travel, surveys, administration, and something called "other expenses" which includes a sum of $15,000 for the campaign directed at first-time voters; in other words, at those presumably who had reached voting age in 1972. These expenses total $1,321,989. Call it $1½ million in round figures.

According to my calculations, the present limitations under the bill would permit expenditures about three times that size. Those limitations would not limit Liberal Party activities. In assessing and analysing the meaning of those expenditures, Professor Paltiel says:

> The most significant change in the 1972 campaign was the sharp increase in spending on the broadcasting media—

The significance of that I will touch on in a moment.

> —and the employment of sophisticated computerized direct mail techniques as well as on surveys of various types.

Surveys of various types did not figure as items of expenditure in 1965 and 1968, although they did so figure in 1972 inasmuch as $75,000 was spent under that heading. More than twice as much was spent in 1972 on television time, $460,000 having been spent then as compared with $200,000 in 1968. In addition, nearly $100,000 was spent on radio. Let me point out that the bill provides for a refund of 50 per cent of moneys spent on radio and television. As I said, the limitation of $4.2 million is about 2½ times what the Liberal Party spent last year. The party will be able to double its expenditure on radio and television and the extra time will not cost it a penny because it will get half the money back from the public purse. So instead of spending roughly half a million dollars, it can spend one million and be subsidized for half its expenditure out of the public purse.

Professor Paltiel suggests that the picture regarding campaign spending needs to be completed. That is significant. We are now talking about campaign expenses or, rather, about those campaign expenses incurred in the period following the issuance of the writ, up to polling day. We are talking about approximately 58 days, depending on when the election is announced, and about an expenditure of $4.2 million. Professor Paltiel suggests that somehow or other Liberal Party headquarters—perhaps the news is borne on the breezes of the air—manages to learn in advance of events when the election writ is to be issued. That, at any rate, is the implication of Professor Paltiel's words as follows:

> To complete the picture of Liberal Party finances in the last campaign some attention must be paid to the ongoing inter-election and sustaining expenses of the party in the period just prior and just after the election. In 1969 the cost of maintaining national headquarters amounted to $363,000. This sum has remained fairly stable but rose by about 25 per cent in the period just prior to the issuance of the writ of dissolution and the launching of the campaign in 1972.

So in addition to being able to spend $4.2 million, the figure suggested in the bill, which is 2½ times what the Liberal Party spent the last time, that party—because of some connection that enables it to gather information which is available to nobody else—will undoubtedly be able to spend more at national headquarters just prior to the issuance of the writ and gain whatever advantages flow from that. So in considering that $4.2 million limitation, which as I said represents a figure almost three times greater than that spent by the party in 1972 when its expenditures reached a peak, we must conclude that the limitation is a farce. It is not any limitation. We could cut the 30-cent figure in half, to 15 cents, and still have enough to fight a manageable election campaign. Of course, I am now referring to the extravagant parties which form the government and the official opposition.

I mention the official opposition because it comes next in Professor Paltiel's examination. The source of the information, according to Professor Paltiel, is a letter from Mr. Finlay MacDonald, national campaign chairman of the Progressive Conservative party of Canada, to the author, dated August 7, 1973. He lists these expenditures similarly as he did in respect of the Liberal Party, which include radio advertising, television advertising, printed material, other expenses, leader's tour and administrative expenses. He sets them apart as separate items, which is significant in light of the example I quoted in section 1.1 which says that the amount contributed by a registered party to its constituency candidates is not included in the limitation. So he includes there a special item for the Conservative Party.

It is true it comprises provincial allotments, meaning gifts to the provincial section of the party, including money paid to constituents. I assume it could all go to a constituency. However, that amount goes from the national headquarters of the Progressive Conservative Party for the conduct of management, the leadership tour, national campaign, donations and contributions in provincial sections and areas. That amount of money was $1,748,165.31. I might as well include the 31 cents. The expenditure, including that of $1.7 million, of the Conservative Party in that campaign was $4,152,321.

By deducting from that the amount donated to constituencies and provincial areas, we arrive at an expenditure of $2.4 million. Again, the limitation of 30 cents times voters insofar as the Progressive Conservative Party is concerned establishes a limitation of about twice the amount that that party expended in the last federal election. We must remember that in the last federal election of 1972 the fortunes of the Conservative Party were moving upward.

An hon. Member: Still are.

An hon. Member: That is what you think.

Mr. Howard: My friend can express whatever hope he likes. I am talking about the fortunes of his party. They were moving upward and had reached a peak. If the hope of the hon. gentleman from the Conservative Party is correct and the fortunes of his party are still moving upward, then they will have a very long way to go before they reach the limitation in this bill, because the limitation means nothing to an expenditure of that nature by that party. There was no difficulty in raising funds. He goes on to say this about the Conservative Party:

> —the Conservative campaign is highly centralized with campaign operations tightly controlled by headquarters personnel—

When I read that I wonder where the hon. gentleman yesterday got the gall to say I belonged to a party that was centralized. The Conservative Party is highly centralized, with campaign operations tightly controlled by headquarters' personnel using such devices as a countrywide telephone. In the statement I have here there is reference to "WATS-line". I do not know the technological terminology for that. It is a central control system, in any event. It is the Big Brother concept. It is clear that the party has somewhat greater difficulty in raising funds for between election periods as distinct from election periods. The Statement continues:

> Moreover, the present minority government situation which prompts parties to maintain a "war footing" presents some hardships to a party which has "no adequate steady flow of interim financing" and lacks the perquisites of the party in office. However, such inter-election costs cannot falll short of $350,000 for a party like the Progressive Conservative.

He refers to the maintenance of a continual war footing basis. We do the same in the NDP. The expenditure that might be directed toward the national campaign are already taking place. As each period of time approaches when we might be faced with an election, as happens from time to time in this parliament, the intensity of activity within the respective national and provincial headquarters of the party builds up. There is an expectation of an election to take place. Perhaps it might be at the time of the Throne Speech, on the budget or on something else. However, every time that expectation and fervour increases around here, the message goes out to the national headquarters of the party, "This may be it: Get ready". So the potential expenditure of money by the Conservative Party relating to the campaign increases in the period prior to whenever the writ may be issued, so it cannot be computed in terms of election expenses.

I turn now to NDP campaign financing because we will come under this. Professor Paltiel says:

> Manifestly, the two old—

I enjoy that adjective.

> —major Canadian parties were amply supplied with monetary resources in the 1972 campaign and to a degree the New Democratic Party as well experienced a sizeable gain in revenues and spending at the federal office level in the 1972 campaign.

We certainly did. We overwhelmed ourselves, Mr. Speaker. I think we spent $370,000 out of our national headquarters, an undreamed of amount for the conduct of an election campaign by a people's party which receives its funds from individual citizens, small groups and people in the community. My hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) pointed out that as a grassroots party we are financed from the community level up to the top and not from the top down to the bottom which is the case in respect of the Liberals and the Conservatives.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps it might be convenient to agree that it is five o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn)—Post Office—Time taken for special delivery letter mailed in Regina to reach Mississauga—Request for explanation; the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose)—Youth—Alleged abandonment of programs—Request for statement.

It being five o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper. I recognize the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) on a point of order.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions through the usual channels. I think there would be agreement to consider item 46 under private members' notices of motions instead of the business set down for today which would have been notices of motions (papers).

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, could I ask on what page the motion appears to which the hon. member is referring?

Mr. Reid: Page 48 in Monday's order paper.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The suggestion is that we consider Motion No. 46 in the name of the hon. member for York East (Mr. Arrol). This would require unanimous consent because it would mean dispensing with private bills, notices of motions (papers) and public bills. Is it agreed that this course of action be followed and that motion No. 46 be considered during private members' hour?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

POLLUTION

PROPOSED STUDY OF PROBLEMS OF INDUSTRY CONCERNING DEVELOPMENT AND IMPLEMENTATION OF ANTI-POLLUTION DEVICES

Mr. Ian Arrol (York East) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of commissioning a special study, in co-operation with the provinces, to investigate the problems of Canadian industry concerning the development and inplementation of anti-pollution devices.

He said: Mr. Speaker the voice of the environmentalist has scarcely been heard in this House and in the land in the last days of this year. Concern is still felt by many, but the voice of the environmentalist has currently been lost in the tumult of louder voices raised in alarm throughout the industrial world that we may not have adequate energy resources. So anxious have we been to maintain the materialistic idea of ever-increasing production that we tend to forget the price paid in ever-increasing pollution.

I suggest it is fitting at this season of Christmas, on the threshold of the new year, that we pause to think of the future of Canada, not only as a nation that could with its still unexploited and unexplored energy riches be among the first nations of the world industrially but as a nation that could be among the first nations of the world in developing the anti-pollution and environmental controls which must be developed if the world is not to choke in its wastes. Some beginnings have been made by the federal government such as the Clean Air Act, the Canada Water Act, amendments to the Canada Shipping Act regarding marine pollution, and others. But the board to be established under the energy supplies emergency bill could destroy the purpose toward which we have been working. This board will have the right to make regulations that will take away the effect of all our environmental laws already in existence. This is another reason for the caution that has been expressed on this side of the House about the powers being given under the proposed bill.

The effects of industry on our environment, even in this new land of ours, are noticeable, especially among our mining areas, forestry areas, hydro electric developments, and areas where gas and oil resources are found. But in the tumult over the energy crisis is responsibility to be disregarded? What about the active co-operation with the provinces and the United States that was the cry in the land a few months ago?

Pollution knows no boundaries. Concern must be expressed, felt and acted upon at all levels. Through the measure I propose, once again we would activate that concern and we would co-operate with such bodies as the ministry of the environment in Ontario and make certain, through the combined power of the provinces and the federal government, that legislation that all concerned people agree should be passed for our future will be passed through such co-operation. While so many nations have a past that corrupts their future, the future of Canada is still to be achieved in our own terms. No matter the mistakes of the past, the future is as broad and uncorrupted as is most of the land. We in this land are masters of our own destiny. What is to be is what we choose to make it.

So I hope for the support of all parties in the House for my modest proposal that in the opinion of this House the government should consider the advisability of commissioning a special study in co-operation with the provinces to investigate the problems of Canadian industry concerning the development and implementation of anti-pollution devices. Canada, unique among most of the modern nations, has adequate energy resources and a unique responsibility to use them well so that generations ahead can say "well done". Otherwise, we will be cursed for corrupting our heritage.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the hon. member on the motion he has brought forward. It is very timely and I am sure concerns Canadians in all walks of life. As the hon. member has indicated, what concerns us particularly is the need for pollution controls that will take into consideration the present emergency with regard to all forms of energy and the difficulties that have been created by the inability of the government or industry in general to provide proper pollution controls.

It is interesting to note that a new automobile built according to 1975 pollution control standards has a considerably reduced mileage per gallon of gas and at the same time the pollution control device installed on the car has a short lifespan. I have heard—and I think that the minister responsible for the National Research Council should have taken a look at the effects of pollution control—that some of the imported cars will have a catalystic pollution control unit using a totally different type of catalyst. It has been indicated by the Nader organization in the United States that the emissions from those catalysts might be much more toxic and noxious than the gases that are currently being emitted by our automobiles.

It seems to me that the government should have provided pollution controls long ago to reduce toxic automobile emissions and at the same time maintained a degree of efficiency in the conservation of one of our major fuel sources. This could be easily accomplished, of course, by reducing the size of automobile engines. The other day I was in one of the oil capitals of Canada where I was offered a ride in a 1974 General Motors half ton truck. I was interested to find that the truck had a 455 horsepower engine and that the mileage the driver got from that brand new truck, which had about 1,500 miles on it, was only eight miles to the gallon. He is getting eight miles to the gallon and the control devices on the truck reduce pollution by 50 per cent. It would seem to be very simple arithmetic that if we went back to the 65 horsepower motors we had in the late 1950's the driver could probably get 30 miles to the gallon from that vehicle.

It seems to me we have been ridiculous in the demands we have made which have almost eliminated any efficiency that could be obtained through normal type of engine development for vehicular traffic. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, the efficiency of pollution devices is of very short duration. What really concerns me, however, is that recently the Minister of Transport and Communications for the province of Ontario publicly recommended that people remove pollution control devices from their automobiles in order to conserve gasoline. I hope that will not be the solution. I agree with the previous speaker that it is absolutely essential that we continue to control pollution in Canada.

One of the greatest pollutants, of course, is the automobile internal combustion engine. I believe that if we really put our minds to it and utilize the resources of the National Research Council to develop proper controls we would be able to eleminate efficiently more of the pollution that takes place.

Until recently on the North American continent it was difficult to believe that pollutants, which are by-products of basic production in the woodworking industry, mining and smelting or a by-product of urbanization, with garbage being a great problem, are in themselves almost as valuable as the basic commodity which in the first place emitted the pollutant. For years in the Sudbury district the emphasis was on employing people in mining nickel and smelting the raw material in that area at as cheap a rate as possible. For miles around, and particularly throughout Blizzard Valley, crops were destroyed annually. As the public began to mount opposition and as the government became more and more involved in lawsuits, steps were taken to make it mandatory that Inco eliminate as much sulphur pollution as possible. That sulphur in itself has now become a valuable by-product. Thousands and thousands of tons of sulphuric acid are now exported from the Sudbury area.

The same is true of almost any pollutant. Rather than disseminating it through the air, in water or into the land it can be developed into a valuable product. One of our greatest future assets in heating cities like Toronto and Montreal will be the separation of bio-degradable waste from cans, bottles and other reclaimable items in garbage. Already this is being used to create energy in certain areas, and the sale of that energy from waste will probably pay for the handling process.

As Canadians and people throughout, the world become more and more concerned about the pollution problem I believe that economic uses will be found for pollutants and that they will become a valuable new resource for development by secondary industry. Here I think of the steps already taken in countries like Japan. I can remember the Japanese efforts in their early days of waste reclamation. Our country used to be covered with tin cans, particularly oil cans. As a child I remember getting a Christmas toy and on the inside you could still see the painted name of Imperial Oil of Canada. The can had been turned inside out, manufactured into a toy and returned as a valuable commodity.

I congratulate the hon. member for York East on bringing this matter forward today. I sincerely hope that departmental officials, both in the field of science and the field of trade and commerce, will give serious consideration to providing the technical know-how to all types of industry in Canada and will undertake further research into pollution emission from automobiles so that what is now a pollutant, what is now dangerous to health, what is now dangerous to our environment can be made in itself productive and become a useful, worth-while product. If we fail to do this, then within a very short period of time not only will we have a crisis in energy but also a crisis in iron, in nickel, in food materials, in fertilizer, and in fact in all the basic resources of the country and of the world.

I believe we have the know-how to eliminate many pollutants. We have the know-how to recycle and make valuable what today are dangerous and obnoxious pollutants affecting the very life style of our people. But if we are not willing to undertake the necessary action until we reach a crisis stage we will fail many generations yet to come.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say a few words about the motion on pollution introduced by the member for York East (Mr. Arrol).

We all know what can contribute to pollution. We also know what are the means to be taken to prevent or eradicate it. Several factors contribute to pollution. Buses, for example, could surely be electrified. Buses are operating with fuel whose chemical disintegration gives rise to pollution. All buses could be electrified and would thus contribute to the removal of pollution.

Mr. Speaker, one municipality is now spending $500,000 on a lake shore in order to eliminate pollution. Meanwhile, it picks up waste, snow mixed with a lot of salt and every kind of dirt that can be found in a municipality and throws that in the very stream where people get their drinking water. It has already picked a quarrel with some company, pretexting that they were throwing wastes into a lake and polluting the water. The same municipality, having made representations before that company to eliminate pollution, has imposed penalties to it through the provincial government while the municipality itself causes pollution because it throws all its wastes into the water. And nobody worries about that.

In my view, laws and regulations should also apply to municipalities that contribute to pollution while calling for its elimination. A great many municipalities in Canada dump snow mixed with salt into streams. This contributes greatly to water pollution and is harmful to fish. All communities located on the shores of lakes surrounded by cottages and buildings where people live should have their own sewage systems. In most cases, raw sewage is dumped into waterways. To treat it would involve spending hundreds of millions of dollars everywhere in Canada. Mr. Speaker, we are always up against the same difficulty: the necessary funds are lacking.

At the present time, the federal government shares part of these costs with provincial and local governments. However, Mr. Speaker, this can hardly improve the situation. Indeed, the debts and taxes of rate payers are increasing and they are too high already. So that is not the solution to the problem.

To solve the problem, Mr. Speaker, as we often say in our speeches, since this is public property and aimed at helping people and getting pollution out of our waters or off the shores of our streams, funds would absolutely have to be made available at very low interest rates. Governments would have to open their eyes and ears and make funds available at very low interest rates. At present governments themselves are borrowing at 9 to 10 per cent, and municipalities at 10 to 12 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, that does not make sense. That is how municipalities become endebted, municipalities or public bodies are prevented from intervening to get rid of pollution. Mr. Speaker, we have that all across Canada. Everywhere there are projects to be carried out but we cannot do that because we do not have the necessary funds or because the debts of both municipal, provincial and federal governments are so high that nothing seems to be worth undertaking anymore.

I would have another suggestion to make to get rid of pollution. In cities we could run cars on the same sources of electric power as buses which would contribute to eliminating a lot of pollution. There is no shortage of electrical energy in any of the Canadian provinces, and especially not in Quebec. There is an abundance of it and, as the means to produce it are many, it could be used for automobile propulsion.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if governments were willing to go further, they could make available to scientists the necessary capital, at a low rate of interest, at administrative cost, and thus enable them to do research with a view to equipping cars with electrical power and making them operate on dry batteries. There certainly must exist, even now, inventions to make automobiles run on electrical power; this would eliminate pollution to a large extent. Mr. Speaker, the present oil shortage could be corrected this way.

There are a number of other means to alleviate the oil shortage. We could suggest allotting the required capital to developing new types of energy. In a few years, nearly all pollution would be eliminated in Canada. Then, in all our cities, we would live as before the advent of modern times and new technology.

We are not against technology, quite the opposite, we are for its progress, we want to make use of it. But, Mr. Speaker, we can use it without poisoning ourselves and others and without poisoning the atmosphere for the future generations and the fauna of our beautiful country.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I thank and congratulate the hon. member who moved this motion. I am sure that other members have a lot to say and to suggest on this subject. It is all very well to make suggestions, but it is even better to put them in practice.

I urge the government, through the work of the committees for instance, to find a way to stop pollution and especially to finance these projects aimed at the welfare of the population.

[English]

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, with your permission I would like to take part in this debate and congratulate the hon. member for having introduced this motion. It gives us an opportunity to examine those things we have been speaking about for so long and to bring them forward in this forum where hopefully some of the devices we know about may gather the attention they deserve.

With your permission and with the permission of the mover of the motion I should like to enlarge the somewhat narrow interpretation of one word in his motion, namely, "devices". I feel that I have his permission to do so, and with your permission I would expand it to include not just an attachment to the various means of locomotion we now have or an attachment to chimneys that emit smoke but actual vehicles.

[Translation]

At the same time, I should like to thank the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) who did such a good job in preparing the way for my comments. As a matter of fact, I was just thinking of using a car developed in British Columbia by engineers of the University of British Columbia and which was given a name which is very famous in those circles, that of Dr. Walter Gage. The car is now called the "Wally Wagon".

So, Mr. Speaker—

Anti-pollution Devices Study

[English]

The Wally Wagon was developed by the engineering faculty of the University of British Columbia precisely with this view in mind. A group of mechanical engineers, chemists, physicists and metallurgists, because of the technologies involved, designed an engine. They designed the sort of panels that would be required to develop that engine in the most economical way with the maximum utilization of every conceivable idea of anti-pollution devices. The Wally Wagon was granted a prize last year at a convention in Detroit at which there were a number of other devices and vehicles. It was given the prize for the best design and the most economical car developed from the point of view of anti-pollution devices.

The hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) suggested that automobiles in urban areas be run on electricity. He lives in one of the fortunate provinces, as do I, where all electricity is developed by hydro power. As hon. members know, there are parts of the country which have to rely on oil and coal for the development of electricity. Therefore we have to ask ourselves whether we are really being anti-pollutionists by urging the creation of power by coal and oil to run cars which do not run on oil or oil products.

The Wally Wagon is powered by an engine which runs on liquid gas. The carburetor or mechanics that go into the conversion of this liquid gas to provide the mode of power have been taken into account with the result that emission from the Wally Wagon is reduced to the absolute minimum. It is indeed a low pollution vehicle.

There is another form of pollution. Our large cities are being polluted by the physical presence of vehicles. It is very difficult to find a parking space. We should get rid of this type of pollution as well.

The Wally Wagon is a very small car. Its measurements are approximately eight feet long and five and a half feet high. Two or three of these could be parked in the area required to park a large car.

This is another form of pollution that would not be beyond the definition of anti-pollution devices contained in the proposed resolution of my colleague. In this particular stream of thought I suggest we might consider such a small vehicle or a better developed one like it, with its production base not only in Canada but, with luck, in my province, as a means of dealing with our urban transportation problems. We could park our vehicles outside our large urban areas. We could get in such a car, put in a 25 or 50 cent piece, drive to town and park it somewhere. There would be a lot of parking places. It would not be a personal car but a community-owned vehicle. If there were another 10 minutes on it, someone could take it for that 10 minutes but would have to produce another quarter to get them to where their personal vehicle was parked. I suggest that it be coin operated.

The hon. member for Compton talked about capital accumulation. I am not thinking in terms of government assistance. I believe there are pools of capital in this country that could be used for the development of a device of this sort. We should use the resources of our country. We have them all ranging from steel to our petrochemical industries. Many of the panels and other pieces of modern vehicles are indeed manufactured from derivatives of our petroleum resources.

I suggest this would be an excellent way of decentralizing our industry. I am sure all members who have flown from the west to the central provinces have noticed great areas covered with a haze of pollution. It is time we cut down on this pollution which is becoming the bane of the large cities. It is derived to a considerable extent from industry of a variety of sorts. Industry must be decentralized. This would decentralize pollution and making it a little less onerous for areas that now have heavy pollution.

I comment the hon. member for his initiative in bringing forward this resolution. I urge the government to consider seriously his recommendation that a study be undertaken in this area leading to the development of practical instruments which will reduce more and more the pollution that is besetting us.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to enter this debate. However, I was tempted to do so by the speech of my colleague a few moments ago. He spoke of the importance of auto emission with regard to the matter before the House and how it must be studied. It must be studied from two points of view. It must ensure that devices used on motor vehicles are sufficient, and I emphasize that word, for the purpose of protecting our atmosphere and our environment from pollution. We have to examine the devices to ensure that we are not overdoing in a quantitive sense the capability of the auto emission control devices, particularly at a time when we may be faced with a shortage of petroleum products.

I do not suggest that we panic, run the other way and advocate the removal of all these devices from cars. I think they are very valuable. However, the aspect of research suggested in the motion might be an opportunity to ascertain the true worth of these devices in Canadian terms, whether our requirement is such that control ought to be as stringent as in other jurisdictions and whether the potential danger is as great. We have a tendency to follow, but I believe there is an opportunity for this country to lead in a field that is very important to us.

I am sure that when my hon. friend talked about research into the development and implementation of anti-pollution devices he did not intend us to think only in terms of the mechanical aspect of those devices. It is fair to say that the speed with which the installation of anti-pollution devices is demanded by the community will have a great bearing on the cost to the industries and businesses concerned. I think it is unfair to businesses generally to demand the expensive installation of anti-pollution devices overnight without at the same time developing some form of compensation to them. By this I do not mean outright payments, although it might well come to that; I do not necessarily mean a grant, although it may turn out to be that, or a combination of the two. I am thinking in terms of a tax incentive or some such mechanism. If the public wants pollution control, if people want to stop the pollution of rivers and streams, they must not burden too greatly the productive capacity of the industries concerned, some of which are having trouble continuing their operations. Some assistance should be given in a meaningful way to business and industry, to businesses and industries which are being forced by circumstances or may be forced by circumstances to instal expensive pollution control devices.

I do not believe we have considered the question of public transportation as an integral part of the whole subject of pollution control and as one which therefore requires urgent attention. Only yesterday in Ottawa the Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton announced a planning study, one of a series, indicating it will probably be ten years before the national capital gets a rapid transit system.

Mr. Hellyer: Ridiculous! Too many studies and not enough action.

Mr. Baker: As a member representing the national capital area I am absolutely appalled by the length of this period. It has even been suggested the development of the system might take longer than ten years, that it might take 19 years. If we are to be strangled in the downtown area because of congestion aggravated by traffic fumes, as I think we shall, it is criminal that the planning study should consider a period of ten years as a minimum. It is criminal that no leadership is being shown by the federal government in the national capital so as to ensure that the capital offers an example of what a modern transport facility could provide. Surely, as the motion suggests, we are bound to consider the needs of a changing community. Surely to God we ought not to be told in this area that we must wait for ten years before the pollution problem is dealt with and that in the meantime we are to be stuck with diesel fuel burning buses giving limited services on narrow streets. If the regional municipality accepts the findings of that report they are not worth the powder to blow them to blazes. For its part, the government of Canada should recognize it has responsibility to take the lead, by using the tri-level committee it has established, to ensure that the time period I have mentioned is cut down. It is tragic that after having the apple of a reasonable transportation system held out to us we should now be called on to wait for so long a period.

There is still time to avoid following courses of action which have all but destroyed older cities in other countries. In terms of transportation in this and similar cities we are still thinking of a system which is akin to the horse and buggy. Perhaps as a result of the wording of the motion before us other cities will not be plagued by the lack of modern services. I do not know of anything in a modern urban city that is more important than public transportation if a city is to be a good place in which to live, a place to enjoy and a place in which to raise a family. I do not know why the downtown areas have to be the scene of traffic congestion. There is still time in this country to correct the errors of the past, and possibly the device suggested by my hon. friend in his motion is one means of making progress. Surely, in the national capital, some leadership ought to be shown.

I think it is axiomatic that we must look to other forms of energy which will not pollute the atmosphere. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has talked about solar energy. I wonder how advanced and concentrated is the effort being made in this area. I suspect that on examination one would find that these efforts are scattered and sporadic. Ontario possesses what is perhaps one of the world's finest hydroelectric systems. A tremendous electrical industry is being built up in Quebec. Perhaps in time we shall not be dependent on non-renewable resources. Consideration has been given to using manure as an alternative source of energy.

Hon. members who come from metropolitan areas, or close to them, know the idea has developed that garbage from any one of our cities can be shipped out and dumped somewhere else, or used as fill. There is right now under consideration in the Department of the Environment a technical process, imported from Europe, the like of which is not known on the North American continent. An announcement is supposed to be coming at some time with respect to use of process for the national capital area on a trial basis. The federal government has indicated its intention to contribute to it. I think it could mark a new departure in garbage disposal and the production of industrial energy into the bargain. I wish the federal government would get on with the project. They have taken the position that they wish to lead, and I ask them to lead, not in the partisan sense but in the sense of the importance of this process to the community.

I do not think there is any matter more important to us when we remember that our environment, whether the air, our water or our land, is a very fragile thing and that we have abused it. I suppose this always happens in a nation that thinks in terms of building rather than conserving. Perhaps since the general environment is irreplaceable, and in view of the factors that I have mentioned, we should now think of conserving. I think my colleague has done a great service to us who sit in this House and to the country in bringing forward this proposal, which I am delighted to support.

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Welland): Mr. Speaker, there have been some good presentations on this subject today. This motion is most timely since I do not think anything is more pressing than the preservation of our natural environment.

In the very limited time at my disposal I should like to say two things. I and two other members on this side, in company with three from the other side, went to Washington for one week where we had an excellent chance to study how the United States is protecting the environment. They have set up a huge Environmental Protection Agency which makes impact studies of all construction that takes place in the United States, whether in municipalities, coastal regions or elsewhere. It is a big octopus, and I think we are handling this question better in Canada.

No one should run away with the idea that everything is done better in a bigger country, because it is not. In fact, we had nothing but compliments from the Environmental Council, the Environmental Protection Agency, the Coastguard and the land aggregation committees about practically everything we did in Canada. In many ways we are ahead of the United States, not only in our research but in the action we have taken as a result of that research.

Take, for example, oil spills. The Coastguard hastened to tell us we had much better clean-up methods than they had thought of in the United States. I refer to those used off the coast of Nova Scotia near Halifax, and I think the same methods are used off the British Columbia coast.

Reference has been made to a council that would deal with air pollution, but I think its terms of reference are too narrow. Water is polluted by industry and by human sewage—certainly the Great Lakes are—and this must be studied too. The study being conducted at Burlington is a model for all countries. The United States sends its people to Burlington to see what is going on, and they give us full marks for what we are doing and say we are ahead of them.

The United States has had to cut back its anti-pollution programs in big cities that pollute Lake Erie, such as Detroit, Cleveland, Buffalo and Toledo, since they are finding them too expensive. I talked about this with my friend the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher), a while ago and he admitted that we have to cut back too. Much as we would like these anti-pollution devices, we have to keep people warm and we are using more gasoline. Therefore, we must set up certain priorities. We have an excellent research council and good university programs all across Canada. We are not behind the United States or any other country in our attempts to beat this problem. The biggest culprit is the internal combustion engine. It runs on gasoline and the sooner we get an alternative, such as an engine run on hydrogen, the better. A lot of countries are working on this problem today.

As has been suggested, municipal waste is a huge problem. In Massachusetts today there is a plant that separates glass, metal, paper, food and other things found in garbage. Enough money is made from selling this waste glass and metal to run the plant at a profit and to use the residue as combustible material to fuel an electricity plant. This is a wonderful thing. Our own energy department is aware of it, but it is a long-term project. Nevertheless, it is a good way to dispose of our garbage. Enough power is derived from it to light the homes and streets of the municipality and it accounts for a large percentage of total electricity requirements. We should do further research into making use of our waste and making sure it is turned into something that will provide fuel and power at no additional expense to the taxpayer.

Another point I want to emphasize is that pollution controls on cars, smokestacks and so on can be lifted temporarily. We are not choking yet. In certain cities like Los Angeles the pollution is bad, and none of us likes pollution, but I do not think we should get excited about it when we have an energy crisis.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. It being six o'clock the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired. I do now leave the chair till eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

ELECTION EXPENSES

PROVISION OF PAYMENTS TO CANDIDATES AND REIMBURSEMENT OF PARTIES FOR CERTAIN BROADCASTING TIME

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-203, to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections; motion No. 8 (Mr. Howard), motion No. 9 (Mr. Barnett), motion No. 10 (Mr. Brewin) and motion No. 11 (Mr. Peters).

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, just before five o'clock I believe I had reached the point of revealing the story regarding finances and expenditures of certain political parties. I had quoted from the paper by Professor Paltiel and had dealt with the part relating to the Liberal and Conservative parties as a prelude to chapter 3 which concerns the New Democratic Party. The pertinent part which I want to quote now says:

> Manifestly, the two old major Canadian parties were amply supplied with monetary resources in the 1972 campaign and to a degree the New Democratic Party as well experienced a sizeable gain in revenues and spending at the federal office level in the 1972 campaign. While miniscule in comparison with its two leading competitors, this growth permitted the party to wage a campaign replete with airplane tours and media expenditures, similar in shape if not in dimensions with that of its rivals. In comparison with the 1968 campaign expenses of the NDP federal office totalling $216,100, 1972 election expenses at the national party level were $370,644—

A quick calculation with regard to the limits contemplated in the bill show, I think, that those limits are about 11 or 12 times greater than the expenditures made by the NDP. Therefore, so far as we are concerned that limit is inordinately high and unreachable. New Democratic Party expenditures are listed under candidates' deposits, organization, travel organizers, telephone, printing costs, leader's tour, survey, contingencies, and so on. There is an item here under "bad debts", which is something neither the Liberals nor the Conservatives seemed to be bothered with. Including the media expenses, contingencies and so on, the expenditure totals $370,000. I think he indicates something very significant here in terms of the strong difference of structure which exists between the NDP and other parties, because within our budget as listed here there is an item of $84,000 for provincial quotas, that is, the provincial sections of the NDP raise money toward a budget. They raise this money on a quota basis toward a budget at the federal level for federal expenditure. Professor Paltiel points out the significance of this by saying the following:

> The provincial revenue quotas are symbolic of the fact that in contrast to the major parties, the NDP is financed from the bottom up with both individual and affiliated (trade union) membership fees being paid jointly to the provincial and federal parties, with the former being charged with the support of the latter rather than the reverse.

In other words, within the NDP we are truly a community and constituency-based political organization, a people's party in the full sense of the word. We finance the operation of our party from the community to the provincial level and the federal level, which means the national party. The membership dues I pay go to help maintain the federal office. Conversely, as the financial analysis indicates, the Liberals and Tories collect their money at the top in large chunks and finance the party from the top down. So there is control at the top by large financial contributions.

In the reverse situation, the NDP operates quite differently. There is indicated here, as well, a listing of income for the year 1972 to the federal office of the party through individual and sustaining memberships. That means individual Canadian citizens can belong to the NDP by paying a membership fee voluntarily and by saying they will sustain and finance the party either through an individual or sustaining membership. The sustaining membership may vary from province to province because each province sets what it calls sustaining memberships. In British Columbia at one time it was a minimum of $1 a month. If you become a member and agree to contribute $1 a month you are classified as a sustaining member. The membership, individual and sustaining, in 1972 accounted for $102,000 in membership fees, just about half the total income of the national office. We even had some money at one stage on deposit, and there is an amount of $763 for interest.

Then there is a list of federal general fund expenditures which are related to the convention of the NDP. This list is filed with the federal convention of the NDP every two years and is in fact public information. We are, in terms of disclosure of the source of funds, the only political party that has steadfastly indicated that anybody can obtain this information at any hour—don't come around at three o'clock in the morning because you will have some difficulty getting hold of the treasurer—by looking at the financial records of the party. We regretted this on one occasion in British Columbia, in a sense, when we were taken up on that offer by some newspaper men. They spent so much time in our provincial office during the course of the campaign that they interfered with the conduct of the provincial campaign. Nevertheless, the books were open to them.

Information concerning the source of funds is available to everybody. We have continued to hold that position because we believe that if we are in the business of dealing with the public, the public should know what we are doing and such information should not be hidden behind the fence. We believe in these principles and this is the reason we are moving these amendments in respect of campaign financing. We believe this should apply to all parties. Professor Paltiel further states:

Unfortunately no information has been obtained concerning national level expenditures of the Social Credit (Créditiste) movement in the 1972 campaign.

There was no information available, and no disclosure to Professor Paltiel. This is fine; it is the business of the national Social Credit Party if it does not wish to disclose this information to Professor Paltiel. But there is a very revealing—I was somewhat amazed when I saw it—declaration by Professor Paltiel who says certain things and then this:

—despite the indications that Créditiste agents attempted to collect funds from the business community including the Canadian subsidiaries of American-controlled multinational firms like ITT.

That is the corporation in the United States that is noted singularly for its involvement in the political sphere and for attempting to suppress the rights and freedoms of people in various parts of the world. I think it is shameful that a national party in Canada should be in the position of having gone to an organization of that nature in an attempt to solicit funds. However, that is its business. In any event, that is the basic substance of what Professor Paltiel said after he had made a study of the political parties in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Abitibi on a question of privilege.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I just heard the assertions of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), which do not surprise me. However, I would suggest that the validity of the statement he just read has never been proven. He is perfectly free to utter such nonsense but, I repeat, it has never been proven anywhere.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member is aware that the privileges of the House are related to the rights of individual members. Assertions, opinions and interpretations constitute a matter for debate and the hon. member will perhaps have the opportunity to answer the hon. member for Skeena in a few moments.

[English]

Mr. Howard: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not much moved by someone saying that something has not been proven. There is a great difference between saying that and saying something is untrue. I know a lot of things about the Social Credit Party in British Columbia, when it formed the government there, which were not proven but were common knowledge concerning its activities in that province. I do not intend to recall them all here. However, I would point out to my friend from Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) that the former premier of the province of British Columbia, Mr. Bennett, while he was premier saw great promise in the hon. member's leader, the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), at a national convention of the Social Credit Party and once sought to nominate him as leader. Unfortunately, he lost out to Bob Thompson who went somewhere else. But it is a known fact that the Social Credit Party in British Columbia refused to disclose to its own members the source of its campaign funds in an election campaign. There was a secret fund kept and controlled by the leader of the party in that province. I do not know whether he got money from ITT and other such groups, but it would not surprise me if he did.

All I was reading to the hon. gentleman was what Professor Paltiel said. I do not give any other credence to it. I only know that Professor Paltiel made a careful examination of this subject and it seems passing strange to me that suddenly, months after this document has been known, members of the Social Credit Party in the House rise and say that that was not proven. I accept that it was not proven and the hon. member for Abitibi does not know anything about it. But he is not the whole organization in the Social Credit Party and it may well be that the Social Credit Party at the national level, or at the Quebec level at this stage, operates on the same basis as did the Social Credit Party in British Columbia. The leader of the party in that province kept entirely unto himself and the director of something called the educational fund information about the sources of campaign funds. He did not even disclose it to members of his own caucus or to the legislature. Maybe that is why the hon. member for Abitibi does not know what is going on between his party and ITT and other groups of that sort.

In any event, we are dealing with the question of the so-called limitations on expenditures by national parties in the conduct of a national campaign. I submit, judging from the financial information that has been given out, that in fact these are not limitations. You cannot call it a limitation when you place a limit 2½ to three times the level reached by a particular party, namely, the government party in this case, or twice as much so far as the official opposition is concerned—twice as high as the level they reached just last year. That is not in fact a limitation; it is simply some kind of formula that will permit the Liberal Party to run around the country and say, "Look how grand we are. Look how good and pure we are. We brought in a bill that limits campaign expenditures." That is a lot of rot. This bill does not limit campaign expenditures in the least. The way inflation is going, it may limit campaign expenditures some day in the future; but it will not now and it will not at the next federal election when a party such as the Liberal Party spends at the federal level, as it declared it did, the sum of $1,321,000.

They spend that sum of money and then turn around and say that they want to limit campaign expenditures at the national level by imposing a limit of $4.2 million. That is no limitation; they can squander another $3 million on leader's tours, surveys and other things that go on during an election campaign, and still not reach the limit stated in the bill. The Conservative Party does likewise. So far as the financial experience and history of the NDP is concerned, we will probably never reach that level of expenditure. The total limitation is in the neighbourhood of $11 million for the national campaign. All that excessive expenditure means to the two old-line parties is that they are intent upon following the notion that the more money you spend, the greater is the possibility of buying votes. Certainly that is wrong in our democratic structure, in my view.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has now expired.

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to support this group of motions, and I will speak very briefly. One of them is in my name, and they are all to the same effect. They deal with the highly important principle introduced into Canadian federal legislation for the first time, that there should be limits on expenditures by parties as well as limits on expenditures by individual candidates. This is something which we have tried to achieve for a long time, and we are glad to see the principle stated in the section that we are discussing to which the present amendments seek a further amendment. They seek a further amendment for the purpose of making the limitation a rational one.

I concur entirely with the remarks made by my colleague, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), that if you set the limit so high that it encourages even greater expenditures than in the past, you are not really setting a limit at all. I had thought that one of the basic purposes of this legislation, in the interest of fairness and so that money should not be a major consideration in the election of members of parliament, was to cut down the expenditures to be made in respect of elections. But the figure that we have here of 30 cents for each voter in Canada, or at least in the constituencies represented by the particular party, means—as the hon. member has pointed out—expenditures of at least $4 million in addition to some of the other expenditures which he listed and which I will not repeat.

In our view, that is no limitation at all; in fact, it is a farce to talk about limiting campaign expenditures, to say that this is one of the purposes of the legislation and then to set the limit so high that it is no real limitation at all—it is a move upward rather than a move downward. The parliamentary secretary in a discussion on a radio program with me today said, and he is quite right, that there is nothing particularly sacrosanct about the figure of 30 cents, nor is there about the other figures we have mentioned in the three amendments. One amendment brought in by the hon. member for Skeena provides for a reduction to 15 cents. The amendment I have introduced strikes a happy mean at 20 cents, and for some reason or other the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) has been rather conservative and has said that we should restrict it to 25 cents.

Mr. Howard: That is what Les Benjamin said.

Mr. Brewin: I do not care whether he said it or not, the motion is in the name of the hon. member for Timiskaming. I think I am entitled to say that between the two extremes of the hon. member for Skeena and the hon. member for Timiskaming I have chosen the happy mean, the via media, and I think that is a pretty sensible approach to the matter. We may not know why 30 cents was chosen, and in fact I think the minister disclaimed in the committee any particular knowledge or rationale behind the fixing of 30 cents. All I do know is that it is much too high, and this is a serious amendment trying to make this bill fulfil the goal in which we believe and in which the people of Canada believe, and that is the genuine limitation of party expenses in elections. That is the reason we support this motion.

I stated earlier that my intervention would be brief because I am anxious to see this bill passed, so I will say nothing more except that this is a motion which should be accepted by the House. I prefer my version, but if other versions meet the wishes of the House I will be perfectly happy.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am rather sympathetic to the viewpoint of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) who I know has had an interest in this subject for a long time. I agree that I was being overly generous. The government said 30 cents. We would like any kind of compromise on that figure. I would be prepared to support the figure suggested by the hon. member for Greenwood, and even more pleased to support the figure suggested by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). The hon. member for Skeena cuts it in half. That probably means a contribution from the federal treasury of about $1,100,000 to the federal parties, and an over-all sum of $2,100,000 is not a small contribution to make on behalf of the parties. But really when one looks at the amount of money necessary to run an election, one begins to wonder.

We have gone both ways on this particular subject. There was a time in England under the British parliamentary system when a person had to have a certain amount of money before he could become a candidate for office. Over the years it was decided that that was not the kind of limitation which should be placed on people and on the representatives of people. But it is still the type of limitation that is in force with respect to becoming a member of the Senate. It is surprising how many people in Canada today have enough money to meet the criteria to become senators. I believe one has to own $4,000 worth of property. I remember the case of one person appointed to the Senate: he did not have $4,000 and had to borrow it from a finance company on the strength of the salary he was going to get as a senator.

There is no question that over the years many people elected to this House have had to go in hock to finance companies in order to get enough money to run their campaigns. There have been occasions when a constituency organization in my party has had to go to a bank and make a personal loan to one or two people to finance an election campaign. In some cases this is necessary, and may even be desirable. During the depression years, when money was very scarce, people were desperately looking for candidates to represent them rather than the institutions which they believed were causing their difficulties. I well remember one of my constituents telling me he participated in an election in 1933 in one of the poorer sections of the dust bowl in Saskatchewan. He and some of his friends went out and cut cord wood, loaded it on a flat car and sold it for $2 a cord to get enough to finance part of the campaign for J. S. Woodsworth. He also told me about riding around the country on horseback raising money for the local candidate. We have come a long way from that situation because through this bill we are saying that $4.2 million should be provided by the treasury for the conduct of an election.

Of course, this is not a large sum of money when compared with what was spent by the parties in the last general election. Paltiel indicates that the last election cost at least a reported $32 million and may have cost considerably more when the government's expenses in connection with the election machinery are included. I think I have seen the figure of $11 million mentioned to cover that operation. Thus it can be seen that elections are a very expensive proposition. For this reason alone it may be necessary for the treasury to provide money to run elections. If this is so, then I suggest that we start off with as low an amount as possible, and that we put strong limitations on various aspects so that elections do not run into multimillion dollar figures but, rather, that election expenses are reduced to the point where they can be easily scrutinized either by the agent who is going to be appointed or by the auditors who will be going over the accounts of the various candidates.

It is my personal opinion that we would be well advised to provide the individual candidate with the opportunity to mail something to the electors in his riding at a cost of about 8 cents to 10 cents per name, but given in kind rather than through this type of arrangement which could lend itself more to the expansion of expenditures by national political parties than to a reduction of expenditures.

We have heard a lot of argument on how political parties are financed. How the New Democratic Party has been financed has never been a secret. It has been financed by people who had a problem and who decided to join together to end that problem. It is interesting to read in Paltiel's report of the last election of something that surprised him, namely, that the amount of money the NDP gets between elections varies very little from year to year, indicating that the party's supporters are willing to make the same kind of contribution each year in order to see that the party continues as their political spokesman.

The other political parties have tended to adopt more elite ways of raising money. It is interesting to look at the direction in which they are going. A history of the last several elections in the United States shows that the Republicans, the Democrats, and even the Wallace campaign adopted several methods of raising money. In the final analysis, most of these methods of raising money created almost as many problems as they were able to solve with the money that they received. They have included fund raising dinners; this has been copied in Canada, sometimes successfully and sometimes not so successfully. In most cases where they are successful an organization is hired to make the arrangements for setting up the dinner and they are paid a certain proportion of the proceeds for running it. In the United States I gather they were paid 7 per cent or 8 per cent of the net take. These have been fairly successful in the United States but I do not know whether political parties in Canada have gone into fund raising to this extent.

There is a second method that can be bought and of course it has a price, and that is direct mailing. They do not direct mail to all the constituents but have a very elaborate system through which they buy names that they believe would be advantageous. In the last United States election the Democratic Party bought lists of names that were involved in causes—anti-war, anti-poverty and two or three of the major protest groups. These turned out to be as good fund raising propositions from a business point of view as did the normal register of Democratic voters. On the other hand, the Republican Party found that selecting names by the computer operation at so much a name was much more satisfactory.

This all leads to the problem that most political parties are faced with today, Mr. Speaker, and that is running an election by computer in a computerized society. In the last presidential election in the United States they were able to raise so much money that they had $3 million or $4 million left over. This was available for other purposes, so some bright young people were given sums of money and told to do something with it that would have an effect on the election. They did something with it that had an effect on the election that was overwhelmingly successful but also overwhelmingly disastrous. It was disastrous for the people who did it because of the corruption involved, and it was disastrous for all political parties in the United States and in Canada because of the results that flowed from the use of that extra money.

An election cannot be conducted without money, and it certainly behooves us to have enough money available to at least have the message of a candidate, no matter whether he has a chance of winning, put before the public. To that degree the payment of a sum of money from the treasury is a good thing. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I think there should be a limitation on that expenditure except for the contribution that an individual wishes to make in a particular riding. As they say, it is true that you have to show the flag in areas where a political party may not have much strength. The Conservatives are having this problem in the province of Quebec—they have joined the New Democratic Party which has had the same problem in that province for many years. My guess is that the Conservatives will be no more successful in showing the flag in Quebec than we have been, but I think it is a fact that they have to do it. If I were a Liberal, I would be scared that neither the New Democratic Party nor the Conservatives are successful in the province of Quebec because that might be to their detriment rather than to their advantage.

Mr. Hurlburt: You had better worry about British Columbia.

Mr. Peters: The hon. member says that we need to worry about British Columbia. We have always felt a certain amount of hope in the province of British Columbia, and this has been going on for many years. I sat with a colleague who had for many years been leader of the CCF in that province and who had come close to forming the government.

Mr. Hurlburt: Never.

Mr. Peters: I should like to inform the hon. member who raised the question that we have been very satisfied in the last year and a half to find that there is now a government in that province.

Mr. Hurlburt: Of sorts.

[Mr. Peters.]

Mr. Peters: We have been able to show the flag for many years in that province, but his party has not done very well there although they may have done a little better than they did in Quebec. However, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to go through all the provinces. We have had very little success in a number of them ourselves, and I do not see any sense in throwing rocks. I suggest that it is a fact of politics that you have to present, as a party, the image of being available in those areas. It is a fact that if people in other parts of Canada believe that a political party is worth while, then you should at least have the right to put forth your program to people in other parts of the country. For this reason I am sympathetic to the idea of providing a sum of money.

Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that this should have been mixed up with so many other considerations for I would like this bill to have contained a clause somewhat along the lines that have been suggested; a total, inescapable report clause that would have made it mandatory to make honest reports. It is interesting to note that we have always allowed those people who have lost to get by without making any kind of report. I believe that if the name of the game is to provide reasonable contributions so that the stories of candidates who have something to say can be told across the country, and if a contribution from the treasury will make that possible we should support it. It should be reasonable; it should not be an excessive amount of money. I believe that not too many years ago $4.2 million would have been more than most political parties considered elections should cost. Costs have escalated to the point where we are now spending well over $30 million each election and they are costing $10 million or $11 million to operate. It indicates that we have not kept pace with modern thinking when we allow expenses to go so high.

Mr. Speaker, if that $4.2 million is properly distributed I think there will be an opportunity for some organizations which feel they would like to become political parties to do so. I have been impressed with the way political parties are formed almost overnight. Sometimes they disappear just as quickly, of course. I am thinking, for instance, of the teachers of this nation who a few years ago were all status quo people and never objected whatever the government did. In British Columbia they embraced the Social Credit Party with open arms and loved them to death until that government suddenly decided there was going to be compulsory arbitration. I have been in many schools in Ontario where press releases from Queen's Park were prominently displayed on the bulletin board and were required reading for all the teachers. There certainly was no resentment about that.

We might well see a new political movement started by some of the so-called white collar workers and professional people of the nation. I sincerely hope we are not making it difficult for them to enter the political arena, run as candidates and get their message across to the public. It seems to me that 30 cents is too high. I should like the government to consider 15 cents, which I believe is a reasonable amount. I would be prepared to support the proposition of the hon. member for Greenwood that it be 20 cents.

What we should avoid is getting ourselves into the position the Americans have done. Give us the money, they say, and we can win an election. I was pleased to note that despite these circumstances south of the border, a third party was able to make an impact during the last presidential election there without the funds available to the two major parties. I was pleased that a third party was able to champion a number of causes and rally round it people who were often of dissimilar views but who were ready to support a group which would allow individuals to make a contribution to the political scene without the backing of large sums of money.

Mr. Paltiel indicates that the Conservative Party assessed the possibilities of 50 ridings in Ontario and chose a number to be visited by the leader himself as part of a special attempt to increase support in those ridings. We, too, have hired people to assess the possibilities of ridings and determine in which of them candidates might best be run, and I am sure all political parties have done the same. No people are worse copycats then politicians: if one thinks of something good, another will immediately seek to copy it. We need look no further than the publications which individual members send to their constituents. If someone gets hold of a copy which appears to contain a new idea or involves a new format, it is immediately picked up.

I believe the country would be prepared to see a contribution made to candidates, even a $4 million contribution, if they were sure this was all the election would cost. It may be I get my contributions from the men who work in the mines, or in industry, or on the farms. The other two political parties may get their money from the men who run the multinational corporations. But in the end the money will all come from the men at the bottom. It is they who will pay it, either directly or indirectly. In one case, though, a person makes a donation knowing what he is doing and believing that to do so is in his interest. In the other case they are making an indirect contribution and one which very often will be used against them rather than for them. For these reasons I hope the House will accept the amendment calling for 15 cents.

An hon. Member: Ten cents.

Mr. Peters: My hon. friend brings it down to 10 cents. That sounds like a nice round figure. I wish he had been here when the amendments were being made; he could have moved a reduction to 10 cents. As I was saying, 15 cents represents a little over $2 million, a sizeable amount of money to be made available to candidates for the purpose of carrying on a reasonable campaign. I am aware that it does not go directly to the candidates, but a politician would be very naïve if he did not believe that a contribution made to the central party did not give him at least some measure of political advantage, whether in recognition by the news media or in other ways. I therefore hope the minister responsible for the bill will consider reducing this figure of 30 cents which I and my colleagues believe to be unnecessarily large and not really required for the effective conduct of an election.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There are four motions before us: No. 8, in the name of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard); No. 9, in the name of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), which is identical to motion No. 10 in the name of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin); and No. 11 in the name of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters).

I hope the House will permit me to put the question in this way: Mr. Howard, seconded by Mr. Peters, moves:

No. 8.

That Bill C-203, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses be amended by deleting the words "thirty cents" where they appear in section 13.2(1) of subclause 4(1) and substituting therefor the following:

"fifteen cents".

The motions in the names of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni and the hon. member for Greenwood would delete "thirty cents" and substitute the words "twenty cents". The final motion, in the name of the hon. member for Timiskaming, would delete "thirty cents" and substitute "twenty-five cents". As I indicated earlier, I thought that if a motion carried positively on any divisions that arise from these motions we are now considering, that would dispose of all motions that followed subsequently. Therefore I will put the one in the name of the hon. member for Skeena. All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The three divisions, or the two divisions, or the one division, as the case may be, will be deferred until a later date. The next motion is motion No. 12, in the name of member for Comox-Alberni. Since he is not here, I presume there is someone to move it on his behalf.

Mr. Howard: Regretfully, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has to be, and is, in attendance at the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development which was scheduled to meet at eight o'clock this evening. I have his authority to move this motion on his behalf.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think this would probably require the permission of the House, but I gather this would be a courtesy that is normally extended.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena), for Mr. Barnett, moved:

That Bill C-203, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, be amended by deleting the word "not" where it appears in section 13.2(1.1) of subclause 4(1).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is a point of order arising?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have one brief comment to make. The hon. member is seeking to delete a negative in the clause, and on that ground I think it should be declared out of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Skeena rising on the point of order?

Mr. Howard: Not really, Mr. Speaker. I was rising to speak to the motion, but I will deal with the point of order. This arose in the committee as a result of the examination of the definition of "election expenses". It relates to the question of amounts paid as election expenses. The definition of "election expenses" is given on page 2 of the bill and is:

(a) amounts paid,

(b) liabilities incurred

(c) the commercial value of goods—

And so on. The words we are concerned with here are "amounts paid". Since I knew the practice existed in varying degrees in different parties, I asked whether the words "amounts paid" included donations or contributions or gifts or transfers of money paid out of the national treasury to constituency associations, the official agent in constituency associations, candidates and so on. Initially I thought it would be included because it was an amount paid out of the treasury of the federal branch of the party concerned. As the definition says further on, one of the purposes of these amounts was to promote or oppose directly, and during an election, a particular registered party, or the election of a particular candidate.

The minister in charge of the bill, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), said no, that was not the intention of the definition of election expenses; the intention was that contributions, donations or gifts from the central funds of the party paid to a candidate or official agent were not to be included in the election expenses. Just in case there was any doubt about it, he said that the government proposed to put into the bill later on an amendment to make doubly sure that this was not to be included. The amendment put in is the one we are now seeking to amend.

Mr. Blenkarn: You are seeking to amend an amendment?

Mr. Howard: Yes.

Mr. Blenkarn: How about an amendment to an amendment that you are seeking to amend?

Mr. Howard: I would have thought that my hon. friend from Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) would have been delighted with my grammatical construction in that sentence, which would reflect the education I have received as a result of sitting next to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who advises us on these matters. The amendment I am seeking to amend is shown on page 9 of the bill. This is the amendment that the government put forward in the committee to clarify and to make sure beyond the shadow of a doubt that this kind of expenditure was not included in the "amounts paid" part of the definition of election expenses. Section (1.1) reads as follows:

[Mr. MacEachen.]

In determining, for the purposes of this section, the amount of election expenses incurred by a registered party on account of or in respect of the conduct or management of an election, there shall not be included any amount in respect of contributions or gifts made by or on behalf of the registered party for the use of candidates at the election.

One way to approach this problem would be to vote against section (1.1.), which would remove it from the bill. I say this because, at the very best, there would be doubt as to whether these would be contributions or gifts made by or on behalf of the registered party for the use of the candidate. We would leave in doubt whether contributions should or should not be included under amounts paid for election expenses.

Certainly there was doubt about this in the minister's mind or he would not have brought forward the change in the first place. Certainly there was doubt in my mind, which is understandable; but then there is also doubt in my mind about all kinds of other questions. There is doubt in my mind as to what "amounts paid" might mean. I know that there was doubt in the mind of the cabinet minister responsible for drafting this bill. He said in so many words, "Yes, there is doubt in my mind." He suggested that the relevant portion should be changed. The parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), moved the motion and it carried. He was a member of the committee. He wanted to insert the particular clause in question.

I submit that if we negative it, remove it completely, there will be continuing uncertainty as to whether or not such contributions as I have alluded to should be included under amounts paid. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), the sponsor of this motion, looked at this question carefully. We discussed it among ourselves. We wondered what was the best approach and in the end we felt that an amendment simply to take out the word "not" would be the best way of handling it. The result would not be a direct negative, inasmuch as we should be left with a positive declaration that for the purposes of this section we could determine what are election expenses incurred by a registered party. We would remove any doubt about it. People would know what is meant by amounts paid as defined in the definition section. They would know what those words mean in relation to expenditures. They would know that certain items should be included under amounts paid and certain expenses should be so included. That would be a positive declaration. They would know that there shall be included under amounts paid any amount in respect of a contribution or gift made by or on behalf of the party.

It could not be done the other way, I submit, as much uncertainty would be the result. After all, not all candidates, official agents or chief agents who will perform their functions under this law—incidentally, I hope this will not be the law—will have sat on the committee and heard the involved and detailed discussions that took place. Members in the committee and in the House have alluded to the fantastic input which the committee had in connection with this bill. Even in the minds of committee members who spent hour after hour looking at this question there was doubt.

I submit that if we were to remove this clause we would bring about a great deal of confusion and it would be difficult to figure out what amounts should be included in returns on election expenses. We would not know what amounts of money should be included and what should not be included under amounts paid. Further, even if the parties wanted to do the right thing they would find it extremely difficult to do so. They might do the wrong thing even though they want to do the right thing. For that reason, for the sake of clarity if for no other reason, I suggest this motion must be considered as being in order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) and the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) for their contributions. I think, in making my determination, I will not be bound by considerations of procedural nicety. As both the President of the Privy Council and the hon. member for Skeena are well aware, the proposed clause before us could have been tackled in one or two ways. Either one word could have been taken out, which would have achieved the result of negativing it, or the whole thing could have been knocked out with a positive motion, which also would have resulted in the clause being negatived.

Therefore, I think this is not a question which the Chair ought to resolve. It seems to me this is a positive matter of principle which the House should determine one way or the other. For that reason, without going at great length into the niceties of it, I would say that the question should be put.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni let me say that I am sure he would like to see the subject matter of his motion placed before the House for determination. May I express certain thoughts on his behalf. Let me deal with the sense of the motion. We have just dealt with motions related to limiting expenses. The bill, in a declaratory sense, says that expenditures are to be limited; yet in fact that limit is no limit at all.

The chief agent of a party, and registered agents are authorized under the bill to spend with respect to the conduct or management of an election an amount equal to 30 cents times the number of voters on the voters' list in the riding being contested. In absolute terms, as has been mentioned before, that would permit the party to spend $4.2 million on such an election. We have been seeking to bring about a further limitation with regard to campaign expenses. We have also brought forward suggestions with regard to the manner in which political parties are to keep books once they have concluded their campaign expenditures.

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a question of privilege. I am just coming from the Confederation building. There is no bus service from the Confederation building to the House of Commons. Buses are running in downtown Ottawa but the members' service—

An hon. Member: From Parliament Hill.

An hon. Member: From the Confederation building.

Mr. Roy (Laval): I beg your pardon? There is no service at all, Mr. Speaker. I had to come here with the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay), by truck—

An hon. Member: A tow truck.

Mr. Roy (Laval): —bearing licence number D16457 and driven by Mr. Arthur Rochon. We have no service at all as I just said. Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege because this has to do with services from which electors get the benefit in the final analysis. We have to be here. I came here to work like other members, but the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) presented a motion yesterday, and it was defeated by 182 to 1. He keeps on with his filibuster. I was hoping, Mr. Speaker, that members would be provided with transportation service from the Confederation building since they cannot come to the House of Commons at the present time. As a matter of fact, the approaches to the Confederation building have not even been cleared up.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hope the Speaker of the House of Commons is never responsible for acts of God or for removing them, but I think the Chair would have to recognize that members are not able to take part in the debate tonight because of weather conditions. I think some leeway should be given to them to make their contributions on these points when the House resumes tomorrow, or next week, or the week after, or at some other time.

Mr. Howard: In January or February the weather will be about the same, Mr. Speaker. I have great sympathy with the question of privilege raised by the hon. member. I do not have my office in the Confederation Building. However, I was at the Confederation Building—not that this puts me in any different class from anybody else. I was visiting there. I came out of the Confederation Building and came up that way at about 25 minutes after seven. I did not have occasion to use a truck. I took the old-fashioned way of walking, and I arrived here in ample time.

I do not think that acts of God such as snowstorms and things of that nature should deter members from getting here. I got my feet extremely wet in the process; they are still wet. Nonetheless, I arrived here and my colleague from New Westminster is here as well. I do not know whether he walked, flew or how he got here, but he did get here.

The other reference about conducting a filibuster may be as accurate a statement as the hon. member will ever utter in this House. I am amazed at his perceptiveness, because it took him so long to discover this. Of course, he has remedies available to him and these remedies are also available to the party to which he belongs. Surely one should not be castigated for trying to examine in as close a manner as possible all the fine, intriguing points in this bill which will have a massive effect on the electorate and upon political parties. This is what we are setting out to do in this discussion.

[Translation]

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Roy (Laval): It is not a matter of exercise, as the hon. member said. However, it did give me some exercise, which I appreciated as I am used to it. But I am rising on a question of privilege to ask why the area around the Confederation building was not cleared, as is now being done on the hill. This did give us some excellent exercise however and we appreciated it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I think that the hon. member has a good argument about snow removal, but I believe that the Deputy Speaker has already ruled on that and I do not consider the point raised by the hon. member as a question of privilege.

[English]

Mr. Howard: The amendment before us seeks to deal with the very serious question of campaign fund expenditures. We all know that money is a pretty potent force at election time. We know there is a tendency for candidates, particularly for registered parties, to think that the more lavish they make the brochure, the more money they spend with an advertising agency in preparing television plugs and spots, the more the political parties concerned can sell its image. They tend to draw a distinction in the sense of image which is not very credible. There is an attempt to develop mechanisms that are not designed to promote public discussion, to establish conversation in the community or to enlighten people about the issues in the campaign.

We all know this. No party is very different from another in that regard. They are designed to influence, to manipulate or to have an effect. They are designed to be attractive primarily to the apolitical voter; they are designed primarily for that person in our society, and there are quite a number of them. By my assessment, 20 per cent to 25 per cent of those who vote are within the group that has the general reference apolitical. These people do not pay attention to politics. The campaign expenditures are designed to have an impact upon or influence that type of voter. That type of voter has no sort of involvement or connection with the political process because he does not generally pay any attention whatsoever to politics, government, legislative items, policies, or who did or did not do what in the political arena. It is considered that he is likely to be influenced at the emotional level more than at the mental level, the level of thought, analysis and logic.

We know that it costs a good deal more in production and agency fees if someone is hired to work out a slick, smooth 30-second television shot designed with no other thought in mind than to impress or make an impact upon the voter. One would pay a good deal more for this type of television program than for the more honest one involving a five-minute period or longer in which one converses in detail or in depth about a party's ideas, programs and policies in an attempt by this mechanism to get across a point of view or an understanding to the general public. There is a tendency not to do that sort of thing and there is a tendency toward the other, that is, toward buying advertising expertise. There is a tendency to go to those agencies which spend the whole year around developing ads designed to sell toothpaste or underarm deodorant, or whatever else might be sold by someone who wishes to sell it.

In respect of a political party, this is regrettable. This is not necessarily a severe criticism of a political party but it is a sad commentary, I think, upon the level of political demand in the country if a political party feels it should go to an agency and ask it to make up a package for it, but rather than call it Crest, call it NDP; do not call it Arrid but call it Liberal or whatever. Just substitute the political party's name for the name of the mouthwash and sell it in the same way. That costs a lot of money.

An hon. Member: What would you call it?

Mr. Howard: There is an old-fashioned country word that people use, not only people on farms. I worked in logging camps and underground in hard rock mines, and I know what that word is. It has been used in this House; it appears in Hansard at one stage in reference to a speech made by the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) and appropriately declared as such. There is a word for it that I think probably we should not use at the moment, not when one is carefully thinking about what one has to say. It is a word that might be blurted out somewhere, a word that may be euphemistically called male bovine excrement.

Mr. Blenkarn: That is not very parliamentary.

Mr. Howard: It is a perfectly satisfactory parliamentary expression. None of our parties is distinctly different from any other in that regard, in that we tend to find the most expensive way to run an election campaign within the limits of our budget; we tend to move up as high as we possibly can. I am glad the hon. member for Trinity has come here. I made a passing reference to some remarks he made. They were not unkind. They were true, correct and accurate, but not unkind.

In any event, we tend to find within the limits of the money we have available the most expensive things to do in an election campaign. We are not content any longer to run off an old-fashioned, mimeographed bulletin, black ink on white paper. What we want now are two or three-colour jobs, and the slicker the paper, the better; the more crisp and so-called professional it looks, the better. We do not want a campaign brochure but something that looks like Playboy or Cosmopolitan in its visual impact.

Mr. Blenkarn: Did you not see the NDP pamphlet in the last election?

Mr. Howard: I am just telling my friend that no party is distinctly different from any other in that regard.

Mr. Blenkarn: When you have international unions to support you, how can you be different?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I know it is late in the day, but I think the hon. member knows the rules of the House. When an hon. member has the floor, he has the right to speak and not be interrupted by other hon. members.

Mr. Howard: Right on, Mr. Speaker; thank you very much. It is the hon. member for Mississauga who made those interjections. He is not nearly as competent as was the hon. member for Peel South, when there was a member for Peel South here. The hon. member for Mississauga had an opportunity a moment ago to stand up and be counted like a man with respect to the type of union contributions to which he referred, but he ducked the issue. Why? Because he wanted to continue to protect their source of funds. He was not concerned about cutting off anybody else's source of funds, but he wanted to continue to protect his party's source of funds from south of the border and make sure that no one knew about it and that they could come in by the back door, that it was folded money, unidentifiable money.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of personal privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. First I would like to ask the hon. member whether he is rising on a point of order or a question of privilege.

Mr. Blenkarn: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member knows full-well that it is only his party that is relying on international union contributions, that these contributions do not come to the PC party, that this party does not rely—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hon. member knows very well that this is a point of debate or opinion. I think the Chair must tell him right away that the hon. member who has the floor is the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard).

Mr. Howard: I would have thought the hon. member for Mississauga would have got that message before. I do not want to go any further in that direction. All this information was set down on the record earlier today in great detail, with great clarity and precision, with complete disclosure while the hon. member for Mississauga was not here to listen to it. If he would like to find the truth about that matter, let him read Hansard. It is there.

I would get back to the amendment before us. As I said, all political parties have this tendency to produce the most slick brochure possible, thinking that that will have the greatest impact and that it will attract people to vote for us because we are able to present whatever it is we have to present. We have a manner of presenting it that would appear attractive, that would appear as if careful thought had gone into it, that would look appealing to the eye. Our television programs tend to do the same thing. We run newspaper advertisements that are designed not to impart information to the general public about anything, and not to indicate that one party or another has a particular philosophy or a particular policy or a particular program, but designed to leave the impression, in the mind of a voter, of a particular name. We have posters. A classic one is that of a minister of national defence cuddling up to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and whispering. This was on a billboard in Winnipeg. It was not designed for any other purpose except to say that the then minister of national defence and the Prime Minister were pretty close buddy-buddies, so much so that they whisper confidentialities to each other in full public view on the billboard.

Mr. Blenkarn: He is in bed half the time when there is an emergency. I guess that is what happens to the Prime Minister also.

Mr. Howard: I have no commentary to make about things of that nature. Those are interruptions from the hon. member for Mississauga. I want to deal with the items that are before us and I hope he will not try to drag the conversation in that direction. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that you have warned him a sufficient number of times that he should stay in order. Now we come to the matter of how much these national elections are to cost.

Mr. Blenkarn: It will not cost you that much while David and Pierre are together.

Mr. Howard: We want them to cost more. One thing I have noticed about these chatterboxes in the Conservative Party is that they make their most sensible comments from the position in which they are now. It may well be that this is because it is that part of their anatomy that is resting at that particular time.

Mr. Stackhouse: Will you be reading from the telephone directory now? You have not done that yet.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I wonder whether the hon. member has terminated his speech, or is some interruption keeping him from expressing his ideas? I would point out to hon. members that we are getting closer to the adjournment hour tonight, but still order must be maintained. The hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) had been asking questions. I would plead with him not to interrupt any more as the Chair is having a hard time following the speaker who has the floor.

● (2140)

Mr. Brewin: May I ask the hon. member a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Does the hon. member for Skeena agree?

Mr. Howard: I would be more than delighted, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Brewin: This amending motion No. 12 seeks to take the word "not" out of proposed section 13.2(1.1) of subclause 4(1). Would the hon. member who is moving this motion tell us the effect of that? I haven't the vagues idea.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. member for Greenwood is kind of embarrassed and is trying to get us back on the track again. Probably if I could put it in one sentence it may help to clarify the whole matter. Most times when you seek to take the knots out of something, you unravel it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard: That is what we are seeking to do here, to remove one of the knots and unravel, or ravel—I am not sure which is correct not being a person who has done much knitting lately. However, we are attempting to unravel a very involved and complicated bit of political declaration.

An hon. Member: Why don't you try a zipper?

Election Expenses

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, sometimes I cannot hear these comments and I let them go by. But seriously, in reponse to the previous question, what is involved is simply that there is a provision in the bill, that we just dealt with, that says the limitation on campaign expenditures by political parties shall not exceed 30 cents times the number of voters in those ridings within which they run candidates. The key words are that that "election expenses" shall not exceed that amount of money, whatever the multiplication comes to.

We have the figure of roughly $4.2 million if parties run candidates in all ridings. When the matter was being considered by the committee we inquired, with respect to the definition of election expenses, whether or not within that definition there was to be included the amount of money that a registered party, or the central headquarters of a party, the national office or whatever they want to call it, gave as donations or contributions to the various constituencies and candidates. This has ranged anywhere from $4,000 to $7,000 in some areas, averaging $5,000 to $6,000 per candidate for the two old-line parties. There was doubt in the committee whether or not that type of expenditure by a national party was to be included within the definition of election expenses. The President of the Privy Council said so, that it was not to include that. If other words, the limitation on election expenses would be 30 cents times the number of voters on the list, plus whatever a political party wanted to donate to its respective candidates running under its banner in the particular ridings. And for more clarity he moved this amendment, which is now before us as 13.(2)(1.1) on page 9 of the bill, and which says:

> In determining, for the purposes of this section, the amount of election expenses incurred by a registered party on account of or in respect of the conduct or the management of an election, there shall not be included any amount in respect of contributions or gifts made by or on behalf of the registered party for the use of candidates at the election.

We seek to take the "not" out of that so that when it is removed it will clearly say that the 30 cents times the number of voters on the voters' list, whatever total that comes to, will include the contributions that the party makes to its registered candidates. In other words it would have the effect, within the 30 cents factor, of limiting that by the amount the party contributes to candidates. I do not know whether Hansard got the last interjection, Mr. Speaker, but the hon. member for Greenwood said that I have got him convinced. So I have got his vote tied up tight. Now I have only to convince some 260 other members of the House.

Looking, for argument's sake, at the Liberal Party, Mr. Speaker, this would not affect the campaign fund expenditures of that party one iota because in the last federal election they expended $1,321,989 to cover radio time and television time, printed media and other advertising, leader's tour, travel, surveys, administration and the like, and in addition to that contributed something in the neighbourhood of $5,000 on the average per candidate running for the Liberal Party.

On just a very rough estimate of $5,000 times 264 candidates, that came to something in the neighbourhood of $1.3 million. So that in addition to the other $1.3 million they spent in the last election campaign, they could make this

$5,000 contribution or donation to each one of the candidates running for the Liberal Party and only come to an amount of $2.6 million, which would still leave ample room for expansion within the $4.2 million available according to the formula in the bill.

I know that revealing this kind of information about a $5,000 contribution on average from the national headquarters of the Liberal Party has caused a number of Liberal members in the House to raise their eyebrows and look in my direction. Obviously they are the ones who did not get $5,000; they got much less. Maybe at that time they were not in favour with the leader of the party, and he figured that if he cut back on these contributions they would not have much chance of getting at him. It is obvious that he did that with a number of members of the previous parliament because they were defeated in that campaign.

Mr. Peters: Maybe that is how he got his $100 million or $200 million.

Mr. Howard: No, he would not have accumulated his $100 million or $200 million that way. With respect to the PC party, again talking in terms of what is indicated with regard to their activities, they also would not be affected one bit because their total expenditure, according to Mr. Finlay MacDonald who was, and maybe still is, their national campaign chairman at the time he provided this information, total PC national office expenditures in the 1972 campaign were $4,520,321 which, if the 30 cents formula were applied, would be just about right where the limit was; and that included the amounts of money allocated to constituencies, or remitted to constituencies, and Professor Paltiel points out that the constituency allocations appeared to average out at $6,600.

Some provinces and their constituencies, like Alberta, were entirely self-sustaining. So what the total contribution was is hard to say from that, except that Mr. MacDonald does say that the total remittance to provincial allotments and constituencies was some $1,748,000—that was the national campaign—bringing it up to a total of $4.1 million.

If we are seriously concerned about trying to effectively and reasonably limit campaign expenses, then we should be thinking seriously about either limiting or reducing the amount of that 30 cents. That can be done by one of those deferred divisions or by taking out the word "not" and saying that we had reached the peak. Both the Liberals and Conservatives, by their own statements, had concluded that that was a peak expenditure last time, and it was a peak position in so far as finding the flow of campaign contributions to the treasury is concerned. I think they will find that the more campaigns cost, the more difficult it will be to raise money. I know that is true of my own constituency and the organization to which I belong. We have found it more and more difficult all the time to raise money.

An hon. Member: No wonder.

Mr. Howard: We have a great deal of difficulty, Mr. Speaker. Somebody says he wondered why, or "no wonder," or whatever. We believe in the principle that you control and dominate and finance and run a political party from the community, from individual memberships and individual participants. We raise our moneys in Skeena from the contributions of individuals in addition to the membership fees to the party. All of this is tabled. All of it is public information and I have it with me now. If the hon. member for Mississauga wants it, I will gladly get it for him and table it in the House. That is how we obtain our money, purely within the constituency from individual contributions and by running raffles, dances and social events. Lots of people do this. We do not print it and we do not phone IT & T, IBM or any of the others.

Mr. Stackhouse: What about the UAW?

Mr. Howard: My hon. friend indicated UAW. I guess this is a question—do we phone up UAW? I do not even know who UAW is.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but he is not addressing the Chair and I do not know of any rule that he should answer a question that is not officially asked in the House by an hon. member. I should like him to address the Chair.

Mr. Howard: I apologize for that, Mr. Speaker. It was a transgression on my part. I should like to indicate that if anybody wants to get recognized in a formal way and ask questions, I will be very pleased to answer them.

An hon. Member: Next week, too?

Mr. Howard: Certainly next week. In fact, I may have the answers next week. I do not have all the answers right now. Mr. Speaker, that is why we have difficulty in raising money. A few years ago in my constituency I looked at the returns the other candidates had filed. I am sure they looked at mine, and that is all right. I looked at the return filed by the Liberal Party and the return for that campaign within the constituency run by the Liberal Party, and the Liberal candidate showed an expenditure of $5,000-odd. It showed one contribution exactly equal to the expenditures, and the source of that contribution was the Liberal Federation of Canada. I know that the Liberal Party raised money in Skeena in the election campaign, but I do not know where it went. I also know that a lot of Liberal Party members in that riding would like to know because the Liberal Federation of Canada paid the whole shot.

The Conservative Party received contributions some years ago, too. The Conservative candidate in the riding listed his source of campaign funds and one was a contribution of $2,000 or $4,000 from one Frederick Field, and accountant in Vancouver. When the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was Prime Minister and had some authority for appointments, lo and behold, shortly after the election this Frederick Field was made a member of the board of the Bank of Canada and the Industrial Development Bank. We raised the question and Mr. Field said, and I gather quite rightly, "Good heavens; I thought I got here on merit and not by any contribution". It turned out that Frederick Field was simply the treasurer of the Conservative Party in British Columbia at that time. The Conservative candidate had make an error and instead of listing the Conservative Association, or whatever it was, he listed Frederick Field because that was who signed the cheque. It really did not come from Frederick Field at all, but from some unknown source.

We have to seriously face the question of whether we are really concerned about continuing to think that the more money we spend, to more we will be able to influence voters. To continue in that direction, I submit, tends to demean us as individuals, tends to demean political parties and tends to place them in the same class as mouthwash and toothpaste companies. Instead of being the Progressive Conservative Party, it might be Proctor-Gamble next time, or whoever makes those sorts of things. That will be the name that will appear by mistake. The advertising agency, instead of saying "Vote Progressive Conservative" will be saying "Vote Proctor-Gamble". It will not make much difference to the advertising agency which advertises the idea.

POST OFFICE—TIME TAKEN FOR SPECIAL DELIVERY LETTER MAILED IN REGINA TO REACH MISSISSAUGA—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, on December 6 I asked the Postmaster General (Mr. Ouellet) if he knew where Mississauga was and how it could conceivably take five days for a letter send special delivery and express, with a 40-cent stamp on it, to come from Regina, Saskatchewan, to Mississauga. There is at least one direct flight per day by Air Canada from Regina to Mississauga. On November 21 a Mrs. Stutt went into the Regina head office of the post office of this government in Regina, Saskatchewan, and deposited with the postmaster's clerk there a letter marked "Special Delivery" and "Express" containing four Grey Cup tickets. Five days later, one day after the Grey Cup had been played at Toronto, that special delivery, express letter was delivered by the postmaster's servant to my constituents, Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Robb in Mississauga.

In answering that question, the postmaster said he was going to spend a lot of money on the Gateway post office in Mississauga: that was the only answer he had. Sir, citizens of this country, relying on the monopoly system of postal delivery, supposedly guaranteed, having spent 40 cents, not 8 cents, on a special delivery express letter, having spoken to the clerk in the main office in the post office in Regina, find that their letters took five complete days to be delivered—more than five if one counts the whole of the period between the 21st and the 26th. I repeat, this was a letter marked "Special Delivery, "Express" on which a 40-cent stamp had been placed, and there is a direct airline service between the two centres at least once a day.

That is about the worst case I have come across, but it is not the only case. At least once or twice a week I personally write to the Postmaster General, and my constituency office writes to the postmaster's officials in Mississauga several times a week with respect to the kind of mail service the city of Mississauga receives. I want to remind the Postmaster General that Mississauga is larger than the city of Victoria, the capital of British Columbia; that it is larger than St. John's, the capital of Newfoundland; that it is larger than Regina, the capital city of Saskatchewan; larger by far than the city of Charlottetown, the capital of Prince Edward Island; and larger, indeed, than the City of Quebec which is the capital of the fair province of Quebec. Nevertheless, this city receives a postal service upon which the major industries within it cannot rely.

I have communicated to the Postmaster General evidence from the St. Lawrence Cement Company that it takes six days for special delivery of documentation to Mississauga from Chicago. Indeed, the St. Lawrence Cement Company has advised me that in no circumstances would it trust the Post Office of Canada; it would prefer to use the services of special bank courriers for the delivery of mail and important documentation.

Sometimes we in Canada cannot get too enthusiastic about the difficulties facing commercial organizations. After all, they only meet huge payrolls and pay enormous taxes to support such ineffective operations as I have been describing! There are people like Helen Friese who delivered evidence to me showing that it took mail from July 14 to September 10 to get from Port Credit to Toronto.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Shame.

Mr. Blenkarn: I have also received information from councillors of the city of Mississauga that even within the city mail sometimes takes six days to go from the sub-post office at Port Credit to the sub-post office at Malton. There are people who have been residents in my community since it was called the township of Toronto. They bring me evidence that mail in that part of the city of Mississauga still served by rural delivery usually takes seven days to come from Toronto.

This sort of thing goes on and on. Every time I write the Postmaster General about the kind of service Canadians expect, that people in a developed urban location like the city of Mississauga are entitled to receive from their government, I get wishy-washy, beautiful letters. Sometimes the department sends its officials to talk to my constituents. They give them the finest of soft soap. If they would spend half the effort on service that they spend on soft soaping and advertising their new direct service, their guaranteed delivery system, their wonderful six-letter codes, and give this community the kind of service it received with the pony express prior to the steam engine, we would be happy.

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I would briefly remind the hon. member that Toronto Post Office employees are handling about 5 million pieces of mail a day. I would also remind the hon. member that at this time of the year the employees of my department are handling about 10 million pieces of mail a day. Of course, we admit that errors are possible and I would like the hon. member to think that with a percentage of errors of only one per cent about 200,000 people would be entitled to complain for late mail.

I think that the hon. member has been slightly exaggerating in his speech and if he is in a position to give a few examples of errors I am convinced that with some goodwill he will find that the mailing services have been quite efficient in hundreds of cases. Perhaps he forgets that for one delayed letter 99 others are delivered on time. I think I should also emphasize that throughout the Post Office administration the improvement of our service depends to a large extent on factors independent from my department such as weather, road conditions and delayed planes or trains which are so many factors liable to influence the punctuality of mail deliveries.

There is also the fact that human nature is fallible and mistakes are bound to happen in the handling of mail. But I do not think that the hon. member is in a position to complain mainly because he is from Mississauga and that in reply to his letter I informed him on December 6 that precisely in Mississauga, we would build an ultra-modern post office to sort out the mail automatically, help improve considerably the mail handling and make that service much more efficient.

To my mind, the hon. member must think that everything works properly, under normal conditions. I urge him to make a personal inquiry. He gives me as an example a letter mailed from Regina which reached its destination too late. If tthe hon. member mails his letter before 11 a.m. in Regina, one can normally guarantee delivery in Mississauga on the next day; if the letter is mailed after 11 a.m., in the same city, it will not normally reach its destination the day after the next. In closing, I therefore say to the hon. member that, in most cases, we respect the time limits we set ourselves. When delays occur, unfortunately, we apologize for them. We strive earnestly to improve the service.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CHRISTMAS ADJOURNMENT

On the order: Motions.

December 19, 1973—The Minister of Transport:

That, when the House adjourns on Friday, December 21, 1973 it shall stand adjourned until Wednesday, December 26, 1973; and

That the hours of sitting on Wednesday, December 26, 1973 shall be 7.00 o'clock p.m. to 10.30 o'clock p.m.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in connection with this motion having to do with the adjournment of the House. As hon. members may realize, certain discussions have been taking place among representatives of the parties as to an alternative method of dealing with this question. These discussions are still under way and probably will not be completed until some time this afternoon. Therefore I recommend that it would be in the interests of the House and of these discussions if we agreed to defer the calling of this motion to later today. If we fail in our efforts, we will call the motion at that time.

Mr. Bell: We agree.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed and so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

IMMIGRATION

STATEMENT ON PROCESSING OF APPLICATIONS BY CHILEAN REFUGEES TO COME TO CANADA

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I announced on November 30 in the House that the Canadian government would apply the provisions of Canada's ongoing refugee program to those people who wish to settle in Canada as a result of the situation in Chile. I would like to report on the results of the program to date.

Applications respecting approximately 1,400 persons have been received. One hundred and eighty-four visas have been issued and up to 213 additional visas could be issued once applicants respond to our request that they come forward for their medical examinations. They have had other screenings, so they have been in contact with us. Many of these have indicated that they do not wish to come to Canada until next spring.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Why wait for spring?

Mr. Bell: They are waiting for a change in the government.

Mr. Andras: We will have to get the snowplows out for them. An additional 369 persons only require successful completion of background checks before being issued visas. Normally these checks would take about six months but under our accelerated program these have been reduced to one to four weeks on Chilean nationals and two months' duration for others. All applications received to date should be completed by January 31, with many being completed before the end of December. These figures will indicate to you, Mr. Speaker, the results of my statement of November 30 that accelerated immigration processing would take place but that medical and background checks would be carried out.

We are endeavouring to ascertain the number of persons who have been delayed by the lack of transportation. Contingency transportation arrangements are being planned for implementation when and if necessary.

In respect of adjustment and settlement arrangements, a number of groups have come forward with offers of assistance, and I am assured that the situation is well in hand.

Chilean Refugees

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in response to the statement the minister made in the House on November 30 concerning Chilean refugees I stressed at that time that the Progressive Conservative Party had always shown a willingness on the basis of humanitarian grounds and compassionate reasons to accept refugees from other countries who wished to relocate in Canada. We still maintain that position. In his statement on November 30 the minister gave the impression that there were only a couple of hundred people who had expressed a desire to come to Canada. Today his statement indicates there are already 1,400 people who wish to come to Canada.

In my reply to the minister then I expressed the opinion that certain caution should be observed and maintained in respect of Chilean refugees. I raised the question of the nationality of these refugees and whether they were Chileans or in fact people from various Latin American countries who now wanted to come to Canada via Chile. We have not received an answer to that question. We also raised a question and a caution concerning whether or not sufficient security checks were being implemented. At that time we insisted that stringent security checks should be maintained in all cases. The Progressive Conservative Party is not impressed to date with the security practices of the immigration branch. The government has allowed well known criminals and international agitators to come to Canada and find a haven here. This is something the government should look squarely in the eye and take very positive action in regard to it.

The government should also make full disclosure of the specific number of Chilean refugees who have applied to come to Canada, their nationality and what security checks have been maintained. We hold to the position that we are interested in helping genuine international refugees, people who want to come to this country and contribute in a positive way to the social, economic and cultural life of Canada.

The minister also indicated in his statement that the department has accelerated the processing of these applications. I remind the minister that many people who have applied for landed immigrant status from outside Canada and have sponsoring relatives in Canada have waited for years to come to Canada without any positive response from the government. This includes people from the United Kingdom. In the first nine months of this year we had more applications than last year by people wanting to come to this country. I suggest to the government that it should take strong and positive steps in that respect.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, the entire premise on which the government based its refugee program was the urgency in respect of these people who are political refugees because their well-being and their lives were in danger. Yet today in his statement the minister said that many of these people have indicated they do not wish to come to Canada until spring. Obviously the effect of winter in Canada has already extended to Chile. These people have become aware of it. Where is the urgency if these people can wait until spring? Why do they not come now? I suggest this entire question should be re-examined and a full disclosure made by the minister in charge.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, when the minister made his statement on November 30 that the people dislodged by the coup in Chile would be given refuge in Canada and treated as refugees and that their cases would be expedited, we welcomed the announcement. Since that date, and particularly in the last few days, I have been receiving, as no doubt other hon. members have, information from Santiago, from Panama, from Honduras and from Mexico of delays and in some cases destitution amongst those who have applied to come to Canada.

There are three causes mirrored in the minister's statement. The first is the delay in medical checks; second, the delay in background checks and, third, difficulties of transportation. We are told that, out of 1,400 persons who have applied, 184 visas have been issued and up to 215 additional visas can be issued when medical examinations are completed. I would like to ask the minister how many persons have actually come to Canada and how that number compares with the over 700 who have arrived in Sweden and France from Chile.

We all appreciate the necessity of background checks, but I see a striking contrast between background checks, which are said to take four weeks in the case of Chilean nationals and two months for others, and what happened at the time of the flood of Hungarian and Czechoslovakian refugees when background checks took a day or two and those people, out of humanitarian reasons, were allowed to enter this country. I suggest that the process of background checks must be speeded up or a simpler method found. I would like to ask the minister also whether the medical staff is adequate. I am informed it is not, that one of the reasons for the delay is an inadequate medical staff to check on those who have applied, at our invitation, to come to Canada.

The minister said in his statement that "we are endeavouring to ascertain the number of persons who have been delayed by lack of transportation." Why at this stage, months after this situation arose, are we still endeavouring to ascertain whether or not transportation is available? Other countries have provided airlifts. I suggested on November 30 that we could provide airlifts. I ask the minister again: Why have we not had a greater sense of urgency in dealing with the question of transportation rather than endeavouring now, months later, to ascertain the number of people who have been delayed by lack of transportation?

There is another serious problem that has arisen. I understand that, with respect to at least some of these refugees, the military junta in Chile has set a deadline, the end of this year, and while we dilly-dally around the possibility of some of these victims of the coup coming to Canada may be cut off by the junta itself. The minister shakes his head. I would be glad to hear from him at some stage whether in fact that deadline exists. It certainly did exist, but if it has been changed I am delighted to hear it.

We still require the utmost sense of urgency if the minister's good intentions are not to be frustrated and if Canada's reputation in the international field is to be maintained as we hope it will be.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, I have just been given the minister's statement. I note that he wants to keep the House informed about the activities of his department. I also note that the accelerated program is helping to speed up the decisions. Moreover—and this surprises me somewhat—the statement says about the procedures to follow:

—these have been reduced to one to four weeks on Chilean nationals and two months duration for others.

I understand that these are special circumstances and especially in the name of humanitarian feelings, we do not object to helping people in trouble. However, we must not forget that Canada has a yet unsolved unemployment problem. We should therefore take care of the many people that we shall be bringing in from foreign countries, as this will certainly not help our unemployment situation.

It is also in order to mention, since this has happened before, that we should take some precautions to prevent Canada from becoming a shelter for political refugees who could contribute in bringing trouble to the Canadian people.

Once again, we do not object to this for special cases after the background checks have been made, but we should act with a lot of prudence.

VIOLENCE IN JUNIOR HOCKEY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity of which I have notified the responsible minister.

Considering that it is the duty of each Canadian citizen to see to the constant improvement of our national sport, hockey and that among juniors brutality if not violence seems to become the main attraction according to certain recent reports, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser):

That this House unanimously invite the minister responsible for amateur sports in Canada to consider the possibility of a thorough inquiry regarding violence among juniors, in order to make those involved in junior hockey in Canada understand that for young people, at that stage, hockey should be in the first place a training school in the best interests of our national sport.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity, so the motion cannot be put.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker—

SUGGESTED HALTING OF CONSTRUCTION OF JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 on a matter of pressing and urgent necessity to the negative people of James Bay. Since the Supreme Court of Canada has decided not to hear the appeal of the James Bay Indians against continued construction of the massive hydroelectric project which Mr. Justice Malouf describes as causing irreparable damage to the native population, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark):

That this House instruct the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to arrange with the Quebec government for an immediate halt to construction until such time as an acceptable political settlement of the Indian claims can be negotiated.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands. It requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

SHORTAGE OF SOREL METAL—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity having regard to the critical shortages of sorel metal in this country, a commodity on which many industries are heavily dependent. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie):

That the shortages of sorel metal be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs and furthermore that the government give immediate consideration to taking interim measures to ensure an adequate supply of this commodity.

Mr. Speaker: This motion also requires the unanimous consent of the House under Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

CF-5 AIRCRAFT—MANUFACTURE BY CANADAIR—LAWSUIT BY NORTHROP CORPORATION AGAINST FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Did the government, prior to the recent legal action by the Northrop Corporation of Los Angeles, undertake consultations with officials of Canadair Limited of Montreal and with the Northrop Corporation with a view to ascertaining why the licence to build the CF-5 fighter aircraft in Canada has been cancelled and, if so, what was the outcome of those consultations?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter that is being handled by my colleague, the Minister of Supply and Services.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport but since he is not here I will address it to the Minister of Supply and Services or the Prime Minister. I should like to know whether the Prime Minister or—

An hon. Member: Here he is.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Will the minister assure the House, in view of the current situation involving this controversy with the Canadian aerospace industry through Canadair and through the action of the United States Northrop Corporation and the possible lawsuit involving the Canadian aerospace industry and Canadair, that he will not proceed to have Air Canada involved through Comstock in this particular industry at this time?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is something which is now being considered, the relationship between Comstock and Air Canada. No decision has been taken yet but this is something we are actively considering now.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

CF-5 AIRCRAFT—POSSIBILITY OF LAWSUITS ARISING FROM SALES TO OTHER COUNTRIES—FINANCIAL PLANS TO MEET COST OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Supply and Services. Did the minister make the cabinet aware of the possibility of lawsuits if sales agreements were entered into with other countries in this regard, and were there any financial contingency plans for meeting the eventual cost of this CF-5 agreement?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, this is an important matter, although it remains of an administrative nature. A few weeks ago, I made a firm bid to the Northrup Corporation. I even invited them to join the federal government in bringing this conflict before Canadian courts, the difference in interests being so significant. This concerns the sale of aircraft to a foreign country.

As to the conversion of F-5s into CF-5s, Northrup Corporation is instituting proceedings against the federal government. Perhaps I should add that Canadair, a subsidiary of an American corporation, is also involved.

It is unfortunate that we should have to go to court, but this is the option of the Northrup Corporation.

There is a third factor in this conflict, which concerns compensation to the Canadian industry. I feel this is very important, and we shall have to defend our rights, as far as this factor is concerned.

CF-5 AIRCRAFT—ALLEGED MISHANDLING OF FUNDS BY CANADIAN COMMERCIAL CORPORATION IN SALE TO VENEZUELA

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Supply and Services. CF-5 AIRCRAFT—CABINET APPROVAL OF NEGOTIATIONS FOR SALE TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES—EFFECT OF PRODUCTION LICENCE CANCELLATION

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, may I direct one final supplementary to the Minister of National Defence. How will cancellation of the CF-5 production licence affect Canada's defence plans?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it will not affect them in any way.

CF-5 AIRCRAFT—EFFECT OF NORTHROP LAWSUIT ON PLANS TO CHANGE ROLE FROM FIGHTER TO TRAINER

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. Is the present situation going to result in an alteration of Department of National Defence plans to change the role of the CF-5 from that of a fighter aircraft to that of a trainer?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker.

CHILEAN REFUGEES—STEPS TO EXPEDITE MEDICAL AND BACKGROUND CHECKS OF THOSE WISHING TO COME TO CANADA

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration apropos the statement he made a few moments ago. What steps has he taken or does he contemplate to expedite the medical and background checks of those who have applied to come to Canada from Chile, either directly or indirectly?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, with regard to medical checks the problem, quite frankly, has been that some of the applicants who have been processed in other ways and have been asked to come forward to complete the whole processing, by virtue of undergoing medical checks have chosen not to do so. We are equipped to handle these medical checks very quickly indeed and are keen to do so. With regard to background checks, in some cases these take a little longer. We are taking special measures and we have augmented our staff down there to accelerate this process as well, although we want to exercise the necessary thoroughness in that process.

Mr. Brewin: I referred to the fact that at one stage, at any rate, the military government of Chile said they were fixing a deadline of December 31 for some, if not all, refugees who sought to leave the country. The minister indicated that was no longer the case. Can he tell us what the situation now is?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the accurate information we are getting is that the military government of Chile had indicated to all embassies in Chile that people in the embassy itself who were there as a safe haven had to be prepared to leave by December 11, and all diplomatic posts were instructed to submit lists of people in their care to the military government of Chile with regard to applications for safe conduct. Our embassy, which now contains some 55 people, submitted its list on December 10 with applications for safe conduct, and we have not had a response from the government of Chile. We anticipate that the response will come within two weeks from that period. We have, I might say, booked 80 seats on a Canadian Pacific Airlines flight on December 31 in anticipation of a possible need to get these people out of Chile. However, we cannot take them out until the government of Chile gives us safe conducts for them.

CHILEAN REFUGEES—REQUEST FOR NATIONALITY OF APPLICANTS TO COME TO CANADA AND NUMBERS SEEKING TEMPORARY HAVEN OR PERMANENT STATUS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration concerning the statement he made today. Can the minister break down the nationality of the approximately 1,400 applicants whose applications have been received by the department to date?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I had that information with my statement but I sent it to Hansard and I regret that I do not have the actual breakdown. I will get it for the hon. member and make sure that he has the information very quickly.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, may I ask another supplementary in the same vein. While the minister is furnishing that information, would he also indicate what numbers have indicated a desire to come to Canada as a temporary haven and how many have applied to come to Canada to receive landed immigrant status and eventually Canadian citizenship?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the bulk of the applications to which I referred are applications for permanent residence, that is, for landed immigrant status. There are some people, particularly in the Canadian embassy, who do not wish to do so. For instance, of the 55 people in the embassy in Santiago only 29 have indicated a desire to come to Canada. The rest are seeking haven somewhere else, and that is the situation we are exploring. Among the rest there is a variation in numbers, particularly among those who are in camps outside Chile. Those we do not consider to carry the same degree of urgency, in the sense that they are not in Chile itself and they are, contrary to other reports, being looked after in the way of accommodation, food, shelter, pocket money and that sort of thing.

TRANSPORT

MEASURES TO KEEP ST. LAWRENCE RIVER OPEN THIS WINTER TO ASSURE OIL DELIVERIES TO MONTREAL

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

Is he considering taking the necessary measures to further facilitate winter navigation on the St. Lawrence River up to Montreal and thus ensure as far as possible the transportation of oil products up to the Montreal harbour and continue to fight the price increase of oil on the Quebec market this winter?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, all depends on the Ship Traffic Branch. Was the hon. member thinking about the navigation on the Lower St. Lawrence River up to Montreal or from Montreal up to the Great Lakes? There is quite a difference between those two things. I am not sure of the meaning of this question.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I meant the Lower St. Lawrence traffic up to Montreal. My supplementary question is the following: Does the minister intend to meet shortly the officials of the St. Lawrence Pilots Federation so as to discuss this possibility with them?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I must inform the House that the St. Lawrence pilots did not ask to see me. Surely I have no intention of writing them and ask for a meeting. I have no objection in case they have problems. The traffic of ships on the St. Lawrence River has considerably increased over the last few years. Ten years back only 150 ships entered the gulf. Today over 2,000 sail through it during winter. Of course this depends on the market requirements and also on the economic situation of sea transportation.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. I am told that the St. Lawrence Pilots Federation has sent a cable to this effect to the Minister of Transport who says he has received no news. Could the minister check whether he has received this cable?

MEASURES TO ACHIEVE MORE EFFICIENT INTERCITY TRANSPORTATION IN ORDER TO CONSERVE ENERGY

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. In view of possible fuel shortages in Canada this winter and the prospect that these shortages may extend for some time to come, has the minister given any consideration to implementing immediately plans for more efficient intercity transportation as a means of conserving energy?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for having given me notice of this question. There is no doubt this is something that we would like to do and we will do it wherever it is possible. We have been negotiating with Ontario for better service between cities. Maybe we can do it with other provinces. Of course, the only thing is that we cannot change these things overnight.

Mr. Woolliams: Not with this government, at any rate.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Not even with yours, Sir, I regret. When we decide to build new track, new locomotives or new cars, that takes some time. I think the idea behind the question is one we must retain and work on very seriously.

Mr. Crouse: Has the Minister of Transport made any proposals to cabinet for new intercity transportation facilities? If so, what response has he received from his cabinet colleagues?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I am about to produce a very long memorandum to cabinet on all transportation problems in Canada, including this one.

ENERGY

OIL—INDICATION BY GOVERNMENT TO SYNCRUDE REGARDING PRICING POLICY TO BE APPLIED TO PRODUCT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I should like to ask him what indications he has given to the principals of Syncrude with regard to the pricing policy to be applied to their product?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I answered a question of the hon. member for York South on this point about a week ago, indicating that our expectation with regard to pricing over the long run for Syncrude and for similar projects would be that a price would be available to make the product marketable and economic from their standpoint, very much in the terms set out by the Prime Minister in his statement to the House. One of the specific assurances we gave them was with regard to the question of shutting in capacity, namely, that given the importance of economics to a synthetic crude plant they would not be subject to be shut-in as a conventional well would be.

Mr. Stanfield: Given the significance of any such communication to Syncrude, or its principals and the light this might shed on the government's policy with regard to the pricing of oil from the tar sands, would the minister be prepared to table the letter he has written to Syncrude or its principals on this subject?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to do so. I will see that translations are made and have the document prepared. I had been expecting that the government of Alberta, which announced the project originally, would have been making a public statement on this matter. However, I shall be glad to table the letter.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ASK QUEBEC TO HALT CONSTRUCTION OF JAMES BAY POWER PROJECT UNTIL NATIVES' CLAIMS SETTLED

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Since the Supreme Court of Canada, in a three-two decision has decided not to hear the appeal of the James Bay Indians against continued construction of the massive hydroelectric project now under way in Quebec, will the federal government use its clear constitutional authority in relation to Indians and lands reserved for Indians to demand that the Quebec government order a halt to construction until such time as an acceptable political settlement of native land claims can be negotiated?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I do not think the law provides that the government may substitute itself for the court. I know the Indians have rights. I have stated this and I have helped them to go to the courts. Once more, I state my view that the only way to get out of this difficulty is through a just and reasonable settlement. I am urging the Indians and the Quebec government to agree to such a settlement. I am working to this end, and I hope both parties will accept what is reasonable.

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Since the minister will not undertake to use his good offices to have current construction halted—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): —will he at least assure the House that he and his negotiators will give immediate consideration to the matter which the James Bay Indians list as their No. 1. priority, that is, the significant modification of the plans for the LG-1 dam?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I should like to correct the hon. member. I have been negotiating on this matter at least three or four times a week. I have been involved. I have been in Montreal, I have been in Quebec. And I have been attending the House of Commons. I am doing my utmost.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: As I have already stated, I think that for the sake of a good settlement we should not try to make this a political matter. We do not need any back-seat drivers in this case.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): What the minister needs, Mr. Speaker, is a good front-seat driver.

Mr. Stanfield: Arrogance!

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): In connection with the negotiations the minister purports to have undertaken, I wonder whether he can report any progress to the House.

Mr. Chrétien: I am glad to report that proposals have been made by the Quebec government to the Indians and that the Indians are studying those proposals. Quebec has appointed a negotiator who knows about the Indian problem, my former assistant deputy minister. They are talking about the matter, and I do not want to say too much about it because I am not keen on publicity; all I want is to resolve this difficulty.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INDUSTRY

PROPOSED TAKEOVER OF MACDONALD TOBACCO COMPANY BY UNITED STATES FIRM—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It follows a question I asked in the House yesterday concerning the takeover of the Macdonald Tobacco Company by R. J. Reynolds of North Carolina. The statement the minister made in the House yesterday did no more than indicate voluntary guidelines with respect to takeovers which occur in the interim period. Since, according to the minister, this takeover is not yet complete, would he tell us what specific steps he intends to take with regard to this takeover which will mean foreign domination of this important industry?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): As I believe I indicated yesterday, I have already taken a step. I asked the representatives of the firm to come to Ottawa. I have met with them and have asked them a number of questions. I am now waiting to hear further from them.

SPORTS

VIOLENCE IN JUNIOR HOCKEY—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister responsible for amateur sport in Canada, the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

In view of recent reports of violence between junior hockey players, does the minister intend, if possible, to undertake an in-depth inquiry into this situation so that junior hockey becomes a school of leadership instead of violence, as is the case at present?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am concerned with this situation and I intend to discuss shortly with the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association the possibility of taking measures of a special nature or, at least, in addition to those already taken in this regard.

[English]

Mr. John Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary to the minister on the same question. Has the minister considered whether there is any federally-funded money going into amateur junior hockey which could be withdrawn if the organizers of amateur junior hockey are not prepared to cut out some of the violence and cease encouraging brutality in our national sport?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, it is not my habit to work with threats and blackmail against people who are receiving funds from the federal government. I believe they are reasonable people and I hope that in negotiating and discussing the matter with them we can arrive at better results than by using threats to cut off public funds.

Mr. Fraser: The minister refers to blackmail. I ask him whether, in view of the obvious public concern about what is happening, the organizers of amateur junior hockey should not be informed that the public will not continue to support them with taxpayers' money unless they clean up their game?

Mr. Lalonde: I said in French before the hon. member spoke that I hope to meet with representatives of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association in the next few days to discuss this very matter. I repeat, however, I do not think that when dealing with responsible citizens we should confront them with the threat of cutting off public funds at the first opportunity. I think there are better ways of dealing with people.

COAL MINERS' ACCIDENT RATE—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In light of information that in the coal mines operating in Cape Breton under the Cape Breton Development Corporation the accident rate in 1971 stood at the appalling figure of 109 per cent and that in 1972 it was 90 per cent, can the minister tell the House why he has not conducted an inquiry into this very serious situation?

● (1150)

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. I would advise him that officials of my department have been working very closely with management, union leadership and so on at Devco for some considerable time in regard to the accident rate which the hon. member has identified and which is very disturbing indeed. Various efforts have been made. I am not complaining about lack of co-operation, but the accident rate has not come down, as is well evidenced by the figures. As a result, I have decided to appoint a commissioner of inquiry to look into the situation. We are working out the terms of reference for the commissioner with management and the union leadership, and we are getting co-operation in that regard.

Mr. Muir: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the minister for his reply but may I put a supplementary question. First, how soon does he think the commissioner will be appointed and get under way with his investigation? Second, in view of the fact there were between 2,600 and 3,000 employees in 1972 and there were 2,300 accidents, 1,900 of them disabling, would the minister send officials from his department to Cape Breton immediately to ensure that safety standards are being adhered to and so the number of human beings being maimed and slaughtered will be reduced as quickly as possible?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would repeat that it was prior to the hon. member bringing this situation to my attention in the House that action was taken by my department, in co-operation with other departments, to do something about this. The negotiations and discussions have not materially reduced the accident rate and this is the reason I decided to appoint a commissioner of inquiry. As to when this will be done, all I can say is it will be done very immediately indeed. I expect the appointment to be made within the next few days; if not, within the next two weeks.

Mr. Muir: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, to have to take the time of the House again, but this is a very important matter. I should like to ask a further supplementary question of the minister. The minister stated that he has been attempting through his officials to reduce the number of accidents by negotiating. Can he advise me what reaction he has received from the officials of Cape Breton Development Corporation, and to what have they laid the cause for such a tremendous increase in the number of accidents? Also, are they co-operating to reduce the number of accidents?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is aware of this situation so far as the Cape Breton Development Corporation is concerned. All I can say is that we cannot complain about lack of co-operation from Devco management, or from the union leadership for that matter. I think there is a genuine desire on the part of both to reduce this accident rate. Some of the problems may be very deeprooted indeed, and it is because of this that we hope a commissioner of inquiry will be able to get to the bottom of them.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ALLEGED UNAUTHORIZED INVASION OF APARTMENT OF PAUL DESBIENS—RESULTS OF INVESTIGATION—SUBSEQUENT ACTION

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Solicitor General a question. Several weeks ago I raised the matter of the unauthorized invasion by the RCMP of the apartment of Mr. Paul Desbiens, in which Mrs. Desbiens was technically assaulted in her bath. A senior RCMP official in the Ottawa area publicly stated that the Solicitor General would reply in the House. Therefore I ask the minister whether the investigation has been completed, and what action has been taken to redress this regrettable intrusion?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I had an answer here for several weeks waiting for the hon. member to follow up the matter with me, but I do not have it with me this morning.

Some hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: But let me say this. There were two Mr. Desbiens, father and son, who lived in the same building. When the police came to press a charge against the son for possession of narcotics, they were directed to the father's apartment. They went to the apartment with a warrant and went into the bathroom, but as soon as they saw the lady there they left. The police left immediately, Mr. Speaker. There was no assault.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: They apologized and then went to the neighbouring apartment and served a summons on the right Mr. Desbiens.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I hope the Solicitor General is not representative of the RCMP or of justice in this country. It is very easy to make fun of the situation, but the facts are that no warrant was presented. The police did not leave, they searched the apartment—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now engaging in debate and he has been recognized for the purpose of asking a supplementary. Perhaps he should ask his supplementary. I seek the co-operation of hon. members; we do not appear to be moving very quickly this morning. I hope we will have as few supplementaries as possible so that more questioners can be given an opportunity to ask a question this morning.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I personally visited that apartment shortly afterwards.

Mr. Bell: Explain.

Mr. Peters: What the minister states is not correct. That apartment was searched. All the possessions in that place were searched. There was no warrant. I am suggesting that I have this knowledge personally. Therefore I would ask the minister to reconsider this matter and have a full investigation made in a serious manner. This is a citizen of Canada whose rights were transgressed. I believe an investigation will indicate that some action should be taken against the officers who made this intrusion without a warrant.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I have checked this matter thoroughly. There was a warrant. The warrant was issued by a magistrate in Ottawa. When the police went to the apartment building, which is to be torn down very shortly for an urban renewal project, there were no names on the doors or below in the apartment lobby. They went upstairs and asked a lady they saw, who was Mrs. Desbiens herself, the wife of the son, where the apartment was. She directed them to the apartment that they entered. They entered that apartment and started searching around. There was no one there. They opened a door, found the elderly Mrs. Desbiens in the bathroom, apologized and left, and then were redirected to the right apartment.

Mr. Peters: That is a lie and you know it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Allmand: They went and put the warrant before the right man and the matter is now before the courts.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member who wants to rise on a question of privilege. The minister has given a statement. The hon. member for Timiskaming on a question of privilege has also given a statement which brings out facts that are different than those reported by the minister. The minister has repeated his facts. Obviously there is a necessity for the matter to be looked into, but I really do not think that it can be settled by an exchange of questions of privilege during the question period. If the hon. member for Timiskaming seeks the floor on a question of privilege I will, of course, recognize him. But I would hope that some way can be found for the matter to be cleared up without taking up all the time in the question period on questions of privilege.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, the facts the minister states are not correct. I personally was there. If the minister wants me to indicate that he is dishonest, I can be pushed into that, Mr. Speaker. I state that the names were on a number of mail boxes in the vestibule and that the numbers are clearly in very large letters on the doors of the apartments. I state this from my own knowledge, Mr. Speaker, and I ask that the minister treat this matter seriously, re-investigate and ascertain the facts.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think I should recognize the minister. We have heard the same report twice from the minister and the hon. member's report. I do not think we should hear it a third time, either from the member or from the minister. The minister rises on a point of order.

Mr. Allmand: Merely on the point that the member accused me of lying. He said that I was a liar. It was pretty clear on my earphone. I think he should withdraw that. I made this statement based on the report given to me. Like him, I have not investigated the matter myself. It is a pretty large country and we have many policemen. I refuse to accept his allegation that I am telling lies in the House.

Mr. Speaker: Certainly, it is against the rules of the House—this has long been established—for any member to accuse another member of lying. I did not hear the hon. member say that. I would have to rely on Hansard. I would hope we would not get into that kind of a situation. If the hon. member has, of course, made that accusation, he would have to withdraw it.

Mr. Peters: I did not say the minister was lying. I said I could be pushed—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Peters: I said I could be pushed into that. Mr. Speaker, I think Hansard will clearly indicate that I said "that is a lie," and there seems to be some difference of opinion as to the facts. I did not say that the minister was a liar but that the report he gave was a lie.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The distinction may be somewhat subtle. The hon. member has the right to question the accuracy of a report made to a minister. He cannot question the honesty of another member giving that report. I think it should be made clear that the hon. member states that he did not accuse the minister of lying or that the statement made by the minister is a lie. If the hon. member confirms my understanding of the situation, I do not think there is any necessity for withdrawal, but that should be made very clear. I hope this is what the hon. member will confirm to the Chair.

Mr. Peters: That is what my intention was, and I am sure Hansard will bear out that that in fact took place.

Mr. Speaker: There are three minutes before the end of the question period. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

URBAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN FEDERAL SHARE OF COST OF RAIL LINE RELOCATION IN VIEW OF ENERGY CRISIS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Due to the transportation crisis being caused by fuel shortages, will the minister now consider increasing the 50 per cent federal government cost-sharing formula for rail line relocation in Canadian cities in an effort to promote intercity rail transit in co-operation with the municipalities and provinces?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think that would be best answered when legislation is introduced.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LEAKAGE OF DOCUMENTS—POSSIBLE CHARGES AGAINST EMPLOYEE RESPONSIBLE—MAINTENANCE OF CONFIDENTIALITY

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I have asked before about the investigation into the improper disclosure of documents. I think the House would like to know if charges have yet been laid in this matter under the Public Service Employment Act for failure to honour the terms of the oath of secrecy which public servants are obliged to take under that act before being assigned to positions of confidence?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, no charges have yet been laid. The investigation is continuing.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the hon. member but we have just about reached the point where I have to call orders of the day.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs is satisfied that the course being followed in this matter will be a positive response to the recommendations of PAFSO, the professional organization bringing together the officers of this department who are anxious, as I am, for obvious reasons, and as all Canadians are, that everything be done to ensure that proper confidentiality is maintained in diplomatic communications and that the integrity of the foreign service is preserved?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I must say I was extremely gratified to see the resolution that was approved by the Professional Association of Foreign Service Officers which supports the position that he and I have taken in the House, and most members, I hope.

FOOD PRICES

STATEMENT BY CHAIRMAN OF REVIEW BOARD—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs but in his absence I will direct it to the Minister of Finance. In light of the statement made yesterday by the chairman of the Food Prices Review Board to the effect that Canadians would have to learn to live with high and rising food prices, I ask the Minister of Finance if this reflects the policy of the government and, if not, does the government intend to ask for her resignation?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to see that statement in full context and refer that question to my colleague to whom she reports.

AIR TRANSPORT

ACCIDENT INVOLVING AIR GASPÉ PLANE—MEASURES TO ASSURE SAFETY OF PASSENGERS

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

As a result of the numerous accidents Air Gaspé has had, of which the most recent occurred Monday, and in view of the answer the minister gave the House on the 19th, does he intend to take emergency measures to ensure the security of passengers on that eastern Quebec airline?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we have asked Air Gaspé to appoint an air comptroller immediately. The company has had repeated accidents and the security of its passengers is threatened. If the company does not submit to our requirements, we will doubtless have to decide whether or not to cancel its license.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQEST FOR HOLIDAY ON DECEMBER 24—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that there is only one working day between this weekend and the statutory holiday of Christmas day for public servants, and because at Christmas it is better to give than receive, will the Prime Minister advise the House whether the government will give public servants Christmas eve as a day off and not require the opening of offices in order to facilitate travel and family planning?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must advise the House that I am not the minister responsible for the public service, but I will discuss the matter with the minister to see what the facts are and to consider the suggestion of the hon. member.

COMMONWEALTH GAMES IN NEW ZEALAND—CANADIAN REPRESENTATION—ALLEGED PROMISE OF PAYMENT TO EDMONTON FOR BRITISH COMMONWEALTH GAMES

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that New Zealand is having the British Commonwealth Games in February, will the minister advise the House who in his department is to represent Canada at the British Commonwealth Games in New Zealand?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I would hope, Mr. Speaker, if it is possible, that indeed I will have the honour to represent Canada on that occasion.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Because it is better to give than receive, would the Minister of National Health and Welfare please tell the House when he expects to give that $15 million to Edmonton for the British Empire Games which the former Minister of State, Pat Mahoney, promised to Edmonton a couple of years ago?

Mr. Lalonde: As usual, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is wrong.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I should like to just say the minister is wrong. I was at a meeting in Edmonton at the Jubilee Auditorium when the former Minister of State said explicitly to 2,700 people in Edmonton that the federal government would soon give them $15 million for the British Commonwealth Games. That was before the last election.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Scarborough East and then call orders of the day.

DRUGS

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON LEDAIN COMMISSION RECOMMENDATION CONCERNING MARIJUANA

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the recommendations of the LeDain Commission, I wonder whether the minister would give the House the assurance that the government is not planning to seek legalization of marijuana, cannibis and such drugs?

• (1210)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The government's position on marijuana was expressed last year by my predecessor, and I have stated since then that the government continues to endorse the position stated by the government last year. So there has been no change in the government's policy. I hope that in the course of the next year we will be able to produce appropriate legislation to bring into effect the proposed changes that were put forward by my predecessor.

Mr. Stackhouse: Is the House to interpret the answer of the minister as meaning that the government will extend the legalization of these drugs?

Mr. Lalonde: I would only refer the hon. member to the well-known and oft-repeated statement that has been made during the course of the last year. The policy is the same as it was. The hon. member should not attempt to distort the situation by allegations such as the ones he is making.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member rises on a question of privilege. He will be recognized for that purpose, after which, as I said, we will have to call orders of the day.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, in my question I made no allegations. I asked for clarification but all I can say is that I received evasion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, may I say in answer to the hon. member that there is no need for clarification. The position was stated categorically by the government last year and there has been no change in policy. If there is any confusion, it is only in the hon. member's mind.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is again debate. During the question period there have been a number of alleged questions of privilege which were debates over alleged facts. I suggest to hon. members that this is not always helpful. I think the Chair should be allowed to call orders of the day. The hon. member for Scarborough West rises on a point of order.

Mr. Harney: Mr. Speaker, this morning, in answer to a question from the hon. member for Exquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) stated that in so far as the matter being investigated by his department is concerned, the investigation was continuing. On November 29, as recorded on page 8250 of Hansard, the minister said, in a statement the investigation:

—I am confident that we have identified the person responsible for the leaks. That person is being informed. The long established procedures for dealing with such cases will now be followed.

My point of order is very simply this: Which of the two statements by the minister is the correct one?

Mr. Speaker: I would have difficulty in ruling that that is a legitimate point of order. I have to suggest to the hon. member that again that is debate. Orders of the day. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), in response to questions about drugs and the LeDain Commission—whether or not he knows it, and he should if he does not—is attempting to mislead the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Howard: I want to put on the record my reason for making that statement and why it should not be permitted. He made reference to a policy statement made last year. That policy statement was made by the former Minister of National Health and Welfare, now the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), and right alongside of him was the then Minister of Justice, now the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), who repudiated that statement and said that it did not reflect cabinet policy. What the hell is cabinet policy?

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

ELECTION EXPENSES

PROVISION OF PAYMENTS TO CANDIDATES AND REIMBURSEMENT OF PARTIES FOR CERTAIN BROADCASTING TIME

The House resumed, from Thursday, December 20, consideration of Bill C-203, to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, and Motion No. 12 (Mr. Barnett).

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, the House has under consideration motion No. 12 standing in my name which would remove one word from the proposed Clause 13.2(1.1) of the Canada Elections Act. It was moved on my behalf last night by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), who at that time explained to the House that I was serving at a meeting of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development which was considering Bill S-4.

The hon. member for Skeena laid some of the groundwork for the consideration of this amendment, but I would like to make a few remarks on it today. The amendment does have an effect upon the whole question of what I have considered to be one of the objectives of the bill we have before us, namely, to bring some reasonable limitation on the amount of the expenditures that would be incurred in the conduct of general elections in Canada. The particular subclause which we have under consideration, as I understand it, was introduced to the committee at the instigation or on behalf of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). If I understand him correctly, according to the mover, it was introduced for the purpose of clarifying to a certain extent what is involved in the actual definition of election expenses. Whether or not it does that, is in my view a debatable question.

I think one can argue fairly successfully that rather than clarify, it tends to confuse the whole matter of what are or are not legitimate election expenses and the whole question of at what maximum level those expenses should be set. The preceding subclause, which was in the original bill as it received second reading in the House, had to do with placing a limitation on the total expenses that a political party can incur in Canada, and in particular with reference to the period during which we have a general election. It purports to set the limit of those expenditures at a maximum of 30 cents multiplied by the number of names appearing on the preliminary lists of electors in the total number of constituencies in which that particular party is putting forward an official candidate. One can debate the question as to whether or not the 30 cents multiplied by the number of electors does, in fact, bring about a realistic attempt to reduce the total expenditures which have been escalating in recent years by leaps and bounds.

But leaving that question aside, this subclause which I am seeking to amend provides that the factor of 30 cents multiplied by the number of electors, does not apply to money contributed by a political party, and the phrase used in the subclause is "for the use of Candidates". I have been looking rather carefully at that question. When I say that there may be confusion rather than clarification, I must say that when one thinks of what is meant by the expression "for the use of candidates" in the election, one is led to wonder exactly what it does mean. It does not say for expenditure by the candidates. It does not say that that money is to form part of the money put in the hands of the official agent of a candidate. It does not say if party X makes a contribution of $10,000 to a candidate that that $10,000 must be spent as part of the election campaign of that candidate in that constituency. In fact, it does not say that the candidate would have to spend all of it, or any of it.

So, Mr. Speaker, if one considers this proposed subsection in relation to existing section 62 of the Elections Act in its present form, it must be realized that certainly the latter is of long standing in that act. This section is one which is very well understood by anyone who has been involved in elections because it is the section which has to do with the appointment, by a candidate, of an official agent, and the official agent's duties. It further sets out the requirement that payments made before, during or after an election by a candidate, or on behalf of a candidate, with certain exceptions, must be channeled through the official agent.

One must also look at this proposal and its import in relation to proposed section 61(1) of the Elections Act, which would be inserted immediately before section 62 if it passes. This provision relates to the amount of money that may be spent for a candidate's campaign. Mr. Speaker, when I try to put all these things together, and try to understand what the effect of this exempting proposal, which was inserted by the committee, would be, I must say that they all do not seem to go together very well.

The ceiling which is proposed of 30 cents per elector, as has been pointed out in previous discussion, makes provision for a sum of money running into a number of millions of dollars, certainly far beyond any kind of money which my political party has had at its disposal in an election. If the reports quoted and the statements made by earlier speakers in this debate are correct, it is a sum that approximates the maximum kind of expenditures that the Liberal party and the Conservative party have been able to make in past elections. When you consider the figure of $4 million or $5 million, whatever it may be, in relation to this proposed amendment, then it really appears that this proposed subclause as it stands is an escape hatch. I think it can be argued that it completely removes the ceiling from the amounts that a political party can raise and can dish out during an election. I submit that that is not in accordance with what some people have suggested is an objective of this bill, namely, to place some reasonable limit on the kind of money that Canadian citizens, directly and indirectly, are to be called upon to put forth during the conduct of an election.

The whole rationale of the debate that developed in this parliament, and in the country, about the limitation to a reasonable size of election expenses, is a recognition of the danger that if we allow a situation to continue in which elections are simply won by money rather than by the espousal of political ideas to gain the confidence of Canadian electors, then we are really striking pretty hard at the roots of democracy. So, Mr. Speaker, it is in that light that I have looked at this proposal which would exempt moneys given to candidates for their use. It is because I feel that the idea that they should not be included in the total which a political party is allowed to spend is wrong that I have put this amendment on the order paper.

Different parties have different methods of running elections. I do not think the House should seek to pass an Elections Act which would run counter to the particular arrangements which various political parties have worked out over a period of time for the conduct of elections, such as the way in which their candidates should be supported or, for that matter, the way in which they have decided that the funds necessary for the conduct of an election are to be raised and distributed. So, I am not prepared to quarrel with the inclusion of this clause, because if a political party wants to provide certain funds from its central body to candidates in constituencies X, Y and Z, my inclination is to say that that is its business.

In my constituency, we usually get a statement saying that we are expected to raise a certain quota of funds to assist the central agency of the party to carry on the general campaign across the country, so that the flow of funds has always been the other way. But if a political party chooses to have its structure so organized, and its fund raising so set up that it wants to send money from a central pot to candidates in constituencies, then so far as I am concerned I am prepared to allow it to continue to operate in that fashion. But if we are talking about a ceiling on election expenses, for the life of me I cannot see why that kind of money, spent by a political party, should be any more exempt from the general ceiling than any other kind of expenditure by that political party. That is why the removal of the word "not" would, in my opinion, be an improvement to the bill.

I noted, Mr. Speaker, that some points of order were raised at the outset of the discussion on this amendment when it was moved on my behalf by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), to the effect that the simple way to deal with the matter, if one does not like this section, rather than remove the word "not", was to vote against it. I was quite pleased that this was not considered a valid point of order. That was not the question at all. It is not a matter of voting for or against the total proposition that is involved. What we have before us through my amendment is not the question of whether a party should send funds to candidates but the simple proposition that those funds should be part of a total allowable ceiling of expenditures of a political party in the country. I think this is a valid question and that the House should consider it.

The ambiguity lies in the phrase "for the use of candidates". I would not make an issue of this if the House would agree to put the amount so contributed within the total ceiling. In other words, if the party chooses a person to run as a candidate in a constituency who cannot take time off to devote himself to a campaign, I suppose there is nothing immoral in a political party sending him $10,000 so that he can devote himself to it. As the act stands now, it would be up to the candidate to decide whether he turned all or part of those funds over to his official agent or whether he used them to replace income lost during the election campaign. I think that has been done in the past in respect of some candidates in some political parties. I am not going to quarrel with the disposition of the funds by a candidate, whether he spends them or puts them into his own pocket, as long as he abides by the provisions of section 62 of the act and does not spend more than $2,000 of his own money for personal expenditures without going through the official agent. I suppose that can be considered to be the business of the candidate, and any transaction that involves funds which he does not so spend could be considered to be left as business between him and his particular central party organization.

To suggest that a political party can give $5,000, $10,000, $50,000 or $100,000 to a candidate which he does not have to spend, and which the party does not have to account for as part of their total allowable expenses in a campaign, is making a mockery of the avowed intent of putting a ceiling on expenditures of political parties.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: He could, of course, continue if there were unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters).

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the discussion that took place last night on this particular amendment. I was particularly impressed when my colleague who was discussing this matter, and another colleague who had sat on the election expenses committee, were asked for an explanation of the term "election expenses". Up to that point, I was not very sure what the discussion was all about, so I was pleased to learn I was not the only one who was confused about the amendment. I gather that the difficulty with that particular clause is not so evident if the clause is read in total, but the difficulty is rather that it cannot be read separately, in a vacuum. It must be read with clause 2 of the bill which sets out the meaning of election expenses. If we set out those election expenses, which the clause refers to as amounts not included in election expenses directly, it in fact fits into the category of allowable election expenses. If the clause is read in its entirety, it would appear that the word "not" should be inserted, but if it is read in conjunction with the election expenses section of the bill, which is the major section of the bill, then I agree that probably the wording is incorrect.

I presume, Mr. Speaker, that there will be a number of amendments to this bill, either in this place or in the other place. I am going to be very interested in the debates in the other place to see whether they make the decision as to what our election espenses will be, and how we conduct the business of running elections, since the members in that place are really in a preferred position in that regard.

I do believe that if the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) is right, and his explanation was fairly lucid, in saying that if, for the purposes of this section, the amount of the election expenses incurred by a registered party in respect of the conduct of an election there shall not be included any amount in respect of contributions made by or on behalf of the registered party for the use of candidates at the election—has a relationship to election expenses, then if you put the word "not" in it means that it will be included and it would make absolutely no sense.

The people in my area found it difficult to define election expenses. They do not quite know what should be classed as a receivable, and what should be classed as an item payable. I am sure that other members, other candidates, as well as official agents and other officials, have run into this problem. What about the contribution I make to myself as a candidate? For instance, I may provide myself with an automobile and other facilities. Most of the signs in my area are made by the silk screening process, and most of the silk screening is done on my premises. I have a large garage which can be used for that. Obviously, if someone else were to do this, it would be classed as an expense. As I do this myself, it really does not cost me much. I am providing the facilities for printing, which, in any event, I would not rent out or use for any other purpose. So, such signs might be classed as a gift. They would not be a contribution. In any event, it would be difficult to include that item under election expenses.

It is also difficult to include volunteer help under the heading of election expenses. I know that this bill does not require voluntary services to be included, but that applies to a certain limit. In my election campaigns at any rate, and this applies to many members of my party, voluntary services are more valuable than money contributions or gifts in kind. Often, without volunteer help we could not run elections. Without volunteer organizations there could be no political parties, because such organizations really are fundamental to the existence of our political parties.

Another difficulty that I have encountered, and this applies no doubt to other candidates, concerns contributions over which one has no control. I notice that there is still in the bill, under the election expenses part, a section relating to the provision of light refreshments and to the mailing of all types of promotional material and so on. The light refreshment question has caused many of my party difficulty. This applies equally to the Social Credit Party. For instance, when organizing election campaigns in New Brunswick, have they not run into the problem of seeing the other big parties passing out 26 ounce bottles on different corners of the street? It is well known that in a certain by-election, the people who came out of one polling booth were handed a bottle from a vehicle standing not far from the polling station. Those light refreshments became quite a factor in that election. Many members of my party, in contrast to voters, have not viewed with favour the consumption of alcoholic beverages. For that reason and, also because of lack of money, we have not provided beer, wine or liquor parties.

I have attended political meetings in an area where my party has no representation. Actually, political meetings there are community affairs. The people like to listen to the candidates of all political parties. They like to go down to the town hall, where they are served sandwiches and liquor. They are given shot glasses for the liquor. Obviously, somebody buys the liquor, and somebody provides the sandwiches. When I objected to the liquor, I was told that is the way things were done in that community and, while I was there, that is how they continued to be done. So far as I know, that is the way things have been done down there ever since. To my mind, however, the light refreshment did not consist of the whisky. It consisted more of the sandwiches. Similarly, I am not in favour of bottles of whisky being handed out as people leave the polling booth. That is not light refreshment. Of course, in one part of New Brunswick, where this practice has gone on, the people are so faithful to their political party that, if they are Liberal supporters, they will go to only one vehicle handing out refreshments, and if they are Conservative supporters, they will only go to the other. Under no circumstances will these people accept a bottle from the wrong vehicle.

I am surprised to see the light refreshment provisions retained in the bill. I would have thought that the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) would have given some attention, when studying the bill, to a clearer definition of light refreshments. In the last election light refreshments were given out in a certain hotel. The hotel keeper was very happy, until he discovered that there was a considerable unpaid bill. Now, he is not quite as much in favour of that practice. I do not think that the serving of refreshments will be enough in future, as the electorate of Canada is too well informed now to be bought that cheaply. If the term, "light refreshments" means what I think it ought to mean, it would not be necessary to clarify the relevant section. As it now is, I think this section is wide open. It really indicates that any amount would be permissible. I suppose these amounts have been increased largely over the last few years.

The figures given by Professor Paltiel show that the amounts received by the Conservative and Liberal candidates from their central offices were between $6,000 and $6,500, though the situation appears to be different in Alberta as far as the Conservatives are concerned. They have been self-sufficient, a sign, I suppose, of an affluence in that province which is not shared by all others. One thing with which we ought all to agree is the payment of $200 to help parties establish a national image across the country during an election. I am sure the New Democratic Party would ensure that this contribution is considered as part of its election expenses and that it is recalculated on the basis of a contribution from the riding. The Liberal Party will have difficulty in getting candidates in a number of areas, I imagine. It will probably have difficulty getting candidates in Alberta, in British Columbia and in the Maritimes. I suppose the Liberal Party usually puts across a national image more easily than other parties, but I believe it will be harder for them to do this in the next election.

A lot of money could be spent if we allowed this section to be wide open. It is all very well to take out the "not" and make this section an election expense similar to those under section 2, but if we leave the words "shall not" in place, it means that it is in a separate section and a contribution can be made in a totally different way and this may not be in the interest of holding a satisfactory election. If we were to apply a limit to these contributions from one particular source I think we would be able to continue to operate on the basis of a local organization which would represent a constituency, but if we leave the section as it is, without the "not" and it is not considered to be an election expense, we shall be able to finance—

Mr. Barnett: We are all in a knot.

Mr. Peters: Well, it is a very knotty problem. It seems to me that some political parties will be operating their constituency organizations under this section from national headquarters and that there will be no need for any support at all from the riding for candidates. If this restriction is applied it may hurt the NDP. In the past, we have run candidates in areas where there was absolutely no chance of getting a major proportion of the vote. This has been done by other parties, too. Candidates who certainly did not get one per cent of the vote have run against me on a number of occasions. I certainly believe they had the right to do so.

An hon. Member: One o'clock!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I imagine it could be called one o'clock according to some of the clocks here. In any event, the hon. member's time has expired.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): When the House adjourned at one o'clock it was considering motion No. 12 in the name of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett). Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion No. 12 (Mr. Howard, for Mr. Barnett) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I declare the motion negatived. If the House agrees, we will now proceed to motion No. 13, in the name of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard).

Election Expenses

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved:

No. 13.

That Bill C-203, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, be amended by adding the following as sub-section 13.2(3) of sub-clause 4(1):

"(3) Where the registered party is guilty of an offence against this Act by virtue of subsection (1) any officer, or registered agent of the registered party who directed, authorized, assented to, acquiesed in or participated in the offence is a party to and guilty of the offence and is liable on conviction to a fine not exceeding twenty-five thousand dollars and to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year or to both."

He said: Mr. Speaker, in the Canada Elections Act there are a number of sections dealing with offences against the act. Some specify the punishment; other make a general reference to a certain penalty that will follow if a person is found guilty by the courts of an offence against the act. The general section providing for penalties for offences against the act is section 78. That section provides that a person who offends against the act is liable upon summary conviction, unless otherwise spelled out specifically, to a fine of not more than $1,000, or to imprisonment for not more than one year, or both. By way of indictment, which I understand carries a more severe penalty, the penalty provided is $5,000 or not more than five years, or both.

The bill sets up a so-called limitation on election expenditures which we examined at great length yesterday and may examine at great length in the future. It provides that the limitation on expenditures made by a registered party shall not exceed a certain amount, which I have roughly calculated to be $4.2 million.

The bill also provides that where that limitation is offended against, or over-reached, or where the registered party makes an expenditure during an election campaign in excess of $4.2 million, the registered party is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding $25,000. I cannot find in the elections act in terms of fines anything approaching the severity of this fine of $25,000. The Act speaks in terms of a $1,000 fine in one instance for tearing down a poster. It also speaks of a $5,000 fine for some other offence, and $1,000 in another area, as maximum fines, and so on. The $25,000 goes far and beyond, in terms of potential fines, anything contained in the Election Act at the moment. Therefore, I assume that the drafters of the bill felt that if a party had exceeded the limitation imposed by the act of 30 cents times the number of voters on the voters list they should establish a pretty severe punishment, a little more than the normal slap on the wrist concept that many Canadians are faced with. This is a maximum fine not exceeding $25,000 to the registered party.

I can conceive of a situation taking place where, in the course of an election campaign, the campaign intensifies during the last two weeks. Then, the moment of truth is approaching. It is a time when parties and candidates have a closer assessment of their chances. They have been involved in a month or a month and a half of campaigning. They have conducted surveys, have listened to what voters have said, have assessed the reponse at meetings and so on, and have received a pretty good assessment of their chances. Likewise, the interest of the general public increases. I can quite easily conceive of a situation arising whereby in that last week a political party may assess that its chances of forming a government are 50-50. That party might conclude that if, during that last week, it could just get its leader out on another cross-country tour this might swing the tide in its favour.

For instance, during the 1968 federal election campaign the Liberal Party desperately tried to get the newly chosen Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) into every nook and cranny of Canada because he was its most valuable asset. We realize he was a little reluctant to engage in a kind of an auction of himself and his personality, but that was the intention of the Liberal Party at that time. In 1972, that situation was somewhat reversed because some people did not wish to be associated with the Prime Minister. In any event, during the last week of a campaign a party might feel that it had reached the limit or close to the limit of expenditures permitted under this legislation but might decide that perhaps it should spend another $100,000 or $200,000 on the campaign in order to get the party leader to all the uncertain spots, to all the dangerous areas that could swing the election. If that were done, it could be an offence under the act.

I can quite readily conceive of some people sitting down and saying, "Well, if we pour this extra $100,000 or $200,000 into the campaign we are almost guaranteed to form the government and all we are faced with is a fine of not more than $25,000, so let us take the gamble because we won't be fined until after the election anyway". This offence would not be discovered until after the return were made and the books totalled, at which time it would be ascertained that the limit had been exceeded. The prospect of obtaining office would be more attractive and the party might decide to gamble. That is not an impossibility. It may be only a lone voice in a political party that would advocate this, but it is not an impossibility. I have taken the wording of my amendment basically from the foreign investment bill which contains references to officers of the corporation. What the amendment says is that if a registered party exceeds that $4.2 million limit on its expenditures, in addition to the party being liable to a fine of $25,000 there should be some responsibility fall on the shoulders of the officers of that party; there should be some deterrent factor with regard to the individual officers because a political party just does not operate without human beings.

A political party is an entity which is comprised of many people. There is a fluidity to it; there are the personnel, the employees of the political party, the officers and so on. The political party remains intact but still has within it, to make it function and keep it alive and moving, human beings. The amendment says that where the registered party has been found to exceed the limits proposed, not only it, the registered party, shall be liable to a fine, but keeping in mind that it will be the officers within that registered party who will take the steps to spend the money, any officer or registered agent of the registered party—and remember that these words I quote now are taken directly from government legislation which just passed this House—is liable on conviction to a fine not exceeding $25,000 and to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year or to both.

—who directed, authorized, assented to, acquiesced in or participated in the offence is a party to and guilty of the offence and

I think if we are to enact legislation of this nature, which we consider to be so important, so valuable and so extraordinary that it must have attached to it a fine of an extraordinary level, namely $25,000, which is far in excess of any other fine contemplated anywhere else in the Election Act, we should also include the companion step, in recognition of the fact that a party will spend beyond the limitation in this legislation only if individual human beings, officers or agents operating within the party, take the deliberate step of seeing that money is appended above that limit. In that case, when the officer or agent of the party takes that deliberate step, and therefore either directs or authorizes the action which results in the over-expenditure in the violation of the law, or if he assented to it, acquiesced in it or participated in it, then that individual also should be faced with some kind of punishment.

In another section of the act—and this is the penalty which exists right now in terms of jail sentences—if a person is guilty of taking down, covering up, mutilating, defacing or altering any printed notice that is the official notice issued under the authority of the Chief Electoral Officer, not party campaign notices about meetings or posters but official notices, he is liable to a jail term not exceeding two years. If a person is guilty of another offence such as for argument's sake, tearing down another person's or party's election poster, then he is liable to a one-year jail sentence on summary conviction. If a person tears down an opponent's election poster or paints a moustache or eyeglasses on the picture, and I have seen that happen as have other hon. members, or if a poster of one party is placed on top of and thus covers up the poster of another party, then he can be arraigned in court and sentenced to a jail term of one year. That is what the Canada Election Act provides. We, as legislators, are saying that if you paint a moustache on somebody else's poster, then you have defaced it and you can go to jail for a year for that. It sounds stupid and ridiculous, but it can happen under the law. We, as legislators, say that we can send a person to jail for a year for simply playing around with someone else's election poster.

When it comes to the limitation of the total expenditure of a party in a national election campaign, when it comes to the over-reaching of the amount which the law says shall be the limit of permissible expenditures, to which we have already attached a fine of up to $25,000 for the party which is greatly in excess of any other fine for any other activity under the act, surely it is not asking too much to say that any officer or agent of that party who directed or agreed to that violation of the law of parliament should be liable to a jail sentence also. That is all the amendment asks. I think it goes further and recognizes also that a political party does not do anything unless an individual officer or agent, a person or a group of people, decide to do something. An aircraft cannot be chartered to take the leader of a party across the country to visit this nation's centres during an election campaign unless someone telephones to make the reservations, arrange to pay the bill, or set up the itinerary. It will not happen by itself. There can be no offence against this act unless an individual takes the step to do it.

It is true that there may be an accidental violation of the act. It may well be that the treasurer or whoever does the bookwork has knowledge—and this information will be made available to him by the Chief Electoral Officer who will publish it in the Canada Gazette—of the number of registered voters on the preliminary list so that every registered party will be able to say: "There are X number of voters. If we multiply that by 30 cents, we can predict precisely to the penny what the limitation of our expenditures is liable to be." It might well be that a commitment is made to do a certain thing, based upon the expectation that it will cost a certain amount of money, and then you find that it will cost you a little more. It is quite easy for that to occur. Unforeseen things develop, postage rates can change or freight rates can change or you can make a verbal commitment about going someplace by aircraft or by some other means and you might find that the rates have changed and you might have to pay more for the fare. It could be that a registered party will cut things so finely that in spite of its close reference to the limitation imposed upon it, it finds some unknown contingencies which will make it accidentally go over the limit, and instead of spending $4.2 million—and I think a party would have to stretch itself quite a bit to reach that level—it will spend another few hundreds dollars or few thousand dollars.

The party will then be arraigned in court and its officials will put up a defence. This is what lawyers tell me happens. The officials will say in court: "Your Honour, this was accidental. We had assessed all the circumstances but we finally discovered in the last week of the campaign that either the airline company had raised its rates or gasoline prices had gone up and we had not anticipated it. We had made a commitment and we could not get out of it. In any event, it was necessary for that campaign, so we went ahead with it and we over-reached ourselves by a small percentage of the total amount of money to which we are limited". I gather, from what lawyers tell me, that that is the reason the bill now says: "liable to a fine not exceeding $25,000". I understand that those words give the judge or the court the opportunity to assess, on the basis of evidence presented, whether it was a deliberate over-spending or an accidental over-spending over which no one had any control. Then the judge could say: "Technically you are guilty of an offence under the act, but I fine you $1" or "I give you a suspended sentence". This means the court has agreed that it was accidental.

But where there is an instance of flagrant abuse of the limitation section of the act, for whatever reason, and this can be proven, and it can be also proven that an officer of the party took part in that deliberate over-reaching, then given those conditions some kind of punishment should be visited on that individual, just to make him that more careful and respectful of the will of parliament when parliament says to registered parties that there shall be a limitation. It does not matter what that limitation is determined to be because as you know, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of amendments on the order paper, the votes on which have been deferred, and it may not be 30 cents by the time this bill gets through. It might be 15 cents. Quite frankly, I doubt very much whether this will be the case, but it is a possibility. But whatever limitation is determined, an officer or a registered agent of the party should not be allowed to deliberately flout the law and over-reach that limitation without having any punishment inflicted on him as an individual. I am sure that if an officer of a party, under the law as it now is, did that deliberately, he would get bad publicity.

Certainly, the fact that a charge would be laid against a registered party for violating proposed section 13.2(1) would mean that somebody representing that party would have to appear in court, probably the chief agent from the sound of this bill, and give evidence as to what took place. And if the bill remains the way it is, then despite whatever evidence that registered agent gives to the court there can be no penalty or punishment imposed upon that individual according to the terms of this bill, but only a fine not in excess of $25,000 against the party. I am quite sure that a political party would not like that kind of publicity. I would feel extremely ashamed and embarrassed of the party I belong to if it reached a position where it violated this proposed section and its chief agent, or president, had to go to court and say, "Yes, Your Honour, we are guilty." That person would probably not be the chief agent the next day, or if he were the president he would not remain so very long. I just do not think the threat of adverse publicity that would accrue to a registered party as a result of violating the limitation imposed on it is sufficient deterrent, and neither did the government think it sufficient deterrent, because it was the government which proposed the potential $25,000 fine in the first place.

The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections spent hours and hours, week on end, during the past month or so, examining this bill in great detail, in fact in so much detail that it is almost impossible to follow the full reasoning by reading the committee proceedings. The committee would consider a particular subject matter, postpone further consideration of it to another day, and in the intervening time deal with another subject matter. One could not follow the flow of its consideration of a subject without jumping back and forth through the records of the committee proceedings. But having been a member of the committee, and remembering what went on previously, I was able to follow the flow. Anyway, the committee discussed this aspect for hours on end, and unanimously felt that the prospect of adverse publicity which would accrue to a party if it violated the limitation section was not sufficient, that there needed to be something else. The committee was unanimously of the view that something else needed to be the threat of a fine, not exceeding $25,000, against a registered party. The committee did not consider the question of a jail term against the officers of the party, although I am sure a number of committee members thought about it. However, the committee did not examine that question in a formal way.

There are many other pieces of legislation to which we can look for guidance and for precedents in respect of this matter. The Foreign Investment Review Act which was passed recently by this House was the one from which I got this proposed section. Under that act, parliament said that if a corporation violated certain of its provisions, and if any officers or agents of the corporation acquiesced in, directed, authorized, assented to or participated in anything that led to a violation of some sections of the act, those officers were to be singled out as individual persons who would be liable to jail sentences.

There are other statutes with such provisions in them. I have not looked for them specifically, but in the committee I posed a question to Mr. Gibson, the chief of the draftsmanship section of the Department of Justice, about the Combines Investigation Act, and asked whether it did not include the possibility of both a fine against a corporation and a potential jail sentence for a corporation's officers or agents who violated the provisions of the act. My recollection is that he said this was so, and he also made reference to other acts such as the Corporations Act.

We are also entitled to wonder whether or not a jail sentence, or the threat of a jail sentence, is the proper potential form of punishment for violation of laws of this nature which, unlike sections of the Criminal Code, do not involve direct transgressions against persons or property. If you violate the Criminal Code by stealing something from somebody, you have violated his property. If you offend against the Criminal Code by assaulting somebody, you have violated or injured that person. The Criminal Code concedes that those offences of theft, murder, breaking and entering and invasion of persons and property in one way or another should carry a potential jail sentence within the discretion of the court. But in the area of violation of a law which does not directly impinge upon property or persons, we are entitled to ask whether the same concept of a potential jail sentence should apply. That would be a reasonable area to explore.

One could argue that point with respect to this amendment if it were dealt with in isolation, if that were the only area in the Canada Elections Act where a violation would result in a potential jail sentence, but it is not the only area. I do not want to go through the whole act but there are many offences, such as disorderly conduct, upsetting a public meeting, tearing down posters, carrying weapons on election day, appropriating, personation, voting in the name of another person, telegraphing I think it is called in Quebec, all these violations of the Elections Act—infringement upon the democratic right of those who are eligible to vote—all those offences carry either a fine or a jail sentence or both. Some judges put a combination of, say, a six-month sentence and a $500 fine.

Because those penalties are in the Elections Act, and because we talk in terms of imprisonment for one year or two years or five years depending on the activity, we are not breaking new ground. We are not saying that we are seeking to do something unusual or different from everything else in the Elections Act. We are simply trying to carry forward the concept of potential jail sentences which exists already and apply it to another offence against the act which the government has determined is severe enough to carry with it a potential fine of $25,000 against the party. We say that the officer or officers or agents of that party who acquiesce or take part in or who are responsible for that expenditure or violation should be punished in some way, a simple punishment of not exceeding one year. Of course, that is an arbitrary figure and it could be for some other period of time. I am not saying that one year is inviolable and not subject to change. I simply picked one year because that is the sort of medium range penalty that exists in the act for a general violation for which no specific penalty is provided under section 78.

I suppose one could have used the words, "is guilty of an offence against this act". If that were the case, then the offender would come under the proscriptions of section 78.1. That is another way of doing it. I do not think it really matters except that the potential fine in section 78.1 is less than it is here, and less than that which was conceived by the minister in drafting the bill in the first place.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, in the last few minutes I have been looking over the responsibilities being created in this bill amending the Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act. We are again faced with the problem of some person being designated by legislation as having a legal position and being then in a position, as a representative of a party, of doing something that, in effect, will be an offence against one of the amending sections of either the Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act or the Income Tax Act.

This person, Mr. Speaker, is acting on behalf of the party and is a recognized official of that party. On page 8 of the bill section 13.2(1) reads as follows:

> The chief agent of any registered party that, through registered agents acting within the scope of their authority as such or other persons acting on behalf of the registered party with the actual knowledge and consent of an officer thereof, incurs election expenses on account of or in respect of the conduct or management of an election that exceed in the aggregate the amount determined by multiplying 30 cents by the number of names appearing on all preliminary lists of electors at the election for the electoral districts in which there is an official candidate who has the endorsement of the party, is guilty of an offence against this act.

To some extent, Mr. Speaker, I disagree with the previous speaker because it seems to me that this is putting a great deal of responsibility on someone who may or may not—this is not very clearly defined in the bill as so many things are not and I suppose we will be relying on practice established from precedent—have the authority. It is not clear who this person may be, or the extent of the responsibility that he will have within the party. In some cases, this would be an honorary position and in other cases we will be talking about the paid political organizer or chief officer of that political party. It will depend to quite an extent on which type of agent is being considered whether they should be involved in the liability that the party may have.

The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) was speaking about specific offences committed by an individual in his right as an agent of a candidate. His liability is totally within his own responsibility, then. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, in looking at the agent representing the national party who may be making decisions for a large number of areas, and who may think that he is providing the amount of money necessary and made possible by this law, we may in fact find that there are other factors over which he has no control. While it may be advantageous to levy a fine against the party, I am not sure that an officer of a political party who may not have too much control over what is done elsewhere should be held accountable. I am not a lawyer, but I can see that the court would have to determine questions relating to the degree of responsibility, how extensive that responsibility is and on whom the burden of responsibility is to rest.

What would happen, for example, if the officer of a political party, in anticipating a letter of recommendation to a candidate, were to make an allotment to the candidate of 30 cents times the number of constituents on the voters' list, only to find at the last minute that there is no letter of endorsement of the candidate from the party, and that the candidate, therefore, does not enjoy the support of the party? That agent, who had in good faith made available moneys in keeping with the law, would find himself in difficulties. Of course, in some cases, the allocation of moneys might be connived. These things might be done without the knowledge of the agent. It seems to me that since an officer might not be able to control what is done, he should not be held accountable for actions which might be violations under the part of the act we are considering. Even though certain actions might warrant a party being fined $25,000, I do not believe that the officer, in such circumstances as I have alluded to, ought to be considered as being guilty of an offence which warrants his incarceration.

The chief agent will be appointed by the party, and he may delegate certain powers and functions to those under him at the constituency level. In my opinion, too many people will be involved in certain kinds of decisions to warrant an individual being held responsible for a situation in which the party may be subject to a fine.

I am sure that many members of parliament do not know how much money was raised for their national organization, or how much the national organization distributed to individual ridings. Often, the official agent, or agents appointed by him, will not know quite how much money has been voluntarily donated for the campaign of the candidate in the riding. Therefore, as it is possible that certain offences may be committed on behalf of a party, the party obviously must have some type of machinery with which to protect itself. Actually, very few people in politics in this country do what is done in the United States, sell their souls for a job, or for a cause they believe in.

In my experience, most mistakes have been mistakes of oversight. They would not warrant a person's being sent to jail. Someone at the national level is to be responsible for providing 30 cents for each voter on the voters' list in 264 constituencies, or thereabouts. That calculation will be made in good faith on the basis of information which has been supplied to the officer. If a mistake is made, I suggest that it should not be considered as an offence which would warrant the incarceration of that individual. If there is to be a penalty, the party should pay. The concept of the guilt of the individual and the culpability of the party should be separated.

There are some extreme penalties in the act that I should like to see softened. Specifically, I am referring to that part of the Elections Act which says that if a candidate has been charged with and convicted of an electoral offence, he shall not run as a candidate in subsequent elections. That provision should be tempered, by limiting the prohibition to three elections, or something like that.

The bill provides for the appointment of a chief agent. He and other officials at the head of the party no doubt will be enthusiastic in dreaming up actions to be taken on behalf of the party. Certain people will be appointed to carry out those actions. They will have responsibility, without much of the control. I suggest that we should consider, at a later stage, taking away the privileges of those who are guilty of infractions. That is to say, we should say that such person cannot be a candidate or participate in any official function thereafter in an election. This type of penalty is provided in other sections of the act. We have used it freely when an offence is charged and proven. I believe, though, that the amendment would be difficult to enforce.

I am sorry I did not have an opportunity to sit on the committee and take part in the discussions which took place there. I am aware that many hon. members who have sat in this chamber in the last few days do not really care how the Elections Act is amended. They are obviously not interested in it. They will probably depend on others to read it if necessary. This probably is why candidates are usually given a large number of copies of the act; hopefully, someone around them will sit down and read it and make the life of the returning officer easy. In my view there will be only a limited number of people interested enough to learn all the intricacies of the job they undertake. They are likely to take on the job with the same attitude as some of the young Americans who worked in the election campaign there and who went from A to B without giving any consideration to the philosophy behind democratic election machinery.

While I am sympathetic to the point the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) is making, I am afraid that if this penalty were applied it would be easy to show that the party itself was not responsible, that someone or another had exceeded his authority and as a result the party should not have to pay the $25,000 fine. Rather, the person who actually committed the offence would likely be incarcerated. Again, we need only look south of the border to find that most of the principals involved in the unfortunate incident there are not likely to be faced with jail sentences, but a lot of "small fish" are in line for jail sentences. Out of the whole "plumber" organization, the only people who are in jail after conviction are bums and petty crooks, while the people who organized this whole Mafia-type structure are still walking around, some of them holding high government positions.

So while supporting the amendment, I fear there will be a tendency on the part of the courts to rap the people who are not fully aware of their responsibilities and that the $25,000 fine will be imposed in very few instances. We are talking here about money distributed from the general purse. It appears to me that if a political party spends an extra amount—

[Mr. Peters.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret that the time allotted to the hon. member has expired.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, the report stage of a bill is an important part of our proceedings and might be regarded as an opportunity to take what used to be called a sober second look. Those of us who have worked on committees know that in dealing with complex and lengthy legislation there is often a desire to dispose of the clauses without too much delay. In most cases, the committee does a good job. Many who have taken part in this debate have referred to the good work done by the committee which dealt with this particular piece of legislation.

The fact remains that the report stage does give us an opportunity to consider once again this legislation which is, in many ways, an experiment. It is not surprising that the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) should have discovered at the end of the committee's work that there are still a number of questions which require consideration. The amendment before us is a good case in point. In a word or two, it is designed to prevent buck-passing.

As we all know, political parties are somewhat amorphous aggregations of people, and on occasions certain people in the organizations do take actions for which others may suffer the consequences. In the bill before us, as I understand it, there is provision that if an offence is created by the chief agent of a registered party which involves overspending of the legal limits, the party itself becomes liable to a fine of $25,000. There are some questions here as to the extent to which parties are incorporated when a party is charged and fined. If I understand the proposal in the bill correctly, before the party can be charged and fined the chief agent would have to be found guilty of an offence.

There is a possibility that the situation with respect to the chief agent may be covered by section 78 of the act, which states that if there is no other provision in the act regarding the penalty for an offence, certain penalties will apply if a person who is charged is found guilty. The position outlined in this proposal for having registration of parties, chief agents and other agents puts a particular responsibility on that individual. As I understand it, the onus would be on the registered agent. As the bill stands without this amendment, the registered agent would have to be charged under section 78 and convicted; the registered party would then be liable to a charge and, if convicted, subject to a penalty not exceeding $25,000. It may be true that the chief agent is primarily legally accountable, but I submit this leaves open the possibility that other people associated with the party who have not assumed a particular responsibility under the Elections Act for the spending of funds might take action which indirectly would make the party and registered agent guilty of an offence under the act.

The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Skeena makes it clear that officers of the party other than the registered agent will be liable for such acts if the party commits an offence. This seems to be a useful proposal to tighten up the whole operation if, in fact, any party does play fast and loose with the law relating to a ceiling on election expenditures. Hopefully, there will never be an occasion in Canada, if this bill becomes law, for any such charges to be laid; but nevertheless it is pretty elementary that in passing laws of this kind some provision is made for penalties to be levied against those who may in fact violate the act.

Therefore, I think the House should commend and give recognition to the hon. member for Skeena for having seen this loophole, which I think will tend to make for a greater sense and degree of collective responsibility on the part of people who hold office within a political organization. In other words, it will mean that the person who happens to be selected and appointed as registered agent will not be the only fall guy if in fact a party is found guilty of violating the spending limitations set out in the act.

For this reason, I think the hon. member for Skeena has come up with something that apparently must have been overlooked by the committee in its detailed analysis of this matter. Therefore, I suggest the House acquiesce to the motion and agree it would be an improvement to the provisions of the act that we are proposing to bring into being.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 13 (Mr. Howard) negatived.

Mr. Howard: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, there are standing in my name notices of motions Nos. 14, 15 and 16. I do not intend to proceed with those motions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): If I understand correctly, the hon. member wishes to withdraw motions Nos. 14, 15 and 16. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Motions 14, 15 and 16, as requested by the hon. member for Skeena, are dropped.

Motions Nos. 14, 15 and 16 (Mr. Howard) withdrawn.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to say that I will not move motion No. 18. While I am on my feet, I might include motion No. 19 and motion No. 32.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Motions 18, 19 and 32, as requested by the mover, will be dropped. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motions 18, 19 and 32 (Mr. Brewin) withdrawn.

● (1520)

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I think the next motion is No. 20, with which I do not intend to proceed. I also do not intend to proceed with motion No. 21, largely because I think it would be out of order. I might mention, on behalf of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) because I happen to have the floor, that he does not wish to proceed with motion No. 22. I will stop there. The hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney) wishes to assert his authority.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): As hon. members have heard, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) asks that motions Nos. 20, 21 and 22 be dropped. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motions Nos. 20 and 21 (Mr. Howard) withdrawn.

Motion No. 22 (Mr. Barnett) withdrawn.

[Translation]

An hon. Member: Speak French!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I think that I could speak French, but I believe that hon. members also have the right to use either official language, as they wish.

[English]

The next amendment is motion No. 23 in the name of the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney).

Mr. Harney: Mr. Speaker, it was my intention to rise to say I will not move the amendment standing in my name, motion No. 23, even though the virtue of the amendment is obvious. I am willing to let it go, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West wishes to withdraw the motion now before the House. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 23 (Mr. Harney) withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: The next motions to be considered are Nos. 24 and 27.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I rise to get the floor through a device known as a point of order. I have had a number of discussions and consultations, and with the permission, consent and advice of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) I might say that he has decided not to proceed with notice of motion No. 24. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) has the same view in respect of notice of motion No. 25. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) has the same view in respect of motion No. 26. The mover of motion No. 27, the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), makes the same request and indicates the same intention. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni has decided not to proceed with motion No. 28.

On my own behalf, in respect of motion No. 29 I think it should not be proceeded with. Motion No. 32 is already withdrawn. I think if my suggestions are accepted, the next motion would be No. 33, which I believe should not be proceeded with. This is the subject matter on which I raised a point of order earlier on the question of the Governor General's recommendation in respect of the provision in the bill to which this proposed amendment relates. If we cannot proceed with that, this leaves me in the position of seeking to move notice of motion No. 34.

Mr. Speaker: I gather there is agreement, consent and advice, as the hon. member suggests, to withdraw motions Nos. 24 to 29 inclusive, and motion No. 33. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 24 (Mr. Barnett) withdrawn.

Motion No. 25 (Mr. Knight) withdrawn.

Motion No. 26 (Mr. Peters) withdrawn.

Motion No. 27 (Mr. Benjamin) withdrawn.

Motion No. 28 (Mr. Barnett) withdrawn.

Motion Nos. 29 and 33 (Mr. Howard) withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: The next motion is No. 34.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved:

That Bill C-203, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, be amended by deleting the words "twenty per cent" in subsection 63.1(1) of clause 10 and substituting therefor the words:

"seventy per cent"

He said: Mr. Speaker, the argument in support of this amendment has been engaged in on many occasions in the past, and from the suggestions put forward and conversations I have had outside this chamber it would appear that everyone expresses agreement with the logic of it. Therefore I will leave my remarks at that.

Mr. Speaker: Is the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) rising on a point of order?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order or to deal with the substance of the amendment. As hon. members will realize, clause 10 of the bill provides that in order to secure reimbursement of election expenses, a candidate must obtain a number of votes at least equal to 20 per cent of the number of valid votes cast in the electoral district.

The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) obviously has put down an ironic amendment to increase that figure to 70 per cent. A following amendment of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) would reduce it to 10 per cent. In the proceedings of the committee on privileges and elections it was put forward by a number of hon. members that some readjustment ought to be made in respect of this figure. It was suggested that 15 per cent might be more appropriate. It was impossible to produce an amendment at that stage because the limit had been established in the royal recommendation from His Excellency. I undertook, as members of the committee will recall, to reconsider this point and, if a different decision were reached, to seek a further recommendation from His Excellency. I have since recommended that the number "20" be changed to "15".

I believe, Your Honour, there is a recommendation in your hands to that effect, so that it would be possible to move an amendment to reduce the 20 per cent to 15 per cent. That is authorized by the recommendation from His Excellency.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I want to say, in view of the remarks we have just heard from the President of the Privy Council, that my amendment No. 35, which is by no means ironic in intent, will be withdrawn. I shall not proceed with it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am advised by the President of the Privy Council that I have in my hand the amended royal recommendation. It is not apparent that it is here, but I assume that the recommendation has been obtained from His Excellency which makes it possible to move an amendment to the motion before us.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The Chair must take the minister's word for it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has a valid point; I have to take the minister's word for this. My understanding, also, is that the amended royal recommendation was to take into account the very valid point of order raised by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) a few days ago, so that eventually the House will be apprised of the terms of the amended recommendation. Is it my understanding that an amendment will be moved to the motion now before the House?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would move, seconded by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury):

That the figure "70 per cent" be reduced to "15 per cent."

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the amendment to the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment carried on division.

Amendment (Mr. MacEachen) agreed to.

Motion No. 34 (Mr. Howard), as amended, agreed to.

● (1530)

Mr. Speaker: It is my understanding that motion No. 35 is dropped. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 35 (Mr. Brewin) withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: Next is motion No. 36 in the name of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett).

Mr. Howard: I wonder if I could go through the same procedure which I used earlier, with respect to motions Nos. 36 and 37 standing in the name of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) and motion No. 38 in the name of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). Then we could go on to a couple of motions of the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney). At the moment I cannot proceed beyond motion No. 38. I would request that the motions to which I have referred be withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that motions Nos. 36, 37 and 38 be withdrawn?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motions Nos. 36 and 37 (Mr. Barnett) withdrawn.

Motion No. 38 (Mr. Peters) withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: We are now on motion No. 39 in the name of the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney).

Mr. Harney: Mr. Speaker, I take it that we are now on motion no. 41.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Harney: Mr. Speaker, I would like to move this motion.

Mr. O'Connor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My copy of the order paper indicates that motion No. 39 stands in the name of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett). Could you read the motion so we could clear up the confusion as to whose amendment it is?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney) moves motion No. 39 as follows:

That Bill C-203, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, be amended in clause 14 by deleting in line 37 at page 29 the period and adding the words:

",providing

(a) none of the allocation is to be used in amounts of less than four minutes of broadcasting time where the broadcasting undertaking that he is licensed to carry on is a television station, and

(b) in any other case, no more than one third of the allocation is to be used in amounts of less than five minutes of broadcasting time."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to this amendment for a few minutes, mainly because most of the debate on the amendments to this bill has not dealt with the section of the bill which deals with the Broadcasting Act. This motion, and another one standing in my name, consists of only two amendments which have to do with an extremely important section of the bill and I think that the point of the amendments at least should be put before the House.

As the bill stands now, the Broadcasting Act would be amended to provide that 6½ hours of broadcasting time on radio and television be allocated among the parties. Of this time that is taken up by the parties, the cost as to 50 per cent shall be reimbursed by the public. I think it is important to note that this is certainly a major departure from past practice in Canada. For the first time in our history the public will be subsidizing the propaganda activities of the political parties over the electronic media.

I think it is important to realize that a considerable amount of money will be involved. In the last election I think it is fair to say that close to $2 million was spent by the political parties on advertising on radio and television. If that pattern is followed, and even assuming no increase, we can expect the public will have to subsidize the propaganda activities of the political parties to the tune of $1 million. Political parties being what they are, and particularly given the kind of feelings that they have during elections, find themselves forced to try to counter the activities of other political parties to the utmost.

If the political parties know—and they will certainly know—that their opponents will be spending as much as they can on television and radio, and if they know that what they are spending will be subsidized to the tune of 50 per cent, we can expect there to be virtually full use of the 6½ hours allocated and allowed under the bill.

In the last election, the Canadian public was exposed to a rather new and disturbing phenomenon. In elections before the 1972 election it is true that political parties made use of spot ads. I refer to spot ads to distinguish them from top time on radio and television. In the last election the political parties, one in particular, vastly increased their use of spot ads. A spot ad lasts from 30 seconds to a minute and it is operated and produced in much the same way that a soap commercial or a toothpaste commercial is produced. The whole idea is to get a name across, to get a brand sold. All that can be done in 30 seconds is to try to influence the voter into some kind of preconditioned reaction.

We all know how advertising works or is supposed to work, and we all witnessed in the last election a considerable increase in the use of that technique. The justification that has been presented for the subsidy on the part of the public purse for radio and television time is that this radio and television time used by the political parties would allow the voters, first of all, to become aware of the issues in the elections and also to know what stands the various parties take with regard to these issues.

I would say that is a very laudable justification. We all agree in the House that it is good for the public to be appaised of the issues during an election; it is good and necessary for the public to know where the parties stand on these issues and to hear the parties explain why they stand where they do. On the basis of these justifications, I am sure no one would object to a subsidy given to the political parties so they can inform the public about the issues and about their stands on the issues.

However, in this bill there is no provision which would prohibit, or even lessen, the use of the spot ad, and it could be possible—I suggest that it certainly will be more than possible; it will be highly probable—that the political parties, and I include my own, will bend to the advice of those people who advise us all in matters of publicity, namely, the advertising agencies. Their advice will be simple and clear. It will be to this effect: Use whatever time you are given in spot ads because the radio or the television talk does not have that kind of impact. With spot ads you, the political party, will be able to saturate the voters' attention.

I think it is important to point out that if the political parties proceed to use this time in spot ads, toward the end of the election the voter, when it comes to watching television or listening to radio, will hear very few commercials except those commercials presented by the political parties. I hesitate even to sketch for you what the reaction of the voter will be when that time comes. I suspect that he will be indignant. I certainly would approve of and understand the indignation of John Q. Public. You can imagine him when the next election comes, sitting before his television set and, rather than seeing his usual beer and toothpaste commercials, seeing the utter and complete repetition of the commercials put forward by the political parties. He will have total justification for asking: Is that why I am subsidizing the political parties? Is that why my money is being given to them so they can tell me about the issues? They are not doing that at all; they are trying to brainwash me.

The point of my amendment is really very simple, Mr. Speaker. It would prohibit the use of spot ads on television for election purposes at election time within the confines of this bill and it would also limit the use of spot ads, not prohibit them, on radio. The object of the amendment is obvious and I think I have given the justification behind it.

What I would urge upon members of the House is serious consideration of the amendment which I am putting forward. If consideration is not to be given favourably, I at least wish to warn the public of what will happen to them in the next election. In effect they will be treated as if they were morons: the political parties will assume that the best way to treat and condition them is in the same way as Pavlov's dogs which slavered at the mouth when a bell was rung. I do not think the average Canadian citizen is anything like Pavlov's dogs and he certainly deserves to be treated much more humanely and as though he had some intelligence.

The point behind the subsidy is to bring the voter into full contact with the issues. Without my amendment the bill would allow the political parties to spend the money for which they will be reimbursed in the way their publicity agents tell them will be the most effective way. I would hate to have the view of humanity that PR men and advertising agencies have. You can tell that view easily, judging from the kind of drivel to which they subject people in the form of television and radio ads. At the very least, I am appealing to the members of the various political parties to say that they have a much higher appreciation of their fellow citizens. I hope my appeal does not fall on deaf ears and that this amendment will receive some support.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we are all aware of the effectiveness of publicity on radio and television. Some of us could well say: It should be understood that people are not convinced by 30 or 60 second advertisements on radio and television. But there are always some people who are. If they are not, they are still affected in some way by this publicity, because if they were not, the large companies which buy advertising time for soap, toothpaste, beer or gasoline, would not spend their money in this way.

It should also be noted, Mr. Speaker, that the items which we consider as essential are rarely publicized on radio or television. There are no advertisements about houses for sale. Food products are not advertised either because people usually know such things are valuable and necessary. Knowing people cannot be influenced by a 30-second or one minute advertisement as far as important things are concerned, producers of such things usually do not advertise on radio or television. As a rule, there is advertising of products that are not necessary, things that are, one may say, trash, things that are not very important in life. On television, we can see advertising on things usually useless, or if they are not useless, it is almost impossible to see the difference between products of one brand and those of another. That is why individuals or corporations that spend money for advertising on television advertize mainly valueless products.

Politics is what sells the idea, Mr. Speaker, because after all politics is something very important, it has to take care of the nation's welfare and future. Now we shall see politics, party leaders and parliament members reduced to the level of toothpaste and Kentucky Fried Chicken.

The object of my amendment is to prevent such a thing, Mr. Speaker. That is what we should prevent, by taking seriously the object of the bill which merely says that the public want to be informed. And to enable the public to be better informed, we are going to grant subsidies to political parties. Without this amendment, such a policy would not be implemented and that is why I am asking members to consider it seriously, failing which the object of the bill would not be reached.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on motion No. 39?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Harney: I believe there are five members who stood.

Mr. Speaker: I see, in effect, only four and a half, one member not being in his seat—and that is not quite enough. I declare the motion lost on division.

Motion No. 39 (Mr. Harney) negatived.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder if I might take one moment before we proceed with consideration of the item before us to refer first to the amended royal recommendation which has now arrived and is in my hand. It contains the amendments referred to by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) which meet both requirements, I am sure, to the satisfaction of hon. members. Perhaps it is not necessary to read it at this time in order that it be accepted by the House.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MR. PETERS—ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY REMARK DURING TODAY'S QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Speaker: I should like to refer very briefly to an incident which took place this morning when we had a few alleged questions of privilege, one of them involving an exchange between the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) and the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand). During the course of the exchange there were words spoken by the hon. member for Timiskaming from his seat and I said at the time that I would look at the record. However, pending this the Solicitor General indicated he was charging that the hon. member had said that he, the Solicitor General, lied. The hon. member explained that he meant it was not the minister who was uttering the lie but that the statement that was given to the minister was in itself a lie.

I have looked at the record, and certainly what the hon. member said is substantiated in it. His explanation, when he was called to order, was: "Mr. Speaker, I think Hansard will clearly indicate that I said that is a lie, and there seems to be some difference of opinion as to the fact. I did not say that the minister was a liar but that the report he gave was a lie."

I still have some hesitation about hon. members using such strong language even in the case of a report given to the House by a minister or another member; but certainly there is a distinction. It is important that all hon. members should realize it is incumbent upon the Chair to ensure that there is respect among members. No member, whether on one side of this House or the other, whether he be minister or not, frontbencher or backbencher, should be accused by another member of dishonesty, of intentionally misleading the House or of lying to the House. I think that is important. The hon. member has given his explanation and the Chair is willing to accept it. The minister is not here but I think he would accept it in the same way that I do. I therefore consider the incident closed.

I will now recognize the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen).

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in accordance with an order made earlier this day, I wonder if we could now revert to motions to deal with the motion in the name of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand).

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motions

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

CHRISTMAS ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to proceed with the motion at this time, having considered an alternative motion which has been discussed and which I think will have the support of all members of the House. Maybe I should briefly summarize the contents of the motion before reading it.

It would provide that upon the adjournment of the House today, it would stand adjourned until January 3 next. Then it provides that there be a method for dealing with three items on the order paper. The first is the export tax bill, providing that it would be dealt with in not more than three days; the oil allocation bill, providing for two more days of committee consideration, not more than three days at report stage and not more than a further day at third reading; then dealing with the election expenses bill it provides that the report stage and third reading be disposed of without further debate or amendment. Mr. Speaker, I could read the motion; or should Your Honour read it?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether it was intended to make this motion before we had completed consideration of the four motions which are still to be called on the election expenses bill, Nos. 40, 41, 42 and 1. If this motion is put and carried it will mean we should immediately thereafter put the election expenses bill motions without further debate. I should like to have this question clarified before the motion is put.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I would think that because we are in the midst of these report stage amendments and one or two of them require a bit of explanation, particularly motion No. 1 with respect to a position hoped to be taken on the vote at third reading of the election expenses bill, we should either hold off the motion of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) for a House order or dispense with private members' hour between four o'clock and five o'clock in order to provide an opportunity for the report stage amendments to be cleared up.

Then we could take a few minutes to put forward a position which some hon. members want to place on the record regarding their position with respect to third reading stage, even though when the order is passed and we return there would be no debate.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I sought the floor before four o'clock in view of the possibility that I might not be able to get it after four o'clock. It is quite agreeable to me, and I am sure to other hon. members, to suspend private members' hour—but with the understanding that we return to this motion before five o'clock.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, we would co-operate in this suggestion, but the hon. member who was going to speak on private members' hour is standing by and we want to preserve that hour, or most of it. We would not mind cutting into it by five or ten minutes.

Motions

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether a compromise could be reached respecting the motion in the name of the President of the Privy Council. I think that it is the will of the House that we proceed with private members' hour. We would put the hon. member's motion, but before that have an agreement that perhaps by 4.15 p.m. these proceedings be terminated. At 4.15 p.m. we would then proceed with the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk). Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: If this is agreed, we will put the motion now.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council):

That when the House adjourns on December 21, 1973, it shall stand adjourned to January 3, 1974, provided always that if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with Her Majesty's Government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time;

That, in the event of Mr. Speaker being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of committees shall act in his stead for the purpose of this

That fifteen minutes before the ordinary hour of adjournment on the third day that Bill C-245, an act to impose a charge on the export of crude oil from Canada, to impose an oil export tax under the Excise Tax Act and to allocate certain of the revenues derived from the oil export tax, is taken into consideration, all questions necessary for the disposal of the said bill at all remaining stages shall be forthwith put and decided without further debate or amendment;

That the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works be instructed to report Bill C-236, Energy Supplies Emergency Act, following two further days of consideration thereof;

That, at fifteen minutes before the ordinary hour of adjournment on the third day that Bill C-236 is considered at the report stage, every question necessary for the disposal of the said bill at the report stage shall be forthwith put and decided without further debate;

That, at fifteen minutes before the ordinary hour of adjournment on the first day that the motion for third reading of Bill C-236 is taken into consideration every question necessary for the disposal of the third reading of the said bill shall be forthwith put and decided without further debate or amendment;

And that, when the order is next called for consideration of Bill C-203, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, every question necessary for the disposal of the report stage and of the third reading of the said bill shall be forthwith put without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, we took part in these negotiations and everything seems to be in order. However, as everybody in the House knows, we had serious objections to Bill C-236. There has been some agreement reached in committee on the bill, and I think it would be helpful to have on the record now the thoughts of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) on that agreement.

[Mr. Bell.]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be a little difficult to put that agreement on the record because 25 or 30 amendments were discussed in some detail. If the House really wants me to do so I will take them seriatim through the amendments. Perhaps the hon. member would clarify what he wants me to do. I can be as full or as limited as he desires.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I would not want the minister to clarify them all—we will have a few minutes in 1974—but I should like him to clarify the understanding with regard to clause 11. The others are all right. I think we should have an understanding of the position agreed to on that clause because the agreement limiting debate on Bill C-236 is founded on the understanding which the minister and I reached in this respect.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the House that clause 11 provides for the declaration of an emergency. If the House is sitting seven days after an emergency has been declared, or seven days after the House recommences if the House was not sitting at the time, a notice of motion to debate an order to approve the declaration of an emergency would be set down. Thereafter there would be an opportunity for the House to debate the motion for four sitting days, and at a quarter to ten on the fourth day the question would be put. If the motion is carried, then the allocation program is put into effect in accordance with the statute. If the motion is not carried, then of course the declaration and the mandatory allocation program would cease to be in force and effect. Is that a fair statement?

Mr. Baldwin: I think that is it, basically. We have some ironing out of commas and semi-colons and dashes, but I think that is basically the arrangement. I should like to lay down one more condition in so far as it is possible to do so. On the days that will be set aside for debate on Bill C-236, will the government House leader give his undertaking that the government will not restrict the full use of those days for this debate? There are some ways in which the government can introduce other measures. We are talking about full days of debate when Bill C-236 would be considered by this House.

• (1600)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a word or two about the motion which the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) has moved. It represents points on which the representatives of the parties have agreed. I think hon. members generally should know that not everyone is completely happy with the motion. Everyone engaged in a give-and-take exercise and the terms of the motion represent the compromise which we reached. I think there will be general satisfaction over the result, as we will not be spending Christmas Eve here on the floor of the House of Commons.

The only other point I wish to make is that since the passing of this motion is based upon the assumption that consideration of the report stage of Bill C-203 will be completed this afternoon, and as we have provided for no debate taking place on third reading, I hope that the 4.15 p.m. order will not be pressed too severely because one or two of my colleagues may want to say a few more things on the bill.

I think if it is understood that the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) is to have one hour, whenever it starts, everybody would be much happier about this motion.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I wish to further clarify one element which has been referred to. With regard to the declaration, if it occurs when parliament is not sitting the understanding would be that the order would be set down as soon as parliament reconvened. There would be no obligation to disrupt the recess or prorogation period for the purpose of bringing parliament back at an earlier time.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, there is some misunderstanding here. It is our understanding that if there is a national emergency—I do not want to debate this because now is not the time to do so—that emergency would warrant the recalling of parliament. We agree that if in the course of an election campaign a national emergency is declared, obviously the matter would be left to the mandate of the people: the people would make the decision. On the question of the recall of parliament, perhaps the minister and I can work out something to do with the timing of that recall. We are not prepared to let the matter go on the basis that parliament will only come back two or three months after the national emergency has been declared. We do not think that is right.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I was speaking from the draft supplied to me by the hon. gentleman, which is in the terms I suggested. If the hon. member has any different understanding of it, I will have to speak to him about it.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, we have run into a difficulty. I do not know whether it is possible for the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and the minister to confer quickly. Perhaps we could hold in abeyance final approval of the motion because the question raised is crucial to our position on the matter.

Mr. Speaker: Obviously, as there is a desire on the part of some hon. members, including the hon. member for Peace River, to consider the motion further and to have further discussions, perhaps the motion should not be put immediately.

Perhaps we could return to the consideration of motion No. 40, Bill C-203, which I believe was about to be called a moment ago, on the understanding that as soon as we have completed consideration of the motions on this bill the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) will bring forward his private members' business.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) asked that the 4.15 p.m. order not be applied strictly and that we give one hour to the hon. member for Athabasca. It should be remembered, however, that there is to be royal assent some time later this afternoon, so that the hon. member for Athabasca may not have an hour.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, I would not be agreeable to delaying beyond 4.15 p.m. consideration of private members' business. I think we should proceed with private member's hour at that time, as agreed upon.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ELECTION EXPENSES

PROVISION OF PAYMENTS TO CANDIDATES AND REIMBURSEMENT OF PARTIES FOR CERTAIN BROADCASTING TIME

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-203, to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: The next motion is No. 40 standing in the name of the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney).

Mr. Harney: Mr. Speaker, I rise in order to withdraw motion No. 40, standing in my name.

Motion No. 40 (Mr. Harney) withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: Next comes motion No. 41.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I should like consent to withdraw this motion.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 41 (Mr. Barnett) withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: We shall now proceed to consideration of motion No. 42 standing in the name of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett).

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni) moved:

That Bill C-203, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, be amended by deleting, in paragraph (b) of section 99.4 of clause 14 the words "between the hours of six a.m. and nine a.m., 12 p.m. and 2 p.m. and 4 p.m. and 7 p.m." and substituting the words:

"between the hours of six a.m. and eight p.m."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. The reasoning behind this amendment and the point I wish to make is this: I believe the committee succumbed to what I would describe as an urban orientation with regard to prime radio time. I have brought forward this amendment to stress that in some areas of the country some of the hours which are not included in the bill as it stands may be more desirable. That is my only point. Unless other members wish to debate it, I will not pursue it further on this occasion. I felt the point should be made at this time in the House.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: The division will be deferred. We shall now consider motion No. 1, standing in the name of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) which is as follows:

That Bill C-203, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, be amended by deleting the words "Election Expenses Act" in clause 1 and substituting therefor the words:

"Election Expenses and Subsidies to Political Parties Act."

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, as the mover of this motion may I say that it gives us an opportunity to put some thoughts on the record. Let me say that I, for one, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) and others are opposed to the concept of providing subsidies out of the public treasury to political parties and candidates. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni, particularly, would like to say a few words and I am sure the House will not be seriously offended if he talks until 4.15.

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I had not expected such generosity from my colleague from Skeena (Mr. Howard). As the bill is to pass third reading stage without debate, perhaps I might make one or two comments. Although I recognize that this bill is a step in the right direction in the limiting of expenses and the reporting of the sources of campaign contributions, I feel that if we carry through the idea of subsidizing political parties and candidates from the public purse, in the long run we shall be acting against the best interests of the political parties themselves. Once the people of Canada become aware of this, I think they will express their opposition to this concept with increasing vigour. For that reason, having weighed everything in the balance, we have brought forward this amendment. It deals with a basic concept which I, for one, cannot agree to support which is included in the bill.

I am agreeable to providing services for candidates, such as franking privileges which would be useful for the mailing of information to voters in one's constituency. But once we adopt the concept of providing reimbursement directly from the public treasury to candidates of parties we shall be encouraging candidates to spend more money so that they can get more money back. By so doing we should be introducing a retrograde element in our electoral system. It is an element which I think is wrong and which I intend to oppose with my vote on third reading, if I have the opportunity.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question? Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the motion lost on division.

Motion No. 1 (Mr. Howard) negatived.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CHRISTMAS ADJOURNMENT

Mr. Speaker: We shall turn now to the motion which stands in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen).

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, may I make a suggestion? The principals involved on both sides of the House are negotiating very hard. There is a good mood, so perhaps we could hold over any decision until after the private members' hour.

Mr. MacEachen: Could we agree to put the motion at five o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: The President of the Privy Council will remember that there is royal assent at 4.45 p.m.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't let him in.

Mr. Roche: I should like to know whether there is to be any opportunity for debate on the third reading of the election expenses bill. I urge the government House leader to provide for at least one day's debate on third reading.

Mr. Speaker: I believe there is a reference to that in the order. Is it the wish of the House that I read the motion? Some hon. Members suggested I should dispense with reading it. The motion has been put and will, I gather, be reconsidered at 4.45 p.m. after the private members' hour.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following communication:

Government House,
Ottawa 21 December, 1973

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Roland A. Ritchie, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, December 21, at 4.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
André Garneau
Brigadier General
Administrative Secretary
to the Governor General

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions, public bills and private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED STEPS TO CONTINUE FAMILY FARMS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca) moved:

That in the opinion of this House the government should consider the advisability of taking steps to reduce or reverse the continuing depopulation of rural areas in particular through the introduction of short and long-term measures to save the family farm.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is almost a year since I placed this motion on the order paper. There have been certain changes affecting agriculture since that time, but the motion still applies today as it did a year ago. I have always felt that agriculture is one of our most important primary industries and is very vital to the Canadian economy. Indeed, I would go so far as to say that it is the backbone of our country's existence. It, therefore, is a direct responsibility of the federal government not only to support this industry to the maximum extent it can but to implement policies which will guarantee its continual expansion and growth.

Presently we are in the middle of a world food crisis. World food shortages and higher food prices to Canadians make it all the more important to realize that any policy other than one of expansion in agriculture is completely unacceptable. Although Canada is becoming a highly industrialized nation, we must continue to produce food because that is certainly one of the things that we can do best. Until very recently it was something we did best in a manner which provided sufficient food not only for Canadians but also for export.

The year 1969, one year after the inauguration of the present government and its policies, was the turning point in Canadian agriculture because that was the year in which for the first time in our history we actually imported more agricultural products than we exported. In other words, the policies of the present government were so filled with disincentive to produce that which we used to do best—and which we can still do best—that it became an unprofitable business to the point at which, in order to provide an adequate food supply to Canadians, we had to buy from other countries.

Even today we are short of commodities which we are well able to produce, but we do not see the kind of policy changes that are required in order to correct this inequity. The first example that comes to my mind is dairy production. We are not producing enough of certain dairy products; there has been a marked decline in our dairy production since the implementation of policies which are now in existence.

Over the past ten years we have seen a continuing depopulation of rural areas because of lack of incentives by way of adequate financial return to the producers. Between the years 1966-71 there was a daily loss of 44 people from the farm to urban centres in the three prairie provinces. This works out to the migration of over 16,000 people per year from the farm to the city in the three prairie provinces. It means the loss of over 4,000 farm families. The core of the problem is, without any doubt, the fact that net farm income has been continuously declining.

Because of the world food shortage in the past few months, however, gross farm income has increased significantly and for the first time in many years farmers felt that they were getting a fair return for their product. However, this feeling of satisfaction did not persist very long when immediately on the heels of increased farm income followed spiralling increased farm costs which have now surpassed the increased income.

The price of machinery continues to rise unchecked in spite of the statements made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) that he has implemented most of the recommendations of the royal commission on the price of farm machinery. This minister has given us assurances that farm machinery prices would not rise unreasonably, yet his assurances have been followed by spiralling costs. The price of fuel to power farm machinery has also gone up substantially. The price of fertilizer, another big item on the farmer's expense list, has nearly doubled in the past year or two.

If you recall, Mr. Speaker, nearly a year ago or, to be more exact, last February, we called for a freeze on prices, incomes, profits, etc. which would not apply to the price of agricultural products at the farm gate. If this suggestion had been implemented at that time, when farm product prices were quite good but inflation had not yet struck so fiercely as it now has, the farmer today would be in a much better economic condition. The Liberals and the NDP scoffed at our proposal. In addition they took action to cut the price of meat and the price of wheat, and the farmers' opportunity for a fair return quickly vanished.

While the government can argue that our farmers are doing as well as any other farmers in the world, that kind of argument carries no weight with me. The fact is, the policies of the present government have been extremely detrimental toward the farmer and his income. I would not complain too much if the policies were at least neutral; if they didn't improve things on the farm but also didn't make things worse. But, in fact, the policies of this government have caused the western Canadian farmer to lose millions of dollars in direct revenue. I am, of course, referring to the LIFT program which was introduced by the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt (Mr. Lang) and was later followed by the grass incentives program. These programs resulted in a massive reduction in wheat production. To be more exact, in 1969 total wheat production was 652 million bushels; with the implementation of the LIFT program, 1970 production was down to 312.5 million bushels, a reduction of some 340 million bushels.

With the implementation of the grass incentives program which followed, production was further curtailed and has not recovered to 1969 levels even to this date. In 1971 we were 142 million bushels short of the 1969 figure; in 1972 we were 139 million bushels short, and in 1973 we were 43 million bushels short. This totals, Mr. Speaker, to a reduced production of wheat, which occurred as a direct result of deliberate government policy, of 664 million bushels between 1970 and 1973 inclusive.

The price of bread wheat today is approximately $5.70 a bushel; the price of Durum is approximately $8.95 a bushel. A rough calculation indicates that about 17 per cent of our production is Durum, while about 83 per cent of our production is of the bread wheat or the slightly less expensive variety; or, we can round it up by saying one-fifth is Durum and four-fifths is the other bread variety of wheat. If we calculate the loss of income to the prairie farmer in terms of dollars since the present minister became responsible for the Wheat Board, we can easily see that he has done irreparable damage and harm to the wheat producer.

A quick calculation, at today's prices, of the loss due to decreased production of Durum wheat of 133 million bushels at $8.95 a bushel amounts to approximately $1.2 billion; decreased production of other bread wheat of 531 million bushels, at approximately $5.70 a bushel, amounts to approximately $3 billion. In short, by one stroke of his pen the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt, has reduced income to the western wheat farmer by $4.2 billion since he has become minister responsible for the Wheat Board. If for no other reason, that reason by itself is sufficient cause not only for having him removed from the cabinet but for having him exiled from the country as well.

Mr. Danforth: That is a little strong.

Mr. Yewchuk: It may be strong, but consider how many years it will take western agriculture to recover that kind of loss. The injury caused is no less than if the same minister had dropped an atomic bomb on each of those three provinces. Western Canadian farmers cannot forgive him for this kind of tragic blunder in policy and planning. There is no doubt that this kind of policy has resulted in many more people leaving the farm in disgust to seek a better life elsewhere.

Other policies that this government has enacted since it has come to power have been mainly to increase interest rates on loans available to farmers, and introduction of the small farm development program. The small farm development program itself has been in operation in Alberta since September, 1972, and in Manitoba and Saskatchewan since June of 1973; in other words, since last summer. This small farm development program has only had the effect of increasing the process of depopulation of rural areas.

As a direct result of this program, 251 farmers in the three prairie provinces received assistance to expand their farms in order to make them more economically viable. Also as a direct result of this program, 1,247 farms were disposed of, and the same number of farm families were displaced from their homes only to be faced with a whole set of new problems such as relocation, possibly vocational retraining, procurement of new housing, etc. But, most important of all, they have had to give up a way of life which they had chosen to follow because that way of life was no longer possible under the present regime.

Obviously, new policies are required, policies that are deliberately designed to increase financial returns to farmers in order that they may return to the land or remain on the land. They must be policies to guarantee the farmer a fair price for his product. They must be policies to encourage new farmers to start farming operations if they are interested in that vocation. They must be policies to encourage vigorous marketing of Canadian agricultural products and to cut substantially the inflated overhead costs that the farmer must now bear as a result of the uncontrolled inflation that has gripped our country in recent months.

Policies must be short-term, mid-term and long-term. Short-term policies could be based on an incentive subsidization, but they can only be short-term. Long-term policies must be based on a vigorous marketing system and the production of an abundance and variety of high-quality Canadian agricultural products. By this method, stability of a fair return to the producer can be achieved as well as reasonable prices to the consumer.

From the consumer's point of view, the only way to ensure a stable food cost is to ensure adequate domestic agricultural production. At the same time it must recognized that farmers are entitled, and indeed must be able, to receive reasonable profit from this increased agricultural production. If there is no profit in production, production will decrease, thereby increasing even more our dependency upon imports to supply our needs. That can only mean higher food costs to consumers.

To sum up, there is no doubt in my mind that the tremendous loss of income to farmers has been a direct result of government interference in the private affairs of farmers. Farm policies must be drawn up in close consultation with the producers, not by backroom bureaucrats. Policies must be designed to allow a farmer to do what he can do best, which is to produce. We had the spectacle in 1969 of the minister responsible of the Wheat Board touring his own province and other provinces and hearing the same complaints from the farmers about the amount of grain they could grow. What the farmers wanted him to do was to find markets; instead, his decision was to cut production. That is an example of direct government interference in the affairs of farmers which has resulted in severe damage to their incomes.

In my view, production can best be achieved in the agricultural sphere through following the principles of free enterprise, which incorporates the incentive of "the harder you work, the better is your financial return." I believe that the farmer should be given the opportunity to play a large role in the solution to his problems, through his own efforts and through the efforts of his farm organizations. Neither today or in the future must we again allow government legislation that creates a disadvantage to farmers in any region of the country. We must never again allow a program like LIFT to contribute to the destruction of the agricultural industry. The farmer should have the inherent right to manage his farm operation as he sees fit, and he should have access to appropriate farm management training if he requires it.

If supply management and farm marketing boards are to be established, the decision to do so must be made by the commodity groups themselves. If these basic and simple principles are followed, agriculture will recover and the agricultural way of life will survive. If the present policies of the government are followed, agriculture will not survive.

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) used in support of his motion, I would have expected, as my colleagues surely did, from a man like him, with as much personality and university training, that the positive would have had the upper hand on the negative. But he chose to stick to the pessimistic side of things, to the negative, and hold the government responsible for all agricultural problems.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the motion of the hon. member is good. I agree fully with its wording, in that sense that the government must surely study the problem of the exodus from the land, the decreasing number of farms and the resulting social and economic problems.

I feel we are unanimous in this House in deploring the rural depopulation. We deplore it for a number of reasons. First because it is a social problem at the level of the individuals and families concerned, and second because it gives rise to immediate economic hardship. It is mainly an economic problem and a long term danger. As in the past, but certainly to a greater extent in the future, governments will be called upon to share in the efforts to stop this tendency and find means to quiet down this unrest. It goes without saying that we, as members of this House, must all be behind this.

However, I cannot buy the statement made by the hon. member that this government is responsible for the rural depopulation which started ten years ago, specifically in 1963. He was very careful in choosing that year, for it was in fact in 1963 that the Progressive Conservative Party was defeated and replaced by the Liberal Party. He claimed that this unrest did not exist before 1963. I must regretfully revive his memory and ask him, although he is still very young, to go back a little further in the past, let us say, 10, 15, or even 20 years. Let us go back to the 1940's at least, when the war broke out. At that time, of course, industries developed throughout Canada. Naturally the war caused a certain manpower shortage. Young people particularly had many career opportunities in fields other than farming. These young people left the farm. The movement of the population from the farming and rural sectors did not start ten years ago, but 30 or 40 years ago. This phenomenon is not unique to Canada. It is international, American, Canadian, European, Mr. Speaker. The government cannot therefore be blamed for the situation.

On the other hand, I agree with the hon. member when he says we must press the government, the provincial-federal institutions to think of the best measures possible to keep rural people where they are and help farmers find adequate people to take over. But that, Mr. Speaker, can happen only with one policy, a policy providing farmers with a sufficient income to justify their investments and the amount of work they have to put into their farm. And that is where the basic problem lies.

If farmers are unable to get a sufficient income or one that can be compared to that of other groups of society, why should they have to keep on sacrificing themselves? Why should we, as Canadians, require that 10 or 15 per cent of the Canadian people should sacrifice themselves by working seven days a week, 10 or 12 hours a day, by investing hundreds of thousands of dollars, by taking great risks in order to provide the Canadian people, the consumers as a whole food supplies adequate as to the quantity and quality and, as everybody hopes, at very low prices?

Such an equation, Mr. Speaker, is simply impossible. We the Canadian people must decide to pay the price of the food we want to be, adequate as to quantity and quality. That is the essential condition if we want to keep farming people in rural areas. To providing the farmer with the necessary help in his work, is the essential condition to make sure that he will able to keep with him his sons, his children who will replace him later on. And that important question of the family farm, Mr. Speaker, that we uphold in a stirring way, I would like to defend it myself! What is exactly a family farm?

If it is the family farm of 25, 40 or 50 years ago, when this type of farm was handed down from grandfather to father to son, without this debt being incurred—and I emphasize this point—as has been the case now since the last generation, if this is the type of family farm that the hon. member means, then I would remind him the following: the owner of the family farm today does no longer wants that this situation be perpetuated. He is the one who decides that his farm is worth $100,000 and who requires the future owner to pay that amount. Of course, the latter must go into debt, if the required capital is not available to him. If it is, he must make this investment. And then, the family farm can no longer be maintained in the same conditions. I wish, Mr. Speaker, we could do so. I wish we did, because it really was a good formula, but is it realistic to advocate such a formula in 1973? That is impossible. Let us be realistic, we cannot contemplate to go on using this formula. Then, we should accept that fact and consider how this farm operated by a family will continue to exist. Mr. Speaker, I ask the government, and I am not the only one, as several of my colleagues do so, to develop a new policy that will enable the son, the young farmer, the young man who is talented and willing to go into that industry which is vital for our economy, to get a start because his father will not be able to give him the $20,000 or $25,000 he needs.

If he does not have this amount of $5,000, $10,000, $15,000, $20,000 or $25,000 according to the size of the business he intends to buy, he will not conceivably get started in agriculture. Even with the best talents and the best will in the world he will not be able to get a start. His attempt is doomed to failure. First, our present legislation will not allow him to do it and there are no credit sources available for large farms.

So it is absolutely necessary to develop a new farming policy. Today, I appeal to all members because it is a top priority item for any government. This government should, during the next session, if possible, introduce a bill to make available the amounts necessary to get the young farmers started. The terms might vary. Of course, the applicant shall have to meet some criteria to qualify. It is quite normal.

I think we should allow young men 20 years or 25 years old who have the potential and particularly the will to go into farming, to get the credit and the money they need because if we do not, Mr. Speaker, more and more young people will quit farming. I should like to sound a note of warning to everybody and it is not a matter of political partisanship, but if we fail to do it now, it will be very expensive to bring people back to farming later.

The price we should pay today to keep young farmers and help them to carry on their trade is extremely low compared to what we will have to pay five, ten or fifteen years from now if we wait that long to bring people back to farming.

This is a real challenge to us Canadians, it is a great responsibility to discharge. If we are to provide the canadian people of tomorrow with a production adequate in quantity and quality and sufficient to help other countries, we have very soon to establish a bank that will provide the funds required by the young people who wish to have that kind of help. Some young people want to work in agriculture, I know some who do. Some study agriculture in technical schools. They want and they say: Tomorrow I graduate. I would like to go into agriculture but I can't afford to buy my father's farm, my uncle's, that of the neighbour, or the guy who will leave it because he has no one to take over.

That is the fundamental question we have to answer, Mr. Speaker. We should not blame the minister. Yet, the hon. member blamed solely the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. In closing, I would like to point this out: In 1973—and this was published in western farm news papers, amongst other by the one we received this week—western producers will have had the highest income ever in Canada. To my mind, instead of criticizing him we should pay tribute to the minister for his good work and foresight.

The blame for some of today's problems must not be laid exclusively on a minister. I think that the minister has done a tremendous job. It is inconceivable and unacceptable that he be held responsible. He has indeed been superb.

In concluding, I want to point out a glaring contradiction in the hon. member's remarks. On the one hand he said that this sad state of affairs was the result of government interference with the freedom of farmers. And on the other, had he said that government interference should be increased.

A choice will have to be made. Farmers have been provided with the tools, and it is quite freely, Mr. Speaker, that they will choose, now and in the future, to use them. We do not intend to lay down any conditions. We merely, and surely, want to help them, and I am positive that all the parties will agree on that point.

[English]

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask the hon. member a question. He said that many things need to be done. Since his government has been in power for ten years, I wonder whether he could tell me why all these things have not been done as yet?

Mr. Lessard: Is the hon. member asking me what we have done in the last ten years? Is he asking me to enumerate the list of achievements, before the House today, in the few seconds left to me in accordance with the order made by the House? Let me tell him that it would take me the rest of the hour, and even then I would not finish listing the achievements of this government. Let me tell him also that we could have done much more if we had had the support of the official opposition, instead of continual opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps hon. members should deal with this matter in the spirit of Christmas. I understand the messenger from the other place may be a little late in arriving, so the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lessard) might be given extra time to reply to the question. In any event, I think the House should be advised that we may be sitting for a few minutes longer. We will see what happens.

Mr. Lessard: Mr. Speaker, I have not yet completed my speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) wishes to rise on a point of order.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, if you are going to let the hon. member continue to speak, I might as well put another question to him.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Yewchuk: The other question is: What action will this government take to compensate the western farmers for the $4.2 billion loss which was created by the minister responsible for the Wheat Board through his programs?

Mr. Lessard: The best answer to this question is that the premise of the question is inaccurate. I was here three years ago when that action was taken by the government, and I am sure many members here remember all the questions that were raised by the opposition. For hours they blamed the government for the surplus in production, for the huge pile of grain on the prairies. They asked what the government would do with that.

Mr. Lang: Record sales.

Mr. Lessard: Hon. members must remember the kind of revenue that accrued to farmers in 1973. Let us remember that we passed a bill in the House permitting western farmers to defer tax on their current year's revenue until next year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lessard: Is the member ready to accept that farmers should have their previous revenue added to the present year's revenue, and thus have to pay higher taxes? Certainly not. Never has a government done so much, so fast, to solve the situation. Perhaps the hon. member does not remember those years, but many hon. members here do. If he wants me to answer the question about what the government will do to assist the western farmers to recoup what he calls a loss, let me tell him that it was not a loss.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: —I do not understand the reason for the catcalls on the other side. I think that they are looking for Santa Claus in the chimney and he is not there yet. I am not prepared, as a member of the House, to listen to a bunch of gosh-darn frivolity in reply to a sane, sensible and serious question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: I believe that the hon. member for Lessard—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Lac-Saint-Jean.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: —the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lessard) made a very uneloquent exposition regarding the situation in Canada. The only problem with the hon. member is that he became lost in the water and never came to shore. He is not even in tune with the Nativity message. He does not know where the manger is, and even if he did the cows would not have him—because there are other hon. members in the House who know more about agriculture than the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean. One of them is the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger). I say that, instead of hearing this frivolity from the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean, we should hear other members who can give a full, clear and objective discourse on the problems of agriculture in Canada. That is my point.

• (1650)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. This is a question of privilege on which the Chair might be permitted to meditate during the Noel season. In the meantime I recognize the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean for the conclusion of his speech.

Mr. Lessard: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say one word about the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan). There are hon. members who are highly qualified to speak about agriculture. I hope he knows enough to disqualify himself from being one of their number. Knowing the hon. member for many years in this House, I think he should be left out of that group.

Returning to the constituency of Lac-Saint-Jean, the name does not imply that we have only a lake there. There is quite a piece of land in the constituency and I have lived and worked with farmers for many years so I know enough to appreciate their work and problems. I admit that I am not an expert. I do not pretend to be one. Having listened over the years to all kinds of forecasts from supposed experts in this House, particularly those on the opposition benches, I can say that the results up until now have not been good. In fact, opposition forecasts have frequently been wrong. With respect to expertise, I say that we should rely much more heavily upon members of the government front benches.

[Translation]

I would like to conclude my remarks, but as agriculture is a most interesting subject and as I express myself more easily in my mother tongue, I would prefer obviously to go back to French and summarize the situation a little. I would say that the measures which have precisely enabled agriculture to get better results within the last few years were put forward by a former Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) who is no longer in the House. Such measures were improved by another Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), by a minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) and by a government which, day after day, through positive policies and action has allowed agriculture to become more viable. In order to solve the fundamental problem, namely that farmers may stay on farms, they would have to be assured—

[English]

Mr. Yewchuk: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is clearly abusing the rules of the House. He has been speaking for nearly 15 minutes in response to a question. We have other members who wish to speak in this debate. I wish there were some way of shutting him up.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. My understanding is that the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lessard) has the floor for 20 minutes under the Standing Order, and I am advised that there are two minutes left to him.

Mr. Lessard: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; and I intend to use my full time.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out in those two minutes that one measure among others has been put forward by the government to control rural depopulation and it is the policy for the development of small farms. If we consider how the provinces have used that policy up to now, what were the first provinces to sign those agreements, we note that there were the western provinces, because they are perhaps more active in that field with the agreement of provincial governments, as they saw in that formula an opportunity to control rural depopulation, while allowing the establishment of profitable units.

This policy makes it possible to keep the rural population on the farm even though not directly involved in farming production. Those people have grown up, lived and worked many years in a farming district. I think that, if they could do so and if it were profitable, they would like above all to continue to live in that environment and work as much as possible in the farming sector. I think that the hon. member's proposal deserves our support, but what he had to say—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that certain discussions have been continuing and I think it might be worth while, before we give up in despair, disagreement or futility to agree that when we return from the royal assent we suspend our sitting until the call of the bells and resume at that time to deal with the adjournment motion or motions. At least we will have an opportunity to make another effort, and even if we fail we can say that we have failed after a final effort.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, we agree with that. Perhaps if we were to walk very slowly to the Senate it would give the negotiators some more time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we also agree. Perhaps on the way there and on the way back, if our colleagues from Quebec who have such good voices would sing Christmas carols, that might improve the spirit.

Mr. Speaker: Before I call on the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) I would also suggest that on our way back from the Senate, while the singing goes on, we might like to congregate in room 16 until six o'clock—and there I might find some way to deal with dissenters. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I want to maintain the Christmas spirit, but I wish to make a few remarks on a subject that I consider very important not only at Christmas but at all times, namely, the mass migration that we have experienced of rural young Canadians to the cities. The hon. member who preceded me said that successive Liberal governments had done much to keep Canadians on the farms, but the statistics tell us that we have now only 350,000 farmers in Canada. This is a disastrous situation, an emergency situation. We must get more young Canadians to remain on farms.

We have heard much talk from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). We have listened to and read his speeches with interest—but he has not brought forth any policy. At the present time he is taking advantage of high prices, ignoring a number of high cost areas which will keep farmers in a low profit situation. All farmers in Canada must have a higher reward for their labours. It is necessary to bring forward policies that will give farmers adequate income and encourage them to stay on farms. In the last few months we have heard much about the Farm Credit Corporation which was established to enable young farmers to get loans in order to start in the farm business. When I look at the statistics I see that 60 per cent of the loans went to persons over 35 years of age, and only 40 per cent to persons under that age group. In order to take care of these farmers who could not apply or be accepted for farm credit, the Small Farm Development Corporation was set up. But really all the corporation does is allow those people turned down by farm credit to make application to it. It in fact consolidates farmers. More and more young farmers and older farmers are going to the cities.

Instead of just talking about what the government is going to do, I think it is time the Progressive Conservative Party made a few more suggestions. As we see, they seem to be accepted more and more by the Liberal Party, so perhaps it is to our advantage to make some positive recommendations. We talk about the dairy problem which is becoming very urgent at the moment. We find that we have to import butter and cheese. For years this was one of our chief exports, particularly to the European countries. I think the problem there is one of overcapitalization, the high cost of getting into dairy farming and the problem of getting good farm labour. This would be an excellent program on which the government could offer something that has been presented by the government of Alberta, that is, to subsidize the wages of farm labourers. We have a problem with unemployment. Until the people who are unemployed can find jobs, they could perhaps spend a few weeks or months on the farm learning where their food comes from.

The problem is that, with their inadequate incomes, farmers cannot today afford to pay the high salaries that are necessary to attract labour. This program has had reasonable success in Alberta although it has only been tried with high school and university students. But there is no reason why it could not be accepted on a federal basis. The government could perhaps pay half the salary, and the farmer the other half and look after the room and board. I think we should experiment with this program, and perhaps it would meet with reasonable success.

Another thing that has been missing for many years, and one reason why young people have been migrating to the cities, is that there are no programs available to keep young people in a happy community, one with all the advantages of the city. The government should make loans to small communities so they can provide recreational facilities and community clubs that would keep not only the farmer happy but the most essential part of his family happy, his wife and his children, so they would not be encouraged to leave the farm and go to the city. I have spoken about this on a private member's motion before, and I hope that the government will look into this matter with great speed.

I have before me some statistics showing that capitalization costs in farming have increased tremendously. We are now faced with higher costs for fertilizer this year, higher costs for machinery, and even weed spray. This has always been a basic problem for agriculture: when young people want to get into farming, or stay in farming, there is always the problem of an adequate supply of capital. Once they get the capital, they find they must spend 30 years or more paying off the debt. It is pretty discouraging having to look forward to working hard all your life just to pay off your debt.

The government should accept the fact that if we want to keep young farmers on the farm, we will have to subsidize their interest rates for three, four or five years so they may have a chance to pay off the principal before they are hit with high interest rates. Capitalization costs on farms today are upward of $100,000, at interest rates of 7 per cent to 10 per cent so it is very hard to pay off any principal—hence the long-term, 20 to 30-year loans.

Mr. Speaker, here are some positive suggestions in addition to the suggestion put forward by the hon. member for Athabasca. I think the House should immediately approve this motion and the government should get on with positive policies, rather than just talk. Some incentive should be provided for young people, not only those on the farm but also those in the cities, who wish to start farming in the future.

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, listening to the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) outline the non-program of the Conservative Party for agriculture was most inviting and interesting. I am always somewhat amused that a party that lambastes the government, and justifiably so, on its agricultural policies should, whenever that government has enunciated a policy in the House, agree with it. May I point out to members of the Conservative Party that when the government set up its rigged and totally unfair vote on the rapeseed ballot this year, as was done by the Minister of Justice in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang), it was the Conservative Party that supported that kind of balloting and the Conservative Party that openly admits its ties with the open marketing system and agrees with the kind of finagling that is going on.

The second area where the Conservative Party supported government action in the last year was in the entire area of the marketing of feed grains and the new policy which has been so disruptive. Not only were farmers in western Canada upset about the operation of the agricultural products board, but the commodity exchange in Winnipeg does not know how to handle the new pricing mechanism of the agricultural products board.

Hon. members from Quebec who supported the minister in this feed grains policy are also terribly upset with the whole marketing and pricing mechanism now being carried out. This is the greatest disaster effected by any minister since the LIFT program was introduced, in terms of the marketing of grains within Canada—and that, Mr. Speaker, is supported by other spokesmen for the Conservative Party as well as the hon. member for Athabasca.

What do they recommend, Mr. Speaker? The hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) says he has three programs. He has one to get labour out on the farm. That may be simple where he comes from, but I say that you cannot take young men out of the unemployment lines and put them to work running machinery on a farm in Canada unless very intensive training is given to them.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hurry up.

Family Farm

Mr. Knight: There is no way any of my relatives are going to let any guy off the city streets come out there and run their $10,000 to $15,000 tractors.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Get your punch line in.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, if we are to have a change, it must be when we go into a new session. We have to change and bring in some programs that will give a certain amount of security and stability to the farming population not only in the west but in all of Canada. That kind of move ought to take place on the basis of the kind of programs enunciated by the province of Saskatchewan and other western provinces when they spoke to the federal ministers at the western opportunities conference. There are suggestions of programs for agriculture in those submissions that not only can be related to the problems of the west but to problems all across the country.

I think some of my colleagues from Quebec and some from rural parts of the Maritimes had very legitimate complaints related to the whole question of agricultural policy and the fact that many of their producers—and this has been a learning process for me, Mr. Speaker—face severe economic problems which are sometimes far worse than those faced by many of the producers whom I represent. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I hope this debate continues in the new session so that the hon. member for Athabasca and I will have a chance to go at it again.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Right Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires to immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

● (1720)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

Bill S-7, an Act respecting The National Dental Examining Board of Canada.

Bill C-191, an Act to amend the Parole Act.

Bill C-135, an Act to provide additional financing mechanisms and institutions for the residential mortgage market in Canada.

Bill C-239, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1974.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the special order made earlier this day, the sitting is suspended until the ringing of the bells.

At 5.25 p.m. the sitting was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 6.49 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CHRISTMAS ADJOURNMENT

Mr. Speaker: Order. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen).

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, before I come to the main point, may I first wish all members a Happy Christmas.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: I thank them for their service to the House. While the rest of you were enjoying yourselves with the Speaker, some of us were working. I am now suggesting that His Honour put the adjournment motion that was suggested earlier, with the expectation that it will be carried. The discussions that we have had among representatives of the parties lead us to recommend this motion to the House.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, as the opposition party in this parliament we are pleased to co-operate in this manner. I would not want to give any false impression that minority governments are working, but in spite of the difficulties I do wish everybody a Joyeux Noël.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, despite the way in which the official opposition works, we have entered into the Christmas spirit and we have reached agreement. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) has correctly stated that there is now an understanding on the basis of which we believe this motion can be passed. In doing so, we too are joining in wishing all members and their families a very Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. In particular, may I wish you, Mr. Speaker, and Madame Lamoureux, the very best.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, long before this last beating about the bush, we were decided not to sit next week, since we have long said that dodging the issue at the end of each session is useless and bothersome and that we should put a stop to it some day. A reform of the parliamentary system is required in order that we may be more serious and better able to deal with the situation and that we may not be forced, at the end of each session, to talk of family spirit, Holiday spirit and parliamentary politics spirit.

However, I would like to take this opportunity to wish to all my colleagues in this House a very Merry Christmas, a Happy New Year and as we say in Quebec, "le paradis à la fin de vos jours."

● (1850)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I believe the first matter to be dealt with is the motion by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), seconded by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell).

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That when the House adjourns on December 21, 1973, it shall stand adjourned to January 3, 1974, provided always that if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with Her Majesty's Government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time; and

That, in the event of Mr. Speaker being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for the purpose of this order;

That fifteen minutes before the ordinary hour of adjournment on the third day, that Bill C-245, an act to impose a charge on the export of crude oil from Canada, to impose an oil export tax under the Excise Tax Act and to allocate certain of the revenues derived from the oil export tax, is taken into consideration, all questions necessary for the disposal of the said bill at all remaining stages shall be forthwith put and decided without further debate or amendment;

That the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works be instructed to report Bill C-236, Energy Supplies Emergency Act, following two further days of consideration thereof;

That, at fifteen minutes before the ordinary hour of adjournment on the third day that Bill C-236 is considered at the report stage, every question necessary for the disposal of the said bill at the report stage shall be forthwith put and decided without further debate;

That, at fifteen minutes before the ordinary hour of adjournment on the first day that the motion for third reading of Bill C-236 is taken into consideration every question necessary for the disposal of the third reading of the said bill shall be forthwith put and decided without further debate or amendment;

And that, when the order is next called for consideration of Bill C-203, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, every question necessary for the disposal of the report stage and of the third reading of the said bill shall be forthwith put without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: This House will therefore stand adjourned, in accordance with the terms of the motion which has just been adopted, until January 3. I thank hon. members who have been kind enough to express their warm and generous thoughts to the Speaker. I would have loved to have continued my speech, but the Sergeant at Arms signals that it is time for me to leave.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Adjournment

Mr. Speaker: If all these negotiations have not been completed, and if hon. members would like to discuss those right now before the adjournment in June, they may do so in room 16.

At 6.55 p.m. the House adjourned until 2 p.m. January 3, 1974, pursuant to special order made this day.

THE LATE WALLACE BICKFORD NESBITT

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it was with a great deal of sadness that we learned on December 21 of the death of our long-time colleague, Wally Nesbitt, member for Oxford.

Through eight elections spanning 20 years he served as one of the best known and active members of this House, both in government and opposition. He represented a beautiful rural part of southwestern Ontario and, with his skill as a lawyer and politician, never failed to do battle in parliament for his constituents and their concerns on the farms and in the small towns.

However, the interests of the member for Oxford ranged beyond his own area, his province and even his country. For years he was deeply involved in promoting Canada's voice in international affairs and was a receptive listener to the difficulties and hopes of other nations regardless of their size or level of development.

[Translation]

More particularly, he was deeply involved in the United Nations and during the fifties he represented Canada as an important political figure and member of our delegations in New York and Geneva.

It is quite difficult, Mr. Speaker, to make a summary of 20 years of service. I can say that in all aspects of his parliamentary life Wally Nesbitt was active. Throughout the Parliament Buildings he was the friend of all, including members of all parties as well as the members of the Press Gallery and all employees.

[English]

Last fall he courageously returned to this House after a serious illness. He quickly resumed his role to the delight of his colleagues on both sides of the chamber.

It is with particular sadness that we pay tribute to him today and extend our sympathy to his family, his many friends and the constituents of Oxford.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to associate myself with the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in connection with Wally Nesbitt, the late hon. member for Oxford. The constituents of Oxford have lost a highly valued representative, we have lost a valued colleague, and certainly it was with the deepest of sadness that we learned of his death.

Wally Nesbitt, as the Prime Minister has indicated, sat in this House as the representative for Oxford since 1953. During those years he made a most vigorous and impressive contribution to the work of the House and, I might add, to the work of his party caucus.

In 1957 he became parliamentary assistant to the Prime Minister and vice-chairman of Canada's delegation to the twelfth General Assembly of the United Nations. In 1958 he was appointed parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and was chairman of Canada's delegation to the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations. In 1960 he was elected first vice-president of the United Nations General Assembly and frequently acted as chairman of that body. From 1963 to 1968 he was the external affairs spokesman for this party in the House and co-chairman of the House of Commons Committee on External Affairs. So Wally Nesbitt had an abiding interest in world affairs as well as in the concerns of our country and his constituency.

If I may speak personally for a moment, to me he was a very warm friend and a very capable associate. He undertook various difficult assignments within our own caucus organization. I have referred to his work in external affairs, but since 1968 he has been our spokesman from time to time for transport, for Indian and northern affairs and for science. As a chairman of committees he had a great capacity to organize the effective discharge of work. When he accepted the responsibility for doing something one knew that the responsibility would be discharged very well and very thoroughly.

We were all shocked by his sudden illness. We admired his fight to regain his health. He fought to regain his health so he could take his position again in the House. He showed great courage. We looked forward, Sir, to him regaining full health and full vigour but this was destined not to be. It was with a very heavy sense of personal loss that I and my colleagues learned of his sudden death.

We join with the Prime Minister in extending our sympathy to Wallace Nesbitt's mother and the other members of his family.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I join with the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition in paying tribute to our late friend and colleague, Wally Nesbitt. I am happy to underline the words of commendation and praise uttered by the Prime Minister. I believe it is very fitting that the Leader of the Opposition has taken this opportunity to place on the record such an excellent resumé of Wally Nesbitt's work, including his contribution to his constituency, to the House of Commons and to the world scene on which he was privileged to play such an important part.

For a number of years our late colleague sat at this end of the Conservative Party benches which meant that we in this party got to know him very well. Although our ideas did not always run along parallel lines, we found him a very warm and genial friend. It was with real sadness that we learned of his illness some months ago and with still greater sadness that we learned of his death just after we had recessed for the Christmas period. I think one of the finest tributes paid to Wallace Nesbitt was the tremendous number of people who were at the very impressive funeral service held for him in Woodstock, Ontario, on December 24.

Sir, I join with the others in asking that you extend our sympathy to Wally Nesbitt's mother, to his sister and through them to the other members of the family and all those who were near and dear to him.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, we all surely deplore the death of a member such as Mr. Nesbitt. So, on behalf of all members of our party, I extend to the family, the relatives and friends of the deceased our most heart-felt sympathy.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to extend our special sympathy to the Progressive Conservative Party which within a few weeks has been twice afflicted by the death of one of its members. And I also take this opportunity to add that the example of a man such as Mr. Nesbitt is one which all members of this House can follow with no qualms of being mistaken.

ORDER OF PROCEEDINGS THIS DAY

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that the first order of business today will be Bill C-245, and that at a quarter to five we propose to interrupt the proceedings, with the direction of the House, to deal with the divisions in connection with Bill C-203 concerning election expenses. Consultations have taken place and I understand that this procedure is agreeable. If that is the case, it might be ordered by the House.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are all in agreement with this procedure. Perhaps I might take this opportunity to point out that the discussions that have taken place have also included an arrangement whereby, instead of our having 13 recorded divisions, the number could probably be reduced to six or seven. When five o'clock comes, perhaps this arrangement can be reported.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Speaker: Is it so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROPOSED RESUMPTION OF SATURDAY MAIL DELIVERY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that Canada is one of the few countries in the world without Saturday mail delivery, considering the growing delays in mail delivery generally, and in view of the fact that many small businesses rely heavily on daily mail service to an ever increasing degree, I ask leave of the House under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move, seconded by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale):

That this government immediately consider reinstituting an all year round Saturday mail delivery service throughout Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

TRANSPORT

MOVEMENT OF ALBERTA OIL FROM VANCOUVER BY SHIP—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. The matter of urgent and pressing necessity is the continuing risk of oil spills in the Strait of Juan de Fuca. In view of the decision to transport Alberta crude oil from the port of Vancouver in foreign-owned vessels of questionable seaworthiness, thereby seriously eroding the credibility of this parliament's position in opposing the U.S. Alaska tanker route, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard):

That the government forthwith cease this method of supplying the eastern market and forthwith replace this method of supply with emergency rail and highway transport until the completion of the Montreal pipeline.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion

Some hon. Members: No.

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

CONCURRENCE IN SEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order: Motions:

December 13, 1973—Mr. Howard:

That the seventh report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, presented to the House on Monday, December 10, 1973, be concurred in.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I apologize for not catching your eye sooner. There is a notice of motion standing in my name seeking concurrence in the seventh report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development presented to the House on Monday, December 10. I seek the consent of the House to withdraw that motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is there agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's notice of motion is withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

THE PRIME MINISTER

CONGRATULATIONS ON BIRTH OF SECOND SON

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before I put a question, perhaps you might permit me to say a word of congratulations to the Prime Minister and Mrs. Trudeau. In a different context the Prime Minister has frequently spoken about the importance of timing.

● (1420)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Certainly I must extend my congratulations to the Prime Minister and Mrs. Trudeau both in terms of timing and in terms of general felicitations. May I say in passing, Sir, that I share his joy to some extent because I had a second grandchild—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: —a granddaughter, born on January 1, a second westerner. Henceforth I hope to be treated with more respect by the western members in the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

INDUSTRY

PROPOSED TAKEOVER OF MACDONALD TOBACCO COMPANY BY UNITED STATES FIRM

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who indicated to the House on December 21 that he had posed certain questions to a foreign company proposing to take over the Macdonald Tobacco Company and that he was awaiting responses. Has the minister received specific answers with regard to that takeover and, if so, is he satisfied or not that it would have significant benefit for Canadians within the meaning of the legislation, whenever it is proclaimed?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the hon. member on becoming a grandfather for the second time around. I wish to tell him I have not yet received any answer to my queries put to the Reynolds Tobacco Company.

PROPOSED TAKEOVER OF EMCO CORPORATION BY MASCO CORPORATION OF MICHIGAN

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question relating to the proposed takeover of Emco Corporation and the questions which I believe the minister directed to the Masco Corporation of Michigan. Has the minister received any responses to those questions and, if so, is he satisfied that this takeover would be of significant benefit to Canada?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I met with the principals of the Masco Corporation yesterday. I put a number of propositions to them with respect to the whole question of significant benefit to Canada. They are considering their position, and I expect to hear from them very shortly.

Mr. Stanfield: In the present situation with the act not having been proclaimed, how does the minister propose to cope with these takeovers in the interregnum? He says he has received no reply with regard to the Macdonald Tobacco takeover. How does the minister propose to cope with it if the guidelines prove to be ineffective, as now seems to be the case? Is it the intention of the minister to proclaim that part of the legislation?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, we intend to proclaim the legislation just as fast as it is possible to do so. I do not think, though, that I can accept the preamble to the hon. gentleman's question when he says that these guidelines have proved to be ineffective. They have not yet proved to be ineffective.

An hon. Member: And not effective either.

FOOD PRICES

POSSIBILITY OF ACTION TO CONTROL PERCENTAGE MARK-UP TECHNIQUE OF FOOD CHAINS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Considering that a study, reported at length recently in the Montreal Gazette, revealed that the 19 per cent increase in food costs during the past year is likely to be continued throughout 1974, and that a good part of this inflation in food costs is due to the percentage mark-up technique of the food chains, will the minister inform the House if his department is taking steps to eliminate or control this pricing technique in a serious way?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not had a chance to see that article yet. I will look at it and get back to the hon. member.

POSSIBILITY OF REDUCTION IN AMOUNT SPENT ON ADVERTISING ALLOWED CORPORATIONS FOR TAX PURPOSES OR EXCESS PROFITS TAX

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I see nothing has changed over the New Year period. I will switch to the Minister of Finance. In light of the fact that the same study revealed that advertising costs in food also account for a substantial part of the increase in the cost of food, amounting, for example, to some 43 per cent on Ajax cleanser and 18 per cent on Palmolive soap and so on, will the minister inform the House if the government intends to reduce substantially or remove entirely the amount that corporations can claim for tax purposes of revenues spent on advertising?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, sir, the government does not intend to do so. As to a further review of that study, my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, will be looking into it in a deeper way. I might say to the hon. gentleman, however, that there is nothing in the study that precludes in any way, in answer to the assertion that advertising adds to costs, the argument that the wide proclaiming that goods are in competition with other goods may contribute to lower costs.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the minister read the study again. Considering that the profits of the food chains, also revealed in that study, were substantially above other sectors of the Canadian economy in the past year, would the minister inform the House if he is considering an excess profits tax to be particularly applicable to that sector of the economy?

[Mr. Gillespie.]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Mr. Speaker, and if I were this would not be the time to announce it.

MEASURES TO KEEP ST. LAWRENCE RIVER FREE OF ICE THIS WINTER TO ACHIEVE LOWER OIL PRICES

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

Did he receive a request from the St. Lawrence Pilots Federation for extending the navigation season of the St. Lawrence River during this winter in order to achieve lower oil prices and, if so, what policy does the minister intend to follow in this respect?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I received a telegram on this matter.

Mr. Matte: In the second part of my question I asked, Mr. Speaker, what policy the minister intends to follow in this respect?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, the technicians from my department are not convinced of the validity of the pilots association's claim.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACT TO IMPROVE SAFETY OF RAILWAY OPERATIONS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Transport. Now that the Canadian Transport Commission has finally taken action with regard to rail safety, even though it is negative action and years late, will the minister take positive steps not only to improve the safety record of Canada's railways but to allow them to take advantage of existing technology to better serve the people of Canada?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is equality in this chamber. I received this report at the same time as the hon. gentleman. I am anxious to read it and after that I may have some comments.

POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN UNIFORMS AND INSIGNIA

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. I should like to ask the minister whether action is now being taken or is contemplated to change the uniforms and insignia of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker, no action has been taken to change the insignia or uniforms of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the minister say that no consideration is being given to this question and, in particular, to the removal of the Crown from the insignia of non-commissioned officers up to the rank of staff sergeant-major?

Mr. Allmand: No, Mr. Speaker, not to my knowledge. I have not heard anything about that. I might say that last summer the weight of cloth in the uniforms was changed in order to give members of the RCMP a lighter summer uniform, but it was the same uniform.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Removal of the Crown would not do that.

● (1430)

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

On December 21, I asked the minister whether he was considering the possibility of an inquiry on violence in junior hockey in Canada. Since he replied affirmatively concerning the possibility of such an inquiry, would he say whether he has met with Canadian Amateur Hockey Association authorities and can he say when he shall get the report of this inquiry and report to the House?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have been unable so far to meet with representatives of the CAHA. I hope I can do so in the next few days. I shall then report to the hon. member.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

EFFECT OF EXPECTED RATE OF GROWTH AND INCREASED UNEMPLOYMENT IN UNITED STATES ON CANADIAN EXPORTS

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Given the fact that the chairman of the Economic Council of the United States has now said that the United States government is expecting the rate of growth of their economy to be not more than 4 per cent and that the unemployment rate will rise to 6 per cent, can the minister tell us what effect this will have on Canadian exports to the United States during the forthcoming year?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, of course this is something we are watching on a very close basis. We recognize, as does the hon. member, all the uncertainties involved in this situation, but we think it will be a very good year.

Mr. Gillies: Does the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce have members of his department working precisely on estimating what the possible impact of a change of that dimension in the economy of our trading partner will be on our economy?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, we have it under constant and continuing review.

Mr. Gillies: Will the minister table in the House of Commons within the next week the results of such studies so that the Canadian people may have some idea of what the Canadian government thinks about the economic situation?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, we have it under constant and continuing review.

ENERGY

HOME HEATING OIL—POSSIBLE PROVISION OF RELIEF TO CONSUMERS IN FIVE EASTERN PROVINCES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources if a decision has been made yet to provide some relief to the consumers of the five eastern provinces who are suffering from the energy situation, especially in the area of home heat? If such a decision has been made, will it be announced before the meeting of first ministers at the end of January?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, no such decision has been taken at the moment, although that will obviously be the primary question for discussion at the first ministers' conference later this month.

LABOUR RELATIONS

RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—INQUIRY WHEN ARBITRATOR'S REPORT WILL BE MADE

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I address my question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the present difficulties in rail transport, the shortage of feed grain supplies in eastern Canada and the difficulties that are being experienced in the Edmonton yards and in the lower mainland of British Columbia, can the minister advise how soon the Hall report will be available and whether or not it is possible that his recommendations or decisions will be tabled prior to the presently proposed recess of parliament?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I did not hear the last two or three words of the hon. member's question, although I believe I got the general purport. I would advise, as I have advised before, that the report of the hon. Mr. Justice Emmett Hall should be available to the parties and, for that matter, very shortly thereafter to the public and every hon. member, about the middle of this month.

Mr. Gleave: In connection with that matter may I ask, in view of the minister's answer, whether we will also have the report of Dr. Deutsch with respect to pensions? Is that to be made at the same time? Can we have that report before parliament recesses so that we may have an idea of what is going to happen to pensions so far as railway workers are concerned?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member is aware, that report was to be submitted to the hon. Mr. Justice Hall for his consideration, so I imagine its contents would be made available at the same time as the Hall report itself, probably as an appendix.

ENERGY

INQUIRY WHETHER MEETING HELD BETWEEN MINISTER AND ARAB STATE REPRESENTATIVES RESPECTING REPORTED OFFER OF OIL AT LOWER PRICE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether he has met with the Minister of Energy of Kuwait or any other Arabian country with respect to a reported offer to supply 360,000 barrels of crude petroleum to Canada at a price considerably less than what Canada or agents representing our country are paying now for Venezuelan crude petroleum?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have not had a meeting.

[Later:]

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources answered my question in such inaudible terms that I felt he must have some knowledge. Has the minister any knowledge? Has there been any offer of such a sale to him, to his department or to any other minister of the government, particularly the Minister of Supply and Services, to the knowledge of the minister?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of proposals put by various of the eastern hemisphere oil producers to the officials of my department, and they have been investigated. I think I would have to examine particularly with them whether this particular proposition the hon. gentleman has mentioned was among those and, if so, what the exact terms of it were.

HOUSING

AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES UNDER NEW PROVISIONS OF ACT

Mr. Speaker: The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Portneuf.

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

Since the enforcement of Bill C-133 would alleviate in part the housing problem which remains a major issue in this country, could the minister advise the House whether he intends to make a statement in the near future concerning the relevant agreements reached with the provinces?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I made a statement yesterday indicating that we have agreements with regard to the neighborhood improvement program, which I take it the hon. member is referring to, either agreements or agreements in principle, with nine of the provinces, and that just before Christmas I had very useful and friendly discussions with the minister from the province of Quebec in Quebec City. I am optimistic that an agreement can be concluded at an early date.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): I wish to direct a supplementary to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

When agreements were reached with the provinces, did he ask them to indicate clearly the amounts coming from the federal government for the construction of homes, including those for the aged?

[English]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the agreements to which my answer applied refer only to the neighborhood improvement program. There are no agreements relative to old age housing or senior citizens' housing. They are made project by project with each province.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF ANTI-INFLATION POLICY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. As the latest report of the OECD, of which Canada is a member, very strongly criticizes this country for not having a comprehensive anti-inflation policy, can the minister advise the House if the government is in the process of preparing such a policy now, and may we expect to hear it announced in the House in the very near future?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman is referring to reports of an alleged impending report. If he will refer to the last published report in December, he will not find that type of analysis of the Canadian position.

Mr. Hees: As the minister knows very well, I am referring to the report that will be produced very soon. He knows all about it. I ask him the following supplementary question. As the government obviously is not in the process of preparing such a program, may we expect that in the near future we will have some kind of announcement from the government as to the economic stand of the government on all these matters, and can that be expected in the near future?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, that will be done at the first reasonable opportunity. As a matter of fact, I hope to have occasion this afternoon, in dealing with the export tax bill, to relate my remarks also to some of the economic underpinnings, both international and domestic.

PROPOSED TAKEOVERS OF MACDONALD TOBACCO AND EMCO BY UNITED STATES FIRMS—DEADLINE FOR REPLIES TO MINISTER'S QUESTIONS TO COMPANY OFFICIALS

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In light of the fact Canadians are concerned about foreign takeovers, particularly in western Ontario, and in view of the reaction in regard to the two companies previously mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition, can the minister inform the House whether a deadline was set for replies to be received to his questions and whether there would be significant benefit to Canadians as a result of these takeovers?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, no deadline has been set but I expect to hear very shortly from both parties.

HISTORIC SITES

PRESERVATION OF HOME OF LATE RIGHT HON. LOUIS ST. LAURENT

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in connection with his special responsibility for national historic sites. In view of the proposed private sale of the residence of the late Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, can the minister advise whether his department is planning to enter into negotiations to ensure that this residence will be preserved as an historic site and thus do honour to this distinguished former Prime Minister?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not know which of two residences the hon. member is talking about. There is the residence of the former prime minister in Quebec City and the house where he was born in Compton. The Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada recommended mainly the residence in Compton, not the one in Quebec City.

[English]

Mr. O'Sullivan: I thank the minister for his interest in this matter. In view of the difficulties encountered with regard to the residence of this late Prime Minister and the residence in Hamilton of the late Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, is the minister considering establishing a special unit within his department to ensure that residences of former Prime Ministers, both those deceased and those still with us, will be preserved as national historic sites throughout this country?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, dedicating buildings for commemoration purposes comes under the jurisdiction of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board. This is an independent board that advises the department and which has developed directives concerning the residences of former Canadian prime ministers.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS FOR RETURN TO CANADA OF KIDNAPPERS OF JASPER CROSS TO FACE CHARGES

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has or is the Department of External Affairs or the government of which the minister is a member in any way negotiating with the kidnappers of a person known as Jasper Cross for their return to Canada to face kidnapping or other criminal charges?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister assure the House that under no circumstances will these kidnappers be allowed to return to Canada to face criminal charges with the knowledge of the government, considering that they have already been given the benefit of making one choice?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I really have not considered this question in depth but, if they do come back to Canada on the understanding they will face criminal charges, I cannot at first blush see anything reprehensible about that.

TRANSPORT

SAFETY OF RAILWAY OPERATIONS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON RECOMMENDATIONS OF TRANSPORT COMMISSION AND IMPLEMENTATION THEREOF

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the serious implications of the report made yesterday by the Canadian Transport Commission, will the minister, after he and his officials have had an opportunity to look at the report which they only received yesterday, make a statement in the House as to how long it will take for the department to make a full study of the report and also advise what measures his department will take to implement the recommendations of the commission?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I actually received the report just this morning. I originally read of it in the newspapers. The department is studying the report immediately and will make recommendations to me. As this is of public interest, I am sure the report will be tabled and the hon. member will be informed of what steps we are going to take.

Mr. Orlikow: In view of the extreme reluctance of the railways in the past to make public any information about rail accidents, their causes and who was at fault, will the minister give special consideration to the possibility of instructing the railways, the Transport Commission and his department to make all information that comes to these bodies public so that proper steps can be taken to alleviate this condition?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I will do what I can. However, I am sure the hon. member knows I am quite restricted in the kind of orders I can give to the CTC. If ever the House and the government decide to change that, maybe I could be more precise.

AIR TRANSPORT

PROPOSED PASSENGER HEAD TAX—POSSIBILITY OF SUBSTITUTION OF INCREASE IN USER CHARGES PAID BY COMMERCIAL CARRIERS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Transport indicate whether the deferment of the implementation of the airport head tax means that the government is seriously considering the alternative of raising the user charges to commercial air carriers at appropriate airports?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, it does not mean that.

Mr. MacKay: Will the minister assure the House that if the tax is implemented as originally proposed there will not be a further major increase in the originally announced figure of $2.80, as has been suggested by the head of the Canadian Air Transport Association?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, as far as the Department of Transport is concerned, we do not expect another increase.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. If the new tax legislation is yielding hundreds of millions of dollars of additional revenue over and above that forecast by the minister at one stage and the minister has an abundance of revenues, why is it necessary to institute this tax at airports at all?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as asked is argumentative. It is debate. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich and then the hon. member for Rimouski.

PROPOSED PASSENGER HEAD TAX—SUGGESTED PERCENTAGE CHARGE ON SHORT FLIGHTS

Mr. Donald Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary of the hon. Minister of Transport.

I should like to ask him whether he and his colleagues are considering the possibility of approving a special charge, 5 per cent for instance, for short flights such as between Victoria and Vancouver rather than insisting on a single levy which lays a heavy financial burden on passengers using such flights?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, for the information of the hon. member, we had the choice between two formulas: a fixed charge which would protect the people at either end of the country or a percentage charge which would naturally protect short flight customers. Unfortunately, we have found no way of using both formulas at once and have decided to protect people who live far from the large centres, who would unfortunately pay considerable amounts under the percentage formula.

ENERGY

SUGGESTED RETURN TO DAYLIGHT SAVING TIME TO CONSERVE ENERGY

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, with your leave, I wish first to congratulate most sincerely Mrs. Trudeau and the right hon. Prime Minister for the excellent timing of the birth of their two sons. Considering that some provinces, especially Ontario, have expressed the wish to return to saving time, does the Prime Minister intend to adopt a standard policy for the whole of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first let me thank the hon. member, the leader of the opposition and other hon. members for their good wishes towards my wife and myself. We thank them most sincerely.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: Hurrah for Alexander!

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have chosen an excellent name, that of Alexander, but—

[English]

Alexandre, spelled the French way, but I am sure the origins are the same. The hon. member has sometimes indicated that I am not a very good House of Commons man. He might be prepared to concede we are a good House of Commons couple, having planned this thing in such a way that it would not interrupt parliamentary proceedings.

● (1450)

[Translation]

In reply to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, I would say that it would, in fact, be desirable for all the provinces to agree on the same formula, that there might be as little disparity as possible in the time chosen; however, the federal government is unable to impose it upon them. I willingly suggest, however, following the hon. member's question, that if the provinces wish to consult each other in this regard, the federal-provincial conference to be held within a few weeks would offer them an ideal occasion of doing so.

AGRICULTURE

FERTILIZER—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRICE AND GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture may I direct this question to the Prime Minister. It is based on the paper tabled today on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture dealing with the Canadian fertilizer situation. It says, in effect, that the price that Canadian farmers will be expected to pay will be higher that last year but less than the price in the United States. Since farmers are businessmen and are certainly entitled to more specific information than this, will the Prime Minister encourage the Minister of Agriculture to make a statement in the House on motions within the next few days on the price of fertilizer and on what government policy may be if price increases prove to be more than reasonable?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to convey the suggestion of the hon. member to the Minister of Agriculture, who is presently in Charlottetown meeting with members of the provincial cabinet.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO UNITED STATES PROPOSALS FOR REDUCTION OF PETROLEUM PRODUCT EXPORTS

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has the government been advised by the United States government of a specific formula for the reduction of U.S. petroleum exports? If so, has it made any response to the United States government proposals, particularly in light of the British Columbia situation?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in the committee this morning, the United States administration through Mr. Simon's office has indicated the proposed intention to put export controls on petroleum products on the basis of historic use in 1972. They have asked users, including Canadian users who take the products by way of export, to express their reactions to this proposal, and we as a government would expect to be responding in due course.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Cullen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry to interrupt the question period but following upon the order made earlier this day that certain questions are to be put at five o'clock may I say I have not had a chance to contact committee members and I should like to inform them that the national resources committee will be holding its meeting this afternoon at 3.30.

TAR SANDS OIL—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LETTER TO SYNCRUDE FROM GOVERNMENT ON PRICING POLICY TO BE APPLIED TO PRODUCT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who said before the recess that he had no objection to tabling in the House the letter from the government of Canada to the Syncrude company or to its principals relating to future pricing policies. Is the minister now prepared to table that letter?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be prepared to table it. I apologize to the hon. gentleman; I have not brought it with me today, but I will see whether the translation has been made and I will be glad to lay it on the table either tomorrow or Monday.

POSSIBLE INTRODUCTION OF DAYLIGHT SAVING TIME—REQUEST THAT MINISTER URGE PROVINCES TO AGREE ON STAND

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the confusion across the country concerning use of daylight saving time to conserve energy, and in view of the further confusion of some provinces accepting this measure and others rejecting it, would the minister make a statement urging the provinces to stay together so that Canadians will not be subjected to communication and transportation scheduling difficulties across the land?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman will recall, we have expressed the view, which I think is also held by Ontario Hydro, that in terms of home heating oil daylight saving time is not an energy conserving measure.

I will be glad to take the suggestion under notice, but traditionally this has been a matter of provincial jurisdiction, as the hon. gentleman will recall from the practice in his own province.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

RECIPIENTS OF WAR VETERAN ALLOWANCE, OLD AGE SECURITY AND GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT—PROVISION OF COST OF LIVING INCREASES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Can the minister say whether the necessary steps have now been taken so that veterans who are receiving both old age security and the guaranteed income supplement on the one hand, and war veterans allowance on the other, will receive the cost of living increases that take place in both those payments this month?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GARRISON WATER DIVERSION PROJECT, NORTH DAKOTA—REPLY TO CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs related to a question asked him approximately three weeks ago dealing with the proposal in the United States to build the Garrison dam project which has quite far-reaching implications for Manitoba. Has the minister received word from the United States on whether or not the U.S. government is going ahead with the project? If he has not received word, why has there been no communication between Canada and the United States on this matter?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the House will recall that I did mention that a note had been transmitted to the United States setting out our concerns in this matter. We have not yet received a reply but I am given to understand that we may expect one this month.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the International Joint Commission been seized of this problem, and is it negotiating directly with the United States counterparts so that this danger to Canadian boundary waters might be averted?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the International Joint Commission is not automatically involved in this matter. We have chosen for the time being to deal with it at an intergovernmental level. The other question can remain open for consideration.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a short supplementary. Would the minister assure the House, and consequently the country, that if the House of Commons is not sitting when the minister or his department receives word, it will be made public as soon as possible so that all interested parties may know what negotiations have taken place?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly give that very serious consideration, but I would hesitate to give an outright commitment until I have had an opportunity to see the reply that we receive.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

BANNING OF TELEVISION PLAY BY MORDECAI RICHLER

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. I wonder whether the Secretary of State would inform the management of the CBC that many Canadians would like a chance to judge the merits of a television play by Mordecai Richler without having the CBC make that judgment for them?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am receiving all kinds of advice as to my answer. Yes, I would be pleased to pass on that representation, but I can assure the hon. member that this matter is now being reviewed by the CBC.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—ALLEGED DELAY IN ANNOUNCING GRANTS

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the absolute confusion and indescribable tardiness of the minister's department in announcing LIP grants for 1974 and extensions of 1973 grants, to such a point that British Columbia has announced it is opting out of the program, can the minister inform the House what he intends to do to clean up this mess in his department?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, with the exception of a very few, all LIP approvals which will be made have now been announced. Some 3,234 applications have been approved involving some 602,000 man-weeks of work. The last few dozen or so pending are subject to some controversy which will be cleaned up very shortly.

SHIPPING

MOVEMENT OF ALBERTA OIL BY TANKER FROM VANCOUVER—PERSONNEL AND EQUIPMENT TO DEAL WITH POSSIBLE SPILLS

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of increased oil tanker traffic from Vancouver destined for the east coast, can the minister advise the House whether there has been any addition to personnel and equipment in order to deal effectively with any oil spill that may take place on the west coast?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether there has been any increase in personnel. I know that all oil spills have been handled quite rapidly, but I will get the information required by the hon. member.

Mr. Fraser: In view of the fact that the existing number of men and the equipment available were unable effectively to contain a minor oil spill several months ago in Vancouver harbour, can the minister assure the House that oil spill prevention and containment measures on the west coast will be substantially improved immediately?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the first part of the question but perhaps we can find another opportunity to discuss this. I think we have all the men and equipment necessary to handle oil spills.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are running short of time. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Vancouver South on a supplementary and then the hon. member for St. Catharines, followed by the hon. member for Algoma.

● (1500)

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that on December 11 Mr. Allard, public relations officer for the Ministry of Transport, said the only equipment available on the west coast is that which was available at the time of the Erawan-Sun Diamond spill in the fall, which was ineffective, I ask the minister in all seriousness whether he will consider this matter and come back to the House in a few days and assure us that something will be done in order that we will be capable of dealing with a major oil spill which might easily occur in view of the increased traffic.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I will look into the matter, and if there are any shortcomings they will be corrected right away.

STANDARDS RESPECTING TANKERS MOVING ALBERTA OIL FROM VANCOUVER TO EAST COAST

Mr. Trevor Morgan (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Having regard to the requirements respecting transportation of oil by tanker down the B.C. coast, and the fact that Canada is now shipping oil from Vancouver to Portland, Maine, what standards are we requiring for oil tankers going down the U.S. coast, through the Panama Canal and up the east coast, particularly in view of the fact that Cape Hatteras is such a dangerous point? Are we requiring the same standards in respect of vessels using the U.S. coastline as we demanded in respect of the B.C. coastline?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, we have to transport oil to Portland. As yet, no tanker from Vancouver has gone up the St. Lawrence. When those tankers have to face such dangerous conditions as ice, we will doubtless have to reach decisions in each case individually because at the present time there is no fleet of tankers available for transporting oil.

[English]

Mr. Morgan: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Transport failed to listen to my question. The Canadian government has made certain representations to the United States government as to the safety standards it will require in respect of oil tankers going from Alaska to Cherry Point. I ask the minister whether we are requiring the same safety standards in respect of oil tankers going from Vancouver down the U.S. coast, through the Panama Canal and up the east coast of the United States to Portland, Maine, particularly in view of the fact that Cape Hatteras is one of the world's most dangerous points of navigation. Do we require the same standards—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I assume the minister has heard the question.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the question. We require exactly the same standards for all ships sailing under the same conditions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: What does that mean?

INQUIRY WHETHER NUCLEAR REACTORS SOLD OVERSEAS WILL BE FUELED BY CANADIAN URANIUM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who was chosen by the Globe and Mail as man of the year for 1973.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: It is obvious that all hon. members want to congratulate the minister and also the Globe and Mail on its choice.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Foster: Do the recent sales of Candu reactors to Argentina and South Korea include an understanding that Canadian uranium will be provided to fuel these reactors?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for his kind reference. In connection with the sale to Argentina, initially Canadian fuel will be used, although the option remains for that country to use Argentine uranium. In connection with the South Korean sale, this will be entirely Canadian uranium.

STANDARDS RESPECTING TANKERS MOVING ALBERTA OIL FROM VANCOUVER TO EAST COAST

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question might be supplementary to the original question about the movement of oil from the port of Vancouver. I direct it to the Prime Minister. On the matter of moving oil by tanker from west coast ports through the Panama Canal to the east coast, was the Minister of the Environment enunciating government policy when he said that any oil tanker used to transport oil from west coast ports to any port on the east coast would be required, at the very least, to meet the standards for oil tankers adopted at the recent IMCO conference in London? Was he stating government policy when he made that announcement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have to check with the minister as to the exact terms of the announcement, but on the face of it the minister was certainly speaking as the minister responsible for the environment in putting before not only his colleagues in parliament but the people of Canada his express wishes as Minister of the Environment.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will be recognized on a last supplementary question, after which the Chair will call orders of the day.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport in respect of the response just made by the Prime Minister. Inasmuch as it is government policy that these stringent standards be met, why is the Department of Transport not following up this matter and requiring ships moving oil in and out of the port of Vancouver to meet the standards set out in this government policy?

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the usual Thursday question about the order of business, if this is the proper stage of the proceedings to do so. I ask the government House leader what we can look forward to in the next few days, even though we do have some idea of the business, particularly in respect of the wiretap bill for which we have indicated our support.

Mr. MacEachen: As I indicated earlier today, Mr. Speaker, the business before the House is Bill C-245, an act to impose a charge on the export of crude oil. That item will be kept before the House for the time allotted and it is completed. Hopefully, at that point we will be able to again give consideration to the oil allocation bill. I have not yet reached any conclusion as to when the wiretap bill might be brought back before the House, but I would be happy to consider with hon. members opposite ways that might make it possible to deal with it quickly.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in respect of the order of business for the coming days, and in particular in respect of the last point to which the government House leader referred, may I ask whether the government is considering, as a means of saving time, substituting for the notice that is now on the order paper in the name of the Minister of Justice a notice simply rejecting the Senate amendment to the wiretap bill so that the House can reaffirm the position it took when the bill was before this House?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker, the government is not considering that point at the moment.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in relation to the last question I put to the Minister of Transport who was a bit slow in rising to his feet although it seemed he was rising to reply to the question. I see he has now disappeared, so perhaps the point of order has no validity, but certainly the minister should be required to reply to the question as to why this policy of the government is not being followed.

OIL EXPORT CHARGE ACT

PROVISION OF EXPORT CHARGE, OIL EXPORT TAX UNDER EXCISE ACT AND ALLOCATION OF REVENUES FROM TAX

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-245, to impose a charge on the export of crude oil from Canada, to impose an oil export tax under the Excise Tax Act and to allocate certain of the revenues derived from the oil export tax, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to use this occasion to wish you and the members of the House a Happy New Year. I wish Your Honour every good fortune in presiding over the affairs of this legislature. I noted the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in congratulating the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and Madame Trudeau on the birth of their second son. He mentioned the question of timing. It only illustrates that this government can do almost anything, Mr. Speaker. I do not take anything away from the notable achievements of the Leader of the Opposition in having become a grandfather during the recess. All I can say is that the difference between the Leader of the Opposition and the Prime Minister is just one of attitude.

Mr. Alexander: I don't get that, John.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): You will have to think about it. I am sorry the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) has left the chamber, because he also celebrated a very important event in his life: he became married. I am sure we all wish him well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Without any reflection at all upon the House leader, I want to say to the hon. member for Peterborough, the Secretary of State, that congratulations are due to him upon finally joining the human race.

In rising at this time, Mr. Speaker, to move second reading of this bill to provide for export taxes and charges upon exports of crude oil from Canada, I should like briefly to review the background and to draw the attention of the House to the rapidly changing international picture against which the substance of the bill must be assessed. I also wish to touch upon some of the internal ramifications of some of those external events and what the external events mean to Canada as a country, because it is now fully evident that the pricing of crude oil in Canada, from which this bill basically derives, now poses for our country an issue of great significance and complexity.

[Translation]

In some respects, it is a unique challenge in the entire economic history of Canada. This matter raises extensive economic, political and fiscal problems. In addition, it could become a serious threat to Confederation and national unity. With regard to that situation, the government of the country must provide a clear and firm answer. The bill involved is only one of various measures included in that response.

It is necessary that Parliament and all Canadians be fully aware of the unprecedented occurrence characterized by an imminent shortage and a very steep rise in crude oil prices.

For some time most of us were aware of certain basic tendencies which were emerging in the over-all picture of the world energy supply and demand in general and of oil products in particular. The Canadian position was outlined in a government analysis paper published last June. This document described the long-term reduction in oil supply as opposed to a rapidly increasing demand as well as the unavoidable necessity of price increases. However I should say that nobody could forecast the rapidly developing events which within a few months not only reduced the flow of supplies but also entailed a sharp increase in world prices. The immediate and direct effects of those developments on certain countries in a less favourable position than Canada are already beginning to be felt: for those countries the balance of payments is being dislocated, economic growth is being slowed down, unemployment is increasing and the standard of living decreasing. As for the indirect and long-term effects they are hard to evaluate. However one thing is certain: some industrialized countries and developing nations which are largely dependent on imported oil will be greatly affected.

Oil Export Tax

However until the end of last fall Canada succeeded in avoiding shortages and sharp price increases. But the sharp rise in world prices exerted heavy tensions on our domestic price system which was designed for the particular structure of Canadian production and market. We are producing enough oil to meet our own needs, since our over-all production slightly exceeds our national consumption. However, because nearly all of our Canadian production is obtained from the western provinces especially Alberta which by itself accounts for more than 80 per cent, and for economic considerations related to location, transportation and world prices, it has proven more profitable to export about half of our production to the United States and to import a lesser volume for the five more easterly provinces. The second half of our production supplies the markets of Ontario and our four Western provinces.

[English]

Since 1960 it has been national policy to foster and develop this production and marketing system. Along with the favourable corporate tax regime applicable to the resource industries, this policy helped greatly in stimulating and encouraging the exploration and development of crude oil and gas reserves in western Canada. With normal world trade and effective links between Canadian, United States and international oil prices, the over-all system provided for a reasonable balance in markets and prices to the mutual advantage of all Canadians. Indeed, the system was sufficiently flexible and balanced as to adjust to a one-third increase in wellhead prices in the west over the first nine months of last year, along with somewhat sharper increases in import prices. It was also able to accommodate the domestic price restraint program which was introduced in early September as part of our general fight against inflation.

All of that, however, has been drastically altered by rapidly changing external events. We now face the need to construct, on an entirely different basis, a new kind of oil policy for Canada. That was fully recognized in the Prime Minister's statement in this House in early December. In that statement he outlined the concepts of a national market, self-sufficiency and a national pricing regime as foundations for a one-Canada oil policy. Along with improved transportation facilities and security of supply, such a policy must mean a reasonable equivalence of prices for petroleum products across the country after adjustment for costs of transportation and distribution.

The question has been asked, however, why oil should be singled out now for special national attention when many other internationally-traded resources and commodities have also been subject to sudden shortages and sharp price escalation. It is a fair question. I have, I think, already indicated a broad, general answer in the House, namely, the fact that on the one hand we have long maintained a basic oil policy aimed at developing Canadian resources and, on the other, we now have to adjust to a very major external disruption.

However, three specific interrelated points can also be made with particular regard to pricing and taxation. In the first place, oil plays a unique and almost unparallelled role in our national life. In a sense, it is the lifeblood of our economic system, providing over one-half of our total energy needs. No other single commodity penetrates so directly or so widely into so many aspects of our daily existence—fuel to heat our homes, to operate our productive industries, to provide essential motive power across the whole range of transportation services. That is why the government has felt it necessary to ask for very broad powers to deal with possible physical shortages, even if these are confined to only part of the country. By the same token, a steep and sudden jump in price can have gravely disruptive and distorting effects across the whole economic system.

Secondly, it is relevant to note the cause of these steep and sudden jumps in price. Normal competitive forces of supply and demand have not been responsible. Rather, these disruptions have been brought about by a deliberate monopoly pricing decision on the part of the main oil exporting nations. As is the case with all other countries affected by this deliberately concerted jacking up of price, we are compelled as a national government to adopt a national policy to protect the broad public interest.

Third, and as a reflection of the great importance of oil as an economic commodity, we must have regard for the staggering financial dimensions of sharp increases in its price. With total domestic production approximating two million barrels per day, and the most recent increases in international prices driving these prices up about $6 to $7 per barrel above present restraint levels, the potential sum involved in higher revenues to producers from higher prices to consumers approaches $5 billion on an annual basis. That sum represents about 4 per cent of the gross national product—not far short of a normal year's total national growth. To my mind, the sheer magnitude of the sums involved in the present oil situation compels a wide ranging assessment of public finance policies by the federal government to maintain stability, balance and equity across the country.

As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has indicated, a comprehensive oil policy for Canada in the near term, and certainly in the longer run, is predicated upon the development and use of Canadian petroleum resources for the benefit of all Canadians. Immediately, this means greater dependence upon the known resources of the western provinces. It underlines the importance of specific programs to accelerate exploration, research and development of those resources. We must recognize, however, that these resources are mainly within provincial jurisdiction. Consequently, an acceptable national policy can only be developed on the basis of accommodation with the provinces and due respect for their legitimate interests.

The producing provinces, Alberta and Saskatchewan in particular, rightly make the point that so far as established conventional reserves of oil are concerned, these are depleting assets of relatively short life. It is unfortunate that in recent years the search to add to these reserves has not been very successful. However, up until the year-end the provinces have been co-operating fully in maintaining the price restraint program and full supply, and I am confident that all Canadians appreciate that fact. I am hopeful that the provinces will continue in this co-operative way to share with all other Canadians the obligations of confederation as well as its benefits.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

[Translation]

Tax equalization payments paid to the provinces by the federal government could create a special problem. As the House will recall, only four weeks ago, we were examining a bill to improve the equalization system which would integrate property taxes for school purposes, and we also noted that total federal payments will reach close to $1.4 billion this year. However, if domestic oil prices were to increase to the level of those prevailing on the international market and if the provinces would accept only half of the resulting increases in producers' profits, provincial treasuries would collect about $2.5 billion annually, in addition to current regular royalties and other oil revenues.

Mr. Stanfield: What prices exactly do you mean?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): As it is now, that amounts to $7 or $8 a barrel.

Nearly 84 per cent of the total amount would accrue to the Alberta treasury. However, since the federal equalization formula resets receipts of provinces at an average national level the federal government would be faced with a rise in equalization commitments of over $800 million, an onus which would be cast upon the Canadian taxpayer. In those conditions we could be forced into considering appropriate amendments to the equalization formula.

We must also seek to find the most effective means of having closely equivalent prices across this country in a way which would be fair to producers, consumers and different areas. That will be one of the major items on the agenda at the first ministers' conference which is to be held in three weeks.

However, what is apparent at this time is that the very recent doubling of international prices by major exporting countries threatens to widen beyond the level of acceptability the spread between prices east and west of the Ottawa valley. Notwithstanding consumer discriminations the disparities in fuel and energy costs seriously weaken the competitive position of industry and trade in the Atlantic provinces and Quebec. Unless those disparities are reduced all the efforts made at the national level to stimulate regional developments in those provinces will be subject to a major setback. Consequently, to the extent in which domestic prices are limited it would seem more reasonable to offset the greater part of the sudden rise in imported oil prices through the comparable increase in export prices rather than tax provisions of general application to finance the required measures of relief. The imposition of a general tax would hit precisely those consumers and areas we are trying to help. That is why I propose to seek a solution that would not result in a burden for taxpayers of this country as a whole.

[English]

The government has also expressed the firm view that under a unified pricing and market system the price of domestically produced oil must be allowed to rise. This will be necessary to ensure an accelerated program of exploration and development in the frontier and offshore areas and to bring into commercial production the tar sands and heavy oil resources of Alberta and Saskatchewan. Higher prices will also help to meet immediate needs by encouraging the use of secondary recovery methods which can substantially increase the percentage recovered from existing reserves.

Further, a trading nation like Canada can never insulate itself in domestic pricing from the influence of world prices for internationally traded goods, commodities or services. Any attempt to do so, especially for a commodity like petroleum, will lead to distortions in consumption patterns, competitive use of energy, and international trading relationships.

In the longer run, therefore, domestic pricing for oil seems certain to track forward in some relationship with international prices. Even with future additions to west-east transport facilities, which might reduce our dependence upon high-priced foreign supplies, we will probably not want to eliminate all imports form secure foreign sources. A unified market and pricing system will, then, be most easily maintained and subject to minimum distortions if there is not too large a gap between domestic and foreign prices. One of the main advantages of the bill before the House is that the variable export charges it proposes will give us a very useful tool in maintaining the kind of flexible, administered prices most appropriate to Canadian circumstances.

Any prospect of an upward adjustment of domestic prices raises the compelling question of the so-called windfall profits which might accrue to the industry on the basis of production from established reserves. Increases in costs of production from established reserves tend to be nominal in comparison with potential gains in revenue from higher prices. Both Alberta and Saskatchewan have recognized this fact. They have recently taken legislative action intended to increase substantially the share of any increases in sales revenue taken as provincial taxes.

However, we must keep in mind the huge size of these potential increases and the need to be concerned about the burdens placed upon consumers by higher prices for either domestic or imported supplies. As the Prime Minister has emphasized, the federal government is therefore convinced that it must in turn develop some reasonable mechanism to provide, for the benefit of all Canadians, a decent share of the increased revenues which they themselves contribute. Any national policy worthy of the name must provide for some sharing of the burdens and benefits which flow directly from the international distortion of supply and price.

Now I wish to turn to some of the implications for international trade and payments. There is no question in my mind that we are facing an upheaval or reorientation of trade and payments patterns in the world of a magnitude and significance quite surpassing anything we have known since World War II. These consequences will arise in part from the immediate shortages of energy supply. To an even greater extent they will arise from the increase in the price of oil, given the size of the price changes which have already taken place and possible further changes.

The price announced for Arab light crude at the end of 1972 was just under $2.50 a barrel. On January 1, 1974, it was raised to $11.65. As for Venezuelan oil, the price increased from about $3 to more than $14. Although it may be difficult to convert the producers' prices to an average price for importers, this may well be $7 higher in 1974 than in 1972. If this were to happen, it would result in an astronomical increase of nearly $80 billion in the price paid by oil importing countries, on a basis of 30 million barrels imported per day. This would bring about a vast restructuration of the balance of payments throughout the world. Based upon 1972 imports, for instance, a $7 oil price increase would cost approximately $40 billion to western Europe and approximately $14 billion more in Japan and the United States. Since our oil exchanges with foreign countries are more or less balanced, an increase in the international oil price would have only a small total effect on our trade balance, in direct consequence of the new price of our oil exports and imports. The most important repercussions on Canada would rather take the form of a direct effect on the level of prices and the resulting inflationary consequences, trade problems and possibilities, a structural readjustment of expenses and production and, above all, as I indicated earlier, the necessity to share costs and benefits equitably throughout Canada.

All countries are not affected to the same degree. The increase in price of cheaper goods and the resulting loss of a favourable trading position will be greater in some countries than in others. Generally speaking, the revenues of the producing countries will be considerably increased. They may decide to reinvest these funds in the countries they are selling oil to. Although the volume of capital which will flow back to importing countries may very well correspond to the additional amounts of money they have to pay for oil, it is not likely that these payments will balance themselves from one country to the next. There will be strong and renewed competition between nations. In the face of this new struggle, maintaining the spirit of positive cooperation that existed in the establishment of the post-war policies will become one of the most important tasks. There is a danger that we may lose sight of our lofty goals which are the upgrading of the living standard in the developing countries, the liberalization of trade and commerce and the reform of the monetary system. One thing is certain, we will have to take a new look at these objectives in the light of changes with regards to energy.

Some developing countries are going to get rich beyond measure with the higher prices of petroleum products. Others will grow poorer. Most of the developed countries which give aid to other nations will certainly find it more difficult to increase their assistance. Let us hope that the newly rich nations will find a way to put their new resources to use for the development not only of their own economy but also for the development of the economy of the poorer and less developed countries.

[English]

It is as important as ever that the quest continue for freer trading rules in the world. It may be that the forthcoming GATT negotiations should be extended to embrace problems of access to supplies of goods and materials as well as freer access to markets.

The approach to monetary reform must also be reconsidered in light of the energy situation as it has emerged. We are in a period of more than usual uncertainty. It is a period of considerable realignment of the payments positions of countries in a magnitude hitherto unknown over such a short period. It would seem to me to be unwise in such a period to seek to be rigid or overly precise in our prescriptions for monetary order: the fast changing scene requires flexibility and adaptability.

We have taken the position consistently over the last two years that we should proceed to monetary reform by stages, dealing with the specific needs of the monetary system as they arise rather than by trying to impose an ideal structure at some predetermined date. I think recent events have confirmed the wisdom of this approach. I will be stating this position again later this month, in light of the new situation imposed by international energy developments, when I meet in Rome with ministers from the Group of 20.

I believe it is essential that nations keep their cool in the forthcoming period and use to the full all the channels of communication and co-operation open to them. Secretary Kissinger, I believe, was acting in the right spirit when he called for a co-operative approach to the questions of developing more rational uses of energy and more adequate sources of energy. But the need for co-operation is wider than simply the production and use of energy itself. The shortages and the higher costs of energy require sharp and large readjustment of countries' production and payments patterns. The periods of such readjustments can be dangerous periods for international peace and stability. The challenge to the nations of the world will be to accommodate the necessary changes by consultation, co-operation and common sense.

Let me turn now to the specific substance of the bill before the House. The success of the voluntary restraint arrangement introduced early last September required complementary measures to ensure that the price of Canadian exports to the United States would keep in line with the rising price of competitive oil in that market. Moreover, as I believe the House is aware, before the National Energy Board can authorize the export of crude oil it must be satisfied that the prices charged are "just and reasonable in relation to the public interest." Those are the words in the statute. To ensure that export prices were in fact just and reasonable, an export tax would be required equal to the difference between the frozen price in Canada and the price prevailing in the United States. On September 21, therefore, the government introduced a ways and means motion providing for this tax.

[Translation]

The establishment of this tax level by the government was based on information provided by the National Energy Board. The latter takes into account, in its recommendations, the expected discrepancy between the competitive crude oil price on the American market and the posted price that is frozen in western Canada, plus transportation and handling costs. After a review of this price discrepancy, this government put forward ways and means motions that provided for a taxation rate equal to 40c. a barrel in October and November, $1.90 in December and $2.20 in January. The bill provides for amendments to the Excise Tax Act, in order to include proposed taxes on the exportation of Canadian crude oil. During its four months of operation, this tax would provide for additional revenues of about $150 million.

I suggest that the export tax will achieve the required purposes. On a short range basis, it enables to maintain the freeze on domestic prices, to establish a fair and reasonable price for Canadian oil exports as well as to secure to Canadians the additional revenues derived from exports.

As a recognition of the need, on a long term basis, to provide for a more flexible control mechanism, the excise tax will be replaced by new oil export charges, as of February 1, 1974, according to the bill. The new tariff of charges on exported oil, in contrast with the temporary export tax, would include a variable rate according to quality and destination of each exportation. Charges would be established monthly by the governor in council, according to recommendations of the National Energy Board on what should be a fair and reasonable export price for Canadian oil. Charges would be collected on behalf of the Minister of Finance by the board that would be responsible at the same time for issuing export permits, as provided in Part VI of the National Energy Board Act.

[English]

There is one aspect of this bill which poses a special problem. There are some types of crude oil now being exported which clearly cannot bear the burden of the export charge. This occurs because the particular type of crude in question cannot compete in the United States market if the full export charge must be added on as part of the cost. Similarly, there are a number of instances where Canadian crude oil is exported solely for the purposes of refining, and then the refined product is reimported into Canada for use by Canadian manufacturers; but the cost of such reimported products reflects the added burden of the export levy. Clearly, these results are anomalous and run counter to the thrust of our policy, which is to keep prices down for Canadian consumers.

There is no easy answer to this problem. In some cases it could be dealt with by not imposing the tax on the transactions in the first instance, or by refunding the levy to the exporter. But this is not a full solution because in many instances the only way to be sure of achieving the appropriate result is to deal with the reimporter himself. Thus, we may require some combination of measures including remissions of the levy and direct payments. At this juncture we do not have enough facts to put forward a proposal to deal adequately with all appropriate cases. However, I can say that the government is aware of the problem and that we will take such steps as may be necessary to ensure that this bill does not generate anomalous and counter-productive results.

Hon. members will have noted that the bill limits the authority of the governor in council to a maximum export charge of $4 per barrel. However, as a result of the most recent international events the maximum level of $4 is now insufficient. My colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) has recently indicated that for the month of February the charge probably should be about $6.50 per barrel. Subsequent months may require a charge at an even higher level. Therefore it is my intention, after consultation with members of the House, to introduce at some stage in the proceedings of this bill an amendment, by way of unanimous consent, to the ways and means motion and the bill to substitute a maximum level of, say, $10 in place of the presently proposed $4 limit.

I am confident that all members of the House will agree that this bill should be dealt with on a basis which sensibly reflects not only the current realities but also the range of future possibilities. There is no intent, in suggesting that figure or any figure, to lead prices but merely to assure enough flexibility in this measure to meet possible future international price moves. If the House were to allow the amendment to be put and, further, agreed to the amendment, then the governor in council would likely set the charge at an average rate in the range of $6.50 for February. Hopefully, it will not be necessary to set a higher charge for subsequent months. However, I cannot emphasize too strongly the need for parliament to enact a statute which permits the government to pursue a course of action which properly meets the situation as it may emerge in the months ahead.

The voluntary price restraint, combined with the export tax, has produced substantial benefits for Canadian users of domestic oil. I recognize, however, that it has also reduced the oil revenues which the governments of the four western provinces would otherwise have received. The bill provides, therefore, for sharing the proceeds of the export tax to January 31 on a 50-50 basis with these provinces. The shared revenues would be distributed among these provinces according to each province's share of total oil production. I feel that the bill provides for distribution of the export tax revenues which is clearly equitable. The 50-50 division would compensate provincial governments for the revenues forgone as a result of the price freeze. They would be reimbursed for royalty revenues and the corporate income and other tax revenues forgone in respect of their total oil production during the relevant period of four months.

On the other hand, it is evident that a new national oil policy based on a capacity for self-sufficiency in oil and oil products will require certain commitments and important financial outlays at the national level. Such measures would include research and development expenditures on western oil and other energy resources, the provision of additional oil pipeline facilities and a guarantee of expanded domestic markets for western oil. Requirements such as these provide a clear case for a reasonable national share in the export tax revenues already collected, and in future export charges.

More broadly, however, I believe that the great majority of Canadians fully support the principle that there must always be a reasonable sharing of income and wealth among all our regions and all our citizens. That is a principle which goes to the heart of national unity in a federal system of government. It is the basis for the whole fiscal system of taxation, spending and transfer payments which has steadily evolved over many decades. Certainly, confederation is not based on any notion that federal revenues derived from economic activity or wealth in a particular province should as a matter of course be returned solely to that province. If that were to be the nature of confederation, we would be hard put to call ourselves a country.

As I mentioned previously, the export tax would be replaced after January by the tariff of charges as the means for securing appropriate export revenues for Canadians. The level of those revenues, and their disposition, will be related in part to the petroleum legislation recently enacted by Alberta and Saskatchewan. The Alberta legislation provides for the establishment of a petroleum marketing commission with the power to sell, as owner or as agent, all oil produced from Crown lands. That province has also indicated its intention of introducing substantially higher royalty rates on oil and gas production. In Saskatchewan's case, the new legislation provides for a royalty surcharge on all production from Crown rights.

Either of these provincial instruments could be used to influence the ultimate price to Canadian consumers of Canadian oil and thereby undermine the domestic price freeze. Such action would affect, in turn, one side of the equation which determines the level of the export charge. The application of these provincial instruments, as well as other factors bearing upon the level and disposition of the export charge revenues, will also be discussed by first ministers at the energy conferences in three weeks' time.

In summary, Mr. Speaker—and I thank the House for its patience—the bill provides for an export tax on crude oil covering the period October, 1973, to January, 1974, the revenues from which would be shared with the oil exporting provinces. It also provides for a flexible tariff of charges on oil exports commencing February, 1974. As I have said, however, I am hopeful that the House will be prepared to give unanimous consent to amendments necessary to bring the bill into line with the new situation precipitated by the most recent jump in international prices.

In these proposed measures we have attempted to strike a balance between the interests of the Canadian consumer and those of the oil producing provinces. We have also tried to ensure a reasonable return for all Canadians from the export of our oil resources. Having in mind the importance of the principles at stake and the major dimensions of pricing, taxation and revenue involved, I trust that the bill will be received with understanding by the members of the House.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in addition to dealing with the bill before the House, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) made certain references to and discussed briefly, at least, some of the international problems—probably of increasing intensity—which result from the rapid and very substantial increase in the price of oil being exported by the oil producing countries. There seems to be no doubt that this situation will produce international exchange problems of massive proportions. It is difficult to see how this will not have important consequences for Canada although it may be difficult to foresee exactly what they are. Anything that threatens to disrupt international monetary stability of the scale these price increases for oil are likely to create, anything that brings about such worldwide instability in terms of international exchange is bound to have very important consequences for a trading nation like ours.

I say this without offence at all, Mr. Speaker, but I think the Minister of Finance is being just a little too casual about the consequences of these international problems for Canada. Although I would agree that it is not easy to foresee exactly what they are, they certainly indicate trouble for us and, I would think, dreadful trouble for developing countries. Our problems by comparison could be quite soluble, with good will, in contrast to the frightening proportions of problems being created internationally, particularly for developing countries.

There are two parts to this bill before the House. There is the export tax in effect for the months of October, November, December and January at various levels for each month, to which the minister made reference this afternoon. This tax really arose from the voluntary freeze adopted by the government in September. The export tax was, in a sense, an afterthought. The reason given by the government for the sudden imposition of the export tax was the desire, as put forward by the government, to maintain the so-called voluntary freeze on Canadian crude sold domestically and at the same time to get a fair, full price for Canadians for oil exported. That was the origin of the freeze and of the export tax. The tax, in other words, arose as a result of the voluntary freeze in Canada. The purpose of the tax was to assist in the maintenance of that freeze and at the same time get a fair price for oil exported.

The government said at the time that it had to act with great precipitation. I hope the Minister of Finance will pardon me for using that word because it might remind him of bad weather and various other troubles. The government felt it had to react very quickly. For that reason it felt it was justified in its failure to consult with the oil producing provinces at the time of the imposition of the oil export tax.

We take the view, and I took the view at the time, that the government ought not to have imposed an export tax on natural resources coming from the provinces, without consultation. I also took the view, and still believe, that with meaningful consultation either at the time or immediately after the imposition of the export tax, agreement on methods could have been worked out with the oil producing provinces which would have achieved the purposes the federal government said it was seeking to achieve, without producing the problems that were produced and without exacerbating federal-provincial relations because of lack of effective consultation.

But the tax has been continued. There has been no effective consultation with the provinces. It has been sort of an off and on affair. There were days, indeed weeks, when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) seemed to be having real discussions with the governments of the producing provinces; then suddenly the federal government would take some unilateral action on its own again and everything would go back to the starting point.

The federal government made a commitment through the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It was not the commitment made today by the Minister of Finance. The federal government made the commitment that one half of the proceeds of the export tax for those four months would go directly to the oil producing provinces. Whereas the Minister of Finance, as I understood him today, suggested that the balance would be used for federal purposes, or something to that effect, the assurance given by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was that the other 50 per cent would find its way back to the provinces by investment in one way or another. I want the Minister of Finance to listen to me.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I am listening carefully.

Mr. Stanfield: The assurance given was that 50 per cent would go directly to the producing provinces and 50 per cent would find its way back to the producing provinces by way of investment. The choice, presumably, would be made by the federal government. That is different from what the Minister of Finance said today.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Not if you read my words.

Mr. Stanfield: I will read the minister's words carefully. My willingness to support this part of the bill is based on what I thought was the clear understanding given by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that 50 per cent would go back to the provinces directly and the other 50 per cent would go to those provinces, eventually at least, by way of investment. That struck me as being somewhat different from what the minister said today. I ask for some clarification of that point, Mr. Speaker.

We are now in this position. Since October the government has been indicating that the tax for these four months would be collected. The question before the House relating to this part of the bill is whether this tax is to be collected at the rates indicated by the minister or whether it is going to be left in the hands of the oil companies. That is the question the House must face. Whatever may be my reservations about the manner in which the government has proceeded and its lack of consultation, faced with this kind of alternative at this time, namely, of either supporting the export tax for at least four months or leaving this money in the hands of the oil companies, there is really no choice but to support this part of the bill. We shall support the export tax for those four months on the basis of the assurances given by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources with regard to the disposition of those funds.

If this was the only part of the bill I should have no particular difficulty with it. On the basis of the assurances given by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources I should have no difficulty in choosing my preference with regard to alternatives. The alternatives are either that the money shall simply stay in the treasuries of the oil companies, or our going along with the government despite the reservations I have expressed about the procedures followed by the government and the lack of consultation with the provinces involved.

But there is a second part to this bill. Following January 31, a charge is to be fixed against the export of Canadian oil in an amount to be determined by the government, and this is to be done on a month to month basis. The maximum is to be $4 a barrel, but the minister indicates that he is going to seek consent to raise that level to perhaps $10. Parliament is being asked to delegate authority to the government in order to continue to impose a charge at a level which the government will select shortly before the federal-provincial conference which is being called, as I understand it, to work out a package of problems—a number of which were referred to by the Minister of Finance today—relating to a real oil policy involving some of the considerations he mentioned, as well as federal leadership and full provincial participation.

We are being asked, just before this conference is convened, to delegate this power to tax to this government. This tax is only one element, although it is obviously important in terms of the money involved, in the package of proposals which the government proposes to discuss with the provinces. It is only one element in what must constitute a meaningful national oil policy which the federal government hopes to work out with the provinces. This package must include various elements. It surely has to include a future pricing policy for Canadian domestic crude. We were told by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in December that the freeze would be kept on domestic crude until the end of the heating season. We were told that this would be determined at the forthcoming federal-provincial conference. However, the Prime Minister has given no indication of what the pricing policy will be for Canadian crude following the termination of the freeze. That, obviously, is an important element in a national oil policy.

Mr. Sharp: What are you suggesting?

Mr. Stanfield: Just take it easy.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We want to hear the hon. gentleman's policy.

Mr. Paproski: Just listen and you will find out.

● (1600)

Mr. Stanfield: I am very pleased to note that the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Sharp) and the Minister of Finance seem to be seriously disturbed by their lack of policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The Minister of Finance also recognized today—and this is the first time any minister in this House has recognized it—the importance of reducing the disparity between prices paid for imported crude and prices paid for domestic crude. Heretofore the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources have said, "This is just something that happens. It worked the other way for quite a long time. After all, we have a very generous Canada Assistance Plan. We will share 50 per cent with the eastern provinces; that will help them out a lot." That was a totally inadequate response.

My point at the moment—I will develop it as I go along—is that the Minister of Finance stressed today the importance of working under a one-price policy. I say we must not wait until 1980 to have a one-Canadian market principle which the Prime Minister talked about early in December. If we have to wait until 1980 to get something approaching equality, something approaching a one-price principle, maybe not exactly the same but something the country can live with, Quebec and the Atlantic provinces will be so deeply entrenched in economic disparity that what we have seen in the past will be nothing by comparison.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I was pleased to hear the Minister of Finance emphasize this today. However, there is still no precision. All that is precise is what the government wants to tax. There is not a bit of information about a pricing policy which of course is clearly related to the amount the tax would actually be and very closely related to consumer interests. There is nothing specific about measures to be taken to reduce the pricing disparity. These are things I presume the government will put before the conference in a serious and specific way.

During the recess I was pleased to hear that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is beginning to recognize the urgent problems resulting from the price disparity faced by the five eastern provinces. This has been apparent to me and to others for a number of months. We expressed this position in the debate on December 10 and frequently repeated it after that, almost to the jeers of members of the government and members supporting the government. I was delighted to see today the reversal in principle of the Minister of Finance. I do not think it would be an exaggeration to refer to it as a new "Turner Valley find".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Following the Prime Minister's statement of position, I said that the position taken by this government toward the five eastern provinces was a savage policy. It certainly was. I am pleased to see that it is being abandoned, at least in principle. However, I would like to know what the government really proposes to do about it. It is not good enough for the government to come before this House and ask for the right to impose taxes at its discretion without telling us the rest of what it proposes to do.

Mr. Foster: What do you propose?

Mr. Stanfield: What a question! I said as emphatically as I could that the disparity which existed the other way to the extent of 50 cents or a dollar a barrel is something that can be lived with, but we cannot live with the kind of distortion we have at present. I said that as emphatically as I could; I do not know what I can say to get it through the hon. member's head.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Let the government put before the House its package, not just its tax proposal. Let it put before the House its package with regard to the pricing policy of Canadian crude and imported crude. These are all questions that surely must be answered before anyone in good conscience could support this part of the bill. The minister talked about the purpose of the bill. What is the purpose of the bill? Is it to raise revenue? Is it to provide the government with the tool to help it control domestic prices? I would like to know the purpose of the bill. This is fundamental to the whole discussion regarding domestic pricing. On the matter of domestic pricing the government has been going around in circles. First there was to be a five-month voluntary freeze. Some hazy extension was then improvised to last until the end of the winter. The government will not say when that will be.

Our position has been clear and consistent. I said it is unrealistic to look at an indefinite application of the voluntary freeze. I said increases in the price of domestic crude should be phased in and that we should be able to work out a method of keeping Canadian crude prices below international prices. I understood the Minister of Finance to say he thought it was inevitable that domestic crude prices would have to track international crude prices. I do not accept that view; I think we should be able to keep domestic crude somewhat below that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: In yesterday's Toronto Star the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is quoted as saying something to the effect that domestic prices will rise this summer to somewhere between $8 and $10 a barrel. That is the price of domestic or Canadian crude. If that were to happen, the government would be going from a policy of unreality that is simply talking about a continuing freeze to a pronouncement of the hardest of realities, with no explanation; that is, going from a freeze of $4.50 a barrel for Canadian crude in Toronto to $8 or $10 by the summer. That would be going from a policy of unreality to a policy of the harshest of realities—with no explanation, no hint of an attempt to stage the increases and no clear indication as to how this $8 or $10 figure was determined.

● (1610)

In the same press interview the minister referred to some form of tax at the wholesale level to sponge away windfall profits made by companies engaged in the oil business. This, presumably, is another part of the package that this parliament and the provinces will eventually be asked to consider. What kind of tax does the government propose in addition to the present export charge? To what would the proposed windfall profits' sponge apply? How would it fit into the revenues required to hold some acceptable level between the prices to western and eastern consumers? More questions arise and more vacuums are revealed as we examine this bill. There are many unanswered questions, so many that obviously it is impossible to support this part of the bill in its present form.

I thought when the bill was introduced that it should have been split. The part dealing with the export tax on oil at the end of January could be passed very quickly. In spite of any reservations we might have both about the precedent of such a tax and the absence of consultation, and in spite of any reservations about its method of implementation, we would certainly not oppose the part of the bill relating to the export tax for the four-month period. But the part dealing with the ongoing export charge should not be dealt with until the government is prepared to come clean and deal honestly with us, is prepared to give us the answers that we need to make a considered judgment as to what is the position of the government.

I remind the House that it was our desire from the outset to see these propositions dealt with separately. I endeavoured to achieve this by raising a point of order when the ways and means motion was presented. I do not know why the government has chosen to proceed by means of one omnibus-type bill. I do not see any real need for this practice, particularly when one part of the bill is as nebulous and unsupported by information as is the case here.

I do not know why the government is in such an all-fired rush to get this session recessed before the federal-provincial conference, before we have a chance to see what the package is and what arrangements are worked out in achieving a national oil policy with the provinces. I do not see any reason why detailed consideration of the export charge in the form of a separate bill could not be deferred till we have the answers that we need, indeed till following the federal-provincial meeting. If the government is not prepared to split the bill, then it should be prepared to defer the entire bill till after the federal-provincial conference.

There has been altogether too much confrontation and too little real consultation. There has been too much ad hockery, too little solid policy. There has been too much suspicion caused by too little information. I think that from time to time the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has tried to get back to real consultation in order to develop a national oil policy on the basis on which he used to say it should be developed—in consultation with the provinces. I think real progress has been made in getting discussions back to a more reasonable tone following the failure of the Prime Minister to evoke a response from the Premier of Alberta to his rather vicious attack upon him in Vancouver some weeks ago. I hope that the federal government has received an indication that this problem has to be discussed not in terms of vituperation but in terms of consultation. I think the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is working in that direction following a bad beginning. With the prospect of a new beginning that, hopefully, will result in a productive conference, it is all the more important, I believe, that the government take a reasonable and sensible attitude in the House on this legislation. I cannot accept it as either reasonable or sensible for the government to seek support for this double-barrelled bill on the basis of the information provided us today by the Minister of Finance.

We are looking ahead to three weeks which could be crucial weeks in the development of federal-provincial relations in this country as well as in the development of a national oil policy. If the government is really sincere about pursuing the path of consultation rather than seeking confrontation, for whatever motives, it could demonstrate its sincerity to me and my colleagues by following either of the courses I have suggested, namely, split the bill and defer the export charge aspect till after the conference, or defer the entire bill till after the conference.

There is no use pretending that this bill is not related to the balance of the package, because it is. It is obviously related to the question of domestic pricing. The export charge to be fixed by the government will be the difference between the international price as determined by the government and the domestic price. So these questions are tied in together. It is nonsense for the government to present this bill as an isolated measure; it should be presented to the House as part of the package.

We are quite prepared to give very quick passage to the export tax aspects of the bill for the four-month period. We would be quite prepared to co-operate with the minister if he thinks he might be in some difficulty for the month of February, for example. We want to be co-operative. But we want to see what we are being asked to buy before we adopt something of an ongoing, permanent nature.

We would waive all notices required for the reintroduction of separate bills. We have agreed to a time allocation for the bill before us, and we would agree to a consistent time allocation respecting separate bills. I emphasize that we are certainly prepared to be here three weeks from now to deal with this matter and other matters following the federal-provincial conference, and to deal with them in the context of full information, or at least fuller information. I believe this is a reasonable approach on our part and that we could not do more in present circumstances without abandoning our responsibilities to the House and to the people of the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: We want to see the government's total package before giving further consideration to these matters. We do not operate on a system of executive rule in this country, though there is a large element of this involved in this tax bill. The government is asking to be delegated the right by parliament to fix from month to month the tax to be imposed. We do not yet have a system of executive rule and we do not yet live in a country that has a unitary government. We in our party consider the federal nature of our country and federal-provincial relationships, as I am sure members of the government do, basically to be a source of strength and we would like to keep it that way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: So in closing I simply say that it is fantastic that this government seeks this continuing power in the future in regard to the export charge, the amount of which is related to domestic pricing policy, policy that the government has not disclosed and has not even discussed with the House. It has given us nothing at all precise as to what it intends to do to reduce the disparity in price between those parts of Canada that have to rely upon imported crude and those parts using Canadian crude. These are all matters that will be presented to the federal-provincial conference and will be worked out there. I think this House, and in particular the opposition, is entitled to a lot more information, not just generalities, than the Minister of Finance has given us.

● (1620)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has given the House a very exhaustive resumé of the oil situation as it obtains in the world generally and in Canada in particular, and has put forward the thesis that the changing oil situation has necessitated a national oil policy. With that contention this party is certainly in agreement, but I disagree with the minister when he says the necessity for a national oil policy has arisen from the fact that the oil producing countries have acted in concert to jack up the price.

It is true that the actions of the OPEC nations, particularly the embargoes and restrictions arising from the Arab-Israeli war, have accelerated the crisis and I think in a way have fortunately demonstrated to us and to other western nations how vulnerable we are in respect of both the price and supply of oil upon which so many western countries are dependent. The fact is that this crisis has been coming upon us for a good while and has arisen from two factors. The first factor is the distribution of oil supplies in the world, and the second is the situation on the North American continent.

With reference to world distribution, some 80 per cent of the world's conventional oil is located in the Middle East. Although we generally think of Canada as a great oil producing country, we have only 2 per cent of the world's conventional supplies and the United States has only about 9 per cent. Therefore, the world has been very dependent upon Middle East oil and is becoming increasingly so as our domestic supplies are diminishing.

With reference to our own supplies of oil, we and the United States have passed our peak of production. In Canada we have a life index of conventional oil of about ten years. If we are fortunate and do not increase our consumption too rapidly, both the United States and Canada will be dependent, before the end of this decade, upon finding other sources of oil either from the oil sands or from shale. Therefore, we have needed for some time a national oil policy and the crisis through which we are passing has been of some use in that it has awakened the government and the country to the need for a national oil policy.

Almost 12 months ago members of this party were pointing out the need for taking a number of steps to meet the situation as it obtained then and as it has accelerated since. We pointed out the need for export controls to prevent our oil being taken out of the country at the prevailing rate of 50 per cent to 60 per cent of our production per day. We pointed out the need for establishing a two-price system so that Canadian consumers would not be required to pay exorbitant prices because of rising world prices, and the need for an export tax to ensure that the additional money received for oil exported did not go to the oil companies which have done nothing to contribute to these increased prices. We pointed out that this additional money should be retained for the benefit of future development. Finally, we pointed out the need for setting up a national petroleum company which would be the sole purchaser of both domestic and imported oil and would have the ability to equalize the price across the country so that people in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces would not be victimized by virtue of the fact that imported oil was reaching an astronomical price.

I submit, in all modesty, that the distinctive position we were taking about a year ago has been fully justified by the developments which have taken place since that time.

The government moved, belatedly it is true, but it did move eventually last September toward taking steps along the lines I have just indicated.

The bill now before us presented by the Minister of Finance, divides itself logically into two parts. Part II simply gives legislative effect to the export tax which the government has been levying since October 1. This was a tax to ensure that the profits which the multinational oil companies would obtain from selling Canadian crude oil at world prices would not accrue to those companies whose profits are already substantial, but would accrue to the federal and provincial treasuries. We supported the imposition of such a tax. In fact, we advocated the imposition of such a tax and we certainly support wholeheartedly this part of the bill. We not only advocated the imposition of an export tax but we urged very strongly that the proceeds from this tax should be returned to the producing provinces, in part to compensate them for the royalties they would have received had the price freeze not been imposed last September and also to enable them to finance, if they chose to do so under the cover of public ownership, the development of alternative oil supplies.

I am taking it for granted that the commitment which has been made in this House repeatedly by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) still stands. That commitment was that 50 per cent of the proceeds from the export tax would go back to the provinces in lieu of the royalties they would have collected, and that the other 50 per cent would be spent exclusively in the oil producing provinces for the development of energy resources. The Minister of Finance made no reference to this apportionment of the revenues from the export tax, and certainly before this bill passes the House we want a categorical assurance from the minister that the commitment made by his colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, is a commitment made by this government and fully endorsed by the Minister of Finance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas: We now come to the second subject covered in this bill under part I which deals with the imposition of an export charge under the Excise Tax Act. I certainly agree with the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) that this part of the bill raises more questions than it answers. For instance, what is to be the basis of this export charge? There is no doubt what the basis of the export tax was: it was the differential between the restrained, or frozen price in Canada and the price the national board estimated the Chicago price would be for a given month. That was 40 cents in October and November, $1.90 in December and $2.20 in January. It is now estimated that for February it could go as high as $6.50.

● (1630)

But what is the basis upon which the export charge will be levied? It cannot be on the differential because the Minister of Finance today, and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources outside the House, have both said that the price freeze is to come off at the end of the winter season and that the price will be allowed to rise. How much will it be allowed to rise?

Mr. Stanfield: That is the question.

Mr. Douglas: And why will it be allowed to rise? Who will get the proceeds from that increase in the price?

Mr. Alexander: That is the next question.

Mr. Douglas: Those are questions not answered in the minister's statement. If the price is allowed to rise and if, as the Minister of Finance says, the price will track the international price, then what differential will there be upon which to base an export charge? The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources keeps making contradictory statements every few days, so it is difficult to follow what is the government's policy. He has said repeatedly that it would be the international price at Montreal. The international price at Montreal will be increasingly the price of imported oil; it will not differ largely from the Chigago price or the Gulf coast posted price. So what will be the differential upon which to base this export charge?

The second question which comes to my mind as I read the bill is this: Is this export charge merely a temporary measure, to be replaced later by some other tax mechanism? The press reports the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources as saying, first of all, that the price of oil probably will double this year and reach $8 or $10 a barrel and that a tax will be placed on oil possibly at the wholesale level in order to prevent windfall profits. Is that type of tax mechanism to replace the export charge and export tax?

I notice that the oil companies have indicated they would like some measure of this sort, and understandably so because any tax they would pay under the circumstances would be chargeable against their corporate tax payments. Also, they will be able to use the substantial revenue they will get from rising prices for oil development, which will increase their assets. They will be making large profits which do not show and cannot be taxed: they will put this money into inventory by developing additional oil reserves which will belong to them but which will have been financed by the taxpayers of Canada and by the oil consumers of Canada.

I recognize that some increase in the price of oil may be necessary, but only if the additional price paid by the Canadian consumer is to be used by the federal and provincial governments to ensure that there will be additional supplies of oil when our present conventional oil is used up—not if it is to go into the pockets of the oil companies so they can either enlarge their profits on the one hand, or develop further oil reserves on the other, which will of course tremendously increase their assets and their present holdings.

The minister said nothing about how the revenue from the export charge will be apportioned between the federal and provincial governments. Clause 12 of the bill provides that the minister can make an apportionment of the profits, but there was no indication by the minister in his statement today concerning the basis of that apportionment. Is it to be the same as the distribution of the export tax enunciated by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, 50 per cent in lieu of royalties and 50 per cent to finance oil development in the oil producing provinces? If that is what the government intends to do, then certainly I think that is commendable. But the minister has not said so and the bill does not say so. Therefore, there should be some clarification on that point.

Mr. Speaker, since I have only a few minutes left before we must turn to another matter, let me try to summarize briefly what I think is required in legislation designed to implement a national oil policy. First of all, it must be a policy that will guarantee Canadian consumers against an unnecessary increase in the price of domestic oil. Second, it must prevent the multinational oil companies making windfall profits out of price increases that are due not to any effort on their part but to a worldwide situation which has pushed up prices and will continue to push up the price of oil in the world market.

I think the one thing on which the government has not come clean is how we propose to finance the future development of oil resources in Canada. This is the number one question. If we think we face a crisis now, in a country which produces more oil than it consumes, I ask members of this House to think of the situation when our conventional oil supplies diminish to the point where we are dependent upon imported oil, as we could be in Canada in not too many years. We in this party have no hesitation in saying what we believe should be the policy for ensuring future development of our oil resources. We have said that the federal government and the oil producing provinces ought to get together in a program for the proper development of the oil sands and heavy oil in Alberta and Saskatchewan, so that in the future the great reservoir of oil which is in western Canada will be in the hands of the Canadian people and will be developed for the benefit of the Canadian people at reasonable and fair prices.

Every so often someone on the government side sort of lets the cat out of the bag. One has the uneasy feeling that there are other forces at work in this country. The Globe and Mail for Friday, December 14, reporting from Calgary, states:

There is as much as $20 billion in profits to be reaped in exporting synthetic crude produced from the Alberta oil sands by the end of the decade, says federal supply minister Jean-Pierre Goyer.

But the federal and provincial governments and the industry must act quickly to capitalize on the oil sands before the United States—Canada's largest customer—achieves self-sufficiency in energy by 1980, he said in an interview—

● (1640)

Mr. Goyer predicted that at least 40 billion barrels of synthetic crude could be pumped out of the oil sands in northern Alberta, giving profits of $2 billion to $3 billion a year.

"We have very good customers, eager customers and wealthy customers", especially the United States, Japan and West Germany.

At the very least, the minister said, 40 billion barrels of synthetic crude can be produced from the oil sands, using present technology, at an approximate cost of $5.50 a barrel.

Export contracts should stipulate minimum and ceiling price levels but $8 would be a realistic figure in the next few years, he said.

"This could mean a net profit of $2 billion to $3 billion a year for the next seven or eight years".

Mr. Goyer said the United States should be approached to help develop the oil saids. "We can pay the loans back in oil."

This is what we did 40 or 50 years ago when we turned the great oilfields of Canada over to American multinational oil companies, and we have been paying through the nose for it ever since.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas: I am saying to the government that if this government or any other government starts to hypothecate the oil from the oil sands of western Canada to American multinational corporations or any other group of foreign investors, the Canadian people are not as unmindful as they were 40 or 50 years ago of the implications of foreign control of their great national resources. As far as we in this party are concerned, it will be over our dead bodies if the government tries to ever get away with a policy of that kind.

Mr. Paproski: They are going to vote Conservative.

Mr. Douglas: I would be prepared to vote Conservative if I thought the Conservative Party would do anything to stop multinational oil companies milking this country.

Mr. Paproski: That is exactly what we are going to do.

Mr. Douglas: I have found them all too often getting the cow to stand still so that it could be milked more placidly.

Mr. Paproski: That was 20 years ago.

Mr. Douglas: I see you are about to rise, Mr. Speaker. May I conclude by saying that in this bill the government has set forth the details with reference to the export tax, which we support; but we want some confirmation as to the apportionment of the revenue. We want a great many more answers with reference to the export charge and with respect to the government's policy on pricing after the end of the price freeze. I hope the minister will be able to give us this information, because so far we have not been able to secure it and we absolutely require it if we are to make any favourable decision with reference to this legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) will be recognized at eight o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Pursuant to Standing Order 40, it is my duty to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland)—Manpower—Local Initiatives Program—Allocation of funds—Grant criteria—Request for reference to committee; the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn)—Royal Canadian Mounted Police—Charges against members working at Malton airport—Request for investigation; the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez)—Regional economic expansion—Northern Ontario—Date of announcement of agreement for development—Degree of co-operation between governments.

Election Expenses

ELECTION EXPENSES

PROVISION OF PAYMENTS TO CANDIDATES AND REIMBURSEMENT OF PARTIES FOR CERTAIN BROADCASTING TIME

The House resumed, from Friday, December 21, consideration of Bill C-203, to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in respect of election expenses, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 4.45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to the special order made earlier this day, to interrupt the proceedings now. The House will proceed to the consideration and disposal of the deferred divisions at the report stage of Bill C-203, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act, in respect of election expenses. After the ringing of the bells, somebody on behalf of the House leader will announce the motions on which votes are to be taken. Call in the members.

● (1700)

And the members having been called in.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) seeks the floor.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to the divisions now to be taken. Perhaps since the motions are all in the names of members of this party, I might indicate certain agreements that have been made.

It is satisfactory to us, Mr. Speaker, when we have taken a vote on motion No. 3, that if that is defeated we will accept that as defeat of Nos. 4, 5 and 6; but if motion No. 3 is carried, we hope the House will accept that as the carrying of Nos. 4, 5 and 6.

After that, we would suggest that there be a vote on the amendment to motions Nos. 7, 17 and 31 which appear at the bottom of page xi, first column. After that has been disposed of, there could be one vote on Nos. 7, 17 and 31, either a vote on all three together or a vote on No. 7 which would cover the other two.

We then suggest that when we come to motions Nos. 8, 9, 10 and 11, that the first one that passes ends the story; if not, that there be a vote on No. 8, then Nos. 9 and 10 together and then a vote on No. 11. Finally, there needs to be a vote on No. 42.

Mr. Speaker, I think you will find that this reduces what looks like 13 recorded divisions to seven.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will require the guidance of hon. members as we proceed. Beginning at the beginning, we will call motion No. 3.

The House divided on motion No. 3 (Mr. Knight) which was agreed to on the following division:

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

OIL EXPORT CHARGE ACT

PROVISION OF EXPORT CHARGE, OIL EXPORT TAX UNDER EXCISE ACT AND ALLOCATION OF REVENUES FROM TAX

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-245, to impose a charge on the export of crude oil from Canada, to impose an oil export tax under the Excise Tax Act and to allocate certain of the revenues derived from the oil export tax, be read a second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House desirous that the Chair call it six o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At 5.55 p.m. the House took recess.

———

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, before passing judgment on a bill such as the one before us, it would be appropriate to set the record straight, because the subject matter of this bill is obviously of current and even urgent interest as we readily realize. When we have to face a crucial problem that is even called a crisis, it is always extremely important to act wisely and to give the matter careful consideration before passing judgment.

For instance, there is an important point that should be made at the outset as regards oil: to me, it is unthinkable, if not ridiculous, in a country such as ours which produces and even exports oil to other countries—of course, in the present case, other countries mean the United States—to have to cope with an oil shortage. That is nonsense. It is as if we were to read in the newspapers tomorrow that Saudi Arabia or Kuweit have an oil shortage and wondered what to do to help them. Such is the situation in Canada. This is what is happening at the present time. Such is the energy crisis which we heard about. As a solution, it was proposed to turn down the thermostats and to close the windows properly. All such little measures seemed all the more ridiculous as we were exporting 60 per cent of the Canadian oil production.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Then, this is a point to be considered. Should we not have taken some action based on sound economy, on basic principles, simply to the effect that a country must consume its own production first and thus make financially possible what is materially feasible? Mr. Speaker, the Social Crediters have been saying this for many years, and today we find ourselves before the facts. At present, some countries are taking advantage of a crisis that they provoke themselves. We are entirely dependent on them because we want it. There would not be any problem for us if we wanted to get oil even from Arab countries.

Mr. Speaker, it is not really about this that we should be talking although it is related in a certain way, but about the fact that if we had a policy based on common sense, on the fact that we must consume first our production before throwing ourselves on the mercy of foreigners. The more we think of this, the more we wonder how such a situation could exist.

How is it that we have to put up with so much, to reach such conditions? And we find similar conditions—not that I intend to digress greatly—in many fields, in areas which are still as easy to develop as food products, livestock. Mr. Speaker, sometimes we have problems and we import from abroad. Why import lamb from New Zealand, Mr. Speaker, when it is known that we have good lands for sheep-breeding? But a policy based on things like that can only lead us to the dead end we are now reaching. There is oil in Canada but we cannot distribute it adequately throughout the country. Because of whom? This is due to a lack of foresight, at the very least, on the part of leaders, and nobody can deny it. In spite of what will be said or done, a policy should have been worked out to provide for that.

But I repeat that if we followed the basic principles of a sound economy, such situations could not occur. So, there is some reluctance to undertake the study of a bill which is presented at a moment when we are in a blind alley and we have to find a solution. Advantage might be taken of the situation to assume rights which do not belong to the federal government. We have already seen that in a more serious crisis situation, the war, when advantage was taken of the situation to assume provincial rights. This explains why family allowances and old age security allowances are administered by the federal government when they obviously fall under strictly provincial jurisdiction. But we took advantage of a crisis situation to appropriate that. What I fear now is that we take advantage of a crisis which will be probably only temporary as we will discover some new oil fields. The Arab nations will open more freely the oil tap. We are in a temporary situation. Are we going to pass bills that could, in the long run, create problems in Canada at a moment when we have a temporary crisis situation? Mr. Speaker, did we consider that in a provincial field like energy and oil, once we have a foot in oil, we could slip into something else? Electric power is also a very important energy source. We can foresee the conflict, Mr. Speaker. Should the federal government ever decide to impose a tax on the kilowatt-hours from the province of Quebec sold to the United States it would be a terrible disaster. So, care must be taken. At a time when a precedent is being set in one field, it can also be established in others. Hence some reluctance to admit that they are meddling with certain things, Mr. Speaker. If we analyze this legislation, and as the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) put it, I think that he was right then, we do not know too well where we are heading. Here is one interpretation that can be given, for instance: This is an indirect way of establishing royalties since a tax which changes constantly, every month, according to international oil prices, becomes simply a royalty, a percentage taken on a natural resource, which according to the constitution ought to be the exclusive property of the provinces. Therefore, I realize why the provincial governments concerned, including the Alberta government, obviously do not agree with the federal government policy in that field. It has also been stated during the afternoon that a policy had to be agreed to all the same in the present situation in order to prevent excessive differentials between oil prices in eastern and western Canada. Of course, Mr. Speaker, it is the duty of the government in the present situation to try and avoid this inequality of treatment among citizens of the same country.

However, if the government intends to use this charge in order to effect this distribution, this balance, we would have to be informed in a much more detailed way so that we know precisely what we are voting on.

I feel therefore that we must have a great many reservations concerning this bill, taking into account the government's apparent eagerness to accelerate things and its failure, as often is the case, to do what it should have done.

What is the reason for the many unilateral decisions? How is it, Mr. Speaker, that the government did not realize how important it was, in a matter of great concern to the province of Alberta, to go and have discussions with the main people involved? This is quite elementary. But no, it chose to act unilaterally and stir up passions. How will all this turn out, nobody knows. And yet, this bill concerns this particular problem. No one knows exactly what will become of it since the provincial premiers' conference on the subject will be held subsequently. The provinces were not consulted; yet a bill has been introduced which directly concerns the provincial governments. As I said earlier, this shows a lack of wisdom. I know the present problem is urgent, but its urgency should not make us lose our heads.

On the other hand, one must admit that the problem would doubtless be solved if there were a pipeline to Montreal. Of course, we would then have less difficulty with regard to oil prices throughout Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I fail to see why it is not possible to transport oil from a western province to eastern Canada. I fail to see why trains of tank cars cannot head from Alberta to Montreal. I simply cannot understand it. Let trains be made up that are one mile, or two miles long, if need be; within a matter of two or three days, the oil will have reached its destination. I fail to see why that should be a major problem.

I do not understand either why the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) said in answer to a question put to him this afternoon that he did not believe that the maintenance of the St. Lawrence Seaway could ease up the oil problem. Yet we know that what is involved now in Canada is an oil transport problem. Therefore we should try harder to settle the problem where it is. Since a transport problem is involved, let us first solve this problem. Then it will be so much easier to fix the domestic price when we can be sure that the oil is truly Canadian. And that will be done to the satisfaction of all concerned.

These considerations, Mr. Speaker, lead me to express some doubts, since we don't know exactly what is the purpose of this bill, this purpose is very vague. As a matter of fact, it reads as follows, and I quote:

3. (1) For the purpose of obtaining the best return for Canada on the export sale of crude oil while allowing the price of crude oil used in Canada to be determined in relation to the circumstances of the Canadian market—

The clause then stipulates what the requirements will be.

Here the objective of the legislation is spelled out. Canada is to be favoured. Mr. Speaker, every measure we adopt tends to favour someone. The terms are not clear or precise enough, particularly since we are acting in an area where once again unilaterally, it is decided, as it says in the second part of the bill, that 50 per cent of the taxes will go to the provinces concerned.

There is still one thing which can only be settled by the provinces themselves. And, as I said earlier, I do not see at all how at a given moment the problem of Hydro-Quebec or Ontario Hydro taxes could be settled. And since oil is a source of energy similar to electricity, how is it that we are trying, through this bill, to settle some problems which are first and foremost provincial problems? I do not suggest that the government has no coordinating role nor that it should not be concerned with regional interests. Of course, this is its role. But it should not play this role by assuming the rights of regions which, in this case, happen to be in a favourable position because they have this natural resource which is called oil.

This is why I am quite reluctant to approve this bill and I would like to have further clarification on its motivations and particularly on its objectives. Furthermore, we are presented with this bill at a time when we cannot fully appreciate it in view of the fact that we are in the middle of a so-called energy crisis and that we might pass a legislation which, within the next few months, could turn into a bone of contention for the whole country. This is why I wonder whether before introducing such a bill the provinces should not be consulted. The federal government should act only after those consultations as its role implies as a coordinator and not by imposing initiatives. With those few remarks, I do not quite agree with this bill. Perhaps some amendments should be proposed or the bill should be more precisely explained so that we do not take a decision which we would regret in a few months or years.

● (2020)

[English]

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in rising tonight to speak on second reading of Bill C-245, I should like to say how interested I was in the remarks of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) who spoke at some length this afternoon with reference to consultation and commonsense. It seems that when this government is in great difficulty, when they reverse themselves and contradict themselves as they have on this and other issues, the Minister of Finance is always called upon to take the leading role in either piloting a bill through the House or getting the approval of parliament on a difficult problem such as this. I was thinking also of the War Measures Act. All those dirty jobs seem to be handed to that gentleman in the front row, the Minister of Finance who was formerly the minister of justice. One wonders who plans these events. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) may recognize that this minister has the ability to help him out of tough spots or it may be that he wishes to dim an image. At any rate, I do not believe the government can take any credit for attempting to lead people to believe they have any idea of consultation or that there is any commonsense in the way they have tried to make out that they have an oil policy.

At the outset, I should like to say that my home province is the province of Alberta, the largest oil-producing province in Canada. I was born in another oil-producing province, the province of Saskatchewan. I am a westerner. I have always appreciated, whether I represented the former constituency, now represented by another member, of Palliser-Bow River or whether I represented Calgary North, a new constituency established in 1967-68 by redistribution, that I come here to speak as a Canadian; as a Canadian member of parliament I must look at the whole picture from a national point of view.

I should like to endorse what my leader said today. I want to incorporate his remarks in mine and also much of what was said by the former leader of the New Democratic Party, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas). In their criticism of this bill I think both these gentlemen were right on target.

I want to deal with the bill itself and why I think it should not be brought before the House in this form. I think it can be emphasized again that clause 2 of the bill should really be clause 1. Clause 2 is really asking this parliament to affirm what is already a fait accompli; namely, that the government implemented a surtax against exports of crude petroleum in the amount of 40 cents per barrel in October and changed that to $1.90 on December 1, 1973 and finally changed it again to $2.20 in January, 1974.

I have dealt with one part of the bill. I shall now deal with another contentious part. I realize that on second reading one does not refer to specific clauses. However, for the sake of clarity and brevity, may I read part of Clause 3(1):

> For the purpose of obtaining the best return for Canada on the export sale of crude oil while allowing the price of crude oil used in Canada to be determined in relation to the circumstances of the Canadian market,—

Whatever that may mean,

> —there shall be imposed, levied and collected on each barrel of crude oil exported from Canada during any month commencing with the month of February, 1974 a charge in such amount, not exceeding four dollars, as may be prescribed in a tariff of charges for that month made by order of the Governor in Council—

The clause uses the words, "determined in relation to the circumstances of the Canadian market." We do not know what those words mean. I will say more about them later.

The Minister of Finance, no doubt on instruction, referred to the ceiling of $4. There was a suggestion that this could be raised to $10 by order in council. So, there is to be a new kind of budget in Canada, a budget brought in by order in council. We have to trust the government and hope that it will implement this program with fairness and equity. I am not prepared, as a Canadian, to accept that kind of suggestion from this government, particularly in view of its waffling and the changes in its oil policy which have taken place over the last few months.

It has been suggested that there has been really no change in national oil policy since 1961, when the Progressive Conservative Party, after consultation with the provinces, brought in a policy under which the Ottawa Valley line divided the country, the part west of the line using western crude oil and the part east using imported oil from Venezuela and elsewhere. That policy was made after consultation with the provinces and with the United States, as at that time we had been unable to market sufficient oil, even for a very low consideration. The American government gave us the right, by agreement, to export to the northwestern part of the United States. In return, we were to take imports from Venezuela and from other parts of the world of oil, which, no doubt, was financed with American money.

Let me return to the export charge. Perhaps we will discover in committee, although I doubt it, how much money is to be raised. What share of this money will go to the provinces, and how much money will the federal government keep? Let us look at some figures.

In October, the export tax was 40 cents a barrel; in December it was $1.90, and in January $2.20. Crude oil was authorized to be shipped in the following quantities: in October, 30,888,750 barrels; in November, 27,207,990 barrels; in December, 25,628,730 barrels, and in January, 29,270,100. What was the revenue accruing to the government from the export tax? I shall quote figures to show the astronomical amount that would be raised if the export were $10 per barrel. Just before coming to the House this evening I heard someone in the gallery say that one could raise money just by waving one's hand. I do not accept that philosophy. Let me, therefore, show what revenue will accrue to the federal government during the months in question. In October, the revenue was $12,355,500. That much was collected by the government. In November, the figure was $10,883,196. In December, it was $56,383,206, and in January the figure will be $64,394,220, for a total of $144,016,120, in four months. Those figures relate to the surtax of 40 cents, $1.90, and $2.20.

If the surtax were increased to $4 per barrel, the government would gain $120 million per month, or $1,440 million per year. At $6.50, the government would gain $195 million per month, or $2,340 million per year. At $10 per barrel, the government would gain $300 million per month or $3,600 million per year. That is close to $4 billion.

We may ask, how much money will actually be raised? We do not know. This is the first time any government has asked the House of Commons to tax the Canadian people on the basis of an order in council. That is how a commodity is to be taxed. In other words, the government will bring in a budget by order in council, and the budget will provide for revenues of almost $4 billion, without the approval of Parliament. That is one of my reasons for saying this bill should have been split.

One can also ask, is this taxation by inflation? Is this taxation primarily aimed at unrest in the Middle East? What is its purpose? Is this taxation to grease the Liberal gravy train? Is this taxation aimed against the west, or is it designed to get votes? Some think it is. Also, who is to get the money? What share will go to producing provinces and what share will go to those provinces now suffering because of the increase in the price of crude petroleum imported from Venezuela and the Middle East?

Early today I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) if any Arabian country had offered us 360,000 barrels per day, spread over one year, at prices cheaper than those we are paying for Venezuelan oil. I could not hear the minister's answer, so I assumed he must have some knowledge of this. When I raised this matter a second time, he said he would make inquiries as to whether such an offer had been made. I am sure the minister knows the details. You cannot get any information from ministers of this government which they feel may hurt them in this House or in the eyes of the Canadian people.

One could boil down this bill to one thought. It introduces a budget by order in council, without parliamentary approval. That sums it up pretty well. I have asked how much money will be raised by way of order in council, and I have not heard the answers. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) says one thing, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources says another and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) says still another. Each statement contradicts the other. I shall put these questions to the minister in committee, when we are dealing with the export tax.

In this connection may I read some comments to be found at page 12 of Issue No. 44 of Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous estimates. I said, as recorded:

I shall try to be brief in my questions and I trust, Mr. Minister, as I only have five minutes that you will be as brief.

I then said,

First, could you advise the Committee, if there is any decision on when the export tax of $1.90 a barrel of crude petroleum would be repealed or rescinded?

That was to give us a little idea of what might happen when the government is given carte blanche authority to tax the public as under Clause 3 on page 3 of the bill.

The minister replied as follows:

● (2040)

The amount of the tax will depend on the judgment of the National Energy Board, from month to month, as to the price or value of Canadian oil when sold into the Chicago market. For example, its finding in early December for the month of January 1974 might be that Canadian oil has either dropped or increased in price. Therefore it might vary either above or below that level.

Basically, we shall be putting before Parliament a measure to deal with the differential between the Canadian and the Chicago price.

The point which my leader and the former leader of the New Democratic Party made this afternoon is that under the other surtax there was at least a frozen price of approximately $3.83 a barrel which most people accept as $4 a barrel. There is a differential between that and the Chicago and Montreal market.

I will refer to what the Prime Minister said when interviewed by Bruce Pillips of the Southam Press. Once the freeze is lifted, then what formula and criteria do we really arrive at? That has not been answered. I hope it will be answered when we get to the committee stage. What is the Canadian price after the freeze comes off? Is there such a price? Of course, there is not. Is it the world price? Who knows? That is the mystery. The minister went on to say:

I think it is fair to say that there will be a substantial reduction in this differential on February 1 when the Canadian price is allowed to rise to international levels at Toronto and Montreal.

Will that be the price of crude from Venezuela? Someone mentioned $14 a barrel or $11.75 from some Arab countries. What is the Canadian price? Without knowing that factor, there is no formula and no criteria. I then asked:

Mr. Chairman, do I take the answer from the Minister, on the criteria and the formula he has set out, that no decision has been made as to when the export tax will be either rescinded or repealed?

The minister replied:

No decision has been made in this regard, whether it be in the form of an export tax or some other control mechanism.

If that is the control mechanism, it is some mechanism because it is incomprehensible. To follow that up, I asked a question with regard to the division of the surtax, namely who would get it. That is found at page 13. I will not read all the answer because it is half a page in length. When I asked the same question in the House of Commons, the minister finally reduced the answer to one line. Dealing with the export tax as it has existed until now, he said that 50 per cent will go back to the producing province and the other 50 per cent will be used by the federal government for exploration, technical development or what have you.

The hon. member for York Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) then picked up the ball because my 10 minutes had run out. So there will be no mistake about what was said with regard to sharing with the provinces, this is what is found at page 30 of volume 44, and I quote:

Mr. Chairman, I was wondering if the Minister could clarify a statement that he made earlier with respect to the $1.90 per barrel tax. Did I understand him correctly to say that either directly or indirectly the entire tax will go back either to the province or be used within the province where it originated?

The minister replied very clearly:

Yes, sir.

I now wish to refer to what was said by the Prime Minister when interviewed by Bruce Phillips. I want to be fair to the Prime Minister. I suppose there are two thoughts that are not clear. It is not clear whether he is talking about this charge the government is trying to implement by this bill or about the tax during the last four months. The Prime Minister said the producing provinces will get 50 per cent, but the other 50 cent may be used to assist those provinces which are now forced to pay so much for imported crude petroleum. There are two contradictory statements. Surely, the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources should have been able to clarify that. I hope it is clarified if and when this bill gets to a committee. That is the very basis of my reason for saying we cannot really trust the government.

On November 28, 1973, as recorded at page 8223 of Hansard, I asked the following question:

> Will the minister make it very clear at this stage what mechanism or alternative measures will be suggested to replace the export tax when the price freeze goes off so that the consumers of Canada will be protected against the high cost of fuel and gasoline?

The minister replied:

> Mr. Speaker, we will be bringing forward a draft bill to the House for first reading to deal with the export tax and the continuing system in this situation. With regard to the question of the economic rent to be yielded by an increase in the western part of the Canadian market, we have had discussions with several provincial governments on this question. This may indeed relate to the kind of royalty programs they are planning on instituting in the near future.

To date there has not been any consultation. The big question to be asked is, what is the criteria when the freeze comes off. That question has not and cannot be answered because I do not think the government knows the answer. The minister appeared before the committee. He said he had a special technical committee advising him. Under the other bill that is now before the committee, the minister is asking that a new board be set up.

I want to read from Issue No. 26 of December 20, 1973. Mr. Armstrong, the president of Imperial Oil, was appearing before the committee. This will give some insight into what the committee advising the government had in mind. After several questions, I asked Mr. Armstrong this:

> Now, may I put this to you? Since you say on page 2, having dealt with the question of emergency and with the pipeline and got your position, that
> > Imperial is prepared to volunteer experienced personnel to achieve such a state of readiness under the administration of the proposed Emergency Supplies Allocation Board.
> and you have said in paragraph one that your company firmly supports the intent of the bill—and I expressed my opinion in that regard, I agree with the intent—has there been any discussion on record or off record to date with the Minister, or with any officials of the department, on your supplying personnel at this time to the government?

Mr. Armstrong replied:

> We have supplied personnel in the form of a member on various and sundry committees or subcommittees under Energy, Mines and Resources.

In other words, one of the members of the advisory board which has been advising the minister is an executive of Imperial Oil. Then, the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) asked the following question:

> We must determine whether or not there is a crisis at hand. You agree that there is not one now—

By the way, Mr. Armstrong said there was no crisis, there was no emergency.

> —but there may be one. The bill says something about an expected crisis. I just forget the exact terminology, but in any case, it is a crisis or a—
> AN HON. MEMBER: A potential crisis.
> MR. HORNER (CROWFOOT): Yes. There is not a crisis now, but there may be a potential crisis, but not as far as your company is concerned. Have you one person from your company on this Technical Advisory Committee on Petroleum Supply and Demand that we hear so much about these days?
> MR. ARMSTRONG: Yes, we do.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

> MR. HORNER (CROWFOOT): What advice is he giving? Is he giving the same advice you are today to this Committee, that your company will not—
> MR. ARMSTRONG: He had better be.

● (2050)

I have dealt with Imperial Oil in a small way for years, and probably most of us have an Esso card. We are asked tonight to approve a bill that might set a surtax anywhere from $6.50 to $10 a barrel without any floor price or any criteria having been given to us. Where will the government get its information on which to base a decision as to what to charge? Is the technical adviser to Imperial Oil, who sits on a committee, going to advise the minister? The president said "He had better listen to me or he won't be working for the government". Is this government in the pocket book of Imperial Oil? That is the question. Certainly, one wonders. That matter was raised in the committee and I should like to have it answered.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Oh, come on, Eldon.

Mr. Woolliams: Talking about costs, the bill refers to the Canadian price in clause 11. That clause provides:

> There shall be imposed, levied and collected on each barrel of crude oil exported from Canada—

Then, follows certain provisions imposing the tax to be applied to Canadian exports of oil. The only evidence that we have as to what the tax might be is in the statement made in the House by the Prime Minister on December 6 last. This is what he said, according to page 5 of the notes for remarks made by the Prime Minister in the House of Commons debate on petroleum policy on that date:

> A characteristic common to all frontier oil, and oil from unconventional sources such as the tar sands, is that it is much more expensive to develop and to bring into production than wells in the southern parts of Canada. This simple, undisputed fact is often ignored because it contains an unpleasant truth. It means that the days of abundant, cheap energy for Canadians must come to an end. It means that the cost of producing domestic oil must go up before too long. It means that Canadians must be prepared sooner or later, in some way or another to pay for these additional costs or go without oil. Any attempt to hide these facts and to formulate future policies without taking them into account can only lead in the longer run to even greater shortages and hence to even higher prices than Canadians are now experiencing in eastern provinces. In short we must in the long run allow the price of domestically produced crude oil to rise forward a level high enough to ensure the development of the Alberta oil sands and other Canadian resources but not one bit higher.

Is that to be the Canadian price, or what will it be? The Syncrude economists engaged on the tar sand project estimate that the cost of production will likely be $10 a barrel. Is this the price that the Prime Minister talks about, or will it go as high as $14 a barrel, as it has in Venezuela? What charge is going to be added to the Canadian price so that this formula that will be applied by order in council will mean anything at all?

I should like also to refer to what the Prime Minister said on December 21 and December 30 when he was questioned by Bruce Phillips and Carol Taylor in regard to what action we might expect from the government. We ask the government questions every day and each day get a different answer. I am referring to page 8 of the transcript, where the Prime Minister said this:

I think here it's a question of perhaps not communicating the facts well. On the freeze we said quite frankly we'd changed our mind.

Both the leader of this party and the spokesman for the New Democratic Party have pointed out that when the freeze comes off we will want to know the Canadian price. The Prime Minister continued:

When we announced the freeze on the 4th of September it was till the end of January. That was before the Middle East war, before the Arab nations had decided to cut back drastically on their supplies. We were then fighting inflation and we said a freeze till the end of January will give us time to adjust. A month later, less than that, the Middle East war breaks out, energy becomes in short supply. It's no longer a question of fighting inflation. It's a question of making sure we have enough. So I say quite frankly, quite candidly on television, after a lot of agonizing thinking the government has come to the conclusion that we should extend the freeze. You can call it a contradiction. I prefer saying that the government has extended its policy. It felt that its first decision, made before the Middle East war, about which nobody could have any sure prediction, was a wrong prediction—

The question is, how long will the freeze stay on? The Prime Minister was then asked about supply, because he had said that this mechanism was really to guarantee supply. After being interrogated as to why his government had done nothing since 1967 to build the pipeline, he said this, as reported at the top of page 9 of the transcript of the interview:

I think the simplest and to me a telling answer to that, Bruce, is that on the 4th of September when I announced that we would extend the pipe line, Quebec said—never. We don't want to have to buy your bloody well western oil. You won't put a pipe line in here, or if you put a pipe line, we'll make sure that we send the oil in the other direction because we're getting cheap oil from the Middle East and we'll never accept this pipe line. So a stitch in time, for them even the 4th of September was not time.

In other words, the reason he did nothing about the problem, which has now become a crisis not only in Quebec but in the Maritimes, is that the government of Quebec had said "We don't want your bloody oil". I do not know whether to believe that or not, but that is what the Prime Minister said on television. Then, he went on to say this, and this is why I mention the point about consultation. Bruce Phillips said:

There are occasions when what provincial governments have to say to you about the energy question is not a point of view that you would necessarily accept.

I will not read all of the Prime Minister's reply, but he went on to say that we were going to build this such and such pipeline anyhow, whether Quebec wanted it or not. This is the kind of consultation the government has recommended this afternoon. It is the kind of consultation that the premier of Alberta, Mr. Lougheed, experienced, and it is the kind of consultation that the province of Quebec gets from the Prime Minister and his government. I cannot accept for a moment that we are going to get consultation and common sense from the government, either through the Minister of Finance or through the Prime Minister.

Let me examine for a moment the history of this surtax since it was applied. The Alberta minister of resources visited Ottawa to discuss the problem of petroleum shortages. He had not reached home by plane before the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources double-crossed him and applied the first surtax. And the government talks about consultation! The government's consultation is like the old system that we used to read about but which I have never had tried out on me, though I have heard about it. It is like the mother and father who told son and daughter, when they were sick, to open their mouths and take cod liver oil whether they liked it or not. This is what I call the cod liver oil consultation method of the Liberal party, and it is the kind of consultation that the provinces are going to get.

I cannot believe for a moment that Mr. Lougheed—and I shall have something to say in a moment about Mr. Blakeney—is going to come to this energy conference with the kind of goodwill that I am sure everyone would like to hope would prevail, since he has gone through this recent experience with consultation. The Prime Minister asked: "Well, when I was out in western Canada, in Calgary, why didn't the provinces then raise the question of a national oil policy?" Surely, the Prime Minister does not expect the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba to sit down with him and plan a national oil policy for all of Canada. Yet this is the reply we are given. It is the sort of answer we receive when we ask whether there has been consultation and why the government does not have a policy. To summarize part of what I have said, I say that to give this government the power it wants to tax by order in council is to ask the Canadian people to accept in good grace what I would say is the greatest tax fraud ever perpetrated, not only on the Canadian people as the taxpayers but on the consumer using this energy in great quantities, whether at the individual consumer level or at the industrial level.

I started by saying I thought every member of parliament, whether he comes from western Canada, central Canada or the Maritimes, if he realizes his responsibility in coming to parliament, must speak in reference to the national interest. I was most interested to read today an article written by the Premier of Saskatchewan. I hope the government studies this article well before the meeting, because he has said some very important things.

An hon. Member: Table it.

Mr. Woolliams: Somebody says I should table it. That is all this government would do. It tables everything but nothing happens. It is full of words and documentation, but there is no action.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Everything is right on the table; everything is in the open.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, everything is on the table all right, but nothing ever gets past the drafting board. Let me quote from what Mr. Blakeney said:

Some parts of Canada face a shortage of gasoline, heating fuel and other petroleum products this winter, and perhaps for several winters, and no one should pretend that this is not going to lead to hardships for some Canadians if nothing is done to protect them from a situation they did not cause.

That situation may or may not be serious, we don't know yet. But it can be met by well-considered joint action by the provincial and federal governments without resort to panic measures.

I think those are pretty reasonable words from the Premier of the province of Saskatchewan. He went on to state in this article:

We will face a much more serious problem in Canada if our major trading partners, particularly the United States, run into deep recession. Canada may be able to take some evasive action, but we could not escape the serious effects of such international events largely beyond our control.

There are parts of this nation where poverty has been an involuntary way of life. There are regions where many of the people, for generations, have struggled against adversity and have had few of the comforts and luxuries of our most prosperous regions.

I might say that this is true of the province of Saskatchewan in which I was born, and was also true of the province of Alberta in 1935 before a certain development took place. It was one of the provinces which did not default on interest payments on its bonds during the depression. That is the point Mr. Blakeney is making. He goes on to state:

Some people may not be able to afford to buy as much gasoline as they need for their cars. But they have cars.

Some people may lose their jobs, perhaps for many months, and this will be very hard on them and their families. But those jobs will return.

This crisis of inequality is the real national crisis we have to cope with. We are talking about large numbers of Canadians, quiet Canadians, who do not make headlines very often. Canadians who have been around for a long time.

He goes on to say that the real crisis is a crisis in respect of regional disparity at various points across this country, and he ends his article with a reference to the surtax provided by this bill:

Only oil, oil belonging to the people of Saskatchewan, should be sold on a different basis. It should be sold at a price, we are told, related to cost.

Now Saskatchewan doesn't object to the principle of selling essential commodities on a cost-plus basis. But why stop at oil? Indeed, why start with oil?

What about freight rates?

Western Canada was promised at the last conference that something would be done about freight rates, but all we have received has been information. Mr. Blakeney then asks:

What about freight rates? Lumber? Building supplies? Chemicals and fertilizer? Farm machinery? Automobiles?

Certainly, there is an inflationary price situation in respect of petroleum products which is working a hardship on those areas to which Mr. Blakeney and Mr. Lougheed have referred, but we must realize that in the city of Toronto the value of a house today will be increased by $6,500 within a few months. We must remember that the price of lumber has gone up under this government by 200 per cent and that we have practically the highest interest rates we have had since confederation. We all realize there is real concern in the country.

Let me say to the government before I sit down that it had many years to make certain that energy could be transported to the various parts of Canada where it is needed at reasonable prices and with equity. The real problem today, whether we are dealing with oil, wheat or potash, relates to transportation. We cannot get the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) to take action in respect of the railroads. This government has done nothing but vacillate and procrastinate as far as these problems are concerned. Our real crisis now is a crisis of government resulting from the fact that this government is doing nothing and, as far as I can see, will do nothing.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Béchard: And you call that democracy.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to make a few comments on this bill which I find most important like everybody else. I have spoken on Bill C-236 which is related to the present crisis and to the problem now facing us.

In our view, the government is introducing a measure that will give it rather extraordinary powers in matters of taxation on a natural resource, which is questionable all the same, from the point of view of provincial jurisdiction. The latter feel, of course, this is an encroachment upon their rights. It is for this reason perhaps that I would like to say a few words on this bill, considering the respect we owe to the provinces.

We must also recognize that quite legitimate wish of each province to try and protect its natural resources. What concerns me as well as many others is to see that this bill that we are asked to pass in this House seems to be premeditated if one considers that we know full well that a federal-provincial conference of first ministers will soon be held. I have had the opportunity of referring to it two weeks ago. The bill now before us today prompts me also to urge that it be passed only after the conference.

We will be told, Mr. Speaker, that this piece of legislation is urgent, that we must act very fast in order to grant the government some powers that are said to be absolutely necessary.

We are also taking advantage of a temporary crisis and I suggest that this piece of legislation would give the government some extraordinary powers.

For the time being we know nothing about the wishes or desires of each province. One can be sure that the provinces are preparing right now briefs to be presented to the conference that will take place in a few weeks. We will know then where the provinces stand. It would be detrimental, it would be a mistake should this Parliament pass this bill quickly without knowing exactly where the provinces stand, their wishes and their desires.

We read in newspapers and we heard the comments of the provincial premiers or of the ministers of national resources of some provinces.

Now, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) gave us an excellent account this afternoon. He introduced his bill very clearly, as the leader of the opposition pointed out. The first part of this bill is very clear as far as the repayment of the collected tax is concerned, but in the second part, one notices an obvious lack of information as to what the government is going to do once the said tax is collected.

We surely expect the producing provinces to be rewarded, we expect the profits of this tax to be distributed to them, but we do not know exactly where the other provinces stand. We are perfectly aware of certain projects on the part of the province of Quebec, as regards the petrochemical industry. Certain agreements were to be concluded apparently with some countries. They are directly concerned with the bill before us today.

We are not entirely sure about the position of the province of Quebec nor that of several other provinces at the present time. A few weeks ago, we heard the minister responsible for energy speaking of a two-price policy. I was glad to hear last week, Mr. Speaker, that because of recent increases, he was considering a subsidy formula that would be agreeable to all provinces. However neither the formula nor the reaction of the provinces are yet known.

I was also pleased to listen to the hon. member for Lapointe saying on television last week that the government should lose no time in subsidizing Quebec and the Maritime provinces, in order to implement this one-price policy across the country.

I take this opportunity to ask all hon. members from the province of Quebec to follow the example of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Marceau). I had a chance to ascertain the position of Quebecers on this legislation. We have gone through several days of discussion on bill C-236 and the one now before us, and we regret the silence of the majority of Quebecers on this legislation. I must say that recently the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Stanfield) made strong criticisms, that members from Quebec were betraying their own province on this legislation. I know that may irritate some hon. members, Mr. Speaker, but I think it is our duty to urge our members to fall in with the wishes of Quebecers.

For example, I see members representing the province of Alberta who do not hesitate to comply with the wishes of the people of Alberta and try and vindicate the interests of a resource that now exists in Alberta, and I congratulate them for doing that job, Mr. Speaker. And I am glad to see that now it is not the province of Quebec that is quarreling with a lack of consultation with the federal government, but Alberta. We had reasons to criticize the federal government or ask for certain powers. Alberta now feels the need to do the same. Members representing that province are doing it beautifully, and I congratulate them on their job. I think that on the current problems, especially the increases that hurt and scare them, as is probably the case with Maritimers, Quebec members have the responsibility of asking this government to understand the importance of knowing the position of the provinces.

That does not mean that the bill introduced by the minister is unacceptable. I think that the first part of the bill undoubtedly meets reality. On the other hand, we would want to know all the implications of that policy and above all know the response of the provinces to the powers that the federal government is trying to vest in itself through this legislation. I therefore, suggest that it is logical for me to appeal to my colleagues from Quebec, as members from Alberta seem to do in performing their first duties in this house. As far as I am concerned, I repeat this appeal to Quebec members. I must say once more, Mr. Speaker, considering the high percentage that they represent within their own party—over 50 per cent—that we must expect a very serious representation on the part of Quebec members, and in view of their substantial number, they should be in a position to make responsible ministers as well as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) aware of the wishes and needs of their own province. I dare believe that this appeal will be answered, as the hon. member for Lapointe did it so well last week on television. I was pleased to see that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) had suggested that he would think about the possibility of developing a grant formula for Quebecers.

As to the bill now before us, surely the province of Quebec, as all other provinces, has its word to say, and I think that at the time when this bill is being introduced, it would be wiser to wait for the federal-provincial conference to take place, and thanks to the briefs that will be put forward and to the fact that the provinces will surely make their positions known, I believe that the federal government would then be in a better position to satisfy the wishes of the provinces.

I owed it to myself to make these few comments in order to urge hon. members and the minister or ministers who are responsible for the overall energy policy to try and understand that it is important for the provinces to explain and state their needs perfectly well and to determine to what extent it will be possible, once this bill is passed, to give a favorable answer to the provinces.

I feel it is unthinkable to pass energy legislation before the federal-provincial conference. Responsible ministers or premiers should be asked what they want exactly in the context of oil problems. I think it is nonsense to ask for their opinion after the legislation has been passed. That is why I think it is tremendously important that this bill before us as well as the other bill we will be discussing in coming days should not be passed before the positions of the provinces are clearly known. This way I think we will have met prior consultation with the provinces. That is the way to render acceptable that federalism about which we are told and attempts are being made to convince us of its viability. It will be to the extent in which that consultation with the provinces will have taken place.

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude on those few words by calling upon and urging ministers and hon. members to insist that the federal-provincial conference be held before those pieces of legislation are passed. I hope that knowing better the positions, the claims and briefs of the provinces we will be able to answer them in a positive way. I think we will have also met the wishes of our constituents who have the right to think and demand that we take position on legislation as important as this.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. Is the hon. member for Laval rising to ask a question?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I heard the pious wishes of the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) and I understand why he rose in this House. But the government members have established structures to sensitize ministers through—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. If the hon. member wishes to make a comment or to take part in the debate, he may do so in due time. If he wishes to put a question, he must ask the consent of the hon. member for Joliette.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, is the caucus of the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) setting up a policy on the energy crisis?

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I will point out to the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy) that in the caucus of the hon. member for Joliette, as he so justly said, the freedom to speak according to the interests of our constituents and all other Quebeckers exist. The policy would be based on the interests of my province, Mr. Speaker, and this is why I ask my hon. friends from Quebec to answer in the same way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Labelle.

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of my intervention in this debate is not to reply to an invitation of members of the official opposition or of other parties. The present crisis is real regardless of what some Progressive Conservative members thought in early December. Of course the crisis interests all hon. members from Quebec, notwithstanding the views of some hon. members who pretend that this matter can be solved in terms of decibels. I think that the already obvious confrontation between Canadians in some parts of the country could increase and become much more serious if, instead of making much political noise with the political problem which we are now facing, we kept a cool head and looked at the situation as it really is.

I believe that the right hon. Prime Minister gave us an excellent example of this on December 6, 1973, when he announced in the House, for the benefit of everyone, the action that the government was planning to take to reduce the difficulties that this crisis could bring to Canadians. Among other things, he wanted to assure Canadians that there would be no serious shortage like the one in Great Britain, Japan, West Germany and other countries, and to announce to the country the action that he and his government were planning to take to prevent Canada from being ransomed as most of the countries by nations which are trying to use this weapon which oil is now for political purposes.

Bill C-245 is precisely designed to permit the government to impose an export surtax of up to $4 per barrel. This bill would also permit controlling our oil exports. In his excellent speech, the minister stated this afternoon that already those $4 might be considered inadequate and that through an amendment they might be increased to $10. This bill also insures the sharing of the benefits drawn from this export surtax. A 50 per cent share for the producing provinces and a 50 per cent share for the federal government are put forward in the bill.

Without anticipating on the government's decision, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the adoption of measures to alleviate the difficulties of the Easterners is foreseen when one considers that 50 per cent share which will not be returned to the oil producing provinces.

In the speech he made last December 6, the Prime Minister stated that in the East, Canadians will probably have to pay a little more for their oil and that this was already a recognized fact. However, he indicated that limits will be set to this difference and that these limits will not be allowed to exceed a certain figure.

Surely we can expect that following the federal-provincial conference which will be held on January 22, and 23, next, measures will be taken to see to it that Easterners are not penalized when purchasing oil and mainly home heating oil.

However, this temporary crisis seems to be the weapon that certain politicians were waiting for to overthrow the Liberal government of Mr. Trudeau. A campaign is now underway in Quebec and we have a Mr. Massé—not Mickey, but Marcel—who says to anyone who will listen that the Liberal members from Quebec have simply abandoned their responsibilities and betrayed the people by ignoring the difficulties.

Mr. Stanfield: It is true.

Mr. Dupras: He is an ignorant who does not know what is going on in the Liberal caucus, for if he knew he would understand exactly the pressures and interventions made by members from Quebec. If one could realize and measure the contribution of the Quebec members to some legislations, one would be amazed. I see a number of Progressive Conservative members complaining about "French Power", and there are some people who tour the province of Quebec saying that we are selling out the province. May someone make up his mind: Either it is sold out or not taken care of.

During their unproductive discussions and debates, Mr. Speaker, on consideration of Bill C-236, we repeatedly asked the Leader of the Opposition: What is your policy on this problem?

An hon. Member: He does not have any.

Mr. Dupras: They do not have any!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dupras: The propagandists who tour the province of Quebec in an effort to destroy the confidence vested in Parliament by the Canadians from that province keep saying that we are doing nothing, that we do not care about the problems of the Quebecers. On the other hand, I wonder who is sincere. The Progressive Conservatives should establish some communication between the various branches and the various parts of their party, to make sure they all tell the same story. They have a group saying that the members from the province of Quebec have betrayed their constituents, and another saying that there is a "French power" in the House of Commons. They should make up their minds once and for all.

Mr. Speaker, if there is trouble between Canadians from various Canadian regions, it is because these regions are very much concerned and unable to make up their minds about supporting the steps the government has decided to take to prevent situations which are common in other countries from happening here. In fact, this legislation is not as complicated as all that.

Some hon. Members: Ah! ah!

Mr. Dupras: You are laughing because you do not understand it.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) tried this afternoon—and I feel he succeeded quite well—to explain to a large number of hon. members the mechanism whereby Canadians will have the necessary means to develop their own non-renewable resources, including oil and all energy resources. And this tax, which is limited to $4, could be increased, should Middle East and Venezuelian producers continue to raise their prices, in order to make sure that the necessary funds will be available for the development of new techniques, the construction of the pipeline which is essential to supply eastern Canada, and that Canadian firms prospecting for oil will operate at a profit.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted everything I said to be taken seriously. I know the situation to be fairly serious and I wonder if the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) considers it to be a good joke on certain areas of our country.

[English]

Mr. Baker: We think you are funny.

Mr. Dupras: I have not heard your comments on the subject. I am anxious to know what you think about it. Perhaps you do not have the same opinion as have the westerners in your party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (2130)

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I would ask the hon. member to address himself to the Chair. In that way, the debate will be—

[English]

Mr. Dupras: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. Through you I would like to remind the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) that if the western members of that party can agree with him, perhaps if they had a serious caucus meeting on the matter and got everyone to agree on the subject, he would be able to rise here—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Let us see what policy you have, Wally.

Mr. Dupras: —and we would learn what policy his party has.

An hon. Member: They do not have a policy.

[Translation]

Mr. Dupras: Mr. Speaker, each time such a crisis arises, some politicians take the opportunity to divide the country or say that someone wants to divide it. It is quite the contrary. In 1961, the country was divided when the Ottawa Valley line was established. We have abolished it. And if in 1961 we had not taken such a decision, we would probably not be faced with the difficulties we now have.

Oil Export Tax

Mr. Speaker, I find it quite odd that we are being accused of dividing the country when we are doing just the opposite. We are putting all Canadians on an equal footing, that is, we are going to help them all to get a sufficient supply of oil so that houses may be heated at a reasonable price.

Mr. Gauthier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the hon. member for Labelle meant the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and not the hon. member for Ottawa East because that riding is not known as Ottawa East any more.

[English]

Mr. Baker: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to join with my hon. friend from Ottawa-Vanier in those remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. This is hardly a point of order but a correction.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, the proportion of difficulty which the Atlantic area will suffer through the differential in price for petroleum products has certainly escaped the powers of influence exercised on the government of Canada today. In spite of all the presentations which have been made by the premiers of the Atlantic area, and in spite of all the presentations that have been made by members to your left in this House, Mr. Speaker, presentations on behalf of the Atlantic area, there is still nothing of any concrete nature which would suggest that there is relief in the offing for a new form of disparity which will exist in that area.

Actually, in contrast, we have had statements from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) which would indicate it is his feeling that the provinces themselves should pick up the tab for the difference in price, and relieve the industries, the homeowners, the individual truck owners, etc., of the extra burden which they must now expect. He indicates that the provinces themselves should do this. On one occasion he mentioned that the grants to the provinces had been increased and, therefore, they were quite capable of looking after any disparity which may exist.

This is totally unacceptable to the Atlantic area, and regardless of what those members from the Atlantic area who sit on your right, Mr. Speaker, have said to their caucus, it is still not acceptable. Regardless of what the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras) may have suggested, it is very obvious that there is very little significant influence or input, very little change in policy to be arranged by the presentation of the eastern Canadian problem as it presently exists in connection with the petroleum situation in which we find ourselves.

The unfortunate part of it is that all of the grants which have been made to the provincial governments have been made for equalization and other purposes. They may have been increased for the purposes of education, for the purposes of welfare, for the purposes of DREE, or for any other purpose you may wish to mention. But as the grants were increased for one purpose or another this was only done in recognition of a problem which then existed.

I think the Prime Minister showed his total misunderstanding of the concept of grants from the federal treasury to the provinces when he suggested that the provinces should pick up the tab themselves, and that it was not the responsibility of the federal government. I say to hon. members opposite that they had better go back and review the synoptic report, or Hansard of this House, because the Prime Minister did say that the provinces should pick this up, and they were quite capable of doing so. Read his reply in response to the question posed by the hon. member for St. John's. Read it before some of the members of the Quebec government caucus allow the government to ride roughshod over eastern Canada, including Quebec. I say read it before you make your partisan, divisive speeches, like that of the last speaker, who accused everybody of division except himself, but who in his remarks showed he is sort of fuzzy in his comprehension of the whole problem, and used this occasion to attack others in a personal way. He did not show any real knowledge of the problem that his province faces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCain: We are not just making idle, idiotic remarks like some hon. members. We are not resorting purely to charge and countercharge across the House. Instead, we are pleading that the government change its course, and recognize the needs as they presently exist. The provinces of eastern Canada, including the province of Quebec, do not have the economic capacity to take up the difference in the cost of the operation of industry, of families, of automobiles, indeed of any facet of our lives.

How serious could this be, Mr. Speaker? It could be so serious that it would negate the effect of all the good intentions of the policies of governments, present and past, which recognized that Atlantic Canada, including part of Quebec, had to have certain special conditions if it were to share in the standard of life which was the objective of the government of the day. Now this is a new burden, a new inequity, which is hurting the economy of eastern Canada, including Quebec. We are being asked at this moment in time to say that this bill will cure the problem. The government has been saying, "Give us all the legislation we want with respect to energy, and we will cure the problem."

I would like the government to answer some questions. I would like it to tell us what the effect would be on the economy of the Atlantic area, what would be the effect on the pulp and paper industry, what would be the effect on the food industry, what would be the effect on all the industries of the Atlantic area which, for various reasons, may have been directed to the use of oil during the past 25 years because it was the cheapest possible source of energy and heating? Now, the increase in the price has reached such a degree that some companies, which have high energy requirements for the production of their goods and services, will find that the cost of fuel in certain instances exceeds the margin of profit which they enjoyed during the last five years.

As of December 15, the cost of home heating oil in the Atlantic area had already risen 60 per cent over a year ago. The cost of gasoline from the refinery, has virtually doubled and, depending on the tax structure, the motorist and the trucker in the Atlantic area have experienced a 30 per cent to 40 per cent increase in its cost. There is no longer any guaranteed source of supply in the Atlantic area. Consumers are discovering that their suppliers are saying they can supply them for the month of January, but then there is uncertainty, even though the National Energy Board has indicated that it can supply Maine with a little oil for its pulp and paper mills. But suppliers cannot see beyond January. As I say, supply in the Atlantic area is uncertain. The only thing certain is that the cost will keep going up.

The increases in costs which I have mentioned came into force before the last change in price. What a pleasant New Year's message it was to learn that Venezuela is going to increase the price of its oil by $4.80, or 80 per cent a barrel. The full impact of this increase is yet to come. What a nightmare for the Atlantic area to learn that the Middle East countries may raise their price as high as $17 per barrel. This means, of course, that Venezuela will follow. What does this do to the price of oil for the farmers, to diesel oil or gasoline? I do not think that we have to tell you that since fuel oil has already gone up by 30 per cent to 40 per cent or, rather, 60 per cent, the rise has just begun. There is no indication in anything said in this House today that any legislation, or regulations which may emanate from legislation will do anything whatsoever to relieve that price rise in Atlantic Canada when the full impact of the increases in the price of crude oil are felt.

The government shows a serious lack of understanding of the principles of confederation. Perhaps because I spent a number of years in a provincial legislature, I am aware of the diminishing responsibility of provincial governments as intrusions by the federal government follow one upon the other. If one has learned anything by observing this government in action for one year as of tomorrow, and perhaps by the day, one year today, it would be that its philosophy is that it cannot put up with the negotiation that is required in a democratic system; that it must establish for itself an autocracy and dictatorial authority; that it must put its power in the hands of boards which are not responsible to anybody. This is what it has done in this energy situation and is what it did in the foreign investment control structure. These things, sir, are not in tune with the creation of a united and harmonious Canada.

I am particularly concerned that this House has been asked to pass either of these bills relating to energy prior to the time that the provincial premiers meet with the government of Canada. This is a philosophical blunder; a complete lack of recognition of the authority, the pride and the responsibility that provincial governments should have, do have and would have if any other party in this House were the government. No other party in Canada has anything like the authoritarian complex and the dictatorial desires which are illustrated by the legislation we are being asked to pass today. This is a tragic situation, Mr.

Speaker. It is this kind of system which brings disharmony. No matter what the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras) might say, this is the kind of thing that irritates Canadians from coast to coast, to say nothing of the divisive statement, the personal attack ar d the regional attack which that hon. member so unjustly and improperly mentioned in this House.

The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) said that this government was going to administer a dose of castor oil to the provinces, whether they liked it or not, by the virtue of the authority which would be vested in them by this legislation. I might say that the castor oil they are going to give would not taste much worse or be more offensive than the lack of recognition which has been given to the Atlantic area up to this time.

The Atlantic area wants to know what this government is going to do to alleviate that cost increase. We want an answer to that question and we are entitled to an answer. What is the government going to do to assure the Atlantic area in particular of a supply of fuel oil? It has already stated that there is no visible physical capacity in Canada to transport oil from our present national supply to the Atlantic area or to the province of Quebec. What then are we going to do about price?

I am concerned about the remarks made by the minister today. But first, I wish to associate myself with my leader. I agree totally with what he said; I agree on the lack of clarity of policy and I agree on the lack of understanding of the Canadian problems. I feel very sorry for the people in the Atlantic area who get no understanding from this government, who get no sympathy from it; I feel very sorry for that part of Atlantic Canada which is represented by members on the government side of the House who have not had the courage to speak in defense of their own constituencies and their own communities.

I wonder what is going to happen, for instance, to the pulp and paper industry? Looking at the economic structure of that industry in the Atlantic area, it will be seen that the province of Newfoundland has found it necessary to take over a pulp mill. In many instances, in order to get further development, the provinces have had to find ways and means to support, subsidize or guarantee capital for the construction of new buildings and new production capacity. In these structures and in this production there is a massive consumption of petroleum products. If there is inflicted upon us a doubling, trebling or quadrupling of fuel costs, that industry which has been seriously hurt economically for the past ten years and is just getting on its feet, will receive a further serious setback. What does the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) or the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) have in mind for this area? What does the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) have in mind for the farming industry?

In the last ten years, during the administration of this government, the farming industry has faced a trebling of labour costs and a doubling of mechanical costs. Apparently between now and the spring it will face roughly a threefold increase in fuel costs. What solution is the Minister of Agriculture going to offer to eastern agriculture to this problem? The industry is already hard pressed by viture of the massive increases in every other field concerned in the cost of production. What is going to be the continued effect of the various cost increases in fuel on food costs as eastern agriculture undertakes production for a price conscious consumer population?

I noticed with interest the other day that the cost of an acre of potatoes has increased almost threefold in the last ten years. This quadrupling of the price of fuel which we can apparently look forward to will be passed on to the farming community. The Atlantic area to a large degree has become dependent upon highway transport. Are the difficulties of this industry to be recognized? Will additional assistance in the transportation field be offered so that the trucking industry can carry on? This is a very serious situation and trucking firms are looking at their profit and loss sheets. They are looking at the rate structures and are finding that, with existing increases, they are in serious trouble. I suppose it is proper to say that firms in New Brunswick are not going to be in competition with firms in Alberta; therefore, the trucking industry is isolated in New Brunswick and you do not need to give it any special consideration. But we must remember, Mr. Speaker, that the cost of transportation always has been and always will be an integral part of the prosperity or lack of prosperity of the Atlantic region, and this is going to be a major cause of increases in transportation costs, as a large percentage of our goods are moved by truck. Even though presidents of trucking companies have been in contact with the government, and even though stock holders of trucking companies have been in contact with the government, they cannot get answers.

There is one question to which some truck owners would like an answer. I direct this question to the Minister of Finance, or to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce or to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald). Are suppliers to be compelled to continue to supply the trucking industry, as they have been supplying them in the past year? Is the trucking industry to get any assurance that its fuel will be guaranteed and available, and is the government pressing suppliers to this end? I happen to know that one particular firm has received a virtual ultimatum from its supplier of quite some time. That ultimatum has been, "We don't know how long we can supply you, or if we will supply you at all". We have found that the price increases, as applying to some fuels, have been almost exorbitantly passed on to the trucking industry. This is particularly true in a case in which the trucking company may have sought a new supplier for reasons of price some time within the last 12 or 15 months. May we have assurances that this government will say today that as the trucking industry must be supplied with the necessary fuel, it will have priority. This assurance is particularly pertinent to the potato industry, which depends upon trucking for a large percentage of its deliveries to the Canadian market. If, perchance, we do not get that assurance, the lack of it may well impede the whole economy of the Saint John River Valley, which will suffer.

I heard a member from the other side of the House suggest that we, on this side, have no policy. If that were the case, I would have to say, after listening to the Minister of Finance introduce this bill today, that we are certainly in company with others who are no better off than we are. Let me say that the only policy introduced in this House is one giving the government the right to control and to tax, without first explaining to the people of Canada exactly what will be the consequences and the effects of those actions. We do not know what is the grass root attitude towards the policy. What will be the effect upon Canada if the policy is implemented? What will be the benefit to Canada of the law, as enacted? What will be the opportunity for the provinces to state their case and obtain their just rights? There is no way to tell what the effects of the policy will be. As I said before, I am deeply disappointed that virtually all we have received has been the philosophical point of view regarding what might be done, what should be done and what can be done, but we have not been told emphatically or concretely what will be done.

We have been told that tens of millions of dollars will be collected weekly. We have not been told of what benefit this will be to Canada. The only benefit that would seem to accrue to Canada is this: more money will be brought into Canada, which in itself is a benefit as I acknowledge. But what is the rest of the benefit? There has not been associated with this tax and with this legislation any suggestion that we are going to seek oil, that we are going to facilitate the distribution of oil, that we are to facilitate the exploration for oil or that we are to harness the resources of Canada and try to relieve the situation in one year, two years or even six years. Nothing concrete has been put before us. There has been no suggestion of substituting one form of energy for another, or of developing new opportunities for energy. There has merely been a concentration of power in the hands of government, under a dark cloak, purely for the edification of the government. The government wants to say, "Look at how we are trying?" It does this so that its public relations people can tell all in this land of the importance of the legislation which it has brought forth. But, when members of the government are asked to expound the benefits of this legislation directly, area by area in Canada, they become as confused as the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras). That hon. member showed that he has no concept of the general policy of his party, and he cannot put forward a policy for himself.

I was interested in listening to the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. LaSalle), who suggested that Quebec was being ill served by this legislation. He was another member from Quebec who said that the province is being ill served by the present policies of this government. His was a much more logical, proper and obvious approach for a Quebec member to take. I say to other members from Quebec that unless the government will implement some unknown factor which may be behind this legislation, Quebec will suffer with the Atlantic area. It will pay prices it cannot afford. Further, we are being led by a Prime Minister who comes from that province. He is selling the province down the river without considering the realities for eastern Canada. May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

MANPOWER—LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—ALLOCATION OF FUNDS,—GRANT CRITERIA—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr.Speaker, on November 9, as recorded at page 7697 of Hansard, I asked the following question of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras):

> Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In light of apparent inequities in the allocation of LIP funds to constituencies, would he be prepared to ask the House for a reference to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration of the matter of the allocation by constituency of funds for LIP projects and the criteria which have been employed in making those allocations, and would he agree to appear before the committee and provide that committee with a list of the allocations made?

The minister replied to the effect that he would be appearing before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates and would make that information known there. I then asked the minister the following question:

> Can the minister assure us if he makes an appearance before the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee during consideration of the supplementary estimates of his department, that the figures, constituency by constituency, of the amounts of money and the criteria will be made available to the members of the committee and that his officials will be there to defend their position?

The minister replied:

> Mr. Speaker, that would be my intention. I point out that the expenditures under last year's Local Initiatives Program were made available in response to a question on the order paper, and that is what I would intend.

Since that time I have been looking for last year's expenditures, which the minister indicated would be made available. They were not made available at that time, nor were they made available later. Further, having looked at this year's allocations, I have done my very best to make heads or tails of the rationale behind them. I find it very strange that the bulk of the large grants to constituencies were made to those of Liberal cabinet ministers. I cannot claim that the allocations were made solely on political grounds because the smallest per capita grant in Manitoba was made to the constituency of the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay), a Liberal member. However, when you look at Winnipeg, Vancouver, northern Ontario or Toronto, you see that the second largest grants are almost invariably allocated to constituencies of Liberal cabinet ministers.

According to Manpower officials, funds were initially allocated to a province as a whole. That allocation was made in relation to the over-all unemployment figures of the provinces. They were made, roughly speaking, to the province as a whole, in the same proportions as in 1972-73. Within the province, statistics on unemployment and population were used to calculate allocations on the basis of Canada Manpower areas. These allocation figures were in turn converted to a constituency base. They were then further modified to take in potential man hours of unemployment as proposed in the project submissions themselves. That is the official explanation of the officials of the Local Initiatives Program.

If the above explanation did indeed fully account for the methodology employed, then it is hardly likely that the constituency of Winnipeg South, that of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson), would reasonably qualify for its accorded allocation either in terms of local employment rate or size of population as a percentage of provincial population or both. It is the second largest allocation in the province of Manitoba. The largest allocation of local initiative grants was made to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). He represents the core area of Winnipeg where the largest population of the poor and under-privileged is located. That is just. However, the Minister of National Defence represents what is probably the richest constituency in the province.

I have attempted to convert the Canada Manpower Centre figures to the constituencies and that is impossible. I have attempted to convert the Department of Regional Economic Expansion designated and specified areas to constituencies and that is virtually impossible. As a matter of fact, I placed a question on the order paper and the Department of Regional Economic Expansion cannot supply the answer with respect to how many constituencies fall within designated or special areas. I attempted to relate the amounts allocated to the native population within a constituency and that proved to be impossible. I am not going to allege that patronage was involved in the allocation of the local initiative project funds. I really cannot do that when I consider that Winnipeg South, which is the richest constituency in the province, has received the second largest allocation of grants, second to Winnipeg North Centre, a constituency represented by one of my colleagues. The lowest per capita grant in the province went to St. Boniface—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, according to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras), as stated by him in the House and before the miscellaneous estimates committee, the first stage in the implementation of the objectives of the local initiatives program was to allocate funds to the provinces and territories in the same proportion as in 1972-73. The 1972-73 allocation was based on historical seasonal unemployment patterns. Especially in urban constituencies, statistics on unemployment by constituency are not maintained.

However, there are operational records measuring the number of persons without employment who are registered at Canada Manpower Centres. As an intermediate step, therefore, an allocation was made to CMC areas, based on the total number of people unemployed in each CMC area during the first quarter of 1973.

Adjournment Debate

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—CHARGES AGAINST MEMBERS WORKING AT MALTON AIRPORT—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, on November 6 last I asked certain questions of the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) in relation to problems that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police seemed to be having in connection with the taxi business at Toronto international airport. I have been in touch with the Minister of Transport about the matter on many occasions, but the matter has now become serious for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. This is the police force that represents some of the highest ideals of Canadians and which is becoming involved in disciplining taxi drivers at the airport, creating an impossible situation for a police department to handle.

The problem results from a judgment of His Honour Judge Shapiro of the county court of the county of Peel given last year, as a result of which the authority of the town of Mississauga to licence taxis doing business at Toronto international airport was removed. As a result of this, if you, Mr. Speaker, were to decide tonight to drive to Toronto international airport, you, too, could become a taxi driver without being asked to take out a licence and would be able to pick up a fare. All you would need to do to operate legally is to put 25 cents into what is called the "spitter"; this would satisfy the Minister of Transport and you could pick up passengers. In addition, you could surcharge any fare as you felt was desirable, and it would not be necessary for you to have a meter. Nor would it be necessary for you to carry insurance on your vehicle. Indeed, it would not even be necessary for you to demonstrate that your vehicle was roadworthy. As I say, all you would need to do is to pay 25 cents to the "spitter"; you would then get in the lineup like anybody else. Of course, when you have people who are legitimate taxi drivers and have spent a great deal of money buying a licence and a proper vehicle, and anybody and his brother is allowed to get into the lineup, then you have a problem. The problem has arisen because of no licensing, no regulation and no control. People are cruising and picking up passengers.

The RCMP, who are trying to police the airport, have had an impossible situation to deal with. They have had to arrest and charge people who are trying to earn a living. The whole situation has become so serious that one member of parliament I can mention, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), has spoken to me about the problem he had in getting a cab at the airport. He told me he wanted to get over to the Cara Inn but could not get a cab because the fare was only a dollar or so; therefore he had to walk and carry his bag to the Cara Inn.

The Minister of Transport has refused to attempt realistically to regulate the taxi industry at Toronto international airport. In spite of pressure from the industry and repeated complaints not only by myself but by other members of this House, the minister has in effect abandoned his responsibility to police and to organize public transportation at the largest airport in this country. I suggest there is a hands-off policy or an "I don't care" policy. The result is that Charterway Service, which runs the limousine service at the airport, will probably very soon, if it has not already, discontinue its entire limousine service at that airport.

The charges against the members of the RCMP to which I referred, and certainly there are not 90 as suggested by me in my question, have been laid by persons prosecuted. This has led to a situation in which the police are not even trying to enforce the inept regulations that do exist. It is high time the Minister of Transport took his responsibilities seriously and organized a system of licensing those persons allowed to use commercial vehicles to pick up passengers from this airport.

It is a disgrace that people who come to the city of Toronto to do business, or come as visitors, get taken to the cleaners by some hotshot people who pretend to be cab drivers operating rotten automobiles, without being licensed and without having reasonable metered fares. Surely, they should not have to accept this kind of service at an institution under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport. The minister has a responsibility to regulate the taxi service at this airport. He has no right to sit back and suggest that Toronto or the province should get organized. This airport belongs to the people of Canada and is under the control of the Minister of Transport, so this service should be regulated by him. It is not an excuse to put the RCMP in an impossible position, as has been done. There is a requirement on the minister to do something, and that is the reason I raised these questions on November 6 last.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member put this question to me in the House on November 6, I told him I would investigate the situation and report to him. I did so by reporting to him in a detailed letter on November 16. Much of what I said to him then I will have to repeat tonight as not much has changed.

In his question on November 6, the hon. member said some 90 charges of assault and similar offences had been made by private individuals against members of the RCMP in connection with their work at Malton airport. When I investigated and reported on the matter on November 16, I indicated that during the last three years only four charges of any kind were preferred against members of the RCMP at Malton airport; one in 1972, which was dismissed, and three in 1973, one of which was dismissed and the two others were withdrawn. Since November 16, five additional charges of common assault were preferred against members of the force. Two of those charges were withdrawn, and three remain to be heard by the courts. One will be heard in January and two will be heard in March.

I must say that there is a difficulty existing between taxi cab drivers and members of the RCMP resulting from the enforcement of airport vehicle control regulations under the Government Property Traffic Act, and the government airport concession operations regulations under the Department of Transport Act. Enforcement activities in the main involve illegal solicitation of fares and illegal parking by taxi drivers at the Toronto International Airport.

[Mr. Blenkarn.]

In addition there is a conflict between the taxi cab owners and drivers and Airline Terminal Transport, which operates the limousine service, as to prime pickup designations at arrival and departure gates 1 and 2.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—NORTHERN ONTARIO—DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF AGREEMENT FOR DEVELOPMENT—DEGREE OF CO-OPERATION BETWEEN GOVERNMENTS

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) announced last May that officials of his department were meeting with officials of the provincial government to work out a general development agreement for northern Ontario. That meeting began on June 10, 1973. The minister expected to announce the specific program of industrial development for northern Ontario. In September 1973, I asked the minister in the House whether he was prepared to announce a strategy of industrial development for northern Ontario. The minister replied that in a few weeks he would make such an announcement. On October 29, 1973 I asked the minister once again the following question:

> In view of the answer given by the minister in the House in September 1973, that an announcement would be made within a few weeks or a month with regard to development in northern Ontario, and since it is now, over a month, can the minister inform the House when he now intends to announce such a strategy?

This time the minister avoided answering the question by saying:

> It is the working out of a general development agreement that is taking considerable time.

We are well aware of how long it takes for the government not to plan anything. In the meantime, the minister gratuitously announced that the current designations of regions and areas for purposes of the regional development incentives program had been extended to June 3, 1974. In the meantime, the minister continues to dole out, in a most haphazard fashion, a grant here, a grant there, so-called 'incentive' grants, which, for the most part, do nothing at all to alter the existing inequities borne by the workers and the small business people of the underdeveloped regions in this country. There is no apparent urgency felt by the DREE minister, or indeed by the government. There is no apparent pressing commitment to a fundamental restructuring of DREE. At best, its incentive program is as helpful as a straw to a drowning person and, at worst a travesty on the public purse.

Every announcement of change made by the minister is followed by another announcement postponing the previously announced change, which is then followed by another postponement, much in the manner of the one-step forward, two-steps backward routine that has characterized the Liberal Party, and the Conservative Party—

An hon. Member: Oh, no! Why us? Leave us out.

Mr. Rodriguez: —throughout the history of this country. DREE follows the pattern of every other situation in Canada. Under the regional development program, the overdeveloped regions get the one-step forward, and the underdeveloped regions get stuck with the two-steps backward. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was first seeking election in 1968 as Prime Minister, he declared publicly that there were two specific goals for Canada he was dedicated to accomplishing. One was national unity and the other was elimination of regional disparity.

Regional disparities were created and have been guaranteed by the lack of serious long-term planning and attention to the problems of remote or disadvantaged areas. There has been a dearth of ideas and well thought out possible solutions, and consequently a complete lack of productive adjustment to the DREE program. The Liberal and Conservative Parties have always found it easier to let things go until a crisis presents itself. That approach, that philosophy, reigns still, as DREE staff produce working papers that suggest, for instance, tourism as a solution to the problems of northern Ontario, when northern Ontario sits on, and mines, some of the richest ore bodies in the world. While the jobs produced by the minings of those ores go south and to countries all over the world, DREE suggests tourism for northern Ontario and slips in small incentive grants creating three jobs or four jobs or five jobs, and no fundamental change occurs.

If this government's success is to be gauged by the reduction of regional disparity between northern Ontario and southern Ontario, then it has failed miserably. Those of us who live in northern Ontario firmly believe that there is no excuse whatsoever for nickel plating plants, steel mills, wire factories and so on to be built in southern Ontario while our municipalities lack basic amenities or enjoy the highest taxes to provide such facilities. It boils down to simply a lack of sincerity on the part of those who govern to eliminate regional disparity in our neck of the woods. We are no closer to equality of industrial opportunity within our province than we were prior to the Trudeau years. Yes, time is running out on the Liberal Party in northern Ontario, and the sooner the better.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) made it clear to the hon. member in his reply on October 29 that there had been excellent co-operation between officials of the province of Ontario and those of DREE throughout the detailed consultations carried out to develop the contents of a general development agreement with Ontario. The fact is that the process of consulting with the provincial government, and of discussing the policy thrusts that will govern the new regional development policy in Ontario, is a lengthy one. The hon. member will agree, I am sure, that full account must be taken of local opportunities and circumstances in this process to ensure that the developmental activities are tailored to the needs of the province and to the requirements of its slow growth regions.

I am pleased to assure the hon. member that the preparatory work on the general development agreement covering the development of Ontario and on subsidiary agreements to provide for the identification and pursuit of specific development opportunities is now in its final stages. I know that my colleague, the minister of DREE, will be pleased to inform the concerned members of this House as soon as the contents of the agreements are finalized.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.24 p.m.

TABLING OF TEXTILE AND CLOTHING BOARD'S REPORTS ON COTTON YARNS AND MEN'S AND BOYS' SHIRTS

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I wish to table in both official languages copies of two reports, the Textile and Clothing Board report respecting cotton yarns and the Textile and Clothing Board report respecting men's and boys' shirts.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order relating to the procedure under motions and the responses or lack of them of the Minister of Transport yesterday in the House about the movement of crude oil from the port of Vancouver to the east coast. In response to one question yesterday the minister said that perhaps we could find another opportunity to discuss this, and so on. It would seem to me, because of the confusion that exists respecting government policy and who is right—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order or is he rising to propose a motion? I think he should indicate to the Chair under what Standing Order he is now seeking the floor.

Mr. Howard: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. At the outset I did say I was rising on a point of order with regard to the procedure under motions. I do not want to move a motion. My point of order is the obvious disdain of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) for the House in refusing to state clearly here and to the people of Canada, particularly in Vancouver, what is happening with regard to the authority of his department over ships moving crude oil out of Vancouver and the potential danger that arises therefrom. That is the point of order.

Mr. Speaker: That is hardly a point of order. It may be a point of disorder. I am not sure how to qualify it, but I would doubt that we should have a debate at this time on the point raised by the hon. member.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ALLEGED LACK OF INDUCEMENT TO RECIPIENTS TO SEEK WORK—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the widespread resentment of the majority of Canadians about the unemployment insurance rip-off whereby unemployment insurance benefits induce people not to search for work opportunities. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Manpower and Immigration in order to consider the feasibility of a work incentive, such as an increase in the personal exemptions of $100 per month for every month a person is employed in excess of six months during the year.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION ON RAILWAY ADMINISTRATION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion concerning a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

The number of railway accidents throughout Canada having considerably increased, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin):

That the House take this opportunity to appoint a royal commission on the administration of railways throughout Canada and suggest means to urgently remedy the consequences of this deplorable deterioration in this service of prime necessity and national interest.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimous consent; therefore, the motion cannot be put.

CLASS ACTIONS BILL

PROVISION OF RIGHT OF ACTION TO CONSUMER GROUPS WHO SUFFER LOSS BECAUSE OF OFFENCES UNDER CERTAIN LAWS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-247, respecting class actions.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. member shall have leave to introduce the said bill?

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide a right of action to any class or group of consumers who may have suffered loss as a result of offences under either federal or provincial consumer protection laws or breaches of contract and where it is impractical for an individual lawsuit to be undertaken because of the nature and size of the loss. A further purpose is to provide to groups of consumers and others the legal and financial stature to stand on an equal footing with business, government or other large institutions.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT ON RAISING BY COMMERCIAL BANKS OF LENDING RATE TO DOMESTIC BORROWERS

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I will direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister tell us, given the fact his government believes that nothing can be done about the root causes of inflation in Canada because it all comes from abroad, whether the government supported the move by the commercial banks of Canada to raise the lending rate to domestic borrowers to one of the highest rates we have had in Canadian history?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Without entirely accepting the premise of the hon. member's question, because there are certain efforts that the Minister of Finance and other ministers are making on the international level—

Mr. Baldwin: Hardly noticeable.

Mr. Trudeau: Hardly noticeable to the hon. member for Peace River who is asleep most of the time.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: You can see it is Friday morning—he's edgy.

Mr. Baldwin: The Prime Minister must have been wakened for the two o'clock feeding.

Mr. Trudeau: I see the House is not in a serious mood today, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I really received an answer to my question but I will put my supplementary question. Now that the Minister of Finance is here, I can direct my question to him. Given the fact that the government has taken the position that Canada can do nothing about the root causes of inflation because apparently it all comes from abroad in their estimation, does the Minister of Finance support the policy of the Canadian commercial banks in raising the domestic lending rate to borrowers to the high level that they have in the past month or two when borrowing is done by domestic borrowers?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the prime rate was raised by the banks in response to tremendous pressure on the short-term money market both in Canada and the United States as a result of great strength in the expansion of the economy.

Mr. Gillies: Then the question I would like to ask the minister is this: why did the Bank of Canada not raise the prime rate if this is the reason the commercial banks thought this should be done?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Because, Mr. Speaker, in the judgment of the Governor of the Bank of Canada that was not the move to take.

Mr. Gillies: How is it possible for the minister to take the position that it is appropriate for the commercial banks to raise the cost of borrowing money to domestic borrowers in Canada if at the same time it is not the policy of the Bank of Canada to raise its rate to the commercial banks?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I might suggest to the hon. member that this is argument. I am sure he will disagree with me, but I still have to make that suggestion to him.

ENERGY

DOMESTIC CRUDE OIL—PRICE MECHANISM FOLLOWING LIFTING OF FREEZE AT END OF WINTER—SUGGESTED DEFERMENT OF EXPORT CHARGE LEGISLATION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance arising out of the statement by the Prime Minister last December to the effect that the freeze on the price of domestic crude would be lifted at the end of the winter season. May I ask him what price mechanism the government has in mind, on what basis the price of domestic crude will be allowed to rise and, in particular, what is the minimum differential that will be maintained between the price of Canadian oil sold to Canadian consumers and the world price?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in my statement yesterday I suggested to the House that the movement of the price of petroleum in the Canadian market, the revenues to be derived from any increase in price, and the burdens that might be incurred as a result of the movement of that price were issues that had to be discussed by the first ministers three weeks from now in Ottawa, and subsequently by the ministers of finance, since the international price structure as it bore upon Canada radically affected the whole fiscal relationship between the federal government and the provinces.

Mr. Douglas: If it is the minister's opinion that the whole question of the price structure is not going to be determined until after the first ministers meeting at the end of this month, would it not be advisable to leave the matter of the legislation dealing with the export charge until after that date and in the meantime deal only with the export tax on which we have some specific information?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would offer to the hon. gentleman's perception two responses to that question. The first is that the federal government and parliament should be in a position to deal with the matter in the event that we are unable to achieve some sort of satisfactory arrangement in the short term with the provinces. The second is that parliament should put the government in a position where it can deal now with an intensely flexible international situation, which is why the export charge technique is to be used after February 1.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands in just a moment for a supplementary, but I would hope we would not anticipate too much the debate that will take place following the question period. It seems to me that we are now bringing into the question period the debate that is to take place later today. In any event, the hon. member will be recognized for a supplementary.

Mr. Douglas: While recognizing that the federal government needs certain authority to go to the conference, may I ask the minister if he in turn thinks parliament should be asked to clothe the government with certain powers without any clear understanding or undertaking from the government as to how those powers are to be used?

• (1120)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think the situation that parliament finds itself in is, first, that it has to be able to deal with the situation after February 1 in as flexible a manner as possible in order not to preclude whatever arrangement is made by the federal government with the provinces; second, that the government is in a position where it can set forth the general principles of the fiscal arrangements, as I tried to do yesterday, and yet leave the conference in the position three weeks from now where there is genuine consultation and genuine negotiations.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In other words, if the government were to take the type of fixed position that the hon. member suggests, it would really be precluding a negotiating role for the government at that conference.

OIL—SUGGESTED CONTINUATION OF EXPORT TAX TECHNIQUE DURING FEBRUARY AND MARCH IN LIEU OF IMPOSING EXPORT CHARGE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. Would the government find it satisfactory to have authority to continue the existing kind of export tax for, say, the months of February and March with a view to coming back to parliament following the first ministers' conference and then presenting to parliament its full package and in the meantime, during those two months, having the authority to impose an export tax at an appropriate level as has been done over the past four months?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have considered the approach that the hon. gentleman suggested yesterday. Perhaps a lot of these questions should be threshed out in the committee stage, but I think we would prefer to be in a position—

An hon. Member: Of course you would.

An hon. Member: You would like a big stick.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —and I think the country should be in a position where it has an instrument flexible enough to deal with an unpredictable international situation and flexible enough also to deal in a meaningful consultative way with the provinces.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. Leader of the Opposition for a supplementary, but again I take the liberty of reminding hon. members that we are to be considering this matter later today on second reading and in committee. I would hope that some of these questions could be asked then.

Mr. Hees: Except that you cannot get an answer then.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether this bill will reach the committee stage today, but I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether the suggestion I made in my previous question would not in fact put the government in a position during the next month or two where it could respond adequately to any change in the international situation?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it gives the country the flexibility it needs to meet both the international and the federal-provincial situation.

Mr. Bell: We want Macdonald back! He was not that bad!

Mr. Hees: John, you make Thumper look good!

Mr. Baldwin: We would even be better with Benson!

An hon. Member: And look what happened to Benson!

INQUIRY WHETHER PROVINCES ARE SEEKING FEDERAL GRANTS IF SALES TAX ON PETROLEUM PRODUCTS ABOLISHED

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the right hon. Prime Minister.

Could he tell the House whether in the correspondence exchanged between his department or the government and the provinces preparatory to the federal-provincial conference on energy, the provinces are saying that they are seeking federal grants to compensate for the loss of revenues if the federal government decided to abolish the sales tax on petroleum products?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. In this correspondence, the provinces did not go into those details. Until now, the correspondence has mostly been based on the agendas in very general terms. However, I should point out to the hon. member that I and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources have suggested that the provinces should remember that the equalization formula gave them and will continue to give them very considerable funds. We hope that they will indeed consider the possibility of using these funds for reducing taxes on energy and gas.

POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN UNIFORMS AND INSIGNIA

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I preface my question to the Solicitor General by the question I asked yesterday, as found on page 9004 of Hansard:

> . . . my question is for the Solicitor General. I should like to ask the minister whether action is now being taken or is contemplated to change the uniforms and insignia of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

The answer given by the minister was:

> . . . no action has been taken to change the insignia or uniforms of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Knowing the minister, I know he was completely truthful and did not have any information along those lines concerning the RCMP, of which he is the responsible political head. I therefore ask whether he will table, first, the administrative bulletin issued in the year 1973 by the commissioner of police—I will not go into detail at the moment—and, second, the latest administrative bulletin, No. 54. I do not have the number of the first one. In bulletin No. 54 members of the force are advised that the gold crown on sergeants', sergeant-majors' and staff sergeants' uniforms is no longer available, that the red serge suit—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if it is necessary for the right hon. gentleman to read the whole document.

[Mr. Hees.]

Perhaps he might consider that the question has been asked and allow the minister to reply.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I apologize. I felt that full information might be helpful to the minister. I ask whether he will table these two administrative bulletins. They will be of information to himself as well as to the House and country.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to check into those bulletins and table them if it is appropriate to do so. I might say that I did check into this matter after the right hon. gentleman's question yesterday. I spoke with the commissioner's office. He told me that there was no plan to change the insignia or the uniform. But I will check these bulletins and report back to the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the ministerial applause indicates that the ignorance has a larger area than that of the minister. I ask him to get in touch with the commissioner. These administrative orders have been sent out. One was sent out several months ago and the other recently. Changes have been made.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I know that there was a change made, not with respect to the style of the uniform or the colour of the uniform but merely with respect to summer wear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, no. This is all year round.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I have already checked with the commissioner's office but I will do it again. I should like to provide the House with the fullest information.

COMBINES

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON ALLEGED PRICE FIXING IN OIL INDUSTRY

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Can the minister tell us whether he has yet received the report respecting the investigation into collusion by price fixing in the oil industry in Canada, for which we have been asking for several months?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this inquiry is under way through the combines branch of the department. The result of the inquiry would be either its termination because there was no evidence on which charges could be laid under the act, or action by the Attorney General through charges being laid in the courts. I am not in a position to make an announcement at this time.

Mr. Lawrence: In view of the fact that in the United States an investigation into exactly the same matter and involving exactly the same companies started after the investigation began in Canada and the United States government has now started prosecution in the courts against these same companies, can the minister possibly explain to us why there has been delay in regard to this matter in reporting to him and to the government of this country?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, if I am not mistaken, the action by the United States authorities in their courts came after an investigation lasting at least two years. Our investigation began about last February. I know that the director and his staff want to complete their work as expeditiously as possible, but it involves questioning large numbers of people and examining large quantities of documents. I am sure my hon. friend would not want this work to be done in a way which would not enable it to be carried through to a favourable conclusion in the interests of the public.

REVIEW OF RELEVANT POLICIES AND STATUTES CONCERNING USE OF RAILWAY RIGHTS OF WAY IN LIGHT OF COMMUTER NEEDS OF URBAN POPULATIONS

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that studies of the rail corridor through eastern Ontario indicate that rapid transit could be developed on the CNR right of way at a cost far below that for subway or expressway development, and given the fact that present statutes and policies give a very low order of priority to the use of rights of way for urban transportation, is the minister reviewing these policies and statutes with a view to giving due weight to the commuter needs of urban populations?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Yes, we are, Mr. Speaker, with the government of Ontario and in conjunction with the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

Mr. Harney: In view of the fact the minister's department will soon be getting involved in establishing rail commuter service north of Toronto, will the minister indicate to the House whether his department is moving toward a national urban transport policy with all the planning and consultation that entails or intervening in urban transit problems on an ad hoc basis?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I think we are doing both, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OIL—REVISION OF ESTIMATED SHORTFALL IN LIGHT OF PRODUCTION BY COME-BY-CHANCE REFINERY

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. As the Come-By-Chance refinery is now producing 84,000 barrels a day and large volumes of oil are coming to eastern Canada from British Columbia, has the government revised its projected shortfall of 200,000 barrels per day this winter and, if so, can the minister give us the new figure?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, my information is that the Come-By-Chance refinery is not expected to be in a position to ship before next week. The information I have at the moment is that the basic figures have not been altered, but they obviously will be if Come-By-Chance comes into effect more quickly.

HEALTH

ALLEGED LACK OF ADEQUATE AMBULANCE SERVICES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I have an urgent question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister in receipt of a document prepared by provincial officials in the health care delivery field which describes emergency ambulance services in Canada as being in a very bad state? This being the case, does the document recommend uniform national standards for ambulance design and equipment, emergency communications, the training of emergency personnel and that the federal government should accept a provincial ambulance service system as an insured service under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act? If so—

An hon. Member: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might allow the minister to reply to the first part of the question and then he can ask a supplementary.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I have not—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I am not blowing this up. I simply wish to say that many members in this House have constituents who wait over an hour for ambulance services. Questions like this deserve a little bit of attention and respect. This being the case, can we expect immediate action on the part of the federal authorities?

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Grafftey: What's the use, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked a question. Perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply. The hon. member will have the right to ask a supplementary.

Mr. Grafftey: I appeal to you, Mr. Speaker. The conventional wisdom is that people get to me when I blow my top on things like this. I think it is very poor manners when people are interrupted while asking questions such as this one. I ask Your Honour to protect our rights in this regard. I now put the question to the minister. Can we expect reasonable action from the federal government within a very short time?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have not received any document such as mentioned in the hon. member's question. A federal-provincial ad hoc committee of members of the professions concerned studied this situation and reported to the conference of deputy ministers of health. This report has not yet reached the ministerial level, but it will be presented for consideration at the conference of health ministers to be held in mid-February.

GRAIN

FEED GRAIN—MEASURES TO COPE WITH SHORTAGE IN QUEBEC

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Agriculture is not present I direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the great difficulties facing Quebec millers concerning supplies of feed grains and particularly oatmeals, a situation that may well cause a major reduction in food production and thus bring about considerable price increases, can the Prime Minister say what short term action the government intends to take to solve what seems to be a very serious problem?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture is already dealing with the problem. Even now, he is visiting one of the provinces concerned to discuss government matters. I shall be pleased to convey the question of the hon. member to the minister to find out whether or not he can make a statement on the matter.

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary to the Minister of Transport.

As it is now very difficult if not impossible for farmers to buy a carload of western grain because of the lack of railroad transportation, does the minister or the department intend to take steps to improve the situation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in the last month or so the shortage of cars has been brought up repeatedly in the House. The railway companies and the Department of Transport are jointly making efforts to remedy the situation.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: I shall allow the hon. member to put his supplementary but I remind hon. members that there are only a few minutes left in the question period. I hope there will be as few supplementaries as possible so that a greater number of hon. members can put questions. The hon. member for Richmond.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, according to the minister's answer, there is obviously a shortage of cars at this time. Could he tell us whether the Department of Finance or his own department will suggest to the government to give assistance to the trucking industry in order that these producers may secure grain?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, this is an entirely new matter. It involves the whole issue of grants and I cannot merely answer yes or no. As for the cars themselves, new ones are being manufactured and we expect to meet our responsibilities in the moving of grain.

In light of the fact that LIP project 3B-1314 dealing with native off-reserve housing has been granted on a constituency basis in Nova Scotia when according to all the band chiefs in the province it seems unworkable and impractical on this basis, will the minister have another look at this project to ascertain if the funds can be directed to the Union of Nova Scotia Indians for administration, as requested by the band chiefs?

POSSIBILITY OF ADJUSTING WHEAT PRICES TO ARAB STATES OR CURBING ALLOCATIONS IN LIGHT OF THEIR OIL POLICY

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the recent $90 million wheat sale to Algeria, which is in addition to an earlier sale of $75 million, will the Prime Minister advise the House if the government is contemplating adjusting wheat prices or curbing wheat allocations or, indeed, attempting to negotiate with the Arab states in light of the Arab states oil policy toward Canada and the free world?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to take note of the question on behalf of the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board.

COMMUNICATIONS

POLICY RESPECTING APPLICATIONS BY TORONTO CABLEVISION COMPANIES FOR AUGMENTED CHANNEL CAPACITY

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, this question is addressed to the Minister of Communications.

In view of the impending removal of WNED-TV, a commercial free Buffalo public station broadcasted in Toronto on channel 17, what is the policy of the government with regard to cable companies in Toronto that have applied for augmented channel capacity?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the question has been prompted by, I must say, totally incorrect press releases from a certain Toronto daily.

So far most households, that is 280,000 households out of 336,000, have had access to channel 17 and they will retain access to it. The problem lies with a very large cable company that has not yet submitted the technical briefs without which it cannot obtain the necessary licences. But all cable companies have known for three years about the coming change and therefore had ample time to make representations to the department and the CRTC.

AIRPORTS

CHARLOTTETOWN—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO KEEP MAIN RUNWAY SERVICEABLE AND PREVENT CESSATION OF OPERATIONS

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a brief question to the Minister of Transport. Will he personally look into the situation at the Charlottetown Airport which has been closed for the last two days, preventing hundreds of people from leaving Prince Edward Island by air, with a view to ensuring that either the efficiency of the maintenance operations is increased or that the facilities required to keep the main runway serviceable are provided?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): This is a very important question. There is no doubt we are doing all we can to restore the service while at the same time maintaining the necessary security.

PROPOSED PASSENGER HEAD TAX—ESTIMATED COST OF COLLECTION—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN USER CHARGES PAID BY CARRIERS AS ALTERNATIVE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the statement made yesterday by the President of the Canadian Air Transport Association that it would cost 50 cents per passenger to cover the expense of collecting the proposed airport head tax, may I ask the minister what estimate he and his department have made as to the cost of collecting this head tax?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The tax amounts to $2.80 a head. I think you would have to multiply that figure by the number of passengers carried.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: Perhaps I ought to put my question again. I think the minister did not understand what I asked him. If the President of the Air Transport Association is correct, or nearly correct, when he says it would cost 50 cents per person to collect $2.80 in tax, this would represent about 20 per cent of the tax itself. In these circumstances, would the government consider withdrawing this inefficient manner of raising desired revenues and use some other method, specifically that of raising the user charges imposed on airlines?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The hon. member will excuse me; I did not understand the first question very well. We do know the cost of collection. I can check the figures and make them known to the hon. member, but I do not have them in my head right now. It is not our intention to suppress this tax. We hope we shall find ways and means to apply it very soon. We believe this tax should be paid by users of airports.

Mr. Hellyer: Raise the taxes and suppress the people.

PROPOSED PASSENGER HEAD TAX—SUGGESTED PERCENTAGE CHARGE ON SHORT FLIGHTS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport as a result of the one I asked yesterday.

Can he explain why it would be so difficult to adjust the simultaneous levy of a fixed charge and a percentage charge? I feel that it is a matter of elementary mathematics, because the charge—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has asked a question. He cannot, however, submit an argument in support of his question. He could now allow the minister to answer his question.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is not merely a matter of elementary mathematics. We have to choose between a percentage charge levied on the amount of the ticket, that is the longer the journey, the higher the charge or a fixed amount which means that the price of long flight tickets would not considerably increase. Now what position should be taken if the hon. member finds it is merely a matter of mathematics? I would like him to send me some explanations which could perhaps be useful to me.

POST OFFICE

SUGGESTED RESUMPTION OF SATURDAY MAIL DELIVERY

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. Now that the Letter Carriers' Union has publicly declared its support, through its president, Roger Decarie, for the return of six day a week mail delivery, when will the hon. gentleman be announcing the restoration of this service?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I have often stated that this matter was being considered and that, so far, there is not enough evidence to justify the reinstatement of such a six-day service in our urban centres. The hon. member knows very well, I am sure, that such a service does exist in many parts of Canada, but not in the large cities, because it has indeed been proven to be unnecessary.

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: In view of the confusion during the recent holiday period because of the lack of a six-day service and the statement by Mr. Decarie that he wants this service restored so that the Post Office may get back into the business of postal service, would the hon. gentleman not reconsider this matter in order that the morale of the employees of the Post Office Department can be improved by restoration of pride in service?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I think that the only confusion existing is in the hon. member's mind. He is perfectly aware that there is no six-day service in large cities since 80 per cent of the largest mail users are large companies which in any case are closed on Saturdays.

ENERGY

INQUIRY AS TO SPECIAL ALLOCATION OF BUNKER FUEL FOR MOVEMENT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA FOREST PRODUCTS

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has the National Energy Board made a special allocation of bunker fuel to look after the forest products industry at Canada's Pacific seaboard?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): If the hon. gentleman is talking about export, I would have to inquire. If he is talking about use within Canada, the board does not make allocations for use within Canada.

SUGGESTED USE OF COMMERCIAL AIRCRAFT BY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. As President Nixon has recently demonstrated that heads of state can travel by commercial aircraft without any loss of security, is it the intention of the right hon. gentleman in the near future, and while the energy situation remains uncertain, to use this means of transportation with a view to setting an example in energy conservation?

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am not sure in what direction the example would flow, because I have travelled commercially many times. The essence of the operation, however, is to do it at a time when a flight is not scheduled and not known in advance. Otherwise, as I explained the other day, it might cause considerable inconvenience to the travelling public. However, as everyone knows, the press is always anxious to know when I am travelling and the news generally gets out in advance.

Mr. Hees: Since the press is not more interested in knowing when the Prime Minister is travelling than it is in knowing when the President of the United States is travelling, will he advise the House whether he is planning to make a trip by commercial aircraft within the next three or four weeks?

SHIPPING

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF SPECIFICATIONS FOR TANKERS CARRYING ALBERTA OIL FROM VANCOUVER TO EASTERN CANADA

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport related to questions which were asked yesterday about tankers carrying crude oil from Canada's west coast to Canada's east coast. When does the minister intend to fulfil the commitment he made to the Standing Committee on External Affairs on December 3 in response to questions I asked about laying on the table of the House the complete specifications in respect of each and every ship leaving Canada's west coast carrying crude oil to Canada's east coast?

• (1150)

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if my memory serves me well, I think this list was tabled in the committee itself so the hon. gentleman has access to all the names and specifications of the ships.

Mr. Barnett: In view of the fact the committee met on December 3 and it is my understanding there have been cargoes continuing to depart from the Pacific coast bound for eastern Canada, will the minister table in the House the specifications in respect of every cargo ship which has left subsequent to that date, particularly in view of the fact the committee is not in continuous session?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): With pleasure, Mr. Speaker.

FUNDY TIDES—AVAILABILITY OF REPORT OF REVIEW COMMITTEE IN TIME FOR FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The minister informed me in December that the review committee report on the 1969 Fundy tidal power report would probably be ready some time in January. Can he now indicate whether this report will be available in time for the first ministers' conference in order that all ministers, including the Prime Minister, will have an opportunity to examine the possibilities and potential of energy from the tides?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will make an inquiry on that point.

EXPLOSION OF DC-8 AIRCRAFT AT TORONTO ON JUNE 21, 1973—REASON FOR DELAY IN TABLING REPORT ON INVESTIGATION

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. On June 21, 1973, a DC-8 exploded at Toronto International Airport and the minister stated an immediate inquiry would be held and the results would be tabled in the House. Will the minister tell us now the reason for the delay in tabling this report?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is for the simple reason that I have not yet received the final report. They are still trying to find out the cause of the explosion.

SAFETY OF RAILWAY OPERATIONS—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE OF TRANSPORT COMMISSION REPORT TO COMMITTEE

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Transport. Yesterday the minister indicated he had not read the report of the Canadian Transport Commission. In view of the fact there have been two further derailments in the eastern provinces, I wonder whether the minister would be prepared to direct the report to the attention of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): There is no objection to that, Mr. Speaker. We have the report. It has been forwarded to the railway companies and the department. I think there is a series of good recommendations in it, but we should not wait until the committee sits in order to correct what has to be corrected.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize one or two supplementary questions at this point and then call orders of the day.

SAFETY OF RAILWAY OPERATIONS—ACTION TO OVERCOME DEFICIENCIES IN ORDER TO ENSURE MAXIMUM PERFORMANCE

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the one posed by the hon. member for Hastings. Having regard to the recommendations made by the Railway Transport Committee, which included, among others, a reduction in carloadings to 70 tons or 80 tons and a reduction in speed, the effect of which will reduce the capacity and efficiency of the railways' operations in Canada, which in turn will add to the backlog in the movement of commodities and goods, is the government considering any immediate action jointly with the railways to overcome these deficiencies and upgrade standards in order that the maximum performance can be obtained by the railways?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman has raised one of the most important questions relating to this report, because in the manner it has been made it means capacity will be decreased which will have an impact on the movement of goods. These are the things we are going to study and we will let the House know what our decision is.

SUGGESTED INDEPENDENT COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE ALL TRANSPORTATION ACCIDENTS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the Minister of Transport whether in fact he does not now believe that investigations of air, rail and other transportation accidents might be much more expeditiously handled were we to have in Canada an independent commission for accident investigation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think that is surely an idea that should be looked into very seriously.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN UNIFORMS AND INSIGNIA

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since the beginning of the question period my office has been in touch with the RCMP and I have an additional answer to the question posed by the hon. member for Prince Albert. I have been told there have been absolutely no changes in the insignia or crest, as of the beginning of the question period.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: I have also been told that administrative bulletin No. 54, referred to by the right hon. member, deals with postal codes and makes no mention of dress. Administrative bulletin No. 78 dealt with summer dress, to which I referred in the House.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I apologize to the House for arriving late after the time for motions had passed.

Mr. Bell: We know you have problems; it's all right.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I wonder whether, with unanimous consent of the House, I could revert to motions to make an announcement on the beef surtax.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

AGRICULTURE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PHASING OUT OF SURTAX ON IMPORTS OF CATTLE AND BEEF

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce arrangements for terminating the surtax on beef and cattle by February 10. The tax will be phased out in three equal instalments starting January 14.

The surtax was imposed November 3 under Section 8 of the Customs Tariff because unusually large imports of cattle and beef were threatening the stability of the market and endangering the future production of beef cattle in Canada.

The temporary surtax was three cents per pound on imports of live cattle and six cents per pound on beef. Effective midnight January 13 the surtax on live cattle will be reduced to two cents per pound and the surtax on imports of beef to four cents per pound. A further reduction, to take place at midnight January 27, will reduce the surtax to one cent per pound on live cattle and to two cents per pound on beef. The surtax will no longer apply as of midnight February 10.

In announcing the imposition of the surtax on November 3, I said the tax was intended to deal with a temporary situation resulting from the marketing of large numbers of American cattle which had been held back from the market during the U.S. price freeze that ended early in September. The government at that time undertook to review the need for the surtax within 30 days. On November 30 the government said it had been decided to continue the surtax, subject to continuing review.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I should first like to thank the minister for his usual courtesy in furnishing the opposition with a copy of his statement before the House met. I should also like to commend the minister on behalf of the opposition for the imposition of the surcharge at the request of the beef industry. We were worried about the fact that there appeared to be some delay, but we do appreciate the magnitude of the problems involved in the imposition of the tax.

In dealing with the minister's announcement this morning I can only reflect the concern of the beef industry of Canada over the actions of the government. It will be recalled that within a period of just seven months the government completely removed the tax on live and dressed beef coming into this country, restored the tax, by the surcharge doubled the tax and now, Mr. Speaker, by this action it is phasing out the surtax and restoring the position that prevailed before this action began in the first place. I think you can appreciate the concern and the chaos this has caused the beef industry in Canada.

We appreciate very much that the minister did accept the advice of the cattle industry and, knowing full well that this surtax could only be on a temporary basis, we appreciate the fact that the government has decided to eliminate it by phases rather than by abrupt termination.

There are two concerns of the cattle industry I should like to bring to the attention of the government. The first relates to the fact that the minister has in effect telegraphed when the reductions will take place. What this proposal does in effect is, to allow the purchasers of the beef products in Canada to hold off their buying until the elapsing of these various dates, thus enabling them to make an additional profit of up to $1 per hundred on domestic beef products and $2 a hundred on imports.

The other concern of the cattlemen, which is of a most serious nature, involves their hope the government is not completely committed to the reductions on January 27 and February 10, because although the cattle market appears to be in a stable condition now that stability is precarious and could be upset very easily. It is hoped that the government will keep the matter under very serious review, so that if stability does not continue the actions planned for January 27 and February 10 could be rescinded or altered until another look is taken at the situation.

We hope this proposal will create stability in the beef market because it is of the utmost importance to the consumers of this country. There must be a continuity in respect of high quality beef at a reasonable price. The fact still remains that, under present conditions of high input costs, in many instances the profit margin is minimal or non-existent. For that reason we must make sure that this industry remains on a stable footing in order that in the months ahead Canadians can have an ample supply of this very important food.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in general I welcome the fact that the government will again be attempting to follow the policy we have followed for a number of years in relation to the United States and Canadian markets in order to attain a balanced market for beef and other meat products. In this way the consumer will get the benefit of the large production which is possible on this continent. I would hope this practice would be encouraged. I think the brinkmanship policy practised in the past few months by the implementation of embargoes and the changing of tariffs, to which the previous speaker referred, was a bad policy. To shift back to the practical working policy we had before is a good move. We do not know what the effect will be of phasing out the surtax over this length of time in terms of prices and advantages to packers or producers. Certainly, it does give some advantage to some of the processors.

I point out to the government that it has made no move yet toward a real support policy for hogs and beef. This is essential and would be more effective than trying to manipulate the tariff. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) in a speech in Ontario recently, announced there would be a stabilization policy. I thought for a while he had put on the hat of the Minister of Agriculture because he said we should have support prices for hogs, cattle and so on, but he does not mention that in this statement. If we are to have adequate supplies of beef and increasing production, which should be our objective as a nation, then some moves will have to be made in that direction. Until now it has been left to provinces such as Saskatchewan to guarantee a floor price for hogs, for example, and this may be an area which is being overlooked.

The other point I should like to make concerns the relationship of feed supply to beef and hog production. During the question period today, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), for instance, pointed out the lack of feed supplies in Eastern Canada and the instability of the market. This is one area in which the government is falling down badly. The lack of policies on the pricing and transportation of feed grains is a serious matter. The interests of neither the seller nor the buyer are being served. The facts can be documented to prove what I say. I trust the government will take note of these important areas as well as juggling tariffs.

OIL EXPORT CHARGE ACT

The House resumed, from Thursday, January 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-245, to impose a charge on the export of crude oil from Canada, to impose an oil export tax under the Excise Tax Act and to allocate certain of the revenues derived from the oil export tax, be read a second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, it is just a year ago today that this session began. It is just a year ago today that a great many members of this House had the privilege of assuming a seat in Canada's House of Commons for the first time. It is a privilege for which I am sure each member is grateful to his constituency. It is to be hoped that each has served his constituency well. It is regrettable, however, that during that year we have had the misfortune to observe a government in operation which has exploited its opportunities for evasion.

The government has exploited the rules of the House and has used this method to continue the secrecy surrounding of its behaviour. It has continued to keep the people of Canada in ignorance wherever possible. It has used the committee system of this House as a means for introducing ministerial statements, statements of policy and long drawn out statements by representatives of the departments. I think this has been done intentionally in order to make it utterly impossible for a committee of this House to function effectively and obtain the information necessary for an intelligent decision to be made in respect of the committee's report. There has been a deplorable neglect by the government of recognition of the democratic privileges on which the work of this House has so long been based. I am deeply disappointed when I hear such answers as we received this morning from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when he said he would refer the matter to the minister concerned and gave no assurance that an answer would be forthcoming.

I was again deeply concerned to hear the typical reply of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) this morning when he suggested to this House that a matter was not anybody's business except his own, that he would let us know what he wanted us to know and no more, and that he would conduct himself in the way he felt was best for Canada, regardless of what anyone else thought. There has been a direct challenge to the democratic system. This has been a shortsighted systematic operation. There has not been any long-range policy. The government has operated on a short-term basis in respect of a problem which is publicly known because it has been written up in the newspapers. It has not been guided by a policy involving long-range foresight and long-range planning. The government has not taken the action necessary to ensure that the nation will have the social and economic policy which Canada deserves. This is a tired, drained out, incompetent cabinet which has led this country nowhere.

I submit to you, Sir, that this government does not have the respect the government should have and does not have the support of the voters of Canada. It has been demonstrated beyond any doubt that Canada needs a fresh and creative group, with imagination and capability for planning, which is not present in the structure of the government today. It is time that we had forthright, courageous leadership which will not be influenced by a Prime Minister who accepts only the advice of those on his political left who espouse ideas which seem to please him much more than the realities of Canada's economy. The indications are that there is a tryst or perhaps even a conspiracy between the Prime Minister and those who are practising socialists in the House, to take Canada along a collision course with the economic reality at a time when others who have learned lessons about the necessity for the exploitation of the best brains in their country have been going in the opposite direction.

At a time when the economic climate for the development of the resources has improved in other nations, we have been discussing in the House the fearsome subject of profits as if that were a dirty word. We have been discussing it in a way which has accused the industry and the private citizen who was seeking to make a living of being capitalist oriented and not interested in the development of their own country. This is a charge without foundation in fact. It is indeed detrimental to the best interests of our country at a very serious time.

The legislation which has been introduced in respect of the energy requirements of Canada is typical. We have brought in a patchwork regulatory type of legislation which has provided no incentive for anyone to go out to work. It has provided no means whereby the resources of knowledge, technical skill and private and public capability could be encouraged to go forward and seek the solution which must be found if Canada is to remain economically viable.

The only suggestions that have been made by this government in the last year in respect of the economic ills which we have suffered is that the taxpayer will have to help bear the burden, and the government will be given a further opportunity to interfere with the rights and privileges of citizens and other governments in such a fashion that their authority and privileges are restricted. They have exhibited no understanding of the value of national or international goodwill, but rather have been obsessed with the idea of the divine right to rule which is so typical of the present Prime Minister and the cabinet which has continued to advise and support him on this course. There has been a continuing concentration of power in the hands of the central government to the detriment of the provinces, and I abhor this. There has been a total lack of understanding of Canada as it should be.

This is reason enough in itself for the public to reject this government. This government has assumed the position that it is responsible to nobody, and as it has taken on new authority through its authoritative legislation, it has mocked the people of Canada, the democratic structure, and the members of this House in a merciless fashion.

The provinces have little left to deal with when they meet the federal government at the first ministers conference. Yet, the government of Canada has in its hands all the strength it needs to say to the provinces: If you do not like this, this is what we will do anyway. It is not an opportunity for real and proper negotiations. The government of Canada thinks it is now able to confront the provinces and it does not have to have, in the words of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), real and proper negotiations any longer.

I think that one of the typical examples of the unpardonable, incredible and long-term bungling that this government has practised in its last year is the haggling over the method of the development of the tar sands. If Canada were ever in a position where initiative and action were required, it is certainly in the development of the tar sands for the provision of additional fuel for this country. If by any chance all the accusations which the government has made in respect of profits were true, I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, and to this nation, that the government has the instrument in its own hands whereby it can correct any improper profit, and that instrument is taxation.

It is high time that the government took a look at the capabilities of this country in all respects. It should not get itself and the citizens of this country into an improper, uncomfortable and unnecessary position by bringing in short-term, prejudicial legislation based upon the absolute need of power and the support of the socialists in this House. The governing party today is not interested in Canada. Rather, it is interested in power alone and it has demonstrated this to the public on innumerable occasions, thus creating the basis for its own defeat.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important that the particular bill before us be passed in its entirety before the federal-provincial conference. The provinces have been setting out their positions, particularly the oil producing provinces, and they have a very strong position. We have been reminded on many occasions that in fact the resources are the property of the province, although the movement of those resources is another matter. But the fact that the ownership of those resources under the British North America Act is a provincial right means that the provinces enter the negotiations from a very strong position.

I realize that this debate is creating difficulties for all the members of parliament because all of us here, while the federal interest is uppermost in our minds, cannot help but be somewhat influenced by the provinces from which we come. When there is a federal-provincial confrontation, obviously members, with the best of intentions of fulfilling their duties, find themselves in an awkward position. I have not been adverse to criticizing the members from Alberta in the Conservative party for their position regarding the oil resources.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Try Saskatchewan.

Mr. Saltsman: I want to say that I will not be any less critical of my own colleagues from the province of Saskatchewan if they take a similar position.

Mr. Baldwin: How about British Columbia?

Mr. Stackhouse: Give us a sample.

Mr. Saltsman: I want to say this, Mr. Speaker. If at any time Quebec had ever behaved in the way that some of our western provinces are behaving, there would have been such an uproar in this House and across the nation as would have been difficult to put down. In the worst of times, Quebec has always been the bad boy in confederation, and it has been at Quebec that the finger has always been pointed. But in my recollection, Quebec has never taken the kind of adamant position against the federal government that is now being taken by the western provinces. Their claims for special recognition and certain rights have always been tempered to some extend, and I must say they have always been far more tempered than the voices of the western provinces. For years it has been the west that has had grievances against Quebec. What does Quebec want? Why is Quebec always making difficulties? Now, we have to ask members from the west the same kind of question.

It may be that some of my friends and colleagues in the House will say that I am not really advocating a federalist position, that after all I am from Ontario and that the remarks I have made about those from Alberta and Saskatchewan probably apply equally well to myself or that I am setting out what might be an Ontario position. It may be so. None of us know for certain to what extent we represent the mood of our province and that of the nation. But I do honestly feel that I am trying to put forward what I think is a federalist position. The west has had its grievances against Ontario. On many occasions when I have spoken in this House I have enumerated them. I think those grievances should be recognized, and some sort of political settlement reached on them. But I also want to say that those grievances have been exaggerated beyond proportion. Too often overlooked is the fact that Ontario has accommodated itself to the needs of confederation, to the need to share the wealth of our society as much as it can.

For a long time when wheat was a glut on the international market Ontario was prepared to buy wheat under a two-price system, under that strange situation in which one of the greatest wheat producing nations of the world was paying more for its own wheat than foreign countries to which it was selling wheat. I know that people in the west have remarkable abilities, but one of their faculties which seems to be under developed is that of memory. We did, in fact, have a two-price system, and we were prepared to pay more for wheat in Canada than we received for it on foreign markets.

Now, when we hear talk about transportation it is as though we never had an accommodation on freight rates, as if there were no subsidization of freight rates, even though there has been massive and intensive subsidization of transportation both in eastern and western Canada. Indeed, the thing has become so mixed up now that no one really knows what true transportation rates are, because one kind of subsidization or correction has been put on top of another, obscuring the real rates.

For a long time now we have had a system of equalization grants by which we try to match the increases and benefits received by one province through federal grants to the poorer provinces. In fact, there has been a very substantial matching of grants, and I will return to this a little further on in my speech. In some cases it has amounted to about one-third of the increase in revenues to a province, which means that as the incomes of the "have" provinces rose this put a burden on the federal government which had to make an equalization payment amounting to one-third of the increases gained by the "have" provinces.

We in Ontario have also played our role in oil, which is the principal subject under discussion today. Again there is a very convenient lapse of memory with respect to the fact that the country west of the Ottawa valley line, the Borden line, for years has been paying substantially higher prices for oil than it might have paid had it got its oil on the world market at the lowest possible price. For 11 or 12 years Ontario and the rest of western Canada, including the consumers in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, said it was right that they should be prepared to pay higher prices for oil in order to stimulate exploration and development in the west. Even in retrospect, Mr. Speaker, that was a good policy. Not only was it proper for Ontario and the other provinces to do that, but now we are thankful that that kind of subsidization took place because now we have the stimulation of the gas and oil industry in the west that might not have taken place had there not been a protected market for that oil and gas.

I am not saying this to register a complaint, but merely to put on the record the fact that in many instances a group of provinces, or in some cases one province, has been willing to pay higher prices in order to help out other provinces. This whole confederation of ours is based on trying to diminish to some extent human selfishness, whether it occurs at the personal level, at the provincial level, or at the national level. Here I am talking in a way that goes beyond my responsibilities as a member of parliament. All my life I have been a Democratic socialist. I am a democratic socialist today. As a socialist, it is my view that there should be sharing, whether that sharing is between individuals, or between provinces, or between countries. That sharing must exist. For me to stand up in a political forum and to argue that any one individual, any one province, or for that matter any one country in the world has an absolute right to do with his or its resources and wealth as he or it pleases, to the detriment of everyone else, would be wrong for me as a democratic socialist, just as it would be wrong for me in the Canadian context to argue this as a member of this House.

It does not make much difference, I presume, to the people who are suffering, to the people who have to pay higher prices, to the people who have to adapt themselves to differences and changes, if the people who are extracting those higher prices are the ordinary citizens of a province or, let us say, the ordinary citizens of Saudi Arabia. Perhaps it makes a difference in that the higher price goes to the people of a country rather than to a multinational corporation, but in the final analysis it does not make all that much difference, because the higher price is being extracted from the consumer. As I say, people in Canada who have to pay higher prices to heat their homes, and who have to reduce their standards of living in order to heat their homes, are not going to worry whether the higher prices go to multinational corporations or to the provincial treasuries of Saskatchewan and Alberta. In either case the higher prices will hurt, although maybe not as much in the latter case. This is really the point at issue here. After so many years of being milked by foreign-owned multinational corporations, and having finally decided to take a stand against them and not let all the windfall profits got to those corporations, are we in this parliament now going to say that it is all right for somebody else to come along and become the exploiter of all the rest of us?

That is certainly not the kind of position I am prepared to take. In a federal system, and speaking as a democratic socialist, I say that the struggle must be one to diminish human selfishness, and to increase co-operation through increased sharing and increased equality of position. In order to do that it is necessary to make sure that those who possess power in some way restrain that power, and do not extract everything they might wish to extract from an opportunist situation. That is the position I must take, and I hope it is the position taken by my party.

Up until this point, I have tended to agree very much with the position outlined by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) when he spoke in the House yesterday. I am sorry that he has had to leave the House for a moment because now I have something critical to say of the minister and of his government. We could have saved ourselves a great deal of our present trouble had the government taken the advice of the NDP a number of years ago. And it was not the advice only of the NDP. I am sure it was also the advice of the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gilles), who at that time was a very distinguished and renowned Canadian academic.

The advice given was that we accept some of the arguments on resource development put forward by the Carter Royal Commission on Taxation. But instead the federal government rejected that advice. I must admit that most of the pressure for rejection came from the multinational corporations, aided and abetted by the province of Alberta, when they insisted that higher taxes should not be imposed upon resource industries, and upon the oil industry in particular. I think it would be worthwhile to recall that Carter advocated that the resource industries should be taxed roughly on the same basis as any other industry. There was no reason for them to be let off the hook. In fact, had that been done there would be no need for this export tax because the extra profits that would have accrued to those companies would have been paid, at least 50 per cent, to the federal treasury.

When we talk about profits, the federal share would have been $2½ billion because the extra profits are in the area of $5 billion without export tax. We could have saved ourselves this confrontation with the provinces if we had done the decent thing, but instead we let the resource industries off the hook. We distorted and continued that mish-mash of a tax system we had at that point and now we are suffering for it. Instead of being on the way to resolving our problems, we now have the political confrontation between the federal and provincial governments which may have to be resolved on the basis of the Carter suggestions.

I think the argument advanced by Premier Blakeney of Saskatchewan is an excellent one when he says that the federal government, in the legislation under discussion today, is proposing to deal primarily with the oil industry. Now, when you deal with the oil industry primarily, you are affecting two provinces in particular, Saskatchewan and, more heavily, Alberta. If we are to have a resource policy in this country I think, as Premier Blakeney has said, that it is not fair to deal with one resource only. After all, Ontario gets a lot of its resource income—not as much as it should—from nickel, copper and zinc. British Columbia gets a lot of its resource income from wood and the associated lumber industry. It is not just the price of oil that is rising but all other commodities as well. Why single out oil? If we do not single it out and impose this export tax, these phenomenal windfall gains are going to accrue to very particular groups of people. If the policy of the federal government is to make any sense, we should tackle all resources and not say to one province that it is its resources alone that are to be dealt with. In this sense there is a real grievance against the federal government which would not exist had we accepted the proposals of the Carter commission which proposed to deal with all resource industries. We did not accept them, however, and now we have a problem.

Prices are always a difficult problem. I know that there are people who are looking for simple solutions and there are various directions in which we can move, but I should like to state some of my personal views. Let us look at the question of subsidization. At the moment there is the idea that the domestic price should be frozen and quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, had the government not moved to maintain the freeze I think we would be facing an election today. I think it is important at this stage, when we are groping for an energy policy and groping for a resource policy, that there should be some interim measures. I see the bill before us as an interim measure, not as a permanent measure. We have to some extent protected the domestic price, and I believe there would have been chaos had we not; at the same time, we have assured that the proper rents are being extracted from our exports.

On the question of subsidization, Mr. Speaker, I do not think we can continue our present policy indefinitely, nor do I think we should dismiss the possibility of a two price system for lumber, oil and gas as an alternative. That is one of the choices we can make, although there may be some difficulty about it. We will, of course, have to accept the idea that prices must reach certain competitive levels. There is some argument for maintaining prices through an allocation system, and for seeing that the savings go to the less advantaged people in our society. For example, when we control the price of gasoline, who are the chief beneficiaries? Admittedly some poor people are helped but the chief beneficiary is the man who drives the Cadillac. The savings in food prices should be passed along as well. On the surface it is very appealing to say that we should control the price of milk but we find that it is not so much the poor people who consume milk; indeed, the bulk of it is consumed by people who are not poor. And so it goes down the line, Mr. Speaker.

It seems to me that if windfall gains and special profits accrue to special groups of people, then those profits should be taxed away and the benefits of those price increases should accrue to all the people of Canada. If we were able to do that in the case of oil, we should do it with everything. Let us assume that a 50 per cent tax rate on the $5 million would give us $2½ billion; just imagine what the federal government could do with that. It could reduce taxation or if it did not choose to do that, there are lots of social problems that cry out for intervention. It is not the taxes which are our chief problem; there are the poor in our society who need to be assisted. We could calculate what the average increase in the cost of fuel is for the ordinary person and if it is $100, he could be given a $100 tax credit or could be given a tax credit for food. If he was not in a taxable income bracket, he could be given a demigrant. The procedure would be close to the heart of my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

In a selective way, we could determine the priorities of our society instead of letting the haphazard incidence of prices in the marketplace determine who gets the windfall and who does not. There are many things that we could do, but we need a proper tax system and we do not have it. My colleagues and I have argued for this year after year. Many of the problems we are facing today would not exist if we had moved in the direction of an equitable tax system. We do not have it now and the chances are that we will not get it for a while, so we have emergency measures such as those before us. For this reason I am prepared to support these measures, not because I think this is the proper way to solve problems—and I am sure the minister would agree that it is not—but until we can find the proper way we must have some instrument to deal with a situation which is in danger of getting out of control.

Let us now examine where the benefits will go. In order to talk about that, we have to talk about the system of royalty payments. It seems to me that one of the first things we should do is disallow royalty payments as deductible items for federal tax purposes. At the moment, royalty payments are treated as an expense. The companies are permitted to deduct these royalty payments from income before they pay federal taxation. That means you give the provinces the right to pre-empt all federal taxes if they choose to do so, simply by determining what the profitability of the company would be. On that basis the province could institute what I call a royalty tax, which would be an equivalent amount, and therefore there could be no taxes payable by those companies to the federal government.

Royalty payments, I think, up to a point are legitimate payments and, up to a certain point, it is legitimate to consider them as a deductible expense. After all, a number of considerations are involved. I am suggesting, however, that these considerations have now, to some extent, disappeared because of the astronomical increase in price. In the normal course of pricing, royalty payments could be considered as legitimate. I have been a supporter of royalty payments as deductible items until the present. Now, we face a different situation.

It could be argued, as the province of Manitoba did during the hearings on the white paper on taxation, that if the federal government were to make available depletion allowances, or limit depletion allowances, that those depletion allowances should not be for the benefit of the company. It was argued that the province, not the company, would lose as a result of the depletion of the resource. The future prospects of the province are being reduced and therefore the province, not the company, should be entitled to the depletion allowance. I think that is a sound argument. To the extent that depletion allowances are permitted, the provinces ought to be compensated, not the companies.

Because the federal government could not see this point, the provinces had to use the much more clumsy instrument of royalty payments in order to make sure that the interests of their people were looked after. The provinces can argue that royalties are used to pay social costs. I am speaking of the building of highways, and the establishment of a transport system, for taking care of the needs of resource industries. Unfortunately, resource industries cause serious social dislocations and disruptions. Therefore, royalty payments are part compensation for the people in the province. In that way, the people are reimbursed to some extent for the pieces they must pick up after the mine closes, or after the operation moves to some more lucrative field if certain taxes are imposed. This is like paying for municipal services. Nobody will argue that the tax a company pays for municipal purposes should be disallowed. Some will argue that some degree of royalty payment is legitimate and that companies are entitled to deduct part of those payments for income tax purposes. But we have gone beyond that point.

Speaking on second reading, the Minister of Finance said that the tax limit must be increased, because no one dreamed six months ago that the price of oil would go as high as it has gone. I submit that, in view of the astronomical increase in price, royalty payments in future should not be permitted to be deductible items, to the extent that these were so considered in the past. The question of royalties must now be dealt with.

The question of royalty payments must be considered along with the question of depletion, payment for services and compensation. Royalty payments are now a means of appropriating all economic rents with regard to resources to the location or province in which these resources are to be found. In other words, the fortuitous circumstance of the phenomenal price rise has meant that this economic rent has been appropriated totally to the area in which the resource is found, and the federal government has been pre-empted from any attempt to tax. This might be a great system, but it is hardly one which I, and, I hope, other hon. members of the federal Parliament, can condone. Someone once said that he had not been elected to preside over the dissolution of a certain political entity. We are not here to preside over the dissolution of the federal tax system merely because prices have been rising around the world. For that reason, I want to examine the export tax.

So long as the export tax was around the $2 level, I fully supported the position that the entire amount generated by the tax should be rebated, in one form or another, to the producing province. That position did not seem to be unfair or harmful to the federal interest. I felt that that kind of money should be repaid to the provinces, particularly as at least 50 per cent of that money was to be reinvested in those provinces. I fully support the position of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas). It would be better if we could invest directly in those oil resources, instead of trying to determine how much money the companies need as stimulation for activity, how much money they are making, and so on. Instead of speaking of money transfers, I suggest that we should be speaking of public involvement in future development of energy resources in Canada. I think generations following us will be grateful if we take that position, just as people are now grateful for some of the decisions that were made in the past regarding public utilities. However, that is not the issue at the moment.

It looks as if the increase in the tax will be to $6.50. That $6.50 is calculated after allowing for some $4 odd to the oil companies. That $4 figure also includes substantial royalty payments and substantial profits for the corporations. In other words, if neither the provinces nor the oil companies get any more than the $4, they will still be doing rather well, although I think the provinces ought to be doing somewhat better at the $4 level. Certainly, the companies can make fabulous profits at the $4 level. Just imagine how much they would make at the $10.50 level. So, when we are talking about the $6.50 export tax, we are talking of found money, of pure, unadulterated profits, if profit can be unadulterated.

At the 50 per cent tax level, the federal government would get $2.5 billion per year and the provincial governments would get $2.5 billion per year. That is a lot of money. I do not see why the oil companies should get more than they are making at the $4 level. Of course, the question of the tar sands has arisen. We are told that it will cost more to produce oil made from the tar sands. Nobody is sure how much should be charged; some say that the price ought to be about $6 per barrel. If the government adopted the kind of tax system we advocate, it would not have to worry about needing to reduce the export tax or treating the tar sands oil differently from conventional crude oil. The companies would be taxed according to their profits. The price system would make sure that everyone is treated with the same degree of equity. The companies would receive sufficient stimulation, although speaking personally I would stimulate them right out of business because we would do the developing ourselves. As there may be some difficulty implementing that program for a little while, we must take the second best choice, which is the existing taxation system.

Under our system everybody, the federal government, the provinces, and the people of Canada, would have the advantage of an ample tax base. As I said, $2.5 billion would accrue to the provinces. If prices were to rise, additional phenomenal amounts of money would be at the disposal of the provinces. The arrangement would be equitable, and I think the provinces would be satisfied with their position. I realize that provincial premiers want to continue being provincial premiers and, without being cynical about it, that is their responsibility. I do not fault a provincial premier or member for saying "This is our resource. We have had a lot of grievances and now we are in the driver's seat so it is our right to squeeze." Human society being what it is, maybe to expect too much altruism is not a basis for policy.

For example, I would like to see Canada say at this particular point we are not going to charge the United States the same as the Arabs are charging. I may be accused of being too altruistic. I have made some pretty harsh statements about the United States. However, for us to condemn the Arab nations, the OPEC countries, for unconscionable price increases and then say we are going to adopt that price for the United States leaves a lot to be desired. Maybe Canadians will say I am being too noble, too generous, or that we cannot go all the way. I would like to see my country at least make a gesture and say we will charge 10 or 15 per cent below the price charged by the OPEC countries instead of adopting a parallel course.

The Americans are having the hell squeezed out of them. I do not feel right about saying they are our friends and we will give them some oil, but under the same conditions. I would feel more comfortable if we were to say to the Americans we cannot supply them with oil because we do not have it, but as long as we can supply it we will not take their last drop of blood. I am not particularly proud of that policy being pursued by Canada. I certainly would not argue if the Canadian government would forgo some of those rents in return for a gesture of friendship and an indication that one country does not have the absolute right to squeeze the hell out of another, even though it is in a position to do that.

The other point I want to make before concluding is that if all the revenues go to the provinces, every taxpayer in Canada will not only pay higher prices for fuel but will have to pay higher taxes because the revenues are going to the provinces. In many ways we would be better off to have the money go to the multinational corporations. It would cost less. We could at least tax them and get some of the revenue back. However, if it goes to the provinces, the federal government, under an equalization formula, is committed to paying one third of every dollar to the poorer provinces. For argument's sake, if the revenue of one province increased by $3 billion, and that could easily happen in Alberta, the federal government must then tax the rest of the Canadian people $1 billion in order to make up the equalization payments and abide by its commitment under the equalization formula. They are going to get squeezed in both directions. That would be an intolerable position, a position with which no government would be able to live.

The representatives of the federal government should go to the conference with some understanding of the real grievances of the western provinces. There should be a real desire to find an accommodation for them. They should also ensure that federal prerogatives, rights and the whole purpose of federalism are not bartered away.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might call it one o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

[English]

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, this debate on Bill C-245 might well be one of the most important discussions on the development of the Canadian economy to be heard in the House of Commons for many years. I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) on the analysis he gave this morning. While I do not agree with a good deal of what he said, I do agree strongly with the remark he made at the opening of his speech, that he was not speaking as a member from Ontario particularly, but as a member of the federal House of Commons on a matter of great concern to all Canadians. I was a little surprised that, having made such a statement, he should have gone on to make less than complimentary remarks about people from other provinces. Nevertheless, I think it important to remember that we are not here today debating provincial rights or similar issues, but the evolution of a policy which will be fair and appropriate for all Canadians.

It seems to me that in his speech yesterday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) did succeed in stating the problem. The situation is now clearly defined. The position, as put forward by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), is that we in this party support the proposition that the export tax should continue through a further two months; we would do everything necessary in the House of Commons to make this possible, so that the government would not be left without the capacity to deal with any situation which might arise in the course of the next quarter of the year.

It is an entirely different proposition, however, to ask parliament to give permanent sanction to a proposal which would change dramatically the whole budgetary procedure upon which this House has operated in the past, especially in the absence of further information as to what is involved. The Minister of Finance has been placing great emphasis lately upon the uncertainty in the economy. I agree with him that there is uncertainty, and it seems to me this is one of the major reasons the government should not be pushing, now, for the permanency of any proposal, but should be supporting flexibility.

My heart was warmed yesterday when the Minister of Finance intimated, during an answer given in the question period, that he would have something to say about the Canadian economy in the course of the debate. Indeed, in the opening part of his address he said he would talk about the Canadian economy. He did remark that we probably are facing the most unique situation we have faced in the recent history of the economic development of Canada, and that the policies we are going to follow now, or that may be followed now, will have deep ramifications for the development of the nation.

I was very disappointed that beyond those opening remarks, and that genuflection toward the economic situation, he did not say much more about it; he did not give us much more of the government's thinking on what is going to happen to the economy as a whole. I agree with him that we are possibly at a watershed in terms of economic development in Canada. What we do here in the next few days may have a great impact on the way this nation develops in the future and I am sorry he didn't say more. About his thinking on the economic issues. There is no question, now that the energy crisis has evolved, that there is a whole new pattern of economic forces operating in the world, forces we have a great responsibility to deal with in an effective and responsible fashion. The minister mentioned only one but I should like to mention four.

The first thing that has happened as a consequence of the oil crisis, as it is now known, has been a major change in the international balance of payments of a great many countries. I do not need to review or recite again the difficulties which are going to be experienced and are being experienced by the European Common Market countries, by Japan and by the United States. The increase in the price of energy and in the price of petroleum products from OPEC countries is bound to have an enormous impact, either directly or indirectly, on the balance of payments positions of these countries. But the problem for these nations is nothing compared to the difficulties which are coming about for some of the less developed countries. It is hard to keep up to date with the statistics because prices change so rapidly, but some of the prices now being quoted could result in taking the entire surplus balance of trade of some countries, simply to pay for energy imports.

Associated with the balance of payments difficulties is the fact that the OPEC countries are going to have enormous surplus reserves. What are they going to do with them, where are they going to put them and what will happen to them? Those are questions about which every nation is enormously concerned. Moreover, what happens to the exchange rates if in fact the United States buys energy in the future at the high prices now being set in world markets. The net result will be that the value of the United States dollar will decline dramatically in world markets and there will be surpluses of United States dollars floating all over the world.

If that happens the price of U.S. goods sold outside the U.S. will be cheap compared to the prices of goods from other countries. Will countries be willing to have the United States flood the world with low priced goods and services because of the oil problem? Not likely! The possibility of increases in tariffs along with other measures designed to impede world trade will be great and cannot be under-estimated. The other possible impact of such an international monetary situation, could be, if we have that sort of devaluation, enormous inflation. People keep wondering why there is so much inflation in Canada and in the United States; certainly one of the reasons has been the devaluation which has taken place in our currency in foreign markets. This condition could be exacerbated if the international situation with respect to balance of payments deteriorates.

I am slightly distressed at the position Canada is taking in this matter—one of wait and see. During periods of uncertainty, it is important to watch how a situation is developing, how it is going and how it is moving, but Canada has a long, important and significant tradition as being a leader in the development of ideas for dealing with international monetary situations. I am sure the Minister of Finance will recall that when the Breton Woods Agreement was established it was often known as the "ABC" agreement; The American, British and Canadian agreement. Canada, for a long time, certainly after World War II, was a leader in developing ideas as to how to deal with international problems.

One of the reasons we in this party were very disappointed that before the Canadian delegation went to Nairobi last spring we were unable to get a statement in the House of Commons as to Canada's position, was that we were therefore unable to debate international monetary matters in the House. We felt it was important for Canada to take some relatively positive position at those meetings, and that a debate would clarify Canada's official view. One of the ideas evolving in our party, as the members of the economic caucus of the Conservative party will confirm, was that perhaps Canada could put forward at Nairobi some ideas about an international bank for energy, and this of course was long before the crisis arose. I am not suggesting we had the foresight to see the difficulty, but indeed it would have been raised in this House at that time.

I would hope that we will, before any positive positions are taken by the Canadian government with respect to monetary reform, have the opportunity for some serious debate and discussion in the House about the Canadian position. I would hope that Canada can again emerge as a leader, not a follower, in devising policies for dealing with the international monetary situation which has developed because of the energy situation. It is not satisfactory to always take the position that we have to stand and wait. We should be providing leadership in this important field.

In addition to the problems in the international monetary field resulting from changes in balance of payments positions the energy change has enormous implications for the Canadian economy because of our trading pattern. The three areas of the world which are most affected by the energy crisis are the United States, Japan and the European Common Market countries, and they are the three areas with which Canada does most of its trading. We hear over and over again that 25 per cent of our gross national product is generated by international trade. It is inconceivable to me how anybody could believe, given the changes which appear to be taking place in the world, that changes in our trading partners economies will not have some impact on the Canadian economy. What the precise dimensions of the change will be, is hard to calculate. On the other hand, I am impressed by the fact that the responsible ministers of practically every country in the world involved in industrial activity of any dimension, the United States, Japan and the United Kingdom for example are able to make some forecasts as to what they think the impact of the crisis will be on their economies.

There is little doubt that in Canada at the present time the degree of uncertainty in the business community is probably as high as it has ever been. I would submit to you that the reason it is so is not only a result of the changing positions that have been taken by the government in respect of energy policy, but perhaps equally so because the government has not put forth in any detailed fashion what it thinks is going to happen to the Canadian economy.

With great respect, I suggest that when the Minister of Finance talks about psyching our way into a recession we cannot take him very seriously. How can anyone believe we are going to psyche our way into a recession when in fact there is an energy crisis all over the world? How can anyone talk about psyching our way into difficulties when Britain is now operating on a two-day week? Those are facts, and what Canadians want to know is what do these facts imply for the Canadian economy in the future? Surely, with the body of experts we have in the Bank of Canada, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Department of Finance the Canadian public has a right to know precisely how the government assesses the economic outlook.

There seems to be a view, held by this government that it is wrong, unfortunate, dangerous, or something of the sort, to tell the Canadian people precisely what the government thinks is happening. On the contrary it would be very sanguine and helpful to the Canadian people to know what is happening. It is unfair to believe that informed Canadians are not concerned about the effect of the energy crisis on Canada. It is important for the government to make clear what it thinks this impact will be. It is bound to be important.

The third effect, so far as economic conditions are concerned, of the change in the energy situation is the adjustment in the competitive advantages among trading nations around the world. There is no question that the change in energy supplies and energy prices could have influence in the long run as considerable as the invention of the steam engine had in Great Britain at the start of the 19th century.

The question is what position will Canada play in the changing world. Do we believe that we should use this new condition as a foundation upon which to build an industrial strategy in Canada? Does it provide an opportunity for new types of economic policy? Are we in Canada, in the broadest sense of the word, to use the energy advantage we have to develop an industrial strategy to take advantage of the energy resources we have by pricing them so that there will be a comparative advantage for us in industrial production? I was somewhat concerned with the remark of the Minister of Finance that when Canada goes to GATT again we must go with the hope of greater co-operation with other countries and for an extension of multilateral agreements.

No one is opposed to the expansion of world trade. The greater amount we can have the better. But, surely it is time to examine what we are looking for. Trade for trade's sake indeed may not be the position we should be taking in the Canadian economy at the present time. Consider the realities of the present situation. It is quite clear that not only in respect of oil but in respect of sugar, coffee and other products international commodity agreements are breaking down. Is it time for the Canadian government to look at the question of whether or not it should be striving for some type of different approach to trade, some sort of bilateral approach to trade. For example, should we be making arrangements with Brazil to make sure that we can trade our products for an assured and significant supply of coffee? Is the GATT approach, which was started after 1946, now outmoded with the changes that are taking place around the world? With the present world demand for resources is the kind of approach we have taken with considerable success in the last decade still correct? I note that a former Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said recently that the only processing we do with our raw materials on their way to Japan is kiss them goodbye.

Well, that might be the proper policy, but with the shift in the world that is going on the time has arrived to examine our resources and to evolve a system of trade policies that are appropriate to the times. To go to GATT with the same set of policies as we did in previous years seems to me to be throwing away an opportunity to reassess the direction in which the economy should move.

Finally, the fourth great impact on economic activity because of the energy changes is that we must determine a resource policy for Canada. I am impressed by the arguments made yesterday by the Minister of Finance, in relation to oil, as to what an important commodity it is, how it plays such an enormous role in the economy and that it therefore deserves special attention. But time surely has come to look at all our resources in the broadest sense and to decide what our resource policy in broad terms will be.

I agree with the minister that the energy situation is a unique one. Obviously, the change in the price of energy was brought about by the monopoly position by the OPEC countries. Under the circumstances any responsible government has a duty to protect its citizens and consumers from those particular circumstances, and of course we have supported that position right along. But it is not satisfactory for the government to deal with similar instances which may arise in such an ad hoc way. What we must do is evolve a resource policy that will involve all the resources of Canada.

The point I am making is that we are dealing with an issue which is much more profound than the import tax. The real issue with which the Canadian Parliament and the Canadian government will have to deal in the course of the next year or so is how the Canadian economy is to be modified and how will it be changed as a consequence of the energy crisis that has hit the world. We must deal with the problem and decide what in the long run we can and must do as Canadians to deal with the changing situation before us.

Given that premise and that foundation it is improper for parliament to tie itself to a position before it knows more about the problems which are developing. For example, we know little about the critical question of what price Canadians will have to pay for petroleum products in the period ahead of us. Until the government can give some idea of what the pricing policy will be it is wrong for parliament to lock itself into the situation we are being asked to accept at the present time. What is the price of oil to be for Canadians? The policy of this party is clear. We believe in one price across Canada allowing for deviations because of transportation costs and so on. I assume that position has been accepted now by the government because clearly differentiation in prices between the Atlantic provinces and Quebec and other parts of Canada is something this nation could not stand at present imported oil prices.

We are delighted that the government has accepted our position. But what level will that price be and how will it be set. What could the price be? It could be the international price. When the Minister of Finance says he is tracking international prices I do not know what that means. Presumably he means Canadian prices would follow an international price. Whether or not you agree with that position depends upon the position you take with respect to pricing resources as a foundation for an industrial strategy.

The second possible price would be, say, a price that permits a reasonable rate of return on investment for people who are operating in the oil industry. This might be the policy that the government will follow. Perhaps they could tell us if that is the direction in which they will go? The third possibility which the government might take is to adopt a price system that would be one price for oil and another price for new oil. The fourth possibility is for the government to establish a price that is equivalent to a price for alternative energy sources such as hydroelectricity or nuclear energy. The fact is that we do not know and it is improper to ask parliament to accept the present proposal without knowing what the pricing policy will be.

Certainly, to go into a meeting with the first ministers of the provinces of this country with the current excise tax proposal makes it almost impossible to go into that conference with a fair and open bargaining position. Members of the government and the ministers involved must want—and I am sure they do want—that conference to be an outstanding success because no one benefits in this country from a fragmentation or fractionalization among various areas.

The minister is concerned about the revenues that are being raised, the impact upon federal-provincial fiscal relationships, and properly so. All of us are concerned that it will be worked out properly. I am sure that every member of parliament wants the consultative process to be back in operation in an effective and meaningful sense. In a debate of this magnitude it makes no sense to refer back to the unfortunate circumstances of the past. What we really care about is how the problem will be solved in the future for the wellbeing of all Canadians. So, surely the federal government wants to go into the conference with the provinces believing that both are coming together to try to solve this most difficult problem in an open and effective fashion.

If the conference starts with this bill enacted it may be difficult for the provincial premiers to believe that the federal government is dealing in an open and straightforward fashion. Therefore, I would urge as strongly as I can, given the situation that is developing around the world because of the energy crisis, given the fact that we know the change in the energy situation in the world is creating a whole new foundation for the development of economic policy, given the fact that we do not know what the OPEC countries will do in the next few months, and given the fact that we really have to work this problem out as Canadians together, to find an adequate solution to help all Canadians, that this parliament accept the proposal of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) that we have an extension of the export tax to the end of March so that the windfall gains will go in the appropriate direction, and that we wait until after the provincial conference before proceeding with the latter part of this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oil Export Tax

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate on Bill C-245 I should like to point out that we have heard a number of terms used, such as "export tax", "export charge", regarding the exports of a resource industry. The minister has stated in his speech that this bill is of great significance to Canada. We have heard much said about windfall profits, who gets them and where they are going. Yes, the bill is of great significance to all Canadians. It is a tax on a resource. A member of the NDP wondered out loud in his speech as to why there should be a tax on only this resource. Why should there not be one on other resources as well. Is oil the only product of which we are short? We are short of steel, we are short of many things. We are exporting many other commodities as well. Perhaps, we should tax some of these other exports.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I hear a member of the NDP saying "hear, hear" to that idea. I think the government should make its position clear. Is this only the beginning of a new system whereby the federal government will raise money for its lavish ideas so as to gather more votes? Is this the beginning of a new turn that the government has taken? Will they be taxing oil as a resource, and what other resource will follow? Will they tax other manufactured goods? After all, steel is made from a raw resource manufactured in Canada. Perhaps we should tax steel as well as oil. Perhaps we should tax lumber of which we are exporting much. The exports of B.C. lumber went up 24 per cent this year, and the prices of building goods have gone up in Canada. Perhaps the government has that at the back of its mind as it spends money lavishly to gather votes.

These are the questions that the government should attempt to answer. They should pledge, before this bill is passed, that this is the one and only tax and that it will only be applied for a time. The bill does not specify that. It provides that the tax will end at the end of January and then it will be called an export charge. As one of the newsmen interviewing the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said the other day, it is all salami anyway, and the Prime Minister agreed. It is a tax, a charge, call it what you like; it is an export levy. The bill suggests that it will commence on the first of February, but no one knows when it will end. These things should be ironed out. Is this the only tax, and will it be applied temporarily?

With regard to the matter of where the windfall gains should go, and whether Canada has adopted the best policy, let me quote from an editorial in yesterday's Toronto Star which outlined some of these problems:

> Energy Minister Donald Macdonald says the price of Canadian oil will have at least to double when the freeze comes off next spring, and may have to become only marginally less than the world price, now about $10.50 a barrel.

Are we to believe that the tax is coming off on January 1, and the charge will come off in the spring, as the Prime Minister said in his speech to the House last month? On the strength of this editorial, one might believe that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) believes that the tax will come off completely in the spring. The minister has not said that in his speech. I hope he makes his position abundantly clear because we have heard so many conflicting statements on the subject. The Prime Minister says one thing, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources says another, and now the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is in the game. He, too, has his own ideas about these windfall profits about which everyone is talking and about what would be the best oil policy for Canada. Certainly, we need further explanations. This editorial continues:

> Second, the oil producing provinces are entitled to some increased return from their natural resource.

Even the Toronto Star admits that the oil producing provinces are entitled to some increase. We, from the oil producing provinces, would like a clear definition of the word "some". How big is "some" and how soon is it? The editorial goes on to state the following:

> As we have lately discovered, oil and natural gas have been underpriced in past years in terms of their true energy value.

That is a pretty good admission and we believe that the government is now realizing the true value of energy and that "some" is substantial. The editorial goes on to read:

> But third, the only long-term justification for price increases beyond covering higher production costs, if any, and giving Alberta and Saskatchewan a fair return, is to provide funds for exploration and development of new energy reserves.

I will deal with that a little later, but first I want to emphasize that even the editorial in the Star admits there is some justification for price increases, and one reason they give is the higher production costs. The Star believes inflation will affect everybody, but not the cost of finding oil. As I say, they disregard the higher production costs, but they do say there is justification to provide funds for exploration and development of new energy reserves. That is a very significant point.

In his speech the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) outlined three points that were similar to the points made by the Toronto Star. He said there were three important points and they were interrelated. According to him half of the total energy produced in Canada comes from oil, and that a sudden jump in price can cause grave disruption to our economy. If we are to believe the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) that $10.50 per barrel will be the price in spring, then there will certainly be a sudden jump. Of course, we hope that in spring the heating season will have passed.

The second point made by the Minister of Finance was that the competitive forces of supply and demand have not been responsible for the increase in price. That is a debatable point, and I will deal with it later. Then, he went on to say that 2 million barrels per day are produced in Alberta, and that if we increased the price of that oil by $6 or $7 a barrel this would involve a great deal of money. That is certainly an understatement for the Minister of Finance to make, because it does involve a great deal of money.

When talking about oil we should remember that about 80 per cent of the world's reserves are in the Middle East and north African area. Of the Arab petroleum exporting countries, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and Libya produce about 30 per cent of total world production, and hold about 50 per cent of the free world's reserves. Recently Venezuela increased the price of its oil to $13.80 per barrel, and the Persian Gulf states increased their oil to $11.65 per barrel.

We must develop alternate sources of energy. What is the United States doing? First of all, it has a two-price system. Even before this crisis came along the United States allowed a 23 per cent increase in the price of oil now in reserve, with no limitation on the price of any new oil that is found. In other words, it is giving quite an incentive to oil companies to find new sources of oil. In essence, the United States is allowing the companies to charge the world price for the new oil that they find. Naturally, in consequence the international oil companies will have a tendency to explore for new oil reserves in the United States. Some 20 per cent to 25 per cent of the oil now used in the United States is new oil, for which the higher world prices are allowed. That is a huge amount of oil, so the incentive must be paying off. When you average the price for new oil and old oil in the United States it comes to about $7.50 per barrel.

What are we doing in Canada? Are we doing anything similar to that? We can say that we have outlined a determined policy to invest $40 million in a national petroleum company. That is a great incentive! That will bring security to the people of Canada, particularly to those who live in the five eastern provinces. Of course, I am speaking facetiously because the people there know that Shell Oil spent $125 million exploring for oil in Quebec and off the Atlantic coast without finding any appreciable amount. There is some talk that this $40 million will be spent on research. I would point out that Syncrude (Canada), which has not really gone into production yet, has already spent $90 million on research, and purchased a lot of its research for a cash price from Great Canadian Oil Sands. Yet here is this great, bold government trying to win the confidence of the five eastern provinces by saying it will establish a national oil company and spend $40 million on research.

How lucky and how fortunate are we? I notice that a meeting will be held next month between Canada and the United States to discuss this whole energy question. According to another report in yesterday's Toronto Star, our oil policy has tabbed us in the United States as being the Arabs of North America. The report reads:

> The Canadian Embassy has published a four-page report outlining Canada's oil export policy in a bid to dispell a tendency here to call Canadians "North American Arabs."
> The embassy says many in the United States misunderstand Canada's aims . . .
> A Canadian embassy official said yesterday that the proposed export levy "raised a number of questions and some explanation had to be made that Canada was not engaged in flagrant profiteering."
> The embassy publication says the purpose of the proposed increase is "to help forestall an increase in prices charged to Canadian consumers . . .
> The report went on: "At that same time, we were also anxious to ensure that the return on Canadian oil in your market was not significantly less than that being received for oil imports from other countries . . ."

Even they recognize that there is going to be an increase some time, but they are not sure when. The significant thing is that the Canadian embassy was instructed to do this.

The Canadian government must also realize that if we impose an export tax on our trading partner, the United States, it can retaliate. Two-thirds of the energy produced in Ontario is produced with American coal. I do not suggest that the United States place an export levy on that coal, but it could if we play around with this concept of profiteering at the expense of our neighbour. I noticed that last month the Prime Minister made the statement that in the long run we must allow the price of domestic crude oil to rise high enough to ensure development of the Alberta oil sands and of other Canadian resources, but not one bit higher than that. That is in line with the statement in the Toronto Star. And he said there would have to be some further exploration.

It is interesting to note that the president of Imperial Oil of Canada appeared before the National Resources and Public Works committee on December 20 last. It is the largest international oil producing company operating in Canada, and he is a man fully knowledgeable of the oil industry. In response to a number of questions asked by committee members he very clearly stated that Imperial brings all its oil up from Venezuela, and he did not expect any cut back in supply. I questioned him, as reported at page 43 of the committee proceedings, about the building of the pipeline to Montreal. Imperial is the owner of a one third share in the Interprovincial pipeline system in Canada. I asked were they going to build a pipeline that could supply the Montreal market, and he replied that in no way could they do that. They would build a pipeline to put only 200,000 barrels a day into Montreal. I asked if they would still leave Montreal open to international prices, and he replied that they had to because they did not have enough oil in Canada.

I want to read what he said about that very point because it emphasizes the need for exploration and development. He said:

> I thought I had described the situation, Mr. Horner, that if we tried to supply Quebec and the Maritimes with the pipeline extension that would be required, if you went to that degree, then you would probably be looking at five or six years of supply, availability and proven reserves to date.

We have five or six years' supply of available resources to date if we supply Montreal and the Maritimes from the traditional reserves which are 85 per cent in Alberta! Five or six years' supply, Mr. Speaker; I cannot emphasize that enough. Anybody knows, for example, that the tar sands contain huge reserves, but the technology to extract the oil has yet to be developed. Only one-fifth of the land mass involved has less than 100 feet of coverage. He says that we have only five or six years supply for all of Canada if we do not make further discoveries! He goes on:

> We would not have sufficient lead time either to bring in the Arctic discoveries or the Tar Sands. We would not have enough development in the Tar Sands to do no more than—

Then, he continues:

> Therefore, you are going to run out of crude. You are going to cut off your traditional suppliers—

We do not have great reserves and whether windfalls go to international oil companies or not, they have to go to somebody to develop those reserves. Syncrude hopes to go on production by 1978, but they will be lucky if they are in production by 1980, and they are only going to produce 125,000 barrels per day. We need ten more Syncrude plants in the tar sands if we are to have enough for all of Canada. At page 45 of the committee report Mr. Armstrong emphasized again that if a pipeline were to be built to supply Montreal, another 200,000 barrels per day would have to be put through. That is the amount that western Canada could supply in view of the known reserves there. If the NDP, which is apparently running the government, believes that a national oil company is the answer—and that is one way in which we can prohibit the windfalls going to what we might call the wrong people—then we have to get into the business and get the national oil company producing oil.

In a recent column in the Toronto Star, Jack McArthur suggests that the government would have to pay about $2.5 billion to buy 51 per cent of the common stock of Imperial Oil at recent market prices. Referring to the government he said:

That would make you the leader in Canada but far from completely dominant.

He is quite correct and this is the choice that the government has to make. If they want to guarantee ample supplies of oil to all Canadians, they will have to get into development and that development will have to be speeded up. We have five or six years' supply for all of Canada.

Now, how do you speed up development? You entice and encourage somebody to do the development. But how do you entice and encourage them if you limit them to a price of $3.83 per barrel? It is commonly called $4 a barrel but $3.83 is what the companies in Alberta are getting today. How do you speed development at that price, particularly when development money will flow in the United States and when new oil is found there, the market price will be charged.

The Minister of Finance stated that the competitive forces of supply and demand are not responsible for the increase. At the time I said that point was debatable because, in a way, supply and demand are responsible for the increase. I have before me a pamphlet produced by the Petroleum Society of CIM dated September 30, 1970, the first page of which reads:

On Wednesday, September 23, 1970, Dr. Wilson Laird, Director of the Office of Oil and Gas, U.S. Department of the Interior, testified before a U.S. Senate Sub-Committee on the "current status of the American oil supply situation". In an abstract he said that the spare productive capacity for oil in the southern 48 states and in Venezuela is now almost fully being utilized.

In 1970 it was recognized that the oil in 48 states and Venezuela was being fully utilized! The paper continued:

Texas and Louisiana cannot raise production very much further and in fact, all ". . . the lower 48 states are approximately at their maximum production capacity at this time." He noted also very clearly that Venezuela the biggest overseas supplier of eastern U.S. and eastern Canada is producing almost at its maximum potential.

That was a statement made in 1970 by a man with full knowledge of the oil industry, and who was responsible to the United States government, when he testified before a U.S. Senate subcommittee. He pointed out that we will have to rely on some other sources if our consumption of oil increases. So supply and demand have played a part, Mr. Speaker. As early as 1969 and 1970 we should have expected that oil prices would increase.

Then what about the Arab situation? In a speech which I made in this House some time ago, I said that an oil expert had told me that in the North American market, oil consumption has increased by about 6 per cent per year for several years; that European and Japanese consumption has increased at a rate of about 12 per cent per year; and that to meet these increases the Arab countries would have to increase their production by at least 30 per cent per year. No matter who owned the oil, anybody increasing the production of a non-renewable resource by 30 per cent per year would start to wonder whether it would not run out some time. They have a legitimate right to increase their price somewhat, not as much as they have but as they have said, there are bigger fish in the water than higher oil prices and they are after the bigger fish. But, Mr. Speaker, they also cut back production by seven million barrels per day. Since they produce about 30 per cent of the oil in the world, this naturally creates a shortage. Therefore there is a tendency to say that supply and demand have had some effect on oil prices because of the Arab cutback. Whether that cutback was necessary is another question.

The question now comes up "What does the west want?". A socialist member from the golden triangle of Ontario said this afternoon that for years he had heard the expression "What does Quebec want?". Now, he is wondering "What does the west want?" That made people ponder. Richard Gwyn, a columnist for the Ottawa Journal interviewed Premier Lougheed of Alberta and Premier Blakeney of Saskatchewan and in an article on December 22, 1973, had this to say:

The affluence of Alberta is almost overpowering. New office blocks and apartment buildings tower upwards in Calgary and Edmonton. There is no sales tax, and home owners get a tax rebate.

The article continues:

"All of this comes from a depleting resource," says Lougheed. "The revenues won't last long. We have to use them to build a post-oil Alberta: petrochemical industries, steel, forestry products."

Blakeney says the same thing, only more cautiously.

That is to be expected from a Socialist, I suppose. That is what Alberta and Saskatchewan seek and will get. According to Gwyn's column, that industry must come from somewhere. He goes on to say:

• (1500)

Ontario is going to be the loser. Both premiers believe that in the energy debate, Ontario has been hiding behind Ottawa's skirts.

I am not saying that is not right. Alberta and the west want more industry, more development and more people. We do not want to see only central Canada continuing to grow: I do not think it is wise to expect that. The federation of provinces, working under a federal system of government, want to divide up the spoils. The provinces are asking Alberta to do that. We are supposed to divide up our resources, not to be too greedy and to hand out our oil. Alberta says, "Fine; we will do that." But it says to the rest of the country, "You do the same; you give us some of your industry. Move your industry and your people out here. We do not want to see Canada grow and become industrialized at the expense of our non-renewable resources."

To my mind that is an important point. In some ways underdeveloped nations and countries in the Middle east are saying the same thing. They are saying, "If you want our oil, we will sell it. But your manufactured goods are too expensive; we cannot afford them. We need manufacturing industries and we want more industrialization." That position is understandable.

If this country's industrial policy is to be based on our energy resources, it is clear that there must be development in my part of Canada. It is not good enough for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) to say that we will give money to the unemployed, or that we will spend money creating jobs in areas of unemployment. That is not what Premier Lougheed of Alberta is saying. He wants Canada to be built up where the resources are. Our work force in Canada is mobile. Alberta welcomes people from all over Canada. The province is saying, "Do not expect us to supply you with our non-renewable resources at a low price which does not encourage the further development of those resources."

There has been much talk of windfall profits. I suppose the oil companies are making windfall profits. What are they doing with the money? Last year, 70 per cent of the profit made by the oil companies was plowed back into the development of more oil in Canada, not necessarily in Alberta alone. Shell spent $125 million in exploration off the east coast and did not make a significant find. Huge expenditures are involved in the development of oil and gas resources and in bringing them to market. Panarctic has spent $45 million of the federal government's money in finding and developing natural gas, and much more must be spent in taking the gas to market: the linking of the market with the gas wells will entail a very large expenditure.

What does this bill do? It provides for the imposition of an export tax. At the end of four months, that is, at the end of January, that tax will have brought in about $145 million. The government says that 50 per cent of the proceeds of the tax will go back to the provinces. You could dig up all kinds of quotations from Hansard to show that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) has suggested that the other 50 per cent will be spent in the provinces in the development of resources, so that politicians who follow him can stand up and say, "We still have reserves for five or six years". Perhaps that will be said five or six years from now, although I hope development will keep ahead of our rate of consumption. However, this bill does not say that. The other 50 per cent will go to federal government coffers to help bail out the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) with respect to equalization payments.

Mr. Alexander: That is not what Macdonald said.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): That is not what the minister said, quite right. Just over a month ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in this House that this money will go back to the provinces. He said in the question period that it will go back to the provinces for developing more energy supplies. He has not said that recently; he has said we can do a number of things, equalize the price or things of that sort. He did not say how we would spend the other 50 per cent.

Mr. Alexander: There is confusion over there.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): There certainly is. The bill does not say where the money from the export tax is to go. It does not guarantee the provinces 50 per cent. It merely says that 50 per cent of the tax goes to the province; it does not say that 50 per cent of the capital charge must go to the province. There is a difference.

Mr. Stanfield: The bill says that 50 per cent may be paid.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): As the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) says, the bill only says that 50 per cent may be paid to the province. I think the minister owes this House a clear explanation. Is this to be the first and only export charge to be levied on the export of our resources? Is the provincial government to get 50 per cent of the present tax, or 50 per cent of the charge?

If the charge increases to $10 per month, the government will gain $300 million per month, of which the provincial share would be $150 million. Oil companies, whether provincially, internationally or Canadian-owned, must have adequate returns which will encourage them to find more oil. They will not be so encouraged if the price is held to $3.83. A wise and resourceful premier would hold off the discovery of any more oil until the price went higher and we could market our non-renewable resources at fair and equitable prices. That means, as the Toronto Star said, prices higher than are being charged today.

The Prime Minister said that oil prices must rise if we are to ensure the development of our oil sands. It is no secret in Alberta that the agreement reached with Syncrude outlines a schedule under which oil prices between 1978 and 2000 A.D. will rise to nearly $15 per barrel in order to provide 7 per cent return on capital.

Mr. Stanfield: That will not apply right away.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): That will not be right away. It is conceivable that in the 22 years between 1978 and 2000 A.D. the price could go to higher than $20 per barrel, especially if present inflation rates continue under this government.

Mr. Stanfield: They will not be here that long.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): No, they will not be here that long. Even the Prime Minister admits that there must be some increase in the price of our oil or our resources will not be developed. The independent petroleum producers of Alberta have told us that it costs over $14 per barrel to find the oil which must be found to replace the oil we are now using. Today it costs $14 to find a barrel of oil. This gives some idea that we can expect further development at $3.83 a barrel.

It should be clear to all Canadians that oil security means national security. The minister and the government owe it to all Canadians, whether they be in the five eastern or the five western provinces, to encourage further finds and development of our resources so we can have the oil security and national security which we need. We will not encourage further development with a national oil company which is only being allotted $40 million. In an article in yesterday's Toronto Star headed "Ottawa thinks small in oil big league", Mr. McArthur said—and I do not like the expression—it is just petty cash and peanuts. If the Minister of Finance and his cohorts think that socialism is the answer and a national oil company would do a better job than private enterprise, they should buy 51 per cent of the stock of Imperial Oil. According to Mr. McArthur this would cost $2.5 billion. For Shell Canada the figure would be $600 million and for Gulf Canada it would be $750 million. Mr. McArthur had all the prices in yesterday's Toronto Star.

Get in the business, boys, but let's find further reserves. We cannot expect Canadians in any part of this country to be secure with a five or six-year supply of oil. According to Mr. Armstrong, the president of Imperial Oil, that is all we have. It should be pointed out that since World War II there have been eight periods in the free world when there has been what might be called a shortfall of oil supply. In every other year the American supply of oil has taken up the slack. In essence, the American supply has bailed out the western world on every other occasion. Today that supply is completely used up; they are short 8 or 9 per cent of their requirements, which is not very much—but they used to export. As recently as seven or eight years ago they did not even want to accept Alberta's oil.

We must realize that this oil tax concept, oil charge concept or oil export charge concept is of very short range. The best thing that could happen to Canadians today would be to have an election and get this government out of office, because these short-term policies with which they are trying to obtain votes are endangering the long-term security of every Canadian whether he lives in Alberta, the Maritimes, Newfoundland, Quebec or Ontario.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): These short-term policies are endangering the security of this nation. As I said, oil security means national security. We must have further development to give us oil security. This proposed measure will not do that. The minister should explain that this measure will only be in effect until spring, at which time Alberta will be quite willing to phase in as gently as possible an increase in oil prices for the poor people of central Canada, Ontario in particular. Certainly it must be phased in if we want to create the oil security which will give us national security.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I should advise the House that if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) speaks now he will close the debate on second reading.

[Mr. Horner (Crowfoot).]

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to deal briefly with two or three points that have been raised in the debate during the past day and a half. The first point was raised by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas). It concerns the destination of the 50 per cent of the apportionment that under the bill will go to the federal government during the first four months of the export tax.

The House will recall the bill provides that in the months of October, November and December, 1973, and January, 1974, the proceeds of the export tax are apportioned 50-50 between the producing provinces, on the ratio of their production, and the federal government. The amount of money we estimate to be dealing with in the four months is $152 million, which is very close to the figure put forward by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). Under the bill, $76 million will go to the provinces. As a result of the transfer of that money, those revenues will qualify under the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act as shared revenues and the bill to the Canadian taxpayer under the heading of equalization will be in the nature of $25 million. That is an account that will have to be taken into consideration.

I want to give the undertaking that regarding the $76 million which will go to the federal government, that money will be spent on and invested in research, resources and development industries in western Canada within the range of commitments given at the western economic opportunities conference.

An hon. Member: Exploration?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Including exploration.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister is withholding the amount he estimates will be required through equalization payments.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No, Mr. Speaker. I recognize that in terms of the commitment given by my colleague, the equalization payment for those four months is something the federal taxpayer will have to bear. I might deal with that at a later stage.

What I am saying now about the 50-50 apportionment under this bill applies only to the months of October, November, December and January. That was the limit of the commitment of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald). The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in his statement in the House, that the sharing of revenues after January 31 will depend upon what arrangements we can make with the provinces at the forthcoming conference.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): It will not be less than 50 per cent?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is a question to be negotiated. I would not want to prejudice either the federal or provincial position on that subject.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): You can start from that base.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I never neglect the words of the hon. member for Crowfoot. This afternoon I did not know whether or not he was bearing a message to this House and the government; but I will read his words very carefully.

I now wish to deal with the second subject. The Leader of the Opposition expressed concern about the export charge part of the bill. I heard his tentative suggestion again this morning in the question period. It is important to note that the sharing of the proceeds of the revenue after January 31 has been left open for negotiation at the conference. This is a matter for the two levels of government. It does not directly affect producers, exporters or consumers, but the situation as between governments on the one hand and exporters on the other obviously has to be clarified as soon as possible, whatever the split may be. If an agreement is reached at the conference which is inconsistent with the bill, and other mechanisms are decided on, it is obvious the government will seek to amend the oil export charge act at the next session of parliament accordingly.

• (1520)

I have been asked by the hon. member for Crowfoot, by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) and others what the eventual price will be. The Prime Minister set out the principles in his speech to the House setting forth the national oil policy. I declared it again yesterday in general terms. I urge the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands to read the principles upon consideration of which I think the price ought to be based. But in the final analysis price will represent the source of the revenues which have to be shared as against the burdens which must also be shared in this country through taxation or whatever mechanism may be used.

Today we face a situation—I am speaking of the fiscal relationship between the federal government and the provinces—in which, because of international price distortions imposed by a quasi-monopolistic situation, new benefits and new burdens are experienced in various parts of the country. It is incumbent upon us to achieve some sort of solution whereby a fair return is given to the companies concerned and due recognition is given to the fact that the resources of the provinces are being depleted.

In addition, the federal government must be left in a position where it can equalize the benefits and equalize cost factors affecting consumers, including industrial users, across the country while taking into consideration also the additional equalization burden which falls upon the Canadian taxpayer as a result of additional, uncontemplated revenues going to the producing provinces. These, as the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge said this morning, represent about one-third of a dollar for every dollar of revenue going, say, to the province of Alberta. In other words, for every dollar of additional revenue, under the equalization formula the federal taxpayer has a commitment under the fiscal arrangements legislation to distribute 33 cents to the seven provinces receiving equalization payments.

All this has to be worked into an equation which is fair as far as the sharing of benefits is concerned and fair as far as the sharing of costs is concerned. The federal taxpayer must not find himself in the position of picking up the tab for the whole exercise. This being the case, the matter becomes one for negotiation between the federal government and the provinces, taking into consideration, obviously, the position of the companies as well.

Mr. Stanfield: You can always come back to parliament.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Yes, but I cannot give a commitment as to price to this parliament and yet enable my colleagues, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, to attend this conference in a bona fide, meaningful way. I must have a flexible tax mechanism enabling us to enter this conference free and willing to deal with the producing provinces which own the Crown lands in a way that makes sense.

Mr. Alexander: All you need is a proposal, not a bill.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Well, the federal government must be able to rely on a mechanism which at least places it in a bargaining position equivalent to that enjoyed by the provincial governments.

Mr. Alexander: You are moving unilaterally.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): No. The final question put to me, or implied during the debate was whether the government was taking the taxing power away from the elected representatives of the people, here in parliament assembled, and delegating it to some other body, in this case the National Energy Board. Again it must be borne in mind that the situation is volatile and unpredictable. The government must be allowed a reasonable degree of flexibility to deal with the situation. The maximum figure presently allowed in the bill is $4, which I suggest is unrealistic and should be replaced by a figure of $10 which would carry us through in the immediate future.

The figure of $10 would establish the outside parameter of the charge, thus protecting the traditional rights of parliament. The government is not asking for a blank cheque, but for a maximum amount beyond which it cannot go. There are precedents for granting authority of this sort and when we get to clause by clause examination of the bill I shall be glad to cite them. But the actual amount of the export charge after January would be set monthly, not by some advisory committee drawn from the private sector, as one or two members have suggested, but by the governor in council, the cabinet, which is the body made up of elected representatives of the people reporting directly to parliament, subject to a maximum amount, whatever it is, set by the representatives of the people. The governor in council will act on the advice of the National Energy Board which is an independent agency possessing the most expert knowledge in this area.

These are the points I wanted to deal with at the present stage. Obviously, when we get into committee further consultations and discussions as to how to resolve this matter will be necessary. But if I may say so, I believe this has been a damned good debate.

Mr. Stanfield: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wish to say that I expect the bill will go through second reading without difficulty. But it is not to be taken by the Minister of Finance that there is any agreement on our part to the proposal he is making to bring the $4 up to $10. It should be clearly understood that the passing of the bill on second reading does not involve any agreement on our part to the change.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I hope we shall have further consultations about that, but I can assure the Leader of the Opposition that I do not take anything in this House for granted.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Would the minister permit a question? Since this whole question of oil and the tax has aroused great national interest, will the conference in January be open to the public and will it be televised so that we can take part in it at least as an audience?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): As I understand it, the Prime Minister is the host of the conference and it is to be an open conference. If the provinces agree, it could be televised, I understand, though I might stand corrected by the Prime Minister. As to whether or not there might be participation by way of a live hot-line, I am not sure this is in the cards.

• (1530)

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I should like to pose a question for clarification. In response to a question asked this morning by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), the minister said—I think these were his words—that the charge had to be maintained and there could not be a substitution or a continuation of the excise tax because of international as well as dominion-provincial aspects. He has given us the dominion-provincial reasons and whether they are justifiable remains to be seen; but would he now give us the international reason he needs the charge?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is because of the unpredictability of the international price factor as against the imposition of or voluntary agreement to a price freeze. This is to give us a margin against predictability. It is for that reason I suggested we needed a flexible instrument. The "blues" I received in this respect were a little garbled.

An hon. Member: We will give you that in about two months.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I hope you have a good weekend.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. McCleave in the chair.

The Chairman: The committee will commence its consideration in respect of clause 2 of the bill.

On Clause 2—Definitions.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, this bill really establishes two very important departures from established practice and indicates a very drastic and new change in our concept of confederation. I am afraid this will not do anything to decrease the drastic alienation of western Canada. The problem raised is that for the first time, at least to any large extent, non-renewable resources belonging to provinces are to be subject to federal regulation in order to give what is called by the Minister of Finance a fair oil policy for all of Canada, and at the same time levy an export tax which will not be returned to the provinces in total or will not go through the usual channels of distribution to the companies and eventually to the provinces and to the whole of the country.

Let us consider what is a fair price oil policy. It will consist, so far as the consumers are concerned, of providing the smallest price to be paid by consumers of oil and gas, while still making it economical for oil and gas to flow from the ground. Conversely, the producers will seek the highest price possible. It is fortunate at the moment that this oil and gas is produced in western Canada, because it makes it easier for this administration to continue to discriminate against that part of the country. This direct invasion of provincial rights seems to be unprecedented. This tax bill will do nothing to assuage the feeling that western Canada is cut off from the destiny of the country and that its only value to Canadian confederation is as a resource base.

This past year has seen an increase in the stresses and strains on confederation. These stresses and strains have increased, not diminished. The end of last year saw a call to arms by Alberta and Saskatchewan, with governments of totally different political stripe, to make sure they have control in respect of the price of their own oil. The small possibility which emerged from the Calgary conference that things would be better has obviously become a political mirage. Even at that conference the federal government made little or no promise of substance, even as to regional banking and freight rates. Alberta and Saskatchewan have moved to take new powers unto themselves, and Ottawa is finding this difficult. We may become involved in a constitutional battle. Of course, if the oil and gas were located in central Canada, Ottawa would not have this problem with the legislation which Alberta and Saskatchewan are now enacting.

Perhaps it would be wise to look at the reason the world price of oil has changed and how our Canadian situation fits into the circumstances. There has been a worldwide increase in commodity prices. One cannot really blame the Arabs for increasing the price of their oil. The minister suggested there was a quasi-monopoly situation involved, but in fact they were selling oil for five cents a gallon and finding that it wound up in western Europe selling at $1 a gallon. The price of their crude oil has increased only 16 per cent in 25 years up until the recent increases. The Shah of Iran, as reported in last week's newspapers, made what I think is a very apt comment when he said the western nations had been buying oil for practically nothing and selling them goods at rates 50 times as high as the increase in the price of oil.

As the minister has said, the price of Arab oil at the end of 1972 was $2.50 a barrel, with much of it ending up in western Europe where consumers were paying over $30 for the resulting gasoline. One cannot really blame the Arabs for asking a higher price for this non-renewable resource. We should perhaps also heed the Shah's statement when he suggested that western civilization should not be burning gas and oil in their cars and homes, but should be conserving it in order that it could be used for the manufacture of those things which are so important to our industries.

In addition to the increase in the price of oil there has been an upward revision of the price of renewable and non-renewable resources. I think that is one reason this fair price for oil will create problems. For instance, the world copper price has increased by 300 per cent over the past three years. The price has almost doubled since last year. The prices of lead and zinc have increased respectively by 200 per cent and 800 per cent since 1968. This is much greater than the increase in the price of oil. The price if iron ore has increased by 50 per cent since 1969. The prices of many other commodities have increased substantially in recent years. Nickel prices have increased 50 per cent, grain prices have increased 300 per cent since January, 1972, and lumber prices have increased substantially. In addition, there have been varying degrees of price increases in respect of chemicals which represent over $530 million in exports, with the major source being Ontario and Quebec and oil and gas being the largest base component in their production.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, we export a tremendous amount of electricity, some of which is produced in Ontario by using Alberta gas. Bearing this in mind, should Alberta gas be priced artificially low while Ontario electricity commands the highest possible price on the United States market? It certainly can be seen that the increase in the price of world commodities and many of our resources has been even greater than the increase in the price of oil and gas. This certainly poses the question: If we are to have a two-price system for oil and gas over a long period of time, particularly when in fact oil and gas can be replaced by other forms of energy in many instances—and the world will have to use these other forms of energy eventually—will this two-price system in the long run be a good thing for Canada?

The export tax applied across the board will, in effect, increase the cost of exports to foreign buyers or, alternatively, reduce the Canadian dollar income to the Canadian producer. If the Canadian domestic price is kept low, the purchasing power of the Canadian dollar within Canada for these products will be increased. Artificially low resource prices within Canada will automatically lead to uneconomical and wasteful use of the resource, particularly in comparison with the situation which exists in the rest of the free world. It also creates an unbudgeted tax bonanza for the federal government at the expense of the purchaser and/or the provincial governments' royalty income and requires a costly bureaucracy to administer it. It does not increase the purchasing power of the Canadian dollar relative to its products or imports.

The export tax on oil has the effect of negating specified prices. It destroys, to some extent, the sanctity of contracts. It is a neat way to increase Canadian income in a period of rising prices and will be just as effective on some of our larger export items such as metals, wood products and grain contracts. But it can work the other way as well. If world prices collapse, will foreign buyers live up to their purchase contracts, or could this start significant unemployment in our mine and forest operations? In a period of rising prices, will foreign buyers live up to their longer term contracts to supply bauxite or many other products in which we are not self-sufficient?

If a price freeze and export tax is required on oil, it should be equally justified on all other natural resources. A large range of manufactured and semi-manufactured products use oil and gas as one of their major components. Many of these products are exported. If an export tax and price freeze is applied to oil and gas, then it should be applicable to those products which will be subsidized by cheap Canadian energy and sub-stock. Sudden change in the value of base products clearly has an upsetting effect on the economy. Sudden changes create dislocation and require faster adjustments than is humanly possible. I think, therefore, that in the long term the price of oil and gas must approach world prices unless we wish to accept considerable retaliation by our trading partners and create great problems internally.

The price freeze, with all the uncertainty and the problems between the federal and provincial governments, is certainly creating problems for the future in the matter of supply. It is probably only a natural response that most consumers feel there are unlimited supplies of oil and gas at ever decreasing prices. It is wise to look at what the United States did 19 years ago which brought them into this position. At that time prices were placed on products under the guise of providing assistance to consumers. Now it has become apparent that this was a great disservice to the consumer. The incentive for producers to explore was taken away and additional reserves did not keep pace with demand. Wasteful use of energy through the use of automobiles, and so on, permeated the North American economy.

Contrary to what Canada is doing, the United States is taking off price restraints and allowing the market to set prices on new supplies. Record exploration dollars are flowing back to help find the much needed energy. Here in Canada we are following the example of the American administration of 19 years ago. This would make more sense if we had been steadily increasing our reserves, but the last three years have shown a decrease in conventional oil resources by half a billion barrels a year. There is certain to be, until the provincial problems are settled, a very unsatisfactory situation in the structure of the industry.

Then, again, the Mackenzie Valley pipeline must be in a state of great uncertainty. It is generally considered that this would be beneficial to Canada but requires the joint co-operation of the United States and the Canadian governments. But the unilateral application of government must certainly sour our external relations and make the possibility of coming to an agreement on the pipeline much more difficult. It will obviously encourage the Americans to think that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) are not very sincere and do not have any great conviction that the Mackenzie Valley pipeline could or should be built. This will perpetuate the view of those on the United States side who believe that oil out of Prudhoe Bay should be moved under the guise of the United States flag. Furthermore, with the possible formation of the national petroleum company, all the large integrated companies such as Imperial, Shell, and so on, are a possible takeover. Until the actual framework is decided, the fear of possible takeover is present.

It is certainly small wonder that investment brokers do not recommend the purchasing of stock of the senior integrated companies because they are prevented from going outside Canada, but recommend those small Canadian companies which have acreages outside Canada and which are not affected by the political quagmire in which Canada finds itself. The North Sea especially is attractive. It seems significant, also, that most of these small companies have more Canadian money in them than the large integrated companies which are precluded from going outside Canada. The small company is able to operate outside Canada and indeed around the world. It seems ironic, at a time when we are complaining about the amount of foreign investment in our resource industry, that it is more practical for a Canadian to invest his money in a Canadian company operating outside this country than it is to invest in a company operating inside the country.

I now turn to the application of this tax and the stated intention of the government to keep the price of oil and gas below the world average in order to prevent hardship throughout Canada. However, there are other sides to the coin. Premier Blakeney showed one of these, as reported in a Globe and Mail article, when he pointed out that Saskatchewan, as opposed to Alberta, on the whole is a have-not province except that it does have some extra oil. He points out that as consumers—and the same could be said for Alberta—the people of the province of Saskatchewan depend on the state of the world market for the availability and pricing of commodities such as farm machinery, automobiles, lumber, fruit, vegetables, and so on, which are required by a province with a severe climate.

But this government in Ottawa is saying that it is not right that the province of Saskatchewan should sell its oil at the world market price, and it should be sold at a price related to cost. If Canada is to have a price for oil which in the long run would be below the world price, then this involves really the setting of a political price for gas and oil. If a government must set the price, it will be set on the political pressure of the day and not on any valid market price. A central, national marketing agency for oil will find itself torn between the consumer, who will want oil at as cheap a price as possible, and the producer who naturally will want as high a price as possible. As well as that, conflicts between the various regions of Canada will continue to arise and will become more serious. If these conflicts are not resolved, confederation will become increasingly an empty drum.

I suggest that in the future we should handle so-called windfall profits through a type of excess profits tax. Such a mechanism would allow for further bona fide exploration funds which we need very badly. The minister has said that he has $76 million to give for exploration. I suggest that the federal government is not involved in the exploration of oil and that $76 million will not get it very far. My proposal would not disturb the royalty system according to which the provinces obtain their income and, above all, it would include all the resource companies and all the gold companies which have seen the price of their product go up three times. It would include the copper companies which have seen the price of their product go up three times, the zinc companies which have seen the price of their product go up eight times, as well as the manufacturing industries which are also making windfall profits as a result of the situation in the world.

Furthermore, if this suggestion were adopted, the tax would not carry the stigma of the present export tax which seems to be directed at one or two of the prairie provinces and these provinces will not be the only ones to carry the brunt of providing cheap oil and gas for Canadian consumers.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, I would like to start by saying that I wondered, when I read the statements of the Prime Minister, of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and of the Minister of Justice, who is from Saskatchewan, whether this government by accident or design is heading toward a confrontation with the provinces. Then, when I saw the proposals in this bill which quite deliberately infringe upon the resource base of the provinces in the proposed charges to be levied on oil from the provinces, I wondered if the stage is being set rather deliberately for the meeting between the first ministers of the provinces and the Prime Minister in the future.

The Premier of Saskatchewan—part of which province I have the honour to represent—felt it necessary to state on the public media the position of that province in respect of the oil resources in Saskatchewan. He did not adopt an attitude of confrontation, or an aggressive or belligerent attitude as did the Prime Minister in Vancouver and as did the Minister of Justice when he had the opportunity. In fact, the Premier of Saskatchewan said:

> —I want to talk to you about our new oil policy for Saskatchewan.
> Before I do let me first say that the Saskatchewan government approves of most of the moves toward a national energy policy announced late last week by the federal government.
> We support extension of the oil pipeline to Montreal—
>
> We support the intent of the federal government to hold down the price for Canadian consumers of western Canadian crude.
> We do not, however, accept the federal government's division of proceeds from the export tax which gives to the producing provinces only half of the windfall profits on exported oil.

I quote this for the benefit of the members of this committee because I think that the Minister of Finance and those shepherding the bill may not be aware of this fact. The Premier of Saskatchewan continued:

> Oil and gas are resources that clearly belong to the provinces. It has been our position from the start that the full proceeds of the export tax, which really represent windfall profits, must be returned to the owners of the resource, the producing provinces.

This is a pretty clear statement. If you look at the bill you will see different sections relating to the export charge which state that those who deliver or handle the fuel shall do so and so, shall keep certain records and do certain things. However, when it comes to what is to be returned to the provinces, the bill states, as the hon. member for Crowfoot mentioned, that the federal government may return half to the province. There is the difference, Mr. Chairman. The premier went on to say:

> Our new oil policy . . . is to conserve oil for Saskatchewan consumers in the future, to capture for the people of Saskatchewan the full benefit of all future windfall profits and to encourage further exploration and research in Saskatchewan.

In a statement to the House on December 6, the Prime Minister said that the exploration company would undertake exploration in the Northwest Territories and in the provinces. I wonder whether the federal government will set up an exploration agency which will turn to the provinces of Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia and Manitoba and take out a licence to explore for oil in those provinces. Is that the intention? There are many loose ends lying around here. It was pointed out to the Minister of Finance by the Leader of the Official Opposition and by the energy spokesman for our party in the initial stages of discussion on second reading—

The Chairman: Order, please. I wonder if the hon. member would not agree that this is a good point at which to recognize that it is four o'clock. If so, and I thank the hon. member for his co-operation, it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to consider the bill again at the next sitting of the House.

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills, notices of motions and private bills.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I believe there have been consultations and agreement to take Bill C-46 standing in the name of the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather).

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO PROHIBIT OWNERSHIP OF PETS BY PERSONS CONVICTED OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock) moved that Bill C-46, to amend the Criminal Code (cruelty to animals), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-46 now before the House is one which I introduced five or six years ago, and the government has taken some action along the lines proposed in it. Actually, I had thought of dropping the bill, giving credit to the government for acting in that way and trying to take a little credit myself for inspiring that action. However, as one active in the parliamentary animal welfare committee I am in contact with the Animal Welfare Federation of Canada and I have found from them, from the SPCA and generally speaking from the humane movement throughout the country that there is still need for action in line with what this bill proposes. As a result, I have left the bill on the order paper and I am grateful for having these few minutes to explain why I think that at least the subject matter of the bill should be referred to a standing committee for further consideration.

The explanatory notes to the bill state:

> The purpose of this bill is to enable a magistrate who has imposed a sentence upon a person convicted of an offence of cruelty to animals to prohibit also such person from owning, harbouring or otherwise possessing an animal or a bird for a stated period of time as part of the sentence.
> At present, magistrates are limited to fining or jailing any person convicted of cruelty to animals. The vast majority of magistrates are most reluctant to ever impose a jail sentence for this type of crime.

I have already given some recognition to the fact that the government has taken steps in line with this private member's bill. Actually, this was done when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was minister of justice. It would have done a great deal of good except for the fact that the government qualified what was proposed to the extent that persons found guilty of cruelty to animals suffer no prohibition of ownership of animals or birds until they have been convicted for a second time. The power of prohibiting these people from animal ownership is given to magistrates only on a second offence. According to the SPCA and the humane societies, this makes very little sense and I am told that some of the courts are also unhappy with the present legislation. Magistrates will rarely jail a person for animal cruelty to animals. Fines are a most inequitable manner of handing out punishment. A large corporation such as a multimillion-dollar railway company can be, and in fact has been, involved in some phase of cruelty to animals and fined only $100. A pet shop may be fined $50.

The key to curtailing cruelty to animals in this area is to give power to the magistrates to prohibit ownership of pets. For the law to continue to allow the guilty to own animals or birds, thus letting them be mistreated for a further period, is very wrong. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the courts are clogged with various other types of cases. With their limited resources it is most difficult for the humane societies of the country to bring persons to court; and when a person is brought to court he may be released with a warning not to commit the offence again.

It is true that in British Columbia and Ontario under other legislation there is power to remove a mistreated bird or animal from ownership for a limited period of time. But while this may be some help, it does very little to stop the cruelty that goes on, some of it of a rather gruesome nature. What is wanted by the animal welfare movement is a clear provision in the Criminal Code, effective right across the nation, which will on a first offence prohibit ownership or possession of animals or birds for a period of at least, I would say, two years.

There is every protection now in the law for the convicted party to appeal. His rights are well protected in the ordinary way under the present judicial system. Prohibition of ownership is the one effective and exemplary punishment which will ease the suffering of so many birds and animals that are in captivity.

I would like to conclude by drawing the attention of hon. members to the existence of the parliamentary animal welfare committee. This is a voluntary, ad hoc group made up of members of both houses and of all parties. We meet from time to time to discuss matters such as those touched upon in this bill. I would hope that many hon. members will introduce themselves to the work of this committee so that from time to time we may all gain factual and useful information on this important subject.

In conclusion, I urge hon. members at least to permit the subject matter of this bill to be referred to a standing committee, presumably the justice and legal affairs committee, where it can be examined in detail.

[Translation]

Mrs. Albanie Morin (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, it seems rather ironic that I, who introduced an amendment to Bill C-2, wish to take part in the debate on Bill C-46 aimed at preventing cruelty to animals.

I would like at this point to congratulate the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather) for introducing Bill C-46. However I think we should undertake the education of society at large which is rather indifferent about charges laid as regards cruelty to animals.

I more particularly refer to clause 1 of the bill. It is quite commendable, as I said, and I quote:

(7) —the Court may, if it thinks fit, prohibit such person from owning, harbouring, or otherwise possessing any animal, bird, domestic or otherwise, for a period not exceeding two months—

This is the case of a person who has been sentenced previously.

In fact, who will ever go to the police to complain that such a person, previously convicted of an offence, has an animal or a bird at home? It takes a dreamer to introduce such a clause, unless the public is really concerned about eliminating cruelty to animals.

I must say again that I am fully in agreement with the purpose of the bill introduced by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock. I hope this bill will not end up the way of most private bills, but be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

It is interesting to note the way people react the cruelty to animals. We have daily evidence of this. On the highways of the province of Quebec, on the great many occasions when an animal has just been hit, how many people will stop to give assistance to the wounded animal? More often than not, a second vehicle fails to stop, runs over the animal and puts it out of its misery.

I now come back to Bill C-46. It is all very well to pass legislation to prevent cruelty but if nobody bothers to lodge a complaint against those who are cruel to animals what is going to be the use of this legislation?

I remember a few years ago going to the country where I happened to see a horse which was blind in one eye. I asked neighbours how come that poor animal had only one eye. I was simply told his owner got mad one day and struck it in the eye. I noted with great stupefaction that no one among that farmer's neighbours had filed a complaint with the police department to have action taken against that farmer who had been cruel to his horse.

Another time in Quebec City I heard about two children who had been very cruel to a cat. They had poured gasoline over the poor cat, then with a match set him on fire and the poor cat was burnt alive. The parents of those children never stopped to think about the poor animal. So once again this Bill C-46 is very commendable but people would have to be educated, particularly children.

I would not want to spend undue time on this because I would like very much this bill to be referred to the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. I now stop at clause 1(8) where one can read:

(8) Everyone who owns, harbours or otherwise possesses any animal or bird, domestic or otherwise, during a period for which he is under prohibition as provided is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction—

Once again how is this provision going to be applied? If people do not even care about helping injured animals on roads or in farm yards how are the provisions of such a bill going to be enforced? I leave that matter to the hon. member's consideration, and again I congratulate him for aiming at preventing cruelty to animals, but in my opinion the enforcement of the bill seems a little questionable.

• (1610)

[English]

Mr. Walter Smith (Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, the subject matter of Bill C-46 is one which is dear to the heart, I am sure, of every member of the House. Indeed, it is a subject matter which can be of far more significance than one might ordinarily ascribe to it. I believe a good deal of the essential character of any society can be learned from an examination of that society's laws with respect to the treatment of animals. If a society, through its laws on the subject, demonstrates a deep respect for the well-being of animals, it can be a reliable indicator that that society is well advanced in human values. The degree of sensitivity and humanity of any society can, in significant measure, be judged by its laws on the treatment of animals. We recall the sage test of simpler times: You may know a good deal of a man's character by the way in which he treats his horses.

Fortunately, I believe our present Canadian law on the treatment of animals reflects well upon Canadian society. Our concerns in this respect, as reflected in our laws in this regard, are well advanced. Our criminal law prohibits anyone from causing or permitting unnecessary pain or suffering or injury to animals or birds; it prohibits abandoning animals in distress, or wilfully neglecting to provide suitable accommodation, food, care and shelter; it prohibits gaming with animals, animal fights for gaming purposes, and so on.

Also, I believe it added appreciably to the law when four years ago the Criminal Code was amended by this government to empower a judge to prohibit a person from owning or possessing an animal or a bird if that person had demonstrated vicious or cruel conduct toward animals. The amendments contained in Bill C-46 would not in themselves substantially alter the current state of the law but would bring about some minor changes. I think none of us would want to argue with the general purport of the bill to strengthen the sanction and deterrence against abuse to animals. In so far as these amendments would affect that general purport, they would receive my wholehearted support. I believe there is some merit in some aspects of the bill, but unfortunately it seems to me that merit is combined with a principle which is essentially unacceptable.

I can see some merit in permitting a judge to order that a person be prohibited from owning or having in his custody an animal or a bird if that person is convicted of cruelty to the animal or the bird. At present, the law allows the judge to prohibit a person from owning or possessing an animal or a bird only on a second, third, fourth or subsequent conviction for cruelty. There may be some merit in giving a judge the power to prohibit ownership or possession by a person upon his first conviction, but combined with that I see in the bill a principle which always has been fraught with danger and one in respect of which we should always in this House proceed only with the greatest care and caution, and that is the principle of minimum penalties.

Under the present law, if a man is convicted for a second time of cruelty to an animal the judge may prohibit that person from owning or possessing an animal for a period of up to two years. And if the person who is the subject of a prohibition order of that kind breaches that order by taking possession or ownership of an animal while under prohibition, then he is guilty of an additional offence and may be fined up to $500 and imprisoned for a period of up to six months. You will note that the present penalty for disregarding an order of prohibition made by a judge is a fine of up to $500 and/or imprisonment of up to six months. In both cases the penalty is defined in terms of maximum; that is, a maximum fine of $500 and a maximum term of imprisonment of six months.

This is the case with all summary conviction offences. Every summary conviction offence under the Criminal Code, including this summary conviction offence—that is, cruelty to animals—carries with it the penalty of a fine up to a maximum of $500 and/or imprisonment up to a maximum of six months. The bill before the House would alter the penalty on breach of a prohibition order against ownership after conviction. It would impose a minimum fine of $250 and would empower the judge to impose a term of imprisonment for a minimum period of three months. In other words, it would remove the discretion which is currently vested in the judge. If he found the man guilty, he would have to fine him at least $250, and if he imposed a term of imprisonment it would have to be for at least three months. That would be the case, totally irrespective of the circumstances surrounding the commission of the crime.

One can readily see that this amendment removes the flexibility which traditionally is vested in the judge, to fit the sentence to the crime. The seriousness of the crime can range all the way from a rather slight and technical breach of the law to a blatant and horrendous disregard for it. By and large, our law has adopted the principle of permitting the maximum flexibility for judges to impose a sentence which fits the seriousness of the crime. Under the present law we say to the court, in effect, that if a person is convicted of breaching an order of prohibition against owning an animal, it may impose a fine on that person of whatever amount it considers to be appropriate, given the seriousness of the offence, and may impose a term of imprisonment from one day, in the case of less serious circumstances, up to as much as six months in the most serious circumstances.

Throughout, it is left to the court to determine what the sentence should be in accordance with the seriousness and the circumstances of the offence. And throughout, of course, the decision by the court is subject to appeal either by the Crown or by the aggrieved person. It is this principle which would be altered if Bill C-46 in its present form were to be approved. It would remove the flexibility in the court to fit the sentence to the seriousness of the crime. It would force the court to impose a minimum sentence of $250 and, in the case of imprisonment, to a minimum term of three months. That sentence may in a particular case be far too severe. In yet another case and in other circumstances it may be far too lenient. By and large and in a general kind of way we have always resisted building into our criminal law precisely defined penalties, as opposed to defining certain parameters within which our courts are left with discretion to be exercised according to the seriousness of the particular offence.

As to the proposed penalty for breach of a prohibition order with respect to this particular crime, I seriously question whether a minimum penalty is really justified. Without in any way condoning cruelty to animals, which is a reprehensible act and ought always to be subject to punishment, I think it is necessary to keep the offence in proper perspective. If a minimum penalty is called for here, then the penalty for many other seriously anti-social acts would have to be reconsidered.

It may display less a faith than is justified in the good sense of the judiciary of our country to prescribe minimum penalties for a situation where there has been flagrant disregard of an order of prohibition made by the court. Indeed, I believe that if we were to accept the principle of minimum penalties with respect to this particular crime, that is, with respect to the crime of cruelty to animals, we would have to reassess the penalties that apply to all summary conviction offences under the Criminal Code. I do not think one could justify the imposition of minimum fines and minimum terms of imprisonment with respect to this particular crime and not have similar minimums in respect of other summary conviction offences which may indeed be more serious than this one. It is for this reason that I say before we accept this principle in the bill we ought to have a full and complete understanding of how it affects other sections of the Criminal Code and other offences.

Let me illustrate my point, Mr. Speaker, with but one example. Under section 245 it is an offence punishable by summary conviction to assault someone else. The penalty for common assault is a fine of up to $500 and a term of imprisonment of up to six months. There is no minimum fine and no minimum period of imprisonment prescribed by the Criminal Code for an assault. I question whether it would be defensible to have a minimum fine and a minimum term of imprisonment for breach of a prohibition order against owning an animal and not have a similar minimum or, indeed, a lesser penalty for assaulting another human being. This is the kind of conflict which I see would be introduced into the sentencing provisions of the Criminal Code if Bill C-46 as presently drafted were to pass this House.

That is why I said at the outset, Mr. Speaker, that while I see some merit in the bill and while I laud the intention of the proposed amendment, I find some portions of it, the one providing minimum penalties in particular, to be quite unacceptable. Before accepting the proposition of a minimum penalty in the case of a prohibition, I think all members would want to see how this would affect other summary conviction offences in the Criminal Code.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? Having in mind the fact that the hon. member has found merit in part of this proposal and that he would like to see some aspects of it studied further, would he be prepared to allow the subject matter of this bill to proceed to committee for that further examination?

Mr. Smith (Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I could agree to that.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I commend the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather) for the legislation he has brought forward. We have come to expect from the hon. member legislation and motions to do with the safety of motor vehicles and anti-smoking campaigns. Today the hon. member has brought forward Bill C-46 which seeks to provide an additional penalty to be added under section 402 of the Criminal Code with respect to people who are cruel to animals. Frankly, I am not as hung up on the problem of a minimum penalty as my colleague seems to be. Actually, the individual with whom we are concerned already will have had one chance. He already will have been convicted and fined a certain amount or given a certain sentence in accordance with the facts in the first instance.

I think it is proper to provide for maximum penalties so that judges and magistrates may exercise the greatest discretion in determining the penalty to be imposed for an offence. Once an individual has been found guilty, and disobeys a court order, he may be subject to further penalty. If an individual disobeys an order of a civil court, he may be held in contempt of court. Here we are speaking of an individual who violates a specific court order which requires him not to do something specific. He has already committed a criminal offence. He has already had his first opportunity. He has been given a trial and the discretion of the court has been exercised. In all probability, as the hon. member suggested, the result was a fine. Notwithstanding being given all these opportunities in the first instance, he then violates or in effect contravenes the order or judgment of the court and he is now faced with a minimum fine.

The amendment proposes that the law says, in effect, to the individual, "You have had your first chance. You will have your second chance, but in that situation you know what you will face. You will not face a judge who is lenient, who does not like animals or cannot be bothered with this kind of thing." No judge or magistrate will be able to fine someone $1 or $10 or say, "Don't let it happen again." The individual knows when he contravenes the order that he will face a particular minimum fine. The judge has no option; he must at least impose that minimum fine.

If this had appeared in section 7 of the amendment I would have agreed, but when it appears in the second section where the individual has already had his opportunity, I think it is appropriate that this particular sentence should apply. I do not know that the analogy is complete, but I know that in the days when I used to practice law and defend people on impaired driving charges, a magistrate had a particular discretion on the first offence: on the second offence it was an automatic jail term. I remember on one occasion hoping that my client would not be convicted of impaired driving because drunk driving was a first offence and he would only go to jail for seven days, whereas on a second conviction for impaired driving he would have gone to jail for 14 days. My point is that on the second offence there is a good case to be made for establishing a minimum penalty.

It bespeaks well of this country that we have in the Criminal Code a section dealing with individuals who commit the offence of cruelty to animals or birds: from the explanatory notes this goes from (a) to (g) and applies to people who do various things wilfully, without reasonable excuse, and so on, and the action they take in one form or another which results in pain or suffering to animals. It bespeaks well that we have in our Criminal Code provisions to protect animals that are unable to protect themselves or are not able to speak on their own behalf. The country is right in having this kind of legislation in the Criminal Code.

I think the amendment proposed by the hon. member is good. For my part, I would like to see more discretion in respect of offences of this nature where an individual who has done something such as abusing an animal would not have the privilege or the opportunity of having an animal in his possession for a certain period of time. Where a person has committed vandalism, that individual should repair the vandalism, be it writing on a school wall, a broken window or vandalism to any public building. The magistrate should have the opportunity to say to the individual that he must restify the damage he has done. That seems to be the way the law is heading.

I have yet to learn of this type of punishment being criticized by the general public. I know we read more of this in the United States. When a person is convicted of drunk driving, the judge may indicate that he must attent a school of safe driving for the next year or two and lectures on why persons should not mix drinking and driving. That is a much more effective penalty than simply paying a fine. In a positive way judges are reacting to what society is demanding. The individual must not only do these things which are punitive but he must learn something.

I remember reading a placard in front of a Presbyterian church in my area. Different sayings are put up from day to day. On one occasion it read, "If you would learn something, teach it to others." That is the type of punishment the hon. member is suggesting under amendments (7) and (8) to section 402 of the Criminal Code. I feel that when an individual has committed an offence and is guilty of committing a second offence violating a court order, he should know at the outset he is facing a minimum penalty or a minimum sentence. He knows he starts from there and works down, if you will.

I commend the hon. member. I know there are others who want to speak on this bill. I thought I should make the point that I am happy we have this legislation before us. I am pleased to see this type of amendment. Whether the bill or the subject matter of the bill goes to the committee does not bother me too much. I see some hon. members on the edge of their seats waiting to participate in this very important debate. Bearing this in mind, I will resume my seat.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles de la Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather) for his fine initiative, which is not the first as regards this issue, and I should also like to make a few comments on Bill C-46 sponsored by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock during the few minutes allotted to me.

At this stage, Mr. Speaker, it would be appropriate to remind the House of the scope of Criminal Code section 402 to which the bill being examined this afternoon refers.

Section 402 of the Criminal Code stipulates that:

(1) Every one commits an offence who

(a) wilfully causes or, being the owner, wilfully permits to be caused unnecessary pain, suffering or injury to an animal or bird,

(b) by wilful neglect causes damage or injury to animals or birds while they are being driven or conveyed,

(c) being the owner or the person having the custody or control of a domestic animal or bird or an animal or bird wild by nature that is in captivity, abandons it in distress or wilfully neglects or fails to provide suitable and adequate food, water, shelter and care for it,

(d) in any manner encourages, aids or assists at the fighting or baiting of animals or birds,

(e) wilfully, without reasonable excuse, administers a poisonous or injurious drug or substance to a domestic animal or bird or an animal or bird wild by nature that is kept in captivity or being the owner of such an animal or bird, wilfully permits a poisonous or injurious drug or substance to be administered to it,

(f) promotes, arranges, conducts, assists in, receives money for, or takes part in a meeting, competition, exhibition, pastime, practice, display, or event at or in the course of which captive birds are liberated by hand, trap, contrivance or any other means for the purpose of being shot when they are liberated, or

Mr. Speaker, although I may seem to wish to extend the debate on this matter, I believe that it is important and relevant to know what section 402 stipulates since the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock wants us to amend it. I continue the quotation:

(g) being the owner, occupier, or person in charge of any premises, permits the premises or any part thereof to be used for a purpose mentioned in paragraph (f).

(2) Every one who commits an offence under subsection (1) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, anyone found guilty of offences such as those I have just mentioned and as described under Criminal Code section 402 is guilty of a criminal offence and punishable on summary conviction. This means, therefore, that in fact anyone found guilty of one of the acts described under section 402 can be condemned to a fine of up to $500, to six months in jail or both.

[English]

In addition, under the law as it presently stands, the judge who hears the case has the power to prohibit a person convicted of an offence for a second or any subsequent time from owning or having custody of a bird or animal. The bill before us would change the present law in two respects. One of these proposed changes is of minor concern but the other, I submit, has broader implications and should be fully understood before receiving the approval of this august House. Before discussing the two proposed changes in detail I wish briefly to comment on the history of the current law.

Hon. members will recall that prior to 1969 a judge, on convicting a person of cruelty to an animal or a bird, had no power to prohibit that person from continuing to own or keep animals or birds. Even though a person might have been convicted three or four times of cruelty to an animal or a bird, even though a person might be notorious for his mistreatment of animals or birds, a judge had no power to stop such a person from owning or keeping an animal. In order to rectify this situation an amendment was made to the Criminal Code in 1969. The then minister of justice, under whom I had the honour to work, stated before the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs on March 18, 1969:

The purpose here is to give us some more effective way of curbing cruelty to animals. Prosecution in itself appears not to have stopped convicted persons pursuing the practice of being cruel to animals. We want the power to prohibit anybody who has been convicted on two or more occasions from owning an animal.

Perhaps it is due to the hard work of the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Mather) that the then minister of justice, now Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), put forward that amendment to the Criminal Code. Parliament accepted the proposition and amended the Criminal Code accordingly. I understand there is no jurisprudence since the amendment to section 402 which would indicate that the amendment has not been sufficient to achieve its purpose.

As the law now stands, then, anyone convicted of cruelty to an animal or a bird can be fined an amount up to $500. In addition, the judge may order the person convicted to be jailed for up to six months. In the case of a second offence, the judge may again fine the defendant up to $500 and impose a prison term of up to six months. In addition, the judge may prohibit that person from owning or having in his custody an animal or a bird for a period of up to two years.

How would the bill we are discussing affect the present law? In the first place, it would empower a judge to make an order prohibiting a person from owning or having in his custody an animal or a bird for a period not exceeding two months, on a first conviction, not exceeding six months on a second conviction, and not exceeding two years on a third or subsequent conviction. In other words, the first proposed amendment would permit a judge to prohibit on a first conviction rather than on only a second or subsequent conviction. Second, it would precisely define the period of prohibition, whereas the present law empowers the judge to prohibit for whatever period he considers proper up to two years. In addition, the bill would provide for a fine of not less than $250 or imprisonment for not less than three months, or both, for breach of a prohibition order.

The first of these amendments is, I think, of somewhat small significance. Of far greater significance is the limitation which would be imposed upon a judge in ordering a period of prohibition. Instead of the judge having leeway up to as much as two years, he would by virtue of the passage of this bill be restricted to prohibiting the person from owning an animal or a bird for not more than six months on a second conviction, not more than two years on a third conviction, and not more than two months on a first conviction. The question here is whether it is desirable to impose this kind of limitation on the discretion of the judge.

Let me give an example to show the application of the present law and how it would differ if it were amended by Bill C-46. Supposing a man were convicted today of cruelty to his dog because he kicked it: under the present law the judge would probably fine the man and warn him that if he was convicted again he would be liable to a fine or a term of imprisonment, and in addition could be prohibited from owning an animal or a bird for a period of up to two years. Supposing, then, three months later the same man was again convicted for having similarly beaten the dog to within an inch of its life: under the present law, not amended by Bill C-46, the judge would have the power to fine that man up to $500, place him in prison for a period of up to six months, and in addition he would have the power to prohibit the man from owning a dog for up to two years. That is as the law stands at present.

Under the amendment proposed by the hon. member in Bill C-46, on a second conviction of that man for beating his dog the judge would continue to have the power to fine him $500 and impose a term of imprisonment, but he would be limited to prohibiting the man from owning an animal for a period of six months only. No matter how cruel and vicious the attack on the second occasion, the judge, under this amendment, would be limited to prohibiting that person from owning an animal for six months. Under the present law the judge would have the power to prohibit him from owning an animal for up to two years. In view of what I have just pointed out, I do not know what purpose Bill C-46 would serve. That is why I question whether he would want to, in effect, tie the hands of the judge in this way in respect of a second conviction.

Of far more consequence than either of these results that would flow from the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock in Bill C-46 is the proposal to provide for a minimum fine and a minimum term of imprisonment for breach of an order of prohibition. I say this is of far more significance because it introduces into the Criminal Code in respect of this offence a minimum fine and a minimum term of imprisonment. Having done this, you remove any discretion from the judge who has heard the case. I think this is the kind of change which ought to be fully understood and completely considered by the House before the principle is accepted.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, during the few seconds left I would like to remind the House that the debate on the bill introduced by the member for Surrey-White Rock reminds me how you can go too far when you sympathize exceedingly with animals' plight. I do not mean to speak against the hon. member's bill or that I am in favour of cruelty to animals. On the contrary, I have at home a few animals which I would not like to be mistreated and which I would never dare to mistreat myself.

However I would remind the House how emotions may be exaggerated when an animal is being mistreated or killed. This reminds me of the foolish propaganda made in connection with the so-called killing and in fact the hunting of seals in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Totally rigged films were shown as propaganda throughout Europe showing how Canadians could be cruel to animals. And I do say that those films were totally rigged. I am very much involved in this since in my constituency as in several parts of the Maritimes seal hunting is each spring a welcome crop which brings money into the pockets of the poor fishermen who lived through winter thanks to unemployment benefits and social welfare.

You know how harmful this has been to the population of the Maritime provinces and mainly of the Magdalen Islands. This is why I do not want to go overboard about hunting and about whatever can be done to animals because if we sympathize more with animals than with people hunters will no longer be allowed to shoot a moose or to go fishing and catch a good salmon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The time provided for the consideration of private members' business has expired. It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock next Monday pursuant to Standing Order.

At five o'clock, the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. RODRIGUEZ—REPORT RELEASED BY CANADIAN EMBASSY IN WASHINGTON ON ENERGY POLICY

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. My question of privilege arises out of reports that the Canadian embassy in Washington has released a special report on Canadian energy policy. In view of the fact that this special report which has been released to the American press and business community is not available to Canadians from any source, including the office of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, members of this House are placed on an unequal footing with American businessmen in terms of knowledge of the government's fluctuating policy.

Mr. Speaker: I gather that what the hon. member has in mind is more a grievance than a question of privilege which would require the proposing of a motion to the House. The Chair has to decide whether there is a prima facie case of privilege in the matter raised by the hon. member. While the hon. member may have a grievance which has its usual redress under the rules of the House by the filing of a notice of motion for the production of papers, I am not sure that I could suggest this remedy to the hon. member.

I think I have to rule that there is at most a grievance, and I do not think the matter would be helped by a finding that there is a prima facie case of privilege.

PICKERING AIRPORT INQUIRY COMMISSION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I wish to raise a matter of urgency relating to unwarranted restrictions in the government's terms of reference for the Pickering Airport Inquiry Commission. Therefore I would like to move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens):

That, in view of the blatant assumption in the order in council setting up the Pickering Airport Inquiry Commission that a second international airport is required for Toronto, and in view of the fact that the commission is restricted to a consideration of only new evidence as to need and location, new evidence being defined as something that was not in the mind of the Canadian government on January 30, 1973, and in view of the discriminatory rules as to evidence and costs adopted by the commission, the government give consideration to amending the order in council to permit a fair and objective inquiry with full public participation on an equitable basis.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, this motion required the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimity; the motion, therefore, cannot be put.

SPORT CANADA BUDGET

Question No. 2,687—Mr. Jelinek:

1. Who determines spending of the budget of Sport Canada?

Order Paper Questions

2. What percentage of the budget is for administering actual sport programs?

3. What is the breakdown of the budget (a) by province (b) by age groups (i) 8-10 years (ii) 10-12 years (iii) 12-14 years (iv) 14-16 years (v) 16-18 years?

4. How much money is earmarked for Sport Canada over the next (a) two (b) five years?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The minister, on the advice of his departmental officials.

2. Sport Canada provides financial support to National Sport Governing Bodies which in turn administer the sport programs. The only sport program directly administered by Sport Canada, is Demonstration Projects, which accounts for less than 1 per cent of the budget.

3. The Sport Canada budget is for support of National Sport Governing Bodies, for national events, international events, hosting world events and training. The support to competitive events is aimed at athletes 16 years of age or over. Sport Governing Bodies include all age groups; however, since age ranges are not determining factors in whether a Body receives a grant, an age breakdown is not available.

4. Specific amounts over the next two or five years have not yet been approved by the government. However, in the Speech from the Throne, the government proposed to more than double the current level of expenditures under the Fitness and Amateur Sport Program over the next three years, in response to the increasing importance of fitness for the well-being and health of Canadians and the need for greater opportunities for people to participate in sports activities.

CATERING—COMMONWEALTH HEADS OF GOVERNMENT MEETING

Question No. 2,707—Mr. Stevens:

1. Did the government purchase special bars of soap for the use of Commonwealth delegates recently staying in Ottawa hotels and, if so, for what reason?

2. Did the government judge the regular bars of soap used by Canadians and other tourists in those hotels not to be appropriate and. if so, for what reason?

3. (a) From whom did the government purchase any special bars of soap for the Conference (b) were competitive bids invited and, if not, for what reason (c) how much did the government pay per bar?

4. (a) Who handled the sale of food to journalists and staff at the Commonwealth Conference (b) was this contract awarded after appropriate tendering procedures and, if not, for what reason?

5. (a) How was the contract awarded for the food concession in Place du Portage in Hull (b) were tenders and/or competitive bids invited and, if not, for what reason (c) were Ministers of the Crown and/or Members of Parliament from the National Capital Region consulted in any way with reference to this award and, if so, for what purpose?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. No.

2. Not Applicable.

3. Not Applicable.

4. (a) Nate's Delicatessen. (b) Owing to the international situation there was no way, until late in the preparations for the meeting, that the Media Committee of the Heads of Government Task Force could make a realistic estimate of the number of journalists who would wish accreditation and determine the service required. Further, structural alterations to the Connaught Building were necessary to accommodate the catering equipment. Since this equipment varied from firm to firm a rapid choice was necessary if the alterations were to be completed in time for the August meeting. Despite the indefinite number of people expected and the limited time available for making a choice of caterers, oral estimates were obtained and a thorough comparison made. An oral survey of 11 firms in Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa was carried out and only three companies, all in Ottawa, indicated interest: Morrison-Lamothe, Capital Foods and Nate's Delicatessen. Members of the Media Committee met with each of the caterers concerned and outlined the special requirements for service at the Media Centre. These included reasonable prices, an international menu, and service seven days a week sixteen hours a day with twenty-four hour-a-day service in case of emergency. Operations of the bar were included in the catering arrangement. Nate's Delicatessen was the only one of the three companies concerned considered by the Media Committee to be suitable for the job, since it was the only one experienced in operations of this nature. Reasons included a more varied and interesting menu, service including china and silverware rather than plastic utensils and paper plates, and more reasonable prices. Included in the more reasonable prices were bar prices. Nate's also had sufficient equipment to fully supply their own kitchen within the building. Other interested caterers did not have this equipment and it would have been necessary for the government to make supplementary arrangements for its provision.

NEGOTIATION OF ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

Question No. 2,771—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

In any settlement or negotiation of aboriginal rights, is it the intention of the government to take into account the interest of individual native people who are neither Inuit nor registered Indians?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): In dealing with the various Indian and Inuit land claims, the government intends to take into account the possible claims of all persons who may legitimately advance such claims. It is expected that parliament would be the final arbiter of who has such an interest and the extent of that interest.

CANADIAN ASSISTANCE TO BANGLADESH TO FINANCE DEVELOPMENT OF EARTH SATELLITE STATION

Question No. 2,783—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. What interest is the government receiving from the government of Bangladesh with respect to an $8,000,000 loan to finance development of that country's first earth satellite station?

2. Will such an earth satellite station do anything to eliminate poverty in Bangladesh?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The development assistance loan extended to Bangladesh for the construction of an earth satellite station carries no interest charges.

2. The development of an adequate international communications capability is considered by the Bangladesh government to be a high priority requirement. By facilitating international contacts of all kinds, including trade, it is expected that this communications system will contribute directly towards the economic and social development of Bangladesh, just as similar communications systems in Canada contribute to the economic and social development of this country.

IMPORT OF COMPUTER SERVICES

Question No. 2,792—Mr. Forrestall:

1. In the light of the increasing need of the marine construction industry to modernize in the direction of the use of Computer and Numerical Control design and production, is it the intention of the government to ensure that all such computer services originating from outside Canada will be suitably charged according to the Customs Act?

2. Have there been instances in the past five years in which such imported services destined for marine utilization or marine-related service have not been charged with duty under the Customs Act, and, if so, for what reasons?

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): I am informed by the Departments of Finance and National Revenue as follows: 1. It is the intention of the government to ensure that computer services entering Canada will be imported in accordance with Customs laws and regulations. An interdepartmental committee has been set up to study, among other things, the effect of the Customs law as it relates to computer programs and computer processed data.

2. There have been no instances where duty has not been charged when applicable under the Customs Tariff.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED PERSONNEL

Question No. 2,830—Mr. Knight:

1. What salaries, honoraria or expenses are paid to the Officers and Directors of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, listed separately for each person?

2. What directorships, in addition to membership on AECL's board, do each of the 11 directors hold?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy of Canada Limited advises as follows: 1. According to the by-laws of the company each director other than those in the Public Service of Canada is entitled to be paid salary at the rate of $100 per diem while engaged in the work of the company together with any expenses properly incurred by him in connection with the work of the company. It has not been the practice to make public the salaries of officers and employees of the company.

2. The information requested is not within the knowledge of the company.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES—PUBLICITY EXPENDITURES

Question No. 2,859—Mr. Nystrom:

1. What were the amounts of money spent by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources on publicity and/or information in each of the fiscal years 1972-73 and 1973-74 to date?

2. What were the names and addresses of firms and individuals who received these contracts, what amounts of money were spent in each case and what was the purpose of each contract?

3. In the case of expenditures for publicity and/or information made within the Department by its publicity or information division, what was the amount in each case and the purpose of the expenditure?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. 1972-73, $76,473; 1973-74, $47,178.

2. None. The above figures include direct advertising (i.e. purchase of space in periodicals, production of films and TV clips, exhibits and printing of publicity material). Publicity and information work was done by the department in-house and through federal government agencies.

3. See No. 2 above.

CRTC—PUBLICITY EXPENDITURES

Question No. 2,864—Mr. Nystrom:

1. What were the amounts of money spent by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission on publicity and/or information in each of the fiscal years 1972-73 and 1973-74 to date?

2. What were the names and addresses of firms and individuals who received these contracts, what amounts of money were spent in each case and what was the purpose of each contract?

3. In the case of expenditures for publicity and/or information made within the Department by its publicity or information division, what was the amount in each case and the purpose of the expenditure?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): 1. The amounts of money spent by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission on publicity and/or information in each fiscal year 1972-73 and 1973-74 to date are as follows: Total expended 1972-73, $140,408.20; Total expended 1973-74 to September 30, 1973, $14,335.55.

2. The purpose of this activity is to notify the public of the agenda of public hearings and of decisions of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission. The advertising in 1972 and 1973 up to September 1973 was placed in Canadian publications through the following advertising firms: John Doherty and Co., 46 Elgin St., Ottawa, Ontario; The Harvard Agency, 85 Sparks St., Ottawa, Ontario; Carleton Cowan Public Relations Limited, Tower A, Suite 2100, Place de Ville, Ottawa, Ontario.

3. None.

SELECTION OF MEMBERS FOR PORT AUTHORITY OF PRINCE RUPERT

Question No. 3,008—Mr. Howard:

1. What is the name of each person who has been proposed as a member of the Port Authority for the Port of Prince Rupert?

2. On what date will the said Port Authority be appointed?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The Ministry of Transport advises as follows: 1. No persons have been proposed for nomination to the Prince Rupert Port Authority.

2. Members of the Port Authority will be nominated in the near future.

Order Paper Questions

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO HYDRO-QUEBEC RESEARCH INSTITUTE

Question No. 3,027—Mr. Firth:

1. What were the amounts and purposes of grants or loans made by the government to the Hydro-Québec Research Institute in the fiscal years 1972-73 and 1973-74?

2. Is it the intention of the government (a) to table the terms of such agreements (b) to make available to the public the results of research made possible by such funding and, if so, in what manner?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows: 1. Loans for capital construction of research facilities: 1972-73, $2,500,000; 1973-74, $1,600,000 (budgeted). Grants for research and development: 1972-73, $325,000; 1973-74, $325,000, (budgeted).

2. (a) Under consideration. (b) A condition of the agreement is that there be effective dissemination of results. This is being achieved by publication of results in technical literature and also through the mechanism of the Technical Advisory Committee established under the agreement.

PRIVILEGE OF FREE TELEPHONE CALLS FOR GOVERNMENT OFFICES OUTSIDE OTTAWA

Question No. 3,035—Mr. Schumacher:

1. Do offices of the government departments situated in locations outside Ottawa have the privilege of free telephone calls to (a) other government offices (b) Members of Parliament (c) the parent departmental office and, if not, is there a flat rate charge for each call made by these offices to the above?

2. What is the amount of such charges in each case?

3. Do any government departmental offices in Ottawa/Hull have free telephoning privileges to their counterparts situated in other locations and, if so, which offices?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): 1. (a), (b) and (c), no. "Is there a flat rate?" No. Charges depend on the distance of the call and its duration.

2. Calls made on the commercial toll network are charged for at standard tariff rates. Calls made on the government intercity network which is leased from the carrier and managed by the Government Telecommunications Agency are charged to the departments using these facilities. These charges to user departments represent an equivalent share of the costs of leasing the facilities and their administration. Economies of scale are realized due to the large quantity of facilities leased. The schedule of charges to departments is adjusted down to reflect improved efficiency of use or adjusted up when higher tariffs are applied by the carriers. Typical costs on this network for a six minute call are Ottawa-Vancouver $3.50 and Ottawa-Toronto 65 cents. These costs compare with equivalent commercial toll calls of $5.70 and $2.23 respectively.

3. No.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE TO FRIENDSHIP CENTRES

Question No. 3,063—Mr. Rowland:

1. Of the $25 million which was announced would be spent by the government on assistance to Friendship Centres over a period of five years, commencing in the fiscal year 1972-73, for each of the five fiscal years involved, how much has been spent or will be spent in the following areas (a) core funding (b) capital projects (c) demonstration projects?

2. With respect to the demonstration projects what percentage of the funds is anticipated will be spent directly by the Friendship Centres and what percentage by organizations and individuals other than the Friendship Centres?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State):

1. Year	Core Funding $	Capital Projects $	Demonstration Projects
1972-73	1,177,600.30	190,000	—
1973-74	1,400,000.00	450,000	—

Parliament has not yet approved the Main Estimates for 1974-75, 1975-76, and 1976-77.

2. The criteria for the Migrating Native Demonstration Projects fund have not been established. It is not possible to ascertain the relative amounts that may be awarded to friendship centres and to organizations other than friendship centres.

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF FRIENDSHIP CENTRES

Question No. 3,064—Mr. Rowland:

1. With respect to the $25 million which was announced would be spent by the government on assistance to Friendship Centres over a period of five years, commencing in the fiscal year 1972-73, what was the projected anticipated annual increase in the number of Friendship Centres?

2. To date, what has been the actual increase in the number of Friendship Centres?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. Originally, it was anticipated that there would be an increase of six friendship centres, from 37 to 43, in 1972-1973 and an approximate annual increase of two per year thereafter.

2. To date, the department has funded 12 new friendship centres: nine in 1972-1973; three in 1973-1974.

COST OF OPERATION OF PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

Question No. 3,073—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What has been the total cost of the operation of the Prime Minister's Office for each fiscal year 1958 to March 31, 1973?

2. What is the estimated cost of the operation of the Prime Minister's Office for the present fiscal year?

3. How many persons have been employed by the Prime Minister's Office in each fiscal year 1958 to March 31, 1973?

4. What was the total number of persons employed by the Prime Minister's Office as of October 30, 1973?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. Available records do not permit an accurate answer to this portion of the question for the fiscal years prior to 1970-71. In these years the costs involved were part of the general operating expenditures provided in Estimates for the Privy Council Office. As of fiscal year 1970-71 the operation of the Prime Minister's Office was budgeted as a Program Activity. (See Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence No. 12, April 9, 1970 of Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates). Salaries, contracts and travel expenses 1970-71, $900,839; 1971-72, $1,131,398; 1972-73, $1,384,927.

2. $1,486,814.

3. See answer to Part 1. Man years utilized 1970-71, 85; 1971-72, 85; 1972-73, 88.

4. Eighty-eight.

CANADIAN POSITION TOWARD LOAN CREDIT APPLICATIONS FROM CHILE

Question No. 3,108—Mr. Rodriguez:

1. What is Canada's present position towards loan credit applications from Chile through the World Bank?

2. To the knowledge of the government, has any political decision by a foreign government had any bearing upon the credit rating for Chile during Allende's government and the viability of the Chilean economy, in particular, from 1970 to 1973 and, if so, which one?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): 1. Canada's present position toward loan credit applications from Chile through the World Bank is that such applications should be considered on their technical merits and in the light of the country's creditworthiness situation. Last summer, the bank management was negotiating with the Allende government in the preparation of a small initial loan designed to assist the government in meeting its debt service obligations to the bank. This proposal had not yet been submitted to the Executive Board for approval when the government changed, and since then it has been held in abeyance awaiting the completion of negotiations with the new government.

2. Political decisions by the Canadian government had no bearing on either the credit rating for Chile during the period of the Allende government or on the viability of the Chilean economy from 1970 to 1973. It would be inappropriate for a member of the Canadian government to comment on the effects, if any, of the actions or decisions of any other government on the credit rating and economic viability of a third country.

CONFEDERATION BUILDING—INTERIOR WALL CONSTRUCTION

Question No. 3,144—Mr. O'Connor:

1. What was the total of all costs in connection with the tendering, construction and destruction of a number of cinder block walls adjacent to stairwells in the Confederation Building?

Order Paper Questions

2. Is it the intention of the Department of Public Works to proceed with the wall construction project either in the form originally contemplated or in amended or modified form in the future and, if so, on what date?

3. What is the purpose of such program and what are the anticipated costs?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): 1. $350.

2. No. Fire doors are to be installed at six locations in lieu of the originally specified solid walls. The scheduled completion of the total project was November 30, 1973 but the revisions will extend the completion date to December 30, 1973.

3. The purpose of this program is to comply with National Building Code Fire Safety Regulations enforced by the Dominion Fire Commissioner. The regulations require a fire separation of exit stairwells from the remainder of the building. These fire separations may be in form of fire-rated doors or by solid non-combustible partitions. The anticipated costs are $14,700.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT—EQUIPMENT OF AIRCRAFT WITH EMERGENCY LOCATER TRANSMITTERS

Question No. 3,157—Mr. MacLean:

Are all aircraft operated by the Department of Transport of a class or kind required to be equipped with emergency locater transmitters (ELTS) by July 1, 1974, now so equipped and, if not, on what date will such aircraft be so equipped?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Ministry of Transport aircraft are not all equipped as yet with emergency locater transmitters, ELTS, but will be by July 1, 1974.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT—AIR ACCIDENT INVESTIGATION DIVISION

Question No. 3,180—Mr. Forrestall:

With respect to the answer to Question No. 2,759, how many air accidents have been investigated by the Air Accident Investigation Division since its inception and, of these, how many have been made public in each year?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport):

Reports and Publications Released by the Aircraft Accident Investigation Division

Report Type	Number Published	Circulation	Remarks
Summary	3177	8000	These reports have been issued on selected accidents since the organization of the division at the beginning of 1959. The selection is made by the division on the basis of its potential value to the aviation community as a preventive device. Since the beginning of 1959, of the 5,697 accidents investigated, 3,177 or 55.7 percent have been reported in summary form. Those not reported are the accidents which are repetitive in nature (e.g. ground-loops involving light aircraft).
Synopsis	1400	850	This type of report was introduced during 1970 to supplement summary reports. Every accident in Canada is reported upon in this publication as quickly as possible to enable members of the aviation community to initiate immediate appropriate preventive action.
Major Accidents Reports	13	300–1000	Reports of accidents which have been categorized as major have also been issued since the inception of the division. These reports follow the ICAO format for reporting significant accidents, and are more comprehensive than summary reports.
Annual	1 year	1200	Is an annual statistical summary of all accidents in Canada. It is circulated to members of the aviation community and the public who have expressed an interest.
Public Inquiries	2	on request	There have been two since the inception of the division. Such reports are prepared by the Commissioner and are made available to any enquirer.

NUMBER OF PILOT LICENCES ISSUED

Question No. 3,181—Mr. Forrestall:

1. How many licences has the Department of Transport issued to pilots by class for each year since 1965?

2. How many have been issued to date this year?

3. Does the Minister of Transport consider that sufficient staff exists to process such applications without critical delays to pilots involved?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. Number of pilot licences issued by Department of Transport since 1965.

Class of Licence	1965	1966	1967	1968	1969	1970	1971	1972
Private	3,011	4,499	5,415	5,646	4,922	4,397	4,262	4,252

*DRUG LEGISLATION

Question No. 3,193—Mr. Grafftey:

1. What are the results of a study undertaken to determine the effect of advertising and price listing on the consumption of drugs intended for the public at large?

2. Will the old 1908 legislation be abrogated and, if so, on what date?

3. Does the government ensure that the necessary steps are taken by the provinces to control the sale and distribution of these drugs so as to pave the way for the abrogation of this law?

4. Does the government intend to take appropriate measures to introduce new legislations on drugs?

5. Could the Minister of National Health and Welfare assure the House that the new legislations will prevent pharmaceutical firms from fostering their own interests at the expense of public welfare?

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): 1. A nation-wide study, concerning the use and reasons for use, of drugs that are advertised to the general public has not yet been initiated. Preparatory work is now being done. It is expected that the study will begin early in the new year.

2. Legislation to repeal the Proprietary or Patent Medicine Act of 1908 will be introduced at an opportune time.

3. The conditions of sale and the distribution of drugs intended for the public at large are a Provincial responsibility. The Federal Government, however, will continue to assume its concern for the safety and effectiveness of all drugs.

4. Yes, if necessary.

5. Any new legislation respecting drugs will be designed to serve the interests of the public.

PRIME MINISTER'S CAR

Question No. 3,319—Mr. Howard:

1. How many miles per gallon are obtained by the Fleetwood Cadillac made available for the use of the Prime Minister?

2. Does the Prime Minister intend to participate in the voluntary restraints program suggested for energy conservation by using a different type of automobile?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. 8.3 miles per gallon.

2. Reply to Question No. 2,135 in part reads as follows: "The automobile to be used by the Prime Minister, by the Queen and by visiting Heads of State and Heads of Government . . .". The same reply referred to security and technical equipment provided in the vehicle. The vehicle is assigned to the Prime Minister by the RCMP and has been built to security standards recommended by the RCMP. The Prime Minister will use any type of vehicle assigned from time to time for his use. When he is not on official business and there is no security consideration involved, he frequently rides in a smaller police car, a Ford, or drives his own car.

CODOFIL

Question No. 3,320—Mr. Grier:

1. What is the annual salary of the Canadian adviser to CODOFIL?

2. What are the responsibilities of this official?

3. To whom is this official accountable?

4. In what respects has Canada's financial contribution towards CODOFIL already produced considerable returns in publicity and goodwill?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. We understand that, at the time of his employment, the Canadian adviser received from CODOFIL an annual salary of $18,000. In the fiscal year 1972-73 the Canadian government contributed $8,000 to the adviser's salary.

2. As adviser for technical and cultural co-operation, his main task was to conceive and develop action programs in the framework of the responsibilities given to CODOFIL by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana.

3. He was accountable to CODOFIL authorities.

4. The evaluation report recently submitted by an independent firm of educational consultants to the Louisiana State Department of Education highly commended the programs developed by CODOFIL in the area of French instruction at the primary school level. The adviser played an important role in the development of these programs. More directly, the 1972-73 contribution has resulted in favourable publicity for Canada in the local United States press and has promoted contacts between Louisiana and some Canadian and international non-governmental associations. Related to it was the offer to a Canadian student by a Louisiana university of a scholarship in Petrochemistry. The Canadian contribution was also well received in Francophone countries which have participated with Canada in international activities organized by CODOFIL.

STERILIZATION OF MENTALLY RETARDED

Question No. 3,325—Mr. Rowland:

Have persons diagnosed as being mentally retarded been subjected to sterilization before reaching the age of puberty in the past five years and, if so, in what numbers and in which jurisdictions?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Only the provinces can provide a reply to this question as they have sole jurisdiction over the treatment of those under psychiatric care. Sterilization performed in National Health and Welfare hospitals occurs after the written and signed consent of the patient and the spouse has been obtained. This consent is granted by the person affected and the spouse only ofter a full explanation has been given.

TRAINING IN TORTURE TECHNIQUES

Question No. 3,326—Mr. Rowland:

1. Within NATO (a) does there exist a unit or other grouping which has as its purpose training in torture techniques or interrogation in depth, involving serious physical abuse (b) is there any organized capability within such a group for inflicting and sustaining torture and, if so, is Canada making efforts to have the practice discontinued?

2. Can the government give absolute assurances that no Canadians have been, are now, or will be involved in such activities within NATO?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. (a) NATO does not run or sponsor any type of training in torture techniques or interrogation in depth. (b) Not applicable.

2. Not applicable.

GREAT PLAINS PROJECT

Question No. 3,327—Mr. Coates:

1. What involvement does the government have with or in the Great Plains Project or with Great Canadian Research and Development Foundation Inc.?

2. Has the Prime Minister and his office sponsored this project and, if so, on what basis and in what amount and how was approval secured from Parliament for the use of such funds in this project?

3. Has the Prime Minister consented to the use of his name and his office in the soliciting of funds from private business establishments and, if so, on what basis and what control does the Prime Minister, or his office, exercise over the expenditures of monies secured by this foundation?

4. (a) Who are the officers of the Great Canadian Research and Development Foundation Inc. (b) on what date was it established (c) on what date was Phase I of the Great Plains Project undertaken, who were the individuals involved in this project and how were they compensated for services rendered?

5. What was the cost of Phase I of the Great Plains Project?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1. In the initial stages, the government supported the Great Plains Project by providing financial assistance through the Prime Minister's office. In July 1973, officers of the project were informed that their dealings with the government should be channeled through the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Great Canadian Research and Development Foundation Inc. is the not-for-profit corporate arm of the Great Plains Project. The government has not had any involvement with Great Canadian Research and Development Foundation Inc.

2. Although the Prime Minister's office has provided financial support to the Great Plains Project, it is not a sponsor of the project. Funds for the project were included in Privy Council Estimates for the fiscal years 1970-71, 1971-72, 1972-73 and 1973-74 (See reply to Question 107). The project was funded on a contract basis, as approved by Treasury Board, in the amount of $236,274.33, final, over fiscal years 1970-71 to 1973-74.

3. No.

4. (a) Great Canadian Research and Development Foundation Inc. was incorporated in the province of Ontario. The names of its officers are not on the files of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. However, correspondence with the Great Plains Project indicates that its directors are V.H. Atrill, Ph. D., Major General M.T. Friedl, C.D., and R. Rohmer, Esq., DFC, Q.C. (b) According to a name-search done in the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Great Canadian Research and Development Foundation Inc. was incorporated under the laws of the province of Ontario under the name Mid-North Research and Development Foundation Inc. on September 24, 1969. Its name was changed to Great Canadian Research and Development Foundation Inc. on March 22, 1973. (c) Formal approval of financial support for Phase I was given on December 1, 1970. The Chairman, V.H. Atrill, was compensated on a per diem fee basis. The Deputy Chairmen, Messrs. R. Shannon and R. Rohmer, together with senior developmental officers of corporations in Canada and senior developmental scientists from Canadian universities attended project meetings free of time charges.

5. Thirty-six thousand dollars.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION—OVERPAYMENTS—QUEBEC REGION

[Mr. Trudeau.]

MAINE CORRIDOR ROUTE

Question No. 3,340—Mr. Corbin:

1. With respect to the projected corridor route through the State of Maine between the Provinces of Quebec and New Brunswick, have the governments of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or Quebec, individually or as a group, officially requested aid from the government (a) to finance a study on feasibility and, if so, on what date (b) to finance the construction of the road and, if so, on what date?

2. Has the government undertaken or commissioned any studies on the feasibility of such corridor route between Quebec and New Brunswick through the State of Maine and, if so (a) what studies (b) on what date and by whom were they undertaken (c) what were the conclusions regarding feasibility and costs (d) is this proposal being studied and, if so, by whom?

3. Has the Government of the United States and/or the State of Maine contacted the government or inversely have the government or Provincial Governments contacted the American authorities to discuss a corridor route through the State of Maine and, if so, on what date?

4. What was the reaction of the government, the United States Government or the Government of the State of Maine and who were the Canadian and American representatives in each case?

5. Has the government within the framework of a possible study on building a corridor route through the State of Maine, also studied the marked disadvantages of such a route, particularly for the economy and the development of hundreds of thousands of people, hundreds of communities and thousands of businesses which depend totally on the traffic on the Trans-Canada Highway and connecting roads for their economic well-being?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. This proposal has, as its main supporters, the Maritime provinces but there has never been a formal request made by these governments to study the feasibility of such a highway facility.

2. It was considered at one time that a trade off could be made between the construction of the Maine Corridor Highway and the reconstruction of the Alaska Highway. (a) The study undertaken was entitled "The Maine Corridor Road and the Alaska Highway—An Examination of Comparative Benefits and Costs". (b) The study was undertaken jointly by the M.W. Menzies Group Ltd., and N.D. Lea and Associates Ltd. in the fall of 1970. (c) The study concluded that with respect to the Maine Corridor there could be a positive net benefit for Canada and a negative net benefit for the U.S. The specific amounts varied depending on the assumptions which were made concerning travel time and value of time, operating costs of vehicles, etc. (d) The study is not at present under evaluation due to the lack of interest by the U.S. government in the Alaska Highway.

3. No, in so far as the government of Canada is concerned.

4. This question is not applicable.

5. No.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION LOANS—CONSTITUENCY OF LEEDS

Question No. 3,355—Mr. Cossitt:

How many applications were received from the constituency of Leeds for Farm Credit Corporation loans during each of the past three years for which figures are available, how many of these applications were granted and what was the total amount loaned in the electoral district for each year in question?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The Farm Credit Corporation advises that statistics are not maintained on a constituency basis. However, for the Counties of Lennox-Addington, Frontenac and Leeds, the answer is as follows:

Year	Number of Applications Received	Withdrawn or Rejected	Approved	Amount Approved $
1973-74*	31	8	23	1,111,700
1972-73	34	7	27	1,245,500
1971-72	29	7	22	645,600

*April 1 to October 31, 1973.

OFY GRANTS TO HOMOSEXUAL ORGANIZATIONS

Question No. 3,359—Mr. Jelinek:

1. How many dollars have been allocated through the Opportunities for Youth Program in the past fiscal year towards projects for homosexual organizations?

2. For what projects were OFY grants given to homosexual organizations?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. None. However, a grant of $10,845 was awarded to a group of individuals for a project whose objective was the publication of an information booklet on the subject of homosexuality.

2. The project to which the above-mentioned grant was awarded was entitled Operation Socrates, situated in the Kitchener-Waterloo Region.

MILK SUBSIDY

Question No. 3,361—Mr. Cossitt:

With regard to the statement on September 4, 1973 recorded on page 6,184 of Hansard that there will be a milk subsidy of five cents per quart, for what reason has there been an increase of four cents since that date in quart packages of powdered milk sold by Dominion Stores Ltd. in Brockville, Ontario?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The earliest date that milk powder prices could be expected to be reduced and contained was October 15, 1973, as agreements with powdered milk companies did not take effect until that date.

DISTRIBUTION OF POLICY STATEMENTS BY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

Question No. 3,374—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to answers to Question Nos. 2,827, 3,100 and 3,129 that copies and addresses to Liberal Party meetings made by the Minister of Agriculture were printed and distributed at public expense, is it the intention of the government to accord similar treatment to opposition parties and, specifically, is it the intention of the government to print and distribute at public expense copies of addresses to Progressive Conservative Party meetings made by the Agricultural Critic of the Progressive Conservative Party and, if not, is it the intention of the government to discontinue printing and distributing at public expense addresses by the Minister of Agriculture to Liberal Party meetings and to recover from the Liberal Party of Canada all public funds spent to date in this connection?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Policy statements by the present Minister of Agriculture to Progressive Conservative party meetings, if open to the public, will be treated in the same manner as any other public addresses made by the present Minister of Agriculture.

ELIGIBILITY OF WIDOW UNDER THE PENSION ACT

Question No. 3,382—Mr. Marshall:

1. Under the Pensions Act, what is the rate of disability at which the widow can receive a pension after the veteran's death?

2. Is a widow of a disability pensioner able to receive benefits after his death if he was receiving a disability pension between 5 per cent and 47 per cent?

3. (a) What is the rate of pension for the married veteran who has disability between 48-52 per cent with no children (b) what would his wife receive on his death?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. Provision is made in the Pension Act for the payment of pension to the widow of a pensioner who at the time of his death was in receipt of a pension for a disability assessed at 48 per cent or more, whether or not his death was attributable to his service. The widow of a pensioner who was in receipt of a pension for a disability assessed at less than 48 per cent is entitled to a pension only if it is ruled under the Pension Act that her husband's death was attributable to his service.

2. A widow of a pensioner whose disability was assessed at between 5 per cent and 47 per cent may be awarded a widow's pension if it is ruled under the Pension Act that her husband's death was attributable to his service.

3. (a) $245 a month. (b) $294 a month.

ELIGIBILITY OF FEMALE VETERAN TO MARRIED RATE OF DISABILITY PENSION

Question No. 3,384—Mr. Marshall:

Under the Pensions Act whereby a disabled male veteran can qualify for the married rate with benefits for his wife, who is not a veteran, and their children, can a female disabled veteran, who is married and whose husband is not a veteran, qualify for married rates for her husband and children and, if not, for what reason is this practice allowed to prevail?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Yes, at the discretion of the Canadian Pension Commission.

ELIGIBILITY OF WIDOW UNDER PENSION ACT

Question No. 3,385—Mr. Marshall:

1. What is the rate of pension for a married veteran with no children who has a disability classified between 43 per cent and 47 per cent?

2. What would his wife receive on his death and, if nothing, is consideration being given to overcoming this discrepancy in the Pensions Act?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. $220.50 a month.

2. If it is ruled under the Pension Act that his death was attributable to his service his widow would receive $294 a month. If his death was not ruled attributable to his service his widow would not receive a pension. No change with regard to this feature of the Pension Act is presently contemplated.

MEMBERS OF CYC

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF MEASURES TO CONTROL INFLATION IN LIGHT OF BANK OF CANADA STATEMENT—CONSULTATION WITH FARM, LABOUR AND BUSINESS LEADERS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the Bank of Canada saying that the extent of any price deceleration in Canada depends to an important degree on cost developments in Canada, and in view of the Prime Minister having said that any government that cannot cope with self-induced inflation deserves to be thrown out—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: —I would ask the Prime Minister whether the position taken by the Bank of Canada is also the position of the government, whether the government is preparing a comprehensive package of measures now and, if so, when will it be presented?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the package to which the hon. member refers, if it were presented as a package, would be coming at the time of the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the recent OECD study concluding that inflation in Canada has developed a momentum that can be offset only by a concerted anti-inflation program, is it the intention of the government to present such a comprehensive program at the meeting of finance ministers later this month?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, as the federal Minister of Finance will explain, the meeting at the end of January will, of course, go into economic problems and, not least, the inflation problem, but as to any announcement that might be made the Leader of the Opposition will have to wait until that time.

Mr. Stanfield: It is not only a question of my waiting but of the people of Canada who are waiting.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The OECD study recommended as a first step that the government should set up—

Whereupon there was an interruption from the gallery.

Mr. Trudeau: Is that your grandson?

Mr. Stanfield: I am not sure who is responsible for that, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fairweather: It is a matter of timing.

Mr. Stanfield: But I can say, Sir, that if that was my grandson his voice is carrying all the way from Edmonton. But, Mr. Speaker, to get back to the—

Whereupon there was a further interruption.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Now you are terrifying the child.

Mr. Stanfield: I do not know whether this is a new tactic being adopted by the Prime Minister—

An hon. Member: It is working.

Mr. Stanfield: —but I would like to ask the Prime Minister this question. In view of the suggestion in the OECD study that the government should set up consultative machinery, as a first step, involving government, farm, labour and business leaders to cope with inflationary pressures this year—

An hon. Member: We did it four years ago.

Mr. Stanfield: Yes, they did it four years ago, but it is four years later than the hon. member thinks. Has the government given serious consideration to this proposal and, if so, is the government going to take this initiative?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I should like to take as my text, "And a little child shall lead them".

Mr. Baldwin: What do you think we have had for the last six years?

Mr. Fairweather: Some would think that is all we have got.

Mr. Hees: You cannot be more childish than you have been, Pierre.

An hon. Member: Better that than nothing.

Mr. Trudeau: The consultation the hon. Leader of the Opposition suggests is one which is going to be taking place at the federal-provincial conference at the end of the month, when the first ministers and then the ministers of finance meet. I would remind the Leader of the Opposition that this process is one that we embarked upon in 1969 in order to attempt to come to grips with inflation, and it has never ceased being a matter of discussion every time there is a meeting with the premiers and the ministers of finance.

ENERGY

INQUIRY AS TO COMPLETION OF ARRANGEMENTS FOR EXTENSION OF OIL PIPELINE TO MONTREAL AND FILING OF APPLICATION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, without referring to the humble admission of the Prime Minister a moment ago may I ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether the financial and other arrangements with regard to the pipeline to Montreal have been completed with Interprovincial or any other agency?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Not at the moment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: Can the minister inform the House whether there is still discussion with regard to the route which the pipeline might take? Has it been settled that it will go from Sarnia to Montreal or is there still discussion of a route from Winnipeg or elsewhere through northern Ontario?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the route is still under discussion.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, as a final supplementary may I ask the minister when he expects that these discussions will be completed and when the hearings by the National Energy Board will take place? Can the minister assure the House that the construction of the pipeline will begin this coming spring rather than there being a disastrous delay of many months?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would hope that the discussions would be completed within a matter of weeks and that the board might be in a position to accept an application in the spring.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF EMBASSY IN SAUDI ARABIA

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Could the minister tell us when is the official inauguration of the Canadian embassy in Saudi Arabia, and also whether this embassy is opened in order to increase our country's oil buying power in Saudi Arabia?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, discussions are now under way between the Saudi Arabian government and the Canadian government following my announcement of our intention to establish an office in Saudi Arabia.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO ISSUANCE BY MINISTER OF GUIDELINES ON MINIMUM COMPENSATION FOR INFLATION IN WAGE SETTLEMENTS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour to follow up the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition. Given the fact that inflation does have some bearing on wage settlements, may I ask the minister whether he has issued guidelines to industry indicating what will be the minimum compensation for inflation in wage settlements and, if so, what are the minimum wage increases that he has in mind?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not issued any such guidelines and I doubt very much whether they would have any impact. I have no legitimate authority to do so. This is a matter for the free, collective bargaining process which has worked adequately to date, I think.

Mr. Alexander: In light of the fact the Prime Minister has been stating that our inflation has been worldwide induced, has the minister conducted a study to ascertain what proportion of domestic inflation has led to wage disputes and what proportion of worldwide inflation has led to wage disputes? If so, when will it be completed and when will he table the results?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the hon. member should indicate what he considers to be a wage dispute. A sizeable percentage of claims in all areas where there is collective bargaining at the present time have been settled peacefully to the satisfaction of both parties.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Mississauga. Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member who has assumed the floor might be allowed a supplementary question after which I shall recognize the hon. member for Mississauga.

● (1420)

Mr. Alexander: Can the minister advise, because of the seriousness of the matter, whether he will undertake to make such a study in order to determine in what proportions domestic and worldwide inflation are affecting wage settlements?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, there is so much data now in this area that it is hard to understand the hon. member. If the hon. member is suggesting that those representing labour want to be compensated for the inflationary factor, of course they do. When they bargain they take into account the cost of living aspect. That is a pretty rudimentary exercise which they go through at each collective bargaining session. They will continue to do so now as they have in the past and no doubt they will in future.

HOUSING

RELATIONSHIP OF INTERNATIONAL INFLATION TO INCREASE IN COST OF NEW HOUSING IN METROPOLITAN TORONTO

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, to follow up the question of the Leader of the Opposition, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Can the minister indicate to the House how the inflation in the cost of new housing in Metropolitan Toronto, which is up 25 or 30 per cent over the cost one year ago, is related to international inflation? Has he done any studies on that, and can he tell us of the degree of international inflation with respect to housing?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs has not.

[Mr. Alexander.]

Mr. Blenkarn: Given the fact that the increase in shelter costs amounts to at least 31 per cent according to the Statistics Canada price index, surely the minister can give us an answer. Surely he can tell us the extent to which international inflation does or does not contribute—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question is not a supplementary; it is argument.

FINANCE

REQUEST THAT BANK SHORT-TERM LOAN AND MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES BE REDUCED

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. As short-term interest rates in this country are now higher than such rates in the United States for the first time since the summer of 1972, does the minister intend to ask the banks to roll back interest rates in this country, in other words, control interest rates in Canada?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Sir.

Mr. Nystrom: If the minister will not do that, will he undertake to amend the Bank Act to make it mandatory for banks to lend money to people on mortgages at interest rates no greater than 6 per cent?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think I have the hon. gentleman's views very clearly in mind.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CONSULTATION WITH QUEBEC PRIOR TO TWO LATEST APPOINTMENTS TO SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. It is in connection with the two recent appointments to the Supreme Court of Canada from the province of Quebec. Were those appointments given provincial government consideration before they were made?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is not our custom to discuss with provincial governments the persons we are considering for appointment, although quite frequently we are in touch with the appropriate provincial Attorneys General before the actual, formal announcement.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I did not ask about the custom. Since the federal government, under the famed Victoria Charter of unlamented memory, accepted the principle that appointments to the Supreme Court of Canada should be made subject to provincial consideration, I ask whether in regard to those two appointments there was provincial consideration or whether the Victoria charter, so highly lauded, has died an unnatural death?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the proposals at Victoria, of course, went no further than that meeting and did not result in a new arrangement in Canada. I meant to make it clear to the right hon. gentleman when I referred to "custom" that custom was followed in this case.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not know why it is so difficult to get a direct answer. I know the minister is anxious to answer the question. I ask him whether the Bourassa government was consulted in advance and gave consideration to those two appointments pursuant to the principle that this government stood for so strongly, namely, the need for reform in appointments to the Supreme Court of Canada, when the Victoria charter was up three years ago?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, in order to give a clear answer to the right hon. gentleman, may I ignore the last three-quarters of his question and simply say no to the first part.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then you broke your own agreement.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE PROPORTION OF LARGER FORD AND GENERAL MOTORS VEHICLES PRODUCED IN CANADA WILL NOT BE INCREASED

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Considering the fact that General Motors and Ford of Canada announced layoffs on Friday exceeding 1,200 employees for an indefinite period of time, will the minister, if he has not done so already, obtain assurances from those companies that they will not transfer production of the largest vehicles they produce in both the United States and Canada from the United States to Canada and thus establish proportions different from what now exist?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we have already had discussions with the automobile companies on this point. They have explained to us that the need for these layoffs is occasioned by inventory balancing. They have pointed out that the layoffs in Canada are relatively less than in the United States. The point the hon. member made in his question with regard to big car and small car balance has been made to them. I can assure him there is no indication the automobile companies are planning any change.

Mr. Broadbent: If he has not already done so, will the minister assure the House that in the near future he will discuss with the automotive companies the desirability of shifting their methods of production away from the largest vehicles to moderate and small size vehicles in the years ahead so they will not lose out the way they did a few years ago to Japanese and western European producers when small vehicles were first introduced on this continent on a large-scale basis?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I think the representations we have made plus consumer and market reaction over the past few years, and indeed the past few months, have made that point in spades.

AIR TRANSPORT

PROPOSED PASSENGER HEAD TAX—INFLATIONARY IMPACT

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Have he or his officials calculated the inflationary impact of the proposed airport head tax coming at a time when it is proposed to increase air fares?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I believe that any increase either in taxes or airport operation costs will surely have an effect on prices.

COMBINES

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF NEW LEGISLATION TO PERMIT SMALL INDUSTRIES TO SURVIVE

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Can the minister tell the House whether he has received a request from the National Association of Confectionery and Tobacco Distributors for the amendment of the Combines Act in order to help small industries to survive? If so, what does he intend to do about the amendments suggested by the association in its request?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did receive such a brief and the requests are being studied.

ENERGY

OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL—PARTIES INVOLVED IN NEGOTIATIONS—CAPACITY

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for York South. Will the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources advise the House what specific group is negotiating on behalf of the federal government in connection with the oil pipeline to Montreal? Second, and this is part of the same question, are there any other groups that this group is negotiating with in addition to Interprovincial Pipelines?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned in the House some weeks ago, the Deputy Minister of National Defence has been acting on secondment from his department for the purpose of assisting the government in this regard. At the moment, I think I would be correct in saying his discussions in terms of pipeline companies have been confined to Interprovincial Pipelines.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): In these discussions the ex-Deputy Minister of National Defence is holding—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The present deputy minister.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): —has any decision been reached by the government as to the ultimate delivery capacity of this pipeline and as to the target delivery date?

● (1430)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The maximum amount would be about 500,000 barrels a day. A factor which is obviously relevant to the discussion is whether full throughput will be sought at this time or perhaps half that amount.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact that more than four months have elapsed since the Prime Minister announced the government's intention to proceed with this pipeline, may I ask what are the major obstacles in the way of reaching some agreement concerning the commencement of the project? Is it a matter of finance? Is the federal government being asked to put up some of the money and, if so, is this difficulty close to being resolved?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would say the major obstacle is the question of the route and on that basis, of course, the availability of supply.

OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL—POSSIBLE FURTHER EXTENSION TO EAST COAST

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): In the light of all the conversations which have taken place during the past two or three months, may I ask the minister whether the government has abandoned any consideration of extending this pipeline beyond Montreal to open salt water so that the four Atlantic provinces may enjoy some assurance of a 12 months supply of crude oil?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I think I should tell the hon. member that while there might be some possibility of this being done in an emergency situation the current oil supply situation in Canada would not permit that kind of supply. However, the expansion of the pipeline network with further connecting pipelines to the east has been under very close scrutiny by the government.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

POSSIBLE STEPS TO CONTROL DOMESTIC UPWARD COST PRESSURES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the opinion of the Bank of Canada, as expressed on page 19 of its December review, that the extent of deceleration of living costs will depend to a very large extent on cost developments within Canada, will the minister advise the House whether he is prepared to take specific steps now to control domestic upward cost pressures and, if so, what steps is he willing to take, and when?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): That report draws attention to the complicated interaction between world demand-pull inflationary forces and the reaction in Canada of cost-push forces, and throughout the breadth of the report it is stated quite categorically that the sharp increase in oil prices plus the rise in commodity and food prices constitutes the primary thrust of inflation in this country.

Mr. Hees: Would the minister not agree that the reply he has just given amounts to nothing more nor less than gobbledygook and shows he has no idea what the problem is, and has no intention of doing anything about it?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's supplementary is argumentative.

Mr. Hees: It was intended to be.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that approximately 10 per cent of the Liberal-appointed Senators are spending most, if not all, their time in organizational activities for the Liberal Party, including Senators Molgat, Davey—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is apparently in the middle of his question but even at this point I have a number of procedural objections to it. I am sure he will appreciate that he cannot make allegations or statements by way of preface to his question. I would remind hon. members also that it is not entirely good form to attack, if I might use that word—possibly it is too strong—members of the other House.

Mr. McKenzie: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure the hon. member can ask a supplementary to a question which is clearly out of order. The hon. member for Trinity.

INDUSTRY

EFFECT OF TRANSPORT COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS RESPECTING RAILWAY SAFETY IN TERMS OF ADDED COST TO INDUSTRY

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In light of the recent recommendation to the railroads by the Canadian Transport Commission that they decrease the loads in their freight cars and reduce their cruising speeds, has the hon. gentleman's department looked into the effect of this recommendation, if implemented, in terms of added industrial costs for transportation?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I would be prepared to make inquiries and convey this information to the hon. member.

Mr. Hellyer: Would the minister at the same time give the House the benefit of his views as to the means by which unused production capacity in the automobile industry might be transferred at this time to the manufacture of boxcars and some of the other transportation equipment essential to the long-term reduction of costs in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that a statement of such importance ought to be made by the minister on motions.

GRAIN

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR INTERIM PAYMENT RELATED TO FINAL PRICE

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice as minister responsible for the Wheat Board. In view of the fact that initial prices for grain were established, on wheat, for example, at $2.25, while the Wheat Board's asking price is now $8.34, which means a fantastic sum of money is not available to farmers for use in paying bills or meeting other needs, is the minister about to agree with the request of the Canadian Wheat Board, the wheat pools and the National Farmers Union that an interim payment be made related to the final payment?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): We have received no such recommendation from the Wheat Board. We may look at this question in the days ahead but so far we have not given full consideration to it.

Mr. Knight: Since initial prices are far below the projected final prices as enunciated by the Wheat Board, can the minister tell the House what formula is presently being used to arrive at an initial price which is one-third of the final price as projected by the board and whether this formula will be changed so as to ensure that the initial price will represent a greater percentage of the final price in the present crop year?

Mr. Lang: The initial prices for the year were first set on March 1 and subsequently, on the basis of existing facts, on July 29 they were altered. Of course, it is not common under the pooling system to move these prices up and down from day to day. If that kind of system is preferred one goes to an open system rather than a board system. At the time these prices were set on July 29, as far as I know we had received a request from only one farm organization for prices higher than the March 1 price. Moreover, the prices set on July 29 were as high as, or higher than, those contained in any of the suggestions made to us at that time and therefore, surely, should have been considered satisfactory. None of the members opposite asked for a higher figure at that point—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Give us the formula!

TRANSPORT

REQUEST THAT REPORT ON RAILWAY PASSENGER SERVICE IN SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO BE MADE AVAILABLE

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Many weeks ago the minister received a report from the Canadian Transport Commission resulting from its study of passenger rail service in southwestern Ontario. Can the minister tell us whether he is in a position to release that report to the House this week?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): As I have stated, I have received a report and it has been communicated to all interested parties.

Some hon. Members: Not to us.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): This report will be made public because it is to be studied at the tri-level conference to be held soon in Ontario.

RAILWAY PASSENGER SERVICE IN SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Can the minister tell the House when the policy proposals, which have been promised by the federal government for over a year now, with respect to the transportation needs of southwestern Ontario will be made public? He has been promising them for over a year but we have not seen them.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): In order to give a complete answer I must point out that we have not yet received the third report of the CTC on this question of transportation in southwestern Ontario. As soon as we have it there will be no objection to the report being made public or tabled in the House. As for the delay, the year which has elapsed, I am not responsible. The CTC is the body which is supposed to inquire in this case.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): The minister says he will have no objection to making the report public. In a letter he sent to me he promised it would be made public in October. Why has this not been done? Will he make the report public this week?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The simple reason is that I was told by the CTC many months ago that I would get the report in October, and I did not get it.

● (1440)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): If the hon. member wants to know everything that happened which would justify the delay, I am ready to make a report. He will see that some members resigned and another died. There are all kinds of reasons.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May we have order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the hon. minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe, but the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo rises on a question of privilege.

[English]

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is this. The minister has admitted several times that he received the report on December 4, and we have known that since then. Why is he now misleading the House, albeit unintentionally, by saying that he has not received it, or that people have died and so on? Will the minister release the report? He has had it for over a month.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that is not a question of privilege. The hon. member is asking a question that he has been asked previously. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe.

ENERGY

REQUEST THAT DISTRIBUTION OF PREMIUMS BY GASOLINE COMPANIES BE ELIMINATED IN ORDER TO REDUCE PRICES

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

As a result of the constant rise, especially in Quebec, of the prices of heating oil and gas, does the minister intend to control or at least put a stop to any promotion campaign through the distribution of bonuses, premiums or gifts from wholesalers, retailers or distributors who are trying to draw a larger number of customers by increasing their production and operating costs accordingly and who are complaining afterwards that their margin of profits has become insufficient?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have no such power for the moment, but I will be pleased to deal with the matter raised by the hon. member.

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

FISHERIES

DISCUSSIONS WITH NEWFOUNDLAND OFFICIALS ON POSTPONEMENT OF NEW LICENSING POLICY—PROVISION OF INFORMATION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Has the minister had discussions with the Newfoundland government, either at the ministerial or public service level, with a view to postponing or delaying the implementation of the new fisheries licensing policy?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions both at the ministerial and official levels. The policy as announced in the House will be continued. However, the discussions will also have some effect on future action.

Mr. McGrath: By way of a supplementary question may I ask the minister whether there is any ongoing program or plan to provide more information to the fishermen and the public so they can more fully appreciate and understand the long-term implications of this program?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, local committees have in most instances already been set up and they will continue to explore the program and help it evolve.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

GOVERNMENT INTENTION RESPECTING BROADCASTING OF PROCEEDINGS OF HOUSE AND COMMITTEES

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In the throne speech opening this parliament one year ago the government said it would recommend to the House the broadcasting, by radio and television, of all or part of the proceedings of the House and the proceedings of committees. Does the government still intend to implement this promise and, if so, when?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this certainly was the intention of the government. I understand that the House leader on the government side had discussions many months ago on this subject with other House leaders and that he was not met with much enthusiasm for this suggestion. If we could have more vocal support for this resolution that the government is interested in putting forward, we would act with as much expediency as the House would allow. Perhaps the hon. member will raise the matter in his own caucus.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE ANNOUNCEMENT OF INCREASE IN MILK SUBSIDY

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Agriculture is not here, I shall put my question to his representative.

Last December I asked the Minister of Agriculture if, in view of the troubling diminution of milk production which is forcing Canada to turn to importation, he would propose a subsidy increase in order to raise the prices paid to the producers. The minister replied that he was consulting with the National Advisory Committee. Can the House now be told whether this consultation has brought results and whether a subsidy increase will be announced shortly?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am taking note of the question and I am sure that the hon. minister will give an answer to the hon. member on his return.

POST OFFICE

AUTHORITY FOR INTERCEPTION OF CERTAIN MAIL

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. It relates to a case involving a constituent of mine which I brought to his attention at the end of November. Would the Postmaster General inform me what possible legislative authority his officials have for intercepting mail to a citizen of this country and turning that mail over to officials of the Department of National Defence and the RCMP?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I recall that the hon. member brought a specific case to my attention. I would like to check my files once again before giving an answer to the House.

Mr. Lawrence: If the minister is going to check into this, will he also check into why the mail has not yet been released to my constituent?

IMMIGRATION

TRANSPORTING OF CHILEAN REFUGEES TO CANADA BY GOVERNMENT PLANE—NUMBER INVOLVED—SCREENING—GRANTING OF LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Has a government plane been dispatched, or will one shortly be dispatched, to Chile to bring back to Canada Chilean refugees? If so, how many will be aboard the plane, have they all been carefully screened, and will they be given landed immigrant status on arrival?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is yes; there will be a government aircraft proceeding to Chile on January 12. It is expected that it will bring back approximately 140 people who have been screened and interviewed and have passed the immigration requirements that I announced in the House, I believe in December. I think that completes the answer to the question.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, I have a short supplementary question which I would direct to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. May I ask him whether the 50-odd people who were given refuge in the Canadian embassy will be among the 140-odd who are coming to Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. All of these cases have now been discussed with the Chilean government, and of the group in the embassy 38 will be coming to Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Greenwood on a supplementary, but I remind hon. members that we will be running short of time and I hope we will be able to limit the number of supplementaries between now and the end of the question period.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is addressed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In connection with this whole question of admitting refugees and others from Chile, would the minister give the House an up to date statement on exactly how many have been admitted from various sources before the House recesses?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the figure is changing on a daily basis, but I can say that there have been inquiries on behalf of 2,321 people, and that some 350-odd as of now have been processed. The rest of the cases are still under review. As I say, the situation changes every day. I will be glad to update the hon. member as changes take place, but one statement is not going to cover the situation.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Nickel Belt for a final supplementary on this point and will then recognize the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister inform the House whether the government is considering the establishment of scholarships for refugee students who would like to get out of Chile under the present regime?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker, no such proposal has been before the government.

Oral Questions

GRAIN

POSSIBILITY OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH ARAB STATES TO TRADE CANADIAN WHEAT FOR OIL

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board. In view of the Prime Minister's reply to my question on Friday regarding the trading of our wheat for oil with the Arab states, arising from the recent sale of approximately $165 million worth, can the minister advise the House whether he or the government is prepared to negotiate with the Arab oil states in a manner similar to the recent French long-term agreement whereby that country has exchanged Mirage jets and other armaments for 40 million tons of oil for the next 20 years?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we do not have a closed mind to any particular commercial deal that might be available.

● (1450)

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister could reply to my question and state whether in fact he is negotiating a possible trade with the Arab states?

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. Speaker. There are no such negotiations at this moment.

ACTION TO EXPEDITE MOVEMENT OF LOADED BOXCARS FROM COUNTRY ELEVATOR SIDINGS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Since we are 125 million bushels behind last year's shipment of grain from country elevators and since elevator agents are expected to load cars over weekends and in stormy weather, I should like to ask the minister why loaded boxcars are allowed to stand for weeks at a time on railway sidings?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, that is not a very desirable situation. It is one that everyone seeks to avoid, and regrets when it happens occasionally. Ordinarily the railways have a schedule for picking up cars which does not envisage this happening but, of course, it can happen from time to time.

Mr. Korchinski: Does the minister intend to hold consultations immediately with the railways to see what they can do to correct this situation and clear up the backlog?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad if the hon. member would give me the specific details of the situation to which he refers. We are having constant consultations with all persons involved in the grain movement to make sure that we have the maximum amount of grain equipment available.

[Mr. Sharp.]

AIRPORTS

PICKERING—REQUEST FOR BROADENING OF TERMS OF REFERENCE OF INQUIRY COMMISSION

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the restrictions in the order in council setting up the Pickering airport inquiry commission, which confines the commission to only new evidence as to need and location, and in view of the discriminatory and unfair rules adopted by the commission relating to evidence, witness fees and expenses, would the minister consider redrawing the order in council to permit a fair and equitable public hearing on the whole question of the airport, which might not be the case if the present terms of reference prevail?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have no reason to believe that the terms of reference are unjust. That is the hon. member's opinion. I am not going to interfere. This is an independent board set up under the Inquiries Act. It has all the powers under the Inquiries Act and I am surely not going to interfere at this stage.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NEGOTIATIONS WITH MARITIME EMPLOYERS ASSOCIATION ON GUARANTEEING OF LOANS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question or two for the Minister of Transport, albeit I gave him very brief notice at the opening of the House. Can he indicate the present status of negotiations between his department, the Department of Finance, the Treasury Board and the Maritime Employers Association with regard to the guaranteeing of loans of some $10 million or $12 million for that particular deficit operation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the last time I heard about that—and I can inquire between now and tomorrow—there was no agreement reached between the bank and the National Harbours Board which is negotiating now with the help of the Department of Finance.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for a supplementary, but we have run out of time and I will have to see the Leader of the Opposition before we call orders of the day.

Mr. Forrestall: My concern, Mr. Speaker, which is embodied in my further supplementary to the Minister of Transport, is that something undue does not happen in light of the 75 cents per ton increase at the port of Halifax compared with the picking up of the $12 million deficit for the ports of Montreal, Three Rivers and Quebec. What I want to ask the minister, Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary is whether or not he can give the House his personal assurance that no private deal has been entered into with the Maritime Employers Association with regard to this deficit and that any arrangements that are entered into on his behalf or on behalf of the Minister of Finance by the departmental officials will not be the result of prior arrangements made?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): There were no prior arrangements made with the Maritime Employers Association. I think the only thing we are doing now is trying to respond to what the House decided which was that those men should go back to work and have a full guarantee of work. We are trying to carry out this obligation without charging anything to Halifax or to any other eastern port.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Leader of the Opposition.

PROTECTION OF PRIVACY BILL

INQUIRY AS TO COMPLETION OF PASSAGE BEFORE RECESS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. With regard to the bill ordinarily referred to as the wiretapping bill, I should like to ask him whether it is the intention of the government to bring it back before the House and proceed with it to completion before the House recesses, in view of the amount of time, effort and good will which have gone into trying to produce this bill and in view of the importance of the subject?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it certainly is my hope that will be possible and that it will be done. There have been discussions in the co-operative spirit to which the Leader of the Opposition refers which have led to a possible method to get this very important piece of privacy legislation in place. I am having discussions with my colleague, the House leader, to determine the exact time this could be done, but certainly it would be my hope that we would pass it before we adjourn.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In his discussions with the House leader is the Minister of Justice considering the possibility of sending the bill back to the Senate in the way we sent it to their Honours the first time?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the discussions which I had in that spirit of co-operation which was referred to had led to the placing on the order paper of a very specific order of non-concurrence but with a new provision for notice in regard to the bill which seemed to me to meet the needs of the situation and the legitimate interests of all persons in the House and the other place. It is in that form I hope to proceed with it in due course.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

OIL EXPORT CHARGE ACT

PROVISION OF EXPORT CHARGE, OIL EXPORT TAX UNDER EXCISE ACT AND ALLOCATION OF REVENUES FROM TAX

The House resumed, from Friday, January 4, consideration in committee of Bill C-245, to impose a charge on the export of crude oil from Canada, to impose an oil export tax under the Excise Tax Act and to allocate certain of the revenues derived from the oil export tax—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mr. McCleave in the chair.

The Chairman: Order, please. Perhaps I could give the committee 30 seconds to settle itself before recognizing the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar.

When the Committee rose on Friday, January 4, clause 2 of the bill was under consideration. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar had the attention of the committee.

On Clause 2—definitions.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, when I called it four o'clock on Friday, I had placed on the record the position of the premier of the province of Saskatchewan, as he had stated it previously, in respect of the control of oil in that province. I said I was somewhat concerned about the aggressive attitude expressed by the Prime Minister, and indeed by the Minister of Justice toward the premiers of the two western provinces which were primarily involved in the production of oil. The Prime Minister, in language which I am sure was most unusual, said that the premier of Alberta was caught with his pants down. He said that Mr. Lougheed is in a corner and knows it, so the best policy for him is to yell and to set up a smokescreen. Mr. Chairman, if there is to be any hope of holding a conference that would be useful and productive, then I suggest the Prime Minister of this country should write a little letter to the premier of Alberta indicating that he really did not intend to be that vulgar, rude and childish toward the premier of one of our provinces.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources accused the premier of Saskatchewan of blackmail. How does the minister expect to negotiate productively with the premier of that province in view of such accusations? The Ottawa Journal for Friday, December 28, contains an article in which the following statement is to be found:

> Justice Minister Otto Lang declared Thursday that Alberta and Saskatchewan oil marketing legislation is ultra vires.
> He also stated that the federal government will probably test the legislation in the courts, and if necessary would even use powers of disallowance on the provincial legislation.

In advance of any consultation, I am sure that even with the great powers that the minister has he had no time to digest properly the action which has been taken in the province of Saskatchewan to conserve the resources in that province, the only province which has moved to take control of the resources with the announced intention of seeing that they serve the people of Canada and the people of that province. But the Minister of Justice took no note of this. Contrast this action with that of the Minister of Justice when the province of Quebec decided to stop the other provinces from selling eggs in Quebec. At that time the minister never took any action. It was the province of Manitoba which had to go to court to establish the right to trade anywhere in this country. Apparently the provinces of this nation are equal but some are more equal than others. I believe we must have a better record if we are to have a united country. I think the action of the Minister of Justice was unbecoming to a minister responsible for maintaining justice within this country. It was irresponsible to say the least.

I should like to quote again from the same issue of the Ottawa Journal:

> If there is conflict, the Justice Minister added, there is no question the provincial legislation "will fall".

So, the Minister of Justice hurls his thunderbolts at the various provinces, and then expects them to go into a conference to achieve useful legislation. The minister and the Prime Minister are carrying on a vendetta against these two provinces. A headline in the Ottawa Citizen of December 28 reads "Oil subsidy 'inevitable' for Eastern consumers". Why is it inevitable? It is up to the minister to prove that it is advisable, if he believes that is what he should establish. The trouble with this government is that it was not the premier of Alberta who was caught with his pants down; it was the federal government of Canada. They are the ones who were caught without a policy, and they are still not developing a policy that will serve the people of Canada. They are making only initial moves, and I sincerely hope that they will be guided by the good sense and foresight of the premier of Saskatchewan and will start to think in terms of conserving our energy as well as developing new methods of using energy efficiently. We must envisage increasing public ownership of refineries and pipelines even before we consider the ownership of the oil because the right of ownership of the oil lies with the province. The federal government can play a useful role in the control and development of our refineries and pipelines. On December 6, the Prime Minister said that the government will not necessarily act in the area of refineries.

Another matter which we should consider is an efficient transportation system. At present our transportation system is so inefficient that the Canadian Transport Commission has stated that the safety precautions and standards are not maintained. Our railroads should be electrified. England and other European countries are ahead of us in that they use electrical power to drive their trains. We are far advanced in the technology with regard to the use of atomic energy. Why then can we not, through that method, develop the energy needed to bring our railroads up to date, to electrify significant portions of our railways and to reduce the need for fuel oil in that important method of transportation? We should consider whether it is economical or even wise to move a large amount of freight by truck when our railroads can be electrified thus enabling large volumes of freight to be moved without the use of oil.

We should also seriously consider the advisability of moving a large volume of express freight by ground transport rather than by air because less oil would be used. Our railroads have become so inefficient that some customers have told me they cannot depend on delivery schedules. Let us improve that method of transportation to the point where we can use it to a greater extent. If as a nation we insist on using energy, specifically oil, in such a wasterful and profligate fashion as we have in recent years, then I doubt very much if any method of development or exploration can keep supplies up to our growing demands. At no time has the responsible minister said that we have this or that proposal in mind in order to develop an on-going, progressive and imaginative policy for the use of energy in Canada.

We are fortunate in that we have enough energy. We have the know-how and the technology. What we need is a sensible and coherent plan to use our energy and technology effectively. That is our principal need. If we were in the situation of some other countries which do not have oil, then our position would be very serious, much more so than it is now.

We need to consider very carefully any proposed method of subsidization. I am not opposed in principle to a subsidy given to the eastern provinces, if this is thought desirable. But, Mr. Chairman, we should carefully consider whether we could do more for the Atlantic provinces by electrifying the railroads, thus giving those provinces a first class transportation system, rather than trying to subsidize every gallon of gas and diesel fuel that is consumed between Quebec and Newfoundland. We must seriously consider in what way Canada can most effectively use its resources and technology. We are not rich enough to be able to afford to fritter away these things. I do not think any country in the world is rich enough to be able to fritter away the resources with which it has been blessed.

In the main, I hope that the Prime Minister and some other ministers of the Crown will drop the provocative attitude that they have shown to the oil producing provinces, and in its place develop some constructive, imaginative ideas to place with good will before those provinces. I can certainly say for the province of Saskatchewan that if the federal government does that they will be met with good will and co-operation. I expect the same would apply to Alberta and British Columbia. That is my advice to the government. It is what I would like to see happen, because the government is asking parliament to give it the right and the power to negotiate with those provinces. We should insist on one clear condition when we give the government that right and power, that it exercise it in good faith and with good will.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, hon. members will recall the debate on second reading on Thursday and Friday last when I said that the government was hoping to have the flexibility it needed to negotiate the question of price, revenue and taxation at the federal-provincial conference of first ministers which will be held on January 22 and 23. On the other hand, I stated frankly to the House that the maximum figure attached to the export charge in this bill, $4, had already been outrun by international events and was no longer realistic, but according to the rules of the House there was no way I could see of amending the ways and means resolution to give me and the government the authority to move that figure from $4 to $10, or indeed to amend the relevant clauses unless there was unanimous consent of the House.

It became clear from the tenor of the debate that unanimous consent might well be not forthcoming, and so in the face of the procedural obstacles with which the government found itself confronted, those obstacles paved the way for discussions and for the proposal which I will be placing before the committee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Obstacles are sometimes useful.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The obstacles which the government finds facing it are not obstacles of the texture of the House but the rules of the House.

I suggest for the consideration of the committee a proposal which, if it were to meet with unanimous consent, because we are dealing with ways and means, again would require the government to gain unanimous consent to amend the ways and means resolution to reflect what I am going to say. But, as I say, if the committee were to find this a reasonable proposition then you, Mr. Chairman, might want to take matters into your own hands and suggest ways of accomplishing it.

The proposal I put forward is that for February and March we add to Part II of the bill a provision to extend an export tax in the amount of $6.40 for each of those months; that Part I of the bill relating to the export charge, after those amendments were carried, be withdrawn with the consent of the House; that therefore the sharing of revenues as between the producing provinces and the federal government for the months of February and March be the same as for the months of October, November and December, 1973, and January, 1974, but that it be made clear—this does not appear in the bill—that the undertaking of my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources as to the destination of the federal share of that split, representing 50 per cent of those revenues, will be invested by the federal government in western resources in accordance with the undertakings given at the Western Opportunities Conference, which applies for October, November, December and January—again I repeat which is not set forth in the bill but merely reflects an undertaking of my colleague, one that I confirmed categorically in the House on Friday—in those terms be not extended for February and March.

In other words, whereas the statute would divide the revenues for February and March in the same proportion of 50/50, the destination for those revenues given to the federal government after January 31, 1974, would be part of a negotiation at the federal-provincial conference. Again in other words, my colleague's undertaking and my undertaking would obtain until January 31, 1974. Thereafter, the federal share will have to form part of the negotiation at the federal-provincial conference.

Mr. Lewis: Not thereafter—beforehand. Thereafter the results of your negotiations will apply.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is right. Obviously, this arrangement would need the unanimous consent of the House. The government would need an amendment to the ways and means motion, and if that were granted with the Speaker in the chair, then in the appropriate clause we would deal with it. I suggest that I table at this time, in French and English, the suggested ways and means amendment.

● (1520)

The Chairman: Order, please. I think that the tabling should be done with Mr. Speaker in the chair. The minister has pointed out something that has occurred to me as well. The committee of the whole is the servant of the House and I, therefore, feel that a direction from the House itself is the preferable practice. May I give these reasons for that suggestion? First, we will be dealing in part with a different ways and means motion; second, we may be, and probably are, going to deal with something substantially different from what the House approved on second reading; and, third, the committee of the whole, as is the case with all other committees, is bound by its order of reference.

Perhaps many things are possible by unanimous consent, but taxation measures in my opinion require very strict adherence to established procedures. Accordingly, I think it is better that I rise, report progress, and ask leave for the committee to sit again later this day, at which time points of order can be dealt with.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, with respect, I have no quarrel with your interpretation, but I think it would be very useful for the committee if we were to have some expression of opinion at the committee stage before we ask you to report to the Chair.

I will outline what I believe would be the most convenient way to proceed. If the committee were to reflect a feeling for unanimous consent to deal along the lines I have suggested then, of course, you would want to report it to the Speaker. After that, I suggest that the committee might want to pass clauses 1 and 2, one being the short title and two being the definitions clause, then stand clauses 3 to 10, export charge and move to amend clause 11 in the title, which is the clause amending the export tax for February and March, then carry clause 11 and part II, and clause 12 part III which is the apportionment, 50-50 clause, and then carry the title. I would then ask the committee to allow me unanimous consent to withdraw part I of the bill. That would be the procedure that I would suggest for the consideration of the committee.

The Chairman: The hon. Leader of the Opposition on the point of order raised by the minister.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Chairman, I am not rising on a point of order but to speak to clause 2 of the bill in committee of the whole.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Then I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on a point of order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the sequence of events is that the Minister of Finance announced something he wished to do which led Your Honour to rule that we should rise and report progress. Then, the minister suggested that before we rise to report progress he would like to hear from the parties on the procedural aspect only of what has been proposed. It seems to me that there should be a decision of some sort. Either we are on procedure, in which case we deal with that, or we are on substance, for who knows how long.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, we were invited by the minister to express ourselves on this proposition. I think that is a worth-while idea and the Leader of the Opposition will be putting forward our thoughts, perhaps at some length, but it certainly would be our party's position in so far as the proposition is concerned at this stage.

The Chairman: The Chair would have to hear the opinions of hon. members on whether there was the consent necessary. The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Chairman, I do not think the procedure will take any longer than it would have otherwise. There are some things I want to say relating to the bill and to the conference that will follow the bill. At the outset, however, I must say how pleased I am that the Minister of Finance has, at the eleventh hour, become as reasonable as we have been trying to be in sorting out the difficulties relating to this bill.

I am most pleased that if things continue to go along the way they now seem to be going along, we will be able to defer consideration of the export charge clauses of this bill until after the upcoming federal-provincial conference. I do not want to be gratuitous toward the Minister of Finance; he only did what he did under heavy pressure of events and circumstances, but I do want to compliment him on the way he has behaved in discussions regarding petroleum. I saw the Minister of Finance in a television interview at the weekend, and it was my impression that he displayed a sense of realism and sense of national perspective. These qualities have been lamentably absent in some of the outbursts of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I hope that all the minister's colleagues will take a cue for future behaviour in this regard from him.

An hon. Member: You would make a great opposition leader, John!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Chairman, the minister has made only one spurious reference in the pursuit of getting his bill passed. He indicated somehow that the federal government would be at a disadvantage, in some way would have its hands tied, if it had to face this conference without the export charges provision of the bill being endorsed by parliament. I have never felt that this was so, and I do not feel that way now.

In the first place, there is no way in absolute terms that this government can go to this conference at a disadvantage in terms of jurisdictional authority. It has every power it needs, and it has used a couple of these powers already on a temporary basis. There are others at its disposal as well. So, there was never any question of additional powers being required to meet the provinces of this country on an equal footing. I assure the House that we gave this point detailed and careful consideration before adopting our position. Despite what the government said, we felt it really had no case and it would be wrong for us to extend any further provisional trust to the government on the basis of a non-existent case.

I further assure all hon. members that our position was not predicated on any narrow, regional or provincial interest. I must say I have been surprised by the horror expressed in some quarters when we voiced any concerns about the role and rights of the provinces. There has never been any suggestion on our part that the provinces are, in effect, sovereign states, but they are not colonies either and their rightful claim deserves to find expression in this House.

There is unquestionably a basis for federal interest, a federal presence and a federal responsibility in the development and pricing of petroleum. No one has ever denied that, to my knowledge. In the present circumstances, there is no denying that a federal interest and federal presence must be involved in pricing policy and revenue sharing policy. Let that be very clear.

Canada has had a national oil policy since 1961, and it has served the country well. It was adopted under the government of the right hon. member for Prince Albert which also established the National Energy Board. It has been that policy, Mr. Chairman, which has been serving the country. Had it not been for such a policy we would not have had the development, the delivery capabilities and the reserves on hand that make us the envy of a troubled world today.

[Translation]

And in this new situation we must have new national oil policy. Each province in each area has a particular interest in the elaboration of the policy. Oil producing provinces for example have an interest in the policies concerning prices and taxes, policies elaborated now but that will be used as a guideline for many years.

The five eastern provinces for their part also have a strong interest in this matter because they will have to keep on getting their supplies on the world market and an unduly great discrepancy in prices would signal the destruction of their economy.

Our richer provinces consuming domestic oil are vitally interested in the domestic prices remaining such that their industry may be in a competitive position which would be prifitable on the international level.

And the ordinary taxpayers in these provinces also have an interest based on prices and incomes which would be dictated by this national oil policy.

● (1530)

[English]

The principle of equalization payments, which is an overriding policy in the national interest, calls in effect for payments by the wealthier provinces, Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia, to the provinces which are not so advantaged in wealth and development. These payments are geared to a national average of expenditures and they are accomplished through the national tax system. I realize, of course, that higher equalization payments involve higher tax rates on individuals across the country, and that they also affect transfer payments.

Two main possibilities arise in the present oil situation which would influence these equalization payments. Ongoing, significant price disparity would be hurtful to the economies of the five eastern provinces, thus pushing them further below the national average. This could cause equalization payments to increase. Likewise, ongoing significant revenue increases to any wealthier province which would materially raise the national average of expenditures by provinces would cause equalization payments to increase. These increases are borne by the taxpayer; there is no other source. As I say, they are paid principally by the wealthier provinces.

For all these considerations, it is certainly agreed that a national policy must be put into place and that the federal government, through this parliament, has a large part to play and has a large responsibility, because this parliament is representative of the entire country. But the federal government does not properly play its part and properly discharge its responsibilities by acting arbitrarily; and, regrettably, this is how it has acted to date.

[Translation]

From the federal point of view, there seems to be three possible approaches to this matter.

The government could adopt a laisser-faire attitude, that is let the provinces establish their own prices—ignore the discrepancies in prices in some areas—and show no interest towards the millions of Canadians whose taxation burden would increase to compensate the increase in equalization payments.

Obviously, Mr. Chairman, this alternative is not acceptable to any party in this House and is also inacceptable I believe in all areas of this country.

[English]

A second alternative for the federal government would be to take arbitrary and unilateral action through its existing powers, or seeking others, in order to impose its own will upon the whole country. I am not yet prepared to believe that any federal government would choose to select this approach; but I must say, sir, that many of the actions of this government up to this time have given my faith a sizeable shaking.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The third available alternative, surely the only acceptable one, is for the federal government to work out an approach in concert with all the provinces, and representatives of the territories should participate as well. This approach and its implementation, which would follow, would not be easy. But that approach would provide the basic necessity for good will and the finding of common ground which can provide renewed strength and purpose to Canada for generations to come.

In this process the provinces consuming Canadian crude oil must come to recognize the legitimate claims of the producing provinces which are entitled to get a reasonable return for their shrinking non-renewable resources. In pursuing my own understanding of this, sir, I looked at the example of the price for hydroelectricity, a renewable resource which is under Canadian public ownership. The price of hydroelectricity in Canada is about 3.5 mills per kilowatt hour; that is the lowest range. Taking its thermal energy content and equivalent price to hydroelectricity at 3½ mills, which is pretty cheap energy, a barrel of oil would bring a price of about $6. I am not suggesting that this should be the index. I am merely using this as an illustration of comparative value.

The oil producing provinces, as I say, are entitled to a reasonable return, and they are entitled to share in an adequate way in national development through federal policies that do not militate against their development and diversification while other, wealthier parts of the country use up the non-renewable resources of the producing provinces. I say that all Canadians in other parts of the country must come to better know and understand the plight of our five eastern provinces which are vulnerable to international oil prices and will continue to be vulnerable for years to come. On that point, I want to emphasize, for the benefit of anyone who may have the wrong impression, that the extension of the oil pipeline to Montreal, which should be completed in a couple of years, if they ever get the damn thing started—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: — will only initially ease about one third of this vulnerability in quantitative terms. In other words, about one third of the oil requirements of the five eastern provinces will go through that pipeline, according to present plans. Other new developments, such as reliable production from undersea discoveries off the Atlantic coast and other delivery systems will be necessary to make further inroads into the vulnerability of the five eastern provinces. And these prospects go much further into the future than a mere couple of years.

I have mentioned the interest of the large provinces in consuming domestic petroleum and of the concern of provinces over questions affecting the competitive position of their industries. They are concerned about the effect that equalization payments might have on taxes. As I say, in order to design a national oil policy for the years immediately ahead, a policy for the next decade, the role of the federal government must be one of leadership in bringing the whole thing together. I have conceded that this will not be an easy task. It will not be easy for the federal government, or for the provincial governments. But it is, surely, the only way to proceed, and I believe the prospects are very hopeful.

In the first two weeks of last October I travelled around the country and met with several provincial leaders, including those of Ontario and the four western provinces. You will recall, sir, that at that time all the elements of the world energy situation were already with us; only their magnitude has changed since then. The federal government had implemented a voluntary price freeze on domestic crude and had instituted its temporary export tax. Federal-provincial relationships were not at a high level. Yet in my discussions around the country I came to see many areas in which things could be worked out. I also saw the necessity for certain guiding principles which could form the basis of an accord, the basis for a new national oil policy to serve us in the immediate future. I previously expressed a number of these principles, but I think it would be worthwhile to summarize them in point form today. I think these are the kind of guiding principles which the federal government should take to the upcoming energy conference of first ministers.

First, there should be an objective of de facto national self-sufficiency. This involves the extension and modification of existing transmission systems and construction of new ones. At the optimum, it would also involve new production from undersea sources off the Atlantic coast. Second, there must be a better return, a realistic return, to the citizens of those provinces now producing from shrinking conventional petroleum reserves. The determination of a fair return should involve an examination and adjustment of federal transportation and development policies which would allow those provinces to diversify their economies. Third, an understanding should be reached on a fair price for oil from existing conventional petroleum reserves. This price should be below international prices, and it would be highly desirable if price increases up to the agreed price were phased in over a period of time to ease the impact on consumers.

Fourth, between the federal government and the producing provinces there should also be an understanding reached which would put into place a satisfactory flexible mechanism to administer export prices for petroleum and royalties and revenues derived from these export sales, rather than the federal government simply taking unilateral action. Fifth, there should be federal-provincial accord on appropriate levels of taxation and royalty schedules which would, at one and the same time, remove any prospect of massive windfall profits going to the oil companies but allow sufficient incentive to stimulate new production from new developments. Continued frontier exploration, undersea exploration and expanded development of petroleum in the tar sands and heavy oil deposits are the key to assured supply at stable prices in the future.

Sixth, until de facto self-sufficiency has been achieved, it will be necessary to apply some shelter to petroleum product prices in those parts of the country which are supplied from international sources. I say that with all respect to the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar who just spoke. Seventh, in addition to providing development incentives in the existing private sector and providing the means for a national price shelter program, increased revenues to governments should be primarily dedicated to increasing Canadian participation in the ownership and development of new energy resources and the technology associated with such development.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Eighth, federal incentive programs should be instituted to apply to the expansion of storage facilities in vulnerable communities throughout the country. It should be national policy to ensure that there is a minimum of 90-days supply held in storage at all times. Ninth, conservation must be a basic consideration of national petroleum policy. Governments must set a good example in their own operations and accept responsibility for generating public awareness of the urgency of conservation practices. We must all recognize, in the course of reshaping our economy and redirecting our way of life, that getting away from the profligate use of oil is just as important as the discovery and development of new petroleum resources.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Tenth, at the upcoming first minister's conference on energy some ongoing national forum should be activated, a forum which would continue to bring together the jurisdictional and administrative groups involved in energy development in order to place national oil policy in broad perspective.

These principles are not represented as exhaustive, Mr. Chairman, although listening to them may be exhausting to the House. They deal with petroleum and they deal only with the needs of the immediate future. We all know that conservation is a very broad issue. My party takes a back seat to no one on this concern, and representatives of this party have been most emphatic in declaring the urgency of research and development of alternate sources of energy, alternatives to petroleum. Petroleum is a vital resource in the manufacture of many essential commodities. We owe it to future generations of Canadians to husband this resource with the utmost care.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I have not dealt with natural gas. It is rather amusing the way natural gas has stayed out of this whole controversy. It is a fuel which has been unrealistically underpriced for years. Revisions of natural gas policy will have to be undertaken in the very near future. It would be my hope that the successful negotiations and settlement of a national oil policy would bear dividends of goodwill when these revisions are undertaken. As an extension of that concept, I think there are other benefits to be derived as well if principles of sharing and fairness that are arrived at in the course of developing a national oil policy are extended to all the resources of all the regions of Canada.

For the time being, for our immediate needs vis-à-vis a new national oil policy, I hope the government will follow the principles I have outlined and, more important, I hope they will follow them in good spirit. Regarding the position which we have taken in respect to this bill before us, this matter of proceeding in good spirit concerns us deeply. The development of a national oil policy calls for federal consistency and federal consultation. However, the present federal government has provided us with a classic example of inconsistency and vacillation. It promulgated a voluntary freeze on domestic crude prices with an agreed and assured end date, then abandoned that for some hazy extentions of the freeze with no declared end date.

As a crowing price of shameful judgment this government, through the Prime Minister, put forward an unrealistic and savage policy early in December, a policy which left Quebec and the Atlantic provinces totally at the mercy of rising international prices. It was ludicrous and tragic that the Prime Minister added insult to injury by calling this travesty a "one-Canada" oil policy. As I indicated the other day, I was pleased to see the government withdrawing in principle from this abominable policy, although it turns out they have withdrawn to something quite unacceptable, if we can believe the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Why did they ever announce such a thing in the first place? Why did the Prime Minister then try to cover it up with utterances about adequate help being available to the Atlantic provinces and Quebec through the Canada Assistance Plan and increased equalization payments? Why he said that, I do not know. Why the Liberal members from Quebec and the Maritimes said they would accept it, I will never understand. How could the Prime Minister say on December 6 that he was putting forward a "one Canada" oil policy? Given the immediate valid criticism with which we responded and the responses from the provincial governments involved in this announcement, why did it take another three weeks and another round of international price increases before the government abandoned the position it took on December 6, in principle at least?

What has replaced that position? The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has apparently been the spokesman delegated to cover up the Prime Minister's policy in this regard. This minister says that in December a difference of 10 cents a gallon was thought to be tolerable, but that today a difference of 20 cents a gallon is not. It is truly incredible, particularly in relation to the on-going, permanent power the government was seeking from parliament through this omnibus bill, that a savage policy in the course of being reversed would bring forth an explanation which only reconfirms the intended savagery of the original policy. We have been given precious little in the way of information by the government, but we do now have this bit: the government believed, and still believes, that for years into the future it will remain tolerable for Canadians in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces to pay 10 cents a gallon more for gasoline, heating oil and other fuels than anyone else in the country, quite apart from any differential brought about by provincial taxes. This is the new, revised "one Canada" policy and this is the kind of approach we are expected to endorse by granting extended permanent powers to the government. We cannot and we will not ever endorse, accept or lend a shred of support to that kind of thinking.

Over the past few months, I have talked about specific price shelters and I have talked about a general shelter which would narrow the price disparity gap to a range of from 50 cents to a dollar between a barrel of domestic crude and a barrel of imported crude. That is the sort of disparity which worked the other way for a number of years. It must be remembered that we are talking, now, about a disparity which will continue into the future, a disparity which will not be remedied even when the pipeline is extended; a disparity which under the best of circumstances will not be overcome by de facto self-sufficiency for close to a decade. The government says it is tolerable that this disparity should amount to 10 cents a gallon on heating oil and oil used by industry generally. We say the maximum allowable disparity at the present time, based on a gap of 50 cents to a dollar per barrel, should be something less than 5 cents per gallon, and we maintain that the relationship of this order must be maintained for years into the future until self-sufficiency is achieved. That is our approach to national policy.

I hasten to add that I am not engaging in any auction here. I repeatedly put forward this figure long before the minister invented and disclosed his figure a week or so ago in the course of fabricating a cover-up for the Prime Minister's folly of December 6. A gap of 10 cents a gallon is, of course, not tolerable at all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: To quote the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, that would be a real kick in the pants—I think that was the expression he used. This discriminatory approach on the part of the government is monstrous. It must be obvious that if the government is looking for a gap of 10 cents a gallon it might as well close down the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, and provincial development agencies might as well throw in the towel, too. With a 10 cent a gallon penalty for locating in one of those provinces, a petroleum-fueled industry could not be attracted there for love nor money. It is surely absurd to think that new industries, and existing ones, would not look for more desirable locations.

This insanity is all we really know about the government's approach to national pricing policy. I would think that this, in itself, would be enough to demonstrate the need for the government to meet with the provinces, as we have insisted it should. This in itself is enough to explain why the government must be exposed to reality, why it must reveal the balance of its intentions before any member is asked to give it support for any aspect of its so-called national oil policy.

In the course of the debate on the bill before us, I have been encouraged to find that the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands has expressed on behalf of his party concern similar to that which I have expressed, that is, concern about the lack of information and doubt as to the real intentions of the government. He and I do not see eye to eye on all aspects of policy, but we do share some legitimate suspicions and reservations with regard to the future-oriented section of this bill. At least both our parties—and I say this with sincerity—have been consistent in the principles we have expressed on the subject of petroleum. Some supporters of the hon. gentleman's party, like some Canadians who support mine nationally, bear the burden of provincial office. But I know that they, like the supporters of all parties and the supporters of the independent members of this House, are prepared to put the national interest first. I am speaking, now, of men bearing provincial responsibilities. To do this, however, they must know the proposed ground rules and they must be convinced of the underlying sense of fairness which makes national policy work.

Mr. Paproski: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: From the time the government introduced this bill right up to the present moment it has failed to satisfy either of these requirements. There was, therefore, no way in which we could have given even provisional support to the section of the bill related to the on-going export charge. We offered the government every possible kind of compromise so as to expedite the other sections of the bill and defer that section for consideration at the conclusion of the federal-provincial conference. Because the government ended up being the victim of its own tangled web of changing policy, it was faced with a situation in which the unanimous consent of the House was required to amend a clause in the future export charge section. Thus, it was forced to abandon a schedule which would have seen that section dealt with and brought to a conclusion prior to the up-coming conference of first ministers. I know the Minister of Finance cannot be happy about landing in the position he did, but I at least hope he takes some wry comfort from the fact that he ended up in a position of poetic justice. My colleagues and I have always tried to ensure that justice prevails, particularly poetic justice.

In the days ahead we will continue to do our utmost to ensure continuing justice in the development of a national oil policy, a national energy policy worthy of the name. Certainly, I give my consent to the proposals of the minister, and I hope the House gives its unanimous consent. If it does, I intend to support the bill with the changes made by the minister.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks regarding the proposals which have been put before the committee by the Minister of Finance. When this measure was introduced by the minister last Thursday, on behalf of the members of the New Democratic Party I expressed the very serious reservations we had with respect to some features of Bill C-245. As I said then, we were, and we still are, in complete support of the idea of the export tax. We want to see the legislation passed as quickly as possible, and to have it passed before the first ministers' conference so that the federal government and the oil producing provinces will know exactly where they stand in regard to collecting that tax and to distributing the proceeds from it.

With reference to Part I of the legislation, which provides for the imposition of an export charge, I pointed out on Thursday, and I want to underline again today, that we are in favour of the principle of an export charge. In the present world situation, when world prices have become completely unrealistic and are soaring to unheard of heights, certainly the additional money that comes from exports of oil ought not to go to the oil companies but back to the treasures of the federal and provincial governments. Our quarrel has not been with the principle of an export charge. The objection I raised was to the fact that the federal government was asking us to agree to the imposition of a charge without being able to outline the basis upon which that charge would be levied, without being able to tell us the price structure upon which it would be predicated, and without being able to tell us anything about how the proceeds from that charge would be distributed as between the federal and provincial governments.

In answer to some questions I asked him last Friday, the minister said that it was impossible to give that information prior to the meeting of first ministers, and undoubtedly the minister was quite right. This will require a good deal of hard bargaining and negotiation, and we cannot expect the minister to be able to give us that information. But neither should the minister expect us to agree to give the federal government powers to levy tremendous sums of money without telling us any of the details about how the money will be collected or distributed. Therefore, I think the minister has made a very wise choice and I want to commend him for it.

It is not easy to have to come into this House and say that he is prepared to emasculate a bill that he wanted to have passed and take with him to the first ministers' conference and to the meeting of ministers of finance. I do not agree with his feeling that this weakens his hand. I do not think it weakens his hand at all. If the minister is able to go to that conference having authority from parliament with respect to the export tax, and if he has the assurance of at least the majority of the members of this House who are favourable to the principle of an export charge, then he is in a position to negotiate with the provinces. But it also puts us in the position that when that conference has been completed and agreements have been reached we will be able in good conscience to deal with legislation that is based on definite information, and we will know the terms and conditions on which this money is going to be raised.

The matter that has concerned us most is that the federal government has never clearly stated what its intentions are when the price freeze is lifted at the end of the winter season. Certainly, indications are that the government is going to remove the freeze. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said that the price would probably double by the middle of summer to $8 or $10 a barrel. The Minister of Finance said last Friday that the domestic price would probably track the international price. I take this to mean that the government proposes to let the price rise to something close to the world price, but we have the right to know. We will want to know, when the minister brings back legislation regarding this matter, by how much he is going to allow the price to rise, and who is going to get the benefit of this increase in price.

In my opinion, there are only two reasons for allowing the price of domestically produced oil in this country to rise. The first is if the oil companies can demonstrate that the cost of production has risen. Certainly then, of course, they should be allowed to increase the price to meet their increased costs. The second reason is if governments, federally and provincially, are prepared to say that the price shall rise sufficiently to enable the federal and provincial governments to build up a fund for the development of our future oil needs. That, too, makes sense. I believe the Canadian people would accept the idea, and would pay more for their petroleum products, if they were told that the money is to be used to ensure that ten years from now petroleum products will be produced in Canada and will be controlled by Canadian authorities.

However, if this increase in the domestic price is for the purpose of allowing oil companies either to increase their already excessive profits or the increase is given them on the assumption they will use these funds for exploration and development, then I for one would not be agreeable to such an increase. In the first place, I doubt very much whether we would get any guarantee that the increased revenue the oil companies would receive would be used to develop oil resources in Canada. Secondly, I know that the funds used for the development of oil resources would be deductible from their corporation tax, and would increase tremendously the value of their assets. This committee should stop and think for a moment about what has happened to the assets they now have in the ground, ten billion barrels of oil which have increased in value by $6.50 a barrel. If we are to allow them to milk the consumers in order to increase even further the value of their assets and allow them to deduct that amount from their taxes, then what we will be doing will be making the consumers and the taxpayers of Canada pay for the discovery of oil resources which, in the final analysis, will belong to the same multinational corporations which control 91 per cent of the oil resources of this country at the present time.

That, Mr. Chairman, is why we have been very much concerned about this legislation. It is not because we object to the principle of an export charge, but because the government has given no indication of the price structure upon which the charge will be levied. The government has given us no idea what its intentions are, and the minister says he cannot give us any information until after the first ministers' conference. Therefore, I think the minister is taking the wise course in delaying discussion and decision in respect of the export charge until after the first ministers' conference has reached some agreement.

The matter we are discussing, will be discussing further today and will be discussing when the minister brings back legislation for an export charge, is very fundamental to this country. If what has happened in this country, and in other countries in recent months, is any indication of how vital oil supplies are in respect of the survival of a nation, this surely ought to awaken us to the need for a national oil policy which must concern itself with three things. First of all, it must concern itself with supply. As I have said in this House very often, we are one of the few countries in the world which can produce sufficient oil to meet our needs. However, the problem of supply has been difficult because of the policy which my Conservative friends adopted in 1961 by which more than a third of Canada is entirely dependant on imported oil and by which we committed ourselves to export 60 per cent of our oil supplies to the United States. That situation will have to be rectified.

When the Leader of the Opposition and other members talk about making Canada self-sufficient in oil I agree with them, but I hope they realize what that means. This means that increasingly we must phase out our export of oil to the United States, not because we want to but because we have no choice, until such a time as the oil sands are developed or another source of oil is found. We are exporting at the present time about one million barrels of oil a day to the United States and were exporting about one and a quarter million barrels a day. Our requirements in eastern Canada are 800,000 barrels a day. We cannot supply eastern Canada and at the same time export one million to one and a quarter million barrels of oil to the United States. We will have to make this decision consciously, and tell our American friends that if we are to become self-sufficient in respect of oil we will have, over a period of years, to phase out our exports to the United States.

The other thing that policy means is we will have to extend the pipeline not only to Montreal but to the maritime provinces, unless offshore oil should become cheaper than Canadian oil which I do not think anyone in his wildest dream thinks will happen. The OPEC countries are discussing a price of $20 a barrel and Venezuela is discussing a price of $18.04 a barrel. So, if we are to supply eastern Canada with oil and protect the consumers in that part of the country against these exorbitant prices for imported oil, we will have to extend the pipeline. I was dismayed today when I heard the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources say, in answer to a question from the leader of our party, that the National Energy Board probably will not be ready to hear applications until the spring of this year. After those applications have been heard and after a permit is granted, the right-of-way will have to be bought and the pipe manufactured, processed and put in place. I say that if that happens the government had better get ready to move its target date to 1976 rather than 1975. This would mean that eastern Canada would go through two more winters of the kind of uncertainty through which it is going at the present time. I do not think there is any excuse for that kind of delay.

The second matter to be considered in a national oil policy is the whole question of price. We have been concerned about price mainly in respect of the area west of the Ottawa Valley. Thought must now be given to the price problem in eastern Canada. East of the Ottawa Valley, consumers have been at the mercy of the importing oil companies. They have had to pay very high prices. I have suggested on behalf of this party repeatedly that we ought to set up a national petroleum company. The government may call it a national marketing board. We do not care what the terminology is. We should set up a national mechanism for the purchase of domestic and imported oil so that it could be pooled and the price equalized across this country. Until the pipeline is built we should be prepared, out of the federal treasury or out of some of the proceeds from the export charge, to subsidize the price in Quebec and in the Atlantic provinces because I believe the people of Canada have not only a responsibility but a duty to see that the people in eastern Canada are not made to pay exorbitant prices at this time of crisis. I do not think the people west of the Ottawa Valley line would object to pooling the price if they knew that this would make the situation fair for the people east of the Ottawa Valley line. What they would not take kindly to is a raising of the price merely to increase the profits of the oil companies.

The third thing that is necessary in this national oil policy is that we give some thought, when we are discussing the apportionment of the revenue from the export charge, to the setting up of earmarked funds for the development of future oil supplies. If we are not very careful, the time will slip away and we will find ourselves in a crisis situation when the available supplies of conventional oil are not adequate to meet our needs. When that happens there will be a cry for a crash program. I ask members of the committee to mark my words that the day will come when, no matter what government sits on the treasury benches, it will be saying to Parliament and the Canadian people that our oil supplies are diminishing, that international prices are drastically high and that, therefore, we must have a crash program to develop our oil sands. They will say the only way we can do it quickly is to give to the multinational corporations special tax concessions, the right to export the oil, to tell the American and other international oil companies: if you will come in and do us the great favour of developing our oil sands, we will let you take the oil back home and we will let you control the oil industry in Canada. If we do that, we will have betrayed our trust, not only to this generation but to future generations.

Mr. Bawden: What did you do in Saskatchewan?

Mr. Douglas: I can tell the hon. member what they have done in Saskatchewan. They had the courage to do something that no Tory government has ever had the courage to do. They have set up a provincial petroleum company. They have told the oil companies: You will get $3.38 a barrel providing you spend 30 cents a barrel on development, and the rest will go into the treasury of the province of Saskatchewan to help develop oil resources for the future. When any Tory government in Canada is prepared to do that, in my opinion they will have justified themselves. But I do not see any indication of their doing that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas: May I close by saying that if I understand the minister correctly, he is suggesting that the export tax that is set out in Part II of the bill be extended to cover the months of February and March, and that the amount of the tax will be $6.40 a barrel. He is suggesting that Part I of the bill dealing with the export charge will be withdrawn. He is suggesting that the division of the export tax, namely, 50 per cent to the oil producing provinces, will be continued. The only proviso he is making is that in the months of February and March the federal government make no commitment as to what disposition will be made of its 50 per cent. That is understandable in view of the fact that the minister is going into a conference with first ministers, and I take it this is a matter for negotiation and discussion.

I think that is an eminently sensible proposal. I think it does the things which we advocated last Thursday, namely that we approve the export tax, that we make that export tax effective until the end of March, and that in the meantime we defer the export charge until after the first minister's conference at which time the Minister of Finance, if he so desires, can bring that legislation back to the House. At that time, we will be in a better position to discuss it because the minister will be able to give us the information which he is not able to give us at present. My colleagues and I would be prepared to follow the course which the minister has outlined.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to repeat the remarks I made when this bill was introduced. However it remains that a bill dealing with provincial interests obviously requires the agreement of the provinces.

In view of the fact that oil production is concentrated in one or two provinces and that we have a problem to settle urgently there is some danger, as I said last Thursday, that a crisis situation is exploited to create precedents which we might regret later on. If next year or in two or three years oil wells were operated in the province of Quebec for instance I wonder what would happen if such a bill were adopted. This could very well happen since it seems that if we are short of oil today this is simply due to the negligence of oil companies which have not made the required efforts to develop oil operations in Quebec. Some day we might find ourselves in a situation where not only one or two provinces would have oil but several provinces. Then will all the provinces behave similarly as regards this bill? It was therefore absolutely normal to have the provincial agreement and to negotiate with the provinces a true agreement free from any problem.

Naturally we understand the intent of this bill which however, is not quite explicit and we deplore that we have to admit a certain price uniformity for oil throughout the country. Of course, that is a goal that should be reached. Are we going to reach it through this exercise? Some have doubts about it but once again it is worth repeating that if we are faced with such a situation it is because the government lacked wisdom, foresight, to say the least, since it is quite paradoxal to have an oil shortage in a country such as ours which is itself an oil producing country. We are still wondering how can such a situation arise.

We realize that it is now urgent to try to remedy that but it is also worth pointing out that a lot more foresight should always be present since that is the role of a government. That is why too great haste implementing such a bill could subsequently result in a lack of wisdom and foresight.

Mr. Chairman, everyone understands that in all parts of this country, whether it be the west or the east, it is extremely important that all Canadians have the same facilities, the same possibilities and, as the hon. member who spoke before me, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), said, it is entirely unacceptable to have different prices in the eastern and western parts of this country. But this government seems to accept that situation, and it does so not only in this field since it exists in others as well. For example, I have here an editorial published in the December release of the magazine Le meunier québécois where Mr. René Blanchard relate those differences in prices in the fields of oil and feed grains. Apparently this government likes to foster inequality within our country, which is clearly detrimental to understanding and unity among Canadians. In order to spare the House's time, I shall give a summary of the editorial. The author points out that the two price policy is causing ever more dissatisfaction among Canadians. They will not accept this policy any longer. That is why, as the author states in his conclusion, if we make the necessary efforts to come up with a single price for oil, we could certainly do the same for feed grains, for instance, and wherever necessary resources are readily available. This way we could favour an adequate distribution of goods throughout our country, and not at the expense of such and such regions.

That is why, Mr. Chairman, we hesitated considerably about the bill, and we will be satisfied with the policies put forth on the matter only to the extent where the opinions of the provinces have been considered, in order that the bill that is passed can co-ordinate the field of oil, although this too might create a precedent from which other difficulties might arise.

That is why I pointed out again last Thursday that we are now up against the problem in the field of energy: today we are dealing with oil, tomorrow we may deal with electricity. And I can foresee the dreadful dilemma we could face if a federal tax were to be levied on exports of electricity. Quebec produces an abundance of electricity; it has to export some and it does so. Again we see the type of conflict that could crop up.

So, before creating a precedent, before taking a step in that field, it is imperative that there be previous agreement with the provinces.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. Is it agreed that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Your Honour, the purpose of seeking consent to return to this situation with the Speaker in the Chair is to seek concurrence in a ways and means motion that would have the effect of further amending the excise tax. The wording of the ways and means motion is as follows:

That the Excise Tax Act be further amended to provide among other things that in respect of the export of crude oil from Canada during the period commencing on February 1, 1974 and ending on April 1, 1974, a tax be imposed, levied and collected on each barrel of crude oil so exported, at the rate of $6.40 per barrel, to be paid by the person holding a licence under Part VI of the National Energy Board Act for the exportation of oil from Canada and under whose licence the crude oil is purported to be exported.

With consent, Mr. Speaker, the motion might be put, and if put we could go back to the committee of the whole and be in a position then to deal with amendments that would be made possible by the acceptance of the ways and means motion.

Mr. Tom Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to accept this amendment, as agreed upon earlier in our negotiations.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, Mr. Speaker, this is in accordance with the discussions that have taken place. We are prepared to give the necessary unanimous consent to deal with this motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Matte: We also agree, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: I move the amendment previously outlined.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion (Mr. MacEachen) agreed to.

House in committee on Bill C-245, to impose a charge on the export of crude oil from Canada, to impose an oil export tax under the Excise Tax Act and to allocate certain of the revenues derived from the oil export tax—Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)—Mr. Laniel in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose to report progress it was considering clause 2.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I would now submit to the committee that clauses 3 to 10 inclusive should stand until we deal with the subsequent clauses.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that clauses 3 to 10 inclusive be stood?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clauses 3 to 10 inclusive stand.

On clause 11—Definitions.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to propose to clause 11. I move:

that Clause II of Bill C-245 be amended

(a) by striking out the word "and" at the end of line 31 on page 6; and

(b) by striking out line 35 on page 6 and substituting therefor the following:

"of two dollars and twenty cents; and (d) in the period commencing on the 1st day of February, 1974 and ending on the 1st day of April, 1974, a tax of six dollars and forty cents."

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. In accordance with the provisions of the amended ways and means motion the President of the Privy Council has moved the said amendment. Shall the amendment carry?

● (1640)

Mr. Andre: Mr. Chairman, in rising to participate in these deliberations I want, first of all, to say that I am pleased, as are all members of this party, that we have been able to reach this accommodation with the Minister of Finance in respect of this bill. We can only hope that this is the first of a series of steps that are necessary to clear up a chaotic energy situation in Canada.

At a time when Canada, of all countries in the western world, should be in a position to take advantage of being the only country that is self-sufficient in crude oil, we have bickering, arguing, uncertainty and flip-flops by various government spokesmen announcing changes of policy from day to day. There is apparently a constitutional confrontation between the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan and the federal government. This commodity is, supposedly, within the jurisdiction of the provinces, yet the initiative has been taken by the federal government; this has caused dissension and uncertainty and instead of looking forward to tremendous opportunities, we find ourselves trying to sort out this chaotic situation.

Oil Export Tax

In his remarks on Thursday, the Minister of Finance dealt with the question posed by the premiers of both Alberta and Saskatchewan as to why he singled out oil for special treatment in this supposed fight against inflation. His reasons are reported at pages 9013 and 9014 of Hansard as follows:

In the first place, oil plays a unique and almost unparalleled role in our national life.

There is no argument about that, Mr. Chairman; the statement was as true a year ago as it is today, and it has been true for many years. There is no particular reason that answer should cause the government to jump in at this time with various policy statements and bills such as C-245 and C-236 which were brought forward in a most haphazard fashion. Then, he said:

Secondly, it is relevant to note the cause of these steep and sudden jumps in price. Normal competitive forces of supply and demand have not been responsible.

That was the second reason for the government taking the initiatives it has, and the third reason he gave was:

Third, and as a reflection of the great importance of oil as an economic commodity, we must have regard for the staggering financial dimensions of sharp increases in its price.

There is no question but that is an important consideration as well. However, it is well to consider the political situation existing in Canada. The situation with regard to energy basically stems from a statement made by the Prime Minister on September 4, 1973 when he called for a freeze on the price of domestically produced oil. That freeze was imposed before the Middle East conflict and before any Arab embargo or any steep rise in the price of oil. In other words, it was imposed before any of three reasons given by the Minister of Finance were valid. We are in this chaotic situation today as a result of a short sighted political move made by the Prime Minister on September 4 when he announced unilaterally, and without the consultation that had been promised by the government in its energy analysis of July, 1973, that the price would be frozen until the end of January. I do not bring this up now in order to say "I told you so" nor to remind the government of its blunders, but you cannot appreciate where you are going if you do not know where you have been.

I think it is very important that we examine the history of the energy situation in Canada before the first ministers conference. I believe that many of the difficulties we now face have less to do with the government's attempt to formulate a new oil policy than with its attempt to assume control of energy resources in Canada. In my short time in this parliament it has become obvious to me that in many ways the motivations of the government, of ministers and senior executives in departments are similar to the motivations encountered in big business, namely growth. What they seek is power and control. In order to carry out our responsibility as members of parliament, it is incumbent upon each of us to examine these power plays very carefully. As many hon. members have pointed out, big business can tread on the toes of small people and this is also true of big government. A power play, such as that which the government is apparently engaging in now, is not likely to serve the interests of the people of Canada.

[Mr. Andre.]

The government has no reason to assume that the provinces have mismanaged the resource industry. Canada is the only country that is self-sufficient in oil; we produce more than we can consume. This condition was brought about through the progressive administration of the resource industries by the producing provinces. I do not state this from any partisan point of view, since the oil industry in Alberta grew under the direction of a Social Credit government; so, the federal government has no reason to assume that the provinces have mismanaged the oil industry.

The Oil and Gas Conservation Board of Alberta has rules and regulations to deal with leases and production and these have been copied by many legislatures throughout the world. In comparison, we might look at the federal government's management of areas like the far north and our offshore resources where we are still waiting for Land Use Regulations after three years, and apparently will have to wait much longer. One has to ask why the federal government is being so aggressive in seeking to take control of the resource industries from the provinces. Why is the Minister of Justice threatening the provinces with legal action if they insist on enacting the sort of legislation that has been brought before the respective legislatures of Saskatchewan and Alberta? It has been suggested to me privately by senior officials of the government, and publicly as well, that as a federal member of parliament it is my duty to side with the federal government in this power play with the provinces. Sir, that is totally unacceptable. It is my view that members of parliament in this House ought to be concerned about the interests of Canadians in all parts of the country. I submit that the interests of Canadians are not being served by the present actions of the federal government; nor have they been so served in the past.

Why do I say that? In view of the fluid world energy situation, with prices changing almost daily, with the supply situation changing almost daily, this is the very worst moment in time for the federal and provincial governments to engage in constitutional confrontation. It appears that the federal government has introduced this bill because it wants a cudgel, some sort of weapon it can take to the first ministers conference, for beating the provinces into submission. This is a most improper view of the purpose of that first ministers conference. Apparently the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources view that conference as an adversary forum in which they will be fighting with the first ministers of the provinces and the most powerful group will emerge victorious. I suggest that view is completely inappropriate.

The forum in which the final decision will be made is the forum in which I am now speaking. The purpose of the first ministers conference is that it will enable provincial and federal representatives to work out, in a spirit of co-operation, matters concerning all Canadians. They should not adopt irrevocable, non-negotiable positions but, rather, work from positions of common interest which are of concern to Canadians in all parts of this country. Further, any decisions, agreements or accommodations reached at that conference must be brought back to this House for approval. The fight between the federal government and the provinces, which has resulted in the Prime Minister calling the Premier of Alberta insulting names and in the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources making certain public commitments which he has reversed, or which the Prime Minister has reversed for him, is damaging to Canadians in all parts of this country.

Confidence in the oil industry today is at an all-time low. I repeat, in expressing concern about the industry, I am not concerned about owners or shareholders. As I said on another occasion, there are probably more shareholders in those companies living in the constituencies of Mount Royal, Rosemount or even Ottawa-Carleton, than in Calgary Centre. I am concerned about the thousands of ordinary Canadians who are making their living in this industry. As a result of this lack of confidence, many are finding that their jobs are in jeopardy. Indeed, some have lost their jobs. This is of concern to me, because many of these people live in my constituency; I am expressing their views. Moreover, sir, the question of lack of confidence is of concern to all Canadians, even to those who are not even remotely connected with the energy industry. We must all be concerned about the future of the industry, and the degree of exploration which is taking place. The degree of exploration is being reduced and will be reduced to an alarming degree unless industry confidence is restored.

During the Christmas recess I made it my business to consult with a number of spokesmen for the industry. I talked to industrial associations and tried to assess what was happening. Many expressed the view to me that next year there will be a 40 per cent reduction in exploration by oil companies in western Canada. I am referring to the area south of the sixtieth parallel but north of the North American border. If they are right, the implications for the future are tremendously important. Production from conventional sources can be expected to decrease over the next few years. Unless we find new, conventional sources of energy, we shall become net importers of crude oil and suffer from all the problems which are plaguing Britain, the United States, the Netherlands and other countries.

We cannot rely entirely on the tar sands to overcome this problem. At the very best, under optimum conditions, a tar sands plant can only be brought on stream every two years. Even in these circumstances, even if a new plant were brought on stream every two years, each plant to produce 100,000 barrels per day—and this would require major effort and cost and would bring great stress and dislocation to the economy—we should be lucky if we could keep up with the growth in Canadian consumption. We could not produce the increased supplies of tar sands oil that would be necessary to make up for the decrease in production from conventional sources. That being so, I submit that it is exceedingly important, in considering pricing and supply, for government attitudes to be made clear at the earliest opportunity. Industry must know what the rules will be, so that it can plan and make an increased exploration effort, and so that Canadians will not be in a vulnerable position in the future. In that way we shall remain self-sufficient in energy and look forward to the future with certainty.

More important even than questions involving the oil industry and future supplies is the fact that economic opportunities are being lost. Canada, relative to the rest of the world, is in the position to enjoy economic advantages the like of which we have not seen in the postwar period. We have a potential economic advantage because, as the minister and so many others have said recently, energy is fundamentally important to a modern economy, and we are the only country in the western world which is self-sufficient in energy. This fact alone is tremendously important, for here we have a tremendous opportunity to cure so many of the problems we have faced for many years, problems involving regional economic disparities, unemployment, economic disparities, the diversification of industry throughout the economy, our balance of payments, the sale of our raw materials at less than their true value, etc. All these problems could be cured if we made it our business to take advantage of the tremendous opportunity being offered to us.

We need a national development policy that recognizes our position. What we do not need is bickering between the provinces and the federal government about control of resources. We all have the same goals in mind. I am certain that every provincial premier, whether from a producing province or consuming province, will agree. There is now an opportunity not merely for the producing provinces but for every province in this country. In recent years two large scale refineries have been constructed in the Atlantic provinces and two or three more are on the verge of construction. A great many petrochemical plants are to be built to process raw materials which will be available from these refineries. These can and should be established in the Atlantic area. There is the possibility of altering the economic face of these regions of Canada dramatically; but this will not happen if we continue the present chaotic situation. Sometimes there is a two-price system in Canada, sometimes not. Sometimes the world price is to apply, sometimes less than the world price. Sometimes there is a freeze in part of the country, sometimes not.

All that uncertainty of opportunities will cause us to lose this advantage. We will not have this economic advantage in perpetuity. The United States will make a supreme effort to become self-sufficient in energy. They have the potential in coal, shale, new technological developments relating to solar power and so on. Therefore, we cannot look to Canada retaining this economic advantage for a large number of years in the future. It is a finite time in which we have this opportunity. I ask the minister to use his good offices to plead with his colleagues. I ask every member of this House to help us eliminate this question of fighting between the provinces, of fighting over the spoils, who shall get so much of this or that tax. Let us deal with the real opportunity facing Canada. Let us take advantage of the position in which Canada finds itself so that all Canadians can look forward to the future they deserve.

I will not repeat the remarks made by my leader earlier this day. He outlined 10 points of a national oil policy which, if adopted by the government of Canada, could lead us to the kind of future I have tried to outline briefly. I just wish to comment on one point relative to the question of increased Canadian participation in this future growth—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has now expired.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I wish to take only two or three minutes. As my colleague, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, and I have already indicated, the terms of the amendment to clause 11 which we are now discussing are in accordance with negotiations that took place during the past day or two, so we support this amendment. In fact, it is clear that the tax on crude oil exported will become $6.40 a barrel in the month of February and remain at that level until the end of March, leaving to a later decision what may be done after April 1. We congratulate the government, even though there was some pressure from events and circumstances that forced the government to see things in this very wise way. In any case, we congratulate the government on having come through with this resolution in a difficult situation.

My main purpose in rising is to draw attention to a structural oddity which I think we are creating by the procedure we are now following. Before it was amended, Bill C-245 had in the main two parts, one part establishing a new piece of legislation to be known as the oil export charge act, the other part amending the Excise Tax Act. Once we cut out, as we propose to do, clauses 3 to 10, both inclusive, all that will remain of the oil export charge act will be two sections, one giving it a title, the other setting out definitions. There will not be anything in the oil export charge act that has any operative effect. There is nothing wrong with that. We can put all the acts we want on the statute books that say nothing. Of course, it is being kept there because there is a reference in clause 11 to the fact that all the words and expressions used in that part, in other words that part of the Excise Tax Act, shall have the same meaning as are assigned to them by the oil export charge act.

I realize this is a technical point to raise, but it seems it would have been less structurally odd if the definitions that are now going to be off by themselves in a piece of legislation called the oil export charge act could have been put in the part of the Excise Tax Act which we are amending by increasing the taxes provided by this legislation. It may be the minister has the notion that later in the year he will put some substance into the oil export charge act. However, I think it not out of place to point out we have produced a structural oddity. Nevertheless, as far as the substance of what we are doing is concerned, it has our support.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words on the clause before us. First, I am pleased there has been an accommodation with regard to extending the export tax for a few more months. Coming from the province of Saskatchewan as I do, there are couple of things I want to urge on the minister with regard to the federal government's position over the oil industry in this country. I am not trying to be particularly parochial or provincial when I remind the minister that the resources of this country are under provincial jurisdiction and, as much as possible, the benefit of those resources should accrue to the various provinces in which they are found.

I would not be so tempted to raise this point if the policies that are followed by this government applied to other resources as well as oil. As the premier of my province asked the federal government, why just oil? I want to ask why other natural and mineral resources have increased drastically in price in the past year. Just this past weekend International Nickel announced that the price of nickel would increase by 6 per cent in this country. Iron and steel prices have increased in Canada. Many economists, particularly in the United States, indicated recently that other commodities such as iron, steel, aluminum, copper and so on might rise very drastically in price in the next few months.

I am in favour of a domestic price for oil. However, I suggest we should also have a domestic price for other commodities such as iron, steel, copper, aluminum, nickel and so on which are found right across this country. The time has come when we can put domestic price controls on commodities which we produce in this country, even though they are now controlled by multinational corporations. For example, why should we in Saskatchewan have to pay world prices for the steel and aluminum that go into our farm machinery when many items our farmers produce are being sold in Canada at domestic prices. When considering oil, I urge the government to think about all resources. There should be a domestic price for all natural resources in this country and an export tax should be imposed on them as well as on oil. If that were done, the oil producing provinces would not feel as though they were being discriminated against. There would be a greater sense of fairness.

Another point I wish to make is that it is time Ottawa took some of the prairie problems more seriously. If we are to make certain sacrifices in the area of gas and oil, it is about time there was a quid pro quo and Ottawa listened to the grievances we have concerning the freight rate structure, the stabilization of farm income, the development of secondary industry, and so on. If some of these things were done, if the federal government were to act rather than simply make promises, there might be a better atmosphere at the conference to be held in this city later this month.

The previous speaker said there was a lack of confidence among those engaged in the gas and oil industry and that unless we were careful, exploration and development would cease. I do not believe this. In any case, I do not really care, because I think exploration in this field should be carried out under public ownership. This is what the New Democratic Party and the government in my own province would like to see done. Practical steps toward this end were taken in the legislature of my province during the month of December. There is no reason why we cannot move in this direction. Revenues from the export tax could be used to develop the tar sands and to improve transportation facilities. A quick calculation shows that at the rate of $6.50 a barrel revenue from the tax will represent some $180 million. There is no reason why this sum should not be used as equity capital for the development of the frontier areas of this country under joint federal-provincial public ownership. After all, these resources belong to the people of Canada, not to multinational corporations. As I say, this is a fine opportunity to get started because funds are now available for the purpose, and, besides, if we develop our own gas and oil industry we could subsequently develop a petrochemical industry in Alberta and Saskatchewan, where it belongs, thus providing many more jobs for Canadians.

Another point we should consider when talking about a national oil policy is that the presence of energy supplies in the tar sands and elsewhere will enable us to begin processing some of our own raw materials on the assumption that an increasing number of countries are likely to import commodities which are heavy in energy content since they themselves will be suffering from a shortage of gas and oil. For example, Japan and western European countries may be more ready to purchase our manufactured goods because of a necessity on their part to conserve the energy supplies available to them.

In conclusion, I urge the government to consider bringing all Canadian national resources under public ownership and control for the benefit of Canadians, and not limit their thinking to one particular resource in one or two provinces.

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Symes: I just wish to say how pleased I am the Minister of Finance has withdrawn the section on the export charge until after the first ministers' conference. It is interesting to note that if the government had maintained the principle of the export tax for the whole year this country would have derived revenue amounting to between $2 billion and $3 billion. That is not chicken feed. It is enough to supply the wherewithal to begin the public development of our oil industry, an important concept in my view, and we shall look with interest on the kind of arrangement which comes out of the conference of first ministers on the export charge.

I listened to the Minister of Finance last Friday begin to construct an argument which has been echoed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, namely, that the oil companies need higher prices in order to commit themselves to further exploration and resource development. This is complete fantasy. From 1957 to 1972 oil company profits increased by some 400 per cent, but the percentage increase in exploration amounted to only 10 per cent. There is no guarantee, none whatsoever, that higher profits for the oil companies will automatically mean more exploration, and I hope the Canadian public will see through the hollowness of the arguments of the Minister of Finance, arguments which are identical with those of the oil companies. Imperial Oil, if one follows its accounting procedure, put up only 3 per cent of the total funds used for exploration, that is, out of $201 million set aside for exploration and development the company itself only put up $7 million. The rest of it came from the public, either in the form of deferred taxes or by way of debentures and the sale of assets. It is important to remember that increased prices will not automatically mean increased exploration.

A further point arises. Where will the exploration be carried out? The companies are trying to tell us there are vast oil resources in the Arctic. But when we look at the geological surveys we realize that this is not the case. Only in the Prudhoe Bay area is there any likelihood of sufficient reserves to justify development. The oil which this country will need in the future will have to come from the Athabasca oil sands and we know where they are; no exploration is needed. It will cost about a billion dollars to construct each extraction plant, and one new plant each year will be needed for the next ten years, since it is estimated that conventional supplies will run out in about ten years time. Obviously, we could use some of the revenue from the export tax to develop the oil sands under public control. If we fail to do so we shall only repeat the sell-out, the rip-off, of Canada's oil resources we have witnessed to date.

The oil companies say they need subsidies because of the high cost of Middle East and Venezuelan oil. I should like to remind the committee that Exxon, of which Imperial Oil is a subsidiary, was purchasing oil from Venezuela at $1.45 a barrel through its subsidiary called Creole Oil. Creole Oil, in turn, was selling that same oil at $3 a barrel when the oil was landed at Montreal. It is very interesting, indeed, to note that all of a sudden cheaper foreign oil was jacked up in price to equate with the cost of western oil.

We now have the reverse situation. Imported oil has gone up to $8, $10, $18 a barrel and now the oil companies are arguing that western Canadian oil should also go up to that level. The multinationals are following the same procedure in the United States as they are in Canada. I commend hon. members to read a recent article in Harpers magazine by Mr. Rand, who pointed out that during the 1960's American oil companies were buying oil from Kuwait at seven cents a barrel. That was the cost of getting the oil out of the ground and into the tanker. By the time the oil reached the shores of the United States, it was selling for the same amount per barrel as Texas oil, which was then in the $2 a barrel range. That process has continued for decades and the consumer has suffered. Now, the oil companies are saying the consumer must suffer some more because domestic prices must reach the inflated world price. If we did not have an export tax, a tax which, by the way, was instigated as a result of pressure from the New Democratic Party, we would have lost millions and millions of dollars in windfall profits to the oil companies. The consumer has lost millions in the past, but I can see no valid reason for the Canadian government allowing this to continue.

When you average out what the oil companies have been doing over the past decade, you see they have had all kinds of tax breaks while soaking the consumer through higher prices for oil products. How strange it is that oil companies pay only 3 per cent of their book profits in the form of corporation income tax. How strange it is that 86 per cent of dividends and retained earnings pass from the oil companies into foreign hands. And the Canadian consumer ends up paying a 41 per cent price increase.

If we permit crude oil to increase in price in Canada, there will be no net gain to the economy of the country in view of the low tax rate and the fact that dividends are paid to people outside the country. Higher prices that Canadians pay will more than offset any kind of royalties, corporation taxes and retained earnings gleaned by the Canadian government and Canadian shareholders. Indeed, economists have now shown that any such price increases will mean a net loss to the Canadian economy of 7.73 per cent of any price increment. Canadian manufacturing needs to get off the ground. We need to promote job intensive industries in this country. Yet if we listen to the government and the oil industry, we are going to pull the rug from under these manufacturing concerns. If they have to pay higher fuel costs, then we will lose any competitive advantage we might have gained in world markets from having lower fuel costs in Canada. This means we will continue to export our resources at the expense of creating jobs in Canada.

This is why I say it is so important that the concept of the export tax be maintained, that revenues from the windfall profits of the oil companies should go to the federal government, and in turn to the provincial governments, so we can have a joint federal and provincial development of the oil sands, which will be our future supply of oil in this country. It is time we got the national petroleum company off the ground, not only to develop the oil sands but also to act as an agent in the purchase of foreign and domestic oil, thereby being able to pool prices and have one price for Canadian consumers, a price which hopefully will be much lower than the price that would result if the Minister of Finance and the oil corporation executives had their way. Unless it can be proven beyond doubt that price increases are justified on the basis of increased cost of production, this party, and indeed the Canadian consumer, will not tolerate any further rip-offs in the form of higher oil prices.

The bill before us is an important one. There is an important concept to maintain, and I can assure the committee that this party will see that that concept is not eroded.

Clause, as amended, agreed to.

On clause 12—Payments authorized.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, clause 12 deals with payments to provinces. I agreed in principle with the imposition of an export tax as it related to obtaining funds that might otherwise have gone to the multinational corporations, but I should like to ask the minister a question about the wording of clause 12 and perhaps propose to him a wording that would spell out more clearly that 50 per cent of the revenue will in fact go to the producing provinces. Subclause (1) reads as follows:

> The Minister may cause to be paid to a province, for a prescribed period, out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, at such time or times as he may determine, an amount calculated by him in accordance with subsection (2) in respect of that period.

I wonder whether the minister would suggest to me the reason for use of what I would call the hesitant words, such as "at such time or times as he may determine", instead of using, for example, the words "shall pay" or "shall determine". Why the hesitancy as exemplified by the use of the word "may"?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, the expression "may" is the expression that is traditionally used to authorize a payment to be made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. It is parliament's way, as I understand it, of conferring statutory authority upon the minister to make a payment, and it is the expression traditionally and generally used in authorizing payment to the provinces. I should refer the committee to the fact that the authority to make equalization payments, stabilization payments, tax revenue guarantee payments and post-secondary education adjustment payments, all of which are statutory in form, is granted by a provision using the expression "may". In those circumstances, the courts probably construe "may" as being imperative since it imposes a public duty upon the minister. There is nothing unusual in using that word, and I think I can assure the committee that it has a mandatory, imperative effect.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to get into a hassle with the minister, but since he is a former minister of justice he must agree that under the Interpretation Act "may" is classified as being a word of permissiveness, whereas "shall" is mandatory. However, I accept the statement the minister made beforehand, though as a former minister of justice I think he was getting into the muskeg when he made the statement he just made. In light of his statement that the word "may" is the word always used in the statute, why is it that His Excellency was persuaded in the recommendation to use the word "shall"?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I will charge that one off to the draftsman.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, the minister says he will assure the committee that 50 per cent will go to the producing provinces. We do not have to worry about the word "may"; I will leave that to Her Majesty and her ministers.

● (1730)

In a general way, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words relating to the allocation of funds obtained from the export tax. From the inception of the export tax I believe the federal government has been meeting a situation which neither producing province was prepared to meet at that time when the Chicago price was mounting at an extremely rapid pace. I believe, therefore, that when this party recommended an export tax it was justifiable. I think some of the debate arises from the allocation of the export tax as it relates to our two oil producing provinces.

It is very easy for a member of this House, particularly if he is from the province of Ontario, to suggest that there should be a cheap supply of energy for the provinces manufacturing industries. Hon. members might take that position, regardless of their party, because manufacturing is labour-intensive. There is some merit in that position, but I suggest to those hon. members that in terms of a national policy in this country as enunciated by successive federal governments, the policy that now speaks of a cheap supply of energy, in terms of energy being supplied by other provinces, is the same policy that talked about high tariffs to protect their manufacturing industries and providing a closed market to those industries in the western provinces, particularly the prairie provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta. Regardless of one's political ideology, there is a great deal of regional resentment in the suggestion that since, suddenly, one of our commodities has gone up in price in the international market—and

I am aware of the problems concerning multinational corporations—we now, also suddenly, need a cheap energy policy. We have a cheap food policy, and we have had high tariffs and the unfair kind of freight rate structure which might concern hon. members, regardless of party. Some of them have made speeches on this subject. I mention the late Jimmy Gardiner and give the Grits some credit for this.

I suggest, however, that the national policy in this connection, as developed by the federal state, is outmoded, outdated and must be revised if we are to continue this discussion in a fair and equitable manner. That is why the divvying up of the pie related to the export tax is extremely important to the two provinces I have mentioned. I can imagine what the Ontario members would say if we took all the proceeds from the manufacturing industry and set a domestic price across the country to ensure that the domestic price remained at a certain level, so that when farmers of western Canada buy steel they would pay $1.50 or $2. a ton for it because it is produced in Canada and they would not have to pay the difference between the domestic market price and the international market price.

If an export tax were established I can imagine the hue and cry from Ontario members in any party about having 100 per cent of that export tax channelled for development in the province. So western members express their concern relating to the allocation of this oil export tax fund. This is a fundamental concern related to one of our resources, regardless of province. Therefore, I have been pleased, to be quite frank, with the Minister of Finance and the manner in which the funds have been allocated. I believe 50 per cent is to go back to the producing provinces. The province of Saskatchewan undoubtedly will use it for resource development. Alberta may well do the same, but I do not know the situation in that province as well as I know it in my own province.

I think that 50 per cent to be invested by the federal government in the producing provinces for research and development in the oil industry is a fair and equitable way of doing things. The two producing provinces are being assured that they will not be run over roughshod in terms of a resource with which they happen to have been blessed. I think this will be of value to the international market and will ensure further development in those two provinces.

What is of concern to me is that in the province of Saskatchewan we have set up a method of public control and public ownership of the oil industry, to turn it into a public utility in order to conserve the supply and production necessary to meet the needs of the people, and we want to see come out of the conference a change in policy by the national government so that our energy supplies, whether in the area of uranium, oil, natural gas or any other resource, will be treated as a public utility for all Canadians.

Mark my words, the legislation enunciated by the province of Saskatchewan and passed by its legislature will be a guiding light in the winter blizzard relating to an oil and energy policy, and will be a guideline for turning the oil industry into a public utility to serve the general public. I predict that federal governments of whatever political stripe, will have to move in the general direction of treating oil resources as a public utility even if they have to do it with the oil companies kicking and squealing all the way. Federal governments will have to move in that direction because it will be demanded by the public for the protection of the people of Canada.

I am glad to hear a clear statement from the minister that 50 per cent of this export tax will in fact go to the producing provinces. I do not believe any further comment is needed. I did a little work over the weekend; I am sure the Minister of Finance also spent his weekend doing quite a bit of work. I commend him for his action on this Ukrainian Christmas Day which is celebrated in my area. I appreciate the way in which he handles bills of this kind which he presents to the House. I like the procedure of dealing with these bills in committee of the whole and I hope this practice will continue. In this way we dealt with the capital gains tax in respect of farmers and found we could reach an accommodation. We have reached today a certain amount of accommodation.

Therefore, the minister's commitment in respect of the 50 per cent is appreciated. I had worked out an amendment which would have changed the "may" to "shall" and would have said that the minister "shall" pay to a province, out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, an amount calculated by him in accordance with subclause (2), but I accept his word and I shall forgo moving such an amendment.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 12 carry?

Clause 12 agreed to.

Clause 13 agreed to.

● (1740)

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 1 carry?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What about clauses 3 to 10 inclusive?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I would ask the unanimous consent of the committee to withdraw part I of the bill, including clauses 3 to 10 inclusive, which would mean to the drafter that part II would become part I and part III would become part II.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Do I gather there is unanimous consent to what the minister proposes?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Clause 1 agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the title carry?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I propose that the title to Bill C-245 be amended by striking out the words "to impose a charge on the export of crude oil from Canada". I propose that those words be eliminated. Perhaps this amendment should be moved by my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue. I agree with the point that was made by the hon. member for Peace River and unilaterally withdraw as a minister of the Crown, the words from the recommendation "to impose a charge on the export of crude oil from Canada".

Mr. Bell: May I ask the minister if he has considered taking the word "charge" out of the short title and calling it the Oil Export Tax Act?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I have no objection to that, if the committee would take it as a drafting instruction to amend clause 11, section 22.1(1), where the same words appear on page 6. If we can take that as being agreed unanimously, we should change the title to read the Oil Export Tax Act.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, if we are going to bother with this—and I will not rehash the matter I raised a few moments ago—why not settle for the Oil Export Act?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): You can call it anything you want—

Mr. Baldwin: It smells the same!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): What is wrong with the Oil Export Tax Act?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There is no tax in it; that is what is wrong with it.

Mr. Stanbury moved:

That the long title of Bill C-245 be amended by striking out the words "to impose a charge on the export of crude oil from Canada".

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Stanbury) agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the title as amended carry?

Title as amended agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the bill carry?

Mr. Alexander: What about the recommendation?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I gather that clause I has been amended by consent and that this piece of legislation will be called the Oil Export Tax Act.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Then with regard to the point made by the hon. member for Hamilton West, no amendment is needed to the recommendation because the recommendation is a unilateral act by the Crown. On behalf of the government I can withdraw the words "to impose a charge on the export of crude oil from Canada".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Shall the bill carry?

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Bill reported.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) moved that the bill as amended be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the House and the committee for the courtesy shown me in disposing of this bill.

I understand the House leader has stated that the next item of business will be the CNR financing bill. Perhaps it would be in order at this stage to call it six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the House that the Chair should call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: As it is now almost six o'clock, I leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 5.47 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS AND AIR CANADA

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES AND GUARANTEEING OF SECURITIES AND DEBENTURES

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-164, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, In dealing with the report stage of Bill C-164, it is suggested by the Chair that there be one debate and one vote on motions Nos. 1 and 2, that there be one debate and one vote on motions Nos. 3 and 5, that motions Nos. 4 and 6 be considered separately and, if votes arise, that the votes be taken separately. It should also be noted that with regard to motion No. 6 the reference should be to line 6, not to line 10, on page 9 of the bill. This correction has been authorized by the Chair to make the motion meaningful. We will now proceed to the discussion of motions Nos. 1 and 2.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga) moved:

No. 1.

That Bill C-164, an act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system and Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, be amended in paragraph 3(1)(a) by (a) deleting the figure "$225,500,000" in lines 3 and 17 on page 2 and substituting therefor the figure "211,021,000" and (b) deleting lines 13 and 14.

No. 2.

That Bill C-164, an act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, be amended in paragraph 3(1)(b) by deleting line 22 on page 2 and substituting therefore the following:

"lines but excluding any amount in respect of hotels or C.N. Tower Limited) in the calendar year 1974, prior to"

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motions?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, motions Nos. 1 and 2 deal with the proposal by Canadian National Railways under clause 3 of this bill to invest a further $5,679,000 in hotels and $8,800,000 in the period before us in the company called CN Tower Limited, and to proceed with further investments as are required during 1974. It is to these issues that the attention of the House should be directed.

First I want to deal with the way this national company has been handling the funds of the people of Canada, particularly with reference to its hotel operations. In 1971, with respect to the six hotels operated by Canadian National Railways, having a value of some $46 million to $47 million, the railways returned a profit of $430,000, not even 1 per cent on investment. In 1972 they did not do quite as well; they got only $416,000. But by that time they had invested pretty close to another $400,000 so that their investment had gone up to $47,187,393.

This national company has demonstrated that it has no management capacity in the operation of the hotel business. After much pressure in committee, the corporation produced statements on its management return on a specific hotel-handling during 1971 and 1972. I think it is fair for me to acquaint the House tonight with some of the results of that management to show how this corporation has taken the money of the people of Canada and literally thrown it down the sewer.

They sold the Bessborough Hotel for a little more than $1,600,000 this year. I want to talk about that hotel because I understand the buyer is making a profit on it. Let us consider what they lost on this hotel during 1971; they lost $400,000, and in 1972 they lost another $400,000. During 1971 and 1972 they ploughed only $214,000 into the Bessborough Hotel. In round figures, what's a million? Having lost or spent $1 million of our money in two years, this hotel was sold for $1.6 million to a private investor. The private investor made a profit because he knew how to operate it.

This corporation now has the gall to come to this House of Commons for money. I notice the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is not even proud enough to be here, but the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) is, to ask the approval of this House for an advance to this railroad of over $5 million of Canadian funds earned from the hard work of Canadians. This is to be ploughed into the corporation.

The Fort Garry Hotel sits in a lovely spot in the city of Winnipeg where the land has great value. It only lost $186,000 in 1971 and $265,000 in 1972, and the company added another $109,000 of investment in the hotel. There you have another half million dollars down the sewer in two years, yet they come to us and say they need more money for hotels. They say, "This is a national company and it is important in serving the people of Canada".

If you look at schedule H on page 20:100 in the committee report you will find reference to the Jasper Park Lodge. As the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) says, that is a pretty fine lodge. They even advertise it on Air Canada; they are going to give a free two weeks' holiday in the Rockies. They invested $125,000 in a two-year period in that hotel over and above regular depreciation. In other words, the book value had gone up $125,000 even though in the period they took the ordinary capital cost allowance applicable. In 1971 they made $123,000, and in 1972 they made $160,000. Of course, it is only worth $8,700,000, so that is a return on investment of about 2 per cent. I will talk about return on investment in a moment or two when I get into the cost of money.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Do you realize that the only way you can get to Jasper is by train?

Mr. Blenkarn: You can get there by Tilden car. You fly to Edmonton and take a free Tilden.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I have never had a free Tilden.

Mr. Blenkarn: You ought to fill in this form and find out how to get there. Then we have the McDonald Hotel in the oil capital, Edmonton. It made $15,000 in 1971 and $31,000 in 1972. Of course, we only have $8.3 million invested in the McDonald Hotel. That is the kind of return the people of Canada are expected to accept on their money—$31,000 on $8.3 million. We have some good hotels. In 1972 the Newfoundland Hotel had a return of $107,000, giving us 6.9 per cent on investment. Then we have the Nova Scotian Hotel, the best apple of the whole group, which managed to return 8.1 per cent on investment.

An hon. Member: Good management!

Mr. Blenkarn: When we asked the CNR how they are going to finance the $200 million worth of bonds coming due in February this year, they told us that their money is going to cost 8 per cent or so. The finest hotel in their whole chain will merely earn enough money to pay the interest on the money they are borrowing. That is the kind of situation we have, Mr. Speaker. We have this national company using the money of the people of Canada in a way that cannot be countenanced by members of this House. They pay no attention to the cost of operating and no attention to regular overhead factors.

When they run into a problem like the Chateau Laurier down the street, they apologize in their financial statement and say that some new hotels were opened in Ottawa. They made 7.4 per cent on $12 million. But look at the property that the Chateau sits on. You could not buy it for $12 million today. It is certainly worth more than that; but they wanted the book value at the time they bought the property for next to zip. That is the kind of book value we are talking about in railroad figures. They are not realistic values at all but values they paid away back when. We are not talking about return on today's dollars; we are talking about return on book dollars. Book dollars do not mean anything when you talk about the real estate this company has. It could not care less about real values. It has a board of directors that does not give a damn about the people of Canada, about the taxpayer, about hard-earned money; it wants to use the money of the people of Canada in any way it can to build up its empire. They come to this House and ask for money.

An hon. Member: Tell us about the CPR.

Mr. Blenkarn: At least I will put my tax money into the CPR. The CNR has 4 per cent preferred stock, non-cumulative. The last time it paid a dividend was in the early fifties, yet we are supposed to invest the money of the people of Canada in a system called a railroad. It is not a railroad; it is a tower builder or a hotel builder. It wants to build monstrous things for its own ego. It does not care about moving grain or providing a commuter service; it does not care about moving lumber or potatoes—it cares only about hotels and fancy restaurants high in the air.

If you go through that statement, Mr. Speaker, you will find that the only hotels which make a profit for the CNR are those managed by Hilton. That is an international, American organization. This government does not even care about Canadian ownership and has to find an American company to manage its properties. That is how it has to make a profit, by turning these hotels over to Hilton. It is about time we turned them all over to Hilton, or sold them or something, because there is no reason why the people of Canada should pour the money earned by their sweat into this management in order to run hotels. They do not know how to run them. About the only hotel they can run is the Queen Elizabeth Hotel in Montreal, which made 9.9 per cent last year and 10 per cent the year before—only because they got Hilton to run it for them.

These facts constitute the greatest condemnation of this railroad. The only hotel investment that is showing the sort of realistic return that private enterprise would expect is the Queen Elizabeth Hotel in Montreal, run by the Hilton hotel chain. The truth is that incompetent and incapable managers are overseeing the investments of the people of Canada. That is a pretty serious thing to say, but it bears repeating: that management is incompetent and incapable. Can we, in justice, vote to this corporation, which is run by the kind of management appointed by this government, money that has come out of the pockets of the taxpayers of this country so that that management can run up one loss after another?

When the president of Canadian National Railways was asked about hotels, he said something like this, "Well, it looks as if we have a pretty good hotel, the Beauséjour, in Moncton." Although every one of these hotels is a loser except the one in Montreal run by Hilton, he had the audacity to suggest that he could make 12 per cent on the hotel in Moncton. That is the first time he thought he could make 12 per cent on anything, and he had the audacity to suggest the railway could make 12 per cent on that hotel.

I suggest that the management of this railroad has no business in the field of hotels and I say this for several reasons. At one time when transporting people it may have been necessary for the railroads to maintain a stopover place for its passengers. These days the railroads are not interested in carrying passengers; they are only interested in moving freight, and not too interested in that unless it is high-priced freight. They do not want to move grain; that is not their business and they do not feel concerned about that. They should not be in the hotel business. They do not need hotels. Private enterprise in this country has developed hotel after hotel, as one can see in this city for example, which make a gross profit of between 15 and 18 per cent and which after taxes, after expenses, after interest and after all the rest of the "afters" make at least 10 per cent on invested money.

When the railroad talks about a 10 per cent profit, what does that mean? I do not think interest is calculated. On reading the statement you will find that after interest the railroad only lost about $17 million! Every business, sir, must pay interest on borrowed money. This railroad must take into account interest on borrowed money. After taking into account interest on money borrowed in the hotel operation, the railroad, instead of making, say 1.5 per cent on its hotels, has lost 10 per cent. If interest on borrowed money were taken into account in the case of the Montreal hotel run by Hilton, it would be found that that hotel made a little money but not that much. These people do not really care about the people of Canada; they do not care about the taxpayer. They just want more money to build bigger buildings and say they have a bigger operation going for them. They do not really care about us. Yet they have the audacity to come to parliament and ask for money for hotels.

Private corporations pay corporate taxes. They pay the same wages, at least, as these hotels. I will not attempt to argue whether the wages of hotel workers are adequate. But this railroad does not care. It still pays the lowest possible minimum wage. This railroad does not care about bettering the conditions of its employees. It does not care about poor people who need rooms. It does not supply any gratuitous service to the poor traveller. This railroad operates hotels just the same as anybody else, except that it cannot make a profit.

Why is this railroad in the hotel business at all? Clearly, it got into that business because it inherited the hotels and has kept operating them. It has kept losing money, but has come to parliament for more simply because there is a parliament of Canada willing to pay and because there are suckers for taxpayers. The railroad keeps getting new money to pay for its losses, and it is time this stopped.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): The taxpayer is forced to be a sucker. He is not one willingly.

Mr. Blenkarn: Quite so, Mr. Speaker, and it is time this stopped. This bill is to provide $43 million for this year at least. There will be another pile of money next year. Who knows how much of the money of the people of Canada will go into this railroad? This money is being granted virtually for nothing, although it is supposed to apply to the capital stock of the railroad. The figures with regard to the 4 per cent non-cumulative capital stock mean nothing. Dividends do not amount to anything, so this money represents an interest-free loan.

Look at it this way, sir. If you look at the bill you will find that the railroad wants money for hotels, telecommunications, the C.N. Tower and affiliated investments. If one looks at the bill one can see that the railroad wants $43 million from the people of Canada, interest free, so it can carry on with these games and lose more money or make a negligible return on money. According to their figures, they have made 1.4 per cent on investment. Well, a return of $416,000 on hotel investment of $47 million looks to me like a return of about 0.8 per cent, which is not even worth spitting about.

I now want to speak about the CN Tower being built in Toronto. That tower will rise 1,800 feet or so in the air. That will be a pretty impressive monument for Toronto. Certainly it will stand out on the skyline. I am happy to see that tower in Toronto because we in Mississauga will be able to see it. The question is not why it is being built, but why the people of Canada should pour money into the tower; not whether it is a good investment for the railroad that is supposed to provide service for people, but whether that is the way the money of the people of Canada should be spent.

Should we be spending the money of Canadians on tourist attractions, on a hurdy-gurdy in the air, or should we be spending this money on some of the social needs of this country, on the important communication and transportation devices that are required to knit this nation together? Should we be spending it on hurdy-gurdies in the air when that field of activity is perhaps best left to those in the private sector?

● (2030)

Dealing with the matter of finance, the bill is a bit misleading. It says $8.8 million this year. My second amendment tries to stop them from throwing in more next year. Really what they want to do is spend $29.5 million to build a tower in Toronto. They do not want to bother figuring in the cost of the land. After all, they already own the land. Why capitalize the cost of the land? They could rent or sell the land for some other purpose. They do not want to bother taking in the cost of the land. The land is worth $7 million, but they don't worry about that.

Mr. Benjamin: The CPR don't either.

Mr. Blenkarn: We will come to the CPR. They are a shrewd cookie; they knew what they were getting into. The CPR looked at the statement and said yes, we have our projections. This says you may make 7.8 per cent on your money. If they are really lucky with this tower, and people are willing to pay $3 to go to the top of it year after year, at least one million every year for 40 years, they might make 12.8 per cent on their money. However, after the first year or two they may run out of people who want to pay $3 to go up into the sky.

A great investment? The CPR looked at it and said "nuts". They own half the land but they would not spend their money on a tower. They would rather have the people of Canada build the tower. It would be like a fountain in the park. The CPR can build around the tower and make profits from the office buildings, convention centre and other high-rent deals. The Metro Centre will be visible from these other buildings. The CNR will build the tower. When I asked Mr. MacMillan what he was getting out of CPR for the whole matter, he said:

> CP was eventually reluctant to be involved in the tower. . . . CP agreed, in return for non-involvement on their part in the tower, to make substantial concessions to CN.

When we asked what the substantial concessions were, there was no answer. I suggest this is because there were no substantial concessions, certainly not concessions you would talk about. If they were substantial, I am sure Mr. MacMillan would have talked about them. Instead, he sat back and said, "You know how important confidentiality is in the corporate board room". Members of parliament are not to be treated to that confidentiality. We will find out that there are no concessions.

The truth of the matter is they wanted to build a tower with a 400-seat restaurant in the sky to show they are a wonderful bunch of people. They want the CBC at the top. The truth is that this railroad does not care about the people of Canada. It does not care about the investors who pay through taxes that are dragged out of their pockets in income tax, sales tax and taxes on all and sundry. They are only interested in building 400-seat restaurants in the air. Even CPR, that shrewd organization—

Mr. Benjamin: Are they ever.

Mr. Blenkarn: You are from Regina; you know they are shrewd. They know what the balance-sheet looks like. They know where their money is well placed. They would not put it there under any circumstances.

We now have the wonderful example of a tower being built. When you ask the reasons for the tower, you are given four reasons. They say the growing feeling of the Toronto centre region was a myth. If Toronto was ever a myth, you had better come to Toronto and look at this myth, because it is growing pretty fast. It did not need a Metro Centre on 180 acres of prime downtown land. It did not need a tower as a spectacular focal point. If that is what is needed, why did the owner of the rest of the land not pay half the cost? There is no explanation for that. CN said they had to consolidate CBC and metro. CBC does not need any more consolidation. I did not know CN was running the CBC, but apparently it is.

The CN said they got financial concessions from CP but they would not tell us what they were. The truth of the matter is there were no financial concessions and this parliament is now being asked to vote $8.8 million and an unnamed sum during 1974, and so on. If this is such a good deal, let them go on the market and borrow the money at conventional rates, or sell the tower to someone who can complete it and run it properly. Let us not have any more of the people of Canada being dragged in by the ear to pay for somebody else's grandiose schemes to make themselves important and to build themselves a new empire. The national railway was not set up for a new empire; it was set up to handle freight and to serve the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: It is about time we had commuter trains. It is time our grain was moved, our potatoes from New Brunswick, lumber from British Columbia, and oil. It is time we had a railway that was interested in using the money we supply to move the goods and the people. This railroad is supposed to move people. They do everything they can to avoid moving people. They really do not care. They want to get involved in another venture. They like the situation where they can become real estate developers. That is a great business; there are a lot of real estate developers. These fellows are not very good at real estate development. They like to be in a situation where they have liquor licences and run fancy-dancy hotels with restaurants in the sky. They are not even good at moving people and freight, but at least that is their job. If they spent their time moving people and freight, maybe they would do a better job.

It is about time this House of Commons said to them in no uncertain terms that they are not getting any money for their hotels and tower, and they had better get the money for these things somewhere else and do the job they are supposed to do. It is about time this nation had a railroad that cares about its people.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I assure the House that my remarks on these two amendments will be brief. However, as chairman of the committee there are some things I should say with regard to the bill and the amendments. First, the basic purpose and meaning of the amendment is that the railroad's main concentration of interest and expenditure of dollars should be in the transportation industry. This is where they began, particularly the Canadian National, and this is where their main interest should lie.

We who come from western Canada have from time to time expressed annoyance with Canadian Pacific because of the company's attempts to divert its interests from railroading to various investments, or from railroading to airlines. Basically the amendments suggest there should be a return to the transportation concept. As chairman of the committee I can say that, while I appreciate the support of members of all parties, I have been a little disappointed in the scope of the committee's work. I would much like to have seen the annual reports of the CN and Air Canada referred to the committee for study in depth; it would have been much easier for me then to have ruled on the question whether various amendments were in order, whether in fact they fell within the ambit of Bill C-164. Bill C-164 deals with the expenditure of moneys, and the amendments which were presented have to do with clauses involving expenditures; they represent an attempt to delete $5.5 million to be spent on hotels and $8.8 million to be spent on a communications tower.

There are other questions which I feel should have been more fully dealt with by the transport committee over the past years, particularly those directly involving the movement of goods across Canada and the security of those goods. Very recently the transport commission published its third report on railway safety. Three years ago the transport committee touched upon the safety aspect in the course of its work; I clearly remember a Mr. Jones appearing before the committee to answer a number of questions on this subject. The report recently tabled suggests that more money ought to be spent on railway safety. The standard reply by the railroads was along these lines, "These reports are old hat, because we have already dealt with many of the recommendations which have been made."

Nevertheless, I should point out that a number of specific conclusions have been drawn. The report says that the number of derailments caused by track conditions on CN and CP lines in 1972 was three times as great as in 1959 and nearly double what it was in 1969. That is clear enough. One can conclude that the railways have curtailed expenditure on the inspection of railway trackage or that they have built huge boxcars and hopper cars far too heavy for the capacity of the tracks to bear.

The report goes on to say that the training of signals staff and others has deteriorated in recent years. One might conclude that there has been a failure to spend money in the right direction, since it is obvious that a decline in the training standards of signals staff and others could well result in a greater number of accidents. The report goes on to infer that the problems caused by hot-boxes and journal burn-outs—those are terms commonly used among railwaymen—have not yet been solved.

Mr. Speaker, three years ago I asked in the transport committee what percentage of the rolling-stock was still using the old hot-boxes, the old type of bearing system, that is to say, a system which made no use of roller bearings—Timken or similar bearings. The officials replied that only 19 per cent of the rolling-stock was equipped with roller bearings or Timken bearings. Again, this would suggest that the finances available to the railways have not been used in the right direction. At about the same time, three very serious accidents occurred in the interior of British Columbia, making the movement of grain that winter extremely difficult. It became obvious to railway personnel and others that the snowslide detector fences were completely beyond repair, that they were not being kept up at all. This was pointed out to the CTC by the transport committee, particularly to one of the commissioners, Mr. Jones. He undertook to look into the situation and examine the position. However, the report which has lately come to hand devotes six pages to this whole question, explaining how the snowslide detector fences in the region are in fact not being kept up at all.

Another point of interest arose during the committee proceedings when officials of the CN were before us. One of them, Mr. Hunt, stated categorically that the weight of some of the huge new hopper cars and boxcars was so great as to exert a spreading effect upon the tracks: the company had only lately begun to realize this and were now faced with the necessity of using heavier track and better methods of laying it. Another consequence of the heavy equipment was a marked increase in the number of broken rails, another subject dealt with extensively in the report.

What I am saying is this: although I am not entirely or wholeheartedly in support of the two amendments—I realize that the railroads have been in the hotel business for a number of years and perhaps they are bound to upgrade or modernize their establishments—I nevertheless accord them a moderate measure of support because I wish to emphasize my view that the railroads have paid insufficient attention to the need to direct capital expenditure in the construction of better trackage and improved safety facilities. Some of these things were obvious to many of us as long as three or four years ago.

In opening my remarks I said I was slightly disappointed with the work of the transportation committee, since I felt the committee during the past year should have investigated many of the problem areas that were obvious to anyone interested in transportation long before this safety report was published. The training of signals personnel and new engineers, the operations of the Vancouver port: the problems there are obvious.

Last year we had a railway strike. It is not a question whether or not these are urgent matters, whether we were aware of them or whether they were brought to our attention. They were brought to our attention and we were very much aware of them. We had a railway strike last fall. The railway workers went on strike for better working conditions and higher wages. Were higher wages required? This House deliberated over that far longer than I thought it should. It was all well and good for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) to make a very moving speech about pressure, blackmail, the powers of the unions, and so on; but at that time I thought the problems were very obvious. The workers did need a pay raise to keep up with the rate of inflation that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has allowed to exist in this country.

The Vancouver yard through which most of our grain moves is owned by the Burlington Northern Railroad of the United States. There are many workers in the Burlington Northern yard in Vancouver because they are paid American rates which are far higher than the rates paid by Canadian National. Canadian National is having difficulty hiring men in the Vancouver area even today. The British Columbia Railroad pays higher wages than Canadian National and they, too, are drawing men away from CN. As a result, CN is not able to serve the Prairies to the full extent that it should in order to move those goods that mean so much to the general economy of Canada. Canadian Pacific railroad pays higher wages than does Canadian National. So we find Canadian National pretty nearly going begging for as many as 150 yardmen to move boxcars at the port of Vancouver.

There are two things that make a good port so far as the trading of goods between countries is concerned: first, the accessibility of the boats to the land and, secondly, the accessibility of the commodities from that land to the boats. We have had some difficulty as far as the boats are concerned, but that is not the subject of the debate tonight. We are discussing the movement of goods to the ports, a problem to which we have not really addressed ourselves.

As the unbiased chairman of the transportation committee that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre says I should be, I was a little disappointed during the past year, as I say, that the transportation committee did not visit Vancouver to see whether its members could not lend some wisdom—lend some attention is more likely, since they probably could not lend any wisdom over and above that which had already been lent—to encourage civil servants, Canadian National and Canadian Pacific to redirect their capital expenditures to things other than new television sets for hotels; because this is what the $5.5 million provided for in Bill C-164 is to be used for—the buying of new television sets for Canadian National hotels. At least, that is what the transportation committee was told.

I know it is much nicer to watch television in colour rather than black and white, but what we as legislators and as members of the transportation committee must address ourselves to is the question of priorities. Just where has this word "priorities" disappeared to? In the 1968 election campaign it was first and foremost in the mind of every politician. Everyone was talking about Canada's needs. Then during the 1972 election it was still fairly prominent in the eyes of most voters. They wanted to know what were our priorities. Yet this financing bill is placing the supply of new television sets for CN hotels over and above the movement of goods for export.

Today during the question period somebody pointed out that, compared with a year ago, we are today falling behind in the movement of wheat to export markets by some 125 million bushels. I do not deny that figure since the Canadian Wheat Board officials appeared before the committee that I have the honour to chair and admitted a month ago that we were 75 million bushels behind, so we might well be behind by 125 million bushels today. Why is there not some kind of priority list, or list of things waiting to be done ranked in terms of importance?

Another great question arising on the Prairies today is the supply of boxcars. The Wheat Board declared that we need 4,000 additional boxcars. It is interesting to go back through Hansard and check one's remarks to see whether one was on target a year ago, two years ago, three years ago, or whether one was not. If you find you were on target, it sometimes gives you a little more confidence when you come to make a speech. On March 8, 1972, long before the 1972 election, even before the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board announced the building of 2,000 boxcars for the Canadian Wheat Board, I happened to say that we ought to build some hopper cars for the Canadian Wheat Board to operate.

On the same day I also said we should build a branch line from Ashcroft to Lillooet, and I understand surveys are now being made in that regard. On that date I also said that before the summer rock slides and the winter snow flies, the slide detector fences, which had become completely unsafe between Kamloops and Boston Bar, should be repaired. It is interesting to note that on two of these three matters the government and the Wheat Board are already taking action. As for the third matter, the Canadian Transportation Commission has finally announced it will overhaul the slide detector fences.

Since that date I have said we should build more boxcars for the Canadian Wheat Board to move our grain, but it became vividly clear in the transportation committee that the government's priorities were entirely out of whack. The number of boxcars to move grain had fallen from something like 88,000 to 42,000. This caused the Canadian farmers and Canadian voters to think what a great government this was which in the fall of 1972 was going to build 2,000 more boxcars. We were told that the western farmers should throw out their chests and vote for this fellow in charge of the Wheat Board because he was going to build 2,000 additional boxcars, which would mean that grain would move smoothly and there would be no trouble.

Today, a year or so after these cars have come into operation, we learn that we are running 125 million bushels behind last year in our grain movements. Let us scratch our heads and ask why. The facts are out: the railroads have completely discarded the issue of building more cars. Canadian National officials admitted to the committee that in the year 1972 they were building 3,400 additional cars—though it might have been 3,450; I do not have the proceedings of the committee with me. These cars would be delivered during the year 1972.

Then some young, interested member, I think the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), asked how many of these cars would be available to move grain. Well, they pondered, shook their heads and said that, really, without a great deal of renovation none of them could move grain. So here again we ask, where are the priorities in respect of the capitalization expenditures of Canadian National Railways?

It is interesting to note that in a Free Press item of December 22, 1973—not too long ago—it was reported that Canadian National Railways ordered 94 gondola cars, weighing 100 tons apiece, for the movement of Alberta coal to British Columbia. So they are building cars. It has been said by some people that the railway does not build cars for the movement of grain because of the cursed Crowsnest Pass rates. They are supposed to be the root and evil of it all. Well, nothing would give me greater pleasure than to give the House a brief rundown concerning the Crowsnest Pass rates, why they were arrived at and why westerners generally stick pretty tight on the issue that they should be maintained. Briefly, however, they are the Magna Carta, the saviour of western Canada and the railways have not really proved that they lose money moving grain under them.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are becoming slightly anxious, so I shall conclude my remarks. I know other members are desirous of taking part in this debate. If the Crowsnest Pass rates are the cause of the shortage of boxcars, why is there a shortage of boxcars for the movement of lumber on the railway in British Columbia? Lumber does not come under such a rate; the going rate is applicable in that case. Grain is the bread and butter issue of the CNR and the CPR. I said once to the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway that if they did not have grain to move across the Prairies, they would have to roll up the tracks—and he said that would be the case. The bread and butter movement on the Prairies for the railways is the movement of grain. They could not have survived without this movement. In no way do the railways lose money through the movement of grain.

I should like to take another 20 minutes to document fully what I am saying. However, I shall merely say at this time that I hope, no matter who is elected chairman of the transport and communications committee, it will delve deeper into the problems of transportation and the movement of goods all across Canada so that we can really assess what are the priorities for the expenditure of capital by the Canadian railways, both CNR and CPR.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have an opportunity to take part in this debate, particularly after waiting many months for this bill to return to the chamber. I am particularly delighted because of the amendments with which we are dealing. I have never before heard such irrelevancy in a debate as I heard this evening from the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn). He spent his time dealing with hotels and needles. He did not spend very much time on the matter of transportation and the CNR financing bill. He could have spoken about national transportation and some of the items mentioned by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner), who spoke of the transportation needs of this country. He might even have tried to bring in an amendment in order to accomplish something.

The type of amendments which require consideration are the type that would be moved by the hon. member for Crowfoot, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) or myself; but they would probably be ruled out of order. If we were really dealing with the situation in respect of the railways and airlines of Canada, the government would have before us a bill which would place these systems under public ownership so they could be integrated and provide a national transportation service which would meet the transportation needs of this country.

I am not particularly interested in the foibles of the CNR or the CPR in terms of a national transportation act which is designed only to make sure that the railways and the airlines place operating profit first and service second. We should reverse that situation. The CNR financing bill and many other related matters are mostly irrelevant. It would have been much better had the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) seen to it that in some of this capitalization there was an expenditure of money for rolling-stock, track maintenance, signal systems and all those things mentioned by the hon. member for Crowfoot. However, he did not see fit to do that. He did not see fit to meet with the officials of the CNR and the CPR and have the Board of Transport Commissioners require the CNR or the CPR to make some moves now.

In an all-encompassing transportation system it seems logical that there should be some hotels; they are nothing more than an adjunct to the transportation operation and the movement of people. The hon. member for Mississauga mentioned the sale of the Bessborough Hotel. I hope I am correct in this, but I understand that one of the major participants in the purchase of that hotel is the present leader of the Saskatchewan Progressive Conservative Party. I and the rest of the people of Saskatchewan, particularly in Saskatoon, would like to know from the Minister of Transport what compelled or motivated the CNR to sell the Bessborough Hotel, particularly in such a wild hurry after spending several hundred thousand dollars in long overdue renovations. All of a sudden the CNR decided to sell the Bessborough. I say to my colleagues who are helping me in my speech that I understand that some of the cohorts of the president of the Saskatchewan Progressive Conservative Party happen to be Liberals in the city of Saskatoon, all of whom got together and bought the Bessborough. It has been sold now, after it has been fixed up and is a decent place in which to stay.

I hope the CNR recovered the money that was invested in the renovations. I suspect this was not the case. I hope that my good friend from Mississauga will consult with the leader of the Progressive Conservative Party in Saskatchewan in order to protect his investment. If he does not need to protect it, then I would hope my hon. friend would get up and condemn his colleague from Saskatchewan for bilking the taxpayers of Canada out of a hotel for a cheap price, because the hon. gentleman cannot have it both ways.

The hon. gentleman also said that the Board of Directors of the CNR is incompetent. That is conceivable. I will even agree with him to some extent. However, I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, one thing the Board of Directors cares about: it cares about operating the Canadian National Railways' system according to the terms of reference laid down by the parliament of Canada.

An hon. Member: Why would they do that?

• (2110)

Mr. Benjamin: They do do it. They run a very efficient railway operation, not in terms of providing service for the people of Canada, but they are providing a very efficient railway operation in terms of operating profits and surpluses.

An hon. Member: They lose money.

Mr. Benjamin: The hon. member has been a member of the transport committee for the first time in his life. I wish he would consult the hon. member for Crowfoot who has been on the committee for many more years than perhaps either the hon. gentleman or I have been around here. If he took a look at the annual reports of the CNR he would find that three years out of the last 25 the CN Railways' system showed a deficit and in the other 22 years they showed substantial surpluses. One of their best years was 1956, when they had an operating profit of $44 million and a total surplus of $57,860,000. That is not bad. In fact, for that particular year it was an operating profit of several million more dollars than the CPR was able to show. In the same year the interest on the debt ate up all the operating profits of the CNR.

Mr. Rondeau: Now you are talking.

Mr. Benjamin: Parliament had to vote an additional $20 million or $22 million. The hon. gentleman conveniently forgets that if he also took a look at the bonded indebtedness of the CNR system, he would find a total of $4 billion in debt, half of which is in the hands of the people of Canada in the form of shares which may or may not bring a 3 per cent return and the other half of which is owed publicly. Of that $1,894 million of debt that is called a long-term debt, we have as yet not been able to find out, in the 5½ years that I have been in parliament, how much is still attributable to the bankrupt railways bought up in 1923 for which the taxpayers of Canada are still paying, and paying on mortgage indebtedness, the bond holders having been paid and repaid two or three times over in the last 50 years.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) last September or October agreed with me, in an answer to a question during the question period, that parliament is long overdue in taking another hard look at the financial structure and bonded indebtedness of the CNR. But my friends in the Tory Party always conveniently forget that the only reason we have a so-called publicly-owned national railway system is not because the government of that day or any other government since wanted to have a publicly-owned and operated railway system, but because their private enterprise system did not know how to operate an efficient railway system and the people of Canada had to bail them out in 1923 and have been bailing them out ever since.

When my good friends in the Conservative Party and those across the way in the Social Credit party talk about how the CPR makes a profit and the CNR suffers losses, I ask them whether it would not have been nice if the CNR had been set up on the basis of the same deal as the one under which the CPR was set up, namely, 25 million acres of land including mineral rights and $25 million in cash, plus guaranteed loans. Even the hon. member for Mississauga could run a business with a deal like that. I am not sure he could run any other kind of business, but even he could succeed with a deal like that. It did not take any geniuses on the board of directors of CPR since 1885 until now to make a profit with a deal like that. I want to hear no more nonsense about operating efficiency.

An hon. Member: We don't want to hear any more nonsense, either.

Mr. Benjamin: The National Transportation Act of Canada is not designed to allow our railroads or airlines to provide the kind of transportation system that would meet the transportation needs of the people; rather, it is designed to try to provide the railways with an opportunity to make a profit and nothing else. Until that is changed, until there is that fundamental change in the direction and purpose of our transportation policy, we will go through this exercise every year, as my hon. friend will find out from bitter experience. I am sure the hon. member for Crowfoot would be able to confirm that to him behind the curtain. Railways and airlines are no different from our streets, our sidewalks, our electrical systems, our sewer systems: all those are essential public services and utilities, and until we start treating our transportation system in that way and setting them up in that way we will be faced with the kind of messes we have had all these years such as the ones mentioned by the hon. member for Crowfoot.

Every year, chronically, there has been insufficient rolling-stock to move potatoes from P.E.I. and New Brunswick, insufficient stock cars to move stock out of western to eastern Canada, and insufficient cars to move lumber out of B.C. to anywhere in Canada or to meet our export commitments to the United States. They can build fancy specialty cars for esoteric commodities such as compartmentalized refrigerator cars to move dressed beef, dressed pheasants, or whatever else; they can make fancy equipment of that nature, but there is insufficient equipment to move most of our agricultural produce. This has been the case since 1947. This is also the case with regard to the moving of hogs and cattle.

The same is true with regard to the moving of people. We can spend billions of dollars in this country on divided highways and expensive real estate which makes real estate developers, land speculators and friends of my colleagues to my right very happy; we can spend money on that, and yet we can starve our rail and air transportation systems. I suppose the CNR wants to build a tower in order to get even with the CPR. They have one in Calgary, and I have not heard the hon. gentlemen complaining about the CPR building a tower in Calgary but not building enough boxcars. In fact, they used our money for it.

This is the other thing that my friends to the right do not choose to remember. Every dollar of that investment is paid for by the users of Canadian Pacific Railway's transportation system, and many of those investments are unnecessary and unneeded. They do nothing for the transportation requirements of this country. I say to the hon. gentlemen that until our rail and air transportation, as well as our pipelines and communications systems, are operated as a public utility and fully integrated, we will continue to have the problems which the hon. member for Crowfoot mentioned and even the odd one or two problems that the hon. member who led off this debate mentioned. That must be the intent and purpose of the debate on transportation of any kind in this House, whether or not the CNR made money or lost money. In that context, the debate is relevant, but it does not surprise me that we could get an irrelevant speech from the lead-off speaker in the opposition. I wish the hon. member for Crowfoot or the hon. member for Vegreville had started off the debate, because they know these things as well, or better, than I do.

I have also mentioned the movement of grain and bulk commodities in this country. You don't have to believe me, Mr. Speaker, but the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, which you could hardly call a small outfit, has spoken repeatedly about the inadequacies of our transportation system. On October 26 it noted that Mr. Esdale, an official of the Canadian Wheat Board who used to be in the Department of Transport under the minister's former colleague, the Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin, said that "supplies in the country elevators were more than adequate for this year's export markets, but there was a serious shortage of box cars because cars had been sitting around loaded with other goods. The difficulty with rail transport meant that the board was well below the export target set for that time of year".

On November 2 the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool again said that shipments of grain, just from Saskatchewan, from August 1 to October 17 were down 68 million bushels compared with the same period last year. It said shipments were just able to keep pace with deliveries to the elevators, that stocks in the elevators had not gone down at all since September 15, and that there was still more than 50 per cent of the elevator system plugged. I hope that the Minister of Transport is paying attention to this, Mr. Speaker, because certainly the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board has not been paying attention.

On December 19 the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool said that transportation problems had probably blocked international grain sales totalling 75 million bushels this year, according to information given by Mr. Charley Gibbings, Canadian Wheat Board commissioner. Mr. Gibbings said he doubted that grain movement targets would be met this year unless more rail cars were channelled to the trade. He added that the board had deferred shipment of 15½ million bushels to foreign customers so that western feed grain could be hauled to Thunder Bay. Commenting on the shortage of rolling stock, he said that the only way the rail car crisis could be solved was to provide 4,000 hopper cars and to consign worn-out stock to the scrapyards.

Here I want to pay a compliment to the CNR. In the past few months they at least have been rehabilitating or rebuilding 900 cars and returning them to grain movement. We have yet to hear of anything the Canadian Pacific are doing, even though most of the grain shipping points are on Canadian Pacific lines. At least our publicly-owned corporation is making some kind of effort.

Listening to the hon. member for Mississauga and the hon. member for Crowfoot, I gather that they would make provision for the expenditure of a few more tens of millions of dollars in order that the Canadian National Railways' system could purchase rolling-stock and additional locomotive power. Mr. Speaker, you will recall that a little over a year ago the minister in charge of the Wheat Board announced the purchase of 2,000 hopper cars to be used for the movement of grain. Everybody applauded that announcement, I as well as everyone else, but not for the same reasons.

I applauded it because there was a need to get more cars into the movement of grain. But all we were really doing was bailing the railways out of a responsibility that was legitimately and legally theirs, the responsibility to supply sufficient rolling-stock, trackage and everything else required to meet the transportation needs of the country. We have still to find out how those cars are being financed, who is paying for their upkeep and who is collecting the freight.

It is not just good enough for us to buy some boxcars. Sooner or later parliament will have to move in, take over and operate on behalf of all Canadians all our rail and air transportation systems, including telecommunications, the hotels they own, their mineral rights, real estate developments and everything else that goes with them. Only then will we be able to provide the kind of transportation which Canadians need and should have.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) who so eloquently explained its contents and the meaning behind the proposal. I support the amendment for three basic reasons. First, parliament has and must exercise its ultimate control through the framework of this legislation. Second, this is an opportunity to examine the direction in which this Crown corporation, the CNR, is moving. It seems to me, and to a number of other hon. members who sat on the transport committee during consideration of this bill, that the CNR is moving in a direction which will have the effect of abandoning the main purpose and objective for which it was originally created. Third, this amendment provides an opportunity to express reservations about the direction in which Air Canada and CNR are headed and the ability of management to administer the policies and achieve the objectives of these corporations consistent with the ideals under which they were originally instituted.

Dealing with the first point, I think it is quite clear that parliament has ultimate control in providing funds through this financing bill. We are dealing here with something in the order of $140 million for Air Canada, roughly $100 million for the CNR, and guarantee and approval of a loan of £13 million to a British firm for the purchase of Rolls Royce engines. Therefore it behooves each and every one of us who has an interest in transportation to discharge our responsibility in such a way that parliament does not act merely as a rubber-stamp when considering this legislation, particularly bearing in mind that the legislation seems to be used as a filling device to take up time of the House when other legislation is not ready to be brought before it.

I think it is fair to say that over the past number of years parliament has lost a great deal of control in exercising its ability to analyse and scrutinize government expenditure of funds. We have lost the estimates from committee of the whole, and really dealing with expenditures through the committee system renders many hon. members powerless. It does not provide the opportunity for them to scrutinize effectively in full, minute detail the expenditures and the policies of various departments and Crown corporations. Quite frankly, I have become increasingly disturbed over recent years by the fact that Crown corporations as such are really not answerable and responsible to parliament. I think that the responsibilities of a public corporation, as compared with a private corporation, are drastically different and I do not for one minute accept some of the rationale and explanations advanced by the hon. member who spoke just before me.

Through this bill the taxpayer is being asked to provide a substantial amount of money. Therefore I believe that the matter of management, the matter of policies of both long-term and short-term nature and the objectives of the company should be subject to scrutiny and examination both by parliament and by a parliamentary committee. I want to say further, Mr. Speaker, and I believe this very sincerely, that any Crown corporation, whether it be Air Canada or CNR, should be accountable to each and every member of parliament for its activities. I therefore believe that this bill deserves the kind of scrutiny and examination that it has received, and I agree with the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) who indicated that the committee's ability to fully examine these two Crown corporations was somewhat impaired because the terms of reference were limited.

What has disturbed me more, however, is the difficulty encountered when trying to obtain the answers we feel we are entitled to and through which we could assess the operations of these organizations. We have been denied the opportunity to judge the decisions taken by management and the boards of directors, and have not had the opportunity to express an opinion on whether some of the expenditures were wise. Time and time again we heard the officials of these two Crown corporations indicate that they could not answer this or that question because disclosure of the information would be prejudicial to the operations of the company.

I believe these kinds of answers should be re-examined, Mr. Speaker, and I believe the time has come to establish more effective parliamentary machinery to scrutinize the activities of companies and industries which are under public ownership. This can only be done if the individual representatives of the corporations are compelled to give answers to a parliamentary committee or to parliament. We must remember that these Crown corporations are owned by the people of Canada and that the people who are managing them have no monetary interest in them. Some of them, however, seem to embark upon a huge empire-building job.

When a major commercial corporation which is privately-owned can give the kind of information that we were requesting from these two Crown corporations, surely it behooves the latter to give such information to us. We are living in an age that tends toward greater government involvement and the public is demanding a greater amount of public disclosure. Parliament has a right to know. As a greater number of Crown corporations enter our society, I believe we should urgently consider the question of providing adequate parliamentary machinery to compel the officials of these corporations to give to a parliamentary committee the kind of answers it seeks. We have a right to know why they took this decision or that decision, why they spent a certain amount of money on a particular project and why they did not spend it in another fashion. Certainly we have a right to know.

My second point is one about which I feel very strongly, Mr. Speaker. I feel that the CNR has abandoned the purpose for which it was established. It must be remembered that the railway company, in this case CNR, was established as a company which "works for the general advantage of Canada". Therefore, by law that railway company is required to give service to all customers. This is part of the CNR. Items such as hotels, towers, telecommunications, devices and international consulting firms should not be the priority. That is why I support this amendment.

The hon. member for Crowfoot spoke at some length about the boxcar shortage. There is not sufficient or adequate rolling-stock to meet the demands and challenges of this country. After all, Mr. Speaker, the railways are still the lifeline of the economy of this country and they must have the equipment and the expertise to discharge their responsibility for moving commodities and passengers from one end of Canada to the other.

There was a great deal of discussion in the committee on the question of the shortage of boxcars and rolling-stock. Being a westerner, I am naturally interested in this matter from the standpoint of the movement of grain. It is interesting to note that since 1950 no general purpose boxcars have been built for either of our railways. The hon. member for Crowfoot indicated that in 1963 there were about 88,200 general purpose boxcars which could be used and were suitable for the movement of grain. This number had declined to 70,600 by 1968, and by 1973 it had slumped to 48,200. During the examination of this bill it was indicated that 3,465 boxcars had been ordered by CNR in 1973, of which some 3,000 had been received. I asked officials of the CNR how many of these were suitable for the movement of grain, and the answer was "none".

But there is more to this situation, Mr. Speaker. It seems that about 2,500 boxcars were retired from the system and of these 1,500 were suitable for the movement of grain. In effect, in 1973 CNR alone had a decrease in the number of available units to move grain of something in the order of 1,500.

In the issue of the Western Producer for January 3, 1974, there is an annual forecast by farm leaders for 1974. They give their views and projections for 1974 and say what they think the future might hold. There is a very interesting article concerning the boxcar shortage by Mr. A. M. Runciman of United Grain Growers. He indicates that the rail boxcar shortage will be a major farm problem in 1974. I should like to quote from the article because I think it is significant. He said:

> But I want to deal with boxcar shortages because I think it's the worst single problem facing farm people in the near future. I don't mean the current shortage encountered by the Canadian Wheat Board, largely due to this past summer's strike. I mean the disastrous situation lying ahead—say three years from now—when we simply won't have enough grain cars to move the grain we want to move.

All through the committee hearings we were given excuses and reasons by the CNR for not providing sufficient rolling-stock. In their opinion it was not a good investment. But I want to remind you again, Mr. Speaker, that it was for this purpose that the CNR was created and asked to discharge a responsibility in this country; that is, the movement of goods and people from point A to point B. Mr. Runciman later in the article said:

> The trouble is, there seems to be very little being done, and there is the risk that the whole situation could fall around our ears while we're still scrambling to find out what the problem is.

He continued:

> What are the reasons for the shortage? Why aren't the railroads building cars for moving grain?
> Everybody is familiar with the complaints of the railroads. They say they don't make enough money moving grain compared to other products, and so they're building cars to move all products but grain. They claim if branch lines are abandoned, losses from moving grain will continue because there will be no subsidies to defray costs if the grain moves on the main lines.
> Are the railroads telling the truth? I don't know. But I'll bet even if they were, we wouldn't believe them.
> [Mr. Mazankowski.]

The claim of the railroads about not being able to make money hauling grain reminds me of the person who applied for a licence to sell liquor in his dining lounge so that people could be served drinks with their food. As you know, sir, there is always more profit in selling liquor than in selling food. In this case, after a time the man would prefer to drop the food operation and simply sell liquor because liquor is a better paying proposition than food. In some ways the railways are in the same position. They are obligated to move all commodities, not merely those bringing high profits. They are responsible for moving all items, items of low value to them as well as items that bring a high return.

Mr. Runciman went on to say:

> The first step then is to find out the reasons. It can be done. There is a government agency called the Canadian Transport Commission which operates under the National Transportation Act.
> The transportation act empowers the Minister of Transport, to whom the CTC responds, to enquire into costs of transportation. So what do you think of farm organizations requesting the Minister to instruct the CTC to put the railroads' financial facts on the table? In other words, get an independent analysis of costs by a government agency—not the railroads' side of it. If a cost analysis isn't publicly disclosed by the CTC, I can see all kinds of haywire tinkering with solutions to the boxcar shortage—including attempts to change the Crowsnest rates.

That suggestion ought to be considered. The minister and the government ought to remind the CNR that its major responsibilities include the movement of grain and of all commodities.

I am sure we were all disturbed to learn facts contained in the third report of the commission looking into railway safety, which was tabled. This document is a damning indictment of the railways. They have not maintained their lines as well as they should have done, and those lines cannot accommodate heavy loads and heavily loaded boxcars. Apparently accidents and derailments have just about tripled since 1959, and nearly doubled since 1969. Because of deteriorating track conditions and the safety shortcomings alluded to in the report, the Canadian Transport Commission has instructed the railways to reduce the maximum net weight of its cars to 70 tons from 80 tons per car, to reduce the height of loads and speeds and to take necessary steps to reduce excessive strains which now are greater than the present track structure can bear adequately.

What will be the effect of these instructions? There will be a reduction in efficiency and capacity on the part of the railways. The railway companies will not be able to discharge their responsibilities as well as they ought to, and therefore there will be a growing backlog with regard to commodities needed on the Prairies, B.C., the Atlantic provinces and other parts of the country. It behooves the government to bring the railways immediately to task. They should take action immediately to upgrade their track facilities in order that they can operate at maximum efficiency and capacity. It is time the government reminded the railways of their duties and obligations in this country. It should instruct them to do the job they were intended to do.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, the speeches made tonight have interested me, particularly those made by Conservative members. I only wish we were considering the Canadian Pacific Railway as well, to see whether some of the same arguments would be applied to that company. A number of people in Canada think that anything run by the government must be run badly, and that public ownership is bad.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Peters: An hon. member says that is right. Certainly, some officials of Canadian National Railways and Air Canada went a long way to proving the arguments of some of my colleagues, namely, that Canadian National and Air Canada are less than efficient and are doing less than the job they are supposed to do. I was interested in the remarks of the previous speaker. When he was a member of the transport committee I found, when we were discussing the financing of CN, that he was more tolerant of public ownership and more interested than some others in arriving at solutions to problems involving the railways.

When Canadian National Railways was first formed it was necessary to put it under public ownership. I am of the opinion that such ownership is still necessary. I am also of the opinion that Canadian Pacific Railway should also be brought under public ownership. I suggest it is not correct to say that public ownership leads to inefficiency. I suggest the fault can more properly be laid at the feet of members of parliament who take little or no interest in the operations of Crown corporations.

When, in the committee to which I referred, we were talking about jobs, salaries and certain individuals who were vice-presidents of Air Canada, I was interested to note that the chairman refused to divulge exactly what were the duties of those vice-presidents. He would only say that they were on the upper board, or that there were certain people who were not on the upper board. He would not say how much money they made. He left the fairly clear impression that not all vice-presidents are paid the same money. He suggested that if he told us how much each man got, some people would be mad and morale would disappear.

What he said could be applied to the operations of both the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways. They have reached the stage in their bureaucracies in which apparently one person does not know what the other is doing. They are more concerned about their little bureaucratic empires than about the over-all railway operation. They think more of the bureaucracy than of running the organization.

In those committee hearings we called a representative of the Wheat Board. I remember we were discussing the question of boxcars and the more efficient handling of grain. We had been discussing the new hopper cars, and I was interested to learn that the Wheat Board was operating the hopper cars. Apparently the board controls the cars although ownership remained in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It was very difficult to find out whether the Department of Transport, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Canadian Wheat Board or one or both of the railways were servicing those cars, although it was indicated that a contract for service had been in effect for some time. It was impossible for the committee to find out the terms of the contract, whether the service was being provided and, if so, who was doing it and, more important, who was paying for it.

When the vice-chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board appeared before us, he indicated they did not anticipate that both CNR and CPR would be able to supply the transportation needs of the grain industry in western Canada this year. He said they were running approximately 75 per cent of the quota of last year, the quota that was agreed to by all parties concerned. This would not meet the requirements of the grain trade this year and they anticipated a shortfall in transportation. He went on to say parliament would have to authorize the purchase of another 4,000 hopper cars this year. These cars are worth $20,000 each. This means they will be asking for another $80 million for hopper cars this year. He also indicated that at the end of a five-year period, in order to handle the grain produced in western Canada the Canadian public would have to provide 20,000 cars at an amount well in excess of $400 million.

When the western conference was held last summer, the transportation problems were so bad that one of the requests of the western premiers was that the federal government build a roadbed for upgrading railway services. They said they would supply the rails and the federal government, through the Department of Transport, would operate the roadbed and the rails. We are developing at least two more forms of railway transportation in Canada, one of them owning the rails and the roadbed, with the Canadian Wheat Board controlling the hopper cars for the handling of grain. At the same time, the CNR is operating inefficiently, scrapping boxcars used for the delivery of grain while boxcars are being built that cannot be used for the handling of grain. Members of this House should look very carefully at its operations, for two reasons. First, it is damned inefficient in the handling of most of our major commodities. Second, it will be necessary for us to take over all the trackage in Canada and bring both railways under the control of one head so that the Canadian public will be served in a way where service is more important than profit.

I have no problem supporting the first two amendments. They would remove the CNR from the hotel business and the building of towers in Toronto. According to the president of CNR, the reason for the tower is simply prestige; it will be higher than the bank towers or any other building in Canada. When pressed as to why they would want to do that, he said they would be putting an antenna on the top to serve our communications system. In my opinion, someone else could have built a tower and the antenna could have been on top of that. It would have been much less bother for those who should normally be running a railroad. They are not running a railroad, they are running a business; and they are doing a damned poor job of it. You cannot put political hacks into that kind of operation and expect them to run a railroad.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: Very shortly we will have a chance to do something about this. For many years Mr. MacMillan has been in control of the operations of CNR. I dare say that after 35 or 40 years he has learned a great deal about operating railroads in Canada. He certainly does not know too much about the hotel operation. He does not know why they sold the Bessborough Hotel for $1,600,000 after spending half a million dollars putting in a tunnel to the parking lot. He was not able to explain that. He was not able to explain the reason for the tower. However, he will be retiring. I suggest this government should then appoint an expert to run the railroad. It should appoint someone who will bring new life to the operations of that company.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Not Edgar Benson.

Mr. Peters: My colleague says, not the former minister of finance. I can tell my colleague that the Hon. Edgar Benson would be a great improvement over many of the present vice-presidents of the CNR. He might not do a bad job of running it.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

TABLING OF ADMINISTRATIVE BULLETINS NOS. 54 AND 78

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, following the request by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) on January 3, under Standing Order 41 I would like to table, in French and English, copies of RCMP administrative bulletins Nos. 54 and 78, as well as a copy of a letter I sent to the right hon. member explaining the contents of bulletin No. 78.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I asked for production of the various declarations that were made by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, not an explanation of them, and I take the strongest possible objection to the minister filing self-serving explanations in a letter to me. If he wants to deal with this matter he can do so. I would be very happy to hear him explain on motions what took place, but that self-serving addition of his explanation of the unexplainable just cannot be justified.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has some procedural reservations about what is proposed by the Solicitor General. The point made by the right hon. gentleman certainly deserves serious consideration. I wonder whether it is competent on a minister, under the Standing Order, to propose to table copies of a letter addressed to another member. I would think that a minister is always justified under the Standing Order in tabling what the Standing Order identifies as a document or paper, but I would doubt whether that would extend to an exchange of correspondence between a minister and a member. I would think that that part of the proposed tabling by the minister might be held in abeyance.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY PASSENGER SERVICE, SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the terms of Standing Order 43. The urgency of my motion arises from the disastrous effects of poor passenger travel facilities in southwestern Ontario and the unwillingness of the federal government to make public information it possesses concerning this problem. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis):

● (1410)

That the problem of passenger travel in southwestern Ontario be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications for immediate consideration.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimity; the motion, therefore, cannot be put.

FISHERIES

PACIFIC COAST HALIBUT FISHERY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask leave of the House to move a motion under Standing Order 43 in a case of very urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the fact that the halibut catch on the west coast this past season has been the lowest it has been for over 40 years and the halibut fishery is in great danger of complete destruction by overfishing, particularly by foreign fleets and there is therefore a need that immediate consideration be given to this question. I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Nelson):

That the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry be authorized to conduct forthwith an inquiry into all aspects of the halibut fishery in the Pacific Ocean and waters adjacent thereto.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion requires unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

MEASURES TO PREVENT OFFSETTING OF OLD AGE PENSION INCREASES BY INCREASES IN HOUSING COSTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to raise a matter of extreme importance, relating to the majority of the elderly population of Quebec.

Because a majority of elderly persons living in rest homes in Quebec are subject to lodging and board increases each time the federal government increases old age security pensions, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That a committee of the House consider means by which each increase in federal old age pensions is not taken up by increases in provincial lodging costs for elderly people, in order that pension increases are for the benefit of pensioners and not lodges.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimity?

OIL SHORTAGE—MEASURES TO COMPENSATE SERVICE STATION OWNERS FOR LOSSES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion pertaining to a very important matter.

As owners and renters of gas stations or garages are now losing a considerable amount of money owing to lower sales as a result of the false shortage of oil and also because they have less maintenance and repairs to do on trucks and cars, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That this House study the advisability of compensating those taxpayers through a rebate paid by the government or the Bank of Canada on every gallon of gas sold or through a special tax deduction.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under Standing Order 43, this motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As consent is not unanimous, the motion cannot be put.

INDUSTRY

SHORTAGE OF CAST IRON FOR QUEBEC FOUNDRIES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent to move a motion dealing with a very urgent matter since it contributes to higher unemployment.

Seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard), I move:

That the House examine as soon as possible the serious problem facing Quebec foundries which, unable to get cast iron, must refuse to make the essential parts and pieces that would keep small and medium-size industries in business. Moreover, that the House seek ways of authorizing the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to arrange for a better distribution of the metal so that large corporations such as Chrysler, Ford and others will not compete unfairly against small industries.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. The provisions of Standing Order 43 require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

ENERGY

OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL—REASON FOR DELAY IN COMMENCEMENT—THROUGHPUT VOLUME

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister who, on September 4, told the House that the government intended to move ahead with an oil pipeline to Montreal. That is about four months ago. Can the Prime Minister tell the House precisely what is holding up the commencement of this project or holding up an application being made to the National Energy Board, which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources yesterday said might be made in the spring? Why is this whole project still in the discussion stage after four months?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe the minister also indicated yesterday that he expects to be able to announce a decision very soon. I want to repeat that assurance to the House. The hold-up, to use the expression of the Leader of the Opposition, is due to the fact that we have tried to ascertain provincial preferences as to alternate routes, alternate ways of laying down the pipeline. In the meantime we have proceeded, as the House knows, through the Canadian Commercial Corporation with regard to the guarantee that there would be a supply of pipe. For that reason we are still confident that the deadline I announced will be met.

Mr. Stanfield: The Prime Minister spoke about consulting with the provinces about the route. Can he indicate what provinces the government is consulting about the route and what provinces, if any, the government is consulting about the size of the pipeline and the volume of oil to be carried through the pipeline?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, consultations have been mainly with Ontario and Quebec. There may have been other consultations but I know of those two in particular. We have ascertained, in the case of Quebec, what appears to be a slight preference for one route over another. In the case of Ontario, they have refused, I understand, to indicate a preference for one route over another.

Mr. Stanfield: Has the government of Canada reached any understanding or agreement with the government of Quebec about the size of the Quebec market for oil or the volume of the oil used in Quebec that would be dedicated to Canadian crude? In other words, has the government of Canada consulted the government of Quebec about the amount of Canadian crude which would be dedicated to the Quebec market, and have any discussions taken place with the Atlantic provinces in this respect?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, so far as I know the discussions have been general. The question is not only one of the amount of crude but of the time over which such various amounts would be deliverable in the eastern market. With regard to consultation with the Atlantic provinces, I would have to defer on this matter to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who has been, of course, closer to it than I have been.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I apologize, but may I direct one further supplementary question either to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is the decision to supply roughly 250,000 barrels a day to those markets in the east based upon consultations with the eastern provinces, or is it based upon some other consideration because, of course, 250,000 barrels a day would constitute only about one-quarter of the market of those five eastern provinces and therefore would offer the prospect of supplying only about one-quarter of the market?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the other relevant question of course is the productive ability of the western Canadian sedimentary basin to supply additional markets in eastern Canada without at the same time creating difficulties in regard to our export arrangements to the United States.

This has been a matter of discussion with both the consuming and the producing provinces.

● (1420)

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday the minister said that the main obstacle to reaching agreement was the question of route and availability of supply. Does the difficulty arise out of the fact that unless the pipeline from Manitoba to Sarnia is twinned there is only a spare capacity of 250,000 barrels, which would be only half the target the minister has set and less than one-third of the requirements of eastern Canada? Is the delay due to the difficulty in the government making up its mind whether to extend the pipeline from Sarnia or to build a northern pipeline, and is the Interprovincial Pipeline Company opposing a northern pipeline and insisting on the pipeline being extended from Sarnia?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As I indicated yesterday, Mr. Speaker, what has to be done is make a choice of route as between three possible routes, each of which has different characteristics. In response to the hon. member's first question, the mere question of twinning the line between Manitoba and Sarnia is not the principal obstacle.

Mr. Douglas: Will the minister state definitely where the difficulty lies with regard to making a decision? Has the government not reached a decision as to the route or is there some opposition from Interprovincial to building a northern line which would have a larger capacity and which would be entirely within Canadian jurisdiction?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the question of route is a decision to be taken by the government. The simple choice is between the Sarnia route which could be achieved at an earlier date or an all-Canadian route which would take something like two years longer to achieve.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will note there are five or six members seeking supplementaries on this first question. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands on a last supplementary, the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings and then attempt to complete the first turn of the questioning. I will return to this subject for further supplementaries after we have completed the first round of questioning.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the statement which I understand the minister made on radio last night that the government hopes to begin construction of this pipeline by mid-summer, does the minister still hold to the target date of completion of this pipeline by the autumn of 1975?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, that obviously depends as, I just said, on which route is selected.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT'S PLANS FOR SUPPLYING QUEBEC AND ATLANTIC PROVINCES WITH CANADIAN OIL

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. As Quebec and the Atlantic provinces will require a minimum of a million barrels of oil a day by the time the Montreal pipeline is completed, will the minister take the first opportunity on motions to outline to the House the government's plans for supplying the requirements of these areas from Canadian resources in view of the fact the absolute outside maximum capacity of the Montreal pipeline will be only 500,000 barrels a day and then only if the line west of Sarnia is looped, a policy which the government has not yet decided upon?

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it would be the intention to indicate on motions the government's position with regard to this.

Some hon. Members: When?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I certainly hope within the next two weeks. I assume parliament will be sitting next week. On the question of providing a million barrels a day, the capacity does not exist in Canada to provide for all of the Canadian market. As the Prime Minister indicated in earlier statements, the government's goal is for the purpose of increasing Canadian production to meet Canadian needs.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will be recognized for a last supplementary. As I said, I will then try to complete the first turn of questioning before the end of the question period.

Mr. Hees: As the Prime Minister stated it is government policy that the government is aiming to make this country self-sufficient in oil and as it is up to the government to find additional resources, will the minister outline as soon as possible the government's plans for building a pipeline from Montreal to supply the Atlantic provinces so that they can be supplied by Canadian resources as well?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his unqualified endorsement of a national petroleum company.

SUPPLIES ALLOCATION BILL—ALLEGATION THAT REPORT STAGE MOTION GIVES VETO POWER TO SENATE RESPECTING DECLARATION OF NATIONAL EMERGENCY

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In light of the discussions with respect to the program for the remainder of the session, I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman whether he has studied the report stage motion related to Bill C-236 in the name of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources which gives the Senate the power of veto with regard to the question whether a declaration by the government that there is a national emergency requiring an allocation program is to be revoked or not. Has the Prime Minister studied this provision which would give the Senate a veto of that kind regardless of the decision of the House of Commons, and is it the intention of the government to retain this particular provision in the report stage amendment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I must confess my own impression is that it would be a parliamentary declaration involving a position taken by both Houses. I would have to verify whether the text implies otherwise and perhaps report to the House again after discussion with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the fact that subclause 9 of Motion No. 1 in the order of business for today provides that "if either House of Parliament negatives the motion that an order made under subsection 1 be concurred in, the order is thereupon revoked"—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will allow the Prime Minister to reply to the hon. member but I am sure he appreciates that we are now clearly anticipating an order of the day and I doubt we should become involved during the question period in a discussion of the business which will be coming up later today or tomorrow. However, subject to this caution the Prime Minister might be allowed to reply.

Mr. Trudeau: I will simply let my previous answer stand.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the fact that some members of the other place, some Senators, are directors of oil corporations and businesses related to the oil industry, and bearing in mind that this is the elected House of Parliament, will the Prime Minister give consideration to revising the motion in the name of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources so that the House of Commons will be given the final right of decision on this issue rather than the Senate?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair must refer again to the suggestion made a few moments ago that we are becoming involved in debate relating to an order of the day and are clearly anticipating that debate. I would hope the important matter raised by the hon. member for York South might be considered and debated in some other way than during the question period.

SOCIAL SECURITY

MEASURES TO PREVENT OFFSETTING OF OLD AGE PENSION INCREASES BY INCREASES IN HOUSING COSTS

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Does the minister intend to take specific action so that old age security beneficiaries may receive the full increases in allowances which, at least in the province of Quebec, are being grabbed by senior citizens' homes?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I already contacted many times my provincial counterparts on this matter, but I think the hon. member will have to call upon his colleagues of the National Assembly of Quebec so that appropriate representations may be made to solve the problem.

ENERGY

OIL—JUSTIFICATION FOR ESTIMATED SUPPLY SHORTFALL IN EASTERN CANADA AND PRICE INCREASES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Have there been any late inventories taken which would satisfy the minister that the estimated shortfall of oil supplies for eastern Canada can be justified, and is the minister able to tell the House whether or not some of the increases already made in the price of crude in eastern Canada can be justified in light of these circumstances?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the hon. gentleman is mixing the two questions of price and supply. In terms of supply, the recent judgment given to the standing committee by the chairman of the technical advisory committee was that at the moment the anticipated levels of interruption later this winter have not been changed, though we have had the advantage of a rather milder winter so far than we had anticipated. With regard to the question of price, as the hon. gentleman may recall—he can examine the proceedings of the committee—detailed calculations regarding the cost increases of the various eastern Canadian refiners were set out there. In addition to those, there may indeed be action at the retail level on the part of individual retailers to obtain a higher level of price, but my understanding is that these are wholesale levels to which the refiners have adhered.

Mr. McGrath: I wonder whether the minister would reply to the first part of the question, which is prompted by the substantial inventories in place at Come-By-Chance, Newfoundland. In face of these inventories, is the minister now prepared to re-examine the estimated shortfall?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That had been taken into account in the earlier estimates that were made. It appears that the refinery may be in a position to start moving some heating oil, and if anticipated difficulties do not materialize there the inventory situation, of course, will be much improved.

RELATIONSHIP OF QUEBEC POSITION TO DELAY IN COMMENCING OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

On January 7, the minister indicated that this government had had discussions only with the Interprovincial Pipelines Corporation. Can he tell the House whether the fact that the Quebec government has not yet declared itself in favour of the building of an oil pipeline partly explains the delay in the implementation of this project?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Quebec premier has declared himself in favour of the building of such a pipeline. I think that his provincial colleagues are now obviously in favour of such a pipeline.

[English]

OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL—PLACING OF SURVEY CONTRACTS

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and it follows up a question I asked him yesterday as to what specific group in the government is negotiating with Interprovincial Pipelines. My question today is this. Since there is only one person in this group, namely, the Deputy Minister of National Defence, it may be that part of his responsibilities is delaying the negotiations. Is he asking this company with which he is negotiating that all contracts for surveys be done through firms in Montreal?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No, Mr. Speaker, that is not a consideration at all.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for a supplementary and then the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Is there anybody else in this group with Mr. Cloutier who has responsibility for putting forward these ideas?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Cloutier has been carrying on the discussions but in this regard he has, of course, been conferring with representatives of the National Energy Board and of my own department. With regard to the details of the construction work, in particular the contracting out of surveys and so on, in the normal course this would be arranged between the pipeline company, if indeed it is to be the Interprovincial Pipelines, and the individual surveyors concerned.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, may I ask one further question for clarification purposes. Is the minister receiving any complaints in regard to pressure being exerted on them to let their contracts to Montreal firms?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Certainly I have not received any complaints from Interprovincial Pipelines. The position has been taken by the Association of Consulting Engineers of Canada that, to the greatest extent possible, Canadian engineering talent should be used in extending this pipeline. This seems to me to be a reasonable objective on the part of the engineering profession in this country generally, bearing in mind, however, the importance of speed in this particular case.

[Mr. Grafftey.]

INCOME TAX

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION TO ENSURE CONFIDENTIALITY OF RETURNS IN LIGHT OF FEDERAL COURT JUDGMENT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of Finance a question regarding the recent judgment of the Federal Court of Canada which indicated that the belief we have all had, that income tax returns are confidential has no basis in fact and is a myth. In view of that judgment, and of the concern of the millions of Canadians who pay income tax that their returns should not be available for inspection or examination, would the minister consider bringing in legislation that would definitely assure the taxpayers of this country that they will not be, as far as their returns are concerned, put into a goldfish bowl where what they have stated therein confidentially can become public information?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the right hon. gentleman for bringing this matter to my attention earlier by way of notice. May I say to him that I share his concern about the implications of the recent decision of the Federal Court of Canada. Frankly, I would operate from the general principle that information given to government for one confidential purpose should not be used for another purpose. Particularly in income tax matters, where our system is based upon the principle of voluntary assessment and confidential disclosure, this becomes even more important. I have discussed this matter with my colleague, the Minister of Justice, and we will see what remedy need be taken.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

RAPIDO TRAIN SERVICE BETWEEN TORONTO AND MONTREAL—REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE TO PREVENT CANCELLATION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the present energy crisis, and in view of the fact the House is presently debating the annual CNR financing bill, will the minister request Canadian National Railways not to carry out its intention to cancel, effective the day after tomorrow, the Rapido train service between Toronto and Montreal?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can discuss this problem with the president of the CNR. They made the first decision without consulting the department. I presume they would like to make a second one, but I should like to discuss the matter in the meantime.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that both trains have been carrying capacity or near capacity loads, and in view of the fact the Turbo leaves Montreal at 4.30 p.m. and the Rapido leaves at 4.31 p.m., would the minister request Canadian National Railways not only to retain the Rapido but to have it leave Montreal in the morning rather than at the same time as the Turbo train?

Mr. Speaker: That is, of course, a representation. The hon. member for Yukon has a supplementary to the previous question and will be recognized for that purpose; following that, I will recognize the hon. member for Calgary South.

ENERGY

FORTHCOMING FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE—REPRESENTATION FOR YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—EQUALIZATION OF FUEL COSTS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and has to do with the upcoming conference of first ministers on the 22nd and 23rd of this month. In view of the vital interest that residents of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories have in fuel products, particularly in the question of the equalization of fuel costs as between consumers in various parts of Canada, can he inform the House what arrangements have been made for representation of those two northern territories at this conference? At the same time, can the minister say whether or not the commissioner of the Yukon was expressing government policy when he supported equalization of fuel costs for residents of the north as well as of Quebec and the Atlantic provinces?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that discussions are still going on with the provincial premiers regarding arrangements for the conference. I think I am correct in saying no arrangements have yet been made for representatives from the two territories. Indeed, I do not think any final arrangements of any kind have yet been made. I have not seen the statement of Commissioner Smith, but I would be glad to consider it when I have had a chance to examine it.

● (1440)

Mr. Nielsen: Can the minister say whether it is federal government policy to consider the two northern territories in relation to the question of equalization of fuel costs as between other regions of Canada?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to consider that as a representation.

OIL—INQUIRY WHETHER SUPPLY CRISIS EXISTS IN LIGHT OF PRODUCTION BY COME-BY-CHANCE REFINERY

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the emergency powers the government is seeking under Bill C-236, which is coming before the House this week, and in view of the fact he said on January 4 that if the Newfoundland refinery went on stream this would change the shortfall figure, having in mind the fact that at the present time this refinery has a throughput of 84,000 barrels a day, will the minister indicate whether this will change the shortfall and whether in fact we will no longer have an energy crisis in Canada, thus virtually eliminating the need or certainly substantially reducing the need to declare a national emergency?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, this will depend on the continued success of the proprietors of the Newfoundland refinery in bringing the refinery on stream, the availability of ice-hardened ships to move the product to the Montreal market, which is the shortest market, the degree of cold we have this winter and the intention of the Arab countries to increase the withholding of oil supplies from the Canadian market. On the basis of that I think the best position for Canada to take is to acquire the ability to react to a very sharp drop in supplies to Canada if that should materialize, and on that basis for parliament to pass the necessary legislation.

OIL—NEGOTIATIONS WITH SAUDI ARABIA FOR RESUMPTION OF SHIPMENT OF SUPPLIES TO CANADA

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact the largest cutbacks in crude oil supply to Canada are in respect of the supplies from Saudi Arabia, will the minister say exactly what negotiations are presently under way between Canada and Saudi Arabia for the resumption of crude supply to Canada, and does the minister believe this government is doing everything possible?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the minister might reply to the first part of the hon. member's question. I should remind hon. members in passing that we appear to be still on the first question and we are running short of time. It may be that we will spend the whole question period on the same subject. I am not sure whether that is what hon. members wish, but some thought should be given to moving on to another subject.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the information we continue to get from our ambassador accredited to Saudi Arabia is that Canada is not being boycotted. However, we are still struggling with the fact that, even though we apparently are not being boycotted, oil is not being delivered to us.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: No boycott, but a bypass.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the extreme confusion that seems to exist in the minister's department, and in view of the fact Saudi Arabia has relaxed its embargoes in respect of Europe, Japan and other countries, will the minister say why Canada has not been able to negotiate similar favourable treatment for this country?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we have had no difficulty in negotiating with the Saudi Arabian government, none whatever.

An hon. Member: No, just in getting oil.

Mr. Sharp: We have had assurances from that government that Canada is being treated the same as all other countries except the United States and Holland. That continues to be the situation, but this kind of instruction has apparently not been conveyed down the line in an adequate way.

AGRICULTURE

MEASURES TO OVERCOME SHORTAGE OF FEED GRAIN IN QUEBEC

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Since for about a month Quebec co-operatives and farmers are unable to obtain feed grain, especially wheat and oats, because the Montreal warehouses are empty, can he tell us whether he is aware of such conditions and if so whether the department intends to act to improve the situation which I find most difficult for producers?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have been talking with these people who are using grain and I have no evidence at all of any producer who has gone without grain. If any member of the House has any evidence of producers who have gone without grain he should bring that to my attention by being more specific. We also have the upgrading of rail shipments of grain to eastern Canada, and the Wheat Board will be responsible for any extra increase in the cost that may be involved.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: I should like to put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Can the minister say whether he has received letters about the matter from Trois-Rivières, Sherbrooke and Quebec co-operatives?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I have received many letters of concern but no letter pointing out that they have done without grain.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY PASSENGER SERVICE IN SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO—AVAILABILITY OF REPORT BY TRANSPORT COMMISSION

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and arises from my question to him yesterday and his reply regarding the release of the report of the Canadian Transport Commission on rail passenger services. To quote his reply, the minister said:

[Mr. Sharp.]

—I have received a report and it has been communicated to all interested parties.

Has the report been communicated to any member of parliament representing that area, to any elected municipal representative or to the standing committee of the House on transport?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, it has not been released to all those persons.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, in light of the minister's answer I wonder if I might ask him, through Your Honour, what parties are more interested than the elected representatives in this House?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

[Later:]

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order and I do so most reluctantly, never having done so before. Yesterday and today I have tried to determine who the Minister of Transport considers to be interested parties in respect of passenger rail services. Obviously it is not members of parliament, elected members of the provincial House, municipal representatives or the standing committee of this House. I think it is perfectly logical to ask the minister whom he considers interested parties in respect of passenger rail services in western Ontario.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AGRICULTURE

NORTHERN ALBERTA—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS WHO SUFFERED CROP LOSSES BECAUSE OF EARLY SNOWFALL

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. What action has he taken with regard to the request by the Minister of Agriculture for the province of Alberta for assistance to those farmers in the northern region of the province who suffered severe losses because of an early snowfall and the inability to harvest their crops?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I met with the Minister of Agriculture for Alberta and we discussed the very matter the hon. member brings to our attention today. In view of the fact that advance interest free payments on grain under the snow are being made, in addition to further consideration we are giving in respect of aid in transportation, etc., and the program the province of Alberta has initiated itself, although that has not been finalized at the present time, we hope to be able to work out an agreement with them very shortly.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Am I to take it from his reply that the federal government is not prepared to assist in any way in so far as cash acreage payments as requested by the Alberta Minister of Agriculture are concerned, in view of the fact that in previous similar circumstances the federal government has contributed on an acreage basis in other years?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I could go into great detail in respect of my discussions with the Alberta Minister of Agriculture, which continued until nearly two o'clock in the morning when I was in Alberta.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: That might be hard to explain.

Mr. Fairweather: You were lucky to get to bed at two.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): How did you get to bed so early?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I think it is fair to say that the hospitality of the people of Alberta is always wonderful, but I should explain that the Alberta legislative assembly sometimes sits until late. It sat until after eleven o'clock the night I spoke to Unifarm, and I went by Air Canada instead of taking DOT and the plane was an hour late.

● (1450)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Vegreville has a supplementary question. He will be recognized by the Chair, but I would point out to hon. members that only five minutes are left before the end of the question period. If hon. members insist on having two, three or more supplementaries on every question, we will get into trouble.

Mr. Mazankowski: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I am not interested in what the Minister of Agriculture was doing with the Minister of Agriculture of the province of Alberta until two o'clock in the morning. I am simply asking for an answer to the question I posed. The Minister of Agriculture of the province of Alberta submitted to the federal Minister of Agriculture a request that the federal government make a cash payment of up to $4 per acre and share the cost of the transportation program. My simple question is whether the Minister of Agriculture is prepared to contribute in any way, shape or form with respect to an acreage payment as was requested by the provincial Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, to clarify one thing that I said earlier, may I point out that it was twenty minutes to four, Ottawa time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: I want to point out that this is a very serious issue. The Minister of Agriculture of Alberta did make some modifications in his request and unless he wants to make those public I will not do so at this time. But may I say that we are considering those modifications at present and I hope a decision will be made. I hope the acreage payment is different from what he first stated, if that is what the hon. member wants to know.

OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL—SIZE AND THROUGHPUT OF POSSIBLE NORTHERN ROUTE LINE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who has indicated that he is considering a choice between a pipeline from Sarnia going east with a capacity of 500,000 barrels a day and probably carrying 250,000 barrels a day and a more northern pipeline which would take two more years to complete. What is the size and volume contemplated with regard to this northern pipeline?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the same volume would apply in each of the three cases, a possible early throughput of 250,000 barrels a day up to a capacity of 500,000.

Mr. Stanfield: In the circumstances, what would be the possible reason for subjecting the people of Quebec and the Atlantic provinces to two more years of uncertainty with regard to supply? What possible justification would there be for this if there is no increase in volume involved?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The question is whether it would be desirable at this point to seek an all-Canadian route for additional pipeline throughput in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FISHERIES

PACIFIC HALIBUT—SUGGESTED SECURING OF CONSERVATION AGREEMENT THAT WILL INCLUDE RUSSIA AND SOUTH KOREA

Mr. Ed Nelson (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the deep concern of the west coast halibut fishermen over the excessive taking of halibut, not only by Japan but also by other nations which are not signatories to the Norpac agreement, will the minister assure the House that Canada will make every effort to secure an international agreement that will include such nations as South Korea and the U.S.S.R.?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have been advised that an agreement has now been reached with the Japanese that affords substantial protection to halibut stocks in the areas in question in the Bering Sea. My department, in conjunction with the Department of Fisheries, will be in a position to release the details in a few days. We are carrying on discussions with the U.S.S.R. and South Korea along similar lines.

Mr. Nelson: My supplementary is for the Minister of the Fisheries. Can the minister assure the House that similar restrictive quotas, such as those recently placed on the Bering Sea halibut fishery, will not be extended to the fishing grounds in the Gulf of Alaska?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I think I can give the House that assurance.

PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES

NATURE OF APPOINTMENTS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and it is in relation to the order in council he tabled earlier today. In view of his often declared intention to rotate parliamentary secretaries to recognize and reward talent and to promote those who are able, and in view of the fact that the 17 names he tabled today are identical, with the exception of one addition of a person who will share a part of the responsibility with another man who is already there, with those of the previous holders of this office, is that an admission that there is no talent to recognize and no one to promote or is it just another flip-flop in the Prime Minister's political philosophy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would care to refer to the press release that will be issued this afternoon—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Oh, oh, what? Surely it is permissible to issue a press release without incurring the wrath of the opposition—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —concerning an order in council which has been tabled in the House previously. If the hon. member wishes to refer to the practice established in the previous parliament, he will see that it was to give parliamentary secretaries what I call double terms so they would be in office for a period of approximately two years. I figured that this would permit the rotation of a large part of our talent within a given parliament—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —and at the same time permit a stint in office which should be long enough to allow a member to acquire good experience as a parliamentary secretary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Since it is a standpat parliamentary situation with a few musical chairs with the same names, does the Prime Minister anticipate a cabinet shuffle with whatever talent he has left prior to the next session?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. Paul's.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Nowlan: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister—

Mr. Hees: No.

Mr. Nowlan: My friend, the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings says "no", but I do think the Prime Minister had half risen from his seat. This is a rather interesting question in view of the precarious state of parliament and the precarious state of many people in it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, as to half rising, I realized that you are a better judge than I of what is a serious question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are running short of time. Perhaps the Chair would be allowed to recognize the hon. member for St. Paul's. We will have to call orders of the day very soon.

TRANSPORT

URBAN TRANSPORTATION—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION TO ESTABLISH DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION AND RAILWAY RELOCATION PROGRAM

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the commitment made on behalf of the government by his colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, at the tri-level conference in Edmonton on October 27 to establish a transport development corporation to co-ordinate research, development, promotion and marketing of urban transportation systems and the commitment to undertake a program of railway relocation in urban centres on a 50 per cent cost-sharing basis, would the minister advise what has happened to the bill to implement these policies which his colleague told the tri-level delegates in Edmonton would be tabled in the House before the middle of November?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the bill is in its final drafting form now and it is likely that it will be introduced in the House.

Mr. Atkey: I have a supplementary question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Given the fantastic growth in the number of public transit users in our urban areas and the resulting strain on existing bus, streetcar, subway and dial-a-bus facilities, would the minister explain his unfulfilled promise made in Edmonton to the tri-level delegates and the millions of public transit users in our cities who cannot await a further throne speech of vague election goodies—

SOCIAL SECURITY

ALLEGED FAILURE TO INCLUDE OVERSEAS SERVICE WITH ARMED FORCES IN QUALIFYING FOR OLD AGE PENSION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and may I say I sent him notice of it. Can he confirm to the House that it is the government's attitude at this time that overseas service with the Canadian Armed Forces cannot be considered as physical presence in Canada for old age security pension purposes, and therefore those who served Canada overseas are placed at a disadvantage compared with those who did not serve overseas?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is not a matter of a government attitude, but of legislation voted by this parliament many years ago, including the Old Age Security Act, and the provisions of this act apply not only to the Armed Forces, but to all persons who leave Canada for any reason whatsoever, whether they be religious organization members, civil servants or private business employees, to name a few.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that several hon. members are crying "shame" about their own legislative record since this act was voted by parliament.

However, Mr. Speaker, regulation 15 of the Old Age Security Act provides that an absence from Canada by members of the Armed Forces in relation with their work will not be considered as an interruption from residence here if they return to Canada after having completed their duties abroad.

As for the other problem, I am studying this matter and I hope to have an answer later on this subject.

[English]

Mr. Whittaker: Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's answer, and having regard to a case currently before his department pertaining to this matter, will he undertake to look into the situation and report back to the House as soon as possible?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: This is exactly what I said a few minutes ago, Mr. Speaker. This is a matter which I had previously considered within the forthcoming review of the Old Age Security Act. However, in view of the opposition we are encountering with respect to the passing of a number of amendments to the Canada Pension Plan, by way of systematic obstruction on the part of some hon. members of the opposition, I wonder at what speed . . .

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have run out of time, but the hon. member for Humber-St. Georges-St. Barbe might be allowed to ask a supplementary, after which I will see the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster.

Canadian National Railways and Air Canada

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. Georges-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the incident recounted by the previous speaker in which a war veteran with six years' service was denied eligibility for the old age security pension because of the denial of Canadian citizenship to him while he was serving his country, would the minister investigate this situation from the standpoint of the War Veterans Act and consult with his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, to ensure that this discrimination is overcome?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Yes, I will, Sir.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROTECTION OF PRIVACY BILL

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the government House leader. In view of the indefinite status of today's business, and in fact of the remaining days of this session, can the minister now clear up this situation by telling us whether the wiretapping bill will be brought forward, and in what form?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, it is my intention, hopefully, to bring forward that bill some time this week. That is my present plan.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, when the minister does get to the point of making a decision on this, will he keep in mind that this party is prepared to sit to see that that bill does go through this session?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As a supplementary question, may I ask the minister if he will also keep in mind the fact that this party is prepared to pass a motion immediately if it is designed to send the bill back to the Senate in the way we sent it to Their Honours the first time?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS AND AIR CANADA

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES AND GUARANTEEING OF SECURITIES AND DEBENTURES

The House resumed, from Monday, January 7, consideration of Bill C-164, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, and motions Nos. 1 and 2 (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, transportation is becoming more important to development in Canada, and as its form changes obviously the attitude of Canadians to transportation will have to progress with the times. Last evening I mentioned that Canadians now have a chance to take a new direction with respect to the development of rail transportation, following the retirement of the President of Canadian National Railways after a long and faithful career devoted to the railroad industry. In appointing a new president I hope the government will keep in mind the opportunities now existing to develop a new direction for Canadian National.

The two amending motions before us suggest that extra money be made available for transportation. One of the sacrifices I suggest is CN Tower Limited, which is building a most prestigious tower surpassing in size and height everything else in the city of Toronto, and the purpose of which is reported to be the installation of an antenna to allow better communications to be undertaken by Canadian National.

I am in agreement with those who say that the fundamental responsibility of Canadian National is to operate transportation facilities, and that less attention should be paid to the fringe elements which, rightly or wrongly, Canadian National has accumulated in its portfolio over the years. As a matter of fact, the only changes made in the transportation system have been disadvantageous. We are now providing service to fewer rail passengers and will be encountering immediate difficulties in transporting freight. Allowing Canadian National to continue expenditures in fields other than transportation is not in the interests of transportation as it should develop in Canada within the next decade.

The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) has just mentioned the fact that Canadian National has been operating two trains out of Toronto one minute apart. If there is anything more idiotic than that, I have yet to hear of it. It might be more advantageous to use two engines and twice as many cars in one train. We do not use one engine with ten boxcars on a freight train, and then five minutes later send out another train with as many boxcars. We have used as many as five engines and 220 boxcars. It seems to me that this would be the logical way to operate a passenger service. The discussions that have taken place have amply demonstrated that the management of Canadian National is not seriously considering the problems that we have with transportation and is not doing anything about them.

It is interesting to note that a number of hon. members have voted for a safety report that was specially commissioned. It is also interesting to recall that the former member for Moose Jaw, John Skoberg, continually pointed out that these safety regulations were being violated. Solutions were offered to most of the safety problems encountered by the Canadian National and other railways. These problems are well known; they are certainly well known to the people who work on the railroads. I think they are also known to everyone connected with safety in both the Canadian Safety Association and the provincial associations. Now, we have a study which again indicates that changes have to take place before we can develop a modern, up-to-date and viable transportation facility. It is, therefore, necessary to consider the amendments that are before us in terms of whether they help in providing a transportation facility. It is my opinion that they do not. They may produce some effect on the communication facility, but they do not provide any type of facility that will assist in the transportation arrangements in this nation. One wonders if money saved in that field could be better used in other fields.

I have no quarrel with the Canadian National building the Queen Elizabeth Hotel in Montreal. The station is in the basement and there are complete services in the hotel for the travelling public, some of whom arrive by train. But this parliament allowed the stupid mistake—one that I tried to prevent—of moving the rail facilities from downtown Ottawa. The late Alex Caron and I should probably have our names engraved on the Convention Centre which used to be Union Station because that is all we were able to salvage from the old railway station. If we had trains arriving in downtown Ottawa and downtown Montreal today, we obviously would not be considering STOL aircraft flying from Rockcliffe to Ste. Hélène Island in Montreal in order to provide rapid transit. This would have been provided by rail had the railway station not been moved four or five miles away from the core of Ottawa while the Montreal station remained in the core of the city. It may be to our advantage to keep the downtown core connected by rapid transit and the best way to do that may be to maintain facilities in the core of cities. But the CNR towers in Toronto do not accomplish that; they are not providing that type of facility and there is no indication that the employees of the business offices in the towers will use rail transportation. The railroad is obviously not going to move from Union Station to the CNR tower in Toronto. That is a prestigous office building which involves the investment portfolio of the Canadian National Railways but it does not provide a transportation facility.

If the government is wise in its appointment of a new president for the Canadian National Railways we will be looking at rapid ground transportation into the high Arctic, as well as in the east and in the west, and the provision of transportation to meet the needs of the people of this country, rather than a CNR tower.

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a few brief remarks in support of the amendment presently before this House which was proposed by the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn). It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the fact that this piece of legislation is before us under these particular circumstances, indicates some rather poor administrative and legislative procedures in the government's handling of this important question of the financing of Canada's major Crown corporation.

The major difficulty which gives rise to some of the spirit—and as far as that goes, the basis for the fact that members have found it necessary to make amendments to this bill—is, as the hon. member for Mississauga has pointed out, that the CNR has abandoned to a large extent its primary function. This point has also been made by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) and other members who have preceded me in this debate.

The difficulty in which this House finds itself when discussing this important piece of legislation was precipitated, I suggest with deference, Mr. Speaker, by the unusual and somewhat reprehensible practice followed by the present head of the CTC, when he was a minister in this place, of interrupting the established procedure for the appointment of auditors. We now have the rather ridiculous situation where we have one auditor coming, one auditor going, one auditor gone and two auditors hanging on. We have the firm of Cooper and Lybrands which is going to be entrusted with auditing the CN for the next few years as the result of an amendment proposed by the hon. member for Timiskaming which was accepted in committee and now forms part of the bill. It was a good amendment because it gave a little stability to a precarious situation. At one stage we had a situation where a firm of auditors had been appointed approximately for 40 years, and then were discharged. This made it most difficult to have an annual report submitted because those auditors enjoyed the so-called sanctity of parliamentary approval, while their successors have not received it.

In the last session of this parliament the government introduced the predecessor of this bill, the Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee Act, 1971. That bill covered the financing period from January 1, 1971 to June 30, 1972. The government brought the bill on for second reading on March 6, 1972 and on April 21, 1972 the debate on second reading was adjourned. The government never proceeded with the bill during the life of that parliament. This indicates the respect they must have for this particular piece of legislation.

In this session, Your Honour, the government introduced Bill C-164 on March 19, 1973, which relates to the financing period of January 1, 1973 to June 30, 1974. The only retroactive provision with respect to the year 1972 appears in clause 13, but it is not adequately set out. In effect, we now have a bill covering the CNR and Air Canada financing for the period from January 1, 1971 to June 30, 1974, a 3½ year period. There is a six-months hiatus not covered by the bills that extends from July 1, 1972 to December 31, 1972.

It is obvious that neither the ministry of transport nor the government are treating this legislation with the respect it deserves. It is equally obvious that the financial affairs of CN and Air Canada are controlled by the government alone. The annual financing bill in many respects is a mockery. It is designed to delude the public and its representatives in this House into thinking that they control these two great and important public utilities.

In essence, the CNR has only to give the government a promissory note for whatever hundreds of millions of taxpayers' money it wants. And, if Air Canada wants any money, it can include that sum in the amount on the face of its promissory note. I, therefore, think that Parliament should be more selective in approving and authorizing funds. That, of course, is the spirit and intent behind the amendments proposed by the hon. member for Mississauga.

It is obvious that CNR has neglected its primary function, that of moving goods and services efficiently. Canadian National, in particular, needs to modernize its transportation capabilities. The current energy crisis has shown that in this country we are not fully capable of coping with this situation from the point of view of transportation. I am sure that is apparent to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). Unfortunately, the situation of CN has become so critical that nothing can be done over the short term. Ironically, the energy crisis may bring about the development and improvement of the Canadian National system. This sort of thing appears to be happening in the United States. According to a recent article in the Wall Street Journal, the energy crisis will cause an extended use of Amtrack. Clearly, it is in the interest of the United States to improve the capability of its railways, and that system is an experiment in that direction. What is Canada doing?

Both the present Minister of Transport and his predecessor in office have said repeatedly that the CN financial structure, as well as transport policies, are in desperate need of revision and modernization. The fact that the schedule of the Rapido train was changed without the knowledge of the Minister of Transport shows that there is a lack of direction with regard to that major utility. The fact that the President of Air Canada did not know about the proposed airport head tax until he read about it in the newspapers indicates a lack of consultation. It is obvious to anyone speaking to top executives of Air Canada, as well as other air line and CN employees, that there are morale problems. That this situation has been allowed to develop is an indictment of this government.

The situation was much the same under the former minister of transport. In March, 1972, as recorded at page 808 of Hansard, he said:

> I agree with the claim that a reorganized structure is necessary in order that members and the country generally can obtain more information, and obtain it more easily, about all aspects of transportation. With this objective in mind, I propose to bring before the House in the next session three important pieces of legislation on which work is proceeding at the present time.

Remember, that was said in March, 1972. I continue:

> The first of those is a bill designed to reconstitute Air Canada as a separate Crown corporation, thus divorcing it, as it were, from the CNR. I will also introduce a Canadian National Railways revision act and a companion piece of legislation covering amendments to the Railway Act. Hon. members will know how involved and far reaching these changes are; they have been asking for them for the last two or three years.

Following the commitment given by the former minister of transport, the present minister has been making announcements and promises. Unfortunately, there has not been action. The minister knows how desirable it is to move passengers quickly and efficiently between major eastern Canadian cities and other centres. I suggest, in all seriousness, that it would be sensible to do as the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) suggested last night, divert some of the funds slated for the airport at Pickering and for the STOL experiment, to the Canadian National, in order to enable the railway to construct a modern and efficient roadbed which would permit passengers and goods to be moved at speeds between 100 and 125 miles per hour from one eastern Canadian city to another. This would be of great benefit to us all. Professor Lukasiewicz of Carleton University has suggested that the standard of Canadian transportation lags very badly behind that of other modern countries in the world. While modern western industrial nations are placing increasing emphasis on improving their public transport systems, Canada is doing the reverse.

Canadian National Railways, as the hon. member for Mississauga suggested yesterday, is entering the hotel business to an ever increasing extent. In addition, it is acquiring expensive real estate, building a tower, and is involved in 38 subsidiary enterprises some of which are not related to, or collateral to except under the loosest definitions, the business of transport by rail. The company is more interested in doing these things than in fulfilling the kind of role which Canadians have a right to expect it to fulfil.

Britain at present is testing an electric train, or a diesel electric train which can go 130 miles an hour. Research and development in the Canadian National company in this area has been pitiful, as is evident if one looks at the work entitled "Institutionalization of Canadian Rail Obsolescence", by Professor Lukasiewicz.

It was apparent, as the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) suggested, that officials of Canadian National and Air Canada were not overly frank with the committee. They were reluctant to tell us of the duties of top management officials, although the committee did learn about collateral ventures in which the railway was engaged. Information which the committee justifiably required was not always forthcoming. In examining the basis on which the officials of these companies had refused to divulge information, I learned that a similar problem had arisen in the U.K. in connection with select committees. In this may I read from May's Eighteenth Edition, page 654. This paragraph deals with "select committee on nationalized industries" and reads:

> A demand for some new parliamentary machinery to scrutinize the activities of those industries and services transferred to public ownership after the second world war . . .

There is little difference between a nationalized industry in the U.K. and a Canadian Crown corporation such as Air Canada or the CNR. Although I cannot quote in detail reports regarding the activities of the committee in question, it is said on page 655:

> For the first decade of its existence the Committee investigated on average one nationalized industry each session. In 1966-67 the membership of the Committee was increased and since then the Committee has conducted its enquiries by means of sub-committees either examining two subjects concurrently or else separate aspects of one industry.

If it were permitted under the rules, we should make an effort to follow this practice and procedure in the Canadian parliament, so that Crown agencies such as Air Canada and the CNR could be more accountable to the public. It is obvious from the committee proceedings that the trend is for the bureaucrats in these Crown corporations to proceed further and further away from their primary roles. It must be obvious at this time that the people of Canada have a right to expect better performance from their major Crown corporations. When answering a question today, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) made reference to the fact that Air Canada was an hour late. Everyone laughed because this is what we have come to expect.

If we look at the record of the scheduling of Canadian National Railways, we see that it is a terrible record wreck. Most of the time they will not even guarantee that a passenger will arrive at a particular time. It appears their attitude is they will sell someone a ticket and he will have to take his chances on when he will get there. Canadians have a right to expect something better than that.

With regard to the need for secrecy as to what these Crown corporations are doing, the activities of their main executive officers, how much they are paid, on what basis they were appointed and so on, this is something the people of Canada are interested in knowing. To say that divulging this information would somehow prejudice the operations of these enterprises is patently ridiculous. If they are of any value, they should be paid the going rate. If they are paid something less than that or are merely redundant and have positions that are not necessary for the operations of Air Canada or CNR, they should be removed.

It would be very interesting for the committee and the House of Commons to know on what basis the continuation of the present situation exists whereby Air Canada and CNR are still intertwined in their directorship. It would be interesting to know why this venture into the Canadian aerospace industry was initiated by the officials of Air Canada. It would be interesting to check further into the Wardair situation. Each time members of this House attempted in Committee to find out why these things were done, whose idea it was, whether guidance was given from the minister or on what particular basis the directors or officials proceeded, we were told, as the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) said, that the confidentiality of the matter precluded answering this type of question.

As far as CNR is concerned, I do not see why it should be permitted to continue to expect the people of Canada to provide funds for ventures like the CN tower until it has decided to proceed with its primary role of moving people and freight for the benefit of Canadians. There was never a time in this country when commodities were in such short supply in various parts of the nation. We have a feed grain shortage in eastern Canada. The British Columbia apple industry and lumber industry are cramped because of a lack of adequate rail facilities. The problems involved in moving wheat are well known.

I had a little difficulty last night following the logic of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). I do not want to misquote him. I think he said that CN wanted to build this tower because CP has one in Calgary. He pointed out that he did not think this was necessarily a good thing because the customers of CP had to pay for it. If it is not a good thing for CP, I fail to see why it should be a good thing for CN, even though it is a Crown corporation.

In any event, it seems clear that the principles involved in the amendments of the hon. member for Mississauga deserve support by all members of this House for the simple reason they are an indication that parliament is master of the activities of CNR and Air Canada. It would indicate the parliament of Canada does not approve of so much emphasis being placed on collateral activities such as hotels, towers and this type of thing, the cost of which should be scrutinized and deleted from the estimates for the calendar year 1973. Let these projects be financed, if they are necessary strictly from internal earnings. The fact that this direction is given by Parliament will be an indication to the officials of CNR that parliament is disturbed, and rightly so, about their activities in fields not directly related to transport. It should be a warning to Mr. MacMillan who indicated that intermodal methodology of handling business is a good thing. I do not know what he meant exactly by "intermodal methodology," but that is what he said in one of his answers in committee. As far as the Canadian parliament is concerned, intermodal methodology by C.N.R. should be confined to moving freight and moving people, not building towers and hotels.

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I spoke in the debate when this bill was before the House for second reading on April 13. At that time I referred to the bill as an exercise in futility and an affront to this parliament. Nothing that has transpired since that time has altered my opinion of the bill. In fact, events since that date have served to buttress my opinion and reaffirm my conviction that this government, as it does from time with the CNR financing bill, is again playing games with this House.

This bill is a ridiculous exercise. I hesitated to speak on it again because I have spoken so often on similar bills over the past five years that I am beginning to wonder if there is any way of getting through to this government. I thought I would try once more to convince the government they should at least heed some of the advice of their own cabinet ministers who have said over and over again that this is a bad form of legislation, that there is no proper control over the financing of these two corporations and a new method of financing should be introduced. The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) read some statements by previous Ministers of Transport and the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) promising that legislation would be forthcoming to provide financing for these two Crown corporations in such a way that parliament would have some control over their spending, which in aggregate has been hundreds of millions of dollars every year.

This is a good time to look at the history of these financing bills. I say that because whether we agree wholeheartedly with the principle of the amendments, it is simply to bring before this House the fact that CN and Air Canada have grown beyond parliament. They have gone beyond the priorities that were set for them when they were formed many years ago. They have certainly gone beyond the priorities established for them in the National Transportation Act. It is time to examine what has happened since Bill C-164 was introduced to determine to what extent parliament is being bypassed by CNR and Air Canada.

Members on both sides have heard the comments made in the House by various ministers that new legislation would be brought down. They have attended meetings of the committee and heard witnesses dodge questions which were put to them, withhold complete answers, hide behind the cloak of confidentiality and in other ways avoid giving true answers to members of parliament. The presence on the order paper of amendments of the type we are considering is a good reflection of what went on in committee, and the way members on this side feel about the type of financing bill we are being asked to pass.

Bill C-164 was given first reading on March 19, and second reading on April 13 and 16. Twelve speakers took part in the debate at that time. Yet despite the government's assertions that this is an important piece of legislation the bill was set aside for six months and was not considered again until October 18 at which time there were five days of debate during which 46 speakers took part. Surely, we cannot accept the contention of the government that we have been delaying important legislation when 46 members feel obliged to say something about the operations of the two corporations concerned, as, of course, they are entitled to do.

Once the bill went to committee, it was handled very expeditiously in my opinion. The committee met on November 8, held 12 sittings and heard a number of witnesses. It reported back on December 20. I have described the bill as an exercise in futility but I would modify that opinion to this extent—it is an excellent vehicle for securing the attendance of officials of the CN and Air Canada before the committee. It gave us an opportunity to put questions to them which we had raised without success in the House. On each occasion the minister had sidetracked them in the usual way by saying he would take them up with the CN or Air Canada.

Perhaps the best witness I can call in support of my view that we are being asked to conduct an exercise in futility is the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) who also appeared before the committee. Someone asked him directly why the bill was necessary. He said, in effect, that if the bill were not passed the CN and Air Canada would have to borrow money on the commercial market and pay more for it. After all, the legislation before us is not necessary to enable those companies to borrow money. They already have that power under existing statutes. The minister added that the bill was necessary, too, because it gave parliament control over the appointment of auditors. One of my hon. friends has shown how little control parliament does, in fact, exercise over the appointment of auditors. The minister himself admitted that this appointment to the result of a cabinet decision taken without consultation and slipped into the bill for approval by parliament later. This is the way in which the government effectively bypasses the section of the act which says parliament must appoint the auditor each year.

The frustration which boils up regularly in this chamber is nothing new. It appears every time a financing bill comes before the House. It is felt not only by members of the opposition. Objection to this type of financing is also taken by cabinet ministers, by a previous minister of transport and by other responsible members of the government. I recall questions being directed to the present Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson), then Minister of Transport, when one of these bills was before the House back in 1971. We were complaining about the fact that so many of the expenditures outlined in the bill had already been made. Since there was nothing we could do about them, what was the point of discussing them?

On this point, I should like to quote from the committee report, issue No. 1. of the third session of the 28th Parliament. We were questioning the Minister of Transport of that day about the desirability of this type of legislation. He said:

This is really to permit them (the CNR) during 1971 to cover commitments made prior to that time.

He went on to say:

It is not an entirely satisfactory system from the standpoint of the committee or I may say from the standpoint of the government. I have been saying to both these corporations that they should really adopt a further forward forecasting mechanism and I have been trying to get both of them on a five-year forecasting period . . . As I say, I agree with you that it is not a very satisfactory way of doing things because in a sense we are really approving something of which a good deal has already been done.

Later, I asked the minister a further question, to which he replied:

I do not want to take the responsibility for something which has been embedded in the system for decades, really, but nevertheless it is something which in my judgment we ought to get rid of or improve in some way so that we do not find ourselves in this kind of situation involving, in a way, an after-the-fact judgment.

This is what we have been complaining about. What is the point of spending days and weeks questioning officials in committee when, in fact, the money has all been spent and there is nothing one can do about it? Yet despite the views expressed by the then Minister of Transport and the promises he made in the House, nothing has been done to change the situation.

When the present bill was before the committee, I questioned the Minister of Finance about this method of financing. As members will see if they turn to issue No. 19 of the committee proceedings in the first session of the 29th Parliament, I asked him, as reported on page 25, whether he agreed that this was a proper way to finance large corporations. He replied:

No, I think it is not a satisfactory way, Mr. Thomas. I think these bills are important enough to be dealt with expeditiously by Parliament.

In reply to a further question I put to him, the Minister of Finance said:

I agree with Mr. Thomas, Mr. Chairman. I think we have to develop some more permanent mechanism for the financing of these two corporations while allowing for parliamentary control either by way of the Department of Transport estimates or through some other mechanism. I agree this is not a satisfactory procedure.

I do not know what further evidence the government needs. If they will not listen to us on this side of the House complaining that parliament is being bypassed or ignored, surely they will listen to the brains on that side. The Minister of Finance, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) all agree that this is bad legislation, that parliament has been bypassed. Since they continue to bring in the same type of legislation, hon. members should not wonder why I claim that the government is deliberately mocking this House and affronting our intelligence. This is the kind of thing that leads to amendments of this nature.

There is a feeling among members of parliament that the CNR and Air Canada are going on in their own merry way and have forgotten the primary purpose of their incorporation. The CN was designed to run a railway. Air Canada was designed to fly aeroplanes. Yet we have no control over these corporations or can give them no direction as to how they spend their money, so naturally we should not be prepared to accept this kind of legislation. In fact, I contend that if parliament is to retain any control over the spending of these two corporations, some definite changes must be made in the financing of CN and Air Canada. I suggest that much of the mess we are in now began with the National Transportation Act of 1967. I was not here at that time, but I understand what parliament was trying to do. Although the act was viable and satisfactory in the conditions prevailing at that time, it is becoming more obvious every day that the conditions which applied in 1967 no longer apply today.

When the act was passed in 1967, it was felt that transportation should be placed on a profit making basis, or at least on a compensatory basis. The railways were instructed to make a profit, and this accounts for some of the difficulties today. Members of this House rise and fire broadsides at the CN, but in all honesty the CN is only doing what the House instructed it to do by statute. As a result, we now face an almost insurmountable obstacle: we have given the CN instructions to do just what it is doing today. We have told CN to go out and make money and not to worry about giving service.

I suggest that we are not going to change the situation by lambasting the CNR and Air Canada. Let us put the blame where it belongs, that is on ministers who have said that the whole set-up at the moment is wrong. Let them back up their words by bringing in legislation to correct the situation. I suggest they start by bringing in amendments to the National Transportation Act, which would provide some method whereby the government could tell CN and Air Canada just what their priorities are, and that we do not want them building hotels and towers until and unless they provide a proper freight and passenger train service in this country.

There are many priorities that some body should be laying down for both the CNR and Air Canada. I do not want to go into the details here since I do not have the time, but speakers both today and previously have mentioned the fact that there have to be massive infusions of capital into the CN to improve freight services in this country. Reference has been made to the present ridiculous situation where we are unable to get sufficient boxcars to move our wheat or to move our feed grains. There is a shortage of cars to move potash and a shortage of cars to move coal. Indeed, there is a general shortage of boxcars. Surely in such a situation, instead of worrying about hotels and towers in the air, the CN should be doing something to correct this shortage of rolling stock.

We have also heard about skimping on money they have spent on the maintenance of road beds, and about how crews have been cut down to the point where there is not proper supervision, as a result of which more and more accidents are occurring than ever before. The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) referred to a report which outlined some of the problem areas about which he has been warning this House for years. For example, just last week there were two serious derailments in New Brunswick. Fortunately, freight trains were involved and there was no loss of life, but there was a tremendous dollar loss. I shudder to think what might have happened had passenger trains had been passing over this roadbed. Although I have not yet seen the report on this accident, it appears that this was a case of too heavy traffic passing over the rails which the roadbed could not handle, so it gave way. Instead of spending money on hotels and towers, the CN should do something now in terms of facing up to the tremendous influx of passengers they will have to haul over the next five years as a result of the energy crisis.

Before I sit down I should like, in the limited time I have, to mention another area that has caused me a great deal of concern. This is a grey area that has been very frustrating. Every time I try to get an answer to questions we have the old game of shuffle ball, going from the Minister of Transport to the railways, then back to the minister, and so on back and forth. I am referring to the matter of pensions. This has been an ongoing grievance with the unions, rightly or wrongly—and I am not taking sides. However, what I am saying is that there must be an honest and frank appraisal of the CN pension scheme. I admit that this appraisal is now underway and we are expecting to have Judge Hall's report soon. But I certainly hope that that report will not be the end of the line. While the pension proposal that has been agreed on is a start in the right direction, it is certainly not the ultimate.

When we were discussing pensions in the committee two or three years ago, I was one of those who opposed the suggestion that pensions be made part of the bargaining package. What I have seen since then has confirmed my opinion that we made a grave mistake in suggesting that pensions be included in the bargaining package, and I should like to tell the House why I say that. When you deal with a group of employees whose ages extend from 17 to 65 you find a great difference of opinion existing among those employees. As far as the young men are concerned, they think of bills they have to pay today and tomorrow and are interested in wage increases and hours of work. They think of a pension at age 65 as something away in the future and are not interested in it. On the other hand, employees in their fifties are thinking about retirement. Therefore you find a conflict of interest, and this is apparent with the pension proposals that have been agreed upon. The younger members are quite happy with it, whereas anyone who has been employed prior to 1956 is very unhappy and feels he has been cheated. This is what happens when you bargain for a mixed group such as this.

I do not know what the answer is. We have allowed pensions to become part of the bargaining process, and since the precedent has been established I doubt we can change the situation now. But this is one area in which the government should give direction to the CNR so that the whole pension mess will be tidied up.

In conclusion, I should like to say a few words on behalf of those ex-employees of the CN who have no one to speak for them. I refer to employees who have gone on pension and are no longer union members. These people have been continually overlooked, except of course for any representations made by individual members of the House. Now is the time when the government should tell the CNR it has a moral obligation to these people. Let us know how much is needed to bring their pensions up to a level similar to that of public service employees. If we have to find funds to do this, let us find them, but let us not have the CNR hide behind this cloak of not having the money to do it. It is for these reasons I think the amendments are good. They put into question the whole direction of CNR policy, and I hope members of the House will give them serious consideration.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I have sympathy for the idea behind this amendment, although I doubt that I will in the final analysis support it.

An hon. Member: Oh, come on.

Mr. Gleave: Perhaps I can be persuaded. The idea behind the amendment is that the first concern of the railroad, particularly the CNR, should be to serve Canada as a transportation system. I suggest this is a perfectly sound and useful argument. I do not know the purpose of building this tower in Toronto. It may be some kind of a prestige project so that the CNR will have the tallest building with the needle on top. It will only occupy that position of prestige until someone or some corporation somewhere decides to build a tower with a needle on top 30 feet higher. The CNR will have this sort of thing going for it, which I suppose is something, but I know a great number of people who are dependent on rail transportation, including those in industry, business and farming who will not be impressed at all by the fact that the CNR has the tallest building in Toronto. I know a great many men and women employed by the CNR who have the rather quaint idea that pensions and wages are more important than having the tallest building in the city of Toronto.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gleave: A number of people in those categories communicate with me by telegram and by letter quite regularly regarding their concern about pensions. I received copies of two telegrams recently, one directed to the Chairman of the Standing Committee of the House of Commons on Transport and Communications. This telegram is signed by Mr. H. K. Beckett, Chairman of the Biggar Railway Employees Association, in which he states:

> We hereby request your presenting before transport committee suggestion for recommendation by your committee to railway arbitrator Justice Hall that railway pension study of Commissioner Dr. Deutsch not be included in final wage and rules report of Justice Hall.

We suggest also you recommend to federal Minister of Labour, Justice Hall, and Dr. Deutsch that no action toward finalizing railway pension issue be taken prior to a hearing before your committee of the associations concerned with the railway pension issue in Canada.

The wage and rules issue under arbitration can then be concluded.

Pension study can be provided necessary time required to do a full report after House reconvenes in February 1974.

Another request I received from the same association suggested that this House continue in session until the reports of Dr. Deutsch and Justice Hall come before this House. Both of these seem to be reasonable requests. These are the types of statements being made by people throughout the country, and they do not have much to do with the building of that tower in Toronto.

Another thing which has come to my attention, and this has been mentioned by previous speakers, is the matter of rolling stock, as related to the transportation of grain and lumber, the real business of the railroad. A question which appeared in Hansard for January 7 at page 9087 is as follows:

How many railway cars designed for hauling grain have been built for Canadian National Railways in the past 12 months?

The answer to that question was none. Here we have a railway which is in the business of moving grain and, along with the CPR, is the sole method of accomplishing this movement. However, no cars have been built in the past 12 months for this purpose. The railway gives the excuse that the Canadian Wheat Board purchased 2,000 grain cars in 1972. As an excuse for doing nothing, they cite the emergency action the Canadian Wheat Board took in 1972 to provide rolling stock. Someone asked whether the railway was considering putting concrete ties or sleepers, as they are called, under the rails. The answer was no, they had no intention of modernizing the system to that extent. The company was also asked how many locomotives it leased, and the reply was that they were leasing a certain number from United States railroads. This is of real concern when we realize we have a rail transportation system under the direction of individuals who have been either unwilling or without the imagination to plan the modernization of these facilities in order to carry out the transportation task required in Canada.

If the government, on behalf of the CNR, brought a request before this House for almost any amount of money to modernize this transportation system, to purchase rolling stock or to purchase or lease locomotives, I am sure there would be no difficulty in getting approval. If the government were to bring forward proposals that would satisfy the questions that have been asked here during the last hour, and during the question period, in respect of the development of a passenger service which would rapidly move people between our large centres of population, such as Toronto, Montreal and the golden triangle, I am sure they would receive the approval of hon. members.

If the company came forward with a proposal for a well-designed system which could rapidly move feed grain into Quebec and the Maritime provinces, where it is needed, I am sure it would get approval for whatever amount of money was needed. If the company asked for money in order to improve its service between Thunder Bay and Vancouver, I am sure there would be no question about giving approval. No one criticized the company when it proposed to double-track the line between Winnipeg and Portage la Prairie. The company has no difficulty in getting approval for this kind of improvement which is essential to the provision of a good transportation system.

Why then do we not have, through the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), who in the final analysis is the responsible minister, a request to this House for the financing that is needed to provide in absolute terms a rail transport facility which can serve the needs of Canadian industry, Canadian business, Canadian farming and Canadian citizens? Why does the Minister of Transport not put such a program before the House instead of waiting around? I have asked the Minister of Transport and the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board if they had assurances that the CPR and the CNR would provide the facilities to move the grain out of western Canada. Their reply was that the CNR and the CPR had given such a commitment. I do not question the ministers' sincerity in the answer they gave me, but if the CNR or the CPR have ever given that commitment, they did not live up to it. There are only 10 million bushels of wheat in Thunder Bay in facilities which have a capacity of 70 million additional bushels.

The same situation exists in Vancouver where there are only three million bushels of wheat. When you know that one boat can take a third of that amount, you realize the nature of the problem. As I said, the responsibility rests with the government. When the Canadian Transport Commission reported a couple of days ago that the safety precautions of the CNR were inadequate, what answer did they get? The Canadian National Railways said that the conclusions reached by the Canadian Transport Commission in its report last week on railway safety were based on outdated figures and did not reflect current conditions. The report is not outdated, Mr. Speaker, and it does reflect current conditions. It is the CNR which is outdated and which does not reflect current conditions. The same is true of the Minister of Transport when he brings this bill before the House.

Many Canadian citizens are getting pretty fed up with this sort of approach. I do not know who is making policy in this country with regard to railroads.

Mr. Stackhouse: The NDP.

Mr. Gleave: I do not know whether it is the CPR or the government. If you read the history of the CPR as it relates to the history of this country, you would find it rather difficult to untangle who was making policy, the CPR or the government. One might have reason to hope that by 1973 the government of Canada might have been able to sort out its responsibilities and to discharge them. I say that this government is not discharging its responsibility to the Canadian people in terms of railway transportation. It is a colossal failure and it stands condemned before the House for the proposals it is putting before us. Any one who sat on the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications and listened to some of the answers we got when we were asking about transport could not help but come to the conclusion that many questions were not being fully answered, that we were not receiving a full picture of the needs of Canadians.

I should like to go back to the safety report and point out that it is a disgrace to ask men to run trains under conditions which the Canadian Transport Commission says are unsafe. By what right do we, the people of Canada who own the railroad, ask men to drive trains at high speeds under conditions which are unsafe? The statement by the CNR management that the CTC's report is out of perspective, with no consideration given to the massive workload imposed on the CNR during the past decade, does not make sense. What do they mean by "massive workload during the last decade"? What do they think the CNR was created for except to carry a massive workload? It was not created as a scenic railway to run across the mountains, thus enabling people to sit in a car with some windows up on top and look at the scenery. It was created to move a massive amount of freight and passengers across the mountains. If those who are responsible for the direction of the CNR have not conveyed their need for facilities to meet the demands of the Canadian economy to the minister responsible, then they have not discharged their responsibility. If the minister responsible, having been informed of these needs, has not acted, then he is not discharging his responsibility.

This country needs somebody like Harry Truman who put up a little placard on his desk which read "the buck stops here". It is about time we had someone who had that kind of courage and that kind of attitude. This applies to the CNR and to the government in the present energy situation. However, I will not discuss the energy situation now because it is not the subject matter of our debate here. I could give you, Mr. Speaker, endless references to the requests that have come to us as members of the necessary service by both railways. These go right down to the local level. I continually receive letters and telephone calls from people in small towns in my constituency who tell me they cannot get a satisfactory express service. Most of them have given up hope of riding a train anyway, but they still hope to get some express service, either by truck or by rail. All too often they are dismayed and disappointed at the type of service they are offered. This is inexcusable.

I do not think anyone now expects a passenger train to stop at every whistle stop as it goes across Canada, but people do expect express to be delivered to the various towns by one means or another. After all, the people who live in those towns order goods which they want delivered, unless we expect to get to the point where everyone will have to get into his own individual truck or car and drive 60 or 70 miles to the nearest main shopping centre to pick up what he needs once or twice a week. That is a possibility. I grew up in the pioneer days in Saskatchewan when you did that. You just sat all winter on the farm, and twice a month hooked up a team to the sleigh and went the ten miles to town. Maybe you took in a load of grain. There, you gathered up groceries and the rest of your needs and hauled them home, then waited for another two weeks. If the concept of the government and of CN is that we should regress to those days, well, it is one way of running a country. It is not very efficient. But it is possible to slow our economy down to that pace.

Sometimes we wonder, considering the answers we get, whether the railroads are really thinking in terms of a modern transportation system, or whether they are really thinking of how little service can be given and still get away with it. I hope that, as a result of this discussion and of the proceedings in the Transport Committee some new ideas will filter down to those responsible for running the CNR and Air Canada. Maybe some of those ideas will even reach those responsible in the government, so that instead of excuses we can have an adequate, working railway transportation system for the people of Canada.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, as an ordinary citizen living on the Prairies, even before I was of voting age, I developed certain ideas about what railways were all about, even the CNR. In those days, the railways were carrying grain from the Prairies to the ports. They were carrying goods to the Prairies, and carrying people out to the coast, as we used to say, or down east.

As a freshman member of parliament I brought some of those preconceived notions into this House with me. I thought railways, and the CNR in particular, had as their prime function railroading and that, in the course of carrying out that function, deficits might be incurred. I had heard, again before I came into this House, that the CNR was frequently required, for national, social and economic reasons, to operate lines which were not otherwise economic, in the interests of Canadian unity. That was fair enough and if, in the course of operating these lines and the main line globally, deficits were incurred then CNR could come back to this House, make its explanation, show that it had managed its affairs properly and ask for further finances in order to continue to serve the nation, carrying goods in, across and out of Canada, and carrying passengers at the same time. I understood this to be a legitimate method of operation.

Then, I began to look at some of the reports that came flying across my desk when I became a parliamentarian who still held those old fashioned notions about what railways were all about. I saw the bills that were coming in, and the reports. For example, late last year the Auditor General's report came across my desk. I was thumbing through it and I noticed that the Canadian National Railways was not one of those Crown corporations which report to parliament and have their books audited by the Auditor General. I also noted on page 187 of the 1972 report, under a heading "Loans to and Investments in Crown Corporations" there is a table which shows the comparable balances at the close of three fiscal years, 1970, 1971 and 1972, of the indebtedness of the Canadian National Railways.

In 1970, there was a total of $2,156,770,000. In 1971, it was $2,361,000,000. It had gone up about $150 million. In 1972, it was $2,590,000,000. I did not even have to make the subtraction, because I found out on page 189 that there was an increase over the previous year in the indebtedness of Canadian National Railways of $229 million, all of which was part of this $2,590,000,000.

This $229 million was itemized on page 189, and I found among other things that there was a loan to Air Canada of $14 million, and then another temporary financing to Air Canada of $14,373,000, making a total of $28 million or, if you like, 10 per cent of this overdraft. So I say to myself that CNR started out being a railroad. It started to borrow money to carry on its railroading business, and then it began to go into the money business itself by lending money to another Crown corporation, Air Canada. This I found very strange. Some of my preconceived notions about what railways were all about began to crumble.

Now, I see Bill C-164. Here, there is reference to railroad property. That seems to be a legitimate requirement for funds. Then, there are funds for branch lines, again a legitimate operation, in the amount of $13 million. There is $31 million for equipment, which does not seem to be very much when you consider all the complaints we have heard about the lack of box cars to carry grain. Then, there is an item for telecommunications which is all right, Mr. Speaker. But then, we come to hotels and the CNR Tower. Here again, we find another type of activity in which the railway has become involved. First of all, it gets into the money lending business. I was talking to a colleague yesterday about this. He showed me an item for interest being paid by Air Canada, and I think it was to the CN, which amounted to something like $20 million a year. This I find most peculiar.

Corporate business in the present day has been known to diversify in order to invest its earnings. This seems to be a legitimate occupation for corporations which have profits. I would like to underline the word "earnings". There are a good number of Canadian corporations which earn more than they need for their normal activities, and so diversify. It is a form of insurance, if you like. It is insurance to help them run their other activities, but I do believe this activity is only justifiable when these are earnings from the principal operating function of a corporation such as the CNR. Let us go back and apply that principle to CN. Does it make sufficient earnings in its principal operation to justify diversifying and cross-insuring its activities? I suggest that it does not, because it seems to come back quite frequently to the Canadian parliament to seek more funds. These are not just funds for operating a railway, but funds for making pie in the sky. I find this very odd. I would rather have meals on wheels than pie in the sky made by the CNR.

I went back to my original ideas about railroads then and I do not think they were all that wrong. The Canadian National was conceived to provide transportation to those parts of Canada not served by the first railway line across the country; a most legitimate operation in the interests of Canadian unity. No one questions that. Members from this side of the House cannot bring forward measures to spend money; this must be done by the government. If the government comes forward with measures to support the legitimate activities of the railway, such as building boxcars, building grain cars and hopper cars, they will get their money quickly. I agree with the remarks made by the member who spoke just before me on this point. Why should we start building castles in the sky?

The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) complained about the emphasis that was being placed on the hotel and meal business by the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn). It was the hon. member for Mississauga who introduced the amendment in order to focus attention on these particular aspects. He knew that other hon. members would be speaking on other aspects of the legitimate business of the railways, and his concern was to focus attention of the activities which were at best remotely related to railroading.

I think the CN must be reminded from time to time, and this is our opportunity to do so, that they have a responsibility to this parliament and that the taxpayer is not going to continue advancing funds for non-railway activities. That is the purpose of this amendment. Surely, there are enough transportation problems for the CN to solve to keep it busy. In solving them, the CN can come to parliament and ask for financing if it should run into financing difficulties, but it must stay with its legitimate activities. We are being asked to approve $14½ million out of a total advance of some $225 million; about 7 per cent of the total is being requested for non-railway activities. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is time we drew the line, that we examined the activities of the CN and directed them to focus their attention on their prime activity.

On the radio this morning I heard a technical officer of the Canadian Transport Commission who was involved in the preparation of the report made on railway safety. From his comments I was surprised and dismayed to learn that Canadian railways, and CN in particular, have reduced thair track inspection standards in the past few years. There used to be a track inspection daily, and from this man's comments I understood that this inspection now takes place four times a week. It has been halved. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, we complain about finding people to do jobs when there are lots of people and lots of jobs to be done. This reduction in track inspection procedures has been made, despite the fact that the track and the roadbed are being asked to carry heavier loads more frequently and at faster speeds. If this does not account for accidents, where are we to look?

Last spring I had occasion to travel home on the CNR. Just to make it real, there was an accident in northern Ontario, so our train had to be diverted to the CPR and go across 300 or 400 miles before rejoining the CN tracks. We were four or five hours late getting to the Lakehead, but I enjoyed the trip and cannot commend it highly enough to any hon. member who wishes to see what this country is all about. In the course of two or three days on the train I talked to various members of the crew and was distressed to find that the service I had been used to was seriously downgraded. I was used to seeing linen, silver and finger bowls on the dining room table. Why not?

I heard comments from American tourists who were most upset because they used to take that train back and forth across Canada for the sheer enjoyment of the good service. I am afraid they did not enjoy that particular trip. While they got the service from the people, because they were faithful servants of the railway, they did not get the service from the railway. It appeared that just before the crew set out on that trip they had been told their jobs were to be downgraded and they could like it or get off. Some of them had put in 30 years service and could not easily find other employment. I visited the chef in the kitchen and the washup crew, the whole lot, and found that these people had been downgraded and their wages correspondingly reduced. This is no way to run a railroad, Mr. Speaker, to downgrade the whole operation.

We find the railroad that was originally set up to carry goods and people back and forth across Canada now engaged in the money lending business, the ultra high rise business and hotel business. It is a bad employer, too, which it has no right to be. A few moments ago the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas) spoke about the pension problem. This is a matter which was brought to my attention soon after I became a member of this parliament. I learned that the pensions paid to railway employees in this country were absolutely disgraceful. We must ensure that this situation is remedied, Mr. Speaker. Meantime, we await with interest the report of Mr. Justice Hall. If it meets the situation of the employees, I assure you I will give it my full support.

● (1640)

In my naïveté, also, I like to think that although there have been a good number of speeches on these amendments, and although there has been repetition about diversification, the proper functioning of the railroad, highrises and so on, these repetitions will persuade members of this House to support these amendments and have non-railways functions removed from this particular part of the bill. These repetitions may well serve the purpose. Perhaps a "once over lightly" touch is good for eggs, but not for railways. Let us hope, at any rate, that some of those who for one reason or another—or for lack of reason—would normally support this bill in its entirety, or this particular clause, will, either because some particular reference has struck home, or as reasonable beings, as railroad users, as the children of railroad users or, finally, as the representatives of retired railroad workers who receive letters complaining about the deplorable pension situation, support this particular amendment.

For these reasons I chose to stand up and make a few comments today in support of these amendments. I did this so that the CN can concentrate once again on its primary purpose, namely, that of moving goods and people across the country, since the railways should serve as a sort of unifying force, and provide, perhaps, certain associated services, but keep off the "pie in the sky" kick.

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, on second reading of this bill I discussed the CN tower in Toronto and suggested that that tower is being built not as a communications project, but as a PR project. Without doubt, the citizens of Toronto did not notice the tower when construction first began. Since then, newspapers in Toronto and newspapers serving other parts of Canada have been publishing photographs showing the height of the tower on such and such a day or in such and such a week. I admit that it is an imposing structure. Indeed, anyone who at the beginning opposed its construction will think it not simply imposing, but browbeating.

We know how difficult it is to resist hoopla. The construction of the CN tower in Toronto is the single largest act of PR hoopla we have seen in this country for quite some time. I do not think CN needs the tower. Actually, CP decided it did not need the tower. Let us not forget that originally the tower was supposed to be a combined project. At any rate, CP felt that it did not need the tower and did not need to spend money on the tower.

I suggest, as I suggested on second reading, that CN had in mind much more than a mere tower when it decided to build that monstrosity. It wanted to swing public opinion in the Toronto region behind the metro centre project, which is the major project in the area, not the tower. The tower is simply the most evident part of the project. It serves as a lever on public opinion. Standing there, it says to the public, "Look at what CN can do for you, in building this tower. It will give you, the citizens of Toronto, the tallest tower in the world." As the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) suggested some time ago, it will be the tallest tower in the world until somebody, somewhere else, builds a taller one.

CN and CP have put a lot of pressure on the city of Toronto to develop the area south of Front Street in the way CN and CP want the area developed, which is not necessarily the way which will serve the interests of the people of Toronto or of the southern Ontario region. That is why I was afraid of the tower and opposed its construction. I felt it would be used as a PR lever; indeed, that is happening today.

In a way, the tower is symbolic of the approach of the CNR to the people of Canada and, indeed, to the members of this House. There are perhaps more shuntings in the CNR approach to parliament than you will find along CNR tracks. Members of this House today have tried to stand up and say how they feel. The railway companies of this country have been making a mockery of the original intentions behind the acts incorporating those railways. Time and time again, we have had reason to say that the interests of the people of this country have been let down. We speak of Canadian National Railways. Let us look at that name. We all know of the wag who once said that the Holy Roman Empire was neither holy, nor Roman, nor an empire. It is beginning to look as if the CNR is not going to be a national railway, in the sense in which that term was originally used.

It is not too often that we, in this House, stand up and compliment bodies set up by this House for their decisions. I was pleased to receive today, as I am sure other hon. members were, the report of the Railway Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission in the matter of Section 260 of the Railway Act, and in the matter of the applications by the CNR and CPR for the discontinuance of certain passenger services across Canada. Certain regions need to be served by the railways in their passenger carrying capacity. Despite this obvious need, the railways have had the gall and audacity to apply for suppression of these services. I am, therefore, pleased to read part of the decision and order of the Railway Transport Committee. It felt that there was an overriding claim on the part of the public, a claim overriding the specific and special interests of the railways. After taking into consideration the major arguments of the railways, the committee decided to turn down the application.

May I read into the record the last paragraph of the decision of the committee, as follows:

> Many of the services under consideration in this Decision carry relatively few people, and, in all cases, these services operate at a level well below their capacity. This is primarily because of the marked preference of the travelling public for the private automobile, and also because, in most instances, alternative means of public transport are available. But—

This is a very important "but".

—in considering the future transportation needs of the areas affected at this time, the Committee must take into account the probability of future changes in established travel patterns in Canada because of the looming energy crisis, and must see how change affects the demand for the services under review in this Decision, before considering the discontinuance of any of them. The Committee determines that these services should not be discontinued.

● (1650)

At long last, we are beginning to see some light at the end of the tunnel. The committee has been made painfully aware of the situation which looms before us. It calls it the "looming energy crisis". It is obvious to the committee, as indeed it should be obvious to the railways and as it is certainly obvious to most thinking people in Canada, that one of the most economical ways in money terms to transport passengers is by railway.

I know many members have travelled to other parts of the world, certainly to Europe. They have admired, and possibly even envied, the rail service offered to the people of Britain, Germany, the Netherlands and so on. If you stand in the station of Frankfurt, you will see hundreds, indeed thousands of people filing through that station, not just at rush hour, but at all times of the day. One thing that impresses most of us in this House about European railways is the scheduling. There are trains leaving for all parts at almost all times of the day. I wish to point out that it is not the presence of the passengers that causes the schedule to be so extensive, but the other way around. The fact that the schedule is extensive and does provide service attracts passengers to the railways.

One of the gambits the railways have used over the past few years in Canada to prove to this House that railway operations are not profitable has been to point out that they are not used by the Canadian public. One of the ways they have made apparent the railways are not being used has been by simply driving people away from using their services. In major ways, they have done this by cancelling trains, cancelling services, by making the simple act of getting a ticket at a railway station extremely frustrating or making the problem of getting from the railway station to one's home a difficult one, if not impossible.

I know that members of this House have had the good fortune of going to Montreal, but the misfortune of landing back at the Ottawa railway station. Just the other night I came back from Montreal along with a fair number of passengers. I had to wait outside the CN station in the cold for well over half an hour around the hour of midnight to be transported from the railway station to my home by taxi. I was not alone. A half hour after the train arrived, there were still 22 people waiting for a taxi. The reason the taxi service is so bad is there is a franchise or monopoly handed out by CNR to a particular service in this city. I must say the service is abysmal. It is almost as abysmal as the service we get at the airport here in Ottawa.

Mr. Gleave: That bad?

[Mr. Harney.]

Mr. Harney: I wish to point out to the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) that it is terrible.

Mr. Basford: City Council just turned down a request for 100 more taxis.

Mr. Stackhouse: We need more free enterprise competition.

Mr. Harney: The hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. Stackhouse), the constituency cheek by jowel to mine, says we need more free enterprise competition. At that level, by all means. I agree with him. When it comes to running taxis, we socialists have no intention of taking them over.

Mr. Paproski: That's a surprise.

Mr. Harney: I am simply trying to underline the point that in almost every way the railways are trying to chase people away from their services in order to prove that people do not want them. I doubt whether that is truly the case. I am convinced the people of Canada would be more than willing to use the railways if they provided adequate service.

A few days ago it was reported in the Globe and Mail that a study which had been made indicated that a rapid transit service could be provided from the centre of the city of Toronto to a point 20 miles east at a cost of approximately $100 million. That may sound like a staggering amount of money, but when you consider that this $100 million is for the total cost including setting up new grade levels, new approaches, building stations, refurbishing the tracks, setting up a new signals system, providing for rolling stock and so on, you discover that is not an awful lot of money. Twenty miles for $100 million is really quite cheap when you consider that expressways cost $24 million per mile. To build the same expressway facilities over the 20 mile stretch would, by simple multiplication, cost $480 million. The service provided by the expressway system may not be as fast, efficient or safe as that provided by local surface rail service.

The same article pointed out that CNR was not necessarily ready to make the right of way available for mass urban transit because it had other priorities to consider. It had priorities given to it by the statutes of this parliament and other priorities established over the years. The first priority was intercity travel. The second priority was the carrying of industrial freight, that is service to industry. Somewhere down at the bottom of the pile there was perhaps a priority, or at least a notion, which would indicate the railway had some duty toward the transportation needs of our urban populations.

If that is the case, I would like to ask where in the statutes of this country we will find the priority for real estate. I do not think we will find it. Originally, it was understood that hotels could be built to service the public travelling on the railways. However, as the railways are proud to point out, there are now very few people travelling on them. What justifies their massive interest in real estate? I suggest the very least we can do is re-inspect the priorities we have given to the railways and tell them there is indeed a very real need for the use of their tracks, rights of way facilities, station facilities and so on by the urban travelling public in this country.

As I said a while ago, I was delighted to read the line in the transport committee report about the looming energy crisis. It should be obvious to even a beginner in high school that one of the cheapest ways to transport people over distances, long or short, is by rail, whether you calculate it in terms of kilo-calories per passenger mile or any other way.

Mr. Benjamin: How do you spell that?

Mr. Harney: M-i-l-e. There is no doubt that the most efficient use we can make of energy when it comes to transportation is through rail traffic.

● (1700)

Another aspect of energy conservation occurs to me. We shall need to decide very soon how the fossil fuel supply in our possession can best be used. It is obvious there are certain very inefficient ways of using it; for example, using fossil fuels, oil, let us say, to produce thermal electricity which has an end use of heating buildings is terribly inefficient. There is scarcely a thermoelectric plant which can produce electricity at an efficiency greater than 40 per cent. What we should try to do, therefore, is use fossil fuels for purposes for which other fuels are not practicable. Certain types of transportation vehicles must carry their own fuel along with them; long distance traffic could not be tied to hydroelectric wires, and neither could automobiles. Trains, on the other hand, can operate electrically with great success.

Again, if we turn to the European example we find they have managed to electrify thousands of miles of railway line. Here in Canada I doubt whether there are any lines which operate electrically. This was not always the case. We used to have electric trains, and I do not mean toy trains, either. A few years ago I was living in the City of Guelph, and at that time they were just about to extend highway 401 so it would reach Guelph. I remember saying to an old resident: Isn't it great to know that as soon as they build the 401 to Guelph you will be able to get to Toronto in an hour or an hour and ten minutes? He said: Maybe, but 50 years ago we could get there in 55 minutes. And how did he do it? By means of the electric railway which served Guelph, Barrie and other places on the line. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) says a commuter rail service is to be established between Richmond Hill and Toronto. I can, myself, remember taking a train between Quebec City and St. Anne de Beaupre. It was an electric train, a very good, fast train and I am sure it made very efficient use of the hydroelectric power produced in the area.

People have been talking lately about developing rail service in this country, particularly for rapid transit use, and there has been a tendency to talk in Flash Gordon terms about the facilities we ought to install. The Prime Minister of Ontario has proposed an elevated linear-motored railway of European design for Toronto. The design has not really been tested yet, so there is a proposal to test it at the CN Exhibition within a year or so. All kinds of machines are tested on exhibition grounds. Ferris wheels and roller coasters are tested there and they work very well, but I doubt that the context of an exhibition will give us any real opportunity to test the workability of this futuristic and questionable design. On the other hand, there is much experience from years past of the efficient use of light rail traffic, and we do not need to go very far to re-establish the use of this kind of traffic along rights of way which serve urban populations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTION TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKinnon)—Urban Affairs; the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez)—Immigration; the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall)—Labour conditions.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS AND AIR CANADA

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES AND GUARANTEEING OF SECURITIES AND DEBENTURES

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-164, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways system and Air Canada for the period from the 1st day of January, 1973, to the 30th day of June, 1974, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company and certain debentures to be issued by Air Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, and motions Nos. 1 and 2 (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, the key word in this debate is surely the word "priorities". The question is not whether the railroad should be erecting and maintaining hotels; it is not whether the railroad should be erecting and operating a communications tower. The question is this: what does the railroad value most? What does it regard as its chief social obligation? It is clear from the debate which has taken place that hon. members across this country from one coast to another, the representatives of the people, are not convinced that this national railway is putting people first. It is clear that service to the people does not enjoy the priority we expect it to be given. Instead, we find the thinking of the executives of the CN is dominated by what might be called a "monumentality"; it is striving to erect a monument to the system itself rather than using available resources to develop the services which our society urgently needs.

As one thinks of what the spokesmen for the railway had to say when defending the construction project one is reminded of the movie, starring Charlie Chaplin a generation ago, called "The Great Dictator". Chaplin and Jack Oakie played the parts of Hitler and Mussolini and in one scene they were seated in two adjacent barber chairs. First one jacked up his chair, and then the other, until finally each of them was hitting the ceiling. We get the impression that executives are motivated by a desire to erect a building higher than those possessed by their rivals. What we are criticizing is not the construction of a hotel or a communications tower but, rather, projects which take first claim on the resources of the railway company at a time when the primary need is the service of the people, particularly the improvement and introduction of rapid transport facilities in major urban areas such as Metropolitan Toronto.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stackhouse: It is more in the interest of the ordinary person in Toronto that the rights-of-way entering into the heart of this massive metropolitan area be used for rapid public transit than resources be committed to some tourist attraction. The proposed tower may become an interesting construction which many visitors to the city will enjoy seeing; they may derive a certain pleasure from eating pie in the sky in a revolving restaurant a thousand feet above ground, but the real need of the working people is for efficient, rapid transit within their financial capacity.

Within the Toronto area there is mile after mile of line which could be used in this fashion. Indeed, a report of the CNR recently issued indicated it was possible to adapt a right-of-way for rapid transit purposes, connecting Toronto Union Station and Pickering, a distance of 20 miles, at a total cost of only $100 million. This averages out at $5 million per mile, in contrast to the $24 million per mile proposed for the Scarborough expressway. If this project is feasible, and according to the research study made by the CNR it is, surely it is incumbent upon all authorities concerned, including the railroads, the federal government and the local authorities, to give such construction priority. That is the purpose of this debate. It is not that we are against anything as much as that we want a reallocation of values. We want a renewal of the policy that puts people first, of the policy that asks what it is that people in this area require most.

What can be said about the needs of the people of metro Toronto can also be said of the needs of people in communities right across this land. One of the things that disturbs me is the lack of initiative being shown by the government in regard to meeting the needs of people in the various urban centres of Canada. For years now the CNR has financed the deficits that have been incurred by the commuter service into the city of Montreal. For example, in 1970 the CNR had to pick up a deficit of $2.1 million. In 1971, the deficit was $2.2 million and in 1972 it was $2.4 million.

I do not criticize the CNR for picking up these deficits in operating Montreal commuter trains; I think the commuter service into Montreal is a fine one that meets the needs of a vast number of people. If the CNR were picking up the deficits of a commuter service into Toronto, then I expect a lot of people would object. From all corners of the country as well as from all corners of this House, we would hear words of protest. But here is something being done to meet the needs of people living in a major metropolitan centre of Canada, and we would like to see the same kind of initiative being taken both by the company and the government to meet the needs of vast numbers of people in other centres who are trying to make their way to work and home again day by day.

Fortunately, the federal government is at last shaking itself out of its lethargy on this issue. We recently had an announcement regarding partial federal financing of a commuter train service from Richmond Hill to Toronto. However, I note that the maintenance costs of that service will be have to be borne by the Ontario government, including all deficits. In this regard we would like, first of all, to acknowledge the initiative that the federal government has shown, but we would go on to ask, does the government have to stop there? Although it may not be too little, too late, it is certainly too little in light of the needs of today's society.

What bothers me is that day after day the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), when asked serious and practical questions by members of parliament, stands up and defends his lethargy by saying that he has no real influence over the CNR. I point out that the CNR is totally owned by the people of Canada, and the minister, as spokesman for the people of Canada, surely has a responsibility to get the CNR to take action. Expressways and city streets are clogged with cars and trucks day after day and can rightly be described as the largest parking lots in this country. On the other hand, vast railroad rights-of-way are lying empty. Thus, we wonder at the lack of initiative on the part of this so-called Minister of Transport. We would say to him that, good as this gesture of assistance to metro Toronto is in terms of the Richmond Hill-Toronto commuter service, it is not enough for the people of the area. Certainly, it is not enough when we add up the needs of communities in every province in this country.

I would couple with this the need for the railroad itself to begin again to give priority to the provision of passenger service. One of the things that impressed me from reading the opinions of railroad executives was the way in which they seemed to be rather unhappy about having to carry passengers at all, and on those occasions when I have travelled by train I have been impressed by how fitting their opinions have turned out to be. If the railways say they simply want to carry freight, they sometimes give me the impression they are treating people like freight. There was a time when riding on a train was a reasonably pleasurable experience. Now, you cannot even get a decent meal on a train or find a railway journey that is enjoyable. In this time of crisis we would submit to the leaders of the government and the management of the railroad companies that it is absolutely imperative to begin to give priority to railroad passenger service once again.

I say that for three reasons. First of all, there is a pollution crisis in our cities through over-use of gasoline powered motors. For example, in the United States the environmental protection agency has ordered that all cities in the U.S. reduce hydrocarbon emissions by 93 per cent by the year 1977. Pollution has reached a critical stage and we must liberate ourselves from our dependency upon gasoline powered motors.

My second reason is congestion. In metropolitan Toronto alone there is a concentration of 850,000 motor vehicles, about one for every 2.3 persons in the urban area. This degree of congestion is strangling metro, as it is strangling every urban community in North America.

My third reason is allocation. We have been presented with a bill that calls for the appointment of an energy allocation board. This legislation purports to set up an agency to allocate energy according to need. I should like to use this word "allocation" in order to focus the attention of the House upon the need to allocate transportation services to the end that we will have adequate railroad services which will liberate us from our dependency upon motorcars, upon expressways, upon the kind of transportation facilities that today are polluting our cities, congesting them and making us overly dependent upon oil resources.

Therefore, we urge the CNR and all of the railroad companies in the land, along with the government, which surely has some responsibility here, to give priority to people in this country, and to see to it that the railroads offer them the opportunity to do something serious and creative in the urban communities in this land. These communities are presently facing a transit crisis, but these communities can find a solution to this crisis if railroad rights-of-way are used to their maximum potential. Therefore, instead of giving priority to the development of new tourist attractions which the people may or may not need, we wish the CNR would give priority to working out with the provincial and local authorities, with the encouragement and support of the federal government, ways by which existing railway tracks and rights-of-way can be utilized for rapid public commuter transportation which would free our great cities which are now in danger of strangling to death.

● (1720)

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, there is one thing about this debate that is more notable than any other, and that is the absence of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand).

An hon. Member: His parliamentary secretary is here.

Mr. McCain: From what I have seen of the presence of parliamentary secretaries it would lead me to believe this is a courtesy extended to the opposition, but their voices have not been very loud. If their conversations behind the curtains are the same as their statements in the House of Commons, or if there is no difference between their words behind the curtains and their words in caucus, then their voices are not well heard.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member does not know what he is talking about and that is obvious. In addition, he is certainly not speaking on the subject before the House at the present time.

Mr. McCain: We have both expressed our opinion, Mr. Speaker, so we will let the matter stand there.

We are talking about transportation and amendments to this bill. During the discussion of this bill in the committee and in the House, a wide range of policy needs have been expressed by members interested in the subject of transportation in general, with air and rail transportation being the principal subjects. There has been a very distinct attack on the transportation system in Canada by those who have studied the system, by those who have used the system and by those who have written about it.

Let us look at the press of December 24, where we find a report that the Deputy Minister of Transportation has indicated that governments will have to decide how to make the most efficient use of fuel, money and the facilities of transportation. Members of this House have stated time and time again that one of the building blocks, perhaps even the cornerstone of our economy as we move from sea to sea, is the transportation facilities with which we are provided. Inasmuch as the Canadian National Railways and Air Canada are government owned in their entirety, it becomes the responsibility of government to see that these services are rendered in the interests of the public.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCain: Certainly, we can find fault with individuals in the administrative staff of Air Canada and individuals in the administrative and operating staffs of the railroad. We can cite instances where individuals have not served the public as public servants should, but the whole blame in respect of poor administration can be clearly and squarely laid on the Minister of Transport and the government of which he is a member. That burden of responsibility has been shrugged off with a degree of irony and sarcasm. We have seen reports submitted to the minister in respect of the needs of this nation, and I suggest the responsibility rests with the minister, yet he has not spoken, nor has anyone else on the government side, in a responsible way about these needs.

Let us take as an example the meeting which took place in Nova Scotia more than a year ago. A report in respect of this meeting appeared in the Chronicle-Herald of January 7, as follows:

> More than a year ago, a transportation "crisis" seminar was held in Wolfville, following which the sponsor, the Annapolis Valley Affiliated Boards of Trade . . . pressed Ottawa and the provincial governments for a better deal in transportation. High on the list of recommendations was boosted subsidy rates to assist Atlantic businessmen.
>
> That sparked a meeting between the Council of Maritime Premiers and Transport Minister Jean Marchand last April, at which time it was proposed that subsidies on westbound goods would be boosted.

Canadian National Railways

This meeting was in April, and the date of commitment was January 1, we presume of 1974 although the article does not say so. The article continues:

> Atlantic-area residents, weary of decades of pleading for more help and less hinderance from Ottawa in the East's bid for a fair and just transportation deal, can only hope that the federal government will be just as slow to approve freight rate increases as it has been to grant better subsidies.

The effect of any subsidy is apparently again to be wiped out, because we find that the railroads are now asking for a substantial increase in rates, as high as 33⅓ per cent in some parts of Canada. We find also that there is considerable concern about safety on the railroads. In 1959, there were 40 trains which went off the tracks. In 1969, the total had climbed to 69, and in 1972 it jumped to 132. This, then, became the subject of a board of inquiry under the Canadian Transportation Commission. Again, I submit that this is one aspect of the matters with which this bill deals. It deals with money to be spent for facilities in transportation, and safety is a very vital area in which money should be spent. The report of that commission suggested a slowdown for trains using existing tracks. I ask what this will do to an industry which is already short of cars? What will this do to a country which is pleading for a better transportation system, more efficient and faster movement of goods across the country?

The policies of this government, as embodied in the 1967 act, have permitted a decline in the safety of railways to the point where accidents have increased from 40 in 1959 to 132 in 1972. The government has sat idlely by while the railroads have reduced their maintenance staffs by roughly 80 per cent from what they were 40 or 50 years ago when trains were moving slower and hauling smaller loads. There is reference in this report to the inspection of the tracks. This inspection was carried out on a daily basis as the crews went back and forth on their little cars. The tracks were inspected superficially by eye, and the crews stopped for a closer inspection where necessary, using the appropriate tools. Today, it may be weeks before a maintenance crew ever sees a piece of track. Of course, there has to be an inspection survey, but what has been the result of the cut in the work force?

Just a matter of weeks ago, I was talking with a friend of mine who happens to be a reasonably senior engineer on one of our rail lines. He told me that if he knew any other way to make a living he would get out of his engine. He said that the safety precautions on the railway were so much poorer than when he started some 20 years ago it was shocking. He said the only reason he did not get out of the service was that he had so much invested in his pension, such as it is, he could not afford to quit. After many years of service his opinion was that the application of safety measures had deteriorated.

Under this government, and under the 1967 act as administered by the CTC, we find that the application of safety measures has deteriorated in a frightful way, detrimental to the best interests of Canada. There is only one group of people responsible for that situation. The president of the CNR is not entirely responsible: it is the policy under which the government has allowed the CNR to operate; and it is the ministers, not just the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) but all the ministers in the shuttle service that has been provided by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and by the Minister of Transport. That shuttle service has included several ministers, and they are all jointly responsible for this decline. It is detrimental to the safety and the economics of this nation. Let us put the blame squarely where it belongs—on the shoulders of the government, the Minister of Transport and the Prime Minister.

All these little side efforts of the CNR give me great concern. I am concerned because the tower that is now being built in Toronto was initially intended to be a joint project: it was to be a CP-CN structure. We already have co-operation and joint ownership of a communications system in this country with CN-CP stockholders. Why did the CPR not want to participate in investment in the tower? Why did they accept other real estate opportunities rather than invest their money in the tower? One can only guess that the answers were not forthcoming when this bill was investigated in the committee. I think one must assume, from the lack of information, that we have put ourselves in a position of commitment with respect to the tower, that it was not to be as profitable as was suggested by some and that CPR found it more advantageous to invest money elsewhere or accept other land development opportunities. This is what one would normally assume. If that is not the case, then let us have an answer. Why did they get out? The answer was not forthcoming.

We have had car shortages in the lumber industry, the grain industry and in agriculture in general. We have had difficulties in the transportation of fertilizer, to name but a few products that have had a squeeze. This squeeze did not come upon us without statistical evidence being relayed to the government to indicate that it was about to happen. We have had an increase in tonnage handled and cars loaded in the rail structure of the country over the years, and at the time that increase in loading has been taking place there has been a decline in the number of cars available for the railroads to carry the increased load.

The statistical evidence is available in the various documents presented to the committee, and in other locations as well. Why would any government allow a decline in the carrying capacity to take place on an annual basis when the load requirement was increasing on an annual basis? It is all right to say that the wheat and lumber movements were unusual, but the railroad has to base its operation on the long-term average and the anticipated increases which accrue in the business of this nation. An intelligent government would have ensured that the CNR was following the direction of the statistics and was prepared to accept the extra burden of transportation which inevitably was to come upon it. It is not unusual for transportation or any other industry to run on a cyclical basis, and I do not blame management; I blame the government for the fact that this cycle could not be met.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCain: The ordinary course of events would have led the government in a different direction had it taken the care to take a look at things. One of the things about the system under which we operate is that the National Transportation Act of 1967 was supposed to set us up in a competitive business so far as transportation is concerned. I am quite prepared to accept the fact, as has been pointed out in particular by members on the extreme left of this side of the House, that there are some debt problems so far as CNR is concerned. But when we make this allegation I wonder whether we should not at the same time take a look at the bonded indebtedness of the competitor. If the CNR is not competitive with the CPR, the government should correct that situation. That is the first thing. Second, the government should say to the management of CNR, "Moneywise you are competitive. Now get to the business of hauling freight, and make it competitive."

The CPR has no competition. There is no point in blaming the CPR for what is happening. It is this government's administration of an enterprise which makes it unnecessary for that structure to be competitive and to seek out new business. This is the burden which has been loaded on CNR management. If it is unequitable and unjust, then the government, as the owner, should put them in a competitive position and say to them, "Gentlemen, get out and do the business as any businessman would." The government cannot compete in the free enterprise world if it cannot make a profit. Let us set up a financial structure in the CNR so that it is competitive with private enterprise. At the moment the structure is such that any user of the rails is paying the maximum tariff that his commodity will bear, and in some instances more than it can bear so that he is forced to disappear from the business world. If you look at the rates in eastern Canada, for instance, in the movement of grain you will find that grain is being moved on ton-mile rates which vary by 300 per cent.

I am not referring to western grain, but there are areas of surplus grain in this country. It is not competitive for the producer or for the railways, and it is just convenient for the railways to extract from that commodity, in certain locations in Canada, three times as much tariff as it is extracting in other areas. That is the type of management which the government has tolerated in the industry which it owns.

We find ourselves in an energy crisis, and without a policy in transportation which would show any awareness of energy savings that can be made. There has been no policy statement to indicate that transportation can be used in such a fashion as to conserve energy and, as the previous speaker said, to extend our petroleum reserves for as long a period as possible. There has been no such policy from the Minister of Transport, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), the Prime Minister or anybody else. But there is a policy to build a tower, to refurnish hotels—and now we are asked to approve the unrelated expenditure of money under a transportation bill.

This morning I had a call from a dealer in grain in eastern Canada. On December 10 or 11 the subject of grain was raised in the committee when it was discussing the financing of the CNR. We were assured in the committee that the problem would be resolved. A meeting was held in the maritime provinces on December 17, if my memory serves me correctly. The Wheat Board representatives, the feed grain board representatives, feed purchasers and railroad officials—all the people interested in the transportation, provision and consumption of grain were there. But the call I received this morning told me that there are cars of grain, for which orders have been accepted, which have not moved since December 21. I am told that the grain available will be delivered irrespective of grade, and that the customers must accept the substitution which the Wheat Board wishes to impose.

If our transportation system is to be planned as the Wheat Board plans it for this kind of mix-up, then it is high time the government took a hand and found out what policy is necessary, because friends of mine are moving grain back and forth, trading it back and forth within their own mills so that those mills can continue to operate.

Even after the promise made by various cabinet ministers that this problem would be corrected forthwith, and even after the meeting was held in Moncton and assurances were given that the problem would be corrected, the problem is still acute in some areas. True, there has been an improvement. I can say this to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, and to the chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board; but there is still much to be desired when a car of grain has been on order since December 21 and it has not yet rolled away from the elevator. That is a long while for a chicken to wait for feed. For once I can agree with the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave). It is high time we had a definite government policy on transportation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret that I have to interrupt the hon. member, whose time appears to have expired.

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, as I look around this chamber it is worth noting that the only members of the cabinet here to listen to this debate on the CNR financing bill are the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) and the Minister of State (Mr. Haidasz), who is responsible for multicultural affairs. I appreciate that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) might not want to show their faces around here when this kind of legislation is being debated. I suppose I should not speak ill of the two ministers who are here: there is no doubt in my mind that the Minister of State knows at least as much about transport as the Minister of Transport.

My reason for speaking on these amendments is my belief that before the Canadian taxpayer is asked by the government to support CN hotels and grandiose projects such as the CN tower, he should at least be entitled to decent transportation provided by the CNR. My party's position on this is quite distinct from the position of the other two parties. The Liberals argue that whatever the management of CN wants to do is all right with them, and the NDP complains that CN has so badly served Canadians in providing such poor rail service that it should be given even more public money to waste on hotels that run into the red and on obscene monstrosities such as the CN tower. Our position is that until CN can do a decent job as a railway, its management should not be allowed to indulge in empire building in unrelated areas.

I regret that the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) is not in the chamber. I could not help but feel a sense of wonder and awe as I followed his agile mind at work last night. He complained about the CN board of directors, he complained about the problems of the western farmer in getting proper service from the CN, and he complained that the railway does not meet the transportation needs of the people. But what was his answer to the problem of inept public management of this company? It was that the government should take over CP rail as well.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): I wonder whether I might be permitted to share with the hon. member who said "hear, hear", and with my other socialist friends, a story I heard recently that illustrates the sort of logic that the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre uses when he says that the answer to the problem of too much socialism is more socialism. The constituency I have the honour to represent is largely rural. It contains some of the finest agricultural land in Canada. The eastern part of it, in Dufferin county, has considerable potato production.

The story is told about a couple of city slickers who decided that they would come up and make a quick dollar from the potato farmers in Melancthon township. The two were a father and son team from Toronto by the name of David and Stephen. They got in their truck and drove from farm to farm, buying up large bags of potatoes at $5 a bag until their truck was full. From there they drove into Shelburne, one of the local small towns, parked on the street and sold their potatoes for $5 a bag to the town's residents. Before long all the potatoes were sold, and they went home for the night. The next day they drove up again to Dufferin county and proceeded to buy potatoes at $5 for a big bag until their truck was once more full. Then they drove into Orangeville, where they parked on the side of the road and proceeded to sell their potatoes for $5 a bag to the local residents. By the end of the day all the sacks had been sold. After they had totalled up their earnings for the day, Stephen turned to David and said, "You know, dad, we haven't been making too much money on this deal." To which David replied, "You're right. I've been thinking about what we have to do about that. I've decided it's time we got ourselves a bigger truck." That is an example of the sort of logic employed by my socialist friends who claim that when the government has botched things up the only solution is to give the government more power.

I come from a constituency that has been ill served by the government and by the two railways. The private company would rather haul garbage than people to my area, destroying prime farmland in the process. Both it and the CNR have discontinued passenger service to my area, so that today not one passenger train passes through it. The effect of the discontinuance has been damaging to the development of the small towns which depend upon decent transportation for their survival. Many of our senior citizens have been trapped, unable to visit family and friends outside their home towns.

[Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin Waterloo).]

Each member of parliament from the area has had numerous complaints about the failure of both companies to keep their fences up and the weeds in check. But the answer of the railways is to strip back the number of section crews and the equipment those hardworking men need to do a proper job. In the meantime roadbeds are allowed to deteriorate to the point where trains have to be run upon them at reduced speed for safety. We have already reached the point where passenger service could not be restored without rebuilding vast stretches of roadbed in the area. And what is the answer of the government? It is to ask the Canadian people to spend their tax money subsidizing CN management's edifice complex while the area goes begging for decent treatment from the railways.

Repeatedly the people of my area have asked for help from the federal government, and repeatedly they have been refused. Even when the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, which at the time had a Liberal chairman, a Liberal co-chairman and a Liberal majority, unanimously recommended in June, 1972, that service be restored, the government simply refused to act. When he was asked in this House what action he was going to take on the matter, the Minister of Transport, who confused the problem of the area with that of commuters trying to get to their jobs in Toronto, equivocated, stalled and talked of negotiations with the government of Ontario, or of local participation in the formulation of policy as requested by the municipalities.

He then simply conducted a local Gallup poll that completely bypassed municipal governments. And after claiming in the House yesterday, "I have received a report and it has been communicated to all interested parties", he disclosed that he suppressed the report for over a month, maybe because he does not feel that the local members of parliament, the affected municipalities, the chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications and the people of the area involved are interested parties.

Yet with this sort of record the government asks for the support of this House to give even more money to the CNR for projects that have nothing to do with the company's primary function, namely, running a railroad in an efficient manner. Mr. Speaker, the minister did not want to be made Minister of Transport. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) gave him his present portfolio after he had dropped the ball so badly as minister responsible for DREE and as campaign manager for the Liberal Party in Quebec that he had become an embarrassment to the government. If the minister still does not want this department, or if he is simply incompetent, then surely the people of southwestern Ontario should not be burdened with him. The Prime Minister should relieve him of his present responsibility and appoint him to the Senate where he can join the host of Liberal bagmen and campaign officials who are already working on the next election campaign at public expense. At least if he were in the Senate he could do no more damage to the people of my area.

The people of southwestern Ontario are a hardworking, industrious and independent group. They do not ask the government for hand-outs but they do believe that they are entitled to the same sort of treatment from the government and the CNR as they would receive if they came from the Minister of Transport's riding. And they do not believe that their tax money should be going to subsidize hotels and CN towers until they have received the kind of service they deserve right now from the government and the CNR.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, the amendment before the House deals primarily with priorities in the expenditure of money by Canadian National Railways. The amendment states that money should not be appropriated for the building of CN towers and hotels.

● (1750)

Keeping in mind that the amendment relates to priorities and spending, I should like to say a few words about the participation of CN in the GO commuter service. I was delighted to learn yesterday that the government had agreed to give $13 million toward the operation of this service between Toronto and Richmond Hill. The province of Ontario has already agreed to operate a GO service between Toronto and Georgetown, the latter being 20 miles from the city which I have the honour to represent, namely, Guelph. The city of Guelph has a population of some 66,000 people. The present plan is to terminate the GO service at Georgetown and take the people by bus the 20 miles from Guelph to Georgetown. I do not think it is a proper priority for the CNR to stop the GO train at Georgetown and ask people from Guelph to take the bus for those 20 miles and then transfer to the GO train to Toronto.

I appeal to the CNR to extend this GO service to the city of Guelph for the following reasons: first, the track is already there and, second, the equipment will be provided; the staff will be provided and the general overhead will be more or less the same. There is a place in Guelph where the GO train could stay overnight. The trains are heated electrically, so that is no problem. They could start and finish at the city of Guelph as easily as they can at Georgetown. When they think of priorities, I would hope the CNR, along with the province of Ontario, would consider extending the GO train service those extra few miles to the city of Guelph. There is presently a CN train which leaves Guelph early in the morning and comes back at night, but I understand this train is to be taken off. I am pleased that the government has seen fit for the first time to give money to the GO commuter service in Ontario. This proves that the private member's bill which I introduced last July, an act to amend the Railway Act, which simply recommended that commuter trains should be treated like any other service for the payment of subsidies on losses, has had some effect.

Speaking of priorities, Mr. Speaker, the CN line from Toronto to Stratford and on to Sarnia needs greater attention. Between Christmas and the New Year that train came into the city of Guelph; it was composed of three rail-liners which are three self-propelled cars hooked together. There was standing room only on these three cars and about 75 people were waiting to board them at Guelph. Surely the management of CNR could see the need for proper equipment at peak times such as this. It is hard for people to understand why the proper equipment is not available.

If we are to help in the environmental problem and to play our part in fighting the energy crisis, surely the railways must realize that they have an important part to play as well. They must realize that the main lines of the railways are here to stay and must be maintained and kept in good condition both as to track and general equipment. This must be a top priority. But I would say, Mr. Speaker, that as far as the CN is concerned the matter of priority leaves much to be desired.

I close by saying what I said at the beginning. I feel that the GO commuter train service for all provinces in Canada should be subsidized for losses. I am happy to know that the government has recognized this need and has seen fit to help the Ontario line. I hope that assistance will be available for other GO line services in other large urban areas of Canada. In the particular case in which I am primarily interested, I hope the GO train will go the full distance and will give the people of Guelph the service to which a city with a population of 65,000 is entitled.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it agreed that we call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on the amendments to Bill C-164, I wish to state that I am in complete agreement with the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) with regard to reducing expenditures by CNR and Air Canada. I submit that no money should be paid to Air Canada until MOT has conducted an investigation into complaints registered by employees, members of parliament and the general public and a report has been made to parliament.

If one compares Air Canada with other airlines one will see the the operations of Air Canada leave much to be desired. Air Canada's virtual monopoly of Canadian air travel creates difficulty in measuring its productivity. There are no available Canadian companies of comparable size. Delta offers an example of an airline of comparable size in the competitive U.S. market. The comparison is one of a monopolistic public airline versus a private airline in a highly competitive market.

Let us compare assets. Air Canada possessed more total assets than Delta. Air Canada had assets totalling $834,-262,000, while Delta had assets totalling $780,706,000. In spite of greater assets, Air Canada had less operating revenues. Delta had operating revenues valuing $757,569,- 000; Air Canada's operating revenues totalled $583,272,000. Therefore, while Air Canada had $54,556,000 greater assets than Delta, it had $174,307,000 less in operating revenues. It is interesting to note that the advantage of Air Canada in total assets is not to be found in the number of aircraft. Air Canada possessed 102 aircraft while Delta possessed 138. More specifically, Delta had 22,105,725 available seat-miles while Air Canada had only 12,169,049.

If one compares expenses one will see that Air Canada incurred fewer operating expenses than Delta. Delta's expenses totalled $682,117,000, while Air Canada's totalled $537,770,000. Although Delta's over-all expenses were higher, Air Canada spent $2,975,000 more on general and administrative expenses and $8,448,000 more on promotion and sales. In the area of passenger service Delta spent $1,513,000 more than Air Canada. Therefore, while Air Canada spent more on administration, promotion and sales, it spent less on passenger service.

A comparison of productivity indicates that Air Canada experienced a yield of 6.02 cents revenue per passenger-mile while Delta managed a yield of 6.50 cents. Therefore, Delta produced 8 per cent more in revenue per passenger-mile. This was accomplished in spite of a 17 per cent lower passenger load factor. Delta was also more efficient in cargo. Delta experienced expenses of 22.20 cents per available ton-mile while Air Canada experienced 24.28 cents. An historical survey of these operating expenses reveals that Delta has held them at a more stable rate. Air Canada fluctuated from 28 cents in 1963 to 22 cents in 1971.

Also speaking against the record of Air Canada is the brief submitted to members of parliament by the Canadian Air Line Employees Association. This brief, in criticizing Air Canada operations, deals first with procedures. It says:

> Airline procedures sometimes seem to disregard reality entire. For example:
> (1) It is unrealistic to believe that employees may use the public address system regularly to summon supervisors or other staff members while at the same time they refuse public requests for a page on the grounds that they are not permitted to page. The customer does not know that it is a supervisor being paged at the same time that his request is refused—and he probably would not care. The purpose of the policy is eminently reasonable—i.e. the inaccessibility of the PA due to public pages; the method used to effect some control is completely irrational.
> (2) Qualified ticket agents were permitted to handle only domestic tickets in some offices until an indefinite point in the far distant future when the supervisor decided to designate them "international agents".

● (2010)

Also, the union claims that initiation of automated check-in procedures at some airports had made it impracticable to attempt to offer some services which were available under manual procedures. For example, a seat request might be accommodated under a manual procedure; the request would not normally be considered under one-stop check-in procedures. Unfortunately, none of the company manuals or local bulletins have reflected the inability of an airport to consider such requests. The CALEA brief also comments on facilities. Working conditions have been so bad at times that the staff have threatened to leave the premises. Recently, the following incidents, symptomatic of problems in offices across the system, have occurred:

first, the heat in a ticket office became so intense that the manager refused to work there and a customer fainted; second, the temperature in an airport lobby reached 34 degrees. The management personnel on duty refused to take any corrective action until the union threatened to withdraw the staff and a senior union officer was called to the scene.

Then third, staff have had to complain long and bitterly about the failure of cleaning firms to maintain the premises in a clean manner. Fourth, safety hazards, such as loose wires on the floor, have been permitted to continue in the face of formal protests. In one instance an employee was injured so seriously that he was off work for approximately two months before corrective action was effected. Fifth, a cashier in one busy airport has a cubicle which is completely open in the rear to a well-frequented corridor. Although this fact is easily discernible, management do not feel there is any cause for alarm.

Then sixth, a cash register was provided for a major ticket counter which was too small to handle the volume of cash over more than two to three hours. The cashier then had a choice—leave the cash drawer open with money bulging out, or stop serving the customers briefly while the money was transferred to a safe. Seventh, employee rest facilities are dismal for the most part. Washrooms tend to be tiny, dull and sometimes dirty. Lunchrooms tend to be poorly furnished. In some bases, even the larger ones, there is not even a couch available in case an employee becomes ill and needs to lie down. The recent renovations at the Calgary airport have virtually created a firetrap for Air Canada counter employees.

It is a temptation to continue to recite further examples of poor facilities. The inadequacies cover a wide range of possibilities, as the examples indicate. Under "staffing" in the CALEA presentation it is stated that demands for overtime coverage and greater productivity have increased. The amount of overtime required, particularly for IAM and CALEA personnel, is known to have exceeded the federal maximum hours permitted, yet to our knowledge no report has been sent to the minister as required by law. Because of these increased demands, staff in some areas are suffering from some degree of mental, neural and/or emotional stress.

Air Canada has no known method for staffing their ticket offices. Maximum staff is limited by the facilities themselves. Shifts and meal/rest periods are scheduled in such a way that the staff on duty is greatest during the periods of greatest demand, normally during the noon hour. There are no published standards or statistics available to provide such information as maximum desired waiting period per customer, actual waiting period per customer per hour over extended periods in the past, or anticipated increase in customer demand.

The CALEA brief also refers to standards of Air Canada. Air Canada establishes levels of service which may vary between locations, for example offices such as airport, reservations or ticket offices, or between bases such as geographic areas, usually an urban area such as Montreal. Budget requests for the staff required to provide the level of service deemed acceptable in each location are subject to approval from more senior levels of management. It is not unusual for these requests to be refused and an arbitrary cut in staff ordered.

With regard to automation there is great frustration among Air Canada employees. This is particularly evident in the case of one-stop check-in at airport locations. The airline cannot emphasize too strongly the need for accurate passenger counts, both because of the economic need to fill its aircraft and the safety aspect which demands an exact computation of the weight and balance of an aircraft. The anticipated computer load figures become increasingly inaccurate as each day progresses because no attempt is made to update passenger records to release space on later flights when it is no longer required.

The actual computer check-in totals may be seriously in error due to human error by the agents who operate it, customers who travel on other flights after they have been checked in, customers who are "lobby noshos" and miss their flight, computer malfunctions, and so on. The airline has recognized these problems and reinstated a manual procedure to verify the computerized check-in. Agents now verify the passenger count on board the aircraft before a flight is closed off. In the event of a computer malfunction, the agent may be forced to simply fill the aircraft and release it as he has no access to any information of the flight status, seat selection or passenger reservations. On a multi-destination flight this could affect several stations.

Also, under the heading of "employee morale" the brief states that with regard to relations, when one sees the age-old methods appear again in negotiations and grievances it is useless to claim to be more receptive when, in fact, management acts in as authoritarian a manner as ever. How senseless it is to claim to be concerned with correct procedures and administration of contract terms while at the same time members of management are imposing new and arbitrary interpretations which are bitterly contested by both the employees and the union. Women still have great difficulty in obtaining promotion. Frequently the person promoted is still the person who adhered to the party line or drank beer with the right people.

The company claims to be sincerely concerned for the welfare of its employees. Obvious safety hazards are permitted to continue. An example is the Air Canada facilities at Calgary airport. If an employee is overpaid, he is treated as if he had intentionally appropriated the money and all pay is withheld until the debt is discharged; yet if an employee is underpaid he may spend months attempting to recover his salary. One employee was underpaid in excess of $400 at the beginning of September, yet to date he has not received any satisfaction nor even a hope of satisfaction from the company.

Management ineptitude is sometimes so obvious that it cannot be overlooked. To quote one example, computerized check-in for one-stop check-in was installed in one location at a great deal of expense. When the installation was completed it was discovered that the counters were of the wrong height. An agent could neither sit nor stand in comfort on these counters. Needless to say, productivity suffered considerably.

Poor supervision is a predictable result when the company does little or nothing to select its most promising people and expose them to training and development courses in such pertinent areas as human and labour relations. These areas reflect problems similar to those experienced by CALEA members, although we do not have specific statistics to quote.

Also, the CALEA document mentions standards. They claim they have no information on the manner in which the standards are established for the various functions such as aircraft services, baggage, commissary, etc. The Winnipeg office also comes in for a great deal of criticism. Winnipeg is presently the site of Air Canada's financial operations. Much concern has been expressed in newspapers and by members of parliament regarding a rumoured move of the accounting computer from Winnipeg to Montreal. Naturally, Air Canada has denied any intention of moving their present Winnipeg accounting operations to Montreal. From past experience, including the manner in which Air Canada moved its operations from Winnipeg to Montreal, can one really accept the denials proferred by Air Canada? It should be noted that the first move is to take the computers from Winnipeg to Montreal and that this process is already under way. Can the rest of the accounting operation be far behind?

Another recent event in the finance branch of Air Canada was the transfer to Chicago or Toronto of the function of making up AC-CN credit cards. As well, the CALEA document comments on labour relations. For years Air Canada has attempted to suppress organized labour, and today their attitude is unchanged: it remains as it was before reorganization. In CALEA's opinion, Air Canada does not place enough emphasis on labour relations. This opinion is more than substantiated by the series of labour difficulties experienced by Air Canada in the past five years, with all the unions involves in strikes, partial strikes and slowdowns. The unions that deal with Air Canada also deal with Pacific Western Airlines. It is interesting to note that Pacific Western Airlines has been able over the past few months to conclude agreements with most of its unions in record time. One can only conclude that if Air Canada were to show an enlightened attitude toward organized labour, all parties concerned would benefit.

To summarize the CALEA brief, an attempt is made throughout to place emphasis on people—Air Canada's customers and employees. The tragic truth is that Air Canada does not recognize people as being all that important. They seem to place dollars above all else. It is so simple. If Air Canada became people-oriented, improvements could easily be achieved in employee morale, customer service, labour relations and profitability. Air Canada employees who are CALEA members are conscientious employees. However, they are disturbed and concerned about the direction being taken by this once great airline. Throughout this report they are appealing for the assistance of the government and their MPs to make Air Canada a great airline once again.

There have also been complaints in the Senate with regard to the Air Canada operation. Last June a Senator formally put forward a question in the following terms:

Canadian National Railways

In view of the fact that the International Association of Machinists have, four times in seven years, disrupted the convenience of the Canadian travelling public by their almost criminal irresponsibility, can the leader of the government give any assurance that the government will take the necessary steps to either:

(a) Upgrade the management of Air Canada, which must accept a major share of the responsibility for the large number of strikes in Air Canada in the past five years; or

(b) Initiate steps to ban strikes in the essential services; or

(c) Will the leader of the government in the Senate consider calling Air Canada officials before the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications?

I have also received complaints from Air Canada employees who take early retirement. A recent letter I received from one of them calls attention to conditions which exist at Dorval. The aspect he mentions concerns morale, and we all know this has a great bearing on productivity, safety and health. Most of the persons in their respective trades study and learn their jobs through courses; others have to qualify for MOT certificates. It is very demoralizing for them when someone less experienced is made a supervisor over trained men, especially when that person is brought in from an unrelated department. Some of the promotions and replacements which have taken place have led to very bad morale at the Dorval base.

The Air Canada magazine retirement list printed monthly shows that the biggest percentage of early retirements is constituted by personnel who have been moved from Winnipeg to Dorval in the last three or four years. These are mostly men with service of 25 years or more. They are taking their retirement early, many of them only in their fifties. It must involve a great loss to the company when valuable, knowledgeable men with practical experience retire early. To fill the vacancies requires men of a high technical competence.

The following is a short list of promotions and demotions which have taken place. In the parts shop, the general superintendent was replaced. The retired employee asks why. Also, the assistant superintendent was replaced. Foremen were set up over senior and more experienced personnel, a senior planner over senior and more experienced planners. In the metal shop a general foreman was appointed from employees of the personnel department. Also in the metal section, foremen were set up over lead mechanics who acted also as general foremen on release of—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the theme of most of the speeches which have been made on the two amendments now before the House is that the Canadian National should concentrate on running its railway. I should like to underline comments which have already been made to the effect that one of the ways of ensuring a good railway operation is to achieve the best possible relations between management and employees.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I seem to be getting support for that proposition, certainly from this side of the House, orally, and I suspect from the other side of the House, even though silently.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Good for you, Joe.

An hon. Member: Half an hour late.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am glad my friend and neighbour from St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) has broken the silence on that side of the House and expressed his agreement with the proposition I have made.

Mr. Sharp: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Now I see I have the applause of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp).

Mr. Peters: Let's take a vote.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I see that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) also applauded. How about the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie)? He is looking at me, but he is only smiling.

Let me go a step further and say that in management-employee relations one very crucial element is that of pensions. Now, imagine the member for Winnipeg North Centre referring to the subject of pensions!

Mr. Stanbury: Off on a new tack.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I realize how surprised my friends are, but that only shows they either have not been around here very long or that they have not been listening. In the few minutes I intend to take, I want to emphasize the importance of improving railway pensions. Though there are many facets of this question, I should like to concentrate on one area, that of the annual escalation of the pensions of railway workers already retired.

I am fully aware of the negotiations which took place last year, which began even earlier, leading to a new pension package as part of the collective agreement which is being considered now by the Hon. Emmett Hall. I am also aware that Dr. John Deutsch is a special commissioner who is looking at one aspect of pensions. But the fact is that he is looking at only one area, namely, the percentage value of the pension package agreed to in the collective bargaining in relation to the total benefits of the employees. In other words, Dr. John Deutsch has no authority under the commission given to him by the Minister of Labour to go into the broad question of Canadian National or Canadian Pacific pensions; he is looking at the one narrow aspect to which I have referred. He will simply report to the Hon. Emmett Hall as to the percentage value of that pension package, and then Mr. Hall will have to decide whether to make any adjustment in the wages to be decided by him under the terms of his appointment.

So, Mr. Speaker, any suggestion that pensions are dealt with because Dr. John Deutsch is working on the matter is false. Any suggestion that the matter I am concerned about tonight is covered by the collective agreement is also false—because I am thinking particularly of the pensions of retired railway employees, those who are already on the retired list and are drawing their pensions.

The point that I zero in on particularly has to do with the rate of escalation which in the Canadian National set-up has for a number of years now been 2 per cent per year. I point out that even that annual escalation is made on an ad hoc basis: it has not been written into the rules and it has not been established in any way that employees can count on it from year to year. True, it has been done every year since it was started, but this is by the grace of the company.

Even more serious than the fact that the annual escalation of CNR pensions is not guaranteed is the fact that it is still limited to 2 per cent per year. Not many years ago, when the escalation of pensions first commenced, that figure of 2 per cent was established and we were stuck with it for a long time. But our efforts have not been in vain; we have succeeded in that getting that 2 per cent ceiling removed in the case of most pensions paid under the aegis of the government. For example, if a person is receiving old age security he now receives every year, not simply an increase of 2 per cent but an increase that is equal to the actual percentage increase in the cost of living. The same is true of persons in receipt of the guaranteed income supplement.

Then, again, I could mention the pensions of retired public servants. For a number of years their pension increase was at the rate of only 2 per cent per year no matter how much the cost of living went up. Their increase is now geared to the actual percentage increase in the cost of living. The same is true of retired armed forces and retired Royal Canadian Mounted Police personnel. Many of those retired persons have still another grievance which I might mention in passing, namely, that they have to wait until they are 60 before getting an increase. But the point I am making is that those who get the annual increase get it at a rate equal to the actual percentage increase in the cost of living.

The same can be said of pensions paid to veterans. I am thinking both of the war disability pensions paid under the Pension Act and allowances paid under the War Veterans Allowance Act. Those benefits are escalated every year, not simply by 2 per cent but by the actual percentage increase in the cost of living. I point out that family allowances are in the same category now; they, too, increase not by a fixed amount but by the actual percentage increase in the cost of living.

I might even mention retired members of parliament. They have pensions and are in fact part of a preferred pension plan, although some of those who retired a number of years ago before the plan was improved do not think it is as good all that. But even they will discover this month, if they are over 60 years of age, that their pension will not increase simply by 2 per cent but will be increased by an amount equal to the actual percentage increase in the cost of living.

So I could go on, Mr. Speaker. I have not had the chance to check every last pension that is paid under government auspices, but I think I have mentioned enough of them and have studied the situation sufficiently to be able to make the general statement that pensions, allowances and superannuation benefits that are federal in their origin are now all in the position of being increased each year by an amount equal to the actual percentage increase in the cost of living.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask what is wrong with railway employees, and particularly with Canadian National employees? Why are they not getting similar treatment? Actually, I am as concerned about employees who worked for the CPR as I am about those who worked for the CNR and are now retired. They are not included within the provisions of this bill, but I think they ought to be. What bothers me is that far too often, I think, does the CPR decide upon pension policy and then that company browbeats the CNR to go along with the decision it has made.

In any event, we are now dealing with a bill that grants money to Canadian National Railways and so it is to the Canadian National Railways that we must direct our fire. I contend that employees of the Canadian National Railways are, in a practical sense, just as much employees of the government of Canada as are all these other groups to which I have referred. I think it is a shame, a disgrace—perhaps even calling it a crime would not be language that is too strong—that this particular group of people who work for the government of Canada have pensions that are restricted to an annual increase of 2 per cent, whereas all the others get an increase that is equal to the actual percentage rise in the cost of living.

I see my good friend the hon. member for St. Boniface over on the other side. May I still call him the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport? I have not seen the order in council that was tabled today, so I do not know whether he was retained in that position or transferred.

An hon. Member: Perhaps he was replaced.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I gather from the gestures he is making that he is still Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Alexander: You can tell from the smile on his face.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Then may I be the first to congratulate him. Not long ago he gave an answer on the "late show" to a question of mine on this particular subject which led a number of people to write me and say, "We are glad to see you have got Joe Guay on your side".

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): True.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hear the hon. member say that is true, and I hope it is on the record. I know it is true: I know he thinks in those terms. But for heaven's sake, when are the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) who pounded his desk a while ago, and the Minister of Labour, who is sitting over there, going to use their influence with the government? When are they going to use their influence with the government so the government will say to the Canadian National Railways, "You cannot stay out of step with all other federal authorities which are now paying pensions and escalating them each year by an amount equal to the actual percentage increase in the cost of living"?

● (2040)

Mr. Alexander: Those members you mentioned have no influence.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There are other aspects which have to be dealt with, such as the 50 per cent pension to widows of railway workers. I think this is a disgrace. I think the provisions for early retirement are not yet good enough and the formula itself needs to be improved. Some of these things can, of course, be the subject of collective bargaining, but so as not to weaken my case in respect of the main point I am trying to make tonight I come back to it and emphasize it. This parliament cannot rest while the government fails to say to the Canadian National Railways, "You cannot remain outside the family. You cannot, at a time when other pensions are increased every year by the full percentage increase in the cost of living, raise retirement pensions for Canadian National employees by only 2 per cent a year." This is a disgrace and it is a disgrace that must end.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be unfair or untrue to say that every member of this chamber shares the sentiments just expressed by one of our more distinguished senior citizens regarding faulty management of the CNR. I think we are in agreement for a variety of reasons but, if for no other reason, because—as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—this situation has existed for a long time and it is inhuman.

Let me join in the general theme of our discussion on this amendment which relates to the faulty management of the CNR. In the few minutes available to me I should like to touch upon another dimension which in its own way is equally as irresponsible and, indeed, borders on the criminal. I refer to the area of safety on the railway. I have in mind the number of accidents which have occurred not only in rail transportation but in all forms of transportation in Canada which fall within the purview and jurisdiction of the federal authority.

Perhaps, to set the tenor of my remarks, I should emphasize that the point I want to make—I have mentioned this on a number of occasions in this chamber in recent years—relates to the very obvious conflict of interest that arises in respect of transportation accidents when the body responsible for making and enforcing regulations is also charged with the responsibility of investigating those accidents and making judgments as to their cause, liability, and so on. It is in this area that I have an interest. I will keep my remarks in context by suggesting to you, Mr. Speaker, and other hon. members that what I am talking about is bad management. When I conclude my remarks I will place this subject in absolute perspective and in context with the amendment which is before us.

Since yesterday afternoon we have had before us the CTC report by the Railway Transport Committee entitled "Third report of the railway safety inquiry". When I refer to conflict of interest I have in mind management which permits this type of inquiry to be undertaken without any objection by a committee of the CTC. This is what I mean when I suggest this is man's inhumanity, if you will, to man. This amounts almost to criminal action because of the failure by the commission to do something, and more often than not in this case the crime is failure to act rather than acting in a wrong way.

In August, 1970, the Railway Transport Committee, which is an arm of the regulatory body, decided to set up an inquiry into a series of train wrecks that occurred at about that time. This was a wise thing to do internally; there is no doubt about that at all. The committee decided to do this, and arbitrarily decided that as an arm of the regulatory body it was the only group competent and able to carry out this type of inquiry. I quote from the top of page 4 of their third report as follows:

> —the committee decided to assign its two most senior and experienced officers with expertise in this field to the job of preparing reports on all aspects of railway operation and maintenance—

The field referred to here is that of safety. How could the two most senior people in this area properly advise their senior officials as to what is happening and what should be done internally to correct certain wrongs in respect of safety? the very fact that the decision to set up this inquiry was made in August of 1970, almost 3½ years ago, bears out this point. Had such an investigation been carried out by an independent commission of inquiry into these accidents on the CNR, I am sure this report would have been before the House within six months. Some 3½ years later we still do not have the final report, and the committee has not indicated a date when it expects to submit it. All we have been told is that we may expect it some time in the future, and that is not good enough. The last people to complain about this situation are those in the management of Canadian National Railways, our national transportation system. We have not heard one word of objection and no complaint has been made. Indeed, I imagine management has welcomed this fact and has accepted it as sort of a whitewash.

When accidents occur in the transportation industry in Canada it is no longer tolerable that the regulatory body conduct its own investigations. This gives rise to a conflict of interest. I will not recite examples because I have put them on the record a number of time in recent years. How can a person working on one side of the room for perhaps most of his lifetime make an objective judgment as to safety measures or standards decided upon and put into effect by his friend working on the other side of the room? I suggest he just cannot do so.

We remain the only western nation which clings to this archaic and philosophically wrong method of investigating accidents. The CNR, Air Canada and the investigative branch of the Department of Transport have done absolutely nothing about this situation. I am not making any accusations or imputing any wrong motives to the members of that branch. Indeed, they are among the finest air accident investigators in the world: they have won several national awards for their high standards of investigative work. But the investigative body was a limb or a branch not even at arm's length of the regulatory body. For example, I wonder how many of the 13 or 14 points made by the judge in the hearing of the tragic DC-8 crash in 1970 have been fully implemented by Air Canada. We know some of them have been implemented immediately, but I wonder if all of them have.

● (2050)

I am talking about the growing rate of accidents in all modes of transport—air, shipping, rail, interprovincial trucking and busing. The carnage of the highways and in the air as a result of these accidents grows every year. The amount of information made available to the public is negligible. We have not had half a dozen public inquiries into serious Canadian transportation accidents in the last 15 years. That is not good enough. What this country needs and what management groups such as CNR must do is to urge all governments to move as quickly as possible toward the establishment of a commission of inquiry removed from parliament, so that the possibility of a conflict of interest cannot arise and so that users of the national transportation system, be they Canadians, visitors to our country or exporters into our country, can use our transportation facilities with safety and to their satisfaction.

I regret the removal, for example, mentioned by an earlier speaker in this debate, of the direct control over Crown agencies, not because they should be the day to day concern of the House of Commons but because in the absence of responsible management principles in areas such as safety not even the House of Commons and not even our colleagues in the other place have any way of questioning management regarding whether the fullest means of ensuring safety in areas of transportation are being taken. I regret the loss of parliamentary control, if for no other reason than for that reason, and I think every member of this chamber should regret it. When the remotest possibility of a conflict of interest arises and the loss of life is the consequence of an accident, all of us should remember that we have sat here and done nothing.

Equally important in the management of CNR is exactly that type of body that could urge upon the government the necessity of removing from the purview of the regulatory body or agency the responsibility for investigation. With regard to air accidents in 1972, there were 155 fatalities and some 629 accidents, 83 of which were fatal. With regard to projections to the end of last year, the figures I have are to November 30 of last year and they show that there were 161 fatalities from 745 accidents.

Rail accidents are in another area of management. I know that different criteria are involved here, but how on earth can anyone expect to understand what is going on when Statistics Canada report that there were 1,922 accidents in 1970 and the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications reports that there were 4,622 in the same year? Those figures have grown to 4,818 according to the committee, and 1,963 according to Statistics Canada. Again we have a discrepancy with regard to fatalities. According to Statistics Canada, the number increased from 180 fatalities in 1970 to 226 in 1972, but the committee reports 195 in 1970 and 255 in 1972. What happened to the other 29 deaths? Is that a responsible way for the management of one of our largest conglomerates to approach the disclosure of information? It does not display much concern for the public.

Canadian National Railways

I am concerned about the disclosure of information, I am concerned about faulty management and I am concerned enough to wonder sometimes why we should sit here and give Air Canada $140 million and CNR another $100 million. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) said that they made operating profits in all but three of the last 25 years. That is fine; but I wonder about the Department of Transport through whom this august body reports to parliament. I wonder about their attitude to CNR and their obvious lack of concern for faulty or bad management. In the editorial of the Evening Patriot of December 22 the following account is to be found:

> On Thursday of this week, a light civilian aircraft landed on a runway at the Charlottetown airport across the path of Eastern Provincial Airways flight 112 incoming from Montreal. This incredibly dangerous incident happened before the eyes of a startled group of passengers in the airport lounge—

The final paragraph of the editorial reads as follows:

> This is the capital city of a province of Canada. We no longer live in a horse-and-buggy age. This newspaper is demanding immediate action on the part of the Department of Transport to correct this situation for the sake of the safety of all passengers who use the Charlottetown airport facilities.

What they are complaining about is the absence of a landing tower manned by somebody who says, "Come on in; it is safe to land" or, "It is safe to take off; the wind is blowing at such and such a velocity, the altimeter is reading so and so, your visibility is such and such". Those are simple safety procedures. I can understand now why the government does not give a damn about what the CNR does. I suppose a government that would permit the principal airport in a province of Canada to remain without a manned tower for safety's sake does not give a darn about what procedures are followed with respect to safety measures or investigations of accidents in any form of transportation. This is what I regret about the management of CNR, the management of Air Canada and the management of all other forms of transportation in Canada.

I regret their failure to bring pressure to bear on this government to correct the very obvious and glaring errors in our approach to safety in transportation in Canada. It is a simple thing to do. I sometimes wonder whether the government, recognizing that this is a principle which should be put into practice, is reluctant to do so because the suggestion essentially comes from an opposition member of parliament. For years they have neglected to do anything about this most serious situation.

I support the amendment of the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) because it condemns the management of the CNR. It pinpoints areas where that management has failed. I will continue to support the amendment until the management of Crown corporations like CNR and Air Canada begin to demonstrate a little more concern for the responsibilities and authority we give them rather than for mere management and the achievement of operational profits and, I might add, capital losses.

When members of management begin to demonstrate to me that they are concerned about the human aspects and are concerned about ensuring that the users of our transportation systems need not have cause to worry about the possibility of conflict of interest in the investigation of accidents, then I will start to change my mind and perhaps be a little bit more willing to give the CNR the amount of money it needs. We need an independent commission of inquiry to conduct impartial accident investigations. The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) agrees that we have done nothing. I leave it to him in his new appointment to face this problem and do something.

Mr. Norval Horner (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to speak on the subject of the railways, particularly the CNR. For the past 25 years I have observed the disintegration of CNR services. The CNR was created to provide service to the people of Canada; it was not created to ease the tax burden as a whole. Initially, many concessions were made to the railways to encourage them to build tracks across the country. In terms of real estate, those concessions are now paying off very well for them. Yet we hear the railways say they cannot haul grain, that it is not paying them to haul grain. I point out that they have an obligation to haul grain and to try to keep this country together. It is utter nonsense for them to talk in terms like that.

The CNR is an agency of the federal government and the government is certainly responsible for its actions. In this bill we find the CNR seeking money for capital expenditures, not to improve its railway services, not to slow down the disintegration of those services but to spend on other projects. It has chosen to turn its back on the tracks in order to build needles in the sky. People in railway management know that the rails are disintegrating and that they will not be able to provide service much longer. They are lagging behind in things they should be doing. They should be spending money on the repair of tracks in all parts of Canada so that the CNR can continue to provide the service which it was created to provide.

It seems that people in the CNR do the things they like to do, and any time they are met with a little competition they just ease out and let someone else take over. It is a good example for budding socialists of what happens when government shifts its responsibilities onto Crown agencies and tells them, "Run things the best you can and we will pour in all the money you need." Every year officials of the CNR come before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. They admit their failures and their faults, but then go back and continue to commit the same faults. Seemingly, it is a failure of the democratic process that these agencies increase in number, becoming more complex in their operations and thus making it more difficult for the will of the people to be carried out through their instrumentality.

There are three services that the CNR should be providing—carriage of freight, carriage of passengers and the movement of bulk commodities across Canada. But it has almost completely moved out of the freight business. One way it did this was by providing poor living accommodation for its employees. Its passenger business has gone the same way. I once came to Ottawa on the train. Most people you talk to have travelled on the train—once. They don't do it again. In fact, from the time I got on at Saskatoon until I reached Ottawa I had the impression that someone kept asking me was I not aware that I could fly and did not have to travel by train.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Now there is a failure on the part of the CNR to move bulk commodities and grain. We had an election campaign last year. We had "Build for a billion" stickers all across the Prairies. I imagine there are still a few of them around. But the very next year the Wheat Board says "we cannot fulfil contracts for grain because we cannot guarantee to get the wheat into export position." As recorded at page 84 of the minutes of the transport and communications committee of December 11 last, Mr. MacMillan said that their target for the period August 1 to December 8 was 67,628, cars and the actual supply of cars numbered 65,738. On the one hand we have the railways saying they reached their target, and on the other hand we have the minister in charge of the Wheat Board saying that they did not reach their target because cars were tied up with potash and lumber.

Then the joking Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) suggested there were too many Canadian cars in the United States and talked about sending an engine down to the United States to pick up loose Canadian cars and bring them back. When he does not know the answer to something, the Minister of Transport makes a joke. We are supposed to put up with that. We are not likely to get good performance from the CNR when we have that minister.

Of course, the Wheat Board said it disagreed with the railways. Here are two agencies of the federal government which negotiate with each other every year, yet they cannot agree on the number of boxcars over the period August 1 to December 8. Mr. Gibbings suggested in committee that the target was 61,000 cars, but only 43,000 cars were delivered. Surely to goodness we have the right to expect a better performance than that from these agencies? Are these people being paid the minimum wage so that we must accept that sort of performance from them? Surely we have the right to expect better than that from the Minister of Transport and from the minister responsible for the Wheat Board? These agencies work together all the time. They sit down together and set targets. Then they come here and report to our standing committee. Of course, they say that the language each one uses is different. The CNR is talking about car equivalents and the Wheat Board is talking about actual cars. We have all this sort of gibberish. Surely the people of Canada can expect better performance from the responsible ministers.

We are faced now with a situation where there is very little grain at the lakehead. The president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool says we are 5,000 boxcars short in Vancouver today. Next spring, when the grain is coming into the elevators, we will be back where we started, wondering what happened to the 2,000 boxcars that were supposed to solve the problem. The minister in charge of the Wheat Board, and the government, have been asked to supply more hopper cars to the railways, but we have not received any answers to our requests. Surely the government must take the matter in hand and see that the rolling-stock is provided so that grain and all other commodities in Canada can be moved.

In Saskatchewan, where I come from, we rely tremendously upon the railways. We produce more than we can use and have to export, so we depend upon the railroads. They will have to operate better in order to serve us. The answer is not to raise the Crowsnest Pass rate. This year the railways have been able to charge what they like for lumber, but they have not provided the service required by the people in the business. They offer no guarantee to improve the service, but simply ask for more money so they can build more hotels or more towers in places like Toronto.

Mr. Speaker, the CN was created by an act of parliament. We could have another act of parliament just as easily and restructure the CNR. The people involved should be made aware of their obligations and the service that should be provided for those Canadians who need it, and we should see that they carry out their responsibilities.

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to this debate very carefully for the last two days. It is a well-known fact that the railways were declared by parliament to be "works for the general advantage of Canada". I have been very surprised at what I have found since coming to Ottawa. We seem to be faced with a whole series of problems such as the failure of the government to provide auditing of both the CNR and Air Canada's financial operations. We have the problem of the annual ritual of this CNR financing act to delude the public. The financial affairs of Canada's two greatest public utilities are controlled by the government and by the government alone.

We are faced with the problem of discriminatory freight rates and the collective complaints of the western premiers that it is impossible to assess the internal operations of the CNR accurately. We are also faced with the problem of financial mismanagement of the Canadian National, its long-term debt and its loans to Air Canada. Worst of all, we are faced with the failure of this government to develop a comprehensive national transportation policy.

Mr. Speaker, I used to think that the Canadian National had a major obligation to provide service, to carry goods and passengers. In the area that I come from, passenger service is almost non-existent. We deliver grain to a line that has a 20-mile an hour speed limit and where they have been replacing an average of one railway tie per mile per year for the last eight years. In this area the Canadian National receives a subsidy of over $100 for every boxcar of grain that they haul out. That is on top of the freight rate. The boxcars that are delivered are often a disgrace. They require patching and repair by the local grain buyer before loading. The buyer is afraid to reject a car because they are so scarce that he might not get a replacement.

There is a CNR line in my area where they abandoned the last 12 or 13 miles of track to the last elevator, and now Canadian National are paying the trucking costs from the last elevator which is some 20 miles to the city of Swift Current. The transportation of grain in particular in this crop year is a complete fiasco and farm deliveries are 150 million bushels less than this time last year. The Canadian Wheat Board and the railways cannot agree on the grain targets and we still have not received any satisfaction on that question. Officials of the railway companies are questioning the Crowsnest Pass rates, and I have the uncomfortable feeling that they have had some encouragement from the Canadian Wheat Board, from the minister in charge of the Wheat Board or from Department of Transport officials.

Question after question remains unanswered. Is it the intention of this government to announce, some time in the near future, a comprehensive, long-range rail transportation policy which will provide not only for the effective rationalization of rail operations but also for some logical alternative to the current energy shortage? On what basis does this government justify an annual subsidization of approximately $180 million for uneconomic rail lines, when these funds could be diverted into research concerning both alternate modes of transportation and alternate fuel systems? Why has there been so little research into rail transportation in Canada? Why has there not been research by the appropriate government agencies as well as private interests? Is the lack of government support and initiative, both economically and morally, concerning rail transportation research a major reason for this unrealistic inertia?

Would it not be more economically feasible to shelve the STOL program between Montreal and Ottawa and use the money instead to modernize the already existing rail system between these two cities? By "modernize" I mean not only increasing the frequency of the number of trains between Ottawa and Montreal but also the running times of trains between these two cities. Would not the electrification of the line between Ottawa and Montreal be less expensive than the STOL program?

I should like to know this government's views concerning the use of railways as a means of long-haul passenger transportation in Canada. Have the railways seen their day in this respect? Should transportation by air be encouraged more and more as a means of long-haul passenger transportation in Canada? Many questions such as these remain unanswered.

Let us look at what our neighbours to the south are doing about rail transportation. I should like to quote from an article which appeared in the Wall Street Journal of December 28 which reads:

> The Interstate Commerce Commission issued the nation's first set of regulations designed to force improved intercity rail-passenger service.
> The rules apply to Amtrak and the railroads that run its trains, . . .
> They mandate a nationwide, toll-free telephone reservations and information system; enough seating space to meet "normal demands" of customers seeking reservations; minimum levels for train-on-time performance, baggage delivery, train connections and station hours, and a range of other standards for food, temperature control, sleeping cars, rest rooms and drinking fountains.
> The regulations take effect April 1. ICC chairman George M. Stafford said they are designed "to improve the overall quality of 'America' passenger train service and thereby make rail travel attractive, especially during the current energy crisis."

● (2120)

Newspaper after newspaper in the United States speaks of the updating of the transportation system in that country. According to one report, travel on Amtrak trains will go "right through the roof". Amtrak officials themselves now expect ridership to leap 30 per cent next year, double what they previously predicted. I quote once more from the Wall Street Journal of December 28:

> —Amtrak has been flooded with state bids for new routes. Nebraska would like an Omaha-Kansas City train, Colorado a Denver-Kansas City route, Missouri a Kansas City-St. Louis route, and Ohio a Cincinnati-Columbus-Cleveland run. "I've had to put a map on my wall showing all the inquiries and expected inquiries. It looks like a . . . spider web," an Amtrak state-relations official says.

What is the general situation in Canada, Mr. Speaker? There are only two passenger rail lines in all of Canada which are not subsidized—the Quebec-North Shore-Labrador line, because it has never applied, and the CPR's Esquimalt-Nanaimo route on Vancouver Island because upon investigation it was found that the rail line had done nothing to improve its services, thus the request for application was denied. The railways need only apply once for abandonment of passenger service. Upon initial application the Canadian Transport Commission undertakes a study of the area to review the effects abandonment would have on the area. If these effects are thought to be detrimental to the population, the service is continued under a subsidy which amounts to 80 per cent of the loss claimed. In the following years an annual claim is made and audited by CTC officials. Each year over $100 million is expended in subsidies allotted to unprofitable railway services. A Canadian Transport Commission spokesman is quoted as saying that there are no passenger train lines in Canada making any money.

The main reason the abandonment procedure operates in this manner is that the 1967 National Transportation Act encourages the diversion of funds into unprofitable operations rather than into the research and development of advanced railway technology. The most logical alternative to the wasting of federal moneys on these unprofitable operations would be to divert a portion of the funds into research for more effective and efficient services. Electrification is a viable consideration. The modernization of railways, as represented by their electrification, has yet to start in Canada. Seventy per cent of gross ton-miles are generated by electric traction in West Germany, France and Japan. The capital investment required by electrification is far outweighted by the resultant service. The benefits entailed from this type of modernization include lower capital and maintenance costs of locomotives, longer life, higher availability, better adhesion, higher speed, better braking performance and superior environmental characteristics.

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, the railways in Canada have been declared to be works which are for the general advantage of the public of Canada. I think the taxpayer of this country is entitled to expect a better shake from the government in the matter of transportation.

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, we are debating the amendments to this bill. My colleagues tell me that it does not much matter whether this bill passes or not, because CN and Air Canada will spend the money anyway. So why are we debating this bill if the money is to be spent? Is this not a mockery of parliament?

The amendment before us seeks to deny Canadian National Railways so many millions of dollars which are to be spent on the huge structure known as the tower in Toronto. I am told that the tower is two-thirds completed. If the amendment passes, will the tower stand two-thirds finished and never be completed, or will it be finished in any event? Therefore I think this debate is ridiculous. We should pass the bill and get it over with, because the tower is three-quarters finished anyway. Let us not be stupid.

[Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek).]

A member to my right talked about the CNR as an example of socialist inefficiency. Apparently CN service is very poor. Well, if those fellows want to talk about socialists, let me tell them some things.

An hon. Member: You are not a socialist, are you?

Mr. Nesdoly: You bet I am, and proud of it. They say that Canadian National gives poor service, that it does not do the job. I admit the service is poor and that the railway does not do its job. But the service is not as poor as the service of the CPR. Actually, it is a bit better. The previous speaker mentioned how wonderful are the railway companies in the United States, how well they are doing, and so on. Mr. Speaker, they are going bankrupt left and right and there is no end in sight to the trend of bankruptcies.

I was in Washington during the week of November 26 to November 30. I was at a dinner given in the Canadian embassy. One chap with whom I had the honour of speaking said, "You know, I was in Canada three years ago. My, you guys have a wonderful railroad service." I asked him which railroad he travelled on. He said, "It was one of those government operations." I said, "Was it the Canadian National?" He said, "Yes, that's it" Further, he said that passenger service on the Canadian National was ten times better than anything he had ever seen in the United States. So who do you believe, the man who has travelled on Canadian and American trains or the Wall Street Journal?

The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) said yesterday in his speech that he had fought against the concept of taking the railroad station from downtown Ottawa to the suburbs. He neglected to say that Canadian National was never in favour of the move and that the Conservative government of the day forced the move to the outskirts of Ottawa. So what are members to my right talking about?

Some complain that Canadian National Railways are getting too much into real estate. Some members have mentioned the CN tower in Toronto. I agree with some hon. members on one or two small points. For example, I do not think the Canadian National should hang on to railway rights-of-way which it secured about 40 years ago, rights-of-way on which it has no intention of building rail lines.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): It sold them in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Nesdoly: I am talking about the right-of-way from St. Walburg to Loon Lake. No railway line has been built. That is to say, the railway is hanging on to the choice piece of property in the village. The village is expanding. It cannot expand more because it is surrounded by an Indian reserve. There are 50 housing lots on the railroad right-of-way, but the railway says, "We do not want to give up property because some day we may build a rail line on it". Big deal! They are trying to abandon 400 miles of line in my constituency, but claim they need this property for possible future lines. That will be the day!

One of the problems with CN concerns management. Too often we have appointed to the board of directors, or to the office of vice-president or president, men who know nothing about the railroad, men who were not brought up on the railroad or know how to run one. We have tended to appoint to the big paying positions political hacks. A man may not have done too well in the House of Commons, so he is made president or vice-president of CNR.

I want to tell members to my right a little more. There is a great problem with regard to boxcars and the movement of wheat. I am concerned about the movement of grain. I understand that at the present time CNR is repairing 900 grain cars. Some of them are battered and have greatly depreciated. These repairs are being carried out in Winnipeg and somewhere in Quebec. My inquiries also indicate that Canadian Pacific is doing absolutely nothing about repairing or buying new cars. At least the CNR is making an effort.

The basis of our problems is that we expect CNR to operate like the CPR. CNR is a people's railroad: it must serve the people of Canada but not on the same basis as the CPR. This is what our party will ensure when we form the government some day.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nesdoly: That will happen some day. We will operate the CNR and CPR when we take over. We will rationalize the transportation policy of this country. There will no longer be short Air Canada flights between Ottawa and Montreal. By the time a plane gets up 13,000 feet it is time to start coming down. It then takes two hours to get from Dorval to downtown Montreal. It only takes two hours to drive from here to the Queen Elizabeth Hotel. For short run passenger service trains are the only logical answer. We should forget about aeroplanes; they use a lot of energy.

An hon. Member: Do you know where Montreal is?

Mr. Nesdoly: Yes, I have been there a few times. There have been complaints about inadequate passenger service. I live in northern Saskatchewan. I travel from Saskatoon on the CNR passenger train. That is a good service. In southern Saskatchewan they do not have good service. That is because CPR runs through Regina. In my area we are satisfied with the passenger service.

I have read many articles and reports on state-operated railways. Some of the most efficient railways in the world today are being operated in France, Germany and Italy.

Mr. Stanfield: What about Japan?

Mr. Nesdoly: These are state-operated railways. The taxpayer has been underwriting the losses of the CPR for the past 50 or 100 years: let us not be gullible about that. There are many railway companies in the country south of us. They are all going bankrupt. Pennsylvania went bankrupt a while ago. I guess that is a railroad called Pennsylvania. Our railroads also went bankrupt. It is up to the government of Canada to resurrect them. The government did not bail them out as they bailed out the shareholders, the people who had money in the railroads.

Until the government of Canada has the guts to make the railroad system a people's railroad we will not have a transportation system that will satisfy the needs of the Canadian people.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on the allocation of money to Canadian National Railways and Air Canada, and in particular on the amendments of the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) having to do with funds for hotels and towers. I wish to speak briefly about a hotel with which I am somewhat familiar. It is located in a city close to where I live, the Hotel McDonald. The hon. member mentioned that its profits are somewhat low. I know they have a manager problem. They have night managers, day managers, assistant managers, food control managers, beverage control managers, and I suspect they even have a manager who is available in case all those managers happen to be out at the same time. I am familiar with the time it had problems and ten people were fired. Another manager was hired to find out the problem. As the hon. member for Mississauga said, it is no wonder the McDonald made only $15,000 in 1971, and $31,000 in 1972 with an investment of $8.3 million. In addition, this hotel gets most of the convention traffic in the city of Edmonton.

I wish to refer for a moment to Mr. MacMillan's opening remarks when he appeared before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. He said:

> Our activities today include such things as telecommunications, hotels, trucking, passenger buses, marine services, real estate, industrial location, international consulting, pipeline studies, and the provision of transportation and telecommunications expertise for large-scale resource development. And, without neglecting our basic job of providing good rail transportation, we are expanding in many of these fields and looking towards other fields of diversification.

These amendments single out only two of the things in which the railways are involved, namely, hotels and towers. Air Canada has 21 vice-presidents. I wonder how many vice-presidents are necessary for CNR to handle all the diversification in which they are involved. I have no trouble in supporting these two amendments. Even though CNR has been traditionally involved in hotels, I believe these amendments point out that parliament is concerned about the diversification of the CNR into these many facets. The CNR should have to borrow the money for hotels, TV in hotels and tourist attractions in Toronto from other sources. They should be involved in the encouragement of passenger and freight service and safety as well as providing luxurious hotels and towers.

In committee I asked about the safety record of CNR. I pointed out that I understood it was poor. I received a comparison with the United States. I then pointed out that only $19 million per year was put into improving railway crossings. I stated it should be necessary to put more funds into the updating of railway crossings because 85 per cent of them are not marked with flashing lights. Perhaps this is one reason for the poor safety record of CNR. The answer I received is that it is necessary to accelerate the program but it will be necessary to substantially increase the funds available. I was told these level crossing projects have become very expensive and it will take several million dollars to update them.

The following was pointed out to me by a constituent, and I quote from his letter of July 9:

> The daily passenger makes a round trip from Calgary, Drumheller, Camrose and Edmonton. This passenger train does not always blow the whistle. Now, to the best of my knowledge, the said passenger has had two accidents this year about two months apart.
>
> One was near Edmonton where a gravel truck was hit. The other accident, I believe, was between Drumheller and Calgary. It killed all six passengers in the car. This is the CNR.

● (2140)

Soon after he had pointed this out to me by letter—and of course I notified the CNR—he sent me a further letter telling me that a dayliner had hit a truck and two people had been killed. So there are problems and, as my hon. friend from Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) stated, the CTC has also expressed this opinion in a report. Instead of towers, hotels and STOL aircraft providing service between Montreal and Ottawa, perhaps we should be more concerned about passenger train service. We learn that by the end of 1971 the CTC had received 69 applications for discontinuance covering virtually all passenger transportation services in Canada. The significance of this is clear. The railways are not prepared to provide any passenger service whatsoever unless subsidies are available from the government and the government is prepared to provide such subsidies in the public interest.

Another omission which concerns me is the lack of effective research. When the president of the CN was before the committee I asked why the transcontinental train only arrives on schedule 34 per cent of the time. He told me—and I was surprised at his answer—that our winter conditions made it difficult to get these trains across Canada on time. The biggest problem, apparently, was the cold—the icy winds that affect the running of the trains. I asked whether any research had been carried out to overcome this problem, perhaps through the better heating of these cars. Apparently none has been carried out up to this time. I believe the railway should become more deeply involved in researching better means of transporting people across the country.

These, Mr. Speaker, are some of the reasons I feel we should support the amendment before us. I feel the CNR should get away from all this diversification and become more concerned in the handling of freight and passengers. That was its business to start with, and it should continue to be so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peter Reilly (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I shall, of course, ask hon. members to support the amendments before them. At the same time I should like to make a few remarks of my own about both Canadian National and Air Canada. Each of these concerns is a public utility in the true sense of the word. A public utility is created, not as an occasion for self-aggrandizement, not to build empires but to serve the public where it is either impossible or undesirable for private enterprise to do so. And may I say to my demi-semi, pretend-socialist friends—if there are any of them here—that I have not come here to sing the praises of the Canadian Pacific, whose performance I believe to be as abominable as that of any other transportation company in this country. After having been deeded half the country to provide transportation where it was needed, they goofed, they blew it, they built themselves into a giant multinational corporation, one could almost call it.

[Mr. Schellenberger.]

Mr. MacKay: Multicorporate corporation, perhaps?

Mr. Reilly: Yes, multicorporate corporation, as someone near me says. I would suppose that in the case of Canadian National it would devote itself to the movement of goods from point to point in this country where it was necessary to do so. Instead, what did we see in the annual report? We see not only luxury hotels and communications towers, but satellites, trucking companies and Lord knows what else.

What we do not see is much evidence of the successful movement of people and the moving of goods such as grain and lumber from place to place in this country. And there are people who are being very badly hurt by this failure. In fact, because of the policy of the railroads, which it pleases their highly-paid bosses to call rationalization, which usually means screwing the people in one way or another, entire towns have disappeared from the west. Anyone who knows the Prairies can confirm this. But they do not care about that. In the financial statement we read that in 1972 Canadian National carried record amounts of traffic, earned the highest revenues in its history and "continued its steady improvement in over-all financial results which has taken place in recent years". Then the company's president, Mr. MacMillan, says at the conclusion of his commentary:

> The management and board of directors of Canadian National look forward to a continuation of the steady progress toward planned objectives which has taken place in recent years. They recognize the contribution made to this progress by the thousands of men and women who make up Canadian National—

And so on. Then they tell us they lost $17.8 million. I grant you that is a heck of a lot better than the $67.5 million they lost in 1960, but if this is their best year, by my reckoning it is going to take them until 1980 to break even at the rate they are going. That is not what I would call running a company very well.

As to Air Canada, may I say I have travelled hundreds of thousands of miles in aircraft of every conceivable kind, to almost every point in this world, over the last 20 years. I want to tell hon. members I have had better service on Air Congo than I have had on a great many Air Canada flights. Begin with the necessary task of making a reservation in Ottawa to go to Montreal, Toronto, Chicago or wherever. Here we are, in the capital of Canada, the seat of parliament. When ones phones for a reservation, who picks up the phone? Somebody in Montreal. It used to be one could telephone to the airport and some friendly person would say, "Better hang back and not spend the money on a cab to come out here, because the whether is bad and the plane may not get off the ground." You cannot do that now, because in Montreal they don't know what is happening here in Ottawa and they seem to have no way of finding out. Indeed, you are lucky if you can find someone to answer the phone in the first place. But if you surmount that obstacle, if you get a reservation and find there is a reasonable probability that the plane will take off, you board the aircraft. If you are only going to Toronto or Montreal it is not very important, but if you are going out west, as a great many members of this House have to do—

An hon. Member: Don't go.

Mr. Reilly: —or any appreciable distance, sooner or later you will have to eat. And here begins one of the more traumatic experiences a human being has ever been asked to suffer —plastic food served in plastic containers, very often by plastic people. The labour relations of the airline are so bad that when I was considering travelling from here to Toronto next weekend I found myself reflexively thinking, "God, I had better find out whether there is a strike on"—because their history of labour relations has been so turbulent, as the former minister of labour sitting over there knows very well.

● (2150)

I have been fairly harsh on both these Crown corporations, and this is not according to my policy. I do not think that Crown corporations ought to be jumped on when it is not always their fault that things go wrong. The real responsibility lies over there in the empty pew which is sometimes occupied by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). The real responsibility lies with this government which has failed to come up with any national, rational transportation policy. I see the parliamentary secretary here, but the minister is absent; in any event, his presence would not affect the outcome.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You are not here too often yourself.

Mr. Reilly: I am here when it is important to be here. As I was saying, the real fault lies with the government, which has failed to give the country a rational policy, which has failed to realize the needs of Canadians from coast to coast, and which has failed consistently to realize how important it is to those people to be able to move themselves and move their manufactures to market.

Every day in this House we hear questions asked by worried members on this side of hon. gentlemen opposite concerning why wheat cannot be moved, why lumber cannot be moved and why other manufactures cannot be moved. Lately, faced with a crucial shortage in eastern Canada of oil and other petroleum products, questions have been directed to our capacity to move oil products. But there simply is no rational transportation policy in this country.

I could go on at some length about the traumatic experience it is to travel by rail. For myself, I would sooner go by bus. Anyone who has travelled on a train in this country knows what it is like to try to find the dining car, to be directed 98 cars to the rear and then to be told by a surly person when you get there that the snackbar is closed and you have to get something from a candy dispenser.

Then, again, anyone who has travelled on our national airline knows how fouled up the computers get; they know that getting from point A to point B is a calamitous business. As one of my colleagues has said, the only thing on which you can congratulate Air Canada is its non-stop flights between airports.

We will continue to have these problems until this government puts its shoulder to the wheel.

An hon. Member: Or until it changes.

Mr. Reilly: Or, as my hon. friend says, until it changes. But short of that, we will continue to have these problems until the government realizes the vital importance of transportation to this country that spans so broad a distance and is populated by so few people. Some of them are remoter than others, off the main line and off the beaten track, but they are Canadians nevertheless and are entitled to service. Until this government begins to think about these problems and to plan for them, until it gives us a rational transportation policy, Canadians will continue to worry about their industries, the marketing of their produce and the supply of the necessities of life. So far this government has shown no inclination to give thought to these matters.

The performance of the Minister of Transport has gotten to be one of the grislier jokes of the daily question period.

An hon. Member: "Farce majeure."

Mr. Reilly: Yes. There is no apparent willingness on the part of the government to tackle these problems, just as it has failed to tackle other major problems that have been brought before this parliament. The most passion I have ever seen directed by this government toward any piece of legislation was the first amendment it threw at us last January to cover up the fact that because of such high unemployment it was necessary to overspend by $800 million the amount that had been estimated for the unemployment insurance fund.

As I have said, daily we hear questions being asked by worried representatives of the Canadian people, and until the government accepts its responsibility we will continue to worry on behalf of the Canadian people.

May I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House agree to call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

Adjournment Debate

URBAN AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN FEDERAL SHARE OF COST OF RAIL LINE RELOCATION IN VIEW OF ENERGY CRISIS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, on December 21 I directed a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) concerning whether or not the minister was now considering increasing the 50 per cent federal government cost-sharing formula for rail line relocation in Canadian cities in an effort to promote intercity rail transit in co-operation with the municipalities and provinces.

As could have been expected, the answer from the minister was uninformative. He said that my question would be best answered when legislation is introduced. One has to wonder, however, when any legislation concerning this subject will be forthcoming from the government. In view of the energy crisis, it is indeed surprising that there is no federal policy regarding intercity rail transportation or on any means of urban transportation, for that matter.

Actually, the question I directed to the minister concerns two interrelated subjects: rail line relocation and intercity rail transportation, which may fall more under the realm of the Department of Transport than the Department of Urban Affairs. Many Canadian cities are planning to relocate railway tracks away from downtown areas, thus freeing large amounts of property for urban development. One tremendous advantage inherent in such a relocation is that connections from these could provide a means of transporting people to and from the inner city. With the possiblity of fuel shortages in Canada this winter and the prospect that these shortages may extend for some time to come, it seems imperative that the government give consideration to this and other suggestions which might improve intercity transportation as a means of conserving energy.

Members of this House are only too familiar with those problems which have arisen and will continue to arise from the energy crisis. Shortages of oil and gasoline necessitate that people be encouraged to leave their automobiles at home and use public modes of transport wherever possible. The best way to encourage such a transformation in the public's attitude is by developing public transportation systems which are both more efficient and economical than the private automobile.

Technology has provided us with such rapid transit systems. However, the federal government has done little to improve the current situation. It gives no leadership and has no real policy. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) summed up the government's attitude regarding urban transportation very well when on December 21 he declared:

> We cannot change these things overnight.

The minister added:

> There is no doubt this is something that we would like to do and we will do it wherever possible.

● (2200)

The question, of course, is when? I am no expert on the subjects of transportation and energy, but one does not need to have any particular expertise in these fields to realize that Canada, like other countries, has serious petroleum shortages and inadequate urban transportation facilities. The thing that makes us unique is that we do not even have a coherent set of policies to deal with these problems.

One example of the way in which rapid transit lines could be added to existing or relocated corridors can be seen in a proposal by the Metro Toronto Transportation Commission. A study by the commission and Canadian Pacific Railway shows that the Canadian National main line corridor through east-end Toronto and Scarborough could have a 20-mile long, rapid transit line added to it at a reasonable cost. This line would provide transit for thousands daily and at the same time ease gas shortages and relieve inner-city traffic congestion and pollution. It is proposals such as this that the government should now be considering for all of Canada's urban regions, not just for some.

The federal government's decision, announced on Monday, to provide a $10 million grant to launch a province-operated commuter rail service between Richmond Hill and Toronto's Union Station is a step in the right direction. However, it should be noted that this grant, which will provide long rail service, marks only the first time that the senior level of government has directly financed a commuter service in Canada.

If the federal government is really serious about the need for public transit as an alternative to the automobile, why is it not supplying more money and leadership to the provinces to help speed the provision of new transportation services? In the city of Ottawa, at least, what the government appears to be doing is encouraging people to bring their cars into the core area. I refer to the Department of Public Works and its intention to construct a mammoth underground parking garage in the heart of the downtown area. This will encourage public employees to bring their cars to work rather than seek out public transportation. The logic escapes me.

Logic is what the United States has been using for the past several years in developing policies to deal with urban congestion and pollution. Like us, they have a long way to go, but they do have a head start on most countries. Long before the advent of the energy crisis, the Americans were formulating long-range urban transit policy. The federal government has provided the initiative and the majority of funds which have enabled governments to come to grips with the problem. Instead of building more freeways, they are building more buses and commuter trains. In these regions, particularly New York and New Jersey, new public transportation networks are now being tested as more and more motorists are opting for buses and, to a lesser extent, trains because of high fuel costs. The U.S. government's foresight is now paying off. This is an example we should have followed. I should also mention the fact that with the serious petroleum shortages, the United States is bringing back transcontinental railways in a big way. Railways once again will be trafficking large numbers of people across the country and across the states.

We in Canada should also look to the past for solutions for the future. The railway was responsible for opening up this country and in no small way has contributed toward our development and prosperity. It is perhaps time to resurrect the locomotive and to once again utilize it as a means of ferrying persons across the provinces and across Canada. Such a revitalization of our rail lines would provide Canadians with an alternative means of transportation over relatively long distances, to say nothing of the savings in petroleum.

The passenger services currently being provided by our two national railways are at present neither efficient nor economical and do not operate on a sufficient scale to handle large numbers of people. This situation should be changed. Our railways should be encouraged to expand their passenger operations and lower their fares. As in the case in the United States, the federal government could provide subsidies to the companies to finance such an expansion. Perhaps then Canadians would leave their cars at home when travelling long distances.

In conclusion, then, I believe it is time the government got around to formulating a policy to deal with inner-city transportation. One means of providing a better urban transit system might be via rail lines connected to relocated corridors; but the actual mode chosen is not really that important. As well, the government should consider reviving railways throughout the country. What is important, though, is that something be done soon to deal with the problems which are arising. However, based on what we have seen thus far in the way of policy, I am not optimistic.

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, to suggest that the government consider amending a proposed cost-sharing formula on legislation yet to be introduced in this House, although it will be soon, is to ask for a hypothetical response to a hypothetical situation. There is nothing to indicate that the proposed 50 per cent federal cost-sharing in railway relocation projects is not adequate. Moreover, to suggest that the cost-sharing be increased to promote intercity rail transit is to miss entirely the main purpose of the railway relocation legislation.

The proposed measure is intended for intracity, not intercity, application. It is designed, as will be readily apparent when the bill is introduced, to apply to cities where obsolete or underused railway facilities—tracks, yards, terminals—are formidable obstacles to planned and orderly urban development. Essential intercity lines will not be reduced in capacity or efficiency. The provisions in the railway relocation legislation are intended to modify the flow of traffic on lines in cities or to relocate lines entirely in accordance with urban plans formulated by the provinces and their municipalities.

Where a rail line is relocated, the property thus vacated may be put to any number of uses in accordance with the priorities established by such plans. These priorities can include the provision of improved and expanded rapid transit facilities in cities. Railway rights-of-way will, in many cases, provide excellent corridors for rapid public transit systems. It is our hope, in view of the energy crisis and for environmental considerations generally, that the municipalities will give top priorities to rapid transit systems in their urban plans prepared for railway relocation.

Of much more potential importance for intercity transit is the national transportation development corporation which the minister proposed, on behalf of the government, last October in Edmonton at the second and highly successful trilevel conference. He stated at the time that the federal government was making the proposal contingent on the kind of response obtained from the provinces. I can report that officials of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Department of Transport and officials responsible for urban affairs have since been seeking the views of the provinces on the desirability of such a national corporation, and everywhere that response has been positive. Such a national agency will help marshall our resources to the task of meeting current and future needs in public transportation and will go some way to meeting the further demands created by the energy situation.

The need for such an agency is obvious, both on economic grounds as well as in the light of emerging energy needs. The domestic market for public transportation systems will amount to at least $5 billion over the next two decades, and we have the opportunity now to develop an integrated public transportation system that will meet, in an energy conserving way, the transit needs generated by large cities and small cities, as well as among cities.

I would like to remind hon. members also that the federal government has been carefully examining its overall role in urban transportation as was outlined in the last throne speech, and it will consult the provinces on this when the examination has been concluded. It is prepared to do this to improve and strengthen the urban environment for the future as well as to meet more pressing current needs as illustrated by the energy situation.

IMMIGRATION—TRANSPORTING OF CHILEAN REFUGEES TO CANADA BY GOVERNMENT PLANE—NUMBER INVOLVED—SCREENING—GRANTED OF LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, on November 30, 1973, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) announced measures to assist Chilean refugees wishing to come to Canada. At that time the minister announced that in line with Canada's ongoing refugee program, the government would relax selection criteria, would accelerate immigration processing, provide language training and job placement services, assistance to cover transportation costs, financial assistance to provide for accommodation, winter clothing and other such special support to facilitate early establishment. The minister at that time said that as of that date 20 people had arrived in Canada, 50 had received their visas and the applications of 125 others were being processed as quickly as possible.

On December 21, 1973, about one month after his initial announcement to the House, the minister further announced that applications respecting approximately 1,400 persons had been received. He said that 184 visas had been issued and up to 213 additional visas could be issued once applicants had responded to the request that they come forward for their medical examinations. The minister went on to say that all applications received as of that date ought to be completed by January 31, 1974, with many being completed before the end of December, 1973. Well, Mr. Speaker, to date no refugees have landed in Canada since the minister's first announcement of November 30, 1973.

There are four groups of persons in Chile who have requested the aid of the Canadian government in leaving that country. These include Chileans who have sought refuge in the Canadian embassy; those who are seeking entry to Canada through normal, but relaxed immigration procedures; another group who are hiding in Santiago and are being hunted by the military junta; and finally those refugees, Chilean and non-Chilean, who are presently sheltered in six specially created United Nations refugee camps. By way of clarification it should be noted that those who have applied for visas on a normal basis have done so with a view to bettering their personal economic positions, as many have lost their jobs since the junta takeover. The large majority of these people have no political problems with the ruling military. On the other end of the spectrum, those who are in hiding have little or no hope of escape. They are in hiding and we do not know who they are or where they are.

The last group, those who are being cared for under the United Nations refugee program, is the group which both needs and at the same time can benefit from the minister's announced accelerated immigration program. United Nations figures of December 27 showed that 509 refugees were in camps on that day, 1,147 foreigners were on UN lists but living in the city, 123 in embassies and 23 in prison.

The minister's statement in the House that Canada was expanding its aid to refugees created a good deal of optimism and hope among UN officials and the refugees. But in actual practice the announced policy was not much relaxed, and on the contrary was found to be very strict. There were lengthy interviews, first about professional capacity, then questioning about political ideology and party affiliation, followed by medical examinations, a check-out with Ottawa and a wait of several weeks. Some later received curt, two-paragraph letters, of which I have a copy here, affirming rejection by Canada because "your admittance to Canada would be contrary to the public interest of the Canadian people." As a matter of fact, the situation has become so confusing and contradictory that Mr. Ernest Schlatter, the UN High Commissioner for Refugees in Santiago, directed a letter to the Canadian ambassador in Chile, Mr. Ross, on December 28 complaining of Canada's policy in the UN operation.

Three common complaints from UN refugee camps have been that the Canadian immigration officials presume the clients to be guilty as criminal terrorists until proven innocent. The refugees have also spoken bitterly of police-type interrogation. Thirdly, the manner in which the Canadian officials have gone about assisting these refugees appears contrary to what the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in his statement referred to as humanitarian considerations. The minister has not cleared up to my satisfaction the disposition of the refugees in the UN camps who have applied for entry to Canada. For example, we do not know how many from the UN camps have applied to come to Canada and what their status will be if the UN camps are closed as scheduled on February 3.

The minister has obfuscated the whole issue by quoting regular immigrant concerns about Canada's winter weather and by using meaningless phrases such as "importing revolution," "real refugees," "revolutionaries in masquerade" and his classic statement that "all 124 immigrants are clean." Who, in heaven's name, does the minister think overthrew the democratically elected government? The terrorists and revolutionaries are in the military junta, not in the refugee camps. Why does the government regard the Latin-American refugee who has taken a stand against an oppressive, dictatorial, guerrilla regime as a criminal terrorist and not a freedom fighter, a patriot striving to build a world of justice and decency?

In recognizing the military junta diplomatically, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) announced that such recognition did not imply agreement with the junta. Yet his colleague the Minister of Manpower and Immigration appears not to have understood this, for he seems to regard it as his duty to hand over those refugees to the illegal junta, those who have most opposed the junta and who have most to fear at the hands of the military. I cannot help but feel that in the minister's view General Pinochet could fulfil the qualifications he has made necessary for the refugees. I am sure the minister could find him "clean."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I think it no exaggeration to say that the statement we have just heard is an abuse of the proceedings on adjournment. Yesterday the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) raised a supplementary question with respect to whether the government is considering the establishment of scholarships for refugee students who would like to get out of Chile; tonight he lectures us on another question having to do with Chileans coming here, but not scholarships. Other hon. members opposite, when they make an attempt to change the subject on which they originally asked a question, at least refer to the subject matter of the original question. The hon. member opposite has not favoured us with that courtesy this evening.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) have already adequately replied to the charges made tonight by the hon. member for Nickel Belt. As I have said, the charges are not, in any event, the subject matter which is before us.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—NEGOTIATIONS WITH MARITIME EMPLOYERS' ASSOCIATION ON GUARANTEEING OF LOANS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a few words to the parliamentary secretary tonight arising out of a situation started many months ago on the Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec docks with regard to early retirement and an alleged undertaking by the government of Canada to guarantee full employment for the workers. I hope I have not misquoted the minister on this.

On two occasions, first on December 10 and again yesterday, I asked questions of the minister relating to the intentions of the government with respect to the guaranteeing of certain loans incurred by the Maritime Employers' Association to effect the early retirement of slightly over 500 waterfront workers in those three ports. The minister indicated to me on one occasion that he did not really know what I was talking about, and then he recalled that there was a guarantee to assist these people. Yesterday he was not certain what had happened. He was vague about it and indicated that he would try to find out something for me for today.

What we are talking about is the underwriting of loans of approximately $12 million for the Maritime Employers' Association, which is essentially a private group representing private industry and private interests based in Montreal but in fact representing east coast ports as well. I am concerned that a deal was made some time ago. I cannot imagine the Royal Bank of Canada or the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce extending to the Maritime Employers' Association something like $9 million or $10 million on the basis of the figures which in less than eight or nine months had proven to be deficient, so I must conclude that some other assurance was given to the banks. There must have been an undertaking given to the banks by the government that it would do everything in its power to effect full employment; that is, a guarantee of work through all these three ports. That is the only way I can imagine the banks would lend that amount of money to the Maritime Employers' Association.

I am sure the government at the time did not in deed or in word, maybe by implication but not by indication, guarantee the loan to the Maritime Employers' Association which is virtually on the brink of bankruptcy: they cannot meet their commitments to the banks.

I have before me a copy of the proceedings of a meeting of the Maritime Employers' Association held in Montreal on Thursday, December 13, at 2.30 p.m. This copy was distributed on December 19, 1973. I want to read one or two parts of this extract. We are dealing here with the report of A. E. Masters, president of MEA, to member companies. This company represents employers such as Atlantic Container Line (Canada) Ltd., Cast North America Limited, Clarke Transportation Canada Ltd., Federal Commerce and Navigation Co. Ltd., Kerr Steamships (Canada) Limited, Montreal Shipping Company Ltd., and so on. I think we all know their names.

In that report to the members, Mr. Masters deals with the total cost of the early retirement program, which was to run about $7 million originally and was financed by the Royal Bank and the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce on the basis of cargo projection flows starting in May. These projections have now proved deficient. He deals with the three ways in which that deficiency occurred. There was a decline in cargo handled at the three river ports. The cargo shift from bulk to mechanized methods was taking place at a more rapid rate than had been anticipated and, finally, productivity had increased. That is fine and probably absolutely accurate. What concerns me has to do with the following part of the report which I now quote:

> Your board is meeting with officials of the federal government in the Departments of Finance, Treasury Board and Transport immediately after this meeting with a view to finalizing the refinancing of your association's loans.

Mr. Masters then instructed directors of MEA not to ask questions, not to discuss this because meetings were to take place that very afternoon. I am concerned about the impact on the port of Halifax of the 75-cent per ton cargo assessment put on just a few days ago to help offset pension and administration costs. We are concerned about this. Mr. Masters told the meeting not to make a fuss, not to make a noise because they were going to get the federal government to underwrite the loan, so that the cargo assessment will not have to go up for the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec. The people of Halifax are understandably concerned.

I am concerned about the confusion and about what the government intends to do. Will it guarantee the loans and permit MEA to function for a month or two after the loans have been guaranteed, and then simply let them fold their tents, declare to the banks their inability to meet the loan and let the Canadian taxpayer pick up the tab? On the one hand there is increased assessment in Halifax and there is increased assessment in the port of Saint John. This will come about quickly. I hope this evening the hon. member who acted previously as parliamentary secretary can tell us of the intentions of the government with respect to these loans.

Is the government to guarantee these loans? Are we in danger of having to repay the loans to the banks? If so, what compensation is to be offered to the ports of Vancouver, Halifax, Saint John, New Brunswick, etc., and to other ports? Finally, I am concerned about the attitude of the Department of Transport, the National Harbours Board and what-have-you about the establishment of the Maritime Employers' Association in the port of Halifax, as that port can operate at a fraction of the cost which is now being charged against administration in Montreal. I know the hon. member will do his best to answer these questions. I suggest to him that his failure to do so tonight will have me on my feet again before the House adjourns.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) yesterday, as recorded at pages 9014 and 9015 of Hansard, answered in a clear manner matters raised by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall). The Maritime Employers' Association is a corporation incorporated under part II of the Canada Corporations Act that represents some 85 operators who employ International Longshoremen's Association labour in the major eastern Canadian ports. There are several separate labour agreements, one of which is for the three St. Lawrence River ports of Quebec, Trois-Rivières and Montreal, for a three-year period ending December 31, 1974.

Difficulty was experienced in the early stages of this contract due to changing cargo patterns, including the high level of containerization and diversion to other ports and the ILA strike in these ports in 1972, finally settled by an act of parliament and by arbitration which cost MEA a great deal of money to support a wage-guarantee program. In May of 1973 a reduction of some 550 men in the work force was accomplished for which MEA borrowed $7.2 million with an undertaking from NHB that the matter would be brought to the attention of the government if results showed that conventional financing was too great a burden for MEA. This present recommendation is therefore in fulfilment of that undertaking. The repayment program for these funds has not been met and cannot be met within the current labour agreement.

The NHB has proposed to the government that some arrangements be made to guarantee bank loans incurred by MEA for the purpose of the early retirement program for surplus longshoremen. This will remain an MEA obligation entirely and will be repaid out of MEA charges made at Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec.

There is no relationship between the MEA labour contract in these three St. Lawrence ports and the east coast ports. These are completely separate contracts and neither Halifax nor Saint John could be involved. Funds for each port in the NHB system are kept separate and distinct, and funds from Saint John and Halifax could not be used to pay any obligations in the St. Lawrence ports.

The basis of the funds to support this guarantee is reserved funds invested in government bonds from the three St. Lawrence ports out of prior years' profitable port operations. In the event that the government was ever called on to make good such a guarantee, these reserve funds would be made available by the NHB for this purpose. These total now about $30 million. There are no similar funds of any kind in the port of Halifax, and in fact the government was required to provide $1 million in the 1973 estimates to cover the operating loss of that port. There are only about $2 million of similar funds in the port of Saint John, and the NHB has pledged that this will be used for capital improvements in the port. The government has not yet completely reviewed the NHB proposal, so detailed comments are rather premature.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

APPOINTMENT OF GRANT DEACHMAN TO TARIFF BOARD

Question No. 1,923—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What were the considerations that led to the appointment of Mr. Grant Deachman of Vancouver, formerly M.P. for Vancouver Quadra, to the Tariff Board, as announced by the Minister of Finance on April 10, 1973?

2. Did the fact that he was at one time a member of the executive committee of the Liberal Party of Canada have a bearing on his appointment?

3. Did the fact that he was formerly a Liberal Member of Parliament have a bearing on his appointment?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): 1. In a reply to an oral question in the House on April 11, 1973, it was suggested that the appointee had been a great public servant who developed his judicial qualities to a very high degree in the House.

2. No.

3. The fact that he had been a member of parliament had a bearing on his appointment.

SCALE RESPECTING FEES PAID TO LAWYERS EMPLOYED BY GOVERNMENT

Question No. 2,398—Mr. Cossitt:

Is any fee scale maintained by the government in regard to fees paid to lawyers doing government legal work and, if so, what are the various items and amounts of this tariff or scale?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Given the diverse range of legal services performed by lawyers retained to act on behalf of the government, tariffs or scales of fees are maintained only in relation to those services where the activities are routine or the proceedings reasonably well defined. In matters pertaining to the criminal law there is a scale of fees, paid to lawyers retained as agents of the Minister of Justice, the amounts of which vary according to the experience of counsel retained and with the complexity of the professional services being rendered. The range of the tariff is from $20 per hour for preparation and $200 per day in court to $40 per hour for preparation and $400 per day in court. In exceptional cases, $50 per hour for preparation and $500 per day in court may be allowed. In property conveyancing matters, standard services are normally remunerated at a fixed tariff, for example $15 for drafting a standard lease, $50 for a title search under a land registry act, and other services at $20 per hour. In all other non-litigation matters, the fee to be paid to an agent of the Minister of Justice is governed by the level of experience of the lawyer retained, the complexity of the matter in question and, where relevant, the amount of money involved in the case. The fee is normally billed on an hourly basis. In so far as civil litigation is concerned, there is no payment to lawyers, retained as agents of the Minister of Justice, according to a scale or tariff of fees. Agents are expected to charge the same fees that they would ordinarily charge their other clients for similar work, and they are expected to submit an account prepared on an hourly basis.

B.C. PENITENTIARY COMPLAINT

Question No. 2,652—Mr. Reynolds:

1. On February 11, was a written complaint sent to management at the British Columbia Penitentiary concerning dealings between officers and inmates contrary to the penitentiary service regulations and, if so, did the incident involve inmate No. 6061, Herbert and guard H. O. Johnson as well as Dr. Brewster, a penitentiary physician?

2. Was an answer received by the complaining officer and, if not, can the Minister advise for what reason?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): 1 and 2. There is no evidence of such a complaint being received by management at the British Columbia Penitentiary. It is assumed that the matter alluded to refers to two complimentary tickets to a National Hockey League game in Vancouver on March 10, 1973, which Dr. Brewster, the Penitentiary physician, left with Hospital Officer Johnson for delivery to inmate Hébert and his A.A. sponsor. The provision of gratuitous benefits of this nature does not contravene Penitentiary Service Regulations.

GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING HIRING OF PERSONNEL THROUGH PRIVATE EMPLOYMENT AGENCIES

Question No. 2,659—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What is the policy of the government towards the hiring of personnel for government positions of a full-time, part-time or casual basis through private employment agencies, other than Canada Manpower Centres?

2. How many persons have been employed through such agencies since April 1, 1970, by year?

3. For a similar period of time, how many persons were placed by Canada Manpower Centres in government positions on a full-time or casual basis?

4. How does the government assess such practice?

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): I am informed by the Treasury Board Secretariat and the Department of Manpower and Immigration as follows: 1. The hiring of personnel for government positions of a full-time, part-time or casual basis is governed by the Public Service Employment Act and, other than those hired by department through Canada Manpower Centres, is done through the Public Service Commission.

2. Nil.

	Full-Time*	Casual
1970–71	45,535	4223
1971–72	80,414	3498
1972–73	86,364	3705
1973 to July 31/73	36,230	1110

*6 days or more 5 days or less

NOTE: The above statistics indicate the number of referrals by Canada Manpower Centres to departments and agencies of government which resulted in placements in government positions.

4. Not appplicable.

CANADIAN PENITENTIARY SERVICE

Question No. 2,772—Mr. Stackhouse:

1. (a) How many Classification, Visiting and Correspondence Officers were on the staff of the Canadian Penitentiary Service in 1972-73 (b) how many are currently on the staff?

2. How many parolees were required to forfeit their paroles and return to penitentiary in 1970, 1971 and 1972?

3. How much expense was incurred in 1973 for the production by the print-shop at the Millhaven Maximum Security Institution of score-cards for use at the golf course of the Institution?

4. (a) How many inmates in the Warkworth Institution have been allowed to leave the Institution in 1973 to play golf at courses outside the Institution (b) have they been given escorts (c) have they been required to pay the green fees and transportation (d) if the Institution has paid these expenses, what has been the cost (e) what has been the cost of providing escorts?

5. (a) What has been the dollar value of illegal drugs confiscated in Canadian penitentiaries in 1972 and 1973 (b) how many inmates were (i) charged (ii) convicted in 1972 and 1973 with drug offences committed in Canadian penitentiaries?

6. Has the RCMP made any investigations of illegal drug-use in Canadian penitentiaries?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): 1. (a) 211 Classification Officers; 73 Visits and Correspondence Officers. (b) 235 Classification Officers; 94 Visits and Correspondence Officers.

2. 1970, 422; 1971, 639; 1972, 666.

3. None. Scrap material was used in the production of score-cards as part of the print shop training program for inmates.

4. (a) 95; for a total of 210 absences to play golf; (b) Yes. Escorts were approved volunteer citizens or regular staff members. (c) No. There were no transportation costs and golf fees were donated by the clubs concerned; (d) Not applicable; (e) No costs were involved where volunteer citizens acted as escorts. Where regular staff members acted as escorts the only cost involved would be that resulting from the staff members' absence from the institution for a maximum of three and a half hours.

5. (a) 1972, $2,167*; 1973, $2,966*. (b) (i) 1972, 21; 1973, 40; (ii) 1972, 21; 1973, 40.

6. Yes.

B.C. PENITENTIARY—INMATE AUGER

Question No. 2,795—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Did inmate Auger 6980 arrive at the British Columbia Penitentiary on September 8, 1973 under custody of the Quebec Region?

2. Was this inmate sent to Quebec Region under escort less than 30 days prior to that date?

3. Did the prisoner and penitentiary officials question his shipment to Quebec when outstanding charges were still to be faced in British Columbia and, if so, with what result?

4. What was the cost of this transfer?

5. What was the reason for this transfer?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): 1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. No. No one questioned and it can only be assumed from documentation on file that communication between the County Court Registrar and the British Columbia Penitentiary Records Department did not function in this instance in that no official document or other notification was received stating that Mr. Auger was required to again appear in B.C. Court, prior to his transfer to the Quebec region.

4. $1628.71, breakdown as follows: Cost of the Transfer: Staff costs including air fare, meals, hotel, taxis, and overtime, etc. in the transfer of Mr. Auger from B.C. to Quebec on August 22, 1973, and his return to B.C. on September 8, 1973, are as follows: August 22, two escorting officers from B.C., $814.75; September 8, one escorting officer from B.C., $548.96; Total, $1,363.71. Mr. Auger's air fare amounted to $131 each way plus a meal on each of the two trips at $1.50 per meal thus making a grand total for the transfer of $1,628.71.

5. Mr. Auger is a unilingual French-speaking inmate, who was encountering serious difficulties adapting to an English-speaking milieu. This was considered to be a sufficient enough reason to warrant the unusual measures adopted in his case. Also, Mr. Auger had requested this transfer on humanitarian grounds.

COST OF CANADA'S PEACEKEEPING INVOLVEMENT IN VIET NAM

Question No. 2,838—Mr. Forrestall:

What was the total cost to the Canadian taxpayer of Canada's involvement in peacekeeping in Viet Nam?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Expenditures since 1954 to September 30, 1973 in respect of the International Commission for Supervision and Control (ICSC) in Indo-China including Cambodia, Laos and Viet Nam and the new International Commission for Control and Supervision (ICCS) in Viet Nam amounted to $8,507,554 of which $3,078,322 is recorded as recoverable. Total expenditures in respect of both commissions relating specifically to Viet Nam are available only from April 1, 1969 as prior thereto the ICSC in Indo-China was considered as a single entity and the accounting procedures did not differentiate between expenditures in Cambodia, Laos and Viet Nam. For the period April 1, 1969 to September 30, 1973 expenditures in respect of both commissions relating to Viet Nam amounted to $2,176,482.

LEAP ADVERTISING COSTS AND OFY ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES

Question No. 2,841—Mr. Marshall:

1. Of the $9,500,000 committed to the Local Employment Assistance Program for the fiscal year 1973-74, what portion was allocated for advertising costs?

2. By what means has LEAP been advertised to the general public?

3. For what reason are the administrative expenses of OFY not constructed in such a manner as to allow the computation of the average cost per project for the approval process?

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): I am informed by the Departments of Manpower and Immigration and the Secretary of State as follows: 1. No portion of these program funds have been allocated for advertising. Other administrative funds in the amount of $581.42 have been allocated for the production of an information sheet.

2. Information on LEAP is available at every Canada Manpower Centre across Canada as is information on every program and service administered by the Department of Manpower and Immigration. Special emphasis is placed by Special Programs Counsellors and Consultants on assisting clients of CMCs, likely to remain unemployed despite normal labour market activity, to develop LEAP project proposals.

3. The projected administrative expenses of OFY submissions were taken into account in the approval process. In 1973, the administrative costs of OFY projects constituted an average of 9 per cent of total project budgets.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS PUBLICITY EXPENDITURES

Question No. 2,854—Mr. Nystrom:

1. What were the amounts of money spent by the Department of Communications on publicity and/or information in each of the fiscal years 1972-73 and 1973-74 to date?

2. What were the names and addresses of firms and individuals who received these contracts, what amounts of money were spent in each case and what was the purpose of each contract?

3. In the case of expenditures for publicity and/or information made within the Department by its publicity or information division, what was the amount in each case and the purpose of the expenditure?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): 1. Total value of contracts granted by the Department of Communications for information purposes: 1972-1973, $9,800; 1973-1974, nil.

2. Contracts granted during the fiscal year 1972-1973: John Doherty Co. Ltd., Ottawa, Ontario, two contracts for a total amount of $9,800 for consulting and editing services. 1973-1974, nil.

3. The Information Services budgets allocated to information were: 1972-1973, $161,500; 1973-1974, $150,000.

SALARIES PAID TO EXECUTIVE OF QUEBEC INDIANS ASSOCIATION

Question No. 3,065—Mr. Godin:

What are the salaries paid to the Executive of Quebec Indians Association (a) President (b) two Vice-Presidents (c) Secretary (d) Staff Manager?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): The Indians of Quebec Association is a private association. Inquiries concerning the salaries paid to the executive of this association should be addressed directly to the Indians of Quebec Association, Village des Hurons, Quebec, G0A 4V0.

HALIFAX INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—DOMESTIC AND INTERNATIONAL FLIGHTS

Question No. 3,135—Mr. Forrestall:

What percentage of (a) domestic (b) international flights went out on schedule from the Halifax International Airport to date this year?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): These statistics are not kept by the Ministry of Transport. In Air Canada, international and domestic flight delays are not processed separately, and therefore the following information is for both domestic and international flights for the period from January 1, 1973 to October 31, 1973: 75.9 per cent of the flights departed within 15 minutes of scheduled departure times.

CROP RESEARCH

Question No. 3,142—Mr. Schellenberger:

What was the total number of man years budgeted by the Department of Agriculture for crop research for the fiscal years ending March 31, 1973 and March 31, 1974 and, of the total number, how much was used on (a) high protein barley (b) high protein, high lysine barley (c) high protein oats (d) feed wheat?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture):

	1972–73 (man years)	1973–74 (man years)
Crop Research	1013	1027
(a) high protein barley	5	5
(b) high protein, high lysine barley	1	1
(c) high protein oats	2	2
(d) feed wheat	15	15

SUPPLEMENTARY RETIREMENT BENEFITS ACT

Question No. 3,177—Mr. Forrestall:

What is the rationale for requiring contributions to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act after an employee has accumulated 35 years pensionable contributions when such contributions cease, to the Public Service Superannuation Account after 35 years pensionable service?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): The Advisory Committee, whose recommendations to the President of the Treasury Board were accepted by the government, in proposing the legislation on the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act for submission to parliament in 1970, felt that every employee who was going to benefit under the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act should contribute for the valuable new benefits provided under that act so long as that person was employed on a full time basis. There is no relationship between the method of financing the benefits payable from the Superannuation Account under the Public Service Superannuation Act and the method of financing the benefits payable from the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account under the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act. Accordingly, in looking for new sources of funds for the payment of benefits under the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act there was no reason to limit the period over which contributions should be made.

PURPOSES OF TRIPS MADE BY S. S. REISMAN, 1971-72

Question No. 3,225—Mr. Knight:

1. In the fiscal year 1971-72, what were the purposes of the trips made by S. S. Reisman, Deputy Minister of Finance (salary range: $45,000-$50,000), to (a) Washington ($265) (b) Paris ($1,056) (c) Washington ($94) (d) Washington ($120) (e) Washington ($327)?

2. In what months of the year were these trips made?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): 1 and 2. (a) Washington ($265)—Purpose of Trip—To attend discussions with U.S.A. representatives regarding the trade between Canada and the United States in automotive products, and certain other trade issues affecting relations between Canada and the United States. August, 1971. (b) Paris ($1,056)—Purpose of Trip—To attend the meeting of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development and the Working Party on International Financial Developments. September, 1971. (c) Washington ($94)—Purpose of Trip—To attend discussions with U.S.A. representatives regarding the balance of payment relationship between Canada and the United States. October, 1971. (d) Washington ($120)—Purpose of Trip—To attend discussions with U.S.A. representatives regarding the United States Interest Equalization Tax, foreign exchange development, and the upcoming meeting of the Group of Ten (Smithsonian Conference). December, 1971. (e) Washington ($327)—Purpose of Trip—To attend with the Minister of Finance the meeting of the Ministers of Finance and Central Bank Governors of the countries in the Group of Ten. December, 1971.

[Mr. Whelan.]

PURPOSE OF TRIP MADE BY A. W. JOHNSON, SECRETARY OF TREASURY BOARD, 1971-72

Question No. 3,287—Mr. Knight:

1. In the fiscal year 1971-72, what was the purpose of the trip made by A. W. Johnson, Secretary of the Treasury Board (salary range: $45,000-$50,000), to Hong Kong, Peking, Canberra, Sydney and Tokyo ($3,643)?

2. In what month of the year was this trip made?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): 1. Hong Kong, Peking, Canberra, Sydney, Tokyo ($3,643)—Purpose of Trip—The Secretary of the Treasury Board is a member of the Interdepartmental Committee on External Relations. In that capacity he was visiting several posts in the Pacific area, as well as attending a meeting of Canada's Heads of Missions in that area held in Canberra, Australia, for the purpose of discussing the co-ordination of the policies and programs, and the integration of the services, of Canadian government departments and agencies with external interests.

2. Date, January, 1972.

PURPOSE OF TRIP MADE BY J. P. CONNELL, 1971-72

Question No. 3,288—Mr. Knight:

1. In the fiscal year 1971-72, what was the purpose of the trip made by J. P. Connell, Deputy Secretary of the Treasury Board (salary range: $34,000-$40,000), to San Francisco ($745)?

2. In what month of the year was this trip made?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): 1. San Francisco ($745)—Purpose of Trip—To attend the 1971 international conference of the Public Personnel Association.

2. Date, November, 1971.

PURPOSE OF TRIP MADE BY G. COUSINEAU, 1971-72

Question No. 3,290—Mr. Knight:

1. In the fiscal year 1971-72, what was the purpose of the trip made by G. Cousineau, Deputy Secretary of the Treasury Board (salary range: $28,000-$35,000), to Lansing, Mich. ($119)?

2. In what month of the year was this trip made?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): 1. Lansing, Michigan, U.S.A. ($119)—Purpose of Trip—To meet with officials of the Michigan state government to review their long range plan for electronic data processing in relation to the study that the Treasury Board was to undertake with regard to data processing in the federal government.

2. Date, October, 1971.

RCMP RETIREMENT BENEFITS

Question No. 3,302—Mr. Forrestall:

As of November 30, 1973, how many retired members of the RCMP are not eligible for receipt of benefit under the Public Service Supplementary Retirement Benefit Act who have retired after (a) 20 years service (b) 25 years service (c) 30 years service (d) all other lengths of service for which pensions are normally paid, expressed as a percentage of those receiving pensions and in absolute terms?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): (a) 55.85 per cent, 644; (b) 41.75 per cent, 453; (c) 8.9 per cent, 22; (d) 31.81 per cent, 49.

PUBLIC SERVICE SUPPLEMENTARY RETIREMENT BENEFIT ACT—ADOPTION OF CONCEPT OF PAYMENT OF INFLATION COMPENSATION

Question No. 3,303—Mr. Forrestall:

Is it the intention of the government to proceed with the full adoption of the concept of payment of inflation compensation through the Public Service Supplementary Retirement Benefit Act on the basis of years of service regardless of age and, if so, on what date can such legislation be expected?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): In so far as the Treasury Board Secretariat is concerned: No, at least, not at the present time.

LEGISLATION TO AMEND SUPPLEMENTARY RETIREMENT BENEFIT ACT AND PUBLIC SERVICE SUPERANNUATION ACT

Question No. 3,304—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Pending the introduction of legislation to substantially amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefit Act and the Public Service Superannuation Act and other pension-related legislation, will the government give consideration to ceasing the current practice of having members of the Public Service fill in retirement-pension election forms far in advance of the actual date of termination of service?

2. Is the government giving consideration to eliminating the hardships involved to such about-to-retire public servants when legislation is introduced and passed between the date on which an employee has signed an election and the date of the employees termination of service?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): 1. For administrative convenience and in order to speed up the processing of retirement benefits, those retiring employees who are entitled to a choice of benefits under the Public Service Superannuation Act are asked to indicate that choice some weeks in advance of their actual retirement date. The wording on the Optional Benefit Form clearly states that the option becomes operative on the date of ceasing to be employed and employees are therefore free to change an option made prior to retirement at any time up to the date of ceasing to be employed and, under some circumstances beyond the actual retirement date.

2. In any situation where legislation is introduced after the date of completing an Optional Benefit Form but before the date of retirement, the employee concerned could receive the benefit of the new legislation.

POST OFFICE—IRREGULARITY AND LATENESS COMPLAINTS

Question No. 3,308—Mr. Fairweather:

1. Have complaints been received about irregularity and lateness of mail originating from Toronto, particularly from subscribers of newspapers and financial and trade publications?

2. What steps has the Post Office Department taken to overcome such delays and ensure a return to normal service?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): 1. Sporadic complaints have been received about irregularity and lateness of time-dated material, originating from Toronto, most recently the weekly ethnic press and the monthly FM radio programs in magazine form, second class mailings.

2. Short-range solutions to the complaints involve the establishment of a complex production control system, working with the mailer to improve his mail makeup and delivery schedule and an increased recognition by all post office employees of the sensitivity of time-dated material. Long-range permanent solutions depend on the installation of the new Toronto processing facilities, which is proceeding according to plan.

CANADIAN PENITENTIARIES SERVICE—OVERTIME FOR CUSTODIAL STAFF

Question No. 3,313—Mr. Stackhouse:

1. How much was spent on overtime for custodial personnel by the Canadian Penitentiaries Service in each of June, July, August, September and October?

2. How many additional members for the custodial staff have been authorized since June 1 by the Treasury Board?

3. How many (a) have been hired (b) have received training (c) are now on duty?

4. How many escapes have there been from federal penal institutions since June 1, 1973?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): 1. June, $503,436; July, $506,710; August, $502,509; September, $531,418; October, $525,846.

2. Six hundred twenty-one.

3. (a) 470; (b) 173; (c) 260.

4. Thirty-four. June 1 to December 3, 1973.

MANPOWER

Question No. 3,356—Mr. Godin:

1. What is the total manpower available in Canada?

2. Of this number, how many (a) men (b) women are employed?

3. For both sexes, how many are members of a labour union?

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Statistics Canada reports that: Statistics Canada does not produce data on total manpower in Canada, however, it does collect information on the labour force which is defined as follows: "The civilian labour force is composed of the portion of the civilian noninstitutional population 14 years of age and over who, during the reference week were employed or unemployed (those without work and seeking work, or those temporarily laid off for the full week)." For parts 1 and 2 of the question, the most recent data available are for November 1973. For part 3, however, the latest data available are for December 1971, which is when the last survey of trade union membership was conducted. Comparable data for December 1971 has therefore also been provided in response to parts 1 and 2. These data are provided in the following table.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT—COMPETITION POLICY

Question No. 3,358—Mr. Crouse:

Is the government aware of the concern and disappointment among small businessmen over the first stage proposals for a new competition policy in Canada and, if so (a) is the government giving any thought to establishing a policy that loss leadering ought to be subject to restrictive legislation (b) on what date can the House expect that the subject of loss leaders and predatory behaviour and the protection of small businessmen will be incorporated into amendments to the Combines Investigation Act?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs does not agree with the premise in the hon. member's question that small businessmen are concerned and disappointed over Bill C-227, the first stage proposals for a new competition policy in Canada. On the contrary, many favorable comments have been received in support of the bill. In reply, however: (a) Representations have been received concerning the practice of loss-leadering. It is intended that these will be considered in the course of developing proposals for stage two of the competition policy. These representations can also be considered as Bill C-227 proceeds through the parliamentary process. (b) Bill C-227, which contains a number of measures for the protection of small businessmen, received first reading on November 5. No date has yet been set for second reading.

ORDER PAPER QUESTIONS NOS. 2,941 TO 2,950 INCLUSIVE

Question No. 3,377—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to Question Nos. 2,941 to 2,950 inclusive in regard to moneys paid to certain lawyers, on what exact date and time were these received by the Privy Council Office, who received them, what are the names and job designations of those to whom they were assigned for the purpose of compiling answers, has the Privy Council Office at any time attempted to expedite the answers and, if so, on what specific dates?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): See reply to Question No. 3,366 relative to the Parliamentary Enquiries and Coordination Division of the PCO. Questions Nos. 2,941 to 2,950, inclusive, were referred to the appropriate official in the Department of Justice by the Parliamentary Enquiries and Coordination Division on October 17, 1973. The time frame in which questions are answered varies depending on workload, time involved in compiling statistics, research etc. In each instance an endeavour is made to answer questions as expeditiously as possible. However, one must bear in mind that questions are an addition to the usual workload of divisions and sections and there are times when other duties devolving on officers responsible take priority.

ORDER PAPER QUESTION NO. 2,398

Question No. 3,379—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to Question No. 2,398 of June 26, 1973 in regard to the fee scale for lawyers doing government legal work, on what exact date and time was this received by the Privy Council Office, who received it, what are the names and job designations of those to whom it was assigned for the purpose of compiling an answer, has the Privy Council Office at any time attempted to expedite the answer and, if so, on what specific dates?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): See reply to Question No. 3,366 relative to the Parliamentary Enquiries and Coordination Division of the PCO. Question No. 2,398 was referred to the appropriate official in the Department of Justice by the Parliamentary Enquiries and Coordination Division on June 27, 1973. The time frame in which questions are answered varies depending on workload, time involved in compiling statistics, research, etc. In each instance an endeavour is made to answer questions as expeditiously as possible. However, one must bear in mind that questions are an addition to the usual workload of divisions and sections and there are times when other duties devolving on officers responsible take priority.

VETERANS LAND ACT—ELIGIBILITY OF MALE AND FEMALE VETERANS

Question No. 3,386—Mr. Marshall:

1. Under the Veterans Land Act, is any distinction made between a male and a female veteran as to qualifications to acquire loans and, if not, and it can be deduced that a war veteran, whether male or female, can qualify (a) can either the male or female qualify (b) can they both qualify and acquire separate loans and, if not (i) what is the definition of a veteran (ii) what is the regulation that prevents both female and male veteran from qualification, if they are married to one another?

2. If the regulation states that they both cannot qualify, for what reason?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. There is no distinction made between a male and a female veteran as to qualifications to receive a loan. (a) Yes. (b) Section 14 of the Veterans' Land Act Regulations provides that where a husband and wife are both eligible to participate in the benefits of the Veterans' Land Act and a certificate of qualification was issued to each of them, only one such certificate shall be in effect at any one time except where evidence of legal separation has been submitted and the Director is satisfied that the legal separation is not the result of collusion or an understanding between the veteran and his spouse with a view to obtaining any benefits under the act.

2. This regulation reflects the basic principle on which the benefits of the Veterans' Land Act were developed, i.e., that the successful rehabilitation of a veteran on the land was dependent on providing him or her with a built-in equity of up to $2320, non-repayable if the veteran complies for a period of 10 years with the provisions of the VLA purchase contract including residence in the case of a veteran settled as a small holder. The act envisaged the establishment of a veteran and spouse as a family entity because normal matrimonial circumstances precluded any reasonable basis on which separate properties could be purchased for each of them, if they were both eligible and qualified veterans, as they could not be expected to comply with the residence requirement on the separate properties. Re-establishment credit benefits and VLA benefits were alternative one to the other. Where a husband and wife were both veterans and a qualification certificate was issued to each of them, the decision was left to them as to which would apply for the VLA loan. Usually the one who did so was the one who had the smaller re-establishment credit benefit.

ADULT OCCUPATIONAL TRAINING COURSE

Question No. 3,399—Mr. Godin:

1. For the 1972-73 fiscal year, how many persons registered for adult occupational training courses (a) across Canada (b) in Quebec?

2. How many completed the courses in Quebec?

3. What was the average salary of such persons?

4. What were the salaries paid in Ontario?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): 1. (a) During the fiscal year 1972-73, 275,701 Canadians enrolled in the institutional part of Canada Manpower Training Program: 204,247 were full-time trainees and 71,454 on a part-time basis. (b) In Quebec, 133,774 trainees enrolled in the program: 71,873 on a full-time basis and 61,901 on a part-time basis.

2. In the Province of Quebec, 53,790 full-time trainees completed their courses in 1972-73. This figure does not reflect however the number of discontinuations during the fiscal year nor the number of trainees still in training at the end of this period.

3 and 4. Based on full-time trainees only, the average weekly allowance paid to trainees is: for Canada, $51.34; for Quebec, $60.03; for Ontario, $59.04. No allowances are paid to part-time trainees.

CANADIAN AMBASSADOR TO LEBANON—OFFICIAL VISITS TO SAUDI ARABIA

Question No. 3,416—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. In the past six months how frequently has the Canadian Ambassador to Lebanon made official visits to Riyadh, Saudi Arabia?

2. What was the date of such visit or visits and with what representatives of the Saudi Arabian government did he confer?

3. On what date is it intended to appoint a resident Canadian Ambassador to (a) Saudi Arabia (b) Iraq (c) other Arab countries in the Middle East in which Canada is not as yet so represented?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Three times.

2. During the first visit from June 18 to 26 the Ambassador conferred with King Faisal to whom he presented his credentials, the Crown Prince, the Minister of State for Foreign Affairs, his deputy and various other government officials. During the second and third visits from October 29 to November 1 and from December 7 to December 12 respectively, the Ambassador conferred with the Minister of State for Foreign Affairs, his deputy and various other government officials.

3. (a) A decision was taken on December 20 to appoint a resident Canadian Ambassador to Saudi Arabia. (b) No decision has yet been taken to appoint a resident Canadian Ambassador to Iraq. (c) The appointment of a resident Canadian Ambassador to Morocco is tentatively scheduled for the summer of 1974.

PERSONAL LOANS MADE BY CHARTERED BANKS

Question No. 3,431—Mr. Matte:

1. What rules have been established for chartered banks regarding the way personal loans are to be made?

2. Can the chartered banks loan up to 100 per cent of deposits on hand?

3. Do the same rules apply in the case of loans made to firms?

4. What percentage of the deposits must chartered banks deposit with the Bank of Canada as reserves?

Hon. John Turner (Minister of Finance): 1 and 3. The general powers of banks to make loans with or without security, including personal and business loans, are set out in Section 75 of the Bank Act. Banks are prohibited under Section 138 of the Act from making an agreement with another bank with respect to the rate of interest or charges on a loan. Under Section 92 of the Act and the Bank Cost of Borrowing Disclosure Regulations of September 27, 1967, banks are required to disclose the cost of borrowing on personal loans. Subject to such provisions, a chartered bank is permitted in competition with other banks and other financial institutions to establish its own rules regarding the way personal and business loans are to be made.

2. The relationship of the total outstanding loans of a bank to its total deposits is not laid down in the Bank Act and varies depending on the policy and operations of each bank. The statement of assets and liabilities of the chartered banks, published each month in the Canada Gazette, indicates that at October 31, 1973, the total outstanding loans of all chartered banks were approximately 59% of total deposits.

4. Under Section 72 of the Bank Act, a bank must maintain a minimum cash reserve in the form of notes of, and deposits in Canadian currency with, the Bank of Canada, such reserve not to be less on the average during any month than an amount equal to 12% of its deposit liabilities payable on demand in Canadian currency and 4% of its deposit liabilities as are payable after notice in Canadian currency. Each bank must maintain a secondary reserve, in addition to its cash reserve, comprised of treasury bills and day to day loans to investment dealers plus any cash reserves that are in excess of the minimum requirement, such reserve not to be less on the average during any month than 8% currently of its deposit liabilities as are payable in Canadian currency.

PURCHASE OF "THE DUNES" COTTAGES, PEI

Question No. 3,432—Mr. MacLean:

1. Did the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development purchase property known as "The Dunes" cottages for the Prince Edward Island National Park?

2. How much land was involved in this purchase?

3. Have the cottages been now disposed of?

4. Were the cottages leased or used in any other way during the period that they were the property of the Department and, if not, for what reason?

5. In making plans for the Prince Edward Island National Park that involves such things as the purchase of land, which has a direct effect on the local residents, were local organizations such as the Cavendish Resort Association contacted for advice and suggestions?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes, in 1971.

2. Approximately 3.14 acres.

3. Yes, through Crown Assets Disposal Corporation.

4. Cottages were leased to former owners from April 5 to October 29 in year of purchase only.

5. Previously only the provincial authorities were consulted on acquisitions; however, it is now the practice to inform local officials and organizations.

ENERGY

OIL—SITUATION IN TERMS OF SUPPLY AND PRICE IN LIGHT OF DECISION OF NEW GOVERNMENT OF VENEZUELA TO TAKE ROYALTIES IN KIND

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will recall that last December he told the House the government of Venezuela had expressed interest in a possible accord with the government of Canada on assured future petroleum supplies. In light of the decision of the new government of Venezuela to take royalties on oil in kind after April 18, has the government of Canada reached an accord with Venezuela, and can the minister tell the House what this royalty decision by Venezuela will mean in terms of future oil supplies to Canada and prices for such oil from Venezuela?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have noticed the remarks of the president-elect of Venezuela with regard to the possibility of taking royalty in kind and, indeed, with regard to the possibility of bringing to an early end some of the concessions in that country. We have had our embassy in Caracas keep in touch with the government on the situation and, in particular, until the new government takes power, to make clear Canada's interest in a continued assured supply from that country and the possibilities of an accord with regard to such proportion of Venezuela's oil supplies as may be taken in kind rather than supplied through Canada's traditional suppliers.

● (1410)

Mr. Stanfield: Is the government taking any specific action to ensure that Canada will be able to purchase at least enough of the royalty oil to avert a shortfall caused by Venezuela's decision to take a portion of royalties in kind rather than in cash? Has the government proposed anything specific? Has it made any arrangements to negotiate promptly with the government of Venezuela in this regard?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, in this regard our embassy has been instructed to keep in touch with the interim Venezuelan administration and also, as soon as the new government becomes responsible for the conduct of affairs in that country, to represent the interests that the hon. gentleman has indicated.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I might ask whether the minister is contemplating another visit to Venezuela, but I will not.

Mr. Bell: We cannot stand another one.

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask about the status of the Canadian Commercial Corporation. Has the government of Canada taken up with the government of Venezuela the question of whether the government of Venezuela regards the Canadian Commercial Corporation as a government corporation in terms of entering into an agreement on a government to government basis? Has the government of Venezuela informed the minister or the government of Canada that it is prepared to deal in these circumstances through the Canadian Commercial Corporation?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Not specifically, but of course that will be one of the questions to be discussed with the new government when it takes power.

INQUIRY AS TO PLANS TO DEVELOP COAL RESOURCES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the rapidly rising prices of oil from foreign countries such as Venezuela make very clear the need for developing alternative energy sources in this country, can the minister advise the House when he plans to announce a specific program to develop the coal resources of Canada to their full potential?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we would hope that the question of coal, particularly for thermal purposes, would be one of the subjects on the agenda for the first ministers meeting and would be discussed within that context.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Five or six members are seeking to ask supplementaries on the first question. I suggest to hon. members that yesterday we spent most of the question period on the very first question raised by the Leader of the Opposition, and members in the fourth and fifth rows never had a chance to ask their questions. I appreciate that supplementaries have to be asked, but we might try to complete the first round of questioning, after which I will return to the hon. member for Calgary North, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville and others who have supplementaries to the first question.

OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL—POSITION OF QUEBEC GOVERNMENT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or the Prime Minister to clear up the situation arising out of a report in Le Devoir this morning that the authorities in Quebec do not know of any agreement between the government of Quebec and the government of Canada with respect to the extension of the pipeline. This is the report in the newspaper. I ask either the Prime Minister or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to be specific in the answer and to inform the House whether or not there is an agreement between the two governments with respect to the extension of the pipeline?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there have been extensive discussions and a full description of viewpoints in this regard but there is nothing so formal as to be called an agreement.

Mr. Lewis: Whether it is formal or informal, the minister in particular and to some extent the Prime Minister, but more specifically the minister, have given the House of Commons the impression that there has been an agreement, that whether or not it has been written out in a formal document the two governments have agreed about the need for extension of the pipeline and that the only question remaining to be discussed was which route the pipeline would follow. I ask the minister again, has the government of Quebec informed the government of Canada that it is in agreement with the idea of having an extension of the pipeline to Montreal, whatever route may eventually be chosen? Has such an agreement been reached between the two governments?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding from the discussions that the government of Quebec is agreeable to the extension of the pipeline.

Mr. Lewis: Can the minister inform the House whether in expressing such agreement the government of Quebec posed to the government of Canada a number of specific questions, the answers to which are tied as a condition to any agreement they may have expressed about the need for extending the pipeline?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Not in the formal sense of conditions subject to any agreement. We understand that in general terms they share the views of the government of Canada about the importance of a pipeline to Montreal. They recognize, of course, that the final responsibility is that of the government of Canada. They have made their views known to us on these various aspects and they will be taken into account in reaching a decision.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY OF PROVISION OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS IN LIGHT OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

In view of the great number of projects submitted under the LIP, which shows the interest of the people for this program, does the minister intend, as was the case last year, to grant further subsidies for the achievement of more projects thus reducing the number of unemployed in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated some days ago, the decision was taken not to augment the original funding announced last fall.

INQUIRY WHETHER LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM WILL BE RENEWED NEXT YEAR

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Does he intend to renew this program next year?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, no such final decision has yet been taken.

ENERGY

ALLEGED OFFER OF CRUDE PETROLEUM BY KUWAIT AT LESS THAN VENEZUELAN PRICE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, on January 3 I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether he, any members of his department or agencies acting on their behalf had been approached with regard to the purchase of some 360,000 barrels per day—I notice the words "per day" were left out—of crude petroleum from Kuwait. Was there an offer made and was that offer at a price less than what Canada is now paying Venezuela for crude petroleum?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, after the hon. member's question I made inquiries of my officials. They confirmed that they knew of no such offer in that regard from Kuwait.

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION TO INCREASE COAL PRODUCTION IN EASTERN CANADA

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings. It is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Because of the drastic decrease in eastern Canadian coal production at a time when that part of the nation is the most vulnerable to scarcity of oil, can the minister say what action he favours to raise the level of production in eastern Canada of this useful alternative source of energy?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, over the past five years we have gone through a process of phasing out some uneconomic coal operations in eastern Canada. I think we would need to have a better indication of the economies or possible economies in developing this particular hydrocarbon in that area before we would encourage anyone to get back into that field again.

Mr. MacKay: Is the minister prepared to recommend to his cabinet colleagues special measures in conjunction with the provinces concerned, including federal aid, to look into this whole question?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, in light of past experience I think I would have to see far more evidence of the kind I have already referred to before reopening this particular area of endeavour.

OIL—VOLUME OF EXPORTS BY MIDDLE EAST COUNTRIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the recent statement by Christopher Rand, a former employee of Standard Oil, that exports from the Middle East countries this year are actually up by 40 per cent over last year, how does this compare with the government's information and does the minister have any information about some of that oil either being diverted or stockpiled elsewhere in the world?

● (1420)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I think that was a television comment in the recent past. I have made inquiries but I do not have a response at the moment.

OIL—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE CONSUMERS WILL RECEIVE BENEFIT OF ANY PRICE REDUCTION RESULTING FROM APPRECIATION OF U.S. DOLLAR

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Since there is a possibility that the price of oil will go down because of the appreciation of the United States dollar, the price being tied to the United States dollar, can the minister assure us that any benefits that accrue as a result will go to Canadian consumers rather than to the multinational oil corporations?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I would certainly hope so, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. MacKay.]

REQUEST THAT INVENTORY OF STOCKS BE PROVIDED BY OIL COMPANIES AND FUEL DEALERS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the absence of any conclusive evidence that there is an actual shortage of fuels in Canada, will the minister consider asking all oil companies and fuel dealers in Canada to provide the government with a complete inventory of all their fuel stocks and information as to where these fuels are stored? By "fuels" I mean gas, oil, bunker fuel, kerosene, jet fuel, and so on.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, that has been the function of those engaged in the liaison process which has been under way with the industry for the last several months.

HOME HEATING OIL—ALLEGED UNDUE PRICE INCREASES

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It arises from his recent declaration that the prices of petroleum fuels would be frozen and from complaints I have received from constituents that the price of home heating fuels, especially propane, has increased by 32 per cent in the past ten months. Why has this freezing process not been carried out effectively?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I might remind the hon. member that the request made of the industry related specifically to prices at the wholesale level; there is no ability to control prices at the retail level. Moreover, in order to assure supplies, particularly of home heating oil in regions of Ontario dependent on offshore supplies, it has been agreed that certain price increases could be made by the companies.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I have a supplementary question directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Is the minister aware of any action undertaken by his department together with that of the minister of energy pertaining to this matter of undue price increases?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): We are in continuous and constant contact.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: The same old song.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INCREASE IN WHOLESALE PRICE INDEX—STEPS TO PROTECT CANADIANS FROM DOMESTIC INFLATION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact the wholesale price index released today shows a substantial increase amounting to 26.5 per cent over the year, and since the prices of vegetable and animal products reflect the highest rate of increase, may I ask the minister what steps the government proposes to take to protect Canadians from the effects of this domestic inflationary process?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): The rate of increase in the wholesale price index has, fortunately, shown a slight reduction proportionately in the last two or three months. It still reflects international commodity prices against which we have been protecting the Canadian consumer by increasing his disposable income by tax reductions and other measures, through family allowances and by increases through the indexing of pensions.

Mr. McGrath: Since Canadian incomes seem to be losing in the race against inflation, may I ask the minister what further steps the government proposes to take to deal with this issue, bearing in mind the experience, for example, in the United States where the price of a loaf of bread is expected to go to a dollar?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In terms of real disposable income, that is to say, after discounting inflation and taking into effect tax reductions and other increases on the demand side of disposable income, real income in this country is 6 per cent above what it was last year.

Mr. McGrath: Notwithstanding the minister's assurance to the contrary, the fact that real inflation exists in Canada is a matter of public record. May I ask the minister whether he proposes to place this subject on the agenda of the first ministers' conference which is to take place later this month?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I suppose it will be implicitly on the agenda. It will certainly be on the agenda when the Ministers of Finance meet on January 23 and 24.

SHIPPING

LEGALITY OF USE OF TANKERS OF ITALIAN AND LIBERIAN REGISTRY TO TRANSPORT OIL FROM VANCOUVER TO EASTERN CANADA

Mr. Paddy Neale (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport may I address my question to his parliamentary secretary. In light of the recent transfer of oil from Vancouver to Holyrood, Newfoundland, by the Barbagia, a tanker of Italian registry, in light of another recent transfer of oil from Vancouver to Quebec City by the Akritas, a tanker of Liberian registry, and in view of the fact that neither tanker is a ship of British registry as required under the Coastal Shipping Act, can the minister assure the House that these actions were undertaken without violation of the act?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I believe that is exactly what the minister is investigating at the present time, but I will bring the matter to his attention.

Mr. Neale (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question and I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary would also take it back to his minister on my behalf. In view of the fact there is a tanker of Canadian registry available in Montreal, the Bassin Transport, with a capacity of 120,000 barrels and which meets all of the pollution and safety regulations of the Canada Shipping Act, what consideration has the minister given to chartering this vessel for the purpose of transporting oil from the west coast of Canada to the east coast?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, in view of the preface to the question I will do what I have been asked and bring this matter to the attention of the minister as well.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO PREVENT RAILWAY FREIGHT RATE INCREASE ON STEEL SHIPPED TO WESTERN CANADA

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I should also like to ask a question of his illustrious parliamentary secretary. In light of the expressed intention of the two major Canadian railways to increase their freight rates on eastern steel transported to western Canada by up to 33 per cent on February 1, 1974, what action, if any, is the minister contemplating to stop this increase which will place an unbearable burden on the steel construction industry in western Canada?

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will bring this matter to the minister's attention.

Mr. Oberle: When the parliamentary secretary is discussing this matter with the minister, would he also ask him whether he is aware of the fact that the price of steel in Canada has increased four times in the last six months, and that the freight increase now proposed will put industries and consumers in western Canada in an impossible position?

SOCIAL SECURITY

ALLEGED FAILURE TO INCLUDE OVERSEAS SERVICE WITH ARMED FORCES IN QUALIFYING FOR OLD AGE PENSION

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare and relates to a question I asked him yesterday and to his answer. In view of the fact it is clearly stated in the letter from Health and Welfare, Canada, that my constituent returned to Canada after completing his duties abroad, will the minister answer today whether this man will be eligible for his old age pension according to regulation 15 of the Old Age Security Act?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The answer that I gave yesterday still holds, Mr. Speaker. The time spent by anyone in a foreign country will have to be considered in order to determine his eligibility.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO REQUEST BY ONTARIO FOR ASSISTANCE TO THUNDER BAY AREA FARMERS FOLLOWING CROP LOSSES

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the disastrous rains that hit the Slate River valley and the Thunder Bay area during the months of July, August and September last year, which virtually wiped out the hay and feed grain crops, left farmers with no feed at a time when feed grains are so costly, and also proved disastrous to the potato farmers, has the minister received any request from the province of Ontario for assistance to the farmers of this region, many of whom will be bankrupted without this assistance?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker.

IMMIGRATION

STATUS OF CHRISTIAN KARL RING

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and I have given him notice. Will he advise the House whether Mr. Christian Karl Ring is in Canada and, if so, whether he has a valid visa and what is the purpose of his visit?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Ring originally came to Canada as a tourist on September 28, 1972. He was subsequently ordered deported and his appeal is now before the Immigration Appeal Board.

Mr. Hellyer: Is the minister aware that this man is wanted for questioning in Rome in respect of supplying arms to the Japanese terrorists who were involved in the Lod massacre, and also in respect of the possession of drugs and of weapons of war, and wanted in Switzerland on a charge of wounding with intent to kill? If so, can the minister advise the House why a man like this was welcome in Canada in the first place?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, he has been ordered deported, which is not exactly a welcome. I do not think I can comment further.

Mr. Nielsen: Where is the happy hooker now?

Mr. Hellyer: Just keep stalling and stalling.

[Mr. Lalonde.]

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR REFERENCE OF ANNUAL REPORT OF DEPARTMENT TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address this question to the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as government House leader. In view of the fact the Minister of Fisheries indicated some months ago he had no objection to a reference of the annual report of his department to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry, and in view of the committee's expressed desire to have such a reference, will the minister agree to make such a reference tomorrow and to include in that reference the right of the committee to sit while the House is adjourned and to travel to British Columbia so it may hear evidence about the current crisis in the halibut fishery and on other matters about which B.C. fishermen are concerned?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is not possible to give a definite answer because I am not sure at the moment whether the House will be adjourned or prorogued. That will depend upon circumstances as they develop. If we succeed in having an adjournment, I would consider the possibility of empowering the committee to meet while the House is adjourned. If that were the wish of the committee I would consider the matter.

AIR TRANSPORT

INQUIRY WHETHER TERMINAL CHARGES TO CARRIERS TO BE INCREASED

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Can he inform the House whether he plans to increase terminal charges for airlines in the near future?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Terminal charges, did you say?

An hon. Member: Aren't you with transport?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, no decision has been made on the subject.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, has the minister or his department not notified some or all Canadian air carriers that there will be a 20 per cent increase in terminal charges in the very near future?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I am not informed of this, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: We want Joe, we want Joe.

HOUSING

PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH QUEBEC TOWARD AGREEMENT UNDER ACT

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

In view of his talks with the Quebec Minister of Municipal Affairs aimed to coming to an agreement for implementing Bill C-133 in Quebec, and in view of the slowness of the negotiations, can the minister say whether the government of Quebec has shown any opposition to this bill? If so, can he tell us on which particular point?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Quebec government has not shown opposition to Bill C-133. As I indicated to the House the other day, we are negotiating and consulting with the government of the province of Quebec as to the use of the National Housing Act in that province, with specific reference to the application of the neighbourhood improvement program. There is no opposition from the provincial government to National Housing Act programs in that province. It is simply a process of negotiation as to how best they can be used.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in view of his answer, can the minister tell us if these negotiations will soon end and if the agreement will be signed shortly so that the municipalities may benefit from it as soon as possible?

[English]

Mr. Basford: I would hope so, Mr. Speaker, but that is relative to the use of the neighbourhood improvement program and the neighbourhood improvement fund within the province of Quebec. There is nothing to prevent the use of other sections of the act within the province of Quebec, as is now taking place in terms of senior citizen's housing, the sewage treatment loan program, the assisted home ownership program and all the other programs which are now operational in that province.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the hon. member for Bellechasse.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of the subject, I should like to ask a supplementary of the minister to clarify my question.

It concerns more particularly the part of the act which will apply to the renovation of sectors. Has Quebec shown any opposition in this regard?

[English]

Mr. Basford: No, Mr. Speaker. There are negotiations going on with the provincial government as to the use of the neighbourhood improvement program in Quebec and within selected neighbourhoods the use of the repair and rehabilitation sections. Those negotiations are continuing. In the meantime, I would emphasize to the hon. member that other programs, including rehabilitation programs undertaken by non-profit housing associations or corporations, can now go forward in that province.

IMMIGRATION

DEPORTATION OF PERSONS FOR CRIMINAL ACTIVITIES

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and arises from the report that the Toronto police department in the year 1972 alone discovered 364 persons who, by virtue of criminal activity, were subject to deportation from Canada. In view of the concern expressed by the chief of police and senior officials of the police department of that city that unless the minister's department now enforces the act and deports such people Canada will have a crime rate like those of the United States cities of New York and Chicago, will the minister instruct his officials to get in touch with the police forces and finally take the action which should be taken under the act to ensure that these people are deported from Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to set the record straight, as a matter of fact, because there is a great deal of spurious comment in that question, if I may say so.

An hon. Member: Don't get touchy.

Mr. Andras: In fact, my officials have been in constant touch with the Toronto police. I talked with the chief of the Toronto police force as recently as two days ago. As a matter of fact, the co-operation between us is working extremely well, and we will enforce the act.

PETROLEUM PRODUCTS—REQUEST FOR LIST OF PRICE INCREASES APPROVED, COMPANIES INVOLVED AND PRODUCTS CONCERNED

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He announced in December, I believe, that he had approved certain increases in the prices of petroleum products based upon the price of imported crude. Will he make available a list of all the increases in prices he has authorized in respect of petroleum products based upon the price of imported crude in terms of the company involved, the nature of the product and the amount of the increase approved?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, this information was made available to the standing committee during its consideration of Bill C-236. It did not indicate the identity of individual companies but it did indicate specific requests and the reaction with regard to the seven or eight eastern Canadian refiners. I will be glad to get a copy for the hon. member.

Mr. Stanfield: May I ask the minister to give me a comprehensive list involving not only the refiners but also the wholesalers or jobbers who have imported the crude and have sought permission to charge higher prices? Would the minister give me a comprehensive list of any increases authorized, designating the companies, the products and the price increases?

HONOURS AND AWARDS

SUGGESTED COMMENDATION OR DECORATION FOR CONSTABLE GREGORY ROBBINS OF DEEP RIVER POLICE FORCE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is not in any way provocative. It is directed to the Prime Minister. Mention has been made in the last two or three weeks of the extension and multiplication of crime not only in our country but in other countries. In the last couple of days a police officer, Constable Gregory Robbins of the Deep River police force, revealed that often it is those who are urban police officers who are the unsung heroes. What he did gave deep pleasure and satisfaction to Canadians as a whole.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I wonder whether the Prime Minister, in his position as the Queen's first minister, would consider giving to this police officer a commendation or recommend him for a decoration so that police officers who daily face terrific danger with courage as he did will know that the country as a whole appreciates their efforts?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the right hon. gentleman to refer the clipping he had in his hand to me and I will pursue the matter. I will want to inquire into the circumstances of the heroic deed to which he refers. I would also add for the information of the right hon. gentleman that the government has followed up on the initiative of the former Prime Minister, Mr. Pearson, who instituted a Canadian system of honours. The essence of that system is that it is removed from politics. I would inform the right hon. gentleman that he is in as good a position as I to make a recommendation to the Governor General in respect of people who deserve recognition under the Canadian system of honours. I have no privileged position, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will have nothing to say in answer to that except that, as I read the names of some of those who have received the Order of Canada, if there are no political considerations I can see no other reason for some of the appointments.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN WORLD POPULATION YEAR

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It arises from the fact that last October 31, in answer to a question of mine which had begun in May, the minister undertook that he would make within two or three weeks, hopefully, a statement on Canada's preparation for World Population Year in 1974. Now that we are in World Population Year and before there is too much damage accomplished as a result, I wonder whether the minister would carry out this undertaking and make such a statement before the House rises?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I will be in a position to make a statement before the House rises. That depends upon an uncertain date. But may I say that arrangements are under way for consultations throughout the country in preparation for the conference that is to be held later this year on World Population Year. My colleagues, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, and the Minister of Health and Welfare are carrying on similar inquiries and public discussions all for the purpose of stimulating interest in this in Canada and to give the government the advantage of the views of all the Canadian people.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Many Canadians are interested in this. Can the minister suggest ways and means by which the ordinary citizens can find out what is going on with a view to taking part and placing their views before the government?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, our general idea is that we should ask some non-political organization to undertake the organization of such a meeting so that Canadians can express their views freely without interference from politicians.

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, on Monday last I asked the Postmaster General a question and he undertook to give me an answer. I seek the guidance of the Chair concerning whether I must ask the question again or should rely on the minister's undertaking.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer the question. I can assure the hon. member that no postal worker tried to intercept Mr. Keeler's mail. The computer card was returned in good faith to the Department of National Defence since it bore no stamp. Because of the nature of the information given on the card, the employee simply thought it belonged to the Department of National Defence. He returned it not to the inquiry division but simply to the administration division of National Defence.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY PASSENGER SERVICE IN SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO—AVAILABILITY OF REPORT TO MUNICIPALITIES BEFORE TRI-LEVEL CONFERENCE

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and relates to the report on railway passenger service in southwestern Ontario which we discussed earlier this week. In light of the minister's statement on Monday that the report is to be studied at the tri-level conference to be held soon in Ontario, may I ask the minister why he has to date refused to make the report he has received available to the municipalities which will have to deal with it at that conference?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that situation is not as complicated as the hon. member wants to indicate. We have two parts of this report in hand. We are going to get a third one and will communicate this report to all interested parties as soon as we have the three parts so that it can be discussed at the tri-level conference we will have in Ontario.

Mr. Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): In light of the fact the Minister of Transport has had the CTC report for over a month and as its recommendations are not dependent upon the Gallup poll of 1,200 families which he has not yet received, does the minister feel that his suppression of the report is consistent with his commitment to full consultation with the municipalities concerned—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I bring to the attention of the hon. member that we have just about reached the end of the question period. Perhaps members who have supplementaries might pursue the matter tomorrow. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Calgary South.

ENERGY

OIL—POSITION OF MINISTER ON POSSIBLE SHORTFALL OF SUPPLIES

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On January 4 the National Energy Board reported to the Standing Committee on National Resources that January to March minimum foreign crude oil imports in regions one and two, without the Shaheen refinery, would be 70.1 million barrels. The movement of crude from Vancouver by way of Panama is now 100,000 barrels a day, or a total of 9 million barrels for the three months. This is over 5 per cent more crude than these regions received last year, according to Statistics Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member ask his question? I will have to call time and orders of the day before the hon. member asks the question if he does not ask it soon. We are running short of time.

Mr. Bawden: In view of the fact that this region has received 5 per cent more crude this year without the Shaheen refinery, and as the Shaheen refinery will mean an additional 10 per cent plus, will the minister say how he can possibly foresee a national emergency or energy shortage in eastern Canada this winter?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am a very prudent man.

IMMIGRATION

ACTION TO EXPEDITE DEPORTATION OF CRIMINALS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Trinity. In view of the fact the minister put his finger on one of the acute problems in our immigration law, namely, that through various appeals people can stay in Canada year after year, is the minister contemplating, especially in the Ring case, any action whereby deportation of known criminals and drug traffickers will be expedited?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-197, which was passed by the House last year, restricted the right of appeal to the Immigration Appeal Board. Such deportations, as in the case referred to by the hon. member, are now being expedited and in fact are being implemented at a much greater pace than before.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we might have one or two supplementaries, after which I will have to call orders of the day.

DEFERRAL OF JUDGMENT BY APPEAL BOARD ON DEPORTATION OF CERTAIN AMERICANS FOUND IN POSSESSION OF MARIJUANA—RELATION OF LEDAIN COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In light of the Immigration Appeal Board's decision to defer judgment on the deportation orders with respect to two American immigrants found in possession of marijuana, will the minister tell the House what consultation, if any, he has had with the Minister of National Health and Welfare to relate the decision of the Appeal Board to the LeDain Commission recommendations?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, that consultation will be taking place very shortly.

Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Could he tell the House when, if ever, he is going to introduce legislation to implement the recommendations of the LeDain Commission?

Mr. Paproski: He wasn't listening and he doesn't care.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Oberle: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. During the question period two very important questions were asked of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport. It was unfortunate that the minister was absent, but the parliamentary secretary indicated that one of the problems was exactly what the minister was studying while he was outside the House. I wonder whether I could have Your Honour's indulgence to let the minister answer the questions, of which he now has notice?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair obviously has no objection to the matter being pursued further if there is consent.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the question might be deferred until tomorrow, at which time the Chair will give priority to the hon. member so he may ask the question.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-248, to amend the Customs Tariff (No. 3), be read the first time and be printed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ALLOCATION BOARD, MANDATORY ALLOCATION OF SUPPLIES AND RATIONING OF CONTROLLED PRODUCTS

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-236, to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada and to amend the National Energy Board Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River) moved:

Motion No. 1.

That Bill C-236, An Act to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada, and to amend the National Energy Board Act, be amended in Sub-clause 2(1) thereof by deleting the words "or any province" in lines 28 and 29 on page 2.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill, like the child who goes to kindergarten, comes back from committee in a much better state than it was in when it left this House. It is less repugnant to us now than it was before but there are still a number of areas where, in our opinion, it can be greatly improved. I think the bill is going to pass anyway. It is quite obvious that the government, with the assistance of the rather obsequious and subservient members of its junior coalition party, is going to ensure that the legislation is passed. During the course of discussion on the amendments we will have some comments to make which we think may be of some use, and hopefully some of our amendments will be accepted.

I have said that the bill will pass. This is obvious when you see how deeply and passionately those two parties favour the bill. The government favours it. Of course, the government position is always to take more power whenever it can, without any action. The government's position on this is like that of the usual bureaucrat when approaching a problem—when in doubt, mumble; when in charge, ponder; and when in trouble, delegate. That is just what the government is doing with this legislation. We have had enough promises, enough talks, enough declarations, enough statements made by members of the cabinet over the last few years which, if stretched end to end, would reach from Victoria to Halifax and would provide enough material to fuel this building for several years. But, Mr. Speaker, when it comes to action, to things to be done, to be anticipated in expectation of this problem, there has been nothing at all. If actions were clothes to cover nakedness or naked policies, then the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) in my opinion would tie for the title "Mr. Nude Canada of 1973".

With respect to the members of the party to my left and the approach which they took in committee, and which they will probably repeat in the House, they also love to see large, undiluted quantities of power given—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but it is extremely difficult for the Chair to hear him. May we have order, please. It is extremely difficult for the Chair, and hon. members interested in the debate, to follow the hon. member who has the floor if all the conversations that are taking place in the chamber continue as at present.

[Translation]

The hon. members should recognize that the floor was given to one of their colleagues, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). If some members want to talk, they should go behind the curtains or in the lobby.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the conversations continued it would mean that any faint hope I might have of converting hon. members opposite, or hon. members to my left, would be lost. My only hope is if they hear me, understand me and believe me. I was dealing with the approach to be taken by hon. members to my left to this particular amending motion, and to the bill generally. I have not much hope that their attitude will change. We have observed their very subservient and obsequious attitude toward the government on this subject. It is a sad situation. As I sit and observe them I say, speaking in the kindest possible way and not in any political sense, that the present front bench of the socialist party can be compared to a group of withered Buddhas presiding over the ruins of party purity.

● (1500)

It is quite true, Mr. Speaker, that some patently phony issues were raised by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) yesterday, and I will deal with them when we come to the appropriate amendment. I simply use this occasion to point out that it is the view of this party, and the view which fortunately the government was persuaded to accept, that any declaration as to a national emergency must be approved by parliament; that any situation which would come about if the position suggested by the hon. member for York South were accepted, would mean that there could be a declaration by this House following an order by the cabinet as to a national emergency; and that a declaration by this House, and the debate which would follow, that no national emergency existed could be circumvented and vetoed by the other place. That is something which this party will not tolerate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is the other way around.

Mr. Baldwin: The hon. member will have a chance to express his view, but he has put himself and his party in an odious position which indicates that he has no faith in the virtue of this House to deal with and set aside an order made by the government if the facts do not justify it. That is what this party wants; it is what this party has always sought and we now have it in reasonable form. I compliment the minister for his astuteness, after some considerable persuasion, in accepting this particular proposition.

I shall not detain the House very long with regard to this amendment, but I think it is essential that we go into it. It gives us an opportunity to find out at the very beginning, in the definition clause, what is involved in this bill, what it could lead to and what the probable consequences are as well as how they may affect other jurisdictions in the country. The amendment is very simply to delete the words "or any province" from the interpretation of the words "wholesale customer" which appear in clause 2, the interpretation clause.

I do not think it will do any harm from the viewpoint of continuity to put the present definition on the record so that it will appear in the context of my remarks. As the bill now reads, "wholesale customer" is defined as:

> ... any person who purchases any controlled product in bulk at the wholesale level and includes Her Majesty in right of Canada or any province, any agent thereof—

Then, it goes on to deal with other groups, other institutions and other classes. My amendment is for the purpose of deleting the words "or any province". I know it is true to say that to some extent—and I am probably anticipating the minister in this—the provinces are substantial users of petroleum products. But in the words of my leader, while they are not sovereign powers in their own right, they have, within the limits of their responsibility, what are in effect sovereign powers as well as some very important functions with respect to the people who have elected the governments of those provinces.

May I point out what some of the functions of a provincial authority are? They are, the construction and maintaining of roads; the use of buildings, which obviously includes the extent to which certain buildings will be used and the fuel to be used to heat them; the providing of fuel for utilities, and I am thinking in particular of those provinces which maintain their own utility corporations as a public service—Manitoba, British Columbia and Ontario are typical examples. Those provinces and their people have seen fit to establish public corporations for the provision of electric power, among other utility powers, to the people of the province. This is something which has to be taken into account when we consider whether the word "province" should be included in this definition of "wholesale customer". There are other provinces which maintain, have maintained, and no doubt will continue to maintain certain facilities for providing transportation for the people. I could go on but I shall limit the list for the purpose of my argument.

What could happen is that any of the provincial governments with regard to maintaining and continuing the services of this kind will, if this bill goes through in its present form, if an emergency is declared and approved by parliament and if a mandatory allocation program is established, have to come hat in hand to a five member board in Ottawa to seek permission for the use of fuel to be supplied by suppliers, as defined, to the provinces as wholesale customers. That is the situation which concerns me.

I recognize that there is another aspect which is covered: British Columbia, for example, has established a marketing board which will take possession of or market certain fuels which are made available in the province. As this bill now stands, under the definitions which I have given to the House and under the right of the Energy Supplies Allocation Board to establish prices, it would then be competent for this five member board to say to the province of British Columbia, "You cannot supply fuel which has come into the legal ownership of your marketing board to any of your own provincial agencies within British Columbia; under no circumstances can you do that unless we give you a certain permit to indicate type, amount, quantity, date and so on." Those are problems which have to be faced.

I want to make another point, Mr. Speaker. The minister knows, as do I and a lot of other people, the very doubtful constitutional character of this legislation. Let us be clear: this body has not and never will take the position, if circumstances warrant the declaration of an emergency, that there should be any constitutional challenge so far as we are concerned. But we are not able to answer for other people in Canada; we are not able to answer for provincial authorities in Canada. We will get a chance to go into this later, but the minister knows that under the jurisprudence which now prevails, the question of an emergency is not a question for the government. It is not even a question for this parliament.

The existence of an emergency which justifies a federal government taking powers and authority to deal with matters such as contractual relationships, and natural resources lying entirely within the control of a province, is a matter of fact. The courts have held this. The Supreme Court of Canada and the Privy Council, in the days when the Privy Council still had jurisdiction, have held this. That position is supported by the litigation which was dealt with after the first world war and the second world war. The question of whether there is an emergency is a matter of fact and if it does exist, the government can legislate. The courts have held that if the federal government legislates in accordance with the terms of that emergency, it has the right to overrule provincial rights and provincial jurisdiction. That is as it should be. We do not challenge that right.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Let me suggest the doubtful legal basis on which this bill stands in its present wording. Theoretically—I admit that this is most unlikely to happen—if the Prime Minister were to wake up one morning and find that the fuel for heating his house had been shut off, he could have the cabinet declare a national emergency and then ask this House to support it. The bill, conceivably, could provide for that. Fortunately, we have been able to persuade the government to allow its decision in that regard to be debated in Parliament.

I am concerned about the position of the provinces. I do not suppose, unless members on the government side change their position or unless I am more persuasive than I have been in the past, that this amendment will pass. Yet we are responsible, on behalf of the people of Canada, for seeing that the best possible bill is passed and that the legislation, in its final form, has as few imperfections in it as possible. Therefore it is my duty to speak of the dangers of including provisions of the kind I have mentioned.

I do not know if any province would see fit to challenge the government declaration. I hope not. If the circumstances warrant the government's declaring an emergency, no one would challenge that. Yet I want to emphasize again the doubtful legal foundation on which this legislation rests and indicate that, beyond any shadow of a doubt, there are real dangers in this. I hope that the exclusion of the relevant words might remove those dangers.

I have looked through the bill and have spoken of the powers contained in it. The regulatory provisions give the board to be established power to establish pricing systems. The government through the board, may make regulations with regard to wholesale customers. It can establish pricing systems which are binding upon provincial authorities which become owners of petroleum products, natural gas or coal, or the products of those fuels which are to be allocated by an order. This board can say to provincial authorities, "We will tell you how much you can charge your own provincial organizations, your own provincial services and facilities, for the fuel which is produced in your province and which belongs to the government and people of that province." I am not arguing about the powers of provincial authorities vis-à-vis the federal authority. I am merely pointing out some dangers that my party, in moving certain amendments, wishes to avoid.

This five-man board can demand from any provincial authorities information with regard to present and past accounts. It can ask for information as to pricing, as to forecasts, projections, and so on. One only needs to read the regulatory section to note the vast powers, quantitatively and qualitatively, with which this board will be invested. I, therefore, say that in dealing with this bill, the House should proceed with the utmost caution and examine and survey each particular issue raised in it.

I do not know how much fuel in the provinces might be involved in any allocation order or how much fuel, which would be subject to an allocation order by the board, the provinces have been using for themselves. We attempted to look into these things in committee but were met by what will be known in future as the "Macdonald principle" underlying the calling and examining of witnesses.

We were told at that time that government witnesses, departmental witnesses, witnesses from the National Energy Board or administration officials, and the minister can correct me if I am paraphrasing him wrongly, could only appear with the permission of the minister, could only say what the minister allowed them to say and that, in the final analysis, it was competent for the minister to control these witnesses appearing before the standing committee. That is a pernicious doctrine which, some day, I hope will be challenged.

If that doctrine prevails, what will it do to the Public Accounts Committee, or to all standing committees? It is essential that members of parliament should be able to come to a committee and obtain information on which to base their attitude towards any legislative proposal. We learned of the attitude of the minister, and that the government wanted this legislation put through with great haste. We do not disagree with the need to legislate with reasonable promptitude. On the other hand, we want reasonable opportunity to make careful and reasonable scrutiny of the provisions of this bill. Hon. members were sent to this House for the purpose of ascertaining such things. Of that opportunity we were deprived.

If this particular amendment is rejected, and I have put forward the bona fide views of my party as well as my own bona fide views on the matter, I urge the minister and the members of the Board yet to be established, in the event that there are mandatory allocations to deal with petroleum products, natural gas or coal, not to compel the provinces to come forward hat in hand. Let the provinces not come forward in a subservient manner to these five people, in order to secure petroleum, natural gas, coal or the products of those fuels in order that they can carry on with reasonable effectiveness the services which are the concern of the provincial governments on behalf of their people.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in dealing with clause 2 I think we can speak not only on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) but deal, more generally, with some of the changes which took place in committee.

Let me say that right from the start my party has been in favour of legislation along the lines now before us coming into effect, if we are forced to allocate oil products in Canada. In the event of a national emergency, legislation such as this must be ready. For that reason, we were not happy with the attempted Conservative filibuster on second reading. We indicated then that it would not take long for the public of Canada to whip the Tory party into line when it was realized that the party was playing, as one of its members said, Russian roulette with the eastern provinces in the matter of energy.

The bill went to committee and members of all parties co-operated in making changes to those clauses which we felt needed changing. I think most of the opposition to the initial legislation was ironed out in committee. I have no hesitation in saying at this time that members of all groups worked very co-operatively in bringing about these changes. While many of the changes in the new draft were brought in by members on the government side, a large number were suggested by members of our group and the official opposition who indicated to the minister the changes we thought should be in the bill. To their credit, the government drafted them and brought them in.

I wish to say a few words about the energy crisis that Canada is facing at this time. Our party feels there is a genuine energy crisis. We do not think it just occurred in the past two or three months or because the Arab nations decided to withhold oil supplies.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member, but I think I should interrupt him for a moment. At the start of his remarks, the hon. member seemed to advance the theory that as we consider the first of the amendments moved, under the Standing Orders there might be a general debate. That, of course, was not considered as a possibility under the Standing Orders. We have before us a specific amendment. I appreciate the hon. member has every right to make introductory remarks and refer to the general matter before us, but the debate at the report stage is not the third reading debate and general observations are usually made on third reading. I recognize this is not always followed very religiously, far from it on some other bills we have had before us, but I would not like to accept the hon. member's theory that when the House considers the first of the motions set down for consideration, that at this stage of the proceedings we can have a general debate. The rules of relevancy apply and hon. members should, as much as possible, relate their remarks to the specific motion before the House.

I again apologize to the hon. member for having interrupted him. I am sure he will bear this in mind when he has concluded his general remarks and addresses himself to the motion now before us.

Mr. Harding: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was just trying to bring to the attention of the House the fact that this crisis with which this legislation deals is very real. I do not think it will be over in three or four months. It is a long term proposition. We have about 10 years' supply of conventional reserves left. The lead time for developing these resources is not that far away.

The motion moved by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) to strike out the reference "or any province" should be turned down by the members of this House. I do not make that suggestion lightly. If there is to be any kind of successful allocation program in Canada, you cannot start exempting the provinces. If you do, you will not have an allocation program. It is not a matter of taking away from the provinces. For example, we feel that if provinces were allowed to make wholesale purchases of products which had to be brought under control, they might be able to utilize these products for purposes other than emergency purposes. This, in effect, would completely nullify the whole allocation program throughout the Dominion of Canada. I firmly believe the allocation board will have close consultation with all the provinces or agencies before making any allocation of supply.

Mr. Woolliams: Don't be naïve.

Mr. Harding: To exempt provinces at this particular time would mean the loss of control by the allocation board of emergency supplies of some specific oil product which was required. The allocation of supplies of any type of oil product is the very key to the survival and working of this program in Canada. I am convinced the provinces will go along with and welcome this, as will the oil companies. The president of Imperial Oil appeared before the committee. He welcomed the introduction of an allocation program. In the event they had supplies on hand which had to be allocated, he felt it would be much better for a board to be in the position to say whether this or that oil product would go here or there.

As far as our party is concerned, we are not going to endorse the amendment. We think it would weaken the bill and weaken the primary function of the whole act which is to ensure that oil products in short supply get to those areas where they are needed and to which priority has been given by the board.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in the same general tone used by the members, I wish to express my appreciation to the members of the committee for the energies they expended in improving the bill. I wish to express particular appreciation to the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) who, by the general consensus of all who participated in and attended the hearings, acted eminently fairly as chairman.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I wish to express particular thanks to a number of public servants who were involved; Mr. Jack Stabback of the National Energy Board, Mr. Rolland Priddle of that board staff, Mr. Jim Ryan of the Department of Justice and Mr. Molot of that department who devoted a lot of effort to preparing the background work and in presenting viewpoints on the bill to the committee.

The point taken by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) is fundamentally one that, while the bill should apply and restrict the ability of certain agencies of the Crown such as the post office or others which may become wholesale customers within the definition of the bill, under no circumstances should any provincial agency, of which there are an extensive number and which have been referred to by the hon. member for Peace River, be the subject of an order of this particular board if indeed an emergency is declared.

I wish to deal quickly with something that was said by the hon. member for Peace River. I disagree with his argument about a doubtful foundation for a measure of this kind under the present law. I take it as being well settled and settled for a long time, ever since the Fort Francis case that through the peace, order and good government under the British North America Act, in an emergency, the government of Canada does have the constitutional jurisdiction to enact a measure of this kind. I would not accept the hon. member's suggestion there could be any doubt in that regard.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The minister and I are in agreement that cannot be challenged. The emergency is a question of fact, however, and an emergency as declared by the government to be a fact might be considered in a different light by the Court.

[Mr. Harding.]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That may be a question of fact to be determined in due course; however, there can be no doubt about the fact that the government of Canada has this jurisdiction and has had it confirmed since the Fort Francis Pulp and Paper case. The real question of substance involved in this amendment is whether the government of Canada was unreasonably interfering with the powers of provincial governments in this regard. I suppose the best evidence as to whether there has been any neglect to act reasonably would come from the provincial governments themselves.

● (1530)

I can say to the hon. gentleman and to the House that, while comments on the bill have been received from various provincial governments which will be most affected by it—and, indeed, we have sought their view on the proposal both before it was submitted to the House and subsequently—there has been no objection as far as I am aware to the particular clause which the hon. member now seeks to amend. I think it was well understood at the meeting of energy ministers on November 23 that if facts do materialize of such a nature as to bring about a national emergency it would not only be appropriate, from the standpoint of the provinces, but an obligation on the part of the Government of Canada to assume the emergency powers embodied in the act in order to make certain that the wider interest of the public should be protected.

The position which I took in committee, and which I take again today is, therefore, to ask the House not to accept this particular amendment. To do so would mean that an allocation intended to provide for certain individuals within the community, either because of their special circumstances or because of their priority need, would be subject to the individual judgments of provincial agencies which, as the hon. member for Peace River has said, already possess extensive jurisdiction in this regard. It is not unfair to comment that, from time to time during the course of this particular crisis of supply in the entire western world, some provincial governments have been inclined to look upon their obligations to supply users in other provinces in a very narrow sense and have been inclined to object to the suggestion that there should be any extensive application of this provision through eastern Canada. I, therefore, think it is reasonable that one agency should be responsible for looking after the over-all needs of Canadians affected by the bill and ultimately deciding on the priorities.

Further with regard to the interests of the provinces, the hon. gentleman has raised the question whether this agency under federal authority will take account of provincial claims. I would remind the House, as I said in committee and at the second reading stage, that when we described this proposal in general terms to the provincial ministers of energy on November 23, they specifically asked that not one but two provinces be represented on the committee. We accepted that proposition, which meant raising the number of board members to five, with the stipulation that one appointment was to be made from among nominees suggested by a producing province, in this case Alberta, and another from those suggested by a consuming province, Quebec. I look forward to receiving from the Province of Alberta the name of the nominee suggested. We have already received suggestions from Quebec. In other words, the board will be representative of the experience possessed by the National Energy Board, of the experience accumulated at provincial level from the standpoint of a producing province and of the interest of the consuming public in a more general sense.

In summary, then, it seems to me to be in the interest of the nation generally that the board, acting under these emergency powers, should have the ability to protect all Canadians and that this ability should not be curtailed by prior claims made, perhaps, out of an excess of zeal, by individual provincial civil servants. It should not be curtailed by the claims of provincial agencies but the needs of all Canadians should be taken into account. This tribunal which, after all, would include representatives nominated by the provinces, should be able to determine the priority given to allocations in the event of any shortages. On this basis I invite the House to reject the hon. gentleman's amendment.

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour will please say, yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those against will please say, nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion No. 1 (Mr. Baldwin) negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The House will now move to motion No. 2 in the name of the hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River) moved:

Motion No. 2.

That Bill C-236, an Act to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada, and to amend the National Energy Board Act, be amended in Sub-clause 9(4) thereof by deleting the words "or purported exercise" in line 19 on page 5.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is another amendment for the purpose of deleting three words. Unless anyone here may say this is simply a matter of semantics, I wish to assert the contrary. We are dealing in this legislation with a board which would have greater power in peacetime than was, quite possibly, delegated even in wartime to any similar group since the days of Ghengis Khan—perhaps I shall be able to find a more modern analogy later on.

My colleagues and I have already enumerated the vast powers being given to this board, powers which could be used to ride roughshod over the rights of everyone from provincial governments to individual consumers. Clause 9 deals with the authority of the board and the power of the board to delegate—in itself significant.

Finally, in subclause (4), the offensive subclause, the board and its members are exempt from liability in respect of any act or thing done or purported to be done in good faith in the exercise or purported exercise of a duty or power under the act. Mr. Speaker, if these words were subject to the amendment I am moving, if the words to which I am objecting were excluded, I would find no objection to the subclause. I think it is proper that a board of this nature should be given a measure of immunity. If the board or one of its members does something in the course of exercising the functions or powers prescribed in the act, and does it in good faith, I think they should be protected from the possibility of civil or criminal proceedings being taken.

But bearing in mind the substantial powers with which the board is vested—and I urge all hon. members to read the bill carefully to find out how extensive these powers really are—I suggest that a clause which purports to allow a member of the board to act outside the powers parliament is being asked to confer and still enjoy full immunity is altogether unacceptable. One could follow the trails left by the injuries, losses and damages sustained by thousands and thousands of people affected by the rules and regulations of similar boards which were established during the first and second world wars. One could follow the proceedings of, and read the evidence given to, boards that were established to find out how much damage was in fact inflicted on the one side, and suffered on the other side, by people or institutions who had to comply with the orders of those boards.

I suggest to the members of this House that it would be entirely unwarranted to give this board an invitation—because that is what the clause amounts to—to go forth as the good and faithful servant of the government and to do something that is quite outside the scope of the act and outside the scope of its duties. Then, all you would have to do would be to say that you acted in good faith and you would be free from any sanction. I cannot buy that.

I am quite willing that the board operate within the four corners of this piece of legislation. If it makes an error of judgment, it then has protection. But to allow the board or its members, or possibly even people who receive a delegation of authority under the first part of the clause, to handle a matter in their own way, entirely ignoring the act and the regulations, or its mandatory allocation program, perhaps in some cases causing irremedial damage to certain people, and then to be freed from any form of punitive action or sanction simply because they said they acted in good faith, we simply cannot accept. After all, acting in good faith can mean a lot of things. In a clause of this sort, all it means is that they can say they thought it was a good thing for the country to do what they did, and that would free them from punitive action. I would object to those powers being given to a board that has only the usual powers and authority.

It is a sad commentary on the kind of world we live in, when crises, or alleged crises, or rumours of crises abound, that we all flock forward and give this kind of power to the government. It is a shocking, shameful thing, and is one of the reasons, to a great extent, that civilized countries today find themselves sometimes incapable of handling the problems that arise. In October 1970, we had a situation in which people were urging the government to act. Some of the sycophantic members of the media who were supporters of the government said that the government should go into Montreal with all the troops they needed to suppress this apprehended insurrection. Those same members of the media six months later were asking how they could have accepted the government's assessment of the situation.

This is the kind of situation we are facing today. When you read the reports and the transcript of the committee proceedings you are amazed to find that, in addition to the government and the NDP, the other group that was so much in favour of this action was the multinational oil companies. They said: "This is lovely; it gives us the authority to do under government sanction what we were probably going to do in any event". What a strange trio—the government, the NDP and the multinational oil companies all having a love in! I see the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) laughing to himself; I know he finds himself very uncomfortable in that kind of company, and I hope he will be able successfully to extricate himself.

I suppose I am wandering a little, Mr. Speaker, and I will listen to your admonition, but I would suggest that the deletion of the words "or purported exercise" do no violence to the bill or to the meaning of the bill. They would do no harm to the members of this board or to the board itself so long as the board acts within the limits of its authority under the act, and so long as it acts in good faith. As I understand it, the word "purport" means "pretend". For example, you can say to yourself that you will engage in act A or act B, but that you will not worry whether they come within the confines of the legislation because you know you will be protected; all you have to say is that you acted in the purported exercise of a duty or power and it was done in good faith. I say nuts to that, and I hope hon. members will set those words aside.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the argument of my learned friend in his discussion of this "purported" amendment, but I must confess that I do not agree with him. It seems to me that, as it stands now, this clause affords a necessary and reasonable protection to anyone who assumes the very important responsibilities of this board.

I would remind the House that the words are "in good faith". If anyone acts in a way that is not in good faith, then they can be made responsible for what they do. But if they do act in good faith, they should not be harassed by the possibility of legal proceedings being brought against them, perhaps because they made some mistake in the exercise of their powers, or perhaps because a court declared that they should not have done what they did or that they did not have the legal authority for doing what they did. I say that if they nevertheless act in good faith, they deserve to be protected.

I doubt very much whether any person of the calibre required for this particular job would be very happy about accepting his responsibilities if he knew that he would be liable to legal harassment if he made a mistake, which in my view would be the result of this proposed, purported amendment. This language is not unfamiliar to those versed in legal matters. Other people, such as magistrates, sometimes perform functions of lesser importance than the members of this board will be required to perform, but they are protected so long as they act in good faith in the carrying out of their duties. From our point of view this amendment is unnecessary, and indeed might be harmful to the carrying out of the purposes of the act.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would answer this question. I tried to follow him closely, and I always respect his legal abilities. He emphasized that the words are "in good faith". Would he tell the House what is the difference between the words "in good faith in the exercise of a duty or power" and the words "in good faith in the exercise or purported exercise of a duty or power"?

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, there is quite a considerable difference, as I understand it. I am a little rusty in my law and my friend may be able to correct me if I give him the wrong interpretation, but my view of the matter is this. The words "in good faith" have to do with the approach, with the mental attitude, of a person. Are you trying to carry out your duty in the way you are required to do so? Are you carrying out your duty without personal malice or personal bias? If so, you would be acting in good faith.

On the other hand, supposing you were to make an order that for some reason was irregular or which the court holds is improper for some legal reason. You would then be not acting in the exercise of a duty or power but in the purported exercise of a duty or power. A person who, in perfectly good faith, makes a mistake in law or a mistake in fact is protected by the words "or purported exercise", whereas he is not protected if those words are struck out. I think the protection should be broad enough to cover anybody who is trying his best to do a job, acting without malice, without improper motives and without bias in seeking to perform his duty, even though he may happen to make some mistake in law or conceivably a mistake in fact which would deprive him of his powers under the act.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to make in substance the same point already made by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) whom I recall from the distant past, when I was practising law and he was practising it with more distinction, had something of a reputation as an expert on prerogative writs. During a study of this particular question of excess of powers, I would listen to that hon. member with some attention because he had occasion from time to time to act on the other side on these particular questions.

On the point which he has expressed, I would agree that the question of good faith would be a question of fact under the circumstances of a particular case, and the question as to whether it was an excess in the exercise of powers would really be a question of law depending upon the technical interpretation of this particular statute. As has already been mentioned, the statute is a highly technical one, but one under which it would not be difficult at all, from the standpoint of a legal interpretation, to arrive at a situation where there was an action which legally might be described as an action in excess of the powers.

The basic position I took in the committee, which I will repeat, is that it seems to me apt and just that action should be taken, as it can be taken against the board, under the Federal Courts Act. Under the provisions of that act, a review of the exercise of jurisdiction can be taken by prerogative writ, by declaration or perhaps by injunction. Legal action might be taken against the board in that way, or political action might be taken against the ministry which, after all, remains responsible for the board.

It seems to me to be a basic fundamental that individuals who are appointed should not be made personally liable so long as they acted in good faith, and also in the belief they were exercising a power which had been conferred upon them by the statute. It seems to me the appropriate legal method in these circumstances is not one that seeks to put individuals acting on this board into personal bankruptcy. I would remind hon. members that we will be dealing here with not just thousands of dollars but potentially hundreds of thousands of dollars in terms of orders which may have to be made from time to time.

The least useful way, and perhaps I bring bias to this as the son of a former public servant, in this bill or any bill that comes before this parliament, would be to seek to exercise the jurisdiction of the courts against an individual public servant by putting his personal assets up to the possibility of a writ for suit. It is on this basis we opposed the amendment in committee and will oppose it again today.

The hon. member for Peace River made reference to the fact that this power would give the members of the tribunal the right, and I noted his words, to ignore the act, ignore the regulations and to disregard whatever their powers might be; that is a matter of question. I would point out that that would be a matter of good faith in the circumstances, the question of the excess of jurisdiction, which is the point to which the word "purport" refers, is a question of law which would have to be determined by the courts under the circumstances. Therefore, I would hope, for the better exercise of this jurisdiction, that this can be left with the tribunal.

The point has been made, and I reiterate it, but for this protection it would be entirely possible for private interests to seek to harass members of the board by making them personally liable for actions taken not only in good faith but in the genuine belief that they were acting within their powers. Nothing could make the exercise of the important jurisdiction of this board more difficult than the threat of that kind of personal action against a public servant.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the minister to reconsider his position. I will try to make my point clear without getting into the question of what might happen under the act, as that has already been gone into by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin).

The bill provides:

> The Board and its members are exempt from liability for any act or thing done or admitted by the Board in good faith in the exercise or purported exercise of a duty or power under this Act.

That certainly protects the members as far as the minister wants to go. Surely, that protects them if the board acts in good faith in the exercise of a duty or power under the act, but when you include the word "purported" I think it is contradictory. I have a dictionary here which gives a brief definition of the word "purport", and I think this is what the hon. member for Peace River was driving at. It suggests that purport in respect of a document or a subject has the meaning of conveying a state or professing to do something, or intending to seem to do it. This definition really makes the situation worse than has been described. I do not think you can purport to exercise a duty or power if you are acting in good faith because that would be totally contradictory. I do not know why this phrase is in there at all, except in the case of the board deciding to deliberately ignore the terms and conditions of the act and the regulations laid down by the Cabinet. As long as they purport to exercise a duty or power under this act they would escape liability.

Surely, all we are trying to do is make certain that the members of this all-powerful board, and it will be powerful when we implement this bill, are exempt from liability when they act in good faith in the exercise of a duty or a power. I agree with the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), although he differs in interpretation, that the important words are "in good faith". If you exercise a power in good faith or a duty in good faith, providing you do so to the best of your ability, honestly and without any idea of committing a fraud you should be protected. If you purport to do something, then I suggest this is totally contradictory. In fact, I think this phrase was thrown in by some civil servant who was worried that he might get into some trouble so he put in another word he found in the dictionary to make the protection broader.

The minister suggests that the courts will interpret this, but surely it is a function of this parliament to legislate clearly and precisely in order that there will not be that kind of difficulty in the courts. There has been a great complaint about lawyers not being clear and precise, and I think parliament should make the statutes very clear. We have referred to the phrase "in good faith", but when you suggest that a member purports to do something, or makes out to do it, surely that is contradictory.

It is because of this difficulty that I directed my question to the hon. member for Greenwood. If we want to legislate in this way, I suppose the amendment is not particularly important because, it does not go to the root of the bill, and there has been an agreement by the various parties that the matter of declaring an emergency will, in the final analysis, be referred to parliament. So, there is some protection. I cannot see for the life of me why the minister, who is a lawyer, wants that word "purport" left in, except perhaps because some civil servant put it in there. Like most ministers, once his officials put something in, he will not remove it. You cannot get a minister to remove anything. It seems to me that the members of this board will have all the protection they need, and by leaving out the word "purport" the clause would be better worded and would not be contradictory.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should just like to reiterate some of the comments of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) in respect of this subclause and the Conservative amendment thereto. This amendment falls in line with the general strategy of that party in attempting to weaken or undermine the bill in whatever way it can.

Mr. Alexander: That's a lot of baloney.

Mr. Symes: Because of the wording of this bill there is a possibility that, as a result of an allocation, a corporation may suffer a loss. The point of the phrase is a technical one. This is an administrative clause and the phrase is included to protect public servants, that is members of the board, from personal law suits. I suggest it is as simple as that.

● (1600)

If we remove the word "purported", as the Conservatives would have us to do, then I put the question to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) who then would want to serve on the board? Who would take the risk if he knew there was a loophole by which he could be sued personally because of the implementation of this emergency legislation. If we face a real emergency in respect of fuel, we need very capable people on this board. If we were to in any way cast doubt on a person's security in serving on this board we would only weaken the capability of the government to make a decision concerning whether or not an emergency should be declared.

It seems to me the Conservative Party is concerned that we know the facts as to whether or not it is necessary to have a national emergency declared. Therefore, we need capable people on this board, and I cannot see them serving if this risk is involved. Indeed, who on the board would dare make a decision if, having traced down the line of responsibility, he found there could be a possibility of a personal lawsuit against him. I think members of this House will see the necessity to leave this sub-clause as it is and we will reject the Conservative amendment.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, I will follow the admonition of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and remain impartial on this question. I want to say, with respect that this particular clause, that when I looked at it in the first instance I wondered whether in fact there was a need for the words "or purported exercise". The more I studied it the more I became convinced they were, in fact, necessary. Notwithstanding the caveat filed by the hon. member for Peace River, I think we are getting into a debate on legal semantics. It seems to me that under the clause we could have simply indicated that the difference is that if the individual acts pursuant to his authority in the exercise of his duty or power there would be no problem. I think the expression, in good faith, really applies more effectively to the purported exercise of a particular duty or power.

Perhaps I might draw this analogy to illustrate what I mean. An individual, let us say in the Canadian armed forces, has the use of a vehicle from Monday to Friday. In the interest of answering an emergency on a Saturday he uses that particular vehicle. In effect, he is acting in good faith in the purported exercise of his duty. Eventually, someone will have to decide whether he made the right decision and whether, in deciding to use that particular vehicle on the Saturday, he was purporting to exercise his duty. Clearly, he is not exercising but is purporting to exercise his duty. I think that is the analogy I would use to indicate that there is, in fact, a difference between exercising authority under the jurisdiction given and purporting to do so. So, I think there is a necessity for these three words to be incorporated.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think this perhaps is one of the most important clauses. It is not, as it has been painted just a moment ago by the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen), a matter of legal semantics. I listen with great interest to the hon. member most of the time, but I must disagree with him on this occasion. I want to point out that this is not, as the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) called it, a strategy to weaken the bill by the Conservative Party. This member allows his prejudice to ooze out of his mouth when he makes such a statement.

I think, Mr. Speaker, if you check the record of the committee in respect of this matter you will find that the efforts of the Progressive Conservative members of the committee were really not designed to weaken the bill in terms of the powers but to, in effect, strengthen the hand of the government in the exercise of the power with regard to the declaration of the emergency. Now, if an emergency were declared, the government would not be standing alone. If its recommendation were passed, the government would have the support of the opposition, or at least a majority of the members of this House of Commons. It seems to me, if I were sitting on the treasury benches, I would feel my hand was strengthened if the representatives of the people of Canada were behind me. I think the prejudice—I can only call it an outburst of prejudice—by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie is unjustified in the circumstances.

As the minister has said, we are dealing with an important bill. We are dealing with an important bill because of the powers it gives the government, sanctioned we hope by Parliament. It is important not only because it gives the government this power but because the government, in the near future, may see fit to exercise its power, ultimately with the approval of Parliament. I would be inclined to agree with the hon. member that the government would have to stand or fall on that judgment under the circumstances. Potentially it could be a dangerous statute. Everything that flows from it as a result of that right could be dangerous.

The minister says it is a highly technical statute. May I say with respect that I disagree with him. I do not think I have ever read any statute of Parliament, including the War Measures Act, which is so all-embracing or all encompassing in respect of the way it can gather under an umbrella the resources, the transportation facilities, the production facilities of the country, as related to energy. This is why I say it is a highly dangerous statute. That group of men, or women as the case may be, who will constitute the board, nominated as they may be as set forth by the minister, have upon them a great burden with regard to the operations of that board since they will be armoured by tremendous powers—some might say overloaded with powers. Having been given the broadest possible range of operation it seems unreasonable to me—I say this with the greatest of respect to the minister—that the board members ought to be given, in addition, the right in law to be protected if they act outside those powers. That is why I think it is important that this amendment not be dismissed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Baker: I will have no objection to a question at the end of my comments. I do not have a copy of the statutes in front of me with regard to the appointment of, let us say, provincial judges, federal court judges or others who exercise certain powers over citizens. However, I have read these statutes, and I do not recall seeing in them any provision whereby a person is given protection for acting outside his authority merely, as the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) says, because he professed to be acting within it. To my mind this would seem to be stretching matters just a wee bit. The minister, in defending the position taken by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), used the tactic that is often used when one describes judges. One will say of judges who decide cases in one's favour that they are marvellous, and of course that the others ought never to have been appointed. He embraced the argument of the hon. member for Greenwood. His argument was that this was a highly technical statute, and of course the minister agreed. I contend that it is not a highly technical statute at all. As I read it, it is a gathering of all of the powers to this board in the proper circumstances, supported by a resolution of parliament.

● (1610)

Someone says that they have the protection of the prerogative writs that are in the Federal Court Act. This is supposed to be a quick remedy. Mr. Speaker, it is some time since the minister practised law in the Federal Court of Canada, or in any court. I do not say that in any derogatory sense because he has been involved in the government of this country, but I point out to him that that is not a speedy remedy by any stretch of the imagination. I say this as one not that far distant from the practice of law.

Frankly I am somewhat dismayed that the group to my left, which on occasion in this parliament, in fact recently in this parliament, found themselves on the side of civil libertarians should now suddenly find themselves in a position where they would deny what seems to me to be an ordinary restriction on the power of any board, namely, that providing the board is acting in good faith the officials will have protection. However, if the board does not act in good faith, and officials act outside the limits of the statute, even though they profess to be acting within the statute—self-serving, of course—then they should not be protected.

I think the latter matter raised by one of the other speakers who preceded me related to the question of personal bankruptcy in the event something of this nature occurred. But surely the government of Canada is not in a different position than, let us say, the city of Toronto was on one occasion when a member of its police force acted illegally in carrying out his duties. I am sure he thought he acted legally, and the city of Toronto on that occasion decided to stand behind that person financially.

I understand what the government wants, but I really think it has gone somewhat too far in denying protection to the public who could be injured by someone taking a heavy-handed attitude, something that is not unknown in this world, using the authority, or at least thinking he is using the authority or, worse still, professing to be using the authority, when he knows in his heart that he is acting outside the statute. For those reasons, I really believe that this amending motion is important. I am rather surprised that the hon. member for Greenwood should take the attitude he has adopted. I knew him in other days before either of us came here, and as a student I observed him in Toronto arguing some cases that were completely on the other side of the principle that he is advancing in this House now.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the question I was going to pose to the hon. gentleman is that surely the appropriate way for the courts to exercise control over public servants is under the Federal Court Act rather than by exercising damages in a personal suit of this kind, in effect an action for tort for interference with an advantageous contractual relationship. Surely, the prerogative writs are appropriate there? I would point out that with the Federal Court Act, the injunction proceedings there could apply to interim injunctions as well.

Mr. Baker: I am not suggesting that the prerogative writs are not a remedy. I am suggesting that there are undertakings, as the minister knows, with respect to prerogative writs, undertakings which must be made at the time of the interim injunction which are of such a financial penalty, at least potentially, to the person against whom that undertaking is committed that on many occasions in effect it effectively removes from the petitioner to the court the right to proceed with his injunction. I am aware of the prerogative writs and how they work, but as the minister knows there is quite often a bond that must be filed, or cash that must be put up, or an undertaking given to pay, which really takes away the right of the average individual to action. If I had to judge between who is able to bear the financial burden of this I would say that the government is much better able to bear that financial burden than the individual, and that the burden ought to be placed on the government. That is aside from the argument of slowness, and that is why I suggest that we should go along with this amendment.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I would like to support the amendment of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). As a non-legal person I feel that this addition of "purported exercise" is unnecessary. I think this board will have tremendous powers. It may well be inactive for the next number of years, based on what the future in energy seems to hold for us. However, as I understand the meaning of "purported exercise" it means that any member of the board, acting no matter how irresponsibly, would be protected under this clause.

It seems to me that there is plenty of protection for these civil servants, for these appointed members, in the words "in the exercise of a duty or power," and that "purported duty" merely widens the whole matter so that they can hide behind any action they carry out by saying it was done in the purported exercise of a duty or power under this statute, and therefore they would not be subject to criticism or to action by anyone under this clause. I feel that the removal of "purported exercise" would make the members of the board more aware of their duties and more thoughtful in exercising their duties.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great delight and interest to the arguments advanced from both sides of the House. I believe they are serious arguments. A question has been raised as to the necessity of including the words "purported exercise." Clause 9(4) on page 5 of the bill reads:

The Board and its members are exempt from liability for any act or thing done or omitted by the Board in good faith in the exercise . . . of a duty or power under this Act.

That just simply means that immunity is given to the person who acted or did anything, or who omitted to do anything, as long as his action or inaction was undertaken in good faith. What the minister tries to convey is that further protection is needed. This is where we get into the "purported exercise". I want to quote from the dictionary, Fowler's Modern English Usage, second edition.

● (1620)

An hon. Member: That is not a dictionary.

Mr. Alexander: It is not; it is Fowler's Modern English Usage. At page 493, referring to the word "purport" it gives the meaning:

The word is one that, whether as noun or as verb, requires cautious handling. The noun may be said to mean 'what appears to be the significance'—

I do not think we are using it in this context; I think we are going into the explanation by way of the verb. Notice how the English language usage book indicates that this is a word that you just cannot tamper with, and it requires very cautious handling. With reference to the verb aspect of it, I should like to put the definition on the record:

As to the verb, there are certain well-defined idiomatic limitations on its use, one of which, in an ugly development, is sometimes neglected. This development is the use of the passive—

Now, we start to realize that we have a problem.

An hon. Member: A filibuster!

Mr. Alexander: It is not a filibuster. Any time a person wants to make a point somebody on my left says it is a filubuster. It is all right for them to frustrate this House by their attitude on the wiretap bill and their attitude with respect to the allocation bill. They are making all sorts of statements about what they can do, but I am getting sick and tired of these 30-odd people on my left creating an atmosphere that is frustrating the work of this House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I stand up only now and again but I can get kind of raucous if it is required.

Mr. Jamieson: What is the meaning given to that in the book?

Mr. Alexander: I stood up in all sincerity to try to get this House to realize what we are getting into.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

Considering the verb now, as I indicated, Fowler's Modern English Usage says:

The first idiomatic limitation then, is that the verb, though not strictly intransitive only, should never be used in the passive.

What we have to be concerned about here is whether we are overstepping the bounds by which immunity has been granted. When we read the section we see that it provides:

The board and its members are exempt from liability for any act or thing done or omitted by the board in good faith in the exercise . . .

The moment you get to the word "purported" I think you are frustrating that section to such an extent that one never knows whether in fact a board member could be caught in any respect. This is the part that is frightening. Surely, some responsibility must attach to a board member. I do not care who it is. If he accepts this job, then ultimately there must be some responsibility. The moment you bring in the words "purports to exercise" the clause is open to all sorts of interpretations; interpretations that will call perhaps for more litigation than is before the courts right now. I know that judgments have come out of litigation that could give interpretations of the words "purported exercise". I think the words are superfluous.

I should like to ask the minister about this because I am a little concerned. I am not trying to hold up this bill. I have not taken part in the debate so far, but when I see something like this I want to know the answer. I should like to ask the minister whether this wording is found in the general immunity section included in legislation which imposes responsibilities on boards. Is this the usual thing? Has it been tested in the courts? Is there a definition? If it is something new, surely we should have the reasoning or the background for it.

I will conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that in my opinion the word "purported" is contradictory when we look at the original intent of the section. Because it is open to many and valid interpretations then, as stated, we should be very cautious in tampering with this word or including it in this legislation. I do not think we on this side have any great hangup but we are concerned. I should like to ask the minister whether there have been cases in which the interpretation of that word has been adjudicated upon or whether it is the usual type of thing that is included in legislation when dealing with the immunity of boards, or persons, as the case may be.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am not entitled to speak again, I think, and I will require the unanimous consent of the House to respond.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I will have to put that to the House. The only other technique would be for the minister to rise and say "Is not the hon. member aware of such and such" which might be a very cumbersome question. Does the minister have unanimous consent to respond to the question posed by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it would have been valuable if this question had been put to me in the standing committee because then I could have sought advice in this regard. I must confess I have not made a review of the statutes to see to what extent members of the public service, or any other tribunal, are protected from personal suits in this regard. I hope that the leisure time I will have once this bill passes will allow me to carry on that study, but I cannot give a definitive opinion now. I would say, however, that we had the usual draftsmen draft this.

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): I just want to take something back, Mr. Speaker, that was interjected while the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) was speaking. I think someone in this corner called out "filibuster". Really, we were not meaning to say "filibuster" but perhaps something like philological peregrination because he was taking us through the pages of Fowler. If he had gone to the Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, 1964 edition, he would have found that the sense of the word "purported" as it is used as a past participle in this particular phrase, is in the sense of "professed". I think had he gathered that sense of the phrase "professed exercise", then he would have seen the point of the phrase as it stands in the bill.

Having made that point, and I am sure that he is now convinced, Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is anything else that needs to be said on this question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

Mr. Bell: On division.

Motion No. 2 (Mr. Baldwin) negatived.

● (1630)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now consider motion No. 3, standing in the name of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). Mr. Baldwin, seconded by Mr. Bell, moves:

Motion No. 3.

That Bill C-236, An Act to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada, and to amend the National Energy Board Act, be amended in Clause 11 thereof by deleting the words "that affect or will affect" in lines 5 and 6 on page 6 and substituting the word "affecting".

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I want to make just a few comments on this motion.

Mr. Jamieson: Make sure you speak on the right side. This is your own party's amendment.

Mr. Alexander: I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker. I have just exhausted all my comments on this particular amendment.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we ought to regularize our proceedings by asking for unanimous consent of the House so that the hon. member for Peace River can speak on this motion.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, may I suggest to the House that as motion No. 3 seeks to substitute one word for five words used by the government, which shows the nature of the Progressive Conservative Party since it can accomplish better with one word than the government can with five, and since this motion affects a clause which is the subject of a substantial amendment to be moved by the minister and, further, since the amendment to be moved by the minister includes in its proposed new terms Clause 1 in its original form, might I suggest that we stand motion no. 3 and deal with motion No. 4. Then, after No. 4 has passed, we could consider my amendment which would affect clause 11.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that motion No. 3 be allowed to stand and considered after the House has completed consideration of motion No. 4?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 3 (Mr. Baldwin) stands.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now consider motion No. 4.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I move:

Motion No. 4.

That Bill C-236, An Act to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada, and to amend the National Energy Board Act, be amended by renumbering Clause 11 thereof as Sub-clause 11(1) and by adding thereto the following:

Motion to adopt order — "(2) A notice of motion to concur in an order made under subsection (1) shall be laid on the table of each House of Parliament by or on behalf of a Minister of the Crown within seven days after the order is made if Parliament is then sitting.

Procedure in Commons — (3) A notice of motion laid before the House of Commons pursuant to subsection (2) shall be set down as an order of the day for consideration as the first government order on the sitting day next following the sitting day on which the notice was laid on the table of that House and until it is disposed of, no other government order shall be considered.

Question put — (4) At fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on the third sitting day following the commencement of consideration of a motion of which notice was given under subsection (2), or at such earlier time as the House of Commons is ready for the question, the Speaker shall put the question forthwith without further debate.

Energy Supplies Emergency Act

Calling Parliament

(5) If an order under subsection (1) is made during a prorogation of Parliament or when Parliament stands adjourned, Parliament shall be called forthwith to sit within seven days after the order is made under subsection (1).

When Parliament recalled

(6) If Parliament is called to sit in the circumstances described in subsection (5),

(a) the Speaker of the House of Commons shall, at the instance of a Minister of the Crown, cause a notice of motion to adopt an order under subsection (1) to be published on a Speacial Order Paper, which shall be circulated prior to the opening of Parliament or the resumption of the session, as the case may be; and

(b) consideration of a motion of which notice has been given in the House of Commons under paragraph (a) shall be set down as the only order of business and, when that order is disposed of, Mr. Speaker shall adjourn the House and, having consulted with the government, shall fix the date for the resumption of the session, provided that the foregoing provisions for adjournment shall not apply in the event that any other business is brought forward by the government.

Consideration

(7) Consideration of a motion of which notice has been given under subsection (6) shall commence at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of the day fixed, and the House shall sit continuously until eleven o'clock in the afternoon of such day or until such earlier time as the House of Commons is ready for the question, when the Speaker shall put the question forthwith without further debate.

Procedure in the Senate and termination

(8) Where a notice of motion to concur in an order made under subsection (1) is laid on the table of the Senate,

(a) if the notice was laid on the table of the Senate in the circumstances desbribed in subsection (2), the motion shall be debated in the Senate on the next sitting day as the first order of the day and brought to a vote before the expiration of the next two sitting days if not earlier disposed of, or

(b) if the notice was laid on the table of the Senate in the circumstances described in subsection (5), the motion shall be debated in the Senate as the only order of business and brought to a vote before the expiration of the sitting day on which notice thereof was laid on the table of the Senate.

Revocation

(9) If either House of Parliament negatives the motion that an order made under subsection (1) be concurred in, the order is thereupon revoked.

Effect of revocation

(10) Where an order made under subsection (1) is revoked pursuant to this section, any mandatory allocation program instituted as a result of that order immediately terminates but without prejudice to the previous operation of that program or anything duly done or suffered thereunder or any offence committed or any punishment incurred."

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment embodies the arrangements that were arrived at through discussions among the representatives of the parties in December. The purpose of the amendment is to make it clear that the House shall have an opportunity, if it is sitting, to consider, under Section 11(1), as it will become, the declaration of national emergency. The government is to be under the obligation to lay the declaration on the table of the House and, at that point, to provide for debate, over the succeeding days as set out in the amendment, so that the question can be determined shortly thereafter by the House as to whether there is indeed an emergency. If the House negatives the existence of the emergency, then, of course, the declaration will cease to be in effect, and the mandatory allocation order will also cease to have effect.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

The problem arose as well with regard to the declaration being made under section 11(1) when the House is not sitting. A situation was comprehended in which, first, the House is standing adjourned for some period of time during the course of the session and, second, in which the House has been prorogued and is waiting for another session to be called by His Excellency. The amendment provides that, in those circumstances, the House shall be called back for the purpose of considering a motion to deal with the declaration; that debate shall be for a continuous 12-hour period; and that, in the case of the prior prorogation of Parliament, the Throne Speech will not be proceeded with but that this item shall be the first order of business to be considered and dealt with by the House. In either case, whether the House is sitting or called back, if the order is negatived either by the House of Commons or by the Senate, this being a question on which the NDP have certain views, the declaration will cease to be in force and effect. At that point the mandatory allocation order will also cease to have any efficacy, subject only to this, and, I refer to the very last words of the over-all amendment:

... but without prejudice to the previous operation of that program or anything duly done or suffered thereunder or any offence committed or any punishment incurred.

That is the basis of the amendment. Basically, it is to carry into effect certain discussions which have been held by representatives of the parties, so that Parliament, as early as possible, can review the circumstances under which a declaration is made.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in one of his asides the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) indicated the reason for my rising at this time. Indeed, I intend at the end of my remarks to move an amendment to motion No. 4, the effect of which would be to remove the veto power given to the Senate by motion No. 4, as that motion now reads on the order paper.

An hon. Member: Why not remove the Senate at the same time?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): One of my friends behind me suggests that we should remove the Senate at the same time. I have been engaged in that effort for a long time. As I pointed out in our caucus a few days ago, I have been trying to get rid of the Senate since I first came here in 1942. At the moment, there are only three Senators still in the other place who were there when I first came, so that I am not doing badly. I will soon have the place abolished.

An hon. Member: What about Eugene Forsey?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Senator Eugene Forsey has made some of the best speeches against the Senate. One of his articles is still being used in various parts of this country in support of the abolition of the other place.

Mr. Speaker, may I refer to the statement of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, to the effect that motion No. 4 embodies the result of discussions among the parties. It is true that there were discussions about the idea of an order in council declaring an emergency which would require the approval of the House of Commons. Frankly, we do not know when there was imported into the language of this motion the suggestion that the approval of both the House of Commons and of the Senate would be required. I want to make it clear that, although we did not disagree with the idea of a reference to the House of Commons, we at no time agreed to the proposition that the Senate would have a veto in this area.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is part of Parliament.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member can make his speech later. I may say also that we do not share the concern, indeed we think it is an undue concern, of some members of this House, that an order in council under this legislation should be treated as though it were an order in council bringing in the War Measures Act or taking steps to interfere with civil liberties, steps that would lead to the arrest of people at four o'clock in the morning and so on. We think this is a different piece of legislation.

What we are concerned with in this legislation is the fact that an emergency could arise in this country during which Canadians might be suffering extreme cold. Canadians might be freezing. In those circumstances, the government should not only have authority to declare an emergency and act accordingly, but it should be obligated to take such steps. We do not share the view of some of my friends to the right on the proposition that the right of the government in these circumstances should be shackled. We are a bit afraid that if the right to declare an emergency and to deal with it is burdened with the necessity of calling parliament when parliament is not here, the government could err in not declaring an emergency when it ought to do so.

However, it sounds like a good idea that if there has been an order in council declaring an emergency, it ought to come before parliament. In spite of what I just said about the difference between this kind of emergency and emergencies involving infringements of civil liberties, we are prepared to go along with the main purport of this amendment which is that an order in council establishing an emergency having been passed, within a certain period of time that order must be approved by this House of Commons.

I must point out, however, that we take the strongest possible exception to the idea that it must also be approved by the other place or, in other words, that the following type of situation could develop. There could be shortages of energy and fuel in this country to the point where Canadian were suffering. The government could take the view that there was an emergency, and could express it in an order in council. This House of Commons, which contains the elected members of the people of Canada, could take the same view and say yes, there is an emergency, and we approve of what the government has done. Yet their Honours in the other place could veto the decision of the government and the decision of this House of Commons. I submit that is a shameful thing for the government to be placing before us at this time.

When I was referring to the place of the Senate a while ago, I overheard one of my friends to the right use the word "parliament". I suppose that was an attempt to remind me that parliament consists of more than the House of Commons, and that there is a constitutional obligation for everything that is decided to be decided by both Houses. May I remind the hon. member that parliament consists of three entities and not just two. It consists of the Senate, the House of Commons and the representative of the Crown. If you talk about having a resolution approved by both Houses, you are still not having it approved by parliament as a whole. It is only when you bring in a bill, have it passed by both Houses and submitted for Royal Assent that it becomes an act of parliament in its entirety.

I remind the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro), who has been following me with interest, that there are instances when decisions under legislation are made by this House of Commons and by this House of Commons alone. I ask my hon. friend to look at Section 91(1) of the British North America Act which, among other things, provides that there shall be no tampering with the provision that a parliament must not last longer than five years. In that same Section 91(1), approved by this House of Commons and the other place, there are words that say that that provision can be set aside, that in time of war or emergency, real or apprehended, the length of a parliament can be extended, provided it is not opposed by more than one third of the members of the House of Commons.

What decision could be more serious to our democratic way of life than the right to extend, even in wartime, the life of parliament and yet in our sacred document, the constitution, it is clearly spelled out that the decision on that matter is made solely and exclusively by the House of Commons. Do not tell me that I am ignoring parliament as a whole or suggesting something new or unique when I say there are times when decisions are made by the House of Commons alone, and there are times when it ought to be that way. I did not have the time nor the research assistance that some people have to do all the searching of records and documents that I wanted to do. I went on the assumption this might not come up until tomorrow or the next day. However, I do know from my memory of some other instances.

For example, in the Government Organization Act of 1970, there is provision for the government to establish additional ministries of state, or ministers of state, or both. That act provides that if the government passes an order in council establishing a new ministry of state, it cannot come into effect until that order in council has been tabled in this House of Commons and approved by this House of Commons, but only by this House of Commons. Incidentally, that was put in there largely at the instigation and urging of my friends in the Progressive Conservative Party. In 1970, they were quite satisfied that the establishment of an additional ministry could be put into effect if it had a favourable decision by this House of Commons and by this House of Commons alone.

In looking at a situation in which people might be freezing because of shortages of energy or fuel, why must we give a veto to the other place? Members know what some of us think about some of the business connections and business interests of those in that other place. I submit that if ever there was a case where the elected people should speak on behalf of the people of Canada, this is it. In a cold northern country, when talking about the difficulties of fuel and energy, it is preposterous that there is placed before us a proposal that a decision of the government, concurred in by the House of Commons, could be vetoed by Their Honours in the other place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): When we passed the Statutory Instruments Act a year or two ago—maybe it is not that long, I am relying on my memory—there was in it a part which amended the Interpretation Act and it does provide for affirmative and negative resolutions. The Interpretation Act, as hon. members are aware, is an act which provides definitions. That is really all it does; one cannot make a great out of this, but I think it is relevant to the picture. It is true there are two definitions of affirmative resolutions and two definitions of negative resolutions.

● (1650)

Mr. Bell: A message from the Senate?

An hon. Member: From Her Majesty, signed with her own hand.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hon. members will learn in a moment what it is I have just had confirmed, thanks to the efficient messenger service in this building. I was pointing out that in the Interpretation Act, as amended by the Statutory Instruments Act, we find two kinds of affirmative resolutions and two kinds of negative resolutions. One is an affirmative resolution of parliament, that is to say of both Houses, and the other is an affirmative resolution of the House of Commons. Then, there is the same duality with respect to negative resolutions. Hon. members in other parts of the House may cite this as a precedent for having resolutions submitted in both Houses. They are free to argue that way. In fact, I have given them the reference. But I would make this point: it is not the member for Winnipeg North Centre who is pressing the idea of a resolution being passed only in the House of Commons. It is there in the Statutes of Parliament. It is there in the Interpretation Act brought up to date only a year or two ago by the Statutory Instruments Act.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that if I were to ask hon. members what is the most serious action taken by the executive since the end of the second world war, in nine cases out of ten, if not in 99 cases out of 100, I would get the same answer,—that the most serious executive act on the part of the government was the declaration of the War Measures Act in peacetime in October 1970. I have now come to the point I wished to have confirmed, and which was confirmed, thanks to the efficient messenger service, as I said a few moments ago.

As hon. members will recall, the declaration was made by the government during the night of October 16/17, 1970, and came into effect at four o'clock in the morning of Friday, October 17, 1970. At eleven o'clock that morning the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) presented a motion asking the House of Commons to approve the government's action in invoking the War Measures Act.

Mr. Alkenbrack: He had already invoked it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is beside the point. He asked members of this House what they thought about it. The point is that the most serious executive act undertaken by any government in Canada since the second world war was submitted to this House for approval. Was it submitted to the other place for approval? The answer is, no.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It should have been.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I do not agree at all, but even if the hon. member wants to argue that it should have been, the fact is that it was not done. As a matter of fact, the government was not obliged to submit a motion even to the House of Commons. It was an act of democracy on the part of the government of which we approved. We did not approve of what was being done but we did not hesitate to give unanimous consent to allow the government to introduce the motion, because it was doing the right thing. The Senate was not even sitting on October 17, 1970. It resumed on Monday, October 20, and it continued its debate on the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, and it was not until a day or so later that the Hon. Paul Martin tabled in that House the Order in Council invoking the War Measures Act together with related correspondence. But there was no debate on the matter in the other House. There was no motion No decision was reached by the other House at all. The decision to approve the government's action was made here, and only here.

If it is part of our history that the most serious executive action most people can remember was made subject to the approval of the House of Commons alone, it is utterly preposterous for the government to say that if an emergency is declared because people are freezing and need power the question should be submitted not only for the approval of the House of Commons but for the approval of the business people, the magnates, the directors and so on, in the other place. It is completely wrong, and I urge the government as strongly as I can to agree to the amendment I am about to propose.

We do not object to the idea that the government should bring the matter before parliament. On balance, we say there is merit in it. We have become involved in a lot of gobbledygook in this clause because of the need to anticipate three kinds of situations, first, a declaration being made when the House is sitting, second, when the House is in recess, and, third, when the House is away during a period of prorogation. I am not saying there is anything wrong with it. I am accepting it. I am commenting on it. But our willingness to accept and support the idea that the elected people of Canada should pass on this important matter does not carry with it willingness to accept the right of veto being given to the other place, and that is what it amounts to.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): You are just trying to get at the other place.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hope the hon. member will rise and make a reasonable, sensible speech when he is through with these interruptions. I hope he will tell us—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but the time available to him has expired. He could continue, however, by unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I shall take only a few minutes more. I thank the House for its courtesy. I hope anyone speaking to this amendment will explain why it is so much more important to bring the Senate into this than it was to bring the Senate into the declaration of the War Measures Act. After all, we are dealing here with something which affects plain, ordinary Canadians who may be cold. We are their elected representatives and we should determine whether the government should proceed with the proposition it makes that there is an emergency.

● (1700)

Now, to achieve this change, this denial of the right of veto to the Senate, I am going to move an amendment to motion No. 4. As I started to say a moment ago before I was interrupted, motion No. 4 has a lot of language in it and it would be extremely difficult to draft an amendment to cut the Senate out in all the places that it appears in the motion. Therefore, I am not going to interfere at all with the obligation that the order be tabled in the other place as well as here. I am not going to interfere with the right of the other place to debate it, or with the regulations that apply to that debate, or even with their right to vote on it. But I am going to insist that this House should not give the Senate, by their vote, the right of veto. How they vote simply should not count.

My proposal is simply that we change subclause (9) in the proposed motion. That subclause now states:

If either House of Parliament negatives the motion that an order made under subsection (1) be concurred in, the order is thereupon revoked.

I propose we change that wording to read as follows:

If the House of Commons negatives the motion that an order made under subsection (1) be concurred in, the order is thereupon revoked.

I have this in proper amendment form and I shall read it in just a moment, but may I make clear what it would do. If my amendment carries—and I plead with this House in the name of democracy and in the name of the rights of the ordinary people of this country to accept my amendment—what would happen is that if there is an emergency, then parliament is either sitting or is called, the order is laid on the table in both Houses, debates take place, but it is the vote in this House that prevails. If the order place votes the same way as this House, that is fine. But if this House votes that there is an emergency and the other House votes the other way, the vote in the other place has no effect and we are not stuck with some back and forth arrangement regarding conferences in an effort to get things sorted out while Canadians suffer from the cold.

I plead this case as strongly as I can, and I urge my hon. friends in the Progressive Conservative party to support me. Let me give them this word of commendation. I will commend them for having fought to get a reference to parliament into this bill, and here it is now before us. I will even take back some of the things I said a while ago and say that this is good. But having got it in the bill, let us not spoil it by giving a veto to the other place. My hon. friends of the Conservative party know how many Liberals there are in the other place and knowing how the other place is dominated by Liberals I am surprised that they would want to give them this extra power.

To my Liberal friends on the other side of the House I say, let them look at this proposal carefully and not be bound by any agreement that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) may have made with any spokesman for the Progressive Conservative party. Any agreement that we made for this motion requiring reference to parliament did not include veto power being given to the Senate.

Therefore, in support of this very strong plea that I urge upon this House, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That Motion No. 4 be amended by deleting from the proposed subclause (9) of clause 11 of Bill C-236 the words "either House of Parliament" and by substituting therefor the words "the House of Commons".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Peace River rising on a point of order?

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to have the same courtesy extended to the hon. member to ask him a question. I was very impressed by the hon. member's speech, and certainly in the expectation that his amendment will last until this evening I will ponder it, just as the government ponders in the motto that I quoted earlier today. In coming to his decision, can the hon. member advise me whether the two members of his party who, during the committee hearings, introduced an amendment to clause 11 that included the Senate as well as the House of Commons are also going to support him?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Well, Mr. Speaker, they can speak for themselves in this debate, and probably will do so, but I can tell my hon. friend that there is a misunderstanding about what went on in the committee. But whatever did go in the committee, my colleagues from Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) and Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), as well as all of my colleagues, will be voting for this amendment.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With regard to the amendment referred to by the hon. member for Peace River, it was never moved in committee or discussed formally between the minister, the hon. member for Peace River and the representatives of our party. The idea was that, just before the recess, the hon. member for Peace River would introduce his amendment, which he did. Then, he found, to his horror, that it did not include everything he thought it included. But at no time was an amendment moved in committee by this party. Indeed, the minister's amendment was not presented to the committee in written form; we only agreed to the amendment coming before the House at this stage for debate.

Mr. Baldwin: You did file one in the committee that included the Senate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I raise this point only because the Chair asked whether hon. members were speaking to a point of order. Is it clear that the amendment I have moved is in order?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): That is correct; the amendment is in order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Then, would Your Honour put it?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I will put the amendment. Moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That motion No. 4 be amended by deleting from the proposed subclause (9) of clause 11 of Bill C-236 the words "either House of Parliament" and by substituting therefor the words "the House of Commons".

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to this amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), specifically to paragraph (9) of motion No. 4, I hope I will be able, in the most positive fashion, to indicate my opposition to it. Having said that, I would be the first to admit that, to the best of my knowledge, the hon. member did not have an opportunity to attend the energy committee hearings when this bill was receiving consideration.

No piece of legislation that has come before this House since I have had the honour to sit here has disturbed me more than Bill C-236. Not only has the legislation disturbed me, but the government's unforgiveable method of handling the legislation has disturbed me almost as much. I find it odd that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would emphasize energy shortages in the context of this bill and totally ignore the real problem that will result from this legislation, which is not supply but rather the cost of fuel in this country.

During the committee hearings, and in answer to many questions that have been raised in this House, the government has indicated that it is nothing but a "patsy" for the international oil companies. I say that not only should we in this House of Commons review any purported state of national emergency, we should also ask the Senate to agree that there is such an emergency. I find it very difficult to understand the argument raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre when he referred to the fact that the War Measures Act was approved by this House on a motion but was not subsequently approved by the Senate. In reply to that, I would suggest that it would have been my wish had I been here that the matter be sent to the Senate for its approval.

Mr. Douglas: That is a democratic approach.

Mr. Stevens: I would point out that Bill C-236 disturbs me more than anything else that has been before this House since I have had the honour to represent the riding of York-Simcoe. I suggest further that no piece of legislation in this country has disturbed me more than the War Measures Act. I only hope that, had I been sitting in this House at the time it was invoked, I would have had the courage to stand up and vote against it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Having lived with Bill C-236 during its consideration by the committee, and having been left with the frustration of being denied the right to call witnesses before that committee and the right to hold meetings since June of last year, I feel stronger than ever that any declaration of a national emergency should also be sent to the Senate for approval. After considerable negotiation, the minister agreed that if and when he makes a declaration in respect of an emergency and causes a program to be worked out, such as is anticipated by this legislation, the declaration itself will be referred to the House of Commons and the Senate for approval. In view of that, I find it truly unbelievable that a member of that group to my left would suggest there is no reason for double security in respect of a declaration of a national emergency.

We should bear in mind that in this House we are to be given only three days to debate the matter, with no suggestion that the committee will convene to consider it. Judging from the experience we have had with this Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) and the government, both in committee on this bill and in the House, we will have little opportunity to dig into the facts in order to determine why the government might feel there is a national emergency. We will have little opportunity to assess the situation in Canada or to determine what facts might lead the government to declare such an emergency. In that context, I hope we, in our wisdom, will vote in the appropriate way.

Let me emphasize the fact that I see nothing wrong in having the Senate review the situation to see whether it comes to the same conclusion at which we arrived.

An hon. Member: The amendment allows for that.

Mr. Stevens: Surely, I am justified in suggesting that, bearing in mind the fact that this government has demonstrated over the past weeks that it does not know even at this date whether there is going to be an energy crisis, as it likes to refer to it, in the coming months. In fact, there has been mounting evidence over the last four weeks to suggest that the so-called fuel supply shortage will not in fact develop. As a matter of fact, a chart provided to the energy committee at one of its last meetings demonstrated that the government anticipated less of a shortfall in December than it had anticipated six weeks previous.

Let me point out also that certain publications make it clear that the anticipated 40 per cent shortfall in the New England States is not likely to materialize, and that the estimate now is that there may be no more of a shortfall than 3 per cent. If this government is unwilling, as has been the case, to have its minister appear before the committee of this House to allow that committee to investigate the current situation in Canada in respect of supply and price, then I have very little confidence that if and when a declaration of a state of emergency is made under this legislation we in this House will have the opportunity to truly investigate the facts in order to determine why the government feels an emergency exists.

Mr. Baker: The government has not come clean with the Canadian public.

Mr. Stevens: It is in that context that I oppose the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The government is proposing an extremely serious measure in Bill C-236. Tremendous powers will be given to a board, if and when a state of emergency is declared.

Contrary to what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre indicated, when Mr. Armstrong, the President of Imperial Oil, appeared before the committee he made it very clear that he was virtually in complete agreement with allocation Bill C-236.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: I notice that the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) endorses that view. Surely, nothing demonstrated more clearly the fact that it was this government, working in unison with the large multinational oil corporations, which fostered this piece of legislation.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the comment by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), I might point out that Mr. Armstrong was a witness of the hon. member for York-Simcoe.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Perhaps I should indicate that, in my opinion, that is a point of debate rather than a point of order.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the only witness we succeeded in calling was called to appear before the committee by the committee.

An hon. Member: At whose suggestion?

Mr. Stevens: I feel that had the committee been allowed to call those witnesses on the list we proposed, we would now have a much better informed membership in this House than we have at the present time.

Mr. Bawden: They don't want that.

Mr. Stevens: In my opinion, the more witnesses we called the more able we would have been to demonstrate that this government was simply acting as a taxi for the seven major international oil companies.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Does the hon. member rise on a question of privilege?

Mr. Blais: No, Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to suggest that it is completely contrary to the rules of this House, and the rules of the committees of this House, to refer to anything that took place in the steering committee except the report of that committee. I would point out that the report of the steering committee only recommended that appearance of Mr. Armstrong before the committee. My friend's reference is most irregular. We must remember that the committee has already made its report. The decision of the steering committee, as I recall it, only recommended the calling of the President of the Imperial Oil Company, whereas hon. members opposite wanted to call the presidents of Texaco, Gulf and a number of others from the large multinational corporations the hope that the position they were taking would be supported. Much to their chagrin that was not the case, but rather the government's position was supported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I suggest that is not actually a point of order. Hon. members must remember that the committee has made its report to the House, and I agree that the hon. member is entitled to refer to that committee report as well.

Mr. Baker: Of course. Go back to sleep.

Mr. Alexander: You have been here long enough to know that.

● (1720)

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, If I may continue my comments on the amendment, I might refer to the fact that the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) raised the question of who called Mr. Armstrong. We were not at all disturbed by the testimony of Mr. Armstrong, because it demonstrated exactly what we have been saying, which is that this government is acting as a tool of the major international companies.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, when one receives this type of flack one knows he is hitting where it hurts. With that background, as I have said, I am quite certain, had we been given the opportunity—and incidentally now that the minister has returned to his chair he cannot deny it—to call the witnesses we proposed, to call before the committee there would have been some very revealing statements to show exactly why the government is proposing this legislation at the present time.

I would emphasize it was our group which proposed that the declaration of an emergency be referred to the House of Commons and the Senate, and that it be negatived or otherwise by those two bodies, rather than be left solely to the government to decide, as had been proposed. It was not the hon. members to the left who agreed. They did agree subsequently, but it was our proposal, and I say it is a stronger proposal since it is a two-pronged proposal involving the House of Commons and the Senate.

Having said that I find it very strange that the allies of the government, the hon. members to my left, should be disturbed. After all there are some 70-odd Liberal members sitting in the Senate at the present time, and their leader sits in the cabinet. Surely, we do not think that the odds would be less than 100 to one against the Senate ever negativing a state of emergency which had been declared and approved in this House.

So, I am saying, in dealing with this type of legislation, the NDP has come up with a trumped-up argument. The members of the NDP know that the question of whether or not the Senate is included is of virtually no consequence. I am saying that it is a safeguard in the event that this House, for any reason, should not negative a motion perhaps the Senate would do so. Then, the nation should perhaps decide whether there was truly an emergency or whether the government had attempted to mislead the people of Canada.

I hope to be able to speak further on this bill, but I did feel at this time that I wanted to make clear why I, personally, am so opposed to the proposed amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I believe this amendment would delete a possible safeguard in respect of the declaring of the national emergency in this country. I am sufficiently aroused by the impact, or the possible impact of this legislation, that I feel we need every safeguard we can possibly have in order to protect ourselves against this government and the multinational and international corporations.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended joining in the debate on this bill, but unfortunately some allegations have been placed on the record which require rebuttal. The amendment introduced as motion No. 4 on the order paper is a compromise between the parties. I agree that there is a subamendment presently under consideration. However, I shall concentrate on the amendment. The members of the New Democratic Party also were a party to that compromise when the minister presented it to the committee. The bill, in its present form, is a marvel of compromise, good sense and reason. I wish to point out that the compromise had absolutely nothing to do with the hon. member for York Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). There is a story behind that which is of considerable interest.

As hon. members will recall, when the bill was introduced for second reading and was debated, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) indicated that it was the intention of that party to completely filibuster this bill. He said that they would talk, talk and talk. The hon. member for Peace River indicates no. I must place that nod of the head on the record. Now it is a positive nod in agreement with my negative statement.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order under that standing orders, with which Your Honour is familiar, which permits a member, when words are put into his mouth which are not correct, to so state and I do so state at this time. I indicated that this party, because of the great power granted by this bill, intended to examine it at reasonable length and would move suitable amendments. The word "filibuster" is a word that is most repugnant to me. I have never used it and I shall never use it. I would like the hon. member to bear that in mind.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, it is perhaps because of the fact that I have not been in this House any longer than the hon. member for York Simcoe that I have been impressed by some of my experiences with the Conservative Party, as well as some of my reading in that regard, and have been under the impression that the conduct of the Progressive Conservative Party constituted filibustering. I shall not use that term if it is repugnant to the hon. member.

However, there were public declarations that they would speak at length on this bill. They did so until there was pressure coming back from their constituencies to the effect that they should let the bill pass on second reading. The bill did pass second reading and then, in committee, there were indications that it was still the intention of the representatives of the Conservative Party to stymie the intentions of the government by adopting tactics in that committee which would delay the passage of this piece of legislation. With all due respect, may I say that the hon. member for Peace River, who is intent on interfering with my contribution to this debate, was not there. Eventually, when he did start attending the meetings of the committee his remarks were conciliatory and, indeed, his presence in the committee signalled the departure of the hon. member for York Simcoe who had not been so conciliatory before that particular event. I might indicate that there seemed to be a shift in the particular direction taken by members on the other side.

By coincidence, referring to what the hon. member for York Simcoe said, the whole change, the road of demarcation—

An hon. Member: The road to Nipissing.

Mr. Blais: Yes; it may be the road to Nipissing because my constituents are very interested in the passage of this particular piece of legislation. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is attempting to make light of this bill. I suggest to him that he should refer to his constituents. I would point out to him that he and they live east of that line which is being supplied by off-shore oil. I would point out also that his constituents are very vulnerable because they find themselves at the end of the supply line. I would advise him to be very careful with his comments.

● (1730)

Now, returning to Damascus, the Tory conversion on the road to Damascus took place when, lo and behold, at the behest of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), the President of Imperial Oil was summoned before the standing committee. Contrary to the insinuations of the hon. member for York-Simcoe, I have no connection with the President of Imperial Oil. Although I have an Imperial Oil credit card, I do not have any shares in that company. I do not know whether or not the hon. member for York-Simcoe has.

As a responsible government member of the committee, I took the attitude that what the President of Imperial Oil was going to say would not assist the consideration of the bill. I did so because of the Tory stand. They were delaying the bill, and expected the attitude of the President of Imperial Oil to support them. They were very insistent on having the President of Imperial Oil appear before the committee, and I was prepared for his appearance. But, Mr. Speaker, on that Thursday morning Mr. Armstrong appeared before the committee and provided the government with complete, unquestioned, unconditional support, except for three minor amendments that he suggested to the government's bill. Mr. Speaker, I cannot describe to you the faces of the members of the Tory party. They were a sight to behold. As a result, there was a volley of questions from them. They had not been expecting that sort of bombshell.

For a moment I felt that a rift could develop between the multinationals and the Tory party. I could not believe my eyes. Of course, that was on the spur of the moment, and I am sure the differences have since been patched up. However, almost simultaneously with the evidence given by the President of Imperial Oil the Conservatives began to show the sweetest disposition, the like of which we have not seen since January 4, 1973, or at least during my short experience with members of the Tory party. I was so relieved to see this conciliatory attitude because I recognized the seriousness of the emergency we were facing, and the potential emergency for which the government was attempting to prepare. We had but to read the newspapers to be convinced of the fact that we were facing very serious difficulties indeed.

On top of that evidence, which showed that the crisis was one that we ought to be contemplating seriously, came support from that particular company which had no problem at all with its supplies. In fact, it gets all its supplies from Venezuela. Of course, then the Tory members wanted somebody from Texaco. It does not get all its oil from Venezuela. It gets some of its oil from the Arab countries. We were dealing with a particular witness who was not facing any shortages—

An hon. Member: Who is?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, we get that from a member from Alberta. While we are freezing in the darkness, let us consider the seriousness of that interjection from the hon. member from Alberta.

Now, we have a bill which, after the complete conversion of the Tory party, progressed through committee stage and which is the result of compromise. I still recall the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) sitting at a press table, smiling here and there, pointing out adjustments in the bill. They did so in a very friendly manner. They are both present. I am sure they will recall that occasion with fond memories, once they have left this honourable assembly.

I might point out that I am slightly disappointed at the amendment that was presented, because I feel we have a very potent bill indeed. There is no doubt about that. I am aware of the constitutional limitations that face the executive in the implementation of its provisions. There is no doubt in my mind that there is too much power given to the executive. I did not feel that it was necessary to bring this bill back to parliament for debate within the time stipulated because, in my opinion, the courts of the land could well determine whether a declaration of emergency was one that the government was entitled to make, having regard to all the factors relating to such an emergency.

There is no question at all that the government would not interfere with private contracts, as it has power to do under this legislation, unless there was a state of national emergency. The cases are quite clear. I do not have to cite them. I do not need Senator Forsey to assist me at this time, but I suggest the cases are legion to show that the emergency provisions of this bill could not be brought into force until there was a de facto emergency. Further, if a declaration were made of an emergency which was not justified by the facts, then any citizen of Canada directly affected by the implementation of the provisions of this bill could bring an application before the Supreme Court, in order to present to that court the facts as he saw them to enable the court to determine whether or not the government was acting soundly.

I suggest that the government would not make such a declaration without very close consultation with the provinces.

An hon. Member: For the first time.

Mr. Blais: I hear this "For the first time." For some time now, the Conservative party has been suggesting that the government has not been consulting with the provinces. I take strong issue with that, because the government has been in very close touch with the provinces on this energy question. It may be that some of the actions taken by the government have not been to the liking of one province or another. Evidently they were not in certain circumstances. We forget that we have a constitution in Canada which creates a federal government, and that government is responsible for the peace, order and good government of the whole country. At the time we were dealing with the Quebec problem there were many cries for stronger central government in order to achieve a united nation, one country. There were a number of cries that the provinces were too strong, that the central government was too weak, at the time we were facing the Quebec problem, which now evidently has been resolved.

● (1740)

The Conservatives are now saying that the central government is attempting to take too much power, too many responsibilities; that we should give more power to the provinces; that the provinces, after all, have a right to their resources. I recognize that they have a right to the resources that lie within their boundaries, but the Conservative Party would like us to believe that they also have a right over interprovincial trade. That is their view, Mr. Speaker, and I cannot interpret it as being any different. When Mr. Pearson was prime minister of the country, the Tories were saying that there was too much concentration of power in the provinces. Now, they have done a complete flip-flop, and because we are dealing with a different province, they say the federal government is attempting to take too much power unto itself. I suggest that they cannot suck and whistle at the same time.

An hon. Member: You are doing it.

Mr. Blais: These one liners slay me, Mr. Speaker. We are dealing with an emergency situation, a confrontation not between the federal government and the provincial governments, but between groups of provinces; one group identified as the consuming provinces and the other group the producing provinces. Mr. Speaker, we are attempting at this particular time to protect the people of Canada from the Tories because it is their intention to delay the bill. I might indicate as well that in this conflict between the producing and the consuming provinces, there will have to be an arbiter.

I am very anxious to see the results of the meetings on the 23rd and 24th of this month between the first ministers of the various provinces and the federal government. Two questions have to be resolved: the question of pricing and the question of supply. The question of pricing is a short term, immediate problem but the question of supply is dependent on how long it takes to build a pipeline and where it will be located. The question of pricing is going to be of considerable interest to the provinces; indeed, the consuming provinces in eastern Canada, including Quebec, are going to be very interested in finding out how much a barrel of oil, or gas or home heating fuel or indeed the building blocks for their petrochemical industry, are going to cost. They will also be interested in finding out if they will have a petrochemical industry and how much it is going to cost. The producing provinces are interested in finding out how much they will get from the sale of oil.

If there is not a strong federal presence at that particular conference, the party which will suffer is the body politic of Canada and all the residents of this country. To my mind, it is essential that we recognize the obligation of the federal government to protect its jurisdictional responsibilities. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that any attempt to erode the powers of the federal government at such an important period in our history is very serious indeed. I suggest that if the opposition is interested in tying the hands of the federal government prior to that conference, they are acting most irresponsibly and will have to bear the consequences. There is no one who can say of this government that it is not acting in the best interests of the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: This government?

Mr. Blais: We have not abandoned our responsibilities, and we have not abandoned the principle of the adversary system in our parliamentary structure or, indeed, in our federal-provincial negotiations.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him is now expired.

[English]

Does the hon. member rise for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. Stevens: No, Mr. Speaker; on three questions of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): We will listen to one at a time.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais), first of all, indicated that I had engaged in a filibuster. I want to say most emphatically that I feel that statement was completely without foundation. This debate has not even been going three hours, and I would emphasize that I was simply the first speaker on the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I did not even take my full 20 minutes as the hon. member did.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I regret to say this, but the hon. member will know that this is not a question of privilege; it is a question of opinion on what was said. The hon. member rises on another question of privilege?

Mr. Stevens: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member indicated that I may have shares in Imperial Oil. I want to assure this House that I do not have shares in Imperial Oil. I wish to assure this House that my family did not have the good fortune which the Trudeau family had, and have a fortune spring from Imperial Oil.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I was not a member of the committee to which this bill that we are reporting was referred. This is probably just as well because I must say that, while I found the revelations of what took place in the committee extremely interesting and would have liked to hear more about them, I am afraid the discussions of the internal details of the committee are obscuring an important point of principle which is raised by the amendment moved by my colleague. The important point of principle is one that I think we have to settle and that is whether the other place, a non-elected body, is the appropriate group to have the responsibility of determining whether an emergency of the type described in the measure exists in this country. I say emphatically that it is not; that a non-elected body is not an appropriate tribunal or authority for determing the existence of an emergency.

It would be absolutely unthinkable, after the government of this country, the executive, had determined that there was in fact a national emergency, and a matter which required extraordinary action and that decision had been upheld or approved by a motion of the elected members of this House of Commons, that this body which has no jurisdiction in this matter unless we choose to give it, the other place, should be given the responsibility of overriding a decision on this matter of the executive of the country and the decision of the House of Commons composed of elected members. It is no insult whatever to the other place. It is not quite correct to say that they are unrepresentative. They do represent certain interests. A number of directorships are held by members of the other place. I will not go into details, but it is well known that they represent a particular point of view. I, for one, other members of my party and, I hope, members of the House generally, do not accept the proposition that we should give to the other place the right to veto the will of the elected members of the House of Commons.

● (1750)

The principle embodied in motion No. 4—I am not talking of the amendment as a whole—is an advance. I was in the House when the War Measures Act was invoked by a decision of the executive. Their power to do that has been upheld by the courts on innumerable occasions. They are the authority which primarily determines the existence of the emergency. In that situation we, in this House, were asked to express our views as to whether an emergency existed. I was one of those who voted against the invocation of the War Measures Act, because I did not think that such an emergency existed as would justify the complete abolition of the constitution and the withdrawal of all the rights and liberties of the people. This is what was involved in any declaration that the War Measures Act had been invoked and was in force.

I submit that the elected branch of Parliament in which I am now speaking, the House of Commons, should have the right to pass judgment on whether the very strong powers—they need to be strong in an emergency—to be conferred by this statute are justified by the existence of a real emergency. That, really, is what we are considering, and in that regard the provision before us represents a step forward. But, in giving the non-elected, unrepresentative members of the other place the power to intervene and say, "We say, from our limited point of view, that there is no emergency, and therefore the will of the people of Canada can be frustrated by our determination," we are taking not one step forward but two steps backward.

We are talking, simply, about a matter of principle. This has nothing to do with what went on in committee. I submit that the other place is not the appropriate body to determine this particular subject matter, important as it is to all the people of Canada. The Senate does not have the power under the constitution. Why should we give them that power by statute? It would be wrong of us to do so. I think we should be abandoning our responsibilities as elected representatives if we were to share our responsibility with a non-elective body and give them power to veto decisions which are the subject matter of this particular motion. We are not considering a statute. This is to be a resolution. I think it is perfectly appropriate for resolutions to be passed by the House of Commons, without reference to the other place.

For these reasons, I hope the House will determine to accept the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Let us pass the measure, and vest the ample power to check decisions in this elected House of Parliament; let us not resort to the other place which, for reasons I could elaborate on at length, is made up of the most inappropriate group possible to which this power should be given.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Harney). I beg your pardon. The Chair had recognized the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), but I think he had yielded to the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). I think, to be correct, the Chair had better recognize the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, may I emphasize some of the points raised by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) in support of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The amendment proposed by the minister, as printed on the order paper, is mostly the result of negotiation between the minister and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). As the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) pointed out in committee, they were busy working out last minute details. The amendment was never presented in written form in the committee. The committee agreed that it should be printed on the order paper for consideration at the report stage. This we are now doing and, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said, we now see its weakness.

As the amendment proposed by the minister now stands, the Senate has the right to veto the decision of the elected members of this House. By giving that right to an appointed body we should be thwarting one of the basic principles of democracy. I am disappointed to note that members of the Conservative party so far have been supporting the amendment proposed by the minister.

If there is an emergency involving oil supplies, an emergency affecting thousands of Canadians, people in hospitals, children in schools and workers in industry, the responsibility for decision making should not rest with those who cannot speak for the people, but should rest with those who are elected in this chamber.

Mr. Paproski: Filibuster.

Mr. Symes: If the House accepts this amendment, appointed members and not representatives in this chamber will have the power to make the decision. May I call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock the House adjourned without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. OBERLE—CBC PROGRAM, "UP CANADA"

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, on January 8, 1974, the night before last, the government subsidized national television network aired a program called "Up Canada", a portion of which was dedicated to a soap opera called "One Honourable Member". It may be coincidental that this program was followed immediately by a program called, "Some Honourable Members". I, and I am sure most hon. members, appreciate the media's recognition of our presence here in Ottawa, but we must object to the use of the national network in creating a false impression about our activities here.

The scene in the opera showed one hon. member from the west coast, whose name and address were almost identical with those of one of my colleagues, in bed with another member's secretary. The male actor was clad only in a blanket with which he protected his vitals, and the female was devoid of any clothing apart from false eyelashes and fingernails.

An argument ensued in bed over the arrival of the member's wife from the west coast. The girl decided to "split the sheets" and she called a taxi which was to arrive in five minutes. As it happened, the taxi was on the spot almost immediately.

I would expect, Mr. Speaker, that the minister responsible for financing the corporation would make every effort to stop the continuation of this exhilarating cultural experience so that we do not create the impression in Canada that any member or his secretary can call a taxi in Ottawa and expect to have it arrive in less than half an hour.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF MOTION TO CONTINUE CERTAIN TARIFF REDUCTIONS UNTIL JUNE 30, 1974

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 60(1) I wish to table notice of a ways and means motion proposing the continuation until June 30, 1974, of most of the tariff reductions introduced in the budget of February 19, 1973.

CANADA-GREAT BRITAIN-TURKS AND CAICOS ISLANDS ASSOCIATION STUDY ACT

PROVISION FOR COMMITTEE TO STUDY ASSOCIATION WITH CANADA

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-249, respecting a proposed association between Canada and the Caribbean Turks and Caicos Islands.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

● (1410)

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to establish a study committee to examine the feasibility of a political or economic union with the Crown colony of the Caribbean Turks and Caicos Islands following upon a visit of Canadian parliamentarians to the islands as a result of an invitation by the state council of the islands.

The elected members of the state council consider that one solution to the needs of the islands is Canadian association. They would like to investigate seriously the possibility of these islands becoming an overseas maritime province or territory of Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION ON RATE OF PRICE INCREASES NECESSARY TO JUSTIFY INTRODUCTION OF CONTINGENCY PLAN

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister who on a number of occasions has told us that the government has some comprehensive contingency plan which it could introduce in the case of an emergency concerning inflation. In view of the fact prices increased by over 9 per cent during 1973 and no contingency plan was activated, will the Prime Minister inform the House what rate of price increase constitutes an emergency by the government's definition so that people will have a better idea whether or not they should turf out the government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when the consequences of bringing in the emergency plan are less serious than the consequences of the inflation, that will be the turning point.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Speaking about serious consequences, is it the view of the government that, with the erosion of the value of small savings in this country of nearly 10 per cent in one year, this is not an emergency, omitting altogether any reference to the fact there has been 20 per cent inflation or one-fifth erosion since the Prime Minister said that inflation in this country was licked?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, obviously it is a serious situation. That is why the government has done so many things to combat inflation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I would merely point out that those countries which attempted formal wage and price controls, such as the United States and the United Kingdom, have a worse rate of inflation and, therefore, more serious consequences with regard to the value of the savings of the little people than has been the case in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: If the Prime Minister is suggesting that his incomes policy has not been a failure, he had better consult people like the secretariat of OECD.

Mr. Trudeau: I am sorry, whom did you say I should consult?

Mr. Stanfield: People like the secretariat of OECD and others better informed apparently than the people who are advising him.

Mr. Hees: You are doing a lousy job.

Mr. Stanfield: Let me put to the Prime Minister a very simple question that he ought to be able to understand and appreciate. In view of the claimed success and some apparent success of the elimination of the sales tax on children's clothing in having a beneficial effect on prices, would the Prime Minister do something to help the little guy in this country by taking off the federal sales taxes on all clothing?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, this specific suggestion is certainly one that will be considered, and if an announcement is to be made it will be made in plenty of time. But I certainly would not agree with the Leader of the Opposition when he implores us to do something, as though what we have done not only to help the elderly people but to take people off the income tax rolls and by indexing the income tax rolls in a way which he himself has applauded is not good, and that this is not doing something.

FOOD PRICES

INCREASE IN PRICE OF EGGS—REQUEST FOR PROHIBITION OF DUMPING IN UNITED STATES—JUSTIFIABLE PRICE LEVEL

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact the price of eggs in Canada has gone up substantially during the last year, and in view of the fact eggs are being dumped in the United States at a lower price than that charged Canadians, would the minister inform the House whether the government is prepared to prohibit this practice of dumping?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have taken note of this information and are studying the matter on an active and urgent basis. We hope to be able to state our position shortly.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister inform the House what price level for eggs is justifiable at the present time and would be fair to both consumer and producer?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the price that would be fair to the egg producers of Canada is one that would give them a decent standard of living for their economic input. That is what the board is trying to accomplish.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would like to take a gamble and name that price?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the input costs have to be measured. The producers have to have a decent margin over their input costs. This is what the Canadian Egg Marketing Board is trying to give them at the present time.

INCREASE IN EGG PRICES—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON MARKETING SYSTEM—SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION BY FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact the Canadian Egg Marketing Board receives its licence and authority from the government of Canada, and in view of the fact the report of the Food Prices Review Board indicates that the Egg Marketing Board has been a substantial factor in contributing to inflation by an unrealistic increase in the price of eggs, is the minister satisfied with the system of egg marketing in Canada and, if not, does he intend to revoke the licence of the Canadian Egg Marketing Board?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Egg Marketing Board receives its authority through the governor in council under the farm products marketing legislation. I said in answer to a previous question that because of the type of findings that have been mentioned we are looking into this matter on an urgent basis. I might also add that the Food Prices Review Board findings also refer to the activities of the provincial marketing boards, agencies of the provincial governments.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, in view of the major recommendation of the Food Prices Review Board in its fifth report that the government set up a royal commission to look into this matter, and as this is the very reason for the existence of the Food Prices Review Board, may I ask the minister whether he intends to direct the Food Prices Review Board to carry on such an investigation on its own and not impose any additional charges on the taxpayers of Canada?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, this is one of the matters we are considering. I am also glad to note that the hon. member has had a personal conversion and now supports the activities of the Food Prices Review Board.

● (1420)

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, it so happens that the Food Prices Review Board has been the only answer this government has had and so far it has been an unsatisfactory answer.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INVESTIGATION BY CANADA BEFORE SENDING FOOD TO ETHIOPIA TO RELIEVE ALLEGED SHORTAGE

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

It has been revealed recently that there was no food shortage in a certain African country to which Canada, through the Department of External Affairs, has granted funds. Can the Secretary of State inform us if an investigation had been held before granting this aid and if so why was it not serious?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I did not understand the purport of the question. I did not catch the name of the country to which the hon. member was referring.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: The country referred to, Mr. Speaker, is Ethiopia. An emotional climate has been created in Canada by saying that that country was starving when it is exporting food surpluses. Moreover, it has been provided financial help by Canada.

Can the minister say if a serious study of the matter was made before granting money to that country?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House that before any food is provided to Ethiopia or any other country we investigate the need, and we do not provide food where it is not needed.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Can the Secretary of State say whether, in those circumstances, the supplies having not yet reached Ethiopia will nonetheless be unloaded or sent elsewhere?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, if it is found, contrary to the reports that have been received, that Ethiopia is not in need of food, I can assure the hon. member that there are many other places where food is needed and it will be directed there.

FOOD PRICES

INCREASE IN EGG PRICES—POSITION OF MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE ON REVIEW BOARD REPORT

Mr. William C. Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. Having regard to the fact that the Food Prices Review Board in its latest report indicated that retail egg prices cannot be justified, I would ask whether the minister agrees with the board's view that Canadian egg producers through their own marketing board's pricing policies are gouging the consumers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have not had time to study the report yet.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I want to say that is true. Mrs. Plumptre saw fit to give the report to the press but not to the Minister of Agriculture—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: —so I have not had an opportunity to study it. I have not received it yet. It has not come across my desk. But I want to say that I have the utmost confidence in the Canadian Egg Marketing Board.

Mr. Frank: Assuming that the minister, after having had a chance to peruse this report, agrees that the consumers are not being gouged by the egg producers' pricing system, will he then consult with his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Afairs, in order to correct the erroneous impression created by the Food Prices Review Board report, which can do nothing but jeopardize the future of Canadian egg producers?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the minister and I have already had one discussion today and our officials are studying this matter.

An hon. Member: That was after you saw the report.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Oh, you dog.

Mr. Hees: Start again and let's have the true story.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I would indicate that after I have had time to review the report and our officials have had time to study it we will then make a decision and a statement as to what we are going to do, if anything.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether you would permit me, under the provisions of Standing Order 41, to table the report of the Food Prices Review Board in order to make it available to the minister? I have had it since four o'clock yesterday from distribution.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that Standing Order 41(2) does not make it possible for an hon. member to table a document. The Standing Order refers to ministers. If the hon. member wants to bring the report to the attention of the minister, I am sure he can send it to him and give him an opportunity to look at it.

Mr. McGrath: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to make the document available to the minister so that he can table it under Standing Order 41.

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. member for Prince Albert.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs—

Mr. Frank: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the right hon. gentleman. The hon. member for Middlesex rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Frank: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The answer the minister gave to my first question indicated that he had not seen the report—period. In answer to the second question he indicated he had seen it because he discussed it with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. What did he discuss if he had not seen the report?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I have seen it just now since the member's question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: I have seen a document that looks like the rising sun, but I have not had time to look at it and study it and it had not come across my desk as at twelve o'clock. Speaking to the point of privilege, I think I have some right to explain my position. I was at meetings last night until after eleven o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bell: Wait until Mrs. Plumptre hears about it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Whelan.]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I have been at meetings right until walking into the House at two o'clock, Ottawa time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: I want to explain that I have meetings with the Canadian Livestock Feed Board and other bodies during the rest of the day and will not have time to look at this report even if it is on my desk when I get back.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. These procedural points are fascinating, I am sure, but we might attempt for a few minutes to return to the question period. The right hon. gentleman has been recognized and has the floor.

NATIONAL SECURITY

ALLEGATIONS ON CBC TELEVISION PROGRAM CONCERNING ACTIVITIES OF NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL AND OTHER CANADIANS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he saw the CBC show last evening put on by Mr. W. I. Macadam which was a tremendously potent one, so far as the alleged facts therein are concerned, most disruptive of relations between our country and the United States. I would ask him whether or not there was any submission of this program to the government department in charge of security, how long the oath of secrecy applies and, in general, what he has to say about the alleged revelation that the National Research Council of Canada has been used as a secret intercepting and bugging agency working directly with United States national security agencies and also the other allegations concerning the use of Canadians in North Viet Nam, Hanoi, and in Cuba to engage in espionage work for the benefit of our allies?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did not see the program last night. I was with my colleagues discussing other matters.

Mr. Hees: Egg prices.

Mr. Sharp: I should say to the hon. gentleman that of course the material that appeared in this program was not submitted to the government for approval. As to security I would also like to say to him that there has been no change in the arrangements regarding the activities talked abcut on this program since he was Prime Minister of this country.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Any suggestion that anything of that kind was done when I was Prime Minister is false. That is not answering the question. That will please the Prime Minister because this kind of smart-aleck stuff is regarded by him as statesmanship. I ask a simple question. The minister said he did not see this program and was busy last night as was the Minister of Agriculture, I hope in different fields. I ask him: Will he have this looked into because the statements made cannot but be dangerous to our relationship with the United States?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I want to say in all seriousness to the right hon. gentleman that I did not say that in order to be facetious. I thought he would be interested to know that there has been no change in the activities carried on in the field of intelligence and of security information since he was Prime Minister of this country. I thought this would reassure him. I have had a report and so have my colleagues on the program last night.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: Yes, we have, and we have looked at these allegations. I agree with the right hon. gentleman that they are most mischievous and misleading.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question deals with the answer just given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I should like him to advise the House whether he feels, in view of the release of this information, that the scientific credibility of the National Research Council has been impaired as a result of this revelation that it may be engaged in this kind of activity?

Mr. Sharp: The answer, Mr. Speaker, is no.

● (1430)

ALLEGED ACTIVITIES OF DEFENCE DEPARTMENT AND NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL IN ELECTRONIC SURVEILLANCE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. I remind him of the series of some 30 questions I placed on the order paper earlier this year, which were purported to have been answered last July and one of which specifically dealt with the activities of the Department of National Defence and the National Research Council in electronic surveillance by their establishment at Shirley's Bay, since removed. Will the Prime Minister, who on that occasion answered the question by saying that it would not be in the interests of national security to release the information, now reconsider that matter in the light of the revelations that have been made over the public media?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, not at all. The Canadian government, as indicated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, has always collected what information was available to it in its territory. We have never, to my knowledge, certainly not under my government, engaged in any espionage abroad in the sense that we have not been looking for information in an undercover way in any other country. But with regard to what comes into our territory we do take what cognizance of it we can, and certainly it would be recognized, even by the hon. member, not to be in the public interest to indicate by what means and where this information is gathered.

Mr. Nielsen: The Prime Minister couched his reply just now in terms of activities with respect to actions abroad. The question I advanced to the government last spring, which was answered last July, had to do with the use of equipment by the Department of National Defence and the National Research Council for the purpose of maintaining surveillance on the whole of the telephone system in the Ottawa area. It is this aspect of the question that I am directing to the Prime Minister since he chose last July to say in his answer that it would not be in the public interest to reveal that kind of information. In light of the revelation on last night's program, perhaps he would like to reconsider that answer and inform the people of Canada whether such machinery does exist?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member might be wiser to talk about allegations rather than revelations if he is referring to last night's program. Certainly there have been several allegations made, some of which I know to be false, but on the general principle of assembling information which might help Canada in preserving the security of its territory or, indeed, even in exchanging information with some of our friends and allies, there is clear admission by the government that this is done. The hon. member is asking how it is done, by what means and in what areas. He is referring specifically to some system around Ottawa. My answer is that we do not answer that kind of question and we do not intend to.

INQUIRY AS TO CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN INTELLIGENCE TREATY OR ARRANGEMENT WITH UNITED STATES, GREAT BRITAIN, FRANCE AND AUSTRALIA

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister, in light of his answer to the previous question, if he would explain to the House, either now or on motions, the nature and extent of Canadian participation in the four-party intelligence treaty operative between the United States, Great Britain, France and Australia?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is referring to the specific treaty called UKUSA, the answer is that we are not a party to such a treaty.

[Later:]

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): The Prime Minister cited a specific treaty in response to my original question. I should like to know whether there is any Canadian participation in any four-party intelligence treaty or arrangement operative between the United States, Great Britain, France and Australia and, if so, will he indicate to the House either now or on motions the nature of that Canadian participation?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the treaty question was one which was raised on the program last night, and that is why I replied in specific terms. In general terms, there is, as I said in reply to the first question, an exchange of information with our friends and allies on intelligence and security matters. We hope that we are the beneficiaries of such an exchange when it does take place.

Oral Questions

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF CONFIDENTIALITY AND SECRECY OF GOVERNMENT CLASSIFIED COMMUNICATIONS

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister consider making a statement to the House as soon as possible to assure the House that the confidentiality and secrecy of Canadian government classified communications to our embassies abroad, to the leaders of other states, and between Canadian government departments are adequately protected from various communication detection devices that might be employed by other nations in this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Obviously we attempt to ensure the security of our communication systems as best we can. We have various devices and codes in order to ensure that. As to whether other countries are succeeding in breaking these codes, the answer is that we hope not, but I cannot make a statement of fact as to what may be done by other countries and what knowledge they may be gathering.

ALLEGATIONS ON CBC PROGRAM CONCERNING ACTIVITIES OF NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL AND OTHER CANADIANS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs arising out of his statement that he and his colleagues have in their possession a document answering in some detail the very serious allegations contained in the CBC television program last night. Would the minister be prepared to ask the House either to revert to motions at this time or undertake tomorrow on motions to make that information available to the House in view of the fact the Canadian people must be understandably disturbed by some of the allegations which were made last night and have not been satisfactorily answered today?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no such document. What I said was that my colleagues and I have been informed of the contents of the program which none of us had seen because we were engaged in discussion of public business in cabinet committee—

Some hon. Members: Public?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Public matters.

Mr. Sharp: It is on the basis of the study that we have given that we have been answering questions today, and we would be happy to answer any other questions that may be put to us.

GRAIN

RESULTS OF PLEBISCITE ON RAPESEED MARKETING—PROVISION FOR GRAIN EXCHANGE SUPERVISOR AND VOLUNTARY POOLING

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Since approximately 1,500 votes remain to be counted in the just concluded rapeseed plebiscite in western Canada, would the minister at this time either confirm or deny that the results of that vote indicate that approximately 45 per cent to 50 per cent of the people who have voted for retaining the present marketing system, with some 35 per cent to 40 per cent having voted in favour of the Canadian Wheat Board marketing system, and with a small undecided vote cast up to this point?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is correct in saying that a fairly small number of votes remain to be counted. The votes counted so far by the supervisor of the poll, Mr. George Turner, in the presence of scrutineers for the interested parties, indicate in fact that the majority are in favour of the present system of marketing rapeseed by a margin that is relatively small but yet large enough to make it appear that the remaining votes cannot affect that result, even in terms of a majority. The hon. member is also right in saying that a very small percentage of the ballots, under 2 per cent of the votes, were marked undecided.

● (1440)

Mr. Murta: Since it now appears that rapeseed will continue to be marketed under the present system, is the minister going to keep his pledge to the farmers, made during the rapeseed plebiscite, that as soon as possible a supervisor for the grain exchange will be appointed and that there will be voluntary pooling as far as rapeseed marketing is concerned?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, both of those items require legislative changes and I will be seeking to bring those before the House as soon as possible.

TAXATION

REQUEST THAT SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS BE ELIMINATED AND MORTGAGE INTEREST BE ALLOWED AS DEDUCTION FOR INCOME TAX PURPOSES

Mr. John Reynolds (Burnaby-Richmond-Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact housing is now 31 per cent of the consumer price index, and in view of the fact that the government is making quite a profit from the sales tax on building materials, can the minister tell the House whether he will recommend to his cabinet colleagues that the government immediately eliminate the sales tax on building materials to help the old people and the old age pensioners that the Prime Minister was talking about either to buy or rent housing at a reasonable rate?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will take that as a representation to be considered before the budget is presented.

Mr. Reynolds: In view of the fact the government has been blaming Canada's inflation on world pressures, will the minister adopt a policy in Canada in his new budget that will allow Canadians to deduct mortgage interest from their taxes in order to help people in the lower income brackets to get into housing?

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—ALLEGED DELAY IN APPROVING CERTAIN PROJECTS IN QUEBEC

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

A large number of local initiative projects in Quebec have not yet been approved. The average is two or three in some constituencies. Could the minister tell the House on what grounds are those projects delayed, why members of parliament are not told of the real reasons and whether, as initially agreed, he intends to inform members of parliament about the study of the projects?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge there are only two constituencies in which there is a delay in giving approval to applications for local initiatives projects. They happen to be Liberal constituencies, although there are some few others projects in other constituencies that remain as matters of discussion between the sponsors and the advisers. They would not amount to more than 40 or 50 out of the several thousand submitted. Otherwise, all projects that are going to be approved have been announced.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that increases in the cost of clothing and personal and health care products—

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member but the hon. member for Lotbinière is rising on a point of order. Perhaps he might be recognized, after which I will come to the hon. member.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, the people in here who speak French must have realized that our excellent interpreter did not catch anything of what the hon. minister replied. Therefore, I am completely in the dark as to the minister's reply. With the consent of the House, therefore, would the minister kindly repeat what he said in order that, this time, I may have a chance to hear it?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps that might be allowed. The minister could respond to the question a second time, after which the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe. The minister might like to repeat the reply he gave to the hon. member a moment ago.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I indicated that only in two constituencies to my knowledge have the project applications not been dealt with, although there are individual projects in some other constituencies that are still in negotiation because some details have to be straightened out. The number would not amount to more than 40 or 50 projects among the many thousands that have been submitted. In other words, all the projects that are going to be approved have been so indicated and the sponsors have been so notified.

FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD

REQUEST THAT TERMS OF REFERENCE BE EXPANDED TO ENABLE INVESTIGATION OF INCREASES IN COST OF CLOTHING AND PERSONAL AND HEALTH CARE PRODUCTS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that increases in the cost of clothing and personal and health care products have doubled this year and since support of these increases is subject to doubt, would the minister expand the terms of reference of the Food Prices Review Board to give it authority to investigate the reasons for these increases which create a hardship on Canadians in meeting the inflationary cost of living?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this would be a matter for decision by the government since the terms of reference were established by order in council under the Inquiries Act. I am certainly willing to have this considered by my colleagues.

Mr. Marshall: Would the minister investigate the practice of some clothing manufacturers of refusing to sell to retail outlets that are willing to sell to consumers below the suggested retail price? This action is causing hardship and is against the act.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to draw my hon. friend's question to the attention of the director of the combines branch so that he may consider whether this action amounts to an offence under the present combines law. There are certainly adequate provisions dealing with that practice in the bill that I presented before Christmas, and I hope we will be able to consider it early in the new year.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST THAT ALL PHOTOGRAPHS AND FINGERPRINTS BE RETURNED WHEN ACCUSED FOUND NOT GUILTY OR CHARGES DROPPED

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. In cases where criminal charges have been dropped against an accused person or where an accused person has been found not guilty of any crime in a court of law, is the minister considering forcing all law enforcement agencies to return all copies of fingerprints and photographs to the accused?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, that question goes well beyond the jurisdiction of the Minister of Justice. Much of criminal law enforcement and administration is in the hands of the provincial Attorneys General. It is a question that might create some serious difficulties but perhaps it might be discussed by the uniformity commissioners.

AGRICULTURE

FERTILIZER—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF ADEQUATE SUPPLIES AND INFORMATION ON PRICE

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture on a matter of serious concern to the farmers of this nation. In view of the official estimate in the United States of over a one million ton shortfall in nitrogen fertilizer and a 700,000 ton shortfall in phosphorus, both of which are necessary elements in most fertilizers, can the minister indicate whether the government is still confident of adequate supplies in Canada, and what effect this shortfall in the United States will have in forcing prices upwards in Canada?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am still confident and optimistic that we are going to meet the demand for fertilizer for Canadian farmers. We are meeting the manufacturers again shortly and we have been in constant contact with them. I have just received a telegram from one of the largest manufacturers of fertilizer in western Canada pointing out that transportation is one of the big problems in getting supplies, the availability of cars, because there has never been such a demand for railway cars for all commodities as at the present time in Canada.

Mr. Danforth: In view of the fact the statement the minister filed on fertilizer in the House dealing with the price of fertilizer to Canadian farmers said that prices would not be as high as in the United States but would be higher in Canada this year, can the minister give the House an undertaking that after his meeting he will make a statement in the House dealing specifically with the price of fertilizer so that farmers will know what they have to be concerned about?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, whether the House is in session or not it is our intention, after we have our meeting with the fertilizer firms, to make a statement so that the public can know what we feel the position on fertilizers is so far as supply and price are concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I see some 30 members on my left rising at the same time and there are only three or four minutes left before the end of the question period. I appeal to hon. members. Obviously, many will have to be disappointed because there is no time for more than three or four more questions. The hon. member for Malpeque rises on a supplementary question.

● (1450)

Mr. Neale (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Yesterday I put two questions to the hon. member for St. Boniface, the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Transport. Toward the end of the question period the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River rose on a point of order to ask if my questions could be answered because the minister had then entered the House. Your Honour said that you would give priority to those two questions in today's question period.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I did not say whether I would give priority at the start or the end of the question period. The hon. member is still entitled to his priority. I have not forgotten the undertaking. For the moment the Chair recognizes the hon. member for Malpeque.

FERTILIZER—ASSURANCE OF ADEQUATE SUPPLY TO PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND FARMERS

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. During his visit to Prince Edward Island a few days ago, which we welcomed, was he able to assure the provincial government and the agricultural associations he met that every action is being taken to assure a reasonable supply of fertilizer for the heavy users of fertilizer there at reasonable prices?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think we all understand that input costs are now higher for fertilizer. If the hon. member means that these prices have to be taken into account with regard to the final cost of fertilizer, yes, that is what I said. I think he will also understand that one plant in Prince Edward Island is running at full blast at this time of the year, something it never did before, I understand. The other plants intend to start blending fertilizer and they will do everything they can to supply fertilizer. We will be taking this into further consideration when we meet.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Elgin.

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN SUPPORT PRICES FOR BUTTER, SKIM MILK POWDER AND FARM-SEPARATED CREAM

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the recent requests and representations made to the Minister of Agriculture by the dairy farmers of Canada, supported by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, for an increase in support prices of two cents per pound on butter, six cents a pound on skim milk powder and 30 cents on farm-separated cream, would the minister indicate what immediate steps he is taking to fulfil these very necessary requests? Can the minister indicate whether or not he is presently discussing this situation with the Dairy Commission?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I met with the dairy farmers of Canada yesterday. I have also instructed the Canadian Dairy Commission to make a full report on dairy production input costs, etc., available by the end of January for the government.

SPORTS

INQUIRY AS TO ANNOUNCEMENT OF FEDERAL GRANT FOR COMMONWEALTH GAMES TO BE HELD IN EDMONTON

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Does the minister plan to be in Edmonton next week to make the announcement about the federal government contribution to the Commonwealth games? If not, why not?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I shall have the pleasure to attend a welfare ministers' conference in Edmonton around mid-February, but I do not feel that this would be a proper occasion for such an announcement. Moreover, following an investigation I have made, I have ascertained that the allegation the hon. member made recently in the House concerning a statement attributed to a former federal minister from Alberta appears to be totally unfounded.

[Later:]

[English]

Mr. Paproski: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not usually do this, but my earphone was not working when the minister answered. I could not understand the minister because he was speaking a little too fast and my French is not that good.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, do I understand that I should repeat the answer?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member did not hear the reply, I am not sure whether it is in order to invite the minister to repeat the answer. However, perhaps he might do so quickly.

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I said that I would be present in Edmonton around mid-February to attend a conference of welfare ministers, but that this conference would not be the proper occasion for a statement concerning a possible financial contribution from the federal government to the Commonwealth Games and that, at the same time, I had inquired into the allegation the hon. member had made concerning a statement attributed to a former minister of the government in respect of this assistance. As far as I could ascertain, his allegation was groundless.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO PREVENT RAILWAY FREIGHT RATE INCREASE ON STEEL SHIPPED TO WESTERN CANADA

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I today ask the question I asked yesterday of the hon. member for St. Boniface, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport. It relates to the increase in freight rates for steel shipped from eastern Canada to the port of Vancouver. Is the minister aware that both of the large Canadian railways have expressed the intention to increase freight rates on steel by up to 33 per cent between Hamilton and Vancouver? What action does he contemplate to stop this increase?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have been informed that the two railways filed new rates for the transportation of steel between different points in Canada, between Hamilton and Vancouver, between Hamilton and Yorkton, Calgary, and Winnipeg. The increase in most cases is three, four or five per cent. There are only a few cases in British Columbia where it is 30 per cent.

[Later:]

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport if he has abandoned the commitment he gave at the Western Economic Opportunities Conference regarding freight rate freeze to western Canada? I would also ask him if he is aware that there have been five increases in the price of steel and that industry in British Columbia will just not be able to cope with a 33 per cent increase?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I mentioned 30 per cent as the top rate, and it touches only a few points. I have not changed the commitment I gave at the Western Economic Opportunities Conference. If the hon. member would like to read again the statement which was made in the House, he will see that it does not cover the rate to which he has referred.

SHIPPING

LEGALITY OF USE OF TANKERS OF ITALIAN AND LIBERIAN REGISTRY TO TRANSPORT OIL FROM VANCOUVER TO EASTERN CANADA

Mr. Paddy Neale (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I directed to the Minister of Transport through his parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for St. Boniface, two questions. Later I gave the questions to him in typewritten form. I do not know whether the minister wants me to repeat the questions or whether he is prepared to answer the two questions I put to him yesterday.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I take it those questions concern the two ships. It appears at the moment that those two ships were chartered, the first one, the Barbagia, on November 18, and the other one, the Akritas, on December 20. No other ship was available and suitable at the same time.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Bell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the House leader regarding the business of the House. Realizing that we are living in very precarious times, may I ask him if can show some optimism with regard to House business for the next day or so which would indicate that, with the pledged co-operation of the official opposition and the hoped for co-operation of the NDP, we can demonstrate once and for all that this minority government may still work?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I wish to tell my hon. friend that today we will be considering the wiretap motion in the name of the Minister of Justice. If we make good progress today and complete that motion, I would call the oil bill tomorrow. I would be prepared to put a motion to adjourn in these circumstances the moment we finish the oil allocation bill. If that could be done Friday or Saturday, it certainly would receive my approval.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, would the minister also like to consider in a last minute way Bill S-4 with regard to establishing national parks, which came out of committee last night? It would be given quick passage by this party and is very desirable so far as all members are concerned.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would consider that proposal. There are one or two other bills I should like to see passed, notably the CNR bill and the Canada Pension Plan bill. However, not wanting to be overly optimistic, I thought that if we could get the motion on the wiretapping bill dealt with today and then deal with the oil allocation bill we would be ready to adjourn. However, with that mood of co-operation, possibly we might deal with all the others.

● (1500)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the minister consider altering the proposal with regard to the wiretap bill so that this House can send it back to the other place the way we sent it the first time in the hope this can be done in about five minutes?

Mr. Paproski: Send Stanley to the other place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I understand my hon. friend's suggestion. I have no reason to believe that tactic would solve the problem. As an alternative for the consideration of my hon. friend, I suggest that he allow the issue to come to a decision today so that we will know before the end of the day what solution would be appropriate.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before asking my supplementary question, may I express my forgiveness to the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) for the insulting suggestion he made a moment ago. I know he did not mean to be insulting, for he knows I would not go there under any condition. As a matter of fact, he would be a much weightier addition to the other place.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My supplementary question relates to the last response made by the minister. If there is not an agreement or conclusion with regard to the wiretap issue today, will we be proceeding with it tomorrow or will we revert to the oil bill?

[Mr. Bell.]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I should really say that I will answer the hon. member after he answers me, but I will live in expectation that he will answer later in the day. I cannot be certain. There are five hours between now and ten o'clock. We will decide then what we will call tomorrow. If there is some chance of disposing of all items tomorrow and Saturday, I will not mind in which order they are called.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

PROTECTION OF PRIVACY BILL

CREATION OF OFFENCES RELATED TO INTERCEPTION OF PRIVATE COMMUNICATIONS BY CERTAIN DEVICES

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice) moved:

That this House does not concur in the amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-176, An act to amend the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Official Secrets Act, but that instead of the said amendment the said Bill be amended by striking out lines 16 to 44 on page 18 and substituting the following:

"Report to judge — 178.23(1) Subject to subsection (4), within ninety days next following the period for which an authorisation or any renewal thereof was given, a person specially designated in writing for the purposes of this section by the Attorney General of the province in which the application for the authorization was made or the Solicitor General of Canada, as the case may be, shall make a report, in writing, to the judge who gave the authorization or any revewal thereof or, if such judge is unable to act, a judge of the same jurisdiction, specifying the progress of the investigation in relation to which the authorization or any renewal thereof was given.

Judge to consider notification — (2) Upon receipt of the report referred to in subsection (1), the judge to whom the report was made shall consider if it is in the interests of justice and the protection of privacy that any person whose private communications have been intercepted be notified of such interception.

Notify Attorney General or Solicitor General — (3) Where the judge to whom a report referred in subsection (1) was made is of the opinion that it is in the interests of justice and the protection of privacy that any person referred to in subsection (2) be notified that his private communications have been intercepted, he shall inform the Attorney General of the province or the Solicitor General of Canada, as the case may be, who shall thereupon notify such person, in writing, of the interception, and deliver to him a copy of the authorization.

Exception — (4) Subsection (1) does not apply where the authorization was obtained for the purpose of an interception in relation to the prevention or detection of subversive activity as defined by subsection 16(3) of the Official Secrets Act.

No access — (5) Nothing in this section shall be construed as giving a person who has received a notice referred to in subsection (3) a right of access to the application for the authorization or any renewal thereof or to the report described in subsection (1) or to any material in support of or in relation to such applications or report.

Manner in which report to be kept secret — (6) The report referred to in subsection (1) and any documents related thereto are confidential and shall be dealt with in the manner provided in section 178.14 in respect of documents relating to an application made pursuant to section 178.12 or subsection 178.13(3) with such modifications as the circumstances require.".

He said: Hon. members will appreciate that I rise once again to speak on this bill with some regret, even though I repeat how important a measure it is. Like many hon. members, I had hoped this House had disposed of the matter and that it would be on its way to becoming the law of the land. This is an important bill. There are many clauses in it which should not be lost sight of, even though we are dealing with some rather different and special areas. It is important because it makes it an offence to intrude upon individuals in this country or to possess electronic intrusion devices.

When we disposed of this bill last, we had a debate in this House on the particular clause which is now in issue, the clause which was deleted in the other place. Rather than allow it to be deleted, I propose in my motion to substitute therefor a different form of words. When this specific notice provision was before the House last, I indicated my doubt about the real importance or desirability of having that provision, having regard to the fact that we are dealing here only in the area of wiretaps which are legal in their nature and which are authorized. It is only in that case the notice provision comes into play and requires some further examination from time to time by a judge as well as notice concerning those authorizations which have been given.

I also indicated to the House something which concerned me about the clause, and which in later discussion also concerned members in the other place. I refer to the fact that the clause, as originally proposed by the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey), seemed to be rigid in the sense that it required, in certain circumstances, notice to be given of criminal investigations when those investigations were not complete which might, therefore, seriously interrupt and interfere with those investigations.

There has been some discussion of this subject in the press. I read it again in this morning's Globe and Mail. It is to the effect that one can go back to a judge again and again under the clause as proposed by the hon. member for St. Paul's. That is not so. That is not how the clause reads. The clause basically requires notice of an intrusion by the police under a lawful authorization, that notice to be given within a 90 day period following the authorization. There is an exception to that which would allow the going back to a judge, but really only within the 90 days. The words of the clause require the attorney general to certify within the said 90 days that the investigation was continuing. In that case, an exception could have been granted by a judge.

When speaking before the Senate committee, the police indicated that in one particular famous example, the Zizzo case, they were sure this would have interfered with the investigation to completion of a very serious offence. The Zizzo case was the subject of court proceedings in Toronto in 1973. Heroin importation of a very serious nature was involved. The conviction of the persons who were involved led to certain life sentences being imposed. Therefore, we are dealing with no light matter: the importation of heroin into Canada which led to life sentences. In that case the police investigation included the use of certain electronic intrusion devices spread over a period beginning in May 1971 and not completed until 1973. If in that period of time the police had had to give notice after 90 days, they are sure that would have been the end of their opportunity to apprehend these criminals. This is a very serious matter, indeed.

It also appeared to the committee looking at this question that a judge might have granted a certain extension. However, there is some real question whether he would grant an extension of one or two years on the one occasion he could grant an extension under the clause in question. It was this point which troubled me originally, which troubled the members in the other place, and which led them to delete the section. In the other place, appearing before members there, I did attempt to urge them to pass the bill as it stood rather than see this important piece of legislation fail to become law. I urged upon them the possibility of our watching the section and introducing amendments in short order, if necessary, to cover any deficiencies rather than hold up the bill. I did this recognizing the procedural difficulties in which we could get ourselves if we did not find a compromise.

I think the hon. members in the other place were somewhat impressed by the fact that the decision on this issue in the House had been very close—that we had decided by a vote of only 118 to 113. This, too, may have influenced their course of conduct. As a result, we were presented with the choice of either concurring in what the Senate had done, which, as hon. members will realise is what I had originally suggested, or sending the bill back to them in its original form. Another option would be to continue some of the work upon which we had been engaged, that is to say, endeavour to reach a compromise which could rescue us from a difficulty and produce a reasonable solution. Such a compromise would be one which met the wishes, to a large extent, of members like the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) who felt that notice was desirable and even though I could not see the particular merit of that position, I was willing to put such a compromise before the House in the motion we are now considering.

Discussions have been held with members opposite, and I acknowledge the contribution of some words in the motion itself by the hon. member for St. Paul's, particularly the reference in subsection (1) and elsewhere to the interests of privacy. In subsection (2) the hon. member requested that the words "and in the interests of privacy" be added to the words I had proposed, "in the interests of justice". I was willing to go along with that suggestion, although I felt the existing wording was sufficient. It was clear there was agreement to attempt to pass a motion of that sort, putting a new notice-provision in the bill, and to return it to the Senate in that form in the hope that it would overcome the objection raised by their Honours and thus allow this important piece of legislation to become law.

What I now urge upon hon. members is that above all we should allow this matter to be decided quickly in the House; that we not be carried away by subsidiary or other points. I make this plea particularly to those hon. members who are interested in opportunities to speak about the other place in a variety of ways. In my view, this is not the time to do so. This is an important piece of legislation and it seems to me the point which is before us is a narrow one, one which has been debated fully in its substance on earlier occasions. For this reason, we believe hon. members should say quickly and briefly what needs to be said about the issue before us and allow the matter to be brought to a vote so that members may express their opinions upon it in the hope that a bill which would protect privacy in this country by making illegal the possession and use of private electronic devices can become law. In this spirit I close my remarks by expressing the hope that members will join in seeing this measure to a successful conclusion so that Bill C-176 to protect privacy in this land may become law.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I take part in the debate on this bill for the first time since the measure came before the House. I should like to begin where the minister ended by expressing the hope, as he did, that we can bring this matter to a successful conclusion—although perhaps not in the sense he meant it, as I shall make clear as we go along. The bill on the protection of privacy is before us again because the government and, more precisely, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) failed to support a decision of the standing committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, and the decision of the House itself on the issue of notice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I have no intention at all of getting involved in a non-productive and futile debate on the rights and responsibilities of the Senate to amend legislation sent to it by this House. What does concern me, and what concerns my party, is that because of the obvious stubbornness of the government this legislation may die on the order paper.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Should this happen, it would mean a tragic waste of effort covering several years to protect Canadians from unauthorized electronic intrusion upon their privacy, and it would constitute a serious indictment of the inability of the minority Liberal government to manage the business of parliament effectively. It would mean that the Minister of Justice, having failed to get his way, is prepared to see the bill scuttled rather than take the steps necessary to salvage the work of several years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: My party considers the passage of this bill to be so important that we are not only prepared to sit here until this objective is accomplished, but we believe other members of parliament have a duty to sit here until this is done. It is not good enough for the government in these circumstances to sit back and let nature take its course by putting the bill before the House for one day.

Mr. Lang: At a time.

Mr. Stanfield: One day. We are discussing this now on the basis that the bill is before the House for one day. There is no sense in the Minister of Justice sitting in his seat muttering. The only thing we know is that the bill is before the House today. We have absolutely no undertaking that the bill will be brought back if the matter cannot be brought to a successful conclusion today, and there is no sense in the minister trying to pretend anything else.

Mr. Lang: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. It is bad enough that the Leader of the Opposition should impugn my conduct in relation to this bill when what we have before us is a motion which represents a genuine attempt on my part to be flexible in reaching a solution, but it is worse of him, when starting a debate, to treat it as though the debate was ending. The debate has started today.

Mr. Stanfield: If that is the Minister of Justice's idea of a question of privilege, it is no wonder that this bill is in trouble. I am sorry that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is not here, but I want to say that it is not good enough for the Prime Minister to shrug off his responsibilities with the remark that some bills are always left on the order paper at the end of a session.

This bill is not just another bill. It can in no way be dismissed under the general category of "some bills which die at the end of a session". The protection of privacy bill is at least the fourth piece of such legislation to be considered by parliament. A bill on the same subject was given first reading on June 28, 1971; it died at the end of that session in February, 1972. Another effort was made on February 21, 1972; this bill was considered by the same committee and reported back to the House on June 14 of that year with amendments. Once again events intervened and the bill died on the order paper.

That does not end the chronology, for a private member's bill was introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) back in 1969 or thereabouts. The Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs reported that bill on March 11, 1970, but no further action was taken by the government and the bill died when the session ended in October of that year. In light of all that time and effort expended by parliament and its committees, surely it would be irresponsible for the government to let it all go by default. This is why we in this party are prepared to stay here to see this bill through its final stages.

The Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, in its unanimous report of March 1970, recommended that a provision respecting notification be included in any legislation to protect privacy. When the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) spoke on this bill on second reading on March 7, 1973 he urged the minister to include a mechanism for notifying a citizen that his privacy had been invaded. During the consideration of the bill by the standing committee, the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) again urged the minister to have his officials prepare an amendment covering notification. When the minister failed to respond to these urgings, the hon. member for St. Paul's moved an amendment which was adopted by the standing committee and subsequently by the House. I thought that this sequence of events, this little chronological story, was important since some have claimed that the action of the standing committee and the House regarding notification was hasty and ill-considered. Nothing could be further from the truth.

In an effort to ensure that Bill C-176 did not suffer the same fate as the other bills on this subject, the hon. member for Fundy-Royal and the hon. member for St. Paul's undertook to get the approval of our caucus to a possible rewording of a clause of the bill. These members felt a sense of obligation to try to help the survival and eventual passage of the bill. They approached this as part of a package of legislation. They approached it in a spirit of consideration involving passage of the bill. To date the government has not lived up to this undertaking. The government has given no undertaking to proceed with the passage of this bill. What is so sacred about the House rising on Saturday, or next Monday or Tuesday, compared with the importance of these considerations?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: We strongly prefer the bill as it was adopted and passed by this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: But the minister seeks a compromise with a view to its passage. He got one on the basis of proceeding with the passage of the bill, but he has not lived up to it and neither have his colleagues. I ask the minister to tell the House at this time, before I conclude my remarks, whether if we agree to support the amendment that he has put forward the government will give us the assurance that it will stay here until the bill is passed.

The minister is remarkably silent, Mr. Speaker. It is one thing to ask us to compromise and depart from a position in which we believe for the purpose of getting through in imperfect condition a bill that we consider a vast improvement over the existing situation. But it is something else, sir, to ask us to give such a commitment without giving us in return the assurance that such a compromise on our part will mean the adoption of the bill.

The ball is clearly in the government's court. It is not really a question of the views of the Senate; the trouble is that the government will not accept the view of this House as already adopted. The Minister of Justice is not prepared to adopt the view that this House has already expressed through a formal vote. If the minister wants to talk about a compromise in order to get the bill passed, let him give us the assurance that the bill will in fact be kept before the House until it is passed.

Mr. Hees: Come on, on your feet.

Mr. Fairweather: He does not dare get up.

Mr. Lang: What we thought was an agreement is now a broken word, apparently.

Mr. Stanfield: I suggest the minister had better keep his seat and not expose himself any more than he has. However, I do want to say this, and I shall soon conclude, Mr. Speaker. This House has already passed this bill. If the government will not accept the bill as passed, it has the responsibility to put forward a measure commanding majority support and staying here until the House either reconfirms the bill as it was passed previously or passes the bill with changes in it. That is the duty of this government, particularly since the House has already taken a position on this bill.

● (1530)

You can talk about how a minority parliament works, but let us see it work.

Mr. Hees: It works on the welch principle.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You just want to go home, Steve.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to rise on a point of order, but an hon. gentleman over there says that I want to go home. I did not say I wanted to go home.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: We will sic Stanley after you.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, hon. members over there talk about how they can make a minority parliament work, but let us see it work.

Mr. Lang: And you talk about word of honour.

Mr. Stanfield: You are talking about word of honour?

Mr. Lang: May I ask the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) a question?

Mr. Stanfield: Certainly, you can ask me a question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the minister rising on a point of order? The hon. Leader of the Opposition has the floor and the minister cannot rise unless he claims the floor on a point of order or on a question of privilege.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I asked whether the Leader of the Opposition would permit me to ask a question and I thought he indicated his willingness to answer.

Mr. Hees: Certainly. Get on your feet and let us have a commitment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. Leader of the Opposition has the floor and the minister has already spoken. If he wishes to eventually reply in the course of the debate he will be recognized for that purpose. Questions by the minister can be asked when he has the floor, otherwise they are rhetorical.

An hon. Member: All talk without much action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the minister wants to rise to ask a question and there is agreement, that is a different matter.

Mr. Bell: He is always trying to learn.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask the Leader of the Opposition whether, in view of the words he has just spoken, he has replaced the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) as the spokesman on this bill, and whether—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: —in view of the Leader of the Opposition now departing from the expressed agreement of the hon. member for St. Paul's, that hon. member has resigned from the Conservative caucus?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: That's pretty weak, Otto.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, what sort of nonsense is this? I am speaking on this bill as the leader of my party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: He has more guts than you, Lang.

Mr. Lang: Well, you have a lot of something.

Mr. Fairweather: Yes, I have a lot of something.

Mr. Lang: Then, I am surprised.

Mr. Fairweather: You should be.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I think the highest duty to my party, to this parliament and to my country is to attempt to obtain a commitment from this, and I will leave out the adjective, government at this time that it will keep this bill before parliament.

Mr. Fairweather: That is the point.

Mr. Stanfield: When he gives me that commitment, I will tell him where we stand on his proposal.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: We will only agree to that compromise on the basis that it will, in fact, result in bringing this bill to a conclusion.

Mr. Sharp: Haven't you any principles?

Mr. Stanfield: Yes, I have principles and I stand for those principles. It is because I have principles that I insist on an undertaking from this government that it will keep this bill before the House until we have dealt with it. I suggest it is cynical and irresponsible to lump this bill into that forlorn category of leftover legislation scrambling for priority, especially after this House has already taken a position. There is no question as to what we prefer in principle. If he wants an accommodation, and wants us to indicate what our stand will be in that respect, let him give us the assurance that if we agree to that accommodation this government will see this bill through the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Atkey: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) has unfortunately seen fit to imply a certain position to me and to impugn my character and my honesty in my dealings with him. I should tell you and hon. members of this House that the minister, in my dealings with him, made certain representations on December 17 on the assumption that the government would proceed expeditiously to bring forward this legislation. Until 3.15 today there was no certainty that the government would proceed, and I think it is clear that any agreement made on December 17 has long since been breached by this government's inaction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: Where is the principle?

Mr. Atkey: I should also point out that the Minister of Justice attributed to me the position of spokesman for the Conservative party on this issue. I was interested in that comment in light of the fact that the original wording of the so-called compromise was sent across the floor of the House to the justice critic for the Conservative party, the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather). The minister and his party know full well that he is the spokesman for this party on this issue. It was through the member for Fundy-Royal, in consultation with me and many other members on this side of the House, that negotiations were carried on. The minister knows that and he is quite wrong in imputing to me that particular position.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: That's a dirty trick.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Back to law school for you, Otto.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I listened with some interest to the remarks of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) during his lecture to those of us on this side of the House.

An hon. Member: He has gone.

Mr. Leggatt: I am sorry that the minister is acting rather consistently during the course of this bill, and I note that he has just left the House. I hope he is not sulking. In any event, I will proceed in his absence as I do want to respond to those remarks. He lectured members on this side of the House as though they were school children. As long as we remain in our places, we will not get the strap and, who knows, we might even get the bill through. That is my summation of the minister's remarks. I suggest it is not worthy of the Minister of Justice to take that kind of a position in this House, not worthy at all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, if there is any question about this bill being killed and who may have killed it, I suggest it will be the Minister of Justice who must shoulder the responsibility.

Some hon. Members: Where is he?

Mr. Leggatt: I was delighted to hear the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) to the effect that members of his party are willing to sit in the House until this bill is passed by this House. I want to assure hon.

members that we in this party are willing to do so, too. We intend to see that the bill is passed before there is any further adjournment, prorogation or anything else. Before that bill passes we want to make sure it is the kind of bill of which we in this House can be proud, and the kind of bill that members in this House have already approved. It seems to me the attitude of the Minister of Justice is that he is ready to settle this question out of sheer pique and arrogance in order to get his way.

Mr. Lang: Nonsense.

Mr. Leggatt: If you trace the history of this bill you will find that the only clause the minister wants to bring before this House—and we considered all of them—is the one the Senate altered. Perhaps it is a strange coincidence, but that is the one that was changed. As the Minister of Justice pointed out, they had to look very closely at this particular clause because the vote was close. It was 118 to 113. What kind of consideration did they give to the clause the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) was instrumental in having put in this bill concerning the inadmissibility of illegally obtained evidence. How much consideration did the minister give to that in the other place and how much consideration did the other place give to it, because there was a one vote difference in respect of that. I am not impressed at all with that kind of argument. He said we can decide this quickly because it is a narrow point.

The Chairman of the committee on Justice and Legal Affairs considered it one of the most important points with which the committee dealt. Everyone who has had anything to do with this bill considers the question of notification and the question of illegality of inadmissible evidence to be important. These are vital and important points, but what is really significant is that the minister has throughout the history of this bill attempted to have the best of both worlds. He has attempted to stand on the side of the civil libertarians and say that he is protecting their rights, but when the crunch comes we know on which side he is. He cannot take both sides. He is not entitled to do that. Clearly, he does not believe that privacy is a substantive right. He cannot believe that and take the position he has throughout on the question of notification.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leggatt: My party is willing to sit here until hell freezes over in order to get a bill.

An hon. Member: You likely will, too.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to review briefly the history of this bill. There is no doubt about who is in a hurry to get out of here. It is the government. Perhaps they have had an uncomfortable session and we hope we may make it more uncomfortable. This bill has been considered by this House over a period of four years. It has been considered in great detail by two House committees. Those House committees called in a total of 32 witnesses. The recent committee called in 15 witnesses when it considered the bill.

The question of notification, the issue we are talking about here, was considered in great detail not only by the committee of this House on this occasion but also by the committee of this House in 1970. At that time the committee made a very specific recommendation about the particular notification provision. The hon. member for St. Paul's attempted to incorporate that recommendation, a recommendation by way of a Liberal-dominated committee, into the bill and did so successfully. I withdrew a similar amendment because, quite frankly, I felt the hon. member for St. Paul's had done a much better job of drafting this particular clause.

Over a period of four years 32 witnesses were called. There were 15 debating days in this House. The other place spent—I am trying to be generous—a total of about three hours on the whole bill. There were two witnesses. Both were incredibly prejudiced. However, there were two witnesses. One was the Minister and the other was Chief Adamson of Toronto. I accused the minister in this House of flouting the will of Parliament in his performance before the Senate committee in considering this bill and I apologized in the House. I apologize to him again. There was no overt flouting of the will of Parliament. He did not come in and say, "Please do not remove the notification section because I can live with it either way". But, if he was representing this House before the Senate I want another lawyer, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leggatt: If that is representation, I think we should get in touch with the Bar Association. The hon. member for St. Paul's asks what he did in caucus. I do not know what he did in caucus. I cannot tell, but we all have great imaginations. There is a long list of coincidences involved in this whole procedure. I am a great believer in coincidence but this is like something out of Charles Dickens. It is like "Great Expectations".

We started off with a bill in the committee and against the wishes of the Minister of Justice a notification clause was inserted. Then, in the House, again against the wishes of the Minister of Justice, that notification clause was confirmed. Suddenly, the bill goes to the other place in which 74 out of 95 senators are Liberal appointees. Then, what happens? By coincidence they find that there is one section with which they cannot live. All the rest of the bill is all right, but this one clause bothers them greatly. They did not spend much time on it. They seemed to be able to pick that clause out of the bill immediately. Out of the many, many clauses in the bill, they seemed to know it was this clause that would bother them. They listened to two witnesses and I am not certain of the objectivity of either.

An hon. Member: I am.

Mr. Leggatt: In any event, the result was that the other place accepted all these horrible examples that were given to them by Chief Adamson—there were seven very extreme examples—to show that notification would have destroyed the capability of the police to investigate some very serious crimes. Not once did the Minister of Justice point out to the Senate committee, that none of those examples applied to the clauses we sent to the Senate.

Everyone of those cases was clearly covered under the provisions of the bill as drafted by the hon. member for St. Paul's to provide for a reasonable determinate delay, and I have no doubt that in every case a judge would have ordered that kind of delay so that those notifications would not have had to go out. That is close to a misrepresentation by silence. Surely, the minister could have spoken up during the deliberations and could have pointed out that the examples given honestly by the chief from Toronto did not apply to the House bill, but I cannot find a comment like that in the record of the proceedings.

● (1550)

As I said, we have heard 32 witnesses, such as Mr. Jacques Dagenais and Detective Sergeant Masse of the Montreal urban community police service. We had M. J. Nadon, deputy commissioner of the RCMP and H. C. Draper, assistant commissioner of the RCMP. We also had Ramsey Clark, ex attorney general of the U.S. Unfortunately, we did not have Mr. Adamson. I wish he had come. We also had Dr. Whiteside and Alan Borovoy as well as people from the civil liberties side of the particular question. We tried to weigh the evidence. There was no one representing the point of view of the House before the Senate, no one explaining the position that the House took. I urge this House, not as an act of defiance but as an act of good judgment, to return the bill in its present form to the Senate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leggatt: Let us give the Senate a chance to consider the bill. They have spent a very short period of time on it. Let us hear evidence from the other side. I will be proposing an amendment which would return the bill in its present form. If the House wishes to get on with other business, it can get on with that other business right away. Let us send the bill back in the form in which we sent it the first time and confirm the four years of work that went into creating the bill. I am concerned about these sections which were studied in great detail. Without any question or doubt, the clause which was sent to the Senate by the House is preferable to the one the minister is now proposing and which I am concerned may be accepted by other members on this side of the House. The distinction is clear and uncomplicated.

Under the House amendment to the bill, there is provision for a reasonable, determinate delay of the notice to permit the investigation to continue. The words were "while the investigation is continuing", and I submit to the House that nothing more is needed for a judge to delay that notification procedure other than to say, we still have strong suspicions; we have not developed evidence; we ask for a determinate delay. It does not say how many years.

The Minister of Justice is fond of pointing out his famous heroin case which lasted for over a two year period. There is nothing in the section which the House sent to the Senate which would prevent the extension of the notification provision in that case. It is very clear that the example which the minister cites is not a proper example. Under the House provision that would have clearly been covered. The investigation could go on for 10 years under this provision; there is no limit to the delay which may be considered necessary. The investigation may relate to organized crime, in which case the police might wish to take a great deal of time, and in such a situation I do not see why a 10 year delay could not be given. But then, the minister wants his own little way. I submit that, in order to achieve it, he is sacrificing the work of this House over a four year period and risking this bill.

Before putting the amendment, I should like to mention this matter of whether or not we should be going home. People keep suggesting that if we want to go home we may lose the bill. I have an option. We can go home if you will vote for this subamendment because it will bring an end to this matter. The subamendment will have the effect of saying, first, to the Minister of Justice that there is to be no game playing in the House, and second, it will have the effect of returning this matter to the Senate. Then, the Senate can have ample opportunity to consider all the evidence, not just some of the evidence, when they tinker around with a bill sent by the House.

Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Neale):

That the motion be amended by striking out all the words after the words "an Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Official Secrets Act", and by substituting therefor the following words:

"and that a message to that effect be sent to Their Honours".

I now wish to read the entire motion as amended, so that it will make a little more sense. If this amendment is adopted, the motion would read:

That this House does not occur in the amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-176, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Officials Secrets Act, and that a message to that effect be sent to Their Honours.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the proposed amendment will please say, yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Leggatt) which was agreed to on the following division:

ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ALLOCATION BOARD, MANDATORY ALLOCATION OF SUPPLIES AND RATIONING OF CONTROLLED PRODUCTS

The House resumed, from Wednesday, January 9, consideration of Bill C-236, to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada and to amend the National Energy Board Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, and motion No. 4, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) (P.9215).

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, when I called it six o'clock yesterday we were considering an amendment put forward by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) which would, in effect, give the Senate the power of veto over a decision of this House. Might we have order, Mr. Speaker?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I call to order the hon. members, including the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay), as well as some of his colleagues who wish to continue their discussions from both sides of the floor of the House. May I remind them that I have recognized the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes). He should be given the chance to speak.

[English]

Mr. Symes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The amendment proposed by the minister once again involves an important principle, a principle similar to that on which the House has just divided. It concerns the power of the Senate to thwart the bill of the elected representatives of this parliament. I urge the House to reaffirm the position it took a few minutes ago by rejecting the amendment put forward by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

The emergency allocation bill is designed to deal with the situation in the event of a shortage of oil products in this country. A board will examine the situation and the government will declare a national emergency if it is thought that is necessary. This House would then debate the issue and could, by a negative vote, rescind the declaration of emergency. However, if this House were to affirm that there was indeed an emergency, and that government allocation of fuel supplies was necessary to protect Canadians, then if this amendment were passed the Senate could negative the motion and thwart the will of this House. I say that such a situation is completely intolerable. If Canadians anywhere in Canada are short of fuel, are cold in their homes, if schools cannot open, if hospitals must go without fuel and if workers must be laid off from their factories because the Senate has reversed a decision of this House, then what has happened to our parliamentary democracy?

● (1640)

As we all know, members of the Senate are not elected by the people whom this bill is designed to protect, they are appointed. It is often the case that the other place is a repository for political has-beens. We should remember also that many members of the Senate are on the boards of directors of multinational oil companies, and other companies connected with energy supply in this country. How can we expect them to have an unbiased view of the energy situation? I can see no way that the members of this House can tolerate a privileged, appointed group being given the power of veto over this very important piece of legislation.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) pointed out yesterday that when we in this country had an emergency of another sort and we invoked the War Measures Act, the other place was not invited to pass on the resolution. It was the House of Commons, the elected representatives of the people, who made that decision. I submit that a national emergency which affects the lifeblood of this nation economically, as well as the wellbeing of all Canadians, should also be dealt with in this House and not in the other place.

I urge the members of the Conservative party, who today voted with the NDP in a sense to reject a Senate veto, the negativing of a motion passed by this House, also to vote against the government's amendment. If we reject the amendment we are not taking power away from the Senate, because the Senate does not have this power to begin with. But if we pass the amendment we will be giving the Senate the power of veto, which in my opinion would create a very dangerous precedent.

There are many precedents in the British North America Act for not requiring the Senate to make a decision on legislation or motions that are passed by this House. Under section 91, I believe it is, if war breaks out this House can make a decision to sit beyond the normal five-year tenure of parliament without reference to the other place. We are the elected representatives of the people and are concerned to protect those we represent. This is why we must retain the long honoured principle that it is the elected representatives of parliament who make the crucial decisions on national matters, and that such decision should not be placed in the hands of the appointed, non-responsible members whom we find in the other place. I am sure that, upon reflection, members of the Conservative party will agree that this is a dangerous power to give to the Senate. As I say, in light of our political duties and our duties to our constituents, the House of Commons should be the place where the decision is made. I urge members of the Conservative party to reject the minister's amendment which would give this power to the other place.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is rising for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): May I pose this question to the hon. gentleman. He advised the House to reject my amendment, which would mean rejecting the right of parliamentary scrutiny, which otherwise would not appear in the bill. Does he rather not mean that he is asking the House to vote for the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre?

Mr. Symes: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I should clarify that. I am asking the House to vote for the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre deleting reference to the other place. The rest of the minister's amendment would therefore stand.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I shall not detain the House long. We have already gone through one traumatic experience today, and perhaps in doing so we have accelerated the time when we can proceed to other matters.

First of all, may I deal with the comments made yesterday by the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais), who has a very good, trained voice, such a trained voice that he sat in his place in the committee, and when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) just raised his eyebrows, the hon. member for Nipissing was on his feet to move amendments. It was a great example of ESP. Indeed, I thought the hon. member was in training to be a parliamentary secretary; on his performance in the standing committee he certainly earned it.

The hon. member made a comment about the multinational oil corporations, and how this party might have changed its position. We will give the hon. member a chance to test his relationships with the multinational corporations, as well as my hon. friends to my left, in a little while with another amendment. But let me tell the hon. member that when the members of this party in committee saw, as a result of honest, hard-working negotiations that took place prior to the Christmas recess, that the government was prepared to accept an amendment to the bill that would make parliamentary approval a condition precedent to the government's declaration of an emergency, and that the minister indicated there would be a parliamentary right to review, and if necessary to revoke, that declaration of emergency, then and only then did this party make a change in its position.

It was our opinion, as we so stated during the course of second reading, that without that safeguard this was not the kind of power that should be placed in the hands of the government. This has nothing to do with the multinationals. As a matter fact, we disapproved of the position taken by the multinational corporations, as expressed by the official from Exxon or Imperial Oil who appeared before the committee. He said that he loved the bill, that he was delighted with it. Of course he would be, because one of the effects of the bill would be to give the multinational oil companies legal sanction to do what they have been doing all along, that is to arrange a form of allocation of supplies which has suited them not only domestically but externally. Indeed, I read that there is now being carried on in the United States a close examination and scrutiny of precisely the position taken by some of the multinational oil corporations regarding exaggerating the energy crisis.

I was not privy to what went on in the discussions of the technical advisory committee, but I would consider it very likely that this bill has its genesis in the technical advisory committee. The representatives of the large oil companies said they loved it and welcomed it. As the president of Imperial Oil said before the committee, they would like it a little better if they were given blanket exemption from the provisions of the combines legislation. They would like a measure whereby they could get a better form of compensation, but they said outside of that the bill was fine. Of course it is fine, because it is just giving them legal approval to continue doing what they have been doing and wanted to do. I am amazed that my friends to my left continue to adopt this position. However, I will not go into that any further at this time.

It was at the time the minister gave an indication that our position had changed, after working with members of this party, members on the government side and members of the NDP in an attempt to make a very bad and repugnant bill more attractive, or at least less repugnant, that we saw a more co-operative spirit, as the member suggested. Had that not been the case, and someone talked a little while ago about hell freezing over, that might well have been the situation. Without that safeguard, and the protection which this House must have, we would not have been prepared to allow the bill to pass in its present form without putting up a valiant struggle.

With regard to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), our position throughout has been that we wanted an opportunity for parliamentary approval of any declaration of emergency. While at no time did anyone define what parliament meant, in our opinion and I think obviously in the opinion of members of the NDP and of the government, when that expression was used it involved both Houses of parliament.

Mr. Lewis: And Her Majesty.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, and Her Majesty and her representative. When you look at clause 35 you will find a provision for parliamentary review in respect of a mandatory allocation from time to time, and we note it has reference to both this House and the other place. My hon. friends to the left in the NDP did not put a motion, but, as the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) quite properly said, they circulated a list of the amendments they proposed to move. They gave that list to the Chair and to us, and one of the amendments was an amendment to Clause 11 which provided for a parliamentary review that included both this House and the Senate. As a result of the language in which the amendment of the NDP was couched, and the language used by the government in respect of Clause 35, we found ourselves in total disagreement. That is where I part company with my friend the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

It is, and has always been, our view that if the government declared an emergency and this House agreed there was an emergency, it would be 99.99 per cent unlikely that the heavily Liberal-dominated other place would dare to interfere with that declaration. However, I admit that the possibility does exist, but I do suggest it is most unlikely that it would happen, as a matter of practical fact. We indicated that we were not going to accept, under any circumstances, a situation that would have developed had the type of amendment the government offered and the type of amendment offered by the NDP been accepted, namely that if the government declared an emergency and this House decided there was no emergency following a debate, the Senate could say there was no emergency with the result there would be no existing declaration of an emergency. Under no circumstances would this party accept that type of parliamentary review, and it was in that context that we pressed for the amendment.

In our view parliament includes the two Houses, and if both Houses are included in respect of the type of amendment I put forward, which was later accepted, to the effect that under no circumstances would the Senate be allowed to veto a declaration by this House that an emergency exists, we would have no objection. We would have no objection to the government going along with that, and on the other hand we have no objection to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

To that extent, we do not find ourselves insisting that the Senate be a necessary party to the process of parliamentary review, so long as this House has the right to examine the facts on which the government sees fit to declare that an emergency exists, and, if necessary, to reject it. If we have that power we are quite content. We would have been content with the amendment brought in by the minister. He and I collaborated in the drafting of this amendment. There were discussions between us from time to time in an effort to meet certain technical objections that were apparent in other drafts. So far as we are concerned, if the government is prepared to go along with the amendment we have no objection, but we want to make it abundantly clear that before the discussion of this clause is concluded, perhaps at third reading, we will insist that either the amendment placed before us by the minister or the amendment to the minister's motion proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, is accepted. In either case this House will have the ultimate right to make the decision as to whether in fact there is an emergency. That is what we think is important. I notice it is almost five o'clock.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has stated, the draft of the amendment I put forward was really worked out in close coordination with members from all corners of the House. So that I will not be accused of departing from that in any sense by accepting another amendment, do I understand it is the position of the official opposition that members are agreeable to the incorporation of the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)? If the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) indicates that is the case then I would say, on the government's behalf, we, too, will go along with that change. Since this motion was arrived at by a consensus, I think the change can be arrived at by a consensus.

Mr. Baldwin: That is right, Mr. Speaker. I wanted that declaration from the minister, as I did not want the motion to be voted on when there was the possibility that the minister's amendment might be lost and the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) might be lost, placing us in a position that would be totally obnoxious to us. The minister has suggested that if we agree, then under those conditions the government has no objection. With that in mind, we have no objection.

Mr. Bell: That is very statesmanlike.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the House is ready for the question I will put it now. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) to motion No. 4?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)) agreed to.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is now on Motion No. 4 as amended. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion as amended?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 4 (Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale)), as amended, agreed to.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being five o'clock, it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro)—Air transport—Proposed passenger head tax—Suggested percentage charge on short flights; the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose)—Youth—Alleged abandonment of programs—Request for statement; the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker)—Social security—alleged failure to include overseas service with armed forces in qualifying for old age pension.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills, notices of motions (papers) and public bills. As there is no item under the heading of private bills, the House will proceed to notices of motions (papers). I understand that there is an agreement that notice of motion No. 130 in the name of the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) is to be taken, is that correct?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROPOSED MACKENZIE VALLEY PIPELINE—REQUEST FOR COPY OF TRAINING AND EMPLOYMENT AGREEMENTS PREPARED BY INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West) moved:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of training and employment agreements prepared for the proposed Mackenzie Valley pipeline as referred to at page 61 of the Annual Report of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

● (1700)

He said: Mr. Speaker, some months ago I placed a motion on the order paper. I had hoped that it could have been debated before this time, but I realize a large number of motions precede it and that other members of the House have problems which they feel they would like to have debated in this assembly. The following is my motion:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of training and employment agreements prepared for the proposed Mackenzie Valley pipeline as referred to at page 61 of the Annual Report of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

We have had difficulty in obtaining studies and information from the government on programs related to a potential Mackenzie Valley pipeline. We are told action is being taken in this field by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, but to date very little information has been made public by the department. This House has a right to know what specific steps have been taken, and what reports have been made regarding the training and employment plans for northern people once the Mackenzie Valley pipeline gets underway.

I should like to refer the House to the 1971-72 Annual Report of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It deals with this matter at page 61 and states:

A special staff group in the Department has been charged with the task of seeking effective means to increase employment and provide greater economic opportunity for northern people.

The pipeline industry and associated trade unions have contributed material and information to enable the Department to prepare a training and employment agreement for the proposed Mackenzie Valley pipeline. Industry and other government departments have suggested areas of training having potential for permanent employment.

My motion is designed to obtain specific information from the government concerning the progress made in its plans, as announced almost two years ago, to prepare a training and employment agreement for the proposed Mackenzie Valley pipeline to ensure greater economic opportunity for the northern people. I have several questions which I hope will be answered this afternoon.

First, has a training and employment agreement to assist northern people been formulated by the department, and if so what is it? If no plan has been prepared to date, is one in the making and when will it be ready? If no training and employment agreement will be produced by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, then what is being done to carry out the policy announced in the 1971-72 annual report?

I feel there is some urgency to this matter. There have been frequent statements from various cabinet ministers suggesting an early start on the Mackenzie Valley gas line. We have heard from the potential pipeline builders that an application could be made at an early date, perhaps within the next few months. There is no doubt that it would take at least a year before any application could be approved. Nevertheless, any effective type of training and employment agreement must be in effect at an early date if we are to have a genuine effort to provide greater economic opportunity for our northern people when these projects are underway.

Personally, I see no reason for the early building of a Mackenzie Valley gas line. It should be built to provide energy cheaply for the Canadian market and not overwhelmingly for export, as the present plans of the gas and oil companies indicate. We have had enough sell-outs of our non-renewable oil and gas resources. I hope a new approach to the development and use of these energy resources will develop in time to conserve much of these valuable resources for future Canadian use. Despite this position, we feel that the training programs and employment agreements to assist in improved economic opportunity for the northern people must go forward. They must deal not only with pipeline construction but with a number of potential economic and other developments in the north.

There are other reports on pipeline development which should be made public as soon as possible. All this information is essential if we are to be able to make those decisions which are in the best interest of Canada. It is not my intention to prolong my remarks on this matter, but I again point out that there are a host of problems facing us in the north. They deal with native rights, environmental protection, the wise use of resources and so on. Our NDP group insists that it have all the information for discussion on these matters so that they can be resolved in a proper manner and at an early date.

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) has brought this matter to the attention of the House at this time. Regrettably, we do not have the particular information to provide the hon. member at this time. Also, he asks some specific questions. I want to tell him that the department is still in the process of preparing such an agreement. It is still in draft form, and is continually being revised to reflect technological change related to both the construction and operation of gas transmission lines. It will take into account also the social and economic impact of such a major project in the Mackenzie Valley.

In this regard, the agreement is being prepared to ensure the maximum employment of northern residents during the construction and operation of the pipeline, should it go ahead. Also, the agreement will stress permanent positions for northern residents in the employment which the pipeline will create, such as in the operation of the pipeline, increased exploration activity, gas field development and operations related to petroleum activity. This is consistent with the government policy for northern development for the 70's which stated that the native people should derive early and tangible benefits from the economic development, and be seen to benefit. It will be remembered that in August, 1970 the government announced the initial guidelines for the construction and operation of northern pipelines.

Mr. Speaker, in order to let the House and the hon. member for Kootenay West know how serious we are that the best possible situation be created in respect of employment for the native people, and for the general residents of northern Canada, I should like to go over some of the guidelines, the expanded guidelines, made public on June 28, 1973 by the minister. We are very keen about this. We want to make sure that the native people and all northerners benefit to the maximum from the creation of the pipeline which perhaps will eventually go through the north. I shall go over some of these guidelines briefly in order to indicate the kind of things we are very concerned about.

● (1710)

I will read some of these guidelines:

1. The Applicant must undertake specific programs leading to the employment, at all occupational levels, of residents of the territories—and in particular native people, during the construction and operation of the pipeline. Such programs or projects shall include but not be limited to: advance information on all jobs in a manner that ensures that the information reaches potential workers; skills required for various occupations and anticipated duration of employment; upgrading and skill training; other forms of integrated training that include on-the-job work experience; and counselling for those unfamiliar with industrial jobs or wage style living—

2. Priority placement in jobs shall be accorded native people of the territories in keeping with the tenor of Article 5 of the International Labour Organization Convention, 111, 1958, ratified by Canada, and the government's intent to increase employment opportunities for members of disadvantaged minority groups. During the consultation between government, unions and employers as outlined in the Convention, ways and means will be found to ensure access for these employees into the appropriate union locals and hiring halls where there is a requirement. In addition, in accordance with the principle of employment of local workers which is accepted by organized labour, the applicant will employ labour from the locality where work is being executed to the extent it is available. The applicant shall comply with the above Convention and employment principles, and co-operate with government's effort to operate an effective recruitment, placement and counselling service.

3. The collective agreements signed by the applicant and organized labour shall not distinguish between residents of the territories and others respecting special benefits and allowances, including housing for operational staff, and the nature of these benefits shall be in no way inferior for employees from the territories.

These are just some of the brief indications in the guidelines. Guideline no. 4 reads:

4. Contracts and subcontracts shall be so designed and publicised as to invite and encourage bids from native organizations, settlement councils and local contractors. In addition, the businesses and commercial organizations of the territories shall be invited and encouraged to supply goods and services required for the pipeline development and operation.

5. A substantial number of native people depend on trapping and hunting as a principal means of livelihood, and many derive a real satisfaction from being on the land and being master of a familiar environment. Therefore, the pipeline will be constructed, operated and abandoned with minimal interference to traditional trapping, hunting and fishing areas. In addition, where the pipeline construction is planned to be located in proximity to a settlement—particularly a native settlement or localized area subject to intensive use, then the location of construction camps, associated activities and the detailed siting of the pipeline will be decided by government after consultation with the applicant, and the settlement council, or local government body, or the native organization.

I do not want to read further from these guidelines, but I would be happy to provide a copy of them to the hon. member if he wishes.

As I said before, the minister has already made these public. I want to assure the hon. member that once the agreements are signed, it is our intention to make them public so that everyone will know what our intentions are. We are looking at this matter of possible pipeline construction in the north—there has been no application so far—with the greatest of seriousness, and we want to make very sure that the mode of life of the people in the north will not be disrupted in any major way. We want to ensure that the native people and the northern residents will gain the maximum benefit from any pipeline, both during the construction stage and later in the operational stage.

[Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo).]

I know that there are other hon. members who wish to participate in this debate, and therefore I will end my remarks at this point.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Wakerville): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words about employment for northerners from the viewpoint of the Department of Manpower and Immigration. I do not think it is necessary to outline to the House what the responsibilities of the department in general are. I think they are sufficiently well known, but the extent to which these services are being provided in the Northwest Territories may not be realized. The services of the department in that area are extended not only to the major population centres but also to people in more remote areas, especially through provision of itinerant services.

The department determines the manpower needs of employers in the north and arranges for suitable training courses for northern residents so that their job qualifications might be acceptable to these employers, and in assessing this and all other questions involving manpower in the north it follows the advice of the manpower needs committees. As the House is probably aware, these committees have been set up in all provinces and are composed of representatives of provincial governments and the federal government. In the territories, it is the territorial government which is represented along with the department. It is this committee that is able to bring both national and local expertise to bear on analysing manpower needs. Its advice is followed with respect to the particular problems which arise.

Full time offices of the department exist in Yellowknife and Inuvik, in the western Arctic region, and there are two branch offices at Hay River and Fort Simpson. In addition, there is the main training centre at Fort Smith. During 1973, a full time centre was opened at Frobisher Bay to provide regular service to Baffin Island and the high Arctic area, and itinerant services are also provided from this centre so that there is complete coverage, as complete as possible, of this vast area.

The branch office in Fort Simpson opened in June of 1972 to provide services for the construction of the Mackenzie highway, and from this centre itinerant service has been provided by the department to the larger settlements, the frequency of visits depending on the need for services. With the slowdown if not the cessation of work on the highway in the course of 1972, since that time there has not been the same need for the department's services with respect to highway construction, but the department has remained close to the situation, and I can give the House the assurance that as needs develop, either with respect to the highway building program or to any other employment need or manpower training need in the Arctic, they will be met.

During 1972 a total of 17,337 workers and employer clients requested assistance. Of the clients seeking employment, 5,316 were placed. Workers were assisted under the Canada Manpower Mobility Program to travel to training institutions and to either explore or accept jobs away from their normal place of residence. Increased oil exploration in the Mackenzie Delta and Arctic islands and the construction of the Mackenzie and Dempster highways provided employment for people who had limited previous exposure to a wage economy. Counselling services continue to be of prime importance because of the major development taking place and the special problems encountered by people from isolated areas who are on the threshold of a changing life style.

There have been substantial increases in the number of courses offered and greater participation in training for both the Yukon territory and the Northwest Territories. Courses geared to present and future economic needs of the developing economy are producing graduates trained as heavy equipment operators, pipeline equipment operators, underground miners, and clerk typists to name a few. Other special courses provided by the department include game guide, fire suppression, prospecting, arts and crafts, rod and chainmen and business management. An expanded Manpower Industrial Training Program resulted in significant use of the program, particularly in the mining and service industries. Courses and basic training for skill development and basic industrial skills were offered in more than 16 settlements during 1972. Basic literacy and life skills were added to basic education courses. First and second year apprenticeship courses in carpentry and heavy duty mechanics were offered for the first time in the Northwest Territories.

With respect to direct employment programs, we have of course made available to people in the north departmental programs through LIP, and now also through LEAP. For the 1973-74 year there have been 28 projects approved under the Local Initiatives Program for a total of $506,892. I expect that these programs are now in operation.

Vocational rehabilitation of disabled persons agreements are held between the department and the government of the Territories. The agreement's main function is to provide comprehensive rehabilitation services to disabled persons. Services include medical and manpower assessment, training and placement, and are achieved through co-operation with other agencies. I may mention that there is a small amount of immigration from other countries to the Northwest Territories and this also comes under the aegis of the department.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that the department is just as conscious of its responsibilities toward the people of the Northwest Territories as it is toward those in other parts of the country. As I stated earlier it is remaining in close touch with developments and will be prepared to meet any needs which may develop with all the resources it has available.

Mr. Watson: Mr. Speaker, I have talked to members in the various parties and I understand there is general agreement to call it six o'clock when I complete what I hope will be a few brief remarks. I think this is an accurate assessment of the sentiment of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. We might inquire if there is unanimous consent. Hon. members have heard what the hon. member for Laprairie (Mr. Watson) has just said, that there might be a disposition to call it six o'clock after the completion of his remarks.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, subject to the caveat that the member whose notice of motion for production we are discussing concurs, and that his rights are not denied by this procedure, I do not think there would be any objection from this side. Perhaps we should hear from the person who is involved.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Speaker, the topic is very important but we have received much of the information we required. I would be very happy, at the conclusion of the next speaker's remarks, to call it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it agreed that we call it six o'clock after the hon. member has completed his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie): Mr. Speaker, since this topic has been the subject of two reports of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, I should like to remind the House of the gist of those reports and to reiterate what I consider to be an unsatisfactory situation as far as the employment of Indian people in Canada is concerned.

The rate of unemployment among Indian people in Canada remains in excess of 50 per cent. That is totally unacceptable. There are a number of solutions, but there is one in particular which I have pushed with ministers who have occupied that portfolio since 1964-65. I think the first time I made this representation was in 1964, when Jack Nicholson was minister. We have not tried the simple, obvious thing, and sometimes it seems to me that obvious steps are ignored by civil servants who appear to feel that more complicated steps are necessary to achieve a solution.

The obvious way to help the employment situation for Indian people in Canada is to bring together regionally, provincially or nationally—and I think regionally would make the most sense—the people who are most concerned with the problem. I mean the representatives of the companies involved in northern resource exploitation, the representatives of labour unions that might be involved, the representatives of course, of the Indian people involved as well as representatives of the federal and provincial governments. These people should be exposed to the success stories that have occurred across the north as far as the employment of Indian people is concerned. Some specific companies have shown a special understanding of the Indian people because they have had sympathetic foremen or personnel managers. These people appreciated the difficulties of individuals transferred from one form of making a living to another; they understood that sometimes there was need for an adjustment to rigid time schedules or rigid working hours which were not always acceptable or easily tolerated by the native people of the north. As a result, there have been what the companies consider failures of adjustment among Indian workers and this results in a lack of enthusiasm for hiring them.

I am convinced that this situation could be overcome to a large extent if the people most concerned with employment in the north were exposed to the success stories that do exist. The suggestion was made to various ministers by letter and, finally, in 1969 the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development made certain recommendations. The committee report outlined the Indian job situation and made the following recommendations:

The committee urges that regional conferences be held, bringing together all the elements capable of solving the unemployment problem. These include representatives of federal and provincial departments and agencies directly concerned, organized labour, industries located in the general areas of high Indian and Eskimo unemployment and of the Indian and Eskimo people.

Such conferences would permit:

(a) the establishment of better lines of communication and co-ordination among all the parties involved;

(b) the exchange and sharing of information concerning successful employment programs involving Indian and Eskimo people and northern employers;

(c) underlining the crisis proportions of the Indian and Eskimo unemployment and under-employment problem.

● (1730)

The committee also urges the government to exercise more authority in the application of conditions relating to the hiring of northern residents contained in the Northern Minerals Assistance Program.

And so on. This committee report dated May 29, 1969, which is 4½ years ago, was followed by another report, the report on education of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Incidentally, both these committees' reports enjoyed the unanimous support of all parties in the House. This second report dated June 22, 1971, refers to the earlier report and says:

In its report to the House dated May 29, 1969, this committee urged the convocation of regional conferences including representatives of federal and provincial departments directly concerned, organized labour, industries located in the general areas of Indian and Eskimo unemployment, and of representatives of the Indian and Eskimo people, to permit, among other things, the exchange and sharing of information concerning successful employment programs involving Indian and Eskimo people and northern employers. The committee is very disappointed that the government failed to act upon this recommendation and notes as the committee predicted in 1969 that the unemployment problem among Canada's Indian and Eskimo peoples has, if anything, grown worse. Industrial attitudes, although improving, are improving too slowly. Since the government appears unwilling to act to convoke such regional conferences, the committee now suggests that the task of organizing and convening such regional conferences should be handed over to the appropriate regional Indian organizations and that the Government of Canada, through either the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development or the Department of Manpower, provide the necessary funding.

The committee is convinced that much greater use should be made by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in particular, and other government departments as well, of the willingness of provincial regional, and national Indian organizations, to collaborate with government in evolving vocational programs and employment programs attuned to the needs and skills of our Indian people and to the needs of industries located in the regions where our Indian people live and are available for work.

The report continues:

Vocational programs for Indian youth must not only be integrated with local industrial needs but should include on-job training as a major part of any vocational training course. In addition to the obvious benefits of improved practical training and increased employment opportunities which would flow from such an approach there would also be a useful pressure on vocational school programs to develop the types of training and courses needed by industry.

[Mr. Watson.]

I do not intend to labour the point further. Two reports by standing committees of this House have urged action. The second report urges that if the government does not intend to do something, at least it should support Indian organizations which might be willing to act. I urge the National Indian Brotherhood to act on this recommendation. I also urge the government to support with funding any such initiative which the National Indian Brotherhood or any provincial Indian organization might take in this regard.

May I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): As previously agreed and ordered, I do now leave the chair. We have agreed to call it six o'clock and I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 5.35 p.m. the House took recess.

ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ALLOCATION BOARD, MANDATORY ALLOCATION OF SUPPLIES AND RATIONING OF CONTROLLED PRODUCTS

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-236, to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada and to amend the National Energy Board Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) moves motion No. 5 as follows:

That Bill C-236, an act to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada, and to amend the National Energy Board Act, be amended by deleting subclause 12(5), lines 17 to 23 on page 7, and renumbering the subsequent subclause accordingly.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, this is another issue which may seem small as far as the amendment is concerned. We certainly will not detain the House on it. However, in pursuance of our duty to make this bill better and to take care of what we think are errors in drafting which could have serious consequences, I have moved the amendment.

I ask hon. members to look at clause 11. Even as it has now been amended by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) and by the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), it still reads as follows; and this is the heart, the kernel, the pith and substance of the whole field:

When the governor in council is of the opinion that a national emergency exists by reason of actual or anticipated shortages of petroleum—

I stop there and ask hon. members to bear in mind the word "anticipated". Up to that point the governor in council can be of the opinion that a national emergency exists because it believes that some time in the future there will be shortages of petroleum. It further reads:

—or disturbances in the petroleum markets that affect or will affect—

I ask hon. members to use plain common sense and put those two thoughts together. Put together, they give to the governor in council the right to say that a national emergency exists in this country because there is an anticipated shortage; in other words, that some time in the future there is likely to be a shortage of petroleum products and that possibly may affect the national security. In the name of heaven, are we going to permit the governor in council, with those two vague possibilities, to declare that a national emergency exists? It is all very well to say that the governor in council is composed of reasonable men. That is true enough, they may be reasonable men; but even reasonable men panic. There may be other reasons for this provision in the bill, but I suggest to Your Honour that if the governor in council is to decide, we are likely to be entering upon a period of shortage—

● (2010)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member will forgive me, but I understand the Chair called motion No. 5. It seems to me the hon. member is speaking to motion No. 3.

Mr. Baldwin: I beg your pardon. I thought we stood No. 3 because until No. 4 was dealt with No. 3 was possibly irrelevant.

An hon. Member: Why not start all over again?

Mr. Speaker: I was looking at the record to ascertain what the hon. member might be speaking to. I think I called No. 5. Of course, if it is the wish of the House, we could return to No. 3. Is this the wish of the House?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I would just like the speech and the motion to coincide.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member's remarks could be taken as introductory to observations on motion No. 3. We will assume that his remarks are relevant in some distant way to that motion.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River) moved:

Motion No. 3.

That Bill C-236, an act to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada, and to amend the National Energy Board Act, be amended in clause 11 thereof by deleting the words "that affect of will affect" in lines 5 and 6 on page 6 and substituting the word "affecting".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear from the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). I am reminded of an occasion when one of his former colleagues, Mr. Douglas Fisher, was dealing with a private member's public bill. He started on a long speech but found out two-thirds of the way through that he was dealing with another bill entirely, and we on these benches pointed it out to him. The hon. member for York South is just repaying the courtesy which was extended. If there are hon. members who have not been following me and who wish me to repeat what I have said, I shall be glad to do so, but if they remain silent I will proceed to draw their attention to motion No. 3 which deals with clause 11 as amended.

I think I can sum up by submission by saying it is asking too much of this House to give the governor in council the power to declare a national emergency where it is dependent upon the two events taking place, the possibility of which might be present but which in actuality do not exist. Let us interpret what might happen, in a common sense way. The governor in council could say, "We think that some time next month, because the international situation suggests to us that the war in the Middle East may be resumed, there is likely to be a shortage of fuel supplies leading to a national emergency." That is one element. The other element is the decision that this situation would affect the national security. I think it is too much to ask us to accept the right of the governor-in-council to put these two contingent events together.

I am reinforced in my view because the wording which I am striving for in my amendment is that which appears in the long title. It is the same wording that appears in the recommendation. The long title of Bill C-236 is as follows:

An act to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security—

It does not use the words which the draftsman has used in this case as a result of the instructions he has received, and I am asking that we go back to what the title says. Similarly, in the recommendation the same language appears. It is:

His Excellency the Governor General has recommended to the House of Commons the present measure to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products in Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security—

And so on. All I am asking is that the House restore the wording in clause 11 to what was obviously in the minds of those who first conceived this act and was in the mind of the Governor General when he made the recommendation upon which the bill is founded.

I shall conclude on this note. As I mentioned yesterday afternoon when dealing with the first amendment, our party has no intention of challenging the passage of this bill because of its doubtful constitutional character. I might point out, though, that others might wish to do so at a later date should a national emergency be proclaimed.

The minister and I took part in an exchange of views the other day with regard to the position of the federal government under the federal system and the circumstances in which it may interfere with the rights enjoyed by the provinces. We agree that such cases as the Fort Francis case have determined this issue for a great many years. The fact remains that irrespective of what the government may say—the government may say that there is an emergency every day of the week for two months—and even though this House, following acceptance of the amendment by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, might agree with the government in declaring there is an emergency which warrants the governor in council proclaiming one, this does not necessarily make it so. It remains a matter of fact to be determined by the circumstances.

If you apply the case I have cited to the situation with regard to petroleum products, I suggest strongly, as a member of the bar for a great many years, that any court would throw out a declaration of a national emergency based on the ground that there might be a shortage of petroleum products which could affect the national security at some time in the future. It is for this reason, and in an effort to be helpful to the minister, to try to improve the language of the bill which was in all likelihood put together hastily at the instance of the technical advisory committee, that I make these observations. I think the minister would be in a much better position if he would go back to the wording which appears in the long title and in the recommendation and make the slight substitution which I am proposing.

• 2020

Mr. Symes: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Baldwin: Surely.

Mr. Symes: As I read clause 11, I think the phrase "or will affect" is one of proper grammar to follow a parallelism in the preceding sentence. If the hon. member reads line 3 it says "by reason of actual or anticipated shortages". Therefore, it seems to me logical that if the hon. member wants to remove the words "will affect" he will also have to remove the phrase "anticipated shortages".

Mr. Baldwin: That is where I disagree. I am willing to go with the minister and the government this far, that the government should have to wait until an actual shortage occurs. I agree that if conditions are such that it comes within the government's competence and knowledge that very shortly there will be an anticipated shortage, then that might well permit them to use means to prevent its coming about. But an anticipated shortage, coupled with something that may affect in the future the national security, is in my mind going too far. I go along with the anticipated shortage, but not with any potential effect in the future.

Hon. D. S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the question of the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) is useful to the House because it has converted the mistake of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) from one of merely bad judgment to a somewhat lesser mistake of just bad grammar. Basically, as the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie pointed out, you cannot have an anticipated shortage which "now affects" the national security. To anticipate something has the quality of attaching futurity to it and therefore must be followed by a verb in the future tense. I do not want to lecture the hon. member, who is many years older than I am and comes from a very good educational system in New Zealand.

Mr. Baldwin: Do not forget Alberta, either.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Well, I think of New Zealand when I think of the hon. member. It is really a question of good grammar which the draftsman has followed here, and I only regret that the hon. member for Peace River has not adhered to basic principles in this regard.

The really critical question is that we are talking about an industry that supplies petroleum, in many cases from a long distance away, for which over a period of time there is substantial provision made both in terms of storage of up to 45 days in Canada and 30 days or even longer periods for shipment from more remote sources to Canada.

Mr. Reilly: Your syntax is almost Eisenhower-like.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I must say that if my syntax is almost Eisenhower-like, then that of the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Reilly) is now, and always has been, banal.

Mr. Baker: Always what?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Banal.

Mr. Nielsen: What has that to do with petroleum?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) has a lot to learn here, and perhaps he will.

Mr. Baker: Thank you very much.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) fits that very well, and I shall have occasion in the future to comment about him though not in the context of this particular bill. He was a former local resident who fled to the security of eastern Ontario to get elected to this House.

Mr. Fairweather: Tell us about your rednecks.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would be glad to, but I must say they fit your party beautifully. I would have some interesting things to say, too, to the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) when the subject of rednecks comes up. In any event, we are talking—

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: He is a long way from a redneck.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I raise just a small point of order. I was sitting in my seat minding my business and listening to the exchange going on between the minister and several of our very excellent members on this side, when all of a sudden I heard my name, or at least my constituency being mentioned. The minister said that when he gets to the area of rednecks he will have something to say to, or perhaps about—

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No, "to."

Mr. Alexander: —to the hon. member for Hamilton West. I should like him to clarify his remarks and let me know just what he has in mind. I await his words of wisdom with great anticipation.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I think I can set the hon. member's mind at rest. Perhaps I could not say this about the rest of his colleagues, but the one thing I will not accuse the hon. gentleman of is being a redneck.

If I can now address myself to the bill, what the hon. member for Peace River is really saying is that if you know there is going to be a shortage in eastern Canada—and, of course, he is an Alberta Tory—the government should not be entitled to act. You can anticipate that there will be a shortage, but the government should not be entitled to act and do something about that shortage. That, quite simply, is just not good enough and it is why we on this side of the House cannot accept his amendment.

The hon. member was not entrusted with any responsibilities when his party was in power but the hon. member from Prince Edward Island sitting in the front row was, and he will know that the important thing is to try to anticipate problems and to deal with them. It could well be that in the process of supplying oil to eastern Canada there will be an anticipated problem of delivery when you are talking about a period of time extending from 30 to 45 days. The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) is a Calgarian who has certain views about what we easterners should do in cold weather and in the dark.

Mr. Baker: You don't like anybody, do you?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member from Calgary has a problem. But basically the question is whether the government of Canada should ignore the parochial views of a member like the hon. member for Calgary Centre and try to look after citizens in all of Canada—people in British Columbia and people in eastern Canada—who are threatened by this kind of interruption in supply. Should we take action, should we anticipate action, or should we wait—as the hon. member for Peace River says—until we are in short supply? That is the position he takes, but I do not think a responsible government should take that position. For that reason I reject his suggestion that we should suffer a little bit, as the hon. member has put it, before we take action. We should anticipate a shortage, and this is why I am asking the House to vote against his amendment.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I did not say anything about suffering a little. My question of privilege is that the minister has, by implication, done the unpardonable thing and in effect has attacked His Excellency just at the time of his departure. In accusing me of bad grammar, by implication he is attacking His Excellency, since His Excellency and I used the same word. We both used the word "affecting". When the hon. gentleman says that my grammar is bad he is saying that so is the Governor General's, who has now left Ottawa to become one of the minister's own constituents. I suggest that is one vote he is not going to get.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): On the question of privilege, I do not think we should attribute that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair rules that neither hon. member has a question of privilege.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I say a few words in an endeavour to prevent the minister obstructing the passage of his own legislation? There are times when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) has the diplomatic finesse of a hippopotamus tripping through a field of tulips.

● (2030)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: And that's a lot for him.

Mr. Douglas: I should like to get back to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). This is really the kernel of the whole legislation, as clause 11 provides:

> When the governor in council is of the opinion that a national emergency exists by reason of actual or anticipated shortages of petroleum or disturbances in the petroleum markets that affect or will affect the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada, and that it is necessary in the national interest to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada, the governor in council may, by order, so declare—

This is a very important clause because it is the whole reason for introducing the legislation. I am somewhat disturbed by the remarks I heard from some members during the course of the discussion yesterday and today, to the effect that there is a phony sort of an emergency oil crisis in Canada. I noticed an article in tonight's Ottawa Citizen by Mr. Charles Lynch under the heading "The crisis that isn't". He quotes the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Bawden), who said that 5 per cent more crude oil has been distributed to eastern Canada this year than last year and therefore there is not any shortage. The hon. member also made some interjections yesterday to that effect.

Let me say, first of all, that I would be surprised if the supplies of crude oil delivered to refineries this year were not greater than last year, because for months every effort has been made to get western crude to eastern Canada, through the Seaway, around by the Panama Canal, by rail and by truck. Undoubtedly, much of this oil is being stockpiled in anticipation of the fact that it may not be possible to deliver adequate supplies in the winter months. Undoubtedly, the people in eastern Canada have been fortunate in that we have had a mild winter so far: the St. Lawrence Seaway stayed open much longer than usual and some 100,000 barrels a day were able to be shipped well into December. We are fortunate that the weather has been mild and there has not been the same demand for heating oil—but we are not out yet of the woods by any manner or means.

Let me point out that members in all parts of the House, particularly those who sit in the opposition parties, were pressing the government a few months ago to recognize the fact that there could be an oil shortage in eastern Canada, urging them to take the steps necessary to meet that anticipated oil shortage. If the shortage does not materialize, no one is going to suffer. But I can imagine what we would be saying on this side of the House if the government had not anticipated an oil shortage and had not taken some of the steps necessary to cope with it. Only time will tell whether the steps they have taken are adequate. Certainly steps had to be taken, and I am glad some steps have been taken. I hope they will obviate any hardship on the part of the people who live in eastern Canada.

It is a mistake to think that clause 11 is only going to be required for this winter. If the pipeline to Montreal is not completed until 1976—and I certainly feel, after the statement by the minister, that it will probably be mid-summer of this year before construction starts; it is more likely to be 1976 than 1975—then we have two more winters during which the people of eastern Canada will be largely dependent upon offshore oil. That oil may be very difficult to procure because there are still the problems of restrictions, embargoes and diversions.

It is rather significant that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) said that the government of Saudi Arabia has indicated that we can have the oil we want, but we are not getting any. The very evident reason for that is that the oil which the government of Saudi Arabia is willing to send to Canada is being diverted elsewhere somewhere along the line by the companies which purchase that oil. It is comparatively easy to divert oil in mid-ocean and send it to some destination other than the one put on the bill of lading.

So the possibility—and all of us hope it will not materialize—of serious oil shortages in eastern Canada until such time as the pipeline is built is a fact which this House of Commons has to consider seriously and we have to give the government the necessary powers to deal with such an emergency should it arise. I commend my friends in the Conservative Party for having proposed an amendment in order to give the House of Commons the right to declare whether or not they agree with the government that there is an emergency. We now have the provision in the bill by which the government must come back to parliament to get the House of Commons to declare that there is such an emergency.

The amendment moved by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) would change clause 11 so that it would read:

> When the governor in council is of the opinion that a national emergency exists by reason of actual or anticipated shortages of petroleum or disturbances in the petroleum markets affecting the national security—

As my colleague, the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) pointed out, if you strike out "will affect" you ought also to strike out "anticipated". It is not possible to talk about an anticipated shortage which affects you now; it can only be an anticipated shortage which will affect you when the shortage takes place. Since the art of governing is the art of foreseeing, it may be necessary for the government to set up an energy allocation board to allocate certain supplies of oil and to provide for storage of oil in certain areas of Canada in anticipation of something which does not affect Canada at the time but which will affect it in the future.

[Mr. Douglas.]

Therefore, it seems to me that not only from a grammatical standpoint but in terms of logic and, although I am not a lawyer, I would think in terms of law, if you are going to deal with an actual shortage then you deal with a shortage which affects us now; and if you are also going to give the government power to deal with an anticipated shortage, you must give it power to deal with something which will affect Canada at some future time but which does not affect Canada at the present time. For that reason, it seems to me that the amendment is unwise and that the present provisions in clause 11 ought to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Baldwin: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 3 (Mr. Baldwin) negatived.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River) moved:

Motion No. 5

> That Bill C-236, An Act to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada, and to amend the National Energy Board Act, be amended by deleting subclause 12(5), lines 17 to 23 on page 7, and renumbering the subsequent sub-clause accordingly.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Baldwin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The motion appears in my name, but I think perhaps the House has heard enough from me. I wonder, therefore, if I might obtain unanimous consent—without losing the opportunity to speak if it appears there is not willingness to accept the motion—to have the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) open the debate on this motion for our party. I think we will probably receive unanimous consent and perhaps it could be given in the festive mood of the House.

● (2040)

Mr. Lewis: With regret, we agree.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, the reason for moving this amendment is that it is just one more small attempt on our part to improve what is really a terrible bill and a very poor way in which to attempt to solve a potential problem about which the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) spoke about a moment ago. The mentality of the Liberal and NDP members in their approach to the question of a potential shortfall in energy and their approach to this bill could be exemplied, I think, by the remarks the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) made yesterday afternoon, as recorded at page 9219 of Hansard, when he criticized our party by saying we were attempting to delay this bill. He stated:

—I recognized the seriousness of the emergency we were facing, and the potential emergency for which the government was attempting to prepare. We had but to read the newspapers to be convinced of the fact that we were facing very serious difficulties indeed.

What a ludicrous statement! The minister comes into this House one day and says we could be short 75,000 barrels of oil, and a few days later that we could be short 200,000 barrels of oil a day. The hon. member for Nipissing reads the newspapers reporting the minister's statement and decides we must be facing an oil crisis. They panic just like Chicken Little in the children's story: The sky is falling in! The turkey-lurkeys in the NDP say, "Yes, it is; we must do something". So the government produces this bill which asks for enormous powers. Basically, it asks that the minister be able unilaterally to declare a national emergency and take over the distribution of almost everything in this country.

In this party we recognize that indeed there is a potential short supply of oil in the eastern part of this country. We recognized this possibility many years ago and recommended then that a pipeline be built to Montreal. Mr. Speaker, if you read the same newspapers as the hon. member for Nipissing, you will recall that there was a Middle East war in 1967 and that a lasting peace did not develop. It should have been realized that a disruption in respect of petroleum existed from 1967, and at least some preparation at that time would have been the act of a prudent government.

It is obvious that no such precautions were taken and that no contingency plan existed. It is obvious, also, that very quickly draftsmen sat down and produced this bill. One example of the excessive power demanded by this bill is clause 12 (5) which this amendment would seek to delete. This clause provides:

The governor in council may, by order, add any product that is manufactured wholly or in part from petroleum to the mandatory allocation program and thereupon that product becomes a controlled product for the purpose of the allocation of the supplies thereof in Canada.

That clause would give this board the power to allocate, and ultimately ration, almost every product related in any way, shape or form to petroleum which is an important feedstock and base for so many things. The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) talked about nylon stockings. Indeed the government could allocate these—and garbage bags, toothbrushes, roofing tile, telephones, rubber tires, rubber balloons and other rubber products. This is the granting of far too much power to any board, let alone a board under the direction of this particular minister whose credibility is at least to be questioned.

I would think that every member of this House, when he read this clause, must have raised his eyebrows. Certainly we did. However, we permitted the bill to go to the committee in the hope that in committee we would be able to call sufficient witnesses to determine whether in fact there is a potential crisis, how much the shortfall might be this winter and how much other products might be affected by the shortfall. We wanted to examine this legislation carefully, but we were obstructed at every opportunity. My colleague the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) yesterday alluded to this fact.

The hon. member for Nipissing indicated by his behaviour in the committee that it was the government's intention not to allow us to call the necessary witnesses and obtain some facts and information in order to judge this bill in the proper context, with proper information and not just on the emotional situations which the minister, I suggest, has possibly created deliberately to indicate that there is an atmosphere of crisis ahead. However, we did obtain some information; we did hear some witnesses. Mr. Stabback, who was not allowed to appear alone, appeared as the minister's adviser. He did answer some questions directly, however. In answer to a question put to him by the hon. member for Kootenay West, he said:

I think the difficulties that are facing the plastic industry, Mr. Harding, are related to the shortfall in ethylene supplies that became apparent before the present emergency in North America. As you know, the Canadian industry is endeavouring to establish new ethylene plants in Canada as their response towards meeting the shortfall. We have been made aware by some companies of their difficulty in obtaining raw material for their processing.

The point is that this shortfall in ethylene was apparent to the National Energy Board before there was any concern about crude oil. The hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson) asked a question of Mr. Stabback in the committee. He said:

If I understand Mr. Stabback correctly, the interpretation is that the current shortage of, perhaps, crude and gas is not the reason for the shortfall in petrochemical products in so far as the plastics industry is concerned. It is one of downstream capacity in refining. Is that not correct?

This is from a Liberal member. Mr. Stabback replied:

It is not the primary reason. Of course, it exacerbates it, but it was really related to a shortfall in the supply of ethylene emanating from United States plants and resulting from, amongst other things, a reduction in supplies of natural gas that are now available in the southern part of the United States.

In other words, the shortfall in respect of plastics alluded to by the hon. member for Kootenay West and the hon. member for York North were not related to any shortfall of crude oil from the Middle East area but were related to shortfalls in plant capacity which were in existence long before this bill was presented. It would seem very reasonable, if shortages of this type were not caused by energy allocation problems, that we should not use the energy allocation board to try to solve these problems.

My colleague, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) asked the minister some questions in the committee. He recognized that some petrochemicals could be in short supply as a result of this energy crisis, but suggested these are fairly limited in scope. He asked the minister if he would be willing to tighten up the wording of this clause, and the minister replied no: He said:

● (2050)

I think it is conceivable that if there was a grievous shortage of these things in Canada it might be desirable to take this jurisdiction.

I pursued this question along similar lines, and the minister replied in respect of agricultural chemicals, which are in short supply, as you may be aware, Mr. Speaker, not as a result of the crude oil shortage but, rather, as a result of lack of plant capacity. He said:

—you take an agricultural chemical that may be dependent upon a petroleum derivative and saying that the government should not be in a position to allocate short supplies there, even though that may be as much of a detriment at increasing food production as not having tractor fuel available . . . It seems to me that it is reasonable to extend the jurisdiction here to protect the public as much in that situation as in the case of fuel.

Again I explained in committee what is common knowledge to people cognizant of the industry, that the problem of the shortfall in agricultural chemicals and petrochemicals is the result of lack of plant capacity. If you want to put the blame, go back to federal fiscal and financial policies, to the policies of the predecessor of the present Minister of Finance—the man of the year, the Hon. Edgar Benson. These problems were caused by the fiscal and financial policies of this government, and it would seem to me quite reasonable to think that is the way in which a solution should be sought. I raised this point with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), who said:

Well, it seems to me in principle it is the same problem.

That explains the reason for moving this amendment. Had, in fact, the government taken the position that the points raised by Mr. Stabback were valid, namely, that this allocation board should be in a position to tell refiners what to do with the effluent from refineries, ethylene, benzene and other aromatics, which might go into petrochemical production, I would have agreed. But when the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources states that this energy allocation board might allocate any product that is in short supply and is related to petroleum for no matter what reason, that is overstepping the bounds.

The second reason for moving our motion is that this bill is an excuse for inaction. There are grievous problems in this country with respect to agricultural chemicals. Some farmers are not able to get fertilizer, and this could have serious consequences on their production and on food prices in Canada. Many manufacturing concerns are having difficulty in finding plastic feedstock which they need to manufacture toothbrushes and a number of other products. These are very important problems to which this government has not addressed itself in any noticeable way. They are the responsibility of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray), the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) since it is the fiscal and financial policies of this government in the past which have caused these grievous shortages at this time. So there are two reasons. The first is that the powers asked by the minister in this clause go far beyond anything which one would call reasonable.

[Mr. Andre.]

At this point it might be worth mentioning the make-up of the Energy Board. It will consist of a chairman drawn from the public service who is knowledgeable in this area, a nominee from the province of Quebec as a consuming province, a nominee from the province of Alberta as a producing province, a nominee from industry or somebody seconded from industry who is knowledgeable in marketing, and someone who is knowledgeable in the consumption end of fuels, as suggested by the minister. None of these people has any expertise in the area of plastics, the area of consumer products related to plastics, and it would be most inappropriate to give these powers to the board because I am sure they will cause ten times the number of problems as they will attempt to cure.

The second reason is as follows. We have seen what this government has done with the Food Prices Review Board. They have used it as an excuse for doing nothing about the price of food in Canada. To give this energy resources board potential responsibility for all the shortages in plastics, agricultural and other chemicals, would give them just another excuse for continued inaction in the areas of fiscal, financial policy and trade.

However, the main and the third reason for moving this motion is that the government already has the power under this bill to control all the products which are the base or the feedstock of the petrochemical industry, because in clause 2 under the definition of "petroleum products" we find the following:

"petroleum" or "petroleum product" means crude oil or other hydrocarbon or mixture of hydrocarbons recovered in liquid or solid state from a natural reservoir, any hydrocarbon or mixture thereof, in liquid or solid state, that results from the processing or refining of crude oil or other hydrocarbon,

It goes on to include natural gasoline and natural gas. That includes all the chemical feedstocks. It includes ethylene, which Mr. Stabback, vice-chairman of the National Energy Board, talked about being potentially in short supply. It is a refinery product, or is manufactured from ethane which is a product of a gas processing plant. Benzene, phenol and other aromatic compounds which are products of refineries and are important chemical-building stocks, according to this definition fall within the realm of petroleum and petroleum products. Therefore, this board is perfectly capable of looking after the allocation of these products.

Under other parts of this bill, in view of the generous definition of petroleum and petroleum products—and I have no argument about that; it is an appropriate definition—the minister can look after any shortfalls in plastics or petroleum-related products, agricultural chemicals, and so on, which have anything to do with a crude oil shortage. This bill would allow him to get into the business of allocating fertilizers, toothbrushes, and so on, even though they may have nothing to do with the shortage of crude oil but may be related to shortfalls in plant capacity or, presumably, a strike if there were a strike in a plastics plant that would create shortfalls of plastics. The government could get into the act, according to the bill.

The scope is far too wide. Also, judging from the record of this minister, in particular in handling the energy situation, and the totally inaccurate information he has given the House repeatedly and in statements made to people outside the House, it would be inappropriate to trust him with that sort of authority. It would be dangerous to the people affected to give the government an excuse for inaction in these areas where there are very serious problems. I wonder why the government has not sought to take some action to clear up these problems which are causing people to lose their jobs.

Under the act as it exists, under the definition of petroleum and petroleum products in clause 2, this board would have the authority to look after the allocation of all petrochemical feedstocks to all petrochemical processing plants within Canada. Therefore, I would hope that the other members of this House would agree with me that in the interests of improving the bill we should strike out this clause.

● (2100)

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, one of my colleagues has suggested that we would have done better with the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). I am looking at the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Peace River which we opposed in committee. We see no reason to change our minds this evening. The amendment offered by the Conservative Party will make the allocation program much less effective than we feel it should be. I should like to point out that the allocation board is going to be made up of responsible citizens. Different viewpoints will certainly be represented on the board, and when a decision is made by the board it must come to the governor in council—the cabinet—and it will be responsible for any controls that are imposed. I think it will be careful of the type of allocation program that goes into effect.

Let us look at the section which the hon. member wants to wipe out entirely. This is how clause 12(5) reads:

> The governor in council may, by order, add any product that is manufactured wholly or in part from petroleum to the mandatory allocation program and thereupon that product becomes a controlled product for the purpose of the allocation of the supplies thereof in Canada.

I can think of a number of products that might be added to a program such as this. One of them is rosin. In British Columbia, several industries have already indicated that because of the shortage of rosin they will either have to close down or curtail employment. If the allocation of supplies is needed to keep up the supply of rosin, or if rosin is in short supply, then it seems logical to me that this product should be brought under the control of the allocation board which can see to it that these industries keep working. There are a host of other circumstances where similar logic could apply, and that is why I believe this clause must be retained. The board will not be hard on any specific industry and I am quite certain that it will not abuse the allocation of supplies.

It seems to me, for example, that there might be a need to stop some of the crude oil going to the petrochemical industry, or in some cases to allocate additional supplies of crude oil to that industry if certain products are needed. That is the value of having this provision, but the Tories are out to weaken the bill as much as possible so the program will not work.

We have heard about plastic cups and other plastic materials, Mr. Speaker. If we get into an emergency situation, the allocation board may have to decide where the priority lies. The whole field of oil products comes into this picture. If we have an extreme situation where we need a great deal of heating oil, for example, we will have to divert more crude petroleum into the refineries which are going to produce it. This might force us to stop supplies of crude oil going to some other branches of the petrochemical industry where plastics and other products are made. It is as simple as that. In an emergency, I think the board must have control and be able to tell the oil companies and the people of Canada where the crude oil should go and where oil products should go if they have to be rationed.

We in this party feel that this clause will help in a crisis and we have no hesitation in asking the House to turn down the amendment.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) with a question.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is hard-working and industrious and I know he thinks things through. Therefore I want to put a question to him fairly and squarely. When appointed, this board will be dedicated to its purpose, supposedly experienced in and qualified to allocate petroleum supplies. If what the hon. member contends is correct, does he think that a board with these qualifications, dedicated to and directed at the purpose of dealing with petroleum supplies, would be the right kind of board to control, set prices on and allocate such products as disposable diapers and rubber diapers?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You are all wet.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Speaker, if any petroleum product is essential, including the ones mentioned by my hon. friend, then we might come to the point where they are controlled. However, I do not anticipate that we will run into that problem.

Mr. Paproski: With Macdonald you can anticipate all kinds of problems.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) spoke about this question. In the depth of his compassion he has now left the House, which I regret. There are three points to be made with regard to his particular observation. The first is his reference to fiscal provisions in the past which had inhibited the Canadian petrochemical industry. As anyone would know who has reflected for any particular period of time on the Canadian petrochemical industry, the problem has been one of scale and particularly of access to the United States market by Canadian firms. Of course, this has not been a question of Canadian fiscal policy, but a question of international negotiations within the ambit of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. Basically, the question is whether the Canadian industry has been able to gain favourable access to the United States market, which in fact they have not been able to do over a period of time.

Secondly, if this is so, then who is to provide, on an economic scale, for the needs of Canadian industry and the Canadian consumer community in this particular area of product? There has been a whole range of products; some have come from Canadian sources but the great majority come from overseas. We talk at length with regard to the importation of butadiene from Polysar which, because of sources in Canada, necessarily had to come from abroad. There is a whole range of Canadian products, some of which are dependent upon United States sources. If there is a general shortening of international supply in these particular products, inevitably it is going to affect Canada. Whether one allocates it or not, if there is a shortage of supply in the feedstocks of these particular commodities in their chemical derivations, the fact is that the Canadian community will have to run short.

The hon. member spoke in rather disparaging fashion about a whole range of consumer products which are of importance to Canadians. He suggested that they will run short of these things. Basically, his position and that of his party is: Well, let them run short.

● (2110)

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question or privilege. If I may speak under the Standing Order which the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) cited last night, to do with members opposite putting words into one's mouth, I wish to state that at no time did I or anybody in this party suggest that these potential and existing shortages of rosin, butadiene, ethylene and other chemicals are not serious. They are very serious. Indeed, I made the point of wondering out loud why the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie), who has responsibility in this area, has not done anything to date. People are suffering in British Columbia, Ontario, Alberta, and indeed in every part of the country.

If the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) would turn around one day and talk to his colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and ask why he does not get on with the job, he would be doing much more for the country than he is in proposing this clause in this bill at this time.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that although the hon. member quoted at length from the evidence taken before the committee, there may be nothing more effective in support of my argument than what he just said. The difference between the approach of the hon. member for Calgary Centre and my approach to consumers in Canada who are threatened by this shortcoming is this: I wonder whether we should not express some concern and do something about the shortcoming, and he wants to brush it aside on a legality.

This bill would permit the government of Canada and the energy allocation board to take action and try to protect Canadian consumers against this kind of shortfall. But the hon. member for Calgary Centre is not asking the House to do anything. He opposes, basically, this one power that we can adopt under this statute which is necessary for protecting Canadian consumers with regard to the whole range of products which he has mentioned and which I regard as being important. He and his colleagues referred in disparaging fashion to a whole group of consumer products as though people are not important.

Mr. Andre: That is not true.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would ask the House to decide whether we are to look after the interests of individual people in Canada, or not. The hon. member for Calgary Centre is the living apotheosis of that famous Calgary bumper-sticker and he is now applying it to all Canadians, even those of his own city.

Mr. Paproski: Shame! You should be ashamed of yourself, Macdonald.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I can only echo the words of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas). The minister's performance, his efforts generally to get this legislation through, and his manner of responding to remarks made on my side of the House, certainly are no indication that he is overly eager for the measure to pass.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Coming from the hon. member, that is a compliment.

Mr. Nielsen: He is the last person to hold himself out as some kind of Ajax knight, as the only protection the consumer has. Consider what the peerless plumptre posse, the peripatetic, perambulating price prodders have been able to accomplish! We are getting more of the same now.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Get a new speech-writer, Erik.

An hon. Member: And a new shirt, while you are at it.

Mr. Nielsen: I am as much an expert on petroleum as the minister is, and that does not say much for my expertise in this field. I am concerned about the broad, sweeping powers being called for under this subclause. To an increasing extent we have seen attempts by this government, now personified in the minister, to assert increasingly the power of the state over all facets of life in Canada. This is another example of that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: I hear members groaning on the other side. They are interested only in more power and in holding on to more power. I would suggest that many of them have not even read the bill. If one examines the definition section and then looks at the powers the government wants, one can see that almost every product and byproduct of petroleum is covered and would come under the control of the board. They want to control materials which go into nylon stockings, pantyhose, hundreds of everyday items ranging from throw-away cartons to cleaning solvents, rubber goods and photographic film. They want to control the production of articles such as tires, floor and wall tiles, anti-freeze, pipe coatings, insulation, upholstery, food containers, furniture, paint, records, drugs, automobile protective-foam dashboards and a full range of plastic products.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I hear the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) applauding. I can understand his party wanting to enter the capitalistic field of nylon manufacturing. They want more control; they want to control everything. If they could, they would control the manufacture of toothpicks in the country. That is exactly what the government is trying to do under this subclause.

We have witnessed in the past several examples of this kind of unilateral, arbitrary power which the government is obsessed with garnering unto itself under this provision. It is time we halted this process of government by ministerial fiat. That, exactly, is what the House is being asked to approve here. Those ministers have no appreciation for those whom the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has described as little men.

Consider the conduct of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien). He certainly has wielded unilateral power. The minister opposite has accused us of hindering legislation, simply because he is petulant. It was the same with the Minister of Justice (Lang) earlier today. It was only his stubbornness that resulted in the wiretapping bill being sent back to the other place. The same can be said for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is now engaging in the same exercise.

The minister says that he wants this legislation to pass. Is it for the protection of consumers? No, sir! Passage of this clause without the amendment spoken to by the hon. member for Calgary Centre will result in members of this House sitting down and saying, "Government, take thou all power unto thyself. Exercise it. We are not concerned. Do what you please. This place means nothing any more. We need not concern ourselves with these matters because all decisions will be made over there, on the government side." Ministers can say, to use the words of the Prime Minister, "We have the herd to back us up and to lead us, braying, to the troughs. We do not have to worry about the country. Everything is under control."

The amendment is a good one. The government does not need these broad and sweeping powers for which it is asking. It should not have asked for them in the first place. It has the power it needs under the general provisions of section 12, as one will see if one refers to the definition section. It need not insert itself this deeply into the private, commercial and industrial life or all people in this country to the extent it seeks.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Case dismissed!

● (2120)

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I intervene in this debate only to say that the amendment proposed by the opposition overlooks the problem for reasons different from mine. I hope mine do not overlook the problem. My feelings about the amendment are that even if the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) does not have this motive, we in the New Democratic Party hope that in this bill we are placing different kinds of priorities on our use of petroleum products and energy resources. When we use them for the cups that hold our coffee, something we throw away by the thousand, it is a waste of our petroleum resources. It is time the representatives of the people of this country intervened in what the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) calls the private preserve of entrepreneurs and business people who assist in, and in fact start, the wasting of energy resources in this country.

Mr. Nielsen: Look at the minister.

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, he has one.

Mr. Reilly: Do you want to drink out of it when he is through?

Mr. Benjamin: Members will notice that I very seldom have one in my hand because I might get caught with it. That is only a very minute example of how we waste petroleum and energy resources in this country. I refer to what we use to hold our coffee, what we use for handkerchiefs—

Mr. Baldwin: What about your shirt?

Mr. Benjamin: You are right about my shirt. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) can give me the shirt off his back provided it is not made out of some energy resource.

I do not believe the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has this particular item in the legislation for the purpose which I have just mentioned. I would be agreeable to accepting if if it would help this House of Commons and the citizens of our country to take a more serious look at the way we use our resources. We should take a closer look at how they are wasted every day, even on little things. It might be very well for the mouthpieces of petroleum corporations who sit to my right to help promote the sale of commodities that are nothing more than a waste of time, money and resources.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is not in his seat. Now that he is, the hon. member rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, the last remarks of the hon. member were an unwarranted slur on my colleagues. I respectfully ask that he withdraw them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to include the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Reilly) in the slurs which he thinks I was casting, because he does not come from oil country. I am surprised he is feeling badly about what I said with regard to some of his colleagues.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, I know I am not from oil country. I was not objecting on my own behalf; however, a number of my colleagues do come from western Canada.

The hon. member cast what I regard as an unwarranted slur on their integrity and their ability to serve in this House. Despite the fact he wants to be facetious, this matter is very serious and it cannot be allowed to go unchallenged in this House. I ask the hon. member to withdraw, without reservation, the remarks he made.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, as one of the best non-experts of House rules, I rely upon your advice. On a number of occasions hon. members have been told that is not a question of privilege but a question of opinion or debate. What the hon. member construes as a slur, I construe as my opinion. Some hon. members who sit to my right are here as mouthpieces for the multinational oil corporations.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope hon. members will not expect the Chair to become involved in the dispute which is taking place between the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Reilly) and the hon. member who has the floor. I very often hear hon. members charging other hon. members with being mouthpieces for one branch of industry or commerce, or one aspect or another of national life. I really do not think the Chair should be asked to intervene in such matters.

The hon. member for Ottawa West has the right to make the point that he does not think the hon. member who has the floor is right. The dispute arises from a contention made by the hon. member, but I would hesitate to say it is unparliamentary and requires the intervention of the Chair to call on the hon. member to withdraw his remarks. Rather, I think that is a point of debate, a contention or an allegation by the hon. member who has the floor, to which the hon. member can quite rightly, if he wishes, object as he has done or may do later in the course of the debate.

Mr. Reilly: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, to call an hon. member of this House a mouthpiece with a special interest is, in my submission, unparliamentary in the extreme.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has risen on a question of privilege, the hon. member who is concerned has replied, and the Chair has made a ruling. The hon. member interprets the rule in one way, the Chair interprets the rules and practices of the House in another. Certainly there can be debate, but that is the responsibility which the hon. member for Ottawa West and all hon. members cast upon the weak shoulders of the Speaker.

I know it is not easy to determine what is or what is not unparliamentary. I appreciate that what one hon. member may consider to be debate, another may view as unparliamentary, an attack upon his integrity. However, it is the responsibility of the Chair to take into consideration all aspects of the matter and perhaps see in what light the remarks were made. Because I have taken into account the tone of the debate as it has gone on for the past hour or so, I judge that the hon. member did not intend to cast aspersions on the hon. member for Ottawa West or any other member of the House. Following the point of order, I gained the impression from the hon. member's remarks that he really did not have in mind what the hon. member for Ottawa West considers casting a slur upon him, or upon any other member of the House. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost on division.

Motion No. 5 (Mr. Baldwin) negatived.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River) moved:

Motion No. 6.

That Bill C-236, to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada, and to amend the National Energy Board Act, be amended by deleting clause 22 thereof, lines 1 to 11 on page 16, and substituting therefor the following:

"22.(1) For the purpose of this act, the expression "deprivation of property" includes loss or damage to property or the partial or total divestment of any right having pecuniary value suffered in Canada by an individual resident in Canada within the meaning of the Income Tax Act but does not include any such loss, damage or divestment to the amount that compensation or satisfaction in respect thereof was or is otherwise provided for.

(2) The governor in council shall by order establish a tribunal for the hearing and determination on a quasi-judicial basis of complaints of deprivation of property occasioned by any regulation under this act and shall provide in such order the time within which such complaints may be made and the procedure to be followed thereon and respecting the determination and payment of compensation for such deprivation and the fund from which compensation shall be payable.

(3) There shall be an appeal from any decision of such tribunal to the Federal Court of Appeal which shall have jurisdiction to vary, set aside or confirm such decision.

(4) A person who complains of deprivation of property may, in lieu of making a complaint to the tribunal established under subsection (2), initiate his complaint in the Federal Court-Trial Division which shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the complaint."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order as last time, unless the minister is rising to say he accepts the amendment.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No.

Mr. Baldwin: Under those conditions, I ask for unanimous consent to permit the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour) to carry the burden in respect of this motion.

● (2130)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with regard to the ability of the hon. member to move the motion in his name, on the ground that it would place an obligation on the treasury to pay out more than is contemplated in the recommendation put forward by His Excellency.

This is a matter which occasioned considerable discussion in committee. I shall not attempt to recapitulate that discussion. I would merely draw attention to what was said by the legislative draftsman who, in essence, drew a distinction between deprivation of property as understood in the preparation of this bill in relation to the Canadian Bill of Rights and deprivation of property in the sense it is used in the hon. member's amendment. In the sense it is used in the Canadian Bill of Rights, the phrase would mean actual deprivation of the property of some person or corporation. Perhaps I might refer to the testimony of Mr. Ryan, an assistant deputy minister of the Department of Justice, in this regard as reported at page 28:85 of the proceedings of January 3, 1974. With reference to the phrase "deprivation of property" as used in the statute, he said:

> It refers to such things as personal property, easements, franchises, corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments; but I do not think, strictly speaking, a contract to acquire oil gives you a property right in the oil until it comes into possession or until the terms of the contract are met.

Mr. Ryan went on to point out that the phrase "deprivation of property" as used in His Excellency's recommendation was not related to any kind of damage suit which might be brought against the Crown in this regard, but related to the physical possession of property which, as the Chair will understand, amounts to very much less in terms of the obligation of the treasury. On this basis I suggest, on a point of order, that the amendment in the name of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) goes beyond the recommendation of the Crown; that the hon. member has put forward an amendment which would expose the general taxpayer to a much greater expenditure than was contemplated by His Excellency in the recommendation, and that it is therefore out of order.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, never have I heard such an absurd proposition, even from that master of creative inertia the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald). He calls as his witness a legislative draftsman who works for the government and tries to foist his interpretation upon the House as to the meaning of the word "property". If the bill is passed by this House and the other place, that will be a matter to be determined by the courts.

First let me say that the proper time to have raised this point of order would have been when the amendment were first produced, not after we had embarked upon the report stage. However, I do not hold that against the minister; it is just a matter of not using his "energy" at the right time. What is involved here is an attempt to circumvent the Bill of Rights. All members know that such is the case. The Bill of Rights provides that citizens of Canada can be deprived of property only by due process of law. The term "property" embraces in its meaning far more than the minister has in mind.

I know that the minister and the government rushed into this bill without due preparation. Suddenly they were confronted with the terms of the Bill of Rights and began to wonder what they would do about that situation. So they put in a clause, which can only be called "zilch", in an attempt to circumvent the Bill of Rights. Now an effort is being made to prevent anyone in the House of Commons giving animation and value to the rights of the people of Canada who have been deprived of property.

Let us examine once again the words used in the recommendation. I am surprised that the minister, having been so cavalier in his attitude toward His Excellency, should now quote him. We find they appear in this form—> —to provide for the establishment of a tribunal to hear complaints respecting the deprivation of property and respecting the determination and payment of compensation.

And this is where it ends. These words are vague and subject to a variety of interpretations. We are attempting to make the definition more precise, to say what kind of tribunal shall be established to protect the small, independent people who could be severely damaged as a result of certain actions taken by the board. We assert they should have a place to go and a remedy to seek, and on that basis I ask that the hon. gentleman's point of order be thrown out.

Mr. Speaker: Of course, I would be pleased to hear the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). His long experience both in the House and in the courts of the country might well assist the Chair. However, I am quite prepared to make a ruling now, if that should be the wish of the House. I doubt whether hon. members would want to spend too much time on a procedural point. I see the hon. member appears anxious to join the fray. The hon. member for York South.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I shall not take long. I do not agree with the amendment in the name of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), but I think the minister is asking your Honour to rule in a way which is totally unacceptable. It is impossible for us to say that because an officer of the Ministry of Justice is of the opinion that a phrase has a certain interpretation, the House, or Your Honour, should be governed accordingly. This cannot be a ground upon which any proposition before the House could be held to be out of order. It is our rules and Standing Orders which govern us, not the words of an officer employed in the ministry of justice.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources for having brought this interesting point to the attention of the Chair. I might say that this aspect of the matter did cause some lifting of eyebrows on the part of my advisers. At the same time, I might observe that other motions related to this bill were perhaps even more doubtful. However, it was felt that the Chair should be somewhat lenient from the point of view of procedure in regard to these important motions.

In any event, despite the sympathy I feel, to some extent, with the argument advanced by the minister, it seems to me he wishes the Chair to become involved in a question of law. It is a long-established practice that the Chair rules on questions of procedure, not on questions of law, and I do not think the Chair should be placed in the position of making the kind of ruling suggested by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

● (2140)

For these reasons, I think the hon. member for Peace River ought to be given the benefit of the doubt and that the motion should be put. It has already been placed before the House. The hon. member for Peace River has the floor.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, then may I return to the application I was about to make? I would request the House, if it would be kind enough, to give unanimous consent to the burden of this motion being undertaken by the hon. member for Regina East.

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to introduce my remarks by referring to some comments that Mr. Ryan, the minister's counsel, made in committee. I refer in particular to page 28:83 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of January 3, 1974. Mr. Ryan outlined his view of the purpose of clause 22, the clause presently under discussion, and his remarks read in part as follows:

> It was intended to deal with the remote possibility, and perhaps not too remote, that there might be an actual deprivation, a taking away of property from an individual as a result of some regulation, or the effect of some regulation or order, made under clause 16, particularly—if I can refer to clause 16—the powers dealt with on page 9 under paragraph (i), (j) and (o) on page 10. Now it is conceivable– and I stress the point conceivable—that there may be a deprivation of property resulting from regulations under those particular powers, in which case it is a matter of some concern that the Bill of Rights be observed.

> If that should result in a deprivation, and I use the word deprivation in the sense of it taking away, a confiscation, a seizure in that sense of a taking altogether of property, then I submit it is a deprivation of property, in which case we are concerned with a due process; some tribunal, some board, some place to hear it and have a determination of rights and obligations, which is what clause 22 is intended to do.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the intent and purpose of clause 22 must be of concern to all members of this House. It is only 11 lines in length, but it is the remedial counterbalance to the extraordinary powers given to the government in the public interest to override, frustrate, deny or direct the property and civil rights of private citizens. These powers of the government are spalled out in this bill in pages of detail; they are so extensive as to be granted to a government only in a wartime or a peacetime emergency.

It is right and proper that in such an emergency private rights must be sacrificed to the public good, but it is a corollary to this democratic principle that the cost of such private sacrifice should be minimized; that, so much as possible, the burden placed upon the private citizen for the benefit of all should be shared by those in whose behalf the burden is carried. Obviously, the government has recognized this principle and its corollary in drafting clause 22.

But there is a further corollary, founded in our concept of justice and fair play, that any scheme of compensation for private loss—this is particularly true where compensation is payable out of public funds to private claimants—must be just and must be seen to be just. It is with respect to this most important aspect that clause 22 is faulty or, perhaps, fails. Any scheme of judicial administration, if it is to meet our concepts of justice and fairness, must be firm and must be reasonably specific in its terms of reference as tto who may claim and what may be claimed for.

In our form of parliamentary democracy it has long been accepted that these terms must be set by parliament. Canadians do not accept that these terms should be delegated to the changeable whim and fancy of the governor in council. That method of constituting a judicial scheme has about it the offensive odour of the long-gone aribtrary courts. Unfortunately, that is the judicial scheme that is embodied in clause 22. I do not accuse the government or the minister of doing this with bad intent, quite the opposite. The government has recognized the need to establish a tribunal to compensate persons who are unduly injured by action taken for the public good. That necessity is implicit in our Canadian Bill of Rights.

On the other hand, the government is aware, as we must all be aware, that if this bill, when enacted, is fully implemented, unknown sums may be demanded from the public treasury. Faced with this dilemma—the tradition of a judicial tribunal that is mindful of our human rights and fundmental freedoms, and the foreseen dangers to public revenues if the terms of reference are fully set out while the claimants' claims are yet unknown in number and scope—the government has produced clause 22. That clause would set up a tribunal where all the terms of reference, the form of tribunal, its procedures, the definition of "claimant", "claim", "deprivation", "property", "determination of claim" and "method of payment" are all to be determined by regulation of the governor in council.

Also, we must remember that a regulation that is passed one day may be repealed the next. I doubt that under the Federal Courts Act there is an appeal from the decision of the tribunal. But if there is, what does it avail? A new regulation can change the law between the date of the tribunal's decision and the date of the hearing by the Federal Court.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that I make no suggestion that the government has acted with wrong intent. I recognize the dilemma, and in the urgency of drafting the government has come up with a solution. That solution, however, is that, as between the governor in council acting in the public interest and the injured private citizen, the governor in council is to hold all the cards. I suggest that this type of tribunal is not acceptable to Canadians; moreover, I suggest that it will loose a cloud of suspicion and distrust against the tribunal and will embarrass the government with a plague of pressures. What claimant, knowing that the government can by regulation validate his claim, will accept without protest a regulation that invalidates it? All members of this House are aware of the pressures that are brought against them in like circumstances.

This amendment seeks, by definition, to give certainty and stability to the admissibility or inadmissibility of a claim while at the same time protecting the public interest. Secondly, the amendment would openly bring the tribunal within the judicial process by providing for an appeal to the Federal Court of Appeal, and as well that the Federal Court, trial division, would have original jurisdiction, with the tribunal at the choice of the claimant. These last two provisions would strengthen the tribunal, in the opinion of the public, by incorporating it within the recognized judicial organization, and would ensure a certainty and continuity of decision.

I suggest that if the government of Canada is to be given powers which abrogate the rights encompassed by the Canadian Bill of Rights, including the right to the enjoyment of one's property, it is incumbent upon us to ensure that adequate and comprehensive provision for due compensation is clearly and unmistakably provided for.

It is on occasion necessary to intrude and to infringe upon property rights of Canadian citizens for the common good. However, it is equally necessary, I suggest, that government ensures that individual Canadians who suffer financial loss as a result of action taken and necessary for the common good be compensated so that the burden is shared equitably and equally by all.

I am concerned that there shall be no doubt, no possible doubt, that the individual whose land, for example, may be expropriated for a pipeline right-of-way constructed under the authority of clause 26 of the act shall be entitled to due compensation for the property right lost by him as a consequence of such action. It is not sufficient, I submit, to leave the right to compensation, in such circumstances, as a matter of discretion with the governor in council. Without labouring the matter, I submit that right should be absolute, and I urge the House to support the amendment.

● (2150)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, this is an important question which I think should be continued. I should like to take this occasion to move a motion under Standing Order 6. In the event that I have approval, I would move, seconded by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Stanbury):

That the sitting be continued beyond the ordinary time of the daily adjournment until the completion of the report stage of Bill C-236, or 11 p.m., whichever be the earliest.

Mr. Bell: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, we have no objection provided the "late show" is preserved.

Mr. Reid: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I can give that assurance.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I simply say that there have been discussions and we were prepared to agree to this arrangement without the necessity of the Standing Order. In any case, we agree.

Mr. Bell: It should not be a precedent.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: We, like the other members, would agree to extend tonight's sitting beyond the usual time of adjournment.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There appears to be unanimous consent. Accordingly I will not, thankfully, have to put the motion.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the basic issue between the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour) and myself in this regard is, in the event of the application of an energy allocation program, where the disadvantage should fall. Should it fall upon those who from time to time, having substantial supplies of petroleum, are ordered by the board to allocate that to other people, or should it fall on the general taxpayers of Canada? I do not pretend this is an easy question and, if I might say so, I appreciate the moderation in the use of words by the hon. member for Regina East in posing this particular question.

The really critical point, however, is at the time when one is interfering, as the allocation board will from time to time, with the very substantial contracts to be made by major oil companies with their own affiliates or substantial suppliers, and this really would be the purpose of the legislation. When you step into existing contractual arrangements and say to the major companies in the field, "No, you cannot deliver it to this particular, very substantial corporation. You are to deliver it to charitable institutions, independent retailers or others who will look after the interests of the individuals in Canada," the government, in the first place, should have the right to do so—and that is the essence of this bill—and, secondly, those who are best able to bear this loss should indeed bear it.

The hon. member referred to the question of deprivation of property under clause 26 of the bill. There is reference there, of course, to the existing provisions of the National Energy Board Act in respect of the acquisition of additional right-of-way for pipeline purposes, and these would apply in that context. The real issue involved here is that if one interferes with advantageous contractual relationships of major oil companies, should the general taxpayer in Canada feel incumbent to compensate the major oil companies, or should this be something that these companies, with their very substantial financial resources, should bear?

In respect of deprivation of property, as I had occasion to point out on the point of order, this refers to the actual situation of acquisition of property rights in a specific personal chattel, as opposed to the right of suit which allows an action against a particular party. The decision we have taken as a government, and which I ask the House to support, is that as between the individual taxpayer and the large corporation it is the latter that is in the better position to bear the disadvantage of this situation, and on that basis I would ask the House not to support the motion.

Mr. Lawrence: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): By all means.

Mr. Lawrence: I merely ask this question in an attempt to clarify what the minister just said with reference to clause 26 and the pipeline right-of-way. He indicated that the normal procedure of expropriation safeguards in the National Energy Board Act would apply. At least, that is what I thought he indicated. Is he saying that this Clause would not take precedence or priority, if the government wanted it to take priority, over the expropriation safeguards in the National Energy Board Act? Is he saying these would not apply, that is, the expropriation proceedings?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the specific will apply over the general, and the specific in this regard is clause 26 and the right that the allocation board would have to designate to a pipeline company that in the public interest a particular connection might be desirable. On this basis, the provisions of clause 26 of the bill, joined with those of clause 29, would indicate that the allocation board could issue this particular instruction which would be executed by the National Energy Board under its jurisdiction.

In this respect I would say that for the pipeline companies and the "biggies"—the transportation companies, and so on—there is a special regime in that they have a special regulatory regime. What we are really talking about in this amendment, to pick a few words from it, is the loss or damage to property, or the partial or total divestment of any right having pecuniary value, suffered in Canada by an individual resident. In that sense we are talking about the cause of action that an individual might have, and in that sense clause 26, taken together with clause 29, clauses 27 and 28, provides that this kind of major corporation, already subject to federal regulation, be dealt with under a special regime. We are talking about a basic action by a major oil company which might be taken for the purpose of extending the obligation to pay, and on that basis I would argue that as between the parties involved in this matter, rather than being borne by the general taxpayer it should be borne by the companies.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but perhaps I am not making my point clear to the minister. What I am really asking about is the case of a very troublesome and time-consuming acquisition of an oil pipeline right-of-way. The minister knows, as I know, that this has happened in the past. As a matter of fact, this is the very basis of some of the expropriation procedures and safeguards written into both provincial and federal statutes.

We are by no means trying to delay this bill. Rather, we are trying to accede to the minister's wishes and intent. There is a worry in the minds of some of us that this clause could be used by the government in an attempt to wipe out some of the expropriation safeguards and procedures which now exist. If the minister says that in the event of a national emergency, the government may need to deal otherwise with these safeguards, that is one thing; but I have not heard him say that. I should like to hear him say that, if it is what he really means.

The whole thing comes down to the point that in the event these new procedures can be set up by order in council, at the very least or at the minimum there should be some reference to the judicial system in this country regarding these matters. If the minister wants to disabuse me of my fears, I would ask him to please do so.

● (2200)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, clause 26(5) specifically provides for the situation in which the National Energy Board can exercise its powers, naturally, subject to the other provisions of the National Energy Board Act which provide for appropriation and compensation rights.

[Mr. Lawrence.]

The power to be executed by the National Energy Board in terms of protecting security of supply of individuals is, of course, subject to the provisions of the act in relation to acquisition and compensation for property that may be acquired from individuals.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I learned some time ago that interpretation of the law given by members of parliament whether they are ministers of the Crown, or other members, is not necessarily the interpretation which may later be made either by a court or a tribunal, and therefore to engage in any attempt to do that kind of thing seems to me not very valuable.

What I was struck by is that the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour) could not have written this amendment which he supported. Some of the general statements he has made with regard to the principles of law involved and the philosophy of law involved, one cannot be against or criticize, subject to my philosophical bias that too much of our law is concerned with the defence of property rights and too little with the defence of human rights as against property rights. However, aside from that prejudice which I have always had as a lawyer, I cannot find fault with the general principle. But I suggest to him that if he reads the amendment which he proposed, there simply is no change presented by the amendment in any of the areas with which he dealt.

What does the amendment do? First of all it seeks to define the deprivation of property. It does not define it: it simply says that the term "deprivation of property" includes something else. I am darned if I can see that the "something else" added is any clearer than the phrase "deprivation of property". I would much sooner leave the phrase for any tribunal rather than clutter up the words with a new phrase which has no more meaning than the first one. I do not see what we accomplish except create a great deal of legal confusion. This may help lawyers, but it will not help the people affected. What else does it do? Then it says that the governor in council shall, by order, establish a tribunal. That is not new. It is exactly what the provisions of the bill now say.

Mr. Balfour: There is quite a difference.

Mr. Lewis: No. I may suggest to my friend from Regina East that according to well established practice concerning legal interpretations, when you use the word "may" in respect of something to be done by Her Majesty, which is what "governor in council" means, it is exactly the same as using the word "shall". We use the word "may" in respect of Her Majesty as a courtesy, but the word involves a duty.

From my not very wide experience in the courts I could cite for the hon. member a number of cases dating back to the sixteenth century which make it very clear that there is no difference on that point. The word "may" used in respect of Her Majesty, or the governor in council or any agency of that sort, has exactly the same effect as the word "shall". It is merely a form of wording. So I am not impressed by this change.

What else is changed? Nothing at all. The fact is that the tribunal, in the amendment, is to be set up by order in council in the same way as in the present clause. It says

"determination on a quasi-judicial basis". I suggest to my friend, particularly the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), that that is not very good drafting. I do not know whether it is quasi-judicial or judicial. If you set up a tribunal to determine the property or other rights of people, you can call it a quasi-judicial authority, but so far as I am conerned it is a judicial function it is performing even though it is not a court that is performing that function. The phrase "quasi-judicial basis" surely is of no consequence at all and is merely a use of words. The function is, in fact, a judicial function. That is all that is required.

Then what does the amendment further say? It says exactly the same as the clause now says, that the order in council will provide the time within which the complaints have to be made and the procedure to be followed. It states that the order in council shall deal respecting the determination and payment of compensation, and then it merely adds the words "and the fund from which compensation shall be payable". I imagine that any governor in council with any sense would have to say that. If somebody is to pay compensation, he would have to say where the compensation is to come from. It is not necessary to tell him that today is Thursday: presumably that is known. That adds nothing at all. I suggest that if the intention was to do what the hon. member for Regina East said, then the amendment should have been much more specific in setting out the precise rights to be covered and the precise points to be followed, and so on. I suggest that the amendment merely adds more confusion. The only addition is that there shall be an appeal from any decision of such tribunal to the Federal Court of Appeal.

The hon. member for Regina East says he has some doubt whether that is the case. I do not see how anyone can have doubt. It is not necessary to be a lawyer. Section 28 of the present Federal Court Act reads as follows:

(1) Notwithstanding section 18 or the provisions of any other act, the Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to hear and determine an application to review and set aside a decision or order, other than a decision or order of an administrative nature not required by law to be made on a judicial or quasi-judicial basis, made by or in the course of proceedings before a federal board, commission or other tribunal, upon the ground that the board, commission or tribunal

(a) failed to observe a principle of natural justice or otherwise acted beyond or refused to exercise its jurisdiction;

(b) erred in law in making its decision or order, whether or not the error appears on the face of the record; or

(c) based its decision or order on an erroneous finding of fact that it made in a perverse or capricious manner or without regard for the material before it.

Mr. Speaker, the reason I recall this section in the act is that I was on the parliamentary committee which studied this bill when it was before that committee. I had a concern, as I still have, about the breadth of section 28 which makes it possible for the Court of Appeal of the Federal Court of Canada to hear cases without regard for the decision of fact by the tribunal. The unions are now—the postal unions have been to see me, as I am sure they have been to see others—finding that the decisions of the arbitrator, of the adjudicator, can be and are taken to the Court of Appeal of the Federal Court and that there the Court of Appeal is able to enter into facts as well as law, as well as interpretation and as well as the behaviour of the adjudicator. In other words, it is a complete trial on facts and law so far as section 28 of the Federal Court Act is concerned. So I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it is clear that subclause 3 of the motion of my learned friend is unnecessary. I would not shed any tears if everybody agreed to put that clause in, but it is unnecessary in view of section 28 of the Federal Court Act.

When we come to subclause 4 of the motion, I object to this because in addition to the right of appeal to the Court of Appeal they also want to give the trial division of the Federal Court the right to deal with the same matter. That seems to me to be deliberately creating litigation on litigation, and if you are going to set up a tribunal under this act to deal with compensation for matters arising out of the allocation program and out of the authority given the board under this bill, what possible sense is there in giving exactly the same powers to the trial division of the Federal Court and also giving those powers to the Court of Appeal of the Federal Court? If I have ever seen a suggestion of duplication, surely this is it.

I do not see what my friends are trying to do, except to give the large oil companies and pipeline companies the opportunity to bypass the board set up under this bill, and to go to the trial division of the Federal Court and make the whole process either more expensive or the whole set up of the tribunal unnecessary and useless, because you may be certain that these large corporations will go to court instead of relying on the decisions of the tribunal. Therefore, I strongly object to the provision under subclause 4.

I want to make one or two more brief points as to why we cannot support the motion that is before us. As I have said, I have a great deal of sympathy with the general statement of philosophy which should govern the definition of the rights of people and the opportunity they may have to perfect those rights and to be compensated for any loss. But I am not interested, nor are my colleagues, in making it easier for the large oil and pipeline corporations to squeeze compensation out of the taxpayers of Canada in the case of a national emergency affecting the welfare of the Canadian people. We are just not interested in making it easier for them to squeeze that out of the Canadian taxpayer. We are interested in setting up a tribunal that would deal fairly with people whose rights have been infringed; but it should be a tribunal, as set up under this bill, that has some knowledge of the industry and some appreciation of the purposes of the bill before us and which acts in the interests of the Canadian people, not the interests of the oil and pipeline corporations.

That is why we are suspicious of any attempt to add to the definition of the deprivation of property or to add to the tribunals to which anyone having a complaint may go. We are suspicious—and I am not suggesting for one moment that the hon. member for Peace River, for whom I have always had the greatest respect and whose integrity I recognize, intended it—that the effect of this motion is to add further possibilities of complaint and more tribunals to which these corporations can go, whether or not he intended it. So far as we are concerned, we are not in favour of adding areas of complaint or tribunals to which these corporations can go.

Finally, I want to point out something which I did some days ago in another context with respect to this bill. When I first read it, I was struck by the fact—and I approve of it, I say this quite frankly—that everything under the bill is really done by the government and not by the board. Everything that the board is to do is to be done only by approval of the governor in council, which means, in plain English, approval of the government or by initiation of the government.

Unlike many other agencies, this allocation board is not given independent powers. Its power is under constant control and supervision of the government. Naturally, I would feel a little happier if I thought this government was on its toes a great deal more often than it is, but it is a fact that of course it is the government that will be responsible for the work of this board, and the government will be responsible to parliament and to the people of Canada. There is not a single function that the board is to perform under this bill that is to be performed independently, except for pure administration. All the important functions, whether it is the declaration of an emergency, or the allocation program or changes in it, or anything else, that the board is to do is to be done under the authority and on the approval of the governor in council.

Therefore, I think that on the whole the structure of this bill is good. It is unfortunate that one should ever have to take steps to do away with the normal procedures and safeguards that people in a society have, but these steps are to be taken only in the case of an emergency; and I am sure everyone here agrees that is something that should be done.

May I say, finally, that I heard a number of my friends in the Conservative Party say this is a terrible bill, that in their view there is no emergency and there cannot be one. Therefore, I think that the motion which they have moved to change things in the bill flows from the basic opposition to this kind of bill. I do not agree with that. I do not agree with them that in the present international situation it is prudent, sensible or wise for any member of this parliament to say that he is confident there will not be an emergency a month or two from now, or a year or two from now, with respect to the energy needs of any section of this country or any institution in this country. I think it is most unwise, no matter what one's ideological approach may be, for anyone to say that there will not be an emergency, that he knows it, he has it straight from God, which means in some cases straight from the mouth of the multinational oil corporations.

Anybody who starts from that premise will keep on saying that this is a terrible bill, that we do not need it, that there will not be an emergency and that we will try to find ways and means of frustrating the intentions of the bill a little here and a little there. So far as I and my colleagues are concerned, we do not go for that. We have said for many months, indeed many years, that to have left the future of the people of this nation, with respect to their energy needs, in the hands of multinational corporations, and to have sold out petroleum resources to these corporations, was a disservice to the people of Canada and the future of our country. We are paying for that now.

If, at long last, this government takes steps to give itself the power to deal with an emergency if one should occur, then all of us who hope that such an emergency will not come about should support the idea of being prepared for it should it ever come as a result of action over which we may not have control. I repeat what I said some days ago, that there is some inconsistency in members of this House making statements about the failure of this government and other governments to protect the interests of Quebec and the Atlantic provinces, and then trying to frustrate the purposes of a bill which may be necessary precisely to assist the eastern part of this country which is dependent upon offshore oil.

There you are, Mr. Speaker. I said there are some members who know directly from some source. The hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Bawden), I am sure, knows a great deal about the oil industry.

An hon. Member: Give us your facts.

Mr. Lewis: The facts we are dealing with now show that there is an international situation that threatens the possibility of an emergency facing the people of Canada. If the hon. member for Calgary South, through his association with the heads of the multinational corporations throughout the world, can give us a firm and sacred undertaking that his friends at no time during the next two or three years will create an emergency for the people of Canada, I will not believe him—but at least he would be saying something!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that this bill does not come into effect unless there is a national emergency. It would be imprudent, unwise and irresponsible for this House not to make sure that if such an emergency occurs there is power to deal with it.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I admire the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) and I appreciate his comments about me. In the last part of his speech, however, he outlined the basic difference in our philosophy. I sometimes shudder at the way in which members of his party, the government people and a lot of people in Canada react the minute there is the slightest whiff of an emergency and long before there is any real appearance of an emergency. The hon. member should cast his mind back to October, 1970, and the things that he said then which are equally applicable today. But they rush forward and say, "Let us give this government more power": they heap power on their shoulders and give them the authority to do everything.

When I see the government ask for that power, Mr. Speaker, I get worried. When I hear the hon. member for York South say, "Let them have that power, and even more power", I am worried. When I hear the government and the hon. member for York South, joined by the multinational oil companies say, "Give the government that power", I get very worried. When I think of the hon. member for York South in concert with the multinational oil companies, I wonder why the multinational oil companies say they want this bill—

Mr. Lewis: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I cannot seriously say that the rules would require my friend to withdraw what he said, but I suggest there really is a limit to the hyperbole that ought to be used with respect to my association with the multinational organizations.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the hon. member for York South was not at the committee hearings when the spokesmen for the multinational oil corporations was saying, "This is a beautiful bill". As I said earlier, this bill had its genesis in the technical advisory committee. I have my suspicion that the multinational oil companies, through their representatives there, had a lot to say about the kind of bill they wanted. This gives them the power to do what they have been doing—to allocate supplies offshore and domestically within Canada, and to do it under the cloak of government protection. My friend from York South is quite happy about that and in effect is saying, "Go forth, thou good and faithful multinational oil companies, and operate as much as you want under these conditions under the sanction of Bill C-236".

An hon. Member: Right on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: That is right: just so we could find out what we expected.

An hon. Member: Macdonald is in bed with the oil companies, and so was Lewis.

An hon. Member: What was that award that Bill Twaits got?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) seeks the floor for the purpose of asking a question. This can be done only with the consent of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin).

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I think he should wait until I have finished. By then he will have had time to reflect, because his question may be no better than his speech the other day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Having dealt with this small question of the philosophical difference between myself and the hon. member for York South, and having driven him back to the refuge of his friends in the multinational oil companies, I should like to deal with this particular amendment.

I want to say to the hon. member for York South that we got the amendment in its present form to some extent from his colleagues in committee. We brought this up in committee because we felt, in our examination of the measure and the consequences that would flow from it, that a large number of individuals and organizations such as co-operative refineries and co-operative distributors of petroleum and other products, could suffer substantial loss or damage. So we attempted to introduce an amendment at committee stage. I admit that the amendment was in broad terms and would have offered a measure of assistance to people we did not wish to see benefit from it. Some questions were asked by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) and the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) which persuaded me that we should try to narrow the scope of our amendment. This is what we have attempted to do.

Before we get into that, Mr. Speaker, let me give some of the reasons which persuaded me to proceed with this amendment. I did so because of what was said by the legal adviser to the minister who appeared before the committee. When he was pressed for his definition of "property", he gave what I considered to be a narrow and limited interpretation. He said, "'Property'" means only real or tangible property—real property or personal property which is tangible".

Mr. Lewis: And he was wrong.

Mr. Baldwin: He was wrong. The hon. member for York South wonders why we did not give a specific definition. There are a number of reasons. We used the word "include", and by using that and the words which follow it we have made it quite plain that we were not intending to exclude other definitions, but it does include certain specific things. Let me pause and say this. My friend from Regina East (Mr. Balfour) read into the record some comments by the distinguished chairman, formerly a chief justice of Prince Edward Island and chief commissioner of the War Claims Commission, and also some of the comments of the late Mr. Justice Ilsley, who formed a committee to deal with this question. I say that because the War Claims Commission and the report which was dealt with and brought in by the late Mr. Justice Ilsley flowed out of the problems of the last World War and some of the actions taken by the government at that time. One can think of the resettlement of the Japanese people and a great many other actions taken during the Second World War which resulted from the War Prices and Trade Commission regulations. Because of that, and for other reasons, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), when he was prime minister, brought in the Bill of Rights.

● (2230)

The Bill of Rights resulted largely from the experience of the right hon. member for Prince Albert involving many injustices sustained as a result of the actions arbitrary of government administrative tribunals in the Second World War. So the Bill of Rights was introduced. It contains a provision that nobody shall suffer from deprivation of property without due process of law.

The government and the minister saw, no doubt, the difficulties that would arise in connection with the setting up of the allocation board, and seeing what damages might result from its actions they said, in so many words, "We must get rid of the Bill of Rights." The government had one of two choices. It could say specifically that the Bill of Rights should not apply to this bill. That course would have brought on it well deserved censure. Or it could put in a clause like clause 22 which, despite what the hon. member for York South has said, I suggest is less than worthless. Clause 22 provides:

> The governor in council may make regulations providing for the establishment and conduct of a tribunal for the hearing and determination of complaints of deprivation or property occasioned by any regulation under this act, prescribing the time within which complaints may be made—

And so on. There is nothing to stop the governor in council saying that there shall be no appeal from this tribunal. That, clearly, is the effect of clause 22. As my colleagues saw it, if the government were to take unto itself powers which could result in people suffering damages or injury, some adequate means must be found of ensuring that those people had the right to seek some form of compensation. From my many years before the courts I know there can never be full compensation to people who have suffered damage. It is like insurance: to one who has suffered loss, insurance provides only part compensation, never total.

Certainly it is possible to improve upon this meaningless nonentity of a board that the government would set up under clause 22. So first we wanted to say what should be its jurisdiction with regard to property. Our definition of "property" is not perfect, and if my friends to my left think they can improve it they are perfectly welcome to try. However, if they say, because there may be some imperfection in our amendment, they will refuse to pass it or to deal with it and that we should retain clause 22 as it is, they are being to my mind irresponsible.

The amendment does not cover corporations. We made clear in the definition who shall qualify for assistance. It shall apply to individuals as defined under the Income Tax Act. It does not cover commercial corporations. It does not apply to damages suffered outside Canada by those who may be deprived of the right under contract to receive petroleum outside Canada. I received suggestions with regard to that part in committee from members of my party and the NDP. Further, there is not an exclusive definition. It says that "property" shall include such and such, which means that it is possible to include many kinds of damages involving property.

For instance, one could think of the individual service station proprietor who is cut off completely from his supplies of petroleum or petroleum products and must close down. He may be forced out of business and have to give up the business which he has built up over many years. Those are the kinds of people, and there are thousands and thousands of them, who will be covered by our amendment. But who would not be covered and who would sustain damages if an emergency is proclaimed and clause 22 in its present form comes into effect? As to the large oil companies, they are out under this amendment. The amendment provides simply that if there are other ways and means by which compensation or satisfaction can be provided, there is not to be coverage under the amendment. For example, the pipeline company which is asked to divert its product from one source to another on an uneconomic basis is entitled to go to the National Energy Board, as the minister indicated the other day. The National Energy Board has jurisdiction with regard to tolls and has the right to compensate. It may not do so, but it has that right.

We have made it absolutely plain in the amendment that corporations like pipeline companies are not covered because they have other remedies under other legislation. We are thinking of thousands of small people, the co-operatives, the collective bargaining units and unions which may be covered under collective bargaining agreements. They have entered into a contractual arrangement with a refinery which is cut off completely and must shut down. We are thinking of them. If the hon. member for York South and his supporters are prepared to deprive these people of the right to seek compensation, that is a responsibility his group must bear.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

My penultimate comment concerns the difference between the words "shall" and "may". I think the Interpretation Act makes it clear that "may" is permissive and "shall" is mandatory. The word "may" says that the governor in council may do something but is not compelled to carry it out, whereas if "shall" is used, what is prescribed must be carried out. For that reason we have substituted the word "shall" where it is appropriate.

Speaking on the question of appeal, clause 22 provides for no right of appeal for the simple reason that there is nothing to stop this tribunal or the governor in council from passing a regulation saying that there shall be no appeal. That falls squarely within the rights given under clause 22 as at present. Let me read clause 22 again. It provides:

The governor in council may make regulations providing for the establishment and conduct of a tribunal for the hearing and determination of complaints of deprivation of property occasioned by any regulation under this act, prescribing the time within which complaints may be made and the procedure to be followed thereon—

It is perfectly within the competence of the governor in council to pass a regulation saying there shall be no appeal. We are not prepared to accept that. It is possible that this kind of tribunal may be nothing but a kangaroo court, without any real instructions, authorization or funds to handle the disposition of claims against such individuals, as I have mentioned. I want to make it abundantly clear that if the amendment were accepted, there would be a direction by parliament to the government to establish means of appeal. That is the reason for the amendment. If the government and hon. friends to my left are prepared to vote down any attempt for providing a means whereby individual residents of Canada who may have suffered damages may seek relief, that must be their responsibility; it must rest on their shoulders, not on ours.

● (2240)

Mr. Peter Reilly (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I am at a loss to understand why the government want to oppose this amendment, unless it is because of their customary arrogance and reluctance to admit that any creation of theirs can be less than perfect. Even the most pejorative member of the New Democratic Party could not call me a western oil man. I had to take out a first mortgage to fill my gas tank. I am not a supporter of multinational corporations. Neither do I believe that because a corporation gets into trouble it should be abandoned simply because it is a corporation. Therefore, I am at a loss to understand why the government does not want this amendment which provides for appeals from decisions of a quasi-judicial tribunal.

I am even more at a loss to understand why the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) should be opposed to this kind of appeal procedure. He is an experienced trial lawyer. More than that, for most of his working life he has negotiated union and labour contracts. He knows the difference between "may" and "shall". He knows it as well as I do. That sophomoric, phony attempt of his to say that "may" is the same as "shall" leaves me breathless. I can scarcely believe the evidence of my senses when I hear a man who is so expert try to flog that suggestion past the members of this House.

I could refer to the excellent grammarian across the way who masquerades under the title of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald). He knows the difference between "may" and "shall". I have heard him expound on the difference many times, both across the bargaining table and at arbitration hearings before conciliation boards. He never backed down from the fact that "may" is permissive and "shall" is mandatory. He knows that. He should not now come before this House and tell us that is not the case.

Mr. Baldwin: He says "shall" to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau); that we know.

Mr. Reilly: I am even more at a loss to understand why the hon. member for York South and his followers would object to all of the legal protection which this parliament can write into a bill like this. They know full well the totalitarian and repressive measures of which this government is capable. Surely they can remember what happened in October, 1970.

An hon. Member: Here we go again.

Mr. Reilly: You bet here we go again. You people will not forget that as long as I have breath in me. They apprehended an emergency then. They brought in their legislation. They tossed hundreds of people in jail. It all turned out to be hot air.

I cannot tell whether there is in fact an oil emergency right now. Neither can the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources tell us that. This government has been in office for ten years. All of a sudden within the past few months there is an emergency. From where did the emergency spring? All of a sudden we are running out of oil. On what date was that discovered? Did someone come in out of the west and say "Pssst; we are running out of oil"? If there had been any planning, the government would have known years ago that we were running out of oil. However, all of a sudden we have an emergency.

We now have before us a bill which gives to the government of Canada and, more specifically, to non-governmental bodies, dictatorial powers. What my colleague from Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) seeks to do is provide an appeal procedure from the decisions of the tribunal. What do we get but impassioned oratory from the so-called champions of liberty, simply because there is an outside possibility that one of the best beneficiaries of this appeal procedure might be a corporation? Are corporations not entitled to equal treatment before the law? I do not have any shares in anything, but I still believe that a corporation is entitled to equal treatment before the law.

It is all very well for NDP members to sneer at members of my party, call them mouthpieces of multinational corporations, talk about getting the news from the wellhead, and all that guff. If I wanted to indulge in that kind of petty billingsgate, I could call each one of them a mouthpiece for the American dominated multinational unions. But I would not do that because I do not consider it parliamentary language.

I say to the members of the NDP and the government that there is no harm in this amendment. It does not change anything in this bill. The only thing it does is legislate in favour of people who might conceivably suffer by the application of this potentially dictatorial act. Why should anyone object to it? I am not going to wait until I hear an explanation of that which satisfies me; I very seriously doubt it will be forthcoming from either the opposite side of the House or the nethermost corner occupied by the so-called champions of the people.

Mr. Balfour: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister would respond to a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member is seeking the floor for the purpose of asking a question. The minister does not have the floor to answer a question. As the hon. member has already spoken, he cannot seek the floor unless it is to ask a question of the member who has the floor. I must remind him we are not going through the procedure of committee of the whole, where it is easier to ask questions. When we proceed with the Speaker in the chair, this kind of procedure cannot be followed.

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, you will be delighted to know I will not be very long. I first wish to make a few references to the comments made earlier by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). It is my belief that the hon. member for York South and some of his colleagues have almost a pyschopathic thing about multinational corporations; they seem to have it on the brain.

Mr. Lewis: If I am going to be psychopathic, that is where I want it to be.

Mr. Lawrence: The hon. member for York South is now indicating his concurrence in what I am saying in respect of his attitude. I think this properly reflects his ideas. Obviously, I am not in any way misinterpreting his words or the intent, view and attitude of all his colleagues in this debate. I am very hesitant to say that the hon. member may be right, because that could be misinterpreted to mean it is mandatory and not permissive.

● (2250)

I must admit I share some of the hon. member's misgivings about multinational corporations. I share some of his suspicions and, along with the hon. member, I regard with anxiety the growing amassment of power by these corporations. And there are many of us on this side of the House who share the hon. member's suspicions. I would point out, however, that in the testimony given before the standing committee, the representatives of these large corporations indicated that they agreed with the intent of the bill before us; that not only did they want the bill but that some of them had exerted pressure on the government to bring such a measure forward. It is obvious why they would. It will, in many ways, continue the trend toward greater power in the resource field being given to these very corporations.

In the last four or five decades we have seen the extent to which the power and control exercised by these corporations has increased. And what has been the vehicle they have been using? To a large degree, their expansion has been possible as a result of the compliance and subservience not only of the federal government but also of the tribunals set up under the federal government. I do not care whether one considers the National Energy Board, the Transport Commission or just about any of the other tribunals and agencies of the government: for one reason or another, perhaps without intent, they have assisted in the process by which large foreign corporations are amassing greater power and control. Not only do I share the hon. member's suspicions with respect to the intent of the corporations, but I am suspicious of federal tribunals, especially when they are made up of people about whom we know nothing. Here we face the prospect of an unformed tribunal using known procedures, a tribunal which under the bill before us has been given almost unlimited power.

The purpose of the amendment before the House is, first, to restrict the power of the tribunal and, second, to furnish an appeal procedure to the court system so that in the event of a hasty or unjust decision a remedy will be available to the little man as well as to the corporations or anyone else. I am quite willing to assent to the government's wishes, to go along with what it has suggested and turn my back on the amendment put forward by my own colleague, if I can get two assurances from the minister. First, I wonder if the minister can assure us that the tribunal would never be used to abrogate or circumvent the procedures established in respect of public hearings which now exist under the National Energy Board Act with regard to pipeline expropriations.

The reason I am talking about pipeline expropriation is simply this: I represent in this House an Ontario constituency across which this pipeline must pass if it is to go from Sarnia to Montreal, and I would be failing in my duty if I did not call attention to the fact that the people of my riding are upset about expropriations not only by this government but by other levels of government.

An hon. Member: What expropriations? Tell us about them.

Mr. Lawrence: The minister seemed to give some kind of assurance, but he left it in very woolly terms. Can he assure us that this tribunal will never be used to circumvent or abrogate the safeguards I have mentioned? He can give us a simple assurance, yes or no.

My second point is this. The hon. member for York South says the question of appeal to the courts is already covered by other legislation; that this tribunal would be bound by that legislation and that appeal would be possible to the Federal Court. I think the hon. member for York South is disregarding a clause in this bill under which, merely by regulation, the safeguards afforded by federal legislation or, for that matter, by provincial legislation could be removed.

My hon. friends and I are deeply concerned about this aspect. This is an all-powerful piece of legislation which could be used to override many of the safeguards contained in other legislation. If the minister can assure me that in the event of an appeal arising from action taken by the tribunal, the federal government will not contest such an appeal solely on the ground that there is lack of jurisdiction, and will do nothing to abrogate the right to go to the federal Court of Appeal with respect to a decision of the tribunal, I will accept such an assurance and refrain from supporting my hon. friend's amendment. In the absence of such assurances, I believe the House has a duty to vote in favour of the amendment put forward tonight to this clause.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

● (2300)

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: I gather hon. members would expect the Chair to defer this division until tomorrow or to some other time to be agreed upon following discussions between members of the parties.

It being eleven o'clock, pursuant to the agreement reached earlier this evening, a motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been moved and seconded.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AIR TRANSPORT—PROPOSED PASSENGER HEAD TAX—SUGGESTED PERCENTAGE CHARGE ON SHORT FLIGHTS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I earnestly hope that my voice will last through the short time I have at my disposal. On January 3 and 4, the first two days following our return from the Christmas recess, I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) some questions relating to the head tax that he proposed to levy against passengers using commercial airlines. I was not satisfied with the replies he gave me on that occasion, hence my request that I take this matter up at ten o'clock.

It has been my contention all along that the single levy would impose a burden inequitably on air travellers using short routes. This is part of the elementary mathematics to which I referred in my question of January 4. If a traveller has to pay $3.80 on a trip where the fare amounts to only $13, $14 or $15 it is obviously more onerous than a tax of $3.80 on a trip where the passenger pays a fare of $150 or $200.

This question has been raised a number of times, not only by me but also by my colleagues on this side of the House over the past few months. We have kept at this question of the head tax because of the unfair implementation of the proposal and the burden that it would thrust upon passengers on short routes. Consequently, I was pleased to learn that our representation had found a favourable hearing and the proposed head tax was to be deferred.

This gives us, therefore, a breathing space so that we can think matters out more completely and come up with something more equitable. When I rose last week to raise this question I suggested there was a formula that could be devised to combine the percentage approach with the single levy approach. The minister said he found it very difficult to combine these, and I inferred that it was a matter of simple mathematics. Unfortunately, I did not have the opportunity through a supplementary to explain my elementary mathematics.

None the less, following an offer made by the minister I handed to him a hastily scribbled note following the question period on that day indicating how such a combination could be worked out. I followed this up with a letter dated the following Monday, January 7, the text of which I should now like to read into the record:

Dear Mr. Minister:

I wish to follow up the question I raised with you in the House on Friday, January 4th relating to the Head Tax on the passengers using Canada's air service because in your reply of the previous day you had indicated that no method had been found to combine a flat levy with a percentage charge. I suggested to you on Friday that the problem of combining these two was not all that complicated. My reasons for doing so are set out below:

A levy of $2.80 per passenger trip on short hauls where the fare can be as low as $13.00 (i.e., Vancouver-Victoria) imposes a very heavy burden on travellers amounting to almost 22 per cent of the fare. The same levy assessed against a traveller on the Vancouver-Halifax run, on the other hand, would be just a little more than 2 per cent. The inequity of these two levies is apparent to all.

What I suggest here, and what I suggested to you in the hand written note I gave you on Friday, is that if this tax has to be collected at all, a percentage levy be imposed on fares up to the point where your $2.80 level is attained, and that thereafter the $2.80 be collected. In my hand written note I suggested a 5 per cent levy on fares up to $56.00; because of the heavy density traffic situation on some of these short runs you might think it would be more appropriate to raise that to 10 per cent on fares up to $28.00. Or perhaps a 7 per cent tax up to $40.00.

I do believe that using this system the inequity of the levies would be more evenly distributed.

This is one method, and I suggest it involves elementary mathematics. It might be described as a fluctuating base with a fixed top. There is another method, that of a fixed base with a fluctuating top with, let us say, a charge of $1 or $1.50 on short hops of 30, 35 or 40 miles and a 5 per cent levy on long-distance hauls.

I raised this question in the first place, and have continued to raise it, on behalf of those people who travel on short hauls such as the one between Vancouver and Victoria. There are others which can be discovered by simply leafing through any airline schedule such as the one from Ottawa to Toronto and the one from Toronto to Montreal. A $2.80 levy would put a heavy burden on those travelling on these short hauls. I think there are other means of doing this, and I would like to feel that the ministry is able to come up with a more satisfactory answer.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, the recently announced airport fee is not a passenger tax levied directly on the passenger but a fee which will be levied on the air carriers and paid by them directly. As stated by the minister, one of the principles accepted by the ministry in introducing the airport fee is that users of facilities and services provided by the government should assist more directly in meeting the costs incurred. This relieves the large number of general taxpayers of having to assist in financing facilities which they do not utilize.

The airport fee is designed to meet costs incurred in providing airport facilities and services, and the distance travelled is not considered a factor. It is considered that the recovery of this fee by the airlines from the individual passenger will be carried out in such a manner that the short distance passenger will not be unduly discriminated against.

The original proposal for an ad valorem 5 per cent tax on the price of the ticket was not acceptable to many on the grounds that the long-haul passenger was discriminated against because no additional facilities at airports were utilized, whereas the new airport fee is levied on air carriers based on usage by the passenger irrespective of the distance to be travelled. The effect on short-haul air carriers cannot yet be accurately assessed, but in the unlikely event they are being hurt financially by the application of the new airport fee, other means of financial assistance should be provided.

As to the question of applying an ad valorem tax on short hauls along with a flat fee on lang hauls, this would create really impossible legal and administrative difficulties. To apply the ad valorem tax in this way would require a rewriting of the existing legislation as contained in Bill C-155 as approved by parliament in 1969. Such revisions would necessitate new legislation to be prepared and submitted to parliament. Charges under the aeronautics Act are made on a unit basis. The reason for this is that services and/or facilities are not provided at varying levels. Under the Aeronautics Act, an ad valorem basis of charges would be considered discriminatory as services and facilities are not provided relative to the value of the ticket.

YOUTH—ALLEGED ABANDONMENT OF PROGRAMS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I am here tonight appearing on what is referred to as the "late show" because of the inadequacy of the responses to my questions put to the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) on December 14, 1973. Perhaps it would be informative if I reminded members of the questions I asked on that date. I said, first of all:

I should like to ask whether the minister intends to make an early statement outlining the reasons behind the abandonment by his department of youth programs.

The minister replied:

Mr. Speaker, there has been no abandonment by my department of youth programs, and I think the hon. member knows that. I think what he really wants to know is when an announcement will be made about the student summer employment program.

Then he went on to say a few things about which I did not ask him. I retorted:

In view of the fact that after two years there has been no youth report and the Opportunities for Youth Program is about to be transferred to the Department of Manpower and Immigration and therefore there is no youth policy or program, will the minister please indicate whether the problems in this regard have to do with in-fighting in his department, incompetence on the part of the minister or both?

Of course, the question was ruled out of order by the Speaker and rightly so. I had intended to debate this matter on December 20 and was informed that I could do so during the adjournment debate that evening. But at about 5.30 that day I had a rush call from the minister's office with a request to postpone any debate, on the ground that since I had implied that the Secretary of State might be incompetent, the minister asserted that he should have the right to debate the charge personally and, further, that since the minister was being married that day he could hardly be expected to be in the House to debate the question with me between 10 and 10.30 that evening. Naturally, Mr. Speaker, being a reasonable, understanding and even humane man I could easily appreciate that the minister should be given an opportunity to rebut personally any charge of incompetence, and therefore I readily agreed to the postponement until tonight. Besides, no one would want to be accused of incompetence, especially on his wedding night. That charge could be made, however, but it would be most indelicate emanating from one who is a disinterested bystander in the nuptials or, at the very most, whose interest exists at arm's length.

The motive behind my question is relatively simple. I have been concerned for some time about what has been going on or, more accurately, what is not going on within the Department of the Secretary of State. We have, of course, all heard the rumour that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) advised a lower profile for the Department of the Secretary of State on the ground that some of its programs were controversial and were making the natives restless, which reflected unfavourably on the electoral acceptance of the government. But a lower profile is one thing; retrenchment or outright oblivion is another. I think it is eminently fair for me to say that since the present minister took over the department, not one single major new initiative has been undertaken. On the contrary, many have been cut back.

I should like to give a few examples. The Opportunities for Youth Program has been scuttled and shuffled off to Manpower. The assistant deputy minister has been consigned to Museums. He did not realize he was that old. There has been no announcement of a new assistant deputy minister: I suppose it might be one of the gold-dust twins of the department, either Mr. McCabe or Mr. Ostry. By the way, when discussing these two gentlemen I never knew for sure which was the organ-grinder and which one was the monkey; but Mr. Ostry has gone and we have had no announcement of a new ADM for that department.

The evaluation of the summer youth employment program has never been completed, in spite of the fact that the Secretary of State took it over, which is probably not much worse than the previous year's Treasury Board evaluation which was buried and has never seen the light of day.

Fourth, there is no word about the hostel program from that department. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis), instead of the Secretary of State, seems to be reporting for the CBC. Fifth, half the travelling exchange budget is going to a private agency called World Canada Youth which is about to be abandoned, I understand, by the Department of the Secretary of State after having been carried for two years. Why was it accepted in the first place, and when will the minister table the report on the World Canada Youth project the publication of which, by the way, I understand is now 2½ months late? Finally, where is the much-touted national youth policy which, I would suggest, should have been the natural and logical outgrowth of the million-dollar David Hunter study of Canada's youth problem some three years ago?

I could go on and on listing the failures of this department as to film policy, museum policy and human rights or even educational support. I do not have the time for that. But the inescapable fact is that there has been either a major policy shift within the Department of the Secretary of State or a non-policy of drift and retrenchment. In either case, what the House needs from the Secretary of State is a frank and open, to the point statement about where he is going. I for one—and I am sure other hon. members will agree with me—find his evasiveness intolerable and unacceptable. When I ask him a question, as I did in my original question of December 7, I do not want to be corrected in superior tones regarding a question that I did not really ask; I want an answer. I insist that it is time a statement came from that department.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has, of course, ranged far afield from his original motion under Standing Order 43 and his original oral question. I would like to point out to the hon. member that youth programming by the Department of the Secretary of State and by the government has certainly not been abandoned.

The hon. member seems to view youth as a special class of citizens, a class which has interests which concern only one department. I should like to reaffirm that the government believes that young people are an integral part of society and that their concerns are much the same as those of other age groups in Canada. For this very reason we have initiated programs such as OFY, LIP and New Horizons which in essence open the federal treasury to groups of individuals who wish to devote time and effort to their communities. Opportunities for Youth was one of a number of employment and activities programs undertaken by the government to cope with a situation with which the private sector of the economy was unable to deal, namely, the vast number of students who join the labour force during the summer months.

I might point out that the initiatives undertaken by the government were as many and as varied as the desires of Canadians. Last year, besides Opportunities for Youth there were no less than 12 other employment and activities programs. I fail to see any basis in reality for the hon. member's contention that we have not and are not responding to the needs of youth and those of society as a whole.

The Department of the Secretary of State has programs dealing with second language training, hostel services and group travel. The Public Service Commission of Canada provides career-oriented summer jobs in all departments of the government. The Department of Manpower and Immigration has provided jobs and training for youth in student manpower offices and in Canada Manpower centres. The Department of National Health and Welfare administered three programs, one of which provided scholarships for Canada's young athletes. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce provided young people with an opportunity to work in industrial research projects. The Department of National Defence provided youth with a chance to gain experience in the militia, cadet and civilian training areas.

● (2320)

Mr. Speaker, I could list more initiatives by this government; however, I see my time is drawing to a close. I would simply like to point out that this Liberal government has provided programs for its citizens which are second to none in the world. No other government and no other party has shown the initiative, the creativity and the concern for human needs that this government has. The fact that many government departments are involved in the planning and administration of summer employment and activities programs merely shows that no one department can claim youth as its special clients.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) when he said:

> Youth is not a homogeneous group and never has been. Young people are as different from one another in their interests, their ambitions, and their abilities, as are the members of any age group. Neither is youth a distinct class concerned with its own problems and separated from the rest of society. Young people in this country wish to seek solutions to the problems that affect their communities generally, and not the members of their age group alone. This growing awareness by youth that their ties with all Canadians are much stronger than any differences, has an important lesson for us all.

We in the Liberal government feel that all government departments should be involved in servicing the needs of all its citizens. No other government in any country can match our record in responding to the needs and desires of its citizens of all ages.

SOCIAL SECURITY—ALLEGED FAILURE TO INCLUDE OVERSEAS SERVICE WITH ARMED FORCES IN QUALIFYING FOR OLD AGE PENSION

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, on January 7 I received a copy of a letter which one of my constituents received from the regional director of old age security in Victoria. I read from it as follows:

> For our purposes we cannot consider you as physically present in Canada when we have confirmed that you were overseas with the Canadian armed forces from June 8, 1940, to March, 1946, and in addition left Canada again in November, 1946, the old age security act does not permit us to consider overseas service as physical presence in Canada for old age security pension purposes.

When I read that I said to myself, "What an outrage". I immediately sent a copy to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) informing him I intended to ask a question regarding this from the floor of the House the next day. My question was:

> Can the minister confirm to the House that it is the government's attitude at this time that overseas service with the Canadian armed forces cannot be considered as physical presence in Canada for old age security pension purposes, and therefore those who served Canada overseas are placed at a disadvantage compared with those who did not serve overseas?

The answer given by the minister was:

> It is not a matter of a government attitude, but of legislation voted by this parliament many years ago, including Old Age Security act, and the provisions of this act apply not only to the armed forces but to all persons who leave Canada for any reason whatsoever, whether they be religious organization members, civil servants or private business employees, to name a few.

After cries of "Shame" in the House, the minister went on to say:

> Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that several hon. members are crying "shame" about their own legislative record since this act was voted by parliament.
> However, Mr. Speaker, regulation No. 15 of the Old Age Security Act provides that an absence from Canada by members of the armed forces in relation with their work will not be considered as an interruption from residence here if they return to Canada after having completed their duties abroad.
>
> As for the other problem, I am studying this matter and I hope to have an answer on this subject.

I asked this further question:

> In view of the minister's answer, and having regard to a case currently before his department pertaining to this matter, will he undertake to look into the situation and report back to the House as soon as possible?

The answer the minister gave was:

> That is exactly what I said a few minutes ago. This is a matter which I previously considered within the forthcoming review of the Old Age Security Act. However, in view of the opposition we are encountering with respect to the passing of a number of amendments to the Canada Pension Plan, by way of systematic obstruction on the part of some hon. members of the opposition, I wonder at what speed—

That was the end of the minister's answer. Who are the veterans of Canada to believe—the minister's officials or his half-answers given in parliament? Does every veteran of this country have to come to his member of parliament to get the justice he deserves? The minister said in part of his answer that regulation No. 15 of the Old Age Security Act provides for an absence from Canada by members of the armed forces, in relation with their work, and this will not be considered as an interruption from here if they return to Canada after having completed their duties abroad. This man has complied, yet he is denied. What an outrage that veterans are being denied their overseas service! I am willing to have every veteran write me, and in their interests I certainly will take up their cause in the House.

The minister goes on to explain in his answer the progress of other pension legislation such as the Canada Pension Plan. It is the minister's perfect right to play party politics with the veterans of this country, but I cannot justify my representative role in this House by engaging with the minister in partisan bickering while any of my constituents, and possibly thousands of other veterans, are being denied the pensions they deserve.

On behalf of my constituents I implore the minister to do two things. On behalf of every member of this House I implore the minister to do two things. On behalf of every veteran of this country I demand that the minister do two things. First, rescind the decision of his Victoria office denying my constituent the pension he deserves; and, second, issue immediately a directive to every one of his regional offices clearly spelling out the rights of the veterans.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I assure the hon. member, first, that it was not lack of sympathy for the case of his constituent that brought forward the answer that was given the other day. If I had any discretion, obviously I would choose to do exactly what the hon. member has suggested. Unfortunately, I am required to act within the limits of the law, and I am sure the hon. member would not want me to act in an arbitrary way or, even worse, in an illegal way.

The case that has been brought to my attention, and I thank the hon. member for it, is obviously an unfortunate one. However, it results in particular from an amendment that was made to the Old Age Security Act in November, 1957, by the government of the day. I must say that the amendment was an improvement on the previous situation with regard to the length of time required before eligibility was established to receive the old age pension.

Although the government of the day passed that particular amendment, and although it was possible, on behalf of the government of Canada, to consider absence from Canada with regard to residents, or with regard to qualification for residence purposes, there was another qualification. The amendment could not be considered as applying to the other possible qualification which is based exclusively on physical presence in Canada.

I am advised by the legal officers of the government at present that we could only consider physical absence from Canada, even in the case of the armed forces, as amounting to physical presence in Canada if there were an amendment to the Old Age Security Act. Despite all my willingness and desire to help in this particular case, I am afraid I have not been given power by parliament to remedy the situation. However, let me assure the hon. member that I am indeed looking at this particular matter and I have asked for even the legal opinion to be reviewed. If this can be done without any amendment to the act, I would certainly try to do it if the appropriate regulations could be amended. However, I am afraid that the advice I will get is that the legal opinion which was given to the government must be maintained and I will have to come before parliament with an amendment to the legislation in order to provide for cases such as this one.

I also want to assure the hon. member that there are not thousands of cases like the one he mentioned. In this particular case, as he knows, the man has been absent from Canada for very extended periods over his life. There are few cases which would fall under that particular qualification.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 11.31 p.m.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD

TRIBUTE TO FIRST PRIME MINISTER OF CANADA

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege to salute this special day, January 11, which, although not a national holiday despite the eloquent representations of my colleague, the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), deserves very special recognition from members on all sides of this House and, indeed, all Canadians.

January 11 is the birthday of our first Prime Minister, Sir John A. Macdonald—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): —the man who gave Canada its first national policy, the man whose vision encompassed a country extending from sea to sea. We do well to remember the extravagantly generous, even profligate, expenditure of his time and talents as a parliamentarian and as a great nationalist in order to see his dream fulfilled.

One of the fascinating things about this day, Mr. Speaker, is that the enduring powers of persuasion of Sir John A. Macdonald are still so great in influencing others to follow the art of politics. It is no mere coincidence, Sir, that in this present House six members share January 11 with Sir John A. as their birth dates: the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell), the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), the hon. member for Lafontaine (Mr. Lachance), the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan), the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) and the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon). I am sure we all join in wishing them well on this special day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PASSAGE OF NATIONAL PARKS BILL BEFORE RECESS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The urgency arose yesterday with the indication that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development may not proceed this session with Bill S-4, which has been reported out of committee and which would establish eight new national parks. If the House gives unanimous consent to this motion, we would agree that there should be no debate on the motion or the bill. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett):

That this House give unanimous consent to proceeding today with all remaining stages of Bill S-4, immediately upon the final disposition of Bill C-236.

Mr. Speaker: Under the terms of Standing Order 43 the hon. member's motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

PROPOSED CLOSING OF HAWKER SIDDELEY FORGING OPERATIONS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I also rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the Hawker Siddeley plant at Trenton, Nova Scotia, intends to close its heavy forging and machining facilities, the largest of their kind in Canada, and the fact that this could do serious harm to the economy of the Maritimes, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That this House instruct the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, to force Hawker Siddeley to keep the forging and machining facilities in operation.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

JOB OPPORTUNITIES FOR NATIVE PEOPLE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 on a matter of pressing and urgent necessity in recognition of the situation whereby native people are often at a disadvantage with respect to employment opportunities. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That the Prime Minister discuss with all his ministers having jurisdiction over departments and Crown corporations like Canadian National Railways, Air Canada, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the Canadian Wheat Board, etc., the possibility of giving increasing emphasis to native people for employment opportunities and on the job training programs.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The motion cannot be put.

TRANSFER OF COMPUTER OPERATIONS TO PRIVATE FIRMS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the Department of Supply and Services has closed its computer offices, giving $4 million annual business to Computel Systems Limited and Systems Dimensions Limited, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Nesdoly):

That all studies related to the decision to move the computer services to the private sector, be sent to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications and that this committee be instructed to report to the House of Commons on all matters related to the use of such information by the two companies involved.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

TELEVISION COVERAGE OF 1976 OLYMPIC GAMES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity having to do with further recent statements that the contract for television coverage of the 1976 Summer Olympics was not put out to tender and that apparently part of the financing of this coverage involves an alleged gain by the Quebec Liberal Party. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey):

That all further federal co-operation with COJO be suspended until a public inquiry is held into the letting of a TV contract to the ABC network and allegations of political gains and exclusion of other legitimate bidders are investigated.

HEALTH

ADMINISTRATION OF ST. ANNE'S HOSPITAL, FORT SMITH—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of continuing problems concerning the administration of St. Anne's Hospital at Fort Smith in the Northwest Territories and in view of dissatisfaction with the curious manner in which the Commissioner of the Northwest Territories is handling the current investigation, matters which have been raised continuously by the local newspaper, The Pilot, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett):

That the minister responsible for the administration of health services in the Northwest Territories order an immediate and thorough inquiry aimed at making the facts of the case available to the public and at solving the problems which have led to a lack of confidence in the health services available at Fort Smith.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is proposed under Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent concern to all Canadians. In view of the fact that though an oil pipeline from Sarnia to Montreal could be completed by an earlier date than a pipeline following an all-Canadian route, but would be able to supply only one-quarter of the needs of eastern Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters):

That this House recommend that if the Sarnia pipeline extension is built, the government also undertake to build an all-Canadian route so that self-sufficiency and security of oil supply may be assured.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO REVERT TO MOTIONS LATER THIS DAY TO MOVE ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I had in mind seeking consent at this point to move an adjournment motion which might make it possible for the House to adjourn later today subject to the possibility of Royal Assent later and return late in February. Because of one or two uncertain elements in the picture I am unable to put the adjournment motion at this stage. Therefore, having had conversations with representatives of other parties, I am hopeful I might get the consent needed to revert to motions later today if the circumstances are propitious in order to move such a motion.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, we showed our initiative in co-operation yesterday and we shall be pleased to co-operate today along the lines suggested.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We agree with the request for consent to revert to motions later today to deal with this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed and so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

VETERANS LAND ACT

PROVISION TO PROTECT DOWER RIGHTS OF SPOUSES

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-250, to amend the Veterans Land Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to amend the Veterans Land Act to protect the rights of spouses to file any claims under either provincial law or provincial statute that they may have for dower rights or otherwise. At the present time, since land under the Veterans Land Act is registered in the name of the director of the Veterans Land Act, no claims can be filed in most provinces, thereby depriving spouses of rights that they normally have.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CRIMINAL CODE

REMOVAL OF SECTION 45 AS AVAILABLE DEFENCE TO CHARGE OF ABORTION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-251, to amend the Criminal Code.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, this bill is designed to remove the unfortunate confusion that has arisen in respect of section 45 of the Criminal Code, which it has been suggested may be used as a defence to charges under section 251, namely the abortion provisions of the Criminal Code. This bill is designed to remove section 45 as an available defence to any charge under section 251.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADIAN BILL OF RIGHTS

DEFINITION OF WORD "INDIVIDUAL" TO INCLUDE ALL HUMAN BEINGS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-252, to amend the Canadian Bill of Rights.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the first right that we have under the Canadian Bill of Rights is the right of the individual to life. Unfortunately there has been some suggestion that "individual" does not necessarily include the individual who is unborn, and in some situations those who are either sick or the elderly. This bill is designed to define the word "individual" so that this word will be taken to mean all human beings, including unborn human beings, those "en ventre sa mère" and the aged.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

THANKSGIVING DAY

PROVISION FOR NEW PROCLAMATION EACH YEAR

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-253, respecting the proclamation for Thanksgiving Day.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

● (1120)

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, as our Thanksgiving proclamation now has been in use for 16 years, this bill seeks to require each year a new Thanksgiving proclamation to be issued by the government of Canada and read by His Excellency the Governor General of Canada.

It has been the traditional practice for the identical proclamation to be published annually and, because it is out of date, it frequently fails to acknowledge relevant and current benefits that have accrued to Canadians during the preceding year.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

VETERANS LAND ACT

PHASING OUT OF ACT BY MARCH 31, 1974

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to adjourn the House pursuant to Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the proposed phasing out of the Veterans Land Act by March 31, 1974, which will result in deying to over 100,000 veterans benefits available to them under the act, instead of increasing the maximum loan ceiling and reducing the lot requirements.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: As required by the rules, the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe has given notice of his intention to propose the adjournment of the House under the terms of Standing Order 26. The subject proposed for discussion by the hon. member relates to the phasing out of the Veterans Land Act by March 31, 1974.

It is hardly necessary to remind hon. members that the decision of the Chair under the Standing Order is strictly procedural and is not related to the importance of the matter or to the concern it may evoke among hon. members. The terms of the Standing Order and well established practice confirm that a number of requirements must be met before the business scheduled for consideration by the House on a specific day can be set aside. The subject proposed for discussion must be a new one in the nature of an emergency. In this particular instance it is relevant to note that the problem has been raised on a number of occasions over a long period of time by a number of members, and more particularly by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe.

The Standing Order also requires the Chair to take into account the possibility that the matter might be discussed on other occasions, or that there may be other opportunities for debate. As hon. members know, all of the seven days in the current supply period, which expires on March 31, are available now or would be available during March after a possible adjournment or prorogation. In addition, I think it is reasonable for the Chair to assume that other and additional opportunities for debate will be available in the month of March or before.

In view of the circumstances, the Chair has to rule that the proposed debate cannot take place today under the terms of Standing Order 26.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—PLANS TO PROTECT INVESTORS IN INSURANCE OR CANADA SAVINGS BONDS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. Does the government have any plans to help the Canadian who has managed to save a few thousand dollars and has perhaps invested it in insurance or Canada savings bonds, who now has no way at all to protect himself against inflation and who last year, for example, saw the value of the real purchasing power of his savings decrease by nearly 10 per cent? Has the government any plans to encourage such Canadians to continue to try to save a little money?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): In this particular case, Mr. Speaker, I have no plans to announce.

Mr. Stanfield: Having regard to those Canadians, and there are hundreds of thousands of them, who have perhaps put a little money into Canada savings bonds at an interest rate of about 7 per cent and have seen the real value of their savings decrease by nearly 9 per cent last year, does the Prime Minister regard it as part of the just society that, in addition, the government also taxes the income such a Canadian receives from that investment in spite of the fact he has actually lost 10 per cent during the course of the year?

Mr. Trudeau: The just society is something toward which we must strive every day, and I would be happy to receive any constructive suggestions from the Leader of the Opposition.

An hon. Member: Resign!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: A new government would help.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Prime Minister expressed concern that an incomes policy is hard on the little man and easy for the rich man to get around.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I assume the Leader of the Opposition will be asking a question. I do not think we should become involved in debate at this stage.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, my question is this: Is it the position of the Prime Minister and his government that it is preferable to follow policies which make life practically impossible for the unorganized worker and destroy the savings of the little man who is trying to save some money, while creating thousands of new millionaires who are able to take advantage of the situation.

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL SECURITY

ACTIVITIES OF COMMUNICATIONS BRANCH OF NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL—SUGGESTED TRANSFER ELSEWHERE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister a question regarding the special communications branch in the National Research Council to which reference was made yesterday and I think the day before. Has the government given consideration to the propriety of a middle power like Canada being involved in intercepting and decoding foreign information not so much for its own use but for the use of one of the super powers? Is such an activity of value to Canada's own interests or does it merely underline Canada's satellite position in international affairs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government has assessed from time to time its activities in this general area, and I say "general" because I am not agreeing with the facts as stated by the hon. gentleman. We have assessed it from time to time and we have decided to continue any security and intelligence activities which are of benefit to Canada and to discontinue any which might be of benefit merely to a foreign power.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the National Research Council obviously is not the appropriate agency for such an operation and that consequently the president and the council are made responsible for a division about which they probably know nothing and over which they have no control, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government would consider taking this operation out of the National Research Council and placing it in a more appropriate department such as the RCMP or National Defence or under the super-spy, the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to confirm the existence of the operations the hon. member has mentioned in his allegations, but I am happy to take note that he says there are some areas of government where spying operations should be conducted and I will consider his suggestions.

Mr. Lewis: I have a final supplementary, Mr. Speaker, because I do believe that these matters are of importance to this country. I want to ask the Prime Minister the following question. In view of the fact Canada has a normal avenue of co-operation with the United States and other countries, such as the co-operation between the RCMP and the FBI in the United States, between the Department of State and embassies in Washington and between the Department of External Affairs and embassies in Ottawa, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the time has not come for the Canadian authorities to cease to have anything to do with the CIA in the United States which has been involved in some of the most discreditable actions across the world?

● (1130)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the RCMP, when it deals with its opposite numbers in other countries, is not making a judgment on the policies of the governments which our government has judged to be friendly and allied. The CIA is the organization set up by the responsible government in the United States. If my hon. friend has some representations to make against them, I would gladly convey them through the proper channels if he wants to transmit them to me.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ALLEGED DELAY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS IN QUEBEC REGION

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

In view of the numerous applications for unemployment insurance which are withheld in the Quebec City regional office because the notices of termination of employment have supposedly not been received yet, can the minister give the House guaranties that he will have an inquiry made in the Quebec office, because checks with recipients have revealed that two, three, or even four notices have been addressed to the office? Will the minister inquire and tell the House what decision he intends to take concerning this problem?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly inquire. If the hon. member has details regarding the particular firms or locations involved, they would be of help to me. I must say, however, that the responsibility for producing the necessary evidence, which includes indication of severance, is a fundamental requirement for entitlement under the act, and that responsibility lies with the employer and the claimant, although we will do everything we can to help expedite it.

OBJECTION BY TORONTO TRANSIT COMMISSION TO PREMIUM INCREASE—POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION AMENDING ACT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister is aware or has received notice of the objection by the Toronto Transit Commission which seeks some relief from the increase in unemployment insurance premiums as the cost to the commission will be approximately $1 million in 1974, some $450,000 more than in 1973? Has he received such a statement of concern and, if so, what has been his reply?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, such a specific communication has not crossed my desk. I certainly have seen allusions to this in the press but I have not personally received directly such a representation.

Mr. Alexander: In light of the fact that when I asked the minister the other day whether he was seeking to bring in legislation that would increase the minimum qualifying period he indicated to me that he was not looking at the act in isolation, can the minister now advise the House whether in fact he is looking at the act in its entirety in order to make sure that legislation is referred to in the Speech from the Throne? Is this the minister's intention?

Mr. Andras: I do not think I can elaborate with value on the comment I made on that very subject in my statement to the House on November 7, I believe, when I said that we were examining the policy and the legislation in light of the full year's information with all the data available.

NATIONAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY BY ROYAL COMMISSION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the Prime Minister at once that I share his general view in connection with security and realize how very easy it is for anyone to conjure up weaknesses in security because the subject cannot be discussed openly and in parliament. For that reason I ask him whether or not the government will give consideration to a course that has been followed in the United Kingdom of setting up a royal commission, headed by the Chief Justice of Canada, I would suggest, to look into the whole question of security to the end that Canadians will learn that our security is well placed or, if not, about its weaknesses, and above all so it will show that we are indeed not a satellite of any other country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the right hon. gentleman will permit me to refresh his memory, we had a Royal Commission on Security which entered its report a few years ago, I believe three and a half or four years ago. We have implemented many of the recommendations of that report, although not all of them. Indeed, one of them was that we should have a security branch which would be entirely civilian and separate from the RCMP, but because of our lasting confidence and respect for the RCMP we decided to have the security and intelligence branch remain under the general authority of the commissioner. Incidentally, that is why the Solicitor General has been able to refute the unfounded allegation of the right hon. gentleman about the Crown disappearing from the uniform, an allegation which I would like the right hon. gentleman to retract.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would not have been able, except with the assistance of the Prime Minister, to rise on a question of privilege, and I thank him for the opportunity he has provided to me by that gratuitous statement.

May I say at once that the Solicitor General alleged with much pride—he is now being joined by the Prime Minister who apparently has been converted to the RCMP after what he did to destroy them a year and a half ago—that a crown has now been produced that otherwise would not have been and we have one more crown. Let me point out that this crown, a part of the emblem of the RCMP, is now being placed on a tieclip and will be totally invisible to anyone; it is a miniature emblem. The statement I made was entirely well-founded and the explanation by the Solicitor General outside the House was one that will not hold water in any way. The crown—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: On the same question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think I have to remind the right hon. gentleman that he has risen on a question of privilege, but it seems to me more a question of debate.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No.

Mr. Speaker: If he has a question of privilege, perhaps he should indicate to the Chair in what way it is privilege so that I may make a ruling.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Simply the fact that a minister outside the House went as far as he could toward falsifying the facts and pretending that the crown had been added when all that was done was that a picayune tieholder or clasp with the actual emblem of the RCMP has been added.

Mr. Trudeau: On the same question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I do have a question of privilege because the integrity of one of my ministers has been brought into question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not integrity.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): And Lang's.

An hon. Member: There will be one great shuffle this year.

Mr. Trudeau: The right hon. gentleman has made an allegation based, as he said, on a document or a circular to the effect that the crown was being removed from the uniform and now is trying to hide that allegation by diverting attention to the fact that not only was it not removed but one was added that he finds it too small. I think the right hon. gentleman, if he were not being merely mischievous in inventing these calumnies about the minister, should have the honour and decency to apologize to the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Resign!

• (1140)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the right hon. gentleman, who rises on a question of privilege, but I would seek the co-operation of hon. members, including right hon. members, so that we might get on with the question period as we are quickly running out of time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I rise again on a question of privilege. The Prime Minister mentioned, in his reply to me a moment ago, that apparently my memory was at fault. I at no time forgot two years of my life—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: —and I recall—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. gentleman has risen on a question of privilege. I assume it is a new question of privilege. The right hon. gentleman rose in the first instance on a question of privilege and at some length indicated what the question was. The right hon. Prime Minister replied to the question, as was his right. Now the right hon. member for Prince Albert seeks the floor on another question of privilege. I would hope we could bring this matter to some conclusion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has referred to the RCMP and the attitude of the government. I remind him of the fact that—

Mr. Sharp: What about the crown?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister keeps on interrupting. I remind him that he will not qualify for the description that is generally used of him, "PET", so far as I am concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would hope the right hon. gentleman would try to assist the House and the Chair, if he has a question of privilege, by indicating what that question is because we do have to try to make headway.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I always follow that course, but when there are petty interruptions from the Prime Minister I will answer them. He speaks of the RCMP. Has he forgotten that, when I said a year and a half ago that "RCMP" was being removed from detachment buildings and vehicles, he said outside the House that it was not true, but when 30,000 people in western Canada pointed out that they had seen it then he came around to the explanation that people did not know what RCMP meant.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. What this additional statement has to do with privilege is beyond my comprehension.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, but the minister rises on a question of privilege.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert has just accused me of making false statements outside the House and, I believe, inside the House. I want to say that in the House he insinuated that by RCMP administrative bulletins Nos. 54 and 78 some change was being made in the RCMP insignia by taking away the crown from the RCMP uniform. I pointed out inside the House and outside the House that bulletin No. 54 did not deal with the uniform, crest or crown but with postal codes, and that bulletin No. 78 dealt with some minor changes in the uniform such as a lighter summer shirt and wider tie. The only reference to the crown or crest of the RCMP was that we were now adding the RCMP crest to the tieclip. In fact, that there was no removal but an addition of the crown, even though a small one.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Now that all these important and far-reaching questions of privilege have been debated and settled, the Chair will now call on the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

ALLEGED DUAL CAPACITY OF MEMBER OF PRIME MINISTER'S STAFF

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that a member of the Prime Minister's staff who works in the field of press relations is now the vice-president and general manager of the consulting firm which has been hired to make the press arrangements for the forthcoming first ministers' conference, and in view of the fact that even though this person plans to leave the Prime Minister's office some time in February he is at the moment in a dual capacity, may I ask the Prime Minister what he intends to do about this obvious conflict of interest?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the first thing I intend to do is to say that the hon. gentleman is repeating allegations which are completely false and unfounded. Mr. Chapman is not vice-president and general manager of any such firm, and I regret that the hon. gentleman in his question alleged such things as facts. Mr. Chapman has no connection with that firm. He has indicated to me that he intends to resign from my office at the end of the month and thereafter take some position in that company.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: That is the fact.

Mr. Baker: Some free advertising.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think this is the proper way of proceeding. Had Mr. Chapman not warned me in advance I would think there might be some questions from over there, but he has told me he is going to seek separation from my office and go to work in other fields. I think this is perfectly honourable conduct, and I would like to know what is reprehensible about it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if I quoted something from the press which turns out to be inaccurate, that, of course, can be corrected. But I ask the Prime Minister if it is not a fact that in his discussion about conflict of interest he has himself called for full disclosure, and will he arrange for a full disclosure on the part of Mr. Chapman of any interest he now has, pecuniary, or otherwise, in the consulting firm that has been given this contract?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman missed my answer. I indicated that Mr. Chapman had precisely made that disclosure to me. He told me he had no connection whatsoever. He had been in discussion with these people. He indicated to me that there was an interesting future for him there and that he intended to resign from my office at the end of the month and seek employment there.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre for a second supplementary, after which I will see the hon. member for Egmont.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As a last supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if it is not true that Mr. Chapman's having a job agreed to and arranged for is in fact a connection with that firm?

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ATLANTIC REGION—CEILINGS ON CAPITAL COST AND DIRECT JOB INCENTIVES—CONSULTATIONS WITH PROVINCES ON INCREASES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the fact that the Atlantic region, one of the designated regions under the minister's department for special development assistance, is being hurt increasingly by growing unemployment and rising costs, particularly related to energy, an important component in industrial development, has the minister consulted with the premiers and the ministers of industry in the Atlantic provinces about the reduction, as of the end of 1973, of capital costs from 35 per cent to 25 per cent, and of direct job provisions from $7,000 to $5,000, with the view that some appropriate increase must take place to offset rising costs in particular?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I have had conversations, both in a general way and in a specific way, on the energy question with the appropriate minister, at least in the province of Newfoundland. The figures the hon. member quoted are, of course, the maximum figures. They do not necessarily reflect what has been given in the past. I have asked our incentive people, in terms of working out a new formula for incentives under the Regional Development Incentives Act, first of all to see what changes might be desirable in terms of these levels and also to take the cost of energy in production into account in determining the level of grants we might give. In other words, while the ceiling was 30 per cent or 35 per cent in some instances, it very rarely reached that figure so that I do not believe the reduction will have a significant effect on the actual level of grants made.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Can the minister indicate whether there has been any lessening in terms of industrial activity and expansion in the region, or whether there has been any specific request from provincial governments with regard to the restoration of this ceiling in order that there will not be an increasing disadvantage for industrial development in the Atlantic region?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, on the specific question, the answer is no. I might point out to the hon. member that 25 per cent was, of course, the ceiling until such time as Montreal and the Montreal area were designated for a very limited period. At that time the Atlantic provinces representatives suggested they would prefer to be with the 25 per cent and have Montreal dedesignated, so when we dedesignated Montreal this automatically brought it back to the former level. There is no representation in that regard at the moment, but there are a number of conversations going on with all four Atlantic provinces with regard to specific and major undertakings. I might say, with your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, that one of the questions I discussed only recently is the whole question of the lower Churchill Falls development and the utilization of that energy particularly in the province of Newfoundland.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Practically all the members on my left have risen. There are about ten minutes before the end of the question period. I will recognize the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East, if he will be patient, in a moment, but I remind hon. members that there are just ten minutes before the end of the question period and it is difficult to expect that all members who rose a moment ago can be recognized.

HALIFAX AND DARTMOUTH—INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF OFFICERS OF METROPOLITAN AREA GROWTH INCENTIVES CORPORATION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Inasmuch as enabling legislation with regard to MAGI, the Metropolitan Area Growth Incentives Corporation for the metropolitan area of Halifax and Dartmouth, was passed by the House in September, 1972, and inasmuch as we have yet to have a chairman and vice-chairman appointed and a functioning office established, is the minister now prepared to tell the people of Atlantic Canada, particularly the people of the metropolitan area, when we may expect this long overdue appointment, delayed by inexcusable political consideration, to be made so that we have a chairman?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the position, as I have indicated on a number of occasions, is that this appointment must be made jointly by agreement with the province of Nova Scotia. The federal government has made to the government of Nova Scotia a number of proposals, one, most specifically, with regard to an appointee who was satisfactory to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. This particular nominee was not acceptable to the government of Nova Scotia. I have communicated with the premier of Nova Scotia. I am anxious to have this officer appointed post-haste, and I hope the premier will give us his suggestions in the very near future.

INDUSTRY

SHORTAGE OF CAST IRON FOR QUEBEC FOUNDRIES

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Since the large companies that use cast iron for their production offer higher prices to Quebec foundries in order to obtain supplies required, which is to the disadvantage of small businesses, has the minister received representations on this subject from Quebec industries and, if so, what action is he planning to take to obtain a better distribution of this precious alloy?

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, if I understood the hon. gentleman's question, it had to do with the use of scrap metal in Canada. There have been considerable discussions on the part of the government with dealers and users of scrap in an effort to overcome the scarcity of supply brought on by the United States' imposition of controls on the export of scrap metal to Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put another question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I think he misunderstood the words I used. I was not talking about scrap but about cast iron. This alloy is used by Quebec foundries to produce parts for small businesses. Since large companies also use cast iron for their products, they are offering higher prices to guarantee their supplies. I have received complaints about this. This is why it—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member allow the minister to reply to his question? Time is short.

[English]

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, there appears to be a problem with regard to the definition of foundry feed stock. I will be pleased to meet the hon. member after the question period and go into the matter with him.

HOUSING

ROCHDALE COLLEGE, TORONTO—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO REMOVE DRUG ADDICTS AND PEDDLERS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the finding of a coroner's jury dealing with a death in Rochdale College that the manager is frightened to evict certain people from Rochdale College because there are drug addicts and drug peddlers, would the minister now take action to clean up this mess in Toronto?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have taken as vigorous action as the law allows. As the hon. member knows, the federal government, or CMHC, does not have possession, nor is it entitled to possession of the building. As a result of our foreclosure action, we are awaiting the decision of the trial court in Ontario, which I hope will award us possession. In that case we, as the possessor of the building, will act as vigorously as possible to protect both the public interest and the lives and safety of the people in the building.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, this is a very important question. Clarkson and Gordon are, I assume, the administrators of this bankrupt enterprise on which thousands of dollars of the taxpayers' money have been spent. I ask the minister, who answers for CMHC, if he will not take action now to evict and remove these drug peddlers and drug users who are a cancer on society in that particular area?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I should make it clear, and I thought the hon. member as a lawyer would understand the situation better than he apparently does, that Clarkson and Gordon are in possession of the building and are managing it by order of the court of Ontario on behalf of all creditors. They are not receivers on behalf of CMHC.

Mr. Woolliams: But they became the administrators with the consent of the minister, Mr. Speaker.

SPORTS

MONTREAL OLYMPIC GAMES, 1976—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO AWARDING OF TELEVISION CONTRACT

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister advise the House as to what discussions he has had with COJO, the Montreal Olympic Organizing Committee, if any, regarding the letting of the television contract to the American Broadcasting Company for $25 million, without tender, to cover the Montreal Olympic games when the National Broadcasting Company had in fact indicated that they were prepared to bid up to $32.9 million, without any strings attached?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have had no discussions of that kind, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jelinek: I wonder whether the Prime Minister knows that Carl Lindeman, Vice-President of the Columbia Broadcasting System, in addition to not being given a chance to bid for the contract was told point blank that he would have to kick in $5 million to the Quebec government for pay-offs if he wished to negotiate a contract with COJO, and that he refused to do business with Canada along those lines? Will the Prime Minister advise the House whether he is willing to take immediate steps to initiate an inquiry into the many and constant allegations arising from the ABC contract with COJO, inasmuch as the contract was finalized without giving the other networks an opportunity to bid for the coverage of the Montreal Olympic games?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it is not the policy of my government to look into the dealings and decisions of a provincial government in matters within its jurisdiction. If I understand it to be the policy of the Conservative party that I should suggest such a course to Premier Bourassa, I will do so, but I would want to know if the hon. member is speaking on behalf of his party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appreciate that the Leader of the Opposition wants to rise on a point of order. He will be recognized in a moment. I remind hon. members that we should try to limit supplementaries as much as possible.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I rise simply because the Prime Minister has made a statement that is very misleading. The hon. member's question related to the responsibility of this government with regard to a project being supported by this government. The Prime Minister tried to twist this around in an attempt to indicate that we want to interfere, somehow improperly, in provincial affairs. Is the Prime Minister prepared to exercise his responsibility to look into a matter that clearly involves the responsibility of this government?

● (1200)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the extent of the involvement of this government was made quite clear to the House of Commons in a statement by me in the House in January of last year. I spelled out that involvement. I indicated to the House we would not support the Olympic project at all if it did not have the support of the House of Commons. The support of the House of Commons was given, including that of the Conservative party. We are living up to every undertaking the government undertook to discharge in every aspect as regards COJO and the Olympic project, but we have not undertaken to monitor the relations between COJO and the provincial government any more than we have decided to monitor the relations between the federal Conservative party and the Toronto government in its dealings.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

ACTION TO INCREASE PAYMENTS TO PRERETIRED COAL MINERS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion who is responsible for the Cape Breton Development Corporation. It is related to an earlier question I posed to the minister on December 10. On that occasion, I raised the question of an increase in the allowances received by preretired coal miners in Cape Breton. At that time the minister replied that Devco would have the government's complete approval if the corporation were to increase the allowances now received in accordance with the actual cost of living. What steps has the minister taken since that time to bring this about, and how soon will the expressed approval of the government be implemented? Also, does the minister have knowledge of what steps the corporation has taken or is taking to implement the government's complete approval of this action?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, without being precise as to dates and without checking the record, my recollection is that, in terms of the last submission by Devco of their capital budget and the various changes which were made in the preretirement plan, pensions and so on, it was agreed at that time that pensions would be escalated on the same basis as the Canada Pension Plan. Without checking the dates, I cannot be sure that has actually happened in terms of the Canada Pension Plan or when it happened, but the two are now in concert. One will go up at the same rate as the other. The increase will be on the same basis as the Canada Pension Plan.

SPORTS

MONTREAL OLYMPIC GAMES, 1976—RESPONSIBILITY FOR ALLEGED ADDITIONAL COST OF COVERAGE BY CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It refers to the previous series. In view of reports that costs for coverage of the 1976 Montreal Olympics by the CBC, which will act as host broadcaster, may soar well beyond the $25 million federal commitment articulated by the Prime Minister on February 2, 1973, has there been any further commitment by the government of Canada to cover these added costs or will they be borne by the province of Quebec or the CBC?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, there has been no further commitment by the government. I see the Secretary of State, who answers for the CBC, indicating that my statement is correct. It will, of course, be important for the CBC to make sure it does not go beyond the authorization of parliament, an authorization which was given by most members of the House.

MONTREAL OLYMPIC GAMES, 1976—ALLEGED DEAL BETWEEN ABC AND COJO FOR BROADCAST RIGHTS—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): As it is alleged that the non-tendered $25 million contract between ABC and COJO involved a $5 million under the table deal with the Quebec Liberal party, is the government of Canada investigating this allegation—that is all it is at the moment—with a view, if it is confirmed, to lessening the government of Canada's contribution for Olympic broadcasting coverage by an equal amount?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question is hypothetical in its form. However, I hope this matter will be drawn to the attention of the government of the province of Quebec and that it will be able to refute these facts for all to hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will appreciate we have just about reached or gone beyond the time allocated to the question period. I was hoping we could have two or three more questioners, but if we get involved in points of order we might as well go on with government business. The hon. member for Fraser Valley West rises on a point of order.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, my point of order has to do with the reply just made by the Prime Minister. I would like to ask him how one can refute facts.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I stand corrected. I obviously should have said the alleged facts.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR EXPIRY OF VETERANS LAND ACT TO ENABLE CONSULTATION WITH VETERANS ORGANIZATIONS AND REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the mounting protests, representations and resolutions being received by the minister's office from veterans' organizations and veterans, has the minister had consultation with the veterans organizations of Canada who want to extend the March 31 deadline under the Veterans Land Act? Will he indicate what consultations he is having and what his reaction is?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I first wish to tell the hon. member that as far as the Veterans Land Act is concerned there has been considerable discussion and talk. In 1962, parliament passed an act which stated the cessation date would be March 31, 1974. Also, previous to that, eligibility for building certificates was to be in the hands of veterans by 1968. This was done quite some time ago. I think the hon. member is very familiar with the government that did that. At that time there were other plans available to veterans. Those other plans were re-establishment credits and university training. They were phased out. I also want to say we are certainly looking at this again. We want to keep faith with the veterans who did apply.

I remind the hon. member it is 30 years since the end of world war II and 20 years since the end of the Korean war. This has not been rapidly brought upon the veterans. At the same time, we are taking a close look at it. If I have sufficient information to make me think this date should be changed, I will so recommend to the government. However, it is something that has been in process for a long period of time. We have to assess the facts. We have to keep faith with those for whom this program was designed and they in some cases have to keep faith with us.

Mr. Marshall: In view of the co-operation of the minister, will the government House leader direct a reference to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs so that we can call the veterans' organizations to express the feelings of hundreds of thousands of veterans on the phasing out of this act?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to consider that. I will consult with the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I have the feeling we might as well stay if we want to continue the work of parliament at this time by continuing committee work. However, I will consider the proposal.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO PREVENT RAILWAY FREIGHT RATE INCREASES ON STEEL SHIPPED TO WESTERN CANADA

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have on two occasions requested the Minister of Transport to investigate the announced freight rate increases affecting western Canada. Can the minister tell us today what action he is contemplating to prevent these increases and require the two major railway companies to honour the commitment made by the minister during the Western Economic Opportunities Conference that freight rates would not be increased for 18 months until a study had been carried out? Can the minister give us an answer today? The House is adjourning and we would like to know.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have honoured my commitment. I think it is wrong to state in the House that I have not done so. The rates which were frozen were normal and competitive rates, not negotiated rates. I think the commitment has been complied with by the railways. If the hon. member has other representations to make, that is another matter.

ENERGY

FUNDY TIDAL POWER—AVAILABILITY OF REPORT OF REVIEW COMMITTEE BEFORE FIRST MINISTERS CONFERENCE

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The minister informed me last week that he would find out whether the results of the re-examination of the Fundy tidal power report would be available before the meeting of first ministers takes place. Is the minister now able to tell us when this report will be available?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): My understanding is that the studies which were commissioned by the joint federal-provincial commission will be available by the end of the month, and I hope to be able to report to the hon. member as soon as the commission can report to me concerning its conclusions.

FORTHCOMING FIRST MINISTERS CONFERENCE—REPRESENTATION FOR YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is the minister in a position to answer the question which was raised on Tuesday of this week by the hon. member for Yukon, and tell us whether arrangements have yet been made to permit representation of the northern territories at the federal-provincial energy conference later this month?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): As I indicated earlier, since this is to be a meeting of first ministers the arrangements are being made by an agency of government other than my own department. My understanding is that arrangements have not yet been completed with regard to this matter but perhaps my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, could comment on the specific question of representation of the territories.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): This question is being looked into. I can assure the hon. member that the Northwest Territories and the Yukon will be adequately represented at the conference.

INCLUSION OF YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES IN EQUALIZATION OF FUEL COSTS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): May I ask a supplementary question which was not answered directly by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources when I put it to him the other day? It has to do with the policy of the government of Canada with respect to treating the Yukon and the Northwest Territories in the same way as other regions of Canada under the fuel cost equalization policy. The minister's commissioner said this should be done. Was he stating government policy when he made that statement?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, obviously if a policy of uniform oil prices across Canada is adopted, it will certainly apply to the Yukon and Northwest Territories as well as Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Dick: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I did not intend to rise today until I heard the answer given by the Prime Minister to the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley to the effect that the federal government did not have any jurisdiction when it came to looking into an allegation of criminal activity, that it was entirely a provincial matter because it involved a provincial government. I think it is a matter of importance that the Minister of Justice, who is also Attorney General, and who has responsibilities in connection with the Criminal Code, certainly including the power to enforce sections 107, 108 and 110—

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is obviously a matter of debate, not a point of order.

Mr. Dick: I submit it is a point of order, that perhaps the Prime Minister should know now so he can take action if the House is going to adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: That is a representation, not a point of order.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise on a point of order. With due respect to Your Honour, I have been on my feet every day this week during the question period seeking to ask a question which I consider to be an important one. Your Honour has been most indulgent today. There have been a number of questions of privilege and points of order raised during the question period. You have allowed the period to run beyond the normal 40 minutes. I recognize this. I should like to appeal, through you, to hon. members of the House, on behalf of those of us who sit in the back row, to permit those of us who have questions to ask to be given an opportunity to do so. The question I have in mind has nothing whatever to do with my constituency. I am looking for security in the Canadian public service—this is the portent of my question. I would be most grateful if those of us in the back row, whom Your Honour has been unable to recognize and who have questions to ask, could have some means by which they could be recognized on the third or fourth day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: That is a very good point and one with which I sympathize. I notice that the hon. member's support comes from the third, fourth and fifth rows. I am in full agreement with the point made. As hon. members are aware, I frequently call for co-operation in limiting supplementaries so as to give increased opportunity to members in the back rows to ask their questions. The question period has been extended by some 15 minutes today and this, I suggest, takes into account the so-called questions of privilege and the so-called points of order which have been raised.

Mr. Reynolds: Mr. Speaker, my point of order relates to the question directed to the Minister of Transport by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River. The minister said something about negotiated rates not being covered in his original statement to the House. I just wonder what negotiated rates are, because the five leading steel companies of Canada have demanded that these increases should not be imposed—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the hon. member will appreciate that this is debate. What that has to do with the Standing Orders of this institution is again beyond me. This is strictly debate and not a point of order.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I rise in relation to the same point of order.

Mr. Speaker: It would have to be another point of order. Is the hon. member referring to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich? If so, I will recognize him for that purpose.

Mr. Stackhouse: What I should like to do is request the consent of the House to revert to motions so that I might move that the question period be extended by at least ten minutes. I plead with you and the House to consider this request. I am reluctant to interrupt the regular business of the House but, like many other hon. members, I am supposed to represent a constituency. Since we returned from the Christmas break I have been endeavouring to ask a question of some significance to the people of my riding and I would certainly appreciate a few minutes more during which I and others might have a chance.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, it is with some hesitation that I rise to add to your obvious burdens, but I do feel I have a question of privilege. If Your Honour decides it is not one, I shall, of course, accept your decision. My question of privilege arises from the fact that on at least two separate occasions the Minister of Transport, first in the External Affairs Committee and then the other day in the House, gave an assurance he would lay on the table particulars of each and every ship leaving the west coast of Canada carrying crude oil to eastern Canada. To the best of my knowledge and belief, so far the minister has not complied with what he said he would do. I recognize that he did not put a time limit on when he would take this action, but it seems to me that if a minister gives a commitment to the House to lay certain documents on the table and he does not fulfil that undertaking, that does constitute a question of privilege as far as members of the House are concerned.

● (1220)

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply, subject to this. I would certainly have to rule that is not a question of privilege. Perhaps it is a grievance, but if it were a question of privilege I wonder whether the hon. member would want to refer the matter to the privileges and elections committee and what motion he would propose. It is not a question of privilege but a grievance or a question that might have been asked in the question period if the hon. member had had an opportunity of being recognized. Since he has raised the matter by way of a question of privilege, perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply, after which the Chair will again attempt to call orders of the day.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I asked the department to prepare the documents. If they are not ready, they will be shortly and I shall table them on Monday if we are still sitting. I asked immediately that the documents be prepared, and I have always believed they would be prepared and ready by today.

ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ALLOCATION BOARD, MANDATORY ALLOCATION OF SUPPLIES AND RATIONING OF CONTROLLED PRODUCTS

The House resumed, from Thursday, January 10, consideration of Bill C-236, to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada and to amend the National Energy Board Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Speaker: The House has reached motion No. 7.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River) moved:

That Bill C-236, an act to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada, and to amend the National Energy Board Act, be amended by deleting clause 23, lines 12 to 40 on page 16 and lines 1 to 25 on page 17, and renumbering subsequent clauses accordingly.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have such eminent support as that of the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) as seconder of the motion. He has a thorough knowledge of the particular subject matter, and coming from the region that he does in Ontario I know he will support me handsomely. This is a very simple amendment which seeks to delete clause 23 of the bill.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Baldwin: I hesitate to bring into the House some legitimate business after what we have just been through, but I trust hon. members will not hold me remiss if I deal with the business we are supposed to be discussing today.

Obviously, clause 23 had its genesis in the technical advisory committee, which I understand was largely dominated by members of the multinational oil corporations who imposed their will upon the government and had this bill brought forward. This clause attempts to exempt corporations, particularly this type of corporation, from provisions of the Combines Investigation Act.

Clause 23 provides that where a person, as a result of an order from the energy supplies allocation board, is directed to do something or enters into an agreement that might involve an infringement of the combines legislation, a procedure is outlined whereby that person or corporation may go to the board, and the board in turn go to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Gray)—though heaven knows how much help they will get there, but that is where they are driven—and seek an exemption from the Combines Investigation Act, thus perpetuating restrictive trade practices or situations that are inconsistent with the combines legislation.

The position is as simple as that, and I say, through you, Mr. Speaker, to the members of this House that this party cannot accept a clause of that kind. It is cumbersome. It is a clause whereby we give to a created administrative board composed of five people, a board entirely under the domination of the government, the right at its own whim to abrogate and repeal from time to time very important sections of the law of Canada.

It has taken this country a great many years to acquire some means whereby combines, operating through collusive trade arrangements and conspiracies, may be subject to penal action. This clause is a deliberate attempt, and I say quite seriously at the instance of the multinational oil corporations, to grant exemptions from the law. I say that because the evidence given at the committee by the representative of those corporations indicated beyond a shadow of doubt that that was so. He said "We like the bill, and these are the reasons why we would like a little wider exemption". But great emphasis was placed on the fact that there would be this freedom from examination or possible prosecution under the Combines Investigation Act. If the government and their friends in the NDP want to give that kind of protection to the multinational oil companies, that is their privilege, but we do not intend to be party to it.

I am not going to make a very long speech. I have to argue a little law. It has taken me 16 years to forget that I am a lawyer and to become a member of parliament. I do not know whether I have progressed upwards or downwards in taking that position, I will now go back in time and argue a little law. Having heard the law argued by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) yesterday, I was very sadly struck by how he had degenerated in terms of his knowledge of the law compared with when he first came to the House.

I do not know what kind of reception my arguments will get, but I want to make it plain that as a result of this amendment an individual or corporation which, under direction from the energy allocation board or under some order or regulation, engages in certain actions should not be compelled to pay a fine or penalized under the Combines Investigation Act. What irritates me is that you do not need this kind of legislation to bring about that result. Anyone who has been through law school, or any member of this House who has learned his law second hand, though perhaps not always correctly, should know that where you have two statutes, one later in time than the other, then unless there is some express exception the latter statute has the effect of abrogating the former.

Take the situation where an individual or corporation is directed by the energy allocation board to fix a certain price for its commodities, or to divert oil or petroleum products from one destination to another, in such a way that it might be subject to prosecution at a later date. That direction would be given under the sanction contained in clause 31 of the bill, I think it is, which provides that anyone who disobeys an order of the energy allocation board is, under certain circumstances, subject to a term of imprisonment of up to two years in jail, or a $5,000 or $10,000 fine, as the case may be. This provision is contained in a later statute and effect must be given to it.

If Corporation X, acting under the instructions of the energy allocation board, engages in conduct which, under other circumstances, might constitute ground for prosecution as being in violation of the combines legislation, it has the best defence in the world: it has the order of the board made pursuant to this bill. It does not need any more, and so far as this party is concerned it is not going to get any more. I do not care how friendly the multinational corporations may be with the government or with my friends over there in the socialist party, they are not going to get this kind of protection from us.

● (1230)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: I should just like to present one or two simple quotations which will make it apparent, even to hon. members opposite and the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), who needs a refresher course. Let me first quote from Craies on Statute Law, Fifth Edition. I quote from page 343 as follows:

—when two statutes, although both are expressed in affirmative language, are contrary in matter, the latter abrogates the former.

Even the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) should be able to understand that.

An hon. Member: Don't be too sure.

Mr. Baldwin: If the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) were here, I am sure he would be driven back to his earlier days when he was a professor of law, from which he has been away for some time.

Mr. Stanfield: He may be driven back there anyway.

Mr. Baldwin: We hope that he and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) may still find places for themselves in the sanctuary of some university, although I must say that their attitude over the last few days would make it very difficult for any reputable university to offer them employment.

Mr. Douglas: And it would be no sanctuary.

Mr. Hees: Perhaps they could get jobs at Rochdale.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I have two additional citations and I will then sit down. I know the position of the speakers to my left, and I know they are having trouble with their consciences from time to time, when they can find them. However, I would hope that on a point of this kind—I know they have in the past fought vigorously and vehemently for combines investigation legislation and its preservation—it would not be their intention to willingly give protection to corporations from the sanctions of combines legislation. I hope, particularly after they listen to me, they will come to this conclusion when I point out that there is adequate defence for any corporation or individual without Clause 23.

Let me read from the Canadian Abridgment, Volume 33 at column 655. This is a decision of the appellate division delivered by the late distinguished Mr. Justice Frank Ford. I remember him very well because he admitted me to the bar a great many years ago, but I do not know whether or not that is to his credit. This is the case of Rex v. Knott, 1929 1 W.W.I 304. Mr. Justice Ford said this on behalf of the court:

> It is, as I understand the rule of construction, only when there is an irreconcilable conflict between earlier and later statutory enactments that the latter must be given effect to and the earlier give way.

Let me repeat those words: "The latter must be given effect to and the earlier give way".

Finally, sir, reading from the Canadian Abridgment Consolidation, Volume 9 at column 1011, I refer to a judgment of the court of appeal of British Columbia delivered by Mr. Justice Bird:

> If two inconsistent Acts are passed at different times the last is to be obeyed and if obedience cannot be observed without derogating from the first, it is the first which must give way,—

That is from a case on constitutional questions, the Determination Act and the Vancouver Incorporation Act, 1921 (1946) 1 W.W.R. 177.

I have one further citation and then I will not detain the House further. This is from the same volume at column 1012. This time the judgment is delivered by Robertson, C.J.O. With this I will have given you decisions of the appeal courts of British Columbia, Alberta and Ontario. I am sure if I looked hard enough I could find several from Nova Scotia which has turned out great lawyers and great speakers, as you will know, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hees: Stop shining the apple.

Mr. Baldwin: I was going to say that I think there is one sitting in the Chair at the present time. This was in the case of Rex v. Broughton, 1951, court of appeal. As I said, the judgment was given by Robertson, C.J.O. and he says this in the headnote:

> If, therefore, there is that repugnancy between the two statutory provisions for which appellant contends, the result must be that the provision of the older statute will go, and the appeal would fall on that . . . ground.

I am sure I could find dozens of cases as the books are replete with illustrations of that simple principle. When you lay down, as the government is attempting to do by this bill, a provision which says the board has the right to direct a person or corporation to engage in a certain act or to do a certain thing and impose a penalty if it is not done of a fine of $5,000 or $10,000 as well as a jail term of up to two years, which provision is approved in the year 1974, as it will be on this 11th day of January, that takes effect and abrogates to the extent necessary the provisions of the combines legislation. If a corporation engages in an act as a result of that decision and then is prosecuted in respect of an order, a regulation or a rule under the bill we are now considering, Bill C-236, it has a defence. I, for one, will not voluntarily accept Clause 23 which gives the kind of exemption the government seeks to give.

I will give the minister credit, and I want to say this as I am sure if I do not he will say it anyway, that the oil corporations did seek an even wider exemption. He knew very well, however, the position of rectitude this party has always taken on this score, and if he had attempted to make the exemption even wider it would have been rejected. Being a wise man, he did not accept their proposition. Even so, he has gone too far and we want to turn him back. I hope my friends to my left will support me.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the long and convoluted argument we have just heard from the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) is perhaps the best evidence of why it was thought desirable to try to deal specifically with this problem of the combines legislation in the statute rather than to leave it to the possible interpretation of the courts, in the sense that we are in the position that we are seeking, in the event of an emergency, the ability to act quickly to make sure that supplies are available for Canadians who may suffer from shortages. In these particular circumstances we really would not want to be in a position where a party might well feel it necessary to refuse to co-operate on the grounds that one of the statutes of Canada might abrogate another.

It could well be that the argument made by the hon. member for Peace River would be sustained months of years later by a court of appeal in relation to one of these particular transactions. Obviously the sensible administrative practice would be that rather than leaving it to such a long-run conclusion, when you have a board of this kind, is to give the specific responsibility to that board, as the clause does, to in the first place to make a specific examination in respect of a particular application and then make a reference to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

That minister has within his responsibility the director of investigation and research under the Combines Investigation Act. In so doing and after consultation with him and with the assistance of the combines authorities, a decision can be made as to the kind of action that might be taken alternatively to that proposed by the application, and then an exemption order could be issued which, as sub-clause (4) points out, would be limited in time and, incidentally, might be even more limiting, to 12 months or less at the discretion of the board.

In other words, the obvious and sensible way to deal with a situation where the parties might be combining in their conduct for the purpose of protecting supplies to consumers and who might be concerned about possible criminal prosecution is to put that particular transaction under the specific scrutiny of the board as this action does and if the board finds that they are out-running the exemption given or that it ceases to be in the public interest to give the exemption, it has the ability to remove it right away. In other words the specific and fast-moving situation could be dealt with right there by the board which has the responsibility rather than to leave it, as the hon. member for Peace River would do, to the courts to come up with a conclusion months or even years later.

One further piece of background information is that the government has taken action against the multinational oil industry in Canada under the Combines Investigation Act.

Mr. Baldwin: No wonder the government wanted this act.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is right. It is because the government has been taking the action against the companies under the statute, and because they are now in legal jeopardy under that act at the instance of the government, that obviously the companies would be concerned that any further conduct they might carry on, whether or not under the express or indirect order of this board, might bring them into further jeopardy. For that reason, of course, they came forward to request the exemption.

The industry had asked for a blanket exemption and, after consultation with the acting director of investigation and research, it was my judgment on behalf of the government that in respect of the specific order of this kind, the specific application, an exemption confined to a specific situation should be as far as this Parliament should go, and that the board should have the right at any time either on the complaint of abuse by a third party or indeed by the board on its own initiative to take away that particular exemption. For that reason, since the deletion by the hon. member for Peace River could only hurt the individuals in Canada we are trying to protect by this statute, I would hope his amendment would not be accepted.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I certainly have enjoyed the spectacle of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and the supporters of the Conservative Party now posing as the Sir Galahads who will bring down the dragon of the big multinational corporations. It seems to me strange that they have become now the champions of maintaining the power of the Combines Investigation Act and that this is a new role for them. It is very difficult for me to see the hon. members for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and Calgary South (Mr. Bawden) now being the main champions of exposing the multinational corporations. I think this is probably the most ludicrous spectacle since Don Quixote went down to tilt with the windmill. The fact of the matter is that certainly the members of the New Democratic Party have argued for years not only for a combines investigation act but a much stronger act than is on the statute books at the present time.

I would agree with the hon. member for Peace River to the extent that I would oppose any measure which would weaken the application of the combines investigation legislation under normal circumstances. That is true. I would certainly oppose any move to put a clause in this legislation, as requested by the oil companies, for a blanket exemption which I think could be abused and in my opinion would be abused. However, the primary purpose of this legislation, which I hardly need remind members of the House is emergency legislation, is to give an energy allocation board power to meet an emergency situation. If it is to have that kind of power then it must be able to issue orders which will require the oil companies, the jobbers, the purchasers of oil and the customers to do things ordered by the board. If the board's orders are to be obeyed, then it seems to me that we would weaken the power of the board if those to whom the orders are issued are to be placed in a position where they could say to the board that they are hesitant to comply with the order because they may be prosecuted under the Combines Investigation Act.

The hon. member for Peace River has pointed out quite properly that a statute chronologically later than another statute has precedence, but that is a case which would have to be settled in the courts. This could involve a long period of time. There will be situations, if an emergency should arise, in which the board might be required to say to two oil companies that whereas they have been sending out petroleum supplies to retailers in various areas, from now on they must confine themselves to a given area and that the customers in other areas will be supplied by another oil company. Normally that is a combination in restraint of trade. I could understand an oil company saying to the board that it makes sense in the emergency situation to do what the board requests but that they are very hesitant to do it because they could find themselves being indicted for acting in restraint of trade and therefore require some protection.

I believe that protection should be given provided there is proper protection on the other hand for the public interest. In this clause I think it is fairly specific that when the board issues an order and the companies who are the recipients of that order raise the question of whether or not they will be in conflict of the Combines Investigation Act they may ask the board for an exemption. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will have to be consulted. He can take up the matter with the Restrictive Trade Practices Commissions and his officials to see whether or not there is any conflict and specifically what they are to be exempted from. This is not a blanket exemption but an exemption for only certain specific acts they have been ordered to do by the board. At any time that the board is convinced there is no longer any need for the exemption it may withdraw the exemption so that the oil companies cannot continue to act in the manner which would be in violation of the Combines Investigation Act. They would have to desist the practice they were following at the request of the board as soon as the board decides there is no longer any need to pursue that course of action.

Mr. Speaker, I share the concern of the hon. member for Peace River, as I think must any member of this House, in respect of any legislation which gives an exemption to any part of the community with regard to the Combines Investigation Act. This should be done only in an emergency situation and only for a limited period of time and under the closest possible scrutiny. I think the situation which may arise in this country for which this legislation is designed could be so serious that the provisions of clause 23 would be necessary and for that reason we will support it and oppose the amendment.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on motion No. 7. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This division will stand deferred, along with the division on motion No. 6.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved:

That Bill C-236 to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market distrubances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada, and to amend the National Energy Board Act, be amended by striking out subclauses (4), (5) and (6) on pages 26 and 27 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"(4) A notice of motion to adopt an order made under subsection (3) shall be laid upon the table of each House of Parliament by or on behalf of the Minister for the Crown within seven days after the order is made or, if Parliament is not then sitting, within the first seven days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting.

(5) Subsections 11(3) (4) (8) (9) and (10) apply mutatis mutandis to an order made under subsection (3)"

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now revert to the deferred divisions on motions Nos. 6 and 7. Call in the members.

The House divided on motion No. 6 (Mr. Baldwin) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) moved that the bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Mr. Baldwin: Later this day. It being 1.40 p.m. I suggest we might have the benefit of the speeches on third reading this afternoon.

Mr. Bell: We take the initiative again, as we did yesterday, and suggest a full hour for lunch.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is suggesting that the House rise for an hour, which would mean that the bells would be rung at twenty minutes to three. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being after one o'clock, I do now leave the chair. The House will resume at 2.40 p.m.

At 1.38 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2.40 p.m.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass:

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, shortly this House, in its infinite wisdom, will give final approval to this bill and it will be on its way to the other place—that is, if the other place is receiving legislation from this place at that time. I do not know what the score is there, though I hear the bells ringing and I suppose it will be a question of for whom the bell tolls.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Not for thee or me.

Mr. Baldwin: It may toll for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles); I am sure that is what he is thinking about.

I have a few comments before the bill passes out of our hands. I say that in all sincerity, since I hope the government will have had sufficient apprehension from what has happened in this House not to regard lightly, as it did before the opposition was generated, its power to do what it intends to do, namely bring in an emergency declaration. As I told the minister the other day, as the matter now stands if the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) were to wake up one morning and find his furnace off he could consider that an emergency and make a declaration, which is the kind of thing we do not accept

There have been improvements made to the bill. We have asserted at length, because we had to, the right of parliamentary control. There has been a little dispute over what parliamentary control consists of, but at least there is no doubt in the minds of all parties that it includes the control exercised by this House, and to that extent the bill has been improved.

There was a particularly good amendment by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) to ensure that any violence done to the ecological and environmental safeguards which have been built up over the years would be limited. I am sorry that the other amendments that we offered were not passed, but that is the way it goes.

So it is not a good bill, but it is a better bill than it was. This is what happens so often in this place with the system under which we operate. It is a kind of compromise, the kind of compromise which, with this government, at times emphasizes the sour smell of decay and rot which the government has brought to our parliamentary system.

All that has been done in this bill has been done in the name of crisis. There is always talk of crisis. There was much talk of crisis in October 1970, and we know to what extent that crisis was seen to evaporate against the cold facts of daylight later on. There was talk of crisis in September 1971, I think it was, when we were called back from our respective constituencies where we were doing our best to explain some of the odd antics of this government to our constituents. We were dragged back here because we were told by the government that Mr. Nixon had introduced a new economic policy in the United States that would have terrible effects on Canada, and that the government had to bring parliament back to legislate post haste. We passed an $80 million bill, I think it was, for the purpose of providing employment opportunities, and there were the most dire predictions made by the government as to what would happen if we did not pass the bill. We passed the bill, some small percentage of the money was spent, and we found there was no crisis at all. And so it goes, and this is just one other example of the same thing.

What is the evidence of crisis which was put before this House, or before the committee, to justify this bill? Certainly, there has been none given to the House, and in the committee we attempted to call witnesses but the minister, supported by his faithful group of cohorts, prevented us from doing so. We were left with the evidence of the minister and one of his officials who was allowed to give evidence. That evidence did not justify the creation of a crisis atmosphere.

There were one or two spot situations; one on the east coast and one on the west coast, of potential crisis, but both of those have been remedied. I see some of my friends here from the Atlantic provinces to whom I have listened in respect of the problems they have experienced regarding the fisheries in the Atlantic provinces, and the problems they have faced with so many of their people attempting to find some means of replenishing their income because of what has happened to their fisheries. Those hon. members from the Atlantic provinces have brought overwhelming evidence before this House to show that great numbers of people in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and the other Atlantic provinces have suffered, but the government did not call that a crisis. However, the situation there certainly had as much of the element of crisis as does the situation presented us by the minister in respect of this bill.

There have been similar situations in western Canada with as much of an element of crisis. There has been a situation in my own part of the country during two successive years when, because of inclement weather, thousands of farmers were not able to harvest their crops. They are not the kind of people to go on government assistance programs, and some of them travelled hundreds, sometimes thousands, of miles to get work. They were not able to harvest their crops until the spring. That represented a reasonable crisis but the government laughed at it. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) was asked what he was going to do and he skipped around the question. He would not give the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) a reasonable answer by indicating what he intended to do to help those people.

The evidence the minister has brought forward to indicate that a crisis did or was likely to exist was very limited. Certainly, anyone with commonsense and intelligence understands that there are economic problems closely related to the matter of petroleum products in the sense of quantity, but more particularly and primarily in the sense of price. Pricing is a matter which we have attempted to bring to the knowledge of this government for over a year, almost since this session began. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) and other hon. members of this House have brought forward this problem in respect of pricing time and time again. The hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) made proposals, as did my leader, but the government elected to ignore those proposals. We are facing a problem now, and I think we will be facing it for months to come, mainly in respect of pricing, and we face that problem because this government would not act when it had the opportunity and should have acted.

So, on the question of a crisis, the evidence has not been brought forward or made apparent. The government will have this bill enacted, but whether or not it will act on it is something we will have to wait to see. If events occur during the next few months in respect of petroleum prices, it will be interesting to watch this government to see whether and how it will act. I tell the minister now that we will be watching him very closely.

The government did have a remedy under the Export and Import Permits Act in respect of problems which existed in regard to bunker oil on the east and west coast. It also had remedies available under the National Energy Board Act. We indicated at the very beginning, over a month ago, that if it was found essential to move a very simple amendment to the National Energy Board Act it would have been accepted by this party. Such an amendment could have been moved to provide for the mandatory allocation and, if necessary, rationing of petroleum products. That could have been accomplished without all the ballyhoo in respect of these additional powers the government is seeking under this bill. Had the government wanted to take action this amendment would have been passed weeks and weeks ago, but the government saw fit not to take that action. It wanted the powers contained in this bill, and obviously it is going to get them.

The witness who appeared before the committee, the President of the Imperial Oil Company, said categorically, that the company liked this bill and wanted it because it gives them protection. In fact, it gives them the right to do what they have been doing in the past.

One sometimes wonders when reading the newspapers how many tankers are lying off the coasts of various countries waiting until prices reach a level that is acceptable to the companies. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) said the other day that, while Canada was not on the embargo list of Saudi Arabia, we were nevertheless not getting crude from that country. There are countries which are on the embargo list which are getting crude petroleum. One sometimes wonders to what extent this administrative crisis may have been contrived, partly by the government and partly by the large oil companies, for certain purposes. I cannot make any specific allegation, but we have all heard about the inquiries being instituted in the United States and other places to determine the effects this contrived crisis may have had on the prices of these petroleum products.

In any event, that is history. As far as Canada is concerned at the moment, it is my view that the evidence the minister has brought forward would support the suggestion that this crisis is something which now lies in the womb of history and has not yet come to light. In light of that, the government has created this Frankenstein bill.

Let me briefly sum up the powers this bill gives to the government at the instigation of the multinational oil companies, or perhaps I should say it is a creation resulting from the connivance of the socialists and those big multinational corporations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Just seeing these people as bedfellows should give us cause for concern.

Mr. Alexander: It is nauseating.

Mr. Baker: It is revolting.

Mr. Baldwin: In the matter of allocating gasoline and other petroleum products, when this bill is passed a board will be set up with dictatorial powers to control the manufacture, distribution and price of not only gasoline but hundreds and hundreds of articles and commodities only distantly related to petroleum, such as tars and plastic cups. The government, through this bill, is running roughshod over the Bill of Rights by taking away any effective opportunity to appeal from the despotic fiats of the board, not the corporations, as the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) hinted yesterday.

If that hon. member had read, as he should have, the amendment we offered he would have seen that it was restricted only to the right we attempted to provide those individuals injured by any action of the board under an order or regulation. This right was within fairly narrow terms, and was limited to individuals, such as proprietors of retail service stations and small co-ops who might have been injured. Those are the kind of people we were attempting to assist by giving them the opportunity for recourse if they suffered loss or damage because of what was done under this act. The government, with the help of the NDP, has struck that down. In addition, the government has insisted, with the NDP cheering them on, upon allowing the board to overrule any provincial rights with regard to the simple issue of contractual relationships which lie normally within their jurisdiction. It was with these things in mind that we fought to make this a better bill. We succeeded in a limited way and I am sorry we did not get further.

I want to say in conclusion that what we are dealing with here is a repetition of what I have seen in this House over and over again in the last six or seven years under this government, that is, a steady diminution of the powers of the legislative system and the handing over to the executive of powers which this House should be exercising. Every time we move, every bill we pass, every session we go through we find this repeated. All over the world the lights of parliamentary democracy flicker fitfully against the winds of excessive government power. It is bad enough when the takeover is open and blatant and leads to an obvious dictatorship, but the real danger lies more within the few countries like Canada which still maintain the appearance of the sovereignty of the legislature. As the sands of the hour-clock run down, they carry with them, parliament by parliament, session by session, bill by bill the remnants of control of the elected representatives as such, as contrasted with the arbitrary control of the executive namely, cabinet and bureaucracy.

Over the last ten years there has been hardly a statute that does not extend to governments, to the executive, additional and at times extreme arbitrary and uncontrolled right of decision-making. Any minor crisis is exaggerated into a major one and cheered on by the sychophantic elements in the media which support the government, and by small groups with special interests such as is the case with this bill. We find that the answer is more and more power to the cabinet. Today the political parliamentary coalition of the Liberal and New Democratic parties makes them more ideologically committed to the cause of more power to the executive, and it is left to this party and to those amongst the media who perceive the danger to attempt to halt the onrush.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: As a result, parliament has been weakened when it should be a significant influence in political life. Because of this, the political system is not able to permit the people, through their representatives, to adequately challenge bad legislative proposals. I expected it of the government, I expected it of the NDP, and in the last year or so I have come to expect it of the large corporations. I begin to find more and more that their interests lie in heavy domination and control by the executive. What saddens me to some extent is the way in which a number of other people who do not perceive this danger cheer on the government taking unto itself these powers. Let us not deceive ourselves: when you give this power to a government, it is not readily taken away.

For these reasons, while this bill is passing—it will become law when the other place has dealt with it—I wanted to use this opportunity to point out the dangers which I and my party see in the methods which have been adopted and in some of the terms of the bill which, without the safeguards which we have tried to secure, will become law probably some time today.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I want to say just a few things in respect of the proposals within this bill. I think the bill does not meet the real need for a Canadian policy on energy. I seeks to allocate one element in the Canadian power and energy equation. Equally important is another element, namely, electricity and how it is generated, by water power or by atomic energy. I wonder why, in its approach to this problem, the government takes the attitude in respect of oil that it can protect the needs of Canadians for that vital source of energy by the simple act of setting up a board which will allocate supplies. The government seems to believe that this is sufficient.

If I understood the minister correctly, he said that the internal price of oil will follow the export price, so that the price will be left to the international market. In the coming discussions with the provinces the government will attempt to influence or to manage the price at which the producer provinces will sell their oil. What we should be concerned about is an assurance by the government that we can supply the needs of Canadians in their homes, in their factories, in their farms and in their industries. I think that proposal which is before us does not meet that need.

If we really intend to meet the needs of Canadians we should look toward the ownership and control, for example, of the transmission system. If the multinational corporations which purchase fuel from the Middle East can decide somewhere in the Atlantic to turn a ship around and send it to a destination other than the United States or Canada, then I suggest they are the people who decide whether or not we in Canada will get our oil supplies. If the control of a ship decides who gets what is in the ship, then the control of pipelines and transmission lines surely decides who gets what runs through those transmission lines.

This bill does not propose to take over the transmission lines and say how we shall be supplied. I have heard no clear declaration by this government that they intend to build a transmission line across Canada that is wholly within Canada and under Canadian control. So long as our present oil pipeline flows through the United States it is not under our control; those agencies of the U.S. government which regulate oil pipelines will have partial control over our sources of energy and the flow of oil. I have heard no clear, sound statement from the government that it intends to do anything about that situation.

If we are to protect the interests of Canadians, one of our minimum requirements is a nationally-owned pipeline running within Canadian territory and under our control. That has not been provided and has not been suggested in the last few days of this debate. Somebody says it would take two years to build such a pipeline instead of extending the present pipeline through the United States. It is my experience of Canadians that if they want to do a thing, they can do it and within the requisite time limit. For anyone to suggest that we should allow our fiscal resources to be the deciding factor in whether or not we build such a pipeline is misleading the Canadian people. The only limiting factor is our own will, our own determination.

We should be in a position to say to Shaheen or Imperial Oil, "You will refine this much product, and we will have this much product available for Canadians." Again, the only way to do this effectively is by owning the tools of production. It has surprised me how willing the government has been to put pressure on Saskatchewan and Alberta who are within the Canadian family. It is very willing to do that—

An hon. Member: How about your own colleagues?

Mr. Gleave: —but the government is very reluctant to put the same kind of pressure on those who are outside the Canadian family and who have more control over our destiny through their ownership of sources of energy. It is they who control supplies in vital areas of Canada. Someone asked, how about us. The government of my province has shown a willingness and has even taken action to control energy and the distribution of energy in that province. We own the power lines, we own the gas lines, we own the distribution system.

Recently the province of Saskatchewan moved to control the oil industry. It set out six principles in its statement. The control of oil must be firmly vested in the people of Saskatchewan. Future supplies for Saskatchewan farmers and other users must be assured. Wholesale price increases in Saskatchewan must be limited to reflect the actual increase in production costs. The unearned windfall profits on sales of Saskatchewan crude outside the province, as well as future wellhead increases, should go to the people of Saskatchewan. Oil exploration must be stepped up. The province of Saskatchewan set out a clear policy—much clearer and much stronger, in the interests of its citizens, than the province of Alberta.

Mr. Paproski: I wouldn't say that.

Mr. Gleave: It doesn't surprise me a bit that a member from Alberta would not say that, but it happens to be a fact of life. What I am saying is that the federal government should be taking this kind of action.

I cannot support a measure which is as timid, ineffective, lacking in imagination and has so little concern for the future needs of Canadians as this bill. It is a timid, ineffective approach to the situation in which we find ourselves. Whether or not there is an emergency now, the cruel fact is that this does not depend on the government at all. The decisions are being made outside Canada, and even after this bill is passed they will still be made outside Canada. All this bill will enable the government to do is to spread the shortage around. It permits the government to put added pressure on the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. I suppose within the next few hours it will be passed and the government House leader will suggest that we recess for six weeks, leaving the government with these stupendous powers to spread the shortage around. That is what the government has sought. That is what it will probably be given by parliament. It now will have the right to spread the shortage around and to put pressure on the producing provinces to subsidize the rest of Canada.

The policy being implemented by this bill fails to give the government control of energy resources in Canada in those areas in which it has power to assume control. Instead, the government seeks to assume control of oil in Alberta and Saskatchewan. It does not propose to exercise power in the areas in which it has that right, the chief one being the transmission lines which run interprovincially. There it has the right to exercise power, but it does not propose to do so. Instead, it proposes to move back into areas where the provinces have their rights and powers. It proposes to move back into the area of natural resources. It has turned things completely around from the direction in which it should be acting on behalf of the Canadian people.

This is a divisive policy which will create friction across the country. The government should be taking action which will create unity. Instead it will divide the country. This is a timorous policy. The government does not have the courage to look at the whole situation on behalf of Canadians. Long ago most of Canada decided, with respect to electricity—which is a very important source of energy—that it was necessary for the people to own it. With few exceptions, this is how electricity is managed in Canada. But we see no action, no looking forward by this government, nor any realization that this source of energy which is oil is too important to be alienated from the control of the people of Canada exercised through their government.

● (1520)

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say a few words on the great measures that we are taking to give this country a system through which we can move all we need. We will be able to move our energy resources. We can undertake the development of our natural resources.

The previous speaker, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) said earlier that we ought to be masters in our own home, develop our resources, build the required oil pipelines. All these things ought to be the property of Canadians.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, on what basis we can say that the oil pipeline from Sarnia to Montreal will indeed be built by Canadians. Like many others, I wonder whether we have the technology, the materials, the steel, everything required to build that oil pipeline.

No one among us is concerned about materials or technology. I believe we have everything we need without importing technology from abroad.

Mr. Speaker, if we have everything we need, why be concerned? It is merely a decision and this decision must be taken here, in Parliament. It must be taken by the people who are responsible, that is the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the party leaders and other members. We are the responsible people. It is up to us to take this decision. We know that we have tremendous amounts of natural resources to develop.

If we build pipelines, we have to know whether or not we have the materials and the resources required. If we have all that, why hesitate to take the decisions?

Nobody is worried about the technical aspect. Mr. Speaker, nobody is worried about that! We know that if we get to work, since we have many unemployed in Canada, this can happen quickly. It is best for us to take the quickest action possible.

From what I know, it would be more practical to extend the pipeline from Sarnia to Montreal to serve our population, and to do this as soon as possible. If something else is needed later, if other action should be taken, we can then extend other pipelines in other directions to serve other areas.

But for the moment, Mr. Speaker, we must help develop the eastern provinces, and especially Quebec.

I was saying a moment ago that we had no concern whatsoever about carrying out these projects, except for the financial aspect. Everyone has neglected the financial side. But we are well aware, Mr. Speaker, that if we must depend upon big foreign financial institutions for financing these projects, then we will have to transfer our assets to them.

If we do so, Mr. Speaker, then we lose our titles of ownership. The owners will be the big financial institutions. We have in Canada a financial institution which would do the same thing. If we really wanted to be masters in our own homes and launch these projects for the benefit of Canadians, they should be financed by Canadian institutions.

That is the major problem, Mr. Speaker, and we will have to pay an eternal tribute to those institutions to which we will transfer our assets, pay for those projects perhaps seven, eight or ten times over and nearly never see the day when we can own them.

That is where we should intervene and what we should be dealing with. If it is physically possible to carry out the large projects that are necessary in Canada it should also be as easy to take the necessary means to finance them for the benefit of the people of Canada.

That is where we should intervene, where we should fight and carry out all our large projects through sound finance, appropriate finance, with the required financial means and at very low interest rates. The right hon. Prime Minister said in his speech the other day on this subject that he asked steel producers to provide their steel at cost price to build the pipelines. However, he will not ask high finance to provide the money at cost price. That is where we should intervene. If we do not have the necessary financial means, since this is an urgent matter, a public matter and an important one for Canadians we should have the courage to ask high financiers to provide the money at administrative cost. This way we could build and hope one day to own what we are building. In the present system we increase our debt as we build, we mortgage our new developments in addition to all other obligations contracted in the past.

It is nonsense to tolerate such a situation.

[English]

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on the third reading of Bill C-236, a bill which will give the government the power necessary to allocate oil and oil products in case of shortage anywhere in Canada. When we ask why this bill is necessary we shall find, as the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) suggested, that it is necessary because there has been lack of planning and lack of an over-all oil policy covering this country.

Advisers of the government, including advisers of the minister's department and also of the oil industry, are predicting a shortage of fuel supplies in eastern Canada of between 10 and 20 per cent this year. This bill is designed, in case shortages appear, to give the government power to allocate fuel so that nobody will go without. As the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar said, it will not solve our energy problems, it will merely spread the shortage around.

Why has the possibility of shortages arisen? One only has to look back a few years to the oil policy initiated in 1961 by the Conservative government of the day, under which Canada was divided into two energy regions, to see the reason. Those living east of the Ottawa Valley had to depend upon imported oil and those living west of the Ottawa Valley were supplied with oil from Alberta and Saskatchewan. The possibility of shortages in 1974 has arisen because Conservative and Liberal governments over the years have maintained that policy. If we had an oil pipeline bringing western oil to the eastern Canadian market, we would not have this problem. We would not have the problem of possible shortages, nor would we have the problem of higher prices facing the eastern consumer and, if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) has his way, higher prices facing the western consumer.

I know at this time the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) and the cabinet are studying the issue of extending the western oil pipeline to eastern Canada. I understand the Sarnia to Montreal route seems to have favour at the moment because it can be completed within two years, whereas an all-Canadian route would take much longer. If the Sarnia extension is built in order to get the oil to eastern Canada as soon as possible, I wish to remind the minister that because of its capacity that pipeline can only fulfil between one-quarter and one-third of the needs of eastern Canada.

If the pipeline is extended from Sarnia, from the point of view of time, and if we are really concerned about self-sufficiency and security of supply, we should at the same time be building in stages an all-Canadian route. The first part could be built from Sault Ste. Marie to Montreal. Another branch could be built from Winnipeg to Thunder Bay. During the shipping season, Great Lakes' tankers could be used to ship the oil from Thunder Bay to Montreal for stockpiling while construction of the route around the north shore of Lake Superior is continuing. If we had an all-Canadian route plus the Sarnia pipeline, we could begin to be self-sufficient with regard to oil and would not be held up to ransom for the high price of oil from the Middle East and Venezuela.

In order to be self-sufficient we have to go one stage further. The minister has not been clear about this. If we are to be self-sufficient in oil and have Canadian prices we must begin to cut back our oil exports to the United States. We currently export about one million barrels a day to the United States. Eastern Canada imports close to one million barrels a day. If we want to be self-sufficient we must cut back on exports and stage phases so that this policy can come to fruition.

From the point of view of the security of supply and self-sufficiency it is essential that an all-Canadian pipeline be built. I urge the minister to give very serious consideration to this matter. If we do not build a pipeline we will never solve the supply and price problems. Surely from the point of view of Canada's future energy needs and future economic development, it is essential that this country become self-sufficient and insulated from world prices.

This bill is only a short-term measure. When it comes into effect the act will last only two years. It is designed mainly to meet emergency situations. The Conservative Party has opposed this bill from the beginning, first using the argument that they did not think there would be a shortage and then, after they were embarrassed by figures presented by various officials and by the oil companies, adopted the tactic that the bill gives too much power to the government and for that reason they oppose it.

If we did not have this bill to deal with an anticipated emergency, what would be the alternative of the members of the Conservative Party? I have yet to hear how they would solve a shortage if it occurred. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) made a very good remark yesterday, that the art of governing is the art of anticipating. This government and its predecessors should long ago have anticipated the kind of situation in which we now find ourselves. For that reason the bill will have some use if an emergency does arise.

The New Democratic Party played a very constructive role in committee on this bill and a number of our suggestions were adopted. We supported the Conservative motion that once an emergency was proclaimed by the government, this House should have a say in that declaration from this point of view, that if the House of Commons negated the declaration it would cease forthwith. We had intended to move such a motion, and when the Conservatives moved it in committee we supported it. The minister accepted our suggestion that once an emergency was declared and the allocation program went into effect, monthly reports of the allocation board would be tabled in this House and referred to committee for further study. This is now part of the amended bill before us.

We also expressed concern about the ability of independent wholesalers to obtain fuel supplies during a period of shortage. An amendment has been incorporated in the bill whereby the government will, where feasible, make sure that independent wholesalers of petroleum products will be supplied if at all possible. We also supported the move to strengthen the provisions in the bill to safeguard the environment from sulphur dioxide pollutants. We proposed to change the existing clause. The hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), a Conservative member, brought forward a very good amendment respecting the environment and we supported it wholeheartedly. Also, there seemed to be in the bill an omission on the part of the government. The bill contains a clause which deals with giving the government power to ration fuel products if the situation reaches the stage where it is necessary to ration supplies. There was no reference to petroleum prices at the rationing stage. The idea put forward in this respect was also accepted.

The bill has the capability of dealing with an emergency from the point of view of shortfall. We think that is necessary. We hope it will not have to be used. We can only guarantee it will not have to be used if this government begins to institute a comprehensive oil policy. Such a policy means we must treat energy—oil, natural gas and other energy products—as a public utility in the way in which we now treat electricity. In other words, energy must come under public, or government, control. We would then not be at the mercy of the multinational oil companies which are manipulating world supply and price.

Until we have a national pipeline we should be buying our oil on a government to government basis. This is something the national petroleum company could do. We should not have to buy our oil from the multinational oil companies which use the technique, through their subsidiaries, of jacking up prices to Canadian consumers. I have pointed out in this House how Imperial Oil makes a profit by charging a higher price to the Canadian consumer. Imperial Oil is a subsidiary of the huge multinational oil company called Exxon. Exxon gets its oil from Creole Oil in Venezuela. During the sixties, Creole Oil was buying Venezuelan oil at $1.45 a barrel and selling it to Imperial Oil at $3 a barrel. They are all part of the same family called Exxon. The company is selling to itself, jacking up the price, and as a result the Canadian consumer is paying more.

We should not forget what it costs the oil companies to produce a barrel of oil. The cost of producing western Canadian oil, getting it out of the ground and to the wellhead, is approximately $1.53 a barrel. For many years it was about $1.28 a barrel. That oil is selling today for something over $4 a barrel, yet the Minister of Finance says it should be rising to the world price of $8, $10 or even $18 a barrel.

How can we tolerate this kind of consumer rip-off any longer? We can only tolerate this situation if we do nothing about it, and we can only do nothing about it if we continue to depend on these oil corporations for our oil imports. It seems to me we ought to change the direction of our policy, and that we can no longer allow the oil corporations to develop our energy resources. There is about 10 years' supply of conventional fuel left in the Alberta oilfields, and clearly we must bring the Athabasca oil sands into production.

I hear members of the Liberal and Conservative parties say we should still let the oil companies develop these vast reserves. How long will it take members of those parties to realize that if we do so we shall be continuing the policy of sell-out which has been characteristic of the history of oil production in this country? We must seize the initiative. The Canadian people are demanding that the resources which belong to them should be exploited by the people, for their use, at fair prices. To continue as we have in the past will only mean economic ruin. In my opinion, the bill before us amounts to an admission on the part of the government that past oil policies have failed. Now I ask them to realize their mistakes and bring forth a total oil policy incorporating the prospects of self-sufficiency in supply and fair prices for Canadian consumers.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary to make any extended remarks on third reading of this bill, but since I made the opening statement on behalf of my party when the minister moved second reading there are just a few comments I should like to make.

First, I should like to congratulate the members of the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works on the work they did in connection with this measure. I think the legislation is greatly improved as a result of the amendments the committee incorporated into it, and indeed as a result of the amendments which were approved by the House at the report stage.

I wish, however, to underline the comment made by my hon. friends from Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) and Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) by saying that no one should go away under any illusion that this bill constitutes an oil policy for Canada. Bill C-236 is a tool which is being given to the government to enable it to deal with an oil shortage emergency should it arise. It may never be used. Most of us hope it will never need to be used. In itself, it is not part of an oil policy. It is something which is waiting in the wings to be called to centre stage should certain eventualities arise. We are supporting it because we believe the people are entitled to protection in the event that an oil shortage arises.

I am surprised at the attitude taken by members of the Conservative Party who for weeks were shouting to high heaven about the danger of an oil shortage, and who now seem to protest at every stage because emergency legislation is being provided under which the government can deal with such a shortage should it occur. To my mind, it is inconsistent to complain constantly that the people of Atlantic Canada and Quebec will be in a very precarious position if imported oil were not available to them, while at the same time opposing legislation which would enable the present government or any other government to ensure that whatever oil supplies are available would be fairly distributed to all regions.

As a matter of fact, this legislation if it is put into effect will enable the government to do something which has never been done before, namely, to bring the multinational oil companies which operate in Canada under some type of control. Since the beginning of oil development in Canada there has never been any such control. The foreign-owned oil companies which operate in this country have determined the supply of oil, have manipulated the price of oil and have been able to milk the Canadian consumer at will. I have a strong suspicion that much of the opposition we have heard to this legislation arises because it will bring the oil companies under some type of government supervision and control in the event of an emergency.

I should like to point out that all the power which is contained in this legislation is power which is not given to the board but to the cabinet, and that every action taken by the board, every regulation it passes, every order it issues has to be approved by the governor in council. We are therefore justified in saying to the minister that he is the one who will be responsible to the House and the country for the manner in which the board exercises the tremendous powers which parliament has given to the cabinet. I hope the minister will see to it that these powers are exercised in an equitable manner.

I wish to reiterate what I said on second reading: there must be some protection for the independents and there must be some protection for the co-operative oil companies and refineries. The independents, and to a lesser extent the co-operatives, have had to depend on the largesse of the big oil companies. When oil was in plentiful supply the oil companies had no objection to letting the independents and co-operatives have some of their excess oil as spot oil. But when oil is scarce, then the oil companies will see to it that if anyone has to do without oil it is not the outlets controlled by the oil companies but the outlets that are independent or co-operatively controlled. I urge the minister to recognize that we look upon him as the person responsible for protecting the rights of the co-operatives and independents and to see to it that they get fair and equitable treatment.

This board will have on it a representative from the producing province of Alberta, a representative from Quebec, a representative from the oil companies and someone representing consumer groups. There will be no representative from the independents or co-operatives. I realize you cannot put everyone on the board, and I have a strong suspicion that the representative from Alberta and the representative from the oil companies will look at things in very much the same way. Consequently, it is quite possible that the co-operatives and the independent operators will be completely ignored, and unless the minister exercises his prerogative in cabinet the co-operatives and independents could be discriminated against, neglected and overlooked. I hope the minister will keep that in mind.

This legislation will, of course, be of great value if an emergency does arise. But as my colleagues and I have been seeking to stress this afternoon, this bill does not constitute an oil policy. We still have not had any clear statement from the government on a number of matters that we have been asking the government to clarify for some weeks. We still have had no statement either from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) or from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) as to what the government's intentions are with respect to price.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has been quoted in the press as saying that the price will probably double by midsummer and go up to $8 or $10 a barrel. The Minister of Finance says that the domestic price will be allowed to track the world price. We have had no clarification from the government as to what they intend to do about price, whether it will rise, by how much it will be allowed to rise, who is going to get the benefit of the rise, whether it will go into the pockets of the oil companies or into the treasuries of the federal and provincial governments concerned. The government ought to be giving this House that kind of information.

The government has talked a good deal about the plight of the people in the Atlantic provinces and in Quebec who at the present time are paying exorbitant prices because they are dependent upon imported oil from the OPEC countries. But we have had no statement from the government as to whether they intend to set up some type of marketing mechanism that will pool the oil and equalize the price across Canada, or whether there will be any subsidization of price for the people of the Atlantic provinces who are being hardest hit and who are least able to bear the burden of rising prices. I hope we will get some statement on those questions from the minister, if not today certainly as soon as the House reassembles.

I hope the minister will be making some statement before the House recesses regarding the route that is being selected for the construction of a pipeline to Montreal. My colleague from Sault Ste. Marie has already dealt with this matter, so there is no need for me to speak extensively about it except to say that this is a matter that demands immediate action. It is now over four months since the government gave its blessing to the idea of extending the pipeline. If the delay is entirely due to the fact that the government cannot make up its mind, then that is understandable. What is new about that? It has great difficulty making up its mind about most things.

If the difficulty lies in the fact that the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company is not prepared to co-operate and to act with dispatch, then the government ought to accept the responsibility of building the pipeline itself and put it under public ownership. As a matter of fact, I think the time is long overdue when we ought to bring the whole pipeline structure under public ownership. There is no excuse for delay. The government should be able to make the decision with respect to the route.

If the difficulty lies in the fact that the extension from Sarnia will carry only a limited amount of oil, then I think the suggestion that has been made by members on this side of the House and by members on the government side as well that we should build the short pipeline from Sarnia and then start work on a northern pipeline should be adopted.

I see you are about to rise, Mr. Speaker, so may I have the permission of the House to finish my few remarks? I shall take only a few minutes.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Douglas: I have dealt with the matter of price and with the matter of the pipeline. The third thing I want to say is that I was hoping that at some time in this debate, but before the House adjourns, we will get a statement from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on what the government's policy is respecting the development of Canada's oil resources so that the crisis we are now facing will be resolved in the long term.

I was appalled to read in this morning's Globe and Mail a statement attributed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp). In the course of accepting President Nixon's invitation to a conference on energy in Washington on February 11, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is quoted as saying that Canada has already extended an invitation to the United States to invest money in the development of the Alberta oil sands. I do not know whether that is government policy. It certainly has never been stated in this House as government policy. We in this party will want to know from the government whether or not it is government policy—and if the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is going to close the debate I hope he will tell us whether or not it is government policy.

However, there is no need to invite the United States or any other country to develop our oil sands. There will be sufficient financial return to the federal and oil producing provinces from the export tax and other charges to construct plants at a sufficient rate to develop the oil sands and to have oil onstream from the oil sands by the time our conventional oil resources are depleted.

These are the questions that disturb us, Mr. Speaker. We support the bill because it is necessary to have this power to deal with an emergency. But let no one deceive himself that the bill we are now about to pass will resolve the basic and fundamental problems that face this country with respect to the oil crisis. Those problems still have to be faced. We hope that when the House reassembles the government will bring down legislation to deal with the three points I have raised, namely, the question of price, the matter of the pipeline and the future development of our resources.

[Mr. Douglas.]

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Gleave: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ADJOURNMENT OF SESSION

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, earlier in the day the House was good enough to agree that I be given the opportunity to revert to motions later for the purpose of moving a motion for the adjournment of the session, under certain conditions, until February 26, 1974.

If I may seek the indulgence of the House to make a comment in respect of an understanding which has been reached as to the nature of the debate, or the lack thereof that may follow the putting of the motion, it has been agreed that if there is to be any speech at all it will not exceed ten minutes, and if there is to be more than one speech there will not be more than one by each party. I hope we will not have any speeches, but if any do take place they should not exceed ten minutes in length and should not exceed four in number. With the agreement of the House in that respect, I would put the motion.

Perhaps on the same point, as to the arrangements which have been made, I might mention that we have had discussions on a number of bills which have not been completed, and it might be the wish of the House to agree that the CNR financing bill and the parks' bill be reinstated at the report stage during the next session, at which point they now stand. This could be done by consent. With those understanding, Mr. Speaker, I would move the motion as follows—

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, may I just say, in respect of the understanding, that the minister is quite right. We in this party feel we should have about ten minutes, whether there are one or two speeches, to put forward our point of view regarding some of the matters that will be lost on the order paper and which cannot be reinstated but in respect of which there has been considerable work carried out. With about ten minutes for one or two short speeches, we are satisfied with the arrangement.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the minister is seeking the consent of the House to an agreement, or an order that there be no more than one speaker from each party. He did make reference in his preliminary remarks to the reinstatement of certain bills. I listened to the minister rather carefully. It might have assisted my position in respect of consent to the limitation on speeches if the minister had clarified his intention regarding the reference of the annual report of the Department of Fisheries and the Environment. He said he would give that matter some consideration before the adjournment. Had the minister made some reference to his views on that subject before asking us to deal with the question of limitation of the time and number of speeches, I would have been much happier.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I did undertake to consider that matter with the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis), but before I had a chance to talk with him he left the city and I have not had that consultation. I am not sure that, were the reference made, hon. members would be ready to sit during the adjournment, but I certainly would indicate to my hon. friend, if it will help, that in the resumed session I will be ready to reconsider the matter he has raised today and consult in good faith in an effort to accommodate the wishes of hon. members.

Mr. Barnett: Perhaps I might just say another word or two on that same point. The minister has said he is willing to give further consideration to this matter. We have often been told by ministers that it is not the minister who decides what the committee shall do. My second point is that if the minister could go a step further in assuring us he will give the matter consideration, by making a firm commitment to the House that he is prepared to make an immediate reference of that report to the committee at the beginning of the next session, I would be much happier with that than the undertaking he has given.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, on that point I might say there will be a number of understandings reached which will depend upon our good faith. Certainly I have no hesitation in telling my hon. friend that I will undertake to ensure that the committee will have the opportunity to deal with the matter he has mentioned, in one way or another.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Just for clarification, Mr. Speaker, would the minister indicate whether in fact it is his understanding that Bill S-4, the parks' bill, will be reinstated at the report stage in the new session?

Mr. MacEachen: That is my understanding, Mr. Speaker. It is my understanding that, with consent, these bills would appear at the report stage in the new session and hon. members can move whatever amendments they wish at that stage.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I would like to come back very briefly to the statement made a while ago by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). I think he is right: we could use these few minutes to make some comments, if I understood him correctly. Of course, several bills are still pending. Several subjects have not yet been examined. I believe it rarely happens that so many subjects remain to be dealt with at the end of a session. In my opinion, the opposition is not too much to blame for this. For instance, I can mention government order No. 19, which was tabled on January 17, 1973, and which has not yet been debated. I think that the government has decided instead to simply withdraw Bill C-225. I believe that important amendments should be made to the Unemployment Insurance Act. As soon as the next session starts, the government should table another bill to correct the weaknesses of this act.

[English]

Mr. Muir: For the purpose of clarification, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should pose a couple of questions and ask for the advice of the House leader, particularly in respect of the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts which was tabled a couple of days ago.

At the moment, the vice-chairman has on the order paper a notice of motion for concurrence, as do I. I was wondering whether, in view of the fact the committee carried out some excellent work in arriving at a unanimous report, agreed to by all members of all parties under the excellent chairmanship of the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart), the minister would indicate what will happen to that report. Perhaps with the unanimous consent of the house a motion for concurrence could be agreed to now.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of motions for concurrence in committee reports that could be moved in the course of this session. My hon. friend knows as well as I do that if the session ends, all that is on the order paper ends unless special provision is made to reinstate the bills in the new session. I want to make it clear that while I appreciate the importance of the subject matter and I agree with some conclusions in the report, I do not feel ready to agree that we can reinstate all the motions for concurrence in committee reports to be dealt with in the new session. I think the committee did a good job, the results are good and I think they will have a good effect.

Mr. Muir: There is another point of order on which I would like further clarification. I appreciate the comments of the minister, but if the report dies in this session of parliament, what will become of the ten hearings that were held? Can we consider this work to have been a joke or a farce? We heard delegations from many ethnic groups from all over this country who appeared before the committee. Is this to be all for nought? Are the many hours spent by the members of the committee, from all parties, who worked very assiduously, of no purpose? Is this the end of it, and nothing more can happen; or is there an arrangement whereby this committee report can be reintroduced when the new session starts? I believe the President of the Privy Council wishes to reply.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have anything further to add. When the new session starts there will be a new ball game. The hon. member has many ways in which he can bring things forward, and he can certainly make an effort again. On this particular subject I will be right with him.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, unlike the point made by the former speaker, there were negotiations with respect to the third report of the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices. I believe we could have a motion to concur without debate, and I am wondering when that may be put.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we should try to proceed with some kind of order. We have heard a proposal by the President of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada (Mr. MacEachen)—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: —and while considering the motion hon. members have introduced many matters which are perhaps somewhat foreign to the motion which should be put. My understanding is that a certain agreement has been entered into between representatives of different parties, and subject to this agreement and this being made an order of the House, the minister's motion can be put.

There is one matter about which there is some uncertainty. The minister said that there would be a maximum of one speech for each party, for a total of ten minutes. The hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) spoke of "about ten minutes". My experience with the word "about" in this House is that it is very uncertain, and that "about ten minutes" might turn out to be a long ten minutes. So that we do not get involved in difficulty, I hope we will clarify whether it is ten minutes or "about" ten minutes, with regard to the duration of speeches on this subject.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, speaking only to the request of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) for a time limit on this debate, may I suggest that the modification proposed by the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) is acceptable. In other words, we would be prepared to agree to a House order that the debate on this motion be limited in the sense that each party would be limited to a total of ten minutes. Therefore, if I speak for one minute, one of my colleagues might speak for the other nine.

Mr. Speaker: Am I to assume that there are only eight minutes left for the hon. member's party?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Before putting the minister's motion, I am wondering what will be the situation in relation to the point raised by the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen), because if we have a 30-minute debate and the motion is put and carried, it might be late at that point for the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton to do what he wishes to do, unless he wishes to do it all alone in the House. Perhaps there might be a clarification of this point before the motion is put by the Chair.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think the point you have raised is a considerable one, because I had intended to ask the House to pass government order No. 82, which is to send a certain subject matter to committee. If my motion is carried, we will adjourn. Perhaps the House at this point could be irregular and agree to consider, before we proceed to the adjournment motion, whether the chairman of the Committee on Trends in Food Prices could put his motion, and then consider whether I could put my motion on government order No. 82. Then we could put the motion to adjourn. Perhaps we could agree to that.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I would agree to doing that if there were agreement to allow me to put a request similar to that proposed by the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen).

Mr. Speaker: Apparently there is not agreement; therefore the motion to adjourn will be put.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: My understanding is that the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) indicated that he wanted these motions to be put if his were put. This would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Nielsen: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, the way I understood the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark), all he wanted to do was seek consent to put a motion, to have one at a time. We are prepared to deal with the motion of the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) now, give consent to it and then go on to the motion of the hon. member for Rocky Mountain.

Mr. Speaker: There should also be some guidance as to whether there is to be a debate on these motions if they are put.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may at least try to be helpful. I believe it is fair to say that the motion of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) was drafted with the thought that it might be presented before we had finished the debate on Bill C-245. Now that we have finished that debate and passed the bill, Your Honour is perfectly right that if we pass this motion it would order an immediate adjournment.

Therefore I wonder, if before we have this debate of ten minutes per party, we could deal with two or three things that we have agreed upon, such as the request of the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen), and so on. Your Honour is also aware of a point of privilege that I said I would like to raise. Perhaps we could do those two or three things now and then have this short debate, at the end of which we could adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TRENDS IN FOOD PRICES

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton) moved that the third report of the Special Committee on Trends in Food Prices, presented to the House on Friday, December 14, 1973, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

PROVINCIAL REPRESENTATION IN HOUSE OF COMMONS—REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the discussions that have already taken place, perhaps we could call government order No. 82 which would refer to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections the question of the system of re-adjusting representation in the House of Commons. I therefore move:

That the system of re-adjusting representation in the House of Commons, including the method of determining the number of members for each province established by section 51 of the British North America Act, be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Motion agreed to.

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

CONCURRENCE IN SEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That the seventh report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, presented to the House unanimously on Monday, December 10, 1973, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member the unanimous consent of the House to propose this motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

MRS. J. S. WOODSWORTH

CONGRATULATIONS ON REACHING ONE-HUNDREDTH BIRTHDAY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, for some time I had been hoping and planning to make a brief statement on a matter which I think will interest hon. members, and which I had planned to make this coming Monday, January 14. In view of the fact that when we pass the motion we are about to debate we shall adjourn and probably not be sitting on Monday, I ask the indulgence of the House to say a few words now in lieu of what I had wanted to say on Monday.

It just so happens, Mr. Speaker, that on Monday, January 14, Mrs. J. S. Woodsworth will be 100 years old.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As older members of the House will be aware, Mrs. Lucy Woodsworth is the widow of the late J. S. Woodsworth, the founder of the CCF, the former leader of our party, who was the member of this House for Winnipeg North Centre from 1921 until the time of his death in 1942. Mrs. Woodsworth was also the mother-in-law of the late Angus MacInnis who for many years was a member of this House from the city of Vancouver. Mrs. Woodsworth is also the mother of the very charming and distinguished member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I apologize to my hon. friend and colleague for not having told her that I was going to raise this matter. I felt that if I did she would have asked me not to do so, although I believe I could persuade her that on such an occasion the members of this House would like to pay tribute to Mrs. Woodsworth who in her own right, even apart from her relationship to three distinguished members of parliament, has been a remarkable person.

Some of us have known her for a number of decades, and all of us who are aware of the part she played in raising the Woodsworth family, the part she played in helping her husband in the difficult years when he was getting this movement started, feel very warm in our affection toward Mrs. Woodsworth. Not only did she perform the role of a person who was helpful to others, but she herself was active in many causes and movements in days when those causes were not so popular.

It is good to know that such a person has lived a full century and has been able to see the realization of so many things that she and her late husband believed in and worked to achieve. I regret to say that Mrs. Woodsworth's health now is not as good as we would like it to be, but I understand that at St. Vincent's Hospital here in Ottawa, where she now stays, on Monday afternoon in the auditorium there will be a gathering in her honour. It starts at two o'clock, and thanks to the fact that the House will not be sitting that day I shall have the pleasure of being there.

In any case, I thought it was appropriate that there be placed on the record of the House of Commons, on the eve of January 14, 1974, this tribute to a remarkable and gracious woman who was born in Ontario on January 14, 1874.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ADJOURNMENT OF SESSION

Mr. Speaker: I presume that hon. members at this point would want me to put the motion in the name of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen).

Mr. MacEachen moves:

That, when the House adjourns following the passage of Bill C-236, an act to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada, and to amend the National Energy Board Act, it shall stand adjourned until a time to be fixed by Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the government, when the House may meet for the purpose of dealing with any subsequent proceeding on or the giving of royal assent to Bill C-176, an act to amend the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Official Secrets Act, Bill C-203, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act, the Broadcasting Act and the Income Tax Act in the respect of election expenses, Bill C-236, an act to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada, and to amend the National Energy Board Act, Bill C-245, an act to impose an oil export tax under the Excise Tax Act and to allocate certain of the revenues derived from the oil export tax and any other bills.

That, after the giving of royal assent to the said bills or in the event the House does not meet for that purpose, the House shall be adjourned or stand adjourned, as the case may be, until February 26, 1974, provided that at any time prior to that date if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time;

And that, in the event of Mr. Speaker's being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of committees shall act in his stead for the purpose of reconvening the House.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I intend to take hardly any time to speak on this motion. It provides that the House will be available to deal with any bills that must be given royal assent, that the Speaker will determine when the House will meet for royal assent, whether it be early or late next week, and that following that event the House will stand adjourned until February 26. I feel that that period of recess is justified in light of the length of the present session which began more than a year ago.

The only other point I would like to make is that we have completed a good number of items on the order paper. In the list of bills that I wanted passed this session there still remain three bills, the parks act bill, the CNR bill and the Canada Pension Plan bill. I have had discussions with representatives of the other parties, and in order to ensure that the work which has already been done in committee and in the House of Commons will not be permanently lost it has been agreed that at the beginning of a new session, with the consent of hon. members, we would put forward two of these bills, the parks' bill and the CNR bill, at the report stage. Hon. members would have the opportunity at that time to put report stage amendments and to have them considered.

Under that arrangement the work already done would be protected and hon. members would be free to continue the debate on this stage. I appreciate this being made possible and that the House of Commons has been prudent enough to protect its own labours in the future. That is all I wish to say, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) in his statement did not mention the commitment the government made to various Canadian citizens with regard to Bill C-190. I wonder if the minister would indicate the status of that bill.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, the government has brought forward that bill and we have put it before the House several times. It has been my wish to have the bill completed. Certainly the bill, or its provisions, hopefully, will be brought forward in a new session of parliament. I must say that I had considered asking the House to treat this bill in precisely the same way as the two aforementioned matters, but I was not confident that my proposition would be accepted.

An hon. Member: Now is the time to try.

Mr. MacEachen: If hon. members want to pass the bill, I would try that too.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of regret to me that so many motions for concurrence in committee reports must die on the order paper. I refer particularly to the motion standing in my name at the foot of the list on page 4 of today's order paper, and to the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark).

Of greater concern to us is Bill S-4. A moment ago the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) said that the bill is to stand in the same place on the order paper. May I draw to his attention that on Thursday the House leader of the opposition offered, with the support of the NDP, to pass that bill through all stages without debate on Thursday. A motion was moved this morning by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain asking the House to do the same thing.

There is no need for the bill to be delayed. It could be passed and should have been passed by the House before the recess. On Thursday, when the opposition House leader offered to have the bill pass all stages, it was the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) himself who shouted "No" across the aisle, thus withholding his consent.

We are in this unique situation: the only obstacle to passage of Bill S-4 is the petulance and stubbornness of the minister in whose name this bill stands. That bill would provide for the establishment of eight new parks in the Yukon, the Northwest Territories and other parts of Canada. It was given extensive consideration in the Senate and in this House. The committee sat overtime to facilitate early consideration at the report stage in the House. Both this House and the other place passed amendments to improve the bill. So the blame for this bill not passing rests squarely on the shoulders of the minister. I cannot understand stubbornness such as he, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) and other ministers have displayed during this session.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): The hon. member must have a guilty conscience.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) suggests that I have a guilty conscience. Nothing can be further from the truth, as the opposition House leader on Thursday offered to co-operate—

An hon. Member: Be brief.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, I will be short. I have spoken about the bill and also about my own motion. I am sorry the House did not have the opportunity to deal with it this session. If it had been dealt with, it would have meant a great leap forward in responsible government in the Yukon and in the Northwest Territories. I wish the matter had been dealt with, particularly since it received the unanimous support of all parties in the standing committee when they visited my riding in the Yukon. When this matter comes forward again in the next session, I will look forward to the same unanimity in support of a similar motion which will again be put before the House.

I will not speak for long because my colleague for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) may wish to make a few remarks. I am disappointed in what has happened during this session. I feel that we are now burdened with a greater rate of taxation in the country than we have experienced in our history. The cost of living is the highest in our history. The cost of food and of other essentials in our society has gone sky-high. The rate of inflation is greater than it has ever been in our history.

While all these sad events have been occurring, we have seen a completely disorganized and discredited treasury bench fumbling and bumbling and trying to find its way out of a mess of its own creation. They have been doing this since January 4 last year, and in the process stealing the NDP blind so far as policy is concerned. I do not know which party is further to the left now; I suspect it is the government party. In addition, we have seen them pilfering from the policy chest of the Conservatives.

I look forward to a much more original session, a session in which we shall see to a much greater extent a return to Liberal principles—assuming that party has any principles left—in legislation brought forward. Specifically, I shall expect the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to make announcements during the recess concerning the welfare and well-being of the people of the north, and in the process perhaps even disclose some of the items which will be unveiled in the Speech from the Throne. I hope he will go the whole way, do everything the standing committee recommended—I do not know if he has read that report—and meet in full the request that has been made by the elected representatives of the people in the north.

There being not much time left, and as the hon. member for St. John's East may wish to speak, I shall resume my seat.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I see that the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) is not seeking the floor. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in a few words may I say that the motion now before us in the name of the Presidnet of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) was arrived at by discussion among the House leaders of the four parties, and we support it. There is no need to spell it out at length, particularly as I promised to confine my remarks in case my colleague who is a few seats away from me wants to say a few words. I should like, however, to confirm the agreement among the House leaders with regard to the CN financing bill and the national parks bill. We are prepared to agree that in the new session both these bills are to be put on the order paper as at the report stage.

The only other word I wish to say is that, although at this time of a session we are always anxious to list our favourite subjects and express the hope that something will be done about them before we meet again, I shall confine myself to just two observations. I hope by the time we come back that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), or the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), or both of them, will have done something about a thorough study of railway pensions so that those pensions will be put on a proper basis.

I also hope—I see my good friend the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) looking at me, hoping I am about to say what I am going to say—that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) will have done something by the time we come back to extend the deadline with respect to the Veterans Land Act.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say only a few words at the conclusion of this long session which has lasted 204 days. This adjournment is welcomed by all members. I will make a few comments at the end of this session and recall some of the problems we have met.

I have observed, as did many members and the public I think, that during the past year this government has lost the fight against inflation. Cost of living has kept increasing in a most harmful way for consumers. Unemployment is still much too high and local initiative projects undertaken this winter, but in a different manner from last year, have created more discontent than satisfaction. In my own constituency, more than 90 projects have been submitted, but about 15 only have been accepted. Mr. Speaker, the hopes created by the Local Initiatives Program have therefore led to some dissatisfaction.

At the very end of the year there were lengthy discussions about a so-called energy crisis and in all the debates that the government had both in this House and before television cameras it managed to spread discomfort across Canada.

The public is becoming increasingly aware that that crisis exists only through the decision of multinational corporations which control the world and governments. In the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I think the Canadian public will regret this session because it did not give the Canadain public everything it hoped for although some improvements were made in the field of social security, and even though certain categories of people were left out. I am thinking, for example, about the disabled, those who still have the same allowances to survive that they had a year or two ago.

The cost of living increased for those people as for everyone else. So the government should at the very beginning of this year 1974, especially the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), have serious discussions with provincial governments so that the disabled will be relieved of the burden they are now supporting. Like everyone else those people are entitled to an honest existence, and Canada can give it to them.

Although I for one would have preferred the parliamentary recess to come up during the summer instead of the winter I make the wish that during those few weeks of adjournment members will take this occasion to meet with their voters, as I will be doing, and find out their views, their needs, their wishes so as to be able to make them known to the House during the next session.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, because of the co-operation we have had recently I would ask that some consideration be given to a proposition that I have made for a number of years, namely, that we run our business on a much more organized basis, including a four-year term of parliament with regular breaks and regular periods of recess. I certainly endorse the opinion of the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) that if there is to be an extensive break it should be at a more suitable time of the year. I am pleased with the co-operation that has taken place toward this end. It may well be we will be here for four years with a minority government. If so, we should work at achieving the greatest possible accomplishments.

I think a great deal of credit for the ability to co-operate in this House goes to the government House leader. We have had House leaders who have done a very good job of dividing this House, but this House leader has been very honest in his negotiations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: He has often been tough, but never devious, not even to the extent of using the words "proroguing parliament" yesterday rather than considering a recess with the ramifications some of us knew about prior to 1968.

I suggest that consideration be given to another form of co-operation that can take place. I echo the sentiment of a number of members, namely, that when after long deliberations a committee has made a decision, that decision should not be allowed to die because a session has ended. If the ending of a session always produces the effect of killing all the work the committees have done, all the representations that have been made and all the work up to but not including the conclusion, then really all that work which members do in committee is lost.

This system has progressed gradually for the past five or six years. We have now reached the stage where there is considerable co-operation. With the exception of one committee in which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) was involved when we were discussing agricultural stabilization, there has been a degree of co-operation that is worth while and is certainly in the best interests of this country. By cutting off all agreements, decisions and representations that have been made in committee we are probably losing something in our committees' system, namely, the co-operation we have witnessed in the past few days.

I suggest we give serious consideration to formalizing some of those decisions rather than using the obsolete methods we now use; that is, instead of having to set down a notice of motion to move concurrence in a report, the committee reports be put together into one final committee report, and concurrence given so that the decisions of the committees might be brought before the House for action by the government. This would be preferable to seeking a general agreement which allows some to be brought forward and prevents others from being brought forward because certain members are not as vocal as others.

I suggest to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) that he should give consideration to formalizing the reporting structure of the committees which is really a cosmos, if that is the right word, of the whole House in these various fields. I believe good and conscientious work has been done in the committees in the main, and if we cannot find some way of relating that work to what we do in this chamber, a method more effective than any we have found so far, much of this work is bound to be lost and all the co-operation and effort which has gone into the work of the committees will go for nothing.

To my mind, serious consideration should be given to this proposal in the spirit in which the various House leaders have been co-operating during the last two or three days. We must ensure that the work of the committees is not left in abeyance during the period after a motion to adjourn or to take a recess has been passed. A method must be found to ensure that these reports do not die on the order paper but are brought before parliament by some suitable means.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Before putting the question or submitting the motion of the hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) to the House, may I remind hon. members that they are invited to Room 16. I shall be pleased to greet them and to wish them a pleasant parliamentary recess, a useful and fruitful stay with their families and among their electors.

[English]

Motion (Mr. MacEachen) agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the order made this day, the House now stands adjourned to meet again at a time to be fixed by the Chair, after consultation with the government, for the purpose of dealing with any subsequent proceeding on Bill C-236 and for the giving of royal assent to certain bills.

At 4.55 p.m. the House adjourned to the call of the Chair, pursuant to special order made this day.

APPENDIX "A"

THE PRIME MINISTER'S ADDRESS AT THE INSTALLATION OF JULES LÉGER AS GOVERNOR GENERAL OF CANADA
OTTAWA, JANUARY 14, 1974

Excellence,

J'ai le plaisir et l'honneur de vous offrir les meilleurs vœux du gouvernement, du Parlement et de la population du Canada au moment où vous assumez la lourde charge de Gouverneur général. Puis-je demander respectueusement à Votre Excellence que son premier geste officiel soit d'adresser à Sa Majesté la Reine du Canada un message lui exprimant le loyalisme et l'attachement du peuple canadien.

Dans son célèbre ouvrage sur la constitution anglaise, Walter Bagehot définissait le rôle de la Couronne en ces termes: «Le Souverain a trois droits: le droit de conseiller, le droit d'encourager et le droit de mettre en garde. Il n'en faut pas plus à un monarque sage et éclairé.» Je suis sûr que Votre Excellence voudra exercer pleinement ces droits, et je m'en réjouis d'avance car le gouvernement ne saurait trouver conseiller plus avisé que vous.

The Governor General, like the Sovereign, is the symbol of our unity as well as an agent of its preservation. He is also the symbol and agent of the continuity of our governmental process. Excellency, your experience and accomplishments, at home and abroad, eminently suit you for this role.

As a diplomat, you have had difficult and demanding assignments; they have been accompanied at times by frustration and disappointment. But you have always carried your diplomatic tasks to success, because of your patience and your wisdom. At home, as Undersecretary of State, you helped to evolve national policies designed to ensure that our two official languages could truly thrive; that our many cultures could truly flourish; that our identity as individuals—and as a nation—could find strength and fulfillment in our arts and culture. These efforts have helped to give Canadians a greater knowledge of each other, and to give the world a greater knowledge of Canada.

You assume your high office at a time when world headlines are dominated by an energy crisis, and there is widespread concern about food supply shortages, and about serious threats to our natural environment. I believe these very alarums and shortages have helped convince millions of us that squandering our material resources is not a luxury of our way of life—but a threat to it. For that very reason, I believe that these are hopeful times, since by shattering a consumer society's illusion of unlimited quantity, events such as the energy crisis encourage each of us to turn away from the sometimes mindless scramble for "more" toward the more humane impulse for "better", to turn away from our traditional North American concern with the technologies of "conquering" nature to the joys of living in respectful harmony with nature.

Your Excellency, at a time of increased doubt about material things, you have by your vast culture, your intellect and devoutness, shown the undiminished value of the things of the mind and spirit. I hope you will share these qualities with all Canadians, and will want Government House to be what your home has always been—a place of intellectual and cultural excellence, a home for the arts and for the spirit.

Je vous connais comme un homme d'une grande intégrité, d'une délicatesse et d'une générosité profondes. Même en des périodes de tension et d'intense activité, vous avez toujours su conserver votre calme et votre sérénité, votre capacité d'émerveillement et votre humour indulgent et subtil. Et la sagesse qui est la vôtre, vous avez toujours su la communiquer. Les Canadiens ont très favorablement accueilli votre nomination au poste de représentant personnel de Sa Majesté, et je suis persuadé que leur estime et leur affection pour vous s'accroîtront à mesure qu'ils vous connaîtront mieux. Vous pourrez compter, dans l'exercice de vos nouvelles fonctions, sur l'appui de votre épouse, une femme si chaleureuse, spirituelle et bienveillante. A vous, Madame, nous offrons l'hommage de notre respect, ainsi que nos meilleurs vœux.

Excellence, voilà plus de trois décennies que vous servez le Canada. Nous vous sommes reconnaissants d'avoir bien voulu accepter les lourdes charges du poste auquel vous accédez aujourd'hui. Nous savons que vous remplirez vos fonctions avec tout le zèle et la distinction que l'on vous connaît, et nous souhaitons que votre mandat soit pour vous une source de fécondes satisfactions.

SPEECH OF HIS EXCELLENCY
THE RIGHT HONOURABLE JULES LÉGER
AT HIS INSTALLATION AS GOVERNOR GENERAL OF CANADA,
OTTAWA, JANUARY 14, 1974

J'aurai l'honneur de transmettre à notre gracieuse Souveraine le message d'attachement que vous m'avez confié. Les voyages au Canada de la famille Royale se font plus simples et plus intimes depuis quelque temps, plus liés à notre vie de tous les jours. Ainsi, nous serons heureux d'accueillir, tôt après leur mariage, la Princesse Anne et son mari le Capitaine Phillips, qui passeront quelques jours à Ottawa bientôt.

Cette simplicité dont j'ai parlé reflète avec fidélité les transformations qui s'opèrent dans nos relations avec la Couronne. La symbolique de la couronne en effet est devenue aussi multiple que les membres du Commonwealth et les régions qui les composent, chacune y étant liée de façon particulière, mais chacune y trouvant cependant raison de communauté. Derrière les symboles, derrière cette terminologie, que d'aucuns peuvent trouver désuète, se cache une réalité, un système politique que nous avons façonné à notre guise, qui est devenu notre chose, et qui répond à nos besoins.

My wife and I have been deeply touched, Prime Minister, by your most cordial welcome, offered as it was on behalf of all Canadians, for we can succeed in the mission to which we are dedicating ourselves today only insofar as we are able to rely on the support of all, and on the aid of Providence. We shall seek out that support among all those who have a hand in the vast, richly colourful, yet unfinished tapestry that is Canada.

We shall begin by making brief visits to all the Provincial capitals and later we shall retrace our steps in a more deliberate manner, visiting each of the provinces and territories as occasions arise to which we can lend completeness and a sense of historical continuity, for the office of Governor General symbolizes the stability of our national life and the permanence of our institutions.

Dans une lignée historique sans brisure, Samuel de Champlain fut, de fait, le premier Gouverneur de ces territoires, surtout de cette vallée de l'Outaouais qu'il traversa en 1613. Depuis lors, 63 Gouverneurs ou Gouverneurs généraux se sont succédé. Leur autorité a varié, certes, de même, d'ailleurs, que le territoire relevant de leur juridiction. Venus de France, puis de Grande-Bretagne, et enfin du Canada, ils ont participé d'une façon ou de l'autre à l'édification du pays, chacun y apportant sa pierre, aucun en se rendant bien compte de la grandeur de l'édifice en construction. Non plus d'ailleurs que toute cette lignée de gens simples et dignes du Québec, dont nous sommes, ma femme et moi, fidèles depuis les débuts à leur patrie, n'en ayant aucune autre, n'en cherchant aucune autre. Gens de terre et de mer, d'église et de négoce, auxquels je rends un hommage ému, car sans eux, sans leur courage et leur ténacité, le Canada d'aujourd'hui ne serait pas. Leur vie quotidienne et paisible se passa le long du grand fleuve qui porta leurs ancêtres, et où se joua leur destin.

Nor do I forget the masters with whom I have been privileged to work—some of them equal to the very greatest—and the colleagues whose cooperation has always been unstinting and their friendship wholehearted during the more than 30 years that I have shared their hopes and anxieties in public service. Through war and peace, through negotiation and reconstruction, Canada played her part during a generation in which the world found a new equilibrium and this country a new place. These were proud days for Canada's representatives abroad. Has it really been only by chance that the four Canadian Governors General have been chosen from among their ranks, or is it rather because they have shared the common denominator of national prides?

But already times have changed; we find ourselves in another age, whose contours we cannot fully perceive. Our western civilization is floundering, exhausted, because of a number of paralysing contradictions: generations that confront one another in mutual non-recognition; insecurity amid plenty; poverty amid wealth; a traditional morality that is being shaken and replaced by a yearning for primitive purity; acts of violence by some who shun violence; space-age communications at a time when major political groupings are tending more and more towards regionalism.

In some parts of the world, the consumer society is losing momentum; in some, it is not a factor, and in some, it has become a tyrannical force. A process of change is under way; new values are emerging that have already made themselves felt here, particularly among the young. For it is at once our strength and our weakness that Canada is a crossroads, her people open to influences from many directions.

We have been the first—and in many ways the only—people to be affected in a deep and lasting fashion by the three major currents of contemporary thought and genius: The English, the French and the American. Each in turn has formed and in some respects deformed us. In the past we have had to yield to them, because the strength to resist was not forthcoming in a young and scattered people, disunited and hungry for new technology. But now we have the strength, the numbers and the self-confidence to choose what suits us, to assimilate it and give it originality, thus creating a civilization of many cultures—the only kind that can survive—as we learn that we need very little gasoline to explore the highways of the soul.

Dans cette perspective, que pouvons-nous souhaiter aux quelque 985 enfants qui naîtront dans ce pays ce 14 janvier 1974, et qui se joindront aux 25 millions de Canadiens de 1980? Des paysages propres, aux eaux limpides, des villes accueillantes et laborieuses, un milieu fraternel où l'homme a retrouvé sa vraie place, la première, au centre de la création, et ce, dans un pays uni et prospère, dans un monde de justice et de paix. Si, au cours des quelques années qui viennent, nous pouvons être associés, ma femme et moi, à une telle œuvre, ne fût-ce que modestement, nous saurons que notre mission n'a pas été vaine. Avec vous, nous aurons fait notre dur et incessant métier de Canadien. Et toujours, au cours de cette mission, nous aurons à l'esprit la question de Paul l'Apôtre: Qui t'a donné une supériorité sur les autres? Par quoi te distingues-tu? Si tu as tout reçu gratuitement, pourquoi t'en vanter, comme si tu l'avais acquis par tes propres efforts?

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that a communication has been received, which is as follows:

Ottawa, February 21, 1974

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Honourable Bora Laskin, P.C., Chief Justice of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the chamber of the Senate at 2 p.m. on Tuesday, February 26, for the purpose of proroguing the first session of the twenty-ninth parliament of Canada.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
André Garneau
Brigadier General
Administrative Secretary
to the Governor General.

A message was delivered by Major A. G. Vandelac, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, it is the desire of the Right Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General that this honourable House attend him immediately in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

Whereupon the Deputy Governor General was pleased to close the first session of the twenty-ninth parliament of Canada with the following speech.

[English text]

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

The First Session of the Twenty-ninth Parliament was opened on January 4, 1973. Since that time many events of great significance to Canada and to the world have taken place and you have responded by legislating and otherwise approving many actions of the highest importance.

Canadians were pleased during this Session that Her Majesty the Queen and His Royal Highness, the Duke of Edinburgh, twice came to Canada.

They assisted in the celebrations of the Centenary of the entry of Prince Edward Island into Confederation, the Centenary of the founding of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the Tercentenary of Kingston. They were also present in Ottawa for the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting.

Canadians were honoured to have been host to the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting this summer when the contribution to world understanding of this association was once more underlined.

International affairs generally played an important rôle in this Session. When a major international effort had brought some hope of peace to Viet-Nam, Canada agreed to take part, with reservations, in a new truce supervisory exercise. Although we withdrew when it became clear that our membership in the I.C.C.S. could no longer serve a constructive purpose, our brief participation helped to stabilize a fragile cease-fire which in turn allowed for an exchange of prisoners of war and the withdrawal of American Combat forces.

Following the renewal of hostilities in the Middle East, Canada again accepted an invitation to participate in a peacekeeping mission. Canada's commitment to détente has been evident also in our active participation in the conferences on European security and cooperation and on Mutual Balanced Force Reductions.

In October the Prime Minister paid an official visit to the People's Republic of China. His visit was the first of a Canadian Prime Minister to that country and came on the second anniversary of the exchange of diplomatic recognition between Canada and China. Negotiations and discussions with Premier Chou En-lai and Chairman Mao Tse-tung led to the conclusion of several agreements and understandings, some of them of considerable importance to Canada. A trade agreement was signed, as was an agreement in the field of health services which led quickly to the selection for travel to China of a team of Canadian anaesthetists to study acupuncture analgesia. Arrangements were also concluded to facilitate the reunion in Canada of families of Chinese origin, and for exchanges and cooperation in several other areas of mutual interest.

The Government has pursued its efforts to extend and deepen international exchange in commerce, science, culture and in many other fields and, to this end, several other Ministers have made important visits to nations on all continents.

[French text]

The energy situation has revealed dramatically the inter-dependence of our global society, and while assuring Canadian needs first, the Government has made clear Canada's desire to cooperate with the United States and others to work together towards a solution.

The Canadian economy has functioned at a high level of activity. Very high rates of growth in the first part of the year carried the economy close to the physical limits of its productive capacity. Work stoppages in the late summer and early fall resulted in a slowing of output growth in that period but as we have neared the end of the Session, the production has increased rapidly. One of the fastest growing components of demand is business investment in new structures and equipment. Demand for Canadian exports has been high but is now subject to the uncertain impact upon our suppliers, our markets and our own producers of the world shortage and high prices for petroleum.

Our labour force has continued to grow more rapidly than in the previous year, and more rapidly than the labour force of other industrial countries. This growth has been led by the movement of women and younger Canadians into the labour market. But employment has grown more rapidly than the labour force, so that there has been over the year a significant and welcome reduction in the numbers of persons without jobs and seeking work.

Incomes of Canadians have grown with the expansion of the economy. Workers' incomes have grown, the receipts of governments have grown and so too have the returns to business.

The returns to business, combined with special measures which you have approved, are encouraging the expansion of investment needed to increase the productive capacity of our economy. Investment in housing has also been at a high level.

In our foreign trade, both our exports and imports have grown at a much more rapid rate than the total value of our output and we continue to have a surplus balance on merchandise trade and the combined balance of our international transactions in goods and services has improved from the average for 1972.

The external value of our currency in terms of United States dollars has floated within a narrow range.

The rise of prices in the course of this year has been a matter for constant concern. The increase in prices of industrial materials, foodstuffs and petroleum has been general throughout the world. The impact of these price rises on Canadians has prompted a number of the measures you have taken to relieve hardship among Canadians and to promote an increase in supplies for the future.

During this Session you have acted to deal with the energy situation. The Government has placed before Parliament the basis for a new national energy policy. The objective of that policy, to be reached before the end of the decade, is Canadian self-reliance in oil and oil products. Included in the essential requirements for a new policy are the creation of a national market for Canadian oil; a pricing mechanism that will provide sufficient incentives for the development of our oil resources; measures to ensure that any escalation in returns and revenues as a result of any higher prices will be used in a manner conducive to security and self-sufficiency; the establishment of a publicly-owned Canadian petroleum company principally to expedite exploration and development; the early completion of a pipeline of adequate capacity to serve Montreal and, as required, more eastward points; and the intensification of research on oil sands technology to permit their full and rapid development.

During this Session you have enacted measures designed to begin the implementation of this new policy. The Government has held discussions with the provinces and further negotiations on this subject will take place. In the meantime Canadians are being asked to economize on the use of energy and the Government is confident that the Canadian economy is sufficiently flexible and resilient that it can adjust quickly to changing conditions and can maintain high levels of production and employment.

In the Speech from the Throne beginning this Session, the Government announced a new priority for social policy issues, and the reorganization of social security programs. An important development in fulfilment of this promise was the decision of federal and provincial Governments to commence a comprehensive two-year review of the entire Canadian social security system on the basis of a framework set forth in the Working Paper on Social Security presented to Parliament last April by the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

One of the two main objectives set out in the Working Paper, and agreed on by federal and provincial Ministers, is to strengthen the incentive toward, and the reward for, productive self-reliance on the part of all who can participate in our work force. In pursuit of that objective, the government proposed, and Parliament accepted a legislative initiative to increase substantially Family Allowance benefits. Since wages are not geared to family size, as are social assistance benefits, this measure reached out in particular to the many in our society who, for various reasons, are employed at earnings below the level of family need. The new Family Allowance program seeks to reduce such inequities and increase the incentive to remain in the work force. To effect a sizeable measure of income redistribution at the same time, these new and higher allowances have been made taxable.

To reinforce further the strong desire for independence and self-reliance among our population, our Government, with the concurrence of the provinces, took steps to strengthen the major social insurance program in the country, the Canada Pension Plan.

Through legislation which you have approved the levels of earnings on which contributions can be made will be raised, thereby allowing Canadian workers more adequately to protect themselves against financial hardship arising from conditions over which they have little or no control—aging, disability, or the death of a family breadwinner.

Furthermore, the Government took steps to maintain the purchasing power of social security benefits. For example, under the Canada Pension Plan, War Veterans' Allowances, Superannuation and Family Allowance programs, benefits were made subject to full escalation to meet cost-of-living increases. Old Age Security and the Guaranteed Income Supplement for the aged, which were already fully indexed, had this escalation put on a quarterly basis. Through these measures, all major government income security programs now assure a continuing full dollar value.

The other major objective of the social security review is to ensure a decent basic income standard for all those who cannot, and should not be expected to work. Accordingly, at the beginning of this session, the government proposed, and Parliament assented to, a significant increase in the level of security guaranteed our senior citizens. Thanks to this measure, single persons 65 years of age and more are today assured a guaranteed income of over $2,000 a year, and couples are assured in excess of $4,000 a year—levels which compare very favourably with those of any nation in the world.

But these actions do not exhaust the tasks inherent in the social security review. We can now look forward with justifiable hope to further achievements in the review, aimed at maximizing the benefits and reducing the inequities of Canadian society.

You have acted in this Session to improve the standards and the availability of Canadian housing. You approved a measure that provided assistance for research and planning for community development; for public acquisition of residential land; for the improvement of existing residential neighbourhoods; for the improvement of housing for native people; for the increase in housing available for low income families; for the development of cooperative housing; and for beginning protection of buyers similar to that provided for the purchasers of other consumer products. You also enacted the Residential Mortgages Act, which is intended to increase the funds available in Canada for home mortgages.

You were compelled during this Session to deal with a strike in the railways, but you were able to act justly and expeditiously so that no extensive harm was done to the nation.

Measures to improve immigration procedures were enacted during this Session and the Government acted to legitimize the status of thousands of immigrants.

Steps were taken during this year to improve the operations of the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

Of prime importance to the Canadian direction of the economy was the enactment of the Foreign Investment Review Act. This is a positive measure, designed to promote the development of both the Canadian economy and the Canadian identity. The review process that it established is a flexible instrument which recognizes that foreign direct investment is a complex of costs and benefits. It is intended to help us obtain better performance from foreign investment in Canada while arresting and reversing a trend toward foreign control of enterprise in Canada. This measure is not intended to terminate foreign investment in this country; it is intended to provide a welcome to foreign investment that is of significant benefit to Canada.

Substantial increases in the sales and prices of wheat are manifestations of the prosperity enjoyed by Canadian farmers during this Session. In order to protect these farmers you have enacted measures to eliminate capital gains taxes on family farms passing from generation to generation and to reduce the cost to the farmer of crop insurance. Both farmer and consumer have been protected by the increase in the support levels on dairy products and by the increase in feed freight rate assistance in eastern Canada and British Columbia. Steps were taken to improve generally the marketing of agricultural products and the development of a new feed grains policy was initiated.

In this Session you renewed for a five year period the restriction on capital punishment, and you enacted an important measure to protect the privacy of individuals from abridgement through modern technology. You also enacted a measure to provide protection against air piracy and you increased the membership of the National Parole Board.

You addressed yourselves to the strengthening of the institutions of Canadian democracy. The Government announced its policies toward conflicts of interest of Ministers and public servants. It laid before you a Green Paper on Members of Parliament and conflicts of interest. You initiated the process of review and possible modernization of the system of determining representation of the people in the Canadian Parliament.

Of prime importance to Canadian democracy, you passed the Election Expenses Act. This measure will serve to open the doors of direct political participation in government to many more people. It will provide a more open and just ground for political campaigns in our history and it will assure that the private interests and significant political obligations of candidates and parties will be public.

Much has been accomplished during this Session, but the pace of legislative reform and innovation must continue rapidly so that the challenges of the future may be met.

Members of the House of Commons:

Prorogation of Parliament

I thank you for the provision you have made for the public services during the previous and the current fiscal year.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

May Divine Providence continue to bless our country.

This concluded the first session of the twenty-ninth parliament.
