Hon. Mr. Euler: Before the motion passes, may I ask the sponsor of the bill whether any objection has been registered to the use of the name "Equitable Fire Insurance Company of Canada"? I have in mind a company in Waterloo, Ontario, which has a somewhat similar name, the Equitable Life Insurance Company.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: There has been no objection to the name.

Hon. Mr. Davies: It is an old name, is it not?

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Yes, very old; it goes back to 1901.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I think it is usual to extend the time for the filing of a certificate to a reasonable period after incorporation, when a satisfactory explanation for the delay has been given. I think that the honourable gentleman from Kennebec (Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt) has given such an explanation in this instance, and that he is quite in order in asking for the extension of time.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

YUKON PIPELINES LIMITED— SECOND READING

Hon. William H. Golding moved the second reading of Bill X-12, an Act to incorporate Yukon Pipelines Limited.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill seeks to incorporate Yukon Pipelines Limited. Clause 1 reads as follows:

Frank H. Brown, president of the White Pass and Yukon Corporation Limited, Clifford J. Rogers, president of British Columbia-Yukon Railway Company, Edward M. C. McLorg, barrister, and Albert P. Friesen, accountant, all of the city of Vancouver, in the province of British Columbia; Alexander Neill McGregor, barrister, James Ralph Johnston, barrister, and Diantha Alice Herbert, stenographer, all of the city of Ottawa, in the province of Ontario, together with such persons as may become shareholders in the company, are incorporated under the name of Yukon Pipelines Limited, hereinafter called "the Company".

I understand, honourable senators, that this bill follows the usual pattern of pipe line bills which have come before the Senate. Clause 5 states:

5. The Company shall have all the powers, privileges and immunities conferred by, and be subject to all the limitations, liabilities and provisions of the Pipe Lines Act, and any other general legislation relating to pipe lines enacted by Parliament with respect to the transportation and transmission of oil and gas and other liquid and gaseous hydrocarbons.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: To what territory does this proposed company's business apply?

Hon. Mr. Golding: The explanation of the bill given to me is as follows:

The proposed legislation is for a pipe line bill limited to British Columbia and the Yukon in Canada, and outside Canada. It will be noticed that the applicants for incorporation are officers of the White Pass and Yukon Route. The immediate purpose of the incorporators, if the legislation is enacted, is to provide for:

(a) The continued operation of the existing 4-inch pipe line between Skagway, Alaska, and Whitehorse, Yukon Territory, used for the transportation of fuel and diesel oils.

(b) The construction and operation in due course of a pipe line between the same points for the transportation of gasoline and other volatile petroleum products.

The existing 4-inch pipe line was constructed by the American Army in 1942 along the right of way of the White Pass and Yukon railway for the purpose of pumping all types of liquid petroleum products from Skagway to Whitehorse and thence to Alaska. The petroleums in question were brought up from California by tanker, unloaded into storage tanks at Skagway and in due course pumped north for Army and Air Force use —both Canadian and American and for civilian use in the Whitehorse area.

The pipe line has continued in operation to the present date, except that since the end of the war only low volatile fuel and diesel oils, instead of both gasoline and fuel oils, have been put through the line—the elimination of gasoline being out of regard for safety of passenger traffic on the railway.

Some time this summer the American Army will probably discontinue use of this line in favour of their new 8-inch pipe line, now nearing completion, which runs from Haines, Alaska, to a point on the Alaska Highway about 100 miles northwest of Whitehorse and then on to Fairbanks.

The White Pass and Yukon Route has been intimately associated with the operation of this line from its inception. Through its section hands it maintains continuous inspection. Its repair gangs carry out all required repairs on behalf of the United States Army. The line follows all the company's tunnels, snow sheds and bridges in the railway's precipitous passage through the mountains. In many places the line is at the end of the ties and in a few places is in between the rails.

The White Pass and Yukon employees are fully familiar with the pumping and other operating facilities of the system and are completely equipped to take over its operation at a day's notice. It thus becomes a natural thing that when the United States Army ceases to operate the line the White Pass and Yukon Route should seek to take over this function in its place.

That is the explanation of the bill which has been given to me. If the bill is given second reading I will move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Honourable senators, I would draw the attention of the sponsor of this bill to the fact that in addition to the provisions concerning the pipe line itself the bill also contains provisions dealing with radio, telephone and telegraph communication facilities. It would seem to me, therefore, that the bill should go to the Committee on Transport and Communications.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Are there no provisions in the other bills dealing with radio, telephone and telegraph communication facilities?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I do not think there are.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I have before me the bill to incorporate Petroleum Transmission Company and I notice that in clause 6 there is authority to operate such facilities. There is a similar clause in other bills.

Hon. Mr. Golding: Honourable senators, it would be quite agreeable to me to have the bill referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the question is on the motion of the Hon. Senator Golding for second reading of the bill. Is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. Turgeon: Honourable senators, before the motion is voted on, I would like to ask one question which perhaps the honourable senator from Huron-Perth (Hon. Mr. Golding) can answer.

Yesterday the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Campbell) presented Bill Z-12, and Act to incorporate Trans-Border Pipeline Company, Ltd., the second reading of which he proposes to move on Tuesday. Now, the same project is envisaged in the bill before us as is envisaged in Bill Z-12. I would like to ask whether the second reading of the bill we are now considering would interfere with proper consideration of the bill to be explained later by the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Campbell).

I am assuming that at any rate the passing of these bills would give the two companies only the right to apply to the Board of Transport Commissioners for authority to operate this particular pipe line, and that therefore both bills could pass through parliament. Am I right on that?

Hon. Mr. Golding: The matter can be dealt with in committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Golding: Honourable senators, I move that this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, before this bill is referred to that committee I should bring the attention of the members of the Senate to the fact that the other bills of a similar nature have been referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, and it does seem to me that the one committee should consider all bills of the same type.

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: Honourable senators, I introduced a bill which is very similar to this one, namely, a bill to incorporate S and M Pipeline Limited, and yesterday it was given second reading and referred to the Committee on Transport and Communications. A meeting of that committee has already been called to consider the bill, and I think that the bill before us should go to the same committee. In almost every case that I can remember a pipe line bill has been referred to the Committee on Transport and Communications.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, all these pipe line bills are presented to Parliament simply for the purpose of complying with the general Pipe Lines Act, and whether they come within the ambit of that act is largely a legal matter. In the past legal matters have always been referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee. Furthermore, an additional point is involved here. I am advised that a bill introduced yesterday covers the same operation and will be before us shortly. If that bill happens to be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee and the present bill is referred to the Transport and Communications Committee, and both committees report the bills, we may have a conflict over apparently the same territory. I may say that I for one am not going to vote for two bills covering the same territory. That would be nonsense. It will take all the money that can be got to develop one facility.

Parliament will no doubt have to deal with a large number of these bills, because if oil is found it will have to be transported from place to place by a pipe line, and every company that desires to transport across a boundary will require a federal bill. That is the reason behind the bill, for instance, which the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) explained this afternoon. If Trans-Prairie Pipelines Ltd. were to operate its pipe line in Manitoba only, no federal legislation at all would be required, but in order to extend its pipe line across a provincial boundary legislation of this type is needed. I know that in parts of Saskatchewan there is an area which is presumed to contain large quantities of oil, and if oil is to be transported from that area a pipe line will have to cross into Manitoba to connect up with the interprovincial pipe line somewhere. A pipe line will be necessary, because certainly in these days oil cannot be transported by wagon.

It seems to me that we should adopt a uniform policy when dealing with these pipe line bills. And I think we should frown—that is only my opinion, mind you—on legislation that would give two companies the right to do business in the same district. I would therefore suggest that the honourable gentleman from Huron-Perth (Hon. Mr. Golding) should not press too hard for reference of this bill to the Transport and Communications Committee. I am impressed by the statement that the bill taps the same territory as does a bill introduced yesterday; and I submit that if it does, the one committee should decide the whole thing. Other pipe line bills have been referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee. Experts will be in attendance at that committee and we can ask them questions. Of course, any decision arrived at by a committee does not have to be accepted if the house does not like it. Any recommendation of a committee can be set aside, and then we can discuss the matter in Committee of the Whole.

I appeal to the house to send all these pipe line bills to the one committee in order that they can be dealt with uniformly. We want to encourage development of pipe lines so that all areas of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, and maybe other parts of Canada—I hope so, but especially the four provinces that I have named—will be able to transport oil to the markets. The great need, of course, is to get the product to the markets. I venture to say that if we can arrange a uniform way of dealing with these bills, capital will feel safer in making investments.

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: Honourable senators, may I make one further remark? The bill to incorporate Inter-Provincial Pipe Lines, which operates the largest pipe line in the world, was referred to the Committee on Transport and Communications, and was approved by that committee. The bill to incorporate Trans Canada Pipe Lines Bill, which proposes to transport gas from Alberta to Toronto and Montreal, was also referred to the Committee on Transport and Communications. It seems to me that that is the proper committee to consider the present bill.

Hon. Mr. Golding: I think there is some merit in the arguments both of the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) and of the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig), and I now move that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: When I rose a few minutes ago I was under the impression that all the bills of this type which have come before us were sent to the Banking and Commerce Committee, but it appears that some have gone to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. I think it is unfortunate that bills of the same general character have been referred to two different committees. Apparently the first measure of this kind was referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. I agree with the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig) and the honourable senator from Huron-Perth (Hon. Mr. Golding) that the same committee should have dealt with them all.

Hon. Mr. Euler: In this matter we should have uniformity, and if a mistake has been made, in that previous bills of the same general subject-matter have been referred to two different committees, let us decide to which committee such bills should be referred. If some have already been referred to another committee, we should reverse our action and deal with them all on a basis of uniformity.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: May I be informed, by either the honourable Leader of the Government or by the honourable Leader of the Opposition, what authority issues licences in connection with pipe lines?

Hon. Mr. Haig: The Department of Transport.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I think that answer should settle the point.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 10, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, May 10, 1955

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

DIVORCE PETITIONS

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 319 to 345, dealing with petitions for divorce, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

The motion was agreed to, on division.

CRIMINAL CODE

FIRST REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON CERTAIN QUESTIONS OF CRIMINAL LAW

Hon. J. W. de B. Farris, for Hon. Slater A. Hayden, Joint Chairman of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Capital and Corporal Punishment, presented the committee's first report.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

Your committee recommends that it be empowered to adjourn beyond the precincts of the House of Parliament to take evidence at a place within the seat of Government from an executioner on the present method of capital punishment in Canada.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Veniot: Honourable senators, may I ask, with leave of the Senate, that this report be considered now, because tomorrow morning the committee desires leave to hold a sitting at a place beyond the precincts of the Houses of Parliament.

The Hon. the Speaker: Has the honourable senator from Gloucester (Hon. Mr. Veniot) unanimous consent of the Senate to move that this report be considered now?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Veniot: Honourable senators, I move that the report be concurred in.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Before the motion is carried, may I ask for an explanation of the report?

Hon. Mr. Veniot: Leave is asked by the committee to hold a meeting tomorrow outside the precincts of the Houses of Parliament for the purpose of examining a special witness.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Where?

Hon. Mr. Veniot: Well, that cannot be stated publicly, but I can tell the honourable member in private where it will be held. I can say now that it will be held in the city of Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Thank you.

The motion was agreed to, and the report was concurred it.

PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald presented Bill B-13, an Act to amend the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: With leave of the Senate, next sitting.

ALBERTA-BRITISH COLUMBIA BOUNDARY BILL

FIRST READING

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald presented Bill C-13, an Act respecting the boundary between the provinces of Alberta and British Columbia.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon Mr. Macdonald: With leave, next sitting.

NARCOTIC DRUG TRAFFIC

COMMITTEE SITTINGS IN VANCOUVER

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, may I be allowed to make a brief statement concerning the sittings which the special committee on the narcotic drug traffic held in Vancouver during the Easter recess of the Senate? But first may I point out that this was the first time since Confederation that a committee of this house has sat outside Ottawa. Of course, it must be remembered that the committee, wherever it sits, is investigating the serious problem of the drug traffic on behalf of the entire Senate body.

Eleven of the twenty-three members of the committee attended the sittings in Vancouver. We sat for five days, starting at 10 o'clock in the morning, and at times we were not finished until 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

The committee was well received both by the press and by the public generally. We were welcomed by the mayor of the city of Vancouver, who before we ended our sittings provided us with a lunch in Stanley Park.

We were beseiged by press reporters, and television representatives sought permission to televise our proceedings; but I took upon myself the liberty of refusing to grant this permission, believing that our committee was a court of investigation and not one whose proceedings should be televised.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Reid: We held two secret sessions. At one of these, which lasted all day, drug addicts and their relatives came before us and told their stories. The press wanted to follow us and write these stories up, but this request was refused. We visited Oakalla Prison Farm, where we saw 150 drug addicts, who were given the opportunity to ask questions or make statements; and before leaving we interviewed two women drug addicts out of a total prison population of some 80.

It is not often that laudable remarks are made by the press about the Senate, but with your permission I will quote some remarks of this kind concerning the committee's visit to Vancouver. This appeared in the Globe and Mail of Saturday last:

> The heroes of Vancouver's long war against the drug traffic are 11 members of the Senate's committee on narcotics.
>
> A few weeks ago, when they first proposed a precedent-setting departure for Ottawa to hold on-the-spot hearings in the heartland of the drug trade, the senators were dubbed "tired old men who want to spend springtime in the Rockies."
>
> In five days of sessions they toured the provincial prison at Oakalla, considered a score of detailed briefs and cross-examined 33 witnesses, a dozen of whom admitted they were addicts—the men who know narcotics best.
>
> Doctors and investigators hailed the hearings as a major step forward in the painstaking search for a solution to the problem that has presented this city with what Mayor Fred Hume calls "a first-class crisis."
>
> The editors of the Vancouver Sun went one step further. Impressed by the committee's vigor, they suggested that such Senate bodies might take over some of the tasks normally handed to Royal commissions.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Reid: At all times the committee realized they were acting on behalf of the whole Senate. Speaking as the chairman, may I say I was proud not only of the attendance, but of the impression the committee left with the press, with the witnesses who came before us and the public generally.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

RADIO BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. W. Rupert Davies moved the second reading of Bill 260, an Act to amend the Radio Act.

He said: Honourable senators, this is, I think, a non-contentious bill. It consists of amendments to the Radio Act, brought about, I understand, through representations which have been made to the Department of Transport by a number of the larger Canadian municipalities which have become rather alarmed at the density of the television antennae which are to be seen on the roofs of our cities. I am informed by the Telecommunications Branch of the Department of Transport that "radio" means the transmission of all communications by means of Hertzian waves. I am afraid I cannot explain what Hertzian waves are; but, in any event, the idea is to have control of the erection of these television antennae and a properly regulated inspection of them when and after they are put up. I am sure most honourable senators will agree that these provisions are long overdue. The Department of Transport, in common with a number of the larger and some of the smaller municipalities, feels that these antennae are not only a danger at times to air navigation, but somewhat of a fire hazard. Therefore these amendments to the Radio Act are presented in Bill 260.

By paragraph (ee) in section 1 of the bill, there are exempted from the operation of section 5 of the Radio Act "radio stations not capable of emitting Hertzian waves of a field strength greater than that prescribed by such regulations." I was rather astonished to learn that a certain type of garage door which opens when a car is driven in, is actuated by a Hertzian wave, but the impulse is not strong enough to interfere in any way with radio or television broadcasts.

Section 2 of the bill prescribes the penalty for unlawful interception of radio communications. The purpose of this amendment is well explained in the explanatory notes, namely "to implement the obligations assumed by Canada under the International Telecommunication Convention with respect to the preservation of the secrecy of radio communications" in this country.

That is about all there is to this bill. I do not think it is necessary to refer it to committee, but if any honourable senator feels it should go to committee I will move that this be done.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I wonder if the sponsor of this bill would be good enough to explain where the authority rests with regard to inspections?

Hon. Mr. Davies: My information is that the authority rests with the Department of Transport. As I understand it, the Telecommunications Branch of the department would refer all complaints to the Inspection Branch for action.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Honourable senators, I think it would be wise to have this bill referred to committee, where departmental officials and technicians could give us specific information. I appreciate that in the public interest certain measures may have to be adopted to regulate these antennae, receiving stations and appliances, and to control secret communications which may be received by private stations. At the same time, I do not believe that we should give approval to this bill without being informed in detail of the extent to which the proposed regulations would infringe upon certain freedoms which we all cherish.

Hon. Mr. Davies: I am quite agreeable to having the bill sent to committee.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Honourable senators, I should like to add a word to what has been said with reference to the desirability of sending this bill to committee. I am somewhat puzzled by the implications of section 2 of the bill, which provides that every person who, having become acquainted with any radio communication not intended for public use or information, makes use of such communication or divulges it to any person, shall be liable to a certain penalty.

In my opinion the following question arises. If an individual hears some radio communication, how is he to know whether the communication is not intended for public use? In what way is he to know that what he has heard over the air is of a private nature and is not intended for public communication? It seems to me that this is an interference with the liberty of the subject which we should inquire into rather carefully.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Davies: I am willing that the bill should go to committee.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, this kind of legislation always provokes my suspicion. It puts me on guard. In the first instance, apparently a radio commission is to take unto itself authority to appoint inspectors and to give them the powers of peace officers. One does not grant the powers of peace officers to inspectors unless there is very good reason for doing so. In my judgment this provision requires a great deal of explanation, and I would hesitate to approve of it until I was thoroughly satisfied that it is bona fide and required.

Section 2, to which my honourable friend from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) directed his remarks, provides that a person is not allowed to communicate to someone else information which is not intended for public use or information. Who does the intending? Does every clerk in some public office do the intending? How do we find out who does this? How do we know what is intended for public use or information and what is not? It does seem to me that if you want to keep secrets in a free country like Canada you should not put them on the air. Anything that is top secret should be kept secret. As soon as it is divulged to more than one person it is no longer a secret. The legislation looks to me to be high-handed, unnecessary, and very likely inadvisable. I agree with those who say that this bill should be referred to committee, and I would commend to that committee the greatest care in studying all its various implications.

Hon. Mr. Vien: This bill creates a very serious offence for divulging certain information not intended for public use. Anyone found guilty of this offence is liable to a fine not exceeding $500 or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months or to both fine and imprisonment. But how can the owner of a private receiving station ascertain whether a certain radio communication is not intended for public use or information? Furthermore, as the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) has asked, who is in authority to determine whether such communication is not intended for public use or information? These questions need clarification.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Perhaps my honourable friend from De Lorimier (Hon. Mr. Vien) would agree with me that the penalty should be levied on the person who puts this communication on the air and not on the person who overhears it.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Davies: May I make—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I would point out that if the honourable senator from Kingston (Hon. Mr. Davies) speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Mr. Davies: I just want to make one explanation. The honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity referred to a "radio commission". I would point out that this is not a CBC matter; it has nothing to do with the CBC. This bill to amend the Radio Act has been put forth by the Department of Transport. If the motion for second reading is passed I will move that the bill be referred to committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Davies: Honourable senators, I would move that this bill be sent to the appropriate committee, but I am not certain just what committee that is.

Hon. Mr. Vien: I would suggest the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Davies, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

PRIVATE BILLS

STANMOUNT PIPE LINE COMPANY— SECOND READING

Hon. W. D. Euler moved the second reading of Bill T-12, an Act to incorporate Stanmount Pipe Line Company.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill is similar to others which either have been given the third reading in the Senate or are still on the Order Paper. However, it differs somewhat from some of the bills which have been accepted, in that other charters which have been granted deal with oil or gas produced in Canada, and which in most cases is transported to other points within Canada.

This bill would incorporate a company which proposes to build a pipe line of approximately 140 miles from the Beaver Lodge field, North Dakota, through the Tioga field, North Dakota, through southeastern Saskatchewan to Cromer, Manitoba, where it would join the interprovincial pipe line, which at first is carried along Lake Superior, and thence to Sarnia. The reason for doing so is to obviate the necessity of building a line direct to the United States markets to which this oil is supposed to be carried. The company proposes not to sell the oil in Canada, but to take it to the interprovincial pipe line at Cromer, which would carry it in bond to a point in the United States where it would be sold and distributed to the consumers in that country. An American company has been incorporated under the name Stanmount Pipe Line Company, Inc., and it is proposed that it will be a wholly owned subsidiary of Stanmount Pipe Line Company.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It has nothing to do with the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company?

Hon. Mr. Euler: Nothing to do with it at all, except that the Interprovincial will transport the oil at this point, and it will be carried east and then back into the United States, in order to save the cost of building a main pipe line entirely within the United States. I would judge that there could be no objection to it; in fact, everything is in favour of using the interprovincial pipe line if it has accommodation for 30,000 or 40,000 barrels a day, and assurance has been given that this is the case. The cost of the project would be in the neighbourhood of $6 million, about half of which, it is said, will be expended in Canada. I understand that these fields are located in the Williston Basin, which has estimated reserves of 600 million barrels of crude oil.

Honourable senators, there is not much further information that I can give. I should perhaps point out that the line will be so constructed that the transportation may be reversed in case of an emergency. Whereas most of the oil, perhaps, would come from the United States to the interprovincial line at Cromer, it could also be reversed, and oil could be carried from the Canadian fields into the United States for use there.

If the bill receives second reading, I will move that it be referred to an appropriate committee, where further questions could be asked and answered.

Hon. Mr. Farris: May I ask my honourable friend if any consideration has been given to the question of jurisdiction?

Hon. Mr. Euler: I cannot answer that question.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Probably that can be answered in committee.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Cromer is about 75 miles straight west of Brandon and the interprovincial line runs southeast and hits the boundary of the United States at about Emerson.

Hon. Mr. Euler: On the plan here it says Gretna, Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Well, both Gretna and Emerson are south, and only a few miles apart. The proposed route would save a great deal of construction expense.

Hon. Mr. Euler: In reply to the question raised by the senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris), I dare say that the jurisdiction over the Canadian portion of the line will lie with the Canadian Government, or with some body representing the Canadian Government. My notes here say that the American company "has made application to Washington, D.C., for a Certificate of Necessity, and this application is pending. In addition, such other and formal steps as may be required for the purpose of constructing and operating the proposed line within the United States are being taken." I do not know if that answers my friend's question.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Euler, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

DOMINION OF CANADA GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY—SECOND READING

Hon. G. Peter Campbell moved the second reading of Bill W-12, an Act respecting the Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill provides amendments to the original act of incorporation of the Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company, which was incorporated by Act of Parliament in 1887. Naturally, quite a number of changes have taken place in the business and the capital of this company since its original act of incorporation. It is one of the old, leading insurance companies, having its head office in the city of Toronto, and it engages in all branches of insurance business except that of writing participating life insurance.

Honourable senators may be interested in a brief history of some of the changes which have taken place. The company was originally incorporated in 1887 under the name of the Manufacturers Accident Insurance Company. Its capital at that time was $500,000, and subsequently, in 1893, its name was changed to the Manufacturers Guarantee and Accident Insurance Company; and certain of its powers to write liability insurance were extended by the amendment at that time. In 1898 the name of the company was changed to the Dominion of Canada Guarantee & Accident Insurance Company, and in 1929 to its present name, The Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company.

As I have said, honourable senators, from time to time there have been many changes in the capital structure of this company. The present authorized capital is $6,500,000, of which $5 million is divided into 50,000 class A shares of $100 par value each, and 15,000 ordinary shares of the same par value. The class A shares carry no voting rights whatsoever. The issued and outstanding capital at the present time consists of 10,103 ordinary shares, and the total amount paid on those shares is $1,010,300. No class A shares are outstanding.

The bill before the house provides for the reduction of the authorized capital of the company from $6,500,000 to $2 million, and for the division of the capital into 200,000 ordinary shares having a par value of $10 each; and the subdivision of the 10,103 shares, issued and outstanding and having a par value of $100 each, into 101,030 shares, having a par value of $10, on the basis of ten new shares for each one now outstanding.

The explanatory notes to the bill set forth the changes which have taken place in the capital structure of this company.

I should draw to the attention of honourable senators the fact that certain technical questions arise with respect to preference shares which were at one time outstanding and which, with the unanimous consent of all the holders, were redeemed. A technical question has been raised as to whether the redemption of the preference shares was proper within the provisions of the act of incorporation and amending acts up to that time. Therefore, this bill would, if passed, rectify any irregularities which may have taken place. A full explanation will be available when the bill goes to committee.

The bill would authorize the company to increase its capital by by-law to an amount not exceeding $6 million, upon approval having first been obtained in the usual way by two-thirds of the votes cast at a special general meeting of the shareholders called for the purpose of considering the matter.

Further, the bill would clarify the voting rights of shareholders after the subdivision of shares on the basis of ten shares for one. The original act of incorporation provided specifically that there should be one vote for each share of $100 par value. Now that there will no longer be shares of a par value of $100, it is necessary to have a declaration that each shareholder shall have one vote for each share of stock registered in his name.

Provision is made that the company shall be authorized to carry on the business of insurance in all its forms, except participating life insurance. That, I may say, is a clarification of the powers of the company, and merely confirms the various amendments which from time to time have been made and which permit the company to write the insurance it is now writing.

Hon. Mr. Euler: May I ask my friend a question? Is it proposed to change the name of the company in any way?

Hon. Mr. Campbell: No, the name remains the same.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Honourable senators, I also should like to ask a question. Since section 1 of the bill repeals subsection 2 of section 4 of chapter 105 of the statutes of 1887, why is it necessary to say in section 5 of the bill: "Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection 2 of section 4 of chapter 105 of the statutes of 1887"? I am merely trying to reconcile sections 1 and 5 of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Campbell: Section 5 is merely to clarify the voting rights of shareholders.

Hon. Mr. Vien: But would it not suffice to commence section 5 with the words "At any meeting of shareholders . . ."?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I be permitted to say that in 1887 subsection 2 of section 4 of chapter 105 was in effect.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Yes, but this bill would have no retroactive effect. The provision is only for the future, and the bill repeals subsection 2.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: But it was not repealed when that earlier act came into effect.

Hon. Mr. Vien: True; but as I say, we are legislating for the future, and upon the passage of this bill subsection 2 of the earlier act will be repealed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am not sure that I follow.

Hon. Mr. Campbell: Honourable senators, I do not want to get into a discussion on the interpretation of the act at this time. However, I may say that the act provides for voting rights of the shareholders. With the new capitalization a new basis for voting is prescribed. Perhaps section 5 could be better worded than it is.

Hon. Mr. Vien: It is only a technical point.

Hon. Mr. Campbell: It is a technical point, and it can be discussed in committee.

Hon. Mr. Reid: May I ask one question?

Section 6 says:

> The company shall be authorized to carry on the business of insurance in all its forms save and except the business of life insurance on the participating plan.

Do I understand that this would in any way extend powers which the company now has and which have been obtained by various amendments to the original act of incorporation?

Hon. Mr. Campbell: In reply to the honourable senator, I may say I am advised that the company does business in all forms of insurance except participating life insurance. This provision does not in any way extend the powers the company now enjoys.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: May I ask a further question as to a point raised a few moments ago? Do I infer from section 5 that the shareholders represented by $2 million worth of stock will have full voting power, while holders of the balance, possibly $4,500,000 worth of stock, will have no voting power?

Hon. Mr. Campbell: Under the new capitalization all shares will carry equal voting rights. As I have already said, the original act of incorporation, which was subsequently amended, provided for Class A shares and ordinary shares of authorized capital, but no Class A shares were ever issued. Upon the passage of this bill all shareholders will have voting rights.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Honourable senators, I would just like to know whether I am quite clear in my understanding of what the senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Campbell) has said. I think he said that this bill would not add any powers to those which this company now has in the field of insurance. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Campbell: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Euler: This company has been doing life, fire,—

Hon. Mr. Campbell: Life, fire, casualty and other kinds of insurance.

Hon. Mr. Euler: This bill, then, would not extend the company's powers as far as insurance is concerned, but it has merely to do with the financial structure and that sort of thing?

Hon. Mr. Campbell: It deals principally with capitalization and the subdivision of shares, and clarifies the voting rights.

Hon. Mr. Euler: The reason for my question is this: There are already several life insurance companies in Canada whose name contains the word "Dominion", and if the powers of this company were extended in the life field confusion might result. It is the policy of the Government, I think, to avoid confusion in this respect, particularly in the use of the word "Dominion" which, by the way, does not now seem to be as popular as it once was.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Campbell, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

CANADIAN UNION CONFERENCE CORPORATION OF SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS—SECOND READING

Hon. Arthur Roebuck moved the second reading of Bill Y-12, an Act to incorporate The Canadian Union Conference Corporation of Seventh-day Adventists.

He said: Honourable senators, the bill itself is a very ordinary one so far as form is concerned. In form, it is probably not in the least degree controversial; but its purpose, of course, is another matter. The purpose is to unite two of the very important religious institutions of this country into one conference for all Canada. The bill, I think, is quite regular, and if it is given second reading I will move that it be referred to the appropriate committee.

But while the bill seems so entirely regular, a few words, I think, are in order with reference to the organization itself and its accomplishments, and the reason why the bill is being introduced at the present time. Some senators may know very well of the sect or denomination known as the Seventh-day Adventists, for it is spread all through the provinces of Canada, and in very considerable numbers of membership. There are others, however—I myself am one—who until recently knew it only as a name. That is why I think that a few words with regard to the institution, what it is and so forth, may be found of interest.

The name itself is indicative of the tenets of the church. An Adventist, as I understand it, is one who awaits the second coming of the Founder of Christianity to this earth. And the Seventh-day Adventist is one who endeavours to follow literally the commandments of both the Old and the New Testaments. The Church accepts the account of the creation as stated, that it was accomplished in seven days, the seventh day being the day of rest, and according to its tenets and calculations that day of rest falls on Saturday. So, in common with the men and women of the synagogue, the Church accepts Saturday as the day of the week to keep holy.

It is not a radical church by any means. The Seventh-day Adventists are not, as I understand, innovators in any respect, but look upon themselves as an orthodox Christian church. The history of the movement is interesting at this time, since we are dealing with it in a legislative way. In the last few years of the eighteenth century and the early decades of the nineteenth century there developed among a good many Christians of practically all denominations a profound conviction of the second coming of Christ, and that that coming was imminent, was at hand.

Some students of the sayings of the prophets set the date for the return of Christ to earth in the year 1844. These were the forerunners of the present Seventh-day Adventists. Of course, these good people, devout Christians as they were, and students of Holy Writ, were disappointed, and then they seem to have joined their theological opponents in interpreting the prophesies to mean a moral regeneration. They still, I understand, expect the second coming, and they also expect, as they phrase it, that righteousness will cover the earth "as the waters cover the sea"—to quote the words of Isaiah.

It was out of that movement, a thoroughly devout and serious movement, that the present Seventh-day Adventists organization arose. In its early years, the movement was very loosely knit and it was not until 1863 that a formal denominational organization was established. At that time, it had a constituency of 125 churches and 3,500 members. The headquarters were first located in Battle Creek, Michigan. That was in 1863; but in 1903 they were transferred to Washington, where they are at present.

Since that early establishment the Church has spread throughout practically the civilized world and has enjoyed a phenominal growth. By 1954 the Church had just short of one million members—to be exact, 924,822 baptized, adult members. There were 11,158 churches, with 39,225 salaried workers, in 198 countries of the world. The Church's educational system comprised 4,842 schools and 234,000 students. In 1952, the Church was operating 114 hospitals and sanatoria, with staffs of 8,785 employees.

Hon. Mr. Davies: Has the honourable senator the figures for Canada?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes, I will quote them in a moment.

The accredited Church institutions graduate annually about 90 physicians and 450 nurses. In 1953 the members of this Church gave over $60 million for church work, together with $10 million for welfare work in aid of 1,200,000 persons. These figures relate to North America only.

The denomination operates 40 publishing houses, of which 34 are overseas. In 1953 it printed its literature in 198 languages, with sales running to $17 million.

These statistics, relating to the general Church, show that it is an institution of very considerable magnitude.

I will now give some figures relating to Canada, in which honourable senators will be more interested, I suppose, than in the general statistics.

The movement spread to this country over one hundred years ago. The first organized church of Seventh-Day Adventists was founded in the Eastern Townships of Quebec in 1857, so that in 1957 the Church in Canada will celebrate its one hundredth anniversary of organized activities in this country. As congregations were established in the various provinces of Canada, they formed themselves into local Conferences, with certain managerial functions. In Canada today, there are six Conferences. British Columbia has one Conference, Alberta another, Saskatchewan-Manitoba a third, Ontario-Quebec a fourth, the Maritimes—New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island—a fifth, and the new province of Newfoundland, the sixth. There is also what is known as the St. Lawrence Mission for French-speaking Canadians, with local headquarters in Montreal.

The three Eastern Conferences and the St. Lawrence Mission decided to incorporate, and in 1916 they combined to form The Eastern Canadian Union Conference Corporation of Seventh-day Adventists. They were incorporated by Act of the Parliament of Canada on May 18, 1916: 6-7 George V, chapter 56. The three Western Conferences, namely British Columbia, Alberta, and Saskatchewan-Manitoba, followed suit, and were incorporated, by chapter 103 of the statutes of 1920, as The Western Canadian Union Corporation of Seventh-day Adventists.

I have no doubt that the great distances and more limited travelling facilities of the times influenced the leaders to form two union conferences. But, in keeping with present-day progress, in communications and otherwise, these churches have now determined to ask Parliament to allow them to combine into one Union Conference for all Canada. The name chosen is "The Canadian Union Conference Corporation of Seventh-day Adventists". The head office is to be in the city of Oshawa, Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Quinn: That is the main object of the bill?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is the object of the bill.

The rapid growth of the Church movement in Canada since the incorporation of 1920 is, no doubt, a further reason for the amalgamation.

As of the year 1954, in the Western Union there were 93 Churches; an adult, baptized membership of 8,505 persons, 37 ordained ministers, and 25 employed persons doing ministerial work.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Does that comprise the United Conferences?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No. The bill relates to all Canada; the Western Union, to which I have just referred, consists of the three Conferences of British Columbia, Alberta, and Saskatchewan-Manitoba; and it is to these three Conferences that the figures I have just given relate. In the Eastern Union there were 60 churches, 4,134 baptized, adult members, 23 ordained ministers, and 20 employed persons doing ministerial work. So that, if and when this bill becomes law, the new all-Canadian Union will comprise 153 churches, 60 ordained ministers, and an adult baptized membership of 12,639 persons.

The new Union Corporation will operate 48 elementary schools in Canada, with an enrolment of over 1,200 pupils. There is, also, a senior college at Lacombe, Alberta, and a junior college at Oshawa, Ontario. There is a publishing house at Oshawa, with a net worth of just under $1 million, and a hospital at Sidney, British Columbia. Another hospital is now under construction near Toronto.

Honourable senators will observe from this short and concise outline that the organization of Seventh-day Adventists in Canada is a going concern of very considerable magnitude, with enterprise and industry to its credit. It is an institution, I submit also, which by its virility and good works, and by the large number of devout, Christian, Canadian citizens whom it serves, justifies our most careful consideration.

I feel that I am honoured in asking my fellow senators to join with me in helping this good work along by giving this bill second reading.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Would the honourable senator tell the house if the Canadian organization is autonomous and what its relationship is to the headquarters in Washington to which he has referred?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The American and Canadian organization hold the same tenets and ideals, but the corporation referred to in the bill is given power to hold property and to dispose of it, together with certain managerial authority. The new body is an ordinary Canadian corporation with entirely autonomous rights and powers, with no subservience to any other authority in the United States or elsewhere. The American leaders will no doubt exercise great influence in many conferences between the parties, but there will be no domination or control by the United States organization over the Canadian corporation.

Hon. Mr. Vien: The Canadian corporation is autonomous?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It is undoubtedly so.

Honourable senators, I intend to move that this bill be referred to committee, and so I need not go over the details. The two present acts of incorporation are repealed by the bill which creates the new corporation, which is given authority to hold property and to dispose of it.

Hon. Mr. Quinn: Is membership limited to the United States and Canada?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: By no means. There are just something less than 200 countries in which this organization is active at the present time. The movement started in Europe, not in the United States. The early movement to which I have referred, when these good people thought that the second coming of Christ was at hand, was largely in Europe, and it spread from there to the United States and from the United States to Canada. It was spreading all over the civilized world at the same time.

Hon. Mr. Quinn: Did 1844 mark the beginning?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Well, the beginning was away back in the latter years of the eighteenth century, when certain devout people expected the coming of the Founder of Christianity again to earth. That was the start of the movement. The organized movement took place in 1863.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Are there any dissenting factions among this organization or are its members unanimous?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: As far as I know, they are unanimous. Resolutions were passed by each of the Union Conferences asking for this legislation, and so far as I know there is no opposition. I suppose there is always opposition in a small way in any big organization, but I have heard of no objections so far.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I would move that this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Honourable senators, this bill has nothing to do with banking or commerce and it seems to me that the appropriate committee for it is the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I think the suggestion is a good one, and if I may I will change my motion.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

TRANS-BORDER PIPELINE COMPANY LTD.—SECOND READING

Hon. G. Peter Campbell, for Hon. Mr. Bouffard, moved the second reading of Bill Z-12, an Act to incorporate Trans-Border Pipeline Company Ltd.

He said: Honourable senators, this is the usual form of private bill for the incorporation of a pipe line company under the provisions of the general Pipe Lines Act passed in 1949 and amended last year. Before any company can engage in the operation of a pipe line which crosses a provincial or international border, it must be incorporated by a special Act of Parliament under the provisions of the Pipe Lines Act, and it must adhere to the standard provisions required by the Department of Transport.

The incorporators of this legislation are residents of British Columbia and Alberta, and they seek the usual powers, except so far as the power to construct a pipe line is concerned. The object of the incorporators is to acquire a pipe line constructed as one of the Canol projects during the war. On Thursday last the honourable gentleman from Huron-Perth (Hon. Mr. Golding) moved the second reading of a bill to incorporate Yukon Pipelines Limited, the incorporators of which apparently seek to obtain and operate the same pipe line. In other words, if the bill we are now dealing with becomes law there will be at least a little competition for the purchase of this particular pipe line.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Campbell: I need not repeat much of what was said last Thursday by the honourable senator from Huron-Perth, for he made a good explanation of the objects of his incorporators. I should point out, however, that the incorporators under this bill seek to lease or purchase the existing pipe line between Skagway, Alaska, and Whitehorse, Yukon Territory. It was constructed in 1942, by the American authorities, with the consent of the Canadian government, to receive the petroleum products that were brought up by tanker from California and discharged into storage facilities, and then transported by the pipe line for use in the services of the army and the air force. It is a four-inch line and has been in use carrying certain products since the end of the war, but my information is that the United States had constructed, or was in the course of constructing, a new eight-inch line from Haines, Alaska, to a point on the Alaska highway, and then to Fairbanks.

Hon. Mr. Davies: The point in Alaska would have nothing to do with the Canadian Senate would it?

Hon. Mr. Campbell: No. But I was going to explain that when the eight-inch line is constructed by the United States authorities it is likely that this four-inch line crossing the Canadian territory will no longer be required by the American authorities, and it will probably be available for lease or purchase.

Hon. Mr. Davies: Can the Senate grant two separate companies the power to establish pipe lines over an international line at the same place?

Hon. Mr. Campbell: No power is given by this bill to construct any particular pipe line, and Parliament does not deal with that matter at all. That is dealt with by the Transport Board, upon application of the company after it is incorporated. By passing an act incorporating the company Parliament does not give any power whatsoever to construct a particular pipe line, or to lease or operate a pipe line. But an act of incorporation is required before any negotiations may be opened or before any application may be made to the Transport Board.

To continue with my remarks, there is no doubt that whoever will be successful in negotiating a lease or purchase of the four-inch line crossing the Canadian territory will be required to give an undertaking that it will be maintained at all times, and subsequently it might be required by the Canadian authorities for use in transporting petroleum products.

Honourable senators, the rest of the bill is in the usual form. As I have stated, the purpose of seeking the act of incorporation is to enable the company, if it is successful in negotiating a lease or purchase of the line, to apply to the Transport Board for permission to operate.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Campbell: Honourable senators, I move that this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Honourable senators, I do not care what is done with the bill, but I should like to point out that the other bill for the same line was referred to the Banking and Commerce committee.

Hon. Mr. Howard: Were they not both referred to the same committee?

Hon. Mr. Haig: Unlike some others, I was here when that bill was referred to the Banking and Commerce committee. I think this bill should also go to that committee, so that the whole matter can be discussed by the same members. If there is a fight between the two companies, I have no objection. I am sure if I were a shareholder in the Yukon railroad I would be tickled to death to see them fight for the line.

Hon. Mr. Campbell: I move, then, that the bill be referred to the Banking and Commerce committee.

Hon. J. Wesley Stambaugh: Honourable senators, I would like to give some reasons why I think all these pipe line bills should be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. It was a mistake to refer one or two bills to the Banking and Commerce committee, and we should not make a further mistake of that kind.

I would like to take honourable senators back to the year 1949, when the original bill was introduced for the regulation of all companies incorporated to transport gas and oil by pipe line. It was considered so important a matter that we had the Hon. Mr. Chevrier, then Minister of Transport, come to the Senate and explain the bill. It was pointed out that we were breaking new ground, that it was a new form of a bill, and that because oil and gas had been discovered in vast quantities, especially in Alberta, numerous pipe line companies had asked for permission to transport oil and gas across both provincial and international boundaries. Mr. Chevrier explained that five different companies were waiting for, or had applied for, federal incorporation, and they could not receive incorporation until that general Pipe Lines Bill had been passed. Two of those companies waiting for incorporation were Interprovincial Pipe Line Company and Westcoast Transmission Company Limited, and they were very important companies. After his explanation, Mr. Chevrier said that he hoped we would give very careful consideration to the bill. In order that the bill might receive the careful consideration that the minister urged, the present Speaker of this house, who was then the Leader of the Government in the Senate, moved that the bill be referred to the Committee on Transport and Communications. It was referred to that committee, as were the bills for incorporation of the five companies that were waiting for incorporation, which bills were later passed by both houses.

Last Thursday it was suggested that legal questions were involved in these pipe line bills, and that the Committee on Banking and Commerce was particularly competent to study the bills and give them the necessary consideration because many members of the legal profession are on the committee. I must confess that I do not see any reason for so many lawyers being members of a committee. Two should be enough—one on each side—and when they have given their reasons pro and con the other members of the committee, ordinary people like myself, could be, as it is called in legal phraseology, "a jury of their peers".

However, if it would make anyone feel better, I would like to point out that a number of legal men are members of the Committee on Transport and Communications. I think the Chairman of that committee —Senator Hugessen—has the best legal mind in the house.

Some Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: Looking down the list I see the names of some other lawyers: Senators Aseltine, Bouffard, Campbell, Connolly, Haig, Hayden, Kinley—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: He has not yet been called to the Bar.

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: He talks like a lawyer, so I thought he was one.

Hon. Mr. Haig: In the profession we call him a "sidewalk lawyer".

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: I note also the names of Senators Roebuck and Vien. No doubt other lawyers are members of that committee, but surely I have named enough. And we always have Mr. MacNeill, the Law Clerk of the Senate, to keep us on a straight course in legal matters.

This bill is in the standard form. In view of the explanation given, I am sure no one can reasonably object to it being referred to the Committee on Transport and Communications, where it would receive most careful consideration.

The motion of Hon. Mr. Campbell was agreed to, and the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

RAINY RIVER BRIDGE

SUBSTITUTION OF PETITION—REPORT OF COMMITTEE CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Standing Orders.

Hon. Charles L. Bishop, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Standing Orders, moved concurrence in the report.

He said: Honourable senators, when this report was presented, on Thursday last, the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), requested an explanation. As I did not clearly grasp at the moment just what he wished to have clarified, I asked that consideration of the report be allowed to stand until tonight.

The explanation is very simple. On February 28 a petition was presented to the Senate asking for an act to authorize the construction of a toll bridge between the village of Baudette, in Minnesota, and the town of Rainy River, in Ontario. That petition has been withdrawn and a new one now is substituted. The incorporators mentioned in the first petition were from Minnesota. Those in the substitute petition are mainly from the Ontario side, which I am told brought the petition into conformity with the usage in the parliamentary incorporation of a Canadian company.

The motion was agreed to, and the report was concurred in.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, May 11, 1955

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

MOTION FOR AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Gray Turgeon, for Hon. A. N. McLean, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Canadian Trade Relations, presented a report of the committee.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Canadian Trade Relations beg leave to report as follows:

The committee recommend that it be authorized to print 800 copies in English and 200 copies in French of its proceedings in respect to the inquiry into what, in their opinion, might be the most practical steps to further implement article 2 of the North Atlantic Treaty, and that Rule 100 be suspended in relation to the said printing.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Turgeon: Next sitting.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACTS AMENDMENT BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. W. D. Euler moved the second reading of Bill H-10, an Act to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1952.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill, as is quite evident to those who have read it, is to correct a practice which has grown since Confederation itself, is contrary to the public interest and is a challenge to the usefulness of the Senate. I refer to the practice which seems to have grown into a government policy of postponing the filling of vacancies in the Senate, permitting very large accumulations of vacancies, until today out of 102 seats in this chamber 21 are unfilled—a fifth of our total membership. To my mind this policy threatens the integrity of this branch of Parliament.

This bill proposes to correct that situation and the possibility of its recurrence by making it mandatory to fill every vacancy within a period of six months from the date on which it occurs. Let me emphasize, lest there be some misunderstanding, that in bringing forward this bill I have not the remotest desire to embarrass the Government. In fact, my desire is the reverse, as I shall show later on.

True, I am not thinking of the political implications and considerations which have, perhaps, actuated governments in delaying these appointments and permitting this remarkable accumulation of vacancies. I am quite sincerely thinking of the public good and of the usefulness and efficiency of the Senate, which it is the duty and the responsibility of every senator to defend and to protect.

I remember very well the late Prime Minister King's frequent practice of quoting from the scriptures, and one of his favourite quotations was:

The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life.

If the spirit of the constitution were observed there would be no need for this bill.

Let me read from our constitution, the British North America Act, clause 24:

The Governor General shall from time to time, in the Queen's name, by instrument under the Great Seal of Canada, summon qualified persons to the Senate; and, subject to the provisions of this Act, every person so summoned shall become and be a member of the Senate and a senator.

Of the present 21 vacancies, 6 have existed for one year, 5 for two years, 3 for four years, 5 for five years, and 1 is well on to the seventh year.

Now, surely the clause which I have just read implies that appointments to the Senate should be made within a reasonable time after the vacancies occur; and, though I am not a lawyer nor the son of a lawyer, I imagine that the courts would so construe it. Surely, also, no senator will say that two, four, five and seven years is a reasonable time. The bill, therefore, makes specific what is already inherent in the constitution.

I have inserted the term of six months in the bill because it seems reasonable, and for the additional reason that we have an excellent precedent in an amendment which was made in 1919 to the House of Commons Act. That year Mr. S. W. Jacobs, a close personal friend of mine in the House of Commons, of which I was then a member, introduced a bill providing that within sixty days after the Speaker was notified that a vacancy existed in the Commons a writ must issue for a by-election. It happened in many cases that when a vacancy occurred in the Commons a by-election was not called, and the constituency affected was without a representative until the next general election. Speaking in support of his bill, Mr. Jacobs said:

It proposes to amend the House of Commons Act and it declares that within sixty days after the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery receives a warrant for the issue of a new writ for the election of a member, the writ in question shall issue. In other words, it provides that the election shall take place automatically within a fixed period after the electoral seat has been declared vacant.

That statement was made on the motion for first reading. As honourable senators who are ex-members of the Commons know, it is the custom to give a brief explanation of a bill on first reading in that chamber—a practice which is not usually followed here. In the debate on the second reading Mr. Jacobs spoke as follows:

This measure, Mr. Speaker, is designed to correct certain abuses which have arisen under the House of Commons Act with respect to electoral matters. It provides for automatic by-elections. As is well known, under the present system there is no provision for elections to be held at a certain stated period when a seat has been declared vacant and the result is that vacant seats have been made political footballs by the party in power ever since the House of Commons Act was placed upon the statute-books. I submit that the law as it now stands is undemocratic, that it is not according to British precedent, and that it is high time that some change be made whereby constituencies which have become vacant shall not be kept disfranchised for periods ranging from six months to three years.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: What is the reference?

Hon. Mr. Euler: House of Commons Hansard, September 18, 1919.

Mr. Jacobs, and the House of Commons also, seemed to think that a period of six months to three years was a rather long time for a constituency to be without a member to represent it; but as I have stated already, in this house we have a good many vacancies which have extended for a much longer period.

We note also that the period he inserted in his bill was sixty days. The bill was referred to a committee, and there the period of sixty days was amended to read six months, the same period as I have inserted in the bill before us. Perhaps it is remarkable that, although the Union Government was then in office, a government to which Mr. Jacobs, a Liberal, was opposed politically, it accepted his bill.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Was that a bill to amend the British North America Act?

Hon. Mr. Euler: No; a bill to amend the House of Commons Act. But the result would be the same. Parliament, I understand, now has the power which it had not at that time, to amend the British North America Act. I might remark, perhaps more by way of jest than otherwise, that if a Government could accept a bill submitted by a member of the Opposition—perhaps an almost unprecedented circumstance —it should not be too much to hope that the present Government will accept a bill which is submitted by a man who still calls himself a Liberal.

At any rate, I hope the bill will be accepted. I think it should be welcomed by the Government. Someone has suggested that passage of the bill might embarrass the Government. That may be one argument advanced against the bill—I do not know—but I think it can be argued that the present condition is a greater embarrassment to the Government than there would be if this bill were passed. I submit that, once the present vacancies are filled, there should be very little embarrassment to the Government, if any at all, for there would no longer be any great accumulation of vacancies.

From time to time suggestions have been made for the reform of the Senate, but I am not going to make any proposals of that kind. These suggestions have been made in the press, in the House of Commons and in the Senate itself, some regarding the method of appointment—on which I have my own opinions—some for an age limit—and I believe there is a bill before the House of Commons now with regard to that—some for an elective Senate, and some even for its abolition. I have some views with regard to reforms that could be made, but this is probably not the time to discuss them. None have received strong support, and so nothing has been done. I have not included any of them in the bill before the house, for I felt they would merely create unnecessary discussion. The amendment which I propose is a legitimate and logical one, upon which I think all senators might well agree without offence to the government or the Senate.

I am not even suggesting that the Senate should continue. I am on record in another place with regard to that, and I have no particular apologies to make for it. However, I do submit in all sincerity that if we are to have a Senate at all it ought to be fully constituted, and not be destroyed by this slow process of attrition.

This bill is not primarily a criticism of the Government; it is a criticism of a practice to which the Government has fallen heir and which it has continued, and for that it must assume its share of responsibility.

The Senate, when fully constituted, has 102 members: 24 from the three Maritime provinces, 24 from Quebec, 24 from Ontario, 24 from the provinces west of Lake Superior, and 6 from the new province of Newfoundland.

Let me give some facts and figures to substantiate my statement that other administrations have been guilty of this practice. I could go back practically to Confederation, but shall confine myself to the last six Parliaments, some twenty-five years.

In the 18th Parliament, 1930-35, under the Bennett administration, there was an accumulation of 19 Senate vacancies. They were all filled before the general election.

In the next Parliament, under the King Government, there was an accumulation of 14 vacancies. All but one—and that one in Quebec—were filled before the general election of 1940. Here I am going to anticipate a possible reproach that might be made with regard to myself, for I had the honour to be a member of the Government in that Parliament. Some may say, "Why didn't you make a protest at that time?" I have no particular feeling of guilt with regard to the matter, for after all while each member of the Government has a responsibility for everything that takes place, that responsibility is not placed particularly upon any private member of the Government. However, if there was any responsibility on me, perhaps I might make my apology by saying that, pursuing the course which members of the Senate are supposed to follow, I am now taking a "sober second look". Perhaps this Act to amend the British North America Acts might be regarded as an Act of penitence for my sin of omission at that time.

Hon. Mr. Reid: How many Senate vacancies were there at the time of the 1930 election?

Hon. Mr. Euler: I have not that information. I am beginning with the administration of 1930-1935.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I understood that there were quite a number of vacancies which Prime Minister Mackenzie King did not fill in 1930.

Hon. Mr. Euler: That is probably true. For the purpose of saving time, I am not going back further than 1930.

The Parliament of 1940-1945 saw an accumulation of 18 vacancies. All but one, in Nova Scotia, were filled before the election. All those vacancies occurred under the King administration, except the one in Nova Scotia.

In the next Parliament there was an accumulation of 11 vacancies. Only 3 were filled before the election, and 8 remain unfilled: 3 in Newfoundland, 2 in Nova Scotia, 2 in Ontario and 1 in British Columbia.

In the Parliament of 1949-1953 there was actually an accumulation of 23 vacancies—approaching one-quarter of the normal membership of the Senate; 10 were filled before the election, and 13 were left vacant: 2 in Manitoba, 2 in Ontario, 4 in Quebec, 3 in New Brunswick, and 2 in Nova Scotia.

In the present Parliament, as I have stated, there are already 21 vacancies, and —perhaps I should not say this, because of its implications—the term of this Parliament has not nearly run its course. These vacancies apply to all of Canada with the exception of British Columbia and Saskatchewan. There is 1 in Alberta, 2 in Manitoba, 3 in Ontario, 6 in Quebec, 4 in New Brunswick, 3 in Nova Scotia, 1 in Prince Edward Island and 1 in Newfoundland, making a total of 21. One of these has existed for less than a year; and, as I mentioned earlier, 6 have existed for a year, 5 for two years, 3 for four years, 5 for five years, and one is now in its seventh year.

Surely no one will argue that this is a wholesome situation. Nor, I am sure, will anyone deny that the appointment of 21 men or women of ability, of mature judgment, with a sense of public duty—people who are not too old and not too young, with a reasonable degree of independence of thought and action—

Hon. Mr. Reid: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Euler: —would increase the efficiency of the Senate and raise it in the estimation of the people of Canada. In my opinion, there are hundreds, perhaps thousands, of citizens in this country of 16 million people who are well qualified to give excellent service as members of the Senate. And does anyone believe that among them there cannot be found 21 who could be persuaded to accept the honour and the duty? I believe there are many who are capable, willing, and possibly even anxious to serve their country in this manner, and I have no real fear that it would be necessary to resort to conscription to obtain them.

Hon. Mr. Reid: You can say that again!

Hon. Mr. Euler: It may be that the six months' period prescribed in the bill will be regarded as either too short or too long. I think it is ample and reasonable. However, if the bill should be given second reading—and I hope it will—it could be referred to committee, and that point could be dealt with and adjusted to the satisfaction of the Senate.

Honourable senators, I submit this bill with the conviction that it is reasonable and right in principle, and that it would correct a situation that is without doubt prejudicial to the public interest and to the usefulness and reputation of the Senate.

If the bill is given second reading I will move that it be referred to the appropriate committee.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: Before the honourable senator sits down, may I ask him if he can tell us what the total saving to Canada in dollars has amounted to by reason of the vacancies?

Hon. Mr. Euler: I am not able to answer the question, but if the saving of money is the point at issue it is obvious that the saving would be greater still if the Senate were abolished altogether.

Hon. Mrs. Wilson: The honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) asked a question a moment ago. I can answer his question by saying that I happen to know that all the Senate vacancies were filled prior to the election of 1930.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, before my colleague the honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) gave his address he suggested to me that he would like me to second his motion for second reading of this bill to amend the Constitution in respect of the Senate. I agreed to do so, because I think the matter is one that is well within the compass of propriety for this house to discuss. It may be that this proposal will receive a mixed reception in the Senate, and I can understand some reasons for that. But I wish to say at once that there should be no feeling in the mind of anyone here that this is in any sense a reflection on the Government, or on the Prime Minister, who has the main responsibility of making these recommendations to his colleagues. I have the very highest respect for the integrity and character of the Prime Minister, and I am as certain as that I am addressing this assembly today that his earnest desire is to serve the public weal in the best manner he can.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Then, why not leave it to his judgment?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Let me add that I conclude from my observations over a good many years that perhaps no greater problem comes before the Prime Minister than that of filling vacancies in the Senate. The Senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) seemed to indicate that there might be some difficulty in finding candidates who would accept a call to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I said the reverse was true.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: My experience and observations have certainly not led me to conclude there might be any difficulty.

Hon. Mr. Euler: But I did not say there would be.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Further, some senators may fear that if we pass this bill and it goes to the House of Commons it is possible that the Senate might come in for some sharp criticism in that house; indeed that some members of the Commons might want to amend this bill, and it might be the occasion for a discussion which would be detrimental to the Senate. Let me say at once that I have no fear of such criticism. While there is the possibility of criticism of that kind, the sober sense of this country wants a question of this nature discussed on the basis not of cheap political appeals but of what is best for the country. I am sure that in the end that would be the consensus of opinion in the House of Commons as well.

The fact that this proposed measure is not in any sense a criticism of the Government is proven amply, I think, by the statistics which the honourable senator from Waterloo gave the house. The situation which now presents itself is not a new development; it has persisted for probably fifty years. However, I do believe that immediately after Confederation, when Canada was a young country attempting to establish itself, Senate vacancies were filled much more quickly than they have been in recent years. But I would submit to the house that the practice which has grown of delaying appointments brings no credit to the Parliament of Canada, no laurels to the governing institutions of the country, and in a sense reflects upon this house.

Not long ago a friend of mine, discussing with me the number of vacancies in the Senate, asked me when I thought they would be filled. I replied that I had not the remotest notion of when they would be filled. His observation was, "Well, the Government can't think very highly of the Senate if it leaves some seats vacant for as long as five and seven years." While that may be an unfair criticism, it is a criticism that finds easy lodgement in the public mind. So, for the honour of this house and for the prestige of Parliament, I think the proposal advanced in this bill is one that deserves our most favourable and earnest consideration.

I am sure all my colleagues in this house agree with me that there is nothing more important for the people of a democracy or of any country than how they govern themselves. Broadly speaking, there are two methods of government: there is the authoritarian system, where freedom is denied the individual to have a voice in his government; and there is what we sometimes loosely call our democratic system, where the individual citizen has his say in how he shall be governed. The latter method is the basis of our free institutions. Once we lose the right to govern ourselves, we lose inevitably, or take the risk of losing, all our other rights. Liberty, the right to criticize, the right to speak one's own mind, the right to attend a place of worship of our choice, the privilege of being equal before the law, are, I am sure all honourable senators will agree, the priceless freedoms which we should cherish and protect at all times. Now, if we are going to preserve those freedoms, I submit that it is most important that we in Parliament should conduct ourselves in such a way that the people will have respect for and confidence in not only the legislative programs that may be put forward, but in our great institutions of freedom.

We have no guarantee, honourable senators, that the present state of affairs will continue indefinitely. The greatest danger to free institutions is the apathy and indifference of the electorate. It is frightening to note that at times in municipal elections, for instance, only 25 or 30 or 40 per cent of the electors think it worth while to register a vote for the candidate of their choice; indeed, that is too often the result after large sums of money are spent on publicity and promotion of various kinds to induce the electorate to vote. And under similar conditions in provincial and federal elections, on occasion, less than two-thirds of the electors have voted.

I submit that if that state of apathy and indifference increases we shall be nearing a slippery slope which we should do everything in our power to avoid. Particularly is that a danger sign in these days when our free institutions are challenged throughout the world. Every one of us who follows events in the world today knows that there is a grave challenge to the whole concept of freedom and liberty, as we have understood it and practised it. Therefore I submit that it is of the utmost importance that we maintain our own house in order, that we keep alive not only in our own bosoms, but in the hearts of the people throughout the land, the great blessing of freedom; for there is something more important even than old age pensions or social security, more important than anything else, and that is the preservation of individual freedom. I believe this measure is one that will tend to increase interest in public affairs, and that it will find a good reception among the Canadian people. Let us seek the cause for this apathy, this indifference that we see around us. Let us seek the cause for the remark that was made to me by a pretty intelligent voter when I asked him what interest he was taking in the election and he said: "Not very much. I am going to vote for the party that will promise to do the most for me". He was a sincere individual, and quite honest in expressing that view.

That attitude represents a serious state of affairs which should never be absent from our minds.

There are two dangers, it seems to me, to this great cause of freedom. In a generation two wars were fought which have undoubtedly upset and disturbed the balance of constructive and reasonable thinking in matters of government. There can be no gainsaying that. This phenomenon is not confined alone to Canada. You will see it elsewhere throughout the democratic nations.

Now, another thing—in saying this I trust I shall not be misunderstood—I do think that the philosophy of the welfare state has made a very definite impact on the thinking of our citizens everywhere. The more the idea grows in the mind of the individual that in some beneficient fashion the state is going to aid him and look after him the more you undermine his concept of freedom and liberty and his concept of responsible government. And so today we have—not widespread, it is true—those who advocate that some forms of social security should be increased. We have some who advocate that family allowances should be doubled. We have some who advocate that old age pensions should be increased to $60 a month. I am not arguing at the moment for or against them, but I ask honourable senators to reflect on the possible effects, the growing effects, the expanding effects of that upon the judgment of many voters who should be guided as much as possible by their reason and judgment as to the policies this country should follow.

I come now to a brief discussion of the Senate itself. Sometimes we talk a good deal about what the Fathers of Confederation had in mind when they framed our constitution. They provided for a Senate, that is, a second chamber, in our legislative machinery; and it is not too much to say that, whatever the reasons for it may have been, confederation of the Canadian provinces could not have been achieved if there had not been provisions for a second chamber.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: That was in keeping of course with the practice in almost every democratic country. I am using the term "democratic" in the sense of a self-governing country, where the people govern themselves through their elected representatives.

Now, those who framed our constitution recognized that the Senate should be a different kind of body from the House of Commons; and so in order that it might as far as possible be free from, shall I say, the gusts of emotion that sometimes arise in the elective chamber, this house should be an appointive chamber to which the members should be appointed for life.

But so far as my study of the matter indicates, it was never in the minds of the Fathers of Confederation that the Senate should be merely a body to support whatever legislation came to it from the Government in power; and that is where I sometimes have found myself at variance with honourable colleagues in this house who belong to the same political party as I do. In my judgment it is not enough—and I say it very respectfully—it is not enough for this house to cross the t's and dot the i's of all the legislation that comes to us from the other place. I do not think that is fulfilling our function.

Of course there is a difference between the Senate and the House of Commons. When I was in the House of Commons I was a partisan: I wanted the Government of which I was a member, and the party which I supported, to win the next election, and I did all I modestly could to ensure that. There, that kind of thing is entirely appropriate. Issues are debated, and the only way people have an opportunity to register their decision on those issues is through the candidates they vote for in general elections. That is quite proper, and no exception can be taken to it; but I do think that when legislative proposals come to the Senate this house should act as a sort of court of review. That does not mean that this body should flout the decisions of the House of Commons. Far from it. Once the people have clearly registered their verdict on a question of public policy, whether we consider that verdict a wise or unwise one, I certainly do not wish to stand in the way of passing such legislation. But I do think there are occasions, frequent occasions, when measures from the Commons should be further considered, and I take it that the main function of the Senate is to amend such measures, or perhaps delay them—to give, if I may use again the phrase that has often been used before, an opportunity for a sober second look at the proposed legislation.

One other point I wish to mention; and I trust I shall not be misunderstood. This bill merely provides that appointments to the Senate shall take place within a certain time after the vacancies occur. But there are other matters of some importance for this house to consider with a view of making this body more effective. There have been many criticisms of the Senate, deriving mainly from the idea it is a useless sort of body which does whatever the Government of the day wants it to do. I would like to briefly refer to this notion that the Senate is an assembly of old men;—I once heard them described as doddering old men".

An Hon. Senator: And young ladies!

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I have heard some excellent speeches in this chamber during the session. I listened to what I thought was a very powerful speech by the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) when the Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Bill presented by the honourable senator from Rosetown (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) was under consideration; and I thought that, for "a doddering old man" in his seventies, he did pretty well.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: What about yourself?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I am, I believe, senior to the honourable senator from Vancouver South. I offer no opinion whether I am "doddering" or not; I leave that to the judgment of the house. But the criticism is both silly and false, and we need pay no attention whatever to the sources from which it comes.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Another criticism one hears is based on the theory that the Senate should be elective. I cannot agree with that. If honourable senators are to be elected, though even for a term longer than members of the House of Commons, there will be brought into this body the political differences which exist in the other house, and we shall cease to be what in my judgment we should be, a more or less independent body, and become partisans, holding aloft the banners of our respective parties. On that ground, if the choice were between an elected Senate and the abolition of this chamber, I would vote to abolish the Senate altogether.

The next criticism to which I wish to refer is that appointments should be for a fixed term; that the Fathers of Confederation erred when they provided that appointments should be for life. I am bound to admit that argument is worth consideration; but if there are to be term appointments, the period should be, in my humble opinion, at least twelve years. I have an open mind concerning this proposal: I am willing to consider it.

It has also been suggested that there should be a different basis of selection. There again, it might be possible to make some improvement. Today, as everyone knows, the selection is made by the Prime Minister, though usually with the approval of the Minister from the province concerned, and of the Government as a whole. Is it possible to have a wider basis of selection; to find ways whereby those who have served in, for example, provincial legislatures, municipal work, and other fields of the kind, could be brought in more frequently than at present, to add their experience to ours? I am not advocating that proposal; I am merely putting it forward as a suggestion. But I think that the subject as a whole should have some consideration. We hear talk of a constitutional conference, and if it is to be held, not only these but other matters might be considered. Of one thing I am firmly convinced: it would be a mistake to modify or change in any substantial degree the territorial representation in this house; and this I say as one who comes from one of the smaller provinces. I hope that the balance as between the two central provinces and the outlying provinces will be held about where it is at the present time. All these matters could, perhaps, profitably engage our attention.

I have already referred to the confusion, the apathy and the indifference so evident in popular thinking everywhere, and which we all deplore. I repeat that nothing is more important for the preservation of our freedoms than that Parliament, in both its branches, should not only earn but maintain and increase the respect of the people, because, if we forfeit popular respect, some demagogue may come along and say, "Let us sweep these institutions away, and I promise you a new heaven and a new earth if you will let me do it." We have too often seen what has resulted from that sort of appeal to contemplate without misgiving anything of the kind happening here. Some may say that it is not possible in a country like Canada. I do not agree. Maybe I am wrong, but I believe it is possible for public opinion to become so dulled, so atrophied, so indifferent that by default our liberty may go and tyranny take its place. The only safe principle is to be eternally on guard.

In closing, I suggest that our paramount duty is to do our work honestly and faithfully at all times. If we do so, one need have no doubt what the verdict of tomorrow will be. If we fail, there can be no question but that history will mark our failure. And so in these difficult days there is a great obligation resting upon both branches of Parliament to maintain the respect and confidence of our people in order that our institutions may grow and prosper, and that liberty and freedom shall always prevail.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. James H. King: Honourable senators, I do not propose to detain the house, but I feel I should follow the honourable gentlemen who have just spoken, for they were former colleagues of mine in the Government of Canada. During the last session I had occasion to refer in this house to some 12 or 15 vacancies that were then existing in the Senate. I did not do so with the hope that I could influence the Government, but I did feel that the attention of the Government and of Parliament should be called to those vacancies. I felt that the situation then prevailing was not in the best interests of Parliament, and that the vacancies should be filled as soon as possible. I realized at the time, of course, that the filling of vacancies in the Senate presents one of the most difficult problems which confronts the Prime Minister of Canada.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. King: I must say that I was pleased to hear the speech made this afternoon by my colleague from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler). He spoke in a modest and moderate tone. I agreed almost entirely with his remarks, but I hesitate to follow him to the point of agreeing that we should approve legislation requiring the Government and the Prime Minister to fill Senate vacancies within a six-month period.

The speech of the honourable gentleman from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) was a masterpiece which was well understood and recognized in this chamber, and it will be highly thought of throughout the country. However, I had hoped he would conclude his remarks by saying that the honourable gentleman from Waterloo would be well advised not to insist on any time limit for the filling of vacancies. I am sure that both speeches have served a useful purpose and will be looked on with favour by the present Government and governments that follow. However, I am not inclined to support a time limit for the filling of vacancies. I think this is a matter which should be left to the responsibility of the Prime Minister and his colleagues in the Government.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, this is a difficult question to speak on, but let me describe the situation with which I am faced today. When I came to the Senate in 1935 I was one of 65 Conservative members, only 7 of whom are alive today. The reason for the difficulty in which the Senate finds itself is really simple. I can quite understand why the honourable senators from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler), Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) and Kootenay East (Hon. Mr. King) did not mention the reason, and if I were a former member of the Liberal Government I would not mention it either. The fact is that the Senate was created on the basis of what had occurred between the years 1841 and 1867. In those days the government changed frequently and there was no danger that the nominees of any one party would constitute an overwhelming majority in the upper chamber.

The trouble today is that there is insufficient opposition to bring out the best in the Government party in this house. We can talk as we like, but that is the real crux of the argument. The four representatives of Manitoba in this house are all former members either of the House of Commons or of the Manitoba Legislature. Senator Beaubien served nineteen years in the House of Commons, Senator Crerar twenty-three, and Senator Howden twenty, and I was a member of the Manitoba Legislature for sixteen years. That accumulated experience should give the four of us a pretty good understanding of the present problem. I remember well that whenever there was a strong Opposition in the Manitoba Legislature there was a far better Government. In 1920 the Government's majority was small and the Opposition was very stern; in 1922 the Government was strong and the Opposition was weak, and in 1927 the Opposition became strong—in fact, so strong that the Speaker had to decide numerous contentious points.

There is nothing personal in my viewpoint. No one has received finer treatment from his associates in this chamber than I have. In all my public life, including thirteen years' service with the Winnipeg School Board and sixteen years' service in the Manitoba Legislature, I have never been better treated than I have in the Senate. But I maintain that a democratic parliamentary system is based on the idea of a Government and an Opposition. What has been the experience in Great Britain? There a three-party system was tried but, as predicted by many people, one of the parties fell by the wayside. A third political party was introduced in the United States, but it got nowhere. Democratic parliaments which try operating a multi-party system usually drift back to a two-party system. However, people who live in different sections of a country the size of Canada are bound to differ a little in their thinking. The country is just too big for everyone to travel from one end to the other. For example, how many Maritime members have visited the Prairie provinces and British Columbia, and how many members from the West have visited the Maritime provinces? I know a good bit about Ontario and Quebec and I have done some curling in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, but I am ashamed to admit that I have never been in Prince Edward Island or Newfoundland.

A stronger Opposition is needed in the Senate, but the question is how to achieve it.

I want to say a few words about Canada's Prime Minister, a gentleman for whom I have a very kindly feeling. Perhaps that is not something which the Leader of the Conservative party in the Senate should say, but that is my feeling. I am sure that the Prime Minister is just as much concerned about the problem of Senate appointments as anyone else is. On various occasions he has chatted with me about the judiciary in my province, and from what he has said I know that he feels a heavy responsibility regarding appointments to the Bench and to the Senate.

As to Senate appointments, a great variety of opinion has been expressed. In Maclean's magazine, a year or so ago, suggestions were made by persons from all parts of Canada. One man from Quebec, an author, said: "They should appoint me, because my dad would like to know I was a senator." A man from New Brunswick said that his wife should be appointed, because she was a smart woman and he knew she would be smart in the Senate. Another man, from somewhere else, who forgot that one must be 30 years of age to be eligible for a Senate appointment, proposed that a 19-year old girl, described as Canada's best looking girl in 1953, should be made a senator because she would make a good exhibit in this house. That kind of nonsense, published in Maclean's, was circulated all over Canada.

It is all right for the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar), to say that before selecting a person for appointment as senator the Prime Minister usually obtains the approval of the minister from the province concerned and of virtually the whole Cabinet, but the final say in making an appointment is by the Prime Minister. I speak with authority. I know how I was appointed. I was not appointed by any committee. A man telephoned me long distance and said, "Will you accept a senatorship?" I said, "What?" He said again, "Will you accept a senatorship?" I replied, "Well, I thought you had to be a member of the House of Commons to become a senator." He said, "Oh, no; anybody can be a senator if he is appointed." So I asked, "Will the P. M. appoint me?" The reply came back, "He says he will." I said, "But he doesn't like me." The man answered, "Oh, that doesn't make any difference—he wants you." So I became a senator.

Honourable senators, as I have mentioned, Manitoba has four senators in this Parliament now. I will challenge any province in Canada to produce four senators who have given longer public service than the four members of Manitoba.

I am of the opinion that, to qualify as a senator, any man or woman should have at least experience as a member of a school board, a city council, or a legislature, or as member of Parliament. It is quite true that in this chamber there are men and women without such experience, but they cannot be quite as useful as if they had it. Certainly, greater service can be given with the background of that experience than without it. There may be differences of opinion on that, but that is my opinion, based on what I have observed here.

I hope the Prime Minister will accept the resolution moved by my honourable friend from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler). If I thought the bill would make any trouble for the Prime Minister I would not vote for it. I am willing to vote against the Prime Minister, absolutely, on political questions—on the budget, or on financial matters that I do not agree with. This, however, has to do with the choice of members for the Senate. My experience of 20 years here has taught me that the task of the Prime Minister in making appointments to this chamber is very, very difficult. I think he should appoint men and women to this house from a cross-section of the people of Canada, not some man or woman with a high social status, or a free spender, or some notable person who has written a book. There should be no nonsense like that. Every appointee should be a man or woman who has given real public service to the people of his or her province, the type of person who responds when volunteers are called for to raise money for federated charities or the Community Chest. That is the type of person we need. I urge the Prime Minister to accept the word of the honourable member from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) that he is not introducing this bill to embarrass him or the Government. I accept his word for it. Waiting is not going to improve the situation one iota.

The Prime Minister has the difficult task of considering appointments from among those who have been workers on behalf of himself or of his party, and whose appointment is recommended by other members of the party. On the other hand, he must remember that he has got to do something about appointing to this chamber some men and women who will not be on the Government side. That is a hard thing to do, but that is the very thing he must do, whether he obtains assistance by putting the responsibility on the Leader of the Opposition to make recommendations or by some other means, I care not. The problem will never be solved so long as the Government restricts appointments exclusively to persons of its own political party.

I might mention, incidentally, that criticism of the Government by a Conservative senator is not regarded in the same light as criticism by a Liberal senator. For instance, anything I say against the Government is struck out, or at least all the political part is, and they say, "That is what John Haig thinks." But if I were a Government supporter they would say, "That is what he really thinks; he is a traitor underneath, and we didn't know it."

I did not intend to speak at length on this bill. From discussion I had with them today, I know that many senators thought they would vote against this bill. Well, I do not believe they would be helping the Prime Minister by voting against the bill. I think it should be referred to a committee where it could be examined and we could hear one another's opinions. If we are then so advised by the Prime Minister, directly or indirectly, as far as I am concerned I will not vote for the bill to come back, because I will trust him to do what is right. I think he is as much interested in, and as loyal to, Canada as I am, and that he is just as determined to make the Senate of Canada great, as any other man in Canada is.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Haig: He is bound to do that, and I am trying to do that, too. I think that he owes it to Canada, as I do, to give that kind of service to our great country. The Prime Minister has been very highly honoured by the people of Canada, and we hold him in deep respect. He has the great responsibility of dealing with the problem of vacancies in the Senate; in fact, I think it is one of the greatest problems he has had to face, to organize the Senate so that there is sufficient opposition—which may only require 25 members—to properly express the opinion of the minority of the people of Canada, so that when the majority comes to a conclusion it knows what the minority thinks.

Probably I have spoken long enough. I have not consulted my own supporters; I have not many to consult. I do not know what view they will take, and I am speaking for myself. An appointment to the Senate is a personal matter, it is not and never was a party matter. One hundred and sixty-five people wanted the place I occupy here. I never asked for it. The others asked too hard, and the Prime Minister at the time didn't listen to them. If I had asked, I think he would have turned me down.

Honourable senators, I hope that when I leave this chamber any man or woman who speaks of my life here will say, "John T. Haig made many mistakes; he made a lot of poor speeches, and cast a lot of bad votes, but we never once caught him voting against Canada".

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, it was not my intention to take part in this debate, because I think it is the kind of debate no one would desire to take part in. However, because of certain remarks made by the mover (Hon. Mr. Euler) and the seconder of the bill (Hon. Mr. Crerar), and also by the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig), I feel obligated to say something, at least. I went along with the opening remarks by the honourable Leader of the Opposition when he indicated that what was wrong with the Senate was the large number of Liberals on one side and the small number of Conservatives on the other side. Then, after eulogizing the Prime Minister, he expressed himself as feeling that he should vote for the bill. I was quite unable to follow his reasoning in reaching that conclusion. However, I emphasize that in my opinion his opening remarks touched on the very heart of this problem.

In all kindliness I say to the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) that in my opinion the Prime Minister is much closer to the public of Canada than he is. If my honourable friend does not know it, I will tell him that there has been a rising tide of criticism of the Senate because of the very situation referred to by the Leader of the Opposition, namely, the overwhelming strength of the Government members and the scarcity of Opposition members. I do not know what is in the mind of the Prime Minister on this point, but I am quite sure that he is as fully aware of the situation as I am, and that, being a good Liberal and a democrat, he is paying some attention to the criticism expressed by the people.

The honourable mover of the bill (Hon. Mr. Euler) is trying, improperly I think, to draw an analogy between the situation in the House of Commons as it was prior to 1919 and the present situation in the Senate. My reason for saying there is no relationship between the two is that prior to the amendment of the House of Commons Act it was possible for a government which had a very small majority in the house, and which lost one or two members by reason of death or otherwise, to delay the holding of by-elections for fear of losing its slim majority. It was to prevent that situation that the House of Commons Act was amended. But that act applies to the people's elected representatives, not to members of the Senate, who are appointed for life.

While I differ strongly with some of the remarks of the honourable mover of the bill and the honourable senator from Churchill, I hope neither of them will take my criticism in a personal way. It was rather amusing to hear the mover talk about the impairment of the Senate by reason of some twenty-one vacant seats. I have not been in this house very long, but I spent twenty-one years in the other house and have had considerable experience in public life, and I know something about what happens around parliament. May I say to my honourable friend that I have never been afraid of embarrassing the Government. As a matter of fact, when I was in the Commons I was regarded as the rebel of that house, and I did not wait to become a cabinet member or to join another party before becoming a rebel. I came to Parliament as a Liberal to fight the battles of the people I represented, and although that may have prevented me from being appointed a cabinet minister, I had to do my duty as I saw it. However, it did not prevent my being summoned to this house.

Talking about independence, let me say that I take second place to no man, ex-cabinet minister or anybody else, and whether in the House of Commons or in the Senate I am still an independent. With that in mind, I am wondering how much more independence this house would have with twenty-one new appointees. In my opinion it is not numbers that count, but quality of appointees.

One of the things that is wrong with the House of Commons today is that many members on the Liberal side are afraid to get up on their feet and express their views. They are looking for promotions or other favours. When I was in that house I spoke out rebelliously on behalf of the people I represented.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I should like to ask my friend whether he really knows very much about my actions in the House of Commons. Is he aware that, in the first instance, I was elected as an independent Liberal, and that on occasions I have voted against the Government in that house? Does he know that I exercised as high a degree of independence as he did, or perhaps a little higher?

Hon. Mr. Reid: I am glad to hear that my friend exercised independence, but he did not do it during my time in the other house. I say he was a different man then, and I know whereof I speak.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Not entirely.

Hon. Mr. Reid: The most amazing statement in this afternoon's debate was that of the honourable senator from Churchill that if he had a choice between making the Senate an elective body or abolishing it, he would vote for its abolition.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: He was wrong.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Now, I do not ask that everyone share my views, but if I had any feeling in favour of abolition of the Senate I would resign right now.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Not a chance.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I did not interrupt my honourable friend when he was speaking, and I would ask him not to interrupt me. I am giving my views, and I hope that he will not take any criticism in a personal way.

I am all in favour of an elective Senate. I was elected to the House of Commons five times, and I think I could win another five elections. I had an independent mind and was not afraid to stand up and express my views before the Government, irrespective of whether I was made a cabinet minister or not.

My honourable friend from Churchill stated that he did not believe there would be any sharp criticism if this bill went to the House of Commons. I can only say to him that he had better get wise to the general feelings of some of the members of that house and how they carry on. Those who would tear this bill apart are members who have no hope of ever getting into the Senate. When they go out to their constituencies they make great political capital by running down the Senate. I, as one who has tried to uplift the Senate, feel very much annoyed at the way in which some members of Parliament deride this body when they are speaking before their constituents. Therefore, in my opinion, if this bill were to go to the other house, certain members would have a field day with it.

I come back to the comments made by the honourable Leader of the Opposition. How the state of imbalance between the two parties in this house can be corrected, I do not know, but I am sure the same problem troubles the Prime Minister.

Honourable senators, I am not opposing this bill because of any fear that it might embarrass the government. I am voting against the bill, with apologies to no one for the stand I have taken.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. John P. Howden: Honourable senators, after listening to some very able speeches this afternoon, my contribution will perhaps seem monotonous. But let me say at the outset that I am in full accord with the bill and intend to vote for it. My only criticism is that it does not go far enough.

There can be no doubt in any one's mind that a great deal of criticism has been directed at the Senate. However, I should like to quote from an article in the Winnipeg Free Press of May 2 last which throws some light on the other side of the picture. Incidentally, the Right Honourable Mackenzie King said to me on more than one occasion that the Free Press carried the best editorials of any paper in Canada. Under the heading of "The Senate's Future" there appears the following editorial comment:

> The Senate reconvenes on Tuesday. The Government may soon have to face up to the question of what to do about it. Senator W. D. Euler has introduced a bill that would make it obligatory to fill Senate vacancies within a reasonable time—six months after they occur. If the Senate approves the bill, it will go to the House of Commons for debate and the Senate issue will then be squarely in the Government's lap.
>
> The Government has three courses open to it. It can amend the British North America Acts and abolish the Senate. It can continue the present process of abolishing the Senate piecemeal, by the slow attrition of leaving vacancies unfilled. Or it can embark on a vigorous program of Senate reform.
>
> Abolition of the Senate has been advocated by some members of Parliament. Yet, even though the Senate is so often treated as one of our oldest public jokes, no one who understands and values the principles of our federal constitution would advocate a unicameral Parliament. Continued criticism has created a mood in which the good work performed by the Senate is often overlooked, but it cannot be set aside indefinitely. For instance, had it not been for the Senate, Canadians would not be able to buy margarine today. Senator T. A. Crerar's courageous and thoughtful committee has had an influence on economies in Government spending far greater than is generally appreciated.

The article continues, but I need not read more.

Honourable senators, I repeat that my only criticism of the bill is that it does not go far enough. It still does not satisfy the public demand. If alternate senators were nominated by the various provinces of Canada it would make for a much better representative institution of Government, and thus do away with the criticism that we hear on all sides almost daily.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, the debate was adjourned.

PRIVATE BILL

GILLESPIE MORTGAGE CORPORATION—SECOND READING

Hon. Nancy Hodges moved the second reading of Bill A-13, an Act to incorporate Gillespie Mortgage Corporation.

She said: Honourable senators, this incorporation, under the Loan Companies Act, is being sponsored by a long established real estate investment and mortgage company in Vancouver, R. Kerr Houlgate and Summerfield Limited. The sponsoring company at present acts as principal in placing funds in conventional mortgages for some of the largest financial institutions on the continent. The purpose of the incorporation is to further establish the position of this company in the mortgage lending field and to enable it to participate in insured loans under the National Housing Act.

The bill is extremely brief and follows the form prescribed by the Loan Companies Act. It merely specifies the name, head office and share capital and, in all other respects, the proposed company will be subject to the Loan Companies Act. If incorporated, the company would be subject to the meticulous supervision of the Superintendent of Insurance in all its operations.

If the bill is given second reading I shall move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, where the sponsors of the bill will be available to answer any detailed questions relating to the operation of the proposed company.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mrs. Hodges, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

DIVORCE PETITIONS

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce, Nos. 319 to 345, dealing with petitions for divorce.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the committee, moved that the reports be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to, on division.

COMMITTEE SITTINGS

On the motion to adjourn:

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, before the house adjourns may I remind members that immediately after we adjourn there will be a meeting of the Banking and Commerce Committee. I understand from the Chairman that there are a number of bills to be considered, and if consideration of the bills is not concluded this afternoon we would like the committee to meet after dinner.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Honourable senators, let it not be forgotten that the Narcotic Committee is meeting too this evening.

SITTING POSTPONED

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Honourable senators, a short while ago I sent a note to His Honour the Speaker asking that I be permitted to give a notice to the house. As the Honourable the Minister of Northern Affairs, who was to appear before the Tourist Traffic Committee tomorrow morning, is at present on the West Coast and unable to be here tomorrow, the meeting of that committee scheduled for the morning is necessarily postponed until further notice.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, May 12, 1955

The Senate met at 3 p.m., Hon. James H. King, P.C., Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

EMERGENCY GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the report of the committee on Bill 190.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (190), intituled: "An Act to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 3, 1955, examined the said bill, and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

PRIVATE BILLS

COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS' ASSOCIATION OF CANADA—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden presented the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill S-12.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (S-12), intituled: "An Act respecting The Commercial Travellers' Association of Canada", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 5, 1955, examined the said bill, and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

50437—30½

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave of the Senate, I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

PETROLEUM TRANSMISSION COMPANY—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden presented the report of Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill X-11.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (X-11), intituled: "An Act to incorporate Petroleum Transmission Company", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 5, 1955, examined the said bill, and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave of the Senate, I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

YUKON PIPELINES LIMITED—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden presented the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill X-12.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to whom was referred the Bill (X-12), intituled: "An Act to incorporate Yukon Pipelines Limited", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 5, 1955, examined the said bill, and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave of the Senate, I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

TRANS-PRAIRIE PIPELINES LTD.—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden presented the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill U-12.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (U-12), intituled: "An Act to authorize Trans-Prairie Pipelines, Ltd. to construct, own and operate an extra-provincial pipe line", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 5, 1955, examined the said bill, and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave of the Senate, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

EQUITABLE FIRE INSURANCE OF CANADA—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden presented the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill V-12.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (V-12), intituled: "An Act respecting Equitable Fire Insurance Company of Canada", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 5, 1955, examined the said bill, and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave of the Senate, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

S & M PIPELINE LIMITED—REPORT OF COMMITTEE—AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the report of the committee on Bill W-11.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, to whom was referred the Bill (W-11), intituled: "An Act to incorporate S & M Pipeline Limited", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 4, 1955, examined the said bill and now beg leave to report the same with the following amendment:

Page 1, line 23: strike out the words "four hundred thousand" and substitute therefor the words "one million".

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: With leave of the house, I move that the amendment be concurred in now.

The motion was agreed to.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: With leave, I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

DIVORCE BILLS

FIRST READINGS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following bills:

Bill D-13, an Act for the relief of Mary Matilda Getto Paquin.

Bill E-13, an Act for the relief of Ruth Nourse Tomlinson Wilson.

Bill F-13, an Act for the relief of Joseph Henri Marcel Giguere.

Bill G-13, an Act for the relief of Edith Isabella Bond Brown.

Bill H-13, an Act for the relief of Yolande Joos Thompson.

Bill I-13, an Act for the relief of Norva Florence Lemon Farley.

Bill J-13, an Act for the relief of Freda Marie Johnston Storey.

Bill K-13, an Act for the relief of Jack Beattie Thompson.

Bill L-13, an Act for the relief of Florence Mary Ann Meakin O'Ranski.

Bill M-13, an Act for the relief of Theophile Kulczycki.

Bill N-13, an Act for the relief of William Michael Grayburn.

Bill O-13, an Act for the relief of Katharine Leitner Bouchard Frankenburg.

Bill P-13, an Act for the relief of Clara Gaetan Milot Fullterton.

Bill Q-13, an Act for the relief of Lily Shenker Silverton.

Bill R-13, an Act for the relief of Alsye May Lissemore Masterson.

Bill S-13, an Act for the relief of Sylvia Knelman Wiseman.

Bill T-13, an Act for the relief of Sara Beiss Stein.

Bill U-13, an Act for the relief of Veronica Vera Bordenuik Reidt.

Bill V-13, an Act for the relief of George Gerald Melville Scally.

Bill W-13, an Act for the relief of Joseph William James Tanney.

Bill X-13, an Act for the relief of Aline Mailloux Simoneau.

Bill Y-13, an Act for the relief of Margaret Violet Oswald Nicol MacIver.

Bill Z-13, an Act for the relief of Irving Umansky.

Bill A-14, an Act for the relief of Veronica Forrester Rose Kennedy.

The bills were read the first time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: With leave, next sitting.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I move that when this house rises this afternoon it stand adjourned until Tuesday next at 8 o'clock in the evening.

The motion was agreed to.

VISITORS IN GALLERY

ST. CATHARINES COLLEGIATE STUDENTS

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Mr. Golding: Honourable senators, before we proceed with the Orders of the Day I should like to draw attention to the fact that in the Senate Gallery this afternoon we have a fine group of students from St. Catharines Collegiate Institute. I think it would be in order for me to extend to them a hearty welcome on the occasion of their visit, and to express our appreciation of their interest in Parliament and in our parliamentary procedure.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

MEMBERS OF LA CAISSE POPULAIRE OF QUEBEC

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, I should like to join in the remarks of welcome just made by the honourable senator from Huron-Perth and, at the same time, to extend them to members of La Caisse Populaire of Quebec who also are in the Senate gallery this afternoon. These members are in Ottawa to attend a convention of the Credit Union National Association.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

NARCOTIC DRUG TRAFFIC

NEWSPAPER REPORT

Hon. Mr. Reid: Honourable senators, I should like to point out an error in a press article entitled "Narcotic Group Questions Addicts" which appeared in yesterday's edition of the Ottawa Citizen. The article relates that the committee sat in Vancouver for two days and held two secret sessions. That is not in accordance with the report I made to the Senate on Tuesday night. I said that the committee sat in Vancouver for five days and held two secret sessions.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACTS AMENDMENT BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Euler for the second reading of Bill H-10, an Act to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1952.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I see no reason for any lengthy address in connection with this bill, and, from the standpoint of a constitutional lawyer, I see no great difficulty in answering the question which this legislation propounds.

When Canada was brought into being and became a nation, the Imperial Parliament passed an act which forms our constitution, the British North America Act. If honourable senators will permit me I should like to read an outstanding section of that act, section 17, which is historic in its words and concise in its form. It provides:

> 17. There shall be One Parliament for Canada, consisting of the Queen, an Upper House styled the Senate, and the House of Commons.

Honourable senators, until that section is amended or repealed, it stands as a vital part of the constitution of Canada; and I submit that anyone who subscribes to our constitution is under a duty to maintain it, and not to do anything tending in the opposite direction, either by taking action or failing to take action. The original act declared in very plain language that the Senate shall consist of 72 members. Of course, when Prince Edward Island, the western provinces and Newfoundland were successively admitted to confederation, the act was amended to provide for increased membership, but the principle involved in the section remained unchanged. Section 21 of the act reads:

> The Senate shall, subject to the Provisions of this Act, consist of Seventy-two Members, who shall be styled Senators.

It is of no use to brush aside such a statement in an act when it is concise and perfectly clear. The section says: "The Senate shall . . . consist of seventy-two members". Honourable senators will note it does not say that the Senate shall consist of seventy-two members, or the survivors of them. On the contrary, the wording of the section is as clear, short and concise as it could be. It says that the Senate shall consist of seventy-two members—and that is the Constitution of Canada.

The distribution of the membership is also very important in the Constitution of our country. Honourable senators will remember —and we need not be constitutional lawyers to be thoroughly familiar with the fact—that the Senate was created, devised and designed to protect the numerically weaker provinces from being outvoted and perhaps not well used by the larger and more populous provinces. For that reason, the Senate was devised to give territorial representation and thus to offset in some degree, numerical representation in the House of Commons.

May I now be permitted to read section 22 of the original act:

22. In relation to the constitution of the Senate, Canada shall be deemed to consist of Three Divisions:

1. Ontario
2. Quebec
3. The Maritime Provinces, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick; which three divisions shall (subject to the Provisions of this Act) be equally represented in the Senate as follows: Ontario by Twenty-four Senators; Quebec by Twenty-four Senators; and the Maritime Provinces by Twenty-four Senators, Twelve thereof representing Nova Scotia and Twelve thereof representing New Brunswick.

In the case of Quebec each of the Twenty-four Senators representing that Province shall be appointed for One of the Twenty-four Electoral Divisions of Lower Canada specified in Schedule A to Chapter One of the Consolidated Statutes of Canada.

Of course, the Senate now includes as well representatives from Prince Edward Island, British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Newfoundland, and the full membership is 102. The provision for additional numbers did not, however, change the principle involved in the act. Therefore, to leave any one of these divisions unrepresented for any appreciable time upsets the whole balance of the constitution, and deprives a section of the community wholly or in part of the protection which representation in the Senate would afford. To that extent, the constitution of Canada is destroyed.

The maintenance of the specified number of members in the Senate was very carefully taken care of by the wording of two sections of the act. The Senate was not merely launched by the planners of the constitution and then left to its own devices; rather, they foresaw what might happen, and as well as arranging for appointment of the original members of the Senate, provision was made for the maintenance of their numbers. Section 24 reads thus:

24. The Governor General shall from Time to Time, in the Queen's Name, by Instrument under the Great Seal of Canada, summon qualified Persons to the Senate; and, subject to the Provisions of this Act, every Person so summoned shall become and be a Member of the Senate and a Senator.

The act specifically provides that the successors to those whose seats have been vacated through death, resignation or otherwise, shall be appointed when the vacancy occurs. Just because a provision happens to be short and concise, and seemingly not emphatic, it should not be brushed aside. Personally, I am more impressed by short, clear and direct sentences, than by long and involved passages. With that in mind, I quote section 32 of the British North America Act:

32. When a vacancy happens in the Senate, by Resignation, death, or otherwise, the Governor General shall by Summons to a fit and qualified Person fill the Vacancy.

Honourable senators will observe that the duty of making appointments is placed upon the Governor General, not upon the Governor in Council; but of course, in accordance with modern parliamentary procedure under a limited constitutional monarchy, the Governor General acts upon the advice of his constitutional advisers—in this instance the Prime Minister who, of course, consults his cabinet.

This does not change the form of the appointment, which is by the Crown. The principle of the appointment of Senators is identical with that of the appointment of the Prime Minister and cabinet ministers: all are appointed by the Crown on the advice of constitutional advisers, and all subscribe to the oath of office. When, therefore, a question arises as to the maintenance of the constitution of the Senate by its members, it is inappropriate to bring too strongly into consideration the convenience of the Prime Minister or anyone else. By their appointment, the Prime Minister, members of the cabinet and members of the Senate are of co-ordinate jurisdiction; all of them are appointed by the Crown, and all are charged with very important responsibilities. Therefore, I submit to my fellow senators that on great questions of this kind we must each take his own responsibility for the course which we think right to pursue, and we must let the chips fall where they may.

I am sure that no one in this chamber has the slightest desire to inconvenience or embarrass the present Prime Minister or the Government. I am sure we all share the confidence in the Prime Minister, which was so ably expressed yesterday by the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig). None of us would wish to place obstacles in his way. As a matter of fact, I am strongly impressed that the passage of this bill by Parliament will assist him in carrying out the provisions of the Act of Confederation. However that may be, we each have a duty to perform, just as he has; both duties are important, and each individual in public life must stand on his own feet and carry his own responsibilities.

Some honourable senators have questioned whether the filling of vacancies in the Senate is any part of our responsibility. That very thought may have passed through the minds of the framers of our constitution, because the British North America Act answers the very question. I read section 33:

33. If any Question arises respecting the Qualification of a Senator or a Vacancy in the Senate the same shall be heard and determined by the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: May I ask my honourable friend whether that section does not apply to section 31, on the question of qualifications?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Section 31 refers to the vacation of places in the Senate by senators. There are other sections which set forth the qualifications of senators. When questions arise with regard to these qualifications it is the duty of the Senate to determine them. But the section is also perfectly clear in its wording with regard to vacancies occurring in the Senate. Let me read the section, leaving out the words that do not apply:

If any Question arises respecting . . . a Vacancy in the Senate the same shall be heard and determined by the Senate.

Now in this instance, it is not one vacancy that has occurred, it is 21 vacancies, and the question, honourable senators, is whether those vacancies are being filled within a reasonable time or whether the appointments are unreasonably delayed. That is the question, and that question has been specifically referred to us for determination by the constitution of our country.

The honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) in a very excellent speech which I entirely admire, stated his opinion, and he has written it into his bill that six months is a reasonable time for the filling of a vacancy in the Senate. That is the maximum time. Some may think it is a little too long, some may think it is a little too short, as he himself said. But it seems to me that the time limit should be something in this order. Six months was chosen by the senator because that is the rule in the Commons. For many years there was no limitation of time for the filling of vacancies in the Commons. Seats were held vacant and constituencies unrepresented for weeks and months, and sometimes actually for years, until it became something of a scandal. Finally the conscience of the house was aroused; a private bill was introduced and accepted and a time limitation of six months after a vacancy in the Commons occurs was placed upon the issue of the writ. I think that is the rule in all the provinces of Canada; it certainly is in the province of Ontario. There is such a limitation in my province, and I never heard anyone complain that the limitation is a hardship. There are more complications in the holding of by-elections than in the appointment of senators, more difficulties to be overcome and much more procedure to go through, and yet that provision made in the Commons has been accepted by common consent throughout all Canada. Were a bill introduced in the Commons today to repeal that measure and give to the executive an unlimited time in which it might disfranchise a community, I am sure the bill would be voted down almost unanimously.

The reason that this house does not have a similar provision is that the constitution itself is so clear and plain upon that subject. The Act of Confederation distinctly says that appointments shall be made when they occur. Now, of course, that does not mean the moment they occur, because that would be impossible. The rule of law in interpreting directory words of this kind is that action must be taken within a reasonable time. That is the rule when no exact time is given, and the court is judge of what is reasonable under the circumstances. In this instance, we must determine what is reasonable. The honourable senator from Waterloo has suggested six months is a reasonable time as an outside limit, and with that six-months limit I agree.

Now, I cannot but suspect that when the drafters of our constitution inserted certain provisions to which I will refer, they had in their minds a threat, which has been held over the House of Lords in England, of swamping the house by the appointment of a number of newly created peers. I think that was in their minds, for in the British North America Act they have taken care of such an eventuality most carefully and emphatically. They have seen to it that this house shall not be subject to coercion by threats of the appointment of a large number of new members in order to force upon an unwilling Senate something desired by some Government of the moment. I will read section 26 of the Act:

26. If at any time on the Recommendation of the Governor General the Queen thinks fit to direct that Three or Six Members be added to the Senate, the Governor General may by summons to Three or Six qualified Persons (as the case may be) representing equally the Three Divisions of Canada, add to the Senate accordingly.

I am reading the original text, honourable senators; of course the figures have been changed by amendment in the meantime, but not the general wording of the Act.

In 1915 it was provided that, when additions were made by the Queen, no further appointment shall be made except by her until the number of members has been reduced to the normal 24 senators for each division, and then follows this significant section:

28. The Number of Senators shall not at any Time exceed Seventy-eight.

That was revised in 1915 to 104. At the same time, a provision was inserted that, in event of Newfoundland's admission to Confederation, the normal number should be 102 and the maximum 110, and that as I understand it is the law today. And then there is added this further significant phrase: "and no more".

And so the framers of the constitution took care that there should be no possibility of swamping the Senate by the appointment of new members in order to carry out by coercion the wishes of some Government of the moment against the will of this body. If there ever has been any desire to swamp the Senate by the addition of members over and above its normal complement, any such manoeuvre has been effectively prevented by the Act.

But now, gentlemen, a different possibility arises. I am not accusing anybody of having ideas of this nature. I do not think it is in the mind of anyone at the moment, but there is now a possibility of the Senate being swamped, as another great house within the empire once was threatened to be.

This danger does not lie in the appointment of senators over and above the normal complement, but rather in reserving for an unreasonable time the filling of vacancies, and then filling them all at once, with pledged members.

Now I do not fear anything of that kind under the present administration, or indeed when a Liberal party is in power, but who knows what the future has in store for Canada? Who knows who will be in control of Parliament in perhaps a very short time, in accordance with Parliamentary procedure in this country? How easy it might be when 21—and who knows whether that is the end of it—when 21 or 31 or 41 seats in this house are vacant, how easy it would be to subvert the intentions of the framers of the constitution and override the wisdom of this house by the appointment of a number of instructed senators. It is a possibility. Some may say it is a very remote possibility, a figment of the imagination: I hope it is. But I suggest that you and I, in the quiet of the present moment, should see the possibilities of the future and provide for them as we can. This bill will help to maintain the integrity of the Senate.

The honourable senator from Kootenay East (Hon. Mr. King) suggested that the purpose of the honourable senator from Waterloo had already been accomplished and that he might now well withdraw the bill and leave the future to take care of itself. Well, were I assured that the present Government would remain in office for all time, or that one of the other great political parties would control the destinies of Canada with the degree of responsibility which is now exhibited, I might agree with him. But I am unable to look far into the future, and I fancy that my fellow senators are in the same position. Now when this question has been raised is the time for us to take our courage in our hands and settle the matter. I believe that senatorial seats should be filled within six months after they become vacant. It is destructive of the institutions of our country to allow a beggarly array of empty benches to remain unfilled, such as one now sees in this chamber. No less than twenty-one chairs are unfilled. They ought to be filled. I think the Senate would be a better place, that its purposes would be served more effectively, if twenty-one more senators were added to our numbers. Speaking as chairman of the Divorce Committee, I would like to have added to our number two or three more lawyers. The honourable senator from Calgary (Hon. Mr. Ross) looks at me and smiles: he and I are two of the lawyers on that committee; and in carrying on its most important work we could very well use the services of several more. I mention lawyers only because the reference happens to be pertinent. So fully engaged are the members of the Senate that it would be impossible or at least very difficult at this time to constitute another special committee of inquiry. The number of members of the Senate was, no doubt, intelligently set. The obstacles, if any, to the making of these appointments should be surmounted; the chairs should be filled, so that the Senate may carry on its work to the best advantage. That being my opinion, I do not see how it would be possible for me to vote against this bill. I shall support it.

Hon. J. W. deB. Farris: Honourable senators, I regard this subject as one of considerable importance. Its consideration involves the integrity and composition of the Senate itself—an issue which at any time demands our serious consideration. I congratulate the mover of the resolution on his speech, though not so much on the bill he has introduced, because I have some criticism of the measure itself. He made a dignified and statesman-like presentation of a question which is very important to the Senate and, I believe, to the people of Canada. I also congratulate my good friend the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar), who seconded the motion. He presented the philosophic aspects of this matter as, perhaps, no other member of this body could do, and he did it with credit to the Senate and to himself. With all deference to the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid), who is one of my closest friends here, I do not think that either of the gentlemen I have mentioned merited his fulminations.

Let me also compliment my honourable friend the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig) on the broad tolerance with which he expressed himself on this question. His comments concerning the Prime Minister of this country, coming from a dyed-in-the-wool Tory like himself, reflected great credit on him, on the party he represents, and on the Senate itself. He touched a point which it took a little courage to mention when he said that one of the greatest problems affecting the Senate at this time is the lack of an active Opposition. I agree with him, and I do so without any reflection on himself or the small remnant of his party which survives here, in contrast to the situation nineteen years ago, when I became a senator and when the Conservative party was a dominant influence in this assembly.

I have some comments to make on the form in which the issue before us is raised. It purports to amend the British North America Act—a proceeding which until the method was changed a few years ago, was confined exclusively to the Parliament of the United Kingdom. A part of that power, but only a part, has been delegated to the Canadian Parliament. Whether amendments of this kind are to be made by the British Parliament or the Canadian Parliament, they are not to be lightly undertaken. With all deference to the honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler), a constitutional question is a little different from an amendment of the House of Commons Act. True, it may relate to the same subject-matter; but the Fathers of Confederation, who inspired the provisions of the British North America Act, saw fit to make a distinction between the constitution of the House of Commons and changes therein, and the constitution of the Senate, which is incorporated in the British North America Act itself.

I should like to make a comment on the address just delivered by the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck). I have nothing in my notes about congratulating him on it, for I wrote these notes before hearing him speak, but I am sure his remarks will be indelibly recorded in the annals of this chamber.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Whether I agree with all the results which he expects would flow from the bill, I find myself in complete accord with every pronouncement he made. He referred to a number of sections of the B.N.A. Act, particularly section 32, which deals with Senate vacancies. It reads:

When a vacancy happens in the Senate by Resignation, Death, or otherwise,—

That covers the entire field.

—the Governor General shall—

It does not say "may".

—by Summons to a fit and qualified Person fill the Vacancy.

No lawyer would stake his reputation upon the proposition that this means the vacancy shall be filled some three, five or even seven years after it occurs. The question is entirely one of what is a reasonable time. It cannot possibly mean an indefinite time in the indefinite future.

That brings me to the first consideration of the amendment. It arbitrarily fixes a time of six months. No penalty can be provided for the failure of the Governor General to carry out the mandate of the constitution. Under our constitutional practice the responsibility for any failure to perform a duty by Her Majesty or her representative must fall on her constitutional advisers, and in Canada that responsibility must fall on the constitutional advisers of His Excellency the Governor General.

I am not building up to an attack on our Prime Minister, Mr. St. Laurent. When he was nominated for the leadership of the Liberal party it was my privilege and pleasure to support him against all comers, and I have never regretted doing so. Our Prime Minister possesses advantages enjoyed by few political leaders. To begin with, he is an outstanding constitutional lawyer, and as such he is fully conscious of his responsibility as Prime Minister of Canada.

Had the sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Euler) asked me for my opinion I would have suggested he adopt a different method of approach. I jotted down in my notes what occurred to me as being a way to deal with the subject without becoming involved in the complications of the constitution; and I am bound to say that I am not entirely satisfied as to the constitutional aspects of this question.

By this proposed legislation we are seeking to take unto ourselves the power to amend the constitution in matters that are purely federal. I do not know whether my honourable colleague from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) has given thought to this question, and I must confess I have not given it sufficient thought to justify offering an opinion. However, I have considered it enough to raise in my mind a question that might be given further consideration.

The honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity pointed out that under the constitution the Senate was created as a body to be representative of the different parts of Canada, the representation being designated by provinces. In the light of these circumstances I ask this question: can we say that in all its aspects the matter of Senate appointments is so divorced from provincial consideration that it comes entirely within federal jurisdiction, and that therefore the dominion has full power to deal with it? This issue should not be lightly raised; whenever members feel something is not going just right in the Senate they should not jump up and offer amendments to the constitution. That sort of thing gives me concern. It may be presumptuous on my part, but if the honourable senator from Waterloo had asked my opinion I would have suggested that he present a resolution something like this:

> The Senate views with concern the practice of undue delay in Senate appointments and would urge on the Government discontinuance of the practice as being contrary to the intention of the constitution, not contributing to the efficiency of the Senate, and not in the public interest.

However, that is not the form in which this matter is before us, and whether any individual member is in entire accord with the bill he cannot escape giving it careful consideration.

In listening to the speeches that have been made so far it occurs to me that one question has not been dealt with. There seems to be complete unanimity of opinion in this house that Mr. St. Laurent, as Prime Minister of Canada, is conscious of his responsibility. Those of us who know his constitutional capacity have no doubt that he fully appreciates the significance and importance of section 32 of the B.N.A. Act, but yet he has deliberately delayed filling vacancies in the Senate. There must be some reason for it, and it is only proper that we ponder on what that reason may be.

I was rather hopeful that the Leader of the Government in this house (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) would have given direction to this discussion immediately after the bill was introduced, and no doubt he may still give us direction. Certainly the reason the Prime Minister has failed to make certain appointments to this chamber cannot be the one implied by the honourable senator from Thunder Bay (Hon. Mr. Paterson), when he asked the mover what the total saving to Canada in dollars amounted to by reason of the Senate vacancies. Let us deal with that question. If it had any significance it would mean that the country is better off because of the money it has saved in this way. To put it in other words: any persons appointed to fill these 21 vacancies would not be worth their cost to the country. If that were so, it could apply not only to new appointees but to existing members. I am sure my honourable friend never seriously meant to make any suggestion of that kind. If he did, he could always cure it to a certain extent.

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. Farris: In looking for reasons for the delay in filling vacancies—there was a lapse of seven years in one case—I am sure one reason cannot be that the Prime Minister is unable to find anyone willing to sacrifice himself by accepting a senatorship. Honourable senators, my own feeling is that an appointment to the Senate is the greatest honour available to a Canadian citizen.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Farris: The position carries with it the responsibility of independent thought demanded by no other position in the public life of this country. It also carries with it an honour that cannot be surpassed by any other appointment in our public life, from that of Prime Minister down. I have been a senator for 19 years, and I have always had a very proud appreciation of the great honour Mackenzie King did me when he recommended me for membership in this house. And throughout I have felt a very serious sense of responsibility toward my appointment, although I am afraid I have not always lived up to it.

Some among us who have to earn our livings independently of what we receive in the Senate are at times confronted with a problem arising out of the fact that our homes are a long distance from Ottawa. As the honourable Leader of the Opposition has complained more than once, we kick our heels from Thursday night till Tuesday night, week after week. If the Senate were free to act in dealing with public questions, it could do so effectively, and give them the best of consideration in far less time than we are obliged to waste by remaining in Ottawa unnecessarily.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Farris: However, I have ceased to "kick against the pricks", for I see no solution to that problem, because of the great distances between different parts of Canada. The House of Commons has a full constitutional right, a duty and an obligation to discuss questions from many aspects that we in this house are not called upon to do. We are only called upon to discuss, and we only should discuss, questions entirely divorced from politics.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Farris: The other house could not be asked to take the same position. We must accept the situation as it is.

Honourable senators, I have not had the honour to discuss this question with Mr. St. Laurent or his immediate advisers, but I have heard a good deal of talk and also formed some conclusions of my own about the matter, and I am of the opinion that there is in the mind of the Prime Minister today a conflict of thought which presents great difficulty to him in considering the vacancies in the Senate. First, there is the constitutional problem that my honourable friend from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) has drawn attention to in section 32 of the B.N.A. Act—that these appointments should be made with due dispatch within a reasonable time. But, honourable senators, the Prime Minister undoubtedly recognizes, as we all do, that a new constitutional problem has arisen with the development and growth of Canadian public affairs. In looking to the past we see that representation in the Senate adjusted itself by practical conditions. Representation by provinces was provided for in the constitution, but there are other kinds of representation which, in my humble opinion, are even more important than provincial representation, and they have been left to the exigencies of the occasion. It worked out very well that way until it seemed that the people found it necessary to keep the Liberal party in power almost in perpetuity. Under the old system it was assumed that there would be a two-party system. Naturally, one party would appoint its supporters to the Senate, and after a certain period of time would "load it up" quite a bit, but in course of time it would go out of office and the other party would have a chance to make appointments. The two-party system was self-adjusting.

But two new conditions have developed in Canada. One is the unprecedented length of time that the Liberal party has stayed in power; and may I say, not offensively, the serious possibility that that condition may continue into the indefinite future. My honourable friend the Leader of the Opposition was very frank when he said that what the Senate needs today is a stronger Opposition. I agree with him, and I say so without any reflection on the fine work accomplished by the few men left of the great array of Conservatives who were in this house when I first came here. I know that some of my honourable friends' colleagues are not in a condition of good physical health, and they can no longer give him any assistance whatever. However, it is a fact that not only is there a lack of representation in the Opposition in this house today, but there is also a lack of political thought representative of the people of Canada in the Senate, and this condition will exist while the old system prevails. I believe the Prime Minister recognizes his obligation to the public to see that the Senate is what it ought to be.

We have heard and talked a lot about representation by provinces as provided by the constitution. In my opinion, that is of secondary consideration at present. Perhaps it will become of paramount importance again some day, but as far as our immediate problems are concerned it is a secondary consideration. The primary consideration at this time is that the Senate should be representative of the political and public thinking of the people of Canada.

Honourable senators, let us look ourselves over. I am a Liberal, and I was born into a politically active Liberal family. Both my father and grandfather were in politics, and I myself got into politics before I was 30 years of age. Indeed, I had several defeats in my scalp before I ever got elected to office. But I always was a Liberal. I would say to my honourable friend from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) that he and I are both independents, but at the same time I think we both are good partisan Liberals. That is our political thinking. As I said on another occasion, a man who has no political convictions is no good. He can have political convictions and still be independent in his thought, but he cannot represent a party whose policy is contrary to his political thinking. That, I think, is what is in the mind of the Prime Minister of Canada, and we ought to keep it in mind too.

When my honourable friend, the Leader of the Opposition says we need a stronger Opposition in the Senate, he is probably thinking of representatives of his own party.

Let me remind him of the new conditions which have developed in Canada. While the Liberal party today holds a big majority in the House of Commons I do not think it holds a majority among the people of Canada. Canada has not only a Liberal party and a Conservative party, but a Socialist party with a very large following. Incidentally, I have watched with much interest the amalgamation of the two great labour unions in this country, to see whether they will agree that the new organization will also be the arm of the Socialist party. To date they appear not to have made a declaration in that connection, but it may be in the offing. Whether it comes about or not, it is true that at least in Western Canada there are four political parties: Liberal, Conservative, Socialist, and Social Credit. But there never has been a representative of the Socialist or Labour party in this house; never has there been a man to stand up and express the views and thinking of the people who belong to that group. To that extent the Senate of Canada is not representative of the public thought of this country today. Nor has there been a representative of this newer body which has sprung up with a name and a policy that have no connection one with the other. I have often felt that I would like to see a representative of that body in this house who could be goaded into telling us what is the connection between the name "Social Credit" and the policy of that party.

Hon. Mr. Reid: They could not tell us, because they do not know themselves.

Hon. Mr. Farris: At least we would find that out.

I recall that on the last occasion on which this subject-matter was before the house the late Senator David said to me, "Surely you don't want representatives of the Nationalist party of Quebec here, do you?" I said: "Yes, I would like to see one of those fellows here. I have never heard one of them speak, and I might get some inspiration from knowing what they think and talk about."

In order to give effective representation in this house we should have some opportunity to know about political bodies in Canada which at present are not represented here. I believe the Prime Minister of Canada is giving consideration to that very question.

There is another division in Canada, namely that represented by thinking men not engaged in public affairs in the accepted political sense. Incidentally, I noticed in a press dispatch the other day that among others receiving honorary degrees was H. R. MacMillan, a man from the West, whom I admire very much. Now, I do not know what his political views are, but I do know that from a business standpoint he has been a great pioneer in the building up of Western Canada.

Of course, I would not want to see brought into this house a selection of business men who knew only business. Kipling wrote:

> What should they know of England who only England know?

It would be a poor policy to bring here a business man who knew about nothing but his own sphere of activity in the business field. However, there are many men who are part of the life of the country but are not identified with politics. It is men of that kind whom I think the Prime Minister might well give consideration to in making appointments to the Senate.

As I have said, honourable senators, the whole political aspect has changed in Canada, making it imperative that the Prime Minister, if he is going to recognize the necessity for adequate representation in this body, should depart from the traditional policy that has existed since Confederation.

I do not want to be accused of talking with my head in the clouds. As I say, I was born in a political atmosphere, and for many of my active years in the West I was closely associated with political activity, so I have no illusions about the question of patronage. I well remember being in the Opposition camp under the leadership of Mr. Brewster. At one political gathering our leader made the statement that when his party came into office it would wipe out every vestige of patronage in this country. Ralph Smith, who was a sagacious and experienced public man, shook his head, leaned over to me and said, "The man doesn't know what he is talking about." He might as well have said we will wipe out every vestige of human nature.

I make no claim that I am superior to the problems that confront men in public life. But I do lay down this as a fundamental principle which every man in public life must recognize, that however essential it is that party organization be carried on for the benefit of the public, you must not overlook your friends, with the one qualification that friendship must not interfere with public interest and welfare.

In view of the peculiar systems that have developed in Canada over the past few years, and the existence of various parties, and in view of—as I see it—the prospective continuance of the Liberal party in office, I am of the opinion that the Prime Minister is confronted with the problem that within his own party he must challenge the theory on which appointments to the Senate have been made since Confederation. If I am right, I hope that those of us now in the Senate can, by our views and expressions, give him support.

Honourable senators, whether I vote for this bill or not—and I may say that I have not quite made up my mind—I am in entire accord with the thought that has been provoked by it; and if the Prime Minister feels there is a new constitutional problem which necessitates change in policy in order to give the Canadian people wider representation in the Senate, I am sure we are all wholeheartedly behind him.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly, for Hon. Mr. Hayden, the debate was adjourned.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS—REPORT OF COMMITTEE CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Committee on Canadian Trade Relations.

Hon. Gray Turgeon, for Hon. A. Neil McLean, Chairman of the committee, moved that the report be concurred in.

He said: Honourable senators, I am making the motion because the Chairman of the committee is unavoidably absent. The report simply recommends that the committee be authorized to print a certain number of copies of its proceedings in English and French.

The motion was agreed to, and the report was concurred in.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 17, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, May 17, 1955

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

TORONTO HARBOUR RAILWAY TRACKS AGREEMENT BILL

FIRST READING

A mesage was received from the House of Commons with Bill 262, an Act to approve an agreement between The Toronto Harbour Commissioners, The Toronto Terminals Railway Company, Canadian National Railway Company and Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: With leave next sitting.

VETERANS BENEFIT BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 278, an Act to amend the Veterans Benefit Act, 1954.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: With leave, next sitting.

PRIVATE BILL

WESTCOAST TRANSMISSION COMPANY LIMITED—FIRST READING

Hon. J. W. de B. Farris presented Bill B-14, an Act respecting Westcoast Transmission Company Limited.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Farris: Thursday next.

NEW BRUNSWICK POTATO MARKETING BOARD

INQUIRY AND ANSWER

Hon. Mr. Pirie inquired of the Government pursuant to notice of May 11:

1. Did the Department of Agriculture authorize an investigation in connection with the 1953-54 operations of the New Brunswick Potato Marketing Board under the subsidy agreement with said board?
2. If so, has the investigation been completed?
3. If so, will the report of the said investigation be tabled?
4. When may the tabling of the said report be expected?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The answer to the honourable gentleman's inquiry is as follows:

1. As a part of the audit of the operations resulting from a claim made by the New Brunswick Potato Marketing Board with respect to an agreement for handling 1953 potatoes under the Agricultural Products Co-operative Marketing Act, certain extended checks and detailed investigations are being made to verify the accuracy of the claim.

2. No.

3 and 4. No consideration can be given to these questions until complete audit and investigation reports are available.

THE LATE SENATOR FAFARD

TRIBUTES TO HIS MEMORY

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I would like to refer to the grievous passing of our late colleague Senator the Honourable J. Fernand Fafard, who died on Saturday last. For many years I had enjoyed his friendship; and I recall that I appreciated greatly his kindness to me when I entered the House of Commons in 1935. At that time he had been a member of that house for about eighteen years. I remember especially his fairness as a chairman of the Liberal caucus: he never failed to give an opportunity to the new members to express their views. I recall too his kindness and hospitality during my sojourn at Quebec in that memorable summer of 1951 when I enrolled as a summer student at Laval University. Indeed, I would feel disloyal to an old friend if I did not say a few words in his native tongue.

(Translation):

My wife and I often recall how glad we were to meet Mrs. Fafard and the late senator during our stay in Quebec, when we followed a course in French at Laval University, in 1951. We will never forget the hospitality and many kindnesses of the people of the city of Quebec; Mrs. Fafard and the late senator, in particular, showed us great courtesy.

You may readily understand that our visit in the old and historic city of Quebec not only proved most interesting, but was also very helpful to us.

(Text):

The late Senator Fafard was born in 1882, at L'Islet, Quebec, the son of Auguste and Alphonsine Fafard. He was educated at L'Islet and Levis colleges, and graduated with the degree of Bachelor of Arts. He left college in 1901 and became a land surveyor in Northern Saskatchewan and Alberta. In 1905 he received a diploma as a surveyor, and pioneered in the North, where he made the first survey of the fertile region of Abitibi. He also explored the Upper St. Maurice region and the Lake St. John district.

His years in Parliament represented one of the most outstanding records of public service in the history of our country. He was first elected to the House of Commons in the general election of 1917, and was re-elected in the general elections of 1921, 1925, 1926, 1930 and 1935. He was summoned to this chamber in 1940.

The late Senator Fafard possessed a lovable personality. Although outwardly quiet and gentle, he bore within himself a firm and indomitable spirit which had characterized his forebears in the early days of Canada. This is amply attested to by the adventuresome spirit which encouraged him to go into the great West and the North. It is through the efforts of such men as our late colleague that the boundless treasures of these regions have been unearthed, and in this respect his achievements will prove a great inspiration to young men of vision.

Senator Fafard has left a great legacy to those who follow him. With men of his calibre, willing to bear the responsibilities of public life, I feel that our country's future will be secure. After his long years of public service and our long-established friendship, it is difficult to believe that we shall never see him again in the halls of Parliament. In ours hearts his memory will always remain.

I would like to express my deep sympathy to his widow in the loss which she has sustained.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, I came to know our late colleague after he entered this chamber. I did not know him well while he was in the other house, although during the latter part of his membership there I was in the Senate. I had the honour and pleasure of serving with him on one of the committees of which he was chairman, and I was greatly impressed with his fairness and uprightness in dealing with all the questions that came before the committee.

We shall miss Senator Fafard very much. He was one of those quiet, unassuming men who make up such a large part of the population of this country, yet he served his fellow Canadians in a way that will not be forgotten. For long years after some of us are gone he will be gratefully remembered by the people of Canada and especially by those in the province of Quebec.

Those of us who were privileged to be associated with him in Parliament will always cherish the memory of his kindness.

Honourable senators, I join with the Leader of the Government in expressing sympathy to our late colleague's widow. May Mrs. Fafard and all the friends who mourn his passing be consoled by the fact that their grief is shared by many others who have enjoyed the friendship, love and comradeship of Senator Fafard.

Hon. J. J. Duffus: Honourable senators, on an occasion like this it is difficult not to repeat sentiments already expressed. It is with mingled feelings of sorrow and pride that I rise to make a few brief observations on the passing of my late colleague and deskmate. We had been warm friends since we were both members of the House of Commons. The late Senator Fafard was continuously a member of the House of Commons from 1917 to 1939, and he was summoned to the Senate in 1940. For a number of years he was the capable Chairman of the general Government caucus of the Government of the late Right Honourable Mackenzie King. While he was of a quiet disposition he was always affable, exceptionally friendly and in fact quite witty. Of late years he had not taken a very active part in the debates in this chamber, but he was always faithful in his attendance at meetings of committees to which he had been appointed. He will be greatly missed by all members on both sides of this chamber, and particularly by myself.

By profession, Senator Fafard was a land surveyor, having received his diploma in 1905. In 1924 he was president of the Quebec Land Surveyors Association.

Honourable senators, it can be truthfully said that the late Senator Fafard was a great Canadian, and a true lover of his native province.

Our late colleague is survived by his widow, to whom we extend our very deepest sympathy.

(Translation):

Hon. Aristide Blais: Honourable senators, even though a man is growing old and getting closer to the great adventure, he is none the less overcome when the Grim Reaper strikes a dear one and deprives him of a deep friendship which, even yesterday, was one of the joys of his life.

I met Fernand Fafard in Edmonton, in 1902, when he was a surveyor apprentice with the firm of Coté and Roy of Quebec city, which was engaged in making surveys along the Pembina and McLeod rivers, northwest of Edmonton. He was at that time a tall and handsome young man, barely twenty years of age, pleasant looking, bright eyed, square shouldered and of athletic bearing. He was the picture of vigor and action, although modest and reserved in word and manner.

We were not long in discovering that we had several things in common. He came, as I did, from the south shore of the lower St. Lawrence, and at that time those who came from that part of the country were very clannish; moreover, he had attended the Christian Brothers' College of L'Islet, where my two brothers were studying at the time.

I saw him at infrequent intervals during two years, when he came for supplies at the general store of friends of mine, Larue and Picard, in Edmonton. Then, his contract having come to an end, he returned to the province of Quebec and I saw nothing of him for many years.

He became a full-fledged surveyor in 1905, and shortly after having received his degree he was assigned the difficult task of surveying for the first time the whole fertile district of Abitibi. He acquitted himself of this work with rare ability. Later on, he was sent by the Brown Corporation to explore the upper St. Maurice river and the Lake St. John district. He was thus given the chance to feast his eyes upon the scenic beauty of this lovely river and of the many lakes located along its course.

As for the Lake St. John district, he was quite dazzled by its great forests and beautiful lakes, still in their virgin state. He combined the faith of a discoverer and the instinctive sense of observation of an Indian. He was a good walker and was endowed with remarkable stamina. Swamps, mosquitoes, floods, rain, snow, cold, he could face them all and, by his optimism and resourcefulness, overcome all difficulties.

Not only was he well grounded in his profession and of a generous nature, but he was endowed with a splended disposition. He was affable, good-natured, jovial, he had a pleasant voice, a quick and delicate wit, and he was a charming companion, who loved sports, hunting and fishing and was the pride and joy of his men, on whose affection, esteem and devotion he could count.

Those long months spent in constant and close contact with nature, when he slept under canvas or under the stars, and was awakened by the first chirps of the birds or by the sting of the wind, gave him the soul of a poet, hardened him to the inclemencies of the different seasons and developed in him an almost instinctive knowledge of the things around him, of the ripple and sighing of the trees he came to recognize, of the rivers on which he loved to meander at sundown.

In January, 1940, we found each other again in the entrance hall of the Senate, on the very day when both of us had the great honour of being summoned to this house. We had not seen each other for 38 years. He had changed very little, although he had aged a bit and become a little heavier and slightly stooped, but his step had the same spring and his face the same and even more accentuated good nature, the same kindness and sincerity, the same gentle irony glistening nearly always with a kindly smile; and the joy of living was oozing from his whole person.

In a reminiscing vein, we recalled for a few moments the days of his apprenticeship, near Edmonton, in 1902. He had come a long way since then and met with success at every step. He was first elected to the House of Commons in 1917 and such was his popularity that he was returned five times thereafter, once by acclamation.

He was noted for his deep understanding of men and things and kept well abreast of political problems.

He was highly interested in social security projects and never lost an opportunity of helping to bring them into being or of improving the living conditions of his constituents.

Thanks to the clear and penetrating turn of his professional mind, he was accustomed to find his way through the most complicated situations so that, without any apparent effort, he could do a great deal of work in a short time.

He had the confidence of the leaders of the party who respected his perfect honesty and appreciated his advice. He enjoyed the friendship of several ministers, including the late the Right Honourable Ernest Lapointe, the former Minister of Justice, who loved him as his own brother.

There was never a more simple, straightforward and truly patriotic man, although he guarded jealously his freedom of action. He did not pretend to know the classics, but he expressed himself in warm, stirring and colorful terms which well depicted his feelings and the interest he took in his electors. Neither was his judgment warped by the subtleties of higher education. His was a natural and sometimes spontaneous judgment, emanating from the true common sense which was his chief asset and the envy of his friends; it was allied to an almost feminine intuition, so acute, so sensitive that he could almost foresee events and know their consequences beforehand.

He was a most generous man, who opened his door to any distress, whether small or great. But he was also very discreet and so modest that he hesitated to give openly.

In addition, he was endowed with that courtesy, that exquisite politeness and that hospitality which characterize the true gentleman. Such was, as I knew him, the outstanding and distinguished man we have just lost. He will long be mourned in this house and throughout the country, wherever he passed in doing good.

(Text):

Hon. Armand Daigle: Honourable senators, I would like to add just a few words to what has already been said of the late Senator Fafard.

We of the Senate have certainly lost a great colleague, for Senator Fafard was keenly devoted to all his Parliamentary duties in this house, as he had been in the other house, where he sat for many years.

Senator Fafard was always an inspiration to the new-comer to this house; his calm and dignity and his willingness to advise all of his new colleagues gave confidence to new senators.

To his wife and his immediately family I offer my deepest sympathy.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, I would feel very remiss indeed if I did not take this opportunity on my own behalf and in association with the honourable senator from Peterborough West (Hon. Mr. Duffus) and on behalf of those of us whose designations in this house are in the neighbouring province of Ontario, to pay respect to the memory of our late colleague. He was intimately associated with a period of Parliamentary affiliations that is becoming rather overshadowed by the passing of so many old members and associates.

I had the great privilege of being a deskmate of Senator Fafard when he entered this chamber, after having served so many years in the House of Commons. I had known him slightly while he was in that house, mainly because, as has been so felicitously pointed out by the honourable senator from St. Albert (Hon. Mr. Blais), he was one of the closest of friends of a friend of so many of us, the late Right Honourable Ernest Lapointe. Senator Fafard entered the Senate two years after I did, and I shall always remember him for words of approval and encouragement which he uninvitedly but very graciously extended to me on one of my first attempts at expressing myself in this house. It was on the occasion of the passing of another old friend, Senator J. C. Elliott, who was a member of this house for a few years. The Honourable J. C. Elliott—Jack Elliott, as he was known—was also a close friend of the late Right Honourable Ernest Lapointe. In my remarks I suggested that that association between those two men, one from Ontario and the other from Quebec, extending so intimately over so many years, was a symbol of the growing bond of attachment and understanding that had fortunately and with great results to us all, developed between these two provinces.

It was on that note that my deskmate of that time spoke to me with most encouraging sympathy and approval. I have always thought since then, and I am glad to be able to do so now, that I might have associated him with that triangular friendship as the solid, firm base of the relations that existed amongst the three of them, whose contributions to the ever-present problem of better understanding and more cordial feeling between different parts of this country have been far more valuable—far richer in their results, possibly—than most of us have ever appreciated.

I have always felt that the late senator bore the indelible impress of a man who had spent a great part of his early life in the wilderness of this country, exploring and helping to develop the vast hinterland areas not only of his own province of Quebec but of the middle western provinces of Canada as well. Although we did not hear him in this chamber as often as many of us would have liked to, he possessed a serenity of mind and strength of character which could not but impress those of us who had the great privilege of knowing him.

At this time I should like on my own behalf and those of us from the province of Ontario to extend to his charming wife, who did so much to lighten and glorify his later years, our warmest and most sincere sympathy.

Hon. Charles B. Howard: Honourable senators, I want to join with the previous speakers in paying my respects to the memory of the late Fernand Fafard. By his integrity, his honesty and his enthusiasm he endeared himself to the people of his constituency, and they elected him at six general elections. I was in the other house with him for fifteen years, and was appointed to the Senate at the same time that he came to this body. In my opinion he represented the real mentality of the province of Quebec. He will be much missed: he was one of Quebec's distinguished sons. I join with other honourable senators in extending my sympathy to Mrs. Fafard in her bereavement.

(Translation):

Hon. Paul Henri Bouffard: Honourable senators, I should feel remiss in my duty if I failed to add my tribute to those already expressed to the memory of our lamented colleague, Senator Fafard. If more worthy Quebec representatives than I cannot express their sympathy here this evening, it is because they will attend the funeral of our late friend tomorrow morning.

I am not surprised to hear a large number of senators say that they will miss Senator Fafard.

I accompanied the remains of our late colleague to his favorite home, in his electoral division of L'Islet, in his beloved section of the country; a large number of his constituents, sad and weeping, came to pay their respects.

Although he had left L'Islet, he returned there each summer.

I had the good fortune to number myself among the recipients of his valuable advice, based on his long experience, which he dispensed freely in a humble and generous way; indeed, he made you feel as if you were doing him a favour by accepting his counsel. Not only was Senator Fafard gifted with good judgment, but he was also a marvellous host. During the summer, I had an opportunity of passing his home frequently at L'Islet, in the lower St. Lawrence district, and he would be aggrieved if I failed to stop. He liked to welcome his friends and to listen to them. He was anxious to know their views. In return, he gave them useful advice.

We, from Quebec, will sadly miss Senator Fafard. We shall miss his experience, his hospitality and his sound counsel. But this is life and we must make the best of it.

I wish to express to his worthy and distinguished wife my deepest sympathy.

(Text):

DIVORCE PETITIONS

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the Committee's reports Nos. 346, to 364, dealing with petitions for divorce, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

The motion was agreed to, on division.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACTS AMENDMENT BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING— DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, May 12, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Euler for the second reading of Bill H-10, an Act to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1952.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, the principle of this bill directs the attention of the Senate to a very important question and one which, in affecting the Senate, affects thereby one of the legislative bodies which make up the Parliament of Canada. It is a serious as well as an important question, having to do with the increasing number of vacancies which have occurred in this body. Unfortunately, even since this bill was introduced we have had occasion, this evening, to note the loss of another member of our body, which brings the number of vacancies to twenty-two. This number, compared with a full representation of one hundred and two, represents a very substantial reduction of membership in a body which, even when filled in accordance with the requirements of our constitution, is not very large.

So far as the principle is concerned, I think it is an important one, and the sponsor of the bill is to be commended for having brought up the matter for public discussion and the expression of the views of the Senate, because it affects senators themselves in a very particular way. As these vacancies mount and the public press faithfully records their increasing numbers, there is a growing public tendency toward disparaging comment on the Senate, to the effect that under these conditions it cannot properly function and perform its duties. In the end this reflects upon the dignity and the usefulness of the Senate as a legislative body. If, in fact, 80 members constitute a sufficient representation for the performance of the public duties for which the Senate is responsible under our constitution, then we should face the issue and take some positive action towards providing for a Senate consisting of 80 members. That was not the notion or the idea that moved those who took part in the drafting of the constitution and its provisions for a Senate with a fixed numerical representation.

It seems that a special plan was followed in formulating the various qualifications concerning the setting up of the Senate. Four great divisions of Canada are provided with equal numerical representation in this house —Western Canada, Quebec, Ontario and the Maritimes. There is a separate and additional provision for representation from Newfoundland. These territorial divisions for representation in this house were undoubtedly designed to provide one legislative body in the Parliament of Canada where equal representation and voice could be given during consideration of any legislative measure that might affect minority rights—whether racial, religious or of any other kind—arising by reason of whatever wind of popular fancy happened at that moment to be blowing through the elected House of Commons.

Maintenance of a large number of vacancies has persisted for a period of some twenty or twenty-five years, and we should at this time face the issue and decide whether the original plan of those who provided the constitution of the Senate of Canada is still required for the proper functioning of our Parliament, or whether a reduced membership in this house with equal recognition to the various parts of Canada would serve the purpose. I say that we should face this issue now, so that the public might retain their confidence in this legislative body and feel that it is perfectly capable and willing to carry out its duties.

There are two questions involved here. One turns on the ability of the Senate to do its job, and the other turns on the acceptance by the public—in some measure, an uninformed public—of the idea that the Senate with reduced numbers can effectively perform its functions.

In my view the second question is just as important as the first, for the continued successful functioning of the Senate is dependent upon some measure of public confidence as well as public interest in the Senate.

We do not get anywhere by attempting to excuse ourselves for inaction. We do not get anywhere by looking the other way and saying that there is no problem, for there is indeed a very serious one and it affects the well-being of the Senate and its standing in the public mind of Canada.

Honourable senators, having said that, I should like to turn to some of the other political and national questions which are provoked by the principle of this bill. Some of the present vacancies have persisted for possibly five years. A study of the record in respect of those provinces where some of those vacancies of that duration exist will show, I think that some subsequent vacancies have been filled.

The sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Euler) told us that one vacancy has continued for at least seven years.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Nearly seven years.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Nearly seven years. If failure to make the particular appointments is embarrassing to the Governor in Council, the advisers of the Governor General in Canada or the Prime Minister of Canada, my feeling is that by this time the embarrassment must have become chronic. If under the present system some vacancies cannot be filled within five years, and this leads to embarrassment, it would seem to be time to take positive and affirmative action to provide for a system that would avoid such embarrassment and the kind of situation we have in the Senate at this time. In any event, this discussion, to the extent that it will provoke the thinking of the people as to what should be done, having regard to their constitutional right to have 102 members in the Senate, will have accomplished a useful purpose, even if nothing more comes out of it. On that phase I shall have something further to say in a few moments.

Honourable senators, I am merely expressing my own views on this subject. However, as a senator I do feel quite keenly about it. I was made more conscious of the importance of the subject tonight when we were expressing our respects to the late Senator Fafard and our regrets at his passing. Our late colleague and I came to the Senate together, in February of 1940, and an occasion like this makes one realize the passage of time. I have always enjoyed my association in the Senate, and I have learned to appreciate fully the real function and purpose of this body and its importance in the legislative scheme of things. Therefore I am extra sensitive, shall I say, to anything that might reflect in the public mind, rightly or wrongly, on the usefulness of the Senate, such as even the merest suggestion that the ability of the Senate to function properly is impaired because of failure to keep its strength up to the numbers required by the constitution.

Honourable senators, in my opinion the position of the Senate will not be improved by delaying consideration of this question. Sooner or later it will have to be faced and some action will have to be taken. In these circumstances I turn my attention to a study of the bill before us. I was urged on to most favourable consideration of this measure because of one of the factors I have mentioned, namely, the public interest, which is so important if the Senate is to continue to function as a legislative body in our scheme of Parliament. The work of the Senate is substantially committee work, and when a number of committees are sitting the problem of small attendance, on account of 22 vacancies in the Senate, becomes more and more acute. If we must carry on with 80 members instead of 102 I think we should proceed to reorganize our committee system into one suitable for a membership of 80 instead of 102. Let us be realistic about it.

In considering the legal aspects of the question, I looked first at the provision in the Act requiring the Governor General to appoint senators to fill vacancies. The language is mandatory; it says "shall". Now, it does not say "shall forthwith", it says "shall". In my view, the interpretation most likely to be given to that language, if it ever became the subject of interpretation, would be, "shall within a reasonable time after the vacancy occurs make an appointment to fill that vacancy". When I examine the language of the bill, the only difference I can find between the provision in the constitution and the provision in the bill is that instead of saying "the Governor General shall within a reasonable time" fill vacancies, the bill says "the Governor General shall, within six months" do so. Based on the little experience I have had in matters of interpretation I am inclined to the view—and I think the courts would be inclined to hold—that the six months limitation provided by the bill is a reasonable time.

Honourable senators, having got that far in my rationalization of the subject, I have to face this question: Am I going to pile frustration on futility? The provision in the constitution at the present time has permitted a system to develop over a period of 25 years by which, constantly and persistently, a substantial number of vacancies have occurred. I think possibly the number of vacancies at this time has reached a high-water mark.

Hon. Mr. Euler: There were twenty-three in the last Parliament.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Then it is approaching a high-water mark.

If the provision in the constitution has not resulted in the filling of these vacancies, what is the hope that a change in wording, and the six months limitation, would be more likely to bring it about? And if there were failure to make an appointment within six months, what would be the consequences? Under the constitution as it stands, no legal sanction can be invoked for failure to fill a vacancy in the Senate within a reasonable time.

Hon. Mr. Euler: May I ask my friend a question? Not being a lawyer, I would like to be informed on this point. My friend has stated that under the provisions of the constitution as it now stands it is practically mandatory to make appointments within a reasonable time. With that in view, does he think that application could be made to a court for a mandamus to have senators appointed?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I had proposed to deal with that, but I will try to answer my friend now. I know of no provision in law under which an application could be made for a mandamus against the Crown for failure to proceed under this section of the British North America Act. As I stated, I am unable to find in the constitution any legal sanction that can be invoked for failure to fill a vacancy. If the present system is to be changed it must be by force of public opinion, and there must be the sort of expression of opinion which has been given in this debate thus far. I think it is important that we should express our opinions in this regard, because if we are satisfied to sit back, if we are satisfied to make excuses for inaction, then we are contributing to an increasing volume of public opinion which may hold the Senate in disregard, as an unimportant body whose membership should be permitted to wither away.

After reaching that stage in my comparison of the bill and the present provision in the constitution, I then came to the most disturbing feature of the whole thing, as far as I am concerned, and I said to myself, "What then is the course of action that should be taken?" Honourable senators, I shudder to think what public reaction would be if an announcement were made that the Senate of Canada, on a recorded vote, expressed itself against the principle enunciated in this bill, which merely requires that vacancies in the Senate shall be filled promptly. Having regard to that enunciated principle, I could not interpret a recorded vote against this bill as anything less than evidence that the senators who voted against it were not in favour of filling vacancies in the Senate within a reasonable time. That is what gives me concern.

Honourable senators, that is my sincere view. I hope the members of this house will credit me with sincerity, for I have never yet expressed a viewpoint here that was not sincere.

The important consideration, in my view, is what the reaction of the public, informed or otherwise, would be if the bill were rejected in the Senate. So far as the legal aspect is concerned, except for implication contained in the specific limitation "within six months", as against "within a reasonable period"—which I think is inherent in the present provision of the constitution—I do not see enough difference between the two to justify putting an equally ineffective and unenforceable provision in the constitution in the place of the one already there. That is the rationalization that I have done, and I have tried to give my reasons; indeed I felt it necessary to do so at this time. What course I shall follow is my own privilege, and I shall not try to persuade anyone to follow the course that I may take. That course will manifest itself if the motion for second reading goes to a vote. What conclusions other members of this chamber may reach as the result of what I have said, or from their own rationalization, is a matter for them. Whichever way one looks at the bill the implications are very serious, and I am fearful of the reaction of the uninformed public. I am not now arguing the matter as a question of logic, but I am asking what would be the public reaction if the news were published that the Senate of Canada had voted against a bill providing that appointments to the vacancies in the Senate shall be made within a period of six months after their occurrence.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I should like to ask my honourable friend if he has given consideration to the constitutional question.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: My friend has raised a point that interests me. In the beginning let me say that this might be an opportunity for making another speech, but my answer will be short.

I read the speech my honourable friend made in this chamber a few days ago on this subject, in which he hinted at certain constitutional aspects involved, but he did not venture very far out on the constitutional limb. His course was, I think, a rather upright one, in the sense that he was almost getting his head into the clouds, whether he said so or not, and was attempting to look down upon this scene from the point of view of a statesman.

Hon. Mr. Howard: A good deal like your own speech.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I have tried to be more practical in my presentation, notwithstanding the comment of the senator from Wellington (Hon. Mr. Howard), whose facetiousness I enjoy at all times.

So far as the constitutional aspect is concerned, the Parliament of Canada undoubtedly has power to amend the constitution in respect of matters within the jurisdiction of Parliament. However, I would qualify any opinion I express by saying that more mature deliberation might bring forth an additional statement. Having regard to the course of government thinking in respect to amendments to the constitution over the past five or six years, I would say that an amendment such as that sought by this bill could be justified equally as well as other amendments, some of which were passed by the Parliament of Canada since we declared and took onto ourselves the power to do that in federal matters.

That may not answer satisfactorily the question put by the senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris), but it is the only answer I propose to give him at this time. I am somewhat in the position of the pupil attempting to advise the master. To do that one must proceed with caution and due humility, and always with reservation and qualification, so that if afterwards the advice given proves to be not entirely sound, one can always say, "Yes, but I qualified the opinion I expressed."

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: May I ask a question? Does the honourable senator by implication or otherwise suggest that the sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Euler) should withdraw the bill?

Hon. Mr. Euler: Oh, no!

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I do not know that I should answer that question. However, let me say that the sponsor of the bill gave serious thought to it before he introduced it. On other occasions and in respect of other legislation for many years not very well received in this house, the same honourable senator also gave equally thorough consideration. It is not for me to suggest to him that he should withdraw his bill. That is a decision which he himself will have to make, and until he makes it and announces it, my course of action is something which I myself shall determine. Let the sponsor of the bill make his own decision in respect of matters that affect him.

Hon. Mr. Campbell: May I ask a question? Does the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) seriously suggest that the proposed amendment to the British North America Acts, to impose a limitation of six months, would not put a greater responsibility on the Governor in Council to fill senate vacancies?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Having due regard to the use by my friend of the word "seriously", I am giving the matter serious consideration and express the opinion that whether the limit is "six months" or "within a reasonable time", the responsibility on the Governor in Council to make the appointments is equally clear. It is an obligation, it is mandatory, and no provision is made in the event of his failure to make appointments. If he fails to make an appointment there is no sanction; but whenever he does make an appointment it is a good appointment. The problem is that the making of appointments is a function of the Crown. I have not in my thinking been able to reach any conclusion as to how a substitute can be found for the Governor in Council. If the Governor in Council is not to make appointments, then who is to make them? Frankly, I do not have the answer to that question.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Kinley the debate was adjourned.

HISTORIC SITES AND MONUMENTS BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—
DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Charles G. Hawkins moved the second reading of Bill 182, an Act to amend the Historic Sites and Monuments Act.

He said: Honourable senators will recall that two years ago the Historic Sites and Monuments Board was placed on a statutory basis. At that time provision was made for a board of twelve members, ten to be appointed by the Governor in Council representing each of the provinces, the other two being the Dominion Archivist and the Chief Curator of the National Museum. It was further provided that the chairman should be appointed by the Governor in Council, that members would hold office for periods not exceeding five years and that any retiring member might be eligible for reappointment.

The board, which meets each year, performs an advisory function only. The implementation of its recommendations is subject to the approval of the minister and to funds being voted by Parliament. The board's powers and duties are to receive and consider recommendations respecting the marking or commemoration of historic sites, the establishment of historic museums and the administration of such places, and to advise the minister in carrying out his duties under the act.

Before proceeding to explain the changes in the act proposed by the legislation before us, I am sure that honourable senators will agree that the efforts and work of this board deserve the highest commendation. Joseph Howe once said:

> A wise nation fosters national pride and love of country by perpetual reference to the sacrifices and glories of the past.

I am sure that we all agree with this philosophy. In my belief, however, there is a tendency to emphasize the significance of the role played by a few famous people without sufficient consideration being given to the roles of many ordinary citizens whose fortunes did not lead them into a position where their valour was questioned or their leadership put to the test. By this I do not wish to minimize the magnificent work of such great men as Champlain, Wolfe, Montcalm, Brock, Macdonald, Laurier or a host of countless others whose names have become household words, and who have played such important roles in the initial stages of our country's development. I do wish, however, to say that our greatness is just as much due to the industry, virtue and endurance of thousands of individuals whose endeavours are not recorded in history and whose final resting place may for ever be unknown to those of us who are the beneficiaries of their honest toil. Lord Carnarvon, who was Secretary of State for the Colonies at the time of Confederation, expressed this very eloquently when he said:

> Individuals pass swiftly like shadows across the normal scene, but the life of the state is a long one; that which to the individual is so long is to the state a very short affair. Party politics may seem to divide us; statesmen may make trying demands; but in spite of all, these individuals may do much.

I think it is significant and quite appropriate that the administration of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board should be under the aegis of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. While our frontiers are being pushed back to the west and north it is appropriate in this progression that we should mark for succeeding generations the course by which we are managing to bring this rich land of Canada to a place of preeminence in the world of today.

The actual changes proposed by the bill are simple. The first amendment comprises a broadening of the definition of "historic place". Since the act was passed a good deal of thought has been devoted to the question of preserving buildings and structures which would form living memorials to the past and which would generally be of more interest and value to the Canadian people than some sites, however well marked, where some celebrated structures formerly stood. Some of the buildings that may be considered by the board from time to time may be of very great interest because of their age or because of the architectural design used in their construction. They may be excellent examples of a particular period or style of architecture which would be of significance in illustrating the cultural development of Canada in different areas over the years. In fact, the Royal Commission on Arts, Letters and Sciences recommended that this type of structure be preserved for these reasons wherever it was possible. The present definition of "historic place" is not broad enough or appears to preclude consideration of buildings that have no particular association with an historic event or personage and buildings that are of interest because of age or design alone would, therefore, seem to be excluded. As I pointed out earlier, however, it is important to remember that the way of life of the early pioneers who laid the foundation of this country also merits recognition in the story of Canada. It is, therefore, proposed to amend the definition so that consideration could be given such buildings and if justified, action might be taken to preserve them.

The second amendment touches the matter of representation on the board. At the present time the Act provides for a representative from each province. However, as the provinces of Ontario and Quebec are the largest in Canada in extent and as they were both settled very early in Canadian history, the volume of work arising from them is naturally much greater than in the case of the other provinces. It has become apparent that the present situation is not satisfactory and it is, therefore, proposed at this time to provide for an additional member to represent each of these two provinces. While I hope that honourable senators will forgive the digression and also recognize the reason for these additional members being appointed to the board, I would not be true to my native province if I did not remind the house that the earliest white settlements were established on the Bay of Fundy in Nova Scotia by Champlain. Indeed descendents of this hardy band of settlers will celebrate this year the 200th anniversary of one of the most unfortunate incidents in our history, the expulsion of the Acadians from the country which they had struggled so hard to develop and maintain.

Returning, however, to the composition of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board, one other minor change is contemplated at this time. Under the present act the Chief Curator of the National Museum is an ex officio member of the board. While the present incumbent of this position has knowledge and experience which is of particular value to the board, the duties of the position do not necessarily require this. It is, therefore, deemed practical that the minister should be able to designate, as a member, whichever officer of the department can be of most assistance to the board.

The third and final change concerns the basis of payment, to members of the board appointed by the Governor in Council, of their fees and expenses. Prior to the passing of the present act members of the board held an honorary status for which they drew a daily allowance when on duty and were reimbursed in respect of transportation expenses. When the present act was enacted it provided that members be paid a fee for each meeting of the board and that they should be reimbursed for their actual living and travelling expenses incurred on the board's business. There is now a unanimous wish by members of the board to return to the former basis. They feel that although the board is now established by statute that the work itself is of an honorary nature and that they should not be paid a fee of any kind. In response to this request this change is being made. Under the arrangements existing prior to the act and to which they are now returning, each member received a living allowance of $15 per day when on duty. This was found inadequate and was increased to $20 a day when on duty for the board in addition to which they received transportation expenses. This is a reasonable suggestion and it is estimated that the cost of the proposed new basis would represent a very small increase, if any, over the present system.

Finally, reference is made to the proposed provision for a stenographic allowance of $75 per year to the chairman and $30 a year to the other members. Provision of a stenographic allowance of $30 a year was in effect before the passage of the present act.

I am sure that honourable senators may wish to ask a number of questions and it is, therefore, my intention, when second reading is given, to move that the bill be considered further in committee. I believe that the bill is sound in principle, and I commend it to the house for favourable consideration.

Hon. Thomas A. Crerar: Honourable senators, there are one or two observations I would like to make on this bill. Before doing so however, could the Leader of the Government in this house (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) indicate to us what department it is proposed to have this board come under?

Hon Mr. Macdonald: The Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: It is not mentioned in the bill.

Before the Department of Mines and Resources was reorganized some years ago into two or three departments, the administration of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board was in that department.

The former definition of "historic place" reads as follows:

> A historic place means a site, building or other place of national historic interest or significance . . .

The amendment proposed here widens that definition, and, it appears to me, widens it rather indefinitely. The new definition is this:

> Historic place means a site, building or other place of national historic interest or significance,

Honourable senators will recognize that the words I have just quoted form the present definition. The amendment adds these words:

> and includes buildings or structures that are of national interest by reason of age or architectural design . . .

That may be all right. But in my judgment it tremendously widens the application of the bill and, if I am not mistaken, will bring down upon the department a flood of applications for recognition of buildings which have, perhaps, no more than a peculiar architectural design or are recommended by reason of their age. I think we should go rather cautiously about widening the present definition. When the bill goes to committee, as I assume it will,—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The mover has proposed that it should.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: —that is a point on which I think we should get some information. Though it is of much importance to maintain historic sites and monuments and to mark places of historic significance, the practice may become so common and so general that its real significance and intention will be lost. That is a matter we should watch rather jealously and carefully.

So far as the other amendments are concerned, they seem to me to be quite in order. The board is enlarged from nine members, one representing each province, to fourteen, two of the five will represent Ontario, and two Quebec; and the Dominion Archivist is added to the board.

The proposals for expense allowances seem to me unobjectionable. Under the provisions of the act which this bill is to amend, members of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board hold honorary positions, and they receive only their travelling and hotel expenses when the board has occasion to meet at Ottawa or at some other point. This method involves some work in the recording of expenses, so it is proposed to change the practice and allow the members of the board, for the purpose of attending meetings, $20 per day and actual travelling expenses, that is, the railway fare and presumably meals while on the trains. As I say, that is merely a procedure to simplify matters, and I can see no objection to it. The only point in which I am really interested is the change in the definition of "historic place".

On motion of Hon. Mr. Haig the debate was adjourned.

PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald moved the second reading of Bill B-13, an Act to amend the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill proposes to amend the Prisons and Reformatories Act, with particular application to the province of New Brunswick. Before discussing its provisions in detail, probably I should refer to the fact, which may astonish some honourable members, that a measure which relates to prisons and reformatory institutions operated by a provincial government should be the subject-matter of legislation by this house.

Head 27 of section 91 of the British North America Act, gives to the Parliament of Canada exclusive legislative authority in respect of the criminal law, except the constitution of courts of criminal jurisdiction, but including the procedure in criminal matters. Head 28 gives to Parliament exclusive legislative jurisdiction in relation to the establishment, maintenance and management of penitentiaries. On the other hand, head 14 of section 92 provides that the provincial Legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to the administration of justice in the province, including the constitution, maintenance and organization of provincial courts, both of civil and of criminal jurisdiction and including procedure in civil matters in those courts.

Parliament has provided in section 634 of the Criminal Code that a person who is sentenced under an act of the Parliament of Canada to imprisonment for life or for a term of two years or more shall be sentenced to a penitentiary. A person who is sentenced under such an act to imprisonment for a term less than two years is required to be sentenced to imprisonment in a prison or place of confinement other than a penitentiary, that is to a provincial institution.

It is not enough, however, for the Criminal Code or any other act of the Parliament of Canada to provide that a person who is convicted of an offence and is sentenced to imprisonment for less than two years shall be sentenced to a place of confinement other than a penitentiary. It is necessary to make provision for the courts to commit such persons to particular provincial institutions and to authorize the keeper of the institution to detain them in lawful custody. Provision must also be made for the transfer of inmates between institutions. The conditions under which inmates are to be employed inside and outside the prison must be established, and provision must be made for the maintenance of discipline within the prison. All these matters and others relating to the custody of inmates in provincial penal and reformatory institutions are dealt with in the Prisons and Reformatories Act, which it is now proposed to amend.

The act goes further and has particular provisions relating to institutions in each of the provinces of Canada such as reformatories, industrial farms and industrial schools, all of which are operated and maintained by provincial governments or municipalities.

Particular provisions governing the custody in New Brunswick provincial institutions of persons convicted under the criminal law of Canada are to be found in Part V of the Prisons and Reformatories Act. At the present time adult offenders in New Brunswick can be sentenced for periods of less than two years only to gaols maintained and operated by municipalities, commonly known as "county gaols". In February of this year the Attorney General of New Brunswick wrote to the Minister of Justice as follows:

> This province is in the course of modernizing its penal system. We plan on erecting a central penal institution to be known as the New Brunswick Central Reformatory and it is hoped that the institution will be ready for partial occupancy, at least, during the latter part of this year.
>
> The province is also assuming regulation of the county gaols, and in some cases is closing existing county gaols which are insecure or which, for other reasons, such as health and safety, it is considered undesirable to keep open.

In order to carry out these plans the Attorney General of the province of New Brunswick has requested Parliament to pass the amendments which are now before this house.

Presumably the New Brunswick Central Reformatory will be a modern type of institution where up-to-date principles of penology are applied with a view to effecting the rehabilitation and reform of inmates. I think all honourable senators will agree that since, as the Attorney General of New Brunswick says, his province has embarked on a course of modernizing its penal system, the Parliament of Canada should do everything it can to assist in this laudable undertaking.

The other purpose of this bill is to vest authority in a parole board, provincially appointed, to release inmates of the Boys' Industrial Home at any time during their confinement. That is an institution designed for the custody, care, and treatment of juveniles, that is, boys under the age of sixteen years who are convicted of offences under the criminal law, and is located on Bayside Drive in Saint John, New Brunswick. It was first opened in 1893, and has a normal capacity of sixty. Its average population in recent years has been between fifty to sixty.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Does the granting of that power to the parole board set aside the authority of the Remissions Branch or does that branch also function?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I had intended coming to that point later, but I can answer the question now. At the present time in the province of New Brunswick it is necessary to make application to the Remissions Branch under the Ticket of Leave Act, but if this bill comes into effect the parole will be granted by the board that is set up in that province.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Exclusively?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Exclusively. At the present time there are boards similar to this in the provinces of Ontario and British Columbia. As the honourable senator knows, the parole board in Ontario deals with these questions exclusively.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: If this legislation is passed will it apply to all provinces in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: No. The provisions contained in these amendments will apply merely to the province of New Brunswick. Probably I should say further, in reply to the question of the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), that the bill proposes that a local parole committee, to be appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, shall have jurisdiction to authorize the release of boys from the institution at appropriate times during the course of their detention, upon general conditions to be laid down by the Minister of Justice. Once those conditions are laid down, then the parole board will function apart from the federal Department of Justice.

I intended to read in part another letter which the Attorney General of New Brunswick had written, setting forth in more detail his plans in respect to this home. Perhaps it is sufficient to say that he has also requested that the bill be amended so that the parole committee can be set up by the Lieutenant Governor in Council of that province.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Did I understand the Leader of the Government to say that this bill is designed solely in the interests of the province of New Brunswick and will not affect the other provinces?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: This bill will only affect New Brunswick, but the other provinces can apply—and some provinces have applied —to have a similar bill passed.

I think honourable members will agree that this is a forward step by the province of New Brunswick, and I am sure that we all encourage our provinces to take forward steps in connection with the treatment of young lads who find themselves in trouble. There must be some punishment for them, of course, but there must also be rehabilitation. That is what the Province of New Brunswick has in mind in requesting this house to pass the bill.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Question!

Hon. Mr. Reid: There are boys in industrial homes in every province, and there must be an act under which these institutions are governed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes, there is one, for instance, in the province of British Columbia. The parole board in that province comes under separate provisions of the act as it is now stands. However, the provisions in that respect do not at the present time prevail in the province of New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I see.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The purpose of this bill is to bring those provisions into effect in New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: This measure will not affect Dorchester Penitentiary in New Brunswick?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: No. This legislation will not affect penitentiaries: they are under dominion jurisdiction. Remissions, in so far as they apply to penitentiaries, still come under the Remissions Branch of the Department of Justice. In fact, as Solicitor General, those applications come before me.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Haig: Next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Will the bill be referred to a committee?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I have no objection to the bill going to committee. An honourable senator has suggested—

Hon. Mr. Haig: It affects just one province.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: As I have said, I have no objection to the bill going to committee, but an honourable senator suggested that third reading be given at the next sitting. I suggest, therefore, that the bill be read the third time at the next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The bill seems most commendable, and perhaps it is not necessary to send it to a committee.

DIVORCE BILLS

SECOND READINGS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the second reading of the following bills:

Bill D-13, an Act for the relief of Mary Matilda Getto Paquin.

Bill E-13, an Act for the relief of Ruth Nourse Tomlinson Wilson.

Bill F-13, an Act for the relief of Joseph Henri Marcel Giguere.

Bill G-13, an Act for the relief of Edith Isabella Bond Brown.

Bill H-13, an Act for the relief of Yolande Joos Thompson.

Bill I-13, an Act for the relief of Norva Florence Lemon Farley.

Bill J-13, an Act for the relief of Freda Marie Johnston Storey.

Bill K-13, an Act for the relief of Jack Beattie Thompson.

Bill L-13, an Act for the relief of Florence Mary Ann Meakin O'Ranski.

Bill M-13, an Act for the relief of Theophile Kulczycki.

Bill N-13, an Act for the relief of William Michael Grayburn.

Bill O-13, an Act for the relief of Katharine Leitner Bouchard Frankenburg.

Bill P-13, an Act for the relief of Clara Gaetan Milot Fullterton.

Bill Q-13, an Act for the relief of Lily Shenker Silverton.

Bill R-13, an Act for the relief of Alsye May Lissemore Masterson.

Bill S-13, an Act for the relief of Sylvia Knelman Wiseman.

Bill T-13, an Act for the relief of Sara Beiss Stein.

Bill U-13, an Act for the relief of Veronica Vera Bordenuik Reidt.

Bill V-13, an Act for the relief of George Gerald Melville Scally.

Bill W-13, an Act for the relief of Joseph William James Tanney.

Bill X-13, an Act for the relief of Aline Mailloux Simoneau.

Bill Y-13, an Act for the relief of Margaret Violet Oswald Nicol MacIver.

Bill Z-13, an Act for the relief of Irving Umansky.

Bill A-14, an Act for the relief of Veronica Forrester Rose Kennedy.

The motion was agreed to, and the bills were read the second time, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Next sitting.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, May 18, 1955

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

PRIVATE BILLS

WESTSPUR PIPE LINE COMPANY—COMMONS AMENDMENT

A message was received from the House of Commons returning Bill N-9, an Act to incorporate Westspur Pipe Line Company, and acquainting the Senate that they have passed this bill with an amendment, to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The amendment was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

Page 1, line 29: Immediately after the word "hydrocarbons" insert the following:

"Provided that the main pipe line or main pipe lines for the transmission of gaseous hydrocarbons shall be located entirely within Canada".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the amendment be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. MacKinnon: With leave, I would move that the amendment be concurred in now. It speaks for itself.

Hon. Mr. Reid: What is the hurry? Why not next sitting?

The Hon. the Speaker: The motion is that the amendment be taken into consideration now, with leave of the Senate. Is it your pleasure, honourable senators, to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. Reid: No.

The Hon. the Speaker: There not being unanimous consent for the motion, consideration next sitting.

TRANS-BORDER PIPELINE COMPANY LTD.—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. T. A. Crerar, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the report of the committee on Bill Z-12.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (Z-12) intituled: "An Act to incorporate Trans-Border Pipeline Company Ltd.", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 10, 1955, examined the said bill and now beg leave to report the same with the following amendment:

Page 2, line 19: After the word "Canada" insert "construct".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Next sitting.

GILLESPIE MORTGAGE CORPORATION—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Crerar presented the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill A-13.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (A-13) intituled: "An Act to incorporate Gillespie Mortgage Corporation", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 11, 1955, examined the said bill and now beg leave to report the same with the following amendment:

Page 1, lines 17 and 18: Strike out the words "five hundred thousand", and substitute therefor the words "one million".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Next sitting.

DOMINION OF CANADA GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Crerar presented the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill W-12.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to whom was referred the Bill (W-12) intituled: "An Act respecting The Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 10, 1955, examined the said bill, and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: With leave of the Senate, I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

CANADIAN UNION CONFERENCE CORPORATION OF SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Bouffard, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, presented the report of the committee on Bill Y-12.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, to whom was referred the Bill (Y-12) intituled: "An Act to incorporate The Canadian Union Conference Corporation of Seventh-day Adventists", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 10, 1955, examined the said bill and now beg leave to report the same with the following amendment:

Page 4, line 8: After the word "Corporation" where it first appears in the line, strike out the words "as the Corporation may determine" and insert the following words " and the Corporation shall perform and discharge all of the obligations and liabilities of the two Corporations mentioned in the preceding section with respect to such trusts."

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Next sitting.

PRISONS AND REFORMATORIES BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald moved the third reading of Bill B-13, an Act to amend the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

DIVORCE BILLS

THIRD READINGS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the third reading of the following bills:

Bill D-13, an Act for the relief of Mary Matilda Getto Paquin.

Bill E-13, an Act for the relief of Ruth Nourse Tomlinson Wilson.

Bill F-13, an Act for the relief of Joseph Henri Marcel Giguere.

Bill G-13, an Act for the relief of Edith Isabella Bond Brown.

Bill H-13, an Act for the relief of Yolande Joos Thompson.

Bill I-13, an Act for the relief of Norva Florence Lemon Farley.

Bill J-13, an Act for the relief of Freda Marie Johnston Storey.

Bill K-13, an Act for the relief of Jack Beattie Thompson.

Bill L-13, an Act for the relief of Florence Mary Ann Meakin O'Ranski.

Bill M-13, an Act for the relief of Theophile Kulczycki.

Bill N-13, an Act for the relief of William Michael Grayburn.

Bill O-13, an Act for the relief of Katharine Leitner Bouchard Frankenburg.

Bill P-13, an Act for the relief of Clara Gaetan Milot Fullterton.

Bill Q-13, an Act for the relief of Lily Shenker Silverton.

Bill R-13, an Act for the relief of Alsye May Lissemore Masterson.

Bill S-13, an Act for the relief of Sylvia Knelman Wiseman.

Bill T-13, an Act for the relief of Sara Beiss Stein.

Bill U-13, an Act for the relief of Veronica Vera Bordenuik Reidt.

Bill V-13, an Act for the relief of George Gerald Melville Scally.

Bill W-13, an Act for the relief of Joseph William James Tanney.

Bill X-13, an Act for the relief of Aline Mailloux Simoneau.

Bill Y-13, an Act for the relief of Margaret Violet Oswald Nicol MacIver.

Bill Z-13, an Act for the relief of Irving Umansky.

Bill A-14, an Act for the relief of Veronica Forrester Rose Kennedy.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill were read the third time, and passed, on division.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACTS AMENDMENT BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Euler for the second reading of Bill H-10, an Act to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1952.

Hon. John J. Kinley: Honourable senators, in rising to speak on the motion for second reading of this bill, I think it is well, for the purpose of emphasis, to refer to its title: An Act to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1952. It therefore is an Act to amend the constitution of Canada; and as such it is of great importance and should receive careful consideration in all its phases.

I listened with great interest, as I am sure all members of this house who were present did, to the speech of the sponsor of this bill, the honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler). His remarks were clear, concise and he was specific in what he proposed. After listening to his exposition of the facts and the logic of the matter, I would say he made a very strong case, but, on reflection, it occurs to me that what appears on the face of the bill is not all that there is to it. And after considering speeches made by other members of the house also, especially by those who seem to be in favour of the bill, I have come to the conclusion that it would be unwise for the Senate to send such a bill forward to the House of Commons at this time, and as a consequence I intend to vote against the bill.

The sponsor envisages amendment of the constitution of Canada by repealing the present section 24 of the British North America Act and substituting therefor a new section 24 which he considers would make it mandatory to fill Senate vacancies within a certain time after they occur. I believe that a Senate bill having this for its purpose is a wrong approach to the matter. In this view I am supported by one honourable senator, an eminent member of the legal profession.

I think the bill is too blunt and it is, no doubt, futile; moreover, it is not a friendly bill. If the matter is at all urgent it could be better approached by a resolution directed to the Prime Minister and his Government expressing the wishes of this house, telling them what we desire and what we think should be done and asking for their consideration of the matter. For us to pass the bill before us would look as though the Senate wanted to be its own physician, to cure its own ills.

Hon. Mr. Euler: And why not?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: If instead we approached the Prime Minister and the Government we could have a much more friendly discussion of the matter and perhaps come to an amicable settlement of the whole problem.

I personally believe, and in this I think I am supported by some senators who are members of the legal profession, that a bill to amend the constitution of the country, especially one which affects the Senate and the House of Commons, should be a matter of Government policy; and unless it is a matter of Government policy I do not see how it could pass Parliament. If we were to send the present bill to the House of Commons, I am afraid it would become the subject of speeches and opinions that might make us wish we had not sent over there this "take it or leave it" proposition, a bill which would indicate that we are not flexible in the matter, that we want the existing practice changed in our way and no other.

Several lawyers members of the house have made excellent speeches on the bill. I think that debates of this kind are salutary; and if the bill has any real value at all it is in the discussion that it provokes, which brings into the open a matter that could be very troublesome in the future.

The sponsor of the bill was ably supported by the honourable member from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar). I am reminded of the fact that both of them are ex-cabinet ministers, who served long and well in the government of the country. Both had great powers as ministers of the Crown for a considerable period of time. Perhaps that is what has given them the confidence to introduce and support in the Senate a bill that would change the constitution, without first consulting their former colleagues in the other house.

The honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) spoke on the bill last night. He is one of the best debaters in the house, and we usually look to him for leadership in debate, but in this particular case I must say I was disappointed. The honourable gentleman did not really discuss the issues. Instead, he gave us more or less of a lecture and said, in effect, "Now, be careful how you vote on this bill, because if you vote against it you will impair the reputation of the Senate in the eyes of the public." I thought that was rather strange advice to give, but as he continued with his speech I found that he came to no conclusion. He told the house that he did not know whether he was going to vote for the bill or not, because of certain features in it, and he did not know just what to say about them. Here we have a senator, one of our leading legal lights, giving us a little lecture on the bill, and then saying he does not know whether he is going to vote for the bill or not. If I had originally been in favour of the bill, I think that after listening to the speech of the honourable senator from Toronto, knowing him as I do, I would be convinced that he was not very firm in his convictions one way or the other and would conclude that it was my duty to vote against the bill.

The honourable member from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) and the honourable member from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), also made excellent speeches. They paid high tribute to the Prime Minister, describing him as one of the great constitutional lawyers of this country, and as a sincere and resolute man who can be depended upon to lead this country as successfully in the future as in the past. Then, after praising the Prime Minister in this way, they stated that in the matter of appointment of senators under sections 24 and 32 of the British North America Act he is acting in an improper manner. Evidently there is a difference of opinion between the Prime Minister and these legal lights of the Senate as to what his duty is in this matter. The Prime Minister, they say, is a great constitutional lawyer, whose integrity is not to be questioned. Then is it not fair to assume that he is properly carrying out his duty as he sees it, and that the criticisms one hears at the present time are at variance with what should be done in connection with appointments to this house?

Legal members of both houses—I have listened to many of them during the thirty years I have been in Parliament—invariably look for a precedent and will always quote one if it is available. Have honourable senators noticed that no precedents were quoted in this debate by the lawyer members who favour the bill? Why? Because all the precedents are against them. If the present Prime Minister is wrong, all the others who have held office since Confederation have been wrong. The sponsor of the bill admits, in effect, that that is so, because he says that the present practice has grown up during the years, and it seems now to be the policy of the Government.

Hon. Mr. Euler: And also I condemned it.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: One admission I will make in favour of my honourable friend from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) is that his speeches are clear and concise; and one knows what he means.

The first appointments to the Senate were made under a section—No. 25, I believe—which has been deleted from the British North America Act. Reading it, one gets the impression that the British Government kept a pretty close tab on those appointments. We realize, from a knowledge of such men as Sir John A. Macdonald, George Brown of Toronto, and Sir George Etienne Cartier, of Quebec, that the first appointments were pretty much a co-operative business, that the members were not drawn from any one party, because various parties entered into the scheme of Confederation. It would seem as though the names of the first appointees were submitted to the Crown and, after review, those chosen became the first Canadian senators.

If the present Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Louis St. Laurent, is acting wrongly in this matter, so did Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Sir Robert Borden, Viscount Bennett, and the Right Honourable W. L. Mackenzie King. Indeed, on this assumption, Mr. Mackenzie King was more guilty than the rest, because he, perhaps more than anyone, took very great pains in selecting persons for appointment to the Upper Chamber.

This is not the only body created by our constitution to which men are appointed by the Governor General on the advice of his ministers. Judges are selected in practically the same way. I do not believe that there are any restrictions on how long a judgeship shall be vacant before a new appointment is made. We often hear complaints that the courts are crowded with cases, the judges are overworked, and there should be more appointments to the Bench, but it is not often that such complaints come from the general public. We believe that we in Canada have excellent law courts and that the judges who preside over them are appointed in the proper way; and if the Government delays the process of selection a little while there is not very much we can do about it. After all, it is a salutary practice to select the best men for judges, and, I believe, our Canadian judges are among the best. The appointments are made by the party in power. At the present time most of them are of adherents of the Liberal party. That is the way it should be. Merit should be rewarded; and those who are eminent in the law, who have given good service to their country, who support and forward the principles of the party in power, are the ones who should be appointed to high positions during the time the Government they support is in office. The same system governs the appointment of senators. The Governor General is required to summon to the Senate suitable persons from time to time, and that has always been done. I am not aware that the quality of the Senate has ever suffered from that practice. We are told that there are now twenty-two vacancies, and that this approaches the high-water mark of unfilled positions. But perhaps that number will not remain unfilled very long.

It has always been one of the privileges and prerogatives of Prime Ministers to name persons to the Senate. It is a common criticism of the Government that it makes party appointments to the Senate, the Bench, and other bodies. But does it not accord with the spirit of responsible government that those in power, while they are in power, shall select those whose duty it is to administer the country's business? To my mind this course is of the very essence of responsible government. The Government in power makes appointments and is responsible for them; when another administration follows, the duty passes to them.

Hon. Mr. Euler: This bill does not touch that point at all. It has no connection with it.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: The legal aspects of the bill have been discussed by honourable senators who also are lawyers, and I shall not refer to that question except to remark that they assume to base their argument on what is reasonable, and have decided that a proper period within which vacancies should be filled is six months.

What are some reasons for the existing delay? There are in the present House of Commons 265 members, of whom 172 are Liberals, and, presumably, potential candidates for membership of this body. Many of them have spent a long time in public service and proved their merit; and I have no doubt that the Government has a number of them in mind for preferment when the proper time comes. The House of Commons is directly elected by the people for five years, unless it is dissolved sooner by the Governor General, acting on the advice of the Government. It may be difficult for the Prime Minister to take a person from that house and translate him to the Senate, for as a representative of the people in a certain constituency he may be needed in the House of Commons.

The sponsor of the bill reminded us that an amendment to the House of Commons Act in 1919 provided that whenever a vacancy occurred in that house it must be filled within six months, and he said that amendment served as an excellent precedent for his bill that is now before us. I do not see any connection between them. The House of Commons is an elected body, and the Government must maintain its majority there or cease to exist. Therefore, it can be seen that when the numerical strength in that house is evenly divided it might prove a very serious matter to appoint one of its members to the Senate, for a by-election would have to be held within sixty days to fill the vacant seat. Actually this bill would set up an obstacle to appointment of members of the Commons to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Euler: May I ask my friend if he is not in favour of the policy of appointing members of the House of Commons to the Senate?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. Euler: What you have said comes pretty close to it.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: I think we should be practical about this. In years gone by the majority of Senate appointments were made from the ranks of those who had served well and faithfully in the House of Commons, and I am merely arguing that if the Prime Minister has in mind some member of Parliament whom he wishes to appoint to a certain seat in the Senate, it is reasonable for him to wait until it is convenient to do so.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Might that not take seven years?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: It is not a case of just letting the matter drift. There may be a definite appointment in view and the vacancy is left unfilled until a convenient time. The vacancy that has existed for seven years is the exception that proves the rule.

Hon. Mr. Euler: There have been five vacancies of five years' duration each.

Hon. Mr. Horner: They occurred before the last general election.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Many honourable senators believe that the numerical weakness of the Opposition in the Senate is disturbing to the Prime Minister. It has been suggested in certain places that a number of Conservatives should be appointed, but is it natural that the Prime Minister would appoint to this high place, the Senate, someone who has opposed his party and friends? However, if the Prime Minister is considering making such appointments in order to try to give more balance to the Senate, we should not make his position more difficult.

The personnel of the Senate is constantly changing. My transportation number when I first came here was 93, and today it is 42. People talk about imposing an age limit on Senators, but when you realize that during the ten years I have been in this house 51 members have passed on, you see that nature looks after the situation fairly well. I believe there is a bill before the House of Commons now to impose an age limit for senators. I would point out that two of the leading statesmen in Europe are over eighty years of age, Chancellor Adenauer of Western Germany and Sir Winston Churchill of Great Britain. I think Chancellor Adenauer is the most progressive man in Europe today. Men and women gain wisdom and judgment as they grow older; and while their bodies may fail, their minds usually remain strong. If people were to judge senators as individuals they would realize that there is much virtue in the Senate of Canada.

It has been argued that the existence of vacancies in the Senate deprives various provinces of their rightful representation in this house, but I do not think any one province is being discriminated against, except perhaps Quebec, which is the home province of our Prime Minister. More of the vacancies are in the two larger provinces, so when you consider that the Senate was designed to protect minorities and give the smaller provinces strong representation in the affairs of Parliament, there is not much to complain about.

There is no doubt that the Government has its eye on the representation level in this house, and if there is an inequality of representation it does not impair our work. Let those who feel they are being prejudiced come forward and complain to the Government.

In the United States each state, no matter what its size, is represented in the Senate by two members. For instance, the State of New York, which is a big state, has the same representation as the relatively small state of Rhode Island. It can be seen that there was great virtue in the way the Fathers of Confederation designed the provisions which control representation in the Senate. We in the smaller provinces believe that this system of representation assures us that our voice in public affairs will not be drowned out by those who come from more rapidly progressing provinces which are becoming wealthier and more populous.

It is said that the Hon. W. S. Fielding once proposed in the House of Assembly in Nova Scotia that it would be well to let the provinces choose a proportion of the representation in the Senate of Canada. He thought this would strengthen the Senate and result in greater unity between the provinces and the dominion. But would any Government surrender its privilege and right to appoint senators? Governments do not do that sort of thing. Under our constitution the federal government, which represents all the people of Canada, appoints senators, and that system has worked out well.

The Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig), in delivering a friendly speech, said he would not like to see the Prime Minister embarrassed because of the existing difficult situation in the Senate, where the Opposition now consists of only seven members. I do not know just how the problem of the weakness of the Opposition can be settled. The Government elected by the people, appoints the Senate by virtue of the power vested in it by the people. It is natural that the people, having elected a Government to power would want it to make appointments from the viewpoint of the policies of the Government. The Liberal party's long term in office, while it may be detrimental in respect of appointments to the Senate, has proved to be a splendid thing for the country, and I am glad to say that it looks as if that party is going to remain in power for some time.

Some people say that the Senate should be elected. If a majority of the people want to make it an elected chamber, all right, but doing so would throw the whole constitution of Canada out of balance. An elected Senate would be more aggressive than the appointed body has been, and the House of Commons would find that we had become more like the United States Senate. Under our system the House of Commons sustains the Government, and the Government must maintain the confidence of that house or resign. In the United States, although members of the Senate and House of Representatives are elected, members of the Cabinet are appointed by the President. I think our system is a splendid one. The House of Commons is elected, but senators—men and women chosen for their experience and achievements—are appointed, indirectly by the people, to review the legislation of the country and to give advice to the Government.

Honourable senators, we are told that the Senate is short of manpower, because the present 80 members are not sufficient to carry on our business properly. That makes me smile. I would hate to put an expediter in the Senate, as is done in business, to make a report as to whether or not there is a shortage of manpower.

Hon. Mr. Baird: Some of us are not away from the Senate so long as others.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Many of us come from long distances, especially those of us from the Maritimes.

Hon. Mrs. Hodges: And also those from the West.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Others, who live nearer, can leave Ottawa Thursday night and come back Tuesday night. We must stand by during the interval, but if every member remained here and worked I do not think there would be any evidence of a shortage of manpower in the Senate. What happens at the beginning of each session? Practically every chairman of a committee moves that its quorum be reduced from 10 to 7, or from 10 to 4, as the case may be. He wants to reduce the quorum so that the committee can do more effective work, but he could say that this objective would be achieved if more members attended the committee's meetings. Certain committees consist of 20 or 30 members, and some of more. When a committee consists of that number and the quorum is reduced to, say, 9, don't tell me we are short of manpower in the Senate. I think we have plenty of senators to carry on. No doubt it would be advisable to have the present vacancies filled. The additional members would be valuable here, and we would like to have them. However, to pass a bill in this house telling the Government that they must fill vacancies in the Senate within six months seems to me to be doing a little more than we should do as senators.

The honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) made what seemed a novel suggestion. He said that by delaying the filling of Senate vacancies for some years, so many would occur that a new Government coming into office could appoint and fill all the vacancies and thus overwhelm the Senate. Well, this chamber alone could not abolish the Senate; that could only be done by the Senate and House of Commons together. If a House of Commons wanted to abolish the Senate, and you could get senators to come here and vote for its abolition, a state of affairs would obtain, reflected by public opinion, against which no fortifications could stand. I think, however, we need have no fear of that. I feel that at the end of the present Parliament there will be, as always on such occasions, many appointments to the Senate.

Ever since Confederation the appointment of senators has been the prerogative of the Prime Minister. If the Prime Minister, in his wisdom, wanted to select some outstanding persons outside the Liberal party, as was suggested by the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig), to keep the Opposition in the Senate alive, I think he would have the backing of the country. But do not tell me that just because someone is a big business man, or a doctor, or this or that, he will make a good senator. To appoint a good senator, I think you have to choose a man or woman who has given good public service, in Parliament or elsewhere, and who has the support and respect of the people. In the Senate such a person can render service beneficial to the whole nation.

In closing, may I say to the honourable member from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) that I return to him the quotation which he said was a favourite of Prime Minister Mackenzie King:

The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life.

Hon. Mr. Euler: May I ask my friend a question? How would he interpret section 32 of the British North America Act, which says in effect, that when a vacancy occurs, the Governor General shall appoint?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: From time to time.

Hon. Mr. Euler: No, it does not say that.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: I am not arguing the law with my honourable friend, but I have talked to people who are learned in the law on the subject, and they say that is not a serious point at all.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, I think we will all agree that the discussion on the second reading of this bill has been carried on on an exceedingly high level, and that some most interesting and instructive speeches have been delivered.

As has been truly said, the bill introduced by my honourable friend from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) is one of considerable importance, and is necessarily so because it deals with a part of the constitution of this country. Indeed, any measure which purports to deal with our constitution is extremely important and deserves very thorough consideration by this house. I feel that those of us who have made any sort of study of the constitution have a duty to take part in the present debate.

I must say, and in this I am in agreement with I think every speaker who has preceded me, that I was greatly impressed by the speech of the honourable senator from Waterloo in his introduction of this measure. It seemed to me that his remarks were moderate, that they were concise, and that he made a good prima facie case for his bill.

I do not want to appear invidious, but I should like to point in particular to the speeches made last Thursday afternoon by the honourable senators from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) and Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris), and to say that I think they were outstanding contributions to the discussion. I single them out because in what I propose to say this afternoon I shall deal with and comment in some respects on some of the thoughts which they expressed, and perhaps attempt to carry their ideas a little further.

The discussion has ranged over a wide field, and I must say that in certain respects it has had little if anything to do with the present bill.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Some of what was said by my honourable friend from Queen's-Lunenburg (Hon. Mr. Kinley) was extremely germane and to the point, but I fail to see what reference this bill has to an age limit for senators, to provincial appointment of senators or to the question of an elected Senate.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Except that those matters were referred to by former speakers.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Then my honourable friend and the former speakers are equally in the wrong.

I propose to confine my remarks for the most part to a consideration of some of the legal implications of the bill, and for that purpose I shall have to inflict upon my colleagues a discussion of certain legal principles which appear to me to flow from or relate to the bill which we now have under consideration. However, I think that when honourable senators have listened to these legal principles and their application to the bill, they will realize that they are of considerable importance and may have some bearing upon the attitude which honourable senators may feel called upon to take when they come to vote on the second reading of the measure.

I need refer only briefly to the basic facts from which this measure takes its origin. Under the British North America Act the Parliament of Canada consists of the sovereign, the Senate and the House of Commons. At the present time the Senate is supposed to consist of a maximum of 102 members, 24 from each of the great territorial divisions of the country, namely, the Maritime provinces, Quebec, Ontario and the Western provinces, with an additional six members from Newfoundland. Senators are named for life by the Governor General, as provided for under section 24 of the act, and their replacement is provided for by section 32. Both sections are quite short and I shall take the liberty of reading them. Section 24, which this bill proposes to amend, says:

> The Governor General shall from Time to Time, in the Queen's Name, by Instrument under the Great Seal of Canada, summon qualified Persons to the Senate; and, subject to the Provisions of this Act, every Person so summoned shall become and be a Member of the Senate and a Senator.

That is a general procedural provision with respect to senators and their appointment.

Section 32 says this:

> When a Vacancy happens in the Senate, by Resignation, Death, or otherwise, the Governor General shall by Summons to a fit and qualified Person fill the Vacancy.

Now, actually at this moment there are only 80 senators in office. The Senate is under-manned, or perhaps to be more accurate, I should say the Senate is under-manned and under-womanned—

Hon. Mrs. Hodges: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: —to the extent of more than 20 per cent of its full membership. That, as we all know, is the result of failure to appoint senators to fill some of the vacancies which have occurred during the last few years, extending back in one case to as many as seven years. That is the state of affairs which the bill before us seeks to remedy for the future, and the first question we should consider is how it seeks to achieve that object.

The bill proposes to amend section 24 of the British North America Act by providing that when a vacancy occurs in the Senate the Governor General shall fill the vacancy within six months. That immediately raises the first legal question which I want to consider: What is the legal result of a statute which calls upon a public officer to take certain action within a limited time? This question has often been considered by the courts in England. I have done some slight research on the problem over the past weekend, and I should like to refer very briefly to one of the standard authorities on this subject, an authority which will immediately be recognized by my friends of the legal profession, that of Maxwell On The Interpretation of Statutes. I have in my hand the eighth edition of that work, produced in the year 1937, and with regard to this particular question I want to quote a few sentences which appear on pages 326 and 327:

> On the other hand, where the prescriptions of a statute relate to the performance of a public duty and where the invalidation of acts done in neglect of them would work serious general inconvenience or injustice to persons who have no control over those entrusted with the duty without promoting the essential aims of the Legislature, such prescriptions seem to be generally understood as mere instructions for the guidance and government of those on whom the duty is imposed, or, in other words, as directory only. The neglect of them may be penal, indeed, but it does not affect the validity of the act done in disregard of them. It has often been held, for instance, when an act ordered a thing to be done by a public body or public officers and pointed out the specific time when it was to be done, that the act was directory only and might be complied with after the prescribed time.

Then Maxwell refers to what I suppose is the first case that ever arose on this subject in the English courts. There was an act passed in the reign of Henry IV which required justices to try rioters within a month after the riot. In a case which arose under that act, the decision was that this provision did not limit the authority of the justices to that space of time but that it only rendered them liable to a penalty if they neglected to try the rioters within the prescribed period.

And then on the next page, 327, I quote one sentence only, in which Maxwell says:

> It is no impediment to this construction that there is no remedy for non-compliance with the direction.

Now, what is the effect of this legal principle on the bill before us? The bill requires the Governor General to fill a vacancy in the Senate within six months. It provides no penalty for his failure to do so, and the reason for that is obvious. We all recognize that it would be absurd to seek to impose a penalty on the Governor General for not doing something which everybody recognizes is not a personal act of his own, but one which he can only take upon the advice of those of his advisers who hold office in the Government at the relevant time.

I conclude, therefore, that in the light of the principles laid down in Maxwell this bill would have little, if any, effect from a strictly legal point of view. If the bill should pass, the Governor General would still have the right to delay appointments of senators to fill vacancies for as long as his advisers might desire, and the appointment of senators to fill those vacancies would still be perfectly valid if made after the expiration of the six months which the bill prescribes.

Now, I emphasize that this is the effect of the bill solely from a strictly legal point of view.

Its moral effect, its practical effect, or the practical effect of writing a provision of this kind into our constitution, is another matter entirely, and in that connection different considerations arise which I propose to deal with in a few minutes.

But there is another consideration which supports my belief that the legal effect of the present bill would be negligible, and that arises from a consideration of the remarks of the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) on Thursday last. He quoted section 32 of the British North America Act as follows:

When a Vacancy happens in the Senate—

—and he told us that on the generally accepted principles of legal construction any court would interpret the words "when a vacancy happens" in section 32 as meaning within a reasonable time after a vacancy happens—by Resignation, Death, or otherwise, the Governor General shall by Summons to a fit and qualified Person fill the Vacancy.

The honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris), agrees with the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) in that interpretation, and if I remember rightly I think the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) yesterday evening expressed the same view. I certainly would agree with them, and I think any lawyer would do so; and I would be much interested to learn who was the legal authority which the honourable senator from Queen's-Lunenburg (Hon. Mr. Kinley) quoted a few moments ago in the contrary sense.

Now, honourable senators, that brings us to this: The position is that as the British North America Act now stands it requires, at least by implication, that a vacancy in the Senate be filled within a reasonable time after the vacancy occurs; so that, in substance, the only effect of the bill now before us is to pinpoint or, if you like, to crystallize something which is already in the Act by defining the words "a reasonable time" within which Senate vacancies are to be filled as being a period of six months.

In that light I want to discuss for a moment the interesting constitutional question raised by my honourable friend from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris). As the house is aware, since the passing of the British North America Act of 1951 Parliament has enjoyed the power to amend the British North America Act in all matters relating solely to federal affairs. My honourable friend from Vancouver South raised the point, which he said he had not yet decided in his own mind, as to whether this bill falls within the class of matters relating solely to federal affairs, and therefore lying within the jurisdiction of Parliament to pass, or whether on the other hand it affects provincial rights and is not therefore within our power.

Now, if my view of this bill is the correct one, if it does nothing else but to pinpoint and to crystallize something which is already to be found in section 32 of the British North America Act, I suggest to my honourable friend that he should not have any great difficulty in reaching a conclusion that this bill is one which is solely within the federal ambit and therefore is one which we have every right to pass. I remind him in that connection—although I am sure he does not need reminding, but I would remind the house—that in the following year, 1952, acting on the powers granted to Parliament in 1951, Parliament did pass a bill amending the British North America Act, radically changing the basis of representation in membership of the House of Commons. Well, now, if we have the power to do that under the amending act of 1951, surely we also have the power simply to interpret a provision of the British North America Act which has been there all the time and which deals only with the method of appointment to one of the houses of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. Haig: May I ask, did Parliament not do the same thing in increasing the membership of the Senate from 96 to 102?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: No.

Hon. Mr. Farris: That was an Imperial act.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Yes, I think that was an Imperial act, which was passed before the 1951 amendment.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: 1950.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Yes: I am obliged to my honourable friends for their help.

I have expressed the view that the strictly legal effect of this bill, if it were passed, would be negligible, but its moral or practical effect would, I submit, be an entirely different affair. Suppose this bill becomes part of the British North America Act. It would be taught, as part of our constitution, in all the law schools of the country, and whenever any member of Parliament or public man had occasion to refer to our constitution, the British North America Act, this provision would stare him in the face. I think the practical effect of that would be very considerable, and for this reason. No government, and no Prime Minister, likes to put weapons in the hands of political opponents. If, with this provision inserted in the British North America Act, a future Prime Minister should ignore it, he would immediately lay himself open to the charge by his political opponents that he was flouting the constitution of the country. That might be—depending upon the circumstances—a damaging and effective charge.

Let me give an example to my honourable friends, which I am sure they will all remember when I direct it to their attention, of something which occurred very recently in our political history in a somewhat parallel case. Honourable senators will remember the unholy row—shall I call it—which developed in the House of Commons two years ago when the Minister of Justice was accused of failing to table within the period called for by the act, a report of the Commissioner under the Combines Investigation Act respecting an alleged combine in the milling industry. I repeat therefore that, in contradistinction to its strictly legal effect, the moral or practical effect of writing a provision of this kind into the British North America Act might be quite considerable.

Now I am afraid that I must burden the house with a second legal principle which is implicit in this bill. Perhaps I may be allowed first to state the effect of that legal principle, and then to discuss the principle itself. I say that this bill would not affect in any way the twenty-two vacancies which now exist in this chamber. The legal principle on which I base that statement is a very fundamental one in the interpretation of statutes. It is this: No Act of Parliament has retroactive effect unless it so declares in the clearest and most unambiguous terms.

Again may I refer to the authority whom I have once quoted already. Maxwell On The Interpretation of Statutes, and read a very few sentences. First, from page 189:

> Upon the presumption that the Legislature does not intend what is unjust rests the leaning against giving certain statutes a retrospective operation . . . They are construed as operating only in cases or on facts which come into existence after the statutes were passed, unless a retrospective effect be clearly intended. It is a fundamental rule of English law that no statute shall be construed to have a retrospective operation unless such a construction appears very clearly in the terms of the act or arises by necessary and distinct implication.

And then a part of one sentence from page 190:

> Every statute, it has been said, which . . . creates a new obligation or imposes a new duty . . . must be presumed . . . to be intended not to have a retrospective operation.

Hon. Mr. Horner: That would apply particularly where a penalty was involved, would it not?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I think my honourable friend is right to this extent, that a court would react even more strongly against giving a statute retrospective operation if it provided a penalty, but the principle is the same, whether there be any penalty or no.

If honourable senators will examine this bill they will see very clearly that it provides in no way for it to have any retroactive effect. No, it deals only with the future. If it should become law it would relate solely and exclusively to vacancies which may occur in this chamber after it has become law.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is correct.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: So that honourable senators need have no apprehension and must not rest under the delusion that this bill, if it should be passed, would force the Governor General and his advisers immediately to fill the 22 vacancies which now exist in this house. I am not very sure, but I rather think from some remarks which dropped from the honourable senator from Lunenburg (Hon. Mr. Kinley) that he did have that impression. But I can assure him that it is not correct.

Hon. Mrs. Hodges: Does that mean that, if this bill should pass, when six months have elapsed after the passing of the bill it would not come into operation as regards these vacancies?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: It would mean that only vacancies which occurred in the Senate after the bill came into operation would have to be filled within six months.

Hon. Mrs. Hodges: That is, it would not apply to vacancies which would still be vacancies at the time the bill came into effect?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: No; that is exactly the point I was trying to make. I am obliged to my honourable friend.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Can I supplement that by another question: Would not the moral effect be just the same as my honourable friend has already mentioned?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That is a question of opinion.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I do not know. There are various considerations which would apply; and I do not think that I can answer my honourable friend in that way.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: The honourable senator has spoken of two occasions when bills to amend the constitution have been passed.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: One occasion.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Was not that a carrying out of government policy? He referred to Newfoundland.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: No, I did not refer to Newfoundland. The honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig) referred to Newfoundland, but that was a mistake. The only occasion on which so far this house has exercised its power to change the constitution of Canada, the British North America Act, in matters relating solely to federal affairs, was in 1952, when we passed an act altering the basis of representation in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Was that not a matter of Government policy?

Hon. Mr. Euler: So what?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I suppose it was, but it was a matter of policy approved by the members of both houses of Parliament. Whether it was a matter of Government policy or not does not seem to me to be germane. After all, we have to take our own responsibility to the people of Canada as their representatives in Parliament, whatever Government policy may be.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I should like to make one further point. In view of the position, as I have explained, that this bill would not affect the present vacancies in the Senate, I do not think it could be said that it involves any embarrassment to the Prime Minister or his advisers. I certainly feel that it does not involve any criticism of the Prime Minister, either expressed or implied. Let me put it this way. If any honourable senator wished to support this bill he could take this position, and I think it would be an entirely logical one. He could say: "I have no criticism of the present situation. It has arisen through circumstances in which fault can be attributed to no one." A number of the reasons why it has arisen were mentioned cogently the other day by the honourable gentleman from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris). Any member who wished to support this bill could say, "I do think it is inadvisable that such a situation should be permitted to arise on many occasions, if at all, in the future, and therefore, without criticizing the present situation, I support this bill". I suggest to my honourable friends that that is a perfectly logical attitude which any honourable senator is quite free to take with respect to this bill if he so desires, and that it involves no criticism of anybody.

I am glad that my honourable friend from Vancouver South is in the chamber, for I want to discuss a suggestion which he made in the course of his speech last Thursday. He said that this matter might perhaps be better dealt with by adoption of a resolution by the Senate rather than by enactment of this bill. He was good enough to give us the wording of a suggested resolution which he thought would be applicable in the circumstances, and I venture to quote that resolution from page 466 of Senate Hansard:

> The Senate views with concern the practice of undue delay in Senate appointments and would urge on the Government discontinuance of the practice as being contrary to the intention of the constitution, not contributing to the efficiency of the Senate, and not in the public interest.

I must say that when I heard that resolution from the lips of the honourable gentleman from Vancouver South it seemed to me to be very attractive, and if he were to offer it as a resolution on the floor of this chamber I would be disposed to support it. But the question which honourable senators are faced with now is this: as between this bill and the suggested resolution of the honourable senator from Vancouver South, which will be the most effective in curing the situation which they both seek to remedy? I am bound to say that in my view the bill will be more effective.

Hon. Mr. Farris: If you could get it through the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I am dealing with it from a purely theoretical point of view. Let us consider the nature of a parliamentary resolution passed by a branch of Parliament.

It is passed in one session and it may be amended or cancelled at the next or some succeeding session. Even if it is not amended or cancelled, in due process of time it loses its effectiveness and is apt to be forgotten. On the other hand, consider the effect of this bill. Should it be passed it would become a permanent part of the constitution of the country, plain for all to see.

Let honourable members for a moment project their minds into the future and consider what the attitude of a government in this country might be five, ten or fifteen years hence. I do not think any senator would contradict me in saying that such a government would be far more likely to pay attention to a formal declaration embodied in the British North America Act as part of our constitution, than to a resolution adopted by this house several years before. Therefore, if I had to make a choice as between this bill and the suggested resolution, I would have to choose the bill.

Honourable senators, let me summarize the result of this legal part of the discussion. First, the strictly legal effect of the bill would be small. Second, all that it does is to crystallize and to put into focus provisions which already exist, by implication at least, in the British North America Act. Third, its moral and practical effect, as against its strictly legal effect, might be quite considerable. Fourth, it would not affect the present position or the 22 vacancies now existing in this body, for it deals only with future vacancies.

I should like to discuss, for a moment only, one detail of the bill which in my view deserves criticism. It establishes a period of six months for filling vacancies in the Senate. I think that period is too short. The sponsor of the bill gave what at first sight appeared to be a good and logical reason for fixing this period of six months. It is the period within which under the present law vacancies arising in the House of Commons are required to be filled. I suggest respectfully to my honourable colleague that as between filling vacancies in the House of Commons and vacancies in the Senate different considerations apply.

In the House of Commons the object of the six-month limitation is that the particular constituency concerned shall not lose its representation in that house for too long a period. The electors of that constituency are therefore required to elect a new member within that period to fill the vacancy. It is their business, and their business alone, whom they choose to elect, and the man or woman whom they do elect will have to account to them for his or her stewardship within a reasonably short period of time, that is, when the next general election comes around.

Now, I submit that the appointment of senators is a different matter. Senators are appointed for life, and they represent the whole province from which they come, so that no province is ever entirely deprived of representation in this house. Furthermore, there are certain practical considerations which have to be taken into account by the advisers of the Governor General in selecting a senator from a province. We all know what those considerations are. In some cases it is necessary to maintain the ethnic balance between various elements of the population. In others, there has to be a proper representation of religious groupings; in still others, it is necessary to provide for representation of certain territorial areas within the province. Not seldom some of these factors conflict, and their adjustment takes time. I suggest, therefore, that the period of six months proposed is too short, under the circumstances, and personally I would be willing to see it extended to at least one year. I further suggest to the sponsor of the bill that if at the appropriate time he were to accept an amendment lengthening the period within which senators have to be appointed to fill vacancies the result would be that we should have a more practical and more workable measure.

Hon. Mr. Euler: May I say to my honourable friend that in my remarks on the second reading of the bill I stated that I was not particularly confining myself to the six months limitation and that if the bill did go to committee perhaps the committe could decide a more suitable period of time, whether longer or shorter than six months. I adhere to what I then said.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I am very grateful to my friend for reminding me of what he had said, because I confess that I had forgotten until he reminded me. I am very glad that he made that statement.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Before the honourable senator continues, may I ask him a question? He suggested a limitation of a year instead of six months. Would it make any difference to his reasoning if he felt sure that if this bill were passed by the other house it might be a stepping stone to further amendments to the constitution? Is it not true that this bill assumes the form of a step—an incidental step, but a necessary one—toward a measure remodelling and reforming the Senate? I am wondering if in those circumstances, my honourable friend would change his point of view.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I find it rather difficult to answer my honourable friend, but I think I would say this to him. It seems to me that if we are going to contemplate a lot of other measures of Senate reform in connection with this bill, it is going to make no difference whatever whether we put in a period of six months, or a year, or any period at all.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I do not think I can appreciate the logic of my honourable friend's suggestion, if he will allow me to say so.

Honourable senators, before I come to my conclusion, I want to say that I am afraid I find myself in disagreement with the honourable senator from Queen's-Lunenburg (Hon. Mr. Kinley) in one or two things he said. He appeared to suggest—and he will correct me if I am wrong—that this house should govern itself solely by what it feels to be the convenience or the opinion of the ministers of the Crown. As a member of this house, I do not take that attitude.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Excuse me. When a constitutional amendment or change is contemplated, I think we would be very well advised to consider the policy of the Government first.

Hon. Mr. Euler: That is the same thing.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Well, if all that my honourable friend wishes is to discourage any discussion in this house of possible constitutional amendments without the approval of the Government in office, then again I am afraid that I completely disagree with him, but perhaps we might as well leave it at that.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Now, having said all this, I come finally to the position which I propose to take on the second reading of this bill. What attitude they should take on the vote on second reading of this bill appears to have caused some embarrassment to my honourable friends from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) and Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden). Their speeches have shown, if I may say so, a virgin coyness in dealing with this matter, which is as rare as it is refreshing. It is quite evident to me that in his dalliance with these bashful maidens, the honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) has not yet brought into play all those arts and blandishments which are needed to win them.

I will not follow their examples. I suppose the people who know a man's character best are the members of his own family who have to live with him. No member of my family has ever yet accused me of being bashful or coy. In this matter, therefore, I propose to rush in where these legal angels evidently fear to tread. As I have already implied, in my view the only object that this bill would accomplish would be the carrying out of the intention of the Fathers of Confederation with respect to the functions of the Senate and the filling of vacancies in its membership, which are clearly implicit in the British North America Act as it stands today. On that basis I feel that the principle of this bill is one that deserves the support of every thinking person who believes in our constitution and in the wisdom of the Fathers of Confederation who have handed it down to us. Therefore, I will support the bill on second reading, reserving my right to dissent from details, and in particular the right to suggest a longer period for delay in appointments to the Senate than the delay which appears in the bill in its present form.

I think the discussion on this bill has been very interesting and very informative. I hope it will continue, and I look forward to hearing the views of many honourable members who have not spoken so far.

My principal reason for intervening in this debate has been to try to clarify my own mind, and perhaps to help to clarify the minds of other honourable senators who are not members of the legal profession, as to some of the legal aspects of this bill. If I have succeeded in that effort, even to a moderate degree, I shall feel that the effort has been well worth while.

Hon. G. Peter Campbell: Honourable senators, in rising to participate in this debate, I would first like to congratulate the honourable member from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) on the splendid speech he made in support of the bill. After listening to the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen), and having had the opportunity of reading the speech of the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) and hearing other speeches made in this debate, I feel that the honourable senator from Waterloo should be commended for bringing in a bill which has enabled the members of this house to participate in the debate in such an able way as to show the capacity of the members of this house to deal with interesting questions as they arise.

Honourable senators, I should like first to deal with the principle involved in the bill. It is interesting to note that all speakers, with the exception of the honourable senators from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) and Queen's-Lunenburg (Hon. Mr. Kinley), have supported the principle involved in the proposed amendment to the British North America Act. At the risk of repeating what has already been said, may I say that the principle is simply whether or not the Senate should be at full strength, and in the event of vacancies occurring that such vacancies should be filled within a reasonable time.

The honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) in his speech last evening said that his interpretation of the present law was that vacancies should be filled within a reasonable time. In other words, he read into the provisions of the act the words "a reasonable time". He also gave it as his opinion that in any other matter of a similar kind the courts would likely hold that a reasonable time would be a period of six months.

I think that quite a distinction is to be made between legislation which uses the words "a reasonable time" or any fixed period of time, as against legislation which leaves the matter completely open, as the act does at the present time.

I would submit further for the consideration of honourable senators that the intention of the Fathers of Confederation could not have been that vacancies should be allowed to remain unfilled for a period of from five to seven years. On that account it seems to me that in debating this question and trying to find an answer to it we are taking a constructive step. I must admit, however, that an answer is most difficult under the present circumstances, when many vacancies exist and demands are made by the public that they be filled by non-partisan persons selected from the country at large. I do not wish to get into an argument on that point, because none of us here have any control over appointments to the Senate. However, we must all realize that the problem that exists today is likely to continue for some period of time. I would be so bold as to say that there is not much chance of a change in government at the next general election, and it is therefore likely that the problem of filling future vacancies must sooner or later be faced.

Honourable senators, the principle to be considered in dealing with this bill is simply whether or not the Senate should function as a full body or as a greatly depleted body with vacancies running from 20 per cent to 25 per cent or more of its membership. If I am to interpret the remarks made by the honourable gentleman from Queen's-Lunenburg (Hon. Mr. Kinley), his reasoning is that these vacancies should be allowed to continue indefinitely and that there is no need for filling them at the present time. I would suggest that there is no one in this house, in the other house, or even in the country at large who would seriously say that these vacancies should remain unfilled indefinitely and that this house should attempt to function with 25 per cent or perhaps 50 per cent of its membership vacant.

Many questions come before the Parliament of Canada involving different sections of the country, and the very purpose of the creation of this house was that all sections of the country should be represented, and the number of representatives required to be appointed from each province is specifically stated in the statute.

By supporting this bill we are simply proposing to write into our constitution some specific provisions clearly showing that there is an obligation on those who have the responsibility of making appointments to the Senate to fill vacancies within a reasonable time, whatever that time may be. I was impressed with the statement by the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) that maybe six months is too short a period of time, and that we should consider this matter in committee.

If I have interpreted the remarks of the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) correctly—and I may not have done so—I must conclude that he has some fear or concern as to what might take place in the other house should this bill pass the Senate. I for one have not the slightest concern as to what may be said there.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Campbell: This matter has been debated in a forthright manner. If the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) is able to interpret the remarks made by honourable senators, and if the members in the other place take time to read the debates in this house and seriously consider this problem from a national point of view they will I think agree that some provisions should be written into the British North America Act to prevent the recurrence of a situation such as exists at the present time. We as members of this honourable house must remember that we have a great responsibility to the public in all national matters. We are appointed for life, having equal jurisdiction with the other house except in financial and money matters. We have complete power to initiate legislation and to change legislation, I submit that in order that we may properly fulfil our great responsibility, it is extremely important that we should have a full complement of members who come from all sections of the country and who are able to express the views of all sections on matters of pubilc concern.

I am going to try to avoid repeating some of the things that have been said, because I am sure that I could not express them as well as they have already been expressed, particularly by the honourable senators from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), and Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen). It occurred to me that we might consider some of the functions of the Senate, and, at the risk of this subject not being particularly relevant to the present bill, if honourable members will bear with me I would like to put on record a reference to some of the work that this honourable body has done in the past, and to some of the legislation which has been framed in this house or its committees. The reason I mention this particular subject-matter today is that I have a feeling that if the members of the Government had an opportunity of seeing how the committees of this house function they would realize that there is a great deal of legislation which could be referred to this honourable body and dealt with in committee much better, I submit with all respect, than it is dealt with in the committees of the House of Commons.

We do not engage in political discussions. But I submit that a great many pieces of financial and commercial legislation could originate in this house from time to time. Also there are a number of matters that might well form the subject of investigation by our committees when deemed necessary. For instance, there is an important matter which is now the subject of study by a Royal Commission in Canada, namely our shipping laws. And here I wish to refer particularly to the Shipping Bill which was dealt with some years ago in the Senate. Prior to the passing of the Statute of Westminster in 1931, Canada had not the power to enact shipping legislation having any extraterritorial effect, without the consent of the Imperial Parliament, but after the signing of that statute Canada obtained that power. The then Minister of Marine, the late Hon. Alfred Duranleau, had the responsibility of studying and drafting the first Canada Shipping Act. This was an extremely important piece of legislation necessitating careful consideration of constitutional questions and the bringing together of many facts affecting shipping not only in Canada but throughout the commonwealth.

The department engaged eminent counsel, and in the year 1933 Bill "J", a draft bill, was introduced into this honourable house. I had the privilege at that time of representing a number of Great Lakes shipping companies and so was in a position to observe the method in which the committee carried out this work, and I must say that, like all others who appeared before the committee on that occasion, I was greatly impressed with the knowledge and the experience of its members and the care taken by them in dealing with that very important subject.

May I be permitted to read from the House of Commons Hansard of June 8, 1934 at page 3814, the remarks of the then the Minister of Marine in presenting this important legislation before the Commons:

> This house will remember that when, during the session of 1933, Bill J was withdrawn in the Senate—

I may say by way of explanation that the bill was introduced in 1933; it was studied; it went back with full reports to the department; changes were made; and it was introduced again in 1934.

> —a small bill was introduced in this house providing for certain amendments to the Canada Shipping Act respecting our coastal trade. That bill became law, and stood as chapter 52 of the statutes for 1932-33. May I add that the provisions of chapter 52 have been incorporated in the present bill.
>
> I do not wish to close my remarks, Mr. Speaker, without paying tribute to the Right Hon. Leader of the Senate, Mr. Meighen, and to the members of the Senate, and especially to the members of its Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce and the subcommittee for the tremendous work they have done in studying this measure. They had to spend weeks upon weeks in studying it, and so complete has their work been that they have rendered comparatively easy the task of the house in studying the measure. I am not an expert in maritime matters but I have perused and studied this bill with my officials and I can say that this measure is surely one of the most complete pieces of legislation ever presented to this house.

That, honourable members, is but one illustration of the many things which have been done by this honourable house. It is my opinion that work of that kind cannot be undertaken unless the Senate is at its full or approximately full complement. It is not fair to the various sections of the country that legislation of this character should be dealt with unless all sections of the country are represented. I doubt whether the Government of the day realizes what great contributions have been made in the past, and are being made today, by Senate committees. I know that little publicity is given by the press to their work; but any associations, organizations or individuals that appear before these committees realize that they are dealing with experienced people who conscientiously try to solve public problems and produce suitable legislation.

I think I would be remiss if I did not refer to one other matter which was dealt with by this honourable body. I do so humbly, because I was the author of the resolution on which it acted, and I mention it on this occasion because the splendid work carried out at that time was largely due to the able chairmanship of that committee by the honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler). My reference is to the special committee appointed in 1945 to examine into the provisions and workings of the Income War Tax Act. When first it was proposed to deal with that matter, the then Minister of Finance was of the opinion that this house should not tackle it. Upon reconsideration during the following session, when it had been decided that the resolution should be introduced in this chamber, the Government supported our investigation, and the honourable Leader of the Government in the Senate at that time, who now occupies the Speaker's chair (Hon. Mr. Robertson), stated that the Government welcomed our action. Honourable members will recall that at that time there was a great public demand for changes in the legislation. The Income Tax Act had grown, as it were, like Topsy, and was practically incapable of interpretation. It provided for many ministerial discretionary powers, which necessitated taxpayers obtaining rulings before they could interpret the law. The task of revision, an extremely important one at that time, because it was at the period of the commencement of reconstruction following the war, was undertaken by the special committee named in the resolution; and that was as a result of the independent action of this honourable body and its members in really insisting that they should have the authority or the approval of the Government to go ahead with this work.

The committee did its task extremely well, and I am sure that honourable senators who were members of this chamber at that time were gratified at the complimentary references on behalf of the Government to the committee in respect of the duties they had undertaken. The procedure followed was that a report was made, and annexed to it was a draft of a new income tax law, and this was adopted in almost its entirety—with a few amendments and refinements made by the other house upon the recommendation of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue.

I mention these things merely to indicate what in my opinion is the proper function to be performed by this honourable house. The Senate membership includes people of experience, of independence, of good judgment. Tasks of this kind could be readily undertaken from time to time; and I submit that occasionally, when the Government is asked to consider the appointment of a Royal Commission to deal with some important matter, it might, by referring the matter to this house, have the subject as capably and thoroughly investigated as could be done by an outside commission, and relieve the taxpayer of the cost of such a commission.

I feel I have gone a little astray from the specific subject-matter of this bill, and I would now like to add a few remarks—regarding the constitutional question. After having listened to eminent constitutional lawyers express their opinions, I must apologize for attempting to speak on this subject. I do not hold myself out as a constitutional authority but I think I am quite capable of interpreting the statutes. I must say I have not the slightest doubt that the Parliament of Canada has power to make the proposed amendment. To my mind it would not in any way change the constitution except to provide what you might call an interpretation of the present act and, I submit, clarify the intention of the Fathers of Confederation.

The honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) had some doubts about the right of Parliament to pass this bill without the consent of the provinces. My honourable colleague is known in this house for his fine speeches and his ability as a constitutional lawyer, and I was rather interested to note that he admitted he had not carefully considered the matter. I am confident that had he done so he would have come to the conclusion that there is not the slightest doubt that an amendment such as now proposed is within the constitutional authority of the Parliament of Canada.

In conclusion, may I request that each honourable senator very seriously consider the only principle involved in this bill as being one requiring this chamber to be maintained at its full complement of members in order that the work which can best be done by the Senate and its various committees, may be carried on with full representation from all sections of the country and with the greatest possible efficiency.

May I recommend to the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) that he should draw to the attention of the Government the important work which has been carried out by this honourable house and its committees over past years, and that further consideration be given to assigning more legislation and studies of important subject-matters to this body.

I support the principle of the bill on the grounds which I have indicated. I reserve my right to consider certain matters as they may come before the committee to which the bill may be referred, but propose to vote in favour of this bill because I am firmly convinced that its principle is a simple one which must be seriously faced by every member of Parliament, by the Government itself and by the public at large. I am sure that if the bill goes to committee we can overcome some of the objections that have been raised, and it is my hope that before the bill passes through the committee stage the matter will be seriously considered by the Government in the light of the discussions which have taken place during this debate. I think that the Government should be the first to support legislation of this kind, subject to whatever amendments they may see fit to suggest.

On the motion of Hon. Mr. Lambert the debate was adjourned.

HISTORIC SITES AND MONUMENTS BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—
DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Hawkins for the second reading of Bill 182, an Act to amend the Historic Sites and Monuments Act.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, I would have spoken on this measure last night, but I was too slow in getting to my feet while the order was still before the house. I was inclined to agree with the honourable gentleman from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) when he said we should go rather cautiously about widening the present definition of "historic place", and that while it is important to maintain historic sites and monuments the practice may become so common and general that its real significance and intention will be lost.

I recall that there was a great clamour to make the first post office in Winnipeg an historical monument. When the idea was turned down by the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada, the local citizens got together and bought the building at a small price and transferred it. I think it has practically disappeared now.

I have had some personal experience in respect to something which might be said to be an historic monument. The late Senator Bénard and myself owned a piece of property on Highway No. 1 about fourteen miles west of Winnipeg, and a monument was erected thereon to mark the spot where a surveyor first put down his instruments to survey western Canada. All the land west of that point is west of the first principal meridian, which runs north and south. The survey was made right to the Pacific Coast.

Incidentally, I told this story to my deskmate, the honourable senator from Rosetown (Hon. Mr. Aseltine), and he advised me not to relate it on the floor of this house because everyone would know what a rascal I had been in my younger days. This happened some years ago, when I was young and innocent and needed money badly. Senator Bénard gave the property to the Government, and when he told me about it I said, "Oh, no, you can't do that, not my half." He replied, "I have already done it, so what are you going to do about it?" I told him I didn't want anything more to do with him because I didn't want to give away this acre of beautiful farm land that was worth quite a bit of money to me. He said: "I'll tell you what to do. You're not much of a lawyer, but I'll recommend to the Government that you be given the job of searching the title." We had clear title to the land, so there was not much to search. Later on he told me to go ahead and search the title and to inform the Government what my disbursements were, and that they would pay me whatever they saw fit. Well, I really got full value for my share of the property. My deskmate says that that is a kind of queer way to do business.

That monument is there today and I am proud of it. Once in a while I have been asked questions about it that make me feel rather guilty. Somebody will call me up and say, "Is that John T. Haig, the man who built the monument fourteen miles west of Winnipeg?" When I reply that I am the man they congratulate me upon having put up such a fine monument to commemorate the first survey made in Western Canada. They tell me how attractively the place is kept, and so on, and I wonder to myself what comment I can make. I simply say, "Thank you very much", and hang up the phone. I think the basic purpose of that monument is a good one; and every person who visits it knows what it stands for.

Honourable senators, Manitoba has been fortunate so far in its representation on the Historic Sites and Monuments Board. The present member from Manitoba, a professor at St. Boniface College, has done a fine job. In the sites they have chosen, they have not made a single mistake, to my knowledge, during the last 30 years or so. I support the work wholeheartedly. I agree with the honourable member from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) that we should be very careful in the purchasing of sites. The selection of a site should be of interest not only to a particular province but to the whole of Canada, and even to the United States, and should give some idea of the early history, or even the later history, of our country.

I congratulate the Government upon carrying on this good work.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, my remarks will be very brief, but I do not want to miss the opportunity of extending my congratulations to my deskmate (Hon. Mr. Hawkins) on the interesting manner in which he explained this bill yesterday.

Hon. Mr. MacDonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: He gave a particularly interesting background of the subject and one could not but be impressed with his reasons for desiring to broaden the scope of this act. I have always favoured the work that has been carried on by the Historic Sites and Monuments Board, because it is to a large extent related to our efforts in the province of Nova Scotia to sell—and I use the word advisedly—and promote tourist traffic in our province. Nova Scotia, of course, is somewhat differently placed, with regard to historic sites, than many other provinces. Many historic sites, from one end of the province to the other, greatly attract tourists. Other provinces also have their sites of historic importance, especially the province of Quebec. A notable historic site in Ontario is Fort Henry, which I understand attracts large numbers of tourists.

In dealing with the bill itself and the proposals to broaden its scope, I cannot help but disagree with the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) who fears —to use his own words—"a flood of applications". I noted that the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig) expressed agreement on that point today. I do not fear a flood of applications at all. In my opinion, the more that are received the more publicity that will be given to the value of these historic sites in Canada; and I have enough confidence in the board, which has done splendid work down through the years, to believe that it will meet the requirements and will carry on its functions as provided by the act. Instead of merely erecting monuments by the side of the road for motorists to drive by at 50 or 60 miles an hour, and scarcely notice them, the board will in future give recognition and prominence to outstanding buildings.

The history of Nova Scotia goes very far back, and I feel that the earlier definition of "historic place" was not sufficient to give adequate recognition to our historic sites. I think the ampler definition in the amendment is important and desirable. It adds these words:

and includes buildings or structures that are of national interest by reason of age or architectural design.

Section 2 of the bill provides that the provinces of Ontario and Quebec shall have two representatives on the board instead of one. I am not in accord with that provision. I do not say so in a narrow sense, but I think those two provinces will also be represented to a very large extent by a representative of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, under whose jurisdiction the board operates. I think one representative for each province, with one representative from the department, should be sufficient. That applies equally to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, as well as to British Columbia and the Western provinces. So many bills which are introduced seem to centralize Canada in Ontario and Quebec, and that is why I hesitate to say that section 2 of the bill meets with my approval.

I mentioned that we have many interesting historic sites in Nova Scotia. A book recently published, entitled, "Done at Grand Pré", by Will R. Bird, tells of the expulsion of the Acadians in 1755. Honourable senators will remember, of course, the sad story about the large number of residents of Grand Pré who were put on transports and sent to Boston. We are holding a celebration of that historic event during the coming summer months, which will be attended by about 50,000 people from all parts of Canada and the United States, including approximately 10,000 from Louisiana alone. That celebration is something which comes close to the scope of this act, and I think the board should lend its assistance to the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources to see that publicity is given to the venture in all parts of Canada, so that a large number of Canadians will visit Nova Scotia and become familiar with the part of the country about which Longfellow wrote in his poem Evangeline. The well which served the people in those days is still there, and is an historic attraction to the visitors at Grand Pré.

We in Nova Scotia, of course, can look back to the first social club in America, which was formed in 1605. The club still functions, and an invitation is extended to every visitor to join. This creates goodwill and brings more tourists to our part of the country. In 1632 the first Canadian school was founded in Nova Scotia. For the information of my honourable colleague from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), Chairman of the Divorce Committee, I may say that the first divorce court in Canada was held in Nova Scotia in the year 1749. Nova Scotia has many firsts—

Hon. Mr. Quinn: The first post office.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Yes, and the first printing press established in 1751. We are the only province in Canada to have our own flag, granted to us in 1621 by King James VI of Scotland, James I of England.

I should like particularly to draw the attention of the department to the Duke of Kent's Lodge, located at Princes' Lodge, about six miles from Halifax, which was occupied by the Duke from 1794 to 1800. This historic site is badly in need of restoration and should, I think, come within the purview of the act and be recognized by the board. At Windsor, the shire town of the Hants Company, can be seen signs of old Fort Edward, built in 1749. This is another site which should be recognized by the board.

When we visit Quebec City and see there the Citadel and the Plains of Abraham we are reminded of the large sums of money spent every year to maintain the site in order to attract visitors to that part of Canada. May I say that in the city of Halifax we have an old citadel, erected well over 200 years ago. If I remember correctly, the Parks Commission reported that last year something like 84,000 people visited the citadel at Halifax.

Honourable senators, I have touched only briefly on the sites which I feel should be recognized by the board. I am in favour of the principle of the bill to expand the definition of "historic place", but I am not entirely satisfied that the provinces of Quebec and Ontario each need an additional member on the board.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Gershaw the debate was adjourned.

DIVORCE PETITIONS

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce Nos. 346 to 364, dealing with petitions for divorce.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Committee, moved that the reports be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to, on division.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, May 19, 1955

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

RAILWAY BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 259, an Act to amend the Railway Act.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: With leave, next sitting.

PRIVATE BILL

STANMOUNT PIPE LINE COMPANY—
REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the report of the committee on Bill T-12.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, to whom was referred the Bill (T-12) intituled: "An Act to incorporate Stanmount Pipe Line Company", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 10, 1955, examined the said bill, and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: With leave of the Senate, I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I move that when this house adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday next at eight o'clock in the evening.

The motion was agreed to.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACTS AMENDMENT BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—
DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Euler for the second reading of Bill H-10, an Act to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1952.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, I propose to support Bill H-10, mainly on the ground that it is a step—an incidental step, perhaps, but a very necessary one—in the direction of improving the usefulness and strengthening the status of the Senate as an integral part of the Parliament of Canada.

I am greatly indebted to those senators who have already spoken in this debate for having helped me to boil down some of the thoughts I would like to express today; but even so, I fear that by the time I have finished I shall have failed to provide a good model of condensation.

Broadly speaking, there are two outstanding aspects of this bill: first, that of its constitutional implications; and second, its broad political and practical applications to the status and functions of the Senate.

I have been influenced to some extent in what I have to say today by a desire to follow a line consistent with the position which I took in this chamber on a similar occasion some four years ago. Consistency, of course, has no great virtue; it is sometimes referred to as the bugbear of little minds. In any event, I take this opportunity of repeating now what I said then, that certain measures of reform as applied to the Senate are long overdue, and should be attended to just as soon as the Government, which is the leader and custodian of Parliament, finds it convenient to do so. I would repeat a further statement I made earlier: that the responsibility for Senate reform does not rest here alone, but involves all branches of Parliament and the provinces as well. In the working out of details to this end we must depend upon the Government to take the initiative and lead the way.

Suggestions and even participation in a co-operative way with any other representative branch of government in dealing with proposed changes in the Senate, we can give, and give freely, and we should very properly have the privilege of contributing in this way in the event of definite steps to such an end being taken by the Government at a later date. My support of this bill is based on the hope that it will open the door to an early consideration of the whole question of Senate reform.

The bill in its purpose, it seems to me, has the advantage of focusing attention—not only our own attention and that of our associates in other branches of Parliament, but the attention of the whole country upon this subject in a way that could not be provided by a resolution. The honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) yesterday in his very effective presentation emphasized this in his reference to the legal implications applying to the bill. He pointed out the legal implications with regard to future appointments, and not as applying necessarily to the filling of the present vacancies.

The importance of keeping the machinery of our democratic parliaments up to date and in good repair so as to serve the needs of the people who support them as efficiently as possible can hardly be overstressed. This mechanical side of democracy, if one may so describe it, expressed in such constitutional documents as the British North America Act, is apt to be taken so much for granted that it is almost overlooked altogether. Democracy, if it is to be any good at all, it seems to me, has to function practically through a number of imperfect human beings brought together in committees, councils, legislatures and parliaments from time to time. Their functions in such organizations certainly cannot be properly carried out unless forms of procedure are devised to enable them to exercise their power of action on behalf of the people at the right time and in the right way.

It is no idle platitude to say that the price of all that is involved in the way of freedom and liberty in our democratic system—as was so eloquently expressed by the honourable member from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) in this debate—is eternal vigilance in seeing that the machinery of that system is adequately maintained. If I may develop this thought a little further, I should like to point out what must be evident to any casual observer of political conditions in this country during recent years, namely, the widening gap between the rank and file of our people, the Canadian electorate who pay the taxes and vote, and the State, which is represented mainly by the Government, members of Parliament, and civil servants. That gap has been appearing increasingly as a sort of no man's land, and it is the business of us all to narrow down that area in every possible way by bringing into closer proximity and contact the machinery of the State with the men and women who vote. It has been said, I think with all truth behind it, that the fuel of that system which we call democracy, and which imparts power to the machinery of the State, consists of the political will and consciousness of ordinary folk whom we are in the habit so often of describing as "the common people".

Much of what I have been saying may seem to be a pretty platitudinous play of words on a hackneyed theme of democracy, but I am not apologizing for it, because I am attempting to justify the submission of any constructive suggestion or criticism from this chamber which will reflect a conscious and sincere effort to modernize and improve the representative institutions to which we subscribe our loyalties and beliefs.

I regret that it has been found necessary to introduce into this debate the personality of the Prime Minister. To me there is something rather distasteful about a diversion from the consideration of a meritorious issue by protestations of loyalty and admiration to one who neither invites nor requires such encomiums from anybody. It all savours too much of protesting the virtues of one's own family.

My honourable friend from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) semed to have some misgivings about the possible attitude of members of the House of Commons toward this bill. I do not think he need concern himself about that any more than about any of the sallies pointed in this direction from many quarters.

As a matter of fact, as many arrows from outside are aimed, I think, at the House of Commons and Parliament as a whole, as are directed at the Senate. The House of Commons in its laborious attempt this session to revise its rules of procedure is doing the best it can to improve its position in this respect. In this connection, may I divert to say that I agree very much with something that was said in England recently by the Right Honourable Hugh Gaitskell, who was Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Attlee Government. In an address entitled "In defence of politics" he said that he was not concerned with the good-natured chaff illustrated by the bus conductor's call at Parliament Square, "Anybody here for the gas house?". This kind of attitude toward legislators, he thought, represented in reality a form of public respect modified by a characteristic Anglo-Saxon urge to debunk, and was basically healthy and democratic. I think this applies as much to Canada as it does to England. We might have more reason for concern if complete silence and indifference prevailed in place of the more active attention which is paid to us from time to time.

As the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) made so lucidly clear in his worthy speech of last week, members of this chamber, appointed by the Crown, are advisers of the Crown through the Prime Minister and his colleagues in the cabinet. It is that high position of his that commands our respect, and it is a fortunate circumstance that the man who fills it becomes his eminent position with such great distinction. Everything that has been said about him in this vein here and elsewhere over the last years, and during this debate, surely provides abundant evidence of an understanding which will receive gladly, on behalf of himself and his associates, reasoned and sincere proposals relating to the welfare of this country.

The word "check" is often applied to the functions of the Senate in relation to legislation presented here, and use will be made of that word later in the course of my remarks. I think here it should be emphasized that that word should not be interpreted as meaning obstruction or interference but rather as advice offered to the Government—to the executive branch of Parliament—not to the House of Commons. The constitutional status of senators, as pointed out by the honourable gentleman from Toronto-Trinity—that of being appointees of the Crown—gives to the word "check" a different meaning and significance from its ordinary application. The federal system of government in the United States is often referred to as a series of "checks" and "balances". There is a rigidity in the use of that term in the United States which does not apply here at all. The difference essentially between these neighbouring countries in the use of this word "check" reflects the constitutional difference between a "limited monarchial form of government" and a republic.

That is why Sir John A. Macdonald, in the pre-Confederation discussions at Quebec in 1865, defined Canada's prospective system as one indicating "constitutional liberty as opposed to democracy". It is only fair to say now, ninety years after those words were spoken, and in the face of profound world changes, that those two phrases applying to our respective systems of government on this continent have become interchangeable. Each stands today for the freedom and dignity of the individual citizen as opposed to the totalitarian conceptions of some other lands.

Discussion on the subject of Senate reform has been heard before in this chamber. Only some four years ago an interesting debate took place here on the subject of improving the status of the Senate. It was ably introduced by the Leader of the Senate, who now occupies the Speaker's Chair (Hon. Mr. Robertson); and he made it quite clear that he had been encouraged to do so by the previous Prime Minister, Mr. Mackenzie King; and he also intimated that he had been given a free hand by the present Prime Minister to proceed independently with the subject.

So I say, we have good precedent for dealing again with suggestions which have in mind the betterment of conditions in this chamber.

In all of the discussion that has been devoted to the Senate throughout the years, both inside and outside of Parliament, no serious or substantial claim has been made to dispute the important place of a second chamber in our federal system of government. To my mind that is the real question raised by this bill. It is also a question to which the people of this country and the members of their government and Parliament should address themselves in any consideration of the Senate. I should like to make further references to this point in certain citations before I conclude.

I should like now to refer to the speech made by my very good friend the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) last Thursday. There was so much of it with which I agreed and admired that I am rather reluctant to suggest that upon reading it more closely in Hansard I found that I was a bit mystified by his uncertainty of mind regarding the constitutional aspect of this bill. He commended the purpose of the legislation wholeheartedly, but seemed to have some doubts about the constitutional means or procedure by which the bill might be given effect. This is what he said—I am quoting from page 465 of Hansard, dated May 12:

> I have some comments to make on the form in which the issue before us is raised. It purports to amend the British North America Act—a proceeding which until the method was changed a few years ago, was confined exclusively to the Parliament of the United Kingdom. A part of that power, but only a part, has been delegated to the Canadian Parliament. Whether amendments of this kind are to be made by the British Parliament or the Canadian Parliament, they are not to be lightly undertaken. With all deference to the honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler), a constitutional question is a little different from an amendment of the House of Commons Act. True, it may relate to the same subject-matter; but the Fathers of Confederation, who inspired the provisions of the British North America Act, saw fit to make a distinction between the constitution of the House of Commons and changes therein, and the constitution of the Senate, which is incorporated in the British North America Act itself.

Then further, on page 466, he said:

> The honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity pointed out that under the constitution the Senate was created as a body to be representative of the different parts of Canada, the representation being designated by provinces. In the light of these circumstances I ask this question: can we say that in all its aspects the matter of Senate appointments is so divorced from provincial consideration that it comes entirely within federal jurisdiction, and that therefore the dominion has full power to deal with it?

As I say, I was a bit mystified by these reservations on the part of my honourable friend as I read them in Hansard, because in February 1951, during the debate to which reference has already been made, he expressed a much more definite and certain opinion regarding the power of Parliament to amend the constitution as it applied to the Senate than he did last week.

Let me quote from the report of that debate as shown on page 124 of Hansard of February 19, 1951. I had asked my honourable friend about the obligation of consulting the provinces in connection with any amendment of the British North America Act relating to the Senate. He said this in reply:

As I understand the situation, at the last session we amended our constitution on the theory that the Senate was part of the Government of Canada, and that we did not require to have the consent of the provinces when we asked the Imperial Parliament to make the amendments. Now then, if we, as a part of the Government of Canada, decide to amend the constitution, we have the complete constitutional power and right to do so, and if any one province were to say: "We refuse to appoint the senators for our province"—if my honourable friend really thinks there would be any danger of that—I would suggest that in amending the constitution we should provide that if any province did not make its appointments within, say, six months, the Dominion Government would be authorized to make them.

A little further on Hansard reads as follows:

Hon. Mr. Farris: I said that Parliament had the fullest power to do so; but what it would do I do not know.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Has it the fullest power?

Hon. Mr. Farris: Of course it has. That was declared by the Prime Minister of Canada, the Attorney-General, and every lawyer of high authority, when at the last session an act was passed on the basis that we had full power to amend our constitution in regard to the Senate. There is no question about that. The Parliament of Canada has that power.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Which opinion do you think is the better?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I am aware that my honourable friend may fairly say to me now that I am quite welcome to his discarded or revised opinions.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: He has given us his "sober second thought."

Hon. Mr. Lambert: But when I was reading in Hansard what he said last Thursday I could not help feeling that the positiveness of his declaration on the same constitutional point some four years ago would have made a much more fitting conclusion to his speech last week than the rather cloudy and uncertain view which he did express and which, I felt, did not carry the weight of a very firm conviction. As a matter of fact, honourable senators, as I read over that part of his speech I could not help thinking of the old scriptural injunction:

For if the trumpet have an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle.

I think that at this point I should quote what the Prime Minister said on this matter, as reported at page 7 of the Proceedings of the Constitutional Conference of the Federal and Provincial Governments on January 10, 1950. Before I read it, however, may I say that one does not need to be a lawyer to see that the subject-matter of this bill does not come under any of the specified exceptions which are cited here. This is what the Prime Minister said at that time:

You are, of course, aware that the federal Government submitted to Parliament at its last session an address requesting an amendment to the British North America Act to vest in the Parliament of Canada authority to amend the constitution of Canada in its purely federal aspects.

That amendment, known as the British North America (No. 2) Act, 1949, has now been enacted by the United Kingdom Parliament, and has become a part of the constitution of Canada.

Under that statute, jurisdiction is transferred to the Parliament of Canada to amend the constitution of Canada with the following five important exceptions:

(1) matters coming within the classes of subjects assigned exclusively to the legislatures of the provinces by the British North America Act of 1867;

So far as the exception in No. (1) is concerned, the subject-matter of this bill certainly does not apply there.

(2) rights or privileges granted or secured to the legislature or the government of a province by any constitutional act;

This bill certainly does not come under the purview of that exception.

(3) rights or privileges granted or secured by the constitution to any class of persons with respect to schools;

This bill has no reference whatever to that subject, and therefore does not come under that exception.

(4) constitutional provisions regarding the use of the English or the French language;

And I am sure the bill does not come under that exception.

(5) the constitutional requirement that a session of Parliament must be held once a year and that a general election must take place at least every five years, with a proviso for possible postponement of an election in cases of real or apprehended war.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask if the Prime Minister is not quoting the act almost word for word, when he makes that statement?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Those classes were contained in the text of the British North America (No. 2) Act, 1949, which amended the constitution at that time. I simply quote those passages for the purpose of trying to give a layman's understanding of what actually takes place when powers of this kind are given to the Government to deal with such matters as are represented in the bill before us.

I will now deal with the practical aspect of this bill, which has for its objective the early appointment of new senators to fill the vacant seats in this chamber. The truth is that with more than one-fifth of its membership lacking, the work that should be done here in standing committees and in possible committees of special inquiry, cannot be done properly, for there are not enough members to go around.

Reference was made by the Prime Minister in the other house last week to the inability of that house to set up a special committee of inquiry, as had been indicated in the Speech from the Throne, because too many members are now engaged in attending various other committees. If such is the situation in the House of Commons with its fairly full complement of members, it is many times worse in this chamber with its deficiency in membership. I do not intend to cite examples of this shortcoming that could be mentioned; but I would refer particularly to the Standing Committee on Divorce, upon which the most constant and heavy demands are being made. The honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) referred to the needs of that committee in the course of his contribution to this debate last week. The character of the work in that committee is not only exacting in volume, but it requires as much experienced legal knowledge as it is possible to have in its membership; and that fact in no way casts any invidious reflection on members of that committee who are not lawyers and who have contributed so effectively to the decisions that have been brought to this chamber for approval. The work of the Divorce Committee is being endangered by empty seats in the Senate. And I think it might be fairly said further that no branch of our parliamentary activities is doing more to preserve national unity in Canada than this same committee.

The honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Campbell) yesterday took occasion to mention particularly the work of the special committee appointed in 1945 to inquire into the operations of the Income Tax Act. One should not fail to mention the work of one or two of the standing committees of this house. I think we too easily forget such a contribution as was made to the interests of the country by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce with respect to foreign exchange control legislation. As a result of representations heard, evidence taken and reports later submitted, legislation which had been directed to the establishment of a Foreign Exchange Control Board in Canada for all time was limited to a period of two years, and after the end of that period it was completely removed from the financial machinery of Canada. Time has shown clearly that that action was for the benefit of the country as a whole.

There comes also to my mind the tremendous amount of work done by the Banking and Commerce Committee in connection with the Bankruptcy Act. That work was continued over a long period of time and required the skilful application of the best legal brains in this chamber.

I am reminded also of the work done by the Senate in the revision of the Criminal Code. True, a joint committee of both houses dealt with the subject, but great tribute must be paid to the special subcommittee of the Senate's Banking and Commerce Committee for its very valuable contribution toward amending our criminal law.

I should like to emphasize that a great deal of the possible service of Senate committees to the present and future welfare of Canada is being sacrificed because of the vacancies in this chamber.

In one of the most effective references in his speech the honourable senator from Vancouver South ventured the opinion that the problem confronting the Prime Minister and his colleagues in connection with the Senate was not its constitutional implications so much as its broad political difficulties. I agree with him that the broad political aspect of this question is far reaching and very difficult to meet. But I think also that never was there a more opportune time than now to reconcile some of the realities of our fast changing political scene in this country with the practical workings of government and parliament. The transitional features of political professions and affiliations have not developed all at once out of the recent war years or its immediate aftermath of reconstruction. In so far as the identity of old traditional two-party affiliations is concerned, the process of change in federal as well as provincial fields was noticeable toward the end and after the conclusion of the First Great War. The fact is that a new era for Canada was eloquently envisaged by outstanding leaders of thought and action in this country many years before the Second World War. But the realities have finally caught up with the operation of our political institutions, which must be adapted to them if democratic forms of government and administration are to meet public needs and public demands.

If, therefore, the problem here is broadly political rather than constitutional, the difficulties connected with it are due as much as anything else to the long period that has elapsed since they started to accumulate, and not to any element of short notice in the situation.

It is on this note of modernization I should like to conclude my remarks about the Senate and about the bill now before us. In doing so, I shall quote briefly from the considered opinions of some experienced men of outstanding ability and distinction who have served Canada in this chamber and also as active members of the federal Government in years gone by.

First of all, the late Sir Clifford Sifton—a man who possessed a rare combination of creative and prophetic imagination with a practical ability to organize and get things done—recorded his views about the Senate a good many years ago, towards the end of the First Great War, when many people like himself were looking forward to a new era for Canada. I propose to quote from a volume entitled A New Era in Canada, published in 1917 and edited by a gentleman who is not known here now, Mr. J. O. Miller, who for many years was the very worthy principal of Ridley College at St. Catharines. With a great sense of duty he undertook to enlist contributions to that collection of views from outstanding people of authority and distinction. In that part of his statement relating to the Senate, Sir Clifford Sifton had this to say:

> No nation should be under underchecked, single-chamber Government . . . According to my experience, the will of the people is very often better expressed after a check, and after a period of searching and critical discussion, which generally arises from such a check, than it is in the first instance. It must also be remembered that, under our system, the power of the cabinet tends to grow at the expense of the House of Commons. In Canada the Senate is not so much a check on the House of Commons as it is upon the cabinet, and there can be no doubt that its influence in this respect is salutary. In twenty years at Ottawa, I have never known a case in which a Government was anxious to take the verdict of the people on a bill rejected by the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Then further on he said this:

> As to membership, it would add greatly to the Senate's dignity and independence if hereafter all Lieutenant Governors of provinces, all Dominion Cabinet Ministers, all Provincial Premiers who have held office for three consecutive years, should, on going out of office, have the right, at their option, to be called to the Senate . . . The appointed members should be diminished by a number equal to the number of the ex-officio members, not by cancellation of existing appointments, but by refraining from making new appointments when in the course of nature senators disappear. The total number would vary slightly, but that is not a serious objection. By these methods a body of men would be introduced who would hold their appointments, as of right, by reason of having held high administrative and political office, and who would possess wide experience and a broad political outlook. It is extremely likely that a Senate so constituted might be found to give general satisfaction, especially if certain functions, of a more or less important character, were committed especially to its charge.

I have thought in connection with that suggested basis for selecting membership to the Senate that service in municipal spheres and membership in the House of Commons should be included.

Next I would like to quote briefly from a letter written in 1941 by the late Right Honourable Senator Dandurand, a former Leader of this chamber; and one of the ablest and most courageous men I have ever known. This is what he had to say about the Senate, after having served as an active member of it for over 40 years:

> I have always felt that the Upper House has had its limitations, and should not act as a replica of the House of Commons, and I have often said so. I could never admit that a party of the latter house should ever try to dominate the Government through an accidental majority of its friends in the Senate. In order to bring the Senate to that point of view, I have thought that an ideal Canadian Upper House should have no official Government Leader and that each minister at the head of a department should confide his bills when they reach the Senate to a member of his choice, to pilot them through. The senators would no more sit in two separate groups, one to the right and the other to the left of the Speaker, so as not to be divided on party lines.

The following statement by the Right Honourable Arthur Meighen, another former Leader of this chamber—who once described the Senate as "a workshop and not a theatre"—is taken from a speech he delivered in Ottawa at a farewell dinner tendered to the late Viscount R. B. Bennett on his departure for Great Britain:

> For the five sessions I was Leader of the Senate, and for three later sessions Leader of one section of that house—the section favourable in a general way to Mr. Bennett's party. Throughout that entire period, and it was a long one, the Leader of the Conservative Party recognized, without limitation, the distinct and independent status of that branch of Parliament. The Senate, during his term of Premiership, altered Government measures hundreds of times, altered them in important features, even defeated policies submitted with his recommendation, but never did Mr. Bennett interfere or seek to interfere with the duties of the Second Chamber. Never at any time did he complain or make suggestion that we should take another course. He had a right understanding of how the constitution of Canada should work.

It is worth observing that the Right Honourable Arthur Meighen, while he was Leader of this house and a Minister without portfolio in the cabinet of Mr. Bennett, did not ordinarily sit in the cabinet but devoted himself almost exclusively to the interests and purposes of the Senate. I think it is only fair to sound this non-partisan note in dealing with this bill.

And finally, I would refer to the view expressed by the late Sir Allen Aylesworth when he spoke in this chamber in 1932 on the subject of the Senate's past accomplishments and its future outlook. He stated that he would gladly support legislation if it were presented in this chamber, to disfranchise members of the Senate and thus prevent them from participating or voting in general elections, so that their independent and judicial status might be duly recognized. He believed that the Upper Chamber of Parliament should fill the role of a political and legislative court of appeal and review.

I believe, honourable senators, that Sir Allen Aylesworth's fine definition of what the Senate should be, comes more nearly than any words I know to describing the kind of institution that was conceived by our founding fathers when Confederation was accomplished.

I simply submit these expressions of opinion from the well-qualified minds of our great men of the past as constructive suggestions to anyone who cares to consider them. I am fully aware that they invite further comment and analysis, but I do not propose to do more now than place these offerings on the record.

One more word needs to be said. Whatever may be the fate of this bill, whatever action may be taken by the Government in consequence of it, the responsibility for the future work and activity of the Senate rests right here amongst its members. Even the present British North America Act provides this body with enough power and authority to exert a profound influence on this country, if it only possesses the will and the energy to apply it. In the review of legislation which comes here; in the discriminatory examination of proposed public expenditures presented here for approval; and in special inquiry into matters which call for attention and enlightenment, much remains to be done. It is true that additional members are required to do the job properly. Possibly, however, a fair question, which every member of this chamber might think about, in relation to the work done here is this: Is it the constitutional provisions behind the Senate that need reform, or is it the senators themselves?

Hon. W. H. Golding: Honourable senators, in listening to the honourable senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert) I gathered that he is under the impression that the Divorce Committee has not been able to handle all the cases that come before it. I think I am in order in saying that so far this session there is no case which has been ready to be heard before that committee which has not been heard. And I might add that on many occasions, when as many as four subcommittees were ready and available to carry on, there was not enough work for them to do.

The honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) has mentioned that the committee could do with some more lawyers, but I would like the house to know that the present membership of the committee includes a number of lawyers who do not attend at all. My main purpose in rising, however, was to impress on the house that every case which has been ready for hearing by the committee has been heard.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: May I rise on a point of privilege, to assure the honourable senator from Huron-Perth (Hon. Mr. Golding) that, as far as I can recall, no word of mine was spoken in disparagement of the present Divorce Committe and the work it is performing. What I intended to convey was that the exacting demands on the committee and the pressure of its work require that, in this relation, stock should be taken of the future as well as the present. While it would be advisable to have in reserve a greater complement of legal talent, of legally trained minds, that in no way reflects invidiously upon the lay members who, as I said, have contributed in a very valuable way to the decisions which have been presented to this chamber. We must remember that we are not immortal, and that the future strength of our committees depends almost as much upon a reserve supply of candidates as it does on those who are performing the functions now.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald, the debate was adjourned.

HISTORIC SITES AND MONUMENTS BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Hawkins for the second reading of Bill 182, an Act to amend the Historic Sites and Monuments Act.

Hon. F. W. Gershaw: Honourable senators, the sponsor of this bill very clearly explained its terms, and I have only a few brief observations to make, and some requests which, I hope, will reach the ears of those who are to be on the commission.

About the time of Confederation very little was known by the people of Canada of that great prairie region which extends from Lake Superior to the foothills of the Rocky Mountains. It is true that explorers had penetrated that area: there were trading posts in different places; there were some settlers around the trading posts, and there were quite a number of lawless men who had come in from other countries and were robbing and debauching the roving tribes of Indians who lived in that area. There was tribal warfare; there were very cruel practices: old, decrepit people were left on the trails to their terrible fate—starvation, or death from the elements. The cruel sun dance was indulged in; and there were murders, but the perpetrators were not punished because there was no law enforcement at that time.

Then, one night in the year 1873, a group of Indians and their wives and families were encamped by a little stream in the Cypress hills when a number of whisky smugglers, with some evil purpose, crept up the ravine and from the cutbank shot about thirty of these helpless people. The few who escaped did so by fleeing up into the wooded hills.

When this gruesome story reached Eastern Canada recruiting started at once for the Northwest Police Force, and about three hundred young men volunteered to embark on the dangerous enterprise for which they were engaged. These men in scarlet and gold assembled at Fort Dufferin, in southern Manitoba, made an amazing march—some two thousand miles—to reach the scene of their activities, and there performed a great work. They quickly stamped out the whisky smuggling; they established law and order in that country so that the lives and property of the settlers were more secure; and more than all, they gained the confidence, the trust and the respect of those Indian bands. What they accomplished makes bright pages in the history of the West; and my plea is that the record of their achievements shall not be allowed to go into the limbo of forgotten things, but that it shall be preserved as an inspiration to those who come after. Because those young men never again returned to their homes; they never again saw the scenes of their childhood. They lie in unmarked graves under the sod, and it is said that, especially at this time of year "The prairie flower blows softly and the scented rosebud trains its wealth of summer beauty o'er the Riders of the Plains".

Captain Clark, who was a nephew of Sir John A. and Lady Macdonald, died in the first bloom of young manhood and is buried near historic Fort Walsh.

Constable Grayburn was the very first mounted policeman to die by gunshot at the hands of a treacherous Indian. For a time his grave was marked by a little fence and cross; but, as years went by, cattle moving about in that ranch land began rubbing against the fence until it was completely ruined and practically everything was destroyed. Those are graves which should be marked.

Then there was another outstanding figure, Jerry Potts. He joined the Mounted Police in 1874, and for 22 years he served the force well and faithfully. He had an uncanny sense of direction and guided his fellow policemen in their work in times of darkness and storm. He was a matchless diplomat and could speak six or seven Indian languages. He directed the police on many expeditions against lawless groups, and he often provided their food by his skill with the rifle. There were plenty of buffalo in those days, and on many occasions he saved his comrades from being overrun by stampeding the herds. He was a tower of strength to the force. Today his remains lie in a small cemetery at Fort McLeod, and the single slab above his grave is marked with the one word "Interpreter".

I think the Historic Sites and Monuments Board would perform a splendid service if it took such cases as these under review and established suitable memorials for those early heroes of the Mounted Police, and others, who accomplished so much to save Canada's white people from the bloodshed, misery and destruction which the white people in the northern states suffered at the hands of Indians. It would not be an expensive undertaking, for in almost every town, village and city historical societies are anxious to do something of this kind before the opportunity passes away.

A broad, hard-surfaced highway is being built through this western country which was once the home of roving Indian bands. Along that highway today many high-powered motor cars travel at great speeds and it seems to me we might slow these cars up a little if here and there we were to erect monuments which depict the striking events of local history. If this were done I believe the tourists who travel along our highways in Cadillacs would get a better picture of the way of life of our pioneers whose only mode of transportation was paddle boat, ox cart or covered wagon.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to delay passage of this bill, but in view of an event which happened not so long ago I have one suggestion to make.

First of all may I compliment the sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Hawkins) for making a clear and precise statement on the provisions of the bill and the work done by the Historic Sites and Monuments Board. I was struck by his quotation of Joseph Howe, and I feel it is well worth repeating it in so far as this bill is concerned:

> A wise nation fosters national pride and love of country by perpetual reference to the sacrifices and glories of the past.

Honourable senators, sometimes we are too close to passing events to recognize their historical significance and as a result we often fail to record these events for history.

This bill seeks to widen the definition of "historic place" so that consideration could be given to preservation of historic buildings. Such an amendment would give recognition to historic buildings in the city of Halifax, and place them under the jurisdiction of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board. I would like to see the definition broadened to take in other things of an historic nature. I wonder how many senators have read the stirring account of the famous voyage of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police schooner St. Roch, under her commander, Sergeant Henry Larsen, F.R.G.S., now Superintendent Larsen. She is the only vessel that ever went from Vancouver, B.C., through the North-West Passage to Halifax and Sydney, N.S., and return. A booklet on this memorable voyage, published under the auspices of the City Archives of Vancouver, contains an excerpt from an original letter written by Captain George Vancouver on October 2, 1794, when he was looking for the North-West Passage. While aboard H.M.S. Discovery at Nootka Sound, he wrote:

> We arrived here this day month all in high health and spirits, having truly determined the non-existence of any water communication between this and the opposite side of America within the bounds of our investigation beyond all doubt and disputation, hence I expect no further detention in this hemisphere.
>
> Yours with great truth and friendship,
>
> Geo. Vancouver.

Honourable senators, the St. Roch was presented by the R.C.M.P. last year to the City of Vancouver. It has been suggested that this remarkable and historical ship, which is now lying in harbour at Vancouver, should be placed on a site in Stanley Park overlooking the sea, but no action has been taken in this regard. May I make a suggestion, which I think would be worthy of recognition by the Historic Sites and Monuments Board? There is no provision in the act to establish a site for a famous ship. The St. Roch deserves to be remembered, and I suggest that it would be most fitting to have a monument erected to commemorate her great voyage.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, I do not know if any member of this chamber has said anything about historic sites in Saskatchewan but I heard the honourable senators from Medicine Hat (Hon. Mr. Gershaw) and New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) speak on the early days of the Mounted Police. That brought to my mind Duck Lake which was one of the earliest settlements in western Canada at a time when Regina, or any place south of it, did not exist. Duck Lake is about 35 miles east of Blaine Lake, and about eight miles from the South Saskatchewan River. About 15 miles from Duck Lake, on the North Saskatchewan, is situated historic Fort Carleton. The fort has an Indian burial ground and other marks of the past associated with it. In the early days the fort itself contained a large supply of ammunition, and the Mounted Police deliberately blew it up so that the ammunition could not get into the hands of the rebels. A cairn on the site of the fort has been erected by the Historic Sites and Monuments Board.

I want to speak now about the Northwest Territories Legislature site in Old Battleford, which is being very well taken care of by the Board. It is a lovely prairie plateau between the North Saskatchewan River and the Battle River, and is one of the most beautiful natural sites in Canada. I often think what a pity it was that the seat of the Legislature was transferred to Regina. They had great difficulty in creating an artificial lake at Regina, but at Old Battleford there were two rivers with lovely green banks and evergreens, and beyond that perfectly lovely expanse the Mounted Police had their barracks and a great number of buildings, with all the natural beauty of the surroundings preserved. It is a very interesting place, and people motoring on No. 5 highway can always find someone to show them around. This year Saskatchewan celebrates the jubilee of its establishment. I hope large numbers of people will motor through that part of the province, for I am quite sure that is one site everyone will enjoy visiting. We also have in Saskatoon, and in North Battleford as well, a museum, in which is gathered together all the old machinery that was once in use. Saskatoon has a large, elaborate building, and they have gone to the trouble of building a sod shack, similar to the sod shacks that the prairie settlers lived in when they first homesteaded. At exhibition time they will steam up some of the huge old threshers, pull them outside, put the belts on and run them for the benefit of visitors.

Honourable senators, I commend the work that is done on historic sites—it is useful and necessary, and will make familiar to future generations the things which are quite familiar to us at the present time.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hawkins: Next sitting.

ALBERTA-BRITISH COLUMBIA BOUNDARY BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. George H. Ross moved the second reading of Bill C-13, an Act respecting the boundary between the provinces of Alberta and British Columbia.

He said: Honourable senators, the sole object of this bill is to confirm a survey made by the Interprovincial Boundary Commission, appointed in 1949 to delimit the boundary between Alberta and British Columbia.

An Imperial act, 29 and 30 Victoria, chapter 67, sections 7 and 8, established a natural topographical boundary line along the crest of the Rocky Mountains from the international boundary as far north as the most northerly crossing of the 120th meridian of west longitude, thence following the said meridian northerly to its intersection within the 60th parallel of north latitude, which is the northern boundary of Alberta and British Columbia.

In April 1913 a survey was commenced and was carried on from the international boundary for a distance of 522 miles. This survey was approved by both the provinces of Alberta and British Columbia in 1931, and confirmed by Parliament by the Alberta-British Columbia Boundary Act, 1932.

In 1949 Alberta and British Columbia asked the Surveyor General of Canada to participate in a survey of the rest of the boundary, a distance of 176·9 miles. A commission was appointed to have the survey made. The survey has been completed, and it has been approved by both provincial Governments. We now seek the approval of Parliament, pursuant to the provisions of the British North America Act, 1871, section 3. This is the sole object of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Reid: May I ask the honourable senator what is meant by delimiting the boundary? Section 2 of the bill says that the boundary line was surveyed in 1950, 1952 and 1953 to delimit the boundary between the provinces.

Hon. Mr. Ross: Monuments are erected on the ground on an average of 1·1 mile apart, fixing the boundary between the two provinces. The Imperial act simply said that the boundary should follow the mountains for a certain distance and then go north, but this provision would fix, or delimit, the boundary on the ground itself.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this blil be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Ross: With leave of the Senate, next sitting.

PRIVATE BILLS

WESTCOAST TRANSMISSION COMPANY LIMITED—SECOND READING

Hon. J. W. de B. Farris moved the second reading of Bill B-14, an Act respecting Westcoast Transmission Company Limited.

He said: Honourable senators, this is a brief and simple bill. It seeks an amendment to increase the capital stock from 5 million shares without nominal or par value to 25 million shares without nominal or par value. It is not proposed at the present time to increase the capital of the company, although if occasion for it arises it could be done under the present bill. The proposed change in the authorized capital is to facilitate financing by making more shares available when required.

Hon. Mr. Euler: May I ask my friend a question? Before that is done, is it necessary to have the consent of the Board of Transport Commissioners?

Hon. Mr. Farris: The Board of Transport Commissioners has practical control. While the Pipe Lines Act contains no express provision of that nature, it is my opinion that the whole supervision and control of the pipe line is within the board.

I understand from the Clerk that the practice is to refer all bills such as this to a committee. I would suggest that it may not be necessary to refer this limited amendment. I may say that the only persons who could give the committee any information on it would be an officer of the company from Calgary, or Mr. Frank McMahon, head of the company, who is at present in Washington in connection with the company's application for the right to dispose of gas in the United States. He will have to come to Ottawa again when this measure is considered in the House of Commons. Honourable senators who attended the meeting of our Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on May 11 last will recall that a correlated bill to incorporate Petroleum Transmission Company was considered. Mr. McMahon was present at that time, and because of the close relationship between that company and this company he was asked about the overall picture. The senator from Rosetown (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) in particular asked him about the Westcoast Transmission Company and its prospects. I now propose to give honourable senators what information I have as to the present bill which, I may say, is more than was requested when the Petroleum Transmission Company bill was before the committee.

This company was incorporated by the McMahon group by a bill passed here in 1949 and in February, 1952, after almost three years of hearings in Alberta, the provincial Government granted it the right to export northern Alberta gas. The matter then came before the Board of Transport Commissioners, which has control over such matters of an interprovincial nature, and after full hearings granted leave to carry the gas across the border in an interprovincial pipe line. In addition, Mr. Howe's act, which honourable senators will recall, comes into play, and permission was asked for and given under that statute.

One hitch developed. In June 1952 hearings commenced before the Federal Power Commission in Washington for the right to move gas into the United States. Honourable senators will recall that the application was opposed. In June 1954 the Federal Power Commission turned down the application by Westcoast Transmission Company, which meant either that the company had to throw up its hands and that no gas would be carried to the Pacific coast under the then proposals, or that some new arrangement would have to be made. A new arrangement was made when Westcoast Transmission Company in December last signed an agreement with the Pacific Northwest Pipeline Corporation, the firm that won Federal Power Commission approval on June 18, 1954, to supply Washington and Oregon with gas. This firm, in turn, signed with the El Paso Natural Gas Company, one of the largest gas pipe line firms in the United States, whereby El Paso will purchase gas from Pacific Northwest. The agreements call for the firm purchase of natural gas from Westcoast at the British Columbia-Washington border near Sumas. Oil and Gas Journal, the most conservative and highly respected publication in the petroleum industry, in its December 20th issue, named the agreement the "biggest deal in gas history" and one that is extremely beneficial to all areas and all parties concerned.

As I have said, honourable senators, Mr. McMahon was before our Banking and Commerce Committee about a week ago and was asked expressly about this company and its prospects. When speaking before the house on the motion for second reading of the first bill I gave complete figures as to the extensive exploration work that has gone on in the northern parts of Alberta and British Columbia primarily through the activities of this company and its associates, where it has spent some $30 million.

Honourable senators, this company has the blessing of the Alberta and British Columbia Governments, the Transport Board and Mr. Howe's department, for the handling of gas from the Peace River area and British Columbia, and transmission of it to Vancouver and thence to Sumas, a few miles away, for delivery to the company that now has the franchise on the American side. At our Banking and Commerce Committe meeting Mr. McMahon was asked when he expected to get the United States permit to do that. He stated at that time that the application pending before the Federal Power Commission in Washington would come up within the next two or three weeks and he expected that some time early this summer approval would be granted; that there is no reason in the world why it should not be granted because the only interest opposing his application has received a permit and now is working hand in hand with this company to handle it in the way I have indicated.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Is that the Pacific Northwest Pipeline Corporation?

Hon. Mr. Farris: That is right.

All that is being asked for in this bill is authority to increase the number of shares comprising the capital stock.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Have they put any value on those shares yet?

Hon. Mr. Farris: The first draft of the data sent to me stated that they were considering $2 a share, but they have abandoned that, and the shares will be, as before, of no par value. It is also stated that there is no present intention to increase the capitalization but only to facilitate financing by making more shares available.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Do they not have to put a value on the shares when incorporation is given in this way, in order to calculate the fees, for instance?

Hon. Mr. Farris: I can tell my honourable friend about that. The fee paid on the incorporation of the company in 1949 was based on 5 million shares at a maximum value of $10 per share, having a total valuation of $50 million. By establishing 25 million shares at a value of $2 a share the total approximate capitalization of the company, on which a fee has been paid, remains at $50 million. It is not intended at the moment to insert that figure of $2 in the bill, nor to change the aggregate capitalization. Does that answer your question?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes, but I suppose the company is bound in some way. Is there an undertaking given to the department as to what value is to be placed upon each share?

Hon. Mr. Farris: No, no value has been set. I am now authorized to state that it is not the present intention of the company to increase the total capitalization.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I am just wondering if that is satisfactory, because by this bill you are actually creating five times the original number of shares, and thereby you are really getting a larger incorporation, unless there is a distinct and recorded understanding that the share value is to be reduced proportionately. If there is just something said as to an intention which may or may not be carried out, then there is no certainty in the matter.

Hon. Mr. Farris: I would remind my honourable friend that the Board of Transport Commissioners has control over these matters; that body has the general supervision of all activities of these pipe line companies and I do not think that a step could be taken by any of them without its approval. However, if there is any doubt about that, additional information can be secured. I thought it might be a simple matter to pass the bill without having to refer it to committee, but if my honourable friend feels that it should go to committee I will so move.

The Hon. the Speaker: May I remind the honourable senator that there is no option in the case of a private bill: it must go to committee.

Hon. Mr. Farris: Unless there is unanimous consent for omitting that stage.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I think the bill ought to go to committee.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Honourable senators, I am glad that this bill is going to committee.

As perhaps the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris), already knows, this company has provoked a serious dispute in my home province, British Columbia. I am a little perturbed, because the information I got when the Westcoast Transmission Company bill first came before the Senate was that they were to lay their pipe line right through to Vancouver, Burnaby and New Westminster; whereas now the information is that they are not doing that, and as a result a controversy is raging over the claim of the British Columbia Electric Company that they have the right to buy the gas from Westcoast Transmission Company at Huntingdon. We contend that Westcoast Transmission Company got the right to take their pipe line into Vancouver and New Westminster, where the great market is. When the bill to incorporate this company was before the committee it was stated that they were going to build the pipe line themselves; but now we are told they are stopping at the boundary and that another company is taking it over in their place.

Now, honourable senators, that is something I would like to have explained. It is a hot question with our people in the Fraser Valley and calls for some explanation. I want to find out why we were apparently wrongly informed when the matter was before the committee in the first instance. I am keenly interested, because this pipe line will be laid through the district I live in and represent. I might say that at present two officials are in Ottawa at the moment to protest this.

I know that the Board of Transport Commissioners has control over individual pipe lines, but I am particularly interested in the statements that were made when the franchise was given to this company, the terms of which I claim are not being carried out.

Hon. Mr. Farris: But that has nothing to do with the present amendment.

Hon. Mr. Reid: No, but we can get the information when it is before the committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Farris, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

WESTSPUR PIPE LINE COMPANY—COMMONS AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the amendment made by the House of Commons to Bill N-9, an Act to incorporate Westspur Pipe Line Company.

Hon. Mr. MacKinnon moved that the amendment be concurred in.

He said: Honourable senators, the amendment suggested by the House of Commons is to the effect that the main pipe line or main pipe lines for the transmission of gaseous hydrocarbons shall be located entirely within Canada. That amendment is satisfactory, and I would move concurrence.

The motion was agreed to, and the amendment was concurred in.

TRANS-BORDER PIPELINE COMPANY LTD.—COMMITTEE AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the amendment made by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to Bill Z-12, an Act to incorporate Trans-Border Pipe Line Company Limited.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Crerar, the amendment was concurred in.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: With leave, I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

GILLESPIE MORTGAGE CORPORATION—COMMITTEE AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the amendment made by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to Bill A-13, an Act to incorporate Gillespie Mortgage Corporation.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Crerar, the amendment was concurred in.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: With leave, I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

CANADIAN UNION CONFERENCE CORPORATION OF SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS—COMMITTEE AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the amendment made by the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills to Bill Y-12, an Act to incorporate The Canadian Union Conference Corporation of Seventh-day Adventists.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, for Hon. Mr. Bouffard, the amendment was concurred in.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: With leave, I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 24, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, May 24, 1955

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES COMPENSATION BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 188, an Act to amend the Government Employees Compensation Act.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: With leave, next sitting.

GREAT LAKES FISHERIES CONVENTION BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 279, an Act to implement a Convention on Great Lakes Fisheries between Canada and the United States.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: With leave, next sitting.

PRIVATE BILL

CONSOLIDATED PIPE LINES COMPANY— FIRST READING

Hon. Salter A. Hayden presented Bill C-14, an Act to incorporate Consolidated Pipe Lines Company.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Thursday next.

HISTORIC SITES AND MONUMENTS BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Charles G. Hawkins moved the third reading of Bill 182, an Act to amend the Historic Sites and Monuments Act.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

50437—33½

ALBERTA-BRITISH COLUMBIA BOUNDARY BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. George H. Ross moved the third reading of Bill C-13, an Act respecting the boundary between the provinces of Alberta and British Columbia.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACTS AMENDMENT BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING— DEBATE CONTINUED

The Senate resumed from Thursday, May 19, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Euler for the second reading of Bill H-10, an Act to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1952.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, in rising to take part in this debate may I at the outset compliment all who have spoken, on the high level at which the discussion has been kept. The debate has been most interesting and, I feel, most profitable. There is no doubt that the introduction of this bill has served a very good purpose. We have had the opportunity of hearing the views and getting the opinions of outstanding constitutional lawyers on the constitutional aspects of the bill. I think we are very fortunate in having in this assembly men who are recognized by the Bar as eminent in this branch of their profession. Of course, their views have not invariably coincided. It has been said that lawyers never agree entirely with one another: I might add that lawyers never disagree entirely either. In some respects, however, our constitutional experts are in complete accord. They all agree, I believe, that if this bill were to pass, and the constitution were amended, constitutional procedure with respect to the filling of vacancies in this chamber would be no more effective than it is at the present time. There has been some disagreement on the question of whether Parliament is competent to pass this legislation without consultation with the provinces. But there is one respect in which, whether we are lawyers or laymen, we are agreed, and that is that we should like to see some, at least, of these vacancies filled. When appointments will be made I know no more than you do, but I am sure that we would receive wholeheartedly any new appointees to this chamber.

But while the newcomers would be welcome, I personally do not believe that the fact that vacancies have not been filled is attended with the dire consequences which some of my colleagues suppose. It has been suggested that the delay in filling these vacancies is impairing the usefulness and efficiency of the Senate. Having given some consideration to that opinion, I am unable to discover in what respect there has been any such impairment of our efficiency and usefulness. Our committee work has not been impaired. The other day the honourable senator from Huron-Perth (Hon. Mr. Golding) pointed out that this year the Divorce Committee, with a greater number of subcommittees functioning, is doing more work than it has ever done. I am sure we all agree that the Divorce Committee is our hardest working committee, and we are grateful to its members for the necessary duties they perform so well.

Our various committees never lack a quorum, and any legislation placed before them is considered most carefully. I certainly do not feel that the usefulness of the Senate in connection with committee work is falling by the wayside. Perhaps if some members do not attend committee meetings they may not think the work is being done.

Hon. Mr. Reid: You can say that again.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: If that is so I would remind the house what the honourable gentleman from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert) said the other day:

> Is it the constitutional provisions behind the Senate that need reform, or is it the senators themselves?

Personally I feel that all senators are doing their tasks most faithfully.

Let us examine the work done in the Senate chamber itself. Is it a fact that the vacancies have impaired the usefulness and efficiency of this chamber? I do not want to compare our work with that done in the House of Commons, for I know that comparisons are odious, but I was a member of the Commons for eighteen years, and I can say that we work just as thoroughly and go into questions just as deeply as they do. In any event, we work more expeditiously. I do not think there has been any lack of usefulness in the Senate on account of the vacancies that have existed. There is nothing here that is spectacular. I do not criticize the House of Commons if from time to time there are events and incidents over there that might be described as spectacular. We must remember that every four or five years the members of that house come up for election, so that one expects a different form of debate in that body from what we have here. There is no atmosphere in the Senate such as you would find in the Little Theatre or the Drama League, but we do go into questions deeply and we interest ourselves in subjects which may not have public appeal, and we see that legislation is examined carefully in every respect. In fact, our work in this house reminds me of the words of Longfellow in his poem The Builders:

> In the elder days of Art,
> Builders wrought with greatest care
> Each minute and unseen part;
> For the Gods see everywhere.

In the Senate we look to every aspect of legislation that comes to us, whether we think it has great public appeal or is just of ordinary interest.

Let me mention the Opposition in the Senate. Someone has said that they are weak in numbers and that they might do their work a little better if there were more of them. None of us like to see their numbers dwindling away, but let no one in my presence accuse them of not performing their proper function. The Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig) is an able lawyer and an experienced parliamentarian, and those of his followers who are active never fail to criticize where criticism is warranted. I have been in this house for a little over a year, and I do not recall one item of legislation which would have been changed in any important detail had there been more members on the Opposition benches. The honourable gentleman's supporters are doing their work well. However, criticism is not restricted to the members of the official Opposition.

Honourable senators, it has been suggested that our integrity is threatened because the Senate vacancies have remained unfilled for so long a time. I believe the actual wording used was, "The dignity of the Senate is suffering." Does anyone really believe that the dignity of this august assembly is actually suffering on account of the vacancies? If so, where is it suffering? I do not know, and I cannot find it anywhere. I hope before I am through that honourable senators will agree with me that if all the vacancies had been filled our dignity not only would have suffered but would have been completely shattered.

Let me repeat that I am not against the filling of the Senate vacancies; on the contrary, I am in favour of their being filled. I also am in favour of reform. But as to filling the vacancies in the Senate, I do not think we would be going about it in the right way by passing this bill.

During this debate it has been said that in the House of Commons a vacancy must be filled within six months. Anyone who has read the House of Commons Act, of course, knows that that is not so. In the House of Commons, if a member should die, nothing is done toward replacing him in the house until two members inform the Speaker that there is a vacancy. Let us suppose that this session of Parliament should end on June 23, and that a member of the House of Commons should die on the 24th, that is, a day after prorogation. It is possible that no one would notify the Speaker of the vacancy until the house reassembles in 1956. In such an event, the Speaker would do nothing about it until then.

Hon. Mr. Quinn: Cannot a member notify him?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes, a member can notify him. It is necessary for two members to notify the Speaker; during the interval when the house is not in session two members could notify him, but if they did not notify him and waited until the house reassembled in 1956, then the Speaker would simply issue his warrant to the Chief Electoral Officer, directing him to issue his writ, and then the writ must be issued within six months after the Chief Electoral Officer receives the warrant. The Chief Electoral Officer does not set the election date as six months after he receives the warrant, but within six months after receiving the warrant he issues his writ for the election, and the election can take place at any time after that.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Is it ever later than six months?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It has happened on different occasions that the election was postponed for ten to eleven months; the records show that.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Is that about the limit, ten or eleven months? It would not be as long as five or six years, would it?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I think that is a fair question. Probably the honourable senator would agree that it would not be anything like two or three years. If it were as long as five or six years, a general election would take place in the meantime, but a by-election as a rule is not put off for a time longer than, say, eight or eleven months hence. The point I am trying to make is that some honourable senators may have gained the impression from what has been said here—and I I do not say it was said intentionally—that a vacancy in the House of Commons must be filled within six months of its occurrence, and I hope I have explained clearly that that is not the case. If I remember correctly, the House of Commons Act was amended in 1919 to provide for the writ being issued within six months after the returning officer receives the warrant. I am not going into the reasons for the amendment, but I wish to point out that that provision is included in the House of Commons Act, and is not a provision in the British North America Act.

Hon. Mr. Euler: No one has said that it is.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: No one has said that, but I wish to emphasize that the provision is not in the British North America Act. This bill proposes to amend the British North America Act and to set forth that a vacancy must be filled within six months. There is a great difference, in my opinion, between amending a statute and amending the British North America Act. The British North America Act is our constitution. I think it is a sacred document and should not be amended lightly.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Is it not a statute?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It is a statute which was originally not passed by our Parliament, as my honourable friend knows.

Hon. Mr. Euler: We have adopted it now.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: We have adopted it now; it is the British North America Act which was passed by the Parliament of the United Kingdom. However, it is our constitution and it is, I repeat, a sacred document and must not be amended lightly.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: May I ask a question? Would the honourable leader reconcile that point of view with section 17 of the British North America Act which sets forth the complete set-up and composition of Parliament?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Well, I still say that section 17 should not be amended unless we are absolutely sure that we are doing the right thing and that it is vital that the section should be amended. I would not amend any section of the British North America Act—our constitution—unless I felt that it was vital to amend it.

May I read what the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) said on this subject? I was impressed by his remarks, which appeared in Hansard at page 465:

> Whether amendments of this kind are to be made by the British Parliament or the Canadian Parliament, they are not to be lightly undertaken. With all deference to the honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) a constitutional question is a little different from an amendment of the House of Commons Act.

Let me pass on to an interesting point in connection with the House of Commons Act. From a reading of Hansard of 1919 when the bill to amend the act was under consideration I get the impression that the members of the Commons believed that if there was a failure on the part of a returning officer to carry out his duties and issue a writ, then, under the amendment, a writ of mandamus could be issued against him and he could be forced to do so. The honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) in what I regarded as an outstanding speech before this house, pointed out that the words in the bill before us were probably only directory. I do not know whether he would place the same interpretation on the language of the House of Commons Act, but I do feel that when the House of Commons Act was passed the members of that house thought they were placing on the statute book an effective piece of legislation.

Every constitutional lawyer in this house who has participated in the debate thus far has told us that if we amend the constitution as proposed in the bill it will be no more effective when we are through than it is now; that all we will have done is some pinpointing. Is there any member of this house who would want to amend the British North America Act merely by pinpointing? As I say, we are told that the bill, if passed, will be ineffective, and that nothing more could then be done under the act than can be done under it now. That is probably what the senators from Queen's-Lunenburg (Hon. Mr. Kinley) and New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) had in mind when they asked, "What will the members of the House of Commons think of this bill"? Some honourable senators replied, "What do we care what they think about it"? Certainly we care what they think about it. Have we no dignity? Does any honourable senator want a bill to go to the House of Commons and have the members of that house laugh at it, at our expense—and, I think in this case, rightly so? They would point to this measure and say "Look at what the senators have done: They have passed an ineffective bill and they ask us to confirm it". If that happens our dignity would not only be impugned, but it would be completely shattered indeed. it would be impugned and shattered not only in the House of Commons but in the minds of the Canadian people.

Honourable senators, the reasons which I have expressed, without further discussion, I think are sufficient to cause us to vote against this bill. But there are some practical objections to it too. Before I come to that branch of my argument, let me deal with the constitutional question.

The honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) said he was not sure that we have the right to amend our constitution as this bill seeks to do it. The honourable senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert) pointed out that he had given a different opinion a few years previously, and the honourable senator from Vancouver South asked, "Which opinion do you think is better"?

He is in effect saying, I have thought about this matter for two or three years and I now come to the conclusion that I was wrong previously. Honourable senators, I do not set myself up as a constitutional lawyer, and am not expressing an opinion one way or another. When constitutional lawyers disagree with one another, I think we should be most careful before making any change in our constitution.

One interesting point which I expected one of our constitutional experts might raise was as to whether the bill seeks to amend the right section of the constitution. I am sure none of us would want to ask the House of Commons to concur in a piece of legislation that amended the wrong section of the act. The bill proposes to amend section 24, which reads as follows:

> The Governor General shall from Time to Time, in the Queen's Name, by Instrument under the Great Seal of Canada, summon qualified Persons to the Senate; and, subject to the Provisions of this Act, every Person so summoned shall become and be a Member of the Senate and a Senator.

The bill would delete that section which provides for the summons, the instrument to be used and the consequences of the summons. The bill would substitute for the present section 24 a new section which deals with a vacancy. Now, as I read the act, the section having to do with vacancies is section 32, and although I am not a constitutional lawyer I think that would be the section which the bill should perhaps seek to amend. That section says:

> When a Vacancy happens in the Senate, by Resignation, Death, or otherwise, the Governor General shall by Summons to a fit and qualified Person fill the Vacancy.

Honourable senators who like myself are not constitutional lawyers—

Hon. Mr. Reid: Don't apologize.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: —would think that section 32 is the one that should perhaps be amended.

Hon. Mr. Euler: If my friend would like to make a motion to amend the bill to deal with section 32 in that way, I would be quite willing.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I would merely suggest to my honourable friend from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) that he consult his constitutional experts, and if they agree he might choose to amend his bill in that respect. I am raising this point only to indicate that this bill has not received the mature consideration it should have received before being introduced in this house. We all agree it is an ineffective measure,—

Hon. Mr. Euler: No, we don't.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: —and that there is a difference of opinion as to whether we have the right to amend our constitution; and now I raise the question as to whether the bill proposes to amend the proper section.

For the reasons I have given, honourable senators, I do not think the bill should be passed by this house. But there are still further practical reasons, as distinct from the legal considerations.

Before I cite a few of these practical considerations let me say frankly that I do not think that men or women who have previously sat in the House of Commons or in a provincial legislature make necessarily any better senators than those who come to us directly from the outside. I could point to a number of outstanding members of this house who have had neither parliamentary nor legislative experience. In my opinion, we need some members from the House of Commons in this house, for they can contribute greatly from their wide and practical experience. But if this bill were to pass, fixing a limit of six months within which vacancies must be filled, what might happen? Within a year after a new parliament meets a vacancy might occur in the Senate. There might be in the House of Commons a member who would make an excellent senator; he has served his country well; he has been in that house for many years, and in the Senate he could continue to contribute greatly to our country. If this bill passes, and if the Prime Minister wanted to appoint that member of the Commons to the Senate he would have to call a by-election right away.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Would that be terrible?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not say it would be terrible, but I say it might be an unnecessary expense and cause unnecessary trouble throughout the country. I am sure you all agree that we do not want by-elections unless they are necessary. Unfortunately, when there are deaths among members there have to be by-elections, but as a rule by-elections are not wanted. Would it not be far better to leave the Senate vacancy until the end of the Parliament, when the member could be appointed here? That is merely one of the practical considerations which I have to mention.

Earlier in my remarks I stated that I would return to the question of whether the non-filling of these vacancies has lowered the respect of the public for the Senate, and I said then I wondered if that were so. I wonder if in 1935 for instance, public confidence in the Senate was increased when it was brought up to full strength by the appointment of 19 senators on the eve of the election of that year.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Do not criticize us too much, for I am one of them.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Well I am sure the respect of the public for the Senate was increased when my honourable friend was appointed.

I wonder if public confidence was increased in 1940, when it was brought up to full strength by the appointment of 14 senators on the eve of the election. I wonder if the public had greater regard for and greater confidence in the Senate in 1945 when 18 vacancies were filled on the eve of the election.

On the contrary, honourable senators, I have no doubt that in 1949 the people of this country had more confidence in the Prime Minister and a higher regard for the Senate when he refused to fill the vacancies on the eve of the election, but left 8 appointments which could be made by an incoming government. Again, in 1953, I have no doubt that the confidence of the people in the Prime Minister and their regard for the Senate increased when on the eve of the election of that year he left 13 vacant seats in the Senate. This was something new in the history of our country.

Hon. Mr. Euler: It surely was.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Never before had a Prime Minister left vacant seats in the Senate on the eve of an election except perchance a few vacancies which occurred between dissolution of Parliament and the election day. And I repeat, most emphatically, that in my opinion the confidence of the people in the Prime Minister and their regard for the Senate was increased rather than decreased as a result of his action by the non-filling of these vacancies, and the Senate remained a more dignified and respected legislative body in the eyes of our fellow citizens.

The Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig) in a very forthright speech, spoke in the highest terms of our Prime Minister. I am satisfied that when he realizes the courageousness of our Prime Minister in leaving these seats vacant, that neither he nor any of his followers can support this bill.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Would it not have been the opportune time just prior to the general election for the Prime Minister to have filled the vacent Senate seats by appointing deserving members of the Commons, as suggested by the leader?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) must not be cross with me. I am not at all cross with him.

Hon. Mr. Euler: But you are getting so emphatic in this that I thought I would get that way too.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I think when I get through with my statement that he will agree with me that it was a very courageous thing for the Prime Minister to leave these seats vacant.

In all seriousness I say to the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig) and to the members of his party that I think they will hesitate for a long time to vote for this bill when they realize what the Prime Minister did at the time of the general election in 1953. Honourable senators very well know there is no assurance that a government will be re-elected when it goes to the country. There was no assurance that a new Government would not come into power at that election, and if a new government had come in at that time it could have immediately appointed 13 senators, which would have increased the incoming government's representation in the Senate at the outset of the new Parliament to 21 members; and with the additional 8 vacancies which have occurred since that time the new government would have had at this time 29 members. It is for that reason that I ask my honourable friends of the Opposition: Do you not think that the Prime Minister was very fair in leaving those appointments open so that had your party come into power it would have had a substantial following in this house?

I do not know whether a similar condition will prevail at the dissolution of the present Parliament, but I do know that it has occurred on two occasions, namely in 1949 and 1953, when our present Prime Minister asked that Parliament be dissolved. He left the way open for a new government to have a sizeable following in this house, and I hope the honourable members of the Opposition will take that into consideration when voting on this bill.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Before he leaves that question will the Leader of the Government assure me that there is no danger that the present Prime Minister will not be leader of his party at the next general election?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Well, that is the $64 question, which I cannot answer.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I would like to know.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: All I can say is, and I think this expresses the feeling of both the Leader of the Opposition and myself, that I would be happy if the present Prime Minister continued in office.

Let me say to the honourable members of the Opposition that of course if you do not approve of what the Prime Minister did in that respect, and if you want to tell him so, then vote for this bill; but if you approve of what the Prime Minister did, then in my opinion you have no alternative but to vote against the bill.

I trust I have been fair in my arguments. I have not consciously said anything for the purpose of persuading honourable members to vote on the bill other than in the way they feel they should vote. I have tried to present the issues clearly and fairly.

I am hoping that the honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler)—who has always been my friend and whom I hope to claim as my friend throughout the years that lie ahead of both of us—will take the very sage advice of the honourable senator from Kootenay East (Hon. Mr. King). However, at the time it was offered I could see why my honourable friend probably would not follow it, because he thought that the amendment he is sponsoring would be effective.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I still think so and in my reply I will tell you why.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I thought my friend had been convinced otherwise, because every constitutional lawyer in the house who has spoken so far on the bill is convinced that it is ineffective. But when the honourable senator from Kootenay East spoke, that point had not been made, nor had the question come up as to whether the right section was being amended; nor had the point so well presented by the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) been made that this bill does not affect existing vacancies. When the honourable senator from Waterloo explained the bill he said that it was for the purpose of having the present vacancies filled.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I said nothing of the sort in my speech, nor does it appear from the bill.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not want to misquote the honourable senator; I have tried not to do so; but he did refer to existing vacancies and he said, as reported on page 447 of Hansard:

> This bill proposes to correct that situation.

I do not know what this means if it does not mean that the purpose is to have these twenty-two vacancies filled. I point out these considerations to him because he did not know, and none of us knew at that time, that the bill was ineffective, that a constitutional difficulty existed, and that the bill could not be made retroactive. All of us are now aware of these facts.

Having given the matter very careful consideration, I believe that the effect of the passage of this bill would be to greatly lower our prestige, and therefore it is not in the interest of the Senate, nor is it the sort of legislation that we should pass.

For all the reasons I have expressed, if there is a vote I shall have to record my vote against the bill.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) a question? He has argued that these vacancies do not affect the efficiency of the Senate. Would he give an opinion as to how far this practice of not filling vacancies could go before the efficiency of this house would be affected?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am quite satisfied with the way this matter of vacancies has been handled during the time that our present Prime Minister has held the reins of government, and I am prepared to leave the decision with him. I am told by the honourable senator from Waterloo that at one time there were twenty-eight vacancies.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I did not say that. Probably what the honourable senator is referring to is my statement that in the last parliament there were twenty-three vacancies.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Probably that is the right number. There were more then than there are now. But I am not going to attempt to say just when the Prime Minister should begin to fill vacancies. It is my conviction that he will do what is in the best interests of the Senate and of the country.

Hon. George H. Ross: Honourable senators, I had not intended to take any part in this debate, but after listening to the speeches that have been made in favour of the bill I have come to the conclusion that I should express some of my reasons for voting against it.

As I read the British North America Act, we senators, as a law-making body, have no legal duty or jurisdiction with regard to the appointment of senators. Absolute authority in that respect is vested in the Governor General, which means the Governor General acting on the advice of the Prime Minister and his cabinet. Let me quote what the act says:

32. When a Vacancy happens in the Senate by Resignation, Death, or otherwise, the Governor General shall by Summons to a fit and qualified Person fill the Vacancy.

But, you may say, though the Senate has no legal duty with respect to filling vacancies in the Senate, it should be interested, as it is, in good government. The same might be said of the Canadian Bar Association. It, too, is interested in good government. Each has the same duty as the other as to filling vacancies in the Senate—which, in my opinion, is nil. Suppose the Canadian Bar Association were to pass a resolution saying, "The Governor General shall, within six months of a vacancy occurring in the Senate, fill such vacancy" and send it to the House of Commons, asking their concurrence in it. Would you not consider the Bar was meddling in the business of the Prime Minister and his cabinet? Yet that is precisely what this bill does. For my part I have faith in the Prime Minister and his cabinet, and will not undertake to dictate to them.

Hon. Mr. Euler: May I ask my friend a question? Is he seriously suggesting that the functions and the responsibilities of the Canadian Bar Association in any way resemble those of the Senate of Canada?

Hon. Mr. Ross: In so far as appointments of senators is concerned, yes. The right and the duty of making these appointments belong to the Governor General in Council, and to no other body. If the honourable member from Waterloo can produce any authority to the contrary, I hope he will bring it forward when he concludes this debate.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I am not questioning that statement at all, but I do not see where the Bar Association comes into this.

Hon. Mr. Ross: The futility of the bill if enacted was clearly and eloquently explained by the honourable senator for Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen). Suppose the bill became law: there would be no way of enforcing it in the courts, as no court can compel the Sovereign to perform any duty. The Governor General cannot compel himself to act. If the law were otherwise, it would be a case of the Crown suing the Crown to compel the Crown to act. Such an incongruous action is not tolerated under Canadian law.

To sum up: I am opposed to the bill because in my opinion it amounts to a vote of want of confidence in the Government; and for the further reason that, if enacted, it would be futile.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, the debate on this bill has developed two main points of discussion. The first has had to do with conditions in the Senate, and the second with the amendment to section 24 of the British North America Act.

I do not propose to engage in a long discussion on either point. I must confess too that I rise to participate in this debate with great diffidence because of the high quality of argument which has been made by the outstanding members of this chamber who have already spoken. I may also confess that at this stage of the debate it is most difficult not to repeat some of the points which have already been made.

Every honourable senator has been impressed by the description given of the record of achievement of this house and of its committees. Those members of the general public who read those excellent speeches will also be gratified.

It should be said too that all honourable senators have been impressed by the sincerity of those who have spoken, in urging that greater advantage be taken of the facilities and capacity of the Senate to assume continuing responsibilities for the betterment of Canadian conditions. For these reasons we are all indebted to the honourable gentleman from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) for introducing this bill, and for discussing the situation with reference to Senate vacancies in so objective and moderate a way. Everyone interested in the welfare of the country and in the protection of parliamentary institutions is concerned about the shortage of senators. It is not desirable that the quality or the quantity of the work done here should be impaired. Moreover, no one likes to contemplate that segments of the Canadian population entitled to representation in this chamber should lack it for any extended period.

I will not labour either of these points except to repeat that the annals of the Senate have been enriched by the speeches which have already been made.

The honourable gentleman from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) referred to the desirability of making appointments to the Senate on a basis other than the purely political. This view was expressed also by the honourable Leader opposite (Hon. Mr. Haig), and if I may venture an opinion I think that view would be generally endorsed for the reason given by the gentleman from Vancouver South. I listened with deep appreciation to the views expressed by the senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert) with reference to reform. But these important matters I leave in the capable hands of the gentlemen who have already handled them. They are occasioned by this measure but they do not, strictly speaking, emerge from the bill. They do, however, indicate the nature of the problem faced by any government in the circumstances obtaining in this chamber today.

If I may have the indulgence of the house—and perhaps immediately be out of order—there is another point that I should like to deal with. It is a consideration which has affected parliamentary institutions in our time and which has a bearing not only upon the Senate but as well upon the House of Commons. The problem exists in all countries governed by the parliamentary method. I refer to the recognized position of ascendancy which the executive, the cabinet, has exerted to an increasing degree over legislative bodies. This was also mentioned by the senator from Ottawa. It is not a new development but it has been the object of concern to students in Great Britain. Lord Campion has put it this way:

> The development of party machinery, the growing stringency of party discipline, the replacement of the House of Commons by the electors as the government-choosing agency, have all worked in the same direction to increase the ascendancy of the Executive over Parliament. The Government has also been the chief beneficiary from the restriction of the legislative powers of the House of Lords. There has been a deterioration in the position of the House of Commons, as a body, and in the status of individual members.

The Right Honourable L. S. Amery, who had long experience in public life in Great Britain, has added this comment:

> The ever-growing volume of administrative and legislative business to be dealt with by Parliament adds greatly to the danger of party caucus dictatorship. Some substantial easement could be and should be afforded by once more making a reality of the House of Lords.

It may be small consolation to members of this body to know that there is concern expressed by thinkers that modern conditions of life are shaping the institutions of parliamentary government in a manner somewhat different from what was originally contemplated. It does not follow, of course, that governments or individual members of governments necessarily subscribe to the trend simply for the purpose of consolidating greater power unto themselves. In a measure the situation in the Senate complained of today has a background in this problem. I said it may be small consolation to know this, but at least in knowing it we can realize we are not alone. To say all this, is not to recommend either inaction or despair. Governments must cope with the problem to assure that the best advantage be taken of facilities afforded by legislative bodies like the Senate and the House of Commons. Perhaps, too, in the light of the most interesting discussion of section 33 of the British North America Act given by the honourable gentleman from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) last week, the Senate perhaps has an onus cast upon it to approach this problem in a constructive way.

I had some remarks to make with reference to whether or not section 24 was the section to be amended rather than section 32. I have listened with extreme interest to what the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) has said on that point tonight. There may be some worthwhile consideration that should be given to it. Perhaps some reference, if there is an amendment to be made to one section specifically, should be made to the other section. My only suggestion on that would be that if the bill should go to committee it could be considered carefully there.

There has been general agreement from the lawyers who have discussed this bill, that if a court were called upon to say when the summons to be issued by reason either of section 24 or section 32 of the B.N.A. Act should be issued by the Governor General in the event of a vacancy, it would say that the summons should be issued "within a reasonable time".

An opinion has been expressed by the honourable gentleman from Toronto-Trinity that "a reasonable length of time" may be six months. Others have said a year, and perhaps even longer. There seems to be general agreement, however, that a period of seven or five or even a number of years might not be construed as a reasonable length of time. Perhaps, too, the party-standing in the chamber at a given time would have a bearing on the problem. Obviously the spirit of the two sections and, indeed, the spirit of the British North America Act is this, that the Senate should as far as possible have its full complement of members both because of the representative character of the chamber and as well to ensure the efficiency of its work.

I was most impressed by the legal argument and explanation given by the honourable gentleman from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen). It was but another demonstration of the clarity of his thought and the felicity of his language. I do not propose to discuss that branch of his argument which dealt with the retroactive effect of a statute. In my short experience here I have noticed that honourable senators are careful to guard against the use of words in statutes which might give them retrospective effect. If this amendment is passed, it is clear that it cannot apply to existing vacancies. It might have a moral effect thereon, but that is all. The standard rules of construction for the interpretation of statutes bear out this view completely.

What interested me most in the speech of my honourable friend, however, was his analysis of the legal effects of the proposed amendment. I had been reading some of the authorities on the subject and, of course, it was gratifying to find that he should have resorted to the same authorities upon which I would rely. He quoted Maxwell on Statutes, 8th Edition. There have been two subsequent editions of Maxwell, but there has been no variation in the opinion quoted by my friend from the 8th Edition. That is the basic law, and it is repeated in other authorities like Craies and Beal and the Digests, and indeed in the cases I have read in Canada, in England and in the United States.

In the opinion of my friend—and in this I think we can all concur—the practical legal effect, if indeed there is any legal effect at all in this proposed amendment, is very slight. The proposed new injunction to the Governor General would not be mandatory. It could be no more than directive. No writ of mandamus and no comparable judicial process can run against the Crown. This is long settled law.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Would the same thing apply with reference to vacancies in the House of Commons, so far as the House of Commons Act is concerned?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: I am going to deal with just that point, if my honourable friend will kindly wait.

To repeat, honourable senators, no writ of mandamus and no comparable judicial process can run against the Crown. This is long settled law. In the result, the proposed new section must be without any legal sanction.

The honourable gentleman from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) derived some help for his amendment from sections 10 and 13 of the House of Commons Act. These sections require the Speaker of that house to issue his warrant in the event of a vacancy, in the manner which the honourable Leader of the Government described. They further require the Chief Electoral Officer, upon receipt of that warrant, to issue a writ for an election within six months. The sponsor of this bill is justified in claiming that the six months' period provided in these sections is a useful precedent here; and I think, with all due deference to the Honourable Leader of the Government, that was all the honourable gentleman from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) sought to get out of sections 10 and 13 of the House of Commons Act. And while he claimed no more help from the House of Commons Act, it should be pointed out that there are legal and other sanctions available to enforce the House of Commons Act against the Speaker, if necessary, and against the Chief Electoral Officer, if required. But there are no legal sanctions available against the Governor General. In other words, even if this bill is passed, the Governor General could ignore any time limit which the bill might impose upon him for the filling of a vacancy in the Senate. And if the Governor General did ignore this time limit, but should he thereafter fill the vacancy, the appointment would still be valid. The law on this point I think is clear and can be expressed in this way:

> Where a statute specifies the time within which a public officer is to perform an official act regarding the rights and duties of others, it will be considered as directory merely, unless the nature of the act to be performed or the language used by the legislator show that the designation of the time was intended as a limitation of the power of the officer.

Thus far my honourable friend from Inkerman and myself are in agreement. Here, however, with deference and with considerable diffidence, I must part company with him, and I hope that by doing so I shall not fall into bad company. The honourable gentleman says that a moral effect will flow from the introduction of a specific time element of say six or twelve months. He says that this moral effect will be so cogent that no Prime Minister would risk incurring a charge from his political opponents that he has flouted the constitution by ignoring it. Successfully to charge any cabinet minister with breaking the law upon a serious issue, can have serious political consequences for him, and perhaps for the Government of which he is a member. To charge the Prime Minister with flouting the constitution, in letter and in spirit, could be more serious still. All this is true.

But it is my submission that if section 24 and section 32 now mean what they say, or if they mean what the courts would hold they now say, the constitution is already flouted. And if there are no extenuating circumstances, the situation is now as serious as the honourable gentleman from Inkerman suggests it would be if the proposed amendment becomes the law.

Let me repeat: section 32, it is agreed, means that the Governor General must fill Senate vacancies within a reasonable time. It is argued that some of the vacant seats here have been empty for a period longer than is reasonable. The failure to fill such vacancies must, therefore, be viewed as a violation of section 32, if these views are right.

And what is the legal sanction for this condition now? Obviously there is none. And what is the moral sanction? Perhaps it lies in whatever support from public opinion can be developed. This debate might have that effect. But perhaps, too, the extenuating circumstances to which I have referred earlier, and which have been mentioned by the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris), modify the position. In any event, I think that the legal sanctions or the moral or practical sanctions, which would flow from the adoption of this amendment, would not be greater in similar circumstances than they are under the existing law. I must, therefore, conclude that the amendment is nugatory and ineffective to accomplish the purpose desired. I, therefore, would not feel that I could support a constitutional amendment of this character.

Finally, I think a question might well be raised also as to the wisdom of introducing an ineffective amendment to the constitution of this country. In the first place we must remember that one of the functions of the Senate is to review and revise defective legislation. The Senate might quite properly question this amendment if it originated elsewhere for the reasons I have already given. I think we should hesitate more to pass an ineffective constitutional amendment which originates here.

In the second place, I think that we should approach with great caution, any amendment to the constitution of this country. It is an historic fact that constitutional changes in Britain are undertaken after the most searching investigation, and frequently they are accompanied with considerable political upheaval. The amendments which were made to the Parliament Act in 1911, and perhaps in 1948, are cases in point. They were much more far reaching than this amendment, but they serve as an example.

In the American system of government the machinery for constitutional amendment is elaborate and perhaps cumbersome. Generally speaking, it requires a two-thirds majority in each house of the Congress, the consent of the President and the approval of the legislatures of three-quarters of the States. As a consequence the constitution is much more rigid; perhaps more rigid than we would like to see ours. Viscount Bryce discussing this aspect of the matter, makes this comment:

> Ought the process of change to be made easier? Say by requiring only a bare majority in Congress and a two-thirds majority of the States? American statesmen think not. A swift and easy method would not only weaken the sense of security which the rigid constitution now gives, but would increase the troubles of current politics by stimulating a majority in Congress frequently to submit amendments to the States. The habit of amending would turn into the habit of tinkering. There would be too little distinction between changes in the ordinary Statute law which require the agreement of majorities in the two houses and the President, and changes in the more solemnly enacted fundamental law.

Honourable senators, it could be argued that more than a bare majority in our two Houses of Parliament should be required before the British North America Act be amended, even in purely federal matters. I do not make that argument now. But I think the honourable senator from Vancouver South was most wise when he commented that a change in Canada's constitution should not be lightly undertaken.

There is a bill on the Order Paper in the other place which proposes a retirement age for senators. I think, among other things about that bill, that a charge of "tinkering with the constitution" could be levelled against it. I would not be happy if such an allegation were made successfully about a measure passed here. I conclude by saying that while I cannot support the bill for the reasons I have outlined, I believe that there has been great value from this discussion for the Senate, for Parliament and for the country. The Senate has asserted its views with dignity, with clarity and with commendable moderation. I would not relish it if we adopted an inoperative constitutional amendment.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Turgeon, the debate was adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, May 25, 1955

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

DIVORCE PETITIONS

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 365 to 375, dealing with petitions for divorce, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

The motion was agreed to, on division.

PRIVATE BILL

WESTCOAST TRANSMISSION COMPANY LIMITED—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Norman P. Lambert, for the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the report of the committee on Bill B-14.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to whom was referred the Bill (B-14) intituled: "An Act respecting Westcoast Transmission Company Limited", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 19, 1955, examined the said bill, and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Next sitting.

DIVORCE BILLS

FIRST READINGS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following bills:

Bill D-14, an Act for the relief of Marie Therese Jeannette Mainville Froment.

Bill E-14, an Act for the relief of Goldie Moscovitch Katz.

Bill F-14, an Act for the relief of Yvette Cayer Lefebvre.

Bill G-14, an Act for the relief of Regina Wiener Strelezky Distelman.

Bill H-14, an Act for the relief of Marie-Louise Ashby Tremblay.

Bill I-14, an Act for the relief of Lorna Greenberg Buium.

Bill J-14, an Act for the relief of Myrtle Ada Lewin Derbridge.

Bill K-14, an Act for the relief of Georges Etienne Barry.

Bill L-14, an Act for the relief of Joseph Delphis Guillaume Delorme.

Bill M-14, an Act for the relief of Eileen Bayliss Roberts.

Bill N-14, an Act for the relief of Ernest Augustus Lepage.

Bill O-14, an Act for the relief of Rosaire Jacques Rene Tetrault.

Bill P-14, an Act for the relief of Phyllis Lucy Stiles Beal.

Bill Q-14, an Act for the relief of Margaret Durning Mullins.

Bill R-14, an Act for the relief of Mary Elizabeth Lorraine Callard Ramsay.

Bill S-14, an Act for the relief of Ann Mary Allward Spighi.

Bill T-14, an Act for the relief of Anne Rynski Vincent.

Bill U-14, an Act for the relief of Dora Helen Simmons Glancy.

Bill V-14, an Act for the relief of Joseph Louis Armand Carrier.

The bills were read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: With leave, next sitting.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACTS AMENDMENT BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING NEGATIVED

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Euler for the second reading of Bill H-10, an Act to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1952.

Hon. Gray Turgeon: Honourable senators, it is not necessary for one rising today, near the closing of this debate, to state that during the course of the debate we have heard some extraordinarily good speeches. If I were not rising at so late an hour in the debate I would make some comments on a number of these speeches, but time will not permit one to do that now.

However, there are one or two points that I do wish to bring before the house. First of all I am going to refer to a statement made by the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris), and I will do so partly because it has been referred to by other speakers and partly because I am in hearty accord with it and made a similar statement myself. The honourable senator said, as reported in Hansard, page 467:

> Honourable senators, I have not had the honour to discuss this question with Mr. St. Laurent or his immediate advisers, but I have heard a good deal of talk and also formed some conclusions of my own about the matter, and I am of the opinion that there is in the mind of the Prime Minister today a conflict of thought which presents great difficulty to him in considering the vacancies in the Senate.

My honourable friend related that view to suggestions which he proceeded to make about types of appointments, and then he said:

> It is a fact that not only is there a lack of representation in the Opposition in this house today, but there is also a lack of political thought representative of the people of Canada in the Senate, and this condition will exist while the old system prevails.

While there is an element of truth in that statement, I believe the honourable senator has so far overshot the mark he has in view that I must disagree with it. He went on:

> I believe the Prime Minister recognizes his obligation to the public to see that the Senate is what it ought to be.

Then he stated:

> The primary consideration at this time is that the Senate should be representative of the political and public thinking of the people of Canada.

Honourable senators, I hold in my hand an article which appeared in the Montreal Gazette of December 5, 1953, and from which I will briefly quote. It is headed "Liberals Scan Non-Party Rule on Senate Seats"; and it states:

> Prime Minister St. Laurent today hinted that the Government may be moving away from party appointments to the Senate. In filling the current thirteen vacancies in the Upper House, he said he is looking for a general policy that will strengthen Canada's confidence in the Senate.

The writer goes on to praise the Prime Minister, and develops his thoughts in this connection. I will not at the moment go further into that matter, but I propose to repeat a statement which I made some while ago, and which, I admit, although it drew some approving comments, also elicited strong criticism. I concede that that criticism was quite sincere, but it may have been based on the mistaken impression that what I was saying was that party politicians should not be appointed to the Senate, or that members of the House of Commons or of other legislative bodies should not be called to this chamber.

I will make just one citation of a friendly article. It is from the Ottawa Journal of December 20, 1951:

> We trust that the Prime Minister and the Government Leader in the Senate pay attention to speeches made away from Ottawa by parliamentarians. We have observed that Senator Gray Turgeon, speaking in a round table discussion, has suggested that appointments on the basis of public service in varied fields be made to the Upper House.

The article goes on, but I shall not read further from it.

I am going to read now from a statement that I made on September 28, 1951, on "Town Meeting of the Air", which is a radio panel discussion. Before quoting from my statement I want to say that on that occasion I participated in a debate with Mrs. Angus MacInnis, the daughter of Mr. Woodsworth, whose husband is a member of the House of Commons. I understand that at the moment Mr. MacInnis is sick at home, in Vancouver, and I do hope he will have a complete recovery soon. While he and I do not agree in politics I regard him as one of the most honest men we have in our Canadian Parliament. The debate I took part in was about the Senate, and the remarks I made on that occasion brought me some criticism as well as some favourable comment. I will now quote from my own statement:

> In making appointments it is essential to remember that the Senate is a deliberative and legislative body and has a responsibility with respect to the constitutional rights of our provincial Legislatures and of our federal Parliament. Therefore, to a large extent, men and women with parliamentary experience must continue to be among those appointed.
>
> Today, however, more than ever before, except during actual all-out warfare, one of Canada's most urgent requirements is a positive recognition and acknowledgment of community responsibility. Every individual has a moral obligation of citizenship. It is especially binding upon those engaged in school and university education and in journalism or other forms of publicity. And this obligation applies very strongly to those who are active in business and manufacturing and farming associations and in labour unions. It also applies to the members of our councils of women and our consumers associations. In my opinion and I intend to press for its acceptance, it would be proper to appoint members of these and other groups to the Senate regardless of their politics or their lack of politics. This would bring to Parliament a greater intimate knowledge of day-to-day conditions than now prevails. And as indicated above, some appointments of this nature would make the Senate an even more representative body.

And as the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) pointed out —and I believe it to be true—it would make the Senate more highly appreciated by the public of Canada, generally speaking. It is largely because I made that statement years ago that I am taking part in this debate, and

I was further tempted to do so after hearing the honourable senator from Vancouver South state that he thought there was some disturbance within the mind of the Prime Minister as to the nature of the appointments that should be made.

In connection with the subject-matter of the discussion on this proposed amendment to the Canadian constitution, I want to say quite clearly that I am definitely opposed to this bill, and if it comes to a vote I intend to vote against it. While I believe that the debate will do a great deal of good, I am afraid that even the taking of a vote, whichever way it should go—and if we do have a vote, I hope the motion will be negatived —would do harm in the mind of the public as to the general makeup of the Senate.

I want to say a word of praise for the honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) who presented this bill. It has been implied that he was indifferent as to whether the introduction of the bill would embarrass the Prime Minister or not. I know the honourable senator very, very well, and I owe to him as a former minister, as well as to other honourable senators who formerly were ministers, a real debt for the extraordinarily good work done by him and them as ministers when I happened to need their help in the House of Commons. I feel positive that there is not the faintest feeling within the mind of the honourable senator from Waterloo that the bill if passed would embarrass the Prime Minister. I am quite sure, although I do not agree with him, that he thinks the passing of this bill would do some good. Personally, I feel that, apart from the benefit derived from this debate, if a vote is taken, particularly if it is an affirmative vote, the bill would do a great deal of harm.

It has been suggested here that the Senate vacancies could be filled by members from the political parties in the Opposition. Frankly, I do not agree with that, although I know I shall not be making myself any more popular in some quarters by saying so. I do not agree with it, because I think we have had examples enough in some of the countries of Europe to show not only the uselessness of a system of that nature but also the very injurious effects that can result from such a system. That idea, of course, is more or less based upon what is called proportional representation, although it is a digression from it. We have seen it worked out in some of the countries of Europe, and what have we found? We have found that under such conditions a government never knows where it is. One of the troubles of the so-called Western world today is that it never knows if an agreement, in which certain European countries are participants, will be carried out, because their governments do not last more than a few weeks or a few months at a time.

It was suggested here, in a similar vein, that the provincial governments should make Senate appointments. That system exists in Europe, too. Until lately everybody was wondering what would happen in Germany because of the uncertainty of the result of the provincial or state elections, whichever they are called, and uncertainty whether a certain percentage of the Upper House would be appointed to positions of authority. That system might have destroyed us in our efforts during last year to bring about a proper standing between the countries of Europe. So I do not agree with either of the two suggestions made. However, I want members of this chamber to recall that I suggested that people who had shown a true sense of community responsibility should be appointed to the Senate, regardless of their politics, or their lack of politics—for some of them perhaps have no political background at all. The honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) has said that many members of this chamber were never at any time members of the House of Commons or of legislatures, and yet they are just as good senators as those of us who have had that experience. While I have made the statement that many members of this body should have former parliamentary experience, because this is a deliberate and legislative body, I do not think such experience is essential.

I listened with a great deal of interest to, among others, the speech made by the honourable senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert). He quoted from a statement made by Sir Clifford Sifton to the effect that persons who had held high government offices—for example, ministers and lieutenant governors—should be entitled to appointment to the Senate, but that in order to make such appointments it would be necessary to refrain from filling vacancies for a period of time. That condition is true of appointments of every nature. Particularly is it true of the suggestion which I made, and which was endorsed by the honourable senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) and by editorial comment in various newspapers across Canada. If that is going to be the policy, time for deliberation must be given to the Prime Minister to consult with his advisers on the making of appointments. To pass legislation fixing a time limit within which Senate appointments must be made, and to so direct the Sovereign through her representative the Governor General, would be to destroy our significance as a legislative body. The honourable senator from Calgary (Hon. Mr. Ross), in his speech last evening, brought this thought to our minds, and warned that we must be careful of the nature of the legislation which we pass.

A good deal has been said by many people about the position of the Senate, and we are all aware of the many expressions of lack of confidence in this chamber. The question of long continuing vacancies in this house, does not contribute to the confidence of the public in this body. Therefore, I sincerely hope that that question can be cleared as quickly as possible.

Honourable senators will recall an article about the Senate which appeared in Maclean's magazine some time last year. This carefully written article had some praiseworthy comment about the Senate and was also very critical of it. The article pointed out that, from Confederation up to the year 1954, of some 7,352 bills which had come from the House of Commons to the Senate only 214 had been rejected by this house; also, that within the same period the Senate had seen fit to amend some 1,666 bills. Attention was drawn to some important statutory amendments which were initiated in the Senate, such as the amendments to the Income Tax Act recommended by a special committee which met under the chairmanship of the sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Euler); and mention was made of the work of the Finance Committee, under the chairmanship of the co-sponsor of this bill (Hon. Mr. Crerar). While it had some good words to say about the effect of major amendments, in general the article did not attach much significance to the great majority of amendments proposed by the Senate.

Time permits mention of only one or two amendments which I think are significant and which in fairness to the Senate should be noted. For instance, an amendment to the Public Service Superannuation Bill was brought in last session at the instigation of the honourable lady from Fredericton (Hon. Mrs. Fergusson) and supported by the honourable lady from Rockcliffe (Hon. Mrs. Wilson). My attention was first drawn to that bill by a complaint from the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) about its compulsory feature. The action taken by the Senate was such as to remove this undesirable feature and to substitute strictly voluntary conditions. While we did not reject the measure, we were able to correct and improve it. I am sure that was counted amongst the 1,600-odd amendments to which the article referred as not being very important. To me it is significant that Government legislation, dealing with the relationship between the Government and its employees, was interfered with in the Senate largely at the instigation of a relatively new appointee to this chamber. Certainly that destroys any suggestion that undue pressure or influence is exercised on senators by the authority who makes the appointments.

The article in Maclean's went on to mention the Naval Aid Bill of 1913, on which I should like to make brief comment. The honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Campbell), in his speech of a few days ago, referred to the amendments to the Income Tax Act recommended by the special committee headed by the senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler). He made reference also to the action taken by the Senate with respect to the Canada Shipping Act. It was pointed out that until the passage of the Statute of Westminster Canada had no authority to deal with shipping outside her own boundaries. In this connection I would remind the house that had it not been for the action taken by the Senate with respect to the Naval Aid Bill, in 1913, the Statute of Westminster would never have been passed, or at least not for a very long time. As I have said before, the Naval Aid bill was sponsored by Sir Robert Borden.

Regardless of the fact that just a few years earlier, in 1909, the House of Commons had unanimously passed a resolution against any naval aid of that nature, this bill was accepted by the Commons in 1912. While it was under debate the statement was made over and over again that the time was coming fast when the people of Canada should be entitled to representation in the House of Commons of Great Britain.

Now, honourable senators, I submit that if anything of that nature had happened we never would have had the Commonwealth as we have it today. If the Senate had not killed that bill in 1913 how could Sir Robert Borden have taken the positive and noble stand that he did take when dealing with the Versailles Treaty at the end of the First World War, a stand whereby he refused to permit the delegation from Great Britain to sign the treaty for Canada? He insisted on that point and finally won out, with the result that a Canadian signed the Versaille Treaty for Canada. I repeat that if that Naval Aid Bill had not been defeated by the Senate in 1913 that action by Sir Robert Borden would have been utterly impossible.

What led up to the passing of the Statute of Westminster was the so-called Balfour Memorandum, passed as a result of the 1926 conference of various members of the Commonwealth, as we call it now, in London, and the leading agent in that discussion was our then Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Mackenzie King. In the agreement reached at that time, which brought about the Balfour Memorandum, it was stated that each of the various countries within the proposed Commonwealth was equal, that none was superior to the other; and that is the circumstance which eventually brought about the Statute of Westminster. That is why we have today the Queen as Queen of Canada, and we are all very, very proud of having her as Queen of Canada.

I am just mentioning these things in a brief resumé of what the Senate has done in the past, and of some of the things that have taken place not only in Canada but in other parts of the Commonwealth following from actions of the Senate. If that memorable event of 1913 had not taken place, and if the Commonwealth had not, after the conference of 1926, been put upon the basis which was founded upon the Balfour Memorandum, the Commonwealth conference of a couple of years ago in London could not have achieved the success of which we are all now so proud. I am referring to the conference at which the present Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Mr. St. Laurent and the present Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Honourable Mr. Pearson, played so important a part in having India and Pakistan remain openly within the Commonwealth in spite of the nature and forms of government which the people of those two countries were contemplating. Today we are all part of the same Commonwealth, and proud of the fact that we are playing a marvellously important part in the affairs of the world; and I know that I am right in stating that these accomplishments result from the action of the Senate in 1913.

In closing, I am going to take the liberty of doing what the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) did last night. He approved the suggestion made by the honourable senator from Kootenay East (Hon. Mr. King) that our very good friend the honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler), the sponsor of the bill, withdraw it so that there should be no vote upon it. I also am endorsing that suggestion, and in addition I am making a personal appeal both to the sponsor and to the co-sponsor that, at least for this session, until we see what happens, they withdraw the bill. It is evidently the consensus now that if this bill passes it would not have the slightest effect on the present vacancies, and it could not have any effect until a vacancy occurred after the amendment to the constitution had received Royal Assent. The great desire of the sponsor and the co-sponsor of the bill is to stir up feelings of appreciation of the Senate among the people of Canada, and I think such feelings have been strengthened by what has taken place in this debate. I honestly believe that this debate will improve our position. Let them therefore withdraw the bill, and then their action will be definitely good and have no bad effects whatever on the Senate or on our parliamentary system. I make that appeal in a friendly fashion and I do hope they will give it consideration, because I am sure that in time to come all members of the Senate and countless other Canadians will, in their minds at least place a halo around the heads of both of them for the good they will have done by withdrawing this bill.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, in rising to take part in this debate I do not intend to offer any apology at all. We have heard from a number of lawyers and some professional politicians. As I am an ordinary layman I will express my views as such, because this Senate was originally set-up for the very purpose of having all the diverse opinions of Canada freely expressed in this chamber.

I would like at once to express my reaction to the suggestion of the honourable senator who has just taken his seat that the bill be withdrawn. I am of the opinion that that action, if taken at all, should have been taken before many of the speeches were made, particularly those which implied that the Government or the Prime Minister would be embarrassed if we passed the bill. Now, honourable senators, if that is to be the considered opinion of this body, then we are just sitting here to please the Government.

Hon. Mr. Turgeon: I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. Horner: No, but that was the implication. I could draw no other inference from what you said, than that we should always act in such a way as to please the Government.

Hon. Mr. Turgeon: If you took it in that way I certainly did not express myself properly.

Hon. Mr. Horner: I could take no other meaning out of your remarks.

Honourable senators will perhaps be somewhat surprised to hear that I am supporting the bill. As I look around our little group in this corner I ask myself if the filling of any of the present vacancies would increase our numbers, and what a hope I have of that! However, there is a matter of principle at stake.

Last night, the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) made a good speech, and I thought he was "the lawyer for the defence". Had he been on the opposite side, supporting the bill, he could have done so much better with less effort.

One hears a great deal here and there to the effect that, to qualify as a senator, a man should have experience in some legislative body. I know a little about the subject, because—unfortunately—I was on two occasions a defeated candidate in northern Saskatchewan; and last year I had some difficulty with the honourable senator from Prince (Hon. Mr. Barbour), over a nasty, bad-tempered remark he made, as he went out of the chamber, that, anyway, he had been elected to a legislature. As a good deal of the discussion on this bill has not been strictly in order, I assume I may be allowed the privilege of being a little irrelevant, on what is purely a personal matter. I would like to draw to the attention of honourable senators that today an election is being held in beautiful Prince Edward Island; there are some 60,000 registered voters, and some 30 candidates. Assuming that 70 per cent of the registered voters will attend the polls, it follows that each candidate will have, on the average, no more than 1,300 votes. Now let me say, in no spirit of boastfulness, that for many years I was a member of my local school board, and at the time of my appointment to this chamber I was reeve of my municipality; and there were just about the same number of voters in my municipality as there are in the honourable senator's constituency in Prince Edward Island—to say nothing of the fact that some three to four million bushels of grain are grown in my district.

Hon. Mr. Barbour: What has all this to do with the bill?

Hon. Mr. Horner: A lot of things that have been said here have not had anything to do with the bill, and among them were some of the arguments used by the honourable senator who has just taken his seat. Further, while the honourable senator from Prince remained in his fine province of Prince Edward Island, where his family have lived for generations, and where he was surrounded with relations and friends, I as a young man went to Western Canada and settled in a district where there were few people of my own race and kin. The surrounding country was filled with people from Europe who came here as immigrants. They were told when they arrived that the Canadian Conservative party resembled the reactionary conservatism which oppressed them in their native lands; and the Liberals promoted the idea, not from the public platform but by a whispering campaign, that if these people voted Conservative they would lose their homesteads and be deported from Canada. That was the story which was circulated just before the federal election of 1917. And I will say this to the honourable senator, that had Our Saviour come down to earth and run in that constituency as a Conservative candidate he would have been defeated. Naturally, I was defeated. I felt I should mention this matter to show what some of us have had to contend with. By the way, I was told by my own leader that to the city of Winnipeg belongs the honour, or dishonour, of having elected the first Communist to any legislature in Canada.

To complete what I intended to say—I agree with the Leader of the Government, and I have said so before in this chamber, that people who, though they may never have sat on a school board or any other public body, have rendered great service to Canada may be ideally fitted for appointment to this chamber. I would not object to selections of this kind; and in the very nature of things there will be appointments to the Senate from members of the House of Commons.

I intend to support this bill. I disagreed with a number of remarks made by the Leader of the Government. Every day lately two or three messengers have been calling on senators in their offices to try to get a quorum for various committees.

Some Hon. Senators: No.

Hon. Mr. Horner: That is true. There were three in my office this morning. A man can sit on only one committee at a time; and I am sorry to say that some honourable senators do not attend to their committee duties. It might not be a bad thing to have the honourable the Speaker read, in addition to the prayers, the oath of office which honourable senators take on entering this chamber.

The intention of those who created the Senate was to have it filled with men of various opinions. When 22 in a membership of 102 are absent, it is hard to estimate what the Senate is losing. The question is not whether our business can be carried on with a smaller number, but whether we are not depriving ourselves of the advantage of having new men with new ideas. When you take grist to the mill, though there may be in it some chaff and some leaves, you grind that grist. On a former occasion, when the subject of Senate reform was before us, I was definitely opposed to the fixing of an age of retirement, because I realized then, and I believe now, that, though men might be appointed to and sit in this chamber at the age of eighty, if during their long lives they have been gathering experience and are still mentally alert, we would get "grist from the the mill", and in the very nature of things they would not be here too long.

I have read all the speeches delivered during this debate which I was not present to hear. I was greatly interested in the very fine argument, from a legal point of view, put forward by the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), but I was somewhat amazed at the speech of my honourable friend from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid). I did not know that Scotsmen were given to abuse to the extent that he indulged in it. And I will add that it is necessary, of course, that there shall be a measure of independence in this chamber; but if I were looking for a man to do more than just talk and to take some action, the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) would be about the last man in this chamber I would approach—certainly to carry through any threat to any Liberal anywhere. The honourable senator boasted the other day about being an independent and not being afraid to go back to the people to face re-election. I would remind him of these words of the famous bard, Robert Burns:

> Oh wad some power the giftie gie us
> To see oursels as others see us!
> It wad frae monie a blunder free us,
> An' foolish notion.

Hon. Mr. Reid: And I am looking at you now.

Hon. Mr. Horner: We have been told during this debate that senators should have nothing to say about this question of filling Senate vacancies. I would at this point read section 26 of the British North America Act:

> If at any Time on the Recommendation of the Governor General the Queen thinks fit to direct that Three or Six Members be added to the Senate, the Governor General may by Summons to Three or Six qualified Persons (As the Case may be), representing equally the Three Divisions of Canada, add to the Senate accordingly.

That provides for at least six extra members. Section 27 of the same act reads:

> In case of such Addition being at any Time made the Governor General shall not summon any Person to the Senate, except on a further like Direction by the Queen on the like Recommendation, until each of the Three Divisions of Canada is represented by Twenty-four Senators and no more.

Honourable senators, another point not raised in this debate concerns the volume of business now done in this country. When I was appointed to the Senate the federal budget amounted to some $450 million—less than the present budget of Ontario alone—and today it amounts to $5 billion. Look at the mammoth business done by the federal government and the huge sums of money it spends. Someone has raised the question of the cost of the Senate. Well, anyone who has had any experience in the business world knows that on a cost basis the country could well afford to have three or four hundred senators. In any event, there is no doubt the Senate should continue to exist. Like many others I had hoped that the Prime Minister might have made appointments to this side of the chamber. If I were Prime Minister or even a member of the Liberal party I would regret sincerely that the late Agnes Macphail was not appointed to the Senate. I think the Government made a major mistake by not conferring this honour upon her. Such an appointment would have accomplished many things, but I will not go into them now.

Another Senate appointment that could have been made was that of John R. MacNicol, a staunch Conservative who performed his duties so faithfully in the House of Commons for many years. How long did either one of those persons live after the dates when they might have been appointed to this house? Instead of hanging back, had the Prime Minister appointed these outstanding Canadians to the Senate his action would have created good will and, as a matter of fact, would have been first-class politics.

When Newfoundland joined Confederation most Newfoundlanders were neither Liberals nor Conservatives as we know them in Canada. I said then and I still say that the only just and fair thing to have done was to have appointed three senators from Newfoundland to sit on the Opposition benches in this house.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Suppose they had refused to sit there?

Hon. Mr. Horner: Not a chance. I can name some who would have gladly sat on this side. I do not think any reasonable person inside or outside the Senate would argue that such appointments would not have been fair and just. Furthermore, in order to right the wrong that has been done I would suggest that such appointments could still be made whenever vacancies occur in Newfoundland constituencies. Two former Newfoundland members in the House of Commons, Gordon Higgins and William Browne, would be delightful men to have here.

The honourable Leader of the Government made a play on the fact that the Prime Minister was courageous enough to not fill vacancies before elections. While he was making that statement the thought occurred to me that perhaps it was very smart politics on the Prime Minister's part, that it was just the same as saying, "I am betting we are going to win the election". Maybe that had just as much to do with his action as did any generosity on his part.

I want to deal with the question of representation in the Senate from the various parts of Canada. As a result of the vast development that is taking place in our north country it might be necessary in the not too distant future to appoint the finest Indian or Eskimo we can find. I think it would be a good thing to appoint an Eskimo of the calibre of the nine who, after surviving three or four days on an ice flow in the open waters of Hudson Bay last January, jogged down the shoreline some 150 miles to their village. They had lived on a small supply of seal meat and were none the worse for wear. If we had such a man in this chamber he could tell us how we might surmount some of our seeming difficulties. Incidentally, we could bring in a weatherman from that part of the country too. I am sure he would make just as good a job of forecasting our weather as does some of our modern equipment.

The honourable senator from Queen's-Lunenburg (Hon. Mr. Kinley) told us to leave everything to the Government and not to embarrass it. He said that the people of Canada had voted the Government in, and that it was doing a fine job of appointing judges, and so on. While he was speaking I could not help but think that much of what he said illustrated just where this country is drifting. During the past few years the Government has opened up an enormous number of positions. Just yesterday our Standing Committee on Finance was given evidence about the large number of persons employed by the Government, some who are exempt from the Civil Service Act, and many others who, I would say, are political appointments.

What has been the trend in the past few years? Today no fewer than three Cabinet ministers, and another man who is holding one of the most important positions in the country—a man who says he is ready to go through and over certain mountains—are from Conservative families. I know of men who have been approached; in fact I myself was approached, and I might have been guaranteed election without spending a five-cent piece on my own behalf, if I had consented to run as a Liberal. Well, I do not know what I would have thought of myself, but I know that my Liberal opponent would have been grateful to me had I accepted, because then his party would have been in a position to dictate. Let us see what is taking place in the province of Saskatchewan today. A man who attended a Conservative convention as a supporter in 1948 is now the leader of the Liberal party in Saskatchewan. That indicates the temptation that has to be faced by a man who is anxious to get into public life and secure a position at any cost. Our parliamentary system is getting into a very dangerous position in Canada. As was said by the honourable senator who spoke immediately before me, the best form of government is a government faced with strong opposition. My thoughts go back to a period when Western Canada thought it was being ill-treated. At that time we had about 61 members in the Commons. The present Government Whip in this house, the honourable senator from Provencher (Hon. Mr. Beaubien), and the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar), with others, came down on behalf of the Progressives, and they were taken over by the Liberal party. Granted, they may have got a great many things they desired. I am quite concerned about what is going on in the political field. When I think of men tempted to leave their party for better opportunities I am reminded of the story we used to read about the Chinese armies in the early days, when their soldiers would desert from a small army to join the ranks of the largest. Well, in politics I will be the last possible one to run to the other side.

I am not questioning the desirability of appointing senators to fill vacancies here. Some people have advocated appointment of representatives of different groups. On that point, I may say that I share the very fear that one honourable senator expressed of group government.

As to the appointment of members from another party, Conservative or any other, I do not think the Government would refuse an appointment on that account, but the trend is all the other way.

I will not detain the house longer. I understand there is a desire to conclude the debate today; and knowing the honourable senator from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) as I do, I do not expect there is any chance of his withdrawing the bill.

Honourable senators, I believe in taking an independent point of view. A few years ago when the sponsor of this bill was sponsoring a bill to amend the Dairy Industry Act I opposed it for all I was worth. Although the bill was not passed my friend achieved his objective in another way; and I think that embarrassed the Government and is still embarrassing them to the tune of many million pounds of butter. The bill before us, however, is not so complicated, and it has been presented merely because of a feeling that the Senate would be a more efficient body if the Government could be persuaded to feel that vacancies in this house should be filled within a reasonable time.

The honourable senator has suggested that if the bill goes to committee it could be amended so as to extend the time for making appointments to a year. I think that would be a backward step. As the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) said, if the Senate defeats this bill it will be a very serious thing. I think it will be much more serious than just the defeat of the bill, because the people of this country will say: "The Government didn't want that legislation, and as the Senate has a large Liberal majority it of course defeated the bill." So I ask honourable senators who talk as independents to show a little independent action and support the bill.

Hon. W. D. Euler: Honourable senators,—

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, may I remind the house that if the honourable gentleman, the sponsor of the bill, speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. W. D. Euler: Honourable senators, as seems to be the custom, I should compliment those who have participated in the discussion upon the high level at which the debate has been maintained. In fact, I think perhaps I ought to compliment myself in that my little bill, which I thought was simplicity itself, should have provoked what has been, in my opinion, the best debate since I came to the Senate, fifteen years ago. There was only one slightly discordant note, which has already been referred to by my good friend from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner). The senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid), without any provocation or relevancy to the bill itself quite unfairly, I think, charged the senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) and my humble self with a lack of independence. Under all the circumstances I think honourable members will understand me when I say that I thought he was joking, but it seems that he was serious, for he compared our lack of independence with his own fearless course in the House of Commons, where he had been, as he said with considerable pride, a rebel; and he twice intimated that perhaps his independence had cost him a seat in the federal cabinet. Well, perhaps he is right. But for some reason I was reminded of a little incident that occurred a few weeks ago when I was being taken upstairs in the Senate elevator on the way to my breakfast. The operator of the elevator seemed to be in a cheerful mood, and was singing a little song to himself, so I said to him, "I am glad to see you are so happy this morning." He replied, "Oh, well, senator, I am just kidding myself."

Some Hon. Senators: Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. Euler: The reputation of my deskmate the senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) requires no defence whatsoever in this house. I would say that his record of probably 40 years of public service in Canada would bear fair comparison with that of anyone else here.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Euler: May I proceed to discuss with becoming seriousness the question of this bill. In doing so I hope to stay within the confines of the bill, and not go far afield as many previous speakers have done. I understand that in closing the debate I am not supposed to raise any new issues or discuss any new matters. I am therefore pretty much limited to a discussion of the remarks of those who expressed opposition to the bill. In doing so I shall perhaps pay considerable attention to what the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) had to say last evening, and if I seem to overlook what some other senators have said I hope they will take no offence.

May I refer first to the good speech made by the senator from Queen's-Lunenburg (Hon. Mr. Kinley). Although he roved far and wide, he finally touched on what I think is the crux of the question before us today. He said—I do not have his exact words—that he thought I had made a pretty good case, but that upon reflection he came to the conclusion that my bill was not a friendly one. While this bill is neither friendly nor unfriendly, this is the first intimation I have had that any manner of sentiment can be injected into a bill. If my friend can show me how I can inject any kindly or affectionate feeling into any bills I may introduce in the future—and I am sure they will be few, because my experience in introducing bills has not been happy—I shall be glad to consider the matter. However, I do not know what my hard-boiled legal friends would do to any bill of that kind. From what my friend from Queen's-Lunenburg said I gathered the distinct impression that in his opinion it was entirely outside the duty or right of a senator to introduce legislation which might be at variance with the policy of the Government. To that concept, I take absolute exception.

The senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), in the best speech I ever heard him make, established in the most convincing fashion, to me at least, that under the British North America Act the Senate, like the House of Commons, is an integral part of the Parliament of Canada, neither inferior nor superior, but equal, with one doubtful exception, namely, that of our inability to interfere with financial measures.

If I believed that a majority of the members of this chamber shared the concept that we were merely an appendage of the House of Commons or of the administration, then it would be difficult for me to defend the continuance of the Senate as a part of the Parliament of Canada.

The distinguished lawyer members of this house—I need not name them, because they are well known—have quite definitely stated that there is no constitutional obstacle to this bill such as was referred to by the Leader of the Government last evening. Opinions were expressed by the senators from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen), Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly), Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris), Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden), and other distinguished and unimpeachable authorities, all of whom say Parliament has a perfect right to enact this bill.

Let me come to the principle involved, which leads me to the objections that have been advanced against the bill. There has been almost complete unanimity amongst all speakers that the present practice of accumulating senatorial vacancies is wrong; I have heard no one defend it. The speech of the senator from Vancouver South was freely quoted to bolster the arguments of my friend the Leader of the Government. But the senator from Vancouver South also said this:

> Whether I agree with all the results which he—

Referring to myself.

> —expects would flow from the bill, I find myself in complete accord with every pronouncement he made. He referred to a number of sections of the B.N.A. Act, particularly section 32, which deals with Senate vacancies. It reads:
>
> When a Vacancy happens in the Senate by Resignation, Death, or otherwise,—
>
> That covers the entire field.
>
> —the Governor General shall—
>
> It does not say "may".
>
> —by Summons to a fit and qualified Person fill the Vacancy.
>
> No lawyer would stake his reputation upon the proposition that this means the vacancy shall be filled some three, five or even seven years after it occurs. The question is entirely one of what is a reasonable time. It cannot possibly mean an indefinite time in the indefinite future.

I could read further along the same line, but perhaps that is sufficient.

The Leader of the Government—who I hope will take my remarks in good part, as I took his—said in his speech last evening that he would like to see the vacancies filled. Of course he would, and so would all the other senators who have spoken. All the speakers and especially those who are lawyers have said that under the present law it is legally a neglect of duty—I do not think I am putting it too strongly—not to fill these vacancies within a reasonable time. Thus we have this situation: undoubtedly, Parliament has power to enact this proposed amendment; and eminent lawyers express the opinion that the present law is not being observed, in that appointments are not being made within a reasonable time. The senator from Inkerman made the interesting observation that while the law is there, it is not enforceable. Presumably that is on the basis that since appointments are made by Her Majesty's representative, the Governor General, the well-known principle that "the King can do no wrong" applies and the law cannot be enforced. Not being a lawyer, I am perhaps treading on dangerous ground when entering this field. But it is not so long ago that anyone who had a grievance against the Crown or one of its representatives could not bring an action for redress in the courts unless the government consented and a fiat was obtained. That practice has been abandoned, and quite rightly so. Today any aggrieved citizen who believes he has a claim against the Crown can sue in the courts without first obtaining consent. I fail to see any distinction between that principle and the one which would be involved upon enactment of this bill. If this bill became law and the Governor General were thereby instructed to fill vacancies in the Senate within a period of six months, why could that law not be enforced and the vacancies filled? After all, it is only a polite fiction to say that the Queen fills the vacancies. Everyone knows that no appointments are made except upon the advice of the head of the country, the Prime Minister. Why one cannot apply the very same rule in this case as is now applied when a citizen has a grievance against the Crown, I fail to understand, and I wish there were some opportunity for some of my legal friends to go into that question just a little more fully.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: May I ask the honourable senator a question? In the light of what he has said I think section 20 of the British North America Act has a good deal of relevance, and I would like to ask him if he has read that section.

The point I tried to make on Wednesday last was that the bill which he has introduced could not be legally enforced, because you cannot make the Crown do anything, but I went on to point out, as clearly as I could, that if a provision of that kind were in the British North America Act it might have considerable moral and practical effect. Section 20 of the act reads as follows:

> There shall be a Session of the Parliament of Canada once at least in every Year, so that Twelve Months shall not intervene between the last Sitting of the Parliament in one Session and its first Sitting in the next Session.

Now, legally, that provision is completely unenforceable. It makes no provision for penalty, and the Governor General cannot be forced to convene Parliament within a year after the previous Parliament has adjourned; but from a moral and practical point of view the effect that that provision has in the constitution is so strong that, I think I am right in saying, no Prime Minister and no Government has ever tried to contravene it since Confederation.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I thank my friend for his interjection. In fact, we are in entire agreement. I am not questioning his legal opinion —as I say, I am not a lawyer. I merely state I do not see why there should be a distinction between the one case and the other. So far as he states his opinion—and he did it the other day very, very well—I entirely agree with him that even if there is no possibility of enforcing the proposed amendment if it becomes law, the moral force of these words "within six months" in black and white in the British North America Act would have far greater effect than a resolution passed by this house. Knowing the Prime Minister of Canada, for whom I have the highest regard, I am sure that if this time limit were inserted in section 32 or section 24, I do not care which, he would not dare to flout such a provision in the act. And no future Prime Minister would dare do such a thing. The moral force of the section would be too great to permit that, even though in law, as I agree, the section would not be enforceable.

So we have the strange and I say the sorry spectacle of senators admitting that the practice that has been followed for 25 years or more is wrong. They admit that the law is being flouted—that word was used by the senator from Ottawa West (Mr. Connolly). I read his speech at noon today, and noted that he actually advances the idea, which I think is vicious, that because the law cannot be enforced it can properly and morally be neglected, disobeyed and dishonoured. With that I do not agree, nor does the senator from Inkerman. The latter takes the moral view that morally there is an obligation to carry out the law, even though it is legally unenforceable, and for that reason he is voting for this bill.

The suggestion was made or at least implied by the senator from Kootenay East (Hon. Mr. King) that I might withdraw this bill; and before my friend does any speculating as to whether I am going to do that may I say to him, as a young man to an older one, that I cannot accept his fatherly advice.

May I repeat that the senator from Ottawa West agrees entirely with the argument of the senator from Inkerman as to—

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Will the honourable senator allow me to modify that statement?

Hon. Mr. Euler: I had not finished my sentence. I was about to say that you agree with the senator from Inkerman as to the legality. You agree with the idea that the practice of accumulating vacancies is wrong, but you part company with the senator from Inkerman on the basis that because the law is not enforceable, one is justified in ignoring it.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Oh no, that is not what I said last night.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I am quite willing to yield so that you can let us know just where you do stand. As I understand your speech, you abandon the moral view, as do some others, and I think I may include the Leader of the Government.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not think that you can read that into my speech.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I will take your word for it. I do not believe for one moment that the Prime Minister of Canada would support such a concept of political morality. I believe that if a definite time limit were placed in the act in black and white no Prime Minister would or dare to ignore it. That is why I have not presented this matter in the form of a resolution.

The senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) said twice in his very eloquent speech that if I had consulted him he would have suggested that I bring this forward in the form of a resolution. Well, I had acquainted the honourable gentleman with the fact that I was going to present this measure as a bill, and at that time he made no suggestion whatsoever that I should present it in the form of a resolution.

Resolutions, they say, are made to be broken, and the road to a certain place is paved with good intentions. While the present Prime Minister might be influenced by such a resolution, I am afraid that in time it would be consigned to the political ash can and we would then be exactly where we are today.

The senator from Vancouver South, after condemning the practice which this bill seeks to correct, feels that the Prime Minister must have some good reasons for not making these appointments. He thinks that in this changing world—I have not his exact words before me —the Prime Minister may feel that persons appointed should be truly representative of all the people of Canada at the present time. Perhaps that is so, and I could wish that it were so, but I have been in politics long enough to believe that that is not the compelling reason why these vacancies have been allowed to accumulate. The chief reason is the same as the one that caused accumulations of vacancies for 25 years past, and it cannot be denied that that reason was political in its nature. I believe most of the pressure comes from members of the other house who would like to be promoted to this chamber, although some of them, in their public utterances, declare they would like it to be abolished. That this pressure is political, and comes from the source I have mentioned, was confirmed by my friend the Leader of the Government in his eloquent speech yesterday. I hope he will not take offence if I criticize his remarks severely. I do not want to misquote him, but the effect of what he said is that he thought Senate vacancies should be left unfilled for extended periods to provide places for appointees from the Commons; and that it is embarrassing to the Prime Minister to make these appointments, because they involve by-elections, which are undesirable. I do not agree that they are undesirable. A by-election is a very good gauge of public opinion, and it is an excellent thing that once in a while during its tenure of office a government shall have the opportunity of learning what the public thinks of its actions and policies.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: But not necessarily within six months after a vacancy.

Hon. Mr. Euler: If the Government believe that vacancies in the other place should be filled within a few months, why in the world should not the same principle apply to vacancies in the Senate?

I do not want to burden my friend the Government Leader with too many criticisms, but I am obliged to reply to the speech he made last night. From his point of view it was a very good speech, and it was delivered with a vehemence of which I am not at all capable.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. Euler: And for that, I do not criticize him.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not agree with the statement of the honourable senator.

Hon. Mr. Euler: He said that vacancies are held open for the benefit of members of the Commons.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not believe I ever made that statement.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Then what did the honourable Leader say?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: If my honourable friend got that impression, it was not my intention to convey it.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I shall leave it to the judgment of the house whether or not the thought was advanced that the Prime Minister left some of these vacancies unfilled so that he could appoint men who have given good service—perhaps, good political service, and that their elevation to this house involved or might involve by-elections.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not think I said that the Prime Minister left vacancies unfilled for any reason. I merely gave my opinion as to why appointments were deferred.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I do not wish to misrepresent my friend.

Hon. Mr. Fournier: The honourable senator, in his version of the remarks of someone else, is referring to a speech which has already been printed. I think he should quote the statement from the official record.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I will accept any denial which the leader desires to make. I have not had time, since he made his rather lengthy speech, to read it in Hansard, but I shall do so. It is decidedly my impression that I have correctly quoted him, but if he states that he said nothing approaching it, I shall accept his denial.

Appointments to the Senate, if promptly made, would enforce the holding of by-elections. Perhaps this proceeding would be undesirable from the Government's point of view, but is not that the logical course if the desire is that members of the House of Commons shall be raised to this chamber? I believe that persons who have had experience in the other chamber, or in any legislative body, can be of great use in the Senate. But if it is desired to translate members of the House of Commons into the Senate, and without recourse to by-elections, would it not be the logical thing to appoint them at the time a general election is called?

Hon. Mr. Turgeon: There might not be any vacancies here then.

Hon. Mr. Euler: But my friend changes ground. He made an appeal to the Opposition when he said that the Prime Minister was particularly generous—and I am not quarrelling with that statement—when he went into a general election with vacancies unfilled, because the thought in his mind was that if his Government were defeated and a Conservative administration took its place, the ranks of the present Opposition here would be increased. But that does not accord with his previous argument: you cannot have the two things at once.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not want to be represented as having said that I presume to report what the Prime Minister had in mind. I was not quoting him, I was merely saying what the result could have been.

Hon. Mr. Euler: It may have been with a more or less humorous intention that my friend held out to the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig) the hope that, if his party believed that some of these vacancies would be filled by a Government of their political persuasion, they would have good reason to vote against the bill.

Hon. Mr. Haig: We did not fall for that idea, though.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I did not think for one moment that you would.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I think it was a very sound idea.

Hon. Mr. Euler: If vacancies are left open in order that members of the House of Commons can be appointed, and they are not appointed before the election, that represents a change of policy. If the Liberal Government is returned to office, and the proposed appointees are members of the House of Commons, they cannot be transferred here, because that would necessitate the by-elections which, from the Government point of view, are so undesirable. So we go through the dizzy round once again, and I admit that I am confused.

The real remedy, in my opinion, is to fill vacancies within a reasonable time after their occurrence. Besides, if the Government wants to strengthen the ranks of the Opposition here—a move to which I would not object—even though this bill is carried it will still have the power to appoint anyone it pleases, whether he be a Liberal, Conservative, Social Crediter, Socialist or anybody else; because, as was pointed out by the senator from Inkerman this bill is not retroactive; there are now 22 vacancies; and the Prime Minister can appoint anyone he pleases and take all the time he likes to do so. But I would suppose that if the present bill goes on the statute books, and a six-month limit is set for future appointments, he would regard it as pretty much of a mandate not to delay too long the filling of the present vacancies. The six-month provision applies only to future vacancies.

Some concern has been expressed as to what effect this bill would have upon the public. I must say that I cannot understand a certain remark made in this chamber last night by the Leader of the Government. There must be an error in the report, which I will read to my honourable friend:

> I hope before I am through that honourable senators will agree with me that if all the vacancies had been filled our dignity not only would have suffered but would have been completely shattered.

He is reported to have made that remark after saying he was in favour of having the vacancies filled. I think my honourable friend must have been misreported because the two things do not go together. It does not make sense.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I think it makes complete sense along with the rest of my speech.

Hon. Mr. Euler: The Leader said he was in favour of the vacancies being filled.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Not necessarily all at once or within a six-month period.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I am not saying that, but my friend said he was in favour of the vacancies being filled within a reasonable time, and when he said if they had been filled our dignity not only would have suffered but would have been completely shattered. I admit I do not understand that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It would be completely understandable if my speech were read in full.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Perhaps I am a little dull of comprehension.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. Euler: With regard to the effect upon the public, I share the conviction expressed by the senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden), who is not here today, that if the bill is defeated there will be a feeling of dismay among the people of Canada that the Senate is indifferent to its own efficiency and integrity. I believe that. I am certain it would heighten the general feeling of lack of respect for the Senate—and it is not too high now—and if this sort of thing is continued indefinitely there will be a great strengthening of the movement, which at present does not exist to any real degree, for abolition of the Senate itself.

The Leader of the Government says there is no lack of efficiency as a result of there being only 80 members instead of the 102 that the constitution calls for. He says that the committees are working well. The senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Campbell) made a strong argument that there were insufficient numbers to man all the committees. There is certainly truth in that.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: That honourable senator is seldom here.

Hon. Mr. Euler: You had better take that up with the senator from Toronto. Some members serve on five, six and even seven committees, and the meetings of these committees frequently conflict. Only this morning our most important committee, the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, could not start functioning for about twenty minutes because of lack of a quorum.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: How many constitute a quorum?

Hon. Mr. Euler: My friend knows that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: There are 80 senators here, so I do not know why that committee could not get a quorum.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Well, it didn't.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I would point out that this morning the Banking and Commerce Committee was dealing with a private bill while the Committee on the Narcotic Drug Traffic was hearing an important witness from Lexington, Kentucky.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Eighty members might do a pretty good job, but does anyone believe that the addition of twenty-two capable persons would not improve the quality and efficiency of this body? I say that with all due respect to those of us who are here.

Hon. Mr. Golding: I wonder if my honourable friend realizes that some members are named to only one or two committees.

Hon. Mr. Bradette: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Who is to blame for that? I would say that the Committee of Selection should be asked to change its ways.

Hon. Mr. Golding: It is only—

The Hon. the Speaker: I would point out to honourable senators that they cannot interrupt the speaker to ask a question without first getting his permission to do so.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I shall leave that point. I come now to what I believe is the real reason for the opposition to this bill. It is the feeling that the bill is embarrassing to the Prime Minister.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Howard: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I want to make it perfectly clear that I never intended to leave that impression.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I say that is the real reason for the opposition to the bill. My friend from Wellington (Hon. Mr. Howard) has just admitted it.

Hon. Mr. Howard: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Euler: The other day I heard an observation, which I am sure was meant for my ears, that the bill is intended merely to take a "crack" at the Prime Minister. That is a vulgar statement, and I desire to contradict it with all the emphasis at my command. I have every regard for the Prime Minister and every sympathy for the troubles that bedevil him at this and all times.

I have already said, and I want to emphasize it, that this bill, instead of embarrassing him, would ultimately, after the present vacancies are filled, make embarrassments impossible, because there could never be any more great accumulations of vacancies.

I admit, of course, that the purpose which the Leader advocates, of holding Senate appointments open for deserving members from the Commons, would not be served, but perhaps that would not be an unmixed evil and would surely be a relief to the Prime Minister himself.

Some reference has been made to the fact that parts of the country are now unrepresented in the Senate. There are nine vacancies in the Maritimes representation, and those provinces certainly would not have come into Confederation if they had not been assured of the representation which the constitution assures them. Quebec has seven vacancies, nearly 30 per cent of the number to which it is entitled.

Some solemn observations have been made as to the "sacredness" of the constitution, and it has been suggested that unholy hands should not be laid upon it. Well, perhaps I am not greatly impressed by things that are gone before, for I do not feel that a thing should be regarded as sacred just because it is eighty years old. My reply would be that as the Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath, so the constitution was made for the benefit of the Canadian people and it should be amended if changing circumstances or certain conditions demand it.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Euler: The Leader of the Government, in closing, summed up his opposition as follows. First, the bill has no legal enforceable effect.

Supposing I admit that, he thus ignores entirely the moral effect, which is often of greater significance amongst honest people than the letter of the law.

Secondly, he quoted the senator from Vancouver South (Hon. Mr. Farris) as still having some doubt about the constitutional aspect. Parenthetically, I might say that I am not quite sure that the senator from Vancouver South presented that doubt with any great forcefulness. But, in any event, against that we have the opinions of such lawyers as the senators from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen), Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly), Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden), and Toronto (Hon. Mr. Campbell); and it was not denied by the Leader himself (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) who also is a lawyer.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Not the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden), or at least I did not gather that.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I have enough authority, anyway. I do not like to overlook anyone, and I hope I have not done so. I cannot, of course, include my friend from Calgary (Hon. Mr. Ross).

Then there was the Leader's statement that there is no impairment of efficiency because of the vacancies, but I have dealt with that already.

Fourthly—and I think this has very little strength—he suggested that the proposed amendment is to the wrong section of the B.N.A. Act: that it should be to section 32 instead of to section 24. Well, I do not care which section is amended; the effect would be exactly the same; and I am assured by the gentlemen who drew up the bill for me that the amendment is made in the proper form.

Finally, apart from all arguments, legal and otherwise, the Senate is faced with this undeniable fact: Section 32 of the constitution is being violated; the law is now being broken, and has been broken for years. Yet some members take the remarkable position that that is apparently quite ethical because the law cannot be enforced, because of the polite fiction that the King can do no wrong. Well, they must vote either to condone what is contrary to the B.N.A. Act, or else to vindicate the responsibility, the integrity and the good repute of the Senate throughout Canada. And who has in fact any greater responsibility than members of this body to preserve its responsibility, integrity and good repute in the minds of the people of this country?

I believe that if honourable senators will face the real issue without prejudice, if they will face the moral issue fairly and squarely, they will in duty support this bill.

In conclusion, may I say that I have been in public life for a long time, and I am not easily shocked; but without in any sense adopting what might be called a "holier than thou" attitude. I just cannot help being genuinely shocked that some members of this house put themselves before the people of Canada in supporting the principle, or lack of principle, that something which is morally wrong is justified by the fact that no one can be punished for doing it, because of some peculiar quirk in the interpretation of the law. Each member of the Senate is the keeper of his own conscience, and mine is genuinely shocked by the thought that this honourable chamber is setting so bad an example to the people of this country.

The motion of Hon. Mr. Euler was negatived on the following division:

CONTENTS

Honourable Senators

Baird	Hodges
Crerar	Horner
Euler	Howden
Fallis	Hugessen
Gershaw	Lambert
Haig	Roebuck—12.

NON-CONTENTS

Honourable Senators

Barbour	Hawkins
Basha	Howard
Beaubien	King
Bishop	Leger
Bouffard	Macdonald
Bradette	Marcotte
Burchill	McDonald
Comeau	Paterson
Connolly	Pirie
Daigle	Reid
Dessureault	Ross
Duffus	Stambaugh
Dupuis	Taylor
Farquhar	Tremblay
Fergusson	Turgeon
Fournier	Vaillancourt
Godbout	Veniot
Golding	Vien—37.
Gouin

Hon. Mr. Quinn: Honourable senators, I was paired with the honourable senator from Mount Stewart (Hon. Mr. McIntyre). Had I voted, I would have voted for the bill.

PRIVATE BILL

DOMINION GENERAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY—FIRST READING

Hon. William H. Taylor, for Hon. Mr. Hayden, presented Bill W-14, an Act to incorporate Dominion General Life Insurance Company.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Taylor: Tuesday next.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, May 26, 1955

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received a communication from the Secretary to the Governor General, acquainting him that the Honourable Patrick Kerwin, Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, would proceed to the Senate Chamber this day at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the Royal Assent to certain bills.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I move that when this house adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday, May 31, at eight o'clock in the evening.

The motion was agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL

WESTCOAST TRANSMISSION COMPANY LIMITED—THIRD READING

Hon. John A. McDonald, for Hon. Mr. Farris, moved the third reading of Bill B-14, an Act respecting Westcoast Transmission Company Limited.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

CANADIAN FORCES BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the second reading of Bill 257, an Act respecting the Canadian Forces.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill follows the pattern set in the last four years when single acts were passed to amend various statutes affecting the defence forces of Canada. This is in the nature of a statute law amending bill, and in other years sometimes four and five statutes affecting the forces were amended by an act of this character. This year two acts only are being amended: the first thirteen clauses of the bill amend the National Defence Act, and the remaining twelve clauses amend the Defence Services Pension Act.

Last year I had the privilege of explaining Bill 80, an Act respecting the Canadian Forces, and at that time some objection was taken to the practice of amending several acts by one bill. However, in justification of the continuation of this practice it should be said that it is easier for people interested in legislation affecting the forces to go to these annual law amending statutes to find the various changes that occur from year to year. Also, I am informed by officials of the Judge Advocate General's Branch that these statutes are not of much wider significance or interest than for people in the services, so perhaps there is some justification of the practice, although I say that by way of explaining it rather than of justifying it.

I think it might be most helpful if I explained this bill section by section, because all the sections are disconnected one from another, unlike a new piece of legislation in which one principle is embodied.

Section 2 provides authority for a man to be reinstated in one of the branches of the armed services without any break in his service, if after there has been a break in his service as a result of a decision by a service or a civilian court that decision of the lower court is reversed by a higher court. What is now proposed is that if a man is dismissed as a result of a decision of a lower court, the fact that he is dismissed means that his service is broken. If later another court reversed that decision, there is no authority whatever to enable him to pick up the service, to dispense with the break in the service. In other words, he may now pick up his service where he should have picked it up after dismissal which resulted from the decision of the court that apparently was not warranted. It seems to be a fair amendment to make, and I think it would be accepted, generally.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: May I ask my honourable friend a question? The bill states that reinstatement may be made as the result of a decision by an appellate court "or other competent authority". What is the other competent authority?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: I wonder if my honourable friend would ask that question in committee, if the bill is referred to a committee. Frankly, I cannot answer his question. I would think that normally the court martial appeal board would be a competent authority, but it is in the nature of an appellate court. Certainly, if the original trial took place in the civil courts, only an appellate court of higher jurisdiction could pronounce the decision of the lower court to be wrong.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Is there not an appeal from the service court to the Supreme Court of Canada in some cases?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Yes, there is an appeal in a great many cases to the Supreme Court of Canada. However, I am afraid that still does not supply the answer to the question of my honourable friend from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar), because in such cases the Supreme Court of Canada would be an appellate court. My honourable friend from Churchill is concerned as to who other than an appellate court could reverse the decision of a lower court. I am afraid I cannot answer that question, but I think officials of the Judge Advocate General's Branch could do so.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: Is there anything in the army regulations which permits a soldier to be suspended instead of being dismissed pending the outcome of an appeal of a judgment against him by a lower court? What happens if his appeal is successful?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: I suppose that would be a matter of service discipline. However, I think the problem my honourable friend has in mind is cured by the provision that if a soldier is dismissed from service because of an erroneous decision of a lower court, which is later reversed on appeal to a higher court, he is absolved from the effect of the original judgment. Heretofore it has been provided that upon conviction if he was dismissed from the service he could not be re-established and have his service dated back to the time of his dismissal, even if the decision causing his dismissal was reversed by a higher court. By this amendment, the man would receive fair treatment if the adverse decision of a lower court is in due time corrected by a higher court.

Hon. Mr. Reid: The new subsection 4 in section 2 of the bill contains these words ". . . transferred from one component to another . . ." May I ask whether "component" is the proper word as used by the military authorities in the case of transfer from one branch to another?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: It means, I think, transferred from one establishment to another. The word "component" is frequently used in the National Defence Act and is given a specific meaning in the definition section.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Would not the term "competent authority" sometimes mean a commanding officer? The decision of a court martial is, I think, frequently reviewed by the higher officers of a unit. In those circumstances "competent authority" might not mean a court at all, but simply a higher officer.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: That may well be the answer to the question asked by my honourable friend from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar), and I thank the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) for mentioning it. The reason I hesitated to give an answer of that character is that, quite frankly, I am a little shocked that a decision of a court should be overruled by any body but another court. However, I think the officials of the Judge Advocate General's Branch will have a full explanation to offer on that point.

Section 3 of the bill deals with the case of a man who is officially discharged and legally out of the service, and is later arrested for an offence which he committed within the service. He of course would be subject to the military law in so far as the definition of the offence is concerned, but while he is under arrest, as provided by this section, he becomes subject to service discipline from the time of his arrest until the case is disposed of. That appears to me to be a fair provision, because the man would be in service custody at that time.

Section 4 has this explanation: At the present time the period within which a charge may be laid before a service tribunal is three years. There are times when charges cannot be laid because of the fact that the accused is a prisoner of war, is in desertion, or is serving a sentence other than in a service place of detention. This section provides that any of those periods of time are not to count against the period of three years. Obviously the section will not apply to the situation where a man is in a place of service detention, because there is no reason in the world why the service could not take him out of service detention and try him before a service tribunal. But in all these other cases he is pretty well beyond the reach of service authorities, so he cannot be charged.

Section 5 is designed to make the definition of "insanity" in section 126 of the National Defence Act accord with the definition in section 16 of the Criminal Code. There is a word that is wrong in the Defence Act section. It should be corrected, and that is the purpose of that amendment.

The Hon. the Speaker: May I appeal to honourable senators to refrain from carrying on audible conversation while an honourable member is speaking?

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is not only exceedingly poor parliamentary practice but it is a distinct lack of courtesy to the honourable senator who is speaking and to those who are interested in hearing what he is saying. I am sure honourable senators will co-operate in this matter.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Honourable senators, section 6 is a little more complicated, perhaps, than the ones I have been dealing with so far. At the present time under the National Defence Act a man can be held in detention for 28 days, and before the 28-day period elapses he can be brought out of detention and then put back into detention again for another 28 days, and he cannot complain. This situation is now to be corrected. Under the amendment he will be able to petition the Minister after he has been in detention for 28 days, and the minister is required to show cause as to why he should be continued in detention. The minister can keep him in detention if he so desires for a period up to 90 days and even longer, but he must give reasons for so doing.

Section 7 is also a rather significant section. At the present time the Judge Advocate, who participates in the work of the court martial, is an adviser only to the court; he is not a member of the court, he is not a judge. Now it is proposed by this amendment that he become a judge of the court, and in fact master of the law; and his position at a court martial will be relatively the same as that of a judge who sits with a jury. I may say that according to the information supplied to me this provision of law is now in force in the United Kingdom and in the United States.

Here is something else which I think will interest honourable senators. It is proposed that hereafter when a point of law pure and simple is to be raised at a court martial it will be heard by the Judge Advocate General's representative at that court, but apart from the other members of the court. In other words the other members of the court will be in the position of a jury: they will retire during consideration of the point of law by the Judge Advocate, and then will reassemble with him, much as is done in civil courts in a civil trial.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: How far does that go? I raise that point because there are many mixed questions of law and fact. If it is a question of law and fact does the Judge Advocate become the sole judge and do the other members of the court stand aside?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: I would think that the rules applicable in similar cases in the civil courts should apply.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Does the bill say that?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: No, it does not say that.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Well,—

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Perhaps I might add this: the section is a very important one. I think it is a great improvement on the old system, but the machinery for carrying it out is something to which the committee might give serious consideration when the representatives of the Judge Advocate General's Branch come before it.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: May I ask the honourable senator a question? I did not quite catch what he said about referring this bill to committee, but I assume his purpose is, if the bill is given second reading, to move for reference to the appropriate committee? I am also wondering if my honourable friend is acquainted with the very thorough and long discussion that took place in committee at the time the National Defence Act was being revised and set forth anew. A great deal of attention, as I recall it, was then paid to the very points that my honourable friend is mentioning now. I do not think he was a member here at that time, but the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) was very active in dealing with these matters which would assure to everyone in the forces who came under this section the right not only to have the same procedure as in a civil court, but also the right to appeal to a civil tribunal as well.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: As a matter of fact, I think that some of the discussion which took place then resulted in the establishment of that very necessary addition to the service legal procedure, namely, the Court Martial Appeal Board, which has been a most useful, a most salutary, instrument to assure fairness and justice in dealing with service offences and offenders.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Does the section make the Judge Advocate the final decider of questions of law? It says this:

> Where a judge advocate has been appointed to officiate at a court martial, he may, in such circumstances and subject to such conditions and procedures as are prescribed in regulations made by the Governor in Council, determine questions of law arising before or after the commencement of the trial.

That would seem to make him the arbiter of all questions that he determines are questions of law. In the civil courts the judge determines whether a question is one of fact or law, and if he determines it is of law he then proceeds to decide it. Does this provision make the Judge Advocate a judge of all questions of law, setting aside all other members of the court?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Yes, I understand that is the proposal.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It is a serious proposal.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Yes, I think it is a serious proposal. There is of course this further point to take into account: that now, with the establishment of the Court Martial Appeal Board, where the Judge Advocate goes down the wrong path he becomes subject to correction by that board. Moreover, it is proposed to make regulations, and probably within the scope of those regulations certain restrictions will be laid down under which he will act. I would not attempt to anticipate what is in the mind of the honourable gentleman from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), but I would assume, because this is in my own mind: he may think it a questionable procedure to lay down such rules by way of regulations rather than by statute. I think perhaps that is something the committee might very well direct its attention to when this section is being discussed.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The rules they may possibly lay down are not before us now, and therefore we must proceed in disregard of them, assuming that there will be no regulations until we know that there are regulations.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Section 8 permits the Minister to make a finding which is warranted by the evidence given before a service tribunal, to correct what is considered to be an illegal finding. There is one restriction upon the power of the Minister in this case, and that is that under no circumstances, when he makes a finding warranted by the evidence, can he increase the sentence that was awarded by the court. For example, if a man were accused of theft, the ordinary elements of theft that are set out in the Criminal Code would apply, and if upon review the Minister found that one of the essential elements of theft was not present, he might properly come to the conclusion that the charge of theft was not proved. But if the accused was obviously in possession of service equipment or service property, the evidence might very well warrant a finding that he should be found guilty of a charge "to the prejudice of good order and service discipline", or perhaps, a charge of "being in possession" of such property. In a case like that, the Minister would be entitled to find him guilty of the alternate charge, but he could not increase any sentence imposed.

Section 9 permits the Minister to order a new trial in cases where proceedings are irregular. It also permits him to dispense with a new trial which may have been ordered by the Court Martial Appeal Board. There are times when a new trial has been ordered by the Court Martial Appeal Board arising out of offences committed abroad by troops where witnesses were foreign civilians or servicemen serving abroad, and perhaps not in the Canadian forces. Sometimes it is impossible to secure a witness again for a new trial, even though the Court Martial Appeal Board has ordered a new trial. This clause permits the Minister, in such cases, which are extreme cases, to dispense with the holding of the new trial, if such a decision is warranted.

Section 10 deals with suspended sentences. Long sentences, that is to say sentences of over thirty days imposed upon a serviceman, expire at the end of their term, if they are suspended. Shorter sentences, that is to say sentences of thirty days or less, may be kept in suspension in the services for a year. This povision is particularly applicable to the Navy, where a man might be convicted aboard a ship at sea of some service offence and awarded a punishment of, perhaps, ten days. Obviously at sea, especially in small ships, it is not always possible to have him serve that sentence. It is therefore suspended, and he might be required to serve it ashore if his commanding officer or the appropriate authority should decide that should be done. A short term suspended sentence can be held over a man's head for a year; the longer sentences expire at the end of their own period.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Is there no place aboard a ship to confine a man for ten or twenty days?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: There may be places in some of the larger ships where that can be done, but in some of the smaller ships—minesweepers, corvettes, and some of the smaller escorts—it would be very difficult indeed to find a place of detention.

Section 11 simply provides that the chairman of the Court Martial Appeal Board may delegate his powers and functions. As honourable senators know, Mr. Justice Cameron is chairman of the court; he is also one of the very busy judges of the Exchequer Court of Canada, and as this is a circuit court he is away a great deal. There are other members of the court who live in Ottawa. Chambers motions and applications of various kinds could properly be heard by members other than the chairman, and it is now proposed that such other members be permitted to substitute for him.

Section 12 is purely a procedural provision. It provides that when the Court Martial Appeal Board orders a new trial it must in its order set aside the finding of guilty which was made the first time.

Section 13 is, perhaps, an interesting clause: it deals with the exemption of members of the forces from execution of judgments of the civil courts. It is now proposed to limit this exemption to service equipment. In other words, the civilian goods of servicemen are now available to execution by their creditors. Under this section, also, servicemen can now be summoned as witnesses in civil cases before the civil courts. This provision is contained in comparable United Kingdom legislation.

Section 14 provides that a civilian who is abroad with the forces shall be subject to the civil courts for crimes committed by him when he is so abroad. This is a rather practical provision, because there are now, I am informed, some 3,700 dependents of servicemen who are with the forces outside of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Is action not taken abroad against servicemen for crimes committed by them abroad?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Yes, indeed, but this section applies to civilians who are abroad with the forces. It simply specifies that a civilian will be subject to trial by the civil courts, under civil law, for any crimes committed by him or her when abroad.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Does section 14 set aside the jurisdiction of the court abroad and transfer that jurisdiction to a territorial division within Canada?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: I understand that as far as possible the policy is that civilians abroad with the forces will come under the jurisdiction of courts in Canada rather than courts in a foreign country. This policy would not apply to minor offences such as traffic violations, and so on.

The Visiting Forces Act which is a part of the NATO set-up deals more fully with the subject that the honourable gentleman from Toronto-Trinity has mentioned. My understanding of section 14 is that when Canadian civilians abroad with our forces commit crimes it is preferable to have them dealt with by Canadian courts under Canadian law.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I point out that this is a remarkable provision and sets a precedent of great note. It has been the rule in Canada since Confederation to assume that our jurisdiction ends at the three-mile or seven-mile limit. It was not until the Statute of Westminster was passed that we thought our Parliament had any jurisdiction to legislate for offences committed abroad. For that reason there is a clause in the Criminal Code providing that in certain cases bigamy is leaving Canada for the purpose of committing bigamy abroad. It does not say that bigamy abroad is an offence in Canada. This is the first time I have seen legislation of this character wherein we are exercising the powers that came to us under the Statute of Westminster to legislate against an offence committed abroad; so I think it is a precedent.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: I thank the honourable gentleman for his observation. I think this section too will make an interesting subject for discussion in committee.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Very.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: May I ask the honourable senator a question? This section does not provide that civilian courts abroad shall not have jurisdiction over a civilian accompanying Canadian forces abroad, so such a person may be charged with an offence abroad or in Canada. In a case of that kind who will decide which court is to try the accused?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Certainly the offender could not be tried and punished by both courts. In view of the discussion we have had on this section I wonder if we might leave it for further consideration in committee? Would honourable senators agree to that procedure? I think the section has been well pointed up.

I come now to the proposed amendments to the Defence Services Pensions Act. Section 15 of the bill inserts a new section in the act, section 31A similar to section 12 (4) of the Public Service Superannuation Act which the Senate considered some weeks ago. It provides that a common law wife who has been living with a serviceman for seven years before his death becomes eligible, provided one of the parties is married, to receive his pension in the same way as a wife. If they are both unmarried the seven-year period does not apply and the length of time required to establish the status of the common law wife and her eligibility for pension is at the discretion of the Treasury Board.

The section also provides for the case of a widow who is living apart from her husband, who is a service man and a pensioner, under circumstances in the province where the domicile is which would disentitle her to alimony. Because she is living apart from her husband she is deemed in these circumstances to have predeceased her husband, thus allowing the children to acquire pension rights.

Hon. Mr. Reid: This is going quite a long way.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: There are precedents for this. Before the Easter recess the Senate dealt with a bill similar in principle to this one.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Your explanation would lead us to believe that this section applies to everyone in the military forces, but as I read the section it applies only to officers. Why does it apply to officers and not to the average rank and file? It puts the officer's widow or his common law wife in a class by herself.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: It is not my understanding that the section is so restricted.

Hon. Mr. Reid: That is the way it reads—"If, upon the death of an officer or former officer—".

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Here again I am unable to give a full explanation. I agree that this section does amend the provision with reference to officers, and perhaps I should have anticipated this difficulty. There may be another section applicable to other ranks. However, the questions that have been asked demonstrate the value of discussing the bill section by section. The honourable gentleman from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) has raised a most valid point.

Hon. Mr. Reid: What is meant by the words, "been maintained and publicly represented by that officer as his wife"? A service man could not very well announce that the woman he is living with is his common law wife.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: The circumstances would dictate what discretion would have to be exercised by the board which administers this section. There is of course no document which can establish the position of the common law wife. This must arise from the circumstances.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I think we are going a long way.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: That may very well be. Of course, the second part of the section is intended to be for the relief of children.

Section 16 provides that service pensioners who re-enroll in the service after June 30, 1950, can acquire the benefits of the Defence Services Pension Act. Of itself that does not mean too much, but formerly only service pensioners who re-enrolled after March 4, 1954, could acquire the benefits of this act. The purpose of the amendment is to entitle people who enlisted for the Korean service, and who later left the forces, to acquire the benefits of the act should they re-enroll in the service.

Section 17 is a simple section, which merely requires that a witnessed statement as to the continued existence of a person entitled to a pension be accepted as evidence of the person's continued existence, instead of requiring a statutory declaration. I am informed that both the Treasury Board and the service people who administer this section of the act feel that to require a statutory declaration in cases of this kind entails expense, and perhaps causes inconvenience to a great many people.

I come now to section 18. After a man has served for a certain length of time in one of the services he becomes eligible for a pension under the Defence Services Pension Act. From one year after the date of his eligibility, he is entitled to join the pension plan. It is now proposed that that period be extended indefinitely. In other words, he shall be eligible to join the pension plan at any time while he is in the service, subject to a medical examination and subject to his making the contribution for past service.

I think I should direct the attention of honourable senators to a difference between this section of the Defence Services Pension Act and section 24 of the Public Service Superannuation Act. Under section 24 of the Public Service Superannuation Act it is spelled out in detail what the contribution shall be, but under section 18 of the Defence Services Pension Act that is to be fixed by order in council. I think that might very well be a subject of inquiry if the bill goes to committee.

Section 19 provides that these pension rights shall apply only to the regular forces and not to the reserve forces.

Section 20 provides that regardless of the amount of the pension received by a pensioner or his dependents, the minimum recoverable will be the amount of his contribution. This, of course, is a benefit to the widow and to the children. The pensioner will be sure they or his estate will get back at least everything he paid in.

Section 21 deals with a situation where a man might become eligible for a pension, partly under the Public Service Superannuation Act, partly under the defence forces plan, or partly under the Royal Canadian Mounted Police pension plan. This section simply says that he can count one period of service under any plan but once.

Section 22 provides that where a contributor has served in the forces for a period of less than ten years and a gratuity only is payable to him, the gratuity can be paid after approval by the Treasury Board only, and without reference either to the Service Pension Board or to the Judge Advocate General.

The remaining sections 23, 24 and 25 make amendments to Part V of the Defence Services Pension Act, to bring it in line with Parts I to III, which provide for pensions granted under the pre-war pension plan. Part V provides for pensions under the new act, that is, the post-war pension plan. These three sections make the comparable provisions in the second plan agree with those in the first.

Honourable senators, I have burdened the Senate with this tedious explanation. It is very difficult to explain a bill of this character without dealing with it section by section. Had I done otherwise the explanation would have been completely unintelligible.

If the bill receives second reading I shall move that it be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I wish to compliment the honourable gentleman from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Connolly) upon his excellent explanation of this bill.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: At the same time, I would like to commend it to the grave and careful attention of honourable senators in committee, for I have no doubt it will be referred to a committee. The act is virtually the Criminal Code for the Canadian forces. The Canadian forces include the three armed services, the Navy, the Air Force and the Army. The act was discussed in this house two or three years ago with very great care, and a subcommittee was appointed, of which I was a member, and again it was studied very carefully. In fact, it was before us for all of one session, and we so tore it to pieces that it was decided to rewrite the whole act. A bill setting out the act in a very different form was introduced at the next session, and we carefully studied that bill also in committee and made quite a number of revisions.

Honourable senators, I suggest that if this bill goes to a committee it should also be referred to a sub-committee for study so that all its implications may be known before the committee reports back to this house. For instance, I observe amendments which give certain additional powers to some officials, who no doubt had a great deal to do with the drawing of these amendments. It is not unusual for departments to seek further powers for certain officials, is it? One should always look at such amendments, not exactly with suspicion, but with a good deal of care. I shall be satisfied if the bill receives second reading, but only on the understanding that it go to the Banking and Commerce Committee, as the honourable gentleman suggested, and that the committee give it very careful study.

50437—35½

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 3

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 413, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1956.

The bill was read the first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, this is the interim supply bill making provision for one-twelfth of the total sums to be spent during the current year, together with one-twelfth of certain additional sums. With the consent of the house I would move that the bill be read a second time now.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, when the Leader of the Government makes such a request to this house it is usual to give an assurance that immediate passage of the bill will not in any way affect the discussion which may take place on these items at a later date. I presume we have that assurance now.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am glad the honourable senator has reminded me that an undertaking is usually given. I have prepared an undertaking similar to that which I gave at the end of March when the first interim supply for the current fiscal year was being considered in this house: The usual undertaking is given that the passage of this bill will not in any way prejudice the rights and privileges of honourable senators to criticize and discuss any item in the estimates which might come up from time to time throughout the remainder of the session. Such rights and privileges will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of this measure having been passed.

I now give that undertaking.

Hon. Mr. Reid: The honourable Leader has told the house that this bill deals not with the whole estimates, but with only one-twelfth of them. I would point out to him that the total amount of the vote referred to in the schedule to the bill is $3,122,487.50, and it would appear that this amount goes almost entirely to one department, namely, Mines and Technical Surveys.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: My introductory remarks were perhaps not very clear. What I meant to say was that the bill votes one-twelfth of the whole estimates, with an additional one-twelfth of the estimates for two departments—Mines and Technical Surveys, and Veterans Affairs. As honourable senators know, the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys incurs large expenditures at this time of the year on survey parties and various special services. As to the Department of Veterans Affairs, honourable senators will recall that earlier this year Parliament amended the War Veterans' Allowance Act to provide for payment of increased allowances to veterans qualified for them. The increase in that respect which this house has already approved accounts for the additional one-twelfth now being asked for.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Do I understand that the net total of $3,122,487.50 given at the bottom of the schedule is included in the total figure of $37,469,850 shown in the second column? I must say these figures are always confusing to me.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The amounts which this bill would grant are $257,705,895.34 plus $3,122,487.50. I assure my honourable friend from New Westminster that as a fellow Scot I also find these large sums baffling.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourabe senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, as it is intended that the Royal Assent be given this afternoon to certain other bills, may I have the unanimous consent of the house to move that this bill be now read a third time?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Then I so move.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Honourable senators, before the bill is given third reading I should like to say that I hope the next supply bill, which will come to us near the end of June and will be the final supply bill this session—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I hope so.

Hon. Mr. Haig: —will reach us further in advance of the date on which we are expected to consider it than this one did. I was able to give my consent to three readings of this bill today because it was very kindly placed in my hands three or four days ago and I have had an opportunity to study it. All members of this house should have at least four or five days to study a supply bill before we are asked to consider it. I am sure I need only remind the Leader of the Government of our wishes in this respect, and he will do his utmost to have future supply bills reach us as early as possible.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I will do my best to present the next supply bill to the house as early as possible.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

PRIVATE BILL

CONSOLIDATED PIPE LINES COMPANY—SECOND READING

Hon. John J. Connolly (for Hon. Mr. Hayden) moved the second reading of Bill C-14, an Act to incorporate Consolidated Pipe Lines Company.

He said: Honourable senators, I have been asked by the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) to give a brief explanation of this bill.

The bill is drawn in the form of similar pipe lines bills. I have noticed that the other house usually amends section 5 to provide that the main trunk line shall be built entirely within Canada. That provision is not in this bill and perhaps that is a matter which should be considered in committee.

Apart from that the form of this bill is simply an enabling bill to permit these people to go before the Board of Transport Commissioners to get authority to build a specific project. That is all that is being asked. The applicants will be here before the committee to explain the specific purpose that they have in mind.

They are all Canadians; they are oil and gas people, and contractors, who, I am informed, have had considerable experience with pipe line construction and operation.

At the present time, within the province of Alberta, they operate an organization called Consolidated Gathering Systems. They have built pipe lines, I am informed, to small communities, between oil fields and gas fields, and they build feeder lines to main trunk lines.

I understand further that their project is by no means an attempt to interfere with or to be competitive with any of the main transcontinental gas or oil pipe lines. Apparently there is some requirement, for the proper operation of the company or of their work, shall I say, that in certain cases they cross the boundary line between Alberta and British Columbia on one side or between Alberta and Saskatchewan on the other. I am informed that for that reason they require this special authority of Parliament.

If the bill receives second reading—and being a private bill it is only given second reading for the purpose of sending it to committee—I will move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: Honourable senators, I would like to suggest that this is a proper bill to go before the Committee on Transport and Communications.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Connolly: In view of the suggestion made by the honourable senator from Bruce (Hon. Mr. Stambaugh), if it is agreeable to the house I would move that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

DIVORCE PETITIONS

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce Nos. 365 to 375, dealing with petitions for divorce.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the committee, moved that the reports be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to, on division.

DIVORCE BILLS

SECOND READINGS

Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved the second reading of the following bills:

Bill D-14, an Act for the relief of Marie Therese Jeannette Mainville Froment.

Bill E-14, an Act for the relief of Goldie Moscovitch Katz.

Bill F-14, an Act for the relief of Yvette Cayer Lefebvre.

Bill G-14, an Act for the relief of Regina Wiener Strelezky Distelman.

Bill H-14, an Act for the relief of Marie-Louise Ashby Tremblay.

Bill I-14, an Act for the relief of Lorna Greenberg Buium.

Bill J-14, an Act for the relief of Myrtle Ada Lewin Derbridge.

Bill K-14, an Act for the relief of Georges Etienne Barry.

Bill L-14, an Act for the relief of Joseph Delphis Guillaume Delorme.

Bill M-14, an Act for the relief of Eileen Baylis Roberts.

Bill N-14, an Act for the relief of Ernest Augustus Lepage.

Bill O-14, an Act for the relief of Rosaire Jacques Rene Tetrault.

Bill P-14, an Act for the relief of Phyllis Lucy Stiles Beal.

Bill Q-14, an Act for the relief of Margaret Durning Mullins.

Bill R-14, an Act for the relief of Mary Elizabeth Lorraine Callard Ramsay.

Bill S-14, an Act for the relief of Ann Mary Allward Spighi.

Bill T-14, an Act for the relief of Anne Rynski Vincent.

Bill U-14, an Act for the relief of Dora Helen Simmons Glancy.

Bill V-14, an Act for the relief of Joseph Louis Armand Carrier.

The motion was agreed to, and the bills were read the second time, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, as His Honour the Speaker indicated earlier, the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General will attend in this chamber at 5.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving the Royal Assent to certain bills. I therefore move that the house now adjourn during pleasure, to reassemble at the call of the bell at approximately 5.40.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate adjourned during pleasure.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable Patrick Kerwin, Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Northwest Territories Act.

An Act to amend the Yukon Act.

An Act to amend the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act.

An Act to amend the Precious Metals Marking Act.

An Act to incorporate Westspur Pipe Line Company.

An Act to amend the Historic Sites and Monuments Act.

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1956.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACTS AMENDMENT BILL

WITHDRAWAL OF STATEMENT

Hon. W. D. Euler: Honourable senators, in justice to the honourable senator from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly), I want to withdraw a statement that I made yesterday. In referring to his speech on the Bill to amend the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1952 I attributed to him the expression of the idea that, because the law could not be enforced properly, it could be disobeyed or disregarded. I find, upon reading his speech more carefully, that I cannot fairly place that interpretation upon it. I therefore beg leave to withdraw that statement.

Hon. J. J. Connolly: Honourable senators, may I say that I do appreciate what the honourable gentleman from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) has said and done. I do not think he should have gone to the length he has gone of bothering to do it in the House; but it is a most graceful gesture and I appreciate it very much. Perhaps the fault is mine, in that my language was not clear enough. The next time I will try to make it a little clearer.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, May 31, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, May 31, 1955

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

FIRE OF 1916—UNVEILING OF COMMEMORATIVE PLAQUE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators will recall that in 1916 the Main Block of the Parliament Buildings was destroyed by fire, and that for three years thereafter Parliament met in the Victoria Museum.

The Historic Parks and Sites section of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources have, on the recommendation of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada, prepared a bronze plaque commemorative of this fact, for erection inside the doorway of the Museum.

The unveiling of the plaque will take place in the entrance hall of the Museum on Thursday, June 2nd at 3.30 p.m. All honourable senators are invited to be present at this ceremony, which will include addresses by Professor Fred Landon, Chairman of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada, the Honourable Senator T. A. Crerar, P.C., and the Honourable C. G. Power, P.C., M.P.

PRIVATE BILLS

S & M PIPELINE LIMITED—COMMONS AMENDMENT

A message was received from the House of Commons returning Bill W-11, an Act to incorporate S & M Pipeline Limited, and acquainting the Senate that they have passed this bill with an amendment, to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The amendment was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

Page 3, line 23: Immediately after the word "lines", insert the following:

"provided that the main pipe line or main pipe lines for the transmission of gas and gaseous hydrocarbons shall be located entirely within Canada".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the amendment be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Haig: Honourable senators, I should like to raise a point. This is the second occasion on which the House of Commons has passed a private pipe line bill with the same amendment, and I have been told by a member of that house that they are going to amend every pipe line bill in this fashion. It seems to me that the Senate should have a conference with the Commons to ascertain whether they want all pipe lines to be located entirely in Canada. Personally, I think the bills as we have passed them are preferable. In any event, Parliament cannot give authority to build in the United States. If the House of Commons is going to insist on this procedure, we should decide how we are going to deal with these bills.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I would point out that this is a private bill. Some private companies may want to keep their lines entirely within Canada. I think it is a matter for each company that is being incorporated. I do not know who sponsored this bill, but I would suggest that we should leave it to him to state what this company desires.

Hon. Mr. Haig: All right.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the amendment be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I would suggest that when a private bill comes back from the House of Commons its sponsor in this house should be informed, so he could decide what procedure he would like to have adopted.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Who is the sponsor of the bill?

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: I am the sponsor. The matter will be taken up with the directors of the company tomorrow, and I would ask that consideration of the Commons amendment stand until then.

The Hon. the Speaker: Consideration tomorrow.

YUKON PIPELINES LIMITED—COMMONS AMENDMENT

A message was received from the House of Commons returning Bill X-12, an Act to incorporate Yukon Pipelines Limited, and acquainting the Senate that they have passed this bill with an amendment, to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The amendment was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

Page 2, line 31: Immediately after the word "lines", insert the following:

"provided that the main pipe line or main pipe lines for the transmission of gas and gaseous hydrocarbons shall be located entirely within Canada."

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the amendment be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Haig: Who is the sponsor of this bill?

An Hon. Senator: Senator Reid.

Hon. Mr. Haig: The sponsor of the bill is in Washington at present, so I suggest that the bill be put over until Thursday.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Consideration on Thursday, June 2.

MEAT INSPECTION BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 352, an Act respecting the inspection of meat and meat products entering into international and interprovincial trade.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: With leave, next sitting.

CANADA AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS STANDARDS BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 411, an Act to establish national standards for agricultural products and to regulate international and interprovincial trade in agricultural products.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: With leave, next sitting.

DIVORCE PETITIONS

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 376 to 403, dealing with petitions for divorce, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

The motion was agreed to, on division.

DIVORCE BILLS

FIRST READINGS

Hon. Mr. Roebuck presented the following bills:

Bill X-14, an Act for the relief of Marie Merilda Longval Roy.

Bill Y-14, an Act for the relief of Charles Edouard Thibodeau.

Bill Z-14, an Act for the relief of Rose Bowman Fox.

Bill A-15, an Act for the relief of Marguerite Gladys Letitia Mathers Grimsdale.

Bill B-15, an Act for the relief of Jennie Switzman Rashcovsky.

Bill C-15, an Act for the relief of Charles Ryerson Stewart.

Bill D-15, an Act for the relief of Hilda Emmalin Christensen Taylor.

Bill E-15, an Act for the relief of Glendon Joseph Lynes.

Bill F-15, an Act for the relief of Kenneth Rae Story.

Bill G-15, an Act for the relief of Joseph Marcel Plourde.

Bill H-15, an Act for the relief of Mayo Arthur Perrin Harrigan.

The bills were read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: With leave, next sitting.

THIRD READINGS

Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved the third reading of the following bills:

Bill D-14, an Act for the relief of Marie Therese Jeannette Mainville Froment.

Bill E-14, an Act for the relief of Goldie Moscovitch Katz.

Bill F-14, an Act for the relief of Yvette Cayer Lefebvre.

Bill G-14, an Act for the relief of Regina Wiener Strelezky Distelman.

Bill H-14, an Act for the relief of Marie-Louise Ashby Tremblay.

Bill I-14, an Act for the relief of Lorna Greenberg Buium.

Bill J-14, an Act for the relief of Myrtle Ada Lewin Derbridge.

Bill K-14, an Act for the relief of Georges Etienne Barry.

Bill L-14, an Act for the relief of Joseph Delphis Guillaume Delorme.

Bill M-14, an Act for the relief of Eileen Baylis Roberts.

Bill N-14, an Act for the relief of Ernest Augustus Lepage.

Bill O-14, an Act for the relief of Rosaire Jacques Rene Tetrault.

Bill P-14, an Act for the relief of Phyllis Lucy Stiles Beal.

Bill Q-14, an Act for the relief of Margaret Durning Mullins.

Bill R-14, an Act for the relief of Mary Elizabeth Lorraine Callard Ramsay.

Bill S-14, an Act for the relief of Ann Mary Allward Spighi.

Bill T-14, an Act for the relief of Anne Rynski Vincent.

Bill U-14, an Act for the relief of Dora Helen Simmons Glancy.

Bill V-14, an Act for the relief of Joseph Louis Armand Carrier.

The motion was agreed to, and the bills were read the third time, and passed, on division.

VETERANS BENEFIT BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald moved the second reading of Bill 278, an Act to amend the Veterans Benefit Act, 1954.

He said: Honourable senators, you will recall that when hostilities broke out in Korea those who joined the special force were promised that they would receive the same benefits as those who served in the armed forces during the second world war. There was a difference between those who enlisted and had not previously been in the forces from those who were in the forces at the time and volunteered to serve in Korea, although, generally speaking, I can say that the same benefits were promised to all those who volunteered to go to Korea.

The Veterans Benefit Act of 1951, which is Chapter 62 of the Statutes that year, is entitled "An Act respecting benefits for members of the Canadian Forces". The benefits to which the men and women of the special force were entitled under that act are set forth in a schedule to the act, which is in two parts. The first part includes the benefits under sections 28, 29 and 30 of the Civil Service Act, and under the Veterans' Land Act, the Veterans Insurance Act, the War Service Grants Act, 1944, the Department of Veterans Affairs Act, the Veterans Rehabilitation Act, the Veterans Business and Professional Loans Act, and the War Veterans Allowance Act, 1946. The second part of the schedule makes the members of the special force eligible for benefits under subsection (2) of section 2, section 5A and subsections (4) and (7) of section 7A of the Civil Service Superannuation Act, and under the Pension Act, Part IV of the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1940, and the Reinstatement in Civil Employment Act, 1946.

As honourable senators know, practically all Canadian sailors, soldiers and airmen have returned from Korea to Canada. I say practically all, because at the present time an ambulance unit is still in Korea. We hope that the war in Korea has come to its final conclusion.

The provisions of the bill before us apply to the Reinstatement in Civil Employment Act and the Unemployment Insurance Act. It will be recalled that during the days of the war parliament provided that those who enlisted in the special force would be entitled, upon their return, to the employment they had previous to enlistment if they applied for it within a certain time—I have forgotten the exact number of months—after their discharge from the armed forces. This provision, under an amendment to the Veterans Benefit Act, applied to all members of the armed forces who were in the service in 1954. It will be realized that, now hostilities are ended, those who are joining the forces at the present time do so for the purpose of making the service their career, and probably their life work, so there is no reason why, when they leave the forces, they should be entitled to regain the civil employment in which they were formerly engaged. The amendment set out in section 1 of the bill, whereby the provision to which I refer ceases to have application, will come into effect on July 1, 1955. There is no particular significance to that date: some date had to be fixed, and it was felt that July 1 would be satisfactory. Ample notice has been given that the provision will be effective as of that time.

The only other section of the bill relates to unemployment insurance. As a result of the Korean emergency, personnel serving in the armed forces were made eligible for ninety days' benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act. Honourable senators will realize that the provision was inserted because at that time men and women were leaving their regular employment and going into the armed forces for a particular purpose. That object having been effected, it is felt that the provision relating to unemployment insurance should be discontinued.

The bill so amends the Veterans Benefit Act, 1954 that the two clauses I have mentioned will no longer be in effect.

Honourable senators may ask why men and women who enlist on and after the 1st of July should not receive the benefits of the Unemployment Insurance Act. May I point out that this bill was carefully considered, not only in the House of Commons, but by a special committee of members of that house, before whom representations were made by various organizations. The representatives of the Canadian Legion suggested that the existing provisions relative to unemployment insurance should be retained. However, members of the committee did not think that this proposal should be adopted at the present time: there were suggestions that some members of the armed forces do not want to be subject to it; and the proposal was put forward that if they are to be eligible for benefits under the act they should make contributions in the same manner as persons in regular civilian employment. However, as members of the committee were uncertain whether this course would be acceptable to members of the forces, it was decided to obtain an expression of their views through inquiries by the Department of National Defence. I am informed that these proceedings are now under way.

I do not think there are any other features of this bill to which I need draw attention. I recommend it to the serious consideration of the house.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: As inquiries are being made, would it not be well to retain the present provision until the reports come in?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: These inquiries may take some time, and I do not think it would be fair, in inviting men to join the armed forces after July 1, to hold out as a possibility the benefits I have referred to; it would be better first to determine definitely whether it is the wish of the service men that this provision be continued. We propose to eliminate it, but if, upon inquiry, it appears that the armed forces personnel want it retained, there would be no difficulty about reintroducing it and making it retroactive.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: With leave, next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Oh, no. Representations concerning the bill were made in the Commons, and there are some questions in my mind with regard to it. I think the bill should go to committee.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I have no objection. I had assumed, as there was no suggestion to the contrary, that the bill could be read the third time at the next sitting.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

PRIVATE BILL

DOMINION GENERAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY—SECOND READING

Hon. Salter A. Hayden moved the second reading of Bill W-14, an Act to incorporate Dominion General Life Insurance Company.

He said: Honourable senators, the people who are promoting this bill incorporated through Parliament, in 1945, Dominion General Benefit Association, as a fraternal benefit society, and they carried on the business of life insurance and personal accident and sickness insurance. Having operated for some ten years, they are feeling the pains of growth, and are now applying to Parliament to be incorporated as a joint stock company, so that they may carry on the same lines of business in a larger way.

There is a special clause in the bill which provides that this joint stock company, when incorporated, will take over the assets, operations and liabilities of Dominion General Benefit Association.

The form of the bill, which is usual for bills of this kind, has been approved by the Superintendent of Insurance. The capital with which it is proposed to carry on insurance operations has also been approved by the Superintendent. I should add that there have been indications of objection to the name, Dominion General Life Insurance Company and I am authorized to state that in committee the sponsors will withdraw any part of this name which might in any sense be objectionable and propose a name entirely acceptable to the committee.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Has an alternative name been selected yet?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Not as yet, but one will be by the time the bill gets to committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Hayden, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 1, 1955

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

CUSTOMS BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 410, an Act to amend the Customs Act.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Tuesday next.

VETERANS BENEFIT BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the report of the committee on Bill 278.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (278) intituled: "An Act to amend the Veterans Benefit Act, 1954", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 31, 1955, examined the said bill, and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Haig: Tuesday next.

CANADIAN FORCES BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden presented the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill 257.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (257) intituled: "An Act respecting the Canadian Forces", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 26, 1955, examined the said bill, and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Honourable senators, I move that this report be considered on Tuesday next.

The motion was agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSOLIDATED PIPE LINES COMPANY—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the report of the committee on Bill C-14.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, to whom was referred the Bill (C-14) intituled: "An Act to incorporate Consolidated Pipe Lines Company", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 26, 1955, examined the said bill and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: With leave of the Senate, I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

BAUDETTE AND RAINY RIVER MUNICIPAL BRIDGE COMPANY—FIRST READING

Hon. Mr. Campbell, for Hon. Mr. Paterson, presented Bill I-15, an Act to incorporate Baudette and Rainy River Municipal Bridge Company.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Campbell: With leave of the Senate, next sitting.

TOURIST TRAFFIC

COMMITTEE EMPOWERED TO MAKE INQUIRY

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, I move:

That the Standing Committee on Tourist Traffic be empowered to inquire into and report upon the activities of the various agencies concerned with promoting tourist travel in Canada, and that the committee be authorized to send for persons and records.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I think we ought to have an explanation from the mover of the motion.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Honourable senators, the explanation is in the wording of the motion, I think. It simply authorizes the committee to meet and call necessary witnesses in order to make an inquiry into the tourist traffic in Canada.

The Hon. the Speaker: Has the honourable senator unanimous leave to move the motion now?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The motion was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES COMPENSATION BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson moved the second reading of Bill 188, an Act to amend the Government Employees Compensation Act.

She said: Honourable senators, this bill is an amendment to the Government Employees Compensation Act which was passed in 1918. It was introduced because of representations by employees of the former Canadian Government Railways which is now an integral part of the Canadian National Railways. After a number of amendments had been made a new act was passed, in 1947, which did not change any of the basic principles.

The act provides for compensation and medical aid to employees of the Government of Canada should they become incapacitated through occupational accidents or disease. The act, which of course applies only to persons employed by the Government of Canada, protects them if an accident or an illness suffered by any such person is due to or arises out of his or her duties as an employee. It applies to both temporary and permanent employees.

This legislation does for employees of the Government of Canada what provincial workmen's compensation legislation does for employees of private industry. You may be interested, honourable senators, to know that as of this date the act covers 205,000 persons, including slightly more than 20,000 employed by Crown corporations, boards and commissions and other similar Government agencies.

The sole principle underlying the whole act is to place employees of the Crown in a position comparable to that of employees of private industry in relation to compensation for injury or disease which arises out of their employment. All the provinces have such legislation as this, but as provision for payment of compensation to workers or to their dependents in case of injury or death in the course of their employment is a matter of civil right, under section 92 of the British North America Act, such legislation is within the jurisdiction of the provinces and therefore is not applicable to the Crown in right of Canada nor to employees of the Crown in right of Canada.

Under provisions of the act of 1947 the provincial workmen's compensation boards have, by arrangement, handled as agents for the federal Government the adjudication of claims of employees under the federal act, and it is intended that they shall continue to do so. The amendments contained in the present bill are proposed only because it is believed that the result will be better service to the employees and an improved administration of the act.

It seems to me, after studying the bill, that the amendments proposed fall under five main points:

First, that the compensation shall be at the rate effective in the province in which the injured person is normally employed. Under the present act the rate is that of the province in which the injury takes place or the occupational disease is contracted.

Second, the bill will include coverage of persons in government employ who are not paid by direct salaries or wages.

Third, employees of Canada assigned to foreign parts will be covered and will be paid according to the compensation rate in the province of Ontario.

Fourth, locally-engaged employees in Canadian offices abroad, as in our embassies, will be recognized, and provision will be made for payment to them in case of injury or disease.

Fifth, through the bill changes will be made in the subrogation provisions of the act, which I shall outline in more detail when I refer to particular sections.

Probably there are some other provisions which should be mentioned; and I think that chief amongst them is a provision that the minister may permit and encourage accident prevention measures and may encourage safety programs amongst the people who are employed in the Civil Service. Accident prevention, of course, has been promoted in the past, but it is hoped that, after the passage of this bill, a more cohesive effort will be exerted and that all departments will be more apt to co-operate.

It may be interesting to mention that last year—that is, in 1954-55—there were 15,690 claims, by and on behalf of employees of the Government of Canada, in respect of accidents. Of these, 30 were fatalities. Eleven employees lost their lives by drowning on outside work, such as surveys. The number of accidents in Canada has increased year by year; and the public has become conscious of the necessity of an aggressive campaign to cut down the often unnecessary loss of life and manpower, as was shown by the National Conference on Safety, held in Ottawa last week, which I attended when my other duties permitted. This provision which authorizes the minister to encourage a campaign against accidents seems to be in line with concurrent thinking.

I should like now to discuss some of the clauses in this bill. Clause 1 amends the act by changing some definitions. The new definitions of "compensation" and of "industrial disease" will bring these definitions more into conformity with the new subsection which provides that benefits shall be according to the Workmen's Compensation Act of the province where the workman is ordinarily employed and not necessarily where he sustained his injury. The new definition of "employee" includes persons not paid by direct salary or wage but who are otherwise employees of Her Majesty. There are not many such persons rendering service to Her Majesty without being paid a salary or wage, but some have been loaned to the Government of Canada by business and industry. The definition in this bill provides that where any members of the staff of a department, company, corporation, commissions, board or agency are declared by the Governor in Council to be subject to the act, the declaration shall be made on the recommendation of the Minister; that is, the Minister of Labour. It is expected that requiring the approval of the Minister in such cases will make for greater uniformity.

Under clause 2 of the bill, sections 3 to 6 of the act are repealed and new sections substituted. The proposed new section 3 states who are entitled to compensation, and provides that the rates of compensation payable to employees under the act shall be determined in accordance with the law of the province where the employee is ordinarily employed, rather than, as at present, under the law of the province where the accident occurs or where the industrial disease is contracted. This amendment is proposed so that persons required to do official travelling shall be protected at the compensation rates of the province where they are normally employed. For example, public officials travelling out of Ottawa to provinces other than Saskatchewan and British Columbia, would, if suffering an injury during such official travelling, not receive compensation at as high a rate as is current in Ontario.

The three provinces I have mentioned each have a rate of 75 per cent of salary up to $4,000 a year, which, of course, is broken down to amounts for the period of disablement. Some other provinces have a much lower rate, and therefore if a person from Ottawa were injured in a province in which the maximum rate of compensation is lower than it is in Ontario, he would certainly be greatly prejudiced under the act as it is at present. While it is likely that there would be not more than 100 claims a year of persons being injured in a province other than the one in which they are usually employed, the amendment is regarded as necessary for equitable treatment.

Honourable senators, this will bring the application of the legislation more closely in line with the provincial Workmen's Compensation Acts, which apply generally if a non-government employee's usual place of business is in the province and the accident takes place somewhere outside the province. The amendment is designed to put government employees on the same footing as non-government employees.

The new section 4 provides that where a person is usually employed in the Yukon or the Northwest Territories he shall, for the purposes of this act, be considered to be usually employed in the province of Alberta. This will mean that an injured workman "usually employed" in the Yukon or Northwest Territories will have his claim to compensation processed through the province of Alberta, no matter where the accident occurred. I believe the reason for this is that Alberta is the province with the most direct access to the northland, and the chain of travel to the northland is usually through Edmonton.

The new section 5 provides that employees assigned to work outside of Canada—such as employees of the Departments of External Affairs, Trade and Commerce, and Citizenship and Immigration—for the purpose of this act shall be deemed to be usually employed in Ontario. Most people who receive such appointments receive them in Ottawa and are sent out from this city. Therefore it is reasonable that there should be this provision removing any uncertainty as to their usual place of employment.

The new section 6 brings locally-engaged employees abroad under the act. In the countries where Canada has representation it is customary to employ local personnel—clerks, porters, and so on. In the past there has been an informal arrangement for looking after such persons if they are injured in the course of their employment. Now they will be legally covered.

Clause 3 of the bill repeals subsections (1) and (2) of section 8 of the act and adds new subsections (3a) and (3b). At the present time an employee who is injured by an outside party has a choice of either taking compensation under the act and surrendering any claim for damages to the Crown, or taking legal action himself for an amount which he feels would adequately compensate him for his injuries and loss of earnings. If he sues and collects less than he would have received for medical care and compensation under the act, the difference is payable to him. If he gets a judgment greater than the value of the act, he is that much ahead. In other words, he could not lose by suing, in so far as treatment and compensation are concerned; but if he decided to sue, the legal fees he incurred might cut down the larger amount of his judgment and he might not be any better off. On the other hand, if he decided to take the benefits provided under the act, the Crown was subrogated to his rights of redress against the third party; there would be an action in the name of Her Majesty, and if judgment was given for an amount greater than the cost of hospital and medical care and compensation, the excess would be paid into the consolidated revenue fund. The proposed change in this act will permit payment of any such excess judgment money to the employee, but of course that must be subject to the Government being relieved up to the amount of the excess for further treatment or compensation in connection with the same injury.

Clause 4 of the bill provides that the minister may make regulations.

Clause 5 provides for payment of supplementary expenses in cases where the death of an employee entitled to compensation occurs at a place other than the place where he is usually employed. An additional amount can be paid if heavy expense is incurred in such circumstances.

Honourable senators, I believe I have covered all the important points of this bill. If it receives second reading I shall propose that it be referred to the Committee on Immigration and Labour, as there may be points which honourable senators may wish to have clarified by officials of the Department of Labour.

In conclusion, may I say that the principle of the bill, which is to provide better service to the employees of Canada, and to improve administration of the act, is surely one that we can all approve.

I move second reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Honourable senators, I do not intend to discuss the bill at all, but in reply to a remark made by the honourable senator from Fredericton (Hon. Mrs. Fergusson) that Alberta is the province with the most direct access to the northland, I merely wish to say that we in Saskatchewan feel that with Prince Albert, and the highway to Waskesiu, Lac la Ronge and Ile a la Crosse, we have the natural facilities to deal with all territory lying north of the province of Saskatchewan.

Hon. Mr. McKeen: I might put in a word for British Columbia. We have the Alaska highway.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, may I be permitted to compliment the honourable senator from Fredericton (Hon. Mrs. Fergusson) upon the clarity with which she explained this bill? I think her clear and reasonable explanation of the bill deserves warm commendation.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. King: Honourable senators, I agree with the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) that this bill was very clearly explained, and I join him in complimenting the honourable senator from Fredericton. However, the rules of the Senate do not permit explanation of a bill clause by clause. I draw attention to that fact, because the contrary practice might become common. On the motion for the second reading of a bill the explanation should be confined to the principle of the bill and the bill should not be explained section by section. I think I am right, Mr. Speaker?

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I must say that during my membership in this house it has been a common practice to explain bills clause by clause on second reading, particularly a bill of this type. I think it would be very difficult to set forth in acceptable terms the general principle of a bill such as the one before the house. The honourable senator from Kootenay East (Hon. Mr. King) has had a long experience in parliament and I have great confidence in his opinion. I believe that what he has just said is correct. However, in dealing with a bill of this kind, which has as its object the welfare of those whom it is intended to serve, I think it would be very difficult indeed to explain the bill other than clause by clause. The honourable senator from Fredericton followed a practice which has become quite common in this house.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Honourable senators, I think the objection of the honourable senator from Kootenay East might have some application if the bill were a piece of original legislation, but the present bill seeks to amend an existing statute. When the motion for second reading of the original bill was moved, I am sure the sponsor was very careful to see that he explained only the principle of the bill. But I do not see how one could possibly explain a bill like the one before us without making some reference to the proposed amendments. I think the word "principle" must have different interpretations, depending on the nature of the bill discussed. I feel that the form of explanation given on this occasion was necessary, so that I for one might understand how the principle of compensation to government employees would be affected by certain changes.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Honourable senators, I agree with the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden). I listened very closely to the explanation by the honourable senator from Fredericton (Hon. Mrs. Fergusson), and it seemed to me that she did exactly what was needed to be done. First of all, she explained to us very clearly the points of principle covered by the bill, and then she indicated the particular sections which were designed to deal with those points. I do not see how else she could have proceeded.

Hon. Mr. King: I merely wished to call attention to the rules of the house, and at the outset of my remarks I congratulated the honourable lady who moved second reading.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Honourable senators, I think we all enjoyed the manner in which this bill was explained to us. In another place a bill such as this one would be discussed in committee of the whole, where it could be discussed clause by clause. In this house we seldom meet in committee of the whole, so that on second reading an explanation clause by clause is most helpful. It seems to me that the honourable senator from Fredericton was quite in order in explaining the amendments as she did, and I wish to compliment her on doing it so clearly.

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: Honourable senators, if I transgressed the rules of the Senate, I am very sorry, and I shall certainly be very careful in future.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mrs. Fergusson, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Immigration and Labour.

PRIVATE BILLS

S & M PIPELINE LIMITED—COMMONS AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the amendment made by the House of Commons to Bill W-11, an Act to incorporate S & M Pipeline Limited.

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: Honourable senators, I move that the amendment be now concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

YUKON PIPELINES LIMITED—COMMONS AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN

On the Order for Thursday, June 2:

Consideration of the amendment made by the House of Commons to the Bill (X-12) intituled: "An Act to incorporate Yukon Pipelines Limited".—Hon. Senator Haig for Hon. Senator Reid.

Hon. Mr. Golding: Honourable senators, this item which stands on the Order Paper for consideration tomorrow, is for concurrence in an amendment in exactly the same words as the one that the house has just agreed to in respect of the bill to incorporate S & M Pipeline Limited. I may say that I was in touch this morning with the sponsors of this bill to incorporate Yukon Pipelines Limited, and I was advised that the amendment is acceptable to them. In the circumstances, I would ask permission of the house to move that this amendment be now concurred in.

Hon. Mr. Haig: That is agreeable. In the absence of the senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) last evening, I asked that the order stand for consideration Thursday.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, has the honourable senator from Huron-Perth (Hon. Mr. Golding) unanimous consent of the house to move concurrence in this amendment now?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Golding: Honourable senators, I move that the amendment be concurred in now.

The motion was agreed to.

DIVORCE PETITIONS

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce, Nos. 376 to 403, dealing with petitions for divorce.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Committee, moved that the reports be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to, on division.

DIVORCE BILLS

SECOND READINGS

Hon. Mr. Roebuck moved the second reading of the following bills:

Bill X-14, an Act for the relief of Marie Merilda Longval Roy.

Bill Y-14, an Act for the relief of Charles Edouard Thibodeau.

Bill Z-14, an Act for the relief of Rose Bowman Fox.

Bill A-15, an Act for the relief of Marguerite Gladys Letitia Mathers Grimsdale.

Bill B-15, an Act for the relief of Jennie Switzman Rashcovsky.

Bill C-15, an Act for the relief of Charles Ryerson Stewart.

Bill D-15, an Act for the relief of Hilda Emmalin Christensen Taylor.

Bill E-15, an Act for the relief of Glendon Joseph Lynes.

Bill F-15, an Act for the relief of Kenneth Rae Story.

Bill G-15, an Act for the relief of Joseph Marcel Plourde.

Bill H-15, an Act for the relief of Mayo Arthur Perrin Harrigan.

The motion was agreed to, and the bills were read the second time, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Next sitting.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 2, 1955

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

SIXTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Norman McL. Paterson, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, presented the committee's sixth report.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Haig: Might I ask the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) if he would allow the report to stand until Wednesday of next week?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I have no objection.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: Honourable senators, I move that the report be taken into consideration Wednesday next.

The motion was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES COMPENSATION BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Cairine R. Wilson, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Immigration and Labour, presented the report of the committee on Bill 188.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Immigration and Labour, to whom was referred the Bill (188) intituled: "An Act to amend the Government Employees Compensation Act", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 1, 1955, examined the said bill and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mrs. Wilson: With leave of the Senate, I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I move that when this house adjourns today it stands adjourned until Tuesday, June 7, at eight o'clock in the evening.

The motion was agreed to.

DIVORCE BILLS

THIRD READINGS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the third reading of the following bills:

Bill X-14, an Act for the relief of Marie Merilda Longval Roy.

Bill Y-14, an Act for the relief of Charles Edouard Thibodeau.

Bill Z-14, an Act for the relief of Rose Bowman Fox.

Bill A-15, an Act for the relief of Marguerite Gladys Letitia Mathers Grimsdale.

Bill B-15, an Act for the relief of Jennie Switzman Rashcovsky.

Bill C-15, an Act for the relief of Charles Ryerson Stewart.

Bill D-15, an Act for the relief of Hilda Emmalin Christensen Taylor.

Bill E-15, an Act for the relief of Glendon Joseph Lynes.

Bill F-15 an Act for the relief of Kenneth Rae Story.

Bill G-15, an Act for the relief of Joseph Marcel Plourde.

Bill H-15, an Act for the relief of Mayo Arthur Perrin Harrigan.

The motion was agreed to, and the bills were read the third time, and passed, on division.

GREAT LAKES FISHERIES CONVENTION BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Norman McL. Paterson moved the second reading of Bill 279, an Act to implement a Convention on Great Lakes Fisheries between Canada and the United States.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill has to do with one of the most interesting matters that have come before the Senate in recent years. It treats of the damage done to the Great Lakes fisheries by a parasite called the lamprey. Originally the lamprey was an eel from the ocean. It is different from the eel now, as it has adapted itself to fresh water and does not have to go to the ocean to spawn. The eel is a fish with bones; the lamprey is a glutinous fish which lives in the Great Lakes and feeds on our fresh-water fish. It has bcome such a curse that it has completely depleted Lake Ontario, Lake Erie, Lake St. Clair, Luke Huron and Lake Michigan of the valuable lake trout fishing, and it is attacking the whitefish and cheaper grades of fish. To date, Lake Superior has not been affected to any great extent: so that this bill is for the purpose of, first of all, creating a situation which may protect Lake Superior and rehabilitate conditions in the other lakes. At one time the value of the lake trout fishing on Lake Erie alone was $5 million a year.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Are there no lake trout now?

Hon. Mr. Paterson: Practically none; there is hardly any commercial fishing on Lake Erie. For the past few years an attempt has been made to get the United States and Canada together on a comprehensive scheme for combating the lamprey. The project was objected to by the State of Ohio, which did not want interference by the federal authorities of the United States or Canada with its fishing; but now that Ohio has lost practically all its fishing resources it has asked the United States Government to take a hand; and through that government's Fish and Wild Life Service, eight American states bordering on the lakes have been harnessed together and have met with the Canadian federal authorities and the Province of Ontario. I should mention that all the Great Lakes, except Lake Michigan, are in the province of Ontario, and that province took care of the fishing on these lakes until the problem became too much for them, and they called upon the dominion Government to take a hand in the matter. In September of last year the two countries got together, Ambassador Heeney and Stewart Bates being the representatives of Canada, and Walter Bedell Smith and William Herrington representing the United States, at Washington, and arranged a convention, practically all the terms of which are embodied in Bill 279, which we are to discuss.

The commission which is to administer the convention is not authorized to spend money, but is purely a clearing house to co-ordinate the efforts of the eight states, the Fish and Wild Life Service, the federal Government of Canada, and the Ontario Government. The convention which is set out in the bill has been passed by the United States Senate and House of Representatives, as well as by the Canadian House of Commons, and now only awaits approval by this house. In the meantime the American fisheries authorities have not waited to act on this matter. A little later on I shall deal with what the Canadian Government is doing.

Honourable senators, I was going to tell you a little more about the lamprey. Trouble was first noticed in Lake Ontario about 1922, although as a result of the opening of the Welland Canal in 1919 there may have been lampreys up there before 1922. The lamprey has peculiar habits. He has a sucker mouth which he attaches on such fish as salmon and trout, and by this method he sucks out the cold blood of its victim. The lamprey is not interested in human or warm blood, but only in cold blood and fish juices. I have caught quite a few salmon with holes in their sides about the size of a walnut, indicating where lampreys had attached themselves. Sometimes the lamprey will stay on a fish as long as three weeks and it nearly always kills its victim. The salmon I have caught with holes in their sides had been able to wrench themselves free.

At this point I should like to call the attention of honourable senators to one of the most exciting and enthralling stories I have ever read. It appears in the May issue of Coronet magazine, and relates how a young Toronto girl, Marilyn Bell, swam across Lake Ontario from Youngstown, New York, to Toronto, Ontario. It describes how she had not been in the water very long when a lamprey attached itself to her stomach, but she was fortunate in being able to knock it off. There is no record of humans being hurt by lampreys, but this experience was a harrowing one for this young girl. I would advise anyone to read this story, for I have never read anything quite like it.

Honourable senators, whitefish still exist in the lakes I have mentioned, but trout fishing in Lake Erie, Lake Michigan, Lake St. Clair, and Lake Huron is almost extinct, and the only way it can be brought back is by stopping the breeding of this curse, the lamprey.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Does the lamprey attack the whitefish?

Hon. Mr. Paterson: It does now, but it goes after the best fish first. The lamprey has cleaned out the trout, so now it will start cleaning out the whitefish. If the lamprey tries to get over a dam it is able to attach its peculiar mouth to the straight wall of the dam and work its way back up. The Government has now devised a scheme of putting perforated steel tops on its dams so that the lamprey loses its suction at this point and falls back.

The idea is not so much to prevent the lamprey from coming out of the creeks and rivers where it breeds, as to prevent it from ever getting into these places. The lamprey is like the British Columbia salmon; it goes up creeks and rivers to spawn and die, and if it is not able to spawn it will die anyway.

Honourable senators, as you will learn in committee, this Convention is to remain in force for ten years. The reason is that the offspring of the lamprey stays in the mud of the creek or river, where it has been spawned, for five years, during which time it grows from an egg to about eight inches in length. In its fifth year it takes to the deep water and within one year it grows to a length of from eighteen inches to two feet.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Has the honourable senator ever seen a lamprey?

Hon. Mr. Paterson: Yes. As a matter of fact, I had one on my desk yesterday. It was in a glass jar. It is a most interesting specimen and Dr. Sprules, one of our leading scientists in this field, will display it to the committee members.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Is the lamprey edible?

Hon. Mr. Paterson: People in Canada and the United States have never got to the point where they want to eat this fish, but in foreign countries it is pickled and is regarded as a good food.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Did not some king of England die from a surfeit of lamprey?

Hon. Mr. Paterson: That may be so. There are two ways of killing lampreys. The first way is to prevent them from coming up the river to spawn—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That will only destroy the females.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: —by putting a dam in the river. The second way is to put electric wires across, if electricity is available, and the charged wires will prevent the lampreys from going up the river, but the difficulty is that the wires also prevent the good fish from going up and down.

The convention is made for a term of ten years because lampreys lie five years in mud, take one year to grow and one year to spawn, thus following a seven-year cycle of development. At the end of eight years the two countries hope to find how successful they have been in their efforts to control the lamprey.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Do lampreys spawn in the spring or the fall?

Hon. Mr. Paterson: In the spring, so I understand.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Well, lake trout spawn in the fall.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: Speckled and lake trout spawn in the fall.

On Lake Superior, very near my home town of Fort William, at Pigeon River, right clean around to Sault Ste. Marie, which is on the north side of Lake Superior, are 592 creeks and rivers, most of which are suitable for the spawning of lampreys. Lampreys will not go where there is particularly greasy mud or swampy water; they want sand and gravel to spawn in, and in which their young stay for five years. Quite a number of rivers are not suitable for lampreys, but a good many of them have already been dammed up and wired, through the efforts of the Ontario Government and the dominion Government; and what they do not know, and are very anxious to find out is, if the lamprey, when it is blocked from going up a river can get on the gravel beach and spawn and get away with it. That question has not been answered yet, and the governments are anxious to have sufficient time to test out if their efforts have been successful.

If this bill goes to committee and we call one or more experts before us, they should be able to give most interesting and helpful information.

Honourable senators, I move second reading of the bill.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable members, I do not pose as a fish specialist, as my honourable friend on my left (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) does, but I am interested in this bill. The convention was ratified and confirmed by the United States Senate yesterday by a vote of 79 to 0, according to the newspapers, and now awaits confirmation by Canada.

I am told by people in authority, who should know, that the great problem is to deal with the spawning ground of the lamprey, and I am informed that one of the greatest spawning areas is on Lake Huron. It was stated in a committee of the other house that either the Ontario Government or the dominion Government, or both, would have to put fingerlings of trout in the lakes at once if they are to be successfully restocked; and it is vitally important to protect the trout from lampreys.

I would like personally to congratulate the Government of Canada on making this agreement with the United States; I think it is along the right lines. I have read the bill and the agreement very carefully, and as far as I can judge, as a layman, both the bill and the agreement cover what is necessary to be covered. I agree with the honourable member from Thunder Bay (Hon. Mr. Paterson) that the bill is in the nature of a policy of experimentation with the lamprey—to find out its habits of life, and eventually to destroy it. It seems most peculiar that a salt-water fish should come into fresh-water lakes and become acclimatized; it must be a quirk of nature. It is the purpose of the experts to destroy the life line which exists. I am sure that members of this house have never been asked to make a more vital contribution toward the protection of our fresh-water fish than this bill provides. I for one—and I speak on behalf of our party—heartily support the bill, and I think the Senate of the United States is to be commended for approving the agreement so quickly. I hope the convention is approved and confirmed in this house by as large a majority vote as in the United States Senate.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I wish to join with the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig) in congratulating the honourable senator who explained this bill, and also the Government which negotiated the agreement.

The honourable senator from Rosetown (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) asked if the sponsor of the bill had ever seen a lamprey-eel. Well, I have, on a number of occasions. Lamprey-eels will fasten themselves on the side of a yacht, a rowboat, or any other vessel of that kind, and one can actually catch them by means of the first and third fingers held against the second; they cannot be grabbed by the hand, for they will squeeze themselves out. By the method I have described you can dislodge a lamprey-eel and take a good look at it, and I can assure honourable senators that it is one of the most disgusting sights one could imagine—with its mouth rounded out for sucking purposes, and a little bit of a bone in the centre with which it pierces the side of the fish.

Of course, we are all thoroughly in sympathy with this bill, and hope it succeeds.

It has been mentioned that the lamprey, a creature of the ocean, is able to come from salt water and adapt itself to fresh-water conditions; and therefore I would very much doubt the efficacy of merely blocking it in its effort to go up the river to spawn. Of course, it is not for us to give advice to the experts, but a fish that can adapt itself so ably would most likely become adapted to new conditions if it found the rivers blocked. I should think it would be more effective to allow the lamprey to spawn, and then deal with the spawn in some way.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: There is no reason why we should not do both.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: But we cannot stop this type of fish from spawning in certain places and at the same time trap its spawn in those places.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: As I understand it, an effort is going to be made to prevent the spawn from getting out into the lakes.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I did not understand the honourable senator who explained the bill to say that; I understood that the effort was to prevent the lamprey from going up the river to spawn.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: As they lay some 60,000 eggs, the idea is to prevent them from spawning.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: There is no reason for not trying to destroy the spawn as well as using some method to prevent the fish from spawning.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Let us hope that some effective method will be adopted to rid the lakes of this pest. The Great Lakes fisheries were at one time a valuable industry, and I am sure we would all like to see it re-established. In my younger days there was a large fishing fleet harboured at Port Credit; the boats were used not only in fishing, but in carrying stone for building purposes. But the whole fleet has disappeared. There is sufficient quantity of food in the Great Lakes today to feed large numbers of fish, and I hope that the fishing industry will be revived and made to thrive again.

May I make one or two observations with respect to the bill. Section 5 contains these words:

> All courts, justices of the peace and magistrates in Canada have the same jurisdiction with respect to offences under the regulations as they have under sections 689 to 692 of the Canada Shipping Act, with respect to offences under that act . . .

Does that not mean that they shall have such jurisdiction if this bill passes, rather than that they now have it?

That section continues:

> . . . and the provisions of those sections apply to offences under the regulations in the same manner and to the same extent as they apply to offences under the Canada Shipping Act.

Does that not mean that such provisions shall apply when the bill is passed, rather than that they do apply now?

Hon. Mr. Paterson: I did not look into that phase of the bill, and I am unable to answer the honourable senator's question. I assumed that such details would be discussed in committee.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is so.

Hon. Stanley S. McKeen: Honourable senators, I should like to commend the mover of this bill (Hon. Mr. Paterson) for his very lucid explanation. May I also say that I do not think we have to concern ourselves with whether we are to prevent the lamprey from spawning or to destroy them after they spawn. If my prediction is right, whichever scheme is adopted will not be a hundred per cent perfect; no doubt some of this type of fish will spawn, no matter what is done.

We in British Columbia, where the first fisheries trade treaty was signed, on the halibut fisheries, have found that it has worked exceptionally well, and that fishery has been completely rehabilitated. The point has now been reached where the fishermen on the west coast get just the amount of halibut they require every year.

The next treaty was on the sockeye salmon fisheries, which are regulated by the international commission, of the Canadian section of which the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) is the present chairman. Through their efforts the fishery has been rehabilitated in the Fraser River to the point where it is again a valuable industry, and is expected to continue expanding. Rehabilitation has taken place throughout the Fraser River watershed, but there is still work to be done. When it has been completed the fishing industry will again be what it was prior to 1913, when the big slide on the Fraser River took place.

Attempts are now being made to negotiate a treaty with the United States with respect to pink salmon. Heretofore the Americans have been getting some 80 per cent of the catch while we were getting only 20 per cent, although most of the fish were spawning in British Columbia. The federal government has asked for a treaty on a 50-50 basis. However, I think this year the ratio of catch as between the United States and Canada will swing to the point where we will get perhaps 60 per cent and they will get the remaining 40 per cent. I predict that by next year we will have a treaty whereby Canada will split with the United States the pink salmon catch.

In my opinion the type of legislation now before us builds up good will between the two countries and increases trade. Therefore, I am heartily in accord with this measure.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the question is on the motion of the Honourable Senator Paterson, seconded by the Honourable Senator Campbell, for the second reading of Bill 279, an Act to implement a convention on Great Lakes Fisheries between Canada and the United States. Is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Senators: Carried.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Unanimously.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Paterson, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Natural Resources.

PRIVATE BILL

BAUDETTE AND RAINY RIVER MUNICIPAL BRIDGE COMPANY—SECOND READING

Hon. Norman McL. Paterson moved the second reading of Bill I-15, an Act to incorporate Baudette and Rainy River Municipal Bridge Company.

He said: Honourable senators, I seem to be on my feet a good deal today, but as I have not spoken in the house for some time, perhaps you will bear with me a little longer.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: This is your day.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: This bill, which is for the construction of a bridge between Baudette and Rainy River, brings back memories to my mind. In the year 1905, as a young man, I was private secretary to the Superintendent of a new railway known as the Manitoba and Southeastern, built by Mackenzie and Mann, and I crossed the railway bridge at this point. That railway is now a part of the Canadian National Railways system, and its line between Winnipeg and Fort William touches a portion of Minnesota, between Sprague and Warroad, and comes back to Ontario. Throughout all the years the people of that area have been without a bridge for vehicular traffic; they have had to resort to the use of boats for crossing the river, the nearest vehicular bridge being at Fort Frances, some sixty-five miles away. At long last the people of the locality have organized the building of a bridge, and from a reading of the many clauses in the bill honourable senators will observe that the probable intention is to sell most of the bonds in the United States. I am advised that, strangely enough, in the case of a public endeavour of this kind, the income from the bonds is tax free in the United States; consequently, such bonds are very desirable there. However, that is the affair of the promoters.

The information I have on the bill is as follows. This is an application by the residents of the town of Rainy River, in the province of Ontario, for the incorporation of a company with power to build an international bridge over the Rainy River in the province of Ontario. The bridge is to extend from a point in or near the village of Baudette in the state of Minnesota, in the United States of America, to a point in or near the town of Rainy River. Both municipalities, namely, the village of Baudette and the town of Rainy River, have seen the need for the construction of this bridge for some time past, and both are actively promoting its construction. It is anticipated that the bridge will cost approximately $400,000 and arrangements have already been made for financing it.

The bridge will be a toll bridge, and the net toll profits will be used solely for paying off the cost of financing the project. No profits of any kind will be paid to the shareholders of the company.

When the financing costs have been paid, that portion of the bridge which is in Canada will become the property of Her Majesty in right of Canada, or some other body to be designated by Her Majesty.

The passing of this legislation will not, of course, assure the construction of the bridge, but will enable the promoters to make all necessary surveys and to do all necessary acts to proceed with the bridge. It is the definite feeling of both municipalities that there is a very definite need for the bridge and that it will serve a very useful purpose among them in providing another link for traffic between Canada and the United States, with increased tourist and other benefits to all municipalities in the area served by the bridge.

Among other things, the bridge will give continuous dependable service throughout the year and will avoid any tie-ups in service from icy conditions.

The great increase of heavy-type transportation by truck is common knowledge and is becoming more and more an economic factor of importance to industry. A bridge accommodating such type of transportation will add important advantages to our local industry trading into the great markets of the Middle West of the United States.

The form of the proposed bill is similar to the recent act which incorporated St. Mary's River Bridge Company and was passed at the present session of Parliament. The company incorporated by that act has the object of constructing a bridge between Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan, and Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario; and while the expected cost of the Sault Ste. Marie bridge is expected to be many times the cost of the bridge over the Rainy River, the provisions of the draft bill in this case are largely the same as those of that act.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, I rise just to say that I fully endorse the bill that is before us. I do not know why, but some people in this country have a peculiar objection to or prejudice against toll roads and toll bridges, but I may say that in my opinion a toll bridge is better than no bridge at all. I know the site of this bridge very well. Years ago when shipping horses out West we followed the very road that the honourable senator has mentioned, between Rainy River and Baudette, Minnesota, and I have often spent four to five hours during freight train delays at that point.

The river is difficult to negotiate at certain periods of the year, and I may say that we have similar conditions in Saskatchewan. A ferry can be used for a part of the year, but not in the fall when the ice is forming, or in the spring, when the ice is breaking up. In Saskatchewan there sometimes are thirty or forty cars waiting in line to use a ferry. The advantage of a toll bridge is that the people who are using the bridge pay for it. The bridge can be used throughout the year, so that time is saved by people wishing to cross the river. These people are willing to pay the toll exacted.

I am pleased to endorse the principle of this bill for the construction of a bridge between Rainy River and Baudette.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: May I ask the honourable senator from Thunder Bay (Hon. Mr. Paterson) if I understood him correctly to say that the same interests are proposing to build this bridge as will be building the bridge at the Soo?

Hon. Mr. Paterson: No; I said it is the same form of application.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: It is interesting to note that three of these international bridges—the one at Sarnia, the one at Mackinac Island, and the one proposed for Sault Ste. Marie—have been undertaken by a group of people who have worked with the State of Michigan road authority. I think the financing was largely done by American capital, and I presume that the same will be true of this bridge, chiefly by means of an issue of tax-free bonds. Over the years a number of bridges—the one at Cornwall, the Ivy Lea Bridge near Gananoque, the one at Sarnia, the one proposed at the Soo, and bridges all the way along the river passages between the Great Lakes—have been built or are being built largely through the enterprise of people representing American capital and development in this country. This construction will lead I think to very profitable results to both countries as far as tourist traffic is concerned.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask one question? Section 2 of the bill, which is declaratory, says:

> 2. The works and undertaking of the company are declared to be for the general advantage of Canada.

Of course that phrase is usually used for the purpose of bringing the undertaking within the legislative jurisdiction of the dominion parliament, but in this instance it is unnecessary to do it in that way because section 92 (10) of the British North America Act declares the following classes of works and undertakings to be within our jurisdiction:

Lines of Steam or other Ships, Railways, Canals, Telegraphs, and other Works and Undertakings connecting the Province with any other or others of the Provinces, or extending beyond the Limits of the Province.

Now, this bridge is to be built between a point in Ontario and a point in Minnesota, U.S.A., and those words "Undertakings . . . extending beyond the limits of the Province" would bring this bridge within our jurisdiction anyway; so I wonder what is the idea behind the declaration that this is a work for the general advantage of Canada.

Before I sit down may I comment upon the observation of the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) about the prejudice, as he called it, of the public against toll roads and toll bridges. Undoubtedly, a toll bridge is better than no bridge at all, but the people in general are certainly opposed to having to pay tolls every time they use a strip of road or cross a bridge. It is one of the natural functions of government to supply roads and communications, and the public requires us to do so.

Hon. Mr. Horner: May I repeat that a toll is paid only by those who use the bridge.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is true, but not by all those who benefit from it. That is the point. The bridge will confer benefits on others besides those who travel on it. It will increase land values, for instance, on both sides of the river, and the landowners will put that increased value into their pockets. The proper method of financing a bridge is by a tax on land values increased by reason of the bridge.

I have an illustration in what we call the viaduct over the Humber River in Toronto. Land values went up two and a half times the cost of the bridge before the bridge was opened, as a result of the access which the bridge would give to that territory. The trading interests on both sides of the river are benefited by the intercommunication that will result. It is very difficult to trace how far the benefit goes or to say who does get it, but it certainly is a fact that the benefit is not confined entirely to those who use the bridge.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I point out that if this bridge is being built by a private corporation it would almost have to be a toll bridge.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: As I said, a toll bridge is better than no bridge at all. But a bridge that is open to the public, which is paid for and built by the Government, and made available for the free use of the public, is very much better than a toll bridge. That is why, I think, the public is so set against toll roads and toll bridges. It is for governments, whether local, municipal or federal, to provide them.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Is it not a fact that the federal Government also spends money for the benefit merely of some local community, though everyone, all over Canada, has to pay for the work?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That statement may be accurate in a sense, but the actual fact is that the Government has been building bridges and roads from one end of Canada to the other, and it is not unjust that the cost should be spread from one end of the country to the other. It may be much more unjust to require one community to pay the entire cost of these works, when the expense of similar improvements in other communities is spread over the whole country. So in my opinion it is fair, whenever bridges are required, to defray the cost from government funds, because everybody right across the country benefits from the bridges of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Would the honourable senator differentiate between a type of road such as, in the United States, is built from Chicago to New York, and is called a super-highway, and a road which goes through a number of cities, and on which the speed is limited?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Well, I don't know that I would. It is rather difficult to define what is a super or trunk road or something of that kind which should be financed privately and paid for by those who use it, and a general through road. Both carry the same type of traffic. It may be that a highway in the class of a luxury road should be paid for by those who wish to use it. But I do not see very much to these distinctions. We are progressing to better and wider roads and bridges. The next generation will see wonderful advances in this regard. One of the most amazing developments in this country is the extension of our highways, and the rapidity with which this continent has been interlaced within the last few years with bonded roads. Further improvements will be seen by the next generation—unless, of course, something unforeseen occurs. I want governments to do these jobs and not leave them to private individuals, or exact, from a portion of those benefited, the entire cost.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: My recollection is that the bill relating to St. Mary's Bridge Company, which was recently before this house, contained a provision that after a period of years—twenty, I believe—the bridge would become public property.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: That is, the Canadian half.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: May I point out, with the permission of the house, that the cases which have been discussed are not at all parallel either with the St. Mary's Bridge bill or this one. International undertakings require the participation of two countries; and these bridges that have been developed along the dividing line of the Great Lakes and up the river as far as Rainy River are dependent very much on the enterprise of American capital; and, as the honourable senator from Thunder Bay (Hon. Mr. Paterson) has pointed out, there is the fact of an inducement in the form of tax-free bonds. This is a condition which we cannot control in any way. The country will benefit to a certain extent through the enterprise of these people, who see an opportunity to build a bridge and to make it a source of profit.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I am voting for the bill. Will the honourable senator from Thunder Bay (Hon. Mr. Paterson) answer my question with regard to section 2?

Hon. Mr. Paterson: I would prefer to have the answer given in the Committee on Transport and Communications, to which I intend to move that the bill be referred.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Paterson, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 7, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 7, 1955

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

PRAIRIE FARM REHABILITATION BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 5, an Act to amend the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: With leave, next sitting.

PRIVATE BILL

TRANS-PRAIRIE PIPELINES, LTD.—COMMONS AMENDMENTS

A message was received from the House of Commons returning Bill U-12, an Act to authorize Trans-Prairie Pipelines, Ltd. to construct, own and operate an extra-provincial pipe line, and acquainting the Senate that they have passed this bill with certain amendments, to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The Clerk Assistant, reading:

(1) Page 1, lines 6 to 11. Strike out clause 1 and substitute therefor the following clauses:

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Dispense.

Honourable senators, this bill U-12 is one that I sponsored in the Senate some time ago. I would suggest that, as the amendments are lengthy, we might dispense with the reading of them; and they could be printed in our Minutes of the Proceedings, and considered at a later date.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will the honourable senator make a motion to that effect? At what date shall these amendments be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: On Thursday next. I so move.

The motion was agreed to.

DIVORCE PETITIONS

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 404 to 419, dealing with petitions for divorce, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

The motion was agreed to, on division.

PRIVATE BILL

PROVIDENT ASSURANCE COMPANY—FIRST READING

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt presented Bill J-16, an Act to incorporate The Provident Assurance Company.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: With leave, next sitting.

DIVORCE BILLS

FIRST READINGS

Hon. Mr. Roebuck presented the following bills:

Bill J-15, an Act for the relief of Marian Douglas Jodrey Wallace.

Bill K-15, an Act for the relief of Elie Chabotar.

Bill L-15, an Act for the relief of Evelyn Robert Hurst Watson.

Bill M-15, an Act for the relief of Sidney Robert Allen.

Bill N-15, an Act for the relief of Cecil Brooks.

Bill O-15, an Act for the relief of Jeanne Jacqueline Content Brown.

Bill P-15, an Act for the relief of Eugene Theodore Mantha.

Bill Q-15, an Act for the relief of Marilyn Irene Damer Brophey.

Bill R-15, an Act for the relief of Dorothea Josephine Forbes Chaffey.

Bill S-15, an Act for the relief of Violet Ruby Baxter Williamson.

Bill T-15, an Act for the relief of Nicole Emile Dardano.

Bill U-15, an Act for the relief of Ruth Steirman Levine.

Bill V-15, an Act for the relief of Pearl Raicek Rutwind.

Bill W-15, an Act for the relief of Lorraine Bennet Favreau Williams.

Bill X-15, an Act for the relief of Robert Irvin Morrow.

Bill Y-15, an Act for the relief of Phyllis Lilian Buck Beatty.

Bill Z-15, an Act for the relief of Barbara Louise Bartlett Broadbent.

Bill A-16, an Act for the relief of Ronald Elikum Bessey.

Bill B-16, an Act for the relief of Margaret Francis Kennedy Bailie.

Bill C-16, an Act for the relief of Anna Cibula Reynolds.

Bill D-16, an Act for the relief of Mary McKinnon McEachran Coolon.

Bill E-16, an Act for the relief of Joseph Armand Jacques Phaneuf.

Bill F-16, an Act for the relief of Julia Hut Lutterman.

Bill G-16, an Act for the relief of Evelina Dixon Taylor.

Bill H-16, an Act for the relief of Frances Marguerite Beaudin Karibian.

Bill I-16, an Act for the relief of Claude Ferron.

The bills were read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: With leave, next sitting.

VETERANS BENEFIT BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. Macdonald moved the third reading of Bill 278, an Act to amend the Veterans Benefit Act, 1954.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

CUSTOMS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Salter A. Hayden moved the second reading of Bill 410, an Act to amend the Customs Act.

He said: Honourable senators, the bill before the house for second reading proposes a number of changes in the Customs Act, the principal ones having to do with the question of value of goods for purposes of calculation of duty. I had thought of dealing with that particular subject first. However, the bill is a short one—it has only nine sections—and at the risk of someone questioning my development of the principle of the bill—if there is a principle in an amending bill—and referring to sections, I propose, as an aid to guide honourable senators in following my remarks, to refer to the sections about which I propose to say something.

Section 1 of the bill is a rewriting of section 18 of the act. The real change in the section is this: The act provides that "the following persons"—who are described in section 18—when arriving at a border point in charge of a vehicle, or on foot or otherwise, shall do thus and so in the way of reporting to the customs officer at that border point. In the interest of good draftsmanship and also to be sure that there is proper protection of our revenues, it is proposed that section 18 be changed to read as follows:

> Every person in charge of a vehicle arriving in Canada, other than a railway carriage, and every person arriving in Canada on foot or otherwise, shall . . .

do certain things. The purpose of requiring every person, without distinction, who arrives at a border point to report to the nearest customs officer or the nearest station and to furnish a list of what he may have that may be dutiable and to account for the various things he may have—in a van, for instance, in the way of animals, trappings, harness, and things of that kind—is twofold: first, so that Canada may have a proper record of what is coming in that may be dutiable; and, second, in order that officials at customs border points may perform certain functions required of them under various statutes. For instance, I can think offhand of statutes like the Pest Control Products Act, the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, and the Immigration Act. There is an absolute obligation on every person to report at the nearest border point, and that is why the section is re-arranged and redrawn.

I come now to the main and most important provision in the bill, having to do with value for duty purposes. May I take a minute or two to explain the changes made in the bill in this respect? Before the changes proposed in this bill are made, we start off with the general or basic principle of Customs law that the value of goods coming into Canada for duty purposes shall not be less than the value at which like goods are sold in the home market, that is, in the market from which these goods are being exported to Canada at the time of export. That basic principle seems reasonably simple, but the conditions that are set out in the present law provide that value for duty purposes shall be the fair market value of such or like goods in the home market at the time of sale and export when sold in like quantities in the ordinary course of trade, under comparable conditions of sale and under fully competitive conditions.

Well, the second principle laid down in the present act, in section 35, is if you are not able to get your value under this basic principle which I have enunciated, then under subsection 2 of section 35 you have what is called the principle of the nearest ascertainable equivalent of fair market value, and that has presented all kinds of problems. As one who has had something to do with these particular subsections, I know that this subsection 2, dealing with the basis of determining the nearest ascertainable market value of like goods, has been a real poser and very unsatisfactory.

The third method was the method of what we would call, by statute, constructing a price. In other words, subsection 3 of the present section 35 provides a basis for arriving at value for duty. You take the material cost, the labour cost, overhead, all those factors, and then add to that certain items—the Minister has to exercise a discretion in this—for administration, selling cost and profit. In other words, you take actual cost of production of similar goods at the date of shipment to Canada, which would include all those direct charges like cost of material, labour costs, factory overhead, plus additions for administration, selling costs and profit.

Now, it has been held as a matter of law that these various methods of arriving at value for duty purposes are to be dealt with and are only to come into operation successively; that is, you have to exhaust the conditions of subsection 1—the basic principle of determining value for duty purposes—before you can move into subsection 2. Only when you cannot find the answer in subsection 1 can you avail yourself of the provisions of subsection 2. In other words, you cannot go searching through all the subsections to find one that suits you. You must exhaust yourself in subsection 1 first, and if the answer to the problem cannot be found in subsection 1 then you drop into subsection 2, and if you fail to find the answer in subsection 2 you move into subsection 3.

Because of the practical difficulties that have been presented by the words "the nearest ascertainable equivalent of fair market value" we have the proposals contained in the various subsections of new section 35. You will notice that subsection 1 is just a general statement that the value for duty shall be determined in accordance with the provisions of this section. Subsection 2 is a restatement of the basic general law of value for duty purposes that is contained in the present act. It is the fair market value of like goods when sold for home consumption in the ordinary course of trade at the time of sale and export to this country of the goods in like quantities and under comparable conditions of sale and under fully competitive conditions.

In succeeding subsections there is worked out what I suppose might be called, for want of a better expression, "working rules" which are a little more realistic than that expression "the nearest ascertainable equivalent of fair market value" that has presented a real problem in administration. An instance of the so-called working rules is found in subsection 3 on page 2 of the bill, which provides that if you have a situation where the goods are being imported into Canada and you can find like goods being sold in the home market at the same time in the ordinary course of trade and under fully competitive conditions and in like quantities, but if you cannot find comparable conditions of sale—that is the one factor that is missing that takes you out of the general basic rule for determination of value for duty purposes—then in those circumstances you go ahead and work with what you have; that is, you take the situation where you find the like goods. For instance, if they are coming in from the United States you check on sales taking place in the United States in like quantities to the quantities involved in the importation, and you also look to see if the conditions under which they are sold are fully competitive conditions; and if that one element of comparable conditions of sales is missing, this subsection provides a working rule by which the customs officials try if possible to fit themselves into subsection 3. If they cannot, then they have to move down the line to the next successive step.

The next successive step is this: If you find at the time you are exporting the goods into Canada, say from the United States, that there are no goods being sold in the exporting country that you can identify as like goods, then under subsection 4 you may look for similar goods. Then if you find all the other conditions existing, in relation to similar goods, and you find comparable conditions of sale under fully competitive conditions in the ordinary course of trade and in the same quantities, that is the rule that you apply, and you try to work out an answer and establish value under that subsection.

But if you do not meet the conditions, if the facts will not fit into subsection 4, then you move along to subsection 5, still dealing with similar goods, and if the element of comparable conditions of sale is missing you get along as best you can without that one element.

Now, those are high sounding words, "comparable conditions of sale", but they only mean the level at which the transaction is taking place.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Will the honourable senator permit a question? In the first line of subsection 4 the words "like goods" are used, and later on the words "similar goods" occur. Can the honourable gentleman explain the reason for this different phraseology?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: If the honourable senator will read subsection 4 he will see that it says where "like goods", that is goods that may be described as like goods to those being imported, are not sold in the manner described in subsection 2 or 3, the value for duty purposes shall be the fair market value of similar goods. So if you cannot find like goods being the subject-matter of the transaction, say in the United States, at the time you are bringing like goods into Canada, then under subsection 4 you have recourse to similar goods.

Subsection 5 is simply a repetition of subsection 3, only subsection 5 has relation to similar goods rather than like goods, and here if the element of comparable conditions of sale is missing you get along in the best way you can without it.

May I pause for a moment here? I think I heard someone say in the course of my remarks that possibly the goods would have to travel with a lawyer at all those admission points. It is not really that bad. Two comments may be made here. One is that having lawyers along, even in that phase of operation, might be a good thing. People are getting better educated at all times to the many uses and good purposes that lawyers can serve.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Secondly, more and more of the next generation are embarking on the study and practice of law. So if this procedure will require the use of lawyers I am not objecting or suggesting that we should withdraw the bill, but I do not think it will, because forms will be furnished which the importer and the vendor of the goods from the exporting country will have to fill out. Certainly those who are engaged in the business of exporting and importing know what this language means; they have been familiar with it for a great many years; and the changes which are here made are changes which give, so to speak, a larger area of selection for the person to fit himself into the heading than he has had available to fit himself into under the present act.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Heading, or headache?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Heading. There may be headaches too. But that depends on how well one classifies his goods. When one has got away from the basic principle for the determination of value, which is the one I first stated, having gone successively through subsections 3, 4 and 5, and found nothing to fit, he comes to subsection 6, the one which, in my opinion, should have been the last. But the framers of the bill went on and added another, because they have inserted in subsection 6 that when the value for duty cannot be determined under any of these preceding sections because like or similar goods are not sold for use or consumption in the country of export, or there is no established market in the country of export for like or similar goods, the value for duty of the goods shall be such as the minister determines. The importer, however, does not arrive at subsection 6 before he has run the course and exhausted himself without any beneficial results: it is then that subsection 6 applies. As far as I am concerned, if the enumeration stopped after subsection 6 I would think that the purpose of the enactment would be fully accomplished, because what more could there be than a conferment on the minister of the right to determine the value? Naturally, if the matter goes before the Tariff Board, the values must be supported by appropriate evidence. I do not assume, and I have no reason to assume, that when the minister exercises his power under subsection 6 he exercises it arbitrarily or unfairly or against the interest of the importer.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Is the minister required to fix the value in accordance with subsection 7?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: No. Here, however, I am expressing a legal opinion, which ordinarily I do not do. But subsection 7 reproduces in the present bill the old subsection 3, which establishes the value for duty as the actual cost of production, and adds certain amounts for administration, overhead and profit; this is the enumeration which would apply. If one takes the steps one at a time, when subsection 6 is reached and the minister, because the previous subsections do not fit, makes the determination of value himself, it seems to me that that is the end of the road.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Should not subsections 8 and 9 have preceded subsection 6?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: No. Do not run too fast. Section 7 deals with a constructive price: notice the opening words, to the effect that it applies when the value for duty cannot be determined under the preceding subsections. That is very plain English.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Could not the minister arrive at a value?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: If I am asked what might happen, I would say that if the minister could not find any other way of arriving at the value he might very well take a look at cost of production and similar factors in the country where the goods were produced. But I do not think that, in establishing a price and giving the reasons therefor, he can say, as a matter of law, that his determination is under subsection 6; he would have to say, "I cannot make it under subsection 6, I am making it under subsection 7."

Hon. Mr. Reid: With reference to subsection 7: "Where the value for duty cannot be determined under the preceding subsections, the value for duty shall be the actual cost of production of like or similar goods..."—that means production of the goods where?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: In the home market; that is, the country of origin of the goods.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: How do the Customs Department officials arrive at that value?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: The officials have been doing that for years. They require the manufacturer of goods to furnish these figures; also there are departmental officers located in various centres of the United States; or, if the matter is of special importance, a man is sent down to check the figures as to cost of production and so forth.

Hon. Mrs. Wilson: May I ask a question with reference to subsection 2? Am I to understand that the purchaser is not required to pay duty on taxes levied in the country of origin? I have always had to pay duty on luxury taxes.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Subsection 2 establishes the basic principle, which is, that one cannot import goods into Canada and pay duty on a value less than the price at which those goods are sold in the home market at the time. On the question of what taxes are included, I come to that a little later.

Hon. Mrs. Wilson: Another question, relating to section 1: why are horse-drawn vehicles the only vehicles referred to?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I had not noticed that horse-drawn vehicles are included. I observe that the section states that "every person in charge of a vehicle", which presumably might be horse-drawn or power-motivated, "and every person arriving in Canada on foot or otherwise, . . . "which, I assume, would cover a motor-cycle or a boat or a plane.

Hon. Mrs. Wilson: Harness is referred to.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: That is to deal with a situation where race horses are brought into Canada during the racing season with their equipment, which is checked on the way in and checked on the way out, because it could happen that equipment might be brought in for ready sale rather than for use in the racing season. They keep tally by checking it when it comes in and when it goes out.

Subsection 8 lays down the basic principle that if, in attempting to arrive at a value for duty purposes, you come on a figure of value which is less than the purchaser in Canada is paying for the goods, the duty must be paid on the actual price to the purchaser, not on a figure less than was actually paid by him.

Subsection 9 is merely a re-statement of a provision in the act that the value for duty of imported goods shall not include the amount of any internal tax imposed on the goods in the home market. The reason that this provision is made so specific is, I believe, that there is some ambiguity in the language of the corresponding subsection of section 35. Some question has been raised as to social security taxes and matters of that kind in the United States if, for example, the goods are imported from that country. These are really more of the nature of taxes on the person, and the purpose of the subsection is to make absolutely clear that the only sort of tax which should be excluded from the assessment of value for duty purposes is a tax levied on the imported goods in the country of origin.

Under subsection 10 the Governor General in Council may order that import duties in the country of export may be disregarded for the purpose of arriving at the value for duty purposes.

Subsection 11 gives the minister the power to eliminate from value for duty purposes the cost of services. Cases have gone to the Tariff Board where architects' plans and drawings and educational kits which have to be assembled in Canada have been brought in, involving an element of service as far as the cost of the goods is concerned; and under this subsection the minister is given statutory authority—I believe the same provision has been in the act for some years, as subsection 6—to eliminate a portion of what otherwise would be the cost of goods of the kind I have described.

An Hon. Senator: What about legal services?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Legal services are not dutiable; they are taxable but not dutiable.

Section 3 deals fully with the procedure for appeals. For instance, if an importer is dissatisfied with the classification of a tariff item under which his goods are put, or if he is dissatisfied with the appraisal for duty purposes, he has the right to appeal within sixty days to a Dominion customs appraiser for a redetermination or a reappraisal. I notice that in some of our legislation, notwithstanding comments we hear from time to time about the word "Dominion", we still retain the word as part of a title in describing certain officials. If the importer does not exercise that right of appeal within sixty days it is gone for ever, so far as he is concerned. If he fails on his appeal to the Dominion customs appraiser he may then appeal to the deputy minister. This right must be exercised within thirty days after a decision has been given by the Dominion customs appraiser. This section 3 introduces a new section 43 of the act, which provides for the counterpart of the rights of appeal given to the importer. It is a counterpart in the sense that the Dominion customs appraiser may at any time within two years reappraise or redetermine a classification. The section also provides that the deputy minister may within two years in any case redetermine a classification or reappraise a value for duty purposes. The deputy minister may also at any time make such redetermination or reappraisal if the importer, on the entry of the goods, has made any misrepresentation or committed any fraud. Therefore, with respect to fraud or misrepresentation it is wide open at any time when the fraud or misrepresentation is discovered for the deputy minister to take action under this section.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Does that mean that if a price for import duty has been determined the department can change its mind at any time within two years?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: It does not mean exactly that, for there are statutory provisions under which the department must function. What we are talking about is the determination of a tariff classification or of an appraisal value for duty purposes.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The determination has already been made.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Yes, but it must be remembered that in the first instance the importer fills out his forms and presents them to the customs officer who, in perfectly good faith, may accept the descriptions on those forms. However, at some future time he may discover that the descriptions given were not such that a proper determination of classification could be made or that a proper appraisal of value for duty purposes could be made. Therefore he may re-open and redetermine and reappraise.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Would that have a retroactive effect for two years? Could the authorities go back and collect further duty?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: As a matter of law, yes; as a matter of practice, in the department—and some of these procedures have existed for some time—they do not go back more than two or three months.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The goods may have been sold in the meantime. This does not stipulate that there must have been fraud or misstatement. The section gives the widest power to the deputy minister to redetermine a classification or reappraise a value which has been previously determined. Perhaps the importer has been perfectly innocent, and he may have sold the goods in the meantime, figuring the cost at the rate determined when he imported the goods.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I would tell my honourable friend that that is the present law. This is a re-statement; this is not new law; and the objection my honourable friend has made may be answered if he will permit me to finish what I was explaining. When goods are presented by an importer at the border he must set out on his forms the fair market value in the country of origin, and the price at which he has purchased the goods. If the customs officer accepts that information, a determination is made of the value for duty purposes. There may also be involved a determination of the tariff classification. It may develop later that the information given was not correct, and this may become known long after the goods have been disposed of. Such a situation may arise in two different ways. The wrong information may be given quite innocently, or with an intent to misrepresent in the hope of getting away with something. In such a situation the deputy minister, and in a limited way the Dominion customs appraiser, is given the right at any time within two years after the entry of the goods to go back and in a proper case make a redetermination of classification or a reappraisal of value.

I was going on to say that while the law provides that the departmental officials may go back for two years, unless they find a case where somebody has been trying to be smart and put something over the department they only go back a few months or, at the latest to the point at which the customs official raised the question of the value or of the classification.

Hon. Mr. Baird: I am afraid my honourable friend does not know everything concerning customs.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I do not pretend to. I am trying to appraise or, shall I say, reappraise, with the limited facilities available in the bill before me, the interjection of my honourable friend from St. John's (Hon. Mr. Baird), who I feel is a good friend. I yielded to him so that he might ask a question.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Does my honourable friend claim that the words "within two years of the date of entry" apply to the whole of subsection 4 or only to paragraph (d)? If these words are meant to apply to paragraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d), they should be separated. As the legislation is now drawn, I think the words "within two years of date of entry" would apply only to paragraph (d).

Hon. Mr. Hayden: My honourable friend is correct, but he must remember that subsection 4 is an enumeration of the various powers of the deputy minister. Under subsection 4 (a) the deputy minister may act in respect of an appeal taken by an importer from the decision of a Dominion customs appraiser.

Hon. Mr. Vien: During what period?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: The appeal must be taken within thirty days and may be disposed of at any time after that. There is no time limit on this. Paragraph (b) deals with special cases of misrepresentation or fraud, and time is unlimited. Paragraph (c) deals with the case of an importer who felt himself aggrieved, ran the gamut of all the legal proceedings open to him, and finally ended up in the Supreme Court of Canada with a decision in his favour. The deputy minister is given power to make whatever redetermination or reappraisal is necessary to give effect to the decision. Paragraph (d) specifies that the deputy minister may redetermine the tariff classification or reappraise the value for duty of any goods "in any other case where he deems it advisable". The best way I can describe it is that the deputy minister may be self-starting—he does not need anyone to prod him into action under subsection (d).

Section 4 is a beneficial section, providing for right of appeal to the Tariff Board by a person who deems himself aggrieved in any case where the question at issue has to do with drawback of customs duties, the question of the rate, etc.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Can my honourable friend provide information as to why paragraph (d) should be necessary, when section 43 gives a blanket authorization to the deputy minister to redetermine tax classification? Under (d) the deputy minister is given power to do that in any other case where he deems it advisable, within two years of the date of entry of the goods. The goods may have been sold two or three times within that period. Section (d) does not apply to fraud or misrepresentation, it applies "in any other case"—other than fraud or misrepresentation. Why should a deputy minister have the power "in any other case" to review the classification within two years after the goods have passed entry?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: My friend will appreciate that the enumerations (a), (b) and (c) of subsection 4 deal with particular situations. Paragraph (d), as I stated before, enables the deputy minister to be self-starting in relation to any inquiry where he feels that there has not been a proper determination of classification or a proper appraisal of value for duty purposes—not because of fraud or misrepresentation, but for any other reason.

Hon. Mr. Vien: But can the honourable gentleman state any specific reason for giving to the deputy minister such a broad power to review a reclassification two years after the entry has been passed, when the goods have been sold and everybody acted in good faith?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: All I can say is that I did not determine the policy in relation to this, but I can see some justification for it. In any event, the time limit is considerably shorter than the time limits for retroactive inquiry under other taxing statutes in Canada. Situations could arise occasionally by reason of erroneous classifications of various items and the errors which might go undetected for some time. It is possible that a number of shipments might be erroneously described over a period of time, and suddenly some person, for some reason or another, becomes alert, checks a particular importation, and upon looking back to see what was done as to previous shipments finds misrepresentation—which might have been quite innocent —so the deputy minister is given that power to go back for a period within two years.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Does my friend know it to be a fact that in the United States they make use of that particular power to go back and reclassify and revalue, even though the goods may have gone into consumption? For instance, raw material which has gone into the States may have been absorbed into a manufacturer's product, and the American manufacturer has to pay a higher duty, with a resulting disturbance in the course of trade. Is this perhaps by way of retaliation?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I should have thought that my friend, whom I regard highly, could answer that question, because I think some of this law was being administered by the Department of National Revenue many years ago.

Hon. Mr. Euler: That does not answer my question.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I suggest that the real justification for this clause is not its actual wording but rather the common-sense of the officials who administer the affairs of the customs division of the Department of National Revenue. They are highly trained and very sensible people. If it were not for that fact I would strongly object to this section.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: And of course, adding to what my friend has said, I might point out that a person adversely affected has all the rights and processes of appeal open to him. If he has been done an injustice, and can demonstrate it, the facilities are at his disposal.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: They are pretty costly, though.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Anyway, I have explained section 4.

Section 5 is just a consequential section on the enactment of a new section 35.

Section 6 deals with section 104 of the act. Section 104 deals with special situations, where goods are imported into Canada and by reason of some special use to which they are being put, by the person who brings them in, are free of duty or are subject to a reduced rate of duty. If the person who brought the goods in, instead of using them for the special purpose turned around and sold them to somebody else, then of course the benefit of the tariff item disappeared, but by some strange quirk the penalty heretofore has been on the person who bought the goods. That did not appear to me to have any logic or sense. The importer who brought them in and sold them should be liable as well. Subsection 2 of section 104, proposed by section 6 of the bill, has for its purpose the making of the importer liable for any additional duty if he uses the goods for a purpose for which they were not intended. By way of illustration, some kind of mechanical equipment which is not manufactured in Canada might be imported into Canada for use in a college, and if it went to a college for the particular use for which it was intended, it would enter free of duty; but if the person bringing them in, instead of devoting them to his own use turned around and sold them at a profit because of the fact that they were free of duty, he has violated the provisions of the act. All that this new subsection 2 does, is to make the importer and the person who bought the goods jointly and severally liable for the payment of additional duties.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Why is the person who bought the goods included?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: That is the present law. I am not attempting to justify it; I am dealing only with the amendments.

Hon. Mr. Howard: Was subsection 4 in the old act?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Subsection 4 provides the penalty to be meted out to anyone who fails to comply with subsection 2 or subsection 3.

Section 7 of the bill is a consequential section: it arises because of the amendments which have been made to section 43 in connection with appeals. It is a rather backhanded way of describing the right to a refund. It states that:

> . . . no refund of a payment or overpayment of duty or taxes, arising otherwise than by reason of an erroneous tariff classification or an erroneous appraisal of value, shall be made unless an application therefor is made within two years of the date of payment or overpayment.

What that really means is that if you are applying for a refund on account of an erroneous tariff classification or an erroneous appraisal of value, your application must be made within two years of the payment of the duty. If the refund arises out of a clerical mistake, such as an addition of amounts, the customs officials will correct it at any time, but otherwise applications for refund must be made within two years.

Section 8 is a beneficial section which has to do with the provision to repeal parts of section 166. Certainly the lawyers at some stage or other have had something to do with it. It deals with smuggling. If goods are being smuggled—a car, for example—and the culprit is caught and the car seized, some person who claims to have a lien on it may want a declaration of his interest. There is machinery in the act for him to get this declaration, but under the present law the time limit for making his application is thirty days. It has been found that in many cases the lien holder did not know what had happened until the first following payment went into default. All that this section does is to give the holder of an interest the right to make an application within sixty days instead of thirty, as at present.

Section 9 provides a penalty for failure to report at a border point. If any person, on arrival at a border point in Canada in a car or on foot, does not report to the customs authority there, the goods he is transporting shall be forfeited and may be seized and dealt with accordingly.

Those are the various sections of the bill, and I hope that I have not been too lengthy in my explanation.

Hon. Mr. Ross: Do any of the proposed amendments to this act conflict in any way with the provisions of GATT the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: None of these provisions does.

Hon. Mr. Ross: Not in any way?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: No.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I would like to revert, honourable senators, to a question under section 6, where the importer as well as the purchaser is now made liable for additional duties on goods which have been diverted to purposes other than for which they were imported. I see that the two parties are now made jointly and severally liable. That means, I fancy, that you can collect from either of them and that the person you collect from has no claim over against the other.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I do not think that follows.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I do.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: No.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is the meaning I take out of the words "severally liable". It does seem to me, however, that there should be some determination of who is primarily liable, and to my mind it is the importer who imports under certain conditions and then changes the conditions and sells the goods. But in doing so he may sell them to a perfectly innocent party.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: This section deals not only with goods of that nature but also with goods which a person imports for a specific purpose and uses for some other purpose. He would then be both importer and user. My honourable friend is talking about the meaning of the words jointly and severally. This relates to the liability as between the customs authorities on the one hand and the importer and the purchaser of the goods on the other hand. If a person purchases goods innocently from an importer and the importer knows that the goods are subject to that restriction and that law, then I do not agree with my friend—as a matter of fact I disagree very heartily—that in those circumstances the purchaser would not have a remedy against the vendor of the goods to him.

Hon. Mr. Horner: What would happen in the case where the importer had disappeared—had left the country entirely? The Customs division would then have to take their full satisfaction from the man who purchased the article, because he would have the article to be seized and the original importer would not be available at all.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Well, that is the penalty when you deal with those situations.

Hon. Mr. Horner: But he may be completely innocent.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I think this section should be taken up in committee because I do not see any provision for a claim over by the purchaser, if the collection is made from him, as against the importer, when they are both severally liable.

Honourable senators, there is one comment I would like to make. It is not in the way of a question. My honourable friend opened up his very clear and capable explanation of this bill by rather apologizing for his intention to take it up section by section. There was some discussion, and there has been discussion in the house in the past as to what our rules are with respect to dealing with the principle of a bill, on the motion for second reading, and as to whether you can go into it section by section. I took the trouble to read the rule on this point, and I think it would be salutary to quote it—not that honourable senators do not know it—so as to have the matter rather more vividly in mind.

Rule 64 states, under the heading "Principle discussed at second reading":

64. The principle of a bill is usually debated at its second reading.

That is all it says. It does not state that the principle of a bill cannot be debated on any other occasion, nor that only the principle of the bill may be debated on second reading; it merely asserts the fact that the principle of the bill is usually debated at second reading. That is to say, it places the time for the discussion of the principle of the bill at the second reading. There is nothing, to my mind, either in practice or in law or in these words, to show that you cannot take up the details of a bill on second reading. You do not even need to discuss the principle unless you like to do so, but it is usually done. I think it was worth while and salutary to read that rule.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Does not my honourable friend think that in a bill of this nature there is a different principle in each section of the bill and therefore, when the sponsor of the bill explains it, he must necessarily set out what is involved in every section? It would be out of order to discuss details of each section, but the principle involved in every section can properly be discussed. In dealing with the bill before us there are a number of questions that would arise in the minds of honourable senators with respect to almost every section, involving the principle and the reason for the section. I would appreciate it if, when this bill goes to committee, the officers of the department could attend to explain those reasons that my honourable friend (Hon. Mr. Hayden) could not be expected to give tonight. I am sure that we are all grateful to the honourable gentleman for the very able way in which he has presented the bill; but it would be unreasonable to ask him to go into all the details and all the reasons why each section of the bill has been suggested by officers of the department. I am anxious to listen to these officials when the bill goes to committee.

I entirely concur in the observation of the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), that the officers of the department are men of the highest possible character. They have a very wide and long experience, and they have demonstrated in the administration of the Customs Act a very high sense of duty. But it may be that on some future occasion the country will be served by officials not equipped with the same experience and good judgment; and when this chamber is passing legislation it should guard against assenting to the grant of blanket powers to administrative officers. It is a fundamental principle of Magna Carta and of the Bill of Rights that Parliament alone should impose on the people burdens by way of taxation. Customs duties are a burden of this nature; and when we consent to a blanket authorization we are simply delegating to departmental administrators the power which by Magna Carta and the Bill of Rights is vested in Parliament. No matter how much confidence we may have in the present administrators of this act, Parliament should retain to itself the right to determine in a specific way what burdens shall be imposed on the people of Canada. I repeat, with the utmost respect for the present departmental officers, whose experience and sense of duty I recognize, that there is at stake the principle of the retention by Parliament of the power to impose charges on the people, and that those powers should not be delegated without specific instructions.

I will not say more at this time, but I reserve the right, when the committee stage is reached, to put forward questions which suggest themselves to my mind.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, I rise to say a word or two about the remarks made by the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck). I was not in the chamber when a question arose with regard to the reading of sections of the bill, but I am greatly interested in having the matter clarified. One of the first things I noticed when I came to this chamber from the House of Commons was that sections of bills are read or referred to here on the motion for second reading. I readily recognize that there is a reason for this practice, and I trust that it will continue. It is natural that in the House of Commons sections of a bill are not referred to until the house itself moves into the committee stage, when they are dealt with clause by clause. But in the Senate they are examined by one of our committees, and not in this chamber. I repeat: I trust that in future we shall continue the practice of discussing clauses of bills on the motion for second reading.

Hon. Mr. Vien: It is difficult to see how the principle of a bill can be studied unless an examination is made of how each section reflects the application of that principle. One cannot discuss in detail the provisions of each clause, but one may properly question whether the principle expressed in any particular section or sections is acceptable or not.

Hon. John T. Haig: I do not intend to speak on the subject-matter of the bill, but on this matter of the rules I wish to say a few words. I can speak from an experience of twenty years in this house: and not many honourable senators who are now members entered the chamber prior to 1935. I came to this place under conditions which made me alive to the subject of the rules, because for sixteen years I sat in a legislature where, as a member of the Opposition, it was my duty to deal with and discuss rules of procedure. When I came to the Senate I learned that, upon the introduction of a bill which involved some new principle of legislation, the representative of the Government spoke, on second reading, on the principle of the bill and outlined briefly the general provisions by which it was sought to effect its purpose. That, I repeat, was the procedure when the subject-matter of the legislation was new. But when, as in the case of the measure before us, there is already legislation in existence which it is sought to amend, the purpose of the proposed legislation is discussed, but not the principle. In the Legislature of Manitoba it was the practice to resolve the house into Committee of the Whole and discuss the details after second reading. That system has seldom been followed here. Perhaps on three occasions since I came to this house the Senate has gone into Committee of the Whole, and then, probably, because our members were "rowing" about something which it did not seem possible to settle outside the chamber.

I believe that the principle generally adopted in the past has worked very satisfactorily. As far as my memory goes—and it covers the leadership of the late Senator Dandurand, the honourable senator from Kootenay East (Hon. Mr. King), the honourable the Speaker (Hon. Mr. Robertson), and the present Government Leader (Hon. Mr. Macdonald)—the leader has never refused any reasonable demand that a bill be sent to committee for discussion. To a large extent our work is done in committee, where we can hear explanations from the appropriate officials. The reason for this practice is clear. I put the question on occasion to Senator Dandurand and also to Senator Meighen, and both of them gave me the same answer. They said: "We are not experts in all problems which come before the Senate. In the House of Commons a bill is usually introduced by a member of the Government, generally the one whose department it affects, so that he is an expert on the questions involved. Our procedure here is to send an important bill to committee and call on members of the Government or permanent officials to give us the expert advice we need". That is the reason for our procedure, and I, personally, approve of it. I hope that in future parliaments it will never be the practice merely to move second reading and briefly discuss a principle. To make the contents of a measure thoroughly understood by the house it should be examined in detail in committee; and this, as I have said, has been our practice for many years.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: Honourable senators, with reference to the objections made by my honourable colleague from De Lorimier (Hon. Mr. Vien) to the delegation of powers to ministers and departmental officials, I would remind him that wide powers have already been delegated in the Customs Act to the high officials of the Department of National Revenue. I would also point out that in scores of cases powers have been delegated to various government officials. I do not say that this is wrong, although in general I agree with my honourable friend that it is a breach of the great principle in Magna Carta and the Bill of Rights, but in practice it is virtually impossible to apply these principles in every way. For instance, we have delegated powers to various boards such as the Board of Transport Commissioners, the Board of Directors of the Canadian National Railways, the Board of Directors of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and many other bodies. And I might add that one cannot obtain much information about the operations of many boards which spend public money. Only last week I inquired of one of these boards about the salaries of employees in a certain city, and I was told that the board was not bound to disclose that information.

I would just like to say to my honourable friend that he should not be too greatly scandalized about the delegation of power which is given in the section to which he has referred this evening.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Honourable senators, with all due deference to the splendid explanation of the details of this bill by the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden), and the other comments that have been made, I submit there has been no discussion at all of the principle underlying this bill. I think that after honourable senators have had the benefit of any information that may be elicited in committee, they will have a better opportunity to discuss the principle of this bill when it comes before the Senate for third reading. I am not going to take time now to make the point clear that I should like to make, that in this instance the rule requiring explanation of the principle of a bill has been more honoured in the breach than the observance. I give my honourable friend from Toronto full credit for having been frank enough to say at the outset of his remarks that he was going to refer to the sections of the bill rather than to deal with the principle; but when the bill comes before us for third reading we may have something to say on its principle.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Does my honourable friend say that it is a protection measure?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I am sorry, but I did not catch the remarks of my honourable friend.

Hon. Mr. Horner: He asked if you thought it was a protection measure.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I shall give my honourable friends opposite a suggestion. This bill takes me back in memory over twenty years, when they were very much in favour of this sort of thing as part of the customs administration of the country and some of the rest of us were just as much opposed to it.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: What is your opinion of this legislation?

Some Hon. Senators: Question.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Mr. Hayden, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

50437—37½

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 8, 1955

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

CUSTOMS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the report of the committee on Bill 410, an Act to amend the Customs Act.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (410) intituled: "An Act to amend the Customs Act", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 7, 1955, examined the said bill and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave of the Senate, I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

NARCOTIC DRUG TRAFFIC

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS IN BLUE BOOK FORM

Hon. Thomas Reid, Chairman of the Special Committee on the Traffic in Narcotic Drugs in Canada, presented a report of the committee.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The committee recommended that it be authorized to print 800 copies in English and 200 copies in French of its proceedings in Blue Book form, for distribution as the committee may direct.

The motion was agreed to.

GREAT LAKES FISHERIES CONVENTION BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Natural Resources, presented the report of the committee on Bill 279.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Natural Resources, to whom was referred the Bill (279) intituled: "An Act to implement a Convention on Great Lakes Fisheries between Canada and the United States", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 2, 1955, examined the said bill and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: With leave of the Senate, I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

SIXTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the sixth report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts.

Hon. Arthur Marcotte: Honourable senators, I was going to oppose the adoption of this report, but fortunately for me the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) and the honourable Leader on this side (Hon. Mr. Haig) were kind enough to allow me at least a couple of days to read the law on the matter, and I am now satisfied.

In 1934 I opposed the Honourable Mr. Cahan, then Secretary of State, on the adoption of the present law. However, it is the law, and I cannot do a thing about it. Dura lex sed lex. So I bow to it. In doing what I have done, I have accomplished my duty as I saw it, and I take my defeat well, I hope.

The Hon. the Speaker: I draw the attention of honourable senators to the fact that there is no motion before the house.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I move, seconded by the honourable senator from Montarville (Hon. Mr. Godbout), that the report be now concurred in.

The motion was agreed to, and the report was concurred in.

NEW WESTMINSTER HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS LOAN BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Thomas Reid moved the second reading of Bill 187, an Act respecting the New Westminster Harbour Commissioners.

He said: Honourable senators, before explaining this bill may I first say a few words about the city of New Westminster and its port.

New Westminster, which now has a population of 30,000, was the first city in British Columbia. It was for a time the capital of the province, before Victoria was chosen to be the seat of government. At one time it had a mint of its own, and it minted some ten coins which are now quite valuable as souvenirs.

New Westminster was the only city which some years ago saw fit to spend money on the development of its waterfront; for this purpose it raised some $500,000 by by-law. The Harbour Board was formed in 1913, and it is worthy of note that the first indebtedness against the board's operation was for the cost of an elevator; further, it is the only harbour board in Canada which has year by year paid its interest charges. The board consists of three commissioners, two appointed by the federal Government and one by the City of New Westminster.

The commissioners applied to the federal Government for a loan of $200,000 for the building of a causeway, some 2,000 feet in length, to Annacis Island. The loan has already been made, the money has been spent and the causeway built; and the purpose of this bill is to obtain parliamentary authorization for the loan in the regular way.

Annacis Island, consisting of some 1,100 acres in all, has been taken over by the Duke of Westminster's Estate, in London, which has started to develop the whole of it into one of the finest industrial projects in the entire province. The estate must have in its management some far-seeing men, because although the island at flood time was under water, development has now reached the stage where some two or three hundred acres have been raised eight feet, three miles of concrete road have been laid, a large administration building and a bank have been erected, and industries from Great Britain are being developed. Up to the present time the estate has spent about $4 million and has undertaken to spend a further $15 million within the next fifteen years. I have been informed by the heads of the estate that, taking the long view of development, they expect in the next 50 years to expend $100 million in the development of this industrial site, which is just a mile or so from the city itself. Every convenience is being installed on the island. The causeway conecting it with the mainland will give access to the island by railway and motor vehicle and, of course, for pedestrians too. It is expected that the industries on the island will give employment to upwards of 7,000 people within a period of seven years.

It was with those facts before them that the Government agreed to lend to the Harbour Board the sum of $200,000 to build the causeway to the island, and this amount will be paid back by way of rentals from water lots. As I mentioned earlier, the Board has regularly met its interest payments year by year. I think the only exception was for a period of three years during the war when shipping to the port entirely ceased, because the Pacific had been blocked out.

Honourable senators, this is perhaps all I need say at the moment. If the bill were to go to a committee I do not know that much more information could be given there, in view of the fact that the money has been spent on the causeway.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Reid: With leave of the Senate, I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

DIVORCE PETITIONS

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce, Nos. 404 to 419, dealing with petitions for divorce.

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson, for the Chairman of the Committee, moved that the reports be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to, on division.

PRIVATE BILL

PROVIDENT ASSURANCE COMPANY—SECOND READING

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt moved the second reading of Bill J-16, an Act to incorporate The Provident Assurance Company.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill is of a routine type, its purpose being to grant federal incorporation to The Provident Assurance Company, which at present is operating under a provincial charter. The authority sought by this bill is the same as is granted to any other insurance company.

The clauses of this bill have been approved by the Superintendent of Insurance. I cannot explain every technical angle of the bill: however, after the second reading I will move that the bill be referred to the proper committee, where all necessary explanations will be given.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

DIVORCE BILLS

SECOND READINGS

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson moved the second reading of the following bills:

Bill J-15, an Act for the relief of Marian Douglas Jodrey Wallace.

Bill K-15, an Act for the relief of Elie Chabotar.

Bill L-15, an Act for the relief of Evelyn Robert Hurst Watson.

Bill M-15, an Act for the relief of Sidney Robert Allen.

Bill N-15, an Act for the relief of Cecil Brooks.

Bill O-15, an Act for the relief of Jeanne Jacqueline Content Brown.

Bill P-15, an Act for the relief of Eugene Theodore Mantha.

Bill Q-15, an Act for the relief of Marilyn Irene Damer Brophey.

Bill R-15, an Act for the relief of Dorothea Josephine Forbes Chaffey.

Bill S-15, an Act for the relief of Violet Ruby Baxter Williamson.

Bill T-15, an Act for the relief of Nicole Emile Dardano.

Bill U-15, an Act for the relief of Ruth Steirman Levine.

Bill V-15, an Act for the relief of Pearl Raicek Rutwind.

Bill W-15, an Act for the relief of Lorraine Bennett Favreau Williams.

Bill X-15, an Act for the relief of Robert Irvin Morrow.

Bill Y-15, an Act for the relief of Phyllis Lilian Buck Beatty.

Bill Z-15, an Act for the relief of Barbara Louise Bartlett Broadbent.

Bill A-16, an Act for the relief of Ronald Elikum Bessey.

Bill B-16, an Act for the relief of Margaret Francis Kennedy Bailie.

Bill C-16, an Act for the relief of Anna Cibula Reynolds.

Bill D-16, an Act for the relief of Mary McKinnon McEachran Coolon.

Bill E-16, an Act for the relief of Joseph Armand Jacques Phaneuf.

Bill F-16, an Act for the relief of Julia Hut Lutterman.

Bill G-16, an Act for the relief of Evelina Dixon Taylor.

Bill H-16, an Act for the relief of Frances Marguerite Beaudin Karibian.

Bill I-16, an Act for the relief of Claude Ferron.

The motion was agreed to, and the bills were read the second time, on division.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the third time?

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: Next sitting.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 9, 1955

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

PRIVATE BILLS

BAUDETTE AND RAINY RIVER MUNICIPAL BRIDGE COMPANY—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the report of the committee on Bill I-15, an Act to incorporate Baudette and Rainy River Municipal Bridge Company.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, to whom was referred the Bill (I-15) intituled: "An Act to incorporate Baudette and Rainy River Municipal Bridge Company", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 2, 1955, examined the said bill and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: With leave of the Senate, I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

DOMINION GENERAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY—REPORT OF COMMITTEE—AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN

Hon. John J. Connolly, for Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the report of the committee on Bill W-14, an Act to incorporate Dominion General Life Insurance Company.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (W-14) intituled: "An Act to incorporate Dominion General Life Insurance Company", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 31, 1955, examined the said bill and now beg leave to report the same with the following amendments:

1. Page 1: strike out lines 16, 17 and 18 and substitute the following:

"the name of Canadian Premier Life Insurance company, and in French, La Compagnie d'Assurance-vie Premiere Canadienne, hereinafter called 'the Company'."

2. Page 2, line 19: strike out the word "contracts" and substitute therefor the word "policies".

In the Title

3. Page 1: strike out the title and substitute therefor the following:

"An Act to incorporate Canadian Premier Life Insurance Company".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these amendments be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: With leave of the Senate, I move that the amendments be concurred in.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Would the honourable gentleman be good enough to explain the difference between the words "contracts" and "policies", which are used in the second amendment?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: In section 8 of the bill the word "contracts" is used in one place and "policies" in another. It is proposed to use the same term throughout, rather than two different terms, because the same type of document is referred to in each case.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Thank you.

The motion was agreed to, and the amendments were concurred in.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate, in view of the late stage of the session I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

DIVORCE BILLS

FIRST READINGS

Hon. George H. Ross, for Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the following bills:

Bill K-16, an Act for the relief of Real Perras.

Bill L-16, an Act for the relief of Izrael Szer.

Bill M-16, an Act for the relief of Mary Madeline Collings Bell.

Bill N-16, an Act for the relief of Joseph Flavien Denis Rheo Baillargeon.

Bill O-16, an Act for the relief of Susan Waldman Ruttenberg.

Bill P-16, an Act for the relief of Andre Labreche.

Bill Q-16, an Act for the relief of Alfred Sevigny.

Bill R-16, an Act for the relief of Beatrice Macdonald Stewart Pasmore.

Bill S-16, an Act for the relief of Georges-Etienne Cartier.

Bill T-16, an Act for the relief of Kathleen Dallas White Barnes.

Bill U-16, an Act for the relief of John Tilga.

Bill V-16, an Act for the relief of Edwin Albert Verge.

Bill W-16, an Act for the relief of Aline Sauve Page.

Bill X-16, an Act for the relief of Helen Margaret Robb Woods.

Bill Y-16, an Act for the relief of Jean Louis Larose.

Bill Z-16, an Act for the relief of Molly Wineberg Fishman.

The bills were read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Ross: With leave, next sitting.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Godbout: Honourable senators, I move that when this house adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday, June 14, at eight o'clock in the evening.

The motion was agreed to.

DIVORCE BILLS

THIRD READINGS

Hon. Mr. Ross moved the third reading of the following bills:

Bill J-15, an Act for the relief of Marian Douglas Jodrey Wallace.

Bill K-15, an Act for the relief of Elie Chabotar.

Bill L-15, an Act for the relief of Evelyn Robert Hurst Watson.

Bill M-15, an Act for the relief of Sidney Robert Allen.

Bill N-15, an Act for the relief of Cecil Brooks.

Bill O-15, an Act for the relief of Jeanne Jacqueline Content Brown.

Bill P-15, an Act for the relief of Eugene Theodore Mantha.

Bill Q-15, an Act for the relief of Marilyn Irene Damer Brophey.

Bill R-15, an Act for the relief of Dorothea Josephine Forbes Chaffey.

Bill S-15, an Act for the relief of Violet Ruby Baxter Williamson.

Bill T-15, an Act for the relief of Nicole Emile Dardano.

Bill U-15, an Act for the relief of Ruth Steirman Levine.

Bill V-15, an Act for the relief of Pearl Raicek Rutwind.

Bill W-15, an Act for the relief of Lorraine Bennett Favreau Williams.

Bill X-15, an Act for the relief of Robert Irvin Morrow.

Bill Y-15, an Act for the relief of Phyllis Lilian Buck Beatty.

Bill Z-15, an Act for the relief of Barbara Louise Bartlett Broadbent.

Bill A-16, an Act for the relief of Ronald Elikum Bessey.

Bill B-16, an Act for the relief of Margaret Francis Kennedy Bailie.

Bill C-16, an Act for the relief of Anna Cibula Reynolds.

Bill D-16, an Act for the relief of Mary McKinnon McEachran Coolon.

Bill E-16, an Act for the relief of Joseph Armand Jacques Phaneuf.

Bill F-16, an Act for the relief of Julia Hut Lutterman.

Bill G-16, an Act for the relief of Evelina Dixon Taylor.

Bill H-16, an Act for the relief of Frances Marguerite Beaudin Karibian.

Bill I-16, an Act for the relief of Claude Ferron.

The motion was agreed to, the bills were read the third time, and passed, on division.

NATIONAL PARKS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. A. B. Baird moved the second reading of Bill 261, an Act to amend the National Parks Act and to establish a National Park in the Province of Newfoundland.

He said: I am sure honourable senators will agree that the most important proposal put forward in this bill is for the establishment of a National Park in Newfoundland. This subject has been discussed in the other house on a number of occasions since Newfoundland entered Confederation and I believe that the proposal has been supported by members from all parts of Canada. The provincial Government, that is the Government of Newfoundland, has expressed its desire to have a park established, and discussions have been continuing for several years. A suitable general area on the east coast of Newfoundland has been agreed upon. The bill provides for the establishment of the park on proclamation by the Governor in Council as soon as the boundaries have been set out in the area turned over to the federal Government free of all encumbrances.

It is also proposed to amend the National Parks Act by withdrawing a parcel of land from the Waterton Lakes Park. This land will become the property of the Blood Band of Indians. In exchange, the Band will transfer to National Park ownership certain land within the park that is now owned by the Band. The reason for this exchange goes back to the time of the construction of the Chief Mountain International Highway through the park, some twenty years ago.

There is an Indian reserve belonging to the Blood Band of Indians located within the boundaries of the park. When the Chief Mountain Highway was built it was constructed across the reserve, and at the time no arrangements were made to compensate the Blood Band for the land taken. Negotiations have continued at intervals over the years, and it has only been within the past year that it is possible to reach an agreement.

It is now proposed to give the Blood Indians an area of about 753 acres between the north boundary of the park and the north boundary of the reserve in exchange for the right of way of the highway and for a small area within the reserve on which a park warden station is located. While the total area to be added to the park is only about 45 acres, compared to the detachment of about 753 acres, it is considered that this is a reasonable exchange. The Indians should receive compensation for the land taken for the right of way, as the lands being turned over to them are of little value to the park, and after the exchange the Indians would obtain direct access to their reserve from the north without crossing the park lands, where service patrol work within the park would be simplified. The Council of the Band has agreed to the proposed arrangement.

It has also been necessary to obtain the approval of the Province of Alberta, as, under the Alberta Natural Resources Act, any lands no longer required for park purposes revert to the province. The land to be detached from the park under the proposed amendment would have to be given back to the federal Government by the province before it could be added to the Indian reserve. The province has agreed to do this.

The bill also provides for clarification of certain provisions in the National Parks Act concerned with the use of park waters either in the parks or at locations adjacent to them. The present wording of the National Parks Act provides that the Governor in Council may make regulations permitting the use in the parks of water for domestic and for railway water supply purposes. It also provides for agreements with municipalities or water districts or other persons on land adjacent to the parks for the supply of water for domestic purposes. It has been somewhat doubtful whether the use of the word "domestic" in each case precludes the use of water in connection with the operation of a business, as, for example, a tourist camp development.

As it is considered that the use of water should not be restricted to this degree, the bill provides for the use of water within a park by any establishment licensed to do business within the park. It also provides for the removal of any limitations on the purposes for which water can be used by municipalities and water districts under the agreements now provided for in the act. The bill provides as well for the extension of the use of water to other persons on lands adjacent to a park for purposes of tourist accommodation as well as for the domestic purposes now permitted.

A further proposed amendment to the National Parks Act deals with the question of hospital services within the parks. At the present time Banff Park alone is concerned. The existing hospital serving Banff Townsite is operated by the Sisters of Ste. Martha. The Sisters have indicated that they cannot continue to operate the hospital much longer unless its operation is brought under the provincial hospitalization scheme, which is generally known as the "Dollar-a-Day" plan. Under this plan local residents of a hospital district pay only one dollar a day for each day they are in hospital, provided they accept standard ward accommodation. If they use more expensive hospital accommodation they pay the one dollar plus the difference in cost between the standard and the more expensive space. The difference between the cost of standard ward accommodation and the one dollar paid by the patient is met in equal shares by the provincial Government and the local municipality concerned. As there is no established municipality in Banff, it would be necessary to collect the municipal share by some form of local taxation.

There is some question whether the present term of the National Parks Act would permit the department to enter into an agreement with any hospital board or other authority that might be set up as required by the provincial legislation. There is also no provision in the present act whereby we could charge the cost of collecting the tax against the taxes received. The bill now before the house would provide these authorities.

One further amendment contained in the bill provides for the withdrawal of Broder Island from St. Lawrence Islands National Park. This island will be completely flooded through the construction of the St. Lawrence Seaway, and statutory provision must be made for its withdrawal if seaway construction is to proceed.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, would the sponsor of this bill let us know whether the location of the new park in Newfoundland has been decided upon, in what part of the province it will be located, its extent, and its boundaries? I think this information would be very helpful to us. I believe we are all in favour of the park being established, and at as early a date as possible, but also we would like to have full information with reference to it, particularly as to its size and location. That is one reason why I should like this bill to go to committee.

Honourable senators, some years ago a large piece of land contiguous to Montreal Lake was taken from Prince Albert National Park in Saskatchewan and given back to the province. I strenuously opposed that move, and I have always felt it was made so that certain timber operators could acquire the right to go into the area to cut timber. I am now, as I have been in the past, opposed to the reduction in size of any of our national parks. Some of them are none too big to start with. I am sure that honourable senators who have visited Waterton Lakes National Park have found it to be none too big, and I should like a lot more information about the parcel of land which it is now proposed to withdraw from this park and give back to the province of Alberta.

I do not wish to make any comments about the other proposed amendments to the National Parks Act, to provide for furnishing utilities to residents, levying taxes for hospitals, and so on. I am satisfied that these amendments are necessary. The town of Banff is a fairly large centre and it is only natural that the business people there should pay for certain benefits that they operate under.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: I wonder if my honourable friend from St. John's (Hon. Mr. Baird) would also be good enough to give the house some information about the accessibility of the proposed national park in Newfoundland to tourist traffic.

Hon. Mr. Baird: In reply to the remarks of the honourable senator from Rosetown (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) may I say that, for the benefit of all Canadians, we should like to make a national park out of the whole of Newfoundland. However, we are going to compromise and place the park in the Bonavista Bay district, whose beauty is known to everybody familiar with Newfoundland. When I look around this city, with all its lovely flowers and trees, I like to think also of the beauty of our Newfoundland hills, valleys and fishing villages. I feel our greatest difficulty is going to be in limiting the size of the park. We have not quite decided how far its boundaries will extend, but both the provincial and federal authorities are satisfied that a park should be established.

As to accessibility, may I say to the honourable senator from King's (Hon. Mr. McDonald) that all Newfoundland is accessible, and probably the Bonavista Bay district is a little more so than most parts. It lies close to Gander airport, and has its own seaport and railway facilities. In fact, it is situated just about at the hub of the universe.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, after the comment by the honourable senator from Rosetown (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) that we are all in favour of a national park in Newfoundland, I hesitate in any way to disapprove of its establishment. As has been said, the whole island is a park, and I am just wondering whether the national park will prove as beneficial to its own people as do the national parks in the other provinces. For instance, it is considered a "must" for everyone in Saskatchewan to visit the national park in the northern part of the province. The climate is quite different from that of the southern plains, where you may be buried in dust—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Not this year.

Hon. Mr. Horner: No, but as a rule. The park has an abundance of trees and fresh water and is most appealing to the inhabitants of the prairies. Similarly, the people of Alberta, which has a large area of treeless prairie land, are attracted in large numbers to Banff National Park. Now, as I understand it, the climate in any one part of Newfoundland does not vary greatly from that in any other part of the island, and I am wondering to what extent Newfoundlanders themselves will be attracted to their national park. I do not know what the park will cost, but I hope that it will not be too much.

I have no objection to the proposed withdrawal of 753 acres of land from the Waterton Lakes National Park. As the sponsor of the bill has said, it is of no particular value to the park.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That sort of thing is always said.

Hon. Mr. Horner: The area of land withdrawn from the Prince Albert National Park some years ago covered some seven townships. I, too, was opposed to that action, believing that the area should have been retained as grazing land for wild game. However, the parcel of land that is being withdrawn from the Waterton Lakes National Park will eventually be transferred to Canada for the use of the Blood Indians. In exchange for this land the Blood Band of Indians is giving up title to land used for the park highway and an area required for a warden's station.

Honourable senators, before being asked to approve this bill I think we should be given some information as to the cost of establishing a national park in Newfoundland.

Hon. Vincent Dupuis: Honourable senators, I should like to make a few comments on this bill. When Newfoundland came into Confederation it marked the fulfilment of a hope that I had long cherished, that Canada would extend her eastern territory through union with the island. From any point of view, it seems to me, it was a splendid move on the part of our fellow citizens of Newfoundland to decide to become a part of the Canadian nation. It is natural for the older sister provinces to spoil the youngest, and even if it were in that spirit—and I deny it—that Newfoundland is being granted a national park by this bill, I still would be very pleased to support the bill. I completely disagree with a view expressed by my honourable friend from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner). This park is going to be established in a new province whose future is very promising, although some may doubt it, and the park will be of great service to the people of the province as well as a strong attraction for tourists. I can speak freely about a measure to establish a national park in Newfoundland, for we in Quebec have not been spoiled with national parks—having, I think, only two small ones.

My honourable friend from Blaine Lake mentioned Prince Albert National Park, in Saskatchewan, which I had the great pleasure of visiting in 1933. It is a beautiful park. I saw there a lake almost the size of a sea—Lake Waskesiu—on whose shore the late Prime Minister Mackenzie King had a summer residence, in which I enjoyed the experience of eating the best duck that I have ever tasted. I was told at the time that wild ducks were pests to the farmers in that part of the country, because when they landed on a crop of wheat or oats they devoured it all within an hour.

Hon. Mr. Horner: No wonder they were fat.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: They don't eat oats, they eat wheat.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: I do not know the name given to these ducks, but I thought they were delicious.

Honourable senators, I am very pleased to have said a word on behalf of a national park for our youngest sister province, Newfoundland, and I hope the Senate will approve the bill.

Hon. Mr. Ross: May I ask if the sponsor of the bill proposes to refer the bill to a committee?

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. Baird: To the Committee on Natural Resources.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Baird: Honourable senators, I move that this bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Natural Resources.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I would like to ask the sponsor of the bill if he will produce a good map of Newfoundland to enable the members of the committee to study this famous province of his, and to help them to understand where the park will be located.

Hon. Mr. Baird: Certainly. However, I am terribly sorry that the education of the Deputy Leader of the Opposition has been so sadly neglected with respect to the great province of Newfoundland.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I know more about Newfoundland than my honourable friend thinks I do.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Baird, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Natural Resources.

MEAT INSPECTION BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. J. Adelard Godbout moved the second reading of Bill 352, an Act respecting the inspection of meat and meat products entering into international and interprovincial trade.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill is not very complicated; it simply embodies the regulations on classification and inspection of meat and meat products that are already contained in a statute originally enacted in 1907. The general regulations embodied in that statute, the Meat and Canned Foods Act, have to do with not only the classification and inspection of meat and meat products, but also the grading and inspection of canned foods, including fish, fruits and vegetables. The three phases of the act, having to do with meat inspection, canned fish and canned fruits and vegetables, have no administrative association, but are absolutely independent from an administrative point of view. The Department of Fisheries administers the inspection of fish, and the inspection of fruit and vegetables is done by the Department of Agriculture.

The officials of the respective departments feel that it is much easier for them to control the inspection of products which are under their surveillance. In 1949 Parliament passed the Fish Inspection Act, to take inspection of fish products out of the general law. It is now the wish of the Government to separate meat and meat products from fruit and vegetable products for sanitary inspection purposes. This, I think, would permit easier supervision and inspection by officials of the department.

This bill embodies the substance of the meat inspection law as it has existed since 1907, with one slight difference. Provision is made by clause 4 of the bill for the Governor in Council to make regulations providing for the registration of establishments and the payment by them of inspection and licence fees. I am told that this is not for the purpose of gaining revenue, but to enable officials to better control the establishments handling meat and meat products.

The bill, in any event, should go to a committee because there is a printing error to be corrected. I can assure the house that when it is in committee an official of the department will be on hand to answer any questions asked. Therefore, if the bill receives second reading, I will move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Have we no committee on agriculture? Perhaps it should go to the Committee on Natural Resources.

Hon. Mr. Godbout: I have no strong feelings as to which committee the bill should go, but I would point out that when meat and meat products have reached the inspection stage they have left the classification of agriculture and are in the classification of commerce.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: But the Minister of Agriculture is the one who will carry out the provisions of this legislation.

Hon. Mr. Godbout: This measure has to do only with meat and meat products which move from one province to another or are exported from Canada to another country; therefore, it is not a matter of concern to farmers but to business and commerce.

Hon. Mr. Horner: But it is very important to note that the products being dealt with are produced by the farmer.

Hon. Mr. Godbout: They are produced by him but when they have reached the inspection stage they have passed out of his hands. However, I have no objection to the bill being referred to the Committee on Natural Resources.

Hon. Mr. Reid: May I ask my honourable friend if it is intended that when this bill becomes law similar provisions contained in the Meat and Canned Foods Act will be immediately cancelled? If that is not done immediately there will be confusion as to which act should prevail.

Hon. Mr. Godbout: In answer to my friend I may say that upon passage of this bill similar clauses in the general law will be revoked.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Honourable senators, before this bill receives second reading, I have a few remarks to make. After reading in the House of Commons Hansard the debate that took place on the bill in that house, I believe there is considerable misunderstanding about it. As I understand it, this bill has to do with many questions, including the grading of hogs. We all remember that several years ago we were told we had to raise a better type of hog in order to secure the British market.

Hon. Mr. Godbout: Will my honourable friend permit me to interrupt him? I am of course glad to hear what he has to say, but I should point out that the question he is raising will come into consideration when we discuss Bill 411, which is an act to establish national standards for agricultural products, and to do other things. The bill before us deals only with the sanitary condition of meat and meat products entering into interprovincial and international trade.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Perhaps my remarks should be reserved for the debate on Bill 411. I have no objection to this bill going to committee.

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: May I ask the honourable senator to point out the section of the bill that provides for payment of licence fees? He cited section 4, but my reading of it indicates that it has nothing to do with licensing.

Hon. Mr. Godbout: Pardon me, but I was mistaken when I said section 4. I meant section 5, which reads:

> The Governor in Council may make regulations . . .
>
> (a) providing for the registration of establishments and prescribing fees for registration;
>
> (b) respecting the operation of establishments;
>
> (c) providing for the inspection of establishments, animals and meat products and prescribing fees therefor; . . .

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Does that mean that the federal Government will fix a licence fee to be charged on meat shipped from one province to another?

Hon. Mr. Godbout: No. The fee is to be paid for the licensing of an establishment which, after inspection, is recognized as a suitable and proper place for the preparation of meat for shipment from one province to another and for export to an outside country. In other words, the fee will be imposed for inspection of the premises and of the quality of the meat to be exported, but not on the quantity of meat being exported.

Some Hon. Senators: Question!

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Godbout, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 14, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 14, 1955

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

PRIVATE BILL

TRANS-BORDER PIPELINE COMPANY LTD.—
COMMONS AMENDMENT

A message was received from the House of Commons returning Bill Z-12, An Act to incorporate Trans-Border Pipeline Company Ltd., and acquainting the Senate that they have passed this bill with an amendment, to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The amendment was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

Page 2, line 31: After the word "lines", insert the following:

"provided that the main pipe line or main pipe lines for the transmission of gas and gaseous hydrocarbons shall be located entirely within Canada".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the amendment be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Next sitting.

DIVORCE PETITIONS

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE CONCURRED IN

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 420 to 424, dealing with petitions for divorce, and moved, with leave, that the said reports be now concurred in.

The motion was agreed to, on division.

DIVORCE BILLS

FIRST READINGS

Hon. Mr. Roebuck presented the following bills:

Bill A-17, an Act for the relief of James McMartin.

Bill B-17, an Act for the relief of Charles John Urban.

Bill C-17, an Act for the relief of Joseph Adalbert Beaudoin, otherwise known as Georges Beaudoin.

Bill D-17, an Act for the relief of Donald John McGillivray.

The bills were read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: With leave, next sitting.

NEW BRUNSWICK POTATO MARKETING BOARD

INQUIRY AND ANSWER

Hon. Mr. Pirie inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice of May 24:

1. What sum or sums of money were authorized by Treasury Board under the Agriculture Products Co-Operative Marketing Act and paid to the New Brunswick Potato Marketing Board under agreement entered into December 21, 1953?
2. What amount of the total sum covered support to the grower and what amount covered salaries or wages and other expense to members of the board, including fieldmen, office help, equipment, or any other expense?
3. Give names and amount received by each individual grower.
4. Give names and amount received by each individual dealer or shipper.
5. Give names and amount received by each individual member of the New Brunswick Potato Marketing Board for salary and expense.
6. Give names and amount received by any employee of the board by way of salary, wages and/or expenses.
7. Give total number of railway car loads or motor truck loads of potatoes which were inspected and certified by the federal government inspectors as to grade, and which were sold, shipped and marketed under the said agreement, and the amount received by the New Brunswick Potato Marketing Board for said potatoes.
8. What portion of the total sum on which support money was paid for potatoes delivered by growers to potato starch factories?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, the answer to the inquiry is as follows:

Final audit has not been completed in connection with the claim of the New Brunswick Potato Marketing Board, under the Agricultural Products Co-operative Marketing Act, and final settlement of the above claim has not yet been made. Since any claims due are payable to the Board under conditions specified in the agreement, and not to individuals, much of the details requested with respect to individuals will not be available in Departmental records. After the claim is processed, totals will be available with such detail as was considered necessary by the Department to assess the validity of the claim.

CANADA AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS STANDARDS BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—
DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Cairine R. Wilson moved the second reading of Bill 411, an Act to establish national standards for agricultural products and to regulate international and interprovincial trade in agricultural products.

She said: Honourable senators, the title of this bill, I think, is self-explanatory. According to the definition given in the bill:

"Agricultural product" means livestock (including fur-bearing animals raised in captivity), eggs, poultry, milk, vegetables, fruit, honey and maple syrup, and products thereof.

This bill replaces a number of existing statutes under which inspection is now carried on. The principal acts are: Canada Dairy Products Act; Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act; Livestock and Livestock Products Act; Maple Products Industry Act, and Meat and Canned Foods Act.

The purpose of the bill is to provide in one statute for the establishment of standards and grading for all the agricultural products covered by the foregoing acts. The new act will come into force by order of the Governor in Council. Regulations will be made under the new act; the corresponding regulations under the present acts will be revoked.

This bill empowers the Governor in Council to make regulations establishing grades with appropriate names for any class of agricultural products, and to prescribe terms and conditions as to the manner in which agricultural products may be graded and inspected. This is, as we know, for the regulation of interprovincial and export trade. No person shall sell or offer for sale any agricultural product under a grade name, or even under a designation closely resembling it. Under the bill the Governor in Council may make regulations re importation into Canada or exportation out of Canada, or conveyance from one province to another; and he may prohibit carriage to destinations outside the province of agricultural products for which grades are established unless they meet the requirements of this measure. Also, the Governor in Council may make regulations for the licensing of dealers in any agricultural product and for the issue, cancellation and suspension of licences.

Inspectors, graders and other persons necessary for the administration and enforcement of this measure will be appointed or employed under the provisions of the Civil Service Act. The bill will give inspectors power to enter any premises where they have reason to believe that goods of the type to which the bill applies are offered for sale.

This measure, of course, will not interfere with agricultural products which are sold in the province, unless any dealer falsely claims that some article has been inspected and bears the Government-approved stamp.

There are many provisions for administration, also penalties attached to infringement of any of these stipulations. There are so many clauses that honourable senators, I am sure, will wish to be better informed as to the contents of the bill, and if it receives second reading I will move that it be sent to the Banking and Commerce Committee.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Would the honourable senator kindly point out what is new in this bill, which replaces five existing acts?

Hon. Mrs. Wilson: There is not anything new. The bill is a consolidation. I do not know whether the penalties are more severe: I think we shall have to inquire about that from the officials if the bill goes to committee.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, I wish to congratulate the honourable member from Rockcliffe (Hon. Mrs. Wilson) upon her clear explanation of this bill. I do not propose to deal with the amendments, except to discuss certain standards and grading of livestock, a subject on which I think I am qualified to speak. I know that our first legislation dealing with the grading of hogs was rather severe. At that time it was felt that our bacon was not suitable to the British market, and that we did not have the right type of hog to compete with the Danish hog. However, I was told by pork handlers in the Old Country that our hogs were all right, but that our method of curing the meat was not good. They said it did not compare favourably with the Danish method.

Only this summer I had occasion to visit a former neighbour of mine, a Dane, who is now a very successful Jersey cattle rancher in Alberta. He and his wife had recently flown to Denmark for a family reunion. Sixteen of the surviving nineteen members of his family were able to attend the gathering, five of them flying over from the United States. I think he said one brother was ill in New Zealand and was unable to attend. Anyway, he told me that conditions are wonderful now in Denmark and that if it were not for his family he would return to his old homeland to live. I asked him if Danish hog producers were able to sell all their bacon, saying that I understood they were bound by certain restrictions, and he replied that they are selling to England all the hogs they could raise. That was just last summer, when Canadian hog producers were making scarcely any sales to that country.

There was an interesting discussion on this bill in the House of Commons. The Minister of Agriculture referred to a certain livestock butcher in an Alberta town who had helped him out on a former occasion. Well, I would just like to say there are no longer any butchers, in the true sense of the word. The so-called butchers merely sell the meat now. The packers have been anxious to see this condition brought about. It has resulted in higher freight costs, which have to be borne by the public, for sometimes a return journey of as long as 400 miles is necessary in order that cattle may be shipped away to be slaughtered.

I remember an international company buying out a local butcher in Blaine Lake who had a good cement abattoir. They put in a regular city market, bought beef for about three cents and sold it for twenty-five, if I remember correctly. First of all, I thought they were trying to do something for the community, but one day the head man came in and I had quite a disagreement with him. He said to me, "Oh, you don't understand." To which I replied, "Well, I understood the cattle and hog business well enough to make a living long before I heard of you or your company, and I will start a real butcher shop in town and just see how long you last." So I got in touch with a man by the name of Hill, got him started up in business and provided him with real beef to sell. In a very short time the fancy company closed up, because they could not compete with the man who did his own killing and cut the meat right at the block.

At one time I did my own killing, and I had a crew of men under me. There was no going to the butcher's shop, or the baker's shop either, in those days, but in spite of that our family lived well. Four or five hogs would be killed in the fall, and the pork hung up for the winter. Then in the summer, before the deer-hunting season, year-old lambs and sheep had to be killed every so often for fresh meat. When I was young I tried to dodge helping my father to kill pigs, and when there was a sheep or lamb to be killed I would scheme to be somewhere else, but my father would wait for me to make sure that I helped him. One day I was in tears, for he insisted on my helping him and I could not get out of it. He scolded me and said: "What will become of you if you grow up and raise a family? Will you have to depend on somebody else to do the killing so that you can have meat?" So I gave in. Some years later, when I was living in the West he visited me, and it happened that a neighbour needed some killing done and I was asked to help. I took my father along with me and I said, "Are you satisfied now that I don't have to depend on somebody else to do the killing?"

Honourable senators, there is a lot of nonsense discussed about this whole question of grading agricultural products. The original intention of grading was to assist the producer but, as a matter of fact, all through the years, as I have maintained, it has helped the packer to make large profits. I stated that years ago in an agricultural committee of the Senate. The late Senator Burns was present, and he said, "Well, I don't care." To which I replied, "I didn't expect you would, but that is what I think just the same." Under the system of grading, one price is charged if a pig is one pound underweight, and another price if the pig is one pound overweight. Some people have objected to too much fat on red brand beef, and the farmer has been accused of not feeding his livestock properly. Well, we as farmers and feeders have heard that story often. As a matter of fact, all that excess fat is wasted today.

Honourable senators, when the Canada Dairy Products Act was under discussion in the House of Commons a year ago the member for Kamloops, which is a great ranching country, said that there is no better beef than that which comes from a healthy cow. The member was a lawyer, so I assume he must have got his information from men who dealt with livestock. He talked a great deal in the Commons at that time about the discrimination against cow beef, and he knew what he was talking about. If the meat is old and the fat has not been on it a long time, nothing could have a finer flavour. I do not know if it was because of his discussion of the question, but ever since then cow beef has been brought to the attention of the public. Cattle used to be fed so that the animals were broad in the back and were just loaded with fat, but now there is more lean meat, and that is what people want today.

I may be censured for saying so, but I still believe that the great hope of this country is the farm, and the farm family. I think that the present system of grading needs looking into, and that the judgment of the farmer and the feeder should be respected.

When I first went to the West the Mennonites were settling there from the Old Country and from Nebraska, and it was wonderful to see the men and women raise their own cattle and hogs and kill them for pork and beef. They made blood sausage from the pork, and did everything themselves; they took the bone out of the pork, made the lard, and the spare-ribs taken from the pork were boiled in the boilers of lard. Somehow, those ribs would keep all winter, and they tasted like the choicest goose. Those people pickled the pigs' feet, and made sure that nothing was wasted.

If this bill goes to a committee, I would like to see an amendment made with regard to the grading of hogs. We have a very fine class of hogs in this country, and I think that the strict rule of grading has gone on long enough and that an unnecessary restriction is being placed on the producer, with the packers often getting all the advantage.

I want to mention also the grading of lambs. The practice is to grade a year-old sheep down to about half the price of a lamb, although as a matter of fact it is difficult to distinguish between the meat. Also, the meat from a buck lamb is given a lower grading that that of a ewe lamb, although here again there is very little difference in the taste of the meat.

Honourable senators may not be fully aware of the practice with respect to the grading of hogs. Boar hogs, for instance, are sometimes graded down as low as five cents a pound, although as a matter of fact, taking the whole carcass, the meat is as good as or perhaps a little better than other pork. I recall seeing boar hogs killed at the depot for use in the Abitibi Lumber Company camps, and it was said to be the best pork the men ever ate. In my view there is a lot of nonsense in the matter of the grading of meat, and, it has served to discourage some producers. What may happen is this: A farmer may raise a hog, and for some reason or other—it may be that the roads are bad and he cannot get to market—the hog gets over weight. That very fact will considerably reduce the amount of money he receives for the animal. At the Royal Winter Fair in Toronto I saw a man from Saskatchewan chasing a pig around the alleyways in the pig pens early one morning. He looked tired and so did the pig. I asked him what he was doing, and he told me that the pig was some eight pounds overweight and he had been chasing it all night in order to get its weight down. I told him that I thought that he would lose eight pounds too. It seems to me ridiculous that so much attention should be paid to the weight of hogs in determining the value of the meat.

I once drove a sleigh load of pigs to town, and, failing to get a satisfactory price because they were overweight, I turned around and took them home again, and slaughtered them myself. Although I did not have a licence for doing so, I peddled the meat around town and made myself a few extra dollars for my day's work. However, all farmers may not be as handy a butcher as I am. As a matter of fact, the butcher's work has been pretty well taken out of the farmer's hands; nowadays even the farmer's bacon comes to him sliced wafer thin and packaged.

In closing, honourable senators, may I say that I should like to hear some further discussion on this bill, and perhaps when it goes to committee the provisions covering the grading of hogs can be amended.

Hon. Mr. Golding: Would the honourable senator tell us what the minimum and maximum weights are for a Grade A hog?

Hon. Mr. Horner: I am not at all sure of my figures, but I think the low and high are something like 125 pounds and 175 pounds, dressed weight.

Hon. Mr. Barbour: I think it is more like 145 and 175 pounds.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Possibly so. Anyway, my argument is that when a farmer is raising a large bunch of pigs it is not at all easy for him to govern their weight to the exact pound; furthermore, in my opinion the meat from a 200-pound hog is just as good as, or perhaps better than, that from a 175 pounder.

On motion of Hon. Mr. McLean, the debate was adjourned.

DIVORCE BILLS

SECOND READINGS

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the second reading of the following bills:

Bill K-16, an Act for the relief of Real Perras.

Bill L-16, an Act for the relief of Izrael Szer.

Bill M-16, an Act for the relief of Mary Madeline Collings Bell.

Bill N-16, an Act for the relief of Joseph Flavien Denis Rheo Baillargeon.

Bill O-16, an Act for the relief of Susan Waldman Ruttenberg.

Bill P-16, an Act for the relief of Andre Labreche.

Bill Q-16, an Act for the relief of Alfred Sevigny.

Bill R-16, an Act for the relief of Beatrice Macdonald Stewart Pasmore.

Bill S-16, an Act for the relief of Georges-Étienne Cartier.

Bill T-16, an Act for the relief of Kathleen Dallas White Barnes.

Bill U-16, an Act for the relief of John Tilga.

Bill V-16, an Act for the relief of Edwin Albert Verge.

Bill W-16, an Act for the relief of Aline Sauve Page.

Bill X-16, an Act for the relief of Helen Margaret Robb Woods.

Bill Y-16, an Act for the relief of Jean Louis Larose.

Bill Z-16, an Act for the relief of Molly Wineberg Fishman.

The motion was agreed to, and the bills were read the second time, on division.

THIRD READINGS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, as a rule I object to bills being given two readings in the same day. However, these bills have to be printed and sent to the House of Commons promptly if they are to be passed at this session, and with the unanimous consent of the house I would move that they be read a third time now.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Honourable senators, may I say to my friend from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) that I am quite willing to give the required consent, but I would draw his attention to the fact that as the present session will not conclude before August 1 there is little need for hurry.

Hon. Senators: Oh, oh!

The motion was agreed to, and the bills were read the third time, and passed on division.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 15, 1955

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

INTERNATIONAL RIVER IMPROVEMENTS BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 3, an Act respecting the construction, operation and maintenance of international river improvements.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: With leave of the Senate, next sitting.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 328, an Act respecting unemployment insurance.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: With leave of the Senate, next sitting.

BLIND PERSONS BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 350, an Act to amend the Blind Persons Act.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: With leave of the Senate, next sitting.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS REFUNDING BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 450, an Act respecting Canadian National Railways and to provide for the refunding of matured, maturing and callable financial obligations.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: With leave of the Senate, next sitting.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS FINANCING AND GUARANTEE BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 451, an Act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System during the calendar year 1955, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: With leave, next sitting.

PRIVATE BILL

PROVIDENT ASSURANCE COMPANY—REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the report of the committee on Bill J-16.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (J-16) intituled: "An Act to incorporate The Provident Assurance Company", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 8, 1955, examined the said bill and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave of the Senate, I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

MEAT INSPECTION BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hayden presented the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill 352.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (352) intituled: "An Act respecting the inspection of meat and meat products entering into international and interprovincial trade", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 9, 1955, examined the said bill and now beg leave to report the same with the following amendments:

1. Page 4, lines 21 and 22: strike out the words "whether or not the forfeiture is directed by the conviction." and substitute therefor the words "if such forfeiture is directed by the Court."

2. Page 4, line 38: strike out the figure "5" and substitute therefor the figure "4".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these amendments be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I suggest that a few words of explanation of these rather important amendments would be useful to those who were not present at the sitting of the committee.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: The chief amendment which was made has to do with this situation. Under the provisions of the bill certain requirements in the way of standards of meat products, etc., must be observed. Then there is a section under which every person who violates any provision of section 8 or of any regulation made under that section is guilty of an offence and liable to a penalty. It may be that in the course of commission of such an offence a truck or some other object or article might be used in transporting meat products. The bill that came to us in committee provided that when a person was convicted of a violation in such a case there would be automatic forfeiture of the truck, object or article.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: May I ask the honourable senator whether under the Customs Act there is not automatic forfeiture of trucks or automobiles which are used in the commission of the offence of smuggling?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: May I just finish my explanation? In committee it was felt that, since we have taken out of the offence under this bill any question of intent or knowledge, some person at some place along the line should have the opportunity to exercise a discretion in the penalty to be meted out so that substantial justice would be done. We felt the proper person to determine whether or not a forfeiture should occur would be the magistrate or judge trying the particular case.

In reply to the question interjected by the honourable senator from Rigaud (Hon. Mr. Dupuis), may I say it is quite true that there are provisions for forfeiture under the Customs Act. However, so far as third persons are concerned there are relieving provisions whereby an accused may apply for a declaration of interest, but a person who smuggled and used a car as part of the smuggling operation certainly could not come into court and say that he used the car innocently; whereas under the provisions of the bill it could be—

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Is not intent necessary before there is a forfeiture?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I was answering the question in another way and saying that the offence of smuggling must of necessity involve knowledge. If I bring goods into the country by automobile without the benefit of customs, I have knowledge of doing so. On the other hand, under the bill before us a trucking agency might be called on to deliver some meat products from one province to another, and the law requires that the meat products must bear certain markings and certificates indicating that the products have satisfied the provisions of the act. The trucker who accepts these products and transports them interprovincially might innocently fail to notice the lack of certificates. As a matter of fact, he might not even know that such certificates are required. Nevertheless, in the interest of public health it is important that these certificates be provided, and if they are not and the trucker transports in those circumstances he is guilty of offence, but not in the way a smuggler would be guilty under the Customs Act when he uses a car or other method of transportation for bringing goods into Canada, for the smuggler knows what he is doing. We felt that the difference between the two kinds of cases should be recognized.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: There is no difference.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I would not be as dogmatic as my honourable friend. I never like to make pronouncements from on high. I would prefer to have the legislation allow for a difference and to place discretionary powers in the hands of the magistrate or judge who is hearing the evidence and considering the conduct of the person charged.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Very good.

Hon. Mr. Dupuis: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Speaker: May I remind honourable senators that there is no motion before the house and that consideration of the report has been put off until tomorrow, at which time the report may be debated.

CANADA AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS STANDARDS BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mrs. Wilson for the second reading of Bill 411, an Act to establish national standards for agricultural products and to regulate international and interprovincial trade in agricultural products.

Hon. A. Neil McLean: Honourable senators, with reference to Bill 411, I am in favour of the principle of this bill, and I have the highest confidence in the officials of the Department of Agriculture. I feel that an excellent job for agriculture is being done by the Minister, Deputy Minister and their capable staff. However, we must realize we are not only putting laws on the books for the present, but for future years as well, and any legislation of this kind is deserving of our careful attention.

The British North America Act endeavoured to make trade between the provinces as free as possible and we should endeavour to keep it that way. A great many food products are sold under brand names both at home and abroad. Buyers in foreign countries and in the Canadian market know well hundreds of branded Canadian products; for instance, Maple Leaf bacon, Swift's premium hams, Aylmer brands, Heinz brands, Pippin brand potatoes, Bird's Eye frozen foods, and many others. The owners of these brands have spent millions of dollars in building up these high-standard brands throughout the markets of the world over a long period of years, and they are proud of the reputation for quality that they have established through laboratory research and in other ways. Now if anything happened to usurp these brands by grade markings, I feel sure it would not be understood in foreign countries, as a great many important foreign buyers are interested simply in brands, not grades.

After being in the export market for one-third of a century, I know how sensitive foreign buyers are to change. When they have been buying a brand for years and know it, that is what they want, without any frills.

Exporters receive wonderful help from our Canadian Trade Commissioners sent out to different parts of the free world by the Department of Trade and Commerce. I think Canada has the best trade representatives abroad of any country of the globe. They make a careful study of foreign markets, and the knowledge they gain as to what kind of goods there is a market for in the respective countries where they are stationed and how the goods should be put up to meet competition is invaluable to Canadian exporters. Having taken for granted that the goods being exported are of good quality and high nutritious food value, as sold in the domestic market, we then must remember that the buyer in the foreign country is spending his own money and has the right to say how he wants the goods put up; and if his desires are not met the orders are liable to go to competitors in other countries, and there are plenty of them looking for business. A good many importers in countries not as rich as Canada is and having not many dollars to spend, want the best in straight food value they can get. That is the first consideration. They are not interested in fancy wrappers or trimmings that may possibly enhance the outside looks but on the other hand raises the price and adds nothing whatever to the food value of the contents. Many of us here remember when we bought the major portion of our foodstuffs in old-fashioned sacks or barrels, brown paper bags and brown wrapping paper. Now we have cellophane and fancy boxes and other wrappings, which we are quite willing to pay extra for, although we know the modern wrapping does not add to the food value of the contents.

Now I can easily see the reason why an analyst would seize goods or hold up shipment, for such a person as a representative of the Food and Drug Division would be a trained scientist, and as such would make an examination as to quality and food value. In ordinary circumstances goods certainly should not be shipped anywhere, for human consumption, if they are poor quality and low food value. In this connection, most of the leading food processors of Canada have their own laboratories, and their chemists and biologists are given full authority to establish absolute control over all foods being processed in order to see that the high quality of their respective brands is always maintained.

On the other hand, an inspector would have to be a Solomon, it seems to me, to be always able to make prompt and wise decisions at certain times when such decisions are needed. At our coast ports there are many receiving warehouses where goods are stored in advance of departing ships which may call and leave on short notice. We will say, for instance, that there are branded goods stored in one of these warehouses, and these goods may be just what the buyer ordered, as the importer knows full well what competition he has to meet, but the goods may be held up by an inspector on technicalities such as markings, boxing, etc., which have nothing to do with the food value. In the meantime the ship sails or the letter of credit runs out. Well the exporter simply loses the business and may have to take his goods back home after a great deal of expense.

The bill states that agricultural products and other things may be detained 90 days or more. I am wondering what "other things" include? Would those words mean trucks, a span of horses, wagons or other vehicles, or what do they mean? Ninety days, or such longer period as may be prescribed, is a long time to hold goods up from shipment, especially when the food value of the goods is by far the major factor in question. The bill says that when a person has been convicted of a violation of the act—even on a technicality—then in addition to the penalty that is imposed the agricultural products and other things are forfeited to the Crown, whether or not such forfeiture is directed by the court conviction. Why take the matter out of the courts in this way? The penalties are heavy, being as high as a $2,000 fine or a year's imprisonment, or both, besides forfeiture of the goods and the penalties apply to an employer even if any of his help broke the prescribed regulations, and the employee does not have to be identified as such.

We all know that it is often difficult to get responsible help in connection with primary industries, and also that a considerable number of immigrants are coming into the country to work on farms, in packing plants, etc., and it takes them some time to get used to our ways and methods. We can only hope that great discretion will be used in the enforcement of this part of the act. I can see no reason, for instance, for seizure and forfeiture of goods unless it is on account of poor quality. Then again, the markings on the package will be used as prima facie evidence. There is quite a tendency in the Maritimes, I know, to use second-hand boxes over again in the domestic trade. This is done for the sake of economy, and old markings may have been carelessly left on a package, as they are sometimes hard to get off. This is another instance where discretion will have to be used by officials.

To sum up: To grade goods nationally and internationally needs a great deal of careful thought, for so many important factors are involved, especially where brands are concerned. At this time Canada needs all the export trade possible, for our international trade balance is in the debit column, and we must see that nothing is done to unnecessarily interfere with selling our goods abroad and keeping our interprovincial trade at the highest level possible. And for this purpose our foreign and interprovincial trade must be free of unnecessary restrictions.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. John T. Haig: May I ask the honourable leader of the Government whether it is intended that this bill should go to committee?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The honourable senator from Rockcliffe (Hon. Mrs. Wilson), who moved second reading of the bill, suggested that it should be referred to committee. The honourable lady is absent at the moment. If the bill receives second reading before she returns to the house, I will move for reference to committee.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Thank you.

Honourable senators, I have only a few words to say about the bill at this time. Quite naturally, we are all interested in this legislation, for the reason that Canadian producers are finding it more and more difficult to get into foreign markets. Members of parliament who have travelled abroad during the past six months all come back with the same story of the increasing difficulty of trading in foreign markets.

I recall about a year ago being at one of your parties, Mr. Speaker, which I always enjoy very much, and there meeting an ambassador from one of the smaller European countries. He asked me what part of Canada I came from, and when I mentioned Manitoba, he immediately said "Oh yes, Manitoba wheat." He then went on to tell me that his country had always bought wheat from Western Canada until about a year ago when it purchased a carload from Russia. But because they had found a lot of little stones in the shipment, he said they were going to purchase Canadian wheat again. That to me was a compliment on the high standard of quality that we have maintained.

I agree with what has been said by the honourable senator from Southern New Brunswick (Hon. Mr. McLean), but I would remind him that as members of this house we all want to pass only legislation that will assure us that when our goods go abroad they are up to the standard represented by us. That is the only way we can maintain the confidence of buyers of our products.

Let me illustrate my point. Lawyers are often the butt of good-humoured criticism in this house and elsewhere, but they are the very people whose advice is sought by anyone in trouble. The reputation of a lawyer is built up through the years in part by his ability and his strategy in handling important matters, but above all other things, by his integrity, which is worth more than rubies to him. Once he has lost the public confidence, he has lost everything. The same principle can, I think, be applied to Canada as a producer for foreign markets: our goods must be as we represent them if we are to maintain buyer confidence. Our Government is now trying to sell goods, and it is having difficulties. I am not now indulging in any form of criticism at all. My point is that we are having difficulties so great that we may be faced with the choice of not selling goods or reducing the price. Some of my friends will not like that statement as to what we may have to do; but whatever we do do, let us never reduce the quality of the wheat that we sell.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Because we are through if we do that. I say the same thing with regard to our manufactured products. This bill, as well as one that was reported back from committee this afternoon, deals with the standards of our goods on the world market, and both bills should have our full support. The only criticism that I am making of this bill is that it does not leave a magistrate or judge any discretion as to whether things seized from persons who have been convicted of a violation of the bill should be forfeited or not. I am sure that when we are considering this bill in committee we will amend it in this respect as we did the Meat Inspection Bill.

I am always glad to see the Government bring in legislation of this character, because our country is one of the foremost trading nations of the world. We were in third place among the trading nations of the world, but now we are in fourth place. Really, we are a small nation to occupy such an important position. Our country depends greatly on foreign trade. Our mineral products do not require such important standards of grading, but grading of manufactured goods and agricultural products is most important on the world market. And as I said before, we Canadians are dependent on world markets and we must keep our standards high if we propose to continue in such an eminent position as we now occupy.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, I have just one point, and I am raising it in the hope that the Department of Agriculture and the Minister will make note of it and take the matter up. While in the southern States last year I learned that they were there selling a grade of bacon called "Canadian Bacon", which was not a product of Canada. Now, I do not think there is any way in which we in Canada can protect those words, but I feel that the poor grade of bacon that was being sold under our name certainly was not doing this country any good at all. I do not know that anything can be done about it, but I think that our officials should draw this to the attention of the officials or the Government of the United States. Whilst we have no right to tell them what name to put on their product, it is hardly playing the game of trade in a fair way to use the word "Canadian" on a grade of bacon produced in the United States and much inferior to anything produced in Canada.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I would like to say a word or two with respect to the principle that one finds in section 5 of this bill, which says:

> 5. (1) The Governor in Council may make regulations for prohibiting
> (a) importation into Canada . . .

Now, it is a very serious thing to prohibit the importation of goods into this country; and when one sees a section by which officials are taking into their hands the power to stop international trade one very naturally looks upon the section with, not exactly suspicion but with circumspection, shall I say.

The section continues:

> (b) exportation out of Canada, or
> (c) sending or conveyance from one province to another, of an agricultural product of any class unless it complies with prescribed requirements, has been prepared in accordance with prescribed conditions and is packed and marked in prescribed manner.

It is perfectly all right to make regulations saying that goods shall not be exported from Canada or imported into Canada unless prepared in accordance with prescribed conditions. It may be that the conditions will be designed for reasons of health or something of that kind. The paragraph uses the words, "is packed and marked in prescribed manner". That may serve a very useful purpose, because fraudulent or incorrect marking will do the kind of damage to which the previous speaker referred.

The clause uses even stronger words, when it says: " . . . unless it complies with prescribed requirements . . ." for the prescribed requirements may be with regard to anything. In other words, under this bill, Parliament is surrendering into the hands of the officials of the department, with the consent of the Governor in Council, the power to prohibit trade both ways across the international border for any reason which they desire to state and can get by the council.

I suggest to the members of this house that that is something which Parliament should never surrender. We have kept a fairly close control over tariffs. No tariff can be erected by Order in Council. Because of the necessity of protecting our trade and the intercommunication between ourselves and other countries a tariff is imposed only when Paliament says so. But here, the broadest powers are handed over to the executive to prescribe trading either way, with scarcely any limitation on what the conditions shall be.

Subsections 2 and 3 of section 5 read as follows:

(2) The Governor in Council may make regulations for prohibiting the carriage to a destination outside the province in which it was received of an agricultural product of a class for which grades have been established under part I or of a class for which requirements have been prescribed under this section unless

(a) prescribed evidence that the product meets the requirements of this act and the regulations has been obtained and produced as prescribed, and

(b) the product is identified in prescribed manner as an agricultural product that meets the requirements of this act and the regulations.

(3) No person shall

(a) import into Canada,

(b) export from Canada,

(c) send or convey from one province to another, or

(d) carry or receive for carriage an agricultural product contrary to a regulation made under this section.

That, I submit to this house, is an authority so broad that we should not submit a department to the pressures which may be brought upon it. We should never pass an authority of that kind unless we know exactly what the regulations are going to be or, at least, the limitations that we place upon it. For instance, if we say in this section that they can prescribe health regulations, that is all right. I go a long way with regulations to preserve the quality of goods and their fitness for human consumption. If we say that the goods must be correctly described, all right. I think fraudulent description is a serious matter. There may be some powers in other fields or divisions which I would be prepared to hand over to this department or to the Governor in Council, but I am not prepared to give them power to prohibit the importation into and exportation from Canada of all goods according to their own sweet will. I think it is wrong to hand that power over to officials or to the executive; we, as members of Parliament, should keep it in our own hands. So I hope the matter will be thoroughly discussed and proper amendments made when the bill goes to committee.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Is it not a fact that, without the intervention of Parliament, the value of goods can be changed, even by the imposition of an excessive duty, when they are brought into this country?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The honourable senator is referring to the operations of the Customs Department?

Hon. Mr. Horner: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Of course, I am a free-trader, and I do not approve of any kind of restrictions on trade and commerce. I want more free trade.

Hon. Mr. Horner: I will go further than you in that direction.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I am glad to hear that: the honourable senator will have to go quite a distance. I have objected many times to the extent of the powers we entrust to the officials of the Customs Department, but that those powers have been handed over is no reason why, in this case, unlimited powers should be conceded to the executive. We should carefully prescribe the powers that we propose to hand over.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mrs. Wilson, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

PRIVATE BILL

TRANS-PRAIRIE PIPELINES, LTD.—COMMONS AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the amendments made by the House of Commons to Bill U-12, an Act to authorize Trans-Prairie Pipelines, Ltd. to construct, own and operate an extra-provincial pipe line.

Hon. T. A. Crerar moved that the amendments be concurred in.

He said: Honourable senators, a few words of explanation of these amendments before we vote on them might be useful.

It will be recalled that on May 12 last the Senate passed Bill U-12, entitled "An Act to authorize Trans-Prairie Pipelines, Ltd. to construct, own and operate an extra-provincial pipe line." Trans-Prairie Pipelines, Ltd. is a company incorporated under Manitoba law. So long as it was transporting oil within the boundaries of Manitoba it was not affected by the provisions of the general Pipe Lines Act. As I mentioned on second reading of the bill, oil fields having what is now a substantial production have been developed in the Virden district. Across the provincial boundary line, some ten or fifteen miles away, oil fields have been discovered in Saskatchewan; and what this company desired was authority to cross the provincial boundary line, tap these oil fields in Saskatchewan, and transport the oil to a point called Cromer, where it would connect with the interprovincial pipe line running from Edmonton to Superior and on to Sarnia. The bill as passed by the Senate simply provided that this company could carry its pipe line across the boundary to Saskatchewan, with the proviso that, conformable to the general Pipe Lines Act, the operations must be carried on under the administration provided for by the act, and with the approval of the Transport Board.

In due course the bill went to the House of Commons. But, as the poet Burns has said, "The best-laid schemes o' mice an' men, gang aft a-gley", which means—and I explain this for the benefit of the Irish and English, who unfortunately do not understand the Scottish vernacular—that sometimes one's plans go wrong. When the bill was under consideration in the Commons, strong objections were taken in certain quarters to the endowment of a Manitoba-incorporated company with the power to cross a provincial boundary line. As a result of the discussions, and the desire of the promoters to get authority to proceed into Saskatchewan, a compromise was reached. What is practically a new bill was drafted; and it was acceptable to the committee of the Commons that considered it, and satisfactory to the promoters. It really amounted to a new incorporation. The bill was reported back to the Commons; and our innocent little measure, Bill U-12, amended in this rather formidable fashion, now comes back to us for concurrence in those amendments. The promoters are the same promoters; the capital structure is the same capital structure; the company's operations will still be subject to the general Pipe Lines Act and will be carried on, as provided in the original bill, under the authority of the Board of Transport Commissioners.

Personally, I doubt if it was necessary to proceed by what is in effect a new incorporation. A year ago or more we passed what was known as the Niagara Gas Transmission Limited Bill, which was on all fours with Bill U-12 as we passed it recently. We were advised by the Law Clerk of the Senate that it was quite within the competence of Parliament to pass the bill. However, as I stated a moment ago, exception was taken to that form in the House of Commons, and what amounts to really a new incorporation took its place and appears now as amendments to the bill. I have just moved concurrence in these amendments and I trust that the Senate will accept them.

Hon. Mr. Ross: The General Pipe Lines Act provides that the route of every Canadian pipe line is to be approved by the Board of Transport Commissioners. As I understand the amendments to this bill, the Trans-Prairie pipe line must not go into the United States, but must be kept entirely within Canada.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: That is not correct. The honourable senator is thinking of another bill altogether. At no time did this bill propose that the pipe line should go through any part of the United States. It merely provided that the pipe line may cross the international boundary between Manitoba and Saskatchewan and pick up some oil in Saskatchewan. There was another bill before the Senate which proposed to have a pipe line originate in Manitoba and go into the United States, and I am sure that is the bill which my honourable friend has in mind.

Hon. Mr. Reid: When were these amendments submitted to the other house?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: One day last week.

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: June 7.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Thank you.

The motion was agreed to, and the amendments were concurred in.

CANADIAN FORCES BILL

REFERRED BACK TO COMMITTEE

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill 257, an Act respecting the Canadian Forces.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, I move that this report be adopted.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, I move, seconded by the honourable senator from Rosetown (Hon. Mr. Aseltine):

That the report be not now adopted, but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, with instructions to the said committee to amend the said bill as follows:

"Page 6, line 11: Delete the words 'either' and 'or of herself' from the said line."

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, I am bound to point out that under Rule 24(g) of the Rules of the Senate one day's notice must be given for an instruction to a committee. Has the honourable senator unanimous consent of the house to proceed now with his motion or must he give one day's notice? I would point out that this is not a matter of resolving the question but merely of giving the honourable senator unanimous consent to proceed.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Haig, seconded by the Honourable Senator Aseltine:

That the report be not now adopted, but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, with instructions to the said committee to amend the said bill as follows:

"Page 6, line 11: Delete the words 'either' and 'or of herself' from the said line."

Is it your pleasure to adopt the amendment?

Hon. Mr. Haig: Honourable senators, if I had my way in committee sections 15 and 23 of the bill would have been struck out, but I ran into some difficulties. I have therefore moved an amendment which to my mind is a straight challenge to one of the main issues in the bill.

Section 15 of the bill would amend the Defence Services Pension Act by adding the following immediately after section 31 thereof:

"31A. (1) For the purposes of this Act, a woman who shall, if the Treasury Board so directs, be deemed to be the widow of that officer and to have become married to him at such time as she commenced being so represented as his wife, and for the purposes of this Act a woman to whom this subsection would apply, but for her marriage to an officer or former officer after such time as she commenced being so represented as the wife of that officer, shall, if the Treasury Board so directs, be deemed to have become married to that officer at the time when, in fact, she commenced being so represented."

(a) establishes to the satisfaction of the Treasury Board that she had, for a period of not less than seven years immediately prior to the death of an officer or former officer with whom she had been residing and whom by law she was prohibited from marrying by reason of a previous marriage either of that officer or of herself to another person, been maintained and publicly represented by that officer as his wife, . . .

As I understand this section, it means that a woman may go and live with an officer who is already married, and if he acknowledges her as his wife and they live together for seven years, upon his death it will be within the power of the Treasury Board to grant her a pension under the Defence Services Pension Act. In other words, the woman may have lived in adultery for over seven years, and as a reward the Parliament of Canada proposes to give her a pension.

Hon. Mr. Reid: It is just terrible.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I think so. Somebody might ask me why I have mentioned adultery. Well, according to Chapter 20 of the Book of Exodus in the King James version of the Bible, one of the Ten Commandments is:

Thou shalt not commit adultery.

There is a straight prohibition against adultery in the Bible.

If my amendment is adopted, the first part of section 31a(1) of the act will read as follows:

For the purposes of this Act, a woman who (a) establishes to the satisfaction of the Treasury Board that she had, for a period of not less than seven years immediately prior to the death of an officer or former officer with whom she had been residing and whom by law she was prohibited from marrying by reason of a previous marriage of that officer to another person, been maintained and publicly represented by that officer as his wife . . .

Under that wording she could not recover if her legal husband is still living. That is all it means, and no more.

Honourable senators, I do not think sections 15 and 23 of this bill should have been passed by the House of Commons, because I do not believe the people of our country want that kind of legislation.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Hear, hear—they don't.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I would not like to appear before an audience of ordinary men and women of this country and hear them say, "You stood up in the Parliament of Canada as a senator, representing the people of Canada, and voted for a bill to permit a woman to receive a pension for the rest of her life, when she had lived in adultery for seven years with an officer".

I did not serve in the war, but my boy served, and he came back with a D.F.C., so he knows what it is all about. I once asked him what he thought of this kind of law, and he replied, "Dad, don't be crazy—that was not what we fought for. At night when I used to start my plane down the runway and take off for Germany with six hundred machines alongside of me, what did I think of? I thought to myself 'Mother and Dad are safe—let her go!'" Of course he thought that way, because he was brought up that way, and I want all the boys and girls of this country to be reared that way, too. It cuts me to the heart to think that anyone could stand up and support legislation such as sections 15 and 23 of this bill. If an officer has given service to his country I would be the first to give him a pension, but I will not degrade the womanhood of this country by saying that a woman who has lived in adultery with an officer for seven years can receive a pension with parliamentary approval.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Do I understand my honourable friend to say that his amendment to the section would take out only the reference to women who were previously married?

Hon. Mr. Haig: Yes. I admit that I would like to take out a lot more, but the trouble is that if I move an amendment covering all the things I want, somebody will get up and say, "On that one point, we don't agree with you, Haig, and we are going to vote against your motion." To avoid that, I put it at the minimum.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: But if I read the section correctly it refers to the previous marriage of the officer. Now you would amend it—

Hon. Mr. Haig: The officer could not get a pension; he would be dead, anyway.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: But your amendment would make the section refer only to a woman who was prohibited from marrying by reason of a previous marriage of the officer.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I am trying to kill the vote for the woman who outlives the officer.

I would like to have sections 15 and 23 of the bill struck out. I do not want any man, by making a slight amendment, to say that I am wrong. The whole issue that I take in this debate is that I am against a woman of that class getting a pension under the law. As I said before, I do not believe that the men and women of this country want that kind of legislation. I cannot understand why the same point was not raised in the House of Commons. Only the other day I expressed my views to one of the most distinguished members of that house, and he said, "You are absolutely right." I have had several letters from people on the subject, including one from a widow whose husband was in the First World War and died from sickness contracted overseas. She was left to bring up her three children. In her letter she said, "Thank God, we have in this country someone who knows the difference between right and wrong." I have another letter from a registered nurse in another province, saying much the same thing. I am persuaded that that is the reaction of parents who have the responsibilities of bringing up boys and girls of their own. I do not believe they want this kind of legislation passed and trumpeted before the people of this country.

For the life of me, I cannot understand how this bill ever got through the House of Commons without a bitter fight being put up against it. I may not be the best man in this house to speak against it, and I do not pretend that I am, but I want people who succeed me to be able to say: "Well, Haig stood up in the Senate and fought for what he thought was right. It was not for money, or trade, or economics, but it was to protect the sacred rights of men and women, especially women, in this country." That is the reputation I want to win. I ask honourable senators, both men and women, to vote for my amendment. The Government will not die if you vote for the amendment, but will still live, and the public will know that the Parliament of Canada refuses to pass this kind of legislation.

Hon. Felix P. Quinn: Honourable members, like the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig), I cannot help expressing my amazement that this bill should have reached its present stage without more serious opposition in the other house and here. My belief is that sections 15 and 23 of the bill flout the laws of Almighty God. Our lawmakers are attempting to match their wisdom with the wisdom of God who gave us the Ten Commandments, which all Christians are obliged to obey. Christ said, "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments." Yet, we have placed before the Canadian Parliament a bill which declares that we may flout one of those commandments. One section of the bill provides that a man and a woman who have lived in adultery for seven years can be declared by some officer of the law to be man and wife.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No, no.

Hon. Mr. Quinn: That is the way I read it.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Paragraph (b) of the new section 31a(1) says just that.

Hon. Mr. Quinn: For the purposes of this bill, such persons can be declared to be man and wife, and the woman, if she is the surviving partner to such adulterous living, can be rewarded for her adultery by being granted a pension for the remainder of her natural life. That is the way I read the bill, and in my opinion it asks us to flout the laws of God.

I could quote a number of passages from the Bible to support my position, but perhaps it would suffice to refer to what St. Paul said in the eleventh chapter of his Epistle to the Romans:

> Oh, the depths of the riches of the wisdom and of the knowledge of God!

I repeat, in this legislation our lawmakers are matching their wisdom with that of God. I cannot condone sin, and so I cannot vote for such legislation.

My friend the Chairman of the Divorce Committee (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) and his colleagues on that committee have placed before us at this session more than four hundred reports, in which the committee, by its recommendations, condemns the adultery of one party to the union. In contrast to that legislation, we are here being asked to condone adultery. Surely, we must be consistent, and vote against such a measure.

I admire you men and women for your allegiance to the party of your choice. But your allegiance to a party need not go so far as to require you to vote for such a bill as this.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Party has nothing to do with it.

Hon. Mr. Quinn: I am glad to hear my honourable friend make that remark, and I thank him for it. We must consider first our allegiance to God, and secondly our allegiance to our party. I hope, honourable senators, that your conscience will not permit you to support such an iniquitous bill.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, it will be recalled that when this bill was previously before the house I raised a question on this very clause. I would apologize to the Chairman of the Banking and Commerce Committee (Hon. Mr. Hayden) for being absent when the committee considered the bill.

I rise at this time, not with a holier-than-thou attitude, but to ask honourable senators whether they have fully considered where this legislation might lead us. These are days of laxity: common-law unions are not at all unusual in certain parts of the country. But here we are asked to condone that practice by saying that if an officer publicly declares that a woman is his wife, when he knows he has another wife still living, and he continues to do that for not less than seven years—which will likely mean that he may be living with her for eight, nine, ten or more years—they are presumed to be man and wife. In effect, this bill asks us to countenance the fact that a man has two wives. By doing so, we would certainly be changing the lives of some army officers.

While it is my intention to support the proposed amendment, I would like to see this entire new section 31a taken out of the bill. I do not propose to take up any more time of the house, because every honourable senator here knows well the meaning of this section. Certainly, it is a departure from practice for the Government to countenance adultery.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: As a matter of information, may I ask the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig) what effect the passage of his amendment would have on this measure. I ask the question only because of the remarks just made by the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid). As I understood him he argued that if an officer who already had a wife, lived with another woman for seven years, and then he died, that woman would be entitled to a pension, regardless of the proposed amendment.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Yes. The bill so provides, and my amendment does not touch that part of it.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Quite so.

Hon. Mr. Haig: There is some dispute about a case in such circumstances. For instance, his wife might be in England and have secured a divorce there, but under Canadian law she would still be considered his wife.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Do I take from what the Leader of the Opposition has said that it is not as great a sin for an unmarried woman to live with a married man as it is for a married woman to live with a married man not her husband?

Hon. Mr. Haig: I think the sin is just as great in either case, but in moving the amendment I did not want to place myself again in the position that I was in when the bill was before committee. Let me explain what happened in committee. I was told that there might be in this country an officer who had married in England and whose wife remained in that country; that the British parliament had passed a law by which after a certain period of time she could apply for and be granted a divorce in the courts over there, but that the divorce would not be legal in Canada.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: She would likely get it on the grounds of desertion.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Yes; she could get it on that ground over there but not here, so under our law her husband would be still married to her. Certainly, I would like to move an amendment that would clear up the whole situation, but in the hope that the house will pass, my amendment asks for the minimum change.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Will the honourable Leader of the Opposition permit me to ask him a further question? If his amendment is approved by the house and the bill is referred back to the committee, will the committee be restricted to the changes he has proposed in his amendment, or will it be able to consider the section anew?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The bill would be referred back "with instructions".

Hon. Mr. Haig: The situation is quite clear: My amendment instructs the committee to make certain changes. Of course, I would be quite willing either to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole or to refer it back to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce for full consideration of this section. However, I am sure the house will look with favour on my amendment as it now stands.

If someone will move an amendment to my amendment, that we consider the matter in Committee of the Whole, I will be quite willing to vote for that, but I am afraid it could not carry in this house. But I think my amendment will carry.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Honourable senators, I had the privilege of explaining this bill when it came before the house for second reading, and I was aware at the time of the implications of this section. When I explained the section I think I said precisely what it meant and no more; certainly, I did not give all the various examples. Unfortunately, I was not in attendance to hear all of the discussion that took place in the committee. One reason that was advanced in support of this provision was the fact that in 1952 a similar section was put into the Public Service Superannuation Act. Apparently there was no objection; perhaps at that time honourable senators and members of the other house did not realize its full implication. I understand that such a provision is also in the War Veterans Allowance Act, and covered also by the regulations under the Pension Act. So what is proposed here is to bring the Defence Services Pension Act into conformity with the other acts.

Having said that—and I say it on my own responsibility—I must also say that if those other pieces of legislation were wrong that is no justification or reason for us now to adopt this measure, using them as a precedent. My thought at the moment is that if this bill should be referred back to committee, we should not limit our inquiry only to the officials in the Department of Defence, because probably their answer—although I do not want to prejudge them—may be "We are just making this measure conform with other pension legislation now on the statute books of this country". I think we might well examine officials in other departments who administer similar legislation. However, I would not take it upon myself, as a newcomer to this chamber, to move an amendment to the amendment proposed by the honourable Leader of the Opposition, but perhaps some of the views that I have expressed will commend themselves to some of the more experienced senators.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I am very much disturbed by sections 15 and 23 of this bill. I did not oppose the sections in the committee, for two reasons. In the first place, I was unaware that they went so far as I now find they do, upon a more careful reading of them. In the second place, I wanted if possible to protect those soldiers who were married and divorced in the Old Country but legally were still married here on account of the fact that the English divorce was not legal in this country. I thought that perhaps the subsection (1)(a) of this new section 31A would give relief in a case of that kind. I knew at the time that the War Veterans Allowance Act contained a provision similar to this. In a discussion with one of the commissioners of the War Veterans Allowance Board on the subject, I got this explanation: it sometimes happens that a poor, worn-out, old veteran who is unable to look after himself, is abandoned by his wife, and another woman comes along, lives with him for seven years and takes care of him, the commissioners feel that when he passes out of the picture she should be taken care of. However, upon careful consideration of these two sections I must say that I am opposed to them entirely. I would even like to see them struck out. I do not think the amendment proposed by the honourable senator from Winnipeg (Hon. Mr. Haig) goes nearly far enough.

Just let me state briefly what the new section 31A subsection (1)(a), does. Let us say an officer, or a former officer, has a wife. He picks up with another woman, or she with him—a woman who also is married—and the two live together. Now, by the enactment of this section we would say that that is a perfectly legal situation, and that when he dies she may be allowed to claim a pension.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Is that what my honourable friend suggests the section means?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes, it goes that far. The officer and the common-law wife may both be married, and she may still get the pension.

Hon. Mr. Horner: What becomes of the legal wife, may I ask?

Hon. Mr. Quinn: She is out.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The new section 31A(1)(b) reads:

> For the purposes of this act, a woman who (b) establishes to the satisfaction of the Treasury Board that she had, for a number of years immediately prior to the death of an officer or former officer with whom she had been residing, been maintained and publicly represented by that officer as his wife, and that at the time of the death of that officer neither she nor the officer was married to any other person, . . .

gets a pension.

Then, lo and behold, towards the end of subsection (1)(b) I find these words:

> . . . for the purposes of this act, a woman to whom this subsection would apply, but for her marriage to an officer or former officer after such time as she commenced being so represented as the wife of that officer, shall, if the Treasury Board so directs, be deemed to have become married to that officer at the time when, in fact, she commenced being so represented.

In other words, under this bill we would be marrying these people without a licence.

Hon. Mr. Quinn: Without priest or parson.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Without any ceremony whatsoever. And we say it is legal.

I have no objection to subsection (2) of the new section 31A, except that it is not necessary because provincially we have the same kind of law which goes so far as to say that if a man dies when his wife is living separate and apart from him, under circumstances which would not entitle her to alimony, she gets no part of his estate. Exactly the same principle is embodied in subsection (2). But although I have no objection to subsection (2), I do say this, that if we pass these sections 15 and 23 we shall be subsidizing adultery, or, at least, placing a premium on it. A short time ago we adopted a law to give relief to the gold mining industry; if we pass this measure we shall be giving relief to the gold-diggers. I am not in favour of it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Did the honourable senator say he is opposed to adultery under subsection 1(a) but not under subsection 1(b)?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I am opposed to it, and the honourable senator knows I am.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I thought the honourable senator said a moment ago he did not object to adultery under subsection (1)(b).

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Under subsection (2), I said.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: That would be the sort of thing which would disentitle a married woman to alimony.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Under subsection (2) the woman is deemed to be dead. Well, let us strike it all out.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The honourable senator has changed his mind.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Subsection (2) authorizes the Treasury Board to declare the woman to be dead.

Hon. Mr. Horner: His legal wife.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Yes, his legal wife is declared to be dead.

The Hon. the Speaker: The honourable senator from Rosetown (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has the floor; and other honourable senators should not interject except to ask questions.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: My question is, are there grades of adultery?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I do not think so. But any honourable senator who has sat on the Divorce Committee knows perfectly well that there is enough adultery in this country without subsidizing it, and if we pass this measure that is exactly what we shall be doing. And I repeat that if we are not subsidizing it we shall, by passing this measure, at least be encouraging it, making it legal, and placing a premium on it. So if I had my way I would strike out entirely sections 15 and 23. The two sections are the same, except that section 23 uses the words "contributor or former contributor" instead of "officer or former officer". If the amendment of the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig) to send the bill back for one purpose is carried, I do not see anything in the world to prevent the committee from reconsidering the whole question and, if necessary, striking out sections 15 and 23 altogether.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, may I say that according to the Rules, I do not think the honourable gentleman is correct on that point. Generally speaking the position is this: if, after a committee has already reported a bill and it has been regularly considered, it is desired to reverse a decision previously arrived at, the authority of the Senate to do so must be obtained. In this particular case, if the amendment of the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig) is adopted, the committee will be authorized to amend the bill in accordance with his amendment, and not otherwise. If it is desired that it should be reconsidered in other respects, the Senate should empower the committee to do so. At least, that is my opinion.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: If I am wrong in that respect I suggest that some honourable senator should make an amendment to have the whole bill referred back to the committee.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: I feel that honourable members of the Senate would not like to be in the position of appearing to commend adultery in any form. Therefore, if I am in order, I will move that the bill be referred back to the committee for the purpose of reviewing it—that is, for further consideration.

The Hon. the Speaker: I gather from the remarks of the honourable senator that he moves, in amendment to the amendment of the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig), that the report be referred back to the committee for further consideration of the bill and with power to amend the bill in any respect.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: If they so desire. I so move, seconded by the honourable senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Bishop).

The Hon. the Speaker: It is moved by the Honourable Senator Kinley, seconded by the Honourable Senator Bishop, as an amendment to the amendment:

That the report be referred back to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce for further consideration of the bill and with power to amend it in any respect.

Hon. Salter A. Hayden: Honourable senators, since I moved the adoption of the report I think it is proper that at some stage I should make an explanation.

Hon. Mr. Haig: The honourable senator is not closing the debate?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: No; I am speaking to the amendment of the honourable senator from Queen's-Lunenburg (Hon. Mr. Kinley). I think I should attempt to present to the members of the Senate exactly what this legislation means, not in the sense of seizing on one or two words, or attempting to declaim from a platform and using expressions that are more or less in the nature of catch phrases, because words or sentences put together cannot mean anything more than the facts will let them mean.

First of all, the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) suggested that this bill marks a new departure in legislation in this house. But whether previous legislation be right or wrong, a great deal of it, expressed in exactly the same form, is embodied in other statutes which, I am sure, were passed when the honourable senator was a member either of this house or of the other place. There is, for example, the Public Service Superannuation Act. If my honourable friend looks at section 12, subsections (4) and (5) of chapter 47 of the Statutes of Canada, 1952-53, he will find that my statement is correct. Or he may look at the Pension Act, section 36, subsection (4), chapter 207 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952.

Hon. Mr. Reid: In exactly the same words?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: In exactly the same words. My honourable friend will find it embodied in section 30 (11) (b) of the War Veterans Allowance Act, and he will find a similar provision in section 117 of the Dependents' Allowance Regulations which were enforced during the last war.

The main purpose of incorporating these amendments in this bill is to bring the provisions of the Defence Services Pension Act into line with other pension acts. The reason behind the amendments has been explained in this way. During the last war many Canadian soldiers married in England, and when some of them returned to this country to take up residence their wives refused to accompany them. When according to English divorce laws the required time had elapsed in order to establish desertion, the wives instituted proceedings in England and obtained divorces. Some of the husbands then assumed they were free to remarry in Canada. However, desertion does not constitute a ground for divorce in Canada, which in these cases would be the domicile of the husband and the country in which the divorces should have been sought, and consequently these men were legally prohibited here from marrying a second time.

There is also the situation where a husband abandons his wife, goes to a foreign jurisdiction and obtains a divorce on grounds which are not recognized in Canada. At a later date his wife may become identified with an officer or contributor under a pension plan. Let us assume that she lives with that person for seven years, during which time they do not marry.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Would not the passage of the Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Bill to amend our divorce laws have cleared up the mess you have just referred to?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: My honourable friend could answer that question himself. He knows it would, and that is why I am surprised at his inconsistency.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I do not think it would.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: The Senate defeated that bill this year.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Before being interrupted I was relating these circumstances: A woman who has been deserted by her husband may live with an officer or contributor for seven years, being maintained by him and publicly represented by him to be his wife. As a matter of fact, they may have gone through a form of marriage, but there is an impediment to their legal marriage in Canada because the divorce obtained by the woman's husband in a foreign jurisdiction does not entitle her to remarry in this country.

It was such cases that the department had in mind—perhaps there were only a dozen at most—when it proposed these amendments to bring the Defence Services Pension Act into line with the other acts to which I have referred.

Hon. Mrs. Fallis: May I ask the honourable gentleman a question? Do we understand that the amended legislation will apply only to people in the circumstances he has just spoken of?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: As I shall not be charged with the administration of the act I cannot really say, but I have given the reasons for the introduction of these amendments. They do not give legality to or put a premium on adultery in the sense that just because a woman lives as a common law wife of an officer for seven years she will be entitled to a pension upon his death. The bill merely provides that if the Treasury Board finds these conditions existing it may deem a woman to be a widow so-called of an officer. If the officer has a legal widow who is living apart from him in circumstances under which she would have been entitled to alimony during his lifetime, she is regarded as the legal widow and this particular subsection cannot come into operation at all. If the legal widow of the officer disqualified herself during his lifetime—that is, by committing adultery—so that she could not have claimed alimony, then for the purposes of the act she is not deemed to be his widow. She is deemed to have predeceased him, and that puts a legal end to any right she may have had. When the Treasury Board considers the circumstances in relation to the woman who had been living with the officer, it may feel satisfied to award her a pension. However, there is no law that could compel the board to make such an award, and there is no right of action that the woman could assert in any court to claim that pension. The Treasury Board must be satisfied that the circumstances merit the granting of a pension.

There might be cases of bare faced abandonment or desertion by wives who leave their legal husbands and take up common-law residence with officers or contributors under a pension plan. It might be said that this is the sort of thing we do not want Parliament to sanction. But do you think it is the type of case in which the Treasury Board would award a pension? I do not think any person could honestly answer that question by saying that in those circumstances the Treasury Board would take a course of action having the effect of putting a premium on the commission of adultery. I cannot believe that the board, in its application of the law, would do that.

In looking for the meaning underlying the provisions of this bill it is essential to keep a sense of proportion. The amendment simply applies to the one situation where a woman and an officer, or a contributor, are living together, and the woman happens to have a living husband. The amendment does not deal with the case of an unmarried woman and a married officer who have lived together under the specified conditions for seven years or longer. In those circumstances, my friend's amendment would still permit the Treasury Board, in a proper case, to award a pension to the widow. Nor does the amendment deal with the case of a married woman and a married officer who have both left their legal spouses and joined forces, where it might well be argued that the impediment is that the officer is married and could not marry again in any event, and therefore we do not look at the status of the wife.

It seems to me that we must get down to some basis of reality when dealing with situations of that kind. If 100 per cent morality cannot be applied, one must try to do the best that can be done in a practical way, regardless of what is thought of the conduct of the individuals involved. It must be faced as a fact that these situations do occur and have to be dealt with. For example, when Canadian soldiers served in England during the war, and married in that country, they could not foresee that their wives might refuse to rejoin them in Canada when the war ceased. In such circumstances, let us suppose that a Canadian soldier divorced on the ground of desertion, married again, and subsequently died, and his second spouse, believing she was his lawful wife had raised a family. Is she to be turned out into the cold and refused a pension? In the meantime, the wife who had secured the divorce in England might very well have remarried. When those factors are matched up, where in equity and morality should the pension fall? It certainly could not be argued that the pension should go to the wife in England who had taken divorce proceedings, but who so far as Canadian law is concerned is still the Canadian soldier's wife.

The thing that disturbs me in this debate is the fact that we are asked to read only one implication into this legislation that would be bad, and it is the one implication that I cannot believe is feasible, because I believe the personnel of the Treasury Board are too intelligent for that, and that their principles of morality are just as high as those of any senator or member of the House of Commons. I believe that when the Treasury Board is called upon to administer the provisions of this bill, they will do so in favour of a woman who becomse the wife of an officer in the circircumstances I have related, only if they feel that their action accords with all the laws of decency and morality. To attempt to argue against these provisions on the basis of the one implication I have mentioned is an unfair way of approach.

Whether this bill goes back to committee for reconsideration or not is of no concern to me. I was the chairman of the committee which dealt with it, and honourable senators who were present had the same opportunity of hearing and weighing the evidence as I had. When the members of the committee voted in favour of the provisions which are now before the house for consideration, one member of the committee, at least, did not vote against the provisions, yet he has spoken against them in this debate. Of course, that is his privilege. However, in my view, there is no point in getting excited about this matter. These are situations which confront the department. The provisions of the bill are not retroactive; they are designed to deal with situations as they occur from now on. If we could become 100 per cent moral—and I wish we could, but it seems to be difficult—we could repeal the provisions which are objected to. The alternative course would be to have the provisions taken out, because I do not think it possible to be equitable by recognizing certain grades of morality and making various classifications of adultery. I think the circumstances which prompted the department to seek this power in administering the Defence Pensions Act were humane principles which, to the extent that I have indicated, justify themselves on any moral ground. That is why I speak as I do on this motion before the house.

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) has explained his point of view very briefly by saying that this proposed legislation is for special cases. I know of one special case, a very bad one. An officer who was married just three days before leaving for overseas in 1942, came back in 1945 and left his wife and is now living with another woman; and since he was an army veteran he asked the department to transfer his pension to his common-law wife. His real wife has been obliged to go out and work ever since. I have no suspicions as regards the members of the Treasury Board, but the board is obliged to act on a report given by some officer or committee. If the amendment is passed, the whole pension will go to the common-law wife in the event of the officer's death, and his legal wife, who is living an absolutely honest life, will be in a very bad position. We are often obliged to give assistance by way of food and money to a good woman who has found herself in these unfortunate circumstances.

For those reasons I will vote for the amendment to the amendment.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Honourable senators, I will be brief in my closing remarks.

I always enjoy what the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) has to say, and his remarks in this instance were no exception to his general high standard. In his analysis he cleverly came to the most difficult case last, having stated all the plausible cases first. But let me ask, how many times does the Treasury Board itself examine these cases? A committee is appointed to do it for them.

In my earlier years of practice I frequently had persons with matrimonial troubles come to me for advice. For instance, a woman would come to me and say, "I am living with Mr. Brown, but I am not married to him; his wife has been in a mental hospital for twenty years. We are getting older, and he would like to leave his estate to me when he dies." My immediate suggestion to a woman in such circumstances would be to get the man in question to draw a will. The Treasury Board in its consideration of such a case might consider that some action on the woman's part entitled her to a pension. But my point is, and I put it strongly, that it would not matter if the Prime Minister himself was chairman of the Treasury Board, we should not give them the power to do something that is in itself fundamentally wrong. That is all there is to it: it is wrong for a married man to live in adultery with another woman. It is not a question of who should examine the facts of the case; it is a question of right and wrong. If this bill were passed in its present form and only one case came before the board for consideration under this section, the legislation would be just as wrong as if a thousand cases came for consideration and pensions were granted in each case.

However, this type of legislation has to do with people in certain walks of life, namely soldiers. Such problems have come about by reason of the fact that men leave the country to go to war, leaving behind them wives and children. I know many young men in my own city who were married just before going overseas, and absence from the country for a long period of time is apt to result in difficulties. Be that as it may, let us not by any act of ours pass legislation which would condone the conduct of a woman who had been living in adultery with an officer, by giving her a pension.

In closing may I say to my honourable friend from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) that if the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) had any grounds for chiding him, he had much wider grounds for chiding me. After all, I am a lawyer and am expected to know what is involved in legislation that passes through this house. I must have been in the house when certain bills to which the honourable senator from Toronto referred were passed, but unfortunately their significance escaped my attention.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien: It happened even in this session.

Hon. Mr. Haig: But the provisions of this bill struck me forcibly the first time I read them.

If this bill goes back to the committee we will give this section the serious consideration it deserves. I think it would be to the credit of the Senate of Canada to reduce to a minimum the pension rights of a woman who has been living in adultery. There may be cases where some special consideration is justified, but I cannot think of any. I will not oppose the amendment to the amendment when it comes to a vote.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I think the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Hayden) has explained the purpose of this bill very clearly. In his discussion of the details he has shown how unfair it would be if certain women were deprived of the benefits under section 150. However, the feeling of the house seems to be that the question should be given further consideration. While some honourable senators may not yet have formed a definite opinion on this section, I feel that the majority would like to hear further from the officials of the department and consider certain points raised by the honourable leader opposite before coming to a final decision. Care should be taken to see that no one gets benefits to which they are not entitled, and that none are deprived of benefits to which they are entitled.

As far as I am concerned, I have no objection to the bill going back to the committee for further consideration.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, may I review the events of this debate up to the present moment?

First, a motion was made by the Honourable Senator Hayden, seconded by the Honourable Senator Beaubien, that the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill 257 be adopted. Secondly, by way of amendment to that motion, the Honourable Senator Haig moved, seconded by the Honourable Senator Aseltine, that:

The report be not now adopted, but that it be referred back to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, with instructions to the said committee to amend the said bill as follows:

"Page 6, line 1: Delete the words 'either' and 'or of herself' from the said line".

In passing I may say that it is my opinion that if the amendment carries, any subsequent action by the committee would be limited to that specified in the amendment.

Thirdly, in amendment to the amendment it was moved by the Honourable Senator Kinley, seconded by the Honourable Senator Bishop:

That the report be referred back to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce for further consideration of the bill and with power to amend it in any respect.

The question, honourable senators, is on the amendment to the amendment. Will honourable senators who are in favour of the amendment to the amendment please say "Content"?

Some Hon. Senators: Content.

The Hon. the Speaker: Will honourable senators who are not in favour of the amendment to the amendment please say "Non Content"?

In my opinion, the "Contents" have it, and the amendment to the amendment carries. In the circumstances the amendment may be negatived by the same vote, or it may be withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. Haig: It is defeated, I think.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The amendment, Mr. Speaker, is amended by the amendment to the amendment.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I agree that is the correct procedure, but the amendment to the amendment did not amend the amendment. It might be a little clearer if the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig) would withdraw his amendment so that the amendment to the amendment would became the main amendment.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I think the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) is correct. The honourable gentleman from Queen's-Lunenburg (Hon. Mr. Kinley) has moved an amendment amending my amendment.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: But the amendment to the amendment did not strike anything out of the amendment.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I would suggest that the amendment to the amendment be amended, by consent of the house, to move that my amendment be struck out. That would clear it all up.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Honourable senators, with all due respect to what has been said, I submit that as the amendment to the amendment has been carried it is necessary now either to have the amendment withdrawn or a vote taken on it.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I would not think so.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: In other words, the proper procedure is to vote on the amendment, and if it is defeated it will be out of the way. Of course, my honourable friend may prefer to withdraw it.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Unless the proper procedure is followed we will not know where we are.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I think the difficulty we are in arises from the fact that the amendment to the amendment does not amend the amendment. There was nothing struck out of the amendment. The whole matter could be cleared up if the Leader of the Opposition would withdraw his amendment, as then the amendment to the amendment would be the main amendment.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I say, honourable senators, that an amendment to an amendment does not have to strike out something in order to amend the amendment.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That is quite right, so long as the amendment to the amendment makes sense by adding something to the amendment.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: This amendment to the amendment does make sense. It agrees with the amendment that the report be referred back, but gives authority to the Banking and Commerce Committee to make such changes as it desires. So in substance it is perfectly clear. It has amended the amendment.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Perhaps my honourable friend from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) would just read what the amendment to the amendment says, or have it read.

The Hon. the Speaker: I will read it:

That the report be referred back to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce for further consideration of the bill and with power to amend it in any respect.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It does not even refer to the amendment.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It is moved as an amendment to the amendment, and is to the effect that the report be referred back, as the amendment says, but instead of tying the hands of the Banking and Commerce Committee it gives the committee full authority to act. In other words, the instructions are stricken out of the amendment. That is the common sense of it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: This subamendment has no relation whatever to the main amendment.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I understand the amendment to the amendment to mean that the amendment has been struck out.

Hon. Mr. Reid: May I ask the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) just where will we be if we take a vote on the amendment and it carries?

The Hon. the Speaker: Do I understand that the honourable Senator Haig agrees to withdraw his amendment, or agrees that it has been negatived?

Hon. Mr. Haig: I agree that the amendment to the amendment negatives the amendment.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: And that is the unanimous opinion of the house.

The amendment moved by Hon. Mr. Kinley was agreed to, and the report was referred back to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce for further consideration of the bill and with power to amend it in any respect.

The amendment moved by Hon. Mr. Haig was resolved in the negative.

The motion by Hon. Mr. Hayden was resolved in the negative.

PRIVATE BILL

TRANS-BORDER PIPELINE COMPANY LTD.—COMMONS AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the amendment made by the House of Commons to Bill Z-12, an Act to incorporate Trans-Border Pipeline Company Ltd. to construct, own and operate an extra-provincial pipeline.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Honourable senators. I move that the amendment be concurred in.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: What is the amendment?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: The amendment is a short one. It deals only with the location of the pipe line, and requires that the pipe line be built and situated completely in Canada. I got in touch with the promoters of the bill and the lawyer representing the promoters and they are satisfied with the amendment.

The motion was agreed to, and the amendment was concurred in.

DIVORCE BILLS

SECOND READINGS

Hon. Mr. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, moved the second reading of the following bills:

Bill A-17, an Act for the relief of James McMartin.

Bill B-17, an Act for the relief of Charles John Urban.

Bill C-17, an Act for the relief of Joseph Adalbert Beaudoin, otherwise known as Georges Beaudoin.

Bill D-17, an Act for the relief of Donald John McGillivray.

The motion was agreed to, and the bills were read the second time, on division.

THIRD READINGS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these bills be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I would ask that a special concession be made in these cases and that these bills be read the third time now. This request is due only to the fact that the bills must be printed, with the evidence, promptly, in order to have them before the House of Commons within a reasonable time. Usually I am opposed to having two readings on one day, but there is good reason for this request. Therefore, with leave, I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bills were read the third time, and passed, on division.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 16, 1955

The Senate met at 3 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine Proceedings.

THE HONOURABLE THE SPEAKER

ATTENDANCE AT NATO MEETINGS ABROAD

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, with genuine regret I wish to announce to the house that, owing to a combination of circumstances, it will not be possible for me to attend sittings of the house during the balance of the session after Tuesday next. Some honourable senators will know that, as a result of the initiative of the Canadian NATO Parliamentary Association, a meeting of NATO parliamentarians will take place in the middle of July, in Paris. One of the purposes will be to consider the formation of a NATO Inter-Parliamentary Association. The response to our invitations has exceeded our fondest hopes, and it is expected that over 150 NATO parliamentarians will attend. While the NATO Secretariat have been most co-operative re technical details, the main responsibility will fall on the Steering Committee itself, of which our association did me the honour of appointing me the Canadian representative.

Some members of the Steering Committee will meet in London early in the week of July 3, and I feel it is desirable that I should be present. Until recently I had hoped to change a long standing reservation for June 22 to a week later, but the extraordinary circumstances attendant on the stevedoring strike, in the United Kingdom, leave me little alternative to keeping my reservation of June 22. May I ask from honourable senators their indulgence, and understanding, in the circumstances; and may I, in anticipation, thank whoever may be called on by the house to preside in my absence, and to express the hope that all honourable senators will enjoy the recess following the prorogation of Parliament.

MUNICIPAL GRANTS BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 258, an Act to amend the Municipal Grants Act.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: With leave, next sitting.

CANADA AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS STANDARDS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE—AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the report of the committee on Bill 411.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (411) intituled: "An Act to establish national standards for agricultural products and to regulate international and interprovincial trade in agricultural products", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 15, 1955, examined the said bill and now beg leave to report the same with the following amendments:

1. Page 3, line 14: strike out the word "requirements" and substitute therefor the word "standards";

2. Page 3, line 21: strike out the word "requirements" and substitute therefor the word "standards";

3. Page 6, lines 12 and 13: strike out the words "whether or not the forfeiture is directed by the conviction" and substitute therefor the words "if such forfeiture is directed by the Court".

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave of the house, I move that the report be concurred in now. The amendments are similar to those that the committee made to Bill 352, which amendments came before the Senate yesterday and stand for consideration today. One amendment simply deals with the question of forfeiture of a vehicle or other thing used in connection with some product or article where there has been a violation of the act. As the bill came to us it provided that in the event of a conviction for a violation of the act the vehicle or other thing used in the commission of the offence was forfeited, whether or not the magistrate or judge directed forfeiture. We have amended that provision so as to give the magistrate or judge discretionary powers. He can weigh the circumstances of each case and decide whether a forfeiture should be ordered.

Another change follows on a point raised in the Senate yesterday by the honourable gentleman from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), having to do with section 5 of the bill. It was not clear how broad were the powers which the bill gave to the Governor in Council to make regulations prohibiting the import or export of or interprovincial trade in articles or goods covered by the act. The limiting words, which would form the escape clause, were to the effect that goods would not be subject to such prohibition if they complied with prescribed requirements, had been prepared in accordance with prescribed conditions and packed in the prescribed manner. There was no other place else in the bill where the word "requirements" occurred. In committee we concluded that what was meant was that articles which complied with the standards or the grades provided for earlier in the act would escape from the prohibition provision.

Part of the provisions of the Canada Dairy Products Act have been included in Bill 411, and that act referred to "standards" rather than "requirements". "Prescribed requirements", with unlimited power vested in the Governor in Council to make regulations, are unusual. That is why the committee substituted the word "standards" for "requirements" in two places in section 5, which deals with the power of the Governor in Council to regulate international and interprovincial trade in agricultural products. The committee felt that by so doing it had met the point which the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity properly raised yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Honourable senators, although I am a member of the Banking and Commerce Committee, the meetings this morning of other committees of which I am a member prevented me from attending the Banking and Commerce Committee meeting. May I ask the chairman of the committee (Hon. Mr. Hayden) if this bill has brought in any new features that are not now in the act with respect to interprovincial trade in dairy and agricultural products.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I think I can safely say that the bill does not introduce any new features.

The motion was agreed to, and the amendments were concurred in.

THIRD READINGS

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave of the Senate, I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill, as amended, was read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL PARKS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Natural Resources, presented the report of the committee on Bill 261, an Act to amend the National Parks Act and to establish a national park in the province of Newfoundland.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Natural Resources, to whom was referred the Bill (261) intituled: "An Act to amend the National Parks Act and to establish a National Park in the Province of Newfoundland", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 9, 1955, examined the said bill and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: With leave of the Senate, I move the third reading now.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, before this bill is given third reading I should like to say a few words by way of supplement to the brief remarks I made on the debate for second reading of the bill, when I complained about the proposal to reduce the area of the Waterton Lakes National Park.

I should like to repeat that, generally speaking, I am opposed to the reduction in size of any of the national parks of Canada. I consider these parks to be one of Canada's great national resources, and I believe that in years to come they will be playgrounds for a far greater number of people than we have in Canada today. I was opposed to the cutting down of the size of the Prince Albert National Park in Saskatchewan and I still feel that such a move was a mistake. I also opposed the reduction of the area of the Banff National Park and the turning of it into a hydro project. And I thought I was right when I spoke a few days ago against the reduction by some seven hundred acres of the Waterton Lakes National Park. However, in the light of additional information which has since come to me, I find that I was wrong for once at least.

Hon. Mr. MacKinnon: Twice.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: Or three times.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I went to the trouble of interviewing the member in the House of Commons representing that district and learned that he, with a representative of the department concerned, had gone over the whole area last summer and made a thorough study of it. I learned also that the removal of the seven hundred acres, which is just a little more than a square mile, was more of an advantage than a disadvantage to the park. A representative of the department produced a map of the area which showed the road now being constructed. Upon looking over the whole matter carefully one could not but conclude that the removal of the seven hundred acres would not materially affect the park, which still has several hundred square miles of area in it. To that extent, honourable senators, I should like to amend my remarks of the other day, and express my approval of that portion of the bill having to do with the Waterton Lakes National Park.

May I add that when this bill was in committee we saw maps and had a full explanation as to the park about to be established in the province of Newfoundland. The site will be donated by the province, and it remains only for the federal Government to authorize the establishment of a park. It will be contiguous to both air and rail travel facilities, but later on a highway will have to be constructed to it.

With those few words of explanation, honourable senators, I am quite in favour of the bill being given third reading.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators, I endorse almost everything our colleague from the remoter parts of Saskatchewan has just said.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Rosetown.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: But I do desire to take slight exception to something bordering on the nature of criticism of the reduction in area of Saskatchewan's national park north of Prince Albert, and of some change made in the Banff National Park. Of course, if my honourable friend thinks a mistake was made he is entitled to say so. Those changes were effected when I happened to be the minister of the department responsible for administration of the parks. I can assure the house, if there should be any concern at all about the matter, that the area taken out of the Prince Albert National Park was an area of muskeg that had been a continuing hazard to the administration in its fire protection work, and it was just as well to let that area go back to the province, which looked after the adjoining area.

So far as Banff National Park was concerned, we were faced with a real problem. There was a lovely little lake there, which, if my memory is right, was called Lake Minnewanka. The proposal was to build a dam, raise the level of this lake and hold back its waters so that there would be a more gradual and steadier flow into the Bow River for power development. That would never have been done had it not been for the war needs. War industries had been established in the Calgary area and it was absolutely essential that a continuing source of power be available for them, and after weighing the matter very fully we decided to make that exception in the case of Banff National Park. The dam was built, the level of the lake was raised, a storage reservoir was created, and an even flow of water was maintained into the Bow River and on down to Calgary to service power plants.

I quite agree with what the honourable senator from Rosetown (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) said about the small area taken out of the Waterton Lakes Park. And on general principles I agree with everything he said about the importance of maintaining our national parks untouched, as far as possible, in the condition in which nature has left them. We have so much land in this country that we can afford to set aside in various provinces a few hundred square miles and create national parks that will be things of beauty and joy.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: For ever.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Yes. They are great playgrounds, and will continue to be a source of recreation to the Canadian people long after all of us have passed from this earthly scene.

Hon. Calvert C. Pratt: Honourable senators, may I say just a word on this bill? I was unable to be present on the occasion of the second reading, so I am very glad to have this opportunity to support the move for the establishment of a national park in Newfoundland. I may say first that it is one of the many things still outstanding which the Newfoundland people have been expecting, arising out of union with Canada. I do not say that it is one of the most important things by any means, but it will unquestionably be of considerable value to the province, especially with relation to the development of tourist traffic. Also a national park gives an uplift to many people, being a wide open space of which everyone can feel he is part owner, a place where everyone can visit and get the satisfaction that comes from beautiful surroundings. It is gratifying to know that a start is being made on the establishment of a national park in Newfoundland.

Just one word concerning the location of this park. The honourable senator who explained the bill on second reading (Hon. Mr. Baird) mentioned that the park will be in the Bonavista Bay area, which is fairly accessible to the Avalon Peninsula, the most closely populated section of Newfoundland. That will be in the vicinity of the Trans-Canada highway, and it is near to the Gander airport. Incidentally, very few people, even those who frequently cross the ocean back and forth, have any idea of the tremendous role played by that airport in world travel. I feel the establishment of a national park within easy reach of Gander airport will have a good effect on the development of our tourist trade. Newfoundland has the natural attractions for a large tourist trade, but up to the present time we have not had much opportunity of using them. The coastal area in question is very beautiful and the rivers and arms of the sea will provide unexcelled sporting opportunities.

There may be a question in the minds of some as to whether the wood lands and water power potential in the vicinity can be safeguarded for commercial development. I believe that any difficulty in that connection could be overcome by not having the park too compact but spread out in directions most suitable to serve both purposes. I know the proposed location and I can assure honourable senators that it is very picturesque.

I feel that the whole scheme calls for prompt and joint action on the part of the provincial Government and the federal Government to have this legislation implemented.

The motion was agreed to, the bill was read the third time, and passed.

THE ESTIMATES

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON FINANCE

Hon. T. A. Crerar, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, presented the committee's report on the Estimates laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1956.

He said: Honourable senators, on March 16 last there was a reference by this house to the Standing Committee on Finance to make inquiries respecting the Estimates that had been tabled earlier in Parliament. I present now the committee's final report, to which is attached a number of exhibits and schedules. The report covers almost seven pages, and with the consent of the house I would move that instead of having it read by the Clerk Assistant it be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and the Minutes of the Proceedings of the house for this day, together with the exhibits, but excluding the schedule, Exhibit No. 3, which is a rather large document. That schedule is, in effect, a summary of Government expenditures by departments that appeared in the Blue Book of Estimates. I would suggest that copies of the report and all other exhibits be printed for distribution and that the summary Exhibit No. 3, be inserted in a little pocket at the back of the report, as was done in the Book of Estimates.

I submit this report as the final report of the Finance Committee for the present session.

The Hon. the Speaker: Does the house agree to the suggestion of the honourable senator with regard to printing?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Speaker: Does the honourable senator propose that the report be considered in the house in the near future?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Yes: next Wednesday.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Put it on the Order Paper, at least, for next Wednesday.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Yes.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Crerar it was ordered:

That the report of the Standing Committee on Finance, together with the exhibits attached thereto, less Exhibit No. 3, be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and of the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this date.

See Appendix to today's Hansard, pp. 625 to 643.

AUTHORITY TO PRINT ADDITIONAL COPIES OF COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Honourable senators, with leave of the Senate I move:

That authority be granted for the printing of 1,000 additional copies in English and 200 additional copies in French of the Report of the Standing Committee on Finance on the expenditures proposed by the Estimates laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1956.

The motion was agreed to.

DIVORCE PETITIONS

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Divorce, presented the committee's reports Nos. 425 and 426, dealing with petitions for divorce, and moved that the said reports be taken into consideration at the next sitting.

The motion was agreed to, on division.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I move that when this house adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday, June 21, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

It is rather difficult at this time to determine when we should meet. We are getting near the end of the session, and if we thought that the House of Commons was likely to finish its work next week we would have to sit tomorrow and, probably, on Monday. But in fact I have no more information than any other honourable senator as to when the House of Commons will finish its work. It may be necessary for us to sit on Friday of next week and adjourn till the following Monday. However, conditions are very uncertain.

I appreciate the excellent attendance of honourable senators during this session. I know that all of us are anxious to get away, but I would appreciate it, and I know that the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig) shares my wishes in this matter, if as many honourable senators as possible would so arrange their affairs that they can remain here until prorogation.

The motion was agreed to.

HUDSON BAY INCIDENT

CONDITIONS AT CHURCHILL

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are called I would like to draw the attention of honourable members and the Government to an article which appeared in yesterday's newspapers concerning a plane immobilized on an ice floe in Hudson Bay. It may be recalled that 300,000 pounds of sawdust have been flown out in an endeavour to keep the ice from melting under the plane and to facilitate its removal. I merely mention this incident because it underlines two points which I have been trying to make in connection with Churchill Harbour. One is that an ocean-going vessel should be stationed there. If one had been stationed there, no difficulty would have been experienced in the salvaging of this plane. Another point which I have stressed is the variation in the length of time during which Churchill may be used year by year. Yesterday, with a temperature of 88 degrees, it was perhaps the hottest place in Canada. Now, or shortly, it will be open for navigation.

RAILWAY BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald moved the second reading of Bill 259, an Act to amend the Railway Act.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is to enable the federal Government to increase its grant to the railway grade crossing fund, so that, through co-operation with municipal governments and the railroads, accidents at railway crossings, which have caused a great loss of life, may not be so numerous in the future as they have been. Most accidents these days occur on the highways; and I think we were all very pleased when we learned of the meeting at Ottawa of the National Safety Conference, the first conference of its kind in this country. I think we were also very pleased to know that the chairman of the conference was the Honourable Brooke Claxton, who served his country so well over many years in several portfolios in the federal Government. It is reassuring that a man who has given up active service in Parliament should still be interested enough in the public affairs of this country to head this important conference. I am sure that in his new sphere he will continue to give splendid service to Canada.

I should like to quote Mr. Claxton's opening words at that conference:

> Everyone recognizes the necessity, the absolute necessity and the urgent necessity for doing everything we can to stop the loss of life, the crippling injuries, the pain and suffering, and the cost in time and money caused by motor vehicle accidents.

In 1907 there were 2,130 automobiles registered in Canada. This year there are about 3½ million, or an average of about one car for every four persons in the country. It is estimated that by 1960 there will be at least 5 million automobiles registered in Canada, and I would not like to hazard a guess as to how many will be registered in later years.

Again quoting from Mr. Claxton's remarks to the conference:

> Today accidents are the third largest cause of death, third only to the group of diseases or conditions known to the statisticians by the title of "cardio-vascular-renal" which, I think, is medicine talk for the class of diseases or rather conditions which really represent the breakdown of the human system. The second greatest cause of death today is cancer. The third is accidents of all kinds. In this group of accidents, about one-half the deaths are due to automobile accidents . . . During the last twenty-five years, more Canadians were killed by motor vehicles than lost their lives in the Canadian Forces in the Second World War.

Honourable senators will probably be surprised to know that the numbers of people killed by accidents at railway crossings is comparatively small. In 1953 the Board of Transport Commissioners prepared a report on the railway-highway crossing problem in Canada. The Board conducted an exhaustive inquiry into the question of accidents at highway crossings, and at the foot of page 12 in the report appear these words:

> Before proceeding further in analyzing grade crossing accidents it would be well to see the grade crossing problem in its proper setting in relation to all highway accidents. The spectacular and particularly disastrous nature of many grade crossing accidents is perhaps responsible for a tendency on the part of the general public to over estimate their frequency. Actually they comprise only between 1 per cent and 2 per cent of all highway accidents.

Mr. Claxton, in speaking before the conference, further stated:

People think a lot of accidents are due to railway trains at level crossings. But the figures show that only one one-hundredth of 1 per cent of deaths by automobile are due to railways.

Notwithstanding the fact that the percentage of deaths and accidents at railway crossings is comparatively small, it is still a serious problem and one in which we are all concerned. The Government took such a serious view of it that an order in council was passed directing the Board of Transport Commissioners to make an inquiry into this question.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: May I interrupt the honourable leader to ask him a question? Does the report of the Board of Transport Commissioners deal with railway accidents or automobile accidents?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It deals with accidents at railway crossings. Probably I should read the last part of the order in council:

The Board shall

(a) conduct a survey and report on the methods considered by the board to be practicable under all pertinent circumstances of eliminating the hazards and improving the public convenience and the protection and safety of the public at such crossings;

(b) review and report on the adequacy of The Railway Grade Crossing Fund to provide for the construction of works for the protection, safety and convenience of the public in respect of railway-highway crossings; and

(c) make such recommendations as the board may deem advisable in the premises.

So the inquiry was concerned only with accidents at railway crossings. The board made eight recommendations, which appear on page 72 of the report, and with leave of the house I will place them on Hansard:

1. Until Parliament enacts otherwise there should be an appropriation of $5,000,000, instead of the present $1,000,000, to the Fund each year from April 1, 1954, with a proviso that where on April 1 in any such year there is an uncommitted balance of more than $2,000,000 in the Fund the appropriation for that year should be such sum as with the uncommitted balance will amount to $7,000,000.

2. The contribution presently provided for, of 40 per cent of the cost of the actual construction work for the protection, safety and convenience of the public, with a maximum of $150,000, in respect of any one crossing at rail level, should be increased to 60 per cent and $300,000 respectively.

3. The Fund should be made available to aid reconstruction and improvement of grade separations in existence at crossings when the amendment comes into force and which because of their location, design or size are inadequate for the highway traffic using them, the contribution in any one case not to exceed 30 per cent of the cost of reconstruction and improvement nor exceed $150,000.

4. Contributions should be permitted towards the annual cost of maintenance and operation of automatic signals installed at crossings after the amendment comes into force, the contribution in respect of any one crossing not to exceed for any year the actual cost for that year nor exceed $200.

5. The provision in subsection (1) of section 265, which prevents a contribution from the Fund in respect of crossings at rail level constructed after April 1, 1909, unless there is the agreement referred to in the subsection between the railway company and a municipal or other corporation or person, should be eliminated, but there should be a provision that the board shall not apply any money out of the Fund towards the cost of work in respect of a crossing unless the crossing has been in existence for at least three years prior to the making of the board's order to apply the money.

6. The board should be expressly empowered to make contributions where it sees fit towards the cost of highway projects which involve the construction of a grade separation and the closing of an existing crossing or the diversion from the existing crossing of nearly all the highway traffic using it.

7. Section 263 of the Railway Act, which places on the railway company, unless and except as otherwise provided by an agreement approved by the board, all cost of protection, safety and convenience of the public in respect of any crossing of the highway where the railway is constructed after May, 1909, should be repealed.

8. That the Railway Act be amended to give effect to the foregoing recommendations.

May I come now to the act itself. The purpose of the act is to increase the amount which the Government will pay into the Railway Grade Crossing Fund from $1 million to $5 million a year. An important new provision is that payment out of the Fund can be made not only in connection with existing crossings at rail level, but also toward improvement of the grade separations that will be in existence at crossings when this act comes into force. The act as it now stands provides for payments toward rail crossings at rail level, but there is no provision for payments in connection with grade separations. Further, the act provides that only 40 per cent of the cost shall be paid out of the Fund toward work done at existing crossings at rail level, up to an amount of $150,000. Under the bill 60 per cent of the cost may be contributed up to a total sum of $300,000.

The bill further provides that 30 per cent of the cost of reconstruction and improvement of a grade separation can be paid from the Fund, up to a total of $150,000. Honourable senators may ask why 30 per cent is applicable to grade separations and 60 per cent to rail level crossings. The increase in danger at railway crossings is not the fault of the railways; it is caused by the increase of traffic on roads that pass over railway crossings. In the case of a grade separation, traffic goes under the crossing or above it, and there is no danger as far as the railway is concerned. The difficulty is that an accident might be caused through a bottleneck on the highway or by too many vehicles passing over a narrow bridge. For that reason, it was felt that 30 per cent would be a sufficient contribution towards grade separations.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Thirty per cent by the railway?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: No. Thirty per cent of the cost is paid out of the Railway Grade Crossing Fund. The balance of the money is payable by the municipality and the railway. The Board of Transport Commissioners has not the power to require a provincial government to make a payment, but if a municipality feels that an improvement should be made at a rail level crossing or at a grade separation, it can make its own arrangement with the province to share the cost.

I believe those are the main features of this bill.

May I add that all the recommendations which were made by the Board of Transport Commissioners are embodied in the provisions of this bill, with one exception, namely, the maintenance of warning equipment at railway crossings. The payment into the Fund is $5 million a year, and the Government felt that instead of using any of that money to pay for maintenance of upkeep of equipment at the crossings it would be better to use all the money for improving the crossings; in other words, to prevent accidents at crossings which are not adequately protected. The Government feels that the municipality or the province or the railways should look after the equipment once it has been installed.

I have already said that $5 million is paid into the Fund each year. If for any reason the $5 million is not used in any one year and there is a surplus, that surplus remains in the fund, but if the surplus is more than $2 million any amount over the $2 million is deducted from the $5 million. That means that the Fund will never have more than $7 million in it at any time. It will be seen that as the payment is made annually, unless the whole $5 million is used, there will always be some money in the Fund.

I strongly recommend that honourable senators give favourable consideration to this bill. The municipalities have been asking for the improvement of crossings for many years. If the bill becomes law, I think many lives will be protected and saved by its provisions.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, I think we all agree with the honourable Leader that it is highly desirable to increase the annual appropriation to the Railway Grade Crossing Fund to $5 million. However, the bill goes beyond that, for I notice that section 263 of the act is to be deleted. That section reads as follows:

> In any case where a railway is constructed after the 19th day of May, 1909, the company shall, at its own cost and expense, unless and except as otherwise provided by agreement, approved by the Board, between the company and a municipal or other corporation or person, provide, subject to the order of the board, all protection, safety and convenience for the public in respect of any crossing of a highway by the railway.

The new section 262, which is to take the place of the deleted section 263, provides that the cost of eliminating railway crossings may be apportioned by the board, of course making use of the $5 million assistance, as explained by the honourable leader this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That is an improvement, is it not?

Hon. Mr. Reid: But I have not heard an explanation as to why the railway company seemingly is being let out of its share of the cost. However, I did not rise particularly to draw attention to that clause, but I merely mention it in passing.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The new section 262 provides that:

> Notwithstanding anything in this act or any other act, the board may order what portion, if any, of the cost is to be borne respectively by the company, municipality or other corporation . . .

That refers to the railway company.

Hon. Mr. Reid: But under the present section 263 the railway had a greater responsibility than it will have when that section has been deleted.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I would point out to my honourable friend that under the present law no payments need be made by the community if the railway line was constructed subsequently to 1909. But this bill provides that no matter when a railway was constructed, the costs of protecting its crossings will come within the provisions of the act.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I should like to mention the general situation. One has only to travel about this great country of ours to realize the impossible task of eliminating every railway crossing. And if we are going to protect all the crazy-fool drivers who approach crossings without due care, we will have to eliminate every crossing. The last accident report I read—and I have not yet seen the one from which the honourable Leader quoted —contained the astounding statement that in 30 to 35 per cent of motor car-train collisions at crossings the motor car had struck not the front but the tail end of the train.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: They sometimes run into the side of the train too.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I do not know how we are ever going to protect careless drivers against railway crossing accidents in a country that has two transcontinental railways with perhaps 3,000 miles of track each. If the municipalities are going to do anything worth while by way of protecting crossings they must receive greater financial assistance. Certainly no rural municipality that I know of could afford to eliminate a crossing, which means either building a subway under the tracks or constructing an overhead crossing and removing any buildings that happen to be in the way of either operation.

The city of Ottawa is a good example of how traffic can be tied up with railway crossings. Certainly the removal of all level crossings by the construction of subways, as has been done on Bank Street, would greatly improve traffic conditions in this city. While I use conditions in Ottawa as an illustration, I would not like to hazard a guess as to how much it would cost to eliminate its level crossings. Certainly for forty years my own municipality has not been able to afford to eliminate a railway crossing. It is for that reason that I am wondering if greater help could not be given to the municipalities by the federal Government. In most cases the federal Government has put up some 40 per cent of the construction cost out of the fund, and the remaining 60 per cent was apportioned between the municipality and the provincial Government. Any additional assistance the federal Government could give, would of course be of great help to the municipality.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Under this bill the federal government proposes to put up 60 per cent of the cost.

Hon. Mr. Reid: If that is so, I want to commend the Government for bringing in the bill. I am sure we all support the honourable Leader of the Government in what he has said as to the need for eliminating accidents at railway crossings.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask the honourable Leader of the Government if he can give us some figures as to the number of people killed or injured in crossing accidents? So far he has given only comparative figures as to different classes of highway accidents.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am sorry, but I do not seem to have that precise information. However, I have some general details which may in part answer the question of my honourable friend. There are approximately 33,000 level crossings in Canada, of which 8,595 are in Ontario. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics reveals that at the end of 1952 there were 2,492 urban and 6,103 rural highway crossings on railways in Ontario. Of the urban crossings, 8,955 had some form of protection; and of the rural, 890 were protected crossings. Thus 65 per cent of urban and 84 per cent of rural crossings were unprotected.

I do not have the figures as to the actual number of people killed in crossing accidents, but the annual report of the Board of Transport Commissioners for 1953 contains this information: During the daylight hours automobiles running into the side of trains caused 59 accidents, with 22 killed and 68 injured, and during night hours there were 98 accidents with 19 killed and 175 injured, making a total of 157 accidents, 41 killed and 243 injured.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, I should like to make a few remarks about railway crossing accidents. I am sure a close look at the circumstances of most of such accidents would reveal that they occurred not at obscure crossings or where trains approached from around a bend, but on level crossings where the visibility was good. Drivers have been known to even run into the gates when they were down and in full view.

The number of accidents in Canada from all causes is most regrettable, especially in view of the fact they needlessly take the lives of many young people. The cure, I think, might be found in a more strict examination of persons applying for a driver's licence. The behaviour of a great many people would strongly suggest that they should never be granted a licence to drive on the highways today.

I was astounded to read an account of a recent accident on a four-lane highway where one would think there was little chance of an accident occurring. However, even on a beautiful stretch of road it sometimes happens that a car will cross a boulevard and get involved with a line of traffic going the other way. I know of an accident that occurred in Saskatchewan involving three doctors, only one of whom survived, and it happened on the straightest stretch of road in the province. The cause of most accidents is an excessive rate of speed. The expenditure of money to remove railway crossings may help, but I believe something else will have to be done to curb accidents. The honourable member from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) said that many municipalities would not be able to undertake the great expense of protecting crossings, especially crossings over which a train passes only once daily or less frequently. In a good many cases it is sufficient to warn people to exercise caution in approaching a railway track, or perhaps to require motorists to stop at all railway crossings. But something else will have to be done too. While the amount of money set aside under this legislation is quite large, it will nevertheless not be sufficient to build underpasses or overhead crossings everywhere in Canada. I feel that if people are not educated to exercise reasonable care there will continue to be many who will drive into the side of trains.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: A moment ago the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) asked me if I had any statistics on the number of people killed and injured in level-crossing accidents. I have since had an opportunity of glancing through the report on the railway crossing problem in Canada, which was prepared by the Board of Transport Commissioners, to which report I referred a few moments ago, and I find on page 16 a table setting forth the number of accidents and persons killed and injured from the years 1908 to 1952. With the consent of the house this table could be printed in Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: What are the figures for 1952?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The figures for 1952 are not quite complete. They show only that there were 463 accidents in that year. The figures for 1951 show a total of 490 accidents; that in the urban districts, 67 persons were killed and 213 injured; and in the rural areas, 124 killed and 309 injured.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Have I the consent of the house to put this table on Hansard? I am sure it would be of interest to honourable senators.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The statement is as follows:

SIGNIFICANT STATISTICS ON GRADE CROSSING ACCIDENT PROBLEM IN CANADA

Year	Total Number of Accidents	Urban		Rural		Number of Train Miles	Number of Automobile Registrations
		Killed	Injured	Killed	Injured
	(1)	(3)		(3)		(3)	(2)
						000,000	000
1908	N/A	30	35	21	33	83	3
1909	N/A	33	41	43	31	84	5
1910	N/A	28	45	35	16	90	9
1911	N/A	22	70	14	38	94	22
1912	N/A	33	43	42	41	105	36
1913	84	32	69	31	35	119	54
1914	131	49	72	32	50	113	74
1915	114	30	68	36	44	95	95
1916	101	26	68	41	30	114	128
1917	136	29	88	29	56	119	204
1918	139	40	76	33	56	114	277
1919	142	32	79	30	79	108	.....
1919	.....	39	95	30	98	112	342
1920	191	30	57	45	66	123	408
1921	189	35	60	49	100	108	465
1922	183	29	129	68	133	112	509
1923	241	24	124	50	144	120	576
1924	247	47	143	59	100	115	645
1925	257	35	154	46	197	114	724
1926	303	48	163	96	171	119	832
1927	314	36	147	60	200	123	940
1928	355	51	218	132	241	132	1,069
1929	390	35	190	93	266	124	1,187
1930	338	32	149	81	265	112	1,232
1931	320	33	166	51	55	97	1,201
1932	266	25	146	69	121	85	1,115
1933	218	26	109	52	138	78	1,083
1934	211	19	79	55	148	82	1,130
1935	242	28	88	93	140	84	1,176
1936	243	22	89	97	201	88	1,240
1937	286	23	86	94	252	91	1,320
1938	242	14	66	82	169	90	1,395
1939	243	17	79	83	203	96	1,439
1940	346	21	133	91	237	99	1,501
1941	380	27	107	109	323	115	1,573
1942	341	23	112	114	312	123	1,524
1943	301	22	127	82	271	130	1,512
1944	340	30	121	108	239	133	1,503
1945	382	31	196	90	274	131	1,497
1946	352	28	142	85	300	126	1,622
1947	442	41	195	110	306	131	1,836
1948	414	38	194	103	307	133	2,035
1949	441	50	223	90	267	130	2,291
1950	457	54	254	87	224	128	2,601
1951	490	67	213	124	309	137	2,868
1952	463	N/A	N/A	N/A	N/A	146	3,157

(1) Accidents, Years 1908-1919 ending March 31. Years 1919-1952 ending Dec. 31st.

(2) Motor Registrations are by Calendar Years, source, Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

(3) Casualties and train miles for years 1908-1919 ending June 30th; years 1919-1951 ending Dec. 31st. From Statistics of Steam Railways, Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Honourable senators, I rise just to ask a question and at the same time to compliment the Leader of the Government on placing the purpose and objects of this bill before us in such a clear manner. Anyone who has been driving on the highways for a number of years will, I am sure, appreciate the value of this legislation.

I am at a loss to understand why although there is a contribution of 60 per cent from the Fund in the case of work done on a crossing at rail level, the contribution is only 30 per cent in the case of improvement or reconstruction of an existing grade separation. With the increased traffic and increased speed and other dangers and hazards of today, and particularly when so much stress is being laid on civil defence plans, I should have thought that wherever there is a real hazard and need for protection a maximum contribution would be made, regardless of the nature of the work. No doubt the Leader intends to move that this bill be referred to a committee. If so, I think it would be well to inquire in committee why there is a lower contribution toward the cost of work on existing grade crossings than at rail level.

I am sure we all feel that this increase in the appropriation from $1 million to $5 million is a step in the right direction. For the sake of greater safety I sincerely trust that there will not be $2·5 million or $3·5 million of an unspent balance in the fund, but that the whole $5 million will be used every year. Would you care to comment, Mr. Leader?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I have nothing to add to what I said previously. The board decided, after giving this matter most careful consideration, that a payment of 30 per cent in connection with existing grade separations would be equitable. The railways have been running over many of these grade separations for years, the bridge or the underpass is already there, and the increase in danger, if any, is not caused by the railways; it is merely a result of increased traffic over or under the railway, as the case may be.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: There has been an increase in traffic on railways as well as on the highways.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes; but the railway can run just as well whether the old bridge remains or a new bridge is built.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: But the object of the legislation is to overcome a hazard, is it not?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I do not say it is a hazard. Reconstruction of an existing grade separation might have the effect of enabling highway traffic to move faster. There is not much hazard in cars going over a bridge, whether one or two at a time, but there might be traffic jams, and if the bridge were widened it would allow the traffic to move faster along the highway.

Hon. Mr. Horner: But the railway is not interfering with that traffic?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: No, the railway is not interfering at all. That is the reasoning which the Board of Transport Commissioners followed, I am sure, and I can see the reasonableness of their recommendation. The Government concurs in the proposal for 30 per cent in this instance.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Haig: Now.

Some Hon. Senators: Next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Some honourable senators suggest now, but I would suggest not earlier than the next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Surely the bill is going to be referred to a committee?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: If the honourable senator feels that the bill should be referred to a committee, I have no objection.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: If I were to speak again on this bill I know that I would be out of order, but I feel it should go to committee where a full discussion can be had on it. For instance, I could cite the case of a subway being built which is a real danger to the community, and all because of a mistake the railway made a number of years ago.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I have no objection to referring the bill to committee.

Hon. Mr. Quinn: Certainly, it should be sent to committee.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I move that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Honourable senators, before this bill is referred to the committee may I question what end can be attained by doing so. This legislation is based on the report of a Government board which was directed to make a report on the subject. It made its report, and the Government by this legislation has adopted its recommendations. Surely nothing we can do in committee will change those recommendations. If we did, it would be the first time I ever saw it happen.

I think the Government has done a very wise thing bringing in this bill to increase the annual appropriation. If I had spoken on the bill I would have said that. I do not want to in effect criticize the Government by going to committee with this bill. As far as I can see we can make no change in it at all in committee. I think we ought to send bills to committee only when there is a reasonable hope that they can be improved by our action. However, I have no objection, even if only one member wants it referred.

Hon. Mr. Quinn: There can be no harm in referring it to a committee.

Hon. Mr. Haig: No; but the Government may say, "What in the world is the use of having a commission to investigate a matter and report on it if the Senate refuses to accept the report and argues about it in committee?" The report will not be changed: I doubt if legally we have the power to change it. I am not opposed to having the bill go to committee, but to my mind it is just a waste of time.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

PRAIRIE FARM REHABILITATION BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. F. W. Gershaw moved the second reading of Bill 5, an Act to amend the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act.

He said: Honourable senators, the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act has been very helpful indeed, and the present amendment is designed to facilitate its operation. If honourable members will bear with me for a few minutes I will try to explain how the act works and in what way the amendments will improve it.

At the turn of the century the ranching industry prospered very greatly in the area where the act now operates. At that time ranchers would lease for one cent an acre—later increased to two cents—as much as 100,000 acres of land; and horses and cattle thrived on the nutritious native prairie grass—grass which was cured by the autumn sun and the wind, and provided feed during the winter when the Chinooks melted the snow; grass which for many centuries had supported vast herds of buffalo. In the early years of this century the dominion Government encouraged the incoming of settlers. They divided up these large leases into homesteads and pre-emptions, and people from Eastern Canada, from Europe and, in particular, from the northern States crowded in to take advantage of this cheap land. Very good crops were grown in 1915 and 1916; but for many years there was drought; and there was massive wind erosion and drifting of the fertile soil. About this time of year, because of the high winds, the crops shrivelled up and failed to mature, bringing poverty and despair to the settlers. In one year alone $80 million was dispersed in relief by way of seed and fodder; in other years, also, considerable relief was given; and of this money very small amounts were ever returned to the treasury.

As long ago as 1857, Captain Palliser, on behalf of the British Government, made an investigation of that short-grass country and marked out a triangular area which he decided was unfit for agriculture. In 1935, when the late Viscount Bennett was Prime Minister of this country, he recalled the fact of the Palliser report; and knowing conditions as he did, realized the seriousness of the situation and succeeded in having passed the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act. The next Government, in 1937, greatly enlarged the scope of this measure, with the object of helping the people who were settled in the area and had met with such great disasters. There were three objects in view. One was to put in effect better cultural practices; another was to make better use of the land; a third, and perhaps the most important, was water conservation. As regards the first objective, the system adopted included more summer-fallowing, the re-grassing of certain areas, and the planting of trees. As regards land utilization, a great deal of the poorer land was taken out of cereal production altogether. Of that submarginal land, one and three-quarter million acres was used for pasture purposes; in sixty different localities areas were fenced in where cattle could be fed during the summer months. Last year there were on these pastures 105,000 cattle, belonging to about 10,000 farmers who lived nearby. All this work was done in the province of Saskatchewan; the province of Alberta has never taken advantage of the provisions of the dominion law relating to pasturage.

The chief activity of all was in connection with water conservation. In the spring the snow melts; ten or twelve inches of snow will produce an inch of water; and fifty thousand dug-outs have been constructed to catch that spring run-off and to provide the farmer with a pool of water for stock-watering, for his garden, and for general use. The Government, of course, does the engineering work free and provides amounts ranging from $125 to $350 per dugout for putting in reservoirs for stock-watering purposes. It also has directed its attention to larger systems. In the West there are hills, such as the Cypress Hills and Wood Mountain, in the Souris and Qu'Appelle valleys, whose streams come down from the higher land; and to utilize this supply the Government, bearing the entire capital cost, has established 195 community projects, whereby a large dam is built to store water to be used during the summer for communities in the locality.

Yet another activity is concerned with large irrigation schemes such as the St. Mary-Milk River scheme, where a large dam has been built to hold the mountain streams which descend the eastern slopes of the Rockies. This particular dam is 186 feet high and a quarter of a mile at the base. It will contain and hold enough water to irrigate 465,000 acres. Another undertaking, the Bow River development, which is to supply water to land at a cost of $20 to $25 an acre, is nearing completion, and will irrigate about 240,000 acres. Larger schemes, connected with the Red Deer and the South Saskatchewan rivers, are being investigated. These will provide, in addition to irrigation, electrical energy, and one of them at least will supply water to some of the cities. Up to the present time about a million and a half acres have been irrigated, and it is estimated that these works can be expanded to irrigate at least three million acres.

Already there have been marked improvements in living conditions. Prior to irrigation a peddler, starting from some town which was supplied with water, would go around the country selling vegetables, small fruits, margarine, and even milk to the farmers. The introduction of irrigation methods enabled the farmers to grow fruits and vegetables and to raise poultry and dairy products. Milk became available, and as a result the farmer's children became healthier and happier. The farms were no longer remote homesteads and the farmers were able to enjoy community life. With the production of fruits and vegetables, canning factories, two sugar beet factories, and several processing plants were built in the area. However, there is still a lot of land that can be irrigated.

The amendment in section 1 of the bill is very simple and it is intended to do away with delays. It simply means that the minister can authorize a project that will cost up to $15,000 instead of $10,000.

The second and only other section of the bill, section 2, repeals sections 10 and 11 of the act. Section 10 of the act is being repealed as it is no longer required. Formerly if a minister wanted to buy a piece of land worth, say, $10, he could not do so without referring the matter to the Governor in Council. However, P.C. 4253, passed in 1952, allows any minister, on the advice of his department, to buy land up to the value of $15,000 without referring the purchase to the Governor in Council. Section 11(1) of the act deals with the purchase or rent of machinery and equipment. Formerly a minister could not acquire more than $5,000 worth of equipment without the approval of the Governor in Council, but the passing of the Financial Administration Act in 1951 gave a department authority to purchase machinery or equipment up to a value of $15,000 without referring the purchase to the Governor in Council. Section 11(2) of the act deals with the disposal of surpluses. Under the present arrangement the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation has the sole right to dispose of these surplus products.

Honourable senators, in brief, the object of this bill is to repeal sections 10 and 11, in order to tidy up the act; and to change the word "ten" to "fifteen" in section 9(2), so as to permit a minister to proceed with projects costing up to $15,000 without getting approval of the Governor in Council.

I should be glad to answer any questions, and if the bill is given second reading it could be referred to committee.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Could the honourable senator inform the house who bears the cost of these dugouts? Does the farmer or province contribute anything or does the federal government bear the whole cost?

Hon. Mr. Gershaw: The farmer does the work and the federal government will give him $125 for every dugout and $150 for every dam. In the case of a larger dam which irrigates a garden, the federal Government will pay the farmer up to $350. Then you have community schemes where water is harnessed from the hills. There are 195 of these schemes and the P.F.R.A. meets their whole capital cost. As to bigger schemes like the St. Mary's Milk River and the Bow River, the dominion pays for the cost of the reservoirs and the connecting canals. Then the provincial Government distributes the water to the farmers. The St. Mary's project cost the federal Government somewhere around $12 million for the Spring Coulee dam and the connecting canals. Another $12 million was paid by the province in connection with building the laterals and for distributing the water, but the province is entitled to recover whatever it can from the farmers. It will probably recover the full amount as a result of water rentals, and so on. The dominion's contribution is not recoverable.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Then in most instances the federal Government pays the whole cost of dugouts?

Hon. Mr. Gershaw: Not necessarily. If the farmer estimates his time it would probably cost more than $125. He would be out the difference. The Government only pays him $125 for a small dugout.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I do not criticize the legislation but when one considers that Alberta is almost the richest province in Canada and can clear off its provincial debt, I wonder why it should not be called upon to contribute to the cost of these schemes.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Some of these schemes are to be found in the "pool" province of Saskatchewan. I would like to ask the sponsor of the bill if he knows whether any irrigation has been done as a result of the Sunnynook dam that was built three or four years ago?

Hon. Mr. Gershaw: I am sorry, I do not know.

Hon. Mr. Horner: I saw that dam being built. It is situated on the Westberry Creek south of Hanna at Sunnynook and cost considerable money to build. When it was completed I saw some men demonstrating a new sprinkler method of irrigation. They were using a bunch of aluminum pipes. Evidently the farmers have not taken advantage of the system yet, but my son who lives near there may use it this year. I know that the dam created a lake eighteen miles long. It blocked a roadway and caused many farmers to drive greater distances to the grain elevator.

The honourable gentleman from Medicine Hat (Hon. Mr. Gershaw) referred to canning factories at Brooks, Alberta. It is amazing that the rather small acreage of fertile soil there will supply all the needs of the canning factories in the area. The same is true of the sugar beet industry. If the farmers were assured of a market they could grow sufficient sugar beets there to supply the whole of Canada. Just one irrigation scheme has made that possible. However, a great deal of the land around the Bassano dam is still used for grazing of horses. If settlers came in by the thousands, possibly the dam could be used to very great advantage. There is lots of land, and the soil is first class. A great variety of vegetables could be grown if that water were used. The last time I visited that district I was told that this was one of the finest places for fishing in the whole of Alberta. I do not know if the Government stocked the lake with fish or not, but I noticed about a hundred cars parked there; everybody seemed to be catching fish, which weighed from eight to ten pounds. There must be sufficient food to enable the fish to grow to that size, yet they were evidently hungry enough to take the bait.

For a number of years the seasons have been more favourable for dry farming, but no doubt the good years will come back again, and through irrigation the farmers will be able to grow alfalfa once more. The irrigation method of providing crops with water is all right for beets, peas and other products which go to the canning factories, but as a wheat growing proposition it is pretty well out. I venture to say that 95 per cent of the farmers would not pay for the cost of irrigation in an endeavour to raise wheat. Many years ago I visited a farmer in the wheat belt, and I said to him, "Why don't you get some irrigated land?" He replied: "Well, I have a failure every other year or so, but sometimes I am able to grow sixty bushels to the acre, without any irrigation, and I figure that the cost of levelling the land and the cost of the water would be too high. I think I am making more money than the men who are attempting to grow wheat on irrigated land."

Hon. Mr. Haig: May I ask the honourable member who explained the bill how much the dominion Government has paid out to date for these policies in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta?

Hon. Mr. Gershaw: The Government has expended $100 million in the four western provinces, including British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Can the honourable member state how much the Government has spent in each of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia and Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Gershaw: I am sorry, I cannot give those figures now but I will try to obtain them for my honourable friend.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Gershaw: Next sitting.

MEAT INSPECTION BILL

COMMITTEE AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the amendments made by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill 352, an Act respecting the inspection of meat and meat products entering into international and interprovincial trade.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I move that these amendments be now concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: With leave of the Senate, I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill, as amended, was read the third time, and passed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, June 21, at 8 p.m.

APPENDIX

REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON FINANCE

(Presented by Hon. Mr. Crerar. See p. 614)

THURSDAY, June 16, 1955.

The Standing Committee on Finance, to whom were referred the Estimates laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1956, reports as follows:

On Wednesday, March 16 last, the Senate passed the following reference to the Senate Finance Committee:

That the Standing Committee on Finance be authorized to examine the expenditures proposed by the Estimates laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1956, in advance of the bills based on the said Estimates reaching the Senate: That the said committee be empowered to send for records of revenues from taxation collected by the federal, provincial and municipal governments in Canada and the incidence of this taxation in its effect upon different income groups, and records of expenditures by such governments, showing sources of income and expenditures of same under appropriate headings, together with estimates of gross national production, net national income and movement of the cost-of-living index, and their relation to such total expenditures, for the year 1939 and for the latest year for which such information is available, and such other matters as may be pertinent to the examination of the Estimates, and to report upon the same.

That the said committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records.

In reports of previous years your committee has sought to show the effect of inflation upon public finance at all levels of government. That factor is still at work and is reflected directly in unprecedented estimates of the country's gross national wealth and income. In this report, however, we simply point out some high spots in connection with the federal Government Estimates, which reflect continued increases in public spending. We draw attention particularly to significant increases in the numbers of civil servants with special reference to the Department of National Defence, and to high costs connected with the construction of new buildings and the reconstruction of old ones. Our examination of witnesses was confined altogether to officials from the Treasury Board, the Civil Service Commission, the National Defence Department and the Department of Public Works. Your committee has not been able to have as many meetings, or give as much detailed attention to the entire list of estimates as in previous years, owing to the delayed reference to the committee in the earlier part of the session; and to the preoccupation of many of our members with other committee work.

CIVIL SERVICE INCREASES

Your committee did assemble data from official sources showing the steady increase in Civil Service personnel over recent years (Exhibit 1). It will be noted from this data that the paid servants of the Government have increased in number more than fifteen thousand in the last two years, mainly in the Defence Department. The total in the Service is now over 174,000.

In 1939 the cost of the Service in salaries and wages was well under $80 million. For the present fiscal year the total of Civil Service salaries and wages exceeds $554 million. This latter, it may be added, is about $40 million in excess of the previous year. The introduction of the five-day week over a large area of the Service has been responsible to a considerable extent for this increase which, of course, in the final analysis, has to be paid by taxpayers throughout the land. Evidence supplied by the Department of Public Works showed that as the result of the recent adoption of the five-day week, costs of servicing public buildings in Ottawa alone had been increased by $243,000.

Included in this exhibit also is a list of Crown corporations, 23 in number. Many of these Crown corporations pay their own way and a few have substantial surpluses from year to year in their operations. It should be clearly kept in mind, however, that since these are Crown corporations the Government must make good the deficits when any of them fail to make ends meet. An illustration of this was the Canadian National Railways in 1954. It will be noted also that in round figures the total employees in Crown corporations at the end of 1954 numbered 138 thousand. If we combine these with the Civil Service figures, excluding revenue postmasters who receive their remunerations mostly from commissions, the total number of persons directly and indirectly associated with Government activities at February 28, 1955, was over 312 thousand.

Included also is a summary of expenditures for the current fiscal year compared with the previous year, under the heading of "Standard Objects of Expenditures in Special Categories" (Exhibit 2). This shows the total expenditures by all departments for these various purposes. Associated with this is a statement of the amount each department of Government contributed to these expenditures (Exhibit 3). This statement (found in the pocket at the back of this report) provides the details of the summary just mentioned. This document was presented to Parliament by the Minister of Finance along with his annual estimates at the beginning of this session. Your committee suggests that all members of Parliament as well as others interested in Public Affairs would find a study of it useful.

COSTS OF PUBLIC CONSTRUCTION

The figures relating to the costs of certain public buildings (Exhibit 4) in Ottawa, are cited as an example of the increasing expenditures connected with Government Buildings everywhere. The officials from the Public Works Department, in their evidence, pointed out that plans and estimates for all such construction are now subject to the close examination and approval of committees of departmental officials, as well as by the members of Treasury Board. The Public Works Department is now trying to bring all Federal public building under its supervision, as provided by the Public Works Act. During the war years and the immediate post-war period, much building expansion was initiated and undertaken directly by other departments; and we think that the present trend to restore all such activities to the control of the Public Works Department should bring greater efficiency and greater economy.

GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT

We mention here a statement showing the gross national product and national income for the years 1939 and 1945 to 1954 inclusive (Exhibit 5). Your committee emphasizes the importance of this exhibit. The gross national product is the total of gross earnings of all the Canadian people in all their varied activities. This is the index to the economic health of the nation. If this gross product expands steadily year after year, a broader basis for taxation results. It thus follows that a given rate of taxation will produce increasing revenue as the national product increases; and conversely if expenditures are held down taxes can be reduced. However, if for any reason the gross product fails to increase, or declines, less revenue is produced from taxes and, with the same given expenditures, deficits are the consequence. This happened in 1954 when gross product declined, as against 1953, well over $400 million, accounted for mainly by a large measure of crop failure in the Prairie Provinces, and a higher ratio of unemployment due to curtailment of markets. It is clear now that the competition between the larger countries of the world for markets is becoming more intense and this competition may well force downwards the prices we receive for our exports. Any serious decline in prices, and more important, any loss of markets due to causes beyond our control would be bound to react adversely on the total of our gross National Product. This feature of our economy cannot carry too heavy emphasis.

It may be added here that the difference between the gross national product and the net national income is accounted for very largely by charges against gross income of such things as depreciation and obsolescence.

REVENUES AND EXPENDITURES

Exhibit 6 is a summary of net general combined revenues and expenditures of all Governments in Canada for the years 1939, 1945 and 1950 to 1955 inclusive. The amounts for 1954 and 1955 are estimated but can be considered to be approximately correct. In previous reports this data was further analyzed, giving the main sources from which revenues were derived by all Governments and the main purposes for which money was expended. We regret that this cannot be included in the present report. The Bureau of Statistics, which in the past has supplied this information, has been for some time engaged in the preparation of similar data for the coming Federal-Provincial Conference in October next, and this naturally had first priority.

Your committee would emphasize the importance of this data on revenues and expenditures by all Governments, which means municipal Governments, provincial Governments and the federal Government. For example, in 1950, the revenue of all Governments combined was roughly $4 billion, 300 million, and their expenditures $4 billion, 100 million. In 1954 the total collected in revenue was almost $5 billion, 950 million and the expenditures were $6 billion, 370 million. For 1955 (estimated) the corresponding figures are, revenue $6 billion 158 million, and expenditures $6 billion, 695 million.

There is an indication here of a tendency to increasing expenditures beyond the needs of the normal increase in population. This means what is generally known as "deficit financing". It becomes epidemic and increasingly affects all public financing—municipal and provincial as well as federal. What happens if this tendency continues and through possible inability to find markets for our products at profitable prices our economy slows down? Your committee feels that this is a matter which deserves the earnest attention of public men everywhere, irrespective of where the responsibility for governing lies, because a progression of years with "deficit financing" will mean ruinous inflation.

CONSUMER PRICES AND INFLATION

At this point in our report we include a table (Exhibit 7) showing the Consumer Price Index of the Bureau of Statistics. Prior to 1949 this was called the Cost-of-living Index, but for reasons which need not be considered here was changed in 1949 to Consumer Price Index. This table shows that for the last three years this index has remained quite stable. The inflationary trends of five years ago have been brought under control, for the time being at any rate—a matter of very great importance for all Canadians. It should not be forgotten, however, that inflation is still a powerful factor in our economy. The important thing here for all Governments is to strive to keep their spending within their income. The increasing demands, by sections of our population, on all Governments for more expenditures, to meet needs fancied or real, can be noted almost every day. In addition demands come from farmers for guaranteed prices for agricultural products, from labor unions for a guaranteed annual wage and higher rates of pay, from well-meaning groups of individuals for higher welfare expenditures, and from industries exposed to foreign competition for subsidies or more tariff protection. To what degree these demands upon Governments undermine the admirable qualities of self-reliance and initiative in the individual may be a question for debate. But there can be little doubt the extent to which such demands are met, in its end results, creates inflationary pressures.

For general information we include here a table (Exhibit 8) of selected items of consumer expenditure. While we have not precise figures of the total expenditures by all Governments combined under the broad heading of social welfare, it may be assumed that, at the present time, this is in excess of $1 billion, 600 million per year. We think it is worthy of note that the Canadian people, for alcoholic beverages, tobacco in its various forms, race track betting, soft drink beverages of all kinds, and commercial recreation, are spending well in excess of the total amount expended under the heading of welfare.

ECONOMY IN PUBLIC SPENDING

Your committee offers here some general observations. For reasons already stated it was not possible to make extensive examinations of all items of expenditures. The big item is, of course, the outlay associated with the defence services. It is not possible to forecast how these defence expenditures may proceed, but it appears to be a safe assumption that they will continue without much change for several years. Our responsibility to NATO, the need for ensuring our defences in our northern frontiers, appears to make certain that, unless some effective international plan of controlling armaments is worked out, we shall require to bear these burdens for the indefinite future. Your committee does suggest that these are hard inescapable facts. This emphasizes the need and importance of the strictest economy in ordinary Government administration, whether it be municipal, provincial or federal.

As already noted, we can view only with concern the increasing pressures on all Governments of sections of public opinion for increased spending. We do think that in this respect Governments, as the responsible leaders of the country, must cultivate realistic resistance to sections of the public which appear to think that Governments have inexhaustible resources to meet all the demands made upon them.

The Canadian people have a great record of achievement. In less than ninety years, since Confederation, they have developed a country that was largely a wilderness to the point where it is now the third or fourth trading nation in the world; where Canada has taken her place honourably in two world wars in defence of freedom; where organs of government at all levels have been established, and universities, schools and hospitals have been erected. With all this, a boundless natural heritage still remains to afford a sound economic basis for an enlightened, happy and prosperous people.

But we do wish to emphasize that if we are to enjoy in the future the fruits of past achievements we must journey along the road of reason and common sense and avoid the pitfalls of unsound political appeals.

WHERE THE BURDEN LIES

Your committee suggests that in matters of public spending there is a lack of understanding in the minds of many people of what the business of government, at all levels, is about. Governments have no money of their own. They can secure their money requirements only by taking it out of peoples' pockets in taxes, or by borrowing so long as they are able to borrow. If taxation becomes burdensome, and we believe that this is the case today, the individual's ability to spend and prosper in his own way is curtailed.

Equally, when Governments have to borrow to meet deficits, the danger signals are definitely flying. Surely it is possible for Governments to economize both in small things and large things, and thereby set a good example to individuals in the nation everywhere.

Above all, it is important to keep alive in the minds of all the people of the nation an understanding of what freedom means. People may clamour for security—many are doing that today—but it should never be forgotten that if personal freedom is sacrificed for personal security provided by Governments, the individual can have no guarantee that in the end he will have either freedom or security.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

T. A. CRERAR,
Chairman.

EXHIBIT 1

REPORTED NUMBERS OF EMPLOYEES OF THE GOVERNMENT OF CANADA EXCLUDING MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES AND THE R.C.M.P.

Year	Government Departments	Crown Corporations
March 31, 1939	46,106	67,752
March 31, 1945	115,908	161,464
March 31, 1948	118,370	119,566
March 31, 1951	124,866	115,942
March 31, 1952	137,037	136,400
March 31, 1953	159,654	143,438
March 31, 1954	165,454	139,473
February 28, 1955	174,860	138,094

NOTES

1. The statistics for the last three years were prepared on a slightly different basis from that of the previous years given. The latter, however, can be accepted as approximately correct in comparison with the last three years.

2. Crown Corporations. Figures for all years were supplied by the Bureau of Statistics based on data gathered by them from the Corporations.

Department (a)	March 31, 1953	March 31, 1954	February 28, 1955
Agriculture	7,320	7,544	7,712
Auditor General	145	140	139
Chief Electoral Officer	22	19	17
Citizenship and Immigration	3,435	3,462	3,854
Civil Service Commission	578	570	598
Defence Production	1,678	1,522	1,446
External Affairs	1,375	1,454	1,527
Finance	784	801	789
Comptroller of the Treasury	4,130	4,145	4,107
Royal Canadian Mint	226	215	222
Tariff Board	17	15	16
Fisheries	1,875	1,847	1,845
Governor General's Secretary	16	12	13
House of Commons	676	687	667
Insurance	94	94	90
International Joint Commission	20	20	21
Justice	230	246	254
Penitentiaries Branch	1,615	1,705	1,728
Labour	633	650	596
Unemployment Insurance Commission	8,330	8,881	8,845
Library of Parliament	45	49	61
Mines and Technical Surveys	1,703	1,919	1,991
National Defence—
Administration	5,126	5,601	5,858
Army Services	18,257	18,832	22,097
Naval Services	9,514	9,648	11,393
Air Services	9,923	11,637	14,212
National Film Board	558	553	581
National Health and Welfare—
Departmental Administration	331	438	523
Health Branch	890	906	885
Welfare Branch	924	867	869
Indian Health Services	1,582	1,526	1,654
National Library	14	19	23
National Research Council and Atomic Energy Control Board	2,268	2,415	2,541
National Revenue—
Customs and Excise	6,654	6,790	7,219
Income Tax	6,785	7,264	6,725
Post Office (b)	19,298	19,789	21,321
Prime Minister's Office and Privy Council Office	107	103	103
Public Archives	65	59	62
Public Printing and Stationery	1,199	1,295	1,382
Public Works	7,595	7,797	7,842
Northern Affairs and National Resources	2,402	2,335	2,610
Royal Canadian Mounted Police	849	903	933
Secretary of State	522	554	578
Senate	156	161	160
Trade and Commerce (including Dominion Bureau of Statistics)	2,853	2,649	2,649

Department (a)	March 31, 1953	March 31, 1954	February 28, 1955
Board of Grain Commissioners	833	826	836
Canadian Government Elevators	238	224	206
Transport	11,336	12,074	11,211
Air Transport Board	52	53	50
Board of Transport Commissioners	158	167	165
Veterans Affairs	13,042	12,847	12,519
Soldier Settlement and Veterans' Land Act	1,176	1,125	1,115
Sub Total, Government Departments	159,654	165,454	174,860
Revenue Postmasters	9,355	9,213	9,068
Total	169,009	174,667	183,928
Crown Corporations (c)	143,438	139,473	138,094
Grand Total	312,447	314,140	322,022

NOTES:

(a) The statistics for regular Government Departments include Classified Employees, Prevailing Rate Employees, Casual Employees and Ships' Officers and Crews.

Classified employees comprise those paid on the basis of stated annual salaries, the vast majority being under certificate of the Civil Service Commission, the balance being employed under the authority of other statutes (e.g. staffs of the National Research Council, the National Film Board, and the Canadian Government Elevators).

Prevailing Rate Employees are those whose remuneration is based on the prevailing hourly, daily or monthly rate for similar type of work in the area of employment and who occupy a continuing year round position on the establishment of a Department. Casual Employees are those whose remuneration is based on the prevailing hourly, daily or monthly rate for a similar type of work in the area of employment and who are employed for short periods of time in connection with specific projects.

Ships' Officers and Crews are employed on Canadian Government Vessels.

(b) Excludes revenue postmasters, figures for which are shown separately immediately below the sub-total.

(c) The Crown Corporations for whom staff strengths are included in this total are—

Atomic Energy of Canada, Ltd.
Bank of Canada
Canadian Arsenals Ltd.
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.
Canadian Commercial Corporation
Canadian National Railways
Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Ltd.
Canadian Overseas Telecommunication
Canadian Wheat Board
Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation
Crown Assets Disposal Corporation.
Defence Construction, Ltd.
Eldorado Mining and Refining, Ltd.
Export Credits Insurance Corporation
Hudson Bay Railway
Industrial Development Bank
National Harbours Board
Northern Transportation Co. Ltd.
Northwest Territories Power Comm.
Polymer Corporation, Ltd.
Prince Edward Island Car Ferry
St. Lawrence Seaway Authority
Trans-Canada Air Lines

EXHIBIT 2

SUMMARY OF ANNUAL ESTIMATES OF THE GOVERNMENT OF CANADA BY STANDARD OBJECTS OF EXPENDITURES AND SPECIAL CATEGORIES

Total, all Departments

	1938-39	1951-52	1952-53	1953-54	1954-55*	1955-56*
	(in millions of dollars)
(1) Civil Salaries and Wages	76·9	367·5	413·9	450·6	515·9	554·4
(2) Civilian Allowances	1·2	7·7	8·3	8·8	9·2	9·8
(3) Pay and Allowances, Defence Forces and R.C.M. Police	15·1	223·3	266·5	297·5	339·2	380·3
(4) Professional and Special Services	4·3	36·1	39·1	43·7	48·6	52·9
(5) Travelling and Removal Expenses	4·6	36·5	48·1	53·7	59·4	61·9
(6) Freight, Express and Cartage	0·7	13·4	19·3	18·8	17·9	22·0
(7) Postage	0·4	3·7	3·7	3·9	5·1	5·5
(8) Telephones, Telegrams and Other Communication Services	0·7	8·5	10·9	13·0	12·9	14·2
(9) Publication of Departmental Reports and Other Material		6·7	7·3	7·7	7·2	6·8
(10) Films, Displays, Advertising and Other Informational Publicity	1·8	10·8	10·6	10·0	11·2	10·2
(11) Office Stationery, Supplies, Equipment and Furnishings	2·7	18·3	18·4	19·4	19·6	19·6
(12) Materials and Supplies	6·1	263·3	379·6	228·9	213·2	196·6
BUILDINGS AND WORKS, INCLUDING LAND
(13) Construction or Acquisition	34·9	442·5	507·5	449·4	382·9	337·9
(14) Repairs and Upkeep	4·0	46·5	59·0	42·0	37·9	40·6
(15) Rentals	1·8	9·3	10·4	11·5	13·8	15·3
EQUIPMENT
(16) Construction or Acquisition	14·3	697·9	797·6	919·2	850·8	684·5
(17) Repairs and Upkeep	1·2	104·1	145·9	142·1	164·7	157·2
(18) Rentals		1·1	1·2	1·2	1·7	2·0
(19) Municipal or Public Utility Services	0·9	9·7	13·6	16·8	18·3	20·4
(20) Contributions, Grants, Subsidies, etc., not included elsewhere	50·7	117·3	193·8	518·3	479·2	326·5
(21) Pensions, Superannuation and Other Benefits	5·5	152·5†	79·6	102·1	88·2	79·1
(22) All Other Expenditures (other than Special Categories)	14·0	35·6	39·9	42·5	41·6	43·1
Total Standard Objects	241·8	2,612·3	3,074·2	3,401·1	3,338·5	3,040·8
SPECIAL CATEGORIES
(23) Interest on Public Debt and Other Debt Charges	132·4	437·7	435·5	469·0	511·5	487·1
(24) Subsidies and Special Payments to the Provinces	21·2	115·1	32·3 (317·1)	328·4	350·8	350·5
(25) Family Allowances Payments		320·0	332·2	348·8	366·0	383·6
(26) Old Age Pensions, including Allowances to the Blind and the Disabled	30·5	187·4	23·0	25·1	24·6	31·1
(27) Veterans Disability Pensions and Other Payments under the Pension Act	40·9	103·8	127·2	127·7	128·9	129·8

		1938-39	1951-52	1952-53	1953-54	1954-55*	1955-56*
				(in millions of dollars)
(28)	Other Payments to Veterans and Dependents	9·4	56·8	46·8	46·2	43·3	41·0
(29)	Government's Contribution to the Unemployment Insurance Fund		30·2	32·0	32·0	33·7	32·5
(30)	General Health Grants		25·0	27·5	30·0	31·8	31·8
(31)	Trans-Canada Highway Contributions		15·2	15·0	15·0	20·0	20·0
(32)	Movement of Mail by Land, Air and Water (Post Office)	15·6	38·2	41·4	45·6	48·0	46·6
(33)	Deficits—Government Owned Enterprises	57·2	17·9	4·9	5·5	34·1‡	4·7
	Total Special Categories	307·2	1,347·3	1,117·8 (1,402·6)	1,473·3	1,592·7	1,558·7
	Total Standard Objects and Special Categories	549·0	3,959·6	4,192·0 (4,476·8)	4,874·4	4,931·2	4,599·5
(34)	Less—Estimated Savings and Recoverable Items	0·1	27·3	27·0	344·5	366·6	239·2
	Net Total Estimated Expenditures (Budgetary)	548·9	3,932·3	4,165·0 (4,449·8)	4,529·9	4,564·6	4,360·3
(26)	Old Age Security Payments			322·0	344·9	355·9	367·6

(Figures in brackets include amounts payable in 1952–53 under the 1952 Tax-Rental Agreements but which were not shown in the printed Estimates for 1952–53).

NOTES

*A further breakdown by Standard Objects by Departments for the years 1954–55 and 1955–56 is set out following the "Definitions of Standard Objects and Special Categories".

†Includes $75 million in 1951–52, being a special Government Contribution to the Civil Service Superannuation Account, designed to reduce the deficit in the Account.

‡Includes $28·7 million in 1954–55, being the Canadian National Railways Deficit for 1954.

DEFINITIONS OF STANDARD OBJECTS OF EXPENDITURE AND SPECIAL CATEGORIES

Standard Objects (Items 1 to 22)

1. Civil Salaries and Wages

Includes salaries and wages, overtime and other special pay of all civilian full time, part time, seasonal and casual personnel normally considered as "Government Employees" (but does not include employees of agency and proprietary Crown corporations) whether paid at hourly, daily, weekly, monthly or annual rates of pay. It also includes Judges' salaries, those of the Governor General and Lieutenant-Governors and the indemnities to Members of both Houses of Parliament but does not include persons engaged for a specific project where pay and other costs would normally enter into the total cost of the project.

2. Civilian Allowances

Includes all types of allowances paid to or in respect of personnel normally considered as "Government Employees", such as Living, Terminable, Officer-in-Charge, Living and Representation Abroad, Special Service, Northern, Isolation, and Board and Subsistence Allowances, Mileage Allowances to Railway Mail Service Staffs, Allowances for Assistants, and other such allowances. Also includes Ministers' Motor Car Allowances, and the Expense Allowances to Senators and Members of the House of Commons.

3. Pay and Allowances—Defence Forces and R.C.M.Police

Includes pay and all types of allowances (except travel allowances included in Item No. 5 below) payable to members of the Defence Forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, including Subsistence Allowances and other perquisites common to such Services.

4. Professional and Special Services

Includes provision for services performed by individuals or organizations outside a particular departmental service, other than such services identified with specific works, projects or with projects and programs for which provision is made under Items 9 and 10; payments in the nature of fees, commissions, etc. for legal services, architects', engineers', analysts', accountants', reporters', translators', and writers' services; medical and dental services, doctors and nurses for Veterans Treatment and examination of pension applicants, hospital treatment and care and other outside technical, professional and other expert assistance; annuities and other agents paid on a fee or commission basis, payments to church organizations for Indian education, and Corps of Commissionaires services. It includes armoured car service and other operational and maintenance services performed under contract other than those more properly classified under other Items, such as the Marconi-operated Radio Stations of the Department of Transport which are included in Item No. 8.

5. Travelling and Removal Expenses

Includes travelling and transportation expenses of Government Employees, Members of the Defence Forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, removal expenses of those persons and their dependents, and living and other expenses of such persons on travel status; Judges' travelling expenses and travelling expenses and allowances payable to Senators and Members of the House of Commons. It also includes transportation of persons by contract and chartered facilities or by other means, automobile mileage, aeroplane fares, local transportation, etc., travelling expenses of persons engaged in field survey work, inspections and investigations. Does not include travelling and transportation of other than Government Employees such as travel costs for deports, applicants for treatment or pensions (veterans), etc., which are classified under Item No. 22.

6. Freight, Express and Cartage

Includes the cost of transportation of goods other than initial delivery cost on a purchase which is included in the Object covering the cost of the purchase itself. These costs range from the movement of mails from city Post Offices to the various Government Departments, to the movement of heavy equipment between camps and other establishments of the Defence Services.

7. Postage

Includes ordinary postage, air mail, registered mail, special delivery mail, post office box rentals and any other postal charges. Does not, of course, include provision for mail enjoying the "frank" privilege.

8. Telephones, Telegrams and Other Communication Services

Includes all costs of communication services by telephone, telegram, cable, teletype, radio and wireless communication (tolls, rates, rentals, etc.) and other communication costs such as Courier Services provided by outside agencies and communication services performed under contract or agreement such as the Marconi-operated Radio Stations of the Department of Transport.

9. Publication of Departmental Reports and Other Material

Includes provision for the publication, through the Queen's Printer, of Departmental Reports and other material, including informational and educational bulletins and pamphlets; publications on scientific and technical matters, natural resources, statistics and other such material; Hansard and other Parliamentary Papers; maps, charts, etc. The costs of printing, binding, engraving, lithographing, artwork, mats, writers' fees, and other costs attributable to specific publication projects and programs are included hereunder, with the exception of those belonging under Items 1, 2 and 5. The costs of publications and material produced wholly within a Service are distributed throughout other Items. The printing of forms and other stationery is included under Item No. 11.

10. Films, Displays, Advertising and Other Informational Publicity With the Exception of Publications

Includes provision for films, displays and other visual materials, advertising for publicity and general purposes, including advertising for tenders (except that charges directly arising from specific construction projects or purchases are included under such headings). It includes publication of proclamations, announcements, notices, etc., and various forms of educational and informational publicity, by radio, poster, press and other means. The costs of artwork, writers' fees, casual employees hired for a specific project, and other costs attributable to the foregoing are included hereunder with the exception of those belonging under Objects Nos. 1, 2 and 5, and the costs of projects or programs produced wholly within a Service where the costs are distributed throughout other Objects. Total provision for the operation of the National Film Board and the International Service of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is included under this item.

11. Office Stationery, Supplies, Equipment and Furnishings

Includes stationery, envelopes, blotting paper and other office supplies such as pens, pencils, erasers, ink, etc.; printed forms, including tax return, statistical and like forms; letterheads, ledgers and ledger sheets, carbon paper, stencils and other paper supplies; the purchase, repair and rentals of office machines and appliances, including typewriters, adding machines, calculators, recording machines, tabulating machines, microfilming equipment and supplies, inter-office communication equipment, postal meter machines, machine records and all other office equipment; also includes desks, chairs, filing cabinets and such office furnishings; books, newspapers and periodicals for office or library use.

12. Materials and Supplies

Includes provision for materials and supplies required for normal operation and maintenance of Government Services (other than Office Stationery, Supplies and Furnishings). It includes gasoline and oil purchase in bulk; fuel for ships, planes, transport, heating, etc.; feed for livestock; food and other supplies for ships and other establishments; live stock purchased for ultimate consumption or resale; seed for farming operations; food, clothing and other supplies for sick and indigent Indians; text books and school supplies purchased for Indian schools; books and other publications purchased for outside distribution; uniforms and kits, coining and refining supplies for the Mint; photographs, maps and charts purchased for administrative and operational purposes; laboratory and scientific supplies, including samples for testing; drafting, blueprinting and artists' supplies; supplies for surveys, investigations, etc.; chemicals, hospital, surgical and medical supplies; mail bags for transportation of the mails; char service supplies; coal, wood and electrical supplies; and all other materials and supplies other than those purchased for construction or repair projects which would normally be charged to such projects.

13. Construction or Acquisition of Buildings and Works, Including Acquisition of Land

Includes provision for all expenditures on new construction of buildings, roads, irrigation works, canals, airports, wharfs, bridges and other such type of fixed assets, and reconstruction of such type of assets, improvements involving additions or changes of a structural nature.

and also the installed cost of fixed equipment which is essentially a part of the work or structure such as elevators, heating and ventilating equipment, etc. It includes all such projects performed under contract or agreement or undertaken by a Department directly. The purchase of land is also included. The cost of casual employees hired for specific projects is included but not the cost of continuing employees assigned to work full or part time on such projects.

14. Repairs and Upkeep of Buildings and Works

Includes materials, supplies and other charges entering directly into the cost of repair and upkeep of the type of durable physical assets indicated under Item No. 13 above. It includes repair and upkeep projects performed under contract or agreement or undertaken by a Department directly.

15. Rentals of Land, Buildings and Works

Includes provision for rentals of properties required for special purposes by the various Departments and for the accommodation of Government Offices and Services by the Department of Public Works. Also includes rentals of space for storage of motor cars and other equipment and supplies.

16. Construction or Acquisition of Equipment

Includes provision for all new machinery, equipment and furnishings (other than office equipment and office furnishings), and includes motor vehicles, aeroplanes, tractors, road equipment, laboratory and other scientific equipment, vessels, ice-breakers and other aids to navigation and all other types of light and heavy equipment, and includes various types of such equipment for National Defence, such as ships, aircraft, mechanical equipment, fighting vehicles, weapons, engines, and such spare parts as are normally acquired with that equipment, workmen's tools, farm implements, furniture and furnishings required for other than normal office purposes. Also includes live stock, horses and dogs purchased for employment as such rather than for ultimate consumption or resale (see Item No. 12 above).

17. Repairs and Upkeep of Equipment

Includes all materials, repair and replacement parts and other costs entering directly into the cost of repair and upkeep of the type of equipment indicated in Item No. 16 above.

18. Rentals of Equipment

Includes provision for hire and charter—with or without crew—of vessels, aircraft, motor vehicles and other equipment (but excluding hire of such vehicles primarily for travel or cartage covered in other items, or hire of vehicles or other equipment for works projects where the rental would normally be included in the costs of the projects).

19. Municipal or Public Utility Services

Includes provision for all payments for services of a type normally provided by a Municipality, School Board, or Public Utility Service such as the supply of water, electricity, gas, etc., and includes water rates, light, power and gas services, school fees, and payment for such services whether obtained from the Municipality or elsewhere; taxes and water rates on diplomatic properties. Also includes payments to Municipalities in lieu of Taxes and local improvement charges.

20. Contributions, Grants, Subsidies, etc., not included Elsewhere

Includes contributions to international and other organizations; contributions toward the cost of joint undertakings and programs not directly the responsibility of the Federal Government; contributions or grants to governments outside Canada, whether in money or in kind; grants to national organizations such as the Boy Scouts Association and agricultural, health, welfare and similar organizations; subsidies to primary and other industries; contributions under agreements with the Provinces for vocational training and other purposes, unless otherwise provided for in special categories; payments under the Maritime Freight Rates Act; grants to various exhibitions, etc.; research grants and other assistance toward research carried on by non-governmental organizations; scholarships and similar payments. Does not include Grants to Municipalities in lieu of Taxes (Item No. 19), Subsidies and Special Payments to the Provinces (Item No. 24), Government's contribution to the Unemployment Insurance Fund (Item No. 29), General Health Grants paid to Provinces (Item No. 30), contributions to the Provinces for the Trans-Canada Highway (Item No. 31), nor the Deficits on Government Owned Enterprises (Item No. 33).

21. Pensions, Superannuation and Other Benefits in Consideration of Personal Services

Includes pensions, superannuation and other benefits to former civilian Government employees and ex-members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, or their dependents. It also includes payment of compensation under the Government Employees Compensation Act, the Government's contribution to the Superannuation Account and the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Account, Sick Mariners Dues, Judges' Pensions, Gratuities in lieu of Retiring Leave, Gratuities to Families of Deceased Employees, the Government's contribution to the Public Service and Regular Forces Death Benefit Accounts, payments under the Defence Services Pension Act and the Government's contribution, as an employer, to the Unemployment Insurance Fund. It does not, however, include the Government's contribution to the Unemployment Insurance Fund which represents one-fifth of the net amount contributed by employers and employees combined (Item No. 29) Disability Pensions in respect of World Wars 1 and 2 (Item No. 27), nor Other Payments to Veterans and Dependents (Item No. 28).

22. All Other Expenditures (other than Special Categories)

Includes minor residual items shown as "Sundries" in practically all votes. These include such costs as towel service, laundering and dry cleaning, loss of personal effects, bonding of Government employees, and other small miscellaneous articles and services. It includes licences, permits, dockage, towage, wharfage and mooring privileges; works of art for exhibits, and historical material for galleries, museums and archives. It includes travel costs incurred for other than Government employees, e.g., immigrants, veteran patients and migrant labour. Also included is provision for many items and services detailed throughout the Estimates which do not lend themselves to distribution under the specific headings detailed in this Summary.

SPECIAL CATEGORIES (Items 23 to 33)

23. Interest on Public Debt and Other Debt Charges

Includes interest on the Funded Debt of Canada (including Treasury Bills) and on other liabilities such as Trust and Other Special Funds. It also includes costs of issuing new loans, Annual Amortization of Bond Discount, Premiums and Commissions, and the costs of servicing the Public Debt.

24. Subsidies and Special Payments to the Provinces.

Includes Provincial Subsidies payable under the British North America Act and subsequent arrangements; Special Compensation to the Provinces in lieu of certain taxes as provided in the Tax-Rental Agreements. It also includes certain payments to Newfoundland under the Terms of Union. In general, it does not include payments made to Provinces for expenditures for specific purposes, some of which are included in Items Nos. 20, 26, 30 and 31.

25. Family Allowances Payments

Payments of monthly allowances authorized by the Family Allowances Act—Chap. 109, Revised Statutes.

26. Old Age Pensions, Including Allowances to the Blind and the Disabled

Includes pensions authorized by the Old Age Security Act, payment of the Federal Government's 50% share of old age assistance authorized by the Old Age Assistance Act, payment of the Federal Government's 75% share of allowances paid to blind persons under the Blind Persons Act, and payment of the Federal Government's 50% share of allowances paid to disabled persons under the Disabled Persons Act.

27. Veterans' Disability Pensions and Other Payments Under the Pension Act

Includes pensions and other payments authorized under the Pension Act, the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act and the Civilian Government Employees (War) Compensation Order. Most of these payments arise from service during World Wars 1 and 2.

28. Other Payments to Veterans and Dependents

Includes provision for War Veterans Allowances, including the Assistance Fund, Veterans Treatment and Other Allowances, Unemployment Assistance for Veterans, Rehabilitation Benefits, War Service Gratuities, Re-establishment Credits and other Sundry Items.

29. Government's Contribution to the Unemployment Insurance Fund

Provides for the Government's contribution to the Unemployment Insurance Fund and represents one-fifth of the net amount contributed by employers and employees combined.

30. General Health Grants

Provides for General Health Grants to the Provinces, the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory under terms and conditions approved by the Governor in Council to assist in hospital construction, extending and improving health services, prevention of tuberculosis, prevention of mental illness, control of venereal diseases, prevention and treatment of crippling conditions in children, training of health and hospital personnel, programs for the detection and treatment of cancer, public health research, provision of laboratory and radiological diagnostic facilities and services, medical rehabilitation and the improvement of maternity, infant and child care.

31. Trans-Canada Highway Contributions

Covers payments to those Provinces which have entered into agreements with the Federal Government under the Trans-Canada Highway Act, Chap. 269, Revised Statutes, in respect of the construction of the Trans-Canada Highway.

32. Movement of Mail by Land, Air and Water (Post Office)

Includes provision under the Post Office Department for Mail Service by Air, Water and Ordinary Land Conveyance, including Rural Mail Delivery.

33. Deficits—Government Owned Enterprises

Includes provision for the deficits incurred in the operation of Government Owned Enterprises such as the Hudson Bay Railway, the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Limited, the Prince Edward Island Car Ferry and Terminals, the North Sydney, N.S.—Port-aux-Basques, Nfld., Ferry and Terminals, and Churchill Harbour.

34. Less—Estimated Savings and Recoverable Items

In certain special instances it is necessary for commitment and control purposes to detail total requirements of services but, in order that the actual amount of cash requirement only may be voted, deductions are made of estimated savings or recoverable amounts. Since the Standard Objects are made up of the gross requirements, the total of those objects must be reduced by these deductions in order to arrive at the total amount provided in the Estimates.

EXHIBIT 4

PUBLIC BUILDINGS OVER $500,000 BEGUN OR COMPLETED IN OTTAWA AND HULL FROM APRIL 1, 1951, TO DATE

(A) There are nineteen public buildings costing over $500,000.00 that were begun or completed in Ottawa and Hull during the five years from April 1, 1951, to the present.
(B) Expenditures involved in each follow:

—	(1) Site	(2) Building	(3) Landscaping and Paving	* (4) Furnishings and Equipment	Total
	$	$	$	$	$
Veterans' Memorial Buildings:
East Building	427,082	6,456,583	—	129,310	7,012,975
West Building	288,840	6,639,125	—	100,000†	7,027,965
Parliamentary Library (Rehabilitation)	Crown-owned	2,398,000	Nil	Nil	2,398,000
Central Heating Plant—Cliff St.—renovations	Crown-owned	1,413,674	Nil	Nil	1,413,674
Chemistry Lab., Agriculture—Experimental Farm	Crown-owned	865,437	Nil	Nil	865,437
National Research Council, Montreal Road	Crown-owned	—	Performed by F.D.C.	—
Plant Engineering	—	593,129	—	—	593,129
Building Research	—	1,099,436	—	—	1,099,436
Applied Chemistry	—	1,189,482	—	—	1,189,482
Radio and Electrical	—	3,052,897	—	—	3,052,897
Tunney's Pasture Development	715,680	—	1,887,833	—	2,603,513
Bureau of Statistics	—	6,855,454	—	—	6,855,454
Power Plant	—	675,542	—	—	675,542
Finance Storage	—	603,614	—	26,000	629,614
Archives Storage	—	1,191,172	—	—	1,191,172
Food and Drug Laboratory	—	2,711,457	—	—	2,711,457
P.W.D. Testing Laboratory	—	691,525	—	8,335	699,860
N.H. & W. Virus Laboratory	—	988,921	—	3,900	992,821
Laboratory of Hygiene	—	1,393,567	—	—	1,393,567
National Printing Bureau—Hull, P.Q.	564,991	13,035,009	150,000	250,000†	14,000,000
Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—Head Office	38,860	2,177,479	67,926	202,538	2,486,803
Total:					58,892,798

* Includes only that type of office equipment normally purchased through Public Works, such as desks, chairs, shelving and filing cabinets. Does not include laboratory equipment and heavy machinery bought departmentally.
† (Est. only).

EXHIBIT 5(i)

NATIONAL INCOME AND GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT, 1939 AND 1945-54

(millions of dollars)

—	1939	1945	1946	1947	1948	1949[1]	1950[1]	1951[1]	1952[1]	1953[1]	1954[1]
Wages, Salaries and Supplementary Labour Income.	2,575	4,953	5,323	6,221	7,170	7,761	8,311	9,716	10,818	11,661	11,900
Military Pay and Allowances	32	1,117	340	83	82	115	137	201	270	309	367
Investment Income	917	1,859	1,975	2,269	2,464	2,445	3,155	3,642	3,733	3,775	3,709
Net Income of Unincorporated Business:
Accrued Net Income of Farm Operators from Farm Production[2]	385	1,010	1,112	1,223	1,518	1,504	1,503	2,072	1,858	1,649	1,114
Net Income of Non-farm Unincorporated Business[3]	464	901	1,071	1,189	1,326	1,369	1,444	1,507	1,575	1,692	1,645
NET NATIONAL INCOME AT FACTOR COST	4,373	9,840	9,821	10,985	12,560	13,194	14,550	17,138	18,254	19,086	18,735
Indirect Taxes less Subsidies	733	1,003	1,269	1,604	1,772	1,830	2,018	2,478	2,714	2,900	2,913
Depreciation Allowances and similar Business Costs.	610	928	903	1,118	1,276	1,437	1,636	1,910	2,115	2,364	2,490
Residual Error of Estimate	−9	79	33	61	5	1	−1	−52	119	66	−153
GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT AT MARKET PRICES	5,707	11,850	12,026	13,768	15,613	16,462	18,203	21,474	23,202	24,416	23,985

[1] Includes Newfoundland.

[2] This item includes the undistributed earnings of the Canadian Wheat Board, and an inventory valuation adjustment for grain in Wheat Board Channels.

[3] Includes net income of independent professional practitioners.

EXHIBIT 5(ii)

GROSS NATIONAL EXPENDITURE, 1939 AND 1945-1954

(millions of dollars)

—	1939	1945	1946	1947	1948	1949[1]	1950[1]	1951[1]	1952[1]	1953[1]	1954[1]
Personal Expenditure on Consumer Goods and Services	3,904	6,811	7,977	9,173	10,112	10,963	12,029	13,273	14,363	15,115	15,581
Government Expenditure on Goods and Services[2]	765	3,704	1,832	1,570	1,798	2,128	2,326	3,243	4,259	4,362	4,360
Gross Domestic Investment: [3]
New Residential Construction	185	272	371	506	637	742	801	781	786	1,061	1,159
New Non-residential Construction	166	252	443	599	818	903	1,026	1,260	1,554	1,706	1,676
New Machinery and Equipment	254	462	584	1,016	1,230	1,323	1,389	1,769	1,916	2,073	1,711
Change in Inventories	331	−260	519	947	605	231	960	1,620	270	605	−230
Exports of Goods and Services	1,451	3,597	3,210	3,638	4,054	4,011	4,183	5,089	5,573	5,420	5,134
Deduct: Imports of Goods and Services	−1,328	−2,910	−2,878	−3,621	−3,636	−3,837	−4,513	−5,613	−5,400	−5,860	−5,559
Residual Error of Estimate	9	−78	−32	−60	−5	−2	2	52	−119	−66	153
GROSS NATIONAL EXPENDITURE AT MARKET PRICES	5,707	11,850	12,026	13,768	15,613	16,462	18,203	21,474	23,202	24,416	23,985

[1] Includes Newfoundland.

[2] Includes outlay on new durable assets such as building and highway construction by governments, other than government business enterprises. Also, includes the changes in inventories of government commodity agencies.

[3] Include capital expenditures by private and government business enterprises, private non-commercial institutions, and outlays on new residential construction by individuals.

EXHIBIT 6

SUMMARY OF NET GENERAL COMBINED REVENUE AND EXPENDITURE ALL GOVERNMENTS IN CANADA

EXCLUSIVE OF INTER-GOVERNMENT TRANSFERS

Fiscal years ended nearest December 31, 1939, 1945 and 1950 to 1955

	Government of Canada	Provincial governments	Municipal governments	All governments
REVENUE	Millions of Dollars
1939	480	236	317	1,033
1945	2,720	317	353	3,390
1950	2,906	827	560	4,293
1951	3,766	945	651	5,362
1952	4,349	921	740	6,010
1953[1]	4,437	994	800	6,231
1954[2]	4,149	960	839	5,948
1955[2]	4,242	1,011	905	6,158
EXPENDITURE	Millions of Dollars
1939	571	355	305	1,231
1945	4,679	371	334	5,384
1950	2,495	924	682	4,101
1951	3,310	1,040	780	5,130
1952	4,009	1,166	899	6,074
1953[1]	4,040	1,218	992	6,250
1954[2]	4,000	1,311	1,060	6,371
1955[2]	4,121	1,464	1,110	6,695

[1] Preliminary.
[2] Estimated.

Dominion Bureau of Statistics, May, 1955

EXHIBIT 7

DOMINION BUREAU OF STATISTICS—PRICES SECTION

CONSUMER PRICE INDEX FOR CANADA, 1945-1955*

(1949 = 100)

			Index
1945			75·0
1946			77·5
1947			84·8
1948			97·0
1949			100·0
1950			102·9
1951			113·7
1952			116·5
1953			115·5
1954			116·2
1954	January	2	115·7
——	February	1	115·7
	March	1	115·5
	April	1	115·6
	May	1	115·5
	June	1	116·1
	July	2	116·2
	August	2	117·0
	September	1	116·8
	October	1	116·8
	November	1	116·8
	December	1	116·6
1955	January	3	116·4
——	February	1	116·3
	March	1	116·0

* All figures in this table are directly comparable with each other.

EXHIBIT 8

SELECTED ITEMS OF CONSUMER EXPENDITURE

(Millions of dollars)

	1952	1953
Alcoholic Beverages	833	869
Tobacco in various forms	455	453
Race track betting	69	84
Soft drink beverage—all kinds	189	198
Commercial Recreation	198	205
Total of above items	1,744	1,809

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 21, 1955

The Senate met at 8 p.m., the Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 351, an Act respecting Canadian National Railways.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: With leave, next sitting.

MEAT INSPECTION BILL

AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN BY COMMONS

A message was received from the House of Commons returning Bill 352, an Act respecting the inspection of meat and meat products entering into international and interprovincial trade, and acquainting the Senate that they have agreed to the amendments made by the Senate to this bill, without amendment.

CANADA AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS STANDARDS BILL

AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN BY COMMONS

A message was received from the House of Commons returning Bill 411, an Act to establish national standards for agricultural products and to regulate international and interprovincial trade in agricultural products, and acquainting the Senate that they have agreed to the amendments made by the Senate to this bill, without amendment.

DIVORCE STATISTICS

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I am sure all members of the house, and particularly those who are members of the Standing Committee on Divorce, will be pleased that I am able to report that all petitions for divorce ready to be heard at this session have been dealt with. The committee has completed its work so far as the hearing of divorce petitions and evidence is concerned, so I am in a position tonight to present the committee's 427th and final report for this session. I propose to read it and to make some comments as I go along, and I shall certainly make some further comments when I have read the report.

For the present session 473 petitions for bills of divorce were presented to the Senate and dealt with by the Standing Committee on Divorce, as follows:

Petitions heard and recommended	407
Petitions heard and rejected	7
Petitions withdrawn	11
Petitions not proceeded with	48
Total	473

May I point out that the 48 petitions were not proceeded with because the litigants were not prepared to go on, and not by any wish of the committee.

Of the petitions recommended during the present session of Parliament, 124 were by husbands and 283 were by wives.

Perhaps the lady senators may have some comments to make on that inequality of division as between husbands and wives—no doubt to the disparagement of the husbands.

Hon. Mrs. Fallis: The figures speak for themselves.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The report continues:

Of the petitions recommended during the present session of Parliament, one was from a petitioner domiciled in the province of Newfoundland, and 406 were from petitioners domiciled in the province of Quebec.

The petitioner domiciled in the province of Newfoundland was a wife.

Of the 406 petitioners domiciled in the province of Quebec, 124 were husbands and 282 were wives.

The committee met on 52 days and held a total of 190 meetings, of which 138 were meetings of subcommittees. On 10 days the committee functioned in four sections.

Or, more properly, four subcommittees.

On 23 days the committee functioned in three sections. On 10 days the committee functioned in two sections. On 9 days the committee functioned in one section.

On the nine days when the committee functioned in only one section the case in hand was continued from day to day. One case in particular occupied the committee for four consecutive days. The reason why the committee functioned as four subcommittees for only ten days was that there were not sufficient cases completed and ready for hearing to occupy the four subcommittees for a longer time. A great deal of work is done by the Committees Branch of the Senate in an effort to have counsel prepare their cases for hearing as soon as possible. Had many of the cases been prepared with greater promptitude the committee's work would have been completed long before this date.

In 24 cases the committee recommended that part of the Parliamentary fees be remitted.

The fees were remitted because of the poverty of the applicant, and from memory I would say that the remission in each case was to a woman.

The fees paid to Parliament for bills of divorce heard and recommended during the 1955 session amounted to $82,280.

A considerable sum of money.

Assuming that all bills of divorce recommended by the committee, now in various stages before Parliament, receive the Royal Assent, the comparison of dissolutions of marriage granted by Parliament in the last ten sessions is as follows:

1947	348
1947-48	292
1949, 1st session	184
1949, 2nd session	166
1950	240
1951	294
1952	312
1952-53	282
1953-54	378
1955	407

Honourable senators will note from those figures that from 1947 to 1949 the number of cases decreased, and from 1949 to the present session it has been steadily increasing. Indications are, I think, that we may expect further increases in the immediately forthcoming sessions.

Statistics covering the number of divorces granted in Canada during the years 1950 to 1954, both inclusive, (1955 for Newfoundland and Quebec), are as follows.

I do not propose to read this statement to the house, but it will appear in the record.

The statement is as follows:

	1950	1951	1952	1953	1954	(1955)
Canada	5,373	5,163	5,634	6,110	5,800
Newfoundland	5	4	3	9	8	1
Prince Edward Island	13	10	9	15	8
Nova Scotia	199	187	188	185	249
New Brunswick	194	156	200	181	117
Quebec	234	290	309	273	370	406
Ontario	2,228	2,102	2,202	2,774	2,346
Manitoba	309	361	338	374	371
Saskatchewan	280	226	223	218	250
Alberta	534	589	630	603	610
British Columbia	1,377	1,339	1,532	1,478	1,471

Honourable senators will note from those figures that in 1954 the increase over 1950 for all Canada was about 425. The figures for Ontario are perhaps of interest to the house: in 1954 there was an increase over 1950 of only slightly more than 100 in the number of divorces granted by the Ontario courts. British Columbia seems to be doing very well in the matter of numbers—in 1950 there were 1,377 divorces granted in that province, and in 1954, 1,471.

I thought it interesting to observe the distinction between husbands and wives, as petitioners, over the last few years. The same trend, you will observe, applies to all Canada as to the two provinces from which divorce petitions are made to Parliament.

The following statement shows a comparison between the number of divorces granted to husbands and wives respectively in the years mentioned.

	Husbands	Wives
1950	2,100	3,273
1951	2,010	3,155
1952	2,218	3,416
1953	2,421	3,689
1954	2,278	3,522

Now I would like to make one or two comments on matters that are not mentioned in the report. First, I would like to call attention to the very excellent attendance of most of the senators who are members of this committee. I think that credit should be given where credit is due. The one who stands highest on the attendance list, and to whom I think perhaps the Harbour Commissioner's hat should be awarded, is Senator Golding.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: He attended on 51 days of the 52 days on which the committee sat, and on the one day he was absent I rather suspect that he lost his vote. I suspect so because he abandoned his duties to the Divorce Committee in order to perform his duty as a voter in the province of Ontario. I think Senator Golding should be given a very high award for complete attendance.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Give him an Oscar.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The second member who deserves high commendation is Senator Barbour, who attended on 47 days.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I can pass over myself, because I was present on only 40 days.

I can hardly emphasize too strongly the wonderful service that has been given to the committee by both the medical men who are members, Senator Howden and Senator Gershaw.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The value of their advice has simply been beyond calculation. Senator Howden attended on 39 days.

As a lawyer I suppose I should not bow to the other lawyers who are members of the committee, but I do wish to point out that Senator Ross has performed a great service. He attended on 35 days, and was chairman of a subcommittee, I think, on practically every one of those days.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I would also like to say, if you will permit me, how much I have valued the services of the two lady senators on this committee.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: In my judgment the sense of responsibility exhibited by Senator Hodges and Senator Fergusson toward their duties on this committee was magnificent. If their attendance record is not quite as high as somebody else's, it is because they have also been serving on other important committees. Senator Hodges attended on 33 days; Senator Fergusson, on 32 days.

Senator Hawkins served 29 days; Senator Farquhar, 26 days. And Senator Gershaw, who was away for a period but who when he was here was a constant attendant, served 26 days.

As to the other members of the committee, who served less than 25 days, I do not think I need mention the exact figures on their attendance.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: But I must make special reference to Senator Aseltine. In a sense he is regarded as an honorary member of the Divorce Committee, because for a long period of years he was a very active member and for no less than ten years served as the committee's chairman. I have not thought it appropriate to ask him to give very constant service as a member of the committee, but he has substituted for the chairman of the general committee on a number of occasions, and always when he has been asked to do so.

Senator Haig and Senator Macdonald are, of course, ex officio members of the committee in their respective capacities as Leader of the Government and Leader of the Opposition; and may I say that I have greatly valued the attendance of each of them, when their other duties have permitted them to be present. Particularly were we all pleased at the recent attendance of the Leader of the Government, when a general discussion took place in which he was complimentary—I think, not unduly—to the members of the committee.

I have a further statement which, instead of reading in full, I would ask consent to place on Hansard.

The following information has been obtained by reviewing 364 cases heard by the committee at the present session of Parliament:

The average duration of the actual marriage, that is from the date of marriage to the date of separation, was 8·2 years.

In 35 cases the marriage lasted 1 year; in 24 cases the marriage lasted 2 years; in 36 cases the marriage lasted 3 years; in 34 cases the marriage lasted 4 years; in 25 cases the marriage laster 5 years; in 23 cases the marriage lasted 6 years; in 23 cases the marriage lasted 7 years; in 17 cases the marriage lasted 8 years; in 19 cases the marriage lasted 9 years; in 18 cases the marriage lasted 10 years; in 17 cases the marriage lasted 11 years; in 14 cases the marriage lasted 12 years; in 10 cases the marriage lasted 13 years; in 7 cases the marriage lasted 14 years; in 9 cases the marriage lasted 15 years; in 7 cases the marriage lasted 16 years; in 6 cases the marriage lasted 17 years; in 7 cases the marriage lasted 18 years in 3 cases the marriage lasted 19 years; in 8 cases the marriage lasted 20 years; in 2 cases the marriage lasted 21 years; in 4 cases the marriage lasted 22 years; in 4 cases the marriage lasted 23 years; in 3 cases the marriage lasted 24 years; in 3 cases the marriage lasted 19 years; in 1 case the marriage lasted 26 years; in 2 cases the marriage lasted 27 years; in 2 cases the marriage lasted 29 years; in 1 case the marriage lasted 33 years; in 1 case the marriage lasted 36.

The shortest period of marriage was 12 days. The longest period of marriage was 36 years. Of the 364 cases reviewed, 192 had children and 172 had none.

I may say that the reason that not all the cases were reviewed was that the review was not commenced until after the Divorce Committee had been sitting some little time. I thought it would be helpful to the house to know the average duration of the actual marriage. I had supposed that most of the divorces were of rather newly married couples, but the figures do not bear out that assumption. The brevity of the shortest period of marriage, namely twelve days, requires some explanation. On the twelfth day after the wedding the husband confided to his wife that he had a common-law wife and a very considerable family, so that his legal wife was not his only financial obligation; and she left him at once. As to the final statement—that of the 364 cases reviewed, 192 had children and 172 had none—it may be interesting, at least to moralists, to know that 50 per cent of the families in which there were applications for divorce had no children; and it has seemed to me that that fact was, in some cases, the reason for the application.

One more matter of comment, if honourable senators will permit me. I wish to say, and I say it quite honestly, and I mean the words I use, that no body charged with a responsibility such as ours was ever served better, more faithfully, more thoughtfully and more industriously by its staff than this Committee on Divorce has been. It has a considerable staff, headed by Mr. Harvey Armstrong, Chief Clerk of Committees, whose knowledge, attention and ability are thoroughly appreciated by the members of our committee. The Assistant Chief Clerk of Committees, Mr. John Hinds, has served as clerk of No. 4 subcommittee; but his more important duty has been, in each case, to check the papers, payment of fees, advertising of notices, service of process and all that sort of thing, and to make sure that all the particulars and requirements of the Rules have been complied with. In the ordinary courts those duties are left to the judge: he has to check the advertising and the proofs are made before him. Not so in this committee. That work is done by the staff, who certify to our committees that the Rules have been complied with; and the duty is an important one. Mr. James D. MacDonald, clerk of the general committee, and also clerk of No. 1 subcommittee, has kept the minutes of the committee and performed many functions, including the statistical work whose results I have just presented. He has been a most valuable assistant, at the hearings, in preparing for the hearings, and afterwards. Mr. Gerard Lemire, clerk of No. 2 committee, and Mr. Fred Fortier, clerk of No. 3 committee, have performed their tasks most acceptably. I might also mention Mr. Walter Mathews and Mr. Ralph Ells, court criers, who, by the way, perform a good many other services besides announcing cases and calling witnesses. Perhaps I may also be permitted to mention Mrs. Bertha Anderson, who as stenographer has worked industriously very many hours on the multifarious types of documents required in these proceedings. I would like also to say something about the Debates and Reporting Branch. The work of the reporters is so smoothly done that one hardly notices their presence at the hearings, but it is arduous, it requires the closest of attention and a great deal of skill and industry. The staff, under Mr. Lake, the Chief of the branch, has performed its services this session with 100 per cent competence. I will mention one other official—our highly learned, exceedingly efficient, wise and helpful legal counsel, Mr. John F. MacNeill, Q.C. This year the committee—or more correctly, the chairman of the committee—has referred a good many legal problems to Mr. MacNeill. It is a very good practice: there is no doubt about the legality of asking our legal counsel for a written opinion. He has responded on all occasions with capable, readable, wise and useful memoranda. The Senate is fortunate in having a legal counsel of the capacity of Mr. MacNeill. I should also like to mention his very likable and efficient secretary, Mrs. Jean Sutherland.

Honourable senators, that is my report for the moment. I thank you for your patience in listening to all the details.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I feel I should not let this occasion pass without extending on behalf of all senators our appreciation to the chairman and the members of his committee for the faithful services they have rendered to Parliament during the past session.

The divorce statistics give us some idea of the time required to dispose of these cases. This session 473 petitions were filed, 407 of which were granted and 7 were refused. This means that the committee heard and made decisions on a total of 414 cases. The fact that the committee sat for 52 days gives the house some idea of how much time its members devoted to this work. It is a committee to which none of us seeks appointment; we do not compete with one another in order to serve. But it is very gratifying to know there are so many who are willing to give of their time and ability to this committee, whose function is essential under our present constitution.

It was my privilege to attend the final meeting of the Divorce Committee this session. Having attended other meetings during this and previous years and having some knowledge of the way divorces are handled in our courts. I can say that the committee considers applications just as carefully and thoroughly as does any court in the land.

I am very happy to know that the Senate has men and women who are competent to do this work and who do it so sacrificingly, without consideration of the time and effort involved. I take this opportunity to thank the chairman and the members of the committee for the services which they have rendered to the Senate, to Parliament and to our country.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, I have a few remarks to make at this time, and I should like to preface them by giving you a statistic with which I am sure you are unfamiliar. I hold the record this session of being chairman of the Divorce Committee for the shortest term of anyone, having served on one occasion only and having heard one case.

Honourable senators, I should like to deal with a matter raised tonight by the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) in his report. He referred to divorce procedure in British Columbia. I would point out that that province has shortened the time after which a decree nisi for divorce can be made final to one month.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: There is no waiting period.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I believe that is right. If I recall correctly the waiting period in Manitoba and some other provinces is six months.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: In Ontario it is a three-month period.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That is the case in Saskatchewan.

Hon. Mr. Haig: You will find that wherever the shorter period is in effect it has assisted the parties to an action to get their freedom more quickly.

There is another matter which I should like to deal with tonight. In a sense it has nothing to do with the report that we have before us and I am not bringing it up to deprecate the work of the committee, although it may raise a discordant note. I know that the chairman and the members of the committee have done a wonderful job, and I congratulate them. Through the years when I served as a ranking member of the Divorce Committee I became acquainted with all the troubles that are recounted to the committee, and I fully appreciate the importance of the work that is done and the time spent on it.

When listening to the radio the other night I heard a deliberate attack—I use the word advisedly—made on the Senate and its Divorce Committee. Such an attack should never have been made, for the facts do not support it. I think that the chairman of the committee (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) has asked the C.B.C. to give the same publicity to those statistics he has compiled as was given to the special reporter the other night.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I intend to raise this matter as a question of privilege later tonight.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I am glad of that.

Speaking now in my capacity as Leader of the Opposition in the Senate, I honestly think that before the next session we have got to work out some system whereby we will have continuous sittings of the divorce committee from about the opening of the session to Easter, and from when we resume after the Easter recess until prorogation in order that the committee may function throughout that time. I have always felt that the Government should be asked to make provision for additional compensation for the senators who stay in Ottawa over the week-ends to do the work of the Divorce Committee. In my case my work is finished on Thursday night and I do not work again until the following Tuesday night. Now, I know I have become lazy, but like most men and women in this chamber I would prefer to work rather than doing nothing. I think the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald)—and I am willing to give him every assistance I can—should try to work out some scheme whereby at the next session those senators who do not serve on the Divorce Committee would not have to remain in Ottawa week in and week out. I realize quite clearly that if the house adjourned for two weeks in February it would be awfully difficult to hold the members of the Divorce Committee here. I also appreciate the position in which the Leader of the Government would find himself if the Government were suddenly to bring down urgent legislation while the Senate was recessed; but that difficulty could be avoided if the Government would co-operate with us and tell us in advance what they intend to do.

I am willing to work five days a week for eight months of the year or whatever length of time is necessary, but I do not want to be kept here to work three days a week and twiddle my thumbs for the remaining four. It is not good for honourable senators or for Canada that we should be asked to do this. I suggest that at the opening of the next session the Leader of the Government invite the Leader of the Opposition in the Senate and the Chairman of the Divorce Committee to accompany him for an interview with the Prime Minister, or whomever is the proper person in the Government to interview, to discuss this matter, because it seems to me that divorce has become a big business. I believe the chairman of the committee (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) said that the divorce fees paid to Parliament this session amounted to $82,000.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is the figure.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I do not think we should ask honourable senators who are not on the committee to sit around and wait for days and days while the divorce committee does its business. Secondly, I want a challenge put to the House of Commons that if its members will not desist from criticizing the work of the Divorce Committee in the Senate, they should come forward and do the work themselves, if they think they can do it better. The members of this house serve on the committee from necessity and with a feeling of responsibility toward the people of Quebec and Newfoundland. We feel that people who are unhappy in the marriage state and need to be separated have a right to consideration, and for the people of those provinces we have provided a committee to hear their petitions and give them relief. If we refused that service those people would be unable to get relief.

To repeat, honourable senators, I suggest that at the opening of the next session the Leader of the Government in the Senate—in whose ability to arrange the interview I have every confidence—together with the Chairman of the Divorce Committee, and probably someone from the opposition—I am willing to go myself—should confer with the Prime Minister to see if something can be arranged along the lines I have suggested. I do not think it is fair that honourable senators, both men and women, should work from ten o'clock in the morning until one o'clock, and perhaps from 2.30 to five o'clock in the afternoon, while the rest of the members do nothing. The house sits for about three days a week for short periods of time, largely in order that the divorce committee can continue in session. I make the suggestion in good faith, and with ten years' experience as a member of the divorce committee.

I feel very strongly that the constant irritation caused by remarks such as were heard over the radio the other night, and from jibes by members of the House of Commons, are not deserved by this house, and particularly the members of our Divorce Committee. The sooner such critics realize that the Senate is doing a public service as part of its obligation under the terms of Confederation, the better for Canada. I would say that this one case ought to be answered. I also say that next session a conference should be held to see if some arrangement can be made whereby honourable senators who are not serving on the divorce committee may sit in committee if there is work to do, and if there is no work to do the house should adjourn for two or three weeks. That is not a new idea. I was here when that was customary, and the Senate was not abused any more then than it is now. I recall that the late Senator Dandurand, when he was leader in this house, used to say: "Honourable senators, there is nothing more on the Order Paper, and therefore I move we adjourn for two weeks. By that time, I hope the other house will have some legislation ready for us to deal with."

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am sure the Chairman of the Divorce Committee would not object to more members on his committee.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No, indeed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am sure he would welcome them.

Hon. Mr. Haig: But certain members will not serve. If you care to take a count of how many are willing to serve, you will be surprised.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Of members who are sitting around week-ends?

Hon. Mr. Haig: Some of those who are in Ottawa at week-ends will not serve, either.

Hon. Mr. Reid: This is all foolish talk about honourable senators doing nothing at week-ends. We do not all sit around idle during that time.

Hon. Mr. Haig: But the point is that the house sits three short days a week, so that the Divorce Committee can be kept going.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Oh, no, no. Every day this house has been in session so far we have had legislation or some other matter to discuss.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Will the honourable leader not agree with me that this house sits for about two and a half hours a day?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I think my work day is closer to twelve and a half hours a day. The house may sit for two and a half hours in the afternoons, but committees also sit in the mornings for two and a half hours. I do not think members of this house have much idle time on their hands if they are attending to their duties.

Hon. Mr. Haig: My honourable friend cannot say that to me. If he will look at the record he will find that my record is better than his in attendance on committees.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I agree. I was not making a reference to my honourable friend.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig) has the floor. Any honourable senator may ask him a question, with his permission, but there must be order in this house.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I be permitted to say to the Leader of the Opposition that I know he works much longer than two and a half hours a day, for I am aware that when he is serving on committees he often sits for two and a half hours a day over and above the time he sits in the house?

The Hon. the Speaker: May I ask for order in this house? The Leader of the Opposition has the floor, and when he has finished any honourable senator can follow him. He can be interrupted by a question, but only with his permission. The order and procedure of this house must be observed. Will the Honourable Leader of the Opposition please continue?

Hon. Mr. Haig: Honourable senators, I will conclude by saying that although my suggestion may not be acceptable to the house, it is my view, and I wanted to express it on this occasion so that there will be lots of time to consider the matter. I am not asking the Leader of the Government or the members of this house to make any rash decision; it will be perhaps six months before the next session commences.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: On a question of privilege, may I be permitted to say that I did not intend to suggest in any way that the Leader of the Opposition does not attend to his duties faithfully. On the contrary, I wanted to emphasize that he does attend to his duties faithfully, and in fact sits here much longer than two and a half hours a day.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, I wish to dissociate myself from the remarks which have been made, because I think that the subject of what we do or do not do in this chamber has been discussed at too great length. I am reminded of an occasion some time ago when I had to leave my farm temporarily and I asked one of my men to take charge while I was away. He said he would do so on one condition—that I gave him full authority to settle up, write the cheques, pay off the men, or, as he put it, fire them if necessary. I said that I would give him that authority, and I left him some signed cheques. In those days we worked horses, and the man I put in charge told me afterwards that he had had a little difficulty with the men regarding the work they had to do. So he told the men: "There is no one tied here, except the horses, and some of them are loose part of the time. The same applies to you fellows, and it is quite possible for you to resign." I think the same applies to this house. None of us is tied, and I think it is possible for us to resign.

Hon. W. D. Euler: Honourable senators, I would like to make a suggesion, which probably will not find great favour in certain quarters. In view of the fact that divorce petitions to Parliament come from two provinces, would it be fair to suggest that the senators from those two provinces constitute the membership of the Standing Committee on Divorce and do the work which comes from their provinces?

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Hardy: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that this debate is getting far afield from the report presented by the Chairman of the Divorce Committee. I think it is entirely out of order, and I would ask Your Honour to so rule.

The Hon. the Speaker: Ordered that the report do lie on the table.

HART DIVORCE CASE

RADIO BROADCAST—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I have a statement to make with reference to a matter to which the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig) has already referred. Although I prepared my statement in advance of the remarks of my honourable friend, it is in keeping with his views as to what ought to be done.

As a matter of privilege and as Chairman of the Senate Standing Committee on Divorce, I find it necessary to refer to some grievous errors in a statement made by Mr. Blair Fraser, Ottawa Editor of Maclean's Magazine, and broadcast by him all across Canada over the facilities of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I have before me the text of Mr. Fraser's address, filed with the C.B.C. prior to its delivery on the evening of Thursday last, June 16, and put on the air by C.B.C. in the course of a weekly program event called "News Roundup".

Mr. Fraser refers to a bill introduced in the Commons by a member of the C.C.F. party and designed, he says, for the relief of Lawrence Hart, who claims he was divorced without his knowledge while away in Europe. Mr. Fraser is of opinion that the Senate will not pass this bill as, he says, "the Upper House is hardly likely to find itself guilty of incompetence." However, he says the real purpose of the bill is to draw attention to the C.C.F. effort to replace the system of parliamentary divorce, because, he says the members of that party "think the Senate Divorce Committee does a lamentably sloppy job".

In view of these widely publicized strictures, it is necessary in justice to the Senate and its Divorce Committee, and particularly to the senators who served in connection with this case, that I inform the public as to what actually did occur.

In the first place, let me say that I do not believe that all C.C.F. members of the Commons hold any such opinion of the Senate Committee on Divorce as is thus attributed to them.

I have in my hand a Solemn Declaration by Muriel Fishman, a secretary, of Montreal, who swears that she served Lawrence Hart personally with his wife's notice of intention to apply to Parliament for divorce, together with a copy of her petition and the required Notice of Information to Respondent; that she identified him by a photograph which she produces, and that he admitted to her that he was the person designated in the notice as the husband of the petitioner. This is the usual affidavit accepted in all courts as sufficient prima facie evidence of service, and it is neither "sloppy" nor "incompetent" on the part of the Senate committee to rely upon it, particularly when it is unchallenged by any negative suggestion.

In this case challenge was clearly impossible, for the respondent himself has since the hearing admitted to the Chief Clerk of Committees of the Senate, Mr. Harvey Armstrong, that he was served. He has also admitted that after service he left Canada for Europe without consulting solicitors, instructing counsel, or notifying the Senate by letter or otherwise of his intended departure from Canada, his desire for delay, or his wish to defend.

This failure to communicate, by any means, with the Senate is remarkable for two reasons; first, because the respondent is a lawyer and must know something of the significance of legal process; and, second, because in the Notice of Information for Respondent attached to the petition is a clearly expressed warning that if he desires to oppose the granting of the divorce prayed for by the petitioner, he must within 30 days send notice to that effect to the Clerk of the Senate; failing which a bill of divorce may be passed "without any further notice to you".

Just how much sympathy is due to a lawyer who disregards a notice of that kind may be judged by the fact that he now admits that he deliberately left Canada without taking any action of any kind with regard to it.

The evidence in support of the petition was heard by a subcommittee composed of Senator Golding, as Chairman, supported by Senators Farquhar and Fergusson, all experienced members of the Divorce Committee, the last named being a lawyer. I have personally perused the printed transcript of evidence and find it justifies fully and in every particular the action taken in granting the divorce. I may say that the bill referred to was yesterday ruled out of order in the Commons on two grounds: first, that it was frivolous, and secondly, that it was a public bill to repeal a private act.

What happens to the bill for the relief of Lawrence Hart when it reaches the Commons is no concern of ours, but an utterly false statement that a divorce was granted by the Senate without notice to the divorcee is a charge so serious that it cannot be wholly disregarded by this house when the slander is publicized to the people of Canada by the national broadcasting system. The Senate itself is well used to unjust and unfounded criticism, and usually is little concerned, but I submit that this honourable body cannot and should not tolerate the slandering of witnesses who testify under oath before it or any of its committees. The Senate Committee on Divorce is most vigilant to protect from abuse the witnesses who come before it, and to me it is a matter of grave concern to find a government institution such as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation permitting the use of its facilities for such purposes.

As a make-weight to his misstatements of the Hart case, Mr. Fraser refers to two divorce proceedings of last session. He says:

> Last year they (the C.C.F.) managed to block one divorce bill in which, it turned out, all the evidence against a crippled wife was fabricated and perjured.

The case referred to is clearly identified as that of Lucien L'Esperance, for it is the only one to which the C.C.F. applied blocking tactics and in which the respondent wife might be or has been described as crippled. In this case there has been no finding by any responsible body of either perjury or fabrication by anyone, nor is there any evidence by anyone as against anyone involved of such a crime. There were five witnesses who testified before the Senate Committee in the L'Esperance matter, including the petitioner, who are thus libelled in Mr. Fraser's written statement, and slandered by him in the national broadcast. The case was referred back by the Commons to its Private Bills Committee, but that was because the C.C.F. attackers and others had reported the bill before reading the evidence, and not because there was evidence of perjury, and when the husband withdrew his petition, he stated in writing that he did so because of the publicity, which we were told by his counsel was injuring his business, and because of the protestation of his wife.

Mr. Fraser says that "nobody in that or any other case has been prosecuted for perjury". If Mr. Fraser has evidence of perjury in that case, his remedy is a complaint to the Crown Attorney naming the persons accused, and not by way of a nation-wide smear upon the husband and all his witnesses.

Last year I told the house of a charge of perjury arising out of testimony given before a Senate committee in support of a petition for divorce, in which the accused was convicted and sentenced to two years in prison.

Mr. Fraser refers to "another case, also blocked by the C.C.F." in which, he says, "examination showed that three men testified under oath that they were all standing on a ladder together, apparently side by side". The purpose of this recital is to ridicule the evidence upon which the Senate committee is supposed to have acted, and it is a downright misstatement of fact. There was other and additional evidence before the committee, and the three men did not so testify nor did any one of them. The evidence given by the men was that two of them mounted the ladder, which was big and strong and very wide, and that it was not until the two came down that the third man went up.

It is unbecoming to one who misstates evidence so flagrantly to refer to others as sloppy and incompetent.

It is unnecessary for me to defend the Senate decision in the Delorme case—that is the one that has just been referred to—for as a result of the blocking mentioned, the Commons Private Bills Committee recalled the witnesses and reheard the entire evidence, after which the committee reported the bill, having reached the same decision as made by the senators. Nevertheless, the blocking continued; the bill was "talked out" and died on the Order Paper. It has been passed again by the Senate at this session and is now again before the Commons. If there is virtue to be found in such blocking, I am sure that the litigants, who have borne the additional expense, will not appreciate it.

Hon. William H. Golding: Honourable senators, I would like to add something to what the Chairman of our Divorce Committee has already said and to congratulate him on the very efficient and effective way in which he has dealt with a broadcast by Mr. Blair Fraser in C.B.C. News Roundup last week.

It will not be necessary for me to deal with statements made by Mr. Fraser in regard to some of the cases he spoke of in his broadcast, as the honourable Chairman has already done so very effectively. However, I do feel that I should say a word or two about the Hart case, on which Mr. Fraser spent the major portion of his time in this particular broadcast.

The Hon. the Speaker: If the honourable senator will permit me, unless he rises on a question of privilege his remarks are quite out of order, I have no desire to interfere, if it is the wish of the house that he continue with his statement.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The honourable senator was chairman of the subcommittee which heard the case.

The Hon. the Speaker: If it is the will of the house that he continue, it will be in order for him to do so.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: As a matter of information, may I ask His Honour the Speaker if other members of this house are to be permitted to discuss the same subject on a point of privilege?

The Hon. the Speaker: I am suggesting it is not in order to do so unless the house, which is all wise in this matter, gives its unanimous consent. As the honourable senator has unanimous consent, he may proceed.

Hon. Mr. Golding: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I say, I feel that I should add a word or two about the Hart case, on which Mr. Fraser spent the major portion of his time in this particular broadcast.

This case was heard on Friday, January 21 last, by a subcommittee composed of Honourable Mrs. Fergusson, Honourable Mr. Farquhar and myself, as chairman. This was a case in which I am quite sure none of us who heard it ever expected to be criticized for having decided to recommend the divorce, as the respondent offered no defence at all. I have no intention of referring to the details of the evidence of adultery, other than to say that it was most convincing; but I do feel that in justice to our subcommittee and to the petitioner, I should say something about the evidence she gave under oath when her case was heard.

As shown by page 9 of the evidence, she was asked what had caused the break-up between herself and her husband, and her answer was as follows:

> My husband was very violent, he abused me, and used to strike me frequently in front of the children; life with him was impossible.

The same page of the evidence shows she was asked if her husband has contributed to the support of the children. Her answer was very definite:

> No, he did not. I have supported the children throughout the entire marriage period.

The petitioner also stated that she had not lived with her husband since the spring of 1953. At that time she took action in the civil court in Montreal for a judicial separation and for the custody of her children. Judgment was given in her favour at that time.

The fact that the petitioner had been given custody of the children was a strong point in her favour.

The respondent is a lawyer, evidently well known in Montreal. No doubt he had every opportunity to submit his side of the case to the civil court in Montreal when the custody action was heard, but it is quite evident that he was not able to make a very favourable impression on those who had the responsibility of dealing with his case.

I have made inquiries from our officials and I am advised that at no time has Mr. Fraser asked for any information regarding any of the cases he referred to in this broadcast last week.

It is certainly not for me or any member of the Senate to advise Mr. Fraser of the responsibilities he assumes when he uses the facilities of the C.B.C. or the press to give our people the news as he sees it from time to time. However, I must assume that he knows the Canadian people do expect to hear news reports which are as fair and accurate as possible. Therefore, it may be advisable for him to try to get his information from reliable sources as far as it is possible for him to do so. I am sure he will agree with this, if he places any value on his prestige as a reporter.

There is only one other point I wish to refer to. Evidently the petitioner in the Hart case re-married after her petition was finally approved by Parliament. It is alleged that she has married a professional detective who has given evidence in many cases before our divorce court. I am afraid that in some way the public has been led to believe that this gentleman had something to do with getting the petitioner's case through our court. That, honourable senators, is not true, as far as we know. This gentleman did not appear before us at all, as the evidence—which is available for any honourable senator to read—clearly shows. In any case the petitioner, after her case had been decided, had a perfect right to marry any person she wished to, and as far as I am concerned I hope that if these people, as it is rumoured, are now married, they will be happy together.

PRAIRIE FARM REHABILITATION BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. F. W. Gershaw moved the third reading of Bill 5, an Act to amend the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act.

He said: Honourable senators, I wish at this time to supply some information which was asked for upon the motion for second reading of this bill. The statement is in tabulated form; and with the consent of the house I will place it on Hansard.

Expenditures by Provinces

Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act and Special Votes under its Administration

April 1, 1935 – March 31, 1955

——	Manitoba	Saskatchewan	Alberta	British Columbia	—
	$	$	$	$	$
P.F.R.A.	4,114,329	36,957,316	6,094,279	—
Major irrigation and reclamation in the Prairie Provinces	24,951	3,850,777	35,509,840	—
Land reclamation, construction and development in British Columbia	—	—	—	2,981,800
Land protection and reclamation	1,539,858	—	—	—
Dyking and cut-off (Assiniboine, Manitoba)	287,544	—	—	—
Surveys and engineering costs	631,880	2,628,331	2,264,658	130,541
Administration	225,672	1,688,024	1,550,686	129,820
	6,824,234	45,124,448	45,419,463	3,242,161	100,610,306

Hon. Mr. Haig: Will the honourable senator explain whether the one and a half million dollars spent in Manitoba for land protection and reclamation has to do with the Winnipeg floods of 1950?

Hon. Mr. Gershaw: I assume that this money, which was expended under the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, was applied to the repair of damage caused by the floods, and for the protection of the Assiniboine.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Those were the two items of expenditure?

Hon. Mr. Gershaw: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Otherwise not much money was expended in Manitoba. I notice a somewhat similar item of nearly $3 million in relation to British Columbia, presumably for dyking because of the flooding of the Fraser river.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

TORONTO HARBOUR RAILWAY TRACKS AGREEMENT BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. G. Peter Campbell moved the second reading of Bill 262, an Act to approve an agreement between The Toronto Harbour Commissioners, The Toronto Terminals Railway Company, Canadian National Railway Company and Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

He said: Honourable senators, the principle involved in this bill is simply the approval by Parliament of an agreement entered into by the parties designated in the bill. By way of explanation I might review briefly the history of the Toronto Harbour Commission and the purpose of certain changes which have been or are proposed to be made with respect to the operation of the railways crossing the lands of the commission.

In 1911 The Toronto Harbour Commissioners Act was passed. It vested all the harbour lands in the city of Toronto, including the docks and the facilities for loading and unloading ships, in The Toronto Harbour Commissioners, giving them full power to construct all facilities for the transportation of goods to the harbour property and the discharge of cargoes from the ships, to levy dues, and so forth. There are five commissioners, of whom three are appointed by the Toronto City Council on recommendation of the Board of Control of that city, one is appointed by the Governor General in Council as the dominion representative, and the fifth is appointed by order in council on the recommendation of the Board of Trade of the city of Toronto.

During the development of the harbour facilities it became necessary to erect service railway spurs connecting with the main lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railway. The Toronto Harbour Commissioners undertook the erection of these spur lines, and since their construction have paid the cost of maintenance. In recent years additional burdens have been put upon The Toronto Harbour Commissioners; and there has been a very substantial increase in traffic. Now an agreement has been entered into between the railways and the Harbour Commissioners providing for the maintenance of those lines by a company known as The Toronto Terminal Railway Company, which is owned jointly by the Canadian National Railway Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

I may say that The Toronto Terminals Railway Company was incorporated, I believe, in 1906, about the time that the Union Station was being constructed. It has held certain lands which were jointly operated by the two railways for the benefit of the passengers travelling to and from the city of Toronto.

Under its act of incorporation the Toronto Terminals Railway Company has no power to enter into this agreement, but the Toronto Harbour Commissioners have full power to do so. For that reason it becomes necessary to have an act of Parliament approving the agreement. Therefore, the bill before us simply incorporates the agreement as a schedule to the bill, and it provides that the agreement is approved and confirmed, and that the covenants therein contained are declared to be within the powers of the parties thereto and binding upon them.

As to the cost of maintaining the railway spur lines, I may say that no charge was previously made to the railways. But on account of the heavy traffic that now passes over these lines it has been agreed between the railway companies that a charge of $1.50 per loaded freight car shall be paid by the railways and placed in a fund to take care of the rehabilitation and maintenance of the lines which belong to the Toronto Harbour Commissioners.

The agreement sets forth in detail other operating arrangements between the parties, and these will be fully explained when the bill goes to committee. There are only one or two of these arrangements which might interest the house at this time. One is that the traffic over the spur lines last year, totalling about 70,000 cars, on the basis of $1.50 per loaded freight car, would mean a revenue of about $105,000. It is estimated that this will increase to approximately $120,000. The bookkeeping arrangements between the parties, under this agreement, which will continue for ten years, will be such that any credits in the account, after the entire costs of rehabilitation and maintenance have been taken care of, will be paid to the Toronto Harbour Commissioners, and any deficits will be carried over, to be adjusted between the parties at a later date. Both railways have approved of the new arrangement and, as I said, the Toronto Harbour Commissioners will continue to own the tracks which have been erected on their lines.

The only other matter which may interest honourable senators is that with respect to the sidings serving the occupants of harbour lands. The owners of properties having sidings which connect with spur lines pay for them. They make their own siding installations, which connect with the spur lines, which in turn connect with the main lines of the railways.

Honourable senators, if the bill is given second reading I will propose that it be referred to committee.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Just as a matter of information to a curious and uninformed layman, may I ask why it is necessary to have legislation to cover an agreement made between three incorporated parties?

Hon. Mr. Campbell: As I mentioned, the only reason is that the Toronto Terminals Railway Company has no power under its act of incorporation to enter into an agreement at this time, and it is desirable that this company, which really is in charge of all the terminal facilities in Toronto, be the company that assumes this obligation, with the approval of the two railways, each of which holds a 50 per cent interest. It gives them the power they do not now have by their act of incorporation.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I should like to inquire as to the charge of $1.50 per car. Is that a charge for simply passing over the rails of the terminal?

Hon. Mr. Campbell: Yes, it is a charge agreed to be paid by the railways in order to establish a fund to maintain and rehabilitate these tracks which are the property of the Toronto Harbour Commissioners. The amount of $1.50 per car was considered a fair charge for the use of the facilities by the railways.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: And at the end of ten years there is to be an adjustment. That would be handled by the C.N.R., the C.P.R., the Toronto Harbour Board and the terminals railway, is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Campbell: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I think that is an answer to the question asked by the honourable senator from Northumberland (Hon. Mr. Burchill) as to why this legislation is necessary. If the C.N.R. is assuming a debt which it will have to take care of in the future, the federal government will have to step in and supply the necessary funds.

Hon. Mr. Campbell: I suppose that would be a reason, but it is not the main reason. It is really an operating arrangement, as far as the C.N.R. is concerned. If it was an agreement between the C.N.R. and The Toronto Harbour Commissioners to pay this charge there would be no necessity for the legislation.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Campbell, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

MUNICIPAL GRANTS BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald moved the second reading of Bill 258, an Act to amend the Municipal Grants Act.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is to widen the scope under which payments are made to municipalities in lieu of taxes.

Many honourable senators will recall that in 1944 the Prime Minister, the late Right Honourable William Lyon Mackenzie King, after some discussion with the Mayor of Ottawa, Mr. Stanley Lewis, decided that an inquiry should be made into the relations between the City of Ottawa and the Government of Canada. Upon the adoption of a resolution presented by Mr. King to Parliament, a joint committee of both houses was set up to inquire into this subject and make recommendations. As the result of the unanimous report of that joint committee composed of some twenty-three members representing every section of Canada, the Government later introduced legislation which greatly enlarged the outlook of the people of Canada upon the capital city of Ottawa and the surrounding municipalities embodied in the Federal District which is administered by the Federal District Commission under the provisions of the Federal District Act. At that time the federal grant to the City of Ottawa was increased from $100,000 per year to $300,000 per year for a period of five years. By the time that period of five years had expired, pressure—accumulated pressure—had been brought to bear upon the federal treasury from other municipalities throughout Canada to have grants provided for them as well as for the City of Ottawa.

That is why the Municipal Grants Regulations of 1950 came into existence, and also why they made provision for grants to all municipalities which qualified for same under a certain formula prescribed in the regulations. It is interesting to note that under this formula, which came into effect on January 1, 1950, the grant to the City of Ottawa was increased to approximately $1 million—actually $962,392.

In 1951 the act known as the Municipal Grants Act, which superseded the regulations, came into effect. It is that act which the bill now before us proposes to amend.

I will now deal specifically with this bill. Under its provisions a municipality will qualify for payments in lieu of taxes provided the federal property in that municipality exceeds in value 2 per cent of the combined value of taxable and Federal property, and the Federal property receives the usual urban services from the municipality. This is a reduction from the previous minimum requirement of 4 per cent, and is by far the most important change in the act, although there are other liberalizing features. For instance, under the act as it now stands the grant paid is limited to 75 per cent of a tax rate applied to the value of the Federal property exceeding 4 per cent. Under the provisions of the amending bill, which is now before us, the payment will be on 100 per cent of the value of all Federal property in a municipality which comes within the 2 per cent formula.

I should perhaps point out that there is a provision in this bill whereby the federal Government will pay the full taxes equivalent on a certain type of property. I refer to Crown-owned dwellings occupied by employees of the Crown or by members of the armed forces. In general terms, this can be referred to as residential property owned by the Crown. On such property the equivalent of full taxes is paid.

For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1955, under the Municipal Grants Program the total payments made to municipalities were $3,047,000. It is estimated that under the provisions of this bill the payments to municipalities for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1956, will amount to a sum somewhere in the neighbourhood of $7 million.

In conclusion, I should point out that if a municipality desires to claim the benefits of the present act and has not done so, it must make application before the first day of July, 1955. The bill which is now before us provides that the act, as amended, will be deemed to have come into force as of the first day of January, 1955.

Honourable senators, the bill was referred to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, was considered by the Committee of the Whole and eventually received the unanimous consent of the house. Virtually the only objection raised in the other house was that the grants were not large enough. When the Minister of Finance introduced the bill he said it was a rather complicated measure. I have tried to explain some of its more important features, and I would recommend the bill to the favourable consideration of this house. If it receives second reading tonight I shall move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Reid, the debate was adjourned.

DIVORCE PETITIONS

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the reports of the Standing Committee on Divorce, Nos. 425 and 426, dealing with petitions for divorce.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck, Chairman of the Committee, moved that the reports be concurred in.

He said: Honourable senators, may I point out that in both instances these petitions were refused, so that these reports will not be followed by bills. These two cases are the last to be reported by the committee, and therefore these reports conclude the divorce work in the Senate for this session.

The motion was agreed to, on division.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 22, 1955

The Senate met at 3 p.m., Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 481, an Act to amend the Prairie Farm Assistance Act.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: With leave, next sitting.

CANADIAN FORCES BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Salter A. Hayden, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the committee's report on Bill 257.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred back the Bill (257) intituled: "An Act respecting the Canadian Forces", have in obedience to the order of reference June 15, 1955, further examined the said bill and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hayden: With leave, I move that the bill be read the third time now.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Honourable senators, I do not intend to debate this measure further. I wish only to thank the members of this house for the kindness shown to me and my associates throughout the discussion of this bill in committee. As to the third reading of the measure, I would ask my associates to allow it to pass, on division.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed, on division.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck moved the second reading of Bill 328, an Act respecting unemployment insurance.

He said: Honourable Senators, it will be unnecessary for those who hold that one should not on second reading discuss a bill clause by clause to quote the rules on this occasion, for such a procedure with reference to Bill 328 is a practical impossibility. There are 119 sections in the present Unemployment Insurance Act, 1940, as amended to date and many of these sections are long and complicated. In the bill before us there are 122 sections, extending over 45 pages, and while an effort has been made to simplify the language, it can still take a lot of reading.

One may well ask why a scheme to assist persons when temporarily unemployed should require such wealth of language, and the answer is that this is not in essence a plan of social service, although it may have that effect, but rather an insurance scheme by which vast sums of money are involved and in which large numbers of persons are engaged and many more are affected. It is a complicated world in which we live. Human relationships are infinitely varied and extraordinarily involved, and an insurance scheme that has for its basis inconceivably intricate contractual relations must be precise and comprehensive. Administering such a scheme is the life-work of experts. A prominent Canadian trade union official is on record as saying that there are not more than a dozen people in the trade union movement throughout Canada who can honestly say that they are thoroughly conversant with the act as it reads or with what it means.

I have dwelt thus upon the complexity of the subject because I would have you appreciate the problem of explaining it in the short time at my disposal, and also because I would like to make a plea for your attention and for your patience while I try to cover the very numerous but outstanding features of the bill—not in detail, but rather in principle, and generally. I have spoken of the problem which presents itself to one who undertakes the task of sponsoring a bill of this nature; and I have thought that an attempt to be comprehensive, although not detailed, will be of some value when the bill reaches the committee stage, since we must be familiar with it in all its detail in order to take the responsibility of making it the law of Canada.

This bill is not an amendment to the present act; it is a rewriting of the whole act. It is a rearrangement of the subject-matter and a rephrasing of its expression. There is scarcely a section in the act that has not been altered in some respects in the bill, so that to discuss it clause by clause is out of the question. The best I can do is to tell you something of the act of 1940 and of the alterations in substance which appear in the bill.

The Canadian Unemployment Insurance Act became law on August 7, 1940; and I pause here to comment that of the members of the Special Committee of the Commons and its officials who at that time studied and passed upon its provisions, five only have survived the passage of the years and are still members of Parliament: Mr. Angus MacInnis, Mr. E. G. Hansell and Mr. L. P. Picard are still in the Commons, and my honourable friend Senator Tom Reid and I are in this house.

Hon. Mr. Euler: What about me?

Hon. Mr. Marcotte: And do not forget me. I have claimed all the time that that bill was passed under false pretences.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: You were a member of the house, but not of the special committee. I am speaking of members of a special committee that devised and re-read and revised the bill before it passed the Commons and before it became law. The bill received considerable study at that time.

Hon. Mr. Hayden: I think my honourable friend is overlooking the fact that in 1940 several senators sat in the Commons committee unofficially, and I was one of them.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Unofficially, yes. I knew from the records that it was not a joint committee of the two houses. And I am glad that the honourable gentleman has survived; I hope he will survive many more years for useful public service. Anyway, is it not indicative of the insecurity of parliamentary life that the five members mentioned, plus the unofficial member, alone remain of all that goodly company?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Was not this kind of legislation passed when the R. B. Bennett Government was in office?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No. The act that was passed then was declared ultra vires.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It was passed just the same.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I would like to observe in passing that it is no criticism of the work of those parliamentary stalwarts who at that time devised the act, that we are now rewriting and remodelling it. Rather, one should note that the act has stood for fifteen years with only seven amendments, all but three of which were amendments of mere detail, and not of principle. In 1948 we changed the basis of the rate of benefit from the average of all contributions in the two years preceding the claim to the average of the most recent 180 contributions. In 1950 we introduced supplementary benefits, and in 1953 we authorized continuation of benefits to those who became sick while unemployed. Of course, they went on unemployment relief—or public insurance, rather.

During these fifteen years of operation we have accumulated much useful experience and data, and there have been notable changes in the conditions under which we operate. In fact, we have had nearly twenty years of useful experience in unemployment insurance legislation, for in 1935 Parliament passed the Employment and Social Insurance Act—to which my friend the Deputy Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has in effect referred—which was subsequently declared by the Courts to be ultra vires of the dominion Parliament, thus requiring an amendment to the British North America Act before we again legislated, in 1940.

Since the proposed act will affect many millions of workers and their employers, it is desirable that its provisions be expressed in the simplest of language consistent with precision, and that clauses dealing with the same subject be brought together. For this purpose, the bill has been subdivided into five divisions, as follows:

Part I: Administration.
Part II: National Employment Service.
Part III: Unemployment Insurance:
(a) coverage,
(b) contributions,
(c) benefits and claim procedure,
(d) the Unemployment Insurance Fund.
Part IV: General.
Part V: Transitional.

Those who draw benefits under the new act, which at present is the bill before the house, will on no occasion lose anything because of the new measure for the next three years.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Would the honourable senator allow a question?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Does my honourable friend know why the schedule was not placed in the back of the bill when the legislation was redrafted?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The schedules are in the act, and I shall refer to them before long.

As study proceeds, honourable senators will observe how greatly this rearrangement has facilitated the use and understanding of the act. I shall deal with it under these heads.

Administration

There has been little change in the administrative set up. The act is administered by a commission of three members, upon which both labour and management is represented and which is responsible to the Governor in Council through the Minister of Labour. The Commission is assisted in its employment policies by a National Employment Committee, and there is also an independent Unemployment Insurance Advisory Committee which reports to the Governor in Council with respect to the adequacy of the fund. There are some 200 local offices in the larger communities throughout Canada. Nearly 8,000 employees are engaged in carrying out the insurance plan and in operating the employment service.

The cost of the administration has grown throughout the years from $2,343,599.36 in 1942 to $26,096,722.06 in 1954.

The one notable change in administration is with respect to the term of office of the commissioners, and incidentally the change is not to my liking. In the present act, the Chief Commissioner is appointed for ten-year periods and the other commissioners for terms of five years, and all three retire at the age of 70, without power of extension in the Executive. Under the proposed act, the Chief Commissioner is appointed for ten-year terms and the other commissioners for periods not exceeding ten years, and all cease to hold office at the age of 65 years, and all are eligible for reappointment for one or more terms not exceeding one year each. The chief effect of this change is to subject the older commissioners to the necessity of annual reappointment, which is questionable indeed for a commission which Parliament expects to be independent. The change is said to be made in order to bring the provisions of the proposed act in line with the Public Service Superannuation Act. I do not think the answer is a sufficient explanation, but no doubt that will be debated in the house and later on in committee.

It is interesting to note in this connection that one of the present commissioners, the representative of Labour, Mr. Robert Tallon, will be 70 years old on the 21st of July next, and is carrying on with all his old-time keenness and vigour.

National Employment Service

The provisions with regard to employment service are little changed in the proposed act, although this is a most important feature of the Unemployment Insurance scheme. Its function is to bring together employers seeking employees and workers seeking jobs. The service thus reduces the calls upon the Fund and incidentally provides opportunities for testing the availability of claimants for employment and therefore for unemployment compensation.

The reputation of the Canadian Employment Service as being the best in the world is justified in the statistics. In 1950 the service referred applicants to vacancies to the number of 1,120,258, and this figure has increased year by year without exception, until in 1954 it had risen to 1,193,030. The actual placements are equally notable. In 1950 they were 797,227, and the annual increase has been without exception until 1953, when the numbers placed were 993,406. In 1954 employment demand worsened over the previous year by approximately 200,000, so that the placements for that year were 861,588. This year, by all indications, the figures are increasing at a very substantial rate. The Commission's figures show that there were at least 120,000 more persons employed on June 9, 1955 than there were on that date in 1954.

It is in this connection that the National Employment Committee has rendered such notable service. I am speaking here of the committee which not only advises in many ways on matters of employment but sells good will and co-operation in their respective communities. The committee, as I have said, is composed of both employers and employees, and one of its functions has been to sell to employers the desirability of keeping older men on their staffs and of employing older men when vacancies occur. In this way it has been able to convince a large section of our population that it is a terrible and cruel waste of manpower to put capable and experienced men, still able and willing to work, on the shelf of retirement.

Unemployment Insurance Coverage.

The first subheading under division III of the bill, Unemployment Insurance, is coverage, and in this department the administration is faced with many problems and difficulties.

The basis of inclusion for insurance purposes in the present act is restricted to those employees working for an employer under a contract of service; subject, however, to certain important exceptions. In the main the exceptions are: employment in agriculture, fishing, in hospitals not operated for purpose of gain, and in charitable institutions; teachers, members of Canadian armed forces, police, domestic service, and those paid on a weekly or monthly basis who earn more than $4,800 per annum. It is interesting to note that in 1941 the ceiling was $2,000, and the increase to $4,800 is still below the advance that has taken place in monetary wages since that time. I would emphasize the fact that the monetary wages, not the real wages, have more than doubled in that time.

The provision that only those engaged under contracts of employment are covered excludes of course those working on their own account, independent contractors, professional people such as doctors, dentists, nurses in private service, lawyers and many others, including unpaid family workers, mostly farmers' and fishermen's sons and daughters.

In 1954 the total Canadian labour force numbered 5,426,000 people—a substantial army—on a monthly average for the year. Of these, 736,000 worked on their own account, 296,000 were employers, 240,000 were family workers engaged in agriculture and other primary industries, leaving a residue of paid workers under contract of service of 4,154,000 men and women. Of these 3,244,000 were insured under the Unemployment Insurance Act. No material change in this coverage is proposed.

Contributions.

As you know, the insurance fund out of which unemployment benefits are paid is made up of contributions from employers and employed in equal amounts, and from the dominion treasury of an amount equal to one-fifth of the total of employer and employee contributions. In addition to this the Government pays the cost of administration. For the fiscal year ending the 31st of March 1955 the combined employer-employee contributions amounted to $158,850,309, and the Government contribution was $31,771,464, making a grand total, excluding administration costs, of $190,631,773.

Hon. Mr. Horner: For the year?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes. That is the amount collected from the Government, employers and employees. To this is to be added the Government's payment of the costs of administration, approximately $28,000,000.

There are three major changes made in relation to contributions. Under the present act contributions have been on a daily basis. That is to say, the contributor paid so many cents per day, depending on his rate of earnings. This has involved a multiplicity of stamps of small denomination, and much processing on the part of both employer and the Commission. Under the proposed act contributions will be on a weekly basis, according to the amount earned in each week. The new rates of contribution will be found in the schedule to the act on page 14 of the bill. I will not attempt to read the schedule, but with the kind permission of the house it will appear in Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Would you put the old schedule also on Hansard?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: In due season I will present the new schedule and the present one, so that they may be appear in juxtaposition for purposes of comparison. I will refer to the outstanding changes, of course, as well. I know of no place where the two schedules can be found at present in juxtaposition.

The new schedule on page 14 of the bill is as follows:

Rates of Contribution

Column 1 Range of earnings	Column 2 Weekly contribution Cents
Less than $9.00	8
$ 9.00 and under $15.00	16
15.00 and under 21.00	24
21.00 and under 27.00	30
27.00 and under 33.00	36
33.00 and under 39.00	42
39.00 and under 45.00	48
45.00 and under 51.00	52
51.00 and under 57.00	56
57.00 and over	60

It is out of this new schedule that the next major change arises.

This schedule has been built up over the years, and on examination it is to be observed that the rates of contribution as between the low-paid worker and his high paid fellow-worker are seriously out of line. Thus the person earning less than $9 per week pays 18 cents per week, or on an average 3·21 per cent of his wages. As the rate of wages increases the percentage falls, so that the worker earning $34 to $47.99 per week pays 1·17 per cent of his wages and the person earning $48 and over per week pays on an average as little as ·94 per cent of his wages. That, of course, is all out of line.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It has grown up rather than actually having been devised. Like Topsy, it just "growed". The new schedule to which I have referred corrects this anomaly, so that the percentage of contributions to wages is maintained constant throughout the classes of contributors, as nearly exactly as the avoidance of split-cent payments will permit. This revision results in a reduction in the amount of contributions in all classes up to those drawing from $39 to $45 per week. The highest reduction is in the lowest-paid class, those under $15 per week, the reduction in respect of these workers being up to ·08 cents per week. The reduction tapers off gradually until the worker earning $51 per week is reached, who pays an increase of ·02 cents per week; and the worker earning $57 and over pays an increase of ·06 cents per week—to be offset, however, by higher benefits.

Now, I come to the benefits. The precise way in which to make clear the changes in the benefits under the proposed act as compared with those under the present provisions is to set forth the schedules, and as I said earlier to my honourable friend from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor), I will with the consent of the house, place them on Hansard.

Present Act

Rates of Contribution and Benefit

Weekly earnings	Average insured person Daily contribution	Rates of benefit Person without a dependant	Person with a dependant
	Cents	Weekly	Weekly
Less than $ 9.00 ..	.18	$ 4.20	$ 4.80
9.00 to 14.99 ..	.24	6.00	7.50
15.00 to 20.99 ..	.30	8.70	12.00
21.00 to 26.99 ..	.36	10.80	15.00
27.00 to 33.99 ..	.42	12.90	18.00
34.00 to 47.99 ..	.48	15.00	21.00
48.00 or more ..	.54	17.10	24.00

I may here observe that the rates for 43·8 per cent of the insured population provide an increase of $6 per week, or generally speaking, 25 per cent. Under the proposed new act there are no decreases in benefits for any person.

Hon. Mr. Euler: May I ask the honourable senator a question? If I have followed him correctly, he stated that the percentage rate of contribution paid by lower salaried employees was greater than that by persons receiving higher salaries. Am I correct in that?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That has been so in the past.

Hon. Mr. Euler: That seems to be unreasonable. In the bill is any approach made toward uniformity with regard to this feature?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes. In the bill there is as complete uniformity as can be devised, subject to the necessity of not having split-cent payments.

Hon. Mr. Euler: One would imagine that the lower salaried person should contribute on a lower percentage basis than the higher salaried person.

Bill 328

Rates of Contribution and Benefit

Weekly earnings	Range of average weekly contributions Column 1	Weekly rate of benefit Column 2	Column 3
	Cents paid per week	Person without dependant	Person with dependant
Less than $15.00	Less than 20	$ 6.00	$ 8.00
15.00 to 20.99	20 and under 27	9.00	12.00
21.00 to 26.99	27 and under 33	11.00	15.00
27.00 to 32.99	33 and under 39	13.00	18.00
33.00 to 38.99	39 and under 45	15.00	21.00
39.00 to 44.99	45 and under 50	17.00	24.00
45.00 to 50.99	50 and under 54	19.00	26.00
51.00 to 56.99	54 and under 58	21.00	28.00
57.00 and over	58 to 60	23.00	30.00

Those who take the trouble to study and compare the two schedules will observe, in the first place, that the lowest rate of benefit —$4.20 weekly to a person without dependant, and $4.80 to a person with a dependant—has been abandoned. The reason is that with the general advance in wages over the years, so few people remain in the class of workers earning wages of less than $9 per week that the cost of a separate category is no longer justified. Those formerly in that class are included in the lowest class in the new bill, and their benefit has been increased to $6 and $8, respectively, per week.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: One would think so; but the proper course is to have them all pay on the same basis.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I understand that inequality is corrected in the new bill.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: As I have already pointed out, in the bill the rates are calculated with the utmost precision to fall equally, in percentage of wages, upon all classes from the lowest to the highest, subject to avoidance of split-cent payments. I mentioned this to illustrate the exactness with which the calculations have been made.

I said that there were no decreases in benefits to any person under the proposed act. Under the original act of 1940 the ratio of benefits paid to those with dependants was on a basis of forty times the employees' contribution. The basis has been advanced from time to time until at present the ratio of benefits to those with dependants is 45 times the contribution, and under the proposed act it will be 50 times the contribution. So it will be seen that the value to the unemployed insured has been increased.

Hon. Mr. Horner: That is, the individual's contribution, without taking the employer's contribution into account?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is so: fifty times the average individual contribution. Those who study the new schedule of benefits will also observe that three new classes have been added. The purpose is to take care of the advance in monetary wages over the years. Under the present act the top classification included all employees receiving over $48 per week. Nowadays approximately 65 per cent of all insured workers receive over that amount, so it has become necessary to provide three additional classifications.

A compelling reason for the new schedule of benefits is the fact that over the years the percentage of benefit to average weekly wages has been steadily decreasing. This is because the benefit percentage was lowest in the higher paid classes, and, with the advance in monetary wages, more and more workers have been moving up in classification. In 1940, when the act was passed, the percentage of benefit to average weekly wage was 50 per cent. By 1954 it had sunk to 44·3 per cent, and under the proposed act it will be restored to 50·1 per cent.

With regard to the duration of benefits: under the present act the minimum number of contributions which will entitle the worker to claim for benefit is 180 days of payments, for which he is entitled to 36 days, or six weeks, of benefit payments. This duration of benefit has been found in modern experience to be inadequate, as it is not sufficient to carry the immigrant and rookie-worker over his first period of unemployment. I devised the term "rookie-worker" to designate the man who is on his first job, and who is likely to be the first to be let off and the last to be re-employed. To meet this situation, the benefit formula has been altered to provide a minimum duration of benefits of 15 weeks. This is a notable concession to the low-paid worker.

On the other hand, for the worker with a greater accumulation of benefits, a reduction is made from 51 weeks to 36 weeks. It is the opinion of the experts who have been engaged on this matter that 36 weeks is sufficient, as most employees who have accumulated large amounts are unemployed for very short periods.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Is that in accordance with the original recommendation?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No. The original period was 51 weeks, and I understand that this has obtained for a number of years. If the bill is passed unamended there will be a reduction to 36 weeks. However, there is always something to be said on the other side. I refer to seasonal benefits.

Offsetting to some extent this reduction to which I have referred is the improvement planned in the seasonal benefits. During the period from the 1st of January to the 15th of April, employment in Canada is at its seasonal minimum, and in recognition of the consequent difficulties encountered by many workers special benefits are provided during this season. An unemployed worker who has exhausted his benefit credit may nevertheless claim an additional fifteen weeks of benefit payments, which is approximately the entire period. A rookie-worker who has not made sufficient contributions to entitle him to regular benefits, provided he has made fifteen contributions subsequent to the 31st of the previous March, may draw ten weeks of benefits. Seasonal benefits were first established by a special amending act in 1950, when the minimum benefit for a worker who had exhausted his benefits was six weeks instead of the present fifteen weeks. In the other category, the minimum duration of benefit has been increased from three weeks to ten weeks. Most of these increases were incorporated in an act which we passed in January of this year, and in the bill further concessions are provided.

By the 31st of March 1955, we had paid out in seasonal benefits the sum of $54,634,657.

Hon. Mr. Horner: In one year?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: No. Since the act was enacted in 1950 as a result of anticipated larger unemployment, and up to March 31 this year a total amount of $54,600,000 had been paid out.

May I now address myself to the fund? The period of high employment through which we have passed during the past fifteen years has been reflected in the growth of the insurance fund. It has increased in amount each year since 1941-43 until in 1954 it had reached the sum of $881,274,133. In 1954 we went behind $40,581,816, which left us with an amount of $840,692,317. In the fiscal year ending March 31, 1955, this huge sum earned interest of $26,378,269.

This fund is a substantial cushion against the possibilities of the future, and it justifies the concessions now proposed which will increase the payments out by an estimated 10 per cent on a five-year average, or annually in the order of $25,000,000, based on the experience of the fiscal year 1955.

I have covered this subject more rapidly than I expected. I have touched all the outstanding features of the bill concisely, and somewhat hurriedly, but the details can be discussed more fully if the bill goes to committee.

In conclusion, may I give one or two more figures, which will illustrate the tremendous impact of the unemployment insurance scheme on the working population and the economy of Canada. During the fiscal year ending the 31st of March last, benefits were paid out to one million people, and since the inception of the act, in 1941, benefits have been paid to 6,077,000 persons. There has been paid out in monetary benefits under the act since its inception in 1941 the sum of $1,011,787,716—over one thousand million dollars!

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I would like to ask one question. Can the honourable member give me the number of bank clerks, law students, and others in similar classes covered by the act who have sought and received employment under the act?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I cannot give those figures now, for to go into the various classes would require the presentation of much detailed material. However, I will have the figures ready if the bill goes to committee.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Thank you.

On motion of Hon. Mrs. Fergusson, the debate was adjourned.

CRIMINAL CODE (RACE MEETINGS) BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 504, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (Race Meetings).

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: With leave, next sitting.

CANADA ELECTIONS BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 415, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: With leave, next sitting.

THE ESTIMATES

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON FINANCE CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Committee on Finance on the Estimates laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1956.

Hon. T. A. Crerar: Honourable senators,—

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: In moving concurrence in the report of the Standing Committee on Finance which was submitted to this house last week, I could probably spend two hours in discussing the wide scope and general inquiry covered by the report. However, I am sure honourable senators will be immensely relieved to know that I expect to speak only a short time.

The committee was somewhat limited in the scope of its inquiry, first, because of the extent of the ground to be covered, or that should have been covered, and, secondly, because we were somewhat late in starting. As has so often happened in the past, the work to be dealt with by this house seems to funnel in steadily towards the busiest part of the session when all the committees are active and a growing number of matters engage the attention of honourable members. However, the Finance Committee did make some inquiry into the several matters remitted to it in the reference.

A study of the estimates shows that the increase in Civil Service salaries requirements was very substantial in the past year, amounting almost to $40 million. This increase in expenditure is explained by the fact that for the last two years, from March 31, 1953 to February 28, 1955, the total number of civil servants in all government departments increased from 159,654 to 174,860.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Does that include government corporations?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: No. Crown companies, to which my friend has alluded, are not included.

Nor does this figure of $174,860 include revenue postmasters. They are employed throughout the country in the smaller post offices and are in the main paid by commissions, but since their income for the services they render comes out of revenue, for all practical purposes they should be included. If this were done, the total at the end of February 28, 1955, would be almost 184,000 employees, of whom slightly over 9,000 were revenue postmasters. That shows a substantial increase in the numbers in the Civil Service.

The total cost of the service in 1939, just sixteen years ago, was less than $80 million, and for the current fiscal year it is $554 million. In that respect it is interesting to note that the present total number of employees in the two large railway systems of Canada, including their subsidiary companies but excluding their respective air lines, is about 175,000. In other words, the mechanism of government in the federal sphere alone has more employees than have the two railway corporations put together.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Has the number of railway employees gone up or down?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I regret that I cannot give my honourable friend that information. My inquiry was only as to the number of employees of both railways at the present time.

Honourable senators will I am sure be interested to learn from an examination of the details given as to the number of employees in each department of government, that over the past two years some departments show a substantial increase while others show a slight decline. For instance, the Auditor General's office, a small branch of government service, whose work over the past two years has not diminished but if anything has increased, is employing fewer civil servants in the current year than it did two years ago. Also the Comptroller of the Treasury, a very important official, who on March 31, 1953, had on his payroll 4,130 civil servants, showed a slight reduction at February 28, 1955, with 4,107 employees. I would next draw your attention to the Unemployment Insurance Commission, which we were discussing under a bill earlier this afternoon. Its employees have increased over the past two years by 515. In the Post Office Department we see quite a substantial increase. Excluding revenue postmasters, over the past two years, the number of postal employees has increased from roughly 9,900 to 12,250.

The Department of Transport, an important branch of the government service, has had in the same period a decrease of about 125 employees. True, it is a rather minor decrease, but the importance and efficiency of its functions have not diminished. Another good example is the Department of Trade and Commerce, which over the same period has maintained its efficiency and service and reduced its number of employees by more than 200. While the reduction may appear small, if we take the average annual salary of about $2,500 we see that there has been a decrease in spending by that department of $500,000 a year on salaries alone.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Does my friend mean that the number declined by 200 each year?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: No; it is a reduction of 200 in the two-year period from March 31, 1953 to February 28, 1955.

It is interesting, honourable senators, to try to find a reason why some departments are able to reduce their number of employees while others have increased theirs. The only explanation I have to offer from my thinking about the matter is that in their administration some departments are more efficient than others. This is on the assumption that their operations remain fairly stable, which appears to me a reasonable assumption. In a department employing several thousand people it is very easy for the administration to get a bit out of control. I think we must always keep in mind that the great distinction between a government department and an ordinary business is that the business has a manager who has to meet a payroll at the end of each week or month, and the government department does not have that demand. The deputy minister, who in reality is the general manager of a government department, never has to worry about whether his department will earn the money to pay the wages and salaries when they come due. That in itself has a serious moral effect. It might be worth while to carry on an inquiry at some time as to why some departments quite apparently are more efficient than others. I think the reason can only be found in the personnel. The deputy minister of a department is the man who has charge of the staff, who guides their work according to the policies laid down by the Government and by his minister. If he is competent, efficient, with a measure of ruthlessness—for that sometimes is necessary—and if he is left alone he will probably produce economies in the department; but if he is rather easygoing, if he has not had administrative experience or is lacking in some other necessary qualification, the tendency is to multiply the servants in that department.

I am bound to say too that I think there is a rigidity in the whole business of government administration, an inflexibility, that does not tend to efficiency and economical results. This is not in the slightest sense meant as criticism of the Civil Service Commission, for I believe that on the whole the commission is discharging its duties under the act efficiently. But, frankly, I think the commission has too much power over the placing of servants once they are in a department. I agree wholly that every one who enters the government service should enter through the Civil Service door, but once he has passed the required examination set by the Civil Service Commission the control over him should be left to the responsible official in the department concerned. If a deputy minister is fully competent and knows his work he will resent the fact that he cannot move some person from one sector of his department to another sector, if the move involves an increase in remuneration, without the permission of the Civil Service Commission. I say that if he is a competent man he will resent that; if he is an incompetent man he should not be in the job. I do believe that with the salaries that are being paid to deputy ministers today—which are pretty reasonable salaries—it is possible to get wholly competent and efficient men; and I feel perfectly certain that if we could analyze the reason why some departments are more efficient, apparently, than others we would find it right in the type of personnel at the head of the departments.

The report refers to a few other matters, and I shall touch upon them briefly.

We secured in committee some data on the cost of public buildings in Ottawa and the adjacent district, that is, buildings that house the government departments. The total amount spent or engaged to be spent in the last five years in Ottawa is almost $60 million. Again, one hesitates to offer criticism; but I do think that some of these buildings are on a scale more lavish than is necessary to serve the purposes for which they are intended. As an illustration, I would cite the new Printing Bureau building in Hull. If we look at Exhibit 4 appended to the report, the table dealing with public buildings, we will find that the total expenditure on this building in Hull will be $14 million—for a printing bureau to do the Government's printing. Now, after all, a printing bureau is not a museum of art, nor is it a public library or anything of that kind; it is a place where machines are installed to do printing work and where you must have the necessary facilities to carry through the job. I do think that if for instance we had been able to build a printing bureau for half of that $14 million we might have spent the remaining $7 million much more usefully in trying to clean up slum areas in Ottawa or Hull or somewhere else.

That emphasizes a point which I have made before in this house. The amount of money that governments take out of the taxpayers is important, very important; but even more important is what governments do with the money. We have perhaps been influenced a good deal by the idea that Ottawa should be a lovely city. Every Canadian from one end of the country to the other should take pride in the capital city of his country, but all I am suggesting now is that expenditures on government buildings here should be held in some sort of balanced proportion.

The next matter that I wish to touch upon is rentals. The estimated expenditure for rentals in the present fiscal year shows an increase of $1·5 million over the rentals paid out during the last fiscal year. All of that increase, with the exception of about $150,000, is due to the requirements of the Department of National Defence. Now, if I may revert for a moment to the subject of employees, I would point out that in the period from March 31, 1953, to February 28, 1955, the total number of civilian employees of the Department of National Defence increased by about 10,000. Here again it is difficult to criticize, and certainly I do not wish for a moment to offer any unfair criticism, but the total civilian force in the Department of National Defence now numbers over 50,000.

Hon. Mr. Euler: What is the number of the armed forces?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: When the Deputy Minister of National Defence appeared before our committee, he stated, as I recall, that there was one civilian employee for every two and one-eighth man in uniform. That may be necessary—I do not know—but I do think it is a matter that probably could stand some inquiry. Is it possible that the Department of National Defence is enmeshed in a great deal of red tape in the conduct of its business? If we get down to an analysis of any of these things, or most of them, the increase probably comes about because of a tremendous increase in paper work in the departments. Is it possible in the vast mechanism of government to practice the principle of devolution, to give more responsibility to the man on the spot in the far-distant place, and hold him responsible for his work, instead of making him dependent upon some bureau or department in Ottawa to which he has to refer everything for approval? It is a point upon which it is rather difficult to make any definite pronouncement, but which is well worth study.

Hon. Mr. Golding: With reference to civil servants in the Department of National Defence, can the honourable senator quote the figures given by Mr. Drury, the Deputy Minister, as to the saving which has been made by the use of civilians instead of service men?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I do not recall that there were figures as to savings. Has the honourable senator the reference?

Hon. Mr. Golding: I believe the statement the witness made was that it costs $2,600 per annum for a civilian, as against $3,600 for a service man.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: I understand the point which the honourable senator is making, and I do not question the figures. The only doubt in my mind in this connection is whether 50,000-odd civilians are needed in the Department of Defence. I readily admit that if these employees are necessary, it is more economical to hire civilians than to put men in uniform on the job.

Hon. Mr. Golding: Economy was the reason the witness gave for the great number of civilian workers in that department.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: As I recall, the percentage he quoted was one civilian employee to every two and one-eighth men in uniform.

Hon. Mr. Golding: That is so.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Maybe these numbers are necessary, but no private business in this country could operate for six months on that scale.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: It depends on what the business was doing.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Reference is made in the report to the amount of gross national product and the importance of its relationship to the Canadian economy. We are now in a time of high spending. The figures given in Exhibit 6 of the report are pretty conclusive in that respect. I recognize that, as between the three branches of government—municipal, provincial and federal—the last probably shows up better than either of the other two. But last year expenditures of all governments combined were substantially larger than their revenues, and that has been the trend for the past two years. All I am trying to emphasize in this relation is that the important consideration is the amount of money which the taxpayer has to provide. It is not of first concern to him whether he must dip deeper in his pocket for municipal, or provincial, or federal expenditures; the point which interests him is the total amount of taxes he has to pay to all three branches of government. Here, I believe, is a field in which there should be, if possible, a large measure of co-operation between the three governing authorities in respect of the services they give. For example, federal expenditures on welfare run to very high figures, but provincial welfare disbursements are also very large; so are those of many municipal governments, especially in the larger cities.

Is it possible that some economies might be effected in this respect? I do not know; but it is my belief that there is a great danger for the future in the manner in which expenditures are growing beyond the normal development of the country. If there is a steadily expanding national production, affording a steadily expanding tax base, we can feel reasonably secure. But if for any reason the gross national product declined, as it did last year, and if that decline should continue for several years, or even for only two or three; if there should be another depression, and through causes over which we have no control, such as keener competition from other countries, our markets were lost or seriously contracted, the effect would be immediately felt in the form of a reduction of our gross national production, with consequent unemployment. There can be no other result.

Another danger, it seems to me, is that today our economy is operating on a pretty high cost basis. Wages are high—I do not criticize this: hours of labour have been reduced. Under these conditions shall we be able to compete successfully against some other countries? For instance, the German loves to work; he is happy to put in 48 to 54 hours a week, at a wage substantially lower than Canadian employers are paying. Again, while our trade with Japan is increasing, largely because of the demand for our wheat and barley, can we face the consequences of importations from Japan which compete with our own products and are available at much lower prices? Such factors as these may ultimately have the effect of depressing our gross production. If we could be certain of markets to absorb our production of cereals, timber, metals,—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Wheat.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: —and everything else, at fair and remunerative prices, we could go ahead with confidence. But in this we may fail, for reasons beyond our control, and I think we should keep that possibility always before us.

I have occupied more time now than I intended to take. I wish to express my thanks to the members of the committee for the attention and assistance they gave during the inquiry. The investigation was not as complete as I should have liked to have it. But one thing is very certain: if parliamentarians, either in this house or the other, fail in the full discharge of their duty in these matters, it cannot be through lack of the information on which to base sound judgments. Our government's statistical services are equipped to supply information to committees and to individuals on a scale unexcelled anywhere else in the world. That is very important. We do not know what may lie ahead. Our defence expenditures, as the report states, will probably have to be maintained for the indefinite future. Certainly, if a substantial reduction in defence expenditures could be effected we could look for some decrease in taxation. However, the country expects that due and proper attention will be given to maintaining our defences. There can be no doubt that in the great international struggle the Western powers have attained to a position of strength that is having a marked effect on the whole course of international policy, and therefore we cannot afford to relax our efforts. That being so, it is of vital importance that every government, municipal, provincial and federal, should economize to the fullest possible degree. In the past we had to build slowly, like the old settlers who went out on the prairies 70 or 80 years ago, some of whom, for a few years, had to be content with sod houses until they were able to produce and get some income for development. It is vastly important that expenditures of government should be held in a proper and fair balance. It is vitally important in all branches of public administration, whether provincial, municipal or federal, that the greatest possible degree of efficiency and economy be exercised.

Honourable senators, I move adoption of the report.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable members, I do not intend to take up any unnecessary time. I rise to commend the Chairman of the Finance Committee (Hon. Mr. Crerar) and the Vice-Chairman (Hon. Mr. Lambert) for the great service they have rendered not only to this house, and to the Parliament of Canada, but also to our whole country. They worked very hard to get the data together for the preparation of the committee's report. A few of the rest of us who served on the committee worked earnestly to help them in every way possible, but it is due to those two men more than anybody else that this splendid report was prepared. I urge the people of Canada to read this report from cover to cover, for by so doing they will get a better understanding of the details of the business of the Canadian Government than in any other way. The data was gathered together by the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman of the committee and put in a form that he who runs may read. I repeat that these two honourable senators deserve the thanks of this house and of the people of Canada for the fine work they have done.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I join with the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig) in expressing appreciation to the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman of the Finance Committee for their splendid work on the committee and for the valuable information that has been obtained. Unfortunately it was not possible for me to attend any of the meetings of the committee, because of other duties which I had to perform. However, I understand that the committee, under its Chairman and Vice-Chairman, held numerous meetings, and that officials from various departments furnished statistics which were asked for. It is abundantly clear that this committee has rendered a very splendid service not only to this house but to the country generally.

First, may I refer to the service which the committee has rendered to this house? As honourable senators know, the supply bill always comes to us in the dying hours of the session, when we do not have an opportunity to study the Estimates adequately. However, because of the Finance Committee's study of the Estimates when we receive the next supply bill—which I hope will not be many days hence—we shall have some knowledge of what it contains, and that will help us materially in our consideration of the bill.

I repeat, I join with the Leader of the Opposition in commending the Chairman and Vice-Chairman, and all the members of the finance committee, for their achievement. I am sure that not only the members of this house, but the people of Canada generally, appreciate what they have done.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators,—

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I do not want to usurp the role of my honourable friend from Waterloo (Hon. Mr. Euler) by attempting to second the adoption of this report.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Why not?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I believe the Honourable the Acting Speaker was good enough to suggest that you should do so. All I wish to do is to make an appropriate bow to my honourable friend the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig) who introduced my name into this discussion, and simply to say that the work of planning the Finance Committee fell upon the shoulders of the Chairman. He gave considerable thought and time and effort to its organization, and he deserves the credit for the results achieved.

I am sure the Chairman would like me to say that we all owe a great debt of gratitude to Mr. John Deutsch, the Secretary of the Treasury Board of the Government of Canada.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I say that because the report represents a great deal of statistical work. The review of evidence is the introductory part of the report, but the real substance of the report is to be found in the statistical sheets and tables that are included as appendices. In that connection, I think it should be said that the large sheet—the summary of Government expenditures by departments—which accompanies the annual Blue Book of Estimates each year, was introduced into that volume largely as the result of the work done and the suggestions made by the Senate Finance Committee several years ago. That summary, which is available to members of both houses, contains all the material upon which the report of the Finance Committee is based. When we come down to it, I think the whole problem of making any headway along the lines that have been so definitely emphasized by the Chairman rests with Treasury Board, which is the managerial branch of the department that deals with expenditures. I feel sure the Minister of Finance and his colleagues who compose the Treasury Board will read this report and note, with a good deal of gratitude, the emphasis given to certain items of expenditure. I believe they are very sincere in trying to safeguard the economy of our country.

I am hopeful that the report will be read by members of Parliament and that its contents will be widely distributed through the agency of the press, so that as many people as possible throughout the country will get a better idea of public expenditures by federal as well as provincial and municipal governments.

Let me say again that we all recognize the debt of gratitude we owe to the Chairman for the very sincere effort that he has put into the work of the Finance Committee, not only this year but in previous years. Certainly, he has given this committee a status that is a credit to his work and industry.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, at the risk of detaining the house for a few minutes longer, I should like to add my voice to those already heard in an expression of appreciation to the Chairman of the committee and those associated with him in the preparation of his report. I regret that this year I was unable to take an active part in that work. The report is a very valuable contribution to the work of Parliament. The Chairman has painted a picture this afternoon which the members of both houses should always keep before them. Personally, I am very much indebted to him, for I value the earnest and conscientious way in which he looks at the finances of this country.

As the honourable senator was speaking I wondered to myself what could be done to improve the efficiency and economy in the conduct of the public affairs of this nation. I take his report to mean that we should always be on the lookout for storm signals and warnings of trouble ahead, and be able to set our sails accordingly. One of the basic difficulties underlying the management of public affairs today is that our representatives in the House of Commons are continually faced with requests from all parts of the country for greater expenditures of public money. I take it from the report that we must help them to resist such demands. That, honourable senators, is not a very easy task. Personally, I sympathize with members of the other house, because I know something of the demands which come from my section of the country. Indeed, every senator knows the situation well.

Some years ago I was present at a banquet in the city of Saint John in honour of the late Viscount Bennett who was leaving Canada for England after a long term of public life in this country. His friends in his native province of New Brunswick tendered him this banquet, which was attended by many citizens from all over the province, irrespective of party, to do him honour and to say farewell. I recall very well his valedictory speech, which was very much along the same lines of the speech made by the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) this afternoon. Lord Bennett referred to the extravagant demands made upon men in public life by responsible citizens in every province of Canada—demands which in his judgment the finances of the nation at that time could not stand. He pleaded with those at the banquet to adopt a different attitude towards public men, so as to make their path a little smoother. There was great applause at that point. But Lord Bennett went on to say: "It is all very well for you to applaud my lofty sentiments tonight, but tomorrow if the City of Saint John wants something from the federal Government, half the people now listening to me will join a delegation to go to Ottawa and demand it."

His words came back to me this afternoon as I listened to the honourable senator from Churchill. I am prompted to say that in addition to bringing the information contained in this report before members of Parliament we must find some effective way of getting it before the people of Canada, particularly the young men and women, so that they may know more about the science of politics and government in this country than they know at the present time.

In our universities across Canada we are establishing chairs for almost every subject except politics.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Acadia University at Wolfville is establishing a public service course.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Something may be being done in one or two universities, but not nearly enough is being taught about the mechanism of federal government and the difficulties public men face.

To make the report really effective, and so that it may bear the fruit it deserves, we should find some appropriate means of getting it into the hands of the people all across Canada who will in the future control the destiny of this country.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, as a member of the Finance Committee I would like to add my words of praise to the Chairman (Hon. Mr. Crerar) and the Vice Chairman (Hon. Mr. Lambert) for the excellent report tabled in this house on Thursday last. I should also like to commend the steering committee, composed of the Chairman, the Vice Chairman and three other members who did a splendid job in placing matters for consideration before the committee. The Chairman has this year, as in other years, done a fine piece of work, and the report will, I feel, be well received by the public.

But I am wondering whether the information when it reaches the hands of the average person will be in a form that is readily understandable, and whether he will appreciate what the committee was trying to do. He may not know whether the reference was one calling for a general inquiry or for the purpose of making recommendations which would be useful to the government in future years. While my comment is intended in no way to be critical, I had hoped that the report would contain certain recommendations which it does not contain. Furthermore, no official of the largest department, that of Defence Production, appeared before the committee, so we did not have an opportunity to inquire as to its policy of calling for tenders and awarding contracts, an operation on which we might have been able to suggest some saving to the public. That is a question which the committee may well look into at some future time. I am hopeful that the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) will see fit to set up the Finance Committee again next session and that its reference will allow a greater scope for inquiry.

I should like to make particular reference to one or two items mentioned by the Chairman of the committee. He referred to efficiency, and I think there was a question in his mind as to whether the various departments were as efficient as they should be. After studying the evidence adduced before the committee, I feel that we in Canada are very fortunate to have such splendid men at the head of the various departments; and I think that applies pretty well right down the line—with, naturally, certain exceptions. On the whole, I think we can say that we have in the departments a very fine degree of efficiency. That was shown by the evidence placed before us, and I thought, honourable senators, I should stress that point.

While the Chairman of the committee touched on the subject of the Printing Bureau and its estimated cost of $14 million, no one will dispute that it costs a lot of money to put up a building of that type today. The building has many features which are very necessary from a safety point of view. It must be fire-proof, and heavy steel and concrete must be used throughout in order to support the weight of the machinery. I do not think that a comparison can be made between that building and, say, living quarters for the defence forces. And, too, we find private enterprise putting up buildings today at costs running into figures like $10 million or $15 million. On the whole, considering the large number of employees which the Printing Bureau houses, there is some question in my mind as to whether we should be too critical of its cost.

Hon. Mr. Horner: There are materials other than marble that are fire-proof.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I do not know how much marble is in that building, but I doubt that there is very much.

Next, I want to say a word or two about the number of civilians in the Department of National Defence. I think that was brought out very well in committee through the questions asked by the honourable senator from Huron-Perth (Hon. Mr. Golding). There are certain trades that servicemen cannot be expected to be competent in. For instance, in the dockyards a large number of civilian specialists must be employed, and this applies to both the east and the west coasts. It certainly would not bring about the efficiency that we all desire if servicemen were carrying out the repairs to ships in dockyards. I say that because I know from experience that civilian employees, while perhaps they do not always give 100 per cent efficient service, nevertheless are very necessary. I think the Deputy Minister of National Defence brought that point out when he was giving his evidence before our committee, and it should be borne in mind when comparisons are made between the number of civilian employees and the number of servicemen in the Department of National Defence.

There is one other point that I wish to raise, honourable senators, and I particularly would refer this to the Leader of the Government in the Senate (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) and to the Chairman of the Finance committee. I believe we should try next year, to compile a list of all payments which are being made to the provinces and set them forth in such a way that there will be no question as to what the federal Government is doing by way of assistance to our provinces. I do not wish at this hour, honourable senators, to enumerate the various amounts paid out or the headings under which the payments are made, but we know that they amount to a very considerable sum. I do not know just what the provinces would do today if it were not for these special grants. Perhaps the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, the two industrial provinces, and also British Columbia, could get along without these grants, but I am quite sure that the other provinces would have a very difficult time without them. These grants can only be made out of revenues coming in to the federal Government. I think, Mr. Leader, that that could be included as a broadening of the reference next year, so that the committee could make an inquiry along these lines and set forth the facts in such a way that the people throughout Canada would appreciate just what is being done for them by the federal Government.

Honourable senators, there is one other item, a note of which I made after reading this very interesting report and listening to the Chairman explaining it. I wonder if we could not in future divide the expenditures into two classes: expenditures that show no return, and expenditures that bring back to our economy $1.50, or some such amount, for every dollar we spend. I think that is a very important subject for future consideration and discussion. I feel a great many of the items of expenditure are worthwhile, in the sense that they result in a direct return in dollars and cents as it affects the economy of our nation.

I thought, honourable senators, that notwithstanding the late hour I would like to add my views, rambling as they have been, to the splendid remarks that have been made this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Honourable senators, I have only one remark to make. As the honourable senator from Northumberland (Hon. Mr. Burchill) brought to mind the warning given by the late Viscount Bennett, the thought occurred to me, what a vast change has taken place in regard to our thinking about money matters in Canada in the last twenty-five years. The honourable senator deplored the fact that more of our universities do not have chairs on political science. I say that if they were chairs on statesmanship instead they would be much better received throughout Canada, for the Canadian people suspect that there are too few statesmen and too many politicians.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: It is understood that if the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) speaks now he will close the debate on the motion for concurrence in the report.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Honourable senators, I would be ungrateful indeed if I did not express my appreciation of the very kind things that have been said about the report and whatever part I had in carrying it to the present point. The members, and particularly the honourable senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert), gave the committee very great assistance.

I would not want to leave any impression that there is indifference to this matter of public spending, and I trust my remarks earlier left no such impression. Latterly the Treasury Board has instituted certain steps which will probably have a substantial effect in curtailing expansion in the Civil Service. I do think that the expansion that has taken place in the last few years is pretty extensive, but I believe that the Government is aware of that fact and that the importance of it is realized.

Now, there is just one other thing I would wish to stress. Why do public expenditures which are already high tend to increase? The increase occurs not only in the federal field, but provincially as well. What is the reason for this? If we go back to the source we find it is almost inevitably the demand that comes from communities or organizations or individuals for Governments to spend more money for one thing or another. That is of vital importance, because the remedy for this condition of affairs lies not so much with those who for the time being are entrusted with the responsibilities of administration, as with the people, that they shall be moderate and reasonable in their demands and requirements. The report attempts to draw attention to that fact.

The honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) was kind enough to refer in complimentary terms to the report and to express the hope that it will be widely read. To assure that result is not, of course, within the power of the committee; but I may say for the information of the house that, once the report is adopted, copies will be sent to all the Canadian newspapers, to every member of the provincial legislatures, and to the main public libraries. The purpose of circulating it is that the facts it contains may become known. I am confident that if the Canadian people have the facts before them, they will reach sound conclusions. Although ministers must do their part, the problem is not one that can be solved by them alone. Public opinion must arrive at some sane and steady outlook in regard to all these issues if we are to avoid trouble in future.

The motion was agreed to, and the report was concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the Order:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 258, an Act to amend the Municipal Grants Act:

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: May I point out at this time that, although I had intimated to a number of honourable senators that this order would be proceeded with this afternoon, it is now twenty minutes after five o'clock, and the Chairman of the Committee on Transport and Communications has called a meeting of the committee for this afternoon. I therefore suggest that this and all subsequent items on the Order Paper should stand.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: The items stand.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 23, 1955

The Senate met at 3 p.m., Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

JUDGES BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 505, an Act to amend the Judges Act, and the judicature provisions of the Yukon Act and the Northwest Territories Act.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: With leave, next sitting.

RADIO BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the report of the committee on Bill 260.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, to whom was referred the Bill (260) intituled: "An Act to amend the Radio Act", have in obedience to the order of reference of May 10, 1955, examined the said bill and now beg leave to report the same with the following amendment:

Page 1: Strike out clause 2 of the bill and substitute therefor the following:

"2. (1) Section 8 of the said act is amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

'(2) Except as provided in the regulations made by the Minister under this act or in the regulations made under the Canada Shipping Act, every person who, having become acquainted with any radio communication transmitted otherwise than by a broadcasting station, makes use of such communication or divulges it to any person is guilty of an offence and is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months or to both fine and imprisonment.'

(2) This section shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation of the Governor in Council."

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: With leave, next sitting.

TORONTO HARBOUR RAILWAY TRACKS AGREEMENT BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transportation and Communications, presented the committee's report on Bill 262.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, to whom was referred the Bill (262) intituled: "An Act to approve an agreement between The Toronto Harbour Commissioners, The Toronto Terminals Railway Company, Canadian National Railway Company and Canadian Pacific Railway Company", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 21, 1955, examined the said bill and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: With leave of the Senate, I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

RAILWAY BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transportation and Communications, presented the report of the committee on Bill 259.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, to whom was referred the Bill (259) intituled: "An Act to amend the Railway Act", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 16, 1955, examined the said bill and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: With leave of the Senate, I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

NARCOTIC DRUG TRAFFIC

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Thomas Reid, Chairman of the Special Committee appointed to inquire into and report upon the traffic in narcotic drugs, presented the report of the committee.

He said: Honourable senators, I move:

That the report of the Special Committee on the Traffic in Narcotic Drugs in Canada be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate and to the Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate of this date.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Reid: As the report consists of some 32 typewritten pages and a copy will be in the hands of every honourable senator tomorrow, I would ask that, with the consent of the house, the reading of it by the Clerk Assistant be dispensed with.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Tuesday next.

For text of the report see Appendix to today's Hansard, pp. 690 to 703.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Monday, June 27, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

The motion was agreed to.

FRASER RIVER BASIN BOARD

INQUIRY AND ANSWER

Hon. Mr. Reid inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice of June 9:

1. Have any changes been made in the regulations and personnel of the Fraser river basin board? If so, what changes have been made in the regulations and what are the names of the personnel who now comprise the Fraser river basin board?
2. In the new personnel set-up, have both the provincial and dominion governments made appointees on the board representing the salmon fishery of the Fraser River? If so, what appointees have been so named to the board?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The answer to the honourable gentleman's inquiry is as follows:

1. Yes.

(a) The revised Terms of Reference of the new Board called for submission of an interim report on flood control by June 30, 1956, and of a preliminary report on flood control and power and their effects on other water uses by June 30, 1958. The completion of this report will mark the termination of this Board's activities unless the two Governments agree to an additional program of detailed planning studies.

(b) For Canada:

Director,
Engineering and Water Resources Branch,
Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources,
Ottawa, Ontario. (present incumbent—T. M. Patterson)
District Engineer,
B.C.—Yukon District,
Water Resources Division,
Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources,
Vancouver, B.C. (present incumbent—W. E. Warren)
Chief Supervisor of Fisheries,
Department of Fisheries,
Vancouver, B.C. (present incumbent—A. J. Whitmore)

For British Columbia:

Deputy Minister,
Department of Highways,
Victoria, B.C. (present incumbent—E. S. Jones)
Director of Surveys and Mapping,
Department of Lands and Forests,
Victoria, B.C. (present incumbent—G. S. Andrews)
Comptroller of Water Rights,
Department of Lands and Forests,
Victoria, B.C. (present incumbent—A. F. Paget)

2. See answer to 1 (b).

MUNICIPAL GRANTS BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Tuesday, June 21, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald for the second reading of Bill 258, an Act to amend the Municipal Grants Act.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, in rising to speak to this bill may I say at the outset of my remarks that I intend to deal particularly this afternoon with the city of Ottawa. I make no apology for doing so, because ever since I came to Ottawa, in 1930, I have taken quite an interest in the city and its developments. As a matter of fact, I was counting over the days since I first came here, and I find that I have spent more time in the capital than in my own city. Hence, I think I can speak with some degree of knowledge of Ottawa.

When introducing this bill in the House of Commons, the Minister of Finance described it as a very complicated piece of legislation. In saying this, I think that in the opinion of the average member of Parliament he set a good example of masterly understatement. Over there, the bill was quickly referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, which evidently agreed pretty fully with the minister about the complicated character of the bill, because it seemed to be reported unanimously to the House of Commons, where it finally received third reading without as much as one speech being made upon it by way of elucidation. The main thing about it was that everybody over there seemed to be in favour of boosting direct grants to the municipalities which are affected by this bill. If the Opposition had any suggestions to offer at all it was simply that the grants provided were not large enough. It is interesting to note that members of Parliament generally when they come here are all asking and fighting for buildings and airports in their constituencies, and after they get them they want the Government to pay for them by way of taxation.

I do not propose to say very much about the principle of this bill, which is the paying of grants to municipalities in lieu of taxes upon federal properties located in those municipalities. That principle has been clearly established by the federal Government since 1949, when the Municipal Grants Act was introduced and approved by Parliament. This bill is merely an amendment of that act, and its purpose is to increase the amounts so granted.

I do take this opportunity, however, to point out certain features of this proposed legislation which in my opinion have not been given sufficient attention.

In the first place, the Municipal Grants Act is an outgrowth of the old Ottawa bills which, in the years prior to 1945, came before us every year, and provided for a grant to the City of Ottawa in lieu of payment of local taxes upon federal properties located in this municipality. As was mentioned Tuesday night by the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), in moving second reading of the bill:

> . . . in 1944 the Prime Minister, the late Right Honourable William Lyon Mackenzie King, after some discussion with the Mayor of Ottawa. Mr. Stanley Lewis, decided that an inquiry should be made into the relations between the City of Ottawa and the Government of Canada. Upon the adoption of a resolution presented by Mr. King to Parliament, a joint committee of both houses was set up to inquire into the subject and make recommendations.

Two honourable senators who are now in this chamber had the pivilege of sitting on that committee: one is the honourable senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert); the other is myself. I would pay the honourable senator from Ottawa the compliment of saying that he did good service on that committee. As a result of the unanimous report of that joint committee of some twenty-three members representing every section of Canada, the Government later introduced legislation which greatly enlarged the outlook of the people of Canada upon the capital city of Ottawa and the surrounding municipalities embodied in the Federal District, which is administered, under the provisions of the Federal District Commission Act, by the Federal District Commission. At that time the federal grant to the City of Ottawa was increased from $100,000 to $300,000 per year for a period of five years. By the time that period had expired, pressure—accumulated pressure—had been brought to bear upon the federal treasury from other municipalities throughout Canada to have grants provided for them as well as for the City of Ottawa.

That is why the Municipal Grants Act of 1949 came into existence, and also why the old annual grants to the City of Ottawa came to be merged into one total sum provided for all municipalities which were qualified to come under a formula prescribed by the Department of Finance.

I am not going to express an opinion whether the amounts granted under the formula of 1949 or those prescribed under the amended formula in this bill are too much or too little. I do suggest, however, that this bill should include appendices listing the names of the municipalities receiving grants, with the amounts granted to each municipality. The fact of the situation as far as Ottawa is concerned is that in 1949 the annual grant, which for the previous five years had been $300,000, was increased to over one million dollars, and now, under the provisions of this bill, it will amount to something over two and a half million dollars. The total grants to all municipalities affected by this bill will, as has been stated by the minister, amount to a figure between six and seven million dollars, of which the City of Ottawa will receive almost one-half.

That is not all the story regarding the City of Ottawa by any means. We have here a Federal District Commission which renders certain services to this capital city and its surrounding district. One of these days a bill will come before us amending the Federal District Commission Act so as to increase the amount of the annual grant to the Commission to enable it to meet rising costs of operation. Incidentally, it has been estimated that some $50 million has been expended by the Federal District Commission since its inception, all of which has been contributed by the people of Canada generally.

I am touching only briefly upon this particular aspect of the bill before us to emphasize the point that the situation which applies to the City of Ottawa with its intimate and rather complex relations to the federal Government and surrounding municipalities is altogether different and distinctive from that applying to any other municipality in the country. For that reason, I protest strongly against legislation which tends to obscure the problems affecting this capital city and Federal District by submerging them in a general formula applying to a hundred other municipalities of varying size and character. This is really two bills in one; and I trust that in the near future the Municipal Grants Act will be amended further to remove provisions as to the City of Ottawa from this act and that its case will be presented once again in separate and distinct legislation which may be subject to inquiry and enlightenment each year.

This suggestion, I submit is in keeping with the proposal contained in the Speech from the Throne at the opening of this session, indicating that a Joint Committee of both houses of Parliament would be set up for the purpose of inquiring into matters relating to the capital city and the Federal District. Instead of that undertaking having been fulfilled, we are now presented with a bill without the benefit of enlightenment or recommendations from such an inquiry such as were afforded in 1944.

I have referred earlier to the committee of inquiry which reported on this subject in 1944, and to the legislation which followed its recommendations. It was suggested last year, I think, by the honourable senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert), that a committee similar to that of 1944 should be appointed again after a period of ten years to review relations between the Government and the municipalities. That was not done, but instead notice of a bill to amend the Municipal Grants Act appeared on the Order Paper of the other house at the beginning of last session. It remained there all year and appeared again on the Order Paper at the beginning of this session. Altogether, since it was drafted, this bill has been awaiting the attention of Parliament for over a year and a half. So at least we can say that this is not a case of "hasty" legislation. But one must say that it is a case of "ill conceived" and "ill considered" legislation.

The legislation applying to the City of Ottawa and its surrounding Federal District, which followed the inquiry by a Parliamentary committee in 1944, was the result of the deliberations and the recommendations of members of both Houses of Parliament. As I mentioned before, two senators—the Honourable senator from Ottawa and myself—served on that committee. This bill, and the act which it proposes to amend, are the result of the investigations of departmental officials whose recommendations are expressed solely in a mathematical formula upon which very little light or explanation has been shed.

My real criticism of this bill is that it needs analysis and enlightenment, especially regarding section 4. Not a word was said by the honourable Leader (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) about this section. According to my interpretation it means that, for taxation purposes, the East and West Blocks of the Parliament Buildings are being taken out of the jurisdiction of the federal Government and placed in the jurisdiction of the Corporation of the City of Ottawa. I think this is a most serious matter, and I wonder how many members have noticed that this is being done. I have always understood and I still maintain that the Parliament Buildings are comprised of the West Block, the Centre Block and the East Block. Not a word of explanation has been given as to what is being done, and not one inquiry has been made.

I cannot understand why, before this legislation was drafted and submitted to Parliament, the whole subject-matter of this bill could not have been submitted to a parliamentary committee for examination and recommendation, as was done in 1944.

I shall conclude what I have to say about this bill with a renewed appeal on behalf of the great national enterprise of identifying this capital city and its surrounding district as something outstanding in our national life. It is not merely just one of some one hundred municipalities to come within the scope of this bill. For over fifty years the people of Canada have been told about the great possibilities of this capital city and district; and millions of dollars on their behalf have been expended and pledged in the fulfilment of their desire to realize that glorious objective. The Greber Plan, enshrined in a plaster of paris model which has been exhibited over the length and breadth of Canada, stands in mute testimony of great dreams and visions of a Canadian capital centre worthy of the national aspirations of Canadians. Is this all to be submerged in a statutory provision which can only be reflected in the future by a total figure in the annual estimates showing the amount of total grants to a favoured list of municipalities throughout Canada? If for no other reason than to give some reality to the principle of "no taxation without representation", closer examination and consideration should be given to the project of a national capital centre. It is unthinkable that two and a half to three million dollars per year should be granted to any municipality in behalf of the Canadian taxpayer without some federal control being exercised over the spending of it.

Honourable senators, bear in mind it is estimated that in this city there are some 40,000 civil servants whose payroll runs to something like $10 million a month, which sum is provided by the people of all ten provinces. All Canada contributes. Now it is proposed to grant $2½ million to Ottawa, even though the Treasurer and Mayor of Ottawa have intimated that they are going to resign. Are we just going to hand this over to the city? I am not going to speak about the dog fights among the civic officials here except to say that perhaps one good has come out of it all. I think I speak on behalf of the average taxpayer of this city when I say that the time is now ripe for this city to be taken over and made a federal district.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Reid: I venture to say that if it were put to a vote of the people—the ordinary citizen and taxpayer—hands would go up every time in favour of that great plan.

When the late Prime Minister, the Right Honourable Mackenzie King, presented his resolution to Parliament in 1944, asking for a joint committee to consider this subject, he pictured something of what the future held in store for Canada and its Capital City and District. I cannot do better than quote his actual words on that occasion:

> I should like to take advantage of this moment to say just a word in regard to the future of Ottawa. I have spoken on this subject a number of times, and some years ago I made the suggestion, which others have also made, that some day the capital of Canada might become a federal district to be administered by a commission, in a manner similar to the capital at Washington. I am not putting this forward as anything which should be done immediately. It is a matter which will require a great deal of consideration. But I feel that just now, if there is to be any immediate consideration of the planning of greater Ottawa as a city or as a capital, that planning ought to have in mind all possibilities of the development of this capital. I have often hoped that if the capital were to become a federal district, that district would extend far enough to include a very large area on the other side of the river as well as the Ottawa area. I would ilke to see—I may not live to see it but I hope others may—the day when the Ottawa River, instead of flowing along the north border of the capital, will be flowing through the heart of the city, the greater Ottawa that is to be, and that we shall have a capital city which will extend as far into the province on the other side of the Ottawa River as it may extend in the province on this side. I do not think that is a vision of the future needs or of future greatness by any means too broad or too large. We have seen in recent years how rapidly this city has grown. We may well expect to see a capital city of Canada of dimensions beyond anything we are likely to contemplate at this time.
>
> I have one other thought in mind to which I should like to give expression, and it is this. The sacrifices of the men and women of Canada who served in the last war have been memorialized by a national war memorial in the heart of this city. It would be difficult, if not impossible, to create another memorial which could pay due tribute to the service and sacrifice of those men and women of Canada who will have served in the present world conflict. What finer memorial could there be than a capital city which would serve as a model of community planning for all the other cities of Canada and which would be symbolic of the world-wide effort of Canada in the present war, and the significant place we hope our country will occupy in the world of the future—a national capital which would be not only the pride of Canadians but also an object lesson to other cities and to other countries? The national war memorial of the last war is in the heart of Ottawa. Might not the national memorial of the present war find noble expression, carefully planned, in a federal district as the site of the Canadian capital, through the heart of which would flow the Ottawa River?

Eleven years have passed since those words were uttered, and opinion in this community, as well as feeling throughout the entire country has grown strongly in favour of the project which the late Prime Minister so eloquently expressed. Unfortunately, the bill before the house has failed to recognize that fact.

I sincerely trust that the Government and the Parliament of Canada have not lost the vision of making Ottawa a great capital city. And finally, as a very important step, I suggest that the present Prime Minister interview the Honourable Mr. Frost, Premier of Ontario, and the Honourable Mr. Duplessis, Premier of Quebec, with a view to coming to an agreement in regard to allowing Ottawa and Hull, should it be so decided upon, to become part of the Federal District of Ottawa, similar to that of Washington, D.C., and one that every province in Canada may well feel proud of.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators,—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, if the honourable Leader speaks now he will close the debate on the second reading of this bill.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, if I remember correctly, I also sat on the joint committee of both houses which has been referred to. Does the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) suggest that people living in the federal district which he proposes would be deprived of a vote in elections?

Hon. Mr. Reid: If the federal district were well managed, I do not think they would care. The citizens of Washington do not vote.

Hon. Mr. Horner: I know the people do not vote in the District of Columbia. However, this is a somewhat different proposition.

Washington was planned many years ago. I doubt if the plan suggested by my honourable friend would be workable at the present time.

I do not wish to enter into this argument at all, but I think that it is possible to be carried away with these immense schemes of spending money on tearing down buildings and widening streets for programs of development. I do not agree with enterprises of that kind at the present time. I think every part of the country should receive consideration, and not one particular district only.

Honourable senators, I do not wish to argue further about the matter.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, first of all, I should like to express my very hearty appreciation of the speech delivered by the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid). He referred to me as one of the members of the Joint Committee on Federal-Municipal Relations, which sat in the summer of 1944. I have in my hand a copy of the unanimous report that was presented by that committee. The late Senator Copp, who was one of the joint chairmen of the committee, the other having been the member for Battleford, from the House of Commons, Mr. Gregory. Senator DuTremblay, the late Senator Leger, the late Senator G. V. White, Senator Stevenson and myself were the other members of the committee from this house.

The honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid)—who was then a member of the House of Commons—was a most active and interested member of that house on the committee. The significance of his remarks today is that over these past eleven years little headway has been made in accomplishing the objectives set forth in the committee's report and so eloquently commended in the remarks of the late Prime Minister on the introduction of the resolution in the Commons, as quoted by my honourable friend.

It is a serious reflection on those concerned that more material headway has not been made toward the realization of the great work envisaged at that time. Those objectives had their origin fifty years ago, and in accordance with the development of the national consciousness of Canada they have been emphasized from time to time.

Reference has been made to the sums of money that have been expended on acquiring property around the capital city, and on maintenance of parks, driveways and boulevards, as well as on policing and other activities throughout the city. The people of Canada have all contributed toward the cost of acquiring and maintaining this property. I have no hesitation in emphasizing what my honourable friend has said, that the people of Canada are not getting the run for their money that they deserve in the development of the capital and the federal district areas surrounding it. Public opinion in this community today is overwhelmingly in favour of greater progress being made towards the realization of these objectives.

To emphasize the remarks made by my honourable friend from New Westminster I should like to read a short paragraph from the report made in 1944, which confirms and supports the eloquent words expressed by the Prime Minister of that time. The report reads:

> It is not the purpose of this committee to make definite recommendations to the Government regarding the future character of a federal district to embrace this park area and the municipalities on either side of the Ottawa River including the city of Ottawa. We are of the opinion, however, that this long-term project should be committed by the Government to a special commission of experts for investigation and report, involving as it would the possession of expert professional knowledge and the need for extended travel to study the plans and workings of federal capital districts in other countries. From the observations made by this committee during its investigations, it is clear that with the growth of Canada and the corresponding expansion of its governmental activities, the administrative problems arising between the City of Ottawa and the federal Government will become more complex and more difficult of settlement than they are now. As an indication of that prospect we would merely stress the inevitable difficulty that will arise in connection with the present reckless system of sewage disposal into the Ottawa River, with both banks of which within the most directly affected area, are the property of the Dominion of Canada.
>
> While the project of a federal district of the proportions indicated must wait not only for well matured and well founded plans, but also for the widespread support of a crystallized popular opinion throughout Canada, the development of Ottawa as a national capital is proceeding apace, and must not be held up, pending a settlement of the larger question.

I have read those two paragraphs to emphasize the fact that what my friend has said was clearly considered at that time, in the hope that some headway and progress would be made toward the betterment of this area in the years that followed. One reason why satisfactory progress and headway have not been made has, I think, been due fundamentally to the incompatibility of a small-gauge municipal system of government resting in the heart of an area which is largely representative of the people of Canada. I make that statement, honourable senators, without any disrespect whatsoever to those who may be in positions of importance in relation to the municipal government of this city. Indeed, I have very high respect for the versatile abilities and resourcefulness of the present

Mayor of Ottawa, even though she has recently threatened to resign her position. But I say that the situation as between the municipality and the Federal District can be likened to the tail of a very large dog trying to influence the locomotion of that animal.

I maintain that the large majority of the residents in this city and district, as well as the people throughout the whole of Canada, are very much in favour of some appreciable headway being made towards the realization of the plans undertaken years ago; and they have every right to expect more rapid progress than has been made in the past ten years.

In 1944, when the joint committee's report was submitted and unanimously concurred in, the Government of that day, under the leadership of the late Mackenzie King, brought in new legislation amending the Federal District Commission Act so as to make the Federal District Commission representative of every province in Canada. Prior to that time it had been a purely local commission; but after that, representatives from every province in Canada assembled periodically in Ottawa at meetings of the commission to consider matters relating to the capital city and Federal District. Mr. Greber had been brought to Canada in 1939, but he was brought back after the war with a view to preparing a plan which might readily be carried out over a term of years. As has been said, that plan was enshrined in a plaster of paris model and sent over the length and breadth of this country two or three years ago in order that everybody might have an opportunity of seeing what was contemplated in connection with the development of this project.

In concluding my remarks I would again emphasize what has been said by the honourable senator from New Westminster; and I should also like to read the two concluding sentences of the report of 1944:

> The federal Government and the City of Ottawa as well as other nearby municipalities in reality are travelling along the great national highway of Canada in close partnership; and the journey has just been commenced. The objective at the end of the road is a unified Dominion and a great National Capital which in every respect should reflect the strength of a normal and healthy growth.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Haig: May I ask the honourable gentleman a question on a point which I honestly do not understand—probably because of my ignorance. In the event that a national capital is established here, who is going to provide for municipal services such as schools?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I think that the point raised by the honourable Leader of the Opposition can be easily explained, but before attempting to answer his question I would suggest that this bill be referred to the appropriate committee before which officials can appear and be questioned about matters related to this legislation. I recognize that there is not time now to go into details of the proposed federal district set-up, involving the elimination of the present municipal form of government and other matters. But the answer to the question asked by my honourable friend concerns the two provinces on either side of the Ottawa River. The Governments of Ontario and Quebec control municipal affairs in their respective provinces.

There is no suggestion, and there never has been, that school facilities should not remain as they are today, embodied in the affairs of the community, just as they are in the District of Columbia, where schools are maintained under school boards as part of the federal district organization. Naturally, the needs of the people living in the district must be met.

But the main point, honourable senators, is to give value in return for the money expended by the taxpayers over the past years, by seeing that something along the proposed lines is set up, corresponding with the ambitions and aspirations of the Canadian people. It has to be thought of in those terms and not in any petty, narrow terms of ward politics. It seems to me that it is a matter of getting ahead with the job. A definite position was taken on this matter more than eleven years ago, but today the whole thing is submerged in a bill giving grants to municipalities—largely as the result, may I say, of political pressure. I say that advisedly, because before 1949, when the Municipal Grants Bill was first introduced, there was no suggestion whatsoever from any other municipality in Canada that it should share in the grants that were being given by the people of Canada to this capital city; but in 1945, when the annual grant was increased from $100,000 to $300,000, then, through the usual processes, claims began to arise. First of all a claim came in from Halifax, and then one came from another place asserting that they too should receive grants because they had federal properties within their municipalities. Well, I am not objecting to that.

Honourable senators are familiar with section 125 of the British North America Act, which says that no federal or provincial government shall be liable to pay taxes to a municipality. In order to get around that, governments make up their minds that it is a good thing to pay grants to municipalities in lieu of taxes and that becomes a matter of policy. As the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) has said, that policy was adopted in 1949 under this act, which now is being amended to increase these grants. Well, my objection to the whole thing is that it has not been subjected to proper examination or investigation. A committee should have been set up to look into these matters and give fair perspective to all that is involved in this bill with regard to the capital city and its relation to these other problems.

Hon. Mr. Haig: The honourable senator has not answered my question. I asked who pays the cost of the schools and other municipal services under a federal district set-up.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Under the present system, education—

Hon. Mr. Haig: I know what the present system is, but what is it going to be under your plan?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: The people living in the federal district would pay for these services. People would still be inhabiting this area—there are 210,000 here today.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Would the cost not be paid by the whole country in the form of taxes?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: No, not entirely by the whole country.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Why not?

Hon. Mr. Lambert Well, referring back to the District of Columbia, there the people have their institutions, and taxation is levied in that district to maintain services such as police and fire protection, schools, and so on. But that is a matter of detail. I thought my honourable friend was referring to the complication that might arise as the result of these matters being under different governments. That is a problem that will of course have to be dealt with and worked out fully. And, if I may say so, I do not know how the people of this country could be given any finer concrete example of co-operation in the interests of unity in Canada as between the provinces and the Dominion, than through the establishment in this centre of a federal district, including the capital city and the surrounding areas. It would give substance to the idea of national unity and be a symbol which I think would influence in a very real way the broader interests of Canada in every respect.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, I did not intend to take part in this debate; in fact I did not know it was going to come up in this way. But if I wanted to congratulate the Government, this bill provides an occasion for doing so. The speech by my honourable friend from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert) prompts me to think that this proposed increased aid to municipalities is perhaps a good thing. It really looks as if the federal Government is trying to save some money for the people of Canada which, according to the chairman of our Finance Committee (Hon. Mr. Crerar), is a very laudable ambition. But I am not in favour of bringing this area into a federal district, because to do so would increase the cost of municipal services to three times what it is today.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Nonsense!

Hon. Mr. Haig: You say nonsense, but that has always been the experience.

Hon. Mr. Lambert On what basis do you say that? Is it just a guess?

Hon. Mr. Haig: I will answer you. As I said, that has always been the experience. It matters not what party or government is in power, you will find wherever you go, that when the public service takes over detailed administration, the costs go up. The Government may be able to handle defence and other things of a national character, but when it comes to detailed administration it should be left to the people themselves; they will do it efficiently, because they are the ones who pay the taxes. When the control is exercised by the Government, it is not the Government, but the taxpayers generally, who have to pay. I do not think that this state of things makes for unity.

For twenty years I have viewed the approaches to these buildings, and have seen tourists from the United States arrive here by the carload. The honourable senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert) is not around here in the evenings or during week-ends to see these people, but let me tell him what is the first thing they do when they come here. The other day I asked some tourists who had just arrived from Florida, what they were interested in looking at. The answer they gave, in effect, was, "Well, we want to go to the grounds of the Parliament buildings and have our girls photographed beside the policeman with the red uniform." I said, "Do you know what that building is over there?" No, they said, they didn't. So then I asked, "Do you know what this nearby building is?" Well, they thought it was the Parliament building. But they could not identify one block from the other; they did not even know who owned the grounds; they knew nothing except that some of them wanted to be photographed with "the redcoats"—one or other of the two or three men stationed in front of the buildings.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: May I ask my honourable friend if they explained to him how they happened to get here?

Hon. Mr. Haig: Let me finish my speech, and then ask me questions. If my honourable friends wants to interrupt me, I will allow him to do so; but in this house it is not good manners to interrupt. I remained silent until he finished what he had to say.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Do not talk about manners to me. If anybody has less of them than the honourable Leader of the Opposition—

Hon. Mr. Haig: I did not ask you questions until you were ready to sit down. As a matter of fair play, please treat me in the same way.

Why should the people of my province, or of any other, be required to pay taxes when residents of some particular area are relieved of this particular obligation?

Hon. Mr. Reid: They are not.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Those who live in the capital district do not pay taxes on the same scale. Let the Government announce a definite policy, and we shall know what to do; we can either reject or endorse it.

Another point: look at the way the traffic runs. If I want to go by car from this building to the nearby Chateau Laurier, what must I do? I must go south to Slater street, two or three streets below the hotel, then I must cross a bridge over the canal and proceed easterly for a few blocks, then turn north to Rideau street, then make another turn and proceed westerly as many blocks as I went in the opposite direction, and at last I reach the hotel. It means that I travel five times the distance I want to go. No wonder one hears the Plaza called "Confusion Square". I know nothing like it anywhere else on earth. I have visited about a hundred of the world's cities, and in no place have I found it more difficult to get from one spot to the other than here in Ottawa, from the Parliament Buildings to the chief hotel. The other day, when I arrived at the Union Station, I wanted to walk straight across the road, but I was told that it was against the rules; I must take a circular route around the street and back again. That is the kind of thing one may expect to find, and does find, in a controlled city.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Those matters are under the city administration.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I admit that, but the federal Government has some control too. If, in my city of Winnipeg, there was no more gravel on the sidewalks after a snowfall than one finds here, the people would shoot the mayor. If snow fell tonight in Winnipeg, tomorrow morning outfits would be busy distributing gravel and sand. When I ask what delays action after a snowfall on the ground between here and the hotel, I am told that it is the responsibility of the Federal District; and about twenty-four hours afterwards one finds that gravel is being sprinkled on the road.

I object to the formation of a federal district unless the proposal is agreed to by the nation's representatives from coast to coast. It is for them to decide the matter; I do not believe that the decision should rest with us alone.

I realize that what I am saying will not be welcomed in some quarters. I shall be lambasted tomorrow in the Ottawa papers; they will assert that I am unfriendly to Ottawa. That is not so, but I am in favour of giving a fair deal to Canada as a whole. In Winnipeg the City provides police and fire protection for all the dominion buildings. For that service we do not receive a cent.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Your city is not within the formula prescribed by this bill.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Well, the formula is not satisfactory. I want the same conditions in regard to taxation of federal buildings to apply in Ottawa, in Halifax, in Vancouver, and every other Canadian city. Why, for instance, should Winnipeg be taxed to provide fire, police and other protection for dominion government property if some other city is relieved of that obligation? The requirements of the formula are such that our city cannot possibly qualify under it.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: There are not enough federal buildings in Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I admit that we support largely Conservative and CCF candidates. Maybe that has something to do with it. I will not go so far as to say that it has, for at this time the Government is providing us with a Post Office building at a cost of $9 million. That is a pretty fair contribution to Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. Horner: And you do not need it, at that!

Hon. Mr. Haig: I think we do need it. The building will be very useful, and we are providing the necessary services. I repeat that if a concession is given to one city it should be given to all cities.

I am now willing to answer any question which the honourable senator from Ottawa may wish to ask.

Hon. Mrs. Wilson: Honourable senators, I was pleased that the honourable senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert) referred to the pollution of the Ottawa River. To my mind it is simply disgraceful that not only the citizens of Ottawa, but people on both sides of the river, do not have the benefits of that beautiful stream. The water is unfit for drinking, and it cannot be used for swimming.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators,—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: If the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) speaks now, he will close the debate on the second reading of this bill.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I do not propose at this time to enter into the discussion of whether the capital city should be included in a federal district. There is no provision for the establishment of a federal district in this bill, but it has been a very interesting discussion and I am sure the Government will take note of everything that has been said.

Those who have spoken have inadvertently neglected to refer to the beauty of our capital city, and I am fearful that as a result of this debate the people of Canada may get the impression that our capital city is not one of which we can all be proud. Many Canadians have not yet visited Ottawa, and any of them who read this debate might feel it is not worth while to come here. I know that honourable senators did not mean to give this impression, for Ottawa is indeed a beautiful city. I doubt whether any place in the world was more attractive than Ottawa during the Tulip Festival this spring, when thousands upon thousands of tulips decorated our driveway system. Have any of us ever seen a more lovely display? What city in the world has a finer driveway system? What a magnificent sight greets the visitor to Parliament Hill—the broad green lawns, the colourful flower beds, the pleasant walks, and the majestic Parliament Buildings themselves. The natural beauty of Ottawa is enhanced by numerous splendid structures, of which the Veterans Memorial Building on Wellington Street is the most recently completed one; and the new buildings for the National Library, the National Gallery, and the National Museum will add to the grandeur of our capital. I mention these things to emphasize that Ottawa is a really beautiful city and a capital of which all Canadians can truly be proud.

The honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) said that the Parliament Buildings are being excluded from federal property.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Just the East and West Blocks.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: This follows the basis on which grants in lieu of taxes are made in the United Kingdom. Full taxes are paid there on nearly all Crown properties, although for some classes loss of taxes is paid, which presumably amounts to less than full taxes. Payments had been made on a few Crown properties for centuries, but the main system of grants was set up in 1874. The Treasury Valuer was given the final say about the assessment of Crown properties and the local authorties had no appeal from his decision.

The Houses of Parliament in London were originally excluded from the British system of grants in lieu of taxes. They were, however, added in 1896, at which time it was stated:

> My Lords regard this as a case in which some contribution may be allowed, but the rules for the assessment of private property are not applicable, and they therefore sanction the payment of a moderate contribution to be fixed with due regard to the peculiar character of the property.

I have referred to the exclusion of federal properties in Canada. The rules for the assessment of taxable properties and most federal properties are not applicable to the Parliament Buildings nor to the land which is used along with these buildings. The buildings are large and costly in relation to the number of persons occupying them, and the grant which would result from applying standard assessment procedure, even after eliminating values of ornamental and non-functional features, is out of proportion to the grant paid on other office buildings in Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That does not apply to land values.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It applies to buildings.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Only.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes. The land value would be comparable to other land values in the immediate vicinity.

A grant based on standard assessment procedure is also out of proportion to the cost of providing municipal services. The lands appurtenant to the Parliament Buildings are in the nature of park lands and might be excluded on that ground from the grant base.

The honourable senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert) has suggested that this bill should be referred to committee. I suppose the appropriate one would be the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, and if the bill is given second reading I shall be pleased to accede to the suggestion that has been made.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Before the question is put would the honourable Leader place on record the grants paid to various municipalities?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I have not that information available now.

Hon. Mr. Haig: The honourable senator can get that information in committee.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes, it is information which can be obtained when the bill is in committee.

Hon. Mr. Horner: At that time I should like to get information as to expenditures by the Federal District Commission.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That is another question which can be considered in committee, although it is really beyond the provisions of this bill.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I suppose the committee will not hold a public hearing, and therefore no record will be made of the proceedings.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I shall endeavour to obtain the information and have it put on record when the bill is before this house for third reading.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Thank you.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. T. A. Crerar moved the second reading of Bill 351, an act respecting Canadian National Railways.

He said: Honourable senators, the principle of this bill rests upon a secure foundation. The system known as the Canadian National Railways is the result of the bringing together of various individual railways over a period of many years. Each of those, of course, was governed or affected by statutes of the Canadian Parliament at some time or another.

The purpose of this bill is simply to consolidate into one statute various legislative acts that affect the operation of the Canadian National Railways as we know the system today. That is the simple, elementary principle of the bill, and I suggest to the house that it rests upon a secure foundation. The consolidation would be a convenience for all who have to do with the administration of the Canadian National Railways, as well as for members of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Why was it not done when the statutes were revised a year or so before, instead of leaving it until now?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: Well, that is a question which might be answered if the bill goes to committee. I am simply stating that the purpose of the bill is to consolidate into one statute various enactments relating to Canadian National Railways.

A few other points need mention. Some new provisions are referred to in the explanatory notes to the bill. First, the bill includes authority to operate a telecommunication system. At present various subsidiaries controlled by Canadian National Railways have telecommunication systems, but not of a complete, co-ordinated character. The new provision would enable Canadian National Railways to effect a change of that kind.

The second new provision authorizes officers and employees of Canadian National Railways to act as directors of partially owned companies. That is simply a matter of convenience, and it undoubtedly would expedite the work of administration.

Again, the bill authorizes the railway to construct short lines without reference to Parliament. The legislation sets a limit of six miles. Such construction must be approved by the Minister of Transport and the Governor in Council. If, for instance, there was a need to run a spur line into a factory established on the outskirts of some manufacturing centre, this bill would enable the railway, with the approval of the Governor in Council, to build such a spur line without having to come to Parliament for authority to do so.

Hon. Mr. Euler: Can the railways not proceed without authorization now?

Hon. Mr. Crerar: No, I understand that they cannot.

Hon. Mr. Euler: I am surprised.

Hon. Mr. Crerar: There is also a provision in the bill for extinguishing charters of constituent corporations that have no longer any reason for existence. That is a provision to which, I think, no exception can be taken.

There are also provisions in the bill authorizing the company to operate motor vehicles. This provision has aroused some criticism from various parts of the country, as it did in the House of Commons when the bill was discussed there. I think there is some misapprehension about the powers given under this section. According to existing legislation motor vehicles come under the laws of the provinces in which they operate, and that is also true of motor transport traffic across interprovincial boundaries. That is the result of legislation passed by Parliament last session. The provincial authorities, therefore, will not be affected by developments which may result from this legislation, so far as motor transport vehicles are concerned. Many changes have taken place in railway transportation, and it may be found that on certain branch lines the railway can operate motor vehicle transport at a profit, instead of operating trains at a loss. If the house will permit me, I can give an apt illustration of the great change which has taken place. Fifty years ago a certain railway line in Manitoba, covering a distance of 225 miles, ran a train each way every day with five or six passenger coaches. Last year the railway sought and received permission from the Board of Transport Commissioners to cease to operate trains on that line. The service is now given by motor transport and buses operated by private companies, and the railway has discontinued a line that it had been operating for some time at a substantial loss.

Honourable senators, if this bill receives second reading I shall suggest that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, this bill has received some criticism. The federal Government went to the expense of securing a decision from the Supreme Court of Canada granting it complete control over interprovincial trucking traffic. I was very pleased with that decision, and hoped the Government would introduce legislation that would be uniform and fair to all concerned, so as to permit trucking wherever it would be more economical than railroad services. But, no, the Government, for some reason I fail to understand, passed it over and brought in legislation giving the control back to the provinces, thereby refusing to take the responsibility of dealing with one of the most pressing problems with which this country is faced, and which at some time must be resolved.

There is a large and important area which in so far as the national economy is concerned, is dependent on railways. In the carriage of much of our export products, for example, no method of trucking can successfully compete with the railways. Therefore we are vitally interested in securing for them their just due, and lines that are already built and satisfactorily located should be maintained and continue to render service.

I cannot understand why the federal Government stood by when there was talk of further freight rate increases, and did not make use of the power to control interprovincial truck traffic. True, the railway line which was abandoned in Manitoba was, I understand, within the province and a matter in which the provincial government had authority. But I stress my concern and disappointment over the lack of action by the federal Government when it had received the Supreme Court decision which expressly gave it the authority to control interprovincial truck traffic. In its failure to take action, I say the Government shirked its responsibility. As time goes on we will more and more realize the vital need for action by the federal Government to control interprovincial trucking.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, in view of the possibility that when this bill is considered in committee no record will be kept of the proceedings, I have a few words to say about the measure.

I have been watching with interest this provision whereby the railways can now go into the trucking business, which is a departure from its former activities. I would like some assurance from the railways that what was said by the honourable senator who explained the bill (Hon. Mr. Crerar) is really what is meant.

Let me illustrate my point. The railway at one time carried all the freight from Vancouver to a point some 500 miles into the interior of British Columbia. The time came when a trucking company commenced carrying freight to the same point at a much lower rate than that charged by the railway. Consequently, the trucks got the traffic and the railway did not. After some three or four years the railway reduced its rates below those charged by the trucking company.

Naturally, there was strong protest by the truck operators; but I pointed out to them that they had little ground for protest, because in the first instance they had taken the business from the railway by undercutting its rates. Now, as the railway is losing money on that particular haul, there is talk of it putting in a trucking system.

I should like some assurance from the railway officials that whatever trucking they undertake will be an ancillary operation to the rails and will not be operated in competition with the regular trucking companies.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Crerar, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS REFUNDING BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. G. Pervical Burchill moved the second reading of Bill 450, an Act respecting Canadian National Railways and to provide for the refunding of matured, maturing and callable financial obligations.

He said: Honourable senators, this is a simple bill, the purpose of which is to give authority to the Canadian National Railways to refund securities which mature or will become callable between the years 1956 and 1962. Similar legislation was passed in 1935, 1938, 1944, 1947 and 1951. This bill is patterned on the bill passed in 1951.

The amount which will mature or become callable in the period mentioned is $200 million. The procedure, as honourable senators know, is that the Canadian National Railways, make temporary borrowings from the Government and issue securities therefor at such times as the official of the Bank of Canada and of the railway feel is most propitious.

I think the bill needs no further explanation.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Burchill, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS FINANCING AND GUARANTEE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. G. Percival Burchill moved the second reading of Bill 451, an Act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System during the calendar year 1955, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is to provide for financing by the Canadian National Railway Company in order to secure moneys needed for capital expenditures. A similar bill was passed in 1952, and this one is patterned on it.

The total expenditures, which include additions and betterments, branch line construction and new equipment, amount to $163,508,334, less amounts available from depreciation reserves, working capital and retirement of equipment totalling $47,509,334, leaving a balance to be found of $115,999,000. That amount represents, first, authorization to incur capital expenditures of $75,999,000 in the year 1955; and, secondly, it represents authority to discharge obligations incurred under this act which become due and payable after January 1, 1956; and to make capital expenditures prior to July 1, 1956, in the amount of $40 million.

In addition, the act authorizes the railway company to enter into contracts for new equipment and for general additions and betterments in the amount of $45,681,498, to make contracts for but payment for which will likely not be made within the next year or two.

Now, those things are what the bill does as far as financing is concerned. It also provides for the appointment of the auditors of the company for the year 1955. Honourable senators will recall that in previous years a separate bill was introduced for this purpose.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Who are the auditors?

Hon. Mr. Burchill: George A. Touche and Co.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Why was the practice changed, and the appointment of auditors included in a bill of this nature rather than in a separate bill as was done in former years?

Hon. Mr. Burchill: As this bill deals entirely with financing, it was felt that it was proper to include the appointment of the auditors in this bill.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Well, it took a long time to come to that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That is progress.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Slow, though.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I would like to ask the honourable senator from Northumberland (Hon. Mr. Burchill) what betterments and new equipment are covered by this bill.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: In reply to my honourable friend I would say that detailed information on that matter was given before the Railways and Shipping Committee of the other house by officials of the railway. The budget was approved by that committee, and it includes the amounts which I have just enumerated. I do not feel competent to discuss these items in detail or to answer the question fully. The information will be given by officials of the company when the bill is before a committee of this house.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Is anything included in this bill for the Conrad Hilton Hotel system?

Hon. Mr. Burchill: I am not in a position to answer that question.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, we have had in the past several bills similar to this one. In fact, I would say that this bill is practically identical with other bills that we have had in the past.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: In 1952.

Hon. Mr. Haig: The thing that I have always wondered about in connection with these bills is this: the Canadian National Railways management comes before the Government and asks for certain things, and the Government agrees to write off certain amounts. Last session a bill for this purpose was passed by the House of Commons and subsequently came to our house, and after a long examination of the railway officials who appeared before our committee we agreed to write off a very large indebtedness. I remember distinctly asking Mr. Gordon, the President, this question: Will this be the end of the write-offs? He replied that as the country is now in a prosperous condition he could see no necessity for further write-off on account of deficits. However, I am not going into detail on that now. I do not know what has happened this year to bring about a deficit—only the railway people can answer that question.

Honourable senators, when voting money for the Canadian National Railways in these bills I have never been quite sure what has become of the money through the years. I am not questioning whether it is honestly expended. I know George A. Touche & Company, the company's auditors. They are a well-known English firm which does a large auditing business in all the large cities of Canada. They have been auditing the railway's books throughout the years, and they have an A-1 reputation. I have no qualms on that score. But what I am thinking about is whether the provisions for depreciation have been carried through the books so as to show the true situation. What I want to know is if there is any capital loss in these accounts from time to time that does not show in the current loss, and I want to hear the auditors' answer to that question when they appear before our committee.

Honourable senators, I think this bill should be considered by the Banking and Commerce Committee. True, other railway bills have been referred to the Committee on Transport and Communications, but they were straight railroad bills. This being a finance bill, I think it should be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee. I would like the management of the company to be able to answer the question that I have just posed. I want to know if all the provisions for depreciation have been properly taken into the accounts throughout the years or if these have just been allowed to disappear. If we are to keep putting in new capital we have to know what becomes of it. At the present time there is nothing to show what happens to the old capital, and that is why I would like to get an answer to my question.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: I have no answer to that, but I should like to put on the record the statement that this bill is not one covering debt financing. It is concerned with new financing.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I know that.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: There is something else that I would like to put on the record. For the purpose of additions and betterments, excluding equipment, $44,758,334 is required; for branch line construction, $12,160,000; for new equipment, $60,897,000; for acquisition of securities, $5,693,000; for capital expenditures January 1, 1956 to June 30, 1956, incurred prior to January 1, 1956, $40 million. That adds up to $163,508,334.

From that figure we have to deduct the amounts my honourable friend is talking about; amount available from depreciation reserves, $12,394,000; retirement of equipment, which is another way of describing depreciation reserves—and this, I may say, is a set-up of their books that I just do not understand—$20,115,334; and working capital available for capital expenditures, $15 million. These items total $47,509,334 which, as I say, is deductible from the required amount of $163,508,334, leaving a balance of $115,999,000, which is the net amount required for capital expenditures.

Hon. Mr. Haig: May I be permitted to ask the honourable gentleman another question? I do not quite understand the full import of the figures that he just read, but I will illustrate what I mean by the write-offs. This year the Canadian National Railways sold four hotels: one at Brandon, Manitoba, one at Minaki, Ontario, one at Pictou, Nova Scotia, and one at Port Arthur, Ontario. Those hotels stood on the books at roughly $3,250,000. That was the original cost. They were sold for about $950,000, and it was said that the difference was the write-off. Now, what I want to know is whether that write-off has been charged during the years as an expense or not, because as far as I can see there is no way to trace it as a loss.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: It was set up as a reserve to take care of that particular item.

Hon. Mr. Haig: But what became of the reserve when this sale took place? I think it was lost.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: That amount would naturally go into the working capital.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Still, I think the reserve was lost. In cases where equipment, engines or buildings are sold, what happens to the reserve? The original cost was $3,250,000. How was the write-off taken care of when new equipment was put in its place? Did it disappear?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It disappears when it becomes cash, and so does the reserve. The money thus received becomes cash and goes into the account.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I want to be sure of that.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, I was pleased to hear that the sponsor of this bill intends to move that it be referred to the Committee on Transport and Communications. I say so because of the continuity of the various Canadian National Railyways bills, and in order that the committee may be informed of not only the operational methods but the finances of the Canadian National Railways.

May I also say a word about the railway equipment? It will be recalled that on various occasions I have criticized the Canadian National Railways for the poor type of rolling stock which was running from Halifax to Montreal. Today we are very proud indeed of the equipment, as represented by the Ocean Limited, which runs between Halifax and Montreal, and not only are we pleased with this crack Atlantic train, but we are well satisfied with the equipment on trains running to Sydney, on the Scotian as well as the Maritime Express. All three trains have new, and, in the case of the Ocean Limited, exceptionally fine equipment. The honourable senator from King's (Hon. Mr. McDonald), who frequently travels between Halifax and Montreal, will, I am sure, agree with me when I say that we are very fortunate to have rolling stock of this high quality. To the management of the Canadian National Railways I express appreciation for what they have done, and the hope that they will continue their efforts to furnish the Maritime Express with the same kind of equipment which is provided on the Ocean Limited.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Burchill, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck for the second reading of Bill 328, an Act respecting unemployment insurance.

Hon. Muriel McQ. Fergusson: Honourable senators, I should like first to congratulate the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) upon the very clear and comprehensive explanation of this bill which he gave yesterday. We realize that it could not have been done so well unless it had been preceded by a great deal of intensive work. Even in the short time that I have had the privilege of sitting in this chamber I have come to realize that we can always expect very clear explanations, and excellent and accurate information, from the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity.

Hon. Senators: Hear. hear.

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: This general revision —the first since the Unemployment Insurance Act was passed in 1940, has done a great deal to clarify the legislation. The re-arrangement of the various sections in their proper sequence will make the law more readily understood by employees and employers and should simplify the administration. The Department of Labour is to be congratulated on the clear, well-drafted and easily understood legislation which has been presented in this bill. However, there is one provision to which I object, and which many women had hoped would be dropped from the act at this time of its revision.

The section to which I refer is 67 1(c)(iv), which provides that the commission with the approval of the Governor in Council, may make regulations imposing additional conditions and terms with regard to contributions and benefits in relation to persons who are married women.

The honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity mentioned that the act had been amended five times since it was passed, and he referred to the changes which had been brought about by some of the amendments. He did not mention that among the amendments passed in 1950 was the provision that special regulations may be made regarding married women. Under the authority of this amendment, later in the same year, section 5(a) of the regulations was passed. It provides that women, during the two years immediately following marriage, and before receiving benefits, must fulfil requirements additional to those required of any other employees. Generally, under this regulation, a married woman, no matter how many benefits she may have acquired through her contributions, will be disqualified from receiving unemployment insurance benefit for the period of two years following her marriage if she was unemployed at the date of marriage, or unless she has worked for sixty days following her first separation from work after her marriage.

Honourable senators, this last clause is considered by many as positively iniquitous, and the committee of the other house which studied the bill recommended that the commission study it with a view to eliminating it.

Hon. Mr. Reid: May I ask what section is being referred to?

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: It is regulation 5(a), and section 67(1)(c)(iv) of the act.

Honourable senators, this legislation is rank discrimination. If, as was stated by the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity, this is an insurance scheme, it should be carried on as a business and business practices should be followed.

Is there any insurance company in Canada or elsewhere that would dare to accept premiums from a woman client, and when she becomes eligible for payment refuse to pay on the ground that she has been married? No woman client would buy such insurance and no insurance company would consider offering it. However, unfortunately in the case of the unemployment insurance, the woman has no choice but to pay the premiums, as unemployment insurance is compulsory.

Ever since the passing of these regulations, in 1950, women and women's organizations throughout Canada have protested against this legislation on the ground that it is discriminatory legislation aimed against one class of employees, namely married women. From knowledge gained through contacts with women's organizations, I believe that many representations have been made to the Department of Labour asking for the elimination of this regulation, and since my appointment to this honourable house many representations have been made to me on this point. I feel, in fairness to women, married or single—for some of those now single may eventually be in the other classification—that these protests should be brought to the attention of this house.

According to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics the number of insured persons in the labour force as of April 1, 1954, was 3,317,000, and the number of women in the insured labour force was 849,152, which is about one quarter of the total insured labour force. The number of single women in that force was 561,289, and the number of married women was 287,863.

In a statement prepared by the commission and presented and read before the committee of the other house which was considering this bill, it was stated that the commission does not consider that the regulation discriminates against married women as a class. This may be the opinion of the commission, but it is not the opinion held by a great number of women. The very fact that there is legislation which does disqualify married women, who but for their marriage are eligible for benefits, is discrimination, and no opinions on the matter, whether held by the commission or anyone else, can alter that fact.

The prepared statement to which I have referred sets out individual cases of abuses of the act by married women, and I know that sometimes these do occur. I am of the opinion, because of what I have learned, that these abuses still occur, and that therefore the passing of this discriminatory legislation in 1950, which works hardship on many married women who are bona fide applicants, apparently did not have the desired effect and is not the proper way to put a stop to such abuses. If it had done so I might be willing to agree that in this case the end justifies the means, even though I disapprove of the means. In any event, I think quoting such examples is not fair, for I am sure that the files of the commission contain many cases that show abuse of the act by others than married women.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: Although other classes have abused the act they are not picked out for special discriminatory legislation. I have heard many stories of male applicants who have abused the regulations.

Honourable senators, I believe that another approach would do much more to eliminate abuse of the act both by male and female employees. This is a comparatively new act based on a comparatively new social concept, a combination of insurance and social legislation. I believe it savours of both of these and that it is a part of the general trend in legislation of these days towards the command of Christ to "Bear ye one another's burdens". It is intended to provide help for those who become in need through unemployment. Many employees do not understand the basic principle of insurance which underlies the act. No doubt some explanation is now given in schools in social studies, but many in the labour force did not learn this in their school days because there was no such legislation then. Many do not see the difference between contributions to the Unemployment Insurance Fund and deposits in a bank where one expects and has a right to expect to take out at least as much as one has put in. It has not been made clear enough to the public generally that unemployment insurance should be regarded in the same light as fire or automobile insurance, which gives protection in time of need, and that the protection is what one pays for. If one is fortunate enough not to need the protection, in those cases one certainly does not expect a return of premiums paid.

Abuses of the Unemployment Insurance Act are perpetrated by unthinking persons who do not understand the legislation and they are tolerated by an uninformed public. It is my belief that our Canadian people, male and female are basically honest, and if they understand the principle of this act they will not try to evade the regulations or take unfair advantage which would tend to deplete the fund to the disadvantage of those properly entitled to protection, and, perhaps to their own disadvantage at a later date; nor would an informed public tolerate such abuses.

My belief is strengthened when I recall the experiences of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board during World War II. At that time much more was spent by the Government on educating the public regarding regulations and the need for them than was spent on enforcement of the regulations. This education was carried on through intensive explanatory work, and, when it was understood, the people co-operated and enforcement was comparatively simple. Those who did not co-operate were generally considered unpatriotic, and public sentiment against them prevented infractions of the regulations.

Similar intensive and aggressive educational work regarding unemployment insurance through the Department of Labour, labour unions, men's and women's organizations, schools and employers, would bring about a better understanding of the basic principles of unemployment insurance. Such understanding would build up a new public attitude under which those who scheme to evade the regulations would not be considered as smart, but as chisellers and as unsocial. I think this would accomplish a great deal more than discriminatory legislation against certain classes, such as that against married women.

In view of the large number of employed women in the labour force who contribute to unemployment insurance—which, I would remind honourable senators, in April 1954 was about one-quarter of the force insured—it is surely only reasonable to expect that there should be a woman on the Unemployment Insurance Commission and on the Advisory Committee. The honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity mentioned these, and he also referred to the National Employment Committee. I am glad to say that a woman is already serving on that committee, and that there are women on the Regional and Local Advisory Committees, which were set up under section 99 of the present act and will be under section 21 of the bill. Appointments to the commission and the advisory committee were recommended by the committee of the other house which studied this bill, and I earnestly request that the committee of this house which studies this bill will make similar recommendations.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: If the honourable senator speaks now, he will close the debate.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I have very little to add to the long and tedious speech I made yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Not tedious.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Well, I thought it was pretty long. I thank the honourable senator from Fredericton (Hon. Mrs. Fergusson) for her kind references to my remarks, and I wish to compliment her on the excellent speech she has just delivered. I am sure she has a good deal of knowledge of the subject-matter and of the act. She spoke about discrimination against women, who make up one-quarter of the working force insured under the act. I think I speak for all male members of this house when I say that there is no intention on our part, at all events, to discriminate unjustly against women. It is possible to discriminate justly as well as unjustly—to discriminate in favour of women as well as against them.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Would that be justly or unjustly?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I think it would be very just to discriminate in their favour.

The honourable senator from Fredericton has, I think, admitted that there is need for care in the handling of this act and with respect to the large sums of money paid out on behalf of both men and women. I agree with her that both men and women are basically honest. I remember a sign put up, in a broker's office, I think, which read, "All men are honest, but keep your hand on your pocket." One does not need to consider everybody a cheat and a liar because one takes due precautions to protect one's property and rights and interests.

In this particular instance, the only reason I know for special references to women is the experience of the commission in dealing with women who enter into the holy bonds of matrimony and then apply to the commission for the unholy purpose of getting money to which they are not entitled. Women have been known to get married and at the same time make claims upon the Unemployment Insurance fund on the ground of unemployment—and certainly marriage is not unemployment. I understand that a great deal of that deception has been practised, and it may have resulted in the necessity for special regulations. The regulations that have been in existence up to the present time are now being extensively revised, and a lot of work is being spent on that task. Recommendations similar to those made by the honourable senator from Fredericton this afternoon, as well as those made by the Industrial Relations Committee of the House of Commons after studying the bill, will be seriously considered by the commissioners, and I expect those recommendations will be given effect to in the new regulations.

If this bill receives second reading, I shall move that it be referred to the Standing Committee on Immigration and Labour; and I can assure the house that the members of the commission and officials will attend the meetings of the committee and may be questioned on points about the regulations now in existence, as well as those that it is proposed to put into existence after this bill has been passed. I am inclined to think that after the commissioners and officials have been heard, honourable senators will be fully satisfied that the discrimination against married women in the bill is not an unjust discrimination and that no injustice is intended against women as such.

I should like to concur in the suggestion of my honourable friend that there be a woman member of the commission. However, this house has not the appointment of the commissioners.

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: Could we not make that recommendation?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: There are now three very capable commissioners on the board, whose span of life shows no signs of terminating. It is unlikely that there will be a new appointment for some time. But I hope that those in authority will remember the suggestion made by the honourable senator from Fredericton, and that when appointments are being made consideration will be given to the right of the women of Canada, who comprise one quarter of the labour force, to be represented on the commission.

I have nothing further to say, honourable senators, except to thank you for the patience with which you listened to my explanation of the bill yesterday afternoon.

Hon. Mrs. Fergusson: Did I understand the honourable senator to say yesterday that one of the commissioners is now approaching seventy years of age?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes, but seventy is not old these days.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Not as far as senators are concerned.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I also mentioned that that particular member of the commission was carrying on with all his old-time vigour and keenness.

The motion was agreed to and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Roebuck, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Immigration and Labour.

The Senate adjourned until Monday, June 27, at 8 p.m.

APPENDIX

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON TRAFFIC IN NARCOTIC DRUGS

(Presented by Hon. Mr. Reid. See pp. 672-3.)

THURSDAY, June 23, 1955.

The Special Committee of the Senate on the Traffic in Narcotic Drugs in Canada begs leave to present the following as its final report.

PART I—GENERAL

On February 24, 1955, the following resolution was adopted in the Senate:

1. That a Special Committee of the Senate be appointed to inquire into and report upon the traffic in narcotic drugs in Canada and problems related thereto.

2. That the said Committee be composed of the Honourable Senators Baird, Burchill, Gershaw, Grant, Hayden, Hawkins, Hodges, Horner, Howden, Hugessen, Leger, McIntyre, Quinn, Reid, Stambaugh, Turgeon, Vaillancourt, Veniot and Woodrow.

3. That the committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records.

4. That the committee be instructed to report to the house from time to time its findings, together with such recommendations as it may see fit to make.

On March 2, 1955, the following motion was passed, namely, that the committee be authorized to print 800 copies in English and 200 in French, of the proceedings, and that Rule No. 100 be suspended in relation to the said printing.

On March 2, 1955, it was resolved that the Honourable Senator Reid be elected Chairman of the committee, and that a steering committee be appointed, the members of which shall be selected by the Chairman. It was further resolved that the quorum of the committee be reduced to seven members.

The original membership of the committee was changed on March 9 by the substitution of Honourable Senator Kinley for Honourable Senator McDonald, and on March 22 by adding to the committee Honourable Senators Beaubien, King and McKeen.

The composition of the committee was then, and has remained, as follows:

The Honourable Tom Reid, Chairman. The Honourable Senators: Baird, Beaubien, Burchill, Gershaw, Grant, Hayden, Hawkins, Hodges, Horner, Howden, Hugessen, King, Kinley, Leger, McIntyre, McKeen, Quinn, Reid, Stambaugh, Turgeon, Vaillancourt, Veniot, Woodrow. 23 members—Quorum 7.

The members of the steering committee are Honourable Senators Burchill, Gershaw, Hayden, Horner and Reid.

On March 9, 1955, the committee held a meeting, at which it was resolved to hear witnesses before the Easter adjournment, and it was further resolved that the committee recommend that it be empowered to retain the services of counsel, and the services of Mr. A. H. Lieff, Q.C., of Ottawa, were retained.

In order to cover all foreseeable phases of the inquiry the Chairman held numerous conferences with individuals and with the steering committee, when it was resolved that the scope of the inquiry be as comprehensive as possible. To this end the committee decided to hear evidence on all the ramifications of the drug problem including views of the addicts and of society in general. Because of the alarming proportions of the problem in British Columbia, and the amount of publicity given to that area of the problem it was resolved to hold sessions of the committee in the City of Vancouver. It was felt that by so doing the committee could bring before it all persons considered to be vitally interested and most closely concerned with the problem. Likewise an opportunity would be afforded to all others in British Columbia who wished to testify before the committee.

For similar reasons it was decided to hold sessions of the committee in the cities of Toronto and Montreal. By holding sessions in these three cities it was possible to have described, at first hand, the challenging character and extent of the problem and by so doing it was possible to conclude the sessions of the committee during the present session of Parliament.

It was also resolved to interview a number of addicts and to visit one or more institutions in which addicts were confined.

The investigation by the committee was directed to ascertaining the nature and extent of the narcotic drug problem in Canada and the gathering of such information as would enable the committee to recommend possible solutions to the problem and necessary changes in the law.

On March 15, 1955, the committee held its first public hearing at the city of Ottawa, and further public hearings were held at Ottawa on March 22, 30, May 11, 17, 20, 25, 27, 30 and June 7. Public hearings were held at Vancouver on April 18, 19 and 20, with hearings in camera on the 21st and 22nd. Public hearings were held at Toronto on May 20 and at Montreal on May 27.

These were the first occasions on which any committee of the Senate of Canada had ever held meetings in centres other than Ottawa.

Invitations to make representations to the committee were extended to Attorneys General and Ministers of Health of all provinces and with the exception of the province of British Columbia, all indicated they had no representations to make.

Similar invitations were sent to the Mayors of the cities of Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Calgary, Edmonton, Vancouver and Victoria. Replies in the negative were received from Winnipeg, Calgary and Victoria.

The committee held seventeen meetings all of which, with the exception of two, were open to the public. The two closed meetings were devoted entirely to hearing the representations of narcotic drug addicts, at the R.C.M.P. Barracks in Vancouver, and at Oakalla Prison Farm in Burnaby, British Columbia. Twenty-one addicts and relatives or friends of addicts were heard at the R.C.M.P. Barracks, and at Oakalla Prison Farm Warden Christie convened a meeting of some 150 addicts in the chapel of the prison. During the latter meeting addicts made representations to the whole committee.

Portions of several committee meetings were closed to the public and were devoted exclusively to matters of procedure and the preparation of the committee report.

A request was made to have the sessions held in Vancouver televised. It was deemed advisable, however, not to grant such request.

Evidence was adduced from government sources, including federal, provincial, and municipal authorities; from organizations and individuals; a list and classification of the witnesses is set out in Schedule 1 to this report. Representations in the form of briefs, submissions and letters were received from a number of individuals and organizations. All of these representations were carefully considered and analyzed.

Valuable assistance was rendered to the committee by the Mayors and municipal administrations of the cities of Vancouver, Toronto, and Montreal and by the Honourable R. W. Bonner, Q.C., Attorney-General of British Columbia. Special mention should be made of valuable assistance rendered by Mr. John A. Hinds, Assistant Chief Clerk of Committees, and Mr. Robert E. Curran, Q.C., Counsel for the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Definition of Drug Addiction

For the purposes of the inquiry the committee decided to adopt the definition of drug addiction approved by World Health Organization of the United Nations. It is as follows:

Drug addiction is a state of periodic or chronic intoxication, detrimental to the individual and to society, produced by the repeated consumption of a drug (natural or synthetic). Its characteristics include:

1. An overpowering desire or need (compulsion) to continue taking the drug and to obtain it by any means;
2. A tendency to increase the dose;
3. A physical (psychological) and sometimes a physical dependence on the effects of the drug.

Legislation

The Canadian legislation dealing with narcotic drugs is contained in the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act, R.S.C. 1952, C. 201, as amended by R.S.C. 1952, C. 325, S. 73, 1953-54, C. 38, and the regulations thereunder, (as made and established by Order in Council P.C. 1954-1212, effective September 15, 1954).

The purpose of the legislation is, firstly, to make narcotic drugs available for medical and scientific purposes through trade and professional channels, and secondly the enforcement side.

By administrative arrangement the R.C.M.P. are responsible for the enforcement on the criminal side of the legislation, and the Department of National Health and Welfare, Division of Narcotic Control, is concerned with the importation and legal distribution of drugs in Canada. The officers of the Department of National Health and Welfare work closely with the R.C.M.P.

The committee desires to express its appreciation to the Honourable Paul Martin, Minister of National Health and Welfare, for his assistance in outlining to the committee the narcotic drug problem in Canada and for the co-operation given by him and by the officers of his department.

The committee was favourably impressed with the efficiency of the administration of the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act by the Division of Narcotic Control of the Department of National Health and Welfare, headed by Mr. K. C. Hossick.

The committee would also like to pay tribute to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for the efficient manner in which they assist in the enforcement of the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act and for their co-operation and assistance to the committee.

International Control

Canada has played an important role in international control and is a signatory to all international conventions designed to limit to medical and scientific uses narcotic substances. The conventions, agreements and protocols under which Canada participates in international control are listed in the evidence. Canadian legislation conforms in all respects with the requirements of the conventions and our international commitments, and from the evidence the committee concurs with the statement of the Minister of National Health and Welfare that the Canadian legislation is as realistic and effective as the legislation of any country. Canada, as a member of the United Nations, has, in keeping with other countries, members of the United Nations organization, agreed to make the legal importations of heroin illegal. The prohibition of heroin came into effect in Canada January 1, 1955.

Traffic

The evidence indicates that while Canada maintains excellent domestic control of licit narcotic drugs, international controls have not completely stopped the illicit flow of drugs into Canada.

The availability of drugs and the ease with which quantities of heroin can be secreted and transported makes it almost impossible to completely prevent smuggling of narcotic drugs into Canada across the long Canadian border. Some of the difficulties in denying entrance to illicit drugs have been explained to the committee by officers of the R.C.M.P. and the evidence of Assistant Commissioner G. B. McClellan and Inspector J. J. Atherton is of special interest. It is the opinion of the committee there exists in Canada an illicit drug traffic of which, at the present time, about one half is centred in British Columbia.

The illicit traffic seems to follow a complicated but well defined pattern. The traffic commences with the trafficker-importer who sells to a trafficker-wholesaler, who in turn sells to a trafficker-distributer. This is the hierarchy of the traffic and few if any of this class of distributer are addicts. The distributer then sells to:

1. The peddler or pusher who is not an addict

2. The peddler or pusher who is an addict and who sells drugs to other addicts.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Commissioner of the R.C.M.P. pointed out the extent of profit in the illicit drug trade. By way of illustration, an ounce of heroin has a legal value of approximately $12. An ounce contains 437½ grains, an average dose being ¼ grain, or a total of 1750 doses to the ounce. Almost invariably the drug will be heavily diluted or adulterated, thus multiplying 1750 doses to a much greater number. With a dose or capsule selling for $3 to $5 in Vancouver, and as high as $20 in Edmonton, the profits are truly enormous.

The profit motive needs no further comment. It is significant therefore that much of the evidence heard by the Committee urged the elimination of the profit motive in the sale of drugs.

Suggestions from witnesses for the accomplishment of this objective ranged from that of the legal supply of free drugs to the total segregation of all criminal addicts and the provision of the death penalty for important traffickers.

Extent of Addiction

Addicts in Canada have been classified as medical, professional and criminal. The latter has been defined in Canada as one who purchases his supply of drugs in the illicit market. It is this group that has given cause for the greatest concern.

Appendices A. to C. to the evidence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare respectively set forth a breakdown of the total addict population in Canada by classes; the criminal addict population by sex and age groups, and by occupation.

These figures indicate that at the present time there are in Canada 515 medical addicts, 333 professional addicts and 2,364 criminal addicts, totalling 3,212. Of the 2,364 criminal addicts, 1,101 are located in British Columbia.

Commissioner Nicholson, in discussing the results of a study made of 2,009 criminal addicts, stated that only 341 of this number were first convicted under the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act, 1,220 were first convicted first for some other offence, and the balance of 478 were addicts with criminal records other than narcotic drug convictions. As was explained by the Commissioner, of the 2,009 cases studied, 1,668 involved people who were very probably criminals before they were addicts.

The committee is satisfied that there is no juvenile or teenage addiction problem in Canada. Of 2,364 known criminal addicts only twenty-six are under the age of twenty. These were not attending school when they became involved in the drug traffic and were already known to the police for juvenile delinquency.

Drugs of Addiction

The Minister of National Health and Welfare put on the record the drugs of addiction. "Narcotic drugs" are listed in the schedule to the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act. Reference to the schedule at the end of the act will give the schedule of drugs which the department regards as problems. The drugs so listed come either from natural sources or synthetic.

The natural drugs come from opium, coca leaf or cannabis sativa commonly called hemp or marihuana. Opium produces morphine, heroin and codeine the principal drugs in use. Coca leaf produces cocaine and hemp produces cannabis sativa. Of all these drugs heroin is the one that is the most commonly employed for addiction in Canada.

Marihuana is not a drug commonly used for addiction in Canada, but it is used in the United States and also in the United Kingdom by addicts.

No problem exists in Canada at present in regard to this particular drug. A few isolated seizures have been made but these have been from visitors to this country or in one or two instances from Canadians who have developed the addiction while being in other countries.

The question of barbiturates was discussed. They are not narcotic drugs. They are covered in so far as use is concerned under the Food and Drugs Act.

The committee is of the opinion that the present strict control of these drugs should be continued and that a careful watch be kept of any unwarranted increase in their use, in order to prevent the abuse of such barbiturates.

Enforcement

The R.C.M.P. maintains drug squads at those centres where attention is indicated, reinforced as necessary by men from general duty and other specialist details. Most major municipal police forces maintain special Narcotic Drug Squads which work closely with the R.C.M.P. The R.C.M.P. concentrates particularly on the investigation of traffickers.

The committee finds that police co-operation is relatively good in most cities of Canada. Much of the co-operation depends on the personalities involved. Continued co-operation at all levels of enforcement by all police bodies with the R.C.M.P. appears to be essential and, where necessary, directives to this effect are urged.

The statement of Vancouver Chief of Police, Walter Mulligan, that sixty percent of the major crimes in Vancouver could be traced to narcotic drugs was contradicted by other responsible witnesses who testified that drug addicts seldom, if ever, engage in major or violent crime.

The statement made that shoplifting by addicts was responsible for most of the thefts from stores in Vancouver, amounting, it was stated, to millions of dollars annually, was not borne out by the evidence. The Hudson's Bay Company, a large department store chain, which operates six stores in Western Canada, advised the committee that they have no way of knowing the exact amount of their losses due to actual shoplifting, but they did report that stock shortages in Vancouver due to clerical errors, internal theft, as well as shoplifting, are not any higher than the average pertaining in their six stores.

Treatment Proposals

Suggestions for treatment ranged all the way from the legal supply of drugs to the total segregation of all criminal addicts. The committee considered proposals to alleviate the drug problem that was submitted to it. These proposals included such matters as (a) the removal and segregation of all convicted addicts to an institution, far removed from any area of general population, preferably on an island, for long periods of time, coupled with some system of parole, where rehabilitation was indicated; (b) establishment of a treatment centre far removed from cities, with provision for compulsory confinement or isolation and control of an addict over a number of years, such an institution should emphasize mental care, complete rehabilitation and training for useful occupation; (c) provision for withdrawal treatment in general hospitals, establishment of a rehabilitation residence for men, foster home care for women; (d) narcotic clinics; (e) the British system; (f) community action; (g) education; (h) group therapy, such as is carried on by Alcoholics Anonymous and Narcotics Anonymous.

The committee in making special reference to certain of these proposals also commends for careful study the evidence of those witnesses who spoke on the question of the treatment of drug addicts.

Narcotic Clinics

The committee heard considerable evidence with respect to narcotic clinics and ambulatory treatment. The vast preponderance of responsible evidence on this subject, both oral and written, leads the committee to conclude that the establishment of such clinics or the provision of any other legalized supply of drugs for the purpose merely of supporting addiction would be a retrograde step. The committee is therefore strongly of the opinion that the narcotic drug problem cannot be solved by the creation of government clinics where addicts could obtain their supplies.

The committee unanimously rejects any proposal designed to provide legal supplies of drugs to criminal addicts. The committee was supported in this decision by evidence that the Narcotic Drug Commission of the United Nations at its tenth session has resolved that "in the treatment of drug addiction methods of ambulatory treatment (including the so-called clinic method) are not advisable."

British System

The committee heard frequent reference to the so-called "British System" and various witnesses urged its adoption in Canada. Consequently the committee arranged to obtain firsthand information about the law pertaining to narcotic drugs in the United Kingdom. It was privileged to hear a comprehensive statement from J. H. Walker, United Kingdom Delegate to the United Nations Narcotic Commission. Mr. Walker explained the law relating to dangerous drugs in detail. He stated that dangerous (narcotic) drugs in the United Kingdom are subject to a wide degree of control of the exacting standards demanded by the international agreements to which the United Kingdom, in common with Canada, is a party. He also told the committee that the indiscriminate administration of narcotic drugs to addicts is not now, and never has been, a feature of United Kingdom policy. A perusal of Mr. Walker's evidence would be most valuable to anyone interested in the British system.

The committee was also privileged to hear evidence on this subject from Dr. A. W. MacLeod, Assistant Director, Montreal Hygiene Institute and Assistant Professor of Psychiatry, McGill University. Dr. MacLeod had experience in the treatment of drug addicts in Britain gained while he was assistant director of an in-patient psychiatric unit attached to one of the training hospitals at London University. He stated that the dangerous drug inspectorate of the British Home Office was strongly opposed to any line of action that would allow a known addict to continue his addiction.

From the evidence it appears that there never has been a serious drug problem in the United Kingdom, and that the situation there is not comparable with that of Canada.

French System

The committee regrets that Mr. Charles Vaille, the Chairman of the United Nations Narcotic Commission and the French delegate to that commission, was unable to appear before the committee. His co-operation in submitting a brief in explanation of the French System is greatly appreciated.

Education

The committee considered the question of education against the use of narcotic drugs and is of the opinion that while educational programs may usefully be established for professional groups, for parent-teacher associations, and for adult groups generally, such programs should not be used where they would arouse undue curiosity on the part of impressionable persons or those of tender years. The committee's view is supported by the Narcotic Committee of the United Nations who recommended against any such educational program. Lecture material especially prepared by the Division of Narcotic Control and containing information respecting the economic and social factors of drug addiction has been presented regularly to medical and pharmaceutical associations, schools of nursing, and undergraduate societies in colleges of medicine, pharmacy and nursing. This form of education should be continued.

The committee recommends the improvement and expansion of mental health programs in our schools in the hope that variations from acceptable behaviour may be detected and treated before the opportunity for addiction to drugs has been presented.

Training Personnel

The committee was gratified to hear evidence with respect to the high quality of narcotic drug research carried on by the Department of National Health and Welfare. Some of such research has attracted international attention. It may well be that Canada may become a narcotic drug research centre for students from other countries.

The committee is of the opinion that the Government of Canada consider the possibility of making available bursaries or scholarships for the purpose of training medical, probation and rehabilitation personnel at institutions wherever such training is available.

Narcotics Anonymous and Alcoholics Anonymous

The committee heard evidence that group therapy was of considerable advantage in the treatment of drug addicts. Two organizations which provide opportunities for group therapy are Alcoholics Anonymous and Narcotics Anonymous. Because there are many common factors in drug addiction as well as in alcoholism, both Alcoholics Anonymous and Narcotics Anonymous hold some promise for the rehabilitation of drug addicts. Both of these organizations aim to develop in the individual a desire to be cured.

Alcoholics Anonymous has been operating with commendable success for some time and beginnings have been made to establish chapters of Narcotics Anonymous. Of particular interest in this connection was the evidence of Dr. A. W. MacLeod of the John Howard Society of the Province of Quebec, and Dr. L. P. Gendreau, Deputy Commissioner of Penitentiaries.

One of the difficulties encountered in the establishment of Narcotics Anonymous was the difficulty in finding a sufficient number of addicts who were abstinent from the use of drugs for a sufficient length of time to provide a nucleus for successful group therapy. The committee desires to encourage those engaged in this work and to express the hope that their efforts will meet with success.

Community Action

Any successful program for the prevention and treatment of drug addiction will require concerted community social action to remove from our cities those areas in which drugs are available, to provide adequate opportunity for youth and the emotional social atmosphere which follows general rehabilitation efforts on behalf of treated drug addicts. There is an urgent need for communities to make concerted all-out efforts to eradicate conditions that breed drug addiction.

By the same token such groups as P.T.A., church groups, welfare councils, schools, hospitals, police, recreational bodies and employers and the public generally, will need to use their joint and several skills to readjust the lives of former addicts in order to again fit them into an ordered society. The importance of this is emphasized in the recommendations that are made in this report for a treatment program.

Research in British Columbia

The committee took special notice of the research now being carried on at the University of British Columbia, under the direction of Dr. Geo. H. Stevenson. The committee wishes to express its thanks to Dr. Stevenson for his efforts and for much important information given to the committee on the subject of narcotic drug addiction.

PART 2

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Objectives

A solution of the narcotic drug problem involves the elimination of drug addiction, the suppression of the drug traffic and the prevention of an increase in the drug addict population.

Involved in these objectives is, of course, the protection of society at large against the evils of narcotic drugs.

Size of Problem

As previously stated, the total known drug addict population in Canada is 3,212, of whom 2,364 are criminal addicts. Of the 2,364 approximately one-half are located in the city of Vancouver. The city of Montreal which is the largest city in Canada, has, a total criminal addict population of under 200 and the city of Toronto an addict population of under 400 with, according to the evidence, a large number of these being inactive or in other words as not having recently come to the attention of the enforcement authorities.

Pattern of Drug Addiction

The committee heard evidence from many expert and qualified witnesses concerning the kind of people who make up the criminal addict population of Canada, something of their background and, in addition, the committee saw a large number of these people. Their sordid pattern of development shows a considerable degree of similarity.

There is frequently evidence of broken homes, poor environment, lack of parental control and discipline, and the absence of religious training. This background leads to social deviation, juvenile delinquency, crime and eventually to drug addiction through association with other drug addicts.

The evidence of medical authorities was to the effect that drug addiction is not a disease in itself. It is a symptom or manifestation of character weaknesses or personality defects in the individual. The addict is usually an emotionally insecure and unstable person who derives support from narcotic drugs.

The committee was gravely concerned to learn that relatively few cases could be authenticated where drug addicts, while out of custody, had been successful is abstaining from the use of drugs for any lengthy period of time.

The complications and difficulties in the successful treatment of drug addiction, having regard to the pattern of development of the addict and his almost invariable criminal tendencies, cannot be too heavily stressed.

Jurisdictional Responsibilities

The committee desires to emphasize that the solution of the problem of addiction, which of itself is of great complexity, is further complicated by the division of federal and provincial constitutional responsibilities.

In viewing the problem, it is necessary to distinguish the measures which the federal government can properly undertake by its legislation and the measures which constitutionally are of provincial concern.

The suppression of the illicit distribution and use of drugs is within the responsibility of the federal Government. This, amongst other things, is the aim and purpose of the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act which provides for the legal distribution and use of drugs and the protection of society against the evils of the drug traffic and drug addiction.

The treatment of illness is a matter which comes within the responsibility of provincial authorities as, for example, mental illness and tuberculosis. Drug addiction is considered by medical and social authorities to be a form of illness and the treatment of it as such is likewise within the jurisdictional responsibility of the provinces and of the communities therein.

A number of the provinces have recognized this responsibility in terms of special legislation for the treatment of drug addiction. The Provinces of Manitoba and Nova Scotia, as far back as the middle twenties, enacted special legislation entitled "The Narcotic Drug Addicts Act". The Province of Ontario has included in its Mental Hospitals Act and the Province of New Brunswick in its Provincial Hospital Act, provision for the committal and treatment of drug addicts. The Province of British Columbia, however, where the incidence of drug addiction is the highest, has no legislation in this regard and it was stated to the committee that under the general hospital insurance plan in that province drug addiction was not a condition for which hospital treatment was authorized.

None of the provinces in Canada, however, have provided special institutional treatment facilities for drug addiction as such.

Situation in Vancouver, Montreal and Toronto

The addict population in the city of Vancouver was estimated to be from 1,100 to 1,500 and of this number slightly in excess of 300 are currently in jail or penitentiary. The remaining addicts at large in the city, according to the evidence, must purchase drugs once or more daily and in order to obtain the funds to do so engage in petty crime, such as shoplifting, thievery and, in the case of female addicts, in prostitution. These addicts have no gainful employment and support their addiction by vice and petty crime. They must, therefore, violate daily not only the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act in their illegal purchase and possession of drugs, but also the Criminal Code of Canada.

The committee could not help but be disturbed by this large concentration of drug addicts and the apparent freedom with which they are able to congregate in the heart of the city of Vancouver. These people are known to engage in crime, including prostitution, and are without gainful employment of any kind. The committee is not able to understand why the provisions of the Criminal Code dealing with vagrancy, prostitution and living off the avails of prostitution cannot be more effectively invoked to uproot and break up this concentration.

The committee, in emphasizing this aspect of the situation, points out that the enforcement of the Criminal Code in the city of Vancouver is not a responsibility of the R.C.M.P., but is wholly a responsibility of the city police authorities.

The R.C.M.P. are concerned with the enforcement of the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act and in this connection concentrate essentially on the apprehension and conviction of drug traffickers.

The drug addict population, as already pointed out, are primarily criminal, engaged in crime daily apart from the violations of the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act. These people are, therefore, an enforcement responsibility of the city and the municipal authorities and a solution of the problem which they present requires much more than the enforcement of the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act. It requires vigorous police and community action if this evil social condition is to be successfully removed.

In contrast to the situation in the city of Vancouver, the committee was impressed with the comparable drug situation in the cities of Montreal and Toronto. In both of these cities the authorities now report a drug situation of relatively small proportions and one which is apparently under fairly good control.

The committee is of the opinion that more vigorous effective enforcement of all pertinent law holds the answer to much of the problem in the city of Vancouver.

Treatment of Addiction a Provincial Responsibility

After a most careful and exhaustive examination of the evidence and of all the factors involved in treatment, the committee is strongly of the opinion that the recognition of drug addiction as a treatment responsibility, with the provision of facilities therefor by provincial authorities, is long overdue.

The committee in pointing out the responsibility of provincial authorities for treatment, does not minimize the difficulties that are presented nor the fact that a great number of drug addicts offer little or no promise for successful treatment. These difficulties would not in the opinion of the committee justify the continued failure to provide treatment procedures and facilities.

The drug problem in Canada is essentially confined to the three provinces of Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia, of which the Province of British Columbia has the largest concentration of drug addicts and, therefore, the greatest problem. As was pointed out, there is no legislation nor are there facilities in that province for the treatment of drug addiction.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare in his statement to the committee pointed out that he had gone on record with all of the provinces of Canada in drawing attention to the distinction between federal and provincial responsibilities in the matter of the drug problem. He pointed out that the federal Government had offered to assist in any way that it could, within the limits of its authority and responsibility, in helping to find a solution to the problem of drug addiction.

As evidence of interest in the problem, Mr. Martin stated to the committee that under date of December 3, 1954, he had offered to consider the availability to the Province of British Columbia of the federal Quarantine Station at William Head on Vancouver Island for use by the province as a treatment centre.

He also indicated to the provincial authorities in making such offer that the federal government would be prepared under the National Health Program to see whether or not financial assistance might be given to the renovation of such premises to make them more suitable for use as a treatment centre. No evidence was given to the committee as to whether the offer was acceptable to the province.

The committee makes specific reference to this proposal, because it is apparent that treatment of drug addiction, insofar as the treatment of a drug addict can be effective, depends upon the acceptance by provincial authorities, and particularly the Province of British Columbia, of responsibility for treatment with the provision of whatever facilities and legislative measures are required in that connection.

The evidence of many witnesses recommended the compulsory segregation and isolation of all addicts for long periods of time for the purpose of treatment and possible rehabilitation.

By using its constitutional powers, any province could pass the necessary legislation providing for the committal on a compulsory or voluntary basis, of drug addicts to an appropriate treatment institution in the same manner as is being done now for those in need of treatment for a mental condition.

In considering the various suggestions for treatment, it will be appreciated that the majority of addicts not only have known criminal records, but have, as well, character disorders, or personality disturbances which will require institutional treatment. Evidence about proposed treatment indicated that such treatment should include humane, supported withdrawal, medical treatment, post-discharge control, including long-term probation, coupled with the right of immediate return to the institution in the event of relapse.

It was also submitted that if treatment cannot be provided for all addicts, an effort should be made to treat at least the young ones, or those whose prognosis is good. It appears necessary to segregate young addicts from older addicts.

In commenting upon the responsibility of provincial authorities for the treatment of drug addiction, the committee again stresses the need for community and public support of an addict who has undergone treatment and who desires to re-establish himself in society. It is apparent to the Committee that institutional treatment can do only so much for an addicted person.

The committee draws attention to the evidence of a number of witnesses who strongly advocated the need for follow-up and supervisory facilities for addicts who had undergone treatment, to prevent a return to drugs or to former bad associates or habits.

To make treatment a practical possibility for those addicts who may offer some promise, the committee would hope that provincial agencies, community agencies, voluntary agencies and the public generally, would do everything possible to assist in the acceptance into society of addicts who had been treated, including an opportunity of useful and gainful employment.

The committee, therefore, strongly recommends the provision of suitable treatment facilities for drug addicts, and recommends for careful study by provincial authorities the evidence of those witnesses who discussed treatment, and particularly that of Dr. Harris Isbell who is possibly one of the world's foremost authorities on the subject.

Federal Responsibility

As has been pointed out, the responsibility of the federal government by its legislation is limited to the legal distribution of narcotic drugs for medical and scientific purposes and the suppression of the illicit use and distribution of those drugs. These measures are necessary for the protection of society.

The committee points out that it is not within the constitutional authority of the federal government to assume responsibility for treatment of drug addicts nor to enact the kind of legislation necessary in that connection. This legislation would need to include the compulsory treatment of addiction, the legal supervision and control over the individual during treatment and the right of control of an individual following treatment to prevent his return to the use of drugs, former associations or habits. These are considered to be matters beyond the competence of the federal government.

According to the evidence of Dr. L. P. Gendreau, Deputy Commissioner of Penitentiaries, there are at the present time 369 criminal addicts in federal penitentiaries. These include both male and female criminal addicts.

It is pointed out that the kind of people who are sentenced to penitentiaries, for the most part, have a long and sordid record of crime behind them. These people are criminals from whom society is entitled to be protected. Their violations of the law coupled with their criminal backgrounds are such as to require their imprisonment for lengthy periods of time. It follows, therefore, that any possibility for treatment of addicts who are sentenced to penitentiaries will offer considerably less hope than would be the case of the early offender or the addict beginner. The best hope of successful treatment of a number of people who eventually come to the attention of the penitentiary authorities would seem to lie in early rehabilitative and corrective measures.

The committee appreciates the difficult problem presented by the kind of criminal addicts who are sentenced to penitentiaries. The committee, however, suggests that the penitentiary authorities might give further consideration to the particular problems presented by criminal addicts in terms of possible segregation, treatment including specialized training and rehabilitation and other measures necessary in view of the special problems which addiction superimposes.

Penalties for Trafficking

As already pointed out, the responsibility of the federal government is essentially concerned with the enforcement of the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act to eliminate the drug traffic and to prevent the spread of the contagion of addiction. It is felt by the committee that vigorous enforcement, more severe penalties and a realistic recognition by judicial and other authorities of the extent and nature of the evil will do much to reduce the incidence of drug addiction in Canada.

The committee notes with interest the evidence of Commissioner Harry J. Anslinger, Commissioner of Narcotics in the United States, before a Special Committee of the United States Senate wherein he pointed out that in areas where low sentences were imposed, the drug problem substantially increased and in areas where there was strict enforcement with heavy sentences the drug problem showed a commensurate decrease.

The Opium and Narcotic Drug Act provides penalties of up to fourteen years imprisonment for trafficking and for possession of drugs for the purpose of trafficking. The act, properly, does not draw a legal distinction between the addict-trafficker and the non-addict-trafficker. The elimination of trafficking in drugs is the goal of enforcement and the attainment of this goal is not assisted by artificial distinctions between motives for trafficking.

The committee heard considerable evidence regarding the heavy profits of the drug trafficker and various suggestions were advanced as to how this profit could be taken out of the traffic.

It is the considered opinion of the committee that the most effective way of taking the profit out of the drug traffic is by making all trafficking, in terms of penalties, a most hazardous and costly undertaking to the trafficker.

The non-addict-trafficker, who is sometimes referred to as the "higher up" must depend upon a large number of agents or distributors to peddle the drugs which he imports but with which he seldom comes into contact. The imposition of heavy compulsory minimum sentences for trafficking is suggested as a deterrent to these hireling peddlers or pushers of the "higher up". If the higher up is not able to find a ready supply of assistants to distribute drugs to the addict population the availability of drugs to addicts may be reduced to a possible minimum.

The committee considers that the penalties for trafficking regardless of purpose, motive or amount irrespective of whether the trafficker is or is not an addict, should be made more severe, with a compulsory lengthy minimum sentence and an increased minimum for a second or subsequent offence and possibly a maximum of life imprisonment.

In advocating the increase of penalties the committee intends that this should serve as a clear warning to all who are addicted that if they engage in the distribution of drugs in any quantity for any purpose and regardless of their motives, they can expect to be dealt with as traffickers and given heavy penalties. It is the considered view of the committee that this will act as an effective deterrent to a large number of drug addicts who might be tempted to assist in distribution and with their elimination as distributors the problem of the "higher up" in getting rid of his drugs is made more difficult.

The committee in urging severe penalties for all traffickers does not of course minimize the necessity to continue intensive enforcement in an effort to eradicate the "higher up" from this evil market.

The committee recognizes that illicit drugs are in the first instance imported into Canada by trafficker-importers. These trafficker-importers, however, seldom if ever physically carry into Canada the drugs for which they are responsible. This transportation is almost invariably done by agents or hirelings for a financial reward or perhaps for a share in the drugs. The committee strongly recommends the establishment of a special offence with a penalty of the utmost severity for the illicit importation of drugs into Canada. The committee in making this suggestion feels that a severe penalty may act as an effective deterrent to an individual in smuggling drugs into Canada for the profit of a "higher up".

Evidence was given to the committee of the skill and efficiency by which traffickers and distributors endeavour to avoid detection and conviction.

The trafficker-importer as mentioned, seldom has physical possession of the drugs for which he is responsible and he is rarely addicted to their use.

The trafficker-distributors again are seldom addicted and they too, endeavour to avoid physical contact with the drugs that they distribute. The difficulty, therefore, of apprehending the trafficker-importer or the trafficker-distributor in possession of drugs is apparent. The efforts of the enforcement authorities as pointed out by the Commissioner, R.C.M. Police, in apprehending and convicting since 1949, 36 major traffickers who received penalties ranging from two to twenty-eight years' imprisonment is, in the opinion of the committee, worthy of commendation.

The apprehension and conviction of the street peddler is one of difficulty. Enforcement has taught the peddler to be wary of strangers. He uses every device to plant drugs in convenient caches and thus in completing a transaction, avoids the risk of selling to an undercover agent. The committee therefore suggests that special attention be given by the authorities to the possibility of the facilitation of proof of trafficking at all levels, having regard to the skill and cunning displayed by traffickers and distributors, illustrations of which were given by the enforcement authorities.

It is considered by the committee that the evil of trafficking to be eliminated requires the most effective sanctions that can be devised and the provision of such facilities in the matter of proof of trafficking as are necessary to combat the traffic.

The committee heard evidence from one of Canada's most experienced prosecutors under the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act, with respect to the difficulty in getting proper evidence to lay before the court in cases of traffic conspiracy. He cited sections 15 and 18 of the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act which facilitate proof in charges under that Act but stated that these were not available to the Crown in prosecutions of conspiracy to commit an indictable offense under the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act. The committee recommends a study of the act with a view to amending legislation to overcome the difficulty.

At this point it might be stated that in order to strengthen the hands of enforcement agencies, in addition to changes in the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act, amendments are indicated, to the Juvenile Delinquents Act and the Criminal Code of Canada.

The committee recommends consideration of amendments to section 33 (1) of the Juvenile Delinquents Act which would make association of an addict with a juvenile, prima facie evidence of contributing to delinquency. It must be borne in mind that the drug addict carries a communicable condition and merely by associating with a non-addicted juvenile is conducting himself in a manner likely to make such child a juvenile delinquent.

Since trafficking has become a mobile industry courts should withdraw driving privileges for long periods of time from all those convicted of offences under section 4 (3) of the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act. To give them authority so to do would require an amendment to section 225 (1) of the Canadian Criminal Code adding the offences set forth in section 4 (3) of the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act.

In advocating more severe and increased penalties for trafficking with a compulsory minimum, the committee does not do so in criticism of the length of sentences that have ordinarily been meted out to traffickers. The committee does so having regard to the elimination of street distributors and the discouragement of addicts to engage in the trafficking or transporting of drugs. There will thus be a clear and unequivocal warning to all addicts of the consequences which they can expect if they choose for any reason to become involved in the distribution of drugs.

Heavy penalties and intensified enforcement against street drug peddlers are therefore strongly urged, and in this way the committee believes that the heavy profit motive will most effectively be taken out of the drug trafficking.

The committee desires to express its appreciation to all witnesses who appeared before the committee or supplied briefs. Particular mention should be made of Chief Constable W. H. Mulligan, Vancouver, B.C., Chief Constable M. E. Anthony, Edmonton, Alta., Mr. John W. Walker, United Kingdom Delegate to the United Nations Narcotic Commission and Dr. Harris Isbell, Director of Research, United States Public Health Hospital, Lexington, Kentucky, all of whom travelled to Ottawa to appear before the committee in person.

A copy of the committee's Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence is tabled herewith.

All which is respectfully submitted.

TOM REID,
Chairman.

SCHEDULE

Witnesses who appeared before the Senate Special Committee on the Traffic in Narcotic Drugs in Canada.

Allain, G.—Inspector, Chief of Detectives, Montreal.

Anthony, Melville F. E.—Chief Constable, Edmonton.

Atherton, J. J.—Inspector, Division Personnel Officer, "A" Division, R.C.M.P., Ottawa.

Bagnall, Dr. A. W.—Representing B.C. Medical Association, Vancouver.

Beames, R. S.—Casework Supervisor of the John Howard Society of Ontario, Toronto.

Blackburne, Rev. William—Vancouver.

Brakefield, Moore E.—Superintendent "C" Division, R.C.M.P., Montreal.

Chisholm, John—Chief Constable, Toronto.

Christie, Hugh—Warden, Oakalla Prison Farm, Burnaby, B.C.

Cray, Rex—Detective, Vancouver Police Department, Vancouver.

Curran, R. E.—Senior Solicitor, Department of National Health and Welfare, Ottawa.

Davidson, Dr. Allan—Assistant Director, B.C. Mental Health Services, Essondale.

Dohm, T.—His Worship Magistrate, Vancouver.

Douglass, R.—Warden, New Westminster Penitentiary.

Elliott, Dr. George—Assitant Deputy Minister, Department of Health, Victoria.

Foulkes, Dr. James G.—Chairman of the Committee on Prevention of Narcotic Addiction, Vancouver Community Chest.

Gendreau, Dr. L. P.—Deputy Commissioner of Penitentiaries, Department of Justice, Ottawa.

Hall, Dr. J. E.—Welfare Council of Toronto and District, Toronto.

Hobden, Rev. Dr. J. D.—Executive Director of the John Howard Society of British Columbia, Vancouver.

Horton, J. C.—Superintendent of Detectives, Police Department, Vancouver.

Hossick, K. C.—Chief, Narcotic Control Division of Department of National Health and Welfare, Ottawa.

Isbell, Dr. Harris—United States Public Health Service, Addiction Centre, Lexington, Kentucky.

Leggett, T. O.—Acting Director of Police, Montreal.

Leslie, Captain William—Salvation Army, Vancouver.

MacCullie, Mrs. Edna, Vancouver.

MacLean, Dr. J. Ross—Physician, Vancouver.

MacLeod, Dr. A. W.—Assistant Director of the Mental Hygiene Institute, who appeared before the Committee as a member of the Board of Directors of the John Howard Society of Quebec, Incorporated, Montreal.

McClellan, G. B.—Assistant Commissioner, Officer Commanding, "C" Division, R.C.M.P.

Martin, Hon. Paul—Minister of National Health and Welfare, Ottawa.

Matthews, N. L.—Formerly Special Prosecutor, Department of Health, Toronto.

Mead, Clifford—Detective, Vancouver Police Department, Vancouver.

Mulligan, W. H.—Chief Constable, Vancouver.

Mutchmor, Rev. J. R.—Secretary, Board of Evangelism and Social Service, The United Church of Canada, Toronto.

Nicholson, L. H.—Commissioner of R.C.M.P.

Orr, Oscar—Police Magistrate of Vancouver and also a member of the Vancouver Police Commission.

Parker, Miss—Elizabeth Fry Society, Toronto.

Phair, J. T.—Deputy Minister, Department of Health, Toronto.

Price, Harold—Sergeant, R.C.M.P., Vancouver.

Ranta, Dr. L. E.—Chairman of Health Division, Vancouver Community Chest, Vancouver.

Richmond, Dr. R. G. E.—Physician, Oakalla Prison Farm, Burnaby, B.C.

Roberts, Dr. C. A.—Chief, Mental Health Division, Department of National Health and Welfare, Ottawa.

Shiner, E. V.—Assistant Executive Director of the John Howard Society, Montreal.

Steele, Senior Major John—Salvation Army, Vancouver.

Vaille, Charles—Representative of France on the United Nations Narcotic Commission (Brief).

Van Nostrand, Dr. F. H.—Director of Neurology and Psychiatry, Department of Reform Institutions, Toronto.

Varcoe, F. P.—Deputy Minister of Justice, Ottawa.

Walker, John H.—United Kingdom Delegate to the United Nations Narcotics Commission.

Waterston, Colonel E. T.—Secretary for Mens' Social Service, Salvation Army, Toronto.

Wilson, R. S. S.—Formerly Superintendent of R.C.M.P. (Brief).

Winch, E. E.—Member British Columbia Legislature, Vancouver.

Enforcement

Allain, G.—Inspector, Chief of Detectives, Montreal.

Anthony, Melville F. E.—Chief Constable, Edmonton.

Atherton, J. J.—Inspector, Division Personnel Officer, "A" Division, R.C.M.P., Ottawa.

Brakefield-Moore, E.—Superintendent "C" Division, R.C.M.P., Montreal.

Chisholm, John—Chief Constable, Toronto.

Cray, Rex—Detective, Vancouver Police Department, Vancouver.

Dohm, T.—His Worship Magistrate, Vancouver.

Horton, J. C.—Superintendent of Detectives, Police Dept., Vancouver.

Leggett, T. O.—Acting Director of Police, Montreal.

McClellan, G. B.—Assistant Commissioner, Officer Commanding "C" Division, R.C.M.P., Toronto.

Matthews, N. L.—Formerly Special Prosecutor, Department of Health, Toronto.

Mead, Clifford—Detective, Vancouver Police Department, Vancouver.

Mulligan, W. H.—Chief Constable, Vancouver.

Nicholson, L. H.—Commissioner, R.C.M.P., Ottawa.

Orr, Oscar—Police Magistrate of Vancouver, and also a member of the Vancouver Police Commission.

Price, Harold—Sergeant, R.C.M.P., Vancouver.

Foreign

Isbell, Harris—U.S. Public Health Service (See Treatment).

Walker, John H.—United Kingdom Delegate to the United Nations Narcotics Commission.

Vaille, Charles—Representative of France on the United Nations Narcotics Commission.

Government

Curran, R. E.—Senior Solicitor, Department of National Health and Welfare, Ottawa.

Davidson, Dr. Allan—Assistant Director, B.C. Mental Health Services, Essondale.

Elliott, Dr. George—Assistant Deputy Minister, Department of Health, Victoria.

Gendreau, Dr. L. P.—Deputy Commissioner of Penitentiaries, Department of Justice, Ottawa.

Hossick, K. C.—Department of National Health and Welfare. (See Control & Administration), Ottawa.

Martin, Hon. Paul—Minister of National Health and Welfare, Ottawa.

Phair, J. T.—Deputy Minister, Department of Health, Toronto.

Roberts, Dr. C. A.—Department of National Health and Welfare, Chief, Mental Health Division, Ottawa.

Varcoe, F. P.—Deputy Minister of Justice, Ottawa.

Winch, E. E.—M.L.A. Vancouver. (See Rehabilitation).

Health and Welfare

Roberts, Dr. C. A.—Chief, Mental Health Division of the Department of National Health and Welfare, Ottawa.

Narcotics Control and Administration

Hossick, K. C.—Chief, Narcotic Control Division of the Department of National Health and Welfare, Ottawa.

Reform Institutions

Christie, Hugh—Warden, Oakalla Prison Farm, Burnaby, B.C.

Douglass, R.—Warden, New Westminster Penitentiary.

Gendreau, Dr. L. P.—Deputy Commissioner of Penitentiaries, Department of Justice, Ottawa.

Van Nostrand, Dr. F. H.—Director of Neurology and Psychiatry, Department of Reform Institutions, Toronto.

Rehabilitation

Blackburne, Rev. William—Vancouver. (See Religious Groups).

MacCullie, Mrs. Edna—Vancouver.

MacLean, Dr. J. Ross—Physician, Vancouver.

Wilson, R. S. S.—Formerly Superintendent of R.C.M.P. (an Appendix in No. 13).

Winch, E. E.—Vancouver. (See Government).

Religious Groups

Blackburne, Rev. William—Vancouver.

Mutchmor, Rev. J. R.—Secretary, Board of Evangelism and Social Service, The United Church of Canada, Toronto.

Salvation Army—See Welfare Delegations.

Research

Isbell, Dr. Harris—(See treatment)

Richmond, Dr. R. G. E. (See Treatment)

Roberts, Dr. C. A.—(See Government)

Stevenson, Dr. G. H.—Director Drug Addiction Research, University of B.C., Vancouver.

Treatment

Bagnall, Dr. A. W.—Representing B.C. Medical Association, Vancouver.

Isbell, Dr. Harris—U.S. Public Health Service (Addiction Centre) Lexington, Kentucky.

Richmond, Dr. R. G. E.—Physician, Oakalla Prison Farm, Burnaby, B.C.

Welfare Delegations

Catholic Welfare Federation, Montreal.
Elizabeth Fry Society—Miss Parker, Toronto
John Howard Society—
Beames, R. S., Casework Supervisor of the Society of Ontario, Toronto.
Hobden, Rev. Dr. J. D., Executive Director of the Society of B.C., Vancouver.
MacLeod, Dr. A. W., Assistant Director of the Mental Hygiene Institute, Montreal—appeared before Committee as member of the Board of Directors of the Society of Quebec Incorporated.
Shiner, E. V., Assistant Executive Director of the Society, Montreal.

Salvation Army

Leslie, Captain William, Vancouver.
Steele, Senior Major John, Vancouver.
Waterston, Colonel E. T., Secretary for Men's Social Service, Toronto.

Vancouver Community Chest

Foulks, Dr. James G.—Chairman of the Committee on Prevention of Narcotic Addiction.
Ranta, Dr. L. E.—Chairman of Health Division.

Welfare Council of Toronto

Hall, Dr. J. E.

THE SENATE

Monday, June 27, 1955

The Senate met at 8 p.m., Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AUTHORITY BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 508, an Act to amend the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: With leave, next sitting.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 4

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 509, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1956.

The bill was read the first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, may I have the consent of the house to move that this bill be read a second time now?

Hon. Mr. Haig: Is this a bill to provide supplementary supply for the month of July only?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: For the month of July only.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Then I move the second reading.

Honourable senators, this is a further interim supply bill, for one-twelfth of the total sums to be spent during the current year, to provide for the requirements for the month of July. Unlike our previous interim supply bills, this one contains no additional appropriations for any special items, and in no instance is the total amount of any item being released.

On the second reading of an interim supply bill it is customary to give an undertaking that passage of the bill will not preclude discussion of the estimates later, and at this time I give the usual undertaking—the same undertaking that I gave on the second reading of the previous interim supply bill.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, I received a copy of this interim supply bill four or five days ago; and as the honourable Leader of the Government has just said, it covers only one-twelfth of the estimates, to provide for the month of July.

I understand the House of Commons had hoped, and certainly we had hoped, that we would not have to vote interim supply at this time; but we have no alternative, for it is clear that the session will continue into July.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: With the consent of the house, I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

MUNICIPAL GRANTS BILL

PAYMENTS TO MUNICIPALITIES

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, last Thursday, when we were on the second reading of the Municipal Grants Bill the honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) asked me if I would place on record a statement of the grants paid to various municipalities under the act. I said I would do so on third reading; but as I have received the information I will, with the permission of the house, place it on Hansard now, so that it will be before the committee when it meets on Wednesday. Have I the consent of the house to place the statement on Hansard?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The statement follows:

Calculation of 1954 Grants

		1954 Grant Actual
P.E.I.	—Charlottetown	$ 1,861
	Georgetown	222
N.S.	—Halifax	363,706
	Amherst	6,641
	Canso	3,187
	Dartmouth	45,297
	Kentville	6,214
	Parrsboro	1,230
	Pictou	5,395
	Wolfville	2,283

Calculation of 1954 Grants—concluded

		1954 Grant Actual
N.B.	—Fredericton	43,318
	Moncton	30,587
	Saint John	80,791
	Lancaster	34,664
	Chatham	9,093
	Newcastle	7,276
Que.	—Hull	86,637
	LaSalle	34,008
	Lauzon	4,195
	Senneville	5,921
Ont.	—Ottawa	1,427,237
	Cobourg	47,105
	Geraldton	31
	Gloucester	6,801
	Kingston	42,323
	Little Current	3,660
	Nepean	20,079
	Prescott	6,544
Man.	—St. James	1,632
	Swan River	608
Sask.	—Prince Albert	6,276
	Fort Qu'Appelle	4,544
	Ituna	293
	Scott	1,473
Alta.	—Calgary	30,180
	Leduc	617
	Strathmore	716
B.C.	—New Westminster	28,362
	Delta	13,274
	Richmond	15,393
	Saanich	2,492
Y.T.	—Whitehorse	9,117
N.W.T.	—Hay River	1,479
	Yellowknife	3,866

PUBLIC BILLS

SUSPENSION OF RULES

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald moved, pursuant to notice of June 22:

That from this day until the end of the present session, Rules 23, 24 and 63 be suspended in so far as they relate to public bills.

He said: Honourable senators, on Wednesday of last week I gave notice that I would move this motion tonight. I understand that it is customary to pass this motion near the end of every session. The present session is, we hope, rapidly drawing to a close, and it may be necessary at times to give a bill more than one reading in one day; but I assure the house that if the motion passes I shall not seek to make use of it unless in the view of the house it is necessary to do so.

The motion was agreed to.

BLIND PERSONS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Clarence J. Veniot moved the second reading of Bill 350, an Act to amend the Blind Persons Act.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this amending bill is clearly indicated in the explanatory notes. The amendments to the Blind Persons Act propose to do three things.

First: the age at which blind persons become entitled to an allowance will be lowered from twenty-one years to eighteen years.

Second: the maximum annual incomes allowed recipient blind persons will be increased as follows: for an unmarried recipient without dependents the ceiling will be raised from $840 to $960, an increase of $120 per annum; for an unmarried recipient with a dependent the ceiling will be raised from $1,040 to $1,160, an increase of $120 per annum; for a married recipient living with his sighted spouse the ceiling will be raised from $1,320 to $1,560, an increase of $240 per annum; and for a married recipient living with a blind spouse—that is, where both husband and wife are blind—the ceiling will be raised from $1,440 to $1,680, an increase of $240 per annum.

Third: the age of eligible recipients as defined in agreements between the provinces and the federal Government is lowered from twenty-one to eighteen years.

Honourable senators, this bill received unanimous approval in the House of Commons, and the second reading was followed by the third reading within a few minutes. I have no doubt that this humane bill will receive similar treatment at the hands of the honourable members of this house.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, I am sure we all join with the honourable gentleman from Gloucester (Hon. Mr. Veniot) in support of this legislation. I merely wish to say that the faster the bill can be put through the better we will like it.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Veniot: I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

JUDGES BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald moved the second reading of Bill 505, an Act to amend the Judges Act, and the judicature provisions of the Yukon Act and the Northwest Territories Act.

He said: Honourable senators, the main purpose of this bill is to increase by the sum of $2,500 the salaries of judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, the Exchequer Court of Canada, the Superior and County Courts of the provinces and the Territorial Court of the Yukon Territory, as well as that of the new judge who will be appointed to the Territorial Court of the Northwest Territories. I believe I have covered in that statement all the judges who will be affected by this bill.

The bill also provides for an increase in the number of judges in British Columbia by two; that is, by one each for the Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court, Trial Division. If the bill is passed the Court of Appeal will consist of the Chief Justice and six Justices of Appeal; and the Trial Division will consist of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and nine judges.

At present, the judge of the Territorial Court of the Yukon Territory is ex officio judge of the Territorial Court of the Northwest Territories. Under the bill a new judge will be appointed for the Northwest Territories, and the present judge will perform his duties in the Yukon Territory only.

Hon. Mr. MacKinnon: May I ask the honourable leader where the new judge will reside?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I understand that he will reside at Fort Smith, although that is not stated in the bill.

The bill permits increases in the travelling allowances to judges while away from their homes on judicial duties. The act at present provides that a judge may receive by way of living expenses while away from home the sum of $12 a day, if the place is a city, and $8 if the place is not a city. By section 4 of the bill the allowance may be increased in special circumstances prescribed by the Treasury Board, from $12 to $15 in a place that is a city, and from $8 to $12 in a place that is not a city.

As honourable senators well appreciate, it is difficult to find a hotel room in some cities today for less than, say, $9, and in centres smaller than cities at less than $8 a day.

Section 5 of the bill has to do with annuities to judges upon retirement. Under the present act a judge when he is appointed can elect how he will take his pension—namely, two-thirds of his salary—after having served at least ten years and having reached the age of seventy-five years. He can elect to have one-third of his pension payable to his wife, in which event he upon retirement would get two-thirds of his pension. If the judge predeceased his wife she, having become his widow, would continue to get one-third of his pension ; but if he outlived her, he would continue to receive his two-thirds of the pension.

By section 5 of this bill a judge would not make an election with respect to his pension. Upon retirement he would receive two-thirds of his salary by way of pension, and should he predecease his wife she, as his widow, would receive one-third of his two-thirds, namely, two-ninths of his salary.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Does she receive two-ninths in addition to the one-third?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: No. The point is that should the wife die first the judge would continue to get the full pension.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Would the honourable leader tell us how long it has been since the judges have had an increase in salary?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I regret that I do not have the date of the last increase before me; however, I know it was some years ago. As honourable senators know, the question of increasing judges' salaries has been before the Government for some time, and after giving the matter full consideration it has placed this bill before Parliament. The measure has passed the House of Commons, and I recommend it to the favourable consideration of this house.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, I regret that I am unable to support this bill to provide increased salaries for judges. In the first place, it is scarcely more than four years since their salaries were increased. Further, I am wondering if the Government leader has his facts clear on the matter of expense allowances to judges. It seems to me that quite recently we passed legislation by which the allowance in cities was increased from $12 to $25 a day.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: My only authority for saying what I did is the provision contained in section 4 of the bill now before us, which contains the following two new paragraphs dealing with allowances for judges when travelling to places away from their homes:

(i) if that place is a city, twelve dollars, or fifteen dollars in special circumstances prescribed by the Treasury Board, or

(ii) if that place is not a city, eight dollars, or twelve dollars in special circumstances prescribed by the Treasury Board.

Hon. Mr. Horner: I can quite understand, honourable senators, that a bill of this kind may perhaps be a little embarrassing to members of the legal profession, and I wonder whether they would be competent to take an unbiased vote on such a measure.

It is my feeling that this bill has been presented at a most inopportune time; certainly the matter could quite easily have been put over until the next session. Part of the economic picture in Canada today is not at all clear. According to figures from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, the income of the farmers this year has declined 7 per cent, and I only wish I had some assurance that their incomes would not drop even more in the year ahead. Further, it is becoming more apparent that industrialists and manufacturers are finding competition in world markets increasingly difficult to meet. I should like to refer to a textile centre where a son of mine is employed today. The management of that industry was facing serious difficulties and eventually called in its employees and placed before them this proposition: either they could accept a 30 cent an hour drop in pay or the plant would have to shut down and they would be laid off. The employees, being anxious to hold on to their jobs and maintain the homes they had bought in that centre, had little alternative but to accept the drop in pay.

We have heard a good deal of comment about the difficulties facing the rubber footwear industry. There seems little hope that it will be able to continue long to pay present wages and at the same time compete with products coming into our market from other countries.

It is for such reasons as these, honourable senators, that I say this bill is presented to Parliament at an inopportune time. To my way of thinking it has a dangerous and an unsettling effect on an economy in which we are attempting to hold the line against inflation. We hear a good many complaints every time labour makes a break and secures a wage boost. Here is an opportunity for the Senate to exercise its sober second thought and permit this measure to stand over until next year.

I may say that I know something about judicial appointments. In my experience I have found that appointment to the Bench is very highly desired by lawyers. It is, indeed, a great honour. However, we are to infer from the remarks of the Minister of Justice during the debate on this bill in the other house that it is difficult to attract to the Bench competent men well learned in the law, because of the large incomes which good lawyers can earn as corporation counsel. Now, honourable senators, we all know very well that there are a few fortunate individuals, who, maybe through special circumstances and ability, are paid big sums as counsel for large corporations, but that is not true of the average lawyer. I know of quite a number of lawyers whose income from their law practice is but a small part of their total income. And when a lawyer becomes a judge there is nothing to prevent him from continuing to own real estate and collect rents, or to receive income from sound investments. We hear and are told that to be appointed a judge a lawyer must have been successful. Well, if he has been successful he has acquired some wealth and has made some investments, from which, as I say, he can continue to draw the income.

Then, honourable senators, there is another point in connection with this whole question of the appointment of judges. When I first went west, the western provinces had no universities, and the members of the legal profession practising in the West all came from eastern universities. But such is not the situation today, nor has it been for many years. Today there are universities in every one of the western provinces and they are turning out a large crop of lawyers every year. As a matter of fact, there are a great many able lawyers, capable of making first-class judges, who I am sorry to say are not earning very large incomes.

Then there is this to be considered. A judge on retirement receives a pension of $10,000 a year, to which he contributes nothing. If he should die, his widow is entitled to a pension of $3,500, again without any contribution whatever. Compare this with the treatment of school teachers. It surely is of very great importance to the welfare of this country that our school teachers be paid a just and sufficient salary. Now out of the salary they do receive, their pension contributions are deducted. If that money were taken and invested wisely they would be paying entirely for their pensions. I say this to contrast their position with that of judges, who do not contribute to their pensions at all.

Further, in nearly every one of the provinces we read of county court judges today being paid a certain amount. However, that amount is not their entire salary. In some of the provinces, I understand, judges are allowed $2,500 extra; in Saskatchewan, for instance they get $1,500 for probate and surrogate court work, over and above their county court salary.

I feel quite keenly, honourable senators, that there is not the slightest reason for the increase proposed in the bill, and I have not been convinced that there is the slightest necessity to raise these salaries in order to secure good and competent men. As a matter of fact, the thought struck me a short while ago that possibly we would have to consider raising the salaries of our policemen, men in important posts on the police force.

A rather unusual argument was advanced in the House of Commons by the now independent member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre, that judges have to give up friendships and personal associations. That certainly has not been so, according to my observation. I will admit that a judge should not have resort to certain places, but for the life of me I do not think he is barred from social life in any way. I think that was rather a strained argument.

Honourable senators, I think everyone should consider this matter quite seriously, in view of existing conditions. A great number of our people, and certainly our farm people, are facing a lower income than they formerly enjoyed. Others too are in this position, I fear. Considering the extra money that judges often are enabled to make, and the non-contributory feature of their pension, I think that this chamber should take a serious second look at this piece of legislation. In all sincerity, I feel that in doing so we would be rendering a service to, shall I say the general welfare of our people, and to labour and labour organizations. And may I say here that I certainly believe that if any increase like this is granted we are going to have more and greater demands by labour unions.

Honourable senators, let me say again that I feel that this bill should not be passed at this time. Perhaps in another year it might be wise to pass such a measure, but I do believe it would be very unwise to do so at present. There is no evidence of any shortage of good candidates for the Bench. I am sure that every senator who knows the circumstances in the district where he lives is aware that there is a surplus of able lawyers who would be delighted to accept appointments as judges. So I submit that there is no necessity at all for this salary increase, and in fact it may do great injury.

When the motion is made for third reading I may go so far as to move that the bill be not now read the third time. However, I will consider that later.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, I am afraid the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) might not think me competent to discuss this bill, inasmuch as I am a member of the legal profession, but I may assure him that I have no intention or no ambition to go on to the Bench—

Hon. Mr. Horner: No, but you plead before judges.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: —and so far as I personally am concerned, the provisions of this bill will never affect me in any way. I must say that I disagree with the honourable senator. I think this is a reasonable bill. It is always difficult to assess what the public ought to pay judges for the exceedingly important work which they perform; but, generally speaking, I do not think that it can be said that in this country our judges are overpaid; in fact, I think rather the contrary is the case, and that in past years we have not paid our judges as much as we should have. If one takes Great Britain as an example: away back, I think a hundred and fifty years ago, the High Court judges received salaries of £5,000 a year; and honourable senators will easily realize what that salary must have meant in the early days of the last century, when prices were perhaps one-tenth of what they are today, and there was no such thing as income tax.

It seems to me that under the conditions existing today there should not be any objection to increasing the salaries of judges subject to federal jurisdiction by what might be termed an overall figure of $2,500 each. That addition is, I suggest, justified by the increase in the cost of living which has taken place over the last few years; and on that basis it is probably right to do what this bill seeks to do, and to make a blanket increase of the same amount for each judge, whether he be a judge of a County Court or a Supreme Court, solely on the basis that it costs that judge more to live today than it did four or five years ago. Even with this increase, in my opinion—and here again I must disagree with the honourable senator from Blaine Lake—the remuneration which will be paid to our judges will certainly be no more than sufficient to attract to the Bench the type of men whom it is necessary to obtain if the high quality and the great traditions of our Bench are to be maintained.

I notice that in my own province, Quebec, the judges of the Superior Court other than the Chief Justice are to receive salaries of $16,900. If I remember rightly, when I was called to the Bar—I fear, over forty years ago—the salaries of the judges of our Superior Court were $9,000 a year.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Six thousand.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: As I recall, it was more than that.

Hon. Mr. Haig: No, the salary was $6,000 a year for judges of the superior courts of Quebec, of Ontario, Manitoba and all the other provinces.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: If the statement of my honourable friend is correct, that the salary was formerly $6,000, today $16,900 is not much more than the equivalent of what was paid forty years ago. My honourable friend might be right; if he is, perhaps I should say that I think the salaries of the judiciary in those days were insufficient. But I do not think that today a salary of $16,900 for a superior court judge is more than adequate.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The $6,000 then paid was not subject to any income tax.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: As my honourable friend says, of course in those days there was no income tax.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Pardon me for the interruption, but probably I should correct my statement. The date I had in mind was 1911: I know that the amount was $6,000 then.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: My reference was to 1915 or 1916, when I first came to the Bar. I think it is reasonable to say that the increase in the cost of living justifies an across-the-board increase at this time in the salaries of our judges in the amount of $2,500 a year.

There is only one thing in this measure that worries me a little. Section 8 of the bill, which deals with pensions, provides no increase in the pensions of the judges, and states in effect that for the purpose of calculating the pensions which they will receive in future their salaries shall be deemed to be the salaries that they received before they got this increase. It seems to me to be illogical, if an increase to judges now on the Bench is to be given on the basis of the increase in the cost of living, that there should not be a proportionate increase provided for them when they retire, and for their widows.

Hon. Mr. Turgeon: Does section 8 apply to judges who will be appointed after this proposed amendment has become law?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. Turgeon: It applies to them all?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I refer my honourable friend to the explanatory note on section 8, which states:

> This clause provides that the increase in salaries under this bill will not result in increased annuities to judges or their wives or widows.

I want to end on a note of inquiry—to ask the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) if he will let us know the basis and the reason for section 8.

Generally speaking I must say, interested party though I may be, that I think this measure is justified and, if anything, is overdue.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Could the honourable senator give us any idea of how this proposed increase corresponds with the salaries for similar judicial positions in the country to the south of us?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I understand that recently the salaries of federal judges in the United States have been very substantially increased; that is, to a considerably greater extent than is proposed in this bill. Perhaps the honourable gentleman from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) would know more about it than I do, but I think the minimum salary of any federal judge in the United States under the new legislation will be of the order of $25,000.

Hon. Mr. Haig: I notice there are sixty-three judges and junior judges of county and district courts in Ontario. Are there any county court judges in Quebec?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: The number of Superior Court judges in Quebec is a great deal larger than the number of High Court judges in Ontario, but there are no county and district court judges in Quebec.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, the honourable gentleman from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) thinks it is illogical that the salaries of judges are to be increased in keeping with the increase in the cost of living and that there is not to be a proportionate increase in the pensions provided for them when they retire and for their widows. Well, if the Government should see fit to increase the pensions of retired judges or their widows I would come out vigorously on behalf of the great band of civil servants who years ago were placed on superannuation and for whom the increased cost of living has greatly reduced the value of their pensions. In those circumstances I certainly could not sit quietly by and see the Government award retired judges or their widows increased pensions just because judges' salaries are being increased. If that were done it would be a grave injustice to superannuated civil servants who have been pleading for at least ten years to have their pensions increased.

It seems rather strange that this legislation should authorize a blanket increase in the salary of judges, and I think it marks the first time that such an increase is being made. Naturally it has raised some question. I agree with the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) that there has been no dearth of applicants for judgeships in this country. I could tell you the names of six applicants that have been referred to me regarding one recent vacancy on the Bench in British Columbia. It is a great honour to be appointed a judge, and we have never had trouble filling vacancies. And let me say here that I am one who believes that had the indemnities of senators not been increased it would still have been possible to find many leading citizens desirous of being appointed to the Senate just for the honour attached to the appointment.

I notice that provision is made for only fifteen judges and junior judges of county courts in British Columbia, but for eighteen district court judges in Saskatchewan. Why is this, when Saskatchewan's population is only 842,000 whereas British Columbia's is 1,245,000? I always thought that judges were appointed on a basis of population.

Hon. Mr. Haig: No.

Hon. Mr. Reid: Our population in British Columbia has been increasing at a greater rate than Saskatchewan's, yet we have fewer judges. This arouses my curiosity.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Some judges in Saskatchewan may be acting as diplomats and may not be serving on the Bench at all.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I have very little to say on this bill. In the first instance I should like to compliment the honourable gentleman from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) upon the stand that he has taken tonight. It is very easy to be generous with public money. It is not a popular thing, as a rule, to oppose generous expenditures of public money, and those who call them into question when it is their right to do so are performing a public service. However, while I compliment the member from Blaine Lake it does not mean for a moment that I agree with him. I like to be economical, but I think it is more important to be wise than to be merely penurious, and one frequently gets more for his money by paying what an article is worth than by bargaining and chiselling and getting the lowest price possible.

My honourable friend from Blaine Lake spoke about farmers. Well, they have been enjoying a pretty good time in recent years. I was a farmer myself a long time ago and I know what conditions were on farms in Ontario back in the late eighties and early nineties. Farmers were very poor then, but conditions have changed and in recent years many a farmer has been ready to retire on his earnings.

My honourable friend talked about manufacturers. There are some who have been having a hard time just of late. Unfortunately, in Canada we have a number of manufacturing concerns that have no special advantage because of the country in which they carry on their operations. A number of them are doing things that are not indigenous to this land and are living on special privileges which Parliament accords them.

Hon. Mr. Horner: It might be helpful if the honourable senator would name these manufacturers.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I am speaking, for instance, of the textile industry. It is not indigenous to Canada. The raw materials are imported into this country, and were it not for the fact that Canadians are ready to pay more than the product is worth on the open market the Canadian textile industry would not survive. But the great majority of manufacturers in recent years have been doing very well indeed, and not a few of them have become extremely wealthy.

My friend spoke about police. I think he was in favour of increasing their salaries. I am glad to be able to say that police salaries in Ontario have been increasing substantially in recent years, and I have had the honour to take part in many arbitrations that have gone on all over the province—arbitrations between police associations and police boards. In almost every instance salaries were raised, so that today we have the skilled policeman receiving wages that at least enable him to live among his neighbours in a self-respecting way. The dividends have been excellent.

My friend suggested that the increase in judges' salaries should be delayed until conditions have improved. One need only read the financial reports to see that many industries are prospering. According to the Minister of Finance, Canada will have a larger national production this year than at any time in history.

My friend from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) referred to the salaries of Superior Court judges. But let us consider the sixty-odd judges of the County and District Courts of the Province of Ontario. Under the provisions of this bill they would be paid $10,500. I can state from personal knowledge that a lawyer of good ability who cannot make $10,500 a year in private practice is unfortunate. I know many young lawyers who have recently graduated from Osgoode Hall and are making at least that amount, and some very much more.

It is not so much a problem of getting men to accept appointments of this kind. Of course, as stated by the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid), people would accept appointments to the Senate if the sessional indemnities had not been increased—and, I suppose, even if no indemnities at all were paid—but no one having any appreciation of the importance of this body would suggest for one moment that public funds should be saved by the abolition of these indemnities. As a matter of fact, the public would not get service from the Senate if that were done. Nor would the public get service from the House of Commons if we reverted to the practice of the old days when only men of independent means represented the people in Parliament.

Somebody could always be found to accept paid, but surely that is not the test of what should be paid. Is not the better test this, that men who are charged with the responsibility of declaring and administering the law of the land should at least be endowed with a standard of living equal to that of lawyers who stand reasonably high in their profession? I am not suggesting that the salaries of judges should equal the incomes of lawyers who are tops in their profession, for that never was the case. The increase provided in the bill would bring the salaries of judges up to a standard of living approximating only that of the moderately successful lawyer in private practice.

The honourable senator who spoke before me lives in Blaine Lake. I have not had the pleasure of visiting Blaine Lake, but I hope to do so some day, and I am sure that when I do I shall receive a welcome from my friend. I rather fancy that from personal experience he is not in a very good position to compare the cost of living at Blaine Lake with that of, say, my city of Toronto. I know from personal experience that a man in Toronto engaged in important duties such as judging between litigants could not possibly support himself and his family, on less than $10,500 a year. I know from experience what it costs to live in our great cities. And Toronto is not in any special classification; Montreal and other large cities, as well as many smaller communities, are expensive places in which to live, to keep a wife and bring up a family in decency. It is not so much an increase in the cost of living that concerns us, but rather the higher standard of living which men of ability and success now enjoy in Canada. Everywhere we find people spending more freely, enjoying more luxuries, with larger amounts of money passing through their hands than ever before. It is necessary to increase the salaries of our judges so that they may be able to maintain a favourable position among their fellowmen, in keeping with the gradual, steady and persistent improvement in the standard of living. I think that reason justifies the proposed increase in salary more than any other reason.

Just a word or two in conclusion. My friend from Blaine Lake questioned the competence of lawyers to speak in matters of this kind. Well, judges are part of the profession to which I belong. It is possible that I know more about the subject than some who do not belong to that profession, and it might be—

Hon. Mr. McDonald: There are lots of applicants for the position of judge.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Don't worry—I am not an applicant.

Hon. Mr. Horner: As a lawyer, you appear before judges.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I have done so until lately, but I do not expect to appear much in the future. However, I wonder if my friend realizes the independence with which the Bar addresses the Bench? If he attended our courts he would observe how little grovelling to the judges there is by those who appear before them, and how much plain talk there is, and how honestly the Bar expresses its opinions, whether the Judges like it or not. I hold in my hand right now a brief on behalf of the public of Canada and I can assure my friend that I could not be influenced in the slightest degree against expressing my opinion if I were opposed to this measure. No judge can dictate to me, or ever has done. In saying so, I believe I am speaking for the rest of my fellow members of the Bar as well as for myself.

Honourable senators, I honestly believe that this bill is in the public interest, and I shall vote for it with pleasure.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable members, I did not intend to take any part in this discussion, although I realize the nature of the bill and the importance of the discussion probably as well as any other member in the house. This is a very difficult problem. Let me start out by saying that I had been a practising lawyer long before I was summoned to the Senate, in 1935, and I have been in practice ever since. In all my years of practice I have heard of only two lawyers, and they were from Ontario, who at some time in the dim past had voted for the Conservative party and were later appointed judges by a Liberal government. I think that is the situation right across Canada. Fundamentally, it is felt that there must be some reason why only a lawyer who supports the Liberal party in season and out of season can be appointed to the Bench.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: No, no.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Will my friend allow a question? Will he give us the names of the Liberals who were appointed to the Bench under the previous Conservative administration?

Hon. Mr. Haig: Sir John A. Macdonald appointed a good many of them.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: None that I have heard of.

Hon. Mr. Haig: For argument's sake let us assume that half the lawyers in the country are Conservatives, with perhaps a few C.C.F. and Social Credit supporters thrown in. Nobody from that large body of men ever receives a judgeship under the Liberal government, and the people of Canada feel there must be some reason for that situation. Because of that feeling, there is hostilitiy from some quarters to this legislation. Certainly, it is not that any of us have any quarrel with the judges, and particularly those of us who are members of the Bar of any one of the provinces. I say to my friend from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) that the lawyers in this house appreciate full well that the independence and freedom of this country depend more on the conduct of judges than on any other class in our communities.

Having been a practising lawyer in Winnipeg for more years than I would like to tell, in the low as well as the high courts, I say without hesitation that I have never found a judge hostile towards me because I was a Conservative and he was at one time a Liberal. And certainly he could not claim not to know where I stood politically, because I was always active and everyone knew my stand. The judges who were once Liberals treated me as fairly as any lawyer who happened to be equally strong in his Liberal persuasions.

I take this opportunity, honourable senators, to say that I think the system of appointment of judges to the Bench requires some change and reorganization. It has been argued that certain lawyers in Ontario have large incomes and cannot be attracted to judgeships. That may also be true of Quebec, which is also a wealthy province. However, it does not apply to the average practising solicitor in my province, because I doubt if there are more than twenty whose earnings reach $20,000 a year. True there are lawyers whose income reaches that figure, but they make it not as practising solicitors, but as directors and managers of companies.

I may say to my honourable friend from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) that the reason, if there is a reason, for that flat increase in salaries is particularly to take in the judges of the lower courts, and to pay them a salary commensurate with the work they are doing. When the lower court was originally set up—and the honourable senators from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) and Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) will recall the details—its jurisdiction was limited to, I think, $500, but it has now been extended in most provinces to about $1,000. A great many more cases now come before that court, and the present salary range does not compensate those judges for the volume and importance of the work they do.

I come next to the question of pension. I do not agree with what my friend from Inkerman said, that the change provided by the bill is to meet the increased living cost. I am more inclined to agree with the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity, that the increase is intended to make a judge feel that in our scheme of things we recognize the importance of his work and we want to see that he is properly provided for. Certainly, the motive which would influence me to support this legislation would be a proper recognition of the importance of the work judges do. I say with all humility that only a lawyer who must appear before judges from time to time realizes how important it is that the judge in each instance be a man of integrity and common sense, who loves freedom and fair play and who has pride in the institutions of his country. The lawyer knows that only such a man can fairly adjudicate on the differences of the parties concerned. It is sometimes a little difficult for counsel to quickly place the merits of a case before the Bench, but a keen-minded judge can soon grasp the pertinent points and get a true perspective of the case in hand.

I do not think that this measure touches on the labour question. If that were true, I would not vote for it. I am inclined to follow the thinking of my friend from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner). We must not fool ourselves; we are today running into severe world competition in trade. It is all very well for the Minister of Finance to say that we are going to make more money this year and next year. We have only to listen to the views of men from this chamber who have recently travelled abroad, all of whom come back with the same story, that we are facing stiffer competition from Great Britain, Germany, Japan and many of the northern European countries.

To illustrate the effect of competition, let us look at what happened when tenders were called for the building of an electric power line from Vancouver to Victoria. A Vancouver company quoted approximately $4 million, while an English company tendered at $3 million. The reason given for the lower tender was that the British Company would pay $1 million less in wages than would the Canadian company.

Something has been said tonight about farmers' incomes. Let me emphasize the fact that this Government has not let the farmers make all the profit they should. Under the wheat agreement made earlier with Great Britain the Canadian farmers were skinned —that is the only word to use—out of $600 million to which they were entitled. It is all very well for the people of this country to blow their horns and to give themselves credit for the generosity the Government had shown to the British people, but the cost of such generosity should be borne by the people of Canada as a whole, not by just the farmers.

Now, honourable senators, to come back to my subject. Pardon me for being off the subject a little, Mr. Speaker, but it was because my honourable friend from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), mentioned the farmer—

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I did not start it.

Hon. Mr. Haig: No, but you mentioned it.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) spoke about it first.

Hon. Mr. Haig: The honourable member from Blaine Lake mentioned it and you took him up, and all I have done is follow along.

I propose to vote for the bill, but I hope that when making future appointments this Government will switch its tactics and choose the best men available for the Bench, irrespective of what their politics may be. Speaking for my own province of Manitoba, I cannot name one judge who has been appointed to the Bench in the last twenty years who was not previously a dyed-in-the-wool Liberal.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: May I say something?

Hon. Mr. Haig: Wait until I finish.

In Saskatchewan I think there are some judges who were Conservatives, but in Manitoba there is only one Conservative left, and he was appointed in 1933 by the Right Honourable R. B. Bennett. Judges should be chosen from the Bar as a whole, and their politics should not be a criterion one way or the other. No one can tell me that politics do not influence appointments today. The minute a vacancy occurs in our province the boys at the club all gather around and speculate as to who will be the new judge. But nobody would ever put a Conservative name on the list, for they all know that he would not get the appointment. They put down five or six Liberals, and the procedure is to strike them off one by one until there are three left. I call the attention of the honourable senator from New Westminster to this procedure, for there may be three new appointments to the Bench in his province very soon. I may say that one Conservative, the Honourable Mr. Justice Charles H. Locke, has been appointed to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Turgeon: Yes, and he is one of the best judges that we have on that court today. He was one of the ablest lawyers who ever practised in the province of British Columbia; and, in addition, before he went on the Bench, he was one of the hardest-working Conservatives in that province.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Well, he was brought up and trained properly in Manitoba, so that fitted him for the position. His father was a judge in Manitoba.

My honourable friend from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) said something about appointments to the Senate. I do not know what the proportion is in British Columbia, but the chances of a Manitoban being appointed to the Senate is only one in 27,000. As a matter of fact, it is harder to get into the Senate than it is to get on the Bench. When a person is appointed to this chamber he comes here with his politics, but we do not expect a man to be elevated to the Bench because of his political acumen or experience, or for the work that he has done for a party. The story is told of an American and a Canadian who were discussing the appointment of judges in the respective countries. The Canadian said, "I do not think much of your system of electing judges". To which the American replied, "Well, I don't think there is much difference, because in Canada your judges are first elected and then put on the Bench".

Honourable senators, I want to say in conclusion that I am not hostile to this bill. I am in favour of an increase in salaries for the reasons I have given, but I think that the measure should have contained a declaration by the Minister of Justice, not in the way he replied to the Liberal member from Vancouver-Burrard, but rather to this effect: "In future I will make an absolute choice of the best qualified men in the province concerned for every appointment to the Bench. If he happens to be a Conservative, well and good, but I want the Liberals in this country to know that in my judgment I picked the best man available".

It is all very well for him to say that is done today, but it seems to me that the appointees are always picked from the same party.

My honourable friend from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) remarked that when the Conservatives were in power they did the same thing. I may tell him that Sir John A. Macdonald did not do that. On one occasion somebody said to Sir John, "You have pretty good judges", and he said, "I always appoint a gentleman to the Bench and if he knows any law so much the better". Now, I think on the Bench today we have both gentlemen and good lawyers, and I do not have any complaint that way at all. But I think that lawyers, whether they be Conservatives, Social Crediters, C.C.F.'ers or Liberals, should all stand on equal terms when an appointment to the Bench is about to be made, and the man best qualified should have the position. Under that procedure no Senator could get up and say, "In my province during the last twenty years nobody but Liberals have been appointed to the Bench". Otherwise I do not think the Government is playing the game and we are not getting the best Judiciary available to us.

I propose to vote in favour of the bill, but not because the judges need the money to meet the increased cost of living. A judge receiving $14,400 a year or a chief justice at $16,000 does not need any help on that score. But, as my honourable friend from Toronto-Trinity remarked, the judges of the lower courts who are receiving $8,000 a year do need it. The province of Manitoba gives its lower court judges an extra $1,000, and Saskatchewan an extra $1,500 for Surrogate Court work. I think the New Brunswick judges get extra compensation for admiralty work. But by and large $8,000 is a pretty small salary under present day conditions, and in my judgment this bill corrects the situation. I am sure my honourable friend from Toronto-Trinity has never looked at the books of account of the 400-odd lawyers practising in the province of Manitoba or he would never have mentioned the income figures he did. They may receive such incomes in the city of Toronto, but certainly not in the city of Winnipeg. That is one reason why the people in the poorer provinces say that Ontario should contribute more than it does to the upkeep of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: I would like to say to my honourable friend who has just resumed his seat that the present Chief Justice of New Brunswick was a former Conservative Premier of that province, and he was appointed to his present position by a Liberal Government.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Who is he?

Hon. Mr. Burchill: The Honourable Charles D. Richards.

Hon. Mr. Haig: But he was on the Bench before he was appointed Chief Justice.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: He was appointed Chief Justice over Liberal applicants for the position. I want you to give the Government credit for what it has done.

Hon. Mr. Haig: But he was a trial judge before he was made Chief Justice?

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Yes.

Hon. John J. Connolly: Honourable senators, the introduction of this bill permits a discussion of the position of the Judiciary in this country, and it need not be restricted to a discussion of the proposed increases in judges' salaries. It does seem to me appropriate on this occasion to say something about the Supreme Court of Canada, and I do so particularly because this chamber has had a distinguished record in the ultimate establishment of the Supreme Court of Canada as the highest court of appeal in this country.

The honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) made a very remarkable speech in 1949 when he explained the bill which accomplished that purpose, and he, of course, was in a great tradition which consisted also of the Honourable C. H. Cahan, the Right Honourable Ernest Lapointe, and, going back even further, the Honourable Edward Blake, a former Minister of Justice. Since 1949 the Supreme Court of Canada has been our court of last resort. I sometimes wonder whether we as Canadians continue to think of the high purpose and the great hopes that were expressed at the time the status of the court was so established. In my opinion we have, in the members of that court, a remarkable group of Canadians drawn from the country from one coast to the other. The court compels the respect of not only the members of the legal profession but of the people at large. It was constituted and is still constituted of some very remarkable jurists. One thing I have regretted at times is that the lives, the work and the philosophies of these men are not more generally known to the Canadian people. For example, there recently died Sir Lyman Duff, one of the greatest jurists that this country ever produced. His standing was recognized throughout the Commonwealth as well as in his native land; and I would express the hope that some day a competent biography of this great man, revealing something of the workings of his mind, will be available to young Canadians who may aspire to the high position he held and adorned.

As the years go by the Supreme Court of Canada, as our final court of appeal, will be faced with decisions involving great responsibilities and the exercise of high qualities of judgment. I do think that Canadians should do all in their power to strengthen and fortify that Bench, as typical of the judicial institutions of this country, for by establishing it in a position of great prestige and influence all the courts and, generally speaking, the judicial institutions of this country, will be strenghtened. I know that the rule stare decisis—the dead hand of precedent—can rest upon a court and in some degree stifle its activities. Precedent can be a stabilizer, but it can also be a factor which hinders progress. The Supreme Court of Canada must look upon the problems which face it in the light of the conditions in this country, and much in the manner—if I may say so—that was expressed as a hope by the honourable senator from Inkerman in 1949 when he explained amendments to the Supreme Court Act. This does not mean, of course, that the Supreme Court of Canada is to become untouchable.

In that connection, perhaps honourable members may be interested in an opinion which was expressed by Mr. Justice Holmes in a speech he delivered at the Harvard Law School Association of New York in 1913. Speaking of his own court, he said:

> We are very quiet there, but it is the quiet of a storm centre, as we all know. Science has taught the world scepticism and has made it legitimate to put everything to the test of proof. Many beautiful and noble reverences are impaired, but in these days no one can complain if any institution, system, or belief is called upon to justify its continuance in life. Of course we are not excepted and have not escaped. Doubts are expressed that go to our very being . . . But we must take such things philosophically and try to see what we can learn from hatred and distruct and whether behind them there may not be some germ of inarticulate truth.

Hon. Calvert C. Pratt: Honourable senators, as a layman I would like to say a word or two on this subject. I have been a Canadian a little over six years; and I can hardly believe that political influences are operating in connection with the courts of this country. I find it difficult to credit such a statement; at any rate I hope that any influences of this kind will not reach as far as our province. I am sure that so far they have not affected us. We in Newfoundland have not heard any complaints about the calibre of our Bench, and it would astonish me to learn that Canadians generally have any cause for complaint. My thought has always been and it is now that the Bench of Canada ranks high among the world's Judiciary, that it is beyond the reach of undue influence, and that it administers justice irreproachably. I am sorry that references to alleged political appointments were introduced into this debate. I do not think that a question which reflects—as it must, in the way it was put—on the integrity and standing of the Judiciary of Canada should have been raised on this occasion.

However, I agree with the references of the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) to the dangers of increasing costs of production. I believe that a relatively small population such as ours, largely dependent on exports, and faced at times with great difficulties in disposing of its products, is very much exposed to the risk of pricing itself out of the world's markets, and it seems to me that we have arrived at a stage when our policy should be framed to deal with this trend. But I do not for a moment agree that, because of such aspects in our economy, we should deny to our Canadian judges the increases provided in the bill before us. By raising the level of remuneration, the bill would merely correct a situation which affects practically all the Bench of Canada.

I support the bill, particularly as it is four years, I understand, since an adjustment was made. I look at it this way. In order that the Bench may continue to attract men of high quality and standing they must be adequately recompensed. Their earnings must be in line with those of men who are sought for in professional life in Canada. In looking through the proposed salaries it seems to me that their general level is not too high, and I therefore have no hesitation in voting for them.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators,—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I would remind the house that if the honourable leader speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: There is not a great deal left for me to say. The honourable senators from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen), Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly), St. John's West (Hon. Mr. Pratt), and the honourable Leader Opposite (Hon. Mr. Haig) have clearly set forth why salaries of judges should be increased. While they did not agree in everything they said, they were in general agreement that the salaries should be increased.

It has occurred to me we cannot put on a dollar-and-cent-basis the services that judges render to our country. A judgeship is an honourable position and men seek to fill it because of that. It has been suggested tonight that people could be found who would be glad to serve in the Senate without remuneration; but no one has suggested that this should be done. I have no doubt there are members of the Bar who would accept positions on the Bench even if the present salary were lowered. But we must be fair to our Judiciary, a number of whose members have served for years, and by approving this increase I think we are being fair. Actually, the increase the judges will receive under this legislation is far out of line with the increases that have been received by many people in other walks of life.

I agree with what the honourable gentleman from Toronto-Trinity said about the judges of the County Court of the County of York. I understand none of them receive anything in addition to their salary of $8,000. After paying income tax, a judge with a family must have quite a difficult time getting along in Toronto while maintaining his position in the community as a judge. He will not have too easy a task even on a salary of $10,500.

The honourable Leader of the Opposition pointed out that judges are appointed by the Minister of Justice, who at present happens to support the Liberal party. My honourable friend did not suggest—and I would bring this to the attention of the honourable gentleman from St. John's West (Hon. Mr. Pratt)—that any political influence would be used by an appointee to the Bench, and he said that he had never been unfairly treated by any judge just because he happened to be of a different political persuasion. I think this illustrates that our system of making judicial appointments must be a fairly good one. The honourable Leader of the Opposition referred to the United States system. He did not suggest we should follow it, and I would be strongly opposed to filling judgeships by a system of popular election. It is interesting to note that the Minister of Justice, in speaking in the House of Commons the other day, referred to a statement which he had made some time ago to the effect that from November 15, 1948, to June 27, 1951, out of sixty-eight appointments there were only two former defeated federal candidates. That is a pretty good record, and it certainly does not bear out the statement that defeated political candidates are appointed to the Bench. I do not deny that defeated candidates have been appointed, but I do not think, for instance, there is one defeated Liberal candidate serving on the Supreme Court of Ontario at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes; Chief Justice McRuer.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. Haig: And Mr. Justice Gibson.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: No. He was a member of Parliament but he was never defeated. I am sure we all agree that Chief Justice McRuer is a very competent and excellent judge and that no one could exert political influence over him.

I mention these things to show that our system is a fair and good one, and in looking over the history of our Judiciary I feel the present system of appointments has proved to be satisfactory.

During the debate some questions were asked of me, but I think most of them have already been answered. The honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) asked why there are more judges in Saskatchewan than in British Columbia. Well, I take it that at some time the province of Saskatchewan requested the appointment of additional judges. If a province requests an additional judge the Government usually makes the appointment. The question of the distance of travel may be a factor. For instance, in the province of Saskatchewan distances are great and that province may have felt that it needed more judges for that reason; it was not a matter of comparing the numbers of judges there with the number in British Columbia.

The Leader of the Opposition stated correctly the reason why a blanket increase is provided for, and I think honourable senators consider that is a fair basis on which to make the increase.

I could read to the house the salaries paid to judges in the United Kingdom, but I do not think I should take time to do so. I need only say that salaries of judges in that country are much higher than in Canada.

I think the only question which I have not answered is with regard to pensions. I believe it was the honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) who asked why it is proposed that the pensions be based on the present salaries, without the increase. The judges do not contribute to the pension fund, and although the bill provides for an increased salary, the Government felt that the pension basis was fair and did not require an increase. Therefore, under this bill, although a judge will receive an increase in salary of $2,500, his pension will be two-thirds of his former salary. The purpose of this bill is to be fair to the judges, and we feel that by giving them a reasonable pension, in any event, they are being dealt with fairly.

Hon. Mr. Horner: May I ask the honourable leader a question? Has he any knowledge of the total number of judges in the United Kingdom as compared with the number in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I have not that information at hand, and I do not know if I could get it. However, I can say that the population of the United Kingdom is between 45 and 50 million, and that in Canada it is only 15 million, and, therefore, I think there would be many more judges in the United Kingdom than in Canada.

Hon. Mr. Horner: My understanding is that there are more judges in Canada than in the United Kingdom.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Next sitting.

RADIO BILL

COMMITTEE AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the amendment made by the Standing Committee on Transportation and Communications to Bill 260, an Act to amend the Radio Act.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the committee, moved that the amendment be concurred in.

He said: Honourable senators, I think perhaps I should give a short word of explanation as to the amendment to this bill suggested by the Committee on Transport and Communications.

The bill came to us quite a long time ago. Section 2 gave us a good deal of trouble, in that it seemed to us to be very broad in its provisions and to create quite an infringement upon the liberty of the ordinary subject. The section, in effect, said that every person who, having become acquainted with any radio communication not intended for public use or information, makes use of such communication, is guilty of an offence and is liable to a penalty of $500 or to imprisonment for six months, or both. That seemed to be quite a substantial infringement on the liberties of the public, and we felt that we needed full information as to the reasons why a provision of this kind was necessary in the Radio Act. It took three lengthy meetings of the committee before the information could be obtained. Finally, after consultation with the Minister of Transport, his department produced a lengthy memorandum of the reasons why this section was necessary, and it also drafted a new section to take the place of the original section 2 of the bill. The committee met again last week, and after considering this memorandum—which I had circulated to the members of the committee—we reached the conclusion, first of all, that a provision of this kind, under the circumstances, was necessary, and, secondly, that the amended section 2 was very much better than the section as it had first been submitted to us.

Briefly, the reason why it is necessary to provide for secrecy of private radio communications is more or less the same reason why a man is entitled to secrecy when he sends a telegram or when he uses the long distance telephone. The development of modern science has been such that now, in a great many instances, instead of using a wire for communication the air is used, and a person who has obtained from the proper authorities the right to a private airwave is entitled to the secrecy of the communications he makes over that airwave.

We were told that this section was introduced as a result of Canada having become a party to an international agreement, and that all the parties to it undertook that they would preserve the secrecy of private radio communications. In the memorandum of which I speak, we were given copies of similar legislation enacted in the United Kingdom and in the United States. In the long run, we were finally satisfied that this was justified. As I have said the new section 2 is much better than the one originally submitted to us—it is much clearer and more explicit, and indicates the rights of the public a great deal better than the original section 2. For instance, the amendment makes it quite clear that it is no offence for a person to make use of information obtained from a public broadcasting station. Further, it makes clear that the minister may make regulations in respect of certain private communications which are intended to be made public and would cover such matters as a distress signal from an airplane or a ship.

Therefore, all that the section now contemplates is that a person who has a short-wave receiving set may pick up private messages which the ordinary receiving set would not get, and while there is nothing to prevent him from listening to such private messages he cannot make use of or divulge them. Incidentally, the law in England makes it an offence even to listen under these circumstances, whether or not the information is used or divulged to any other person.

Perhaps I should add at this time something I said at the close of our last committee meeting, that I do not think any department of government ought to come before committees of this house with proposals which infringe the liberties of the subject, unless it is fully prepared to substantiate to the very limit that such infringements are necessary.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Turgeon: Will the honourable senator read section 2 as it is amended?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It is already part of the record.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Subsection 2 of that section as amended reads:

> Except as provided in the regulations made by the minister under this act or in the regulations made under the Canada Shipping Act, every person who, having become acquainted with any radio communication transmitted otherwise than by a broadcasting station, makes use of such communication or divulges it to any person is guilty of an offence . . .

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, may I say a few words before the report is adopted? To begin with, I should like to congratulate the committee on what they have done. When this bill came to the house it received rather severe criticism. I recall making an observation to the effect that a person who heard some private information over a public broadcasting station and divulged it to somebody else was within his rights in doing so; but under this bill as it was introduced he would be open to prosecution. I felt that prosecution should be directed to those persons who allowed such secrets to be broadcast, rather than to those who received them. Therefore, I congratulate the committee upon having eliminated any reference to broadcast from public stations, for that is as it should be.

The prohibition is now confined to private messages which in their very nature are secret messages. The long distance telephone, for instance, carries great masses of conversation through the air, and it is quite within the realm of possibility that an amateur who has a little money to spend could tap those conversations. Under this bill he may do so, but if he uses the information he thus receives and is caught he is open to prosecution.

But, honourable senators, I do not think the committee by its amendment has gone quite far enough. The honourable member for Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) has referred to certain exceptions, such as distress signals from either the air or the sea, and there may be some others. But this bill in association with the act which it amends places in the hands of probably the Governor in Council the right to make regulations with respect to exceptions which must be made. My point is that this is a criminal statute and is in effect criminal law; therefore, I think the exceptions should be in the act rather than regulations. As we all know, regulations are made behind closed doors and are not subjected to public discussion in a deliberative assembly, such as this or the other place, where there is the clash of thought and the opportunity for public expression which is so valuable and essential in our democratic system.

By this measure we are giving the executive power to decide what under the criminal law will be prohibited and what may be allowed. I understand that the regulations are either in the process of drafting or already have been drafted, and could quite easily be included in this measure. It must be noted that if the exceptions are in the form of regulations we do not have the ready access to them that we would have if they were in the act. Certainly no one can say that the regulations are omitted from the statute because they are long; goodness knows, the Criminal Code is long enough. I can illustrate my point by asking this question: Who would suggest that we in one sentence should legislate against sin, and then allow the executive to define what sin is? That, in effect, is what we are doing by this bill. We are leaving to the executive the right to define what is the law.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: My honourable friend is perhaps a little unfair in his example. It would perhaps be more accurate to say that we are saying that sin is a crime, but we are allowing the executive to make certain exceptions to the crime, not to add to it.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It is practically the same thing. We are saying in the statute that a certain thing is a crime, but we are allowing the executive to change the definition.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: To limit it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: To reduce it.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: And to change it rather materially in the sense that if I go to the statute to find what the law is, I am misinformed unless I go also to the regulations made in private and not published in the statute. As I have said, very few people will know anything about the regulations; in effect, only those in the department concerned will know about them. Why should the regulations not be in the statute? What is to be gained by leaving them out? I can tell you what is to be gained by putting them in: Everybody will know what is in fact the criminal law with respect to this particular offence.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, the question is on the adoption of the amendment. Is it your pleasure to concur in the amendment?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: On division.

The motion was agreed to and the amendment was concurred in, on division.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed, on division.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, June 28, 1955

The Senate met at 3 p.m., Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that he had received a communication from the Secretary to the Governor General, acquainting him that the Honourable Patrick Kerwin, Chief Justice of Canada, in his capacity of Administrator of the Government of Canada, would proceed to the Senate Chamber this day at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the Royal Assent to certain bills.

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 452, an Act respecting loans to assist fishermen engaged in a primary fishing enterprise.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Godbout: Next sitting.

PUBLIC OFFICIALS SALARIES BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 507, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Railway Act and the Tariff Board Act in respect of salaries of certain public officials.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Godbout: Next sitting.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the committee's report on Bill 351.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, to whom was referred the Bill (351) intituled: "An Act respecting Canadian National Railways", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 23, 1955, examined the said bill and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS REFUNDING BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Mr. Hugessen presented the report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications on Bill 450.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, to whom was referred the Bill (450) intituled: "An Act respecting Canadian National Railways and to provide for the refunding of matured, maturing and callable financial obligations", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 23, 1955, examined the said bill and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS FINANCING AND GUARANTEE BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. A. K. Hugessen presented the report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications on Bill 451.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, to whom was referred the Bill (451) intituled: "An Act to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System during the calendar year 1955, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 23, 1955, examined the said bill and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I move that the bill be read the third time now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

JUDGES BILL

MOTION FOR THIRD READING POSTPONED

Hon. A. K. Hugessen moved the third reading of Bill 505, an Act to amend the Judges Act, and the judicature provisions of the Yukon Act and the Northwest Territories Act.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Honourable senators, if it is possible I would like third reading of this bill to be postponed until tomorrow. I have a reason for making that request. The Chairman of the Finance Committee (Hon. Mr. Crerar) is expected to be here tomorrow, and I feel it is important that he should be present for the third reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I had not understood that the honourable gentleman wished the third reading to be postponed. In fact, I thought he was going to speak this afternoon. However, in the circumstances, senatorial courtesy would require that third reading be postponed. I would, therefore, with leave, withdraw the motion and ask that the bill be placed on the Order Paper for third reading tomorrow.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: The order stands.

INTERNATIONAL RIVER IMPROVEMENTS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. A. K. Hugessen moved the second reading of Bill 3, an Act respecting the construction, operation and maintenance of international river improvements.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill No. 3, as its number shows, was one of the first bills introduced in the House of Commons at the beginning of this session. It has come to us quite late in the session, for reasons of which, I am sure, honourable senators are aware. Though in terms it is of general import and significance, it does have particular and topical application to one situation now existing in the province of British Columbia, namely, the proposed development of the Columbia River and its tributaries. The bill was debated at considerable length in the House of Commons on second reading, and was then referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs. That committee held a large number of sittings and heard much evidence, all of which has been printed and circulated to honourable members. The principal evidence on the bill was given by representatives of the Government of British Columbia, who had a number of representations to make and who were particularly interested, in view of the fact which I have already mentioned, that primarily the bill will affect the development of the Columbia River in that province. A good deal of evidence was given by General McNaughton who, as honourable senators know, is the head of the Canadian section of the International Joint Commission.

I have read all that evidence, honourable senators, and I must say that it is extremely interesting, particularly the evidence given by General McNaughton and the views which he gave of the possible future development of an enormous natural resource on that part of the Columbia River which is situated in Canada. Obviously, at this moment it would be out of place for me to canvass that evidence. All that I am called upon to do is endeavour to explain to the house the general principle of this bill, and that I shall now try to do.

If the bill is examined, I think it will be found that its principle is quite simple, easily understandable and extremely logical. In a word, the bill is designed to give the federal Government a measure of control over international river improvements. In order to understand the bill it is necessary to know its definitions. The first to which I wish to refer the house is that of an "international river", which will be found in section 2. There "international river" is defined as:

> Water flowing from any place in Canada to any place outside Canada.

In other words, a river flowing from Canada to some other country. The definition does not include for instance, the St. Lawrence River and the St. John River, which do not flow from Canada into any other country, but which form a large part of the boundary between Canada and the United States. Those rivers are what are called boundary waters, and they and their development are governed by the treaty made on January 11, 1909, between Canada and the United States with respect to boundary waters between the two countries. As honourable senators know, under that treaty there has been set up an International Joint Commission consisting of representatives of the two countries and, as I have said, General McNaughton is the head of the Canadian section of that commission.

I should just like to repeat the definition of "international river", as "water flowing from any place in Canada to any place outside Canada". Obviously, for geographical reasons, the only country into which water could flow from Canada is the United States.

Hon. Mr. Reid: What about waters flowing from the United States into Canada?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: The bill does not apply to them.

The next term defined is "international river improvement":

"International river improvement" means a dam, obstruction, canal, reservoir or other work the purpose or effect of which is

(i) to increase, decrease or alter the natural flow of an international river, and

(ii) to interfere with, alter or affect the actual or potential use of the international river outside Canada.

Now, bearing these definitions in mind I think honourable senators will readily see why it is desirable, indeed why it is even essential, for the dominion Government to be able to exercise some control. These international river improvements when constructed and in operation may affect rights downstream in the United States—rights of individuals, of private corporations, and of public authorities, such as the Bonneville Power Administration; and indeed rights of some of the states of the Union into whose territory the waters of these rivers flow.

These matters thus become of international scope, and under the British North America Act the federal Government is alone competent to act on behalf of Canada. It is true that for the most part, if not entirely, the physical ownership of the Canadian sections of these international rivers concerned is vested in the provinces through which they flow. The provinces can deal with the regulation and development of those rivers within the respective provincial limits, but they are incompetent to deal with international matters and with the extraterritorial rights which may be involved. For instance, a number of most interesting questions are apt to arise, such as the beneficial result which will obtain in the United States from storage of the upper waters of the Columbia River within Canada, and what consideration should be payable by those in the United States who derive such advantages from the storage works carried out by and in Canada.

The province of British Columbia, for example, is totally unable to make any treaty or agreement of any kind with, let us say, the States of Oregon or Washington and therefore it is necessary for the dominion Government which, as I say, is the only authority in this country having power to deal without outside states, to become a party to any of these contemplated developments.

That is the basic principle which underlies this bill.

If honourable senators will examine the text of the bill they will realize the extent of federal control that is proposed. In future no international river improvement may be constructed, operated or maintained unless a licence has been obtained under this act from the Governor in Council. Appropriate penalties are provided for failure to obtain such a licence, penalties going even so far as to provide for confiscation to the Crown of any work constructed without a licence.

The Governor in Council is authorized under this bill to make regulations, "for the purpose of developing and utilizing the water resources of Canada in the national interest".

Certain international river improvements are exempted from the operation of the bill. The first class of these to which I should refer is works on boundary waters. As I have already explained, works on boundary waters are governed by the Canada-United States Treaty of 1909. A second class of works exempted falls within the region of minor works for irrigation and other similar purposes within a province. It appears that on quite a number of these international rivers in the provinces of British Columbia and Saskatchewan, farmers and others have made little irrigation works or drainage systems and so on which have no practical effect upon the flow of the rivers into the United States; and the Government of Saskatchewan made representations to the External Affairs Committee of the other house, as a result of which the exception was inserted which will be found in section 7(c):

7. This act does not apply in respect of an international river improvement

(c) constructed, operated or maintained solely for domestic, sanitary or irrigation purposes or other similar consumptive uses.

In the context of this bill provincial rights are of course very important because, as I said, the provinces own the title to those parts of the bed and water powers in the rivers which flow through the provinces concerned. The bill deals with the provincial rights in two ways. First, it declares that Her Majesty in the right of a province is bound by this act. In other words, a province cannot do anything in contravention of this act, should it be passed. Secondly, the bill provides that international river improvements shall continue to be subject to the laws of the province in which they are situated, except only to the extent to which such laws may be repugnant to the act.

I should emphasize, honourable senators, that this bill does not take away or purport to take away any property rights of the provinces, nor does it interfere with or purport to interfere with provincial legislation with respect to rivers and river improvements, either legislation now in existence or such as may be passed in the future, except and only in so far as such legislation may be repugnant to this measure. In effect, all that the bill does is to bring in the dominion Government as another party whose intervention is essential for the proper development of rivers flowing from Canada to the United States, in so far as this development will affect international rights and international obligations.

One thing, I think, is quite obvious. For the proper development of these rivers in Canada and in order to mesh in provincial rights and local requirements in Canada with international rights and international obligations, the closest co-operation will be required between the federal authorities and the provincial authorities concerned. I hope—indeed I will go further and express the confident belief—that that co-operation will occur as and when the occasion may require. After all, honourable senators, we are all Canadians, and whether we happen to wear our federal hat or our provincial hat we are vitally interested in the proper development of these great natural resources with which we have been endowed by a beneficient Providence.

I have explained the basic principle of this bill, and how it is proposed to bring that principle into practical effect. At this stage, on the second reading of the bill, it is unnecessary and I think it would be improper for me to say any more. As I have already pointed out, the bill if enacted, will have particular application at this time to the possible diversion of the Columbia River and its tributaries, in British Columbia. The story is complicated and fascinating. For details of it I would refer honourable senators to the printed evidence given before the House of Commons Standing Committee on External Affairs, and particularly, the evidence of General McNaughton, who is one of the outstanding public servants of this country.

Hon. Mr. Haig: The honourable senator dealt with rivers which flow out of Canada. What about rivers which flow into Canada?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: This bill does not purport to deal with rivers which flow into Canada.

Hon. Mr. Haig: It does not affect them at all?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: No. By its definition it is confined to international rivers; and "international river" is defined as "water flowing from any place in Canada to any place outside Canada".

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators, in rising to say a few words on this bill, may I make it clear that it is not my intention to be critical either of the bill or of any of its provisions. Like every other British Columbian, since the project first became known, through General McNaughton, after a supposed agreement by the Province of British Columbia with certain interests in the state of Washington to utilize the waters of the Columbia for power development, particularly in the United States, I have taken quite a keen interest in the matter. I, too, have read all the evidence very carefully. I have gone one step further, however. On June 3, the International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission, of which I am the chairman, held a meeting here with General McNaughton, not to discuss the power developments of the river but to explain in general the possible condition, as we saw it, which faces the sockeye salmon industry of the Fraser River.

Our commission was greatly concerned when the proposal was made known to divert the waters of the Columbia River into the Fraser during the four low-level periods of that river, namely, the months of November to February inclusive. The suggestion put forward by General McNaughton is, I think, a fairly logical one. The waters on this side of the boundary are Canadian; and I realize, as everyone else does who has studied the matter, that if advantage is not soon taken of the water power now available on the Columbia River we may lose it for all time. Hence a project to put the dam at a place called Mica Creek, has been proposed, and I understand that with that and other projects upwards of two million horsepower can be developed. The statement has been made that some 15 million acre-feet will be held behind the dam at Mica Creek, and surplus water will be diverted, during the four months I have mentioned, from that point through the construction of a fifteen-mile tunnel. When the announcement was first made, there were many who thought that the project of diverting the waters of the Columbia by building a tunnel fifteen miles long was nothing but a dream, but the more the matter was discussed, and the more that was heard from General McNaughton about it, the more people—and I among them—were convinced of the feasibility of the scheme. As a matter of fact, the amount of hydro-electric power which is developed is not dependent so much on the quantity of water as on what is known as the head of water. The statement is made that probably as much power can be developed from the Columbia River as from the St. Lawrence, and although one is inclined to view this estimate with scepticism, when one regards the volume of water and the length of the Columbia as compared with the mighty St. Lawrence, it is to be remembered that at the point of diversion the Columbia River water is about 4,000 feet above sea level, so that the velocity of the descending water is very great.

In the commission's presentation to General McNaughton we pointed out what we believed to be great dangers in the scheme, because it goes further than to propose a diversion of water, and recommends, for usage near Vancouver, the building of a series of low-level dams on the Fraser River to utilize the waters of the Columbia, augmented in the Fraser River during the low four-month period, but of course, using the Fraser River when the waters of that river are high. In this respect the proposed project both disturbed and alarmed us. For the past seventeen years our engineers and biologists have been studying the sockeye salmon in the Fraser River, and with their aid we have accumulated a great fund of information. On a number of occasions I have pointed out the difficulties which are suffered by the salmon as a result of dams. In other places, particularly in the state of Washington, fishways have been constructed where the spawning sockeye salmon can be taken up over the dam. In this connection, we learned our lesson from the Columbia River when it was discovered that there was no way to bring safely over the dams the little fingerlings heading to the sea.

I do not mind telling honourable senators—although we do not care to boast about it, lest a wrong interpretation be placed upon our remarks—that we have been concerned, as an organization investigating this matter scientifically and in a practical way, to see if we could devise some electrical appliance which might divert the little fingerlings before they reach the dam, and guide them down some canal. We are not alone in the matter of this experimentation. Quite a number of countries are endeavouring to find the answer, but the outlook for a successful solution in the near future is not too bright. In fact, it may never be found. We have been afraid to say a great deal about our own experiments in case the power development interests might use the argument "Oh, well, let's go ahead and build dams; they have now solved the problem of bringing fingerlings over dams". But we have not.

General McNaughton has spoken about dams of 200 feet in height. That may not seem very high, but experiments in the United States with a 180 foot dam showed an 8 per cent mortality of fingerlings going over the dam and 30 per cent mortality when they go through the turbines. It can be readily realized that construction of four dams on the Fraser River, that height or of 200 feet, might result in the eventual extinction of sockeye salmon in the Fraser.

I am not going to be too critical of companies which want to develop power, but invariably I have found that they are much more interested in developing water power for electrical energy than in protecting fish for food purposes. I have pointed out to those interested in the aluminum and other power industries that, in view of the growing world population and the increasing shortage of protein foods, they had better take another look at food and not ignore the great sockeye salmon industry of British Columbia, which last year was worth some $22 million. It may interest honourable senators to know that in 1913, the year the great disaster struck Hell's Gate, when millions of tons of rock fell into the canyon, the sockeye salmon industry of the Fraser River had reached a peak production of 2½ million cases. This meant that some 30 million sockeye salmon had actually been caught that year and canned. However, the disaster took its toll on the 10 million salmon heading back up the river to spawn. Incidentally, the sockeye salmon is the only species of fish that must reach the spawning beds where they were born before they themselves can spawn. If they are frustrated in this attempt they will die without spawning.

The full impact of the Hell's Gate disaster was not known until four years after the event, which marked the first year of the four-year cycle following the disaster when the salmon returned to their spawning bed. In 1917 the production had dropped to approximately 425,000 cases. After a long series of inquiries and representations to the United States Government an international treaty was signed. I would point out that although the salmon are born in British Columbia rivers and lakes they later head out to sea; and in the fourth year, in returning to the Fraser River they first enter United States waters, where they are caught by American fishermen. In 1937 a treaty was signed between Canada and the United States. I may say that I am the only surviving one of the original members of the International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission, and at the present time I have the honour to be its chairman. At a cost of over $1 million, shared equally by the Governments of Canada and the United States, a fishway was built at Hell's Gate to take the sockeye salmon through that point of the river. We have three fishways there now and I think they are the finest in the world. I say that without fear of successful contradiction. Incidentally, I might explain that there is a fish ladder and a fishway, the former having steps. I remember that when I appeared before a meeting of United States Government officials some years ago I was told by a senator: "Don't talk to me about salmon. You are trying to tell me that fish go up ladders." He visualized the fish ladder as being straight up and down.

Last year some two million sockeye salmon went through these fishways, but we have found that delays can be dangerous and therefore we are perturbed and anxious about the proposal to divert the waters of the Columbia River to Fraser and to build four dams on the Fraser River. It is our understanding, based on scientific fact, that every obstacle placed in the way of the fish is to their detriment, and that with the construction of four dams they will never be able to reach their spawning beds. It must be borne in mind that the sockeye salmon do not eat after they reach fresh water, and some of them have to travel as far as 650 miles without food. They use up their own fat as energy, and they have only so much of it. Our scientists have warned us that the construction of dams of any height on the Fraser River may result in wiping out the sockeye salmon. I would point out, too, that we still have a long way to go in our rehabilitation program to reach the 1913 production of 2½ million cases; but we have been hopeful that, with the solving of the Hell's Gate problem and the seeding of barren areas in the interior, the supply of sockeye salmon would be built up to its former greatness.

Hon. Mr. Euler: To what extent has the construction of fishways helped in the restoration of the sockeye salmon supply in British Columbia?

Hon. Mr. Reid: There are about five areas in the interior of British Columbia that produce large runs, and two of them are now producing at near to their 1913 capacity. It was estimated by provincial authorities that 2 million sockeye salmon went into the Quesnel area to spawn in days gone past. When we took over we found in one year only six went in, and until lately the highest number found in any one year was 100. However, owing to the work of our scientists, last year 600,000 sockeye salmon went into that area to spawn. This shows that we are beginning to develop the barren areas, and we hope the development will proceed rapidly. I am very hopeful that before very long we shall bring production up to the 1913 level.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Will the honourable senator permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Are there not other salmon rivers upon which fish ladders are being used very successfully?

Hon. Mr. Reid: Our only experience of them has been in the state of Washington, and mostly on the Columbia River, which used to be a great sockeye salmon river. The effect of the dams on the Columbia river wiped out the salmon that went into the interior of British Columbia, with the result that the fishery on the Columbia is gradually going down and down, even though Washington and United States authorities have built fish ladders for the salmon up over the dams. The fact that fingerlings are dying on their way to the sea has brought about a diminution year by year, and we predict and believe that it will not be long before there is little or no sockeye salmon industry on the Columbia River. With that example before us, naturally we are watching every move that is made to build power dams on the Fraser River, which we believe would wipe out the great sockeye salmon industry on that river.

Someone may ask, "What are you going to do with the Columbia River at Mica Creek Dam?" Well, I think we have just as competent engineers on our commission as there are on any other commission—I say that with pardonable pride—and they have advised us that at Mica Creek Dam the electric power should and could be developed.

General McNaughton spoke about sending power into the province of Alberta from Mica Creek Dam, which he says is a distance of 350 miles, and thus raising that province from what has always been a farming or wheat-growing province to an industrial province. One of our engineers said to us, "Why not develop all the power there and carry it down into the Fraser valley, which is only 50 miles farther?" He also reminded us that in Sweden and other countries of Europe power is carried longer distances than 350 miles. That is not against this bill. I am passing on the suggestion, as coming from our staff, that investigation be made to see if power could not be developed at Mica Creek Dam on the Canadian side and utilized in the Fraser valley and in Alberta, because there is ample water to develop all the power required.

I felt that on this occasion I could not sit idly by without warning both governments, and also the people of British Columbia, that although it is very nice to talk about power development after all, you cannot eat aluminum and other metals, and a shortage of food may well become a very serious matter. As a matter of fact, although British Columbia has thousands and thousands of acres of undeveloped land—some of which, of course, will never be developed—the province does not produce enough meat to supply its people at the present time, and will always have to import meat supplies. Experts who have studied the situation say that in time there may be a shortage of protein foods on the North American continent owing to the rapid growth of population and also because many areas of agricultural land are becoming impoverished.

I have one more word to say, and it has to do with a matter of further worry to us. After the statement made by General McNaughton earlier in the year became known, it was said for the record: "Oh, don't worry about that, this project is never going to be carried out"—that is, the delivering of waters from the Columbia River to the Fraser River. But as General McNaughton's arguments developed and as time went on it became evident that it was not entirely a pipe dream, or some kind of a proposal put forward just for the purpose of holding something back or against the Americans, but that it was becoming a reality. May I say here that I take off my hat to General McNaughton; I respect him for his knowledge and for the confidence he has gained because of his work on the International Joint Commission. I was, however, a little perturbed when I heard that the head of the B.C. Electric Company was here in Ottawa in discussion with General McNaughton, the very day we had all the discussion with him. I had a quarrel with the Alcan interests. The Alcan Company at first did not want the site on the Nechako, but wanted a site called Chilco. I had to get very rough at that time, and make a direct challenge to the then Premier of the province to debate the matter publicly. I raised my voice so loudly that the Alcan Company left Chilco and developed where they are now. I am not unmindful of the fact that the B.C. Electric—which as well as Alcan has received some of British Columbia's heritages in power—did a very surprising thing two years ago, when the Social Credit party first came into office, and before it got so friendly—and I say that advisedly—with the power interests and the big business people. The Social Credit government, in its first year in office, passed a bill which required that power companies, before building a dam on any of the rivers, must first consult with the fisheries department of the provincial government and place the plans before it. But, honourable senators, who do you think protested? I cannot understand why Alcan, which has received as great a British heritage in this country as any company has ever received, would protest that bill, but it did, and so also did the B.C. Electric. I was suspicious of the B.C. Electric, because I know that it is out to grab all the available power sites it can. I predict that it will not be long before an application is made for a prominent site on the Fraser River, and if the B.C. Electric succeeds in getting that it will then control the whole of the Fraser River, in so far as future power development is concerned.

I make no apology for bringing these matters to the attention of honourable senators. As Chairman of our commission I feel that I have a duty to perform. I have fought these greedy power interests all along. I am not against power development, but I think that power could be developed without destroying the sockeye salmon on the Fraser River. I believe that both the dominion and provincial Governments should look forward to all the power that it is possible to develop for Alberta and British Columbia, and that the distance is not too great to carry power from Mica Creek Dam to the Fraser Valley. If instead they turn the waters of the Columbia River into the Fraser River, and rights are given to companies to construct dams for power in the Fraser valley, my opinion is that the great salmon industry of the Fraser River will disappear. Bear in mind, honourable senators, that once we bring the Fraser River back to what it was in 1913, at present day prices the catch of salmon will be worth $65 million in the market. Let us be very careful, therefore when making decisions with regard to the developing and utilizing of our water resources for power.

Honourable senators, I want to assure the honourable member who sponsored this bill (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) that I am heartily in favour of his assertion that we should utilize our water resources for Canadians on this side of the line.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, I do not think the honourable senator who has just spoken is at all alarmed about the possibility of the waters of the Columbia River being turned through the mountains to empty into the Fraser River. In my opinion atomic power will be in general use in this country long before that happens. The waters of the Columbia River have been running into the United States for a long time, and unless we come to war with that country and defeat it we cannot hope to be able to turn the waters of the Columbia into the Fraser for our sole use.

However, this bill will serve its main purpose, which was to prevent the attainment of the objects of the Government of British Columbia. And, of course, in the eyes of my honourable friend from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid), anything that Government attempts is a crime and an iniquity; and, anything that is done to prevent the success of its objects would be all right with him. This bill should be taken by other provinces as a warning that the federal Government intends to keep full control over such waters as are dealt with in the bill.

As to the question of the loss of the fisheries as a food, I would point to what is now taking place in the province of Ontario, where immense areas of productive land are being sacrificed to make way for additional power.

Those are all the remarks I wish to make, honourable senators. In closing, I repeat that the bill was introduced for a specific purpose, and it will no doubt accomplish that end.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Unless it is the wish of some honourable senators to have the bill go to committee,—

Hon. Mr. Haig: Next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Next sitting.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. F. W. Gershaw moved the second reading of Bill 481, an Act to amend the Prairie Farm Assistance Act.

He said: Honourable senators, the act which this bill would amend was passed in 1939, and was an attempt to give some relief in those municipalities which had suffered large-scale crop failure. The act was not intended to give relief to individual farmers, because relief of that nature was then and still is the responsibility of the municipalities. The act made provision that where a farmer's yield was less than four bushels per acre he would get $2.50 an acre for half his cultivated acreage, up to 200 acres, or a maximum of $500. If his yield was between four and eight bushels per acre, he received a bonus of $1.50 for half his cultivated acreage, up to 200 acres, or a total of $300.

The bill before us would extend the scope of the act to some extent. Its purpose is to amend the definition of "cultivated land" to include land which could not be seeded or summer-fallowed in the year of the award owing to natural causes beyond the control of the farmer, and in those circumstances to qualify him for the bonus. For instance, large areas of land have been so flooded that a farmer could not seed or summer-fallow it; thus, he would become eligible for the award. Or, it might be that a spring or early summer would be so dry that to seed or summer-fallow the land would cause it to blow away.

Generally speaking, the word "eligible" applies to land which would be entitled to the award, and "ineligible land" is that which does not qualify. Under the present act contiguous sections of six or more in number in an eligible township with a crop of more than ten bushels per acre, would be excluded from benefits under the act; on the other hand, if there are a number of sections, not less than six, in an eligible township, where the yield is less than eight bushels per acre, they would qualify for the bonus.

The question of consideration of the sections contiguous to townships has proved very complicated and difficult to administer. It often happened that a farmer found that his neighbours on three sides would get the bonus while he would not. He would be very discouraged and bitter about it, and it was difficult to explain to him why he was in that position. This bill would change the present arrangement regarding contiguous sections by providing for blocks of sections which are excluded from payment in eligible townships and similar blocks which are brought into payment in ineligible townships, to be rectangular instead of irregular in shape. Under such a provision every farmer within the rectangle would either qualify for the bonus or not qualify; thus there would be removed any cause for grief because of different treatment within a relatively small area.

The land as a general rule is surveyed into townships, sections, ranges and so on, but all the areas are not square. For instance, there are river lots, which are long and narrow. In the early days these were taken up by settlers who, for reasons of protection and neighbourliness, wanted to live near the river front, and their land extended back from the river as far as they could see daylight under a pony standing on level land. Therefore it is necessary to provide an amendment to arrange the wording with respect to the river lots so as to qualify them for the benefit of the bonus.

As I have said, honourable senators, the act has been in operation since 1939. It has been a great blessing to many deserving people, but it has resulted in a considerable amount of bitterness, bickering and heartache. There are three reasons for this. In the first place, the rainfall does not stop at the municipal or township lines. It has happened that one man in an eligible township would get a bonus when he had a yield of ten or even fifteen bushels per acre, when at the same time a man in an ineligible township or a block of sections that was not eligible, who had little or no crop at all, received no bonus.

Secondly, if land is owned and cultivated by a loan company, a postmaster, a professional man, or a merchant, in each case the levy of one per cent per bushel on all grain sold would be paid, yet the owner would not be eligible for the bonus because farming was not his chief occupation. Thirdly, there are areas where a crop failure never occurs, but the people nevertheless pay the levy year by year.

All of these things prove conclusively that the only fair way of dealing with the problem is on an individual basis, so that every farmer in Canada who has paid his premium and who suffers crop failure will be eligible for the bonus.

Hon. Mr. Euler: May I ask the honourable senator a question? He speaks of the levy that is paid by various farmers into this fund out of which the bonus is paid. Does that levy completely cover the amounts expended?

Hon. Mr. Gershaw: No, it does not, but I will come to that in just a minute. It has not paid half of the expenditures.

As I say, the fair way to administer the benefits would be on an individual basis, so that these irregularities I speak of would not occur. But, then, to put it on an individual basis would mean crop insurance, a matter that is definitely ultra vires of the dominion Government. It is like hail insurance. A few years ago the dominion Government considered instituting a program of hail insurance, and when it was found to be ultra vires of the Government each of the three provinces concerned arranged for its own coverage.

In the matter of prairie farm assistance the Province of Saskatchewan considered the whole question of crop insurance, and seems to have decided against it. The Province of Manitoba went so far as to set up a commission to investigate such a plan. That commission came to Ottawa and studied the records of what areas had good crops and what areas had poor crops, and arranged to zone the whole area for the purpose of fixing premiums. The commission then travelled to the United States, where there is a crop insurance program in force, and studied their methods. But up to the present a crop insurance plan has not been put into operation.

Now, honourable senators, in late years crops have been fairly good and the one per cent levy has reached or exceeded the amount paid out; but since the act was passed, in 1939, the dominion Government has received $86 million and has paid out $177 million.

Manitoba is in a different position from the other provinces, having paid in $13 million and received back $8 million. All the amounts are given on page 5057 of the House of Commons Hansard. Saskatchewan has paid in $48 million and has received $126 million, and Alberta has paid in $24 million and received in return $42 million. The Peace River block in British Columbia has collected $364,000, a relatively small amount.

I feel that this measure will be a step forward and will help a great many people who have worked hard and through no fault of their own have met with disaster.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Gershaw, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Natural Resources.

NARCOTIC DRUG TRAFFIC

REPORT OF COMMITTEE CONSIDERED—DEBATE ADJOURNED

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the final report of the Special Committee appointed to inquire into and report upon the traffic in Narcotic drugs.

Hon. Thomas Reid, Chairman of the committee, moved that the report be concurred in.

He said: Honourable senators, in rising to move the adoption of this report I believe it is advisable to touch briefly on some of the salient points outlined in the report and later to mention briefly the work of the committee itself.

The committee was set up on March 2, and at its first meeting I was unanimously appointed chairman. I wish at this time to place on the record my appreciation of the confidence which this important committee placed in me.

When it became known that the committee intended to hold meetings in the city of Vancouver, there were misgivings in certain quarters about the committee's action, some newspapers even referring to it as a joy ride. This was perhaps understandable, of course, for it was the first time in our parliamentary history that a committee of the Senate had ever held sessions outside of Ottawa. But there were certain good reasons for the committee's decision to visit Vancouver. To my mind two, at least, were very important.

First is the fact that 50 per cent of all drug addicts are located or resident in and around Vancouver. It was due principally to the serious conditions which have arisen in that city, with so large a congregation of drug addicts, that this special committee was set up. It is my own opinion had the drug problem been no greater in Vancouver than in either Toronto or Montreal, it might not have commanded the attention it did, either by the Government or by the citizens in and around the lower mainland of British Columbia.

The second reason was a desire to avoid unnecessary public expenses. When it became known in Vancouver that a special committee of the Senate had been set up to investigate the narcotic drug problem, the mayor of that city forwarded a list of certain doctors, psychiatrists and others, some fifteen persons in all, who he believed would be qualified to give evidence before our committee. These witnesses could perhaps all have been asked to appear before the committee here in Ottawa, but in view of the cost of air travel for such an array of witnesses, and as well the fact that only those witnesses who came to Ottawa would have been heard, while others would have been precluded from giving evidence, I think honourable senators will agree that it was a wise decision to go out to Vancouver where the greatest problem existed. When one considers how well the report has been received, the decision to go out to Vancouver has been amply justified.

As a matter of record, the committee, in a period of five full days at Vancouver, heard a total of 32 witnesses, instead of 15; and besides, it visited Oakalla prison and interviewed 150 addicts, two of whom were females. We also held a full day's session at the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Barracks in Vancouver, interviewing certain drug addicts, as well as relatives of drug addicts. The decision made to hold these latter sessions in camera, with the press excluded, and not to allow the committee proceedings to be televised, will, I feel, have the approval of all honourable senators, and I trust of the public as well.

As mentioned, the decision to hold sessions in Vancouver and, later, in Montreal and Toronto, was, I believe, a wise one, because it enabled the committee to obtain first-hand information and so to be in a position to appraise the entire problem more effectively than it could have done had it remained in Ottawa.

In all some twenty meetings were held, thirteen of which were open to the public, two were in camera, and one consisted of a tour of the Bureau of Narcotic Control, under the able administration of Mr. K. C. Hossick, who is Canada's representative on the United Nations Narcotic Drug Commission.

Incidentally, may I remark that we in Canada are prone to rather excessive humility at times, particularly when we compare our ways of handling things with those of the United States. In this connection, while in Washington I was talking with Senator Daniels, head of the United States Senate Judiciary Subcommittee on Narcotics. He had received some information from Mr. Robert E. Curran, the leading counsel of the Department of National Health and Welfare here, and he made the frank admission, "Senator Reid, I think you are further ahead in the control of illegal traffic in narcotic drugs than are we in the United States, and I am going to advise our authorities to visit your country and find out how you are handling affairs there." Perhaps this is an appropriate time to place on the record this splendid tribute.

In all, a total of 64 witnesses were heard, as well as a group of 150 addicts who were interviewed en masse at Oakalla Prison Farm. The witnesses included United States, British and Canadian drug addiction experts, doctors, psychiatrists, federal, provincial and municipal government officials and enforcement officers, church and welfare organization representatives, addicts, and so-styled reformed addicts, as well as many private citizens.

A large volume of mail in the form of briefs, recommendations and letters of encouragement was also received. Briefs considered to be of general interest were printed as appendices to the proceedings. I doubt whether, when the time came to draft our report, we could have obtained any witnesses who could have given the committee any further evidence.

The committee's day-to-day proceedings were printed in 15 parts, and authority has been obtained to print in blue book form all the evidence and final recommendations. This blue book will remain, I believe, for many years to come as a book of reference on the traffic in narcotic drugs in Canada.

A word about the report itself, and also one or two matters not so far touched on but which I believe should be mentioned before the report is adopted. May I say that I hope all honourable senators have read that report?

The chief recommendations are briefly as follows:

It is suggested that the provincial Government undertake treatment looking to the possible cure and rehabilitation of the drug addicts who come under their jurisdiction, and that the federal authorities in penitentiaries give consideration to the segregation, treatment and specialized training, looking to possible cure and rehabilitation, of all criminal addicts sent to penitentiaries.

Many views were expressed to us, both in the press and by witnesses, and one of the opinions most frequently presented, having regard to the great number of drug addicts on the Pacific coast, was that the climate may have something to do with it. I do not think that any members of the committee—certainly not myself—were impressed with the suggestion that the climate is the cause of the congregation of drug addicts at the coast; and in that regard I think it well to point out that the evidence given by Mr. H. J. Anslinger, of the United States Bureau of Narcotics, shows that the states of Washington, Oregon and California contain fewer drug addicts than, for instance, the cities of New York and Chicago. As a matter of fact the incidence of drug addiction in the city of Seattle, immediately south of Vancouver, also in Los Angeles and in San Francisco, is very light. There are only two hundred criminal drug addicts in the entire state of Washington.

One other statement frequently heard throughout the investigation was, "Take the profit out of drugs and there will be no drug problem."

Your committee recognized the importance and significance of the suggestion and kept it particularly in mind when making recommendations. After a careful analysis of all the evidence submitted, the committee recommend heavier minimum sentences for all who are caught selling narcotic drugs, whether these persons are drug addicts or non-addicts; and they are of the opinion that these offenders should be classified as traffickers and given severe minimum sentences.

In recommending the establishment of a special offence with a penalty of the utmost severity for the illicit importation of narcotic drugs, the committee feel that a severe penalty may act as an effective deterrent to those higher-ups who are engaged in this evil trade.

A few witnesses—but only a few—advocated narcotic drug clinics where addicts could obtain their supplies of drugs either at nominal cost or under an arrangement similar to the British system, and they endeavoured to bolster up their suggestion with the bare statement that Great Britain has practically no narcotic drug problem. So far as I know, no mention has been made by these witnesses of the fact that under the British system narcotic drugs are not given to an addict to allow him to continue his addiction as such, as was advocated in British Columbia, especially by drug addicts themselves, who naturally are in favour of being provided with all the narcotic drugs they require.

Before I pass to the next point, may I draw the attention of honourable senators generally, and in particular members of the committee, to some information from Great Britain which came to my hand only this morning. We felt when Mr. Walker, the British representative, was with us that we had not heard all the story about the handling of narcotics in Britain. I hold in my hand an article which appeared in The Sunday Chronicle, a newspaper published in Manchester, from which I will read only two paragraphs:

> Drug addicts entitled to free dope supplies are flourishing in the most wicked black market Britain has ever known.
>
> I have discovered in the night haunts of London's Soho that because of blackmail and fear of violence heroin supplied on National Health prescriptions is being sold at £1 a pill.

Evidence received by our committee showed, I believe, that the same consequences followed when clinics were set up in the United States; and from these statements from Great Britain it would appear that drug addicts are getting supplies from doctors and selling them in illegitimate trade.

Should criticism arise about the tabling of the final report during the present session of Parliament, it should be borne in mind first that the committee heard all the evidence it was possible to hear without repetitious utterances; secondly, that the acute situation in Vancouver, alone, demands urgent, though nevertheless careful investigation, looking towards a prompt and speedy solution.

Just a word or two regarding the committee itself. I think every member of the committee right at the start of the inquiry realized the magnitude and the seriousness of the problem we had been instructed to investigate. Later, as our inquiry proceeded, all were agreed that a change should be made in the treatment of drug addicts and that simply throwing them into jail was no solution of the problem. It was with this thought in mind that the committee recommended humane treatment looking to a possible cure and rehabilitation of the drug addict. It is indeed gratifying therefore to hear that the Honourable Mr. Bonner, Attorney General of British Columbia, has publicly stated he is ready and willing to accept the committee's recommendation as to treatment. Personally it is now my hope and expectation that the federal Government, as soon as possible, will make all the necessary changes to implement the recommendations made in the report, which we believe to be their responsibility, including not only imposing minimum sentences for all drug traffickers, wherever found, but also severe minimum sentences up to life for those caught importing narcotic drugs.

As Chairman of the Special Committee I would be remiss in my duty if I did not express appreciation to all honourable senators who took an active part in the deliberations of our inquiry. Particularly am I pleased—yes, and somewhat proud too, as Chairman—of the splendid showing the committee made not only in Vancouver, but also in Montreal and Toronto. When it is remembered that the committee sat a total of 110 hours, and that out of 23 members the average attendance was eleven members, it should refute any statement made that all the Senate does is to sit three days a week for a short time each day.

It is my sincere hope also that what has been accomplished by the members of the Special Committee appointed to investigate the narcotic drug problem may be an intimation to the Government to give more inquiries of this nature to the Senate rather than to set up so many Royal Commissions. There is, I realize, a place for Royal Commissions, but, generally, speaking, senators —and especially those who have served the people in municipal, provincial or federal governments—have more practical experience in public and national affairs and are closer to the thinking of the people generally than are many of the persons appointed to Royal Commissions. I am not overlooking the fact there are striking exceptions to this statement.

Before moving the adoption of the report, I want to thank again all the members of the committee for the support they gave me as their Chairman. It is my opinion that they all enjoyed the work. I know I did. Thanks to the keen interest taken by the members and the co-operation given by them, all our deliberations were fairly harmonious.

Finally, on behalf of the committee I want to thank those of the staff and others who so ably assisted in all our deliberations. Special mention should be made of the Clerk of the Committee, Mr. John A. Hinds, whose loyalty and services, particularly to myself, were invaluable. Thanks should also go to our able Counsel, Mr. A. H. Lieff, Q.C., whose indefatigable services rendered were a great asset particularly to myself as chairman. The experienced and competent services rendered by Mr. Robert Curran, Legal Adviser of the Department of National Health and Welfare, should not be overlooked. The submission of his evidence following a visit to the United States, particularly to Lexington, was an excellent and worth-while contribution.

Finally, I want to thank Commissioner C. W. Harvison, Director of Operations and Criminal Investigations, Royal Canadian Mounted Police. His untiring interest and efforts on behalf of the committee while in Vancouver were deeply appreciated by all members.

Honourable senators, I move the adoption of the report.

(Translation):

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, as a member of the Narcotics Committee, may I be allowed to congratulate the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) upon his excellent report. We are all proud of having had such a devoted and clear-sighted chairman.

I wish to extend to the senator not only my personal thanks, but also those of the addicts who, tomorrow, will owe their rehabilitation to the work of our committee as well as to the co-operation of all parties concerned. Our whole country is grateful to him. We not only want to cure, but we wish more especially to prevent, so that Canada may become stronger, morally, spiritually and physically.

(Text):

On behalf of the members of the Special Committee on the Traffic in Narcotic Drugs, I wish to compliment the honourable senator from New Westminster upon the splendid work he did as Chairman of our committee. He has rendered a most useful service to the people of Canada. The committee's report embodies, among other things, recommendations for the treatment of drug addicts and for their general welfare. The work done by the committee will also help to improve the prosperity of the country, and will be of benefit morally, spiritually and physically to all Canadians.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, as one of those who attended the committee meetings in Vancouver I should like to say something about the value to Canada of the work done by the committee. I would also like to refer to an editorial that appeared in yesterday's edition of the Ottawa Citizen, which criticized some of our committee's recommendations, including the one that the schools ignore the drug traffic. The editorial urged that, although rejected by our committee, the idea of clinics where addicts could get drugs cheaply under supervision and within a rehabilitation program should be further investigated, and it suggested that this would be an effective way to take the profit out of the drug traffic.

Addicts interviewed by the committee at Oakalla Prison claimed that if they were given a certain dosage they could perform useful work. However, I think the present system of sending violators to jails where they cannot get drugs acts as a deterrent. If the Government attempted to set up a clinic or permitted doctors to give out dosages at a nominal fee, where would the whole thing end? What would deter young people from acquiring the habit? Addicts themselves told us they never induce another person to take drugs. On the other hand, we had very direct evidence that it is chiefly by association with addicts that the habit is formed.

In any event, we learned that a number of addicts are scattered throughout Canada. For that reason, I feel that it might be worth while for the federal Government to consider the establishment of an institution similar to that in Lexington, Kentucky, with a large acreage in nice surroundings, where livestock could be kept. In a great many cases, apparently, husbands and wives both become addicts. Such couples could live normal lives and find something useful to do in an institution of the type I have in mind. Investigation has shown that many young addicts have never done any useful type of work.

I notice that the committee's report states that many addicts come from broken homes. I objected when it was added that many came from a poor environment, and no doubt where the standard of living was very low. Honourable senators, as I see it, the greater number come from homes where there is too much idleness and where there is no useful work to be done. I recall that some sixty years ago a great number of boys from the Barnardo's Homes and similar institutions in the Old Country, were taken into private homes up and down the Ottawa Valley on both sides of the river. Some of them became mayors and members of parliament, while others went to the west and became prominent in various communities. A woman who appeared before our committee got very heated over the whole subject, and said, "What would you do with a fifteen year old boy or girl who went astray?" Well, I suggested the old woodshed and the strap. The boys of whom I am speaking, many of whom went on the farm and into lumber camps when they were about thirteen years of age, were not idle for one minute. In spite of the fact that they received no affection, not one of them that I heard of became an addict or got into any trouble at all. At least, they were trained to work. I suggest that idleness is one of the chief causes of drug addiction. The men I saw in Oakalla were potentially fine looking men who should be filling responsible positions.

So many of these young addicts—and I say this for the benefit of boys and girls—are too ready to blame the police for not getting a break, and say that they are ready to withdraw from the drug habit and work but that the police notify their employers. They have many other excuses to offer. In answer to that, I say that, regardless of circumstances in the home or anywhere else, any boy or girl with the spark within himself or herself can overcome the drug habit. It is almost impossible for any government, provincial or federal to help addicts unless they themselves are determined to lead a different type of life. I think of the old song that was very popular at the turn of the century:

> Whether you rise, or whether you fall,
> As life you are travelling through;
> Whether you gather respect or gather contempt,
> All will depend upon you.

I am inclined to think that a person brought up in poor circumstances has an advantage over one who had all the comforts of life, and that the poor man's son needs a better personality in order to survive than the rich man's son does. Perhaps the poor boy has an easier task in making a success of life.

Many doctors and others appeared before our committee. I was interested in Magistrate Orr, of Vancouver, who told us that in his experience alcoholism was the cause of more crime than drugs were. I thought that was a startling statement to make. He said that it only takes a month or so to become a drug addict but about three years to become an alcoholic. Honourable senators, I think that Alcoholics Anonymous, Narcotics Anonymous and similar associations are doing a very good work and that every encouragement should be given to them.

I do not think there is anything further I need say. It has been an interesting experience and a privilege for me to serve on the committee, and I am sure that all who served did so with a desire to help their fellow-men. At times I feel critical of people who allow themselves to become addicted to drugs but perhaps one should not judge them. However, I believe that there is hope for any man or woman who has the spark and willingness to fight the habit. I believe it is possible for any addict to cure himself, if he desires to do so and is willing to work. Of course, a change of environment is absolutely necessary in order that he can be kept healthy and be given a fair chance to fight this curse.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Howden, the debate was adjourned.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

His Excellency the Administrator having come and being seated upon the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Speaker, His Excellency was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act for the relief of Franga Beryl Harker Stinson.

An Act for the relief of Enid Gertrude Brooks Bray.

An Act for the relief of Shirley Pollack Nadler.

An Act for the relief of Isidore Hoffman.

An Act for the relief of Ethel Dworkin Abrams.

An Act for the relief of Michael Moses Scullion.

An Act for the relief of Clifford Joseph Linehan.

An Act for the relief of Irene Furlong Walters.

An Act for the relief of Joyce Davies Javallas.

An Act for the relief of Freida Schecter Lupovitch.

An Act for the relief of Gertie Tryansky Katz.

An Act for the relief of Olive Gertrude Meredith Bateman.

An Act for the relief of David Sandler.

An Act for the relief of Marcel Deslauriers.

An Act for the relief of Delmar Ross Andreis.

An Act for the relief of Elizabeth Blanche Nelson Mallozzi.

An Act for the relief of Glennice Maude Hunter Garayt.

An Act for the relief of Irene Jessie Hillson Towes.

An Act for the relief of Vivian Ruth Law Alarie.

An Act for the relief of Joseph Antonio Campeol.

An Act for the relief of Mary Matilda Getto Paquin.

An Act for the relief of Ruth Nourse Tomlinson Wilson.

An Act for the relief of Joseph Henri Marcel Giguere.

An Act for the relief of Edith Isabella Bond Brown.

An Act for the relief of Yolande Joos Thompson.

An Act for the relief of Norva Florence Lemon Farley.

An Act for the relief of Freda Marie Johnston Storey.

An Act for the relief of Jack Beattie Thompson.

An Act for the relief of Florence Mary Ann Meakin O'Ranski.

An Act for the relief of Theophile Kulczycki.

An Act for the relief of William Michael Grayburn.

An Act for the relief of Katharine Leitner Bouchard Frankenburg.

An Act for the relief of Clara Gaetan Milot Fullerton.

An Act for the relief of Lily Shenker Silverton.

An Act for the relief of Alsye May Lissemore Masterson.

An Act for the relief of Sylvia Knelman Wiseman.

An Act for the relief of Sara Beiss Stein.

An Act for the relief of Veronica Vera Bordenuik Reidt.

An Act for the relief of George Gerald Melville Scally.

An Act for the relief of Joseph William James Tanney.

An Act for the relief of Aline Mailloux Simoneau.

An Act for the relief of Margaret Violet Oswald Nicol MacIver.

An Act for the relief of Irving Umansky.

An Act for the relief of Veronica Forrester Rose Kennedy.

An Act for the relief of Marie Therese Jeannette Mainville Froment.

An Act for the relief of Goldie Moscovitch Katz.

An Act for the relief of Yvette Cayer Lefebvre.

An Act for the relief of Regina Weiner Strelezky Distelman.

An Act for the relief of Marie-Louise Ashby Tremblay.

An Act for the relief of Lorna Greenberg Buium.

An Act for the relief of Myrtle Ada Lewin Derbridge.

An Act for the relief of Georges Etienne Barry.

An Act for the relief of Eileen Bayliss Roberts.

An Act for the relief of Ernest Augustus Lepage.

An Act for the relief of Rosaire Jacques Rene Tetrault.

An Act for the relief of Phyllis Lucy Stiles Beal.

An Act for the relief of Margaret Durning Mullins.

An Act for the relief of Mary Elizabeth Lorraine Callard Ramsay.

An Act for the relief of Ann Mary Allward Spighi.

An Act for the relief of Anne Rynski Vincent.

An Act for the relief of Dora Helen Simmons Glancy.

An Act for the relief of Joseph Louis Armand Carrier.

An Act for the relief of Marie Merilda Longval Roy.

An Act for the relief of Charles Edouard Thibodeau.

An Act for the relief of Rose Bowman Fox.

An Act for the relief of Marguerite Gladys Letitia Mathers Grimsdale.

An Act for the relief of Jennie Switzman Rashcovsky.

An Act for the relief of Charles Ryerson Stewart.

An Act for the relief of Hilda Emmalin Christensen Taylor.

An Act for the relief of Glendon Joseph Lynes.

An Act for the relief of Kenneth Rae Story.

An Act for the relief of Joseph Marcel Plourde.

An Act for the relief of Mayo Arthur Perrin Harrigan.

An Act to incorporate Petroleum Transmission Company.

An Act respecting The Commercial Travellers' Association of Canada.

An Act to incorporate S & M Pipeline Limited.

An Act to incorporate Yukon Pipelines Limited.

An Act to amend the Government Employees Compensation Act.

An Act to amend the Prisons and Reformatories Act.

An Act respecting the Boundary between the Provinces of Alberta and British Columbia.

An Act to amend the Veterans Benefit Act, 1954.

An Act respecting the New Westminster Harbour Commissioners.

An Act to amend the Customs Act.

An Act to Implement a Convention on Great Lakes Fisheries between Canada and the United States.

An Act to incorporate Stanmount Pipe Line Company.

An Act respecting The Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company.

An Act to incorporate Gillespie Mortgage Corporation.

An Act respecting Westcoast Transmission Company Limited.

An Act to incorporate Trans-Prairie Pipelines of Canada, Ltd.

An Act to incorporate Trans-Border Pipeline Company Ltd.

An Act to amend the National Parks Act and to establish a National Park in the Province of Newfoundland.

An Act respecting Equitable Fire Insurance Company of Canada.

An Act to incorporate The Canadian Union Conference Corporation of Seventh-day Adventists.

An Act to incorporate Consolidated Pipe Lines Company.

An Act to incorporate Baudette and Rainy River Municipal Bridge Company.

An Act respecting the Inspection of Meat and Meat Products Entering into International and Interprovincial Trade.

An Act to establish National Standards for Agricultural Products and to Regulate International and Interprovincial Trade in Agricultural Products.

An Act to amend the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act.

An Act respecting the Canadian Forces.

An Act to amend the Railway Act.

An Act to approve an agreement between The Toronto Harbour Commissioners, The Toronto Terminals Railway Company, Canadian National Railway Company and Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

An Act to amend the Library of Parliament Act.

An Act to amend the Blind Persons Act.

An Act respecting Canadian National Railways.

An Act respecting Canadian National Railways and to provide for the refunding of matured, maturing and callable financial obligations.

An Act to provide for the provision of moneys to meet certain capital expenditures of the Canadian National Railways System during the calendar year 1955, and to authorize the guarantee by Her Majesty of certain securities to be issued by the Canadian National Railway Company.

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1956.

The House of Commons withdrew.

His Excellency the Administrator was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, June 29, 1955

The Senate met at 3 p.m., Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

MUNICIPAL GRANTS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. W. D. Euler presented the report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill 258.

The report was read by the clerk assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (258) intituled: "An Act to amend the Municipal Grants Act", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 23, 1955, examined the said bill, and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Euler: I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE

SECOND REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON CERTAIN QUESTIONS OF CRIMINAL LAW

Hon. John A. McDonald: Honourable senators, I beg to present the second report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Capital and Corporal Punishment and Lotteries.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Ordered that the report lie on the Table.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: I move that the report be printed as an appendix to the Debates of the Senate of this day. If that motion is passed we can dispense with the reading of the report at this time.

The motion was agreed to.

For text of the report see Appendix to today's Hansard pp. 744-5.

JUDGES BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald moved the third reading of Bill 505, an Act to amend the Judges Act, and the judicature provisions of the Yukon Act and the Northwest Territories Act.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, I offered some opposition to this bill when it was before the house for second reading. I notice that in addition to increasing the salaries of judges across the board it authorizes the appointment of judges for the Northwest Territories and the Yukon.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: No; the bill amends the Northwest Territories Act to provide a judge for the Territorial Court. It also provides for the appointment of two additional judges for British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. Horner: But one for the Yukon Territory?

Hon. Mr. Haig: No, there is a judge for the Yukon now.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes, there is a judge for the Yukon now, and he is ex officio a judge for the Northwest Territories. This bill provides for a separate judge for the Northwest Territories.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Possibly that provision is needed and a saving of expense may be effected on account of the long travelling distances, to Aklavik, the Mackenzie District delta, and other points which I imagine would be served by the new appointee. So possibly I would have no objection to that.

For the benefit of honourable senators who were not present on second reading of this bill and who perhaps were not interested in reading the debate, I want to repeat a few remarks which I made then. I said that I thought this was a particularly inopportune time to bring in a bill of this kind, because I think we must face the fact that if we are to continue to exist as an exporting nation the time is coming, and may occur before this year has ended, when lower wages will have to be paid. I regret very much that that may be so. According to the Bureau of Statistics there has been a decline in farm income of seven per cent, and I feel certain that there will be a further decline. The final payment to the producers in Western Canada this year was a mere six cents a bushel. It is because of the great importance I attach to the feelings of the ordinary people in the country that I think this measure is unwise at the present time.

I also stated during the debate on second reading that a bill of this kind might perhaps be embarrassing to members of the legal profession, and I wondered whether they would be able to take an unbiased view of such a measure. On each and every occasion when there is any discussion on a matter affecting judges every member of Parliament who is a lawyer seems to feel it is his bounden duty to come to the aid of the judges. Now, to my way of thinking that is not a sign of what I would call a robust democracy.

In the debate on second reading the hon ourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon Mr. Roebuck) spoke of the need for increased salaries to judges because of the cost of living at the standard which they are perhaps expected to maintain. In his remarks he suggested that living costs in Blaine Lake were much lower than in Toronto. May I tell him that we in Western Canada no longer sleep in the hay nor live in sod huts, and that the cost of living in Blaine Lake at a standard which we as human beings require is higher than in Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: What about the cost of rent in Blaine Lake?

Hon. Mr. Horner: The rent for a house in Blaine Lake with services comparable to those supplied in Toronto is higher than in Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Then I am glad I do not live in Blaine Lake.

Hon. Mr. Horner: And what about the higher cost of automobiles in the west? As I say, we do not sleep in the hay now, and if we can help it we do not want to go back to that level of living.

My honourable friend also suggested that the farmers in Western Canada today are well off. Amazing as it may seem, the fact is that some have done quite well. But if my friend would take the trouble to look up the record of unpaid taxes on Prairie farms he would get a much more accurate picture. We have just come through one year of partial crop failure, and now we are headed for another.

I say to honourable senators that we must never lose sight of the process through which the Western farmer must go in his attempt to make ends meet. Farming in that section of the country is not as it is in Ontario, where the farmer has a continuing revenue from grazing stock and other sources. For instance, each year half of our land is not seeded but is kept in what we call a "blacked" state, in an effort to conserve the moisture that we need for the next year's crop. To do this in a rainy season may cost the farmer $8 per acre, and he receives absolutely no return from that land. And if it happens that he has a crop failure the year after that in which the land was "blacked", he has lost the use of it for two years. In Western Canada we are going to considerable expense in building high schools. As a result taxes have increased to the point where in many areas the rate is now $1 an acre. When one thinks back to the days when in that great section of the country the land with all its fertility was sold for $1 an acre, one realizes how very high this tax is.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: But what is the land worth today?

Hon. Mr. Horner: I answer my friend by asking him what will it be worth if we get a few dry years and the top soil blows away?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Certainly the land is worth more than $1 an acre today.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Some of it is, but if the fertility blows out of it, it may not be worth that much.

My point is that if a farmer has to pay a tax rate of $1 an acre, or perhaps even $2, he soon finds himself in the position of buying his land the second time. I would remind my friend that while Marilyn Bell, a resident of Ontario, swam across Lake Ontario, it does not follow that all Ontarions can do so. Likewise, while it is true that a few Western farmers have managed to carry on their operations so successfully that they have made some profit for themselves and have even paid income tax, by and large that is not the position of Western farmers today.

However, in discussing the measure before the house, we must not forget that judges are human beings and are entitled to some of the good things of life. In a dispatch from Quebec, in the morning press comment was made on the fact that the colleges in that province are turning out three times as many lawyers as geologists. In spite of the fact that the greater need is for geologists to develop the country and industry, the colleges are graduating lawyers in abundance. And I might say that all Canadian universities are doing the same thing. The honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity said that many young lawyers in Ontario have incomes of $10,500 a year. Well, I would like him to show me the young man who, unless he is in some particularly fortunate circumstance, is earning $10,000 a year in the practice of law. There is certainly no young man in Western Canada doing that. There are many of them quite able lawyers, who, if they do not have some sort of a side-line, such as real estate, cannot make a living practising law.

We have heard a lot of argument to the effect that it will be impossible to find suitable men for appointment to the Bench unless the judges' salaries are raised. To my mind, that simply is not a fact. And even if the salaries are increased there will still be judges who make mistakes, just as there always have been. They are only human.

As a result of their mistakes there will be many appeals and costly litigation. An outstanding appeal that I might mention was the one that was taken to the Privy Council from a Supreme Court judgment which ruled that women were not persons within the meaning of a section of the British North America Act. Well, if the judges' salaries are increased judgments will still be reversed, just as that one was.

Honourable senators, so far as the Senate is concerned I think that the present is an excellent occasion on which to demonstrate our independence. There was some boasting in this chamber not long ago about who were the great independents here. I think this is a wonderful opportunity for them to demonstrate their independence in what I consider to be a first-class cause.

The honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity told us that the Minister of Finance predicted Canada would have a larger national production this year than at any time in her history. I only hope that he is not entirely too optimistic, but I am afraid that he is. The newspapers this morning carried a dispatch to the effect that 800 textile workers are meeting for the purpose of considering a proposed reduction in wages in order to enable their industry to carry on. I want to draw attention to what I consider was a very strange remark by the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity, that the textile industry should be let go to the wall, that it does not belong to this country—

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I did not use that phrase.

Hon. Mr. Horner: You said the textile industry was not indigenous to this country.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Horner: All right. Then why not go on and say that because we have to keep our cattle in the barn during the winter, when snow is on the ground, we should import our beef cattle from Argentine, New Zealand and Australia? A similar case could be made out in favour of importation of butter. And what about nylon and rayon? We have a surplus of wood pulp in this country, but the honourable senator might go so far as to state that Canada should not be producing these materials either.

Honourable senators, as I see it a serious problem that we are facing today is the high cost of labour in the various articles that we manufacture. We have raw materials in abundance, but, as I said earlier, the cost of labour is a matter that this country is going to have to deal with if we are to continue to sell our products abroad.

An Hon. Senator: Are you in favour of free trade?

Hon. Mr. Horner: Surely I am in favour of free trade.

The press today contains an article by a professor pointing out the devious methods that this Government is applying, through the application of dumping regulations and so on, which have the effect of a tariff, and he said that the Government should come out frankly and call it a tariff for protection purposes. He is complaining on that score.

Let me repeat: in view of the economic situation that we are facing today—and I emphasize that the situation is becoming increasingly difficult for farmers—I think this is a very inopportune time to bring this legislation forward. I therefore wish to move an amendment in the following words:

That Bill 505 be not read a third time this day, but this day six months.

In moving that amendment, honourable senators, I have done my duty as I see it.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Is there a seconder for the amendment?

Hon. Mr. Horner: Is that necessary?

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Yes.

As there is no seconder, I declare the amendment out of order.

Honourable senators, the question is on the motion for third reading of Bill 505, an Act to amend the Judges Act, and the judicature provisions of the Yukon Act and the Northwest Territories Act. Is it your pleasure to adopt the motion?

Hon. Mr. Horner: On division.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I do not think any reply is necessary when the honourable gentleman cannot find a seconder, but I rise to compliment him. I did so when this same bill was before us on a previous occasion. I said then and I say now that it is difficult to oppose public expenditures and very easy to be generous with other people's money. The honourable gentleman has taken the stand that he believes to be sound, but with which all the rest of us disagree, and I compliment him.

Hon. Mr. Horner: I am not so sure whether you all do disagree.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I do not compliment him, however, on the remarks he has made about those who have favoured this bill, imputing motives of cowardice or self-interest or something of that kind because we of the legal profession, who know something about the matter, have advocated the payment of these increased salaries. He suggests that our action is not robust democracy. He seems to think that when he, as a farmer, advocates the cause of the farmers, that is robust democracy. Then why should it be otherwise when the profession of which one knows something happens to be the law? I do not congratulate him on his reasoning in this matter, nor for calling into question the bona fides of those of the legal profession who have expressed themselves and who will vote in favour of this bill. Neither do I agree with his statement that, because of competition from abroad, we are pricing ourselves out of the international market through high wages.

Hon. Mr. Horner: It is so.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: My friend says it is so. Well, one can imagine wages so high that it would be difficult for us to sell some of our products. But this is a country with a high standard of living, not only for those who earn wages but for those who run farms. There are no other farmers in the world whose standard of living is as high as that of the Canadian farmers. Far be it from me to say that that standard should be reduced to enable them to compete more effectively in foreign markets. As a matter of fact we have been very successful in meeting competition in days gone by. The honourable senator talks about high wages, but for some reason—and I have noticed this on a number of occasions—he never speaks about high land values, although there has been a quiet admission that some Western lands for which the farmers once paid a dollar an acre are not selling for any such low figure today. Indeed, one notes all over Canada increases in land values which, particularly around the great cities, have reached fantastic figures. If any restrictions are necessary to enable us to compete more effectively it is in the direction of land values, not in wages, that the first reduction should take place.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Tut, tut.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: My friend says "Tut, tut". I suppose he regards it as robust democracy to be on the side of the land speculator and the land hog, not on the side of the worker who earns wages. My thought is that the first thing we should do is investigate the exorbitant prices, of which I could give many examples, charged for the mere privilege of doing something, rather than attempt a reduction of the wages of those who do do something.

I predict that we shall carry this bill almost unanimously, and that there is no justifiable imputation against anybody who votes to pay a decent salary to the men who are doing a most important job in our communities.

Hon. Thomas Vien: Honourable senators, among the many things of which the people of Great Britain and Canada can be rightly proud, is the very high character of their Judiciary. No country in the world can boast of judges who hold a higher place in the estimation of their people. In Canada we should endeavour to maintain the dignity of our Judiciary; Canadian citizens, in every walk of life, entrust their lives, their properties, their liberties to the keeping of the men who are called to the Bench. Canadians will be a free, a democratic and a happy people only as long as they may look up with pride to their judges; only as long as these judges continue to discharge their duties as honourably and conscientiously as they have done in the past, and are doing now. Members of our Judiciary are selected from members of the Bar who possess the best professional qualifications. To begin with, they must have been actively engaged in the practice of law for at least ten years. They are chosen by the Minister of Justice—an executive who, at all times since Confederation, has been an eminent jurist—who exercises a wise discretion in the selection of the men who are called to the Bench.

How could we expect eminent lawyers to accept appointment to the Bench unless they are assured, not of adequate or complete compensation, but at least of reasonable compensation for what they have to give up? It would be most unfortunate for us all if the choice of appointees had to be limited to men who are unable to make a living in their profession and who seek judgeship. Let us give the Minister a free hand to select judges from among men who have made a success of their professional practice, men who would make a financial sacrifice if they accepted appointment. This proposed increase in the salaries of judges looms large only in the eyes of those who do not stop to consider the question under all its aspects. For instance, how much of the $2,500 increase would remain in the hands of the judge and how much would go back to the Crown? The Crown gives with one hand and takes back with the other. High Court judges are now receiving $14,400; if this bill is passed, they will get $16,900, and that would put them into a higher income tax bracket.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: About one-third of their entire salary goes in taxation.

Hon. Mr. Vien: Let us consider what an ordinary man, who is industrious and sober, can make in his trade or commerce or chosen profession, by contrast with the eleven or twelve thousand dollars net which is left to the judge. We do not expect a judge to live as a pauper; we expect him to maintain his family and himself on a dignified level. He cannot live in the slums, nor can he dress shabbily. Furthermore, a man is usually called to the Bench at a time in life when his children, if he has any, are attending universities or other expensive institutions of education. A judge has to incur certain necessary expenses and has to maintain a fairly high standard of living. I daresay that all reasonable citizens, when considering the net salary left to a judge after he has paid his income taxes, will applaud us for having voted this measure. Indeed, many will deplore that compensation to judges will not be higher than that fixed by this bill.

Honourable senators, I believe this measure will help to keep our Judiciary at its present high standard and, for that reason, I shall very gladly vote for it.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed, on division.

INTERNATIONAL RIVER IMPROVEMENTS BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald moved the third reading of Bill 3, an Act respecting the construction, operation and maintenance of international river improvements.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

CANADA ELECTIONS BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. William H. Golding moved the second reading of Bill 415, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act.

He said: Honourable senators, in moving the second reading of Bill 415, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act, I should give the house something of its background and a few of the reasons why it is before us at this time.

I may say that on February 25 last reference was made by the House of Commons to their Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, as follows:

That the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections be instructed to study the several amendments to the Canada Elections Act, and amendments thereto, suggested by the Chief Electoral Officer, to study the said act, to suggest to the house such amendments as the committee may deem advisable and that the committee be also empowered to inquire into the different methods of effecting the adjustment of representation;

It will be noticed that this is a double-barrel reference, the first part authorizing the study of amendments to the Canada Elections Act, and the second part empowering the committee to inquire into different methods of effecting the adjustment of representation. I shall have something to say about this later on.

The committee held its first meeting on Tuesday, March 8, having before it on that date certain amendments proposed by the Department of the Secretary of State, the Chief Electoral Officer and some twenty-nine individuals and groups, including two judges.

All these people had evidently taken sufficient interest in this problem to write to the committee offering suggested amendments to our Elections Act. It is surely a healthy sign to have so many of our citizens interested in legislation of this kind. I am sure the committee deeply appreciated having their recommendations, for they must have been a great help in reaching the conclusions on the task which had been assigned to the committee.

Honourable senators will find a complete list of these recommendations and the names of those making them in the No. 1 copy of the committees Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence, dated March 8, 1955. I have here a list of the names and I believe they should be put in our records. I feel that those who have shown such interest in the Elections Act should be recognized in the Senate's records as well as in those of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections of the other place. Therefore, with leave of the Senate, I would ask that this list be placed on Hansard.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Has the honourable senator the unanimous consent of the house to have this list placed on Hansard?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The list is as follows:

1. Jean-François Pouliot, M.P., Rivière-du-Loup, P.Q.
2. United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America, Toronto, Ontario.
3. Trades and Labour Congress of Canada.
4. Harvey Caulfield, Mount Forest, Ontario.
5. Canadian Teachers' Federation, Ottawa, Ontario.
6. Maurice C. Punshon, Toronto, Ontario.
7. Egan Chambers, Mount Royal, P.Q.
8. His Honour Judge Forsyth, Toronto, Ontario.
9. M. A. Myren, Portage-la-Prairie, Manitoba.
10. Robert Fair, M.P., Ottawa, Ontario.
11. United-Automobile-Aircraft-Agricultural Implement Workers of America (UAW-CIO) Local 439, Toronto, Ontario.
12. Manitoba Summer School, University of Manitoba.
13. Summer Session Students' Association of the University of British Columbia.
14. His Honour Judge Morley, Owen Sound, Ontario.

15. T. C. Anderson, Canadian National Steamships.
16. Provincial Normal School, Tuxedo, Manitoba.
17. F. H. Tanner, East Gore, N.S.
18. Graham P. Smith, Calgary, Alta.
19. A. A. Meadows, Guelph, Ontario.
20. PAC-CCL Political Action Committee, Toronto, Ontario.
21. J. P. Doherty, Provost, Alta.
22. Federation Women's Institutes of Canada, Unionville, Ont.
23. The Canadian Chamber of Commerce, Montreal, P.Q.
24. Robert Hewitt, Westmount, P.Q.
25. Leonora Starr, Newmarket, Ontario.
26. Major Gen. G. R. Pearkes, Ottawa, Ontario.
27. J. P. Doherty, Provost, Alta.
28. Donald H. Doherty, Secretary, District No. 4 Council, International Chemical Workers' Union, Toronto, Ontario.
29. Michael Engel, Montreal, P.Q.

Hon. Mr. Golding: The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections held a number of meetings—I believe twelve, to be exact—and a perusal of the Minutes clearly indicates they gave careful detailed study to the subject matter assigned to them. I have read these Minutes, and as far as I am concerned they show that the committee did an excellent job.

On April 29 the committee submitted their second report, which included a draft bill. That draft bill embodied the conclusions reached by the committee, as the present bill does.

While the committee reported their conclusions so far as the first phase of their reference was concerned, that of making amendments to our Elections Act, they felt that they had neither the time nor the factual data to deal with the second phase of their reference, namely, to inquire into the different methods of effecting the adjustment of representations. They requested that this part of their inquiry should be left over for another session and this has been done. Therefore, the present bill deals with amendments made to the Elections Act by the committee and approved by the House of Commons after long and careful study.

This bill deals with the position of the Chief Electoral Officer. He will now be given the full status of a deputy minister, and his remuneration will be increased from his present salary of $12,000 to $13,500.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Is that Mr. Castonguay?

Hon. Mr. Golding: Yes. I believe this change has general approval, for in reading the discussions on this problem it is a great source of satisfaction to find so many members from the different political parties speaking so highly of the ability and the efficiency of the Chief Electoral Officer.

While this bill does seem to be quite lengthy, I am sure if we analyse it carefully we will find it is not a controversial bill at all. It simply makes amendments to keep pace with changing times, and, of course, to meet the request of the department and the Chief Electoral Officer, who finds in the operation of the act that some amendments are really necessary.

While some of the proposed changes are important, for the most part they are technical and remedial.

When the act was being studied by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, the committee agreed to extend the time for nomination day to 21 days before the date of an election, instead of the present 14 days, in all districts other than those listed in Schedule 4 of the Elections Act.

The districts in Schedule 4 are as follows:—

Ontario: Cochrane, Kenora-Rainy River, and Port Arthur.

Quebec: Chapleau and Saguenay.

Newfoundland: Bonavista - Twillingate, Burin-Burgeo, Grand Falls-White Bay, Humber-St. George's and Trinity-Conception.

Manitoba: Churchill.

Saskatchewan: Mackenzie, Meadow Lake, Melfort, and Prince Albert.

Alberta: Athabaska, Jasper-Edson, and Peace River.

British Columbia: Cariboo and Skeena.

Yukon and Northwest Territories: Yukon-Mackenzie River.

In the districts I have just named under Schedule 4, the time for nomination day will remain as it is, namely, 28 days before the day of election.

When this bill was considered by the Committee of the Whole in the House of Commons, the change which had been made by the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections to have nomination day 21 days before the election day was not favourably received. In fact, members from all parties in the house indicated their opposition to such a change. As a result of this opposition, amendments were made to the draft bill resulting in the date for nomination being left as it was, namely, 14 days before the day of the election. This met with general approval by the Committee of the Whole. That simply means that the amendment made in the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections has been eliminated and is not in the bill at all.

Under this bill it will be permissible for a candidate to spend $2,000 on personal expenses, instead of $1,000 as under our present legislation. There was no opposition to this amendment, as I believe all members fully realize how the costs of elections have gone up. The use of radio, television and other modern appliances has sent the costs to candidates very high.

The bill provides that the wife of a serviceman will be entitled to vote if she is living abroad with her husband where he is stationed.

The bill reduces from eight to two days before an election the period in which a person is not permitted to supply, display, or wear badges, ribbons, flags, etc., indicating which party or candidate he is supporting.

There are many amendments, technical, remedial and consequential, all of which are intended to improve the situation for the electors, the Department of the Secretary of State and our Chief Electoral Officer.

Honourable senators, I would like to emphasize this point: the bill as finally passed by the other place, and as it now stands, met with the general approval of the members. I therefore recommend that the Senate adopt the bill as it is. After all, it is the members of the other house who are affected.

Hon. Mr. Howard: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Golding: We in the Senate are not affected by the bill. The members of the other house reached agreement on the bill as it now stands, and I think we should accept it as it is, and give it second and third readings.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Honourable senators, first I wish to compliment my honourable friend who has just taken his seat upon his admirable explanation of the bill. May I ask him a question about the costs of elections, which was an item to be held for future discussion? I recall that some remarks were made when the bill was debated in the House of Commons, particularly by the veteran member for Quebec South. I am just wondering if that phase of the subject is likely to receive any further attention next session.

Hon. Mr. Golding: I think there was considerable discussion on that point, but the committee asked the house to relieve it of proceeding with that part of the inquiry at the present time. The bill, therefore, simply makes amendments to the Elections Act.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask the honourable gentleman a question? Did any discussion take place with regard to progress made in the voting system? For instance, the transferable vote in single-member constituencies is a matter that has engaged the thought of Canadian citizens for some considerable time. Was attention given to any proposal of that nature?

Hon. Mr. Golding: That was discussed in committee, but favourable action was not taken.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Were any of the parties favourable to it?

Hon. Mr. Golding: The matter was discussed, but it was not pressed. That feature is not embodied in the bill at all.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Golding: Next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, may I be permitted to congratulate the honourable senator from Huron-Perth (Hon. Mr. Golding) on his admirable explanation of this bill, and to say that I agree that it is unnecessary to refer the bill to a committee of this house, since it has been thoroughly studied by a committee of the other house. I understand that it will be placed on the Order Paper for third reading next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Next sitting.

NARCOTIC DRUG TRAFFIC

REPORT OF COMMITTEE CONCURRED IN

The Senate resumed from yesterday the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Reid for concurrence in the final report of the Special Committee appointed to inquire into and report upon the traffic in narcotic drugs.

Hon. John P. Howden: Honourable senators as the report of the committee was fully placed before the house yesterday by the honourable chairman (Hon. Mr. Reid), it is unnecessary for me at this time to do more than touch on some points which may bear special mention.

Speaking as a member of that committee, I may say that we were early impressed by the testimony received. The narcotic drug evil has been of very dangerous import—a spreading plague like smallpox or cholera or syphilis. On the few former occasions when the Standing Committee on Public Health and Welfare met and discussed the menace of addiction, I voiced the opinion that there was not a hospital or an institution throughout the length and breadth of our land where the unfortunate addicts could receive asylum or would be taken in and treated, and that there was not much hope for them under these circumstances. That statement was true when it was made, though more recently there has been some improvement. Now there is at least occasional asylum for treating them, but rather by way of punishment; and when they are discharged from jail, all too soon they go out, still suffering from the hangover of their opium spree, sober and agonizingly sorry for it, and bitterly resentful mentally. Small wonder that they immediately seek and find a further supply of the drug, and by peddling, theft and worse means the vicious circle goes on.

Some time after the beginning of the present session of Parliament the honourable senator from New Westminster (Hon. Mr. Reid) discussed the matter very freely and well on the floor of the Senate, for which the members of the Senate and addicts and society at large owe him a debt of gratitude. As an outcome of his speech the Senate decided to investigate the whole matter, and a committee was appointed for that purpose.

We sought and received testimony from many well-informed witnesses. They were by no means in universal agreement. Among our early witnesses were the Chief Constables of Vancouver and Edmonton, who testified as to the very deep and difficult nature of the problem. They were of much the same opinion, namely, that addicts should be apprehended, isolated and the drug withdrawn; that they should be treated intelligently and not unkindly, and not released until there seemed to be little doubt of their being cured temporarily at least; that if and when they broke down again they must be returned to the hospital, treated again, and receive good food and proper exercise, and so on, until they were finally returned to health and wellbeing.

While we were at Vancouver we were surprised to hear some quite prominent people suggest that addicts should be supplied with the drug at no expense from "service stations". This they claimed would freeze out the trafficker, and so overcome the chief source of the trouble. We just could not believe their claim, and we soon learned that whereever free drugs had been supplied the evil worsened by leaps and bounds. So we discarded the suggestion. After obtaining and sifting much evidence, we were bound to decide that the only course was to confine the addicts in an isolated institution where they could have no contact with the outside world, and where their habit could be cured and their health restored under intelligent kindly treatment.

Can this be done? Yes, indeed it can. Such a program is proceeding continuously in the United States, at the Public Health Service Centre of the National Institute of Mental Health, at Lexington, Kentucky, under Dr. Harris Isbell as director. He has been in public health service for twenty years, and for the last eleven of those years he has been in charge of this centre.

Now, honourable senators, what we learned from Dr. Isbell is really the meat of the whole situation. When he commenced his work at Lexington fifteen years ago there were approximately 200,000 addicts in the United States of America, and now, by the best official figures, there are only 60,000. Dr. Isbell is a psychiatrist or research scientist. He knows all the answers and gives them freely. He acts on straight lines and does nothing by guesswork. He has restored to health hundreds of addicts and sent them back into lives of useful activity. He spent a whole morning with us in going over his work, and although he was asked many annoying questions he paused to answer them all without exception and to thresh them out with us. He believes in isolation absolutely, but did not think so much of the island idea.

Here is a method, the only watertight method submitted that has proven its worth. When asked by our legal adviser if he would favour our launching such a program as his, Dr. Isbell said he was much in accord with the idea. We do not have such a great number of addicts—about 3,000 odd—but enough to cause concern. For me, I believe the way has been pointed out and that it is up to us to follow.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before the question is put for adoption of the report, I should like to take this opportunity of commending the Chairman (Hon. Mr. Reid) and the members of the Special Committee for their industry and thoroughness in conducting the various phases of this important inquiry. I think it is most gratifying to know that senators of their own free will and accord will give of their time and ability to inquire into a question of this kind.

It will be recalled that during the Easter recess members of this committee voluntarily gave up part of their holiday to hold meetings of the committee for one week in the city of Vancouver. I think that in itself speaks very highly of the spirit in which the committee's work was undertaken and carried through, and it reflects credit upon not only the commitee but the Senate as a whole.

On behalf of those of us who were not on the committee I wish to express grateful appreciation of what the Chairman and members have done in the rendering of splendid service to our country.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I am delighted that the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) has expressed himself so well and so forcefully in this connection. It was suggested to me that some senator who was not on the committee should put on record the gratitude of the house for the services of this committee; but, of course, that has now been done by the Leader of the Government and much better than I could have done it. Still, if I do not presume too far, I would like to say that I fully concur in what he has said, and to add that, like others who were not members of the committee, I have been greatly impressed by its work.

To begin with, the committee attacked a most difficult problem and one to which there appeared to be no obvious answer or real solution; but they gave themselves to the task with energy and determination, and they showed commendable initiative in doing some things that had never been done previously by any committee of this house. I desire to express appreciation particularly of the courage with which they attacked this difficult problem.

They have accomplished a great deal, though it was doubtful whether they could when they started. Through persistent industry and research they accumulated a large fund of information, which will be for countless others as it has been for themselves a source of enlightenment upon a truly serious situation.

I want to say a word, if I may, about the leadership of the Chairman of the committee (Hon. Mr. Reid).

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I understand he was a most acceptable chairman to all the rest of the members of the committee.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I am sure that as years go by the work that has been done by this committee and the report that it has made will be regarded as one of the great achievements of this house.

We are all delighted with what you have done, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Thomas Reid: Honourable senators,—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: If the honourable gentleman speaks now, he will close the debate.

Hon. Mr. Reid: It is indeed gratifying to hear the kind words of the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) and the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity, (Hon. Mr. Roebuck). On behalf of the committee, may I express our appreciation of the recognition of the work we have done. And to the honourable senator from St. Boniface (Hon. Mr. Howden), may I extend my appreciation for his kind words regarding myself as chairman.

When we set out on this inquiry we all realized that the problem was a serious one, and many of us had our own ideas about it. But when we began to hear the evidence which was presented—I think I speak on behalf of most of the members at least—many of us changed our views as to the problem itself and its solution.

One of the things that struck me most forcibly was that it was not just a single problem of curing the drug addict. When we were informed by witnesses that 70 per cent of drug addicts had had long criminal careers before they became addicts I tried to reason out what should be done with such persons who had in the past gained their living not by honest toil but in evil ways. If we undertook to cure them of the drug habit, I wondered what would become of them for the rest of their lives. So the problem was a very complex one.

I am very pleased that, according to a press report, the Honourable Mr. Bonner, Attorney General of British Columbia, is going to set up a pilot plan for treatment of drug addicts. However, I want to make one comment. The Attorney General is reported to have said that he expected the committee would recommend some specific form of treatment. But I would remind honourable senators, as well as the Attorney General, that it was not the duty of this committee to recommend a specific method of treatment. I do not think the committee could be in a position to say what steps should be taken looking to a possible cure.

The honourable senator from St. Boniface mentioned what is being done at Lexington, Kentucky. I am going to suggest to the Attorney General of British Columbia that he or some of his officials, and those whom he is placing in charge of his plan, might be well advised to spend some time visiting and inspecting the United States Public Health Service Centre at Lexington, to see how that institution is carrying on and find out also the results of the treatment of drug addicts in the United States.

To the Vancouver newspapers I wish to say a word regarding their recent criticism. But first may I say that the newspapers generally have been very kind in their remarks regarding the work of the committee and speak highly of the report. However, I suppose the newspapers in Vancouver are, figuratively speaking, beginning to lick their wounds, and in the process they are now beginning to be a little critical of the report itself. I can say to them, however—and I hope this message is conveyed to them—that before they make any more criticism they should first of all read the evidence itself, because every recommendation in the report is based on evidence given before the committee. I predict that if they do read it they will come to much the same conclusions that we came to and will then agree wholeheartedly with our report.

I was pleased that the honourable senator from St. Boniface pointed out that we had turned down the suggestion that free drugs be supplied to addicts in clinics. I do not know why the idea of giving free drugs to addicts still persists. To my mind you might just as well give one or two bottles of whisky daily to an alcoholic. To those who keep on suggesting that clinics for this purpose should be tried out, I wish to say that if they will look over the evidence they will find that out of 13 doctors, including Dr. Isbell, one of the great authorities on drug addiction on the North American continent, only two advocated establishing such clinics. I ask you, were 11 experienced medical men wrong and two lone doctors correct? I hope that this information will be made known to the public, especially to those who are toying with the idea that such clinics would lead to cures. In my opinion, which is based on the evidence, they know not whereof they speak. In our report we have spoken not from our own knowledge, and not from our own experience, but from the wealth of evidence that was placed before us during our inquiry.

Again, on behalf of the committee, I thank honourable senators for their congratulations on the work the committee has done. It helps a great deal to know that our report is appreciated by all members of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the report was concurred in.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

APPENDIX

REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON CAPITAL AND CORPORAL PUNISHMENT AND LOTTERIES

(Presented by Hon. Mr. McDonald. See p. 734.)

The Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Capital and Corporal Punishment and Lotteries begs leave to present the following as its second report.

Establishment of Committee.

On January 14, 1955, the House of Commons resolved to establish a joint committee in effect to resume the studies and continue the inquiries initiated by the corresponding Joint Committee at the previous session of Parliament. On January 26, 1955, the House of Commons appointed its membership to the committee.

On January 25, 1955, the Senate united with the House of Commons in the establishment of the committee and on February 1, 1955, appointed its membership.

Terms of Reference.

The Orders of Reference from both houses, here consolidated, were as follows:

That a joint committee of both houses of Parliament be appointed to inquire into and report upon the questions whether the criminal law of Canada relating to (a) capital punishment, (b) corporal punishment or (c) lotteries should be amended in any respect and, if so, in what manner and to what extent;

That seventeen members of the House of Commons and ten members of the Senate be members of the joint committee on the part of each house; that the quorum of the said committee be nine members thereof; and that Standing Order 65 of the House of Commons be suspended in relation thereto;

That the committee have power to appoint, from among its members, such subcommittees as may be deemed advisable or necessary; to call (send) for persons, papers and records; to sit while both houses are sitting and to report from time to time;

That the Minutes of the Proceedings and the evidence of the Special Joint Committee appointed last session (First Session, Twenty-second Parliament) to inquire into and report upon the foregoing questions, together with all papers and records laid before it, be referred to the said committee;

That the committee have power to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be ordered by the committee for the use of the committee and of Parliament, and that Standing Order 64 of the House of Commons be suspended in relation thereto; and

That the committee have power to engage the services of counsel.

Membership.

The membership of the committee on appointment was as follows:

The Senate (10): The Honourable Senators Aseltine, Bouffard, Farris, Fergusson, Hayden, Hodges, McDonald, Roebuck, Veniot, and Vien. (On March 1, 1955, the Honourable Senator Tremblay was appointed to the committee in substitution for the Honourable Senator Bouffard).

The House of Commons (17): Miss Bennett, Messrs. Boisvert, Brown (Brantford), Brown (Essex West), Cameron (High Park), Fairey, Garson, Leduc (Verdun), Lusby, Mitchell (London), Montgomery, Murphy (Westmorland), Shaw, Mrs. Shipley, Messrs. Thatcher, Valois, and Winch. (On February 21, 1955, Mr. Johnston (Bow River), was appointed to the committee in substitution for Mr. Shaw, and on March 22, 1955, Mr. Thomas was appointed to the committee in substitution for Mr. Johnston (Bow River)).

Organization and Summary of Meetings.

The committee held its first sitting for preliminary organization on February 2, 1955, when the Honourable Senator Salter A. Hayden and Mr. Don. F. Brown, M.P., the Joint Chairman of last session's Committee, were again elected Joint Chairman. At that meeting, the committee also appointed a subcommittee on Agenda and Procedure and again retained the services of Mr. D. G. Blair, Barrister and Solicitor of Ottawa, as counsel to the committee. At its second meeting, held on February 8, 1955, the committee adopted its general procedure for future meetings. Commencing on February 10, 1955, the committee met approximately twice weekly, except during the Easter recess of Parliament, until May 12, 1955, during which period the committee held 22 sittings devoted almost entirely to taking evidence. The committee of last session held 27 such sittings. All hearings were held in open session, excluding in camera hearings for medical evidence on alternative methods of executions, evidence of the executioner on hanging, and evidence taken by counsel from former inmates of penal institutions who had undergone corporal punishment. The evidence of the first two in camera hearings has been printed as taken but the evidence of the inmates has only been printed in summarized form. In addition, where the deliberations of the committee related to procedural and administrative matters, portions of those meetings were conducted in private session. After May 12, 1955, the committee held 5 sittings in private session devoted entirely to its methods and procedures of summarizing and analyzing all evidence taken during both sessions, including the question of a report to Parliament. In all, at this session the committee held 29 meetings and its Subcommittee on Agenda and Procedure met 14 times. The committee of last session held a total of 30 meetings and its subcommittee met 17 times.

Sources of Evidence.

During the course of the inquiries by this and last session's committees, evidence was obtained on all three subjects from the sources listed in an Appendix to your Committee's Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence, No. 21. In addition, miscellaneous representations on all three subjects were received from many individuals and organizations in the form of letters, resolutions, petitions and briefs which were examined and analyzed, along with other reference material obtained through research, for the best possible evidence and for further sources of information.

Your committee very much appreciated this material without which some aspects of its enquiries may have been overlooked or minimized.

At this session your committee printed evidence from 60 individuals and 10 organizations including several of the provincial attorneys general. The committee of last session printed evidence from 40 individuals and 15 organizations including several of the provincial attorneys general.

Approach to and Method of Inquiry.

Your committee and its predecessor recognized early in their proceedings that public opinion was a major factor to be considered in deciding the three issues of capital punishment, corporal punishment and lotteries. It was felt that an extensive and fair coverage of the work of this committee by news agencies would lead to a better informed public opinion and would assist your committee in its approach to its inquiries. The numerous editorials, articles, and broadcasts during the past two years are evidence of the co-operation received. These agencies also assisted immeasurably in bringing to the attention of the public and organized bodies the committee's desire to obtain their views.

The preceding committee had given consideration to the possibility of completing the hearings of evidence on one subject before proceeding to the next or at least limiting each hearing to one subject. However, some witnesses wished to give evidence on all three subjects and others had difficulty in finding time to appear and, accordingly, it was decided to hear evidence in an order that would meet the convenience of witnesses.

Your committee also had considered obtaining authority to hold hearings across Canada and to visit certain institutions. However, the information required was obtained from witnesses who appeared voluntarily and from selected experts called by the committee thereby making it unnecessary to travel beyond the seat of government.

Appreciation of Assistance.

The committee wishes to record its gratitude to those individuals, organizations, agencies and departments of the federal and provincial governments that made oral or written representations or in other ways assisted your committee in its inquiries. In respect to its legal and secretarial assistance, the committee was very fortunate that these duties were again performed by the counsel and clerk who so capably and energetically served last year's committee.

Interim Recommendations.

The evidence for both sessions has been completely summarized but, because of lack of time, your committee has not been able to prepare a comprehensive final report formulating conclusions and making recommendations relating to the many aspects involved in all three questions of capital punishment, corporal punishment, and lotteries.

Your committee accordingly recommends that another joint committee be established early in the next session of Parliament, with the same powers and membership, to complete a final report on the three questions of capital and corporal punishment and lotteries.

A copy of the committee's Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence taken at this session is appended, together with the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of last session's corresponding committee which were referred to your committee.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Salter A. Hayden,
Joint Chairman.

50437—48

THE SENATE

Thursday, June 30, 1955

The Senate met at 3 p.m., Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

EXCISE TAX BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 418, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Godbout: Next sitting.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. G. Percival Burchill, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Immigration and Labour, presented the report of the committee on Bill 328.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Immigration and Labour, to whom was referred the Bill (328) intituled: "An Act respecting unemployment insurance", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 23, 1955, examined the said bill and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Next sitting.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE—AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Natural Resources, presented the committee's report on Bill 481.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Natural Resources, to whom was referred the Bill (481) intituled: "An Act to amend the Prairie Farm Assistance Act", have in obedience to the order of reference of June 28, 1955, examined the said bill and now beg leave to report the same with the following amendments:

1. Page 2, line 11: strike out "of sections"
2. Page 2, line 19: strike out "of sections"
3. Page 2, line 28: strike out "of sections"
4. Page 2, line 30: strike out "of sections".

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these amendments be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Haig: Now.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: I move that the amendments be concurred in now.

Hon. Mr. Haig: Honourable members, I want to say a word or two for the benefit of those who are not on the committee. The amendments were made at the request of the Government, because the bill as it came to us from the House of Commons included references to river lots, and to make the wording clear it was necessary to strike out the words "of sections." These amendments which we are now considering will not change the bill in any material way at all. As honourable senators know, the bill provides, among other things, for the granting of assistance to farmers of Western Canada whose crops were damaged or lost in the recent spring floods. I have had a great many letters from people who suffered from floods, and I should like to see them receive some assistance as soon as possible. As the bill has been amended in this house, it will be necessary for it to go back to the other house in order that the amendments may be concurred in there. It is for that reason, honourable senators, that I support the motion that the amendments be concurred in now.

The motion was agreed to and the amendments were concurred in.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill, as amended, be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, I move third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill, as amended, was read the third time, and passed.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday, July 5, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

The motion was agreed to.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON LIBRARY

ADDITION TO MEMBERSHIP

Hon. William H. Taylor moved, with leave:

That the name of the Honourable Senator Godbout be added to the list of senators serving on the Joint Committee of both houses on the Library of Parliament; and

That a message be sent to the House of Commons to inform that house accordingly.

The motion was agreed to.

CANADA ELECTIONS BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. William H. Golding moved the third reading of Bill 415, an Act to amend the Canada Elections Act.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE (RACE MEETINGS) BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck moved the second reading of Bill 504, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (Race Meetings).

He said: Honourable senators, this is a very simple matter and not a particularly consequential one. As honourable senators know, betting and gaming and so on are prohibited by the Code; but there are certain exceptions, among which is betting on horse races, under certain conditions. I am not going to defend it or attack it. There are good reasons, no doubt, for the exception. For instance, a very large number of good people enjoy watching the ponies run and most of them seem to like—I say this because of the numbers who take part in it—placing a little bet on the side. So far as can be seen, no very great harm seems to have come to our community as a result of that. However, whatever the reasons may be, we are not concerned with them now, but we are concerned with two little points having to do with the administration of this exception. I have in my hand a copy of the Criminal Code, and I direct attention to section 178, subsection (1),(d),(ii), which says:

> . . . no more than eight races or dashes, or four heat races of three heats each, or six heat races of two heats each, shall be held during any twenty-four hour period, . . .

I suppose the purpose of that is to see that these races do not go on interminably. Section 1 of the bill contains a little amendment —and I say "little" advisedly—which looks entirely unobjectionable. One will notice the expression "eight races or dashes". That is to say, races may be of two kinds; they may be running races, or they may be harness races, in which case there may be eight of them in a twenty-four hour period; or four heat races, which I understand to be harness races, of three heats each, or twelve starts; or six heat races of two each, which also means twelve starts. It is proposed to insert the words, "or two dashes and four heat races of two heats each". The reason is that at many small tracks it is inconvenient or perhaps impossible to arrange four running races in one afternoon, and there seems no earthly reason why in the same afternoon there should not be a certain number of running races and a certain number of harness races, rather than have one or the other exclusively. So this amendment adds to the category, two dashes and four heat races of two heats each, which is ten starts. The bill does not add to the number of starts. I do not see how any possible objection can be taken to this amendment, and none has been, so far.

The only other amendment, which is perhaps a little more important but, I think, no more objectionable, is to subsection (3) of section 178 of the Code. This subsection now states:

> No pari-mutuel system of betting shall be used upon any race course unless the system has been approved by and its operation is carried on under the supervision, at the expense of the association, of an officer appointed by the Minister of Agriculture, whose duty it shall be to stop the betting before each race and to see that no further amounts are deposited . . .

Under this provision, the Department of Agriculture has for many years supervised the accounting of the races and has seen to it that so far as possible the system is regularly and honestly carried on. The cost involved under the present act, it will be noticed, is borne by the association. It has been usual to send two officers to each race meeting, certainly to all big meetings, and the charge has been $27 for each officer. That charge, which is the same in respect of the largest and smallest meetings alike, has been a burden to the smaller tracks. Some of them do not make much more than the cost to the association for the supervision charges of the dominion Government. As a consequence, there have been protests. In fact, a number of the smaller tracks have been neglecting entirely to have the supervision that is required, and the department has been asked to prosecute. But prosecutions are not the best way to administer business of this kind. It is far better to make the law desirable to the parties affected than to cram it down their throats. So a new system has been suggested, and this is provided for in the bill. Instead of a flat charge being made to all tracks, big and small, the Department of Agriculture will collect from the associations one-half of one per cent of the amounts bet. This will yield a larger revenue than the department has been securing, but the charge will be a fair one, for it will be in proportion to the numbers of people attending the meetings and the amount of bets made. The bill provides for this new system by dropping the words "at the expense of the association" from subsection (3) and adding:

> and the person or association conducting a race meeting shall pay to the Receiver General of Canada one-half of one per cent of the total amount of bets, made through the agency of a pari-mutuel system operated under such supervision, on any race run at such meeting.

Honourable senators will no doubt wish to know what that amounts to in actual figures. May I put on Hansard a brief statement of the amounts involved?

1953	Running Races	Trotting Races	Totals
Amounts wagered	$77,795,588	$4,715,537	$85,512,125
Assessments	7,488,618	460,927	7,949,545
Provincial taxes ..	6,412,104	320,274	6,732,378
1954
Amounts wagered	81,053,267	2,949,620	84,002,937
Assessments	7,819,309	289,383	8,108,622
Provincial taxes ..	6,132,787	202,753	6,335,540

½% of $84,002,937 = $420,000.

I would point out that it is the provinces which make money out of racing, not the dominion government, although Parliament carries the legislative responsibility.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Has the honourable senator any information as to the "take" of the various provinces?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I have the percentages which the provinces levied on the race meetings held within their respective provincial jurisdictions. They are as follows:

Quebec	5½ per cent
Prince Edward Island	5 per cent
Ontario	7 per cent
Manitoba	10 per cent
Saskatchewan	5 per cent
Alberta	5 per cent
British Columbia	12 per cent

It can be seen that some of the provinces are doing pretty well.

The next point which I think is of interest is the cost of the work of supervision to the Department of Agriculture. This work is both extensive and important, for we are all interested in the common honesty of every big institution of this kind and we do not want a bad reputation to be made anywhere. Everybody has complete confidence in the way the supervision is carried on under supervision of the dominion Government; and therefore even the larger tracks are in favour of this change, although it means that they will pay more revenue into the federal treasury.

The charge of $27 per day does not pay the cost of the supervision even at the big tracks. It has been estimated that at least $40 per day per man would be required, and that even that rate would pay for only supervision such as is now being given. The Minister of Agriculture estimated that in 1954 the charges for the particular division carrying the work, together with administrative costs, ran as high as $257,000. The amount actually collected was very much less. The total revenue for 1954, on a basis of $27 per day per man engaged, was only $52,210.50.

Fifty men are connected with this operation all across Canada. They are not full-time employees, but are engaged only while race meetings are in progress. It is necessary that they be thoroughly trained in their duties, and last year a class was held in the West—I think at Calgary—for this purpose. So far, most of the work has been done by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I am told that if there was complete supervision and the men were properly trained, the training alone would cost as much as the entire revenue now derived from these tracks. The charge as to cost shown on the books of the particular division is only $53,000—just a little more than the revenue—but it includes, only the amount of the salaries paid to the men doing the work, and does not take into account the cost of administration.

As shown by the statement I placed on Hansard, one half of one per cent on the amount wagered in 1954—$84 million—will give the department a revenue of $420,000, which is a good deal more than the actual cost this year, but it will not be much higher than the actual cost when complete and proper supervision is given to all tracks, large and small, throughout Canada.

I see no possible objection to the measure, because there is no real change in principle. In future, those who enjoy the protection of the supervision will pay the cost, but it will be on a fairer basis, and the regularity with which this work is carried on all over the province will improve the situation generally.

In conclusion, may I say that although some people may object to the method of financing, running races have a real value to the country, for the race track produces light horses, with the result that a large number of high-class horses are available as sires throughout the entire dominion. These sires have no doubt greatly improved the quality of light horses needed particularly for farms. The farm horse of today is a light horse, not a heavy horse—the heavy work being done by tractors.

Honourable senators, I bespeak the support of this house for this measure.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Honourable senators, the honourable member from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), as I understood him, described dashes as running races, and heat races as harness races. I do not think the legislation was designed to distinguish between running races and harness races. In modern practice we have got away from the old style of three heats, or the best three in five, in a harness race. Except in special cases, nearly all races are known as dashes, whether they are harness or running races.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: My friend may be much more familiar with racing than I am. When the Minister of Agriculture spoke on this matter he confessed that he knew very little about it, and I must confess the same. However, I certainly was under the impression—and I got the information from very good sources—that what was meant in the bill by dashes was running races. I may be wrong, and I accept correction if my friend is sure of—

Hon. Mr. Burchill: I am not sure, but I know that today harness racing is designated as dashes.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I am unable to make a definite statement on the point.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Next sitting.

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS BILL

MOTION FOR SECOND READING—DEBATE ADJOURNED

Hon. John J. Kinley moved the second reading of Bill 452, an Act respecting loans to assist fishermen engaged in a primary fishing enterprise.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill 452, an Act respecting loans to assist fishermen engaged in a primary fishing enterprise, comes to us from the Commons, and its short title is the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act. The purpose of the bill is to increase the availability of intermediate credit to bona fide fishermen in a primary fishery enterprise. A bona fide fisherman is described as one whose principal occupation is participation in a primary fishing industry. This bill is fashioned after the Farm Improvement Loans Act. In speaking about the bill, on the resolution in the Commons, the Minister of Fisheries said that in the four years when he was the Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance he twice sponsored the Farm Improvement Loans Act in that house. The act did not become very well known for some time, and in the first year only $3 million was lent under it, but in recent years the amount lent annually has been almost $100 million. He was impressed by the usefulness of the legislation, and when he became Minister of Fisheries he thought it would be a good idea to have similar legislation passed in order to enable fishermen to get the same type of intermediate credit from the chartered banks at reasonable rates because of a government guarantee to the banks against losses. The present Minister of Fisheries has brought forward a number of fine pieces of legislation designed to aid the fisheries, and for so doing he deserves commendation, especially from my part of the country. In attempting to draft this Fisheries Improvement Loans Bill he found that there were certain obstacles. For example, the type of fisherman who most needed the assistance that would be granted under the bill is the so-called shore fisherman, who has a small boat, which it is almost impossible to insure at reasonable rates. He operates alone or with the assistance of his family, and he is subject to loss through storms and other misfortunes. One day he may be quite well off, and the next day he may be worth very little. In these circumstances he finds it difficult to get insurance coverage on his boats and equipment, and as a result the Minister brought forward and Parliament approved the Fisherman's Indemnity Fund, through which, for a premium of 1 per cent, the fisherman could get his boat and gear insured to the extent of 60 per cent of its value, up to a total of $7,500.

The next step by way of legislation for the assistance of the shore fishermen is the bill which we now have before us, which is for the purpose of guaranteeing to the lender repayment of loans made to fishermen. Sections 3 and 6 of the bill are the enabling sections. Section 3 provides that the loans may not exceed $4,000, that they will bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent and be for a period of not more than eight years. There can be no other charges against the loan except for insurance purposes. The guarantee is available on loans made by the lenders within a three-year period from the passage of this legislation.

The principal need for such financial assistance is for improvement to boats, engines, gear and equipment of the shore fishermen. The maximum amount of the loan readily indicates that it is of little use to any other than shore fishermen. A loan of $4,000 would not go very far in building, for instance, a deep-sea fisheries boat, or in the repair or refitting of it. The bill excludes electronic equipment from those items for which loans may be made. As honourable senators know, electronics are used extensively in deep-sea fishing for depth sounding and that sort of thing, and the equipment is quite costly.

The only criticism the bill received in the other place was that the maximum of $4,000 was too low and was inadequate for the purpose. However, it was pointed out by the minister that the fishermen had the benefit of insurance coverage to the extent of 60 per cent on a total of $7,500, and that the maximum loan of $4,000 fitted in with that insurance coverage, and in that respect would be a safe loan.

Throughout the Maritime Provinces there are provincial loan boards which lend large amounts to fishermen. However, as they require the borrower to put up one-third of the cost of the project, and as even the smallest deep-sea fishing boat costs in excess of $100,000, it is more difficult for the fishermen to take advantage of this source of financing. Further, it might be pointed out that the federal Government, through the Department of Fisheries, pays to owners of larger boats of a certain size a subsidy of $165 a ton. Honourable senators will readily see that the deep-sea fishermen are being looked after in another way.

The total amount of the loans that may be made under the bill, within three years, is $20,000,000, of which the Government guarantees to pay any losses suffered by a lender up to 15 per cent of the first $500,000, and 10 per cent of all additional loans made by that lender. Fifteen per cent of $500,000 amounts to $75,000, which would be taken up by the guarantee before the lender would suffer any loss. Such losses are not the experience of the industry, so the lender is practically assured that his transaction will not be unprofitable.

As the bill was originally drafted, it defined "lender" as a bank, but when the bill was in its resolution stage in the other house so much general interest in its provisions was shown all across Canada, and especially in the Maritime areas, that the Government saw fit to consider including credit unions in the definition of "lender". In fact, the pressure in the Commons for such an amendment was so strong that the Prime Minister called the Minister of Fisheries to his seat and suggested that the matter be referred to a committee with a view to seeing what could be done to provide for the inclusion of credit unions as lenders under this legislation. The bill went to committee, where it was subsequently amended by the inclusion of credit unions of various kinds as qualified lenders; and of the $20,000,000 allotted for total loans, $10,000,000 was allocated to the chartered banks and $10,000,000 to the credit unions.

The Canadian Fisherman's Loan Act, which was passed in 1935, and is Chapter 52 of the Statutes of Canada of that year, provides some financial assistance for fishermen, but it has proved too complicated for general use. It requires that loans be secured by a mortgage on the homes of fishermen, and there are other objectionable features. As a result only $40,000 of the amount provided in that legislation was ever taken up, and today only eight loans are outstanding. Section 13 of the bill repeals this legislation.

The addition of credit unions as qualified lenders is an interesting feature of this bill. It is the first time that these financial institutions have been recognized on government guaranteed loans. However, the bill as amended received the unanimous consent of the other house, and the tenor of the debate throughout was that this is highly salutary legislation.

In passing, I might mention that while the measure was in committee two young men, one from New Brunswick and the other from Nova Scotia, representing credit unions, appeared before the committee and informed its members that the credit unions had already lent to the fishermen in Nova Scotia some $40 million, and in New Brunswick $34 million. What appeals to me about the credit union movement is that it was initiated during a depression. It was an effort amongst the people in the eastern sections of Canada, especially in Nova Scotia, and sponsored largely by the St. Francis Xavier University, with a view to helping people to help themselves. The operations of the various credit unions have been watched over carefully and they have become quite successful. I am agreeably surprised that these institutions are willing to take on loans at 5 per cent. However, they are subject to the same rules and regulations as are the chartered banks, and with the security that this legislation offers they are willing to reach out into a new field. I wish them every success.

The Minister of Finance will keep flexible control over this legislation, in virtue of sections 4 and 5 of the bill, in which he is given the power to terminate and to restore his liability to a lender with respect to guaranteed loans.

I look back on the development of the fishing industry in my own county, where it has been eminently successful and always in the forefront on the east coast. I attribute that success to the fact that we always operated under a co-operative system in that area. But it was a peculiar co-operative system. Honourable senators probably know that down east we have the term "highliner". In the old days of the fishing industry all fish caught were counted and every man was paid accordingly. That system has been carried on throughout the industry, and today each fisherman receives a share from the catch. In the production end, there is the keenest of competition.

There is another kind of co-operation, namely overall co-operation between all classes for the benefit of the industry, the effect of it being that we all stand and work together. The whole arrangement makes for effective progress and efficiency in the fishing industry. Down in Lunenburg we like that kind of co-operation.

In the debate on this bill in the House of Commons some members, referring to the way the fishermen obtain funds to carry on, said that it is hard for them to borrow money, that they must be financed by the merchants and other people. That is so, but it was further suggested that there was a bit of feudal bondage in the set-up—I suppose because the members thought the fishermen was not really dealing at arm's length with the merchant. There might possibly be something in that, but the merchant likely has his troubles too. But so far as Lunenburg is concerned, we have never had any trouble with our merchants. Shares in a fishing vessel were taken up by the fishermen, the merchant and citizens in general. Even as a youth I bought shares in vessels, and I still hold some. Everybody wanted to get a share in a vessel, because the return was good. I remember we used to endorse notes, one person for the other, and in that way we could go to the bank and borrow money to buy shares in a fishing boat. The merchants and owners were most anxious to get a good skipper for a ship because so much depended upon him. In order to obtain the best possible skipper, they would help him to finance the purchase of a big share in the catch and in the ship, and he would be sure to do his utmost to have a profitable year for the ship. In that way we had splendid co-operation all around.

We are proud of our West India and fish merchants in Lunenburg, first of all because they know the business and share in this co-operation. Our merchant companies have survived, some for over 100 years. They have most valuable foreign connections, they find our markets, and they have been and are a bulwark of the town's industry. A point that I would like to stress is that most of the merchants in Lunenburg started their lives in the bow of a fishing dory—it can truly be said of them that they started at the very bottom of the ladder and worked their way up. When they went into business for themselves they had the great advantage that comes from practical experience, as fishermen, and that is one reason why we have such a splendid economy.

As honourable senators know, the Report of the Rowell-Sirois Royal Commission on Dominion-Provincial Relations contains a glamorous account of the golden age in the Maritime Provinces, when wooden sailing ships carried our commerce far and wide. The fading of that golden age led to the decline of some of our ports, but Lunenburg survived and carried on with sailing ships in the fishing industry. We built ships, and sailed them; we caught fish, and carried the catch to the markets in our own ships; and we brought back the money or the products of other countries. In this way we continued to prosper.

This leads me to say a word about the banks. As honourable senators know, most of the banks in this country started in the Maritime provinces. The Royal Bank of Canada was started there, and it was known first as the Merchants Bank of Halifax. The Bank of Montreal took over the Peoples Bank of Halifax, and the Canadian Bank of Commerce took over the Halifax Banking Company. The Bank of Nova Scotia, which for many years had its head office at Halifax, is now one of the biggest institutions of this country. Our banks are doing a splendid job, and we believe that they will assist in great developments under this bill. Personally, I am glad that the co-operative credit institutions also are included as lenders under this measure. In time, they too may become great bankers. This measure stirred up a lot of interest in the other house. The remarks on it there were all favourable, the only criticism having been that the maximum amount of the loan may not be large enough. But, honourable senators, this is only a start. In time and in the light of experience we shall be able to make any necessary changes. The measure is a good one, and we are glad to have this assistance for the fisheries.

The bill will come into force when it is proclaimed. The Minister of Finance is the minister referred to in the bill. There are sections dealing with such matters as interpretation and penalties, and these can be dealt with in committee, where I hope there will be a full discussion. However, I believe other members in this house wish to speak on the motion for second reading.

All in all, I believe the bill represents a great step toward providing needed assistance to fishermen, especially the shore fishermen. They are the small men in the fishing industry, but they are numerous. I believe that legislation of this kind is salutary and a credit to the Department of Finance, and I am glad to support it.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: May I ask the honourable senator if he can say how many people would be directly affected by this legislation?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Well, that is a question! The legislation would benefit fishermen in Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, part of the province of Quebec, and British Columbia, besides lake fishermen. I would not like to say how many would be affected. It might be 100,000.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: As far as Nova Scotia is concerned, could you say how many would be affected?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: I would not even like to say that. There might be upwards of 15,000 people.

Hon. John A. McDonald: Honourable senators, I would like to congratulate the honourable member for Queen's-Lunenburg (Hon. Mr. Kinley) upon his very clear and interesting explanation of the bill.

I want to take this opportunity of commending the Government for this legislation, and, especially, the amendment which was made in committee and which, as the honourable senator from Queen's-Lunenburg has said, will extend to the credit unions the same privilege as the banks have in the loaning of money. Truly, the growth of the co-operative movement and of credit unions, especially since the early thirties, has been a great achievement. I can remember, when I was in office at Halifax, meeting some of the pioneers of this movement, who were looking for what assistance we could give them. Some of those who were connected with the organization gave more than they could afford to give in order to get co-operatives started. One day, when a clergyman came in, I may not have been as discreet as I should have been, because I glanced at his waistcoat, and noticed that the silk was worn down to the canvas. Seeing that I was looking at it, he said: "I am sorry, but these are the best clothes I have. I used everything I could get to support my co-operatives".

I could tell some very interesting stories about how these clergymen, especially those who had received their training in St. Francis Xavier University, went into our communities during the depression, when most of the people were on relief, and by using what little credit they had they would buy, let us say, perhaps, a second-hand sawmill, and then take the villagers into the woods to cut wood, first for the co-operative store, then for the school, and also for the improvement of their churches. In several communities, by this means, people were taken off direct relief. The men went fishing and caught lobsters, which were canned by their women in the factory; the children who could be spared went into the fields to pick blackberries, wild cranberries or foxberries, which were canned, and the produce was taken to the Montreal markets and sold. By such means many of the people were able to dispense with relief.

The record of this work is very impressive, and I shall never tire of singing the praises of some of these wonderful men. I might instance Doctor—or as we used to call him, "Jimmy"— Tompkins; the Reverend Father Macpherson, another great leader; Monsignor Coady, who is still with us and who gave inspiring leadership; and A. B. Macdonald, who has passed on. They served their people well, especially in connection with credit union activities.

It is a pleasure to support this legislation. I might say that it was with great satisfaction that, when listening to the debate in the other place, I noticed that representatives of all four political parties rose one after the other and commended the Government for having introduced this bill. I hope it will receive its second and third readings within a very short time.

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt moved the adjournment of the debate.

He said: Honourable senators, before the debate is adjourned I would like to express my astonishment that the Canadian Press and the British United Press have failed to give credit to the caisse populaire of Quebec for its work on behalf of the fishing industry. Credit unions, which have done splendid work in the Maritime Provinces and in British Columbia, were organized 23 years ago, but it is 55 years since the caisse populaire of Quebec began its operations. The total assests of all the credit unions in Canada are $450 million, 80 per cent of which is held by the caisse populaire of the province of Quebec. The caisse populaire is not exactly the same as the credit union, because the union is organized on a community basis and the caisse populaire works on a parish plan. For thirty years we have extended loans to fishermen on the Gaspe coast, the Magdalen Islands and the Labrador coast, and millions on millions of dollars have been loaned with no guarantee except the moral integrity of the fishermen. That moral guarantee is, I think, of the first importance.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt, the debate was adjourned.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, July 5, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, July 5, 1955

Then Senate met at 8 p.m., Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

INCOME TAX BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 417, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Next sitting.

PRIVATE BILL

CANADIAN PREMIER LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY—COMMONS AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN

A message was received from the House of Commons returning Bill W-14, an Act to incorporate Canadian Premier Life Insurance Company, and acquainting the Senate that they have passed this bill with certain amendments, to which they desire the concurrence of the Senate.

The amendments were read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

1. Page 1, lines 17 and 18: Delete the words "Première Canadienne" and substitute therefor the words "Canadian Premier".
2. In the French version, change the title to read: "Loi constituant en corporation La Compagnie d'Assurance-vie Canadian Premier".

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall these amendments be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Haig: With the consent of the house, I move that the amendments be concurred in now.

The motion was agreed to, and the amendments were concurred in.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck moved the third reading of Bill 328, an Act respecting unemployment insurance.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, before this bill receives third reading and passes, I should like to make a few observations on it. It is a measure which deals with a very important subject, one which affects in a vital way the social and economic life of the whole nation.

I can think of few achievements which mark Canada's advance along the road of progress which have helped to maintain the standard of living and have brought security to more homes in this land of ours than has unemployment insurance.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Burchill: It is a necessary auxiliary to our industrial machine, and while an experiment fifteen years ago it is now accepted by all of us as one of the pillars of the state, although I do not think some of us realize what an important function it performs or how much spending money it puts in circulation and makes available to the consuming public. The report of the commission speaks for itself and shows that during last year upwards of $257 million was disbursed in unemployment benefits throughout Canada.

But, honourable senators, unemployment insurance is performing another important role. It is acting indirectly as a stabilizer of prices in world markets in so far as our Canadian natural products affect world markets, and I think the time has come when the prices of our Canadian products have become quite a factor in determining the level of world markets. Canadian exporters are of course obliged to meet the competition of other countries producing similar goods, and in certain cases because of over-production—world over-production—or for some other reason—I am thinking more particularly of some of our natural products—a sharp drop in prices which we have often experienced in the past has meant a very serious loss to the producer or employer, and consequently lower wages to the employee. Now, of late years, I have noticed that when a surplus of goods brought lower prices there was a strong tendency to withdraw Canadian offers, because, in the first place, there was a loss on the production of these goods; and, in the second place, there was not the pressure on the employer to provide work for his men, even at lower wages, because the Unemployment Insurance Fund was available for the benefits of the workers. With no big surpluses overhanging the market, the situation becomes normal more quickly, and in that respect unemployment insurance has acted as a stabilizer of world prices. I have noticed that, with no goods being offered in Canada, the situation righted itself much more quickly than by the older method. I will concede that the new system represents another departure from the ancient law of supply and demand, and it may be termed artificial, but it is one of those props, whether artificial or not, which nowadays we must have if our Canadian standards of living are to be maintained.

Recently, as a result of labour negotiations between a United States labour union and an American corporation, we heard something regarding a guaranteed annual wage. I wonder whether honourable senators realize that here in Canada we already have a guaranteed annual wage—guaranteed by the national Unemployment Insurance Fund, and amounting at the present time to over $840 million. In the United States unemployment insurance is a matter of state legislation, while in this country it covers the entire nation and is administered by the federal government. I do not know the details of the agreement recently made between a labour union and the Ford Company, but I am informed that the broad principle is similar to that governing our unemployment insurance measure, with this difference, that under the United States agreement the Ford Company will set up their own individual insurance fund, whereas here in Canada they would be assessed and pay into a national fund. I understand that this agreement will require changes and amendments of the present Unemployment Insurance Act of the State of Michigan.

Because unemployment insurance is indispensable, it should be safeguarded by careful administration in order to carry out the original purpose of making it serve as an insurance policy against work stoppages with no pay envelope, and it is our responsibility to give those charged with this administration every possible support in carrying out their task. The intention of the act is very clear, and its plan sound, but in a country like Canada, with its far-flung spaces, involving seasonal activities and the production of natural resources, the work of administration is not always easy; and from time to time, we who represent such regions hear complaints and criticisms of the administration. We are told of cases where the fund is being made use of by people who are drawing benefits under circumstances and conditions which were never contemplated when the legislation was drawn. I can quite understand how these things can happen and I have every sympathy for the local and regional managers who are on the firing-line and charged with making the act work.

It may be that more information or education is needed as to the purport of the act, for I fear that many of our people regard unemployment insurance as a fund from which they can draw out their contributions when requirements as to period of payments have been satisfied. This practice not only places the fund in jeopardy, but our people should realize that the fund is there because the workers of Canada—both capital and labour—made it possible by their spirit of vision, venture and hard work; that that spirit is as essential today to the nation and to the character of our people as it ever was; and that we must never allow it to be replaced by another philosophy or code which seeks security first or is satisfied with the second-rate.

Those of us who are on the committee which studied this bill and heard the members and officials of the commission, were impressed with their statements and with the conscientious manner in which they are endeavouring to do their job, which is such an important one for Canada. However, I came away from the committee feeling that more inspection—much more inspection—was needed in order to strengthen their hands and help the local managers in administering the act. One local manager with whom I discussed the matter stated that when he wished a case investigated and asked for an inspector it would at times be a matter of weeks before the official arrived, owing to pressure of work and the amount of territory which he had to cover. I think this act is too precious and the principle of unemployment insurance too important for us to risk its being taken advantage of or used unworthily for the sake of the extra cost involved in providing a closer check on its administration at the local level.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Calvert C. Pratt: Honourable senators, I should like to follow up the last point that has just been made by the honourable member from Northumberland (Hon. Mr. Burchill). First I would say we all agree, I am sure, that unemployment insurance is of great importance to this nation. The value of its stabilizing effect and the place it fills in the social life of our people cannot be overestimated.

However, my reason for rising now is that I wish to acquaint the house with a thought which I expressed when this bill was discussed in committee the other day. At that time I asked how inspection of individual applications was carried out. I assumed, and I think quite rightly, that inspection of individual cases is not carried out very thoroughly, because of lack of facilities or lack of staff to enable inspectors to rotate properly and visit places frequently.

I mentioned in committee some actual cases that came to my notice which, while they were not irregularities, in the meaning of fraudulent acts, were illustrative of what seems to be going on frequently and such as to make the application of the act a laughing stock. I say that quite deliberately. It is most unfortunate that while perhaps 99 per cent of the people who claim unemployment benefits are entitled to them and honestly seek them, the fact is that some people apply with a view to getting something for nothing. The impression one gathers is that there is a lack of adequate inspection facilities. I do not want to confuse "inspection" in this sense with inspection of books and accounts and so forth, but it appears that there is a lack of checking off of individual cases and that as a result abuses creep in. By proper inspection they could be spotted, and the next one could be stopped, and thus prevent a continuous growth of abuses. It must be remembered that the filling out of forms can never tell a whole story, and also that in communities there is a natural reluctance for people to act as informers.

There can be no doubt that the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act requires a lot of tightening up. I think the act is one of the finest in Canada, and that therefore it needs to be kept at a very high level of fairness and equity. It should not be open to an endless chain of abuses whereby some people may treat opportunities for employment lightly and one person after another make application for benefits to which they are not entitled.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE (RACE MEETINGS) BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck moved the third reading of Bill 504, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (Race Meetings).

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS BILL

SECOND READING

The Senate resumed from Thursday, June 30, the adjourned debate on the motion of Hon. Mr. Kinley for the second reading of Bill 452, an Act respecting loans to assist fishermen engaged in a primary fishing enterprise.

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, I am pleased to follow two colleagues from Nova Scotia (Hon. Mr. Kinley and Hon. Mr. McDonald) in approving of Bill 452, an Act respecting loans to assist fishermen. However, I would not have approved of the bill but for amendments made to it in the other chamber, not that I considered it as not being good and useful legislation, but because, as drafted, it appeared to me absolutely inoperative. And in fact, without those amendments the bill would have been inoperative, since there are no banks, or almost none, in fishing centres, whereas caisses populaires and credit unions have been organized in these areas for many years. Credit unions have been making loans to fishermen for over 20 years, and caisses populaires for 35 to 40 years.

Honourable senators will notice that I refer to caisses populaires and credit unions. The fact is that caisses populaires have been organized in Canada for 55 years, while credit unions began to develop some 20 or 25 years ago. I must emphasize that both do not operate in the same way: Credit unions operate on the occupational plan; caisses populaires are founded and organized on the parochial plan. Moreover, caisses populaires lend their money, to a great extent, on mortgages, but credit unions do not lend much in this way.

However, caisses populaires and credit unions have the same object and aim, namely, to help people of the working classes; and both organizations have done really wonderful jobs. In Prince Edward Island, credit unions have lent, since their organization, nearly $6 million; in Nova Scotia, $37 million; in New Brunswick, from $32 to $33 million; in the province of Quebec, caisses populaires have lent over $700 million; in British Columbia, credit unions have made loans of about $90 million. Savings (shares included) in credit unions in Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick total about $40 million; in caisses populaires in the province of Quebec, savings total $375 million.

The $700 million lent by caisses populaires in the province of Quebec is not all that has been lent, but millions and millions of dollars have been lent on the Gaspe peninsula, and on the Magdalen Islands; and on the north shore caisses populaires have three men engaged in the work of supervising loans to fishermen. Our caisses populaires cannot hope to receive big returns from money lent to fishermen, but all our members are very happy to be of service to the fishermen because we realize they contribute greatly to the general prosperity of the country. By putting our growing funds to use in a co-operative way we are able to help all of the people in the country. We cannot draw any line between fishermen, farmers and people in other occuptions; the farmers must buy certain of their goods from the manufacturers, and the fishermen must make purchases from the merchants, and they all work together. So we in turn are happy to have this opportunity of being of service to the fishermen who, as I have said, contribute greatly to our general prosperity.

The development of credit unions in the Maritimes is due, to a large extent, to the wonderful work done by the university at Antigonish. We pay tribute to this university, especially for its educational work. That university was the first to organize study clubs for the advancement of credit unions, and educational institutions in other provinces have taken their inspiration from the development at Antigonish. I am pleased to say that when that university started its credit union movement, it came to Quebec to study our organization there and to learn our procedure.

Fishermen have in the past been able to meet and solve their financial difficulties, both before and during the crisis, to a large extent by the help received from caisses populaires and credit unions. In this respect I speak especially for the province of Quebec and the Maritimes. In Quebec legislation which provides loans to fishermen was introduced by the provincial government and is operated by caisses populaires, and for many years these co-operative lending societies have helped fishermen by loans amounting to many millions of dollars. I understand that with the co-operation of credit unions similar conditions exist in the Maritime provinces.

I would have deplored the bill now before us if it had failed to recognize the wonderful, efficient, necessary and urgent work being done by caisses populaires and credit unions. There, I wish to thank the Prime Minister —and I am aware of his personal intervention —for his part in allowing the amendments which permit co-operative lending societies to participate in loans to fishermen.

I should like to pay tribute to those who for so many years have devoted themselves to the organization of the economic relief of the labouring classes by founding savings and credit co-operatives. I would mention first, Commander Alphonse Desjardins, who in 1900 founded his first caisse populaire in my city of Levis. I wish also to pay sincere tribute to those who immediately supported him, namely: Canon Grondin, Father Turmel, Canon Rochette, Mr. J. A. K. Laflamme and others. And I would pay homage to men from other provinces who have given outstanding help: Monsignor Coady, Father Tompkins, and as well to A. B. Macdonald, Martin Legere, and others. I name these men with full knowledge of the facts, for I myself have been in the co-operative movement for 49 years, and have witnessed its development almost since its birth.

I do not wish, however, to give the impression that I am ill-disposed towards banks. They do a very considerable and necessary work, but they are organized especially to lend to commerce. On the other hand, caisses populaires and credit unions have as their aim to help people of the labouring classes, and these societies have been organized wherever people are willing to help themselves and one another. Caisses populaires and credit unions are in a position to exercise more effective control over loans than are banks. The co-operatives know their borrowers, and they have their moral guarantee—which is most essential today—and other necessary information which the banks cannot have. These things may be said to constitute 80 per cent of the guarantees behind loans.

Moreover, caisses populaires in making loans to fishermen, carry insurance in the event of the death of the borrower and also against losses from fire or disaster at sea.

I believe this bill, as it is now worded, will be very useful, and will be another effective piece of legislation brought in by our Government. I hope that it will be referred to a committee, where I would have certain remarks to make. For example, section 8 gives certain powers to the banks to take security by way of a mortgage on real or personal, movable or immovable property. Caisses populaires and credit unions may take security on mortgages, but the law does not allow them to take good security on movable property. I am hopeful that something can be done to improve this situation.

In conclusion, honourable senators, may I say that this bill provides real social legislation in every sense of the term.

Hon. A. Neil McLean: Honourable senators, because one of my chief concerns in life is the fishing industry generally and the welfare of "those who go down to the sea in ships", I should like to take this opportunity of congratulating the Government on its positive approach to the problems of fishermen through the legislation contained in the bill before the house. The purposes of the bill have been clearly explained by the mover of the motion for second reading (Hon. Mr. Kinley), and I do not wish to dwell on its details. It is, however, gratifying to note that legislation for fishermen comparable to that enabling farmers to obtain loans with a minimum of difficulty has now become a reality.

This is all part of the pattern clearly established by the present Government, which reflects not only its concern for the primary producers of this new nation but also for its confidence in the future of these two major industries.

While I shall deal later with the underlying principles and purposes of protecting primary producers, I should like to preface my remarks by reference to the fiscal policy of the Government and the manner in which it encourages development of both business and primary industries. I have given the budget for the coming fiscal year considerable study. I think there is a great deal in it worthy of favourable comment, and the Minister of Finance is to be congratulated upon the careful way in which he has explained the present financial position of Canada and upon the adjustments that have been made throughout the budget, which are bound to stimulate business and industry. 1954 was, on the whole, a year of what might be called mild recession. The national income of Canada from production, which is the basis of our country's prosperity, declined around 2 per cent as compared to 1953, which was less than the decline experienced by our great neighbour to the south. After many years of budget surpluses, our national budget deficit for last year was less than that which we received from our national production covering a period of three or four days, so there is nothing to worry about in this connection. The debt of our country was reduced, during the past year by $200 million, and taxes have been reduced for the current year by around $150 million, which is bound to stimulate expansion and add to our prosperity. It is true that the Minister of Finance has budgeted for a comparatively small deficit for the current year, but with business on the upturn as it is, my prediction is that the budget deficit for the current year will be small indeed, if any at all. In this year's budget there has been a reduction in the main estimates, the first in seven years, which is all to the good, but there has been no curtailment in the planned program of useful and necessary public works.

Referring to our national debt, I might say the real burden of this debt on the taxpayer is the lowest in many years. This has been brought about by two factors, low interest rates and high national income. Carrying charges now represent a smaller portion of the total income of the country than at any time during the last quarter of a century, so one can easily see how important it is to keep our brawn and brain fully employed to keep our national productive income at a maximum.

I think I have laid the foundation, honourable senators, to the point where I am now going to ask the Government to spend some money on research work.

As a primary producer I am very glad to see that moderate increases are proposed in the outlays for research services which in time will provide aid beyond measure toward the development of our natural resources. Even greater expenditures are fully justified, as no moneys spent by any government pay off to a greater extent than those spent on research and conservation work. All our wealth originally comes from the land, sea and forest and it may seem strange that the sea, which is really the greatest storehouse of wealth of them all, has had the least research work directed toward it. Living by the ocean most of my life and living off it, so to speak, I have often marvelled at the great wealth it contains in animal life, minerals, metals, oil, fertilizers, vegetation, etc. We know, for instance, what top soil means to land. Well, in a period of millions of years, billions of tons of top soil have been washed from the land into the sea until it is miles deep in some places. The population of the globe is increasing by about 84,000 people a day, and this rate is bound to increase annually; the time is not far distant when the wealth of the sea will have to be drawn on to a far greater extent than it is now, and at the present time there is an urgent need for a far greater study of the resources of the ocean, especially its animal life. We need such information not only for this generation but for those who will follow us. Greater knowledge about fish life in the sea would be invaluable, for we would then be in a much better position to both increase and conserve the great animal life of the ocean.

I fully realize that a great deal of work has already been done in this connection, with excellent results. One has only to look, for instance, at the fine work that has been accomplished in connection with the sealing industry of the Pacific coast, also the halibut and salmon industries; and I wish to give the honourable senator from New West minister (Hon. Mr. Reid) great credit for his efforts in this connection. However, we must realize that the oceans cover three times as much of our globe as land does, and there is need for far greater ocean research work in the future than has been done in the past. For instance, the great depth of the sea is almost unknown to mankind, but we do know it contains animal life and great mineral wealth.

Federal expenditures for each ton of food produced from the sea amounts to very considerably less than federal expenditures spent in connection with each ton of food produced from the land, so one can realize there is plenty of room for a reasonable expansion program which will give our people more knowledge of the resources of the sea.

I do not need to tell you, honourable senators, that Canada has one of the finest coastlines in the world, and we must never forget it. Newfoundland by coming into confederation added immeasurably to that great coastline. The seas have never been mapped for their vast resources. Even the lowest estimates promise about one hundred times as much food and mineral products as are being harvested from the sea at the present time. At the present time there is said to be only 1,300 ocean scientists in North America. Today seafood forms less than 2 per cent of all foods eaten by mankind throughout the world.

I would now like to call the attention of this honourable house to our Atlantic coast and the scientific progress which has been made there. We have come a long way since the great explorer Samuel de Champlain discovered our Southern New Brunswick coast, but we still have a great deal of necessary work to do regarding scientific research. Champlain spent his first winter in Canada on an island near the mouth of the St. Croix River, and during the winter between scurvy and starvation he lost half his crew, who are buried on the island. The island was covered with evergreen trees, and, had it been known at that time, if the evergreens had been boiled and the juice drunk, an effective remedy for scurvy was right at hand. But more important, there was food right nearby for tens of thousands of people, for it was discovered in later years that the Bay of Fundy was one of the greatest herring-fishing grounds of the world.

During the last half century tens of millions of dollars have been invested by thousands of fishermen and fish packers in the herring industry of Southern New Brunswick, and a very large income is derived from this great natural resource which means the livelihood of many thousands of fishermen, fish packers and boatmen. The honourable Minister of Fisheries has well said that Canadian fishery resources are among the world's most bountiful. It is to his credit that some valuable research is under way to bring still more benefits to Canada by conservation and regulated productivity in the fishing industry. It is the department with the greatest potential field of operations to be concerned with about three-quarters of this planet's surface. But there is urgent need of greater awareness of the magnitude of the expanse to be harvested and of Canadian preparedness to move in with every available resource of modern science.

Herring are vegetarians. These fish are the bread and butter of the ocean. The Bay of Fundy and adjacent shores have always had a great herring industry and I hope always will, but changes in the habits of these fish have been taking place in recent years. Big herring are becoming scarcer and the large schools of sardine herring, which used to arrive in March, have been arriving in late May or June and have been making their first appearance down the Maine Coast instead of along the New Brunswick shoreline. Where these herring schools come from or where they go, no one seems to know. Why they come at times and leave at other times is equally a mystery. It is known, however, that sometimes large schools of "Brit", or baby herring, far too small for canning, visit the bay and thousands of hogsheads are often sold for a pittance to the fish meal people. These small fish remain in the bay for some weeks, then disappear, but we are led to believe those not caught and sold for fish meal come back again in a few months, at which time they are mature and worth several times the amount for canning for human consumption than had they been caught and sold for fish meal when they were small herring. We believe that the netting of large quantities of herring full of spawn, along the New Brunswick shore, for cat and dog food may be unwise and destructive to the industry. Every spawning herring is capable of seeding the coastal waters with 31,000 eggs. Conservation is a manifest need in fisheries as it is in forestry and in wild life.

The Department of Fisheries has a young and aggressive Minister who is doing excellent work for the fisheries and in making an argument for greater and more effective federal research and conservation work in connection with our herring fisheries, I am not overlooking the fine work that has been and is now being done on the coasts of Canada; but expansion of this work is needed.

Wherever Canada is represented at international conferences relating to the fishing industry, the views expressed by members of Canadian biological staffs are highly regarded. Canadian experts in any province of fisheries are deservedly honoured as among the leading authorities.

One practical service, to the national advantage of Canada, would be to develop facilities, equipment and trained workers, under experienced direction already available, for more intensive research, and conservation work. The need of more scientific information on the migration of herring, one of the most prolific sources of sea food, is an instance in this regard. A great deal more information is needed in the Department of Fisheries about the sardine herring. It should be known where they are spawned and full knowledge is required of their Atlantic feeding grounds. At times they come to feeding places along the Atlantic coast, most notably the Bay of Fundy, when they are young, and leave again; possibly they come back, but no one seems to know where they have been in the meanwhile.

It should be possible to anticipate the year, or years, when the crop of fish will be bountiful; also the year or years when the yield will be poor. In good years extra factories could be put into operation, and a carryover could be financed for the years of scarcity. This information would help to level out the peaks and valleys of production in the fishing industry. It would ensure a steadier continuity of supply to the consuming public. It would put more money into the pockets of the fishermen; the prices paid to the fishermen for fish would be on a better basis. Research workers should keep in close touch with fishermen and packers and benefit from the experience of those who toil from daylight to dark during the fishing season and thus gain practical knowledge.

It would be money well spent and to the national advantage of Canada, to put an extra million dollars or more into the Fisheries estimates for research of this character. In this connection it is well to note that the United States federal Government recently voted three million dollars extra for research for the New England fisheries under the Saltonstall-Kennedy Bill. In this case both parties got together, and by the setting aside of this annual grant the work of the United States in this regard has been doubled. It compares in productive yield with the money spent in Canada's immensely valuable Geological Survey.

Today there is a confusing conflict of opinions about diminishing returns in the Maritime herring fisheries. Some weir men claim that the seiners are depleting the fish. Many believe that the manufacturing of fishmeal, or of cat and dog food, with fish fit for human food, is depleting Canadian fisheries. Winter packing is regarded by some as against the best interests of the fishing industry. A comprehensive survey would surely be warranted to determine whether the fish are so being depleted.

In Bay of Fundy communities, alone, there is no lack of facilities for canning fish. The companies pay out millions of dollars in wages and for the purchase of fish. The markets too can be found for this valuable seafood; but the fishermen cannot always find the fish to be so prepared for the market. More help by the Department of Fisheries in this direction would be of benefit primarily to the fishermen, and generally to the whole community.

As a practical instance of the need of conservation, the disappearance of clam beds should be prevented. Unless immediate, effective measures are instituted, the clam industry will become a thing of the past. It is plainly seen that clams along the shores of the Maritime Provinces cannot survive without a greater measure of conservation.

Within the memory of adult dwellers along the south shore of Nova Scotia, there were prolific beds of this succulent shellfish. In the sands at the mouth of Sable River, or even nearer the villages, as in Lockeport harbour, a school child with a clam hoe could take a bucketful in a few minutes at low tide. The clam chowder served at the Lockeport station restaurant became so popular that the trains would stop to allow passengers to partake of a clam chowder lunch—and, of course, blueberry pie. The trains still stop, but Lockeport clam chowder is no longer on the menu. The clam beds have disappeared. The clam beds of New England, which at one time were worth many millions, have been ruined through lack of conservation. The Indians of North America used clams as a food before the coming of the white man and conserved them, but now the clam beds are a fast vanishing asset.

Surely it would be to the advantage of Canada to save the clam industry from dying out. Vessels are going as far as Grand Manan for clams; but unless there is conservation, the days of that source of supply are numbered. Closed seasons in which this conservation will be put into effect should be instituted, and action should be taken promptly before it is too late. Some of the clam packing plants on the southern shore of New Brunswick have an investment as high as a hundred thousand dollars and are running only part time: their investment will be entirely lost when the clams disappear. The Christian Science Monitor stated a year or two ago that clams were once dug in abundance around Boston harbour, but not only are none there now, but clam beds are few and far between throughout all New England, owing to lack of proper conservation laws. Clams are prolific if given a chance, and will bring in as substantial an income in future years as they have done in the past two hundred years. Clam fishing is one of the oldest branches of the Atlantic fishing industry, but it can only be preserved by the adoption of conservation regulations.

Once again, it should be said there are experts in biological research and conservation on the staff of the Department of Fisheries. It would seem a wise government policy to build up the department substantially around the present expert staff in order to meet the needs of the fishing industry. This would be no mere measure of aid to a local situation; the benefit would be nation-wide, as in government measures to get the best results in agriculture, mining and forestry.

About the time the herring fisheries were discovered in the Bay of Fundy the Swedish towns of Skanor, Bohuslan and Falsterbo were enjoying unheard of prosperity as headquarters of the Baltic herring fisheries. These conditions had lasted for centuries; there seemed to be no end of the silvery wealth-bringing fish. Then quite suddenly the fishery ceased, for the herring withdrew into the North Sea and came no more into the gateways of the Baltic, and Sweden was impoverished. This change in the habits of these herring have never been satisfactorily explained. There are known to be vast floating meadows where fish go to pasture to feed on plankton and other vegetable and animal matter. But whence they come or whither they go is less known to the ordinary fishermen than the pasture lands of the buffalo or the habits of the beaver was known to the red men.

In very recent times a commercial tragedy came upon the sardine industry of California. The New York Times, under date of January 24, 1953, reports as follows:

> In a sixteen-year period the sardine business on the Pacific coast has dwindled to almost nothing from a $65,000,000 industry. More than $600,000 a year is being spent in California to find out why.
>
> With only one catch left in the 1952-53 fishing season the total catch for coastal waters now stands at just about 3,000 tons, which is less than four-tenths of 1 per cent of the catch during the record-setting year 1936-37.
>
> During that season the 300 sardine-fishing boats that put into the home ports of San Francisco, Monterey and San Pedro accounted for 723,000 of the 791,000 tons caught on the whole coast. It was traditional that California contributed about 90 per cent of the West Coast total.
>
> The Pacific Northwest, however, has recorded no sardine catch since 1942-49, and now California, for the first time, has come close to being sardineless. Even during the last several post-war years, when northern and central California fishermen were going broke, the southern California fleets continued bringing in fair sized catches. Last year's total for the south was approximately 125,000 tons.

This disappearance of the sardines from Monterey Bay and other California ocean pastures came about too suddenly to be entirely due to "over-fishing". The year-round harvesting of the sardine crop may well have been one contributing factor; but the expenditure of $600,000 now of government money a year to discover other causes, if any, would suggest that the stable door should have been closed before the horse disappeared.

Five agencies are now engaged in research on the California sardine problem; the California Academy of Sciences; the California Department of Fish and Game; Hopkins Marine Station of Stanford University; the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service; the University of California, Scripps Institute of Oceanography. Whatever the cause of this $65 million loss of annual income in one primary industry, when it is discovered it will surely demonstrate the need to have research and conservation before the event rather than after.

The harvesting of annual crops of fish can surely be made as permanent and increasingly productive as the harvesting of field crops or forest resources. Even as the Douglas firs, the white pines and other commercial trees scatter millions of seeds and need only to be safeguarded against depredators to reproduce, so it is with ocean pastures. The reproductive capacity of fish is prolific indeed.

The killing of wild fowl—ducks, geese or other bird life—to feed cats, would seem to be an offence against nature. There is equal need for awareness of the possible consequences of depleting operations carried on unwisely where scientific information is lacking in connection with our Canadian fisheries. In terms of productive human labour the annual amount contributed to the pool of food production by the fishermen is 47,000 pounds as compared with 34,500 pounds produced by the farmer. Private enterprise in the Canadian fisheries industry is making a substantial contribution to scientific research. The fish packers maintain modern laboratories where handling, preparing and packing seafood are constantly being developed. This private investment in service to the ultimate consumers is expensive, but it does contribute greatly to the high standard of Canadian fish products to the advantage of producer and consumer alike. The oceans are a vast expanse to be explored, however, and oceanography is a field of scientific research away beyond the resources of the laboratories maintained by private enterprise.

Now, we do not want anything to happen to any species of fish on our coast like I mentioned as having happened on the West Coast of United States and in Sweden. Such a thing would be a much worse tragedy if it occurred on our Maritime coast, for fishing is one of our largest industries and hundreds of thousands of people depend on the sea of our Atlantic coast for their very livelihood. Never in my memory has there been so much worry among fishermen and fish packers in Southern New Brunswick with regard to the future of the herring industry and the clam industry as there is at the present time. We had an example before this honourable house very recently when we were told by our federal fishery officials that the terrible destruction of trout and other fish in our Great Lakes by lamprey eels amounted to many millions of dollars, but thanks to the excellent work of our Department of Fisheries and United States co-operation, we now have every hope that the eels will ultimately be exterminated and the lake trout fisheries restored to normal in due time.

The day has long since passed when any important industry, especially a primary industry, can be operated successfully without the benefit of intense research work. Modern scientific and efficient methods must be applied. The days of any rule-of-thumb or guess system have been numbered. Without scientific research work, an important industry courts disaster; perhaps not this year, but disaster will surely catch up with such an industry in the not too distant future. The United States and Europe are spending many hundreds of millions in research work and they find it is an investment that brings greater returns than any other government expenditure. It is said that in Soviet Russia research laboratories have no budget. They work far into the night, and moneys provided for research have a preference over other expenditures.

Recently an outside company was subsidized by one of the provinces to the extent of several hundred thousand dollars to introduce North Sea methods of catching herring in the waters off Nova Scotia and the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The venture is said to be a gamble. Whether the operations of this outside company will have a further adverse effect on the herring coming into the Bay of Fundy, we do not know, as such data is not now available. If the spawning grounds of the herring, which at present are not charted, are seriously disturbed by draggers and trawlers of this company, that may well further diminish the supply of the larger herring entering the Bay. At one time fishermen in Grand Manan did a large business in kippered herring, but the volume has steadily declined in recent years. So far this year most of the sardine herring packed in New Brunswick have come from the Maine coast, so fishermen and packers alike along the Southern New Brunswick shore are seriously concerned about the changes in the habits of the herring during the last few years. They would like to know the cause of the irregular ways of the fish which are costing them substantial losses in catch.

The greatest untapped source of wealth in food for people everywhere in the world is in the ocean. Canada has far more coastline per capita than any other nation I know of. It is practical politics on the part of the Parliament of Canada to build up fisheries research and conservation and perpetuate the harvesting of seafoods. Fish is a concentrated protein diet equal in food value to the finest meats. This high nutritional value of seafoods has been scientifically demonstrated; it is on record in all food research laboratories. In the circumstances, as stated, there is quite a remarkable contrast between annual federal expenditures for the increase of fishing products and those for the increase of products from the land. The fishermen I have known, and they are many, are sturdy citizens and homemakers, resourceful and industrious. They build homes where they can make themselves self-supporting. With so much individual initiative, they are doing their share in contributing to Canada's wealth production.

Charles K. Kettering, of the Sloan Kettering Research Laboratories, whom I think we will all acknowledge as the greatest research scientist of our time, is quoted as saying:

> If there were only a million more youths being taught what it takes to make a research scientist, what an America this would be.

That indicates what Dr. Kettering thinks of research work.

The devoted and highly expert workers in the Department of Fisheries do not need to be persuaded of the possibilities of increased and more stable production through the benefits that will come from more scientific research and conservation work, but they need the interest and practical support of Parliament in the form of liberal estimates to give the nation the full benefit of this great Canadian heritage—our fisheries.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, I confess at once that I am unable to speak on this subject in so scientific a manner as the honourable member from Southern New Brunswick (Hon. Mr. McLean). I am sure that we all listened with great interest to his very fine address on conservation of the fishing industry. Nor am I able to claim such a long association with the credit unions as can my honourable friend from Kennebec (Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt). However, from 1928 until I had the honour of appointment to this chamber, in 1950, a period of 22 years, I represented fishing districts along the Nova Scotia coast, reaching from Hubbards, on the western side of Halifax, to Ecum Secum, on the extreme east, about 104 miles distant. It was there that I came in contact with the very finest type of our fishermen—honest, hardy, and absolutely reliable. During the depression years, in the thirties, these men hesitated to go on relief, and preferred to fish, eat their home-grown potatoes, and live in a very simple way until conditions improved. On many occasions I visited their small homes on the shore, in such fine places as Peggy's Cove—which artists have made to be perhaps the best known village on the Atlantic coast—Hubbards, West Dover and East Dover, Indian Harbour, Glen Margaret, and in the other direction on the western shore; and, on the eastern shore, such places as Musquodoboit Harbour, and others whose names you would hardly recognize, such as Petpeswick down to Necum Teuch. Here you find hardy fishermen of the finest type. It is that type of individual I have in mind in considering this bill which has been so ably explained by the honourable senator from Queen's-Lunenburg (Hon. Mr. Kinley). I wish to pay a compliment to the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) for selecting him to sponsor the bill, because he is an authority on the fishing industry and understands how our fishermen will be benefited by the provisions of the bill.

This proposed legislation could provide fishermen, through loans, with better equipment and the necessary facilities to handle their catch. It could help them in much the same way as the Farm Improvement Loans Act helps farmers to improve their farms. The bill is somewhat similar to that fine piece of legislation introduced after World War II, entitled the Veterans Business and Professional Loans Act, which was of great benefit to young returned soldiers starting up in peacetime careers. I was instrumental in changing one clause of that bill, by recommending that a group of perhaps five, six or seven veterans get together as a co-operative. I am wondering why the bill now before us does not include a provision of that kind, instead of providing for individual loans up to $4,000. Possibly the sponsor of the bill has already considered that aspect and will tell us, when closing the debate, whether it is possible for co-operatives to be formed so that larger amounts than the $4,000 specified in the bill could be borrowed. If the bill should be passed without that provision, I think its future inclusion should be considered.

In this connection, I have in mind the point raised by the honourable senator from Southern New Brunswick (Hon. Mr. McLean), in regard to the clam canning industry. I was pleased to hear him speak of the wonderful clam chowder of Lockporte, which is known from one end of the country to the other. We in Nova Scotia sometimes raise a smile by asking the visiting tourist, "What is a farmer doing when he is digging clams on his own farm—fishing or farming?" We create interest in the fishing industry, particularly the clam industry, by raising that question.

Like the honourable member from Kennebec, and others, I am quite familiar with St. Francis Xavier University's credit unions movement; they have done wonderful work. I recall that in 1943 the Reverend Dr. Coady appeared before a committee—I believe it was the Reconstruction and Rehabilitation Committee—and outlined the work of that university in regard to credits from 1932 onward. He stated that the Maritime Provinces, with a population of roughly 1,300,000, have 40,000 people engaged in and entirely dependent on fishing for a livelihood; and there are about 25,000 steel workers and coal miners. It will be seen, therefore, that fishing is an important industry in the Maritimes. This bill which will allow the individual fisherman to borrow as much as $4,000 to carry on his occupation is a measure which will be well received by all people. Speaking not in a political sense at all, I think the Government is to be congratulated on this fine, helpful piece of legislation.

As honourable senators were told by the honourable gentleman who explained the bill, it provides for loans in the aggregate of $20 million within a three-year period. According to the measure as originally drafted, the loans were to be handled entirely through the banks. We are well aware of the efficiency with which the banks have handled loans on housing developments, under authority which was only recently extended to them. It is perhaps of passing interest to note the encouraging extent to which these loans have been taken up. If my memory serves me correctly, in the very brief period in which the banks have enjoyed this authority some 23,000 individual loans on houses have been made. It may be said that when the measure affecting loans on houses was before Parliament we wondered whether the banks would be able to handle this type of business as efficiently as it had been done by certain other lending institutions.

When the bill now before us was discussed in the House of Commons and in a committee of that house, members from the Maritimes and elsewhere were instrumental in having it amended to include credit unions. I give credit particularly to the Nova Scotian member for Inverness-Richmond, Mr. Allan MacEachen, who at one time was on the staff of St. Francis Xavier University and is very familiar with the work of credit unions. He placed before the house strong reasons why these societies should be included as lending sources under this bill. Personally, I was very pleased to see the bill amended to place them on the same basis as the banks in this respect.

As honourable senators know, loans under this measure are to be made at 5 per cent, which is a reasonable return. From the evidence given before the committee of the other house, it would appear that the credit unions have been lending at 6 per cent. Now it will be up to them to lend to the fishermen at 5 per cent, and the same rate will be charged by the banks.

In my view the credit unions will be of greater service to the fishermen than the banks—and they have a very high reputation in the lending field; because the banks are not always located in small villages, and they are not in as close touch with the fishermen and their needs as are the credit unions. I was impressed with the statement by my honourable friend from Kennebec that the credit unions rely greatly on the moral guarantee of the borrower. I venture to say that 95 or perhaps 100 per cent of loans are made on that basis.

Before concluding my remarks I should like to pay a special tribute to the persons who came from all across Canada, and particularly from Nova Scotia, to appear before the Banking and Commerce Committee of the other house to place the case of the credit unions before it. The Credit Union League of Antigonish presented a fine brief in which they showed that they now have 222 credit unions with a membership of 52,000; that the unions have savings amounting to $3 million, and have lent a total of $40 million. Further they show a rate of loss which would be envied by many finance companies operating with greater facilities and highly trained personnel. I believe experience has shown that any lending institution which lends a fisherman $4,000 can be almost 100 per cent sure that he will repay it. I am sure my honourable friend from Kennebec will confirm me in saying that the loss on loans made by credit unions has been almost nil.

Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt: The loss has been one-fortieth of one per cent.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: That is remarkable. We in business get credit information from three or four sources before we grant credits, and even then we count ourselves lucky if our losses amount to only five-eighths of one per cent.

Mr. Speaker would be justified in calling me out of order if I made reference to government assistance which is to be given in another form to the fishermen. But in view of the fact that the honourable senator from Queen's-Lunenburg made reference to it, perhaps I might also do so. I refer to the 50 per cent salt fish benefit assistance for which the supplementary estimates provide $500,000.

In conclusion, I am pleased to join with those who have expressed their appreciation to the Government for this fine piece of legislation. I am sure everyone recognizes the need which this bill will serve, and the fine type of people who will benefit from it. I trust that the house will give it unanimous support.

Hon. Calvert C. Pratt: Honourable senators, I do not intend to detain the house for long, but I wish to say something about this measure particularly with respect to its application to Newfoundland.

First, I agree with the bill as far as it goes; it can do good work where it is applicable. It will have its benefits only in relation to the amount of use to which it will be put, and that use will be governed largely by the conditions in various parts of the country. It will have some benefits for all fishing populations, but for the province of Newfoundland it certainly will not be nearly as beneficial as previous speakers have said it will be for the other provinces concerned.

In the first place, honourable senators, it is based on the Farm Improvement Loans Act which provides for a maximum loan of $4,000. That does not fit very well into the Newfoundland picture. To the small inshore fishing boats of comparatively low value it may apply, but it certainly is not applicable to off-shore boats which are coming more into use and run in value considerably in excess of that provided. Those off-shore boats are still far below the value of the deep-sea fishing boats which the honourable senator from Queen's-Lunenburg (Hon. Mr. Kinley) has referred to. There is nothing in between which would apply in this case. It has been mentioned here that the deep-sea fishing boats run in cost as high as $100,000. They are not within the provisions of this bill, and possibly rightly so, because the owners may have other means of financing. As far as what I term off-shore fishing boats are concerned, the maximum loan of $4,000 is altogether too small. Probably $15,000 or $20,000 might be a more appropriate amount for assistance.

I find that this maximum loan of $4,000 is somehow or other linked with the Government-operated insurance plan, and I cannot understand just why. That insurance plan is a great help to fishermen. This $4,000 maximum loan figure is arrived at, I understand, by the fact that it is not in excess of the insurance coverage, which is 60 per cent of valuation up to $7,500.00. In that way it seems that the amount of the loan is fixed to correspond to the insurance coverage. I do not think that that makes sense. The conditions that apply to insurance on the general run of risks under the Government insurance plan have no application to the needs of the fishermen for loans on specific risks and values.

I was very pleased, as I know we all were, with the very fine explanation given to us by the honourable senator from Queen's-Lunenburg when he moved the second reading of this measure. However, there are a few points that I will refer to. He said that the maximum of $4,000 for loans may be regarded as a starting point and that increased limits will come as experience is gathered. Well, it may be so, but I am afraid that the provisions will not be availed of in Newfoundland sufficiently to gather very useful experience, and I will briefly state the reason why.

The Speech from the Throne at the opening of this session made reference to this legislation, and during the debate on the Address in Reply I had something to say on the matter. At that time I said that, as far as the province of Newfoundland was concerned, with its extended coastline, its scattered population and with the chartered banks located where they are, I did not think that the proposed measure could function broadly enough through the banks. It will, no doubt, function very effectively in certain areas where banks are established. But, Newfoundland, apart from Labrador, has 4,000 to 5,000 miles of coastline. This fact is not realized outside, and I have yet to meet anyone from the other provinces, except perhaps, from the Maritimes, who are aware of this geographical fact. There are a great many other features that people on the mainland do not realize, but no doubt they will learn in time. Newfoundland, with its long coastline and numerous bays and islands, has not means of communication comparable with the other provinces. Everywhere along the coast, however, there are fishing operations. It is difficult to see how the banks can service these risks outside their immediate areas of operation, and I would point out that the need for modernization of equipment is very great and widespread. There are stretches of hundreds and hundreds of miles of coast where there are no banks, and in many of those stretches the need for this assistance is the greatest.

Honourable senators, like the preceding speakers, I am very pleased with the fact that the credit unions have been brought in under the provisions of the bill. I was really amazed at the extent of the operations of these credit unions as described in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec. They have undoubtedly been a tremendous factor in the economy of the fishing population and the fishing areas of these provinces, but in Newfoundland unfortunately we have not got such credit unions to take advantage of the provisions of this bill. There are very few, if any, amongst fishermen. So what applies admirably to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec has very little application in Newfoundland. I may say in explanation that Newfoundland has been rather unfortunate—and I say unfortunate in the full meaning of the word—in that the co-operative societies have not had the measure of growth in our province that they have had elsewhere. The credit unions are, of course, the offshoots of the co-operative societies. Unfortunately, in the early days of Commission of Government the co-operative movement got off to what appeared to be a fine start, with a great deal of fanfare. There were a lot of wise announcements, but time showed that those wise announcements were followed by very foolish practices. There was too much paternalism. The co-operatives were not allowed, or made, to stand on their own feet and thus grow and gather strength. They did not have leadership at the top. Consequently, the co-operative movement in Newfoundland—I am referring to producers' co-operatives, fishermen's co-operatives and so forth—have not expanded; in fact, they are on the decline. However, in industrial areas there are some consumers' co-operatives which are doing very well.

I might say, however, that the first co-operative society in Newfoundland was started in the days when the co-operative movement in the other provinces was in its infancy. It was established in the north of the island, at St. Anthony, by the late Sir Wilfred Grenfell, and that co-operative movement still carries on there. That is one of many legacies left by that marvellous benefactor of Newfoundland, whom we remember as our Doctor Grenfell.

But what I wish to say here is that while this bill will be of advantage in its aid to fishermen in some of the provinces, and I approve of it, I fear that as it is now drafted it is not going to be of major benefit to Newfoundland fishermen, and certainly not to the extent that previous speakers have anticipated for the other provinces. I wish just to put on record this remark, that, in order to make the act more applicable and valuable to Newfoundland, it should be the subject of special and constant study. In ten years' time our province may be served by credit unions which will fill such gaps as cannot be occupied by the banks, but we cannot afford to delay action for ten years; the fishing industry of Newfoundland should be able to take advantage of what is certainly a world wide movement to make it easier for the producers—in this case the fishermen—to acquire what they need for greater production. I suggest, therefore, that the Department of Fisheries and the other appropriate federal authorities should be in continuous negotiation with the Newfoundland Fishermen's Federation, with the co-operatives—such as they are—with the provincial Government, with our provincial Fisheries Loan Board, and any other agencies, including the banks, that can assist in working out plans which will be applicable to the industry as a whole in our province. Although the economy of Newfoundland is more diversified today than it was in past years, and diversification is growing, fisheries mean relatively more to Newfoundland than to any other province; and to my mind it is too bad that this bill, through its limitations, both as to the amount provided and the extent of its application, will have so little significance for our fisheries.

Hon. John J. Kinley: Honourable senators,—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: If the honourable senator from Queen's-Lunenburg (Hon. Mr. Kinley) speaks now, he will close the debate.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Honourable senators, there is very little I need say about this bill. We have had a splendid discussion, very complimentary in character. The bill was passed unanimously in the other house, and I am sure it will receive the same treatment here. I was much interested in the talk on conservation, by the honourable senator from Southern New Brunswick (Hon. Mr. McLean). It seemed to me as though his thoughts were almost good enough to stand on their own feet and be embodied in a resolution which would give us the opportunity of a splendid discussion on the preservation of our fisheries.

This subject is not merely of national but of international importance. Perhaps it is not realized that Europeans take more fish from the banks adjacent to Canada than do Canadians themselves, including Newfoundlanders. Some months ago I had the pleasure of inspecting a Portuguese fishing fleet in the harbour of Lisbon. It is the finest fishing fleet in the world. The boats were all ready to sail for the banks of Newfoundland. They carry on a very successful industry; they are equipped "to the last minute". I was impressed with the dignified bearing of the labour engaged in Portugal's fishing industry. With them, their occupation ranks as a profession. The would-be fisherman must attend school for years; his apprenticeship is very severe; in consequence his country is in the very forefront of the industry. These people have some concern with the matter of conservation, because the fishing banks are free to the nations of the world.

It may be recalled that some years ago I moved in this house the second reading of a Government bill to make an area division of parts of the sea in relation to certain countries which are most interested in the subject of control. I note that conventions have been held and that the participating nations are trying to establish a shoreline limit of ten miles for the control of fisheries. I believe it is a salutary project, and I hope it will be put in effect. Conservation generally is an international matter and is subject to international control.

I listened with interest to the remarks of the honourable senator from St. John's West (Hon. Mr. Pratt) in connection with this bill. I have been associated with him in business affairs for about thirty years. I remember that when he first came to this country he was interested in the activities of our firm; and I am pleased that he has had such marked success in the industry of his own province. It goes to show that a man of ability can do well even in the older circles of our industrial life. But I suggest that he is a little over-anxious about the capacity of Newfoundland's lending facilities. Newfoundland has a splendid banking system. My honourable friend is a director of one of the banks, and I know that in that capacity his business experience and his advice are most valuable. Business in every corner of Newfoundland is now being served by the banks, and they are doing a splendid job.

It will be remembered that when the subject of loans for housing was being considered by our committee, representatives of the banks showed some reluctance to participate. But the venture has proved so attractive that they are now keenly interested in it; they realize that they have entered a good and productive field. I believe that their experience will be repeated in this industry, and that as time goes on, the people of Newfoundland will in increasing measure take advantage of this legislation. The provincial Government is spending enormous sums to build up the fishing industry there, and I think the honourable senator from St. John's West will agree with me when I say that the outlook for this industry on the island is very good.

The suggestion has been made that this legislation will not be of much use to the fisherman with the small boat. But that is not my opinion; all that a fisherman has to do in order to get a loan is to comply with the conditions prescribed under the bill. I believe that fishermen in general will take full advantage of these provisions.

The honourable senator from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) who is, I believe, interested in the shore fisheries—because the Nova Scotia coastline is long and there are many shore fisheries around Halifax—wanted to know if an association of fishermen could take advantage of the provisions for loans.

Well, a fisherman is described in section 2 (f) of the bill as follows:

"Fisherman" means a person who has a prescribed interest in,

(i) a fishing vessel,

(ii) a weir, or similar fish catching or trapping device, that is affixed to the ground, or

(iii) a proprietory share in a fishing vessel or in a weir or fish catching or trapping device described in subparagraph (ii), and whose principal occupation is participation in a primary fishing enterprise.

If a fisherman has a proprietary share in a fishing vessel with somebody else, it is only fair to assume that his associate should be entitled to get a loan in connection with his share in the vessel. "Prescribed" means prescribed by regulation.

Under section 3 the purpose of a loan will be, among other things, for overhauling a fishing vessel or its hull, superstructure or engine, the purchase or construction of a shore installation, the purchase or construction of fishing equipment, and the purchase or construction of a fishing vessel. I think honourable senators will find that anything which has not been covered in this debate can be explained in committee. After all, this is a bill which should go to committee. Everybody agrees with it in principle and I trust it will receive unanimous approval on second reading.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Kinley, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, July 6, 1955

The Senate met at 3 p.m., Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

DIVORCE

PROCEDURE—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that messages had been brought from the House of Commons returning certain divorce bills and acquainting the Senate that the Commons have passed the said bills without amendment.

Hon. John T. Haig: Honourable senators, may I have consent of the house to speak at this time on a question of privilege? I do not intend to enter into any lengthy discussion about divorce at this time. My purpose in rising is to suggest that at the opening of next session members of this house hold a conference on the question of divorce procedure.

Yesterday I sat in the gallery of another place during a debate, and I was very much hurt by the attitude shown by certain honourable gentlemen there with regard to a few divorce bills passed by this house. I do not know the details of the evidence adduced in connection with the particular divorce bills that were under discussion, but I do know that in the courts of our land the trial judge —and in this matter our Divorce Committee corresponds to a trial judge—is always considered the best judge of whether a witness is telling the truth or not in any trial held before him, so much so that the court of appeal will never upset the finding of fact of a trial judge unless it is so repugnant to justice that no other course can be taken.

I have some suggestions to make with regard to our divorce proceedings, not in criticism of the operations of the present Divorce Committee at all, but on the over-all problem of divorce procedure in this house, particularly on the question of how we should handle divorces, in view of the rising criticism in another place. The reason I rise to say these few words at this time is so that between now and the opening of next session honourable senators may spend some time thinking about this problem, and that when they attend the conference which I suggest should be held at the opening of next session they will have made up their minds as to what ought to be done.

Just one more word, honourable senators. I have had nearly fifteen years experience serving on the Senate Divorce Committee, and I know at first hand of the unselfish work done by members of that committee, not for the Senate, but for the people of two provinces. In the criticism that is being levelled at the proceedings of our committee I do not think we are getting a fair deal. As a senator and a lawyer I should like to have the whole matter discussed among ourselves before we strike committees at the next session, so as to determine if any change can be made in our procedure or if any understanding can be arrived at for avoiding these clashes between another place and ourselves on this subject of divorces. I am not citing any particular case. Critics in the other place may be right; but I do not think they are.

I thank the house for permission to make these few remarks. I hope that between now and next January, or whenever Parliament shall reassemble, honourable senators will consider this whole matter and come here prepared to offer suggestions as to how this very, very vexed question can best be handled.

FISHERIES IMPROVEMENT LOANS BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. G. Percival Burchill, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the report of the committee on Bill 452.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (452) intituled: "An Act respecting Loans to assist Fishermen engaged in a Primary Fishing Enterprise", have in obedience to the order of reference of July 5, 1955, examined the said bill, and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Burchill: Honourable senators, I read third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

CONGRESS OF INTERNATIONAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE AT TOKYO—DISCUSSION, INQUIRY AND ANSWER

Hon. Calvert C. Pratt rose in accordance with the following notice:

That he will draw the attention of the Senate to the recent Congress of the International

Chamber of Commerce at Tokyo, Japan, and will inquire of the Government:

1. Will the recently concluded negotiations with Japan under the provisions of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade supplement the terms of the trade agreement signed between Canada and Japan in 1954?

2. If this is the case, what are the more important respects in which GATT will supplement the earlier agreement?

3. In the light of the announcement made at the above-mentioned Congress of the formation of the equivalent of an international bank, to be known as The International Finance Corporation, with authorized capital of $100 million, and the fact that in the supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1956, the Government has provided for the purchase of 3,600 shares in the amount of $3,600,000 in United States currency—

(a) In what areas is it proposed that the International Finance Corporation will operate?

(b) Who is going to run it and how will it be managed?

(c) Is it intended that the capital be used as a revolving fund and, if so, how will this be done?

(d) To what extent is it felt by the Government that this Corporation with the finances available will be able to achieve its purpose?

He said: Honourable senators, having reference to the Notice of Inquiry standing in my name for today, I feel it will be interesting and, I trust, useful to inform this house of the proceedings of the Fifteenth Congress of the International Chamber of Commerce which it was my privilege to attend in May of this year at Tokyo, Japan.

The deliberations were on subjects of paramount importance to all nations and were carried on with a very wide background of practical experience. At the Congress there were 924 delegates from 42 countries. Every continent was represented. It was a most interesting experience to sit in amongst representatives from Iraq and Mexico, Brazil and Viet Nam, Pakistan and Sweden, the Philippines and the Belgian Congo, Australia and Germany, just to mention a few to illustrate how widespread were the homelands of the delegates. It can well be imagined how diverse were the approaches to many of the problems that were brought up for discussion, as well as the complexity of those problems.

Tokyo being the headquarters of this Congress, Japan naturally had the most delegates, with 262 in attendance. The United States came next with 103; India, France and Indonesia had in the 50's, the United Kingdom 36, and Canada 34. This conference was under the chairmanship of the President, Mr. Camille Gutt, who is undoubtedly doing a job worthy of world recognition. During the period of the meetings at Tokyo, the Congress was saddened by the news that the newly-elected President, Mr. George A. Sloan, had died at New York. His death deprived the organization of the very valuable leadership which such an eminent figure in industrial and cultural affairs would have provided.

I think in order to make my comments on this Congress as meaningful as they should be, it will be useful for me to tell you something of the International Chamber of Commerce, which is not nearly as much publicized as its functions and its usefulness in world affairs really warrant. The I.C.C., as it is termed, is a sort of co-ordinating body for the organizations of commerce and finance throughout the world, and, in general, its purpose is to help people do business with one another wherever freedom of trade is a recognized factor. It is about 35 years old, has its permanent headquarters in Paris and, except for the period of the Second World War, has held its international Congress every second year. As the Chairman of the Japanese committee recently put it, its lifetime has been "35 years of wind and rain".

In Canada we have the Canadian Council of the International Chamber of Commerce, very ably led by the President, Mr. R. C. Berkinshaw, C.B.E., LL.D., and the General Manager, Mr. Carl Bergithon. Both of these gentlemen played a very valuable part in the deliberations of the Congress. Our colleague, the Senator from Vancouver (Hon. Mr. McKeen) is, as you know, a member of the Canadian executive body.

Needless to say, the I.C.C. has no administrative powers over its members in the parent countries, directly or through the Congress. Neither can it speak with authority for any country. The organization, however, can provide the facts, build up the case, and give invaluable guidance to those who have the responsibility for the laws, rules and regulations whereby people in various lands can deal most advantageously and equitably with each other. It can be the supporter and the constructive critic and, in fact, the policy builder as occasion demands for the organizations existing for the development of world trade, such as GATT, the international bank for reconstruction and development, and others. How useful it can be in facilitating and expediting international trade depends, to a great extent, on how closely the trade organizations within its orbit have the attention and co-operation of various governments. Because of the wide background of experience possessed by its members, I cannot think of a more useful medium for the gathering of constructive information and exchange of views.

At this Congress 51 resolutions were passed, aimed at lowering barriers and making easier the flow of international trade and finance.

One could be sceptical and lightly pass off the significance of the long list of decisions on matters of wide variety, but separate committees, each in its own specialized field, have wrestled with the problems, sometimes over years, and could speak with particular knowledge.

Before passing on to a summary of some of the matters of interest to us, may I make this further observation about the general usefulness of the I.C.C. It should be remembered, in appraising the value of this organization and its affiliates and component parts throughout the world, that those who compose them are the very ones whose ambition and interest—personal interest, if you like—are in successful and enlarged international trade, whose job it is day by day and hour by hour to wrestle with the problems involved. Theirs is not an academic nor purely administrative experience and interest—theirs is the job of seeing the goods actually made and produced, seeing a value put on them by buying and selling, seeing them paid for and shipped. All the problems of international trade are right in their laps day by day. Of vital concern to them is an extension of trading within and without all countries. The widening of the avenues of distribution for products by increased purchasing power of peoples is of greatest practical concern. Their views on policies to be adopted will differ with circumstances of business and countries, but it is too often overlooked by governments and the general public that the implementation and practical application of the rules, regulations and laws governing international trade fall on those in business who direct commerce in all its branches.

The I.C.C. is the only economic organ which links the international trading bodies and persons of the world in close association, and I would say again that it is my hope that the governments of the various countries will take the deliberations seriously and weave into public policy the results of the experience of those who know the issues involved in world trading, even though they do not know all the answers.

I would ask your permission to digress for a moment from the main subject of this talk to emphasize by illustration the benefit of closer collaboration of government and business in international negotiations on foreign trade. In 1931, being President of the Newfoundland Board of Trade, it was my honour and privilege to accompany, by invitation, a Canadian trade mission to South American Republics on a specially chartered steamer—the Prince Robert. The mission consisted of 150 Canadians, with one Newfoundlander holding a watching brief. While it was a trade mission under the auspices of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, it had official Government recognition through the presence of Sir George Perley, then in the House of Commons, the Honourable C. P. Beaubien and the Honourable H. H. Horsey of the Senate, as well as some administrative officers of Government. Some provinces also had official representatives. A marked feature of that mission, and one which largely contributed to its success, was its constitution of representatives of both business and government. Ordinarily—though, of course, not always—on such visits to foreign countries, delegates of governments meet only delegates of other governments and representatives of industry meet only their counterparts in other countries. What I feel is needed is more frequent association of representatives of government and trade in missions abroad, so that administrators of public policy will learn, at first hand, of the practical difficulties of interchange of goods and business executives will learn of government policies.

In the 1931 Hansard of both houses there are extended reports on the mission. I refer to them now for just one purpose: to say that I found there just what I expected to find—a tribute to the fact that the joint nature of the mission produced concrete results on the spot. It was not just an academic or administrative survey of conditions in the South—with hopes aroused and results deferred, as we see in so many cases these days.

I will quote the words used by the late Senator Beaubien in summarizing the benefits of that trade mission:

> First: Good will,
> Second: Concrete accomplishments by active trade contacts,
> Third: Understanding trade difficulties.

I am convinced that frequent trade missions, composed of government delegates in highly responsible posts and business men truly representative of the trade best suited for development between Canada and the countries visited, would have far-reaching benefits.

I shall now bring to your attention some details of the proceedings of the Congress at Tokyo. I shall confine my remarks to matters which may have the greater significance and interest to us in Canada, although I would qualify that by saying there is no practical way in these times of divorcing things of international consequence from those of national concern.

The opening session was addressed by the Prime Minister of Japan, Mr. Ichiro Hatoyama, and the representative of the United Nations, Mr. James Keen, as well as the leading officials of the I.C.C.

As the Congress was held in the East, and for the first time in the East, it was natural that its central theme should be announced as "Asian Problems and World Progress". The I.C.C. Commission on Asian and Far-Eastern affairs which functioned to study and promote economic advancement in the East was composed of delegates from Burma, Ceylon, India, Indonesia, Japan, Pakistan, the Philippines, Thailand and Viet Nam.

The headings of the discussions throughout the Congress may be summarized:

1. Freer trade for world prosperity.

The discussion in the general meeting on this all-important subject was presided over by our own Mr. R. E. Berkinshaw, the Chairman of the Canadian Council. Under this heading came trade and tariff policy in the world today, the future of GATT, the new plans for reducing customs tariff and similar matters.

2. Fair competition—A factor in industrial and commercial progress.
3. International co-operation for stability in the world markets for primary products.
4. Progress towards a new monetary order.
5. Asian development and world economy.

Within these categories were group discussions by members experienced in the particular fields. Such discussions held outside the general meetings were on many topics, including:

Freedom and progress in ocean transport,

International commercial arbitration,

Administrative obstacles to trade,

Standardization of commerce and banking practices,

Air transport in the service of economic development,

Flag discrimination as applied to shipping,

Public and private investment in economic development,

The International Finance Corporation,

Nuclear power and economic development,

Convertibility of currencies and economic problems in Asian regions,

Need for a balanced pattern of development in agriculture, primary products and industry.

Surely one might say this is a formidable list for a week's congress, but it is well to remember that separate and regional bodies within the organization have made one or other of these topics their special concern over the years.

I will now attempt to give you some specific information and views on certain of these matters, but I can only be expected, I am sure, to touch the fringe of them.

The subject of the use of atomic energy in the industrialization of Asia received outstanding attention both at the Congress and in the press of the East. The discussion was led off by the well-known and eminent industrialist, Mr. John J. Hopkins, Chairman and President of the General Dynamics Corporation and of Canadair Limited. His organization, as honourable senators are aware, is generally regarded as a world leader in the field of promotion of atomic power for industry. In a speech regarded as of far-reaching importance, he emphasized the need for speeding up industrial development in the East. To repeat his words, "Asia will continue to languish indefinitely in economic chains" if it has to depend on the kind of historical development that characterized industrialization in Western countries. How true such a point of view is, can be realized when we think of the increasing knowledge by Eastern people of the outside world by reason of improved facilities for education, communication and travel. This knowledge serves to impress them with the progress of the more advanced countries while, at the same time, it accelerates the dissatisfaction with the depressing and primitive conditions of living in some of their homelands.

Mr. Hopkins advocated the formation of an atomic energy community devoted to the cause of greater industrialization in Eastern countries. The reaction of the Japanese English-speaking press, as well as of the Eastern delegates, as far as one can judge, was that, while cautioning against expectation of speed in that direction, they expressed gratification at the fact that an eminent body of scientists, business and government leaders were concentrating their thoughts on Asian problems in such a constructive way.

At this point I would like to bring to your attention for a brief period some other thoughts on the Asian position in world trade. Although 16 Free Asian countries contain 760 million people, or nearly one-third of the world's population, they now account for a little more than one-tenth of the world's imports and less than one-tenth of the world's exports. I mention this to bring out the fact that their proportionate share of world trade has declined since World War II, notwithstanding that a considerable number of independent countries have come into being in that period and have expressed an active policy of development.

Asian countries have a tremendous variety of raw materials required by the West, but our part of the world cannot continue to regard the East just as a source of supply for our manufacturing plants. We complain—and with some practical reason—of the low prices entering into competition with our products. The answer of long-range importance—and time is speeding on in this respect—is for the West to encourage the industrialization of the East, so that by the higher standards out there the world trading area and purchasing power will expand, benefiting everybody. Experience has shown that trade cannot be successful on a one-way road. Whether the Western world views it with favour or otherwise, industrialization is not going to be confined to the West. That does not mean that industrialization of the East will necessarily take the pattern of the West. While the people of Japan, for instance, have shown a marked aptitude for industrial processes, that does not indicate that the Eastern populations will or can use to any great extent the streamline methods of Western peoples. The Asian approach to work does require the employment of more people and, certainly, more hours than in the West, for the same volume of turnout; hence for that and other reasons the use of payroll rates alone as the yardstick to measure relative costs is wrong and misleading.

In this connection also I had an interesting sidelight on the differences between the practices of Japanese industries and those of Western countries. In reviewing an official publication of the Japanese Federation of Employers' Associations, I noticed the surprising fact that the basic wages or "take-home pay" of employees is relatively small compared with total payment for employee account. They quoted figures to show that in the years 1948-1951 basic wages, varying of course with years and industry, were as low as 30 per cent and as high as 62 per cent of the total payments made directly to workers and on their behalf. A review of a publication in 1954 by the Labour press of Tokyo conveyed the same impression and also stressed the relatively low per capita labour productivity as a national problem, although inseparable from the problem of overpopulation.

The West may well be expected to hold its lead in industry for generations, if not for centuries, but it will gain far more by having prosperous peoples in the East than by having, as neighbours, impoverished millions. For one thing is certain—geography as a separating factor is finished and all peoples are destined to live in one neighbourhood.

Thought in the Western world, and on the North American continent, in particular, is to my mind too circumscribed by the urge just to protect what we have. What I mean is that we are too "protectionist-minded". Tariffs are frequently used as a protection for wages and costs that are allowed to run up beyond what, in some industries, is economically sound in the world. They are sometimes a cloak for inefficient management and inadequate modernization of methods and, further, they are often a shelter under which are made types and classes of goods which those abroad might make better and thereby provide themselves with the means to buy from us what we can produce more favourably. Do not misunderstand me; there is nothing practical in an overall repudiation by us or by any one country, of tariff protection in the world today, but the evils lie in the excess. We, right at home—and, if I may add, the United States also—should keep ourselves under constant examination to avoid the evils of these excesses.

I mentioned the contribution to the discussions of the Congress by Mr. J. J. Hopkins. I would like also to mention another figure who received outstanding attention. He was Mr. Russell H. Dorr, head of the World Bank, Far-East Section. Incidentally, in meeting him, I had the pleasure of renewing a friendship of many years. Mr. Dorr presented to the Congress the framework of the International Finance Corporation, the plan of operation for which is now before the 56 member nations of the World Bank. The United States, it was announced, has agreed, subject to legislative sanction, to subscribe for $35 million worth of shares in the corporation. The United Kingdom, I believe, has suggested a subscription of $14½ million and Canada's contribution, as shown by the Supplementary Estimates, is $3½ million. Subscriptions range all the way down to $2,000 by the Republic of Panama. We were informed at the Congress that when $75 million has been placed by member countries, the plan will come into effect. The General Assembly of the United Nations on December 11, 1954, endorsed the I.F.C. idea by a vote of 50 in favour with none against, but with 5 abstentions. I have given notice of inquiry concerning certain aspects of our Government's point of view on this investment. The announcement, however, that was made by Mr. Dorr, stated that the objective is to encourage productive private enterprise and to provide capital in ventures where private investment is committed but is inadequate. The fund, it was stated, will not be used where there is public or government investment in a particular project. Also, according to a statement made, it is intended to function in the less-developed areas of the world. It appears to be a very worthy project, but one cannot help feeling that the funds provided are of very modest proportions.

The policy of a return to convertibility of currencies amongst nations received close consideration at the Congress. This matter is of very great importance to Canada as a chief exporting country. The general statements did not minimize the difficulties, nor, indeed, the frustrations where convertibility may fail in practice and be revoked. It seemed to be the general thought that the world situation now is favourable to a show of leadership in this respect by the United Kingdom and certain other countries. It has been officially expressed by the I.C.C. that exchange control, while unavoidable in some instances, is still one of the worst obstacles to advancement of world economy. Governments of the day, while weighing the chances of maintaining stability of currencies—if once free from control—do not give sufficient weight to the possible contribution, by increased competition, to extension of world trade and thus build stability on its own success. International Chamber of Commerce Councils throughout the world were urged to keep the issue prominently before their respective governments. Mr. Anwar Ali of Pakistan, Director of the Middle East Department of the International Monetary Fund, made a notable contribution to the discussion on this particular subject. As we know, the International Monetary Fund has resources equal to around $9 billion, of which $3½ billion is in gold and dollars. The Fund's resources, he pointed out, are available for the encouragement of its members to move effectively towards the establishment of currency convertibility or striving to maintain it. The Fund regards the objective of convertibility on a stable basis as the very foundation of an effective system of multilateral trade. Convertibility is not a favour conferred by one country on another. It must harmonize with national policies, and it is hoped that leaders in countries the world over will become more conscious of what a powerful instrument it can be for achieving internal stability, external balance, increased production in trade and a higher standard of living. The cancellation of control in Canada, freeing of U.S.-Canada dollar transactions, was a progressive example. The step-by-step policy, generally speaking, has been too slow, sometimes over-cautious, sometimes too much influenced by politics to heed even the advice of the best financial authorities. One gathers the impression that forthright leadership in this matter of currency convertibility is lacking in some of the countries that are most favourably placed in respect to their position of accumulated reserves.

Restrictions of freedom of shipping and what is termed "flag discrimination" have been a matter of resolutions by Congress after Congress, but time has seen restrictions getting more onerous. The freedom of the seas is becoming more and more challenged. That freedom is fundamental in movement of traffic, for, after all, the economical and efficient movement of commodities is of much greater importance than just employment on ships—as necessary as this is. According to a brief presented, we learned that there are 16 countries which have bilateral agreements for control of cargo movements and nine of them took unilateral action and dictated use of their own ships where control of cargo was involved. India is one of the leaders in dictating policy of confining cargoes to their own boats. Ocean freights are much higher in some cases, double what they were a short while ago. Controls may have a lot to do with it and may have a material effect on an exporting country such as ours. Canada was not cited as one of the offenders in that respect. It is my opinion, however, that we shall do well to be more closely on our guard than we are, against the limitations imposed by our inland and coastal shipping laws. That, however, is another subject.

Administrative obstacles to trade was the subject of many resolutions calling for correction. It is amazing to see how many trivial—or what appear to be trivial—regulations can obstruct movement of trade. Consular invoices, for instance, are sometimes an outstanding abomination. Some countries seem to aim at paying for Consular Office expenses by a charge for Consular invoices and other documentary requirements, which, actually is a cover for additional protection for their own industries. Valuation of goods for duties other than the purchase price tends to double up on the tariff charges. One country watches another in this matter and there seems to be a race not to be outdone. A bill, I understand, was introduced in the United States Congress in 1954 which would have amended their valuation laws, but action was deferred. One country does a valuation stunt for duties and another just slaps it in the face by similar action, and on it goes. Consequently I think that our provision for the revaluation of textiles last year was of doubtful value from the long range point of view. The I.C.C. holds to the principle that the contract price paid or payable, as proven by invoice, should normally be the basic value on which goods are assessed for Customs purposes. In fact, I feel it is thoroughly sound.

The hindrance to freer trade and greater productivity throughout the world by double taxation as between countries was a prominent issue. For years past, the collaboration of the I.C.C. with the League of Nations on this subject served as a basis for most of the existing double taxation treaties. The I.C.C. has recently taken a step further in the matter by recommending to the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations, recognition of the principle that the country of origin of profits, rather than the country of residence, should have the sole right to tax the profits made. In this connection, I might add that, in the ensuing discussion, it was emphasized that certain of the less-developed countries are now endeavouring to attract capital by exempting earned income on new industrial undertakings. The thought was freely expressed that such profits should not be taxed in a country where the operation has no connection.

The need for arresting the trend, wherever it is shown, towards economic nationalism was one of the keynotes of the Congress. While it is not always in evidence, the countries which are the farthest advanced industrially should, in their own interests, be the most conscious of the fallacy of hedging themselves in by excessive tariffs and other restrictions. It is a policy plausible but short-sighted, seemingly justifiable but practically wrong and, while it might actually provide present relief, is undeniably loaded with future disaster. It should be remembered that technology is no longer confined to a few countries. The spread of technology is a feature of some of the areas of great populations which we shall all need as trading partners, for the exchange both of raw materials and finished products.

The General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, or "GATT", as it is termed, came in for extended study and exchange of views. The Canadian delegation introduced to the Congress, a policy statement and resolution supporting the revision and the proposed creation of the new organization for trade co-operation. It called upon all governments to give effective and practical application to the policy with the least possible delay.

The Congress was fortunate in having in attendance Mr. Eric Wyndham White, General Secretary of GATT. I shall not use your time to discuss this subject which is constantly before us in Canada. I think we are fortunate that Canada, through the Government and organized industry, is taking a leading part in that fine instrument for freer trade. As we all know, it is not perfect by any means. It needs to be able to act more quickly in making decisions and readjustments than it does. It does, however, keep the member countries in touch with one another's needs and, undoubtedly, helps maintain the system of multilateral arrangements. I think I can say it was a fairly general view at the Congress that, without GATT or something broader and better to replace it, the world would fall into narrow sections for trading and currency dealings which would be too restrictive to contemplate.

The trade of GATT signatory countries accounts for 80 per cent of world commerce. Canada's trade with those countries is about 90 per cent of our total trade. For GATT or any world organization with similar ideals to perform its function in a far-reaching way, there needs to be a greater realization throughout the world of the mutual advantage of give and take, with not all "give" expected of some and an attitude of all "take" attributed to others. The movement needs more prominence in world thought and understanding so that it will operate on a plane worthy of its concepts.

I should like to make a particular reference to Japan, which was our host country for the Congress. As we know, last year we entered into a Canada-Japan trade treaty. The general substance of that treaty was that Japan agreed not to discriminate against Canada in favour of any other country in the purchase of a list of products such as grains, flour, woodpulp, certain metals and other commodities which rank high in the list of Canadian exports to Japan. I heard complaints in Japan, although not officially, of the unbalanced trade between the two countries.

In 1949 during the occupation, Japan balanced its trade with Canada at $5 million and, in 1950, at about $6 million. After trade had come under Japanese control, our exports in 1953 to that country, amounted to about $118 million, and, our imports from there to about $13½ million. In 1954 they bought from us goods to the value of $96 million and we purchased from them $19 million worth. Japan has been, in very recent years, our second best customer for grain, having bought from us in 1954 about $50 million worth of wheat and $13 million worth of barley. I cannot take the time to go into the details which this particular subject warrants, but I suggest we should be liberal in our outlook and attitude so as to preserve the good will and co-operation of this very valuable trading partner.

And now, honourable senators, here is something which struck home to me very forcibly as a practical example of Japan's foresight in improving its international relations. I was intrigued when I first heard of the Canada-Japan Society. It is a full-time organization functioning actively and composed chiefly of Japanese with Canadian associations in business and other spheres, as well as some Canadians residing in Japan. I made inquiry and found there are no less than sixteen such societies in Japan. I have listed them for the record:

Afghanistan Society.
Turkey Society.
Italy-Japan Society.
India-Japan Society.
Great Britain-Japan Society.
China-Japan Cultural Society.
Canada-Japan Society.
Australia-New Zealand-Japan Society.
Hungary-Japan Cultural Society.
Brazil-Japan Society.
America-Japan Society.
Argentine-Japan Society.
Israel-Japan Society.
Indonesia-Japan Society.
Philippine-Japan Society.

These societies represent a voluntary movement of citizens in various walks of life designed to cultivate greater understanding and good will in their world contacts. Certainly this is an idea we could well borrow from these resourceful people and use in the cultivation of our relations with them and people of other lands.

I would like to use this occasion to express appreciation of the personal courtesy extended to me by Mr. Yahachi Kawai, the President of the House of Councillors, or, as we would call him, the Speaker of the Senate. It was with great interest that I availed myself of the opportunity of attending at the Upper House of the Diet while it was in session and, after receiving numerous introductions, I could watch—even if I could not understand —the proceedings of their committees.

I feel very sure that all present at the Congress in Tokyo were most impressed with the friendliness and warmth of welcome extended on every hand.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I am sure we have all listened with great interest to the remarks of the honourable gentleman from St. John's West (Hon. Mr. Pratt). It was not incumbent upon him to deliver this address, but we are indebted to him for telling us something of what took place at the recent very important Congress of the International Chamber of Commerce. The fact that it was held at Tokyo made it memorable in itself. Tokyo must be a most interesting city, and to have gone there was, I am sure, a treat for the honourable senator, which he has now shared with us by telling us of some of the things that he saw and heard there.

The honourable gentleman has also given his views on certain questions which concern fiscal policy, and I have no doubt his address will be read with interest by those in the other house who are responsible for making fiscal policy. All in all, it has been an entertaining and informative address, and we are indeed grateful to him.

On June 22 the honourable senator gave notice as follows:

That he will draw the attention of the Senate to the recent Congress of the International Chamber of Commerce at Tokyo, Japan.

He has now done that, and very well indeed. His notice also stated he would inquire of the Government:

1. Will the recently concluded negotiations with Japan under the provisions of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade supplement the terms of the trade agreement signed between Canada and Japan in 1954?

2. If this is the case, what are the more important respects in which GATT will supplement the earlier agreement?

3. In the light of the announcement made at the above mentioned Congress of the formation of the equivalent of an international bank, to be known as The International Finance Corporation, with authorized capital of $100 million, and the fact that in the supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1956, the Government has provided for the purchase of 3,600 shares in the amount of $3,600,000 in United States currency—

(a) In what areas is it proposed that the International Finance Corporation will operate?
(b) Who is going to run it and how will it be managed?
(c) Is it intended that the capital be used as a revolving fund and, if so, how will this be done?
(d) To what extent is it felt by the Government that this Corporation with the finances available will be able to achieve its purpose?

It happens I have the answers to these questions, and they are as follows:

1. Yes.

2. Both the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and the trade agreement between Canada and Japan deal with all important matters in the trading relations between the two countries.

Their articles cover such matters as most-favoured-nation treatment, safeguards respecting the application of import restrictions, and non-discriminatory treatment in the application of domestic regulations and taxes. In addition, the Canada-Japan Agreement provides for non-discriminatory treatment by Japan in the import licensing of a number of important Canadian products.

The GATT supplements the Canada-Japan Trade Agreement in the following ways:

Because it has 34 adherents, the GATT provides for multilateral consultations on trade matters of common interest. It provides the machinery for such consultations and a permanent staff to assist in preparing appropriate background. This machinery can also be used in matters involving disagreement.

The GATT also deals in more extensive detail with such questions as customs administration, marking regulations, subsidies, security matters and the procedures for negotiation and binding of tariff concessions.

3. (a) The Corporation would be authorized to make investments of its funds in productive enterprises in the territories of its members, particularly the less-developed countries.

3. (b) The IFC will be an international organization affiliated with the International Bank which will provide, in association with local and private investors, risk capital for financing the establishment, improvement and expansion of productive private enterprises in member countries when other sources of funds are not available on reasonable terms. Its members will be members of the International Bank affiliated with the Bank through common membership in their Board of Directors and Board of Governors. The articles provide that the members of the Bank's Board of Executive Directors and their alternates shall exercise ex officio the same offices in the IFC if the countries they represent in the Bank become members of the Corporation. The President of the Bank is Chairman of the Board of Directors of the IFC. The President of the IFC is appointed on the recommendation of the Chairman and the concurrence of the Board of Directors of IFC. All powers of the Corporation are vested in the Board of Governors and they may delegate to the Board of Directors authority to take all but certain specified major actions. Each member has 250 votes plus one additional vote for each share of stock held.

IFC is a legal entity separate and distinct from the Bank and its functions must be kept separate and apart from the Bank. However, it is authorized to make use of facilities, personnel and services of the Bank.

3. (c) It is intended that the IFC will provide venture capital but it will not be authorized to invest in capital stock or to assume the responsibility for managing an enterprise in which it has invested. It will not be a holding company retaining its investments on a long term basis, but will dispose of its holdings to private investors as opportunity offers so that it can reinvest its funds in new activities. In this sense, the IFC will be revolving its funds.

3. (d) Experience with the International Bank gives good reason to hope that the new affiliate will be successful in achieving its purpose.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Honourable senators, I should like to ask the honourable gentleman from St. John's West (Hon. Mr. Pratt) whether Poland is a member of the International Chamber of Commerce. I am interested because we have heard a great deal about the recent sale of some nine million bushels of wheat to Poland. If Poland happens to be a member of the International Chamber of Commerce, perhaps a statement of that fact would help to shorten some discussion which is taking place in the other house at the present time. Also it might help solve the question of whether Poland is a friendly nation.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: I cannot say whether Poland is represented in the I.C.C. organization, but it was not represented at the Congress.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, July 7, 1955

The Senate met at 3 p.m., Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

SEVENTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE CONCURRED IN

Hon. Norman McL. Paterson, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, presented the committee's seventh report.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

Your committee have examined the expenditures and revenues of the Senate for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1955, and have found them correct.

The Hon. Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration.

Hon. Mr. Paterson: With leave, I move that the report be concurred in now.

The motion was agreed to, and the report was concurred in.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday, July 12, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

The motion was agreed to.

INCOME TAX BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the second reading of Bill 417, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act.

He said: Honourable senators, the principle of Bill 417 is a triple one. First, the bill is designed to carry out the budget proposals to reduce the rates of personal income tax and of some corporate income tax by two percentage points, and to provide certain other tax relief and tax adjustment. Secondly, the bill is designed to give effect to Government policy touching the matter of provincial income tax, which was referred to in a statement in the other place on behalf of the Government, by the Prime Minister on January 17 last. Thirdly, the bill is designed to effect certain technical and procedural amendments to the Income Tax Act of a character usually to be expected in a bill of this kind.

Before I deal with the individual sections perhaps I should remind honourable senators that, according to the estimates given by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech on April 5 this year, the tax reductions for the present fiscal year will amount to $85 million on account of personal income taxes, $28 million on account of corporate taxes; and for the full calendar year his estimate was a reduction of $128 million in personal income taxes and some $43 million in corporate income taxes.

Perhaps in passing I might say that these provisions are made effective by section 6 for personal income tax, and by sections 9 and 24 for corporate income tax. I might say also that the recognition of payment on account of provincial income tax is dealt with in section 7 of the bill, and I shall refer to that in more detail later.

Honourable senators, the bill contains 34 sections and, as is customary in financial legislation, some of them are long and involved and most difficult to follow. I do not propose to deal with them all, as some do not require special treatment on the floor of the house. Those with which I shall deal I hope to explain succinctly. If there are matters arising from sections which I propose to leave to the committee stage but which some members might like to discuss here, I shall be prepared to do whatever I can to explain them.

At the conclusion of my remarks I propose to move that the bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, where it can receive full and detailed consideration.

Section 1 of the bill is designed to facilitate and encourage access to capital funds by companies requiring them. It provides that the expenses for issuing shares or for borrowing money on bonds or debentures to be issued by a company shall be considered as expenses for the purposes of earning the income of the company. In other words, they will become properly deductible expenses for the company in the course of its operations. The types of expense that are visualized as being covered by this section are: costs of professional fees, printing costs, costs for registering under various securities acts, costs incurred in dealing with stock exchanges, and the like. In passing, may I say that most of these expenses are paid out to people who would pay tax on the money received as income. For example, a lawyer who gets a fee for dealing with this kind of matter would take that fee into his normal income and pay tax upon it. This is a problem which has been presented to the tax department over the years by the Canadian Tax Foundation, the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants. At this time, I understand, the problem is receiving the treatment which had been requested.

Section 2 of the bill deals with insurance. As honourable senators are well aware, the annual depreciation on a property is governed by the regulations which have been made under the provisions of the Income Tax Act. Each year a company is entitled to deduct from its income the various proper charges for depreciation on various forms of its property at the various rates prescribed by the regulations. At the present time the act provides that when a building is destroyed by fire, or by some other means, and insurance is recovered by the taxpayer he is required to take the whole of that payment covering the depreciated part of his building into income in the year in which he receives it. By this amendment, which is an alleviating amendment, it is provided that the taxpayer who receives an insurance payment for destroyed property may defer taking the insurance proceeds into the income of his company in the year in which he receives it, if in the following year he devotes that insurance payment to the replacement of the property which had been destroyed. In this way he begins immediately to depreciate the building again without what was considered under the former law to have been some unjust deprivation.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask the honourable senator a question? I do not understand that. Is he referring only to the depreciated value of the building, or the whole amount of the insurance which is collected? Must the taxpayer reinvest the full amount of the insurance collected next year in a new building to escape its being taken into income?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Yes, Senator. To the extent that he does not reinvest proceeds of the insurance, he does not get the advantage of the amendment.

Hon. Mr. Turgeon: If he pays part of it does he get the advantage of the part he pays?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: If he pays part of it, he gets the advantage of the part he pays.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: In the past, insurance money has not been considered income when paid for a capital asset that has been destroyed.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: I know that is quite true, Senator. But I am talking about the insurance with reference to the depreciated portion of the building.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That was the point to which my question was directed. I take it that it is only with respect to the depreciated part of the building that you make these references?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Yes, indeed, because that is the only part which has been written off against current income from year to year.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I understand.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: I am sorry if my answer was not clear.

I should like to refer next to sections 3 and 4 of the bill. Hitherto the Income Tax Act has provided that income from property transferred by a husband to a wife or children remained taxable in the hands of the husband. The bill provides that in the event of the husband's death, or in the event that he ceases to be a resident of Canada, or if he becomes divorced, that income becomes taxable in the hands of the recipient of the income, the wife or the children, as the case may be.

Section 5 deals with a taxpayer with the status of an unmarried person, who is supporting another person who is wholly dependent upon the taxpayer, and who is related to the taxpayer by blood, marriage or adoption, and where the support is being provided in a self-contained domestic establishment. Now, when all of those conditions obtain, the taxpayer providing the maintenance is entitled to the additional $1,000 exemption allowable to a married person. Under the act as it stands today, if such a dependent person receives any support whatever from another person, even if that other person is related to the dependent person, the benefit of the exemption is lost. This amendment provides that several members of the same family can contribute to the support of a dependent person, and the $1,000 exemption will still be available, but as between the members of the family it must be settled as to which one of them will take the exemption. It cannot be divided.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: And in the case of a disagreement, who would get it?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: In the case of disagreement I think it probably would be disallowed.

Section 6 provides for a 2 per cent reduction in personal income tax from January 1, 1956. Subsection 3 of that section provides for one per cent reduction in personal income tax from January 1, 1955; or, to put it another way, it provides for 2 per cent reduction from July 1, 1955.

I should like to draw the attention of honourable senators to subsection 2 of section 6, which removes, as of January 1, 1955, the 4 per cent surtax from rents received from real estate. As honourable senators know, rental income from real estate hitherto has been classed as investment income—

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: As unearned income.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: —unearned income, and subject to 4 per cent surtax. The reason for the proposed removal of the surtax is that it has always been very difficult to determine whether a person receiving rents was or was not carrying on a business. I think this subsection will remove a serious anomaly in that respect.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: In a case heard in Montreal it was decided that when the owner managed a building and hired the elevator man, and so on, it was not unearned.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: In that case it was assimilated to a business operation. This amendment makes the procedure abundantly clear, and will simplify it, not only for administration but as well for the taxpayer.

I come next to section 7, which deals with provincial income tax. Perhaps the simplest way to handle this amendment would be to describe the present situation and then to outline what is proposed. At the present time a taxpayer who pays a provincial income tax may deduct from his federal income tax the amount he paid to the province or 5 per cent of his federal tax, whichever is less. It was proposed by the Prime Minister on January 17 of this year—and the House of Commons Hansard of that date contains the statement—that for the year 1954 the percentage allowed instead of being 5 per cent will be 10 per cent. The amendment carries this out. In other words, a taxpayer who pays provincial income tax for 1954 may deduct from his federal tax the amount which he paid to the province, or 10 per cent of the federal tax, whichever is less. For 1955 and 1956 the amount paid to the provincial authority becomes completely irrelevant to the issue. If a taxpayer is resident in the province for the entire year of 1955 or 1956 he will be entitled to deduct 10 per cent of his federal income tax.

In cases where either residence or employment in the province which collects provincial tax did not last for an entire year, the 10 per cent deduction will be pro-rated or apportioned.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That applies only to those provinces where a provincial income tax is imposed?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: It is only for such provinces, yes. In the second place, it applies only to personal income tax, not to corporate income tax.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: But if any province in future should impose a provincial income tax, it will apply to that province.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: It is available to every province, but it will apply only to the provinces where a provincial income tax is collected.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: What provinces are those now?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: The province of Quebec is one. I know of no other.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: But any province can take advantage of it, if it is an advantage?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Of course. The statement made by the Prime Minister on January 17 was abundantly clear on that point. This amendment carries out the undertaking which he gave on the floor of the House of Commons at that time; it puts this proposal into the law and it is available for any province imposing a personal income tax.

Section 9 provides for the reduction of two percentage points, from 47 per cent to 45 per cent, to corporations having taxable income in excess of $20,000 per annum, and the amendment becomes effective as of January 1, 1955. Honourable senators are well aware that a few years ago the Income Tax Act began to make a distinction between corporations which earned incomes in excess of $20,000 and those which earned incomes of less than $20,000. For the smaller corporation, the tax rate was 20 per cent. This 20 per cent was made up of 18 per cent income tax and 2 per cent old age security tax. But, for corporations earning over $20,000 a year, the position was this, that on the first $20,000 the corporate tax rate was 20 per cent and on any earnings in excess of $20,000 the rate was 47 per cent. That rate is now being reduced to 45 per cent. There is a provision in this section also which deals with associated companies, but it is a rather technical and involved provision and I think perhaps it might well be left for the committee to look into when this bill is before it.

Section 13 deals with depreciation of capital assets in estates. At the present time a life tenant is entitled to deduct from the income which he receives from an estate the depreciation which has been allowed against the corpus of the estate if he has an interest in that corpus either contingent or absolute. Under the amendment it is now proposed that the life tenant who receives all the income shall be entitled to make a deduction for any depreciation or capital cost allowance which is made in the year in which he receives his income.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Would the honourable senator give us an illustration of that?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Yes. Say Mr. X receives $10,000 a year income from an estate and he is the sole income beneficiary. Say the depreciation allowance at normal rates provided in the regulations under the act amounts to $2,000. Whether Mr. X has an interest in the residue or not, he will be taxable hereafter not on $10,000, but on $8,000 only. That is, he will get the benefit of the depreciation. One of the reasons for the change is that in most provinces trustees are not allowed to accumulate reserves on account of depreciation. The Income Tax Division felt that since trustees could not accumulate reserves for depreciation ultimately to be used for the residuary beneficiaries, after the life interest was over, then why not let the life tenants have the advantage? I think it is a fair proposition, because if the life tenants do not get it, nobody gets it. Now the government is going to collect a little less tax, but it is going to be a little more helpful to life tenants in estates, and a good many of these are people who are left without active support other than the support provided by an estate. The change will help a good many people who are dependent on unearned income.

But, honourable senators, there is one exception to this rule, and that exception applies in the situation where the estate manages a business. This exception arises out of a case which I am sure the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) and perhaps others know about, namely, the John Ross Robertson estate case. In that case the residuary heirs felt that they should be allowed to accumulate whatever benefits would accrue from the establishment of a reserve for depreciation, so as to create a fund to replace the business premises when they had become obsolete. The business in that case was a large Toronto newspaper. In such a case, the benefit of the depreciation on the residue of the estate can be built up in a reserve for the ultimate use of the residuary heirs.

Now, honourable senators, that is a rather complicated situation, or at least I make it rather complicated by my explantion.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: It is complicated.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: But I feel that when it is looked at it will commend itself to all honourable senators for its fairness.

Section 14 imposes a 20 per cent income tax on investment companies, and the reason for it is a simple one. Canadian taxpayers who receive income by way of dividends from Canadian corporations are entitled to make a 20 per cent deduction from those dividends when filling out their income tax returns. The one exception has been income received by way of dividends from investment companies. That income was not taxed in the hands of the investment companies, except such companies that volunteered to pay the tax. It is now proposed that all investment companies shall be taxed, and from now on the people who receive dividends from such investment companies will be able to make the 20 per cent deduction. That is simpler for the dividend receiver, and simpler to administer.

I am happy to say that section 17 is not a complicated one. It merely provides that capital expenditures undertaken for research are to be allowed from the time they are incurred, and need not be postponed until a later time, as is required under the present legislation.

Section 18 also is simple. An error of one word was made in the French translation, and it is corrected by this amendment.

Section 19 is designed to relieve from double or multiple taxation payments from a profit-sharing plan when, by some rearrangement or reallocation, amounts previously taxed against an employee under the plan are computed in some new payment or new allotment which is made to him. The purpose of this section is that if the employee has been credited with a certain amount and taxed thereon, and in some way, as a result of a reallocation of benefits under the profit-sharing plan, it happens to be credited to him again, it will not be subject a second time to tax.

Section 21 has been inserted in the Income Tax Act annually for a number of years. It provides for a three-year exemption from income tax for a company deriving income from a new mine. It is now proposed, in the interests of encouraging the mining industry, to make this feature of the Act a permanent one. The section also contains a definition by implication, stipulating what is not a mine. I think the committee might well look at that paragraph of the section.

Section 22 is somewhat similar to the one which I last discussed. It deals with exploration and drilling costs for petroleum wells, natural gas wells and mines, and provides that these costs shall not be taxable and shall be deductible for a company which incurs them. This provision in its present form originally came into the act in 1949, and was annually renewed in the interests of encouraging the oil, the gas and the mining business.

It is proposed now that the section shall be a permanent feature of the act. It does not apply to deep test wells.

Section 26 would delight accountants, because it deals with reserves for containers. It has relation to companies which sell products in containers—for instance, oil companies which sell oil in drums. I do not think that it is a provision on which we need spend much time, and I propose to pass over it.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Is it applicable to milk bottles?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Yes, I think so. On second thought, I recall that bottles are specifically excluded.

Section 27 deals with sales of inventories and accounts receivable. A number of court decisions have determined that the sale of the assets of a business, not being in the ordinary course of business, is therefore exempt from income tax, and is considered to be a capital return. It is now proposed that these transactions shall not be dealt with as a capital return but shall be taxable. The method of taxation is not to be merely through the addition of the amount received by a vendor to his other income for the year in which the amount is received. He is given the option of paying a special tax at his average rate for the previous three years. I think this is a section which would bear some further explanation and investigation in committee. I believe I have given the substance of it very faithfully, if not too fully.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: The honourable senator does not mean to say that merchandise sold en bloc at any one time is to be taxed on the returns of the previous three years, irrespective of the amount?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Not when it is done in the ordinary course of business. If the transaction takes place in the ordinary course of business the normal rates will apply. This section has reference only to the sale of complete inventories and accounts receivable on the winding-up of the business.

New section 85G, with reference to mortgage reserves, is a rather interesting one and, I think, helpful. It provides for deduction of a reserve on loans on the security of a mortgage. At the present time the only reserve that can be set up against loans on a mortgage account is a reserve for doubtful debts. This has not been particularly satisfactory. It is now proposed that a maximum reserve of 3 per cent of the outstanding amount due on a mortgage or a group of mortgages may be set up, but not all in one year. The reserve can be set up at the rate of a quarter of one per cent per year, to a maximum of 3 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That provision is for a company, not for an individual?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: I think the individual is also entitled to the benefits of the clause. I cannot read in the section a restriction to a company. Certainly it is available to a company, but the text mentions "a taxpayer whose business includes the lending of money on the security of a mortgage", and an individual could carry on such a business. The provision, I may observe, is something which the committee might well inquire into, because if it is intended to apply only to companies perhaps the wording could be improved.

There is also a provision that at the end of a year, if it is found that the mortgages for which the reserve was set up are paid in full, the amount of the reserve must be added back. The provision seems to be a step forward.

The third point in connection with these sections is that under section 85F of the Income Tax Act a new definition is provided for conducting a business on a cash basis. This is a rule which has been applied in the department for a number of years and is now being put into the law. It applies to farmers and to professions.

Section 29 of the bill provides for a new section in the act. It deals with a situation in which a company that has built up an earned surplus is taken over by another one. As honourable senators know, at the present time dividends paid by one Canadian company to another Canadian company are tax free. It is also known that a company acquiring control of a Canadian company, which latter company has an earned surplus, cannot take that earned surplus tax free. It must pay a 15 per cent tax upon that earned surplus, and that is done under old section 95A of the Income Tax Act, which is now section 105A. Honourable members are familiar with the pattern, because it has been adopted in a great many cases in the last few years. A tax-free surplus is created by paying a 15 per cent tax on the whole or a portion of the earned surplus that it is ultimately proposed to pay out. Then preference shares are issued and the designated tax-paid surplus in question is used to redeem those shares. When the redemption is carried out the money paid into the hands of the preference shareholders, is tax-free money. But there have been some anomalies. In every case where a security dealer or a foreign corporation or a charitable corporation took over one of these companies having an earned surplus, the tax rate at which they could get that earned surplus out was less than 15 per cent. For example, the security dealer could write off any loss incurred by his business in that investment because he is a dealer in investments. A Canadian company is entitled to pay dividends to a non-resident parent upon payment of a 5 per cent tax. Accordingly, if a foreign corporation took over one of these Canadian companies with an earned surplus it would pay only a 5 per cent tax when it passed the surplus on to its parent. It is now proposed that in the case of a foreign corporation and in the case of a charitable corporation taking over one of these companies with an earned surplus, regardless of how they do it, the tax they will pay on that earned surplus will be 15 per cent when the earned surplus is passed to the parent.

For some reason I cannot explain, when a security dealer takes over such a corporation he is going to have to pay 20 per cent when the earned surplus is paid out. However, that is something that might be cleared up in committee. I inquired about it from officials of the Income Tax Division, but not the Department of Finance, and someone from that department will appear before the committee to explain this anomaly.

The only other section I should like to refer to in detail is section 33, which provides that in a criminal case the signature on a return, certificate, statement or answer made under some provision of the Income Tax Act shall be received as prima facie evidence by a court. That does not mean everything in the document makes proof of itself. It simply means that the Crown does not have to prove the signature on the document. It also, of course, leaves room for the accused to be able to controvert the signature if necessary.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Is that only in criminal cases?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: I think so, Senator. The section is almost self-explanatory. If the honourable gentleman would care to have me read it I will do so. I think it applies only in a case where a charge has been laid for an offence under the act.

Section 1 of the bill also deals with terminal payments made into a pension fund at certain times on behalf of an employee who severs his employment before normal retiring time.

Section 8 deals with payments under profit-sharing plans. It deals also with payments made in recognition of long service and payments made as death benefits. It allows the tax on such payments to be paid, at the option of the taxpayer, in accordance with a formula that is specifically provided in the section.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Must that formula be approved by the income tax authorities prior to the date of making the grant?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: No. The formula provided is available to the taxpayer, if he wishes to use it, or he may pay the tax in the normal way.

Section 10 of the bill deals with foreign tax credits as a result of the provision with respect to provincial income tax.

Section 11 repeals section 54(6) of the act, which was obsolete.

Section 15 prohibits a non-resident owned corporation from deriving more than 10 per cent of its income from rents in Canada.

Section 16 excludes from the definition of a foreign business corporation those Canadian companies which derive more than 10 per cent of their income from the leasing or operating of ships or aircraft.

Section 23 provides that Crown corporations are not to be considered associated corporations, and this is related to clause 1(2).

Section 24 deals with the reduction in corporate rates for a special category of companies, namely, electric, gas or steam utility companies.

Section 28 provides for a tax on the premium paid by a company when it acquires or redeems its own shares.

Section 30 deals with a problem that has arisen with reference to timber royalties.

Section 32 removes the tax inequity which has developed in cases where a foreign parent corporation provides borrowing power for its Canadian subsidiary. I have read that section carefully and I think it is a particularly equitable provision.

Section 34 provides that certain business undertakings may have a 53-week fiscal period under certain restrictive conditions provided in the act. It also supplies much needed definitions, including one which assimilates to the position of a parent not only a father-in-law but also a mother-in-law!

Honourable senators, that is the explanation of the bill.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, may I compliment the honourable gentleman from Ottawa West (Hon. Mr. Connolly), and express a thought which I am sure is in the minds of everyone present. He has described this bill very satisfactorily and with a clarity that is indeed remarkable.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: And with brevity as well.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: And with brevity as well—which is not to be overlooked on a hot afternoon. We are all grateful to him.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

EXCISE TAX BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. John J. Connolly moved the second reading of Bill 418, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act.

He said: Honourable senators, this bill, which is not long or involved, arises out of terms of the budget resolutions proposed by the Minister of Finance in the House of Commons on April 5 last. I think perhaps the most satisfactory way to deal with the bill is by reference to the budget resolutions, the substance of which is as follows. In the first place, the excise tax on passenger automobiles was reduced from 15 per cent to 10 per cent, effective April 5. Secondly, the excise tax on tires and tubes for automotive vehicles of all kinds was eliminated. Thirdly, the sales tax was repealed on certain commodities, which included wood preservatives for timber, poles or lumber; terrazzo flooring; bituminized fibre pipe; rims for kitchen sinks—and perhaps it is unusual to provide for removal of the tax on the rims, but it so happens that all the rest of the sink is excise tax free; floor tile, and wallpaper; and, finally, vaccine for use in the prevention of polio.

I understand that as a result of the tax reductions provided by this measure on account of sales tax there will be a loss in revenue of $1 million, and therefore $1 million less tax will be paid by Canadians in the calendar year. Canadians will in addition save on the other excise taxes $34 million in the entire year. Of this $34 million, $26 million results from the drop in excise tax from 15 per cent to 10 per cent on automobiles, and $8 million from the elimination of excise tax on tires and tubes.

Honourable senators, I think I have given the explanation of the bill that is required. Frankly, I doubt if it is necessary to refer this bill to a committee, unless any honourable senator requests it. In that case I shall be happy so to move.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I suggest that both Bill 417 and Bill 418 be referred to committee.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: In case this bill is not referred to a committee, may I inquire if the honourable senator can tell us whether a new type of ceiling used by many of the builders, by the name of Marlux, is included in the tax-free list of articles?

Hon. Mr. Connolly: I can tell the honourable senator that, according to the information supplied to me, wood preservatives, including chemicals for locking sap into the wood are to be exempt. Apparently the application of such preservatives is very common at present, because owing to the tremendous amount of construction going on in the country, many builders find it necessary to use green wood. I understand that the use of these chemicals is for locking or sealing the sap into the wood and to prevent warping. If the product of which the honourable member gave the trade name is a chemical of this nature, it would be included in the excise tax-free list.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

On motion of Hon. Mr. Connolly, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, July 12, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Monday, July 11, 1955

The Senate met at 8 p.m., Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that he had received a communication from the Secretary to the Governor General, acquainting him that the Honourable J. W. Estey, a Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator, would proceed to the Senate Chamber on Monday, the 11th July, at 9.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving the Royal Assent to certain bills.

CUSTOMS TARIFF BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 506, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Next sitting.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, may I remind the house that when the Senate adjourned on Thursday last it stood adjourned until tomorrow night, Tuesday, at 8 o'clock. However, after we adjourned the Government deemed it advisable that certain bills should receive the Royal Assent as soon as possible. It was not considered practicable to recall honourable senators to meet on last Friday, and this evening was deemed to be the earliest possible time for a sitting. In accordance with a resolution adopted on March 30 last, which provided for the convening of the Senate, during any adjournment, at a time earlier than that set out in the motion for the adjournment, His Honour the Acting Speaker called honourable senators to assemble this evening. Only two items of legislation appear on the Order Paper and, of course, it was not expected that they would be discussed until Tuesday evening. I propose, therefore, that both items stand until then, in which event the only business before the Senate tonight will be the Royal Assent to certain bills.

Honourable senators, I move that when the Senate rises this evening, it stand adjourned until Tuesday evening, at 8 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 9.45 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 256, an Act to amend the Defence Production Act.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Can the Deputy Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Godbout) tell us if the bill has been printed and distributed?

Hon. Mr. Godbout: The bill is not yet printed, but it will be tomorrow. I would ask that it be placed on the Order Paper for second reading tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I have no objection to that. I was merely inquiring if the bill had been printed and distributed.

TRANSPORT BILL

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 449, an Act to amend the Transport Act.

The bill was read the first time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the bill be read the second time?

Hon. Mr. Godbout: Tomorrow.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

The Honourable J. W. Estey, Deputy of His Excellency the Administrator, having come and being seated at the foot of the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned, and having come with their Speaker, the Honourable the Acting Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable members of the Senate:
Members of the House of Commons:

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Administrator has been pleased to cause Letters Patent to be issued under his Sign Manual and Signet constituting the Honourable J. W. Estey, a Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, his Deputy, to do in His Excellency's name all acts on his part necessary to be done during His Excellency's pleasure.

The Commission was read by the Clerk Assistant.

The Honourable the Deputy Administrator was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following Bills:

An Act for the relief of Marian Douglas Jodrey Wallace.

An Act for the relief of Elie Chabotar.

An Act for the relief of Evelyn Robert Hurst Watson.

An Act for the relief of Sidney Robert Allen.

An Act for the relief of Cecil Brooks.

An Act for the relief of Jeanne Jacqueline Content Brown.

An Act for the relief of Eugene Theodore Mantha.

An Act for the relief of Marilyn Irene Damer Brophey.

An Act for the relief of Dorothea Josephine Forbes Chaffey.

An Act for the relief of Violet Ruby Baxter Williamson.

An Act for the relief of Nicole Emile Dardano.

An Act for the relief of Ruth Steirman Levine.

An Act for the relief of Pearl Raicek Rutwind.

An Act for the relief of Lorraine Bennet Favreau Williams.

An Act for the relief of Robert Irvin Morrow.

An Act for the relief of Phyllis Lilian Buck Beatty.

An Act for the relief of Barbara Louise Bartlett Broadbent.

An Act for the relief of Ronald Elikum Bessey.

An Act for the relief of Margaret Francis Kennedy Bailie.

An Act for the relief of Anna Cibula Reynolds.

An Act for the relief of Mary McKinnon McEachran Coolon.

An Act for the relief of Joseph Armand Jacques Phaneuf.

An Act for the relief of Julia Hut Lutterman.

An Act for the relief of Evelina Dixon Taylor.

An Act for the relief of Frances Marguerite Beaudin Karibian.

An Act for the relief of Real Perras.

An Act for the relief of Izrael Szer.

An Act for the relief of Mary Madeleine Collings Bell.

An Act for the relief of Joseph Flavien Denis Rheo Baillargeon.

An Act for the relief of Susan Waldman Ruttenberg.

An Act for the relief of Andre Labreche.

An Act for the relief of Beatrice Macdonald Stewart Pasmore.

An Act for the relief of Kathleen Dallas White Barnes.

An Act for the relief of John Tilga.

An Act for the relief of Edwin Albert Verge.

An Act for the relief of Aline Sauve Page.

An Act for the relief of Helen Margaret Robb Woods.

An Act for the relief of Jean Louis Larose.

An Act for the relief of Molly Wineberg Fishman.

An Act for the relief of James McMartin.

An Act for the relief of Charles John Urban.

An Act for the relief of Joseph Adalbert Beaudoin, otherwise known as Georges Beaudoin.

An Act respecting the construction, operation and maintenance of international river improvements.

An Act to amend the Municipal Grants Act.

An Act to amend the Judges Act, and the Judicature provisions of the Yukon Act and the Northwest Territories Act.

An Act to amend the Canada Elections Act.

An Act to incorporate Canadian Premier Life Insurance Company.

An Act to incorporate The Provident Assurance Company.

An Act respecting unemployment insurance.

An Act to amend the Criminal Code (Race Meetings).

An Act respecting loans to assist fishermen engaged in a primary fishing enterprise.

The House of Commons withdrew.

The Honourable the Deputy Administrator was pleased to retire.

The sitting of the Senate was resumed.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, July 12, 1955

The Senate met at 8 p.m., Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

RADIO BILL

AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN BY COMMONS

A message was received from the House of Commons returning Bill 260, an Act to amend the Radio Act, and acquainting the Senate that they have agreed to the amendment made by the Senate to this bill, without amendment.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE BILL

AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN BY COMMONS

A message was received from the House of Commons returning Bill 481, an Act to amend the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, and acquainting the Senate that they have agreed to the amendments made by the Senate to this bill, without amendment.

PUBLIC OFFICIALS SALARIES BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Norman P. Lambert moved the second reading of Bill 507, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Railway Act and the Tariff Board Act in respect of salaries of certain public officials.

He said: Honourable senators, Bill 507 provides for increases in the salaries of the chairmen and other members of three boards, namely, the Income Tax Appeal Board, the Board of Transport Commissioners and the Tariff Board. The explanatory notes set forth the salaries that have been paid for some years past, since they were last increased. The salaries provided for in this bill have a direct relationship to those established by the amendment to the Judges Act which was recently passed in this house.

I might point out that this bill, with its projected amendments to the three acts, represents the fifth in a series of salary increases for federal government officials. First, in 1953 the rank and file of civil servants were given an increase; secondly, in 1954 an increase was granted to the deputy ministers; thirdly, the incomes of senior civil servants, assistant deputies and directors of departments were increased; fourthly, a bill was passed this year increasing the compensation of judges in all the courts; and now lastly, and I understand finally, by this bill it is proposed to increase the salaries of the three boards mentioned.

It should be said that regardless of the salary rates established in the various bills passed, maximum superannuation benefits are based upon an income of $15,000 a year; therefore, where the provisions of this or any other legislation result in an increase of an official salary to more than $15,000, the salary in excess of that amount will have no bearing on the amount of pension payable.

I think it is unnecessary to describe the functions of each of these boards, or the services rendered by the distinguished gentlemen who occupy the positions of chairmen of the boards. If honourable senators wish any explanation as to the standard of salaries established by this measure they can get that information in the appropriate committee of the house by having the head of the Treasury Board, Mr. Deutsch, appear to answer any questions we may wish to ask him. I think it should be pointed out, however, that the Railway Act provides that the Chief Commissioner of the Board of Transport Commissioners shall be paid an annual salary equal to that of the President of the Exchequer Court.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: That has not been changed?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: No. His status is provided for under the Railway Act, and that is statutory, so this bill has no effect at all on that point. Under the recent amendment to the Judges Act the salary of the President of the Exchequer Court was raised to $18,500, so the salary of the Chief Commissioner of the Transport Board has to be set at that same figure. The other two boards, the Income Tax Appeal Board and the Tariff Board, are regarded as being on the same plane as a court. The salaries of the chairmen of these boards are kept in line with the salaries paid to puisne judges of the Exchequer Court and of the superior courts of the various provinces.

Honourable senators, if any further information is required as to the services rendered by the chairmen and members of these boards, or as to their qualifications, it may be readily obtained in committee.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: I note that the increases are not equal in all cases, as they were in the Judges Act. Some salaries are being increased by $2,500, and some by only $1,500.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: The increases of $2,500 a year apply to the members of the boards, with some exceptions, including the Chairman of the Tariff Board, Mr McKinnon, whose salary is being fixed at the same amount as that of the Chairman of the Income Tax Appeal Board. As to Mr. McKinnon—and in making these references I certainly do not intend to be invidious to others—I would point out that he has occupied his present post since 1940, and for fifteen years before that he was associated with the Tariff Board. He is deserving of special appreciation at this time. Since 1948 he has performed judicial functions. It will be remembered that in that year the Tariff Board really became a court. Previously, appeals under the Customs Act and Excise Act were heard by the Board of Customs, but from 1948 onward, they were made to the Tariff Board, the Board of Customs having been eliminated from the machinery of government. Since that time over two hundred cases have been heard by the Tariff Board. Of that number, in only fifteen cases has permission to appeal from the Tariff Board's decision been granted; five of these have proceeded to appeal, and judgments have not yet been handed down. So it may be said that the batting average of the Tariff Board in its quasi-judicial status is very creditable indeed.

I should like to place on record appreciation of the services which over the last thirty years have been rendered by the Chairman of the Tariff Board. In my opinion he represents about the ideal type of civil servant—self-effacing, industrious and able. With some of our distinguished diplomatic heads—Mr. Norman Robertson, now in England, and Mr. Dana Wilgress,—he has served in Washington and at the trade conferences which followed the war and thereby has done much to bring about an improvement in international trade relations. I say this with no invidious reflection on other civil servants, of whose work also I know something.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Go ahead.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I want to pay my tribute to them.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The honourable gentleman has made an appropriate reference and paid a well-deserved tribute to Mr. Hector McKinnon. I wonder if he would like to mention some of the others.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I am glad to do so. The Chairman of the Transport Board, who had a distinguished career as a diplomat and a judge, has had brought before him, particularly during the past three or four years, a great deal of work which the board never had to deal with before. As everyone knows, it was required to pass upon a series of very important cases in connection with railway rates. It has also been engaged on an entirely new class of investigation in relation to gas and oil pipe lines. These cases involved a fund of knowledge and a type of approach which had not been required of former boards.

I have no hesitation in saying that we shall be justified in giving this bill second reading and having it considered further, if necessary, in committee. The increase in salaries follows that granted to the other four groups which I have mentioned. This is the fifth and last. While it is rather risky for anyone to venture an opinion about future increases in salaries, I should think that at the very least we would be entitled to very definite reasons for future increases. The arguments about inflation and the pleas for increasing our standard of living, which have been behind the introduction of most legislation calling for increases in salaries, have reached a point where if anything further is done the authorities will have to start all over at the bottom with the rank and file and work up again. The question which naturally arises in one's mind is this: If deflation occurs will the order be reversed and will the reductions start from the top and move down, or will they start from the bottom and move up, as the increases have? However, until that situation arises I do not think we need worry about it.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I am largely in agreement with what the honourable gentleman from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert) has just stated, and I should like to take this opportunity to say a few words about the Income Tax Appeal Board, which was established as a direct result of work of the Senate. In 1945, on motion by the honourable senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Campbell), a special committee was appointed to conduct an investigation into the provisions and workings of the Income Tax Act and the Excess Profits Tax Act, and in its report the committee recommended the establishment of an Income Tax Appeal Board. The board which was subsequently set up represents one of the most important achievements of the Senate. I am more familiar with its work than with the work of the Tariff Board or the Board of Transport Commissioners. In carrying on my business I find it important to read religiously the decisions of the Income Tax Appeal Board, for they affect most taxpayers in my province. The members of that board do highly important work, and their present salaries are not in line with salaries being paid officials in comparable positions. I therefore have no objection to the salary of the chairman being raised to $16.900, although I do not know how the increase is arrived at. In my opinion $16,900 is certainly not too much to pay the person holding this responsible position.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The salary increase is the same as that which has just been given to our judges.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: It is an increase of $2,500?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators who read the decisions of the Income Tax Appeal Board will realize that its members do just as important work as do the judges in our provincial courts and courts of appeal. As I say, I have no objection at all to increasing the salary of the chairman of this board, and I think my remarks can be taken generally as applying to the personnel of the other boards covered by this bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall the bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Next sitting.

TRANSPORT BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. G. Peter Campbell moved the second reading of Bill 449, an Act to amend the Transport Act.

He said: Honourable senators, the principle behind this bill is nothing new. The principle of agreed charges was first introduced into Parliament in 1938, when the original Transport Act was brought in. Agreed charges were introduced by reason of the competition which the railways faced from truck transportation in this country. As honourable senators know, the railways have been regulated as to rates whereas trucking companies have not been regulated in this regard. There was some suggestion in 1937 that regulations should be established for all forms of transportation in Canada, but the Government, realizing that such regulations would infringe on provincial rights, did not bring in legislation for this purpose; but in 1938 it introduced the Transport Bill to provide for control of rates in so far as transportation facilities under the jurisdiction of the dominion authorities were concerned.

As I have stated, the railway companies requested the privilege of making agreed charges. For those who are not familiar with the term "agreed charges", I might say that there is a provision contained in the law permitting the railway to go to a shipper and make a special contract at a rate lower than the normal tariff rate for the exclusive right to move that shipper's goods or a portion of them between certain competitive points in Canada. The trucking companies, of course, had that privilege, for they had complete freedom of action to make special deals with shippers to move the whole or any portion of their goods, and it was felt that the railway companies should enjoy the same privilege.

The original legislation is set forth in detail in Part IV of the Transport Act, chapter 271, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952. That legislation provoked a good deal of discussion, as it was something entirely new to this continent, although similar legislation had been in force in the United Kingdom, and, I think, in France. Great caution was taken, therefore, to see that the railways were restricted and that any shipper or carrier who might be adversely affected by the new procedure could be heard before the Transport Board. The legislation was drafted in such a manner that any party affected could, within thirty days of applying to the board, ask to have the rates changed. The act provided that thirty days' notice must be given by publication in the Canada Gazette, so that everyone who might be affected would have an opportunty to know what rates were being imposed. As honourable senators will appreciate, that was a somewhat cumbersome procedure, because it did not enable the railways and the shipper to make a firm agreement which could become effective immediately. It was soon found that a shipper would come forward and intervene in the proceedings and take delaying action, so that often the final decision of the Board of Transport Commissioners was deferred for months, and sometimes over a year. This resulted in only a few agreements being made providing for agreed charges. During the first twelve years the act was in force, I think about forty agreed charges were put into effect by the railways.

In 1954 the Honourable W. F. A. Turgeon was appointed to investigate this particular phase of the Transport Act, and his report was tabled in Parliament in February or March of 1955. The report was carefully prepared, after thorough consideration of evidence given at hearings which took place across Canada, and at which everyone concerned was given an opportunity to make representations. It recommended simplification of this particular legislation dealing with agreed charges; in fact, I think it contained an appendix suggesting specific changes to the act, much like the changes embodied in the present bill. The amendments proposed in this bill are towards simplification of the procedure, and nothing else. Whereas up to the present time, as I have already stated, the agreement could not come into effect until approved by the Board of Transport Commissioners, under the bill the agreement can come into effect after it has been filed with the board and twenty days have elapsed. So the railways will no longer require approval of the board to make their agreement effective.

In order to protect other shippers, so that there will be no discrimination in favour of one shipper as against another, the amendments provide that any shipper who considers himself aggrieved or discriminated against by reason of the establishment of agreed charges which are less than normal tariff charges, may give notice to the railway that he also wishes to have the advantage of these charges; and provided that his goods are of a similar class and the conditions of transportation are similar in every way, the railways may admit him to the agreement without any further procedure, in which case he also gets the benefit of the reduced rates from the date the original agreement came into effect. If the railways do not approve, there is a procedure by which he may apply to the Board of Transport Commissioners to have a fixed rate established, so far as he is concerned. At the time of such application the usual inquiries are made as to whether he has shipped similar goods under similar conditions, and so forth.

Another slight change enables the water carriers to come in and benefit by agreed charges. In certain cases the movement of goods across Canada is partially by rail and partially by water. Under the present legislation water carriers are not able to come in and benefit by these agreed charges, although they have the right to make a special contract if they wish. The procedure under the bill enables water carriers to join in the railway agreements and thus benefit by the special charges or agreed charges in so far as transportation by water is concerned.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Were water carriers not excluded under the act in 1938?

Hon. Mr. Campbell: Certain water carriers were included; that is, those carrying package freight.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: But not bulk cargo?

Hon. Mr. Campbell: Under the original act bulk cargo includes grain and grain products, and flour, and ore, and all such things as are generally classed as bulk cargo. Any companies engaged in bulk transportation are specifically excluded from the act, and are not restricted in any way. As a matter of fact, there has been considerable litigation between the railways and the water carriers so far as agreed charges are concerned, but under the present measure it is made a little more flexible and a good deal more simplified, so that all regulated companies engaged in transportation can benefit by the special arrangement.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: As I recall it, they were originally excluded under the act of 1938.

Hon. Mr. Campbell: There was an attempt to include them. I had the privilege of representing the bulk carriers at that time. The matter was very carefully considered and dealt with in the House of Commons and by a committee of that house, and later it resulted in quite an issue before the Transport and Communications Committee of the Senate. The members of that committee approached the problem in a very realistic manner, and after extensive hearings the legislation was changed, very much against the wishes of the minister who had promoted the legislation. I think that was a sound amendment, because it has stood on the statute books ever since and no attempt is being made by these proposed amendments to vary it. It is, in my opinion, another illustration of the importance of the sober second thought of this chamber in dealing with legislation of a commercial character affecting the daily lives of people in Canada and companies engaged in the important public business of transportation.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask a question? Does that mean there is competition between the railways on the matter of rates?

Hon. Mr. Campbell: No. The Railway Act still applies to the ordinary tariffs, and the railways will continue to file their tariffs in the usual way. This is merely a special provision enabling them to make separate agreements for the movement of the goods of one or more shippers under special circumstances and conditions.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Does that not mean that a shipper can perhaps play one railway off against the other?

Hon. Mr. Campbell: No. I should have mentioned that both railways must join in such an agreement. When this bill was introduced in the other house it provided that both railway companies must be parties to the agreement. By an amendment passed in the other place the bill now provides that the competing rail carrier must consent to the agreement in writing or join in the making of it. For example, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company can make an agreement with a shipper, but it must be consented to by the Canadian National or any other competing railway.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: If the railways agree on a rate, does the Board of Transport Commissioners have any further authority over it?

Hon. Mr. Campbell: The consent of the Transport Board is not required initially unless the matter is referred to them as a result of action taken by the minister or the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Or by any of the shippers affected?

Hon. Mr. Campbell: No. Under the present legislation a shipper could intervene before an agreement came into effect. Under the proposed new procedure he no longer will have that right, but he may ask that the rate contained in the agreement apply also to his goods. If the railway does not consent to his request there is a procedure by which he may apply to the board to have the rate fixed. In that respect relief is provided for him, but as a matter of practice it is unlikely that a shipper wishing to ship his goods would be deprived of a rate given to another shipper.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Excuse me for asking so many questions. Is there any limitation on the term of these agreements?

Hon. Mr. Campbell: Under the present procedure the Board of Transport Commissions requires a clause to be inserted in the agreements that after the agreement has been in force for a year either party may, after giving notice, terminate it. The bill provides for termination by either party upon notice after the agreement has been in effect for one year. In effect, it is an annual agreement but it may continue beyond that period if no notice is given.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Would it be fair to say that the only competition is between the railways and the truckers, with respect to agreed charges?

Hon. Mr. Campbell: What does my friend mean by "the only competition"?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: The competition comes from the truckers, does it not?

Hon. Mr. Campbell: That is where the entire competition comes from. The trucking industry is not affected or regulated in any way by this legislation. This measure is necessary because the truckers are able to make special agreements with the shippers, and the railways say that they must be allowed to make similar arrangements.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: That seems fair enough.

Hon. Mr. Campbell: Perhaps I am taking an undue amount of time to explain this bill, which could be readily explained in committee by someone much more familiar with it.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It could not be better explained.

Hon. Mr. Campbell: A further benefit will accrue to the shippers under a proposed amendment which enables American railways to participate in part of a rail movement, by reason not of any action taken by them but of action taken by the Canadian railways. In other words, where it would be more beneficial to move goods in part by Canadian route, thence by an American route and back to the Canadian line, an agreed charge would include that portion of the route over which the goods were carried by an American railway. In that respect the shipper has the alternative of perhaps choosing a more economical route through the United States. It is further provided that American railways cannot enjoy this benefit except in so far as the railways operating in Canada are concerned, and only then between points in Canada. In other words, they cannot have these benefits to operate over part of the American system and also the Canadian system, but are confined to competitive points within Canada.

The new section 33, which was introduced in the other house, sets forth in some detail the basis for dealing with companies with respect to agreed charges which have been in effect for at least three months. It provides that any carrier or body of carriers may complain to the minister that an agreed charge is unjustly discriminatory. In that case if the minister is satisfied that the complaint is a reasonable one he may refer the matter to the Board of Transport Commissioners for investigation. The Governor in Council also has the privilege of referring such a matter to the board, if the public interests are in any way affected.

From my reading of the proposed amendments they seem to me to be a step towards the modification of a new system of rate making which is essential to the operation of railways in Canada if they are to be in a position to compete with trucks and provide adequate transportation facilities for Canadian shippers.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Would my honourable friend allow a question? The Railway Act contains a clause providing that no carrier can avoid his responsibility in the course of carrying merchandise, unless approval for doing so has been granted by the board.

Will that clause apply to this legislation in the same way it applies to the act in general?

Hon. Mr. Campbell: I would say very definitely it would, because this is just procedure in so far as rate making is concerned and it could not in any way affect the provision of the Railway Act.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

REFERRED TO COMMITTEE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read a third time?

Hon. Mr. Campbell: If it is the wish of the house that the bill be referred to a committee—

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, certain interests may want to make representations to the house, and they can only do so in committee. Accordingly, I think we should refer the bill to committee.

On motion of Mr. Campbell, the bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, July 13, 1955

The Senate met at 3 p.m., Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, Acting Speaker in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

EXCISE TAX BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. G. Percival Burchill, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the committee's report on Bill 418.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (418) intituled: "An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act", have in obedience to the order of reference of July 7, 1955, examined the said bill, and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Burchill: I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

INCOME TAX BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. G. Percival Burchill, Acting Chairman of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented the committee's report on Bill 417.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (417) intituled: "An Act to amend the Income Tax Act", have in obedience to the order of reference of July 7, 1955, examined the said bill and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Burchill: I move third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

AUTHORITY TO PRINT COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Mr. Burchill presented a further report of the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on Bill 417.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom was referred the Bill (417) intituled: "An Act to amend the Income Tax Act", beg leave to report as follows:

Your committee recommend that they be authorized to print 500 copies in English and 200 copies in French of their proceedings on the said bill, and that Rule 100 be suspended in relation to the said printing.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Burchill: I move that the report be concurred in now.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. A. Neil McLean, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Canadian Trade Relations, presented the committee's report.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant as follows:

The Standing Committee on Canadian Trade Relations beg leave to report as follows:

1. Pursuant to the order of reference dated February 24 last, whereby your committee was authorized to inquire into and report on the most practical steps toward further implementation of Article 2 of the North Atlantic Treaty, your committee has heard submissions from two leading members of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations.

2. The submissions made during this session of Parliament as well as during the previous two sessions have made your committee conscious of the widespread interest being shown in other countries, as well as in Canada, in the subject-matter under consideration and a genuine desire on the part of member countries in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization for further integration on an economic basis.

3. Your committee hoped that during this session of Parliament it would have been possible to complete its hearings and submit a final report for the consideration of this honourable house. However, a careful analysis must be made of the submissions by various groups which will involve a concentrated study on the part of a person or persons qualified to assist the committee in the preparation of its recommendations.

4. Your committee, therefore, is desirous that during the next session of Parliament your Canadian Trade Relations Committee be authorized to complete its work under the Order of Reference. Your committee also hopes that the basic work will have been achieved during the intervening period between the sessions and that its final submissions may be made to Parliament at the earliest possible moment during its next session.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. McLean: With leave, now.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, this is the first time I have seen the report. I believe one of the recommendations it contains is that at this session of Parliament the committee should be re-constituted for next session. I doubt if we have the power to do that. I may be wrong.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I suggest that the report should stand until tomorrow.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: The report stands.

PUBLIC OFFICIALS SALARIES BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Norman P. Lambert moved the third reading of Bill 507, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Railway Act and the Tariff Board Act in respect of salaries of certain public officials.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

CUSTOMS TARIFF BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. Paul H. Bouffard moved the second reading of Bill 506, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Explain.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Honourable senators, the law which applies to the customs tariff at the present time provides very well for an anti-dumping duty, but there is no provision to protect Canadian industry against subsidization of products by foreign countries when such products are imported into Canada. The present customs tariff provides an anti-dumping duty, in section 6. The main purpose of the bill before the house is to enact new section 6A which provides for the imposition of an anti-subsidy duty which, it is intended, shall apply in cases where the anti-dumping duty is not applicable.

The subsidization may take various forms. It may be paid directly or indirectly. Sometimes the final product is subsidized. At other times the material embodied in the final product is subsidized. At still other times it takes the form of government trading losses. Such cases happen when the government of a country buys the product and sells it at a lower price.

Several conditions must exist for the application of the legislation provided by the present act. First: there must be a subsidy in one form or another paid by a government, or there must be a government trading in a product at a loss. Furthermore, such subsidization must cause or threaten to cause a material injury to an established domestic industry, or retard materially the establishment of a domestic industry. Unless these two conditions exist there will be no application of the anti-subsidy legislation or anti-subsidy duty.

The present legislation is necessary to fill a gap. For instance, let us consider that a product is normally sold on the market of the country of origin at $1 apiece. The government of such country decides to pay to the manufacturer a subsidy of 20 cents apiece. Immediately, the local market may fall to 80 cents. In such a case our anti-dumping legislation could not apply, because the price of 80 cents is the market price in the country of origin. In such a case, the Governor in Council may apply the present anti-subsidy duty.

Contrary to the existing anti-dumping legislation, the anti-subsidy duty is not mandatory. It would be impossible to ask the customs officials to make such inquiry as will decide the amount of subsidy paid by foreign government, or inquire as to whether a government sells a product at a price lower than the price of purchase. Neither could we ask the customs officials to decide whether such a subsidy materially injures a domestic industry or retards the establishment of such an industry in Canada. The responsibility for such decision would fall upon the Governor in Council. It is impossible to provide safer means of application of an anti-subsidy duty.

The present legislation is not directed against any particular country and is not to be applied against any particular known shipments. It is a simple closing of a gap to allow the government to face subsidization which is actually paid by many countries to dispose of their surplus or help local industries. Other countries have closed that gap. For instance, the United States levies a special duty on Canadian cheese to offset a subsidy paid by our government to cheese producers. The United Kingdom has recently announced its intention to introduce similar anti-subsidy legislation.

The discretion given to the Governor in Council will be exercised strictly within the limits agreed to under GATT—the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade—and will not be used lightly or irresponsibly. Canadian businesses will be disappointed if they hope to get new protection by merely showing that foreign subsidization exists. Each case will be examined carefully on its merits, and a thorough inquiry will be made as to the two conditions required by the law before this legislation can be applied, namely, the existence of a subsidy, and its possibly serious effect on our Canadian industry. However, the government will be able to use the legislation as and when it is deemed appropriate to do so.

Honourable senators, I think that deals with the main part of the bill. The other sections amend Schedules A and B to the Customs Tariff. For instance, section 2 of the bill amends Schedule A as proposed in the budget speech of the Minister of Finance on April 5, 1955. Section 3 is an amendment to Schedule A introduced by the Government on June 2, 1955. Section 4 is an amendment to Schedule B introduced on April 5, 1955, and section 5 is an amendment to Schedule B introduced on June 6, 1955.

I have tried to familiarize myself as much as possible with the details of the changes proposed by the Government in these different schedules. I do not think it is necessary for me to deal with each section, but I shall be pleased to answer any questions as far as possible, if any honourable senator desires the details of any change. I feel that I am in a position to explain any of the sections, and that should avoid the necessity of sending the bill to committee. May I add that there are at least 150 items contained in the schedules, and there are no increases except in one or two cases, and these are the result of re-negotiation in accordance with GATT. All the other items reduce the tariff or redefine the product without making any change in the tariff, but most of them reduce the tariff to some extent.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I should like to ask the honourable gentleman a question with regard to the proposed new section 6A. This seems to be a long distance away from free trade, and I should like to know if it is not strictly a protectionist measure.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: It is not by any means a protectionist measure. It is designed to prevent importation of goods of a class or kind made or produced in Canada which have been subsidized by a foreign government. I do not think anyone would consider it reasonable that a price which a Canadian manufacturer sets for his goods in the local market should have to compete against a subsidy which is paid on the production of these goods in a foreign country. I will cite an example. Let us take a product which is made in England and is selling at $1. The British Government decides that the industry ought to be subsidized and gives a subsidy for export purposes of 50 per cent, which means 50 cents apiece. I do not think honourable senators would consider it just and reasonable that our local industry should have to fight against such a subsidy. The anti-subsidy law applies only where a Canadian industry is materially injured or the establishment of a Canadian industry is retarded unduly. I do not call that protection; I think that is the proper treatment to be accorded to our Canadian manufacturers and traders.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Can the honourable senator give us a single instance, in actual fact, of that occurring?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: I am told by officials of the department that not a single case of that has occurred up to the present time, but they want to be in a position to meet the situation when a foreign government buys or subsidizes a product and then undertakes to dump that product in Canada. That situation would be met by imposing an anti-subsidy duty which would be equivalent to the amount of the loss incurred in the dumping or the subsidy paid by the foreign government. At the present time many foreign governments give, or intend to give, subsidies to their local industries, or are buying on their local market products which they keep for a long time and later dump in other countries at prices below cost. Those are the two situations that have to be met.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: Can the honourable senator state who has the authority to consider these cases and to decide when, where and how, and to which industry and on what product the duty shall be applied?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Section 6A, subsection 1, makes that very clear:

> Where in the opinion of the Governor in Council subsidized goods of a class or kind made or produced in Canada have been or may be directly or indirectly imported into Canada, he may declare such goods to be subject to an additional duty on their importation equal to the amount of the subsidy on those goods as determined by him.

So the Governor in Council has a completely free hand. He has to make the inquiry and find out, first, if a subsidy is being paid, and if so the amount of it; and, secondly, if the subsidy hurts a Canadian industry or permits the establishment of a similar industry in Canada. It is only when the department is convinced that it is necessary to do so that an anti-subsidy duty will be imposed.

Hon. Mr. Pratt: It applies only to goods of a class or kind made or produced in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Exactly.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: May I ask another question of the sponsor of the bill? I have always been of the opinion that we had an adequate anti-dumping duty law in Canada. That being the case, why could the manufacturer of goods of this kind in Canada not be protected by the imposition of a dumping duty instead of in the way proposed by this measure? It seems to me a back-hand way of accomplishing something that is already provided for in the statutes.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: If there were provision for it in the statutes I do not think there would be any thought of imposing an anti-subsidy duty, but unfortunately there is no such legislation.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I think there is.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: The dumping duty legislation we have applies only to a product sold in Canada or imported into Canada at a price lower than that at which it is sold on the local market in the country of origin. A product which is manufactured in England to be sold at $1 may be subsidized by the government of that country to the extent of twenty cents. That is applicable to the sale of the goods on the local market as well as on the export market. Consequently, a product which sold in England at $1 previous to the subsidy is then sold in that country at eighty cents. If it is exported to Canada and sold here at eighty cents, or exactly the English market price, the dumping duty law would not apply, because the goods come to Canada to be sold at the same price as on the local market in the country of origin. It is for that reason that Parliament has been asked to approve this anti-subsidy legislation.

May I add a second reason, which did not come to me from any of the officials but is my own thought in the matter. While in some cases there might be a 100 per cent subsidy, the dumping duty cannot exceed 50 per cent of the value of the goods. If a product that was sold in England for a price of $1 was subsidized to the extent of 60 cents and exported to Canada, the 50 per cent dumping duty imposed here would be ineffective.

In my opinion these are the reasons for this proposed legislation.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, I cannot let the opportunity pass without making some comment with respect to this type of legislation. To say that I am not enthusiastically in favour of it, is rather understating the case. This particular legislation is in fact protective legislation, and my friend from Rosetown (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) is quite right in his observation on it.

In the first place, the problem of dumped and bonused goods is vastly overestimated. There may be some instances of it, but in my experience I have never come in touch with an instance where a foreign manufacturer or government was offering us goods for less than they were worth. As a rule the seller offers his goods for the highest price he can get. This is not an artificial price, but one at which the seller is trying to dispose of goods which may not be very saleable. As I say, the facts upon which this legislation is based are entirely overstated; they are seductive arguments put forth by the protectionists.

My second point is that the seller and the local manufacturer are not the only interested parties. What about the local consumer? He was not even mentioned by the sponsor of the bill. After all, the action taken by the Government prevents the consumer from getting some goods at the lowest possible price, and only the interests of the manufacturer and the trader are taken into consideration. In my opinion, the chief party to the transaction is the man who buys the goods and pays for them. The true purpose of production is not to support the producer and the trader, but rather to benefit the consumer; the producer and the trader are servants of the consumer, but it seems easy to magnify their interests beyond all reason. Until I raised the question, the consumer was not even mentioned. I say it is the right of the consumer to buy his goods on the market at the lowest possible price. That is the philosophy of the free trader and of the Manchester School, to which I belong, and which I have justified on many other occasions.

I make this comment in passing, that I am not in favour of this measure or this type of legislation, which is protective in its character and disregards the interests of the masses, the consumers.

There is nothing to be gained by voting against the measure, because I am quite satisfied that this chamber will pass it. It was part of the budget. Nevertheless, with the exception of two or three rather inconsequential items, I am in favour of the remainder of the bill. I approve of the budget, because it proposed a number of reductions in tariff which will, to a slight degree at least, decrease the cost of living. It favours the production of goods and puts our products in a position to compete with products from abroad. In these respects, to the extent that reduced tariffs are features of the bill, I approve the measure.

Honourable senators, I see no good purpose to be served in referring this bill to a committee. However, I feel compelled to express my views with regard to this legislation, and particularly with regard to that part of the bill which my friend says is its main feature. I do not agree with him in that observation.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, I should first like to compliment the honourable senator from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Bouffard) upon the study he has made of this bill.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: It is encouraging to hear an honourable senator when explaining a bill say he is prepared to answer any questions which may be asked of him.

I am not sure that I do not agree with the sentiment expressed by the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck). I myself am a free trader and I like to see goods put on the market at the lowest price possible. From the consumer's standpoint I believe that is a good principle. Of course, we in the retail business have to contend with competition from the department and so-called chain stores, which feature loss-leader products.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I take it you are not in favour of loss leaders.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: The loss leader is to me an instrument made use of by those who are in a financial position to take advantage of a situation, and perhaps to a certain extent it is of advantage to the consumer; however, on the whole I believe it is not a good business practice.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I agree.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: May I explain to honourable senators that I rose to ask the honourable senator sponsoring the bill if he would be good enough to turn to Schedule A, on page 8, and look again at tariff item 418, dealing with machinery and apparatus for use in the manufacture of fish meal and other fish products. I may say that I am interested in the fish industry, and I am wondering what effect the proposed change in the tariff would have on the future of the fish meal manufacturing industry. Perhaps the honourable senator would be good enough to explain the proposed change.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I suggest that the sponsor of the bill answer those questions when he closes the debate. I want to say a few words myself before he answers questions.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: I do not mind.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: That will be satisfactory to me. If the honourable senator from Rosetown (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) has any questions to ask—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I was only going to make a few remarks. Have you finished?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I am always ready to yield the floor to the Acting Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Honourable senators, I agree with the honourable gentleman from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) that we have had an excellent explanation of this bill. It is one of the best I have heard for some time.

The bill deals with a very difficult subject; tariffs and protectionist measures and dumping duties are always more or less mysterious to the public at large. Like the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), I, too, look at this measure from the standpoint of a consumer. I am afraid that the bill is not going to be very popular in the Prairie Provinces because the people of the West feel that they always have to pay more than they should for the goods they purchase from protected industries in Ontario and Quebec. In other words, Westerners feel they have to pay through the nose for everything they buy, yet when they sell their products of the farms they have to compete in the world market.

I fail to see any need for the bill, because in my opinion the dumping duties as provided for in the present law today cover all cases of the kind referred to by the sponsor of the bill. He has been unable to give us any concrete illustrations of anything that has so far happened which would justify the measure. He said that the Government is afraid something might happen, and it is looking into the future and trying to protect the manufacturers of this country in advance. I do not like that kind of thing at all. I think it is straight protectionism, and if it spreads to any great extent the people of Canada, and particularly those in the West, are going to pay a great deal more for their goods.

Again like the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity, I am pleased that there have been certain reductions in the tariff. While I do not intend to vote against the bill, I would warn the Government that it should be very careful in bringing into full force and effect the new section 6A.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, as a theoretical free trader, like some of my honourable friends on the other side, I do not think I should allow this occasion to pass without associating myself with what has been said by the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) and the honourable senator from Dartmouth-Halifax (Hon. Mr. Isnor) with regard to the, shall I say, dislike with which I regard the proposed new section 6A.

I compliment the honourable senator who introduced the measure upon his admirably lucid exposition, but for myself I should have been much happier if this section had not appeared in the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Because I support what has been said by other honourable senators, that it is or at least that it can be made a vehicle of a rather extreme form of protection, and that it apparently takes into account only the possible interests of manufacturers in this country and disregards the interests of the ultimate consumers who represent, shall we say, perhaps 95 per cent of the people of the country.

I should have liked, as I say, not to see a section of this kind in the bill. The honourable senator who sponsored the bill gave one explanation on which I should like to ask him a question. He said that this extraordinary power conferred upon the Governor in Council would only be used in cases where it was quite clear that there was going to be some really serious damage done to a local Canadian industry. He may be right in that statement, but the bill says nothing of the kind.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: As far as I have been able to read it, in the short time at my disposal, the only requirement for action being possible by the Governor in Council under Section 6A is that the goods imported shall be of a kind similar to those manufactured in Canada, regardless of whether importation of subsidized goods might or might not cause any serious damage to a Canadian industry. If we are to have a section of this kind enacted I would much prefer to see a provision formally inserted in the bill to make quite certain that it should not go into effect unless there was a likelihood of very serious damage to our own manufacturers as the result of importation of subsidized goods. Perhaps my honourable and learned friend can make it a little clearer where he finds a provision of that kind in this measure.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Before the sponsor of the bill (Hon. Mr. Bouffard) rises to reply, I should like to join other honourable senators who have spoken, in complimenting him on the very lucid manner in which he has explained this complicated measure.

Views have been expressed as to the effect of the proposed new section 6A with regard to subsidies. I do not think that that section can be interpreted as a protective measure. All of us—for we are all consumers—want the consumer to buy goods at the lowest price possible; but we want to be fair both to the manufacturer and the consumer. The trades unions have declared emphatically that there must not be unfair competition, and it is to prevent what would be unfair competition that this clause is to be inserted in the Customs Tariff Act.

When the tariff schedules were adopted they were fixed at a rate which would represent a percentage of the cost price of the goods: when that cost price was ascertained, the appropriate tariff item was inserted in the Customs Tariff. It is now evident that in many countries the selling price of goods is not the cost price, and that the tariff on such goods when they come into Canada is computed, not on the cost price, but the cost price less a subsidy. Admittedly the result is that the consumer pays a lower price, but it is unfair to our manufacturers, and to the working people they employ, that manufacturers must compete with goods produced in a foreign country and brought in at a price less than the cost at which they were manufactured, upon which cost the tariff is based. So the section in question is included in the bill for the purpose of preventing unfair competition. I think it is a proper section, and that it should be enacted.

Hon. John J. Kinley: Honourable senators, it may be said that this bill is being dealt with here as though it were more or less in the committee stage. However, as it is not going to committee, I should like to say a word or two about it. First, may I compliment the honourable senator who moved the second reading (Hon. Mr. Bouffard) on the splendid explanation he has given us.

I think the bill is a very reasonable one and it may be very useful to our economy under present conditions.

On this occasion I am not to be understood as joining the ranks of either the protectionists or the free-traders. I have heard the leader of the Conservative party in this House—a party whose followers have talked protection all their lives—advocating free trade; and—

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: You are not referring to me?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: I am not a free-trader. I believe in adequate protection. But I am against this provision; I do not want to go that far.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: I was about to say that the honourable senator who moved the second reading of the bill was defending himself against accusations of protection. I believe in the freest kind of trade which is beneficial to my country, but I am for my own country first, and will not support measures which I believe are detrimental to Canada. I believe that the theories of the Manchester School, of which we heard this afternoon, are inapplicable today. When we look around and see what is going on in the modern world we must agree that free trade is outmoded. We must also recognize that those measures which we used to associate with protective tariffs are only a small factor in the carrying on of national and international trade. At one time England was the citadel of free trade in the world. But things got to a stage where the British Government not only adopted tariffs, but refused to admit any importations of some goods from overseas. For example, Nova Scotian apples and other Canadian products have been denied entry to what was once a free-trade market. If that sort of thing is not the most vicious kind of protection, I should like to know what is. I remember that years ago, when Canada negotiated a reciprocity agreement with the United States, there was what is called a countervailing clause. In the 1911 election I heard Conservatives going around our province telling the fishermen that if they voted for reciprocity they would imperil their fishing bounty, because the countervailing provision of the agreement would prevent them from shipping fish to the American market from a bonused industry. But we eventually got reciprocity, and the fishermen's bounty continued—which after all was the interest paid by the American Government for fishing privileges.

The sponsor of the bill was quite right in his contention that dumping duties do not meet the present situation, because a dumping duty is dependent upon a declaration by the shipper that the goods he has for sale are sold under like conditions and price in his own country. But where producers are subsidized by the Government they can sell in their own country at a lower price. The proposal before us will prevent the sale in this country of imports produced under unfair and unequal conditions at the place of origin.

References are frequently made to the rights of the consumer. But I believe many people have been misled for a long time by what is called "free trade".

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Certainly Canada has been fooled.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: The greatest country in the world which has adopted protection is the United States of America. Its whole tariff is built on the principle of protection. Who can say that the United States economy has not been successful and beneficial for the people of that country? Can it be argued that the working man and the consumer have not benefited more substantially than if adequate protection had been denied them? Can anyone with a sense of responsibility condemn our manufacturers? Today they are exposed to the strongest competition in a competitive world; they are fighting for their economic lives in order to survive and to give employment to the people. I believe that industry should be permitted to carry on in circumstances which are reasonable and under conditions which will give it the chance to survive. Some people produce, some others are parasites, and they also are necessary and do well. As we know, the orchid, a beautiful flower, is a parasite. When I hear some people talk, I am inclined to wonder whether they could make good in the competitive struggle which is necessary to success in industry nowadays. I wonder if they realize that those who participate in the struggle for existence in the manufacturing field depend upon the excellence of their product and the degree of productibility, and that they have to face competition both inside and outside the country.

It has been said that farmers are not in favour of protection. Oh, no! They are for protection, all right. I recall legislation under which the export price of our domestic grain was lower than the price Canadians themselves had to pay. In order to help the farming industry Canadians had to pay more for their grain.

Hon. Mr. Aseltine: Our farmers furnished wheat to the rest of Canada at a price of 77 cents a bushel at a time wheat was selling for $2 on the open market.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: I think the man who speaks up for free trade is the one for whom free trade is a protection. We are all for protection. At one time in Prince Edward Island there was a legislator who was very much in favour of free trade. When he came to Ottawa and took a place in the seats of the mighty he was always seeking to have a duty imposed on pork, for he knew that Prince Edward Island produced a considerable amount of it.

We in the Maritimes want an entry into foreign markets for our primary products. Under the Fielding reciprocity treaty we would have enjoyed a preference in the United States for our primary products. At the present time our fish products can enter the United States at a fair duty, but we have to compete for the U.S. market against countries which have a lower standard of living and which pay low wages to labour. Fish dealers in Boston and New York will tell us: "We don't mind buying your exports, because you pay fair wages and you enjoy a high standard of living. We will gladly take your goods, but we don't like having to buy goods from countries like Denmark and Iceland, which pay low wages and undermine our markets."

We must realize that these conditions prevail, and there is no use in my friends talking about free trade when there is no longer any such thing. Every country in the world is busy putting up barriers to protect its own economy. For instance, everyone knows that Australia and New Zealand have restricted the importation of foreign goods. In the face of such conditions why should people bother to talk about the impossible conditions of free trade?

I come from a free-trade province, and I think our people have been exploited a little on this free-trade shibboleth. We in the Maritimes would be better off if we were placed in a position where we could share in some of the benefits resulting from protections instead of being left out on the fringe of the country and obliged to face the world by ourselves, as we now have to do in our coastal trade.

Trade is purely a scientific matter of arrangement between governments, and it is something which should be given the most careful consideration by those in public life. It is ridiculous for men to make the sweeping statement "I am in favour of free trade," when there is no such thing today. It is outmoded and a thing of the past. We cannot have it unless we achieve certain world conditions which cannot be envisaged at the present time.

For these reasons I say that this is a salutary bill. I commend the honourable member from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Bouffard) who moved its second reading, and I want to say I am enthusiastically in favour of its adoption.

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: I should like to ask the honourable senator from Queens-Lunenburg (Hon. Mr. Kinley) a question. I understood him to say there was a time recently when Canadians had to pay more for our own wheat than it was sold for on the export market.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: My honourable friend would be right if he deleted the word "recently".

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: How long ago was it?

Hon. Mr. Kinley: It was quite a while ago, but I was in Parliament at the time.

Hon. Mr. McLean: Do I understand that this bill raises the duty on machinery and apparatus used in the fishing industry?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: The amendment reduces the duty on this machinery. I would refer the honourable senator to tariff item 418 in Schedule A to the bill. At present, under the British preferential tariff it comes in free; under the most-favoured-nation tariff the duty is 15 per cent; and under the general tariff, 20 per cent. The new rates are free, 10 per cent and 20 per cent.

Hon. Mr. McLean: I believe that most fish machinery originates in the United States. Does the United States come under this?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: It comes under the 10 per cent rate. There has been a reduction of 5 per cent.

Hon. Mr. McLean: Honourable senators, the honourable gentleman from Queen's-Lunenburg (Hon. Mr. Kinley) spoke about conditions in the United States. It is true that that country imposes rather high tariffs, but at the same time it accepts the currencies of other countries. I know it has put through a bill which will authorize the acceptance of $700 million worth of foreign goods. The United States accepts the pound sterling, the French franc, the Italian lira and other foreign currencies, and in this way it is helping its own trade relations a great deal

Hon. Mr. Kinley: It accepts these currencies at the going rates.

Hon. Mr. McLean: Well, Canada does not even recognize the British pound or the French franc. I notice that recently Japan got a credit in dollars which it paid for in its own currency. The United States accepts these foreign currencies and uses them to buy goods from those same countries, and in this way it is doing its part to extend world trade.

At the present time there is a dollar gap, with some free nations being desperate to obtain dollars. Their purpose in endeavouring to export goods to Canada is to secure Canadian dollars in order to pay for goods they buy from us. These countries can only pay for imports with what they produce from their own land and sea. Their real objective in trying to sell us their goods is to get Canadian dollars, but we are making it more difficult for them to achieve this purpose. It is only natural for these countries to assist their manufacturers in some way or another in getting control of Canadian dollars in order to pay their bills over here. We should not do anything unnecessary to make it more difficult for these people to obtain our dollars, but by refusing to accept their currencies that is just what we are doing.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Honourable senators,—

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, I would point out that if the honourable gentleman from Grandville speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Honourable senators, in answer to the question raised by the honourable gentleman from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor), I would say that according to tariff item No. 418 of Schedule A to the bill the new rates are: free under the British preferential tariff, 10 per cent under the most-favoured-nation tariff, which is a reduction of 5 per cent, and 20 per cent under the general tariff. The reduction is proposed for the purpose of helping fishermen, as the Government felt that the protection of 10 per cent under the most-favoured-nation tariff was sufficient for manufacturers at the present time.

Hon. Mr. Kinley: Is that in respect of machinery and apparatus for use exclusively in the manufacture of fish meal and so on?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Yes. To answer the question put by my honourable friend from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen), I will give a very brief resume of what the minister said when he introduced the bill in the House of Commons. He reminded the house that Canada had entered into a contract with other countries—the agreement known as GATT—and that the intention was to respect the obligations under that agreement. If we examine GATT we find that every country may pass anti-subsidy legislation on condition that it be applied only when it causes or threatens material inquiry to an established industry in the territory of a contracting party or materially retards the establishment of domestic industry. The minister stated definitely that this measure would only be applied in accordance with GATT.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Bouffard: Next sitting.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald moved the second reading of Bill 256, an Act to amend the Defence Production Act.

He said: Honourable senators, the purpose of this bill is to amend the Defence Production Act, in two respects. In the first place, it provides for an increase in the salary of the Minister of Defence Production from $10,000 per annum to $15,000 per annum. At the present time that provision will have no effect, because the bill says he shall be paid this salary "unless he is in receipt of a salary as the minister of another department". At present, as honourable senators know, the Minister of Defence Production, the Right Honourable C. D. Howe, is also Minister of Trade and Commerce, and as such he receives a salary. Therefore he is not eligible to receive the salary provided for by this bill. However, if at any time a minister should hold this portfolio. and not be the minister of another department, he would be paid the salary specified in this bill.

The bill also provides that sections 23 to 31 of the act shall expire on July 31, 1959. Without this amendment the act would expire on July 31, 1956.

Honourable senators will recall that when the original act was passed, in 1951, Canada was engaged in a war in Korea, and the prospect for peace in the world was, to say the least, very uncertain. I am sure we are all thankful that the prospect is brighter today. However, there still are danger clouds, and I think I express the views of all when I say that we must continue to be on guard. This bill gives the minister wide powers in connection with defence projects. His powers, under the terms of this bill, will be extended for three years beyond the present expiry date of the act.

Honourable senators will observe that the bill makes a change with respect to the tabling of regulations. Section 2 provides that every regulation passed under the authority of this act "shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament as soon as may be after it is made." May I emphasize that these regulations must be laid on the table in both Houses of Parliament, the Senate and the House of Commons. Under the Regulations Act, regulations must be laid on the table before Parliament, when it is sitting within fifteen days after they are passed. Under this bill, the new section 41(1) of the Defence Production Act provides that regulations must be laid on the table as soon as possible after they have been passed. So the provision with respect to tabling regulations is more stringent under this bill than under the Regulations Act.

There is also a provision, which will be subsection 2 of the new section 41, that after a regulation has been laid before either house a notice of motion signed by ten members thereof, and made within seven days of the day the regulation was laid before that house, praying that the regulation be revoked or amended, shall be debated at the first convenient opportunity. I would point out that that provision also applies to both the Senate and House of Commons.

Before I sit down I wish to say that, in my opinion, Canada has been extremely fortunate in having as Minister of the Department of Defence Production a man of the stature and ability of the Right Honourable C. D. Howe.

Some Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: During the war he rendered outstanding service to Canada in a similar capacity, when he held a portfolio of another name. I think an especially fine tribute to Mr. Howe is implied in the fact that he is probably the only statesman who held such a position throughout the war years and still serves his country in a similar position today. He proved himself to be worthy of the office during the war, and we continue to have confidence in him.

I also wish to pay a tribute to the Parliamentary Assistants who have been associated with Mr. Howe, Mr. George James McIlraith, the member for Ottawa West, his Parliamentary Assistant for many years, was faithful and industrious and gave all his time and efforts to the task. Since then, Mr. Howe's Parliamentary Assistant has been Mr. John H. Dickey, who became senior member for Halifax when the honourable gentleman from Halifax-Dartmouth (Hon. Mr. Isnor) was summoned to this house; and Mr. Dickey also has given all of his time and great ability to the duties which fall to his lot in this onerous post.

Honourable senators, I have no hesitation in commending this bill to your favourable consideration.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: Honourable senators, there is little need for debate on this bill at the present time, in view of its history since it was introduced in another place. However, I have a few remarks to make.

When the Defence Production Bill was before this house in 1951 I voted for it. But I stated at that time that I viewed with alarm legislation which gave extraordinary powers to the executive. I have always stood, as my honourable colleagues know, for the freedom of the individual, for fundamental liberties and all such rights. I am an intense Liberal. Nevertheless, I voted for the bill at that time and I had my reasons for doing so.

We were then entering into a war in South Korea, and I expressed the view that if as a nation we were ready to conscript our young men and send them across the sea to fight our battles, we were prepared to take away the freedom of the individual in a most drastic way. One could scarcely imagine a greater interference with the rights of an individual than to take him away from school or his job, and, without his consent or that of his family, put him into uniform and send him to war against an enemy in a far distant country. I said that when we were doing that, or even contemplating it, the owners of supplies or of factories capable of producing war materials had very little to complain of if at the same time we told them that they must participate in the war effort. So we passed legislation which contained such extraordinary powers as those which permitted the minister to say to a manufacturer that he must sell his goods to the country, even though he could get a higher price elsewhere, or that his plant should be under different management. While these powers were extraordinary and of a nature that should not be granted in ordinary peace-time, I thought that under the circumstances the citizens who stayed at home and proposed to make money out of the war had little to complain of by the passage of such a measure. So, I voted for it.

As to the term of the legislation, I expressed the view that five years was too long and that two years would be sufficient, after which time the Government, if it so desired, could come to us and ask for an extension of the powers; and that we could be counted on to extend them if circumstances justified our doing so. However, the measure passed at that time was for a term of five years, which has not yet expired, and the Government has now stated that the extraordinary powers are required for another limited period. I am satisfied to take its word for it, and to vote for the bill as it now stands, realizing of course that the powers are not the kind that I am prepared to give to the executive in ordinary peaceful times. I am satisfied to pass the bill to provide for the extension of the powers for a limited time.

May I say that in my opinion it was never the intention of the administration, at any stage of the consideration of this bill, that these powers should be given in perpetuity. The bill as it was first introduced in the other place contained nothing about permanent powers. True, it abolished the time limit. But I would point out that the Emergency Powers Act was passed without limit as to its life, on the understanding that it would be repealed when it was no longer necessary; and in due season it was repealed. Similarly, even if the time limit in this measure were abolished, the understanding would remain that when the act was no longer necessary it would be repealed. So, let nobody go away with the idea that the administration, or any of us on the Liberal side, at any time had any thought of asking for these powers in perpetuity. As the bill now stands, it is limited in its term and with very good reason, and we can bring up its details at any time in the interval.

My second reason for speaking to this bill at this time is to join with the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) in his expression of appreciation of the contributions made by the administrator of this act, the Right Honourable C. D. Howe. A more capable and fairer man would be hard to find. I believe there never has been, nor is there now, anybody in the world who can claim to have spent the enormous sums that have passed through Mr. Howe's hands without the slightest suggestion or suspicion of any of it sticking either to him or to his friends. That record of handling expenditures amounting not to thousands or millions, but to billions of dollars, without a shadow of suspicion, is most remarkable. I have every confidence in him that his record will continue.

But because human life is precarious, I am concerned that a bill of this kind should not provide powers in perpetuity. Perhaps Mr. Howe's successor from our own or some other party might not warrant the trust that we have in Mr. Howe. That is a thought we must bear in mind when we come to vote for this bill as it now stands, with a limit of three years during which it will remain in force. Let us hope, honourable senators, that when the subject comes before us at the end of the next three years—and the time will pass quickly—peace in fact will have been established throughout the world, and that we may then say we are back to normal times and so insist upon the normal type of legislation.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Next sitting.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

50437—51

THE SENATE

Thursday, July 14, 1955

The Senate met at 3 p.m., Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

THE LATE SENATOR KING

TRIBUTES TO HIS MEMORY

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, before the day's business is proceeded with, I should like to make reference to the passing of our very dear friend and colleague, the late Honourable Senator James H. King.

The late senator had many close friends in this assembly and throughout Canada. I well recall that when I first entered Parliament, in 1935, I was fortunate enough to make his acquaintance, and he helped me greatly during those early days. I understand there are other members of Parliament who recall his many kindnesses and great assistance to them when they came to Ottawa as young men.

Senator King comes from a very distinguished family in respect to public service. His father was the Honourable George Gerald King, and it is interesting to note that he was a member of the House of Commons from 1878 to 1886 and from 1891 to 1896. He was first elected to the House of Commons in 1878; he was defeated in the election of 1886; he was elected again in 1891, and re-elected in 1896, in which year he was summoned to the Senate. He was a member of the Senate in 1922 when his son, the late senator, came to Ottawa to accept the portfolio of Public Works in the federal Cabinet. There may have been other instances of a father and son being members of Parliament at the same time, but I recall only one. The honourable senator from Cariboo (Hon. Mr. Turgeon), who is present today, became a member of the House of Commons when his father was a member of the Senate. Those are two outstanding examples of fathers and sons—

Hon. Mr. Burchill: All from New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: —who have given so much to the public service of Canada. It is interesting to note that—as we have just been reminded by the honourable gentleman from Northumberland (Hon. Mr. Burchill)—Senator Turgeon and the late Senator King and their fathers were all born in New Brunswick.

Our late colleague Dr. King left new Brunswick and established a medical practice in the south-eastern part of British Columbia, where he was beloved by many. He had a very extensive practice; and no effort was too great for him to make to serve as a doctor the people who lived in that rugged country—and indeed it was rugged when he went there.

I know we all feel very deeply his passing, because he was so close to each one of us.

I think I should put on record a brief statement setting forth the more important events in his life. As I have said, he was born in New Brunswick, at Chipman, on January 18, 1873. He was the son of the late Senator George Gerald King; and his mother's name before marriage was Esther Briggs. After receiving his primary education at Chipman and St. Martin's Academy, in New Brunswick, he entered McGill University, from which he received his medical degree in 1895. His earliest experience in the field of medical practice was at Andover and Saint John, New Brunswick, after which he took up residence in Cranbrook, British Columbia, in 1898, where he continued his medical career and became Canadian Pacific Railway surgeon of the Crowsnest line.

Dr. King's medical career was not limited to his own general local sphere of practice. In fact, it was broad enough to include the Vice-Presidency of the Graduates Society of McGill University in 1908. He attended the Western Congress of Medicine and Surgery at Budapest in 1910. One of the most outstanding accomplishments of his career was as an original founder and Governor of the American Congress of Surgeons at Chicago in 1913. Had Senator King done nothing else for his country, we realize that he rendered a splendid service to Canada in the field of medicine and surgery. In recognition of his unselfish devotion to the welfare of unfortunate people, he was created a Knight of Grace of the Venerable Order of the Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem.

May I refer now to the late Senator King's political career. Before doing so in detail I should like to point out that his record in public life was long and distinguished. For more than half a century he served the people of Canada in parliament, including the Legislature of British Columbia. In 1903, only five years after his arrival in British Columbia, he became the representative for Cranbrook, and he held this seat in the Legislature until 1909. Although unsuccessful in Kootenay, in the federal election of 1911, he returned to the provincial field and was re-elected to the Legislature for Cranbrook in 1916 and 1920, and from 1916 to 1922 he was Minister of Public Works in the governments headed by Mr. Brewster and Mr. Oliver.

In 1922 Dr. King resigned from the Legislature to accept appointment as Minister of Public Works in the government of the Right Honourable William Lyon Mackenzie King. He was elected to the House of Commons in a by-election that year, and was re-elected in the general elections of 1925 and 1926; and in the latter year he was appointed Minister of the Department of Health and Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. That was a very important department in those days. I do not say it was more important than the present Department of Veterans Affairs, but it was a more or less new venture, and the foreruner of that Department.

Dr. King was summoned to the Senate in 1930 and, as many of you recall, he was appointed Leader of the Government in this house in 1942, and was Speaker of the Senate from 1945 to 1949. Since then he has continued to sit in this chamber as one of our very dear colleagues.

I have outlined two of the outstanding phases of Dr. King's service to his country—his medical and political careers.

His interest in the field of education throughout his long and useful life was recognized by Honorary Doctor of Laws Degrees awarded to him by Acadia University, in 1923, and Ottawa University, in 1924.

Constantly striving in the interests of peace and order in the world, his contribution to Canada's war effort as a member of the Mackenzie King administration was crowned by his participation in the World Security Conference at San Francisco in 1945.

I know we all feel his passing very deeply, because he was so close to each one of us. We have lost a great friend, a great physician, a great statesman and a great gentleman. To his widow I am sure we all join in extending our very deep sympathy.

Hon. W. M. Aseltine: Honourable senators, this is one of those sad occasions when we pay respect to a departed friend and colleague. I wish to join in everything that has been said by the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) with respect to Senator King. He has given us such a fine resumé of the life and work of Senator King that very little is left, perhaps, for me to say. I very much regret that the Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig), whom I am replacing today, is not here, because he was much more intimately acquainted with Dr. King than I had been. However, I notified him this morning of the death of our dear senator, and he will write immediately to Mrs. King from Winnipeg.

The Leader of the Government has stated that for more than half a century Senator King was in public life in this country, first as a member of the Legislature of British Columbia, then in the dominion Parliament, as a member of the House of Commons and later as a senator. During all that time his record was second to none. We learned this morning, with very deep regret, of his passing. He was a great Canadian: I consider him to have been one of the foremost citizens of this country. At the time of his death Dr. King was the sixth member of the Senate, according to seniority. I myself am not so far down the list, being ninth. Senator King, of course, was here when I first came to this house. I shall always remember how well he treated us new members, how he helped us in our work, and what a good friend he was to all of us. He was a real gentleman of the old school, and a fine character in every way.

I wish to pay a tribute to Dr. King for the splendid service he rendered as Minister of the Department of Health and Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment. He was directly responsible for that very fine legislation known as the War Veterans' Allowance Act, and veterans throughout Canada are greatly indebted to him for the benefits they have received over the years. Last year the benefits paid under the act amounted, I think, to approximately $28 million. I repeat that as minister of that department Dr. King rendered splendid service to Canadian veterans.

On behalf of the members on this side of the house, I join with the Leader of the Government in expressing deep sympathy to the widow of our late colleague.

Hon. L. M. Gouin: Honourable senators, I am greatly moved by the tributes paid by the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Ross) and the honourable Acting Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) to the memory of our late colleague.

Dr. King's death is to me a personal loss. It has in truth been said that he was a great friend to all of us. I believe no higher compliment could be paid to this gentleman of the old school, as he was described a few minutes ago, than to mention the quality of friendship which was, so to speak, shining in him. To people in all walks of life in Ottawa, from the lowliest employee in government or hotel to those occupying the most exalted posts, Senator King expressed the same words of kindness and friendship.

I believe that I knew Senator King for more than thirty years. He became a colleague of my father, Sir Lomer Gouin, in Mr. Mackenzie King's first government, in 1922, and I became acquainted with him about that time. When he was made Leader of the Government in this house after the death of Senator Dandurand, I was closely associated with him; and during the critical years of the war especially, I was in a position to appreciate his great quality as a true Canadian, a broad-minded patriot and a serious and sincere champion of national unity.

Dr. King tried to be of service to everyone he met; he was exceedingly kind, and he liked to remember occasions in family life, such as marriages, births and deaths; and whether they were gay or sad occasions he always did the right thing in a charming way.

The late Dr. King's political career, as it was outlined by the Leader of the Government, was indeed very interesting. He gained experience in politics in his province of adoption, British Columbia, where he became the provincial member for Cranbrook in 1903, more than fifty years ago. He later became Minister of Public Works in that province, and in 1922 he assumed the same portfolio in the federal Government. Four years later he was appointed Minister of the Department of Health and Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment, the department with which his name will ever be associated. For that post he was admirably qualified by a deep knowledge of people of all classes and of medicine, a profession of which he was an outstanding member.

In the late Dr. King I salute a good citizen, a true and excellent Canadian. Born in New Brunswick, having studied medicine at McGill University and having made his home on the Pacific coast since 1898, he was as familiar with the problems of the Maritimes as with those of Western Canada. And above all, from my point of view, he had the very great merit of understanding, perfectly the good people of Quebec. The late senator was always anxious to render justice to Canadians of all creeds and ethnic origins. Into all his work he carried the splendid qualities of British fair play, a broad tolerance and a truly liberal mind.

With much sadness I pay this last tribute of respect to my dear friend the late Honourable James King, and express to his widow and family my sincere sympathy.

Hon. Gray Turgeon: Honourable senators, I rise to speak at this time with a very tense feeling within me. Never in my life have I had a closer or better friend than the late Senator King, who has just departed from us.

Our late colleague and I worked together since before he entered the federal Parliament through the House of Commons in January, 1922. In all that time I cannot recall a single occasion on which I found in him anything but the deepest feelings of good will and a desire to do right.

When references were made this afternoon to our late friend's service as Minister of Health and Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment, I recalled a conversation I had with the late Prime Minister Mackenzie King shortly after he had asked Dr. King to accept the portfolio. After saying that the Department of Health and Soldiers' Civil Re-Establishment required as its head a man possessing a clear conception of humanitarianism and good will, and a sincere regard for the welfare of war veterans, the Prime Minister added: "Of all the men I have met I know of no one who possesses the truly humanitarian spirit in greater degree than does Dr. King, and that is why I have asked him to accept this portfolio. I am sure he will do a great deal of good for the returned soldiers, and through them for the various communities in Canada." Honourable senators, I doubt if any prediction regarding a human being ever proved to be better founded than that of the late Prime Minister concerning Dr. King.

As has been said, the late Senator King practised medicine in the Kootenay country, and more particularly in Cranbrook. Anyone who has ever lived in that district will tell you that his whole thought was for his work as a doctor, and for the spreading of human good. He considered cases on the basis of what should be done. He not only cured disease but he helped to create a good friendly co-operative spirit, a good family spirit in the various communities which he entered.

I think the death of Senator King is as serious a loss as could befall this chamber. I am certain that his widow and other relatives will deeply appreciate what has been said by the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), the Acting Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Aseltine), and the senator from De Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Gouin). I wish to associate myself with their expression of sympathy on behalf of the Senate.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, in the passing of the late Dr. King the Senate has lost a figure who played a very important part not only in the affairs of this chamber but in the public life of Canada for a great many years. As a friend and admirer I mourn his loss, and as a representative of New Brunswick I pay tribute to his memory with a sense of pride in the fact that he was born in that province. We have long counted him as one of New Brunswick's very distinguished sons.

His long public career has been described by the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) and other senators, and I would only add that it is not given to many men to have such a varied and distinguished career. As a medical practitioner, first in New Brunswick for a short time after his graduation from university, and later in the early days in British Columbia, he was affectionately regarded as a true physician and friend by his patients scattered over large expanses of territory. His medical visits meant hard lonely trips which tested his physical powers. He was much beloved in those early days as a medical pioneer, and he was the chief character in Ralph Connor's widely read book The Doctor. Honourable senators, what better tribute could be paid to a man's worth?

Not very long ago, in the course of a conversation, Dr. King told me that he was first approached by Sir Wilfrid Laurier to enter the federal field of politics. At that time his father was a member of this chamber. He hesitated to give up his life as a medical practitioner, which he would have to do if he came to Ottawa as a member of Parliament but eventually he responded to the requests of his fellow citizens. His long career in public life has been described here this afternoon. During more than fifty years he gave himself unreservedly to the administration of the public affairs of this country. As has been said, he held cabinet posts both in Ottawa and in Victoria, seat of the provincial Government of British Columbia; and his able administration of the various departments over which he presided, especially here in Ottawa, has been referred to by the Leader of the Government and others.

He was a gentleman in every sense of the word, always courteous and kind. I shall never forget his kindness to me when I came to Ottawa as a new senator.

His services in this chamber are known to all of us, and we know with what distinction he occupied the various positions he held here. I join with the previous speakers in paying tribute to the memory of one whom we shall all miss, one whose character, integrity and courtesy have done much to dignify and enrich the public life of Canada.

To Mrs. King, his nephew and nieces, I tender my deepest sympathy.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, this is a sad occasion. It is not, however, an entirely unexpected occasion because, I think, all of us were aware for some days or weeks past of the critical condition of our friend and colleague Dr. King.

After the speeches that have already been made and the references which have been made to his career and life work, it is hardly necessary for me to repeat what has already been said, and said so well. I think, however, we can summarize it all in words used by the Acting Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Aseltine) when he said Dr. King was in all respects a good Canadian; a Canadian who devoted his entire active working life to the service of his fellowman; first as a beloved doctor at a time and in a place where medical services were urgently necessary and where the help and the relief of suffering that he was able to administer far outweighed any tangible rewards which he might expect to receive; and secondly, in the political field, at first in his adopted and much loved province of British Columbia, and afterwards in the wider field of federal affairs here in Ottawa.

I repeat, Dr. King was a good Canadian, and when all is said and done the man of whom that can be truly said needs no finer and no more eloquent epitaph.

To those of his family who survive, and particularly to his widow, we express our deepest sympathy. But to them, as to ourselves, we say that for him there is nothing to regret. His illness was mercifully short. He has gone to his last rest, full of years, full of honours, and with the consciousness of a life well lived and lived to the full. No, honourable senators, our regrets are not for him but for ourselves, for our loss of a wise, a kindly and a greatly respected colleague and friend.

(Translation):

Hon. Cyrille Vaillancourt: Honourable senators, may I add a few words to the tributes just paid to the memory of our beloved colleague.

When I entered the Senate, in 1944, I called on Dr. King and said to him: "I have known you for a long time, through your father. When my father was a member of the House of Commons, from 1891 to 1896, your father was one of his best friends. Upon my coming here, I wish to call on you. It seems that I am living over again, in my mind's eye, what your father and mine went through together many years ago." And this is what Dr. King replied: "Since your father and mine were such fast friends, so shall we be from now on."

As I was a novice, I went to him for advice and he took pleasure in helping me out, just as he did, indeed, with all his friends.

Today, it is with the deepest respect and, I might even say, with affection, that I offer him the tribute of my appreciation and of my faithful remembrance. To Mrs. King, I express my deepest and most sincere sympathy.

(Text):

TRANSPORT BILL

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. A. K. Hugessen, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented the committee's report on Bill 449.

The report was read by the Clerk Assistant, as follows:

The Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, to whom was referred the Bill (449) intituled: "An Act to amend the Transport Act", have in obedience to the order of reference of July 12, 1955, examined the said bill, and now beg leave to report the same without any amendment.

The report was adopted.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker:. Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Wednesday, July 20, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

If honourable senators will look at the Order Paper they will see that there are four items under Orders of the Day, and a motion in the name of the honourable senator from Medicine Hat (Hon. Mr. Gershaw). I anticipate that today we shall dispose of the first two items under Orders of the Day, that is, the third reading of two bills, and also the fourth item, consideration of the report of the Standing Committee on Canadian Trade Relations. That will leave one item only, namely, second reading of an Act to amend the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act, on our Order Paper, together with the motion in the name of the honourable senator from Medicine Hat. From inquiries which I have made—and this of course, is pure speculation —it does not appear that the House of Commons will have disposed of the estimates of the various departments which are now receiving consideration there, before the latter part of next week. The business which will remain on our Order Paper after this sitting can probably be disposed of in one day, and at most in two days, and it will then be necessary for us to stay here until we receive the supply bill from the other house. I think that if we resume on Wednesday evening ample time will remain to dispose of our business as well as to consider any legislation from the House of Commons.

The motion was agreed to.

CUSTOMS TARIFF BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. Macdonald moved the third reading of Bill 506, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. Mr. Macdonald moved the third reading of Bill 256, an Act to amend the Defence Production Act.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

REPORT OF COMMITTEE AMENDED— CONCURRED IN

The Senate proceeded to consideration of the report of the Standing Committee on Canadian Trade Relations.

Hon. A. Neil McLean: Honourable senators, with unanimous consent I beg leave to move that the report of the Canadian Trade Relations Committee submitted on Wednesday, the 13th of July last, should be amended by striking out paragraph 4 and substituting the following paragraphs:

4. Your committee, therefore, recommends that the Canadian Trade Relations Committee be reconstituted during the next session of Parliament and that it be authorized to continue its work under a similar order of reference.

5. Your committee also hopes that the basic work will have been achieved during the intervening period between the sessions and that its final submission may be made to Parliament at the earliest possible moment during its next session.

This is just a technical change from the latter part of the report I presented yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Honourable senators, before this report is adopted may I say that the new paragraph 4 certainly represents a vast improvement over the paragraph that it proposes to eliminate. The original paragraph 4 really suggests that we authorize continuation of the present committee. which of course we may not have power to do, and certainly should not do. That should be left to the next session. I would point out, however, that the new paragraph is also open to slight objection in that it recommends that the committee should be reconstituted. That is hardly the correct procedure. What should be done at the next session is to appoint a committee anew to carry on this work.

I am not prepared to suggest how this new paragraph 4 should be worded but I do not think it does any harm to call attention to the proper procedure as I see it, namely, that at the next session a committee should be appointed to carry on this work.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That a similar committee be appointed.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Yes; that is the true picture. If the mover of the resolution now before the house agrees with me I would suggest he withdraw the word "reconstituted" and substitute the word "appointed".

Hon. Mr. McLean: I am quite willing that the amendment suggested by the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck) be made.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: May I point out that the exact wording of the resolution presented by the honourable senator from Southern New Brunswick (Hon. Mr. McLean) is:

> Your committee, therefore, recommends that the Canadian Trade Relations Committee be reconstituted during the next session of Parliament and that it be authorized to continue its work under a similar order of reference.

I think that might be reconciled with the definite prospect that next session, if a motion is made to reconstitute the committee and renew the order of reference, the whole question of the personnel of the committee as nominated and of the subject-matter referred to it would then be open for debate. All that is expressed in the report before us is the pious hope that next session the committee should be reappointed to complete the work that it has not been able to finish this session. We can overlook the punctilio of the thing until next session.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, the question is on the amendment of the Honourable Senator Roebuck, seconded by the Honourable Senator McLean, that in the proposed new paragraph 4 of the committees report the word "reconstituted" be struck out and the word "appointed" substituted. Is it your pleasure to adopt the amendment?

The amendment was agreed to.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, the question is now on the motion of the Honourable Senator McLean, seconded by the Honourable Senator Vaillancourt, that the report be amended by striking out paragraph 4 thereof and substituting therefor the proposed new paragraphs 4 and 5.

The motion was agreed to, and the report was amended.

Hon. Mr. McLean: Honourable senators, I now move adoption of the report as amended.

The motion was agreed to, and the report as amended was adopted.

The Senate adjourned until Wednesday, July 20, at 8 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, July 20, 1955

The Senate met at 8 p.m., Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AUTHORITY BILL

SECOND READING

Hon. J. Adelard Godbout moved the second reading of Bill 508, an Act to amend the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act.

He said: Honourable senators, I do not know whether most of you have read this bill. It is not very complicated; the purpose is to make sure that the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority has the power to expropriate lands on Indian reserves as well as other lands. When the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority was created it was supposed by members of both houses that the act which established it invested the commission with this power, but the law officers have some doubt whether the existing law is applicable to Indian reserves. It is therefore proposed to add, as subsection (5) of section 18 of the act, the following:

For greater certainty it is hereby declared that the Authority, acting under this section, is a corporation empowered to take or to use lands or any interest therein without the consent of the owner, within the meaning of section 35 of the Indian Act.

All that the bill will do is to clarify what the intention was when the Authority was created.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: What lands are proposed to be taken?

Hon. Mr. Godbout: Lands near Caughnawaga, Quebec, and Cornwall, Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Are these Indian lands?

Hon. Mr. Godbout: Yes.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Godbout: Next sitting.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, as there is no other business on the Orders of the Day, I would move that the house do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Thursday, July 21, 1955

The Senate met at 3 p.m., Hon. Arthur L. Beaubien, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

EIGHTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE CONCURRED IN

Hon. Norman McL. Paterson, Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, presented the committee's eighth report.

The report was read by the Clerk, as follows:

Your committee recommend that during the coming recess of Parliament the Honourable Senator W. Ross Macdonald, Leader of the Government in the Senate, and two senators to be named by him from time to time, be authorized to act for and on behalf of the Senate in all matters relating to the internal economy of the Senate.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this report be taken into consideration?

Hon. Mr. Paterson: With leave, I move that the report be concurred in now.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask whether this is the usual practice during a recess?

Hon. Mr. Paterson: It is my understanding that it is. This recommendation was passed at the last meeting of the committee, but was omitted from the committee's report to the Senate. That is why it is being brought before the house at this late stage of the session.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I also inquire whether it is usual to give the committee such wide powers? During the recess three senators would have virtually the same powers as are enjoyed during the session by the Internal Economy Committee itself. Has this been the usual practice?

Hon. Mr. Paterson: It is sometimes necessary to attend to certain things while Parliament is in recess. The committee recommends, as a matter of formality, that the responsibility of attending to them be placed upon three senators.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: May I explain that before prorogation last year a similar subcommittee, composed of the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), the honourable senator from Rockcliffe (Hon. Mrs. Wilson) and myself, was appointed to act in connection with certain alterations to the Post Office and other matters. As honourable senators know, when Parliament prorogues all standing committees go out of existence. The proposed subcommittee would preserve a certain amount of order where otherwise there would be chaos.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: The subcommittee seems to be necessary.

The motion was agreed to, and the report was concurred in.

ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I move that when the Senate adjourns today it stand adjourned until Tuesday, July 26, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

The motion was agreed to.

PREPAID HEALTH INSURANCE

PRESENT SITUATION IN CANADA—DISCUSSION

Hon. F. W. Gershaw rose in accordance with the following notice:

That he will call the attention of the Senate to the advantages to the public of prepaid health insurance and the present situation with respect to such insurance in Canada.

He said: Honourable senators, having given notice some time ago, I wish at this time to draw to the attention of this honourable house what is being done in Canada regarding national health insurance. This important subject has been discussed frequently in the press, and by organizations at their meetings, and it has often been brought to the attention of this High Court of Parliament. The subject is important because it affects conditions right in the homes of our people, and its neglect results in much sorrow and suffering.

It has sometimes been suggested that doctors throughout the length and breadth of this dominion should be on salary, and that is what is often meant by state medicine. I wish to make it clear at once that such an arrangement would not be acceptable to the Canadian Medical Association. Even if the Association accepted such a plan of state medicine, it would be very difficult to put it into operation with any degree of fairness. Doctors, like other people, differ greatly in their training aptitude, industry, experience and so on. The doctor-patient relationship is a very highly regarded feature. Competition amongst doctors is not altogether a bad thing. In this far flung country of ours country practice differs greatly from city practice.

For all these reasons I feel it would be quite impossible to work out a fair salary scheme for the compensation of doctors by the state. On the other hand, by an arrangement controlled by those who give the service and those who receive it, a fee-for-service schedule could easily be worked out; and indeed a great many agreements between doctors and patients have been negotiated.

I should like to make it quite clear that the Canadian Medical Association is not in any way a stumbling block to the advancement of any system of national health insurance. Indeed, for many years it has approved the principle of health insurance; and doctors are willing to co-operate in any fair scheme, provided that it allows for the building up and improving of the standards of practice and protects the patient against the unpredictable high cost of medical care.

Honourable senators, I wish to draw your attention to the fact that the Trans-Canada Medical Plans operates in every province of Canada. This is an organization which collects premiums and pays for medical attention when it is required; it is sponsored by the Canadian Medical Association, and doctors everywhere participate in it. Up to the present time the plan has been extended only to group contracts; that is to say, the employees of a garage or any specific industry, a city hall, or any department of government, may pay premiums into the plan at the first of the year and be entitled to prepaid medical attention for the entire year.

The body which co-ordinates all the provincial activities under the Trans-Canada Medical Plans is located at 3246 Bloor Street West, Toronto 18; this office is in effect the headquarters for the operations of the various provinces. The member plans in the various provinces are as follows. In the Maritimes: Maritime Medical Care Incorporated, at Halifax, and Maritime Hospital Service Association, at Moncton. In Quebec: Quebec Hospital Service Association, at Montreal. In Ontario: Physicians' Services Incorporated, at Toronto, and Windsor Medical Services, Incorporated, at Windsor. In Manitoba: Manitoba Medical Service, at Winnipeg. In Saskatchewan: Medical Services Incorporated, at Saskatoon, and Group Medical Services, at Regina. In Alberta: Medical Services (Alberta) Incorporated. In British Columbia: Medical Services Association and B. C. Medical Services Incorporated, both bodies at Vancouver. These are all branches of Trans-Canada Medical Plans and all co-operate with one another.

Now, honourable senators, the idea of providing some measure of health security for all is not new. In the days of the Roman Empire steps were taken to encourage people to set aside a little for a rainy day; that is, to save something while they were in health to carry them over times of disease and disaster so as to avoid their dependence on charity. In 1883 Bismarck introduced a system of national health insurance in Germany. In 1888 a compulsory scheme became operative in Austria, in 1891 in Hungary, and since 1911 in Great Britain and the North of Ireland. There are at present nine or ten countries with voluntary schemes and thirty-two with compulsory schemes. However, the practice in both types is pretty much the same: the doctor answers emergency calls only during the night; in the morning he visits his patients at the hospital or in their homes, and in the afternoon he keeps office hours.

While the doctor is making a contribution towards good health the outstanding contribution is being made by people engaged in research into the causes of diseases and their methods of treatment which will extend and expand the period of health and vigour. This is difficult work. The trail of success winds uphill all the way, but nothing is more striking than the results that have been obtained by medical research. Fifty-five years ago, at the beginning of this century, the average expectancy of life was about fifty years; today it is about seventy years—not only that, but people of a given age today look younger and act younger than did their forefathers at the same age.

Many of us remember the terrible scourges such as diphtheria, scarlet fever, typhoid fever and smallpox, which formerly struck across the world and brought death to a large number of people. These diseases caused great havoc in the country. However, today they are almost completely under control. Even tuberculosis, which for so long was regarded as the captain of the men of death, is largely being controlled. Not long ago a T.B. specialist, looking at the large sanatoria now devoted entirely to the treatment of tubercular cases, commented that with the conquest of tuberculosis these buildings will one day be used as old people's homes.

A word now about poliomyelitis, a disease which always instills fear into the hearts and minds of men and women. It is a dread disease, because sometimes it strikes with such overwhelming violence that a patient dies within a very few days. Sometimes the acute attack passes and the victim gets well, but in many cases a condition is left which lasts permanently. For instance, paralysis may cause deformity or some other disability, with the result that certain attainments are beyond the reach of the child victim forever. Recently, after long research, a serum has been worked out which holds great promise. According to the last reports from Michigan, some 400,000 children were treated; about half of them with doses of the Salk vaccine, and about half with a placebo. As a consequence, according to carefully kept records, the incidence of poliomyelitis was reduced by from 60 to 80 per cent. Vaccination does not invariably prevent poliomyelitis: although it is efficacious in a great many cases, there have been some failures in connection with its administration. But we in Canada can be particularly proud of the record of the Connaught Laboratories. By care, caution and hard work they have produced a vaccine which has proven as good as any vaccine can be. A great deal of the credit for this result is due to the Minister and officers of the Department of National Health and Welfare, because they have checked and double-checked with the object of making sure that every dose of vaccine given to a child in Canada shall be as perfect as it can be. I know that a few days ago a boy of nine or ten who was vaccinated developed polio. However, the disease did not occur until two months after the date of the vaccination, and clearly was not the result of it, but happened in spite of it. No one has claimed that the serum is 100 per cent effective.

I turn now to another department. All of us are mortals: there is a limit to the length of life; we all die, and are all equal in death: the bodily system breaks down sometimes, somewhere. I once had the privilege of treating a man who was 107 years old. I am sure that I correctly state his age, because his daughter, a woman of about eighty, had carefully recorded it. This little old man was completely blind and deaf: he had to be fed with a spoon and treated like a child. In his case the system was a long time in breaking down. Dr. Osler once said that a man is as young as his arteries. According to statistics, breakdowns of the cardiovascular system rank first among the causes of death. The second cause is cancer. Cancers which are detected early and are in accessible parts of the body can be cured, by X-rays, radium and surgery, but these treatments cannot be applied to the deep cancers, such as cancer of the liver. Cancer is not increasing, but more people are living into the cancer age and more cancers are being discovered. The third cause, which I need not dwell upon, is violent accidents.

Attempts are being made to control all of these three major threats to human life, and these efforts, of course, should be continued. If we are to be worthy of the achievements which have been made in the past, we must hold fast to what is good, and add whatever the light of the knowledge of the age enables us to achieve. Only by so doing can we live up to our obligations and be true custodians.

Turning now to the big factor in this matter, social security—because sickness is, of course, a cause of poverty—social security falls into two divisions; one, social insurance; the other, social assistance. Trans-Canada Medical Plans takes both of these into consideration. Those who have promoted this organization believe that the man or woman who can pay the necessary premiums should pay them, and that the comparatively few people who are unable to do so should receive assistance from some government. Nowadays, thanks to provision for family allowances, old age pensions, old age security, and disability pensions, not many are unable to pay the premiums. The system which is being worked out by the Trans-Canada Medical Plans is not a revolutionary one. It will not be very expensive, and it can be put into operation without much bickering or disagreement. In fact, it is already in effect. In 1954 the premiums collected amounted to $33 million, and $28¾ million was paid out for medical care. About 4·2 per cent of the sums received went into reserve account, and the total cost of operation was about 8·8 per cent. So it can be said that the organization is really a going concern, and that the Canadian people favour it and are taking advantage of it wherever they can. There are now 2,082,828 people in Canada insured through the organization.

Canadians are becoming increasingly anxious to protect themselves against the unpredictable costs of sickness and accidents. That is shown by the following statistics. In 1945, 15 per cent of the population had hospital protection; by 1954 the proportion had risen to 60 per cent. In 1945, 5½ per cent had surgical insurance; in 1954, 33 per cent. In 1945, 2 per cent had medical insurance; in 1954, 27 per cent. Of course, a large part —some 20 per cent—of the hospital protection is sponsored by some government.

What are the reasons for this large growth of protection? The first reason is that people realize and appreciate the value of it. In the second place, during the last year of the war most of us looked forward to times of great happiness in the brave new world which we hoped that the peace would usher in, and national health insurance was one of the advances which were generally anticipated. Thirdly, during the war great numbers of young men and women in the military services got medical attention without receiving any bill for it, and they appreciated that service. And still another reason is that as new skills, new drugs, and other means of combating disease are being worked out, costs have risen, and people want to protect themselves against unpredictably high costs of medical care.

In 1943 the Canadian Medical Association approved the principle of health insurance that would develop the highest standard of health services, preventive and curative. They went further, and set up an organization through which groups could be insured against the hazards of sickness. In 1947 the association proposed that the plan should be extended to cover all Canada and be made available to every Canadian citizen. At that time provisions were made whereby a contributor who paid a premium in one province could receive medical attention in any other province to which he might move. At present the plan is available to payroll groups only, but efforts are being made to gradually include every individual.

As health is a provincial matter, I should like to outline what has been done in the various provinces. I will deal with Alberta first. For quite a few years groups in that province have insured themselves against sickness and have received prepaid medical care. Recently an agreement was made between Medical Services (Alberta) Incorporated and the provincial Government whereby the Government approved individual protection for sickness and agreed to contribute $7 per person per year for every person covered by the plan. This agreement was to have come into effect in June, but there was a delay because of the recent provincial election. Present plans call for bringing the scheme into operation on October 1. It will be a step forward, for the Government will help to pay for everyone coming under the plan and will meet approximately one-third of the total cost. This is entirely apart from Alberta's present hospital plan, under which if $7 per day is the cost of hospitalization the municipality and the provincial Government each contribute $3, and the patient $1. This plan seems to be working out quite successfully.

Saskatchewan, which has group coverage, approaches its health plans somewhat differently. It has special programs in 58 rural municipalities and 20 towns and villages. Everyone living within these areas must contribute towards medical attention, and the whole scheme comes under the supervision of the provincial Government. The province also has a compulsory hospital protection plan to which everyone must contribute.

In Manitoba, where there is group and some individual coverage, the Municipal Act allows rural municipalities to pay for coverage out of general funds.

In British Columbia the groups which have been insured are smaller in size, so more people can be protected.

Ontario, a highly industrialized province, has group coverage which reaches a great percentage of the people. However, the need for individual coverage in Ontario is recognized.

In Quebec the coverage is limited, but active progress is reported toward extended arrangements.

Efforts are being made to further this scheme in the Maritimes, particularly in Nova Scotia, where a plan of individual enrolment was set up in 1954. Careful records are being kept and the results will be of great interest.

Honourable senators, Trans-Canada Medical Plans is progressing in an orderly way. It has not been encumbered by difficult negotiations or bickering, and it holds out promise of giving protection to a great number of people.

As I stressed before, if we have to have wars then let us have a war against illness and disease, and let us support methods of research and co-operation which will bring rich rewards. Despite the fact that health is a provincial matter, the federal Government has contributed approximately $30 million a year for the purpose of conducting health surveys, constructing hospital buildings and caring for persons afflicted by special diseases. However, under this plan the federal Government could not contribute to one province without contributing to another. We are hopeful that by advertising the plan and pointing out its benefits, more Canadians will get protection—the protection which they and their families need.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Cairine R. Wilson: May I ask the honourable gentleman if there is any provision for giving the rural parts of the country more service? I think this has always been a serious problem.

Hon. Mr. Gershaw: Some 47 rural municipalities in Saskatchewan give complete coverage, and if more individuals in the cities would come under the scheme more people in the rural districts would be eligible for its benefits. There is, of course, the difficulty of covering long distances in the rural districts, but that problem is being given careful study.

Hon. John A. McDonald: I have noticed in the press recently that the medical authorities in Great Britain have turned down the use of the Salk vaccine for the control of poliomyelitis. I wonder if the honourable gentleman could give us the reason for that. Is it that Great Britain wishes other countries to experiment with this vaccine first?

Hon. Mr. Gershaw: I have read all the literature about the Salk vaccine. I think the British authorities are being very cautious, and it is possible that they have adopted a policy of "wait and see". There have been very unfortunate results from some vaccine manufactured in the United States. A great deal more work will have to be done in connection with this vaccine, but there is strong hope that it will be a real factor in controlling that dreadful disease poliomyelitis. I am not in a position to express any opinion, but I can say that a large number of children have been vaccinated with the Salk vaccine in Canada, and we have been particularly fortunate in the results.

Hon. Arthur W. Roebuck: For some twenty years I carried sickness insurance. I always paid my premiums and I never made a claim. When I became 70 years of age the company cancelled my policy. I was informed that that was the practice among all private insurance companies; that is, they would insure you when you did not need protection, and when you did need it they wouldn't give it to you. I protested vigorously. I even invited the insurance agent to play a game of golf to see if he were in any better condition than I. I trounced him thoroughly and then asked him if he thought that I should not be entitled to insurance. But regardless of what the agent thought, his company cancelled my policy. It does seem to me that private insurance companies, by that sort of treatment, have utterly disentitled themselves from the right to carry on this type of insurance. I should like to know whether any age limit is set by the Trans-Canada system that the honourable gentleman has described in so favourable terms, because if insurance is available only when people do not need it, and they are cut off as soon as they do need it, I am not interested. Insurance should carry on as long as the insured lives. I think the actions of the private concerns in the past have been an outrage—absolutely reprehensible.

Hon. Mr. Gershaw: Under a group insurance plan people of 70 years and over, who still carry their cards, continue to be insured, and are not cut off.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, it is not my intention to take part in this debate. I rise only to thank the honourable senator from Medicine Hat (Hon. Mr. Gershaw) for his interesting and informative address. His references to the place of the physician or surgeon in a plan of health insurance or state medicine will no doubt be read with interest by our Minister of National Health and Welfare. In any event, I shall make a point of sending a copy of today's Hansard to the minister so that he will have an opportunity to read this address.

While the honourable senator was speaking, it occurred to me that other members of this house who, from time to time, draw attention to matters of great public interest are helping to fulfil one of the functions of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Certain honourable members have special knowledge on subjects of vital importance not only to us, but to the people of Canada, and a great service is rendered to the country when they impart their learning and the results of their research. I trust that in forthcoming sessions we shall have the privilege of hearing further addresses from other honourable senators who have special information to communicate.

I am sure I express the thought of all when I extend to the honourable senator from Medicine Hat our grateful appreciation of his excellent address.

Hon. Senators: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask the honourable leader if it would be possible to have a committee of inquiry set up, or some other method devised, to keep this subject under discussion, rather than let it die in the air, so to speak? A committee could call witnesses and information obtained could be circulated abroad to great advantage.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: It could be a very interesting inquiry, indeed. That, of course, would be a question for the Senate to decide at the coming session.

Hon. G. Percival Burchill: Honourable senators, I was greatly interested in the question asked by the honourable senator from Rockcliffe (Mrs. Wilson), as to whether there is any provision for giving more prepaid health insurance service to rural districts. So far as I am aware, no effort has been made along this line in the rural district in which I live, in New Brunswick. I am wondering if the Canadian Medical Association is the body responsible for all the efforts that are made. Perhaps my honourable friend from Gloucester (Hon. Mr. Veniot), a member of the medical profession, can enlighten me?

Hon. Mr. Gershaw: Honourable senators, the office of Maritime Medical Care Incorporated is at Halifax, and the General Manager is D. C. Macneill. The office of Maritime Hospital Service Association is at Moncton, and the Executive Director is Ruth Cook Wilson. According to information I obtained from Mr. Shillington, Executive Director of Trans-Canada Medical Plans, so far there has not been much activity in New Brunswick, but they are experimenting and have a group set up.

With regard to rural districts under the Alberta scheme, I might say that farmers will be entitled to medical care when the individual plan comes into operation.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: May I ask the honourable senator about rural municipal hospitalization in Alberta? Am I right in assuming that the Government of Alberta has for a great number of years supported and subsidized a system of established rural municipal hospitals throughout the province? I can recall an outstanding example of a co-operative plan of medical attention which was in operation in that province in 1912, and I have understood for a long time that Alberta pioneered in rural municipal hospitalization.

Hon. Mr. Gershaw: That is also my impression, and I am pretty close to the situation. Certainly the province has a good system for the building of municipal hospitals, and has shouldered quite a deal of responsibility in connection with them. The Canadian Government has recently contributed toward the building of hospitals, but it was found that the revenue was deficient, on account of the high cost of keeping the hospitals going; so the arrangement which I mentioned earlier is now in operation: that is, the patient pays a dollar a day, and the municipality and the province pay the balance.

Hon. J. Wesley Stambaugh: Honourable senators, I wish to add a word or two with regard to hospitals in rural municipal districts in Alberta. Under the scheme in operation there, a number of sections in a township are included, and a hospital tax is imposed, up to 15 mills. The patients, who are ratepayers, are generally charged a dollar a day for hospitalization, and the balance is paid by grants from both the federal Government and the provincial Government.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AUTHORITY BILL

THIRD READING

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald moved the third reading of Bill 508, an Act to amend the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday, July 26, at 3 p.m.

THE SENATE

Tuesday, July 26, 1955

The Senate met at 3 p.m., Hon. Cairine R. Wilson, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

POTASH AND PHOSPHORIC ACID

INQUIRY AND ANSWER

Hon. John A. McDonald inquired of the Government, pursuant to notice of July 20:

What progress, if any, has been made in recent months towards making Canada more self-sufficient in its potash and phosphoric acid requirements?

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators I have received the following answer to the honourable gentleman's inquiry from the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys:

Potash:

We have knowledge of six companies investigating the possibilities of producing potash from the deep deposits in Saskatchewan. One company has an exploratory shaft down to a depth of 1,170 feet, near Unity, and has an additional 2,300 feet to go before reaching the potash. Another company is preparing to sink a shaft to the potash beds near Saskatoon and has signed a contract for a five years' supply of electrical energy. Two other companies are starting drilling campaigns to locate suitable deposits. The remaining two companies have acquired "withdrawal areas" from the Saskatchewan Government but have as yet put down no drill holes or done other work.

Phosphate

One company in Ontario is investigating the possibilities of producing the mineral apatite (a phosphate mineral) as a by-product along with columbium and tatalum from an iron-titanium property near Sudbury. As yet this property is not in production for any mineral.

No deposits of phosphate rock of workable grade have been found in Canada as yet.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, I have visited the salt plant near Unity, where they have a wonderful method of producing salt from depth by pumping brine. They had hoped to use a similar method with potash, and they spent a great deal of money and decided to sink a shaft. The area of the shaft is 13 feet 6 inches, and it has to go to a depth of 3,000 feet or more, as the honourable leader just stated. In order to pass through water and quicksand it is necessary to employ a method of freezing. An American company has bought the rights to a great deal of the land on Patience Lake, 20 or 30 miles east of Saskatoon, and has declared its intention of going ahead. I know for a fact that the University of Saskatchewan holds some thirteen quarter-sections of land on the eastern edge of Saskatoon, and this company has offered $1,000 a quarter-section for the rights to the potash under that land. It is quite evident that all that is required to get potash in any quantity is an economical method of bringing it to the surface.

I read in a recent press dispatch that a firm was considering sinking a shaft in the vicinity of Yorkton. This is a further indication of the strong possibility of getting plenty of potash in the near future.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask what other use potash has besides being an ingredient in soap?

Hon. Mr. Horner: It is used in the making of fertilizer. I am sure that is why the honourable senator from King's (Hon. Mr. McDonald) is interested in it. It is my understanding that great deposits of potash are found in Germany, and the particular type of fertilizer made from it is very suitable for certain types of soil. I think I am correct in saying that practically all the potash used in Canada today is imported.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: When is the American company likely to commence producing potash?

Hon. Mr. Horner: It has been said that the company is going to build a railway and start producing immediately. Indeed, I am not sure that it has not already commenced sinking one or two shafts in what it calls test holes. It knows potash is there, and that it is at practically the same depth as at Unity.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Honourable senators, at the suggestion of the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) and with leave of the Senate, I might offer a word of explanation as to why I made the inquiry at this time. But first may I thank the honourable leader and the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys for the information that has just been presented.

I realize that the session is drawing near to a close and the time for obtaining information is short. Last week I gave notice also of an inquiry as to the possibility of marketing Canadian apples in Britain next fall and winter. If it is not possible to get an answer to that question before prorogation, I would appreciate it if the honourable leader would send it on to me as soon as it comes to him. Indications are that this year Canada will have a fair apple crop, and it will be necessary to secure an outside market for a large portion of it. Honourable senators from Nova Scotia and from other parts of the country will remember that last year the fruit growers in the Maritimes were very hard hit by the damage caused by the hurricane which hit that area, destroying 85 per cent of the apple crop shortly before picking time. In the provinces of Quebec, Ontario, British Columbia, and to a lesser degree in two or three other provinces it is expected that quite a large crop of apples will be gathered this year. It will certainly mean a lot to our fruit growers if surplus apples can be marketed in Great Britain.

I inquired about the fertilizer, honourable senators, with a view to following up a recommendation made—as many of us here will remember—at the conclusion of the inquiry into plant fertilizers by the Standing Committee on Natural Resources in 1947. At that time the members of the committee felt that Canada should become self-supporting in its supply of the main chemicals that enter into the manufacture of fertilizers. As honourable senators know, three main chemicals are needed in the soil to produce maximum crops, in addition, of course, to a number of other mineral elements in lesser degree. The three main elements are, firstly, nitrogen, the basis of nitrogenous fertilizers; secondly, phosphoric acid, the basis of phosphate fertilizers, and made from rock phosphate; and, thirdly, potash, the basis of potassic fertilizers. Canada at the present time is producing its own requirements of nitrates, although some mixtures of nitrates are being imported, but we are hoping that the time is not far distant when it will not be necessary to import any nitrogenous fertilizer. I understand these combinations will soon be manufactured in Canada. As a matter of fact, only one-fifth of the nitrates produced in Canada today are utilized in Canada, the balance being sold to other agricultural areas of the world.

Canada does not produce potash in any great quantity. A little phosphoric acid is produced here, but not very much. As shown in the report, the reason we do not produce much phosphoric acid is that no sufficiently high-grade deposits of rock phosphate have as yet been found in Canada. We are in hopes, though, that some of our prospectors, assisted by the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, will soon discover deposits of high-grade rock phosphate, and if this is done our requirements of phosphoric acid can be manufactured in Canada. Canada imports something like 500,000 tons of rock phosphate a year, and along with our importations of potash this means an expenditure by Canada of something over $12 million a year. At the time the committee was conducting its inquiry the annual expenditure was about $12 million. As the years go by there is an increasing demand for fertilizers and consequently an increased yearly expenditure for imports.

According to the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner), potash is imported from Germany.

Hon. Mr. Horner: And the United States.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: I want to thank the honourable senator for the information he has given us this afternoon. Like the answer to the inquiry, it is encouraging. It shows that efforts are evidently still being made to find some economic method of recovering potash from these Saskatchewan deposits.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask the honourable senator a question? I was at Muscle Shoals, Alabama, in recent years and while there I was given to understand that there they are manufacturing both phosphates and nitrates from the air by an electrical process. Are we doing that in Canada at all?

Hon. Mr. McDonald: We are producing some nitrates from the air, but not phosphates.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Pardon me, honourable senators, for rising again. The Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company at Trail, British Columbia, has for years been manufacturing a fertilizer that sells very popularly in the Prairie Provinces. Another mining company, Sherritt Gordon, which formerly shipped its concentrates to Trail, now has a plant in operation near Edmonton in which it expects to produce millions of dollars worth of fertilizers yearly. They are a by-product of the smelting process. For quite a number of years the fumes from the Trail smelters were killing orchards south of the border, and the elimination of the nuisance led to utilization of these vapours in the manufacture of fertilizers. This is a great advantage to both companies. As I understand it, their combined fertilizer products will take care of the needs of the country.

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: The fertilizer provided from the Trail Smelters is chiefly phosphates and nitrates. But I understand that the addition of potash will make a complete fertilizer.

Hon. Mr. Horner: For certain soils.

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: Yes.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, if the purpose of this inquiry is to obtain further information as to the possibility of Canada supplying more of these materials as well as importing sufficient quantities to meet the demand, it would be important, I think, at this time to indicate the agencies through which they are now distributed. If there is any definite object in mind in bringing this subject to bear on the needs of agriculture in this country, certainly it is apropos to gain some knowledge of the available distributing agencies, because prior to the late war these chemicals became subject to complete control by world-encircling cartels. I believe that once before, when speaking on the subject, the honourable senator from King's (Hon. Mr. McDonald) made some reference to the difficulty of securing in Nova Scotia, and I think in New Brunswick too, supplies of potash at an economic price for the use of potato growers. It was difficult to obtain adequate supplies from, I think, Windsor, Ontario, where one of these chemical plants was established, at prices which would make potato-growing profitable.

For this reason I suggest that any further inquiry into or discussion of this subject should be conducted in the light of full knowledge of what distributing agencies exist today, in comparison with those which were operating before the last war.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: During the war, of course, it was difficult to get supplies of potash because the sources of supply then were Germany and other far-away countries. But that condition does not exist today. Potash, in fact, is the only fertilizer whose price has gone down somewhat, but because of higher railroad costs this reduction has not benefited the farmers. As honourable senators know, the two plants that were erected at Welland and Calgary during the war by the Department of Defence Production are now in private hands. The plant in British Columbia is bringing in phosphate rock, mostly from Montana, and is using it to manufacture superphosphate. If we could only get a larger supply of these materials at a lower cost our farmers would be able to use a great deal more of it.

There is another point which should be stressed. I wish I could impress upon every farmer that he should make a study of the proper use of commercial fertilizers. Most up-to-date farmers—market gardeners, potato growers and fruit growers—have made such a study, but unfortunately many other farmers are not using fertilizers intelligently. I would hope that our various farm organizations would see to it that Canadian farmers are better educated as to the proper use of fertilizers. Many farmers have not even had an analysis made of their soils and so do not know what fertilizer their land requires. This information is easily obtainable today by taking samples of soil to the nearest chemist or agriculture expert, who will analyse them and tell the farmer exactly what is needed or in what respects his soils are deficient.

PREPAID HEALTH INSURANCE

HOSPITALS IN RURAL MUNICIPAL DISTRICTS IN ALBERTA

Hon. J. Wesley Stambaugh: Honorable senators, I wonder if I might have the consent of the house to offer a brief explanation with respect to a statement I made last Thursday regarding hospitals in rural municipal districts in Alberta. At that time I started out to say that there is a hospital for a number of sections; then I changed the word "sections" to "townships" but the way it reads in Hansard indicates that there is a hospital for a number of sections in the townships.

I would explain that the hospital units are composed of a certain number of townships, some units having four or five townships and some as many as twenty. Each hospital unit is complete in itself. Depending on the size of the hospital, there are five to seven members elected to its board, which has full control over the hospitals. For instance, the board hires the nurses and other employees. For revenue purposes the board figures out a budget each year and then asks the municipal district or county, whichever it happens to be, for a certain amount of money. Then the municipal district or county makes an assessment of so many mills on the assessed value of the district. I know some hospital units where the rate is as low as 2 mills on the dollar, and some where it is as high as 15 mills. This means there is no standard tax charge. Neither is there a standard charge for patients. Some hospitals charge ratepayer patients only 75 cents per day; some $1 a day—this is the usual charge—and the highest charge I know of is $1.50 per day.

Both the provincial and federal governments make grants toward the operation of these rural hospitals, and for several years they have also made grants toward the building of new hospitals. If a hospital is built according to certain specifications each government gives a grant of $1,000 per bed.

The cost of operating the average rural municipal hospital is about $7 per patient per day. All ratepayers are members of the hospital unit and are entitled to hospitalization at the rate of $1 per day. If you are not a ratepayer you may become a member of the hospital unit by paying an annual fee, which entitles you to the same privileges as ratepayers have.

FEED GRAIN

LIGHT WEIGHT WHEAT

On the Orders of the Day:

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, I should like to make a few remarks which might be useful to farmers and feeders in both Eastern and Western Canada. As you know, last year we had a very good wheat crop until rust reduced the yield and left the wheat thin. Well, some of that wheat is now being weighed out as low as 45 pounds to the bushel, which is below the weight of wheat used for flour. But we were amazed to find that this wheat possesses the highest feed value of any of our feed grains. This can be fairly conclusively proven by making a test with laying hens. You can put some No. 1 big, plump wheat and some of this rusted light wheat on the ground, and the hens will go for the lighter wheat every time and they will lay better after feeding on it. There is something strange about this fact; perhaps the wheat in its lighter form contains extra protein value. Eastern feeders pay quite a high price for bran, which is a safer feed than wheat, and of course light wheat is safer than heavy wheat as a feed grain. When viewing the part of Ontario I journeyed across yesterday morning the thought came to me that the oats ripening in the fields must be of a light quality, and that Eastern farmers will require some of the light feed from Western Canada that I have been talking about. There is a large supply of it. It is quite safe to use for feed, and it will be useful to mix with oats. I would recommend eastern feeders and dairy farmers to buy Western wheat, whenever they are in need of wheat for feed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Will the wheat you speak of cost less money?

Hon. Mr. Horner: Oh, yes, it will cost less money, but it is good wheat. The price quotations show that some of it grades as low as feed. No. 1 wheat to grade should weigh at least 58 pounds per bushel, Nos. 2 and 3 should weigh 56 pounds. Nothing lighter than 50 pounds per bushel can possibly get any higher grade than No. 5. So considering the price of this light wheat, it is good value. Only last winter I learned that a great many farmers in the West are of the opinion that it is valuable wheat for feed. It is necessary to keep this grain quite dry and to prevent it from becoming heated. I am assured, honourable senators, that a lot of it is threshed in good condition; and except for the small kernels there is nothing wrong with it.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: Since the honourable senator has just returned from the Canadian West, can he tell us what the crop prospects are in that part of the country?

Hon. Mr. Horner: Of course, Western Canada has become hot and dry, except in some sections where rain has fallen. Thousands of gallons of water have been poured on the land in the dry sections, but it is still dry and some of the crops have been damaged. Rain has fallen in the south. I took a trip down through Maple Creek, Cyprus Hills, Medicine Hat and Swift Current, and the scenery was lovely and green and the crops good, in spite of the intense heat without rain. Conditions vary greatly. Where the crops are lush and green, one may return within two or three days and see the same fields entirely different in appearance, as though they belonged to another farm. I would hesitate to predict any bumper crop. The late barley has been attacked by aphids, and destruction by those pests has been pretty widespread. I did not have a chance to examine the barley crop closely, but I could see fields which had received considerable damage. I motored across that beautiful country from Calgary through Red Deer, Stettler and Biggar, and saw some very nice stands of grain, but the weather was hot and dry, and just how long those crops will continue to be good is difficult to estimate. One year I estimated the crop to the exact million of bushels, but I am not going to attempt to estimate this year's yield. It is always someone else, rather than the farmer, who drives around the country and comes back with glowing reports, and I do not think that helps the farmer to get a fair price for his grain. I hesitate to predict a bumper crop; it is going to be less than the estimate.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: What is the estimate?

Hon. Mr. Horner: 550 million bushels.

Hon. Mr. Hawkins: Is that the estimate for wheat?

Hon. Mr. Horner: Yes. The estimators can take their pen and cut off 100 million bushels.

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: May I ask the honourable member a question? I take it that the rusted wheat he spoke of is all spring wheat, and that none of it would be winter wheat.

Hon. Mr. Horner: It is all spring wheat. I doubt if rust hits winter wheat at all.

Hon. Mr. Stambaugh: It would be good for feed, but hardly successful for seed in this part of the country?

Hon. Mr. Horner: It is quite possible that it could be used for seed, but I would not recommend it.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, you will notice that under the heading Orders of the Day we have a blank sheet of paper. The only legislation remaining to be dealt with this session is the bill voting money to cover the financial requirements of the Government. That bill can only be presented to us after the Committee of Supply in the House of Commons has dealt with the Estimates, and I do not know just when it will reach the Senate. I have made inquiries and found that today the Committee of Supply has been considering carefully and expeditiously the items before it and that it may possibly conclude its work some time this evening. I therefore think it would be advisable for the Senate to adjourn during pleasure, to reassemble at the call of the bell, at approximately 8.30 p.m. I so move.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 8.30 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, this afternoon we adjourned to this hour to try to reach some conclusion as to when the House of Commons might finish its consideration of the estimates. I have learned that the members of that house have agreed to sit after ten o'clock this evening. It is therefore possible that the Committee of Supply may complete its work late tonight or tomorrow morning. It occurs to me that under the circumstances it might be satisfactory to adjourn now until one o'clock tomorrow afternoon. We could arrange to have our lunch before resuming, and if at that time the supply bill has come to us from the Commons we could consider it immediately, with the possibility of prorogation taking place later in the afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: May I ask the honourable leader if there is any chance of the Commons finishing its business tonight? In that case we could meet at perhaps 10.30 or 11 o'clock tomorrow morning, to do whatever business is before us and have the rest of the day free. There may be some honourable senators who would like to leave Ottawa in the afternoon.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I doubt very much that the Commons will pass the supply bill this evening. I believe the intention is that even if the resolutions are passed and adopted tonight, the bill will not be considered before tomorrow morning. Under those circumstances I would move that we adjourn until tomorrow at 1 p.m.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: Agreed.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 1 p.m.

THE SENATE

Wednesday, July 27, 1955

The Senate met at 1 p.m., Hon. Cairine R. Wilson, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that she had received a communication from the Secretary to the Governor General, acquainting her that the Honourable Patrick Kerwin, Chief Justice of Canada, in his capacity of Administrator of the Government of Canada, would proceed to the Senate Chamber this day at 5 p.m., for the purpose of proroguing the Second Session of the Twenty-Second Parliament.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, when the house adjourned yesterday until this hour, it was hoped that the Appropriation Bill would now be before us for consideration. However, the Committee of Supply in the House of Commons has not yet completed its consideration of certain estimates. I am informed that the estimates of the Prime Minister's office are being considered by the committee at the present time, and that there remain the estimates of the Department of Finance. Just how long it will take to deal with these items, honourable senators can guess as well as I can, but I think there is very little doubt that Parliament can be prorogued today. Therefore, I suggest that the Senate rise at this time, to reassemble at the call of the bell, which would not be before three o'clock.

INTERNAL ECONOMY

EIGHTH REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur Marcotte: Honourable senators, may I be permitted at this point to mention a matter which is of some importance to me?

On July 21 the honourable Chairman of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts (Hon. Mr. Paterson) presented the eighth report of the committee, recommending that the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) and two other honourable senators to be named by him act as a subcommittee to handle matters relating to the internal economy of the Senate during the recess. In this connection I have a request to make and, as I have said, the matter is of some importance to me.

I have been here for a number of years and have been known as a friend of everybody. I do not know what will happen during the recess, but in the event of anything occurring that requires the attention of the subcommittee and you appoint two senators to act with you, Mr. Leader, I would like to be one of them. I am asking you to keep me in mind.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: As I recall the wording of the motion, the Leader of the Government, together with two senators to be named by him from time to time are to act during the recess in all matters which normally would come before the Committee on Internal Economy. The reason why no two senators were named was that matters arise quickly and the committee felt that the Leader should be able to consult with two senators without delay. If from time to time there arises a matter that is not of great urgency I shall be pleased to get in touch with the honourable senator from Ponteix (Hon. Mr. Marcotte). But, when more important matters require prompt action, I think honourable senators will agree that it will be necessary for me to consult with senators who happen to be in Ottawa. However, I shall keep the honourable gentleman in mind.

BRITISH MARKET FOR CANADIAN APPLES

TRADE AND SHIPPING

On the Notice of Inquiry by Hon. Mr. McDonald:

What are the latest developments regarding the possibility of marketing Canadian apples in Britain next fall and winter?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Stand.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, may I ask the Leader of the Government why he suggested that this inquiry stand?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I may say that I have not been able to get the information requested by the honourable senator from King's (Hon. Mr. McDonald). However, if the information has come to me when the house reassembles this afternoon, I shall present it then.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Would I be in order in making a few remarks on the subject-matter of the inquiry at this time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I am not sure that the honourable gentleman would be in order, but with the unanimous consent of the house he could speak to it.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Honourable senators, I should like to say a few words with regard to this inquiry by the honourable senator from King's as to the British market for Canadian apples. Of course the old question still is: What goods do we buy from Britain? That is the crux of the whole problem. If we were to purchase more goods from Britain it would be in a position to buy more of our commodities, because it would have the dollars to purchase them with.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: We are buying motor cars and other articles from Britain.

Hon. Mr. Horner: We are buying a good deal more from the United States, with the result that the balance of trade is upset.

I realize that very little opportunity for debate is left, for prorogation will take place shortly. It sometimes seems to me that in this chamber, which contains so many men of great experience and ability, questions of common interest and matters for the general welfare of the Canadian people are not discussed as fully and as often as they might be. It may be that the public expects more consideration from us of the trend and scope of the enormous changes and advances which are taking place nowadays in this country and in the world at large.

Take, for example, one consequence of the enormous increase in the number of automobiles and the extent of our highways: I mean the rise in the accident rate. In many cases, as I have remarked before, the victims are young people, and too often there is no excuse for these casualties. Our highways as a rule are good enough for motoring at a fair rate of speed. Just recently, while driving north from Calgary to Edmonton, I noticed on the highway signs announcing that the speed was strictly limited to sixty miles an hour, and that the road was radar-controlled. Notwithstanding these warnings, while I was travelling at 60 miles an hour several cars shot by me as though I were standing still. The drivers of one fine new Studebaker and an older car seemed to be anxious to outdo each other; and farther on, while coming down an absolutely straight stretch of road, I saw the older car virtually across the road and the new Studebaker almost hidden in the ditch. Fortunately, no one appeared to have been severely injured, but both cars and, I believe, a third one were badly damaged. There is no justification for inviting accidents by maintaining these excessively high speeds. The road was good and entirely clear. That is the sort of thing which is happening all over the country.

Yesterday, when speaking of "rusted wheat", I did not make my meaning quite clear. It is not the wheat which is rusted, though many people in Eastern Canada may have a misconception on this point. What takes place is that the rust affects the straw by making holes in it so that it is not capable of absorbing moisture to properly fill the kernels; so when the wheat forms, it cannot continue to develop. What I was trying to point out is that a bushel of light wheat may contain kernels which have the wheat germ and are therefore more valuable for feed than heavier grain.

I want to mention something which has pleased me greatly. I do not know whether I should take some credit for it, but Lloyd's of London have extended by five days the time limit for insurance on the Hudson Bay-Churchill route. This will particularly benefit us in Saskatchewan. There is every modern method of forecasting weather in the North now, and if it were possible I should like to see the period of this insurance made more flexible to suit our varying seasons. I think that in this year, as in most years, the time limit could be extended by five weeks instead of five days.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: The rate of insurance on the Churchill route is pretty high, is it not?

Hon. Mr. Horner: I understand that during a certain short period the rate is similar to that applying to other ports, but beyond that period the rate is very high. I hasten to point out that the Hudson Bay-Churchill route is one of the safest in the world, and Churchill has the finest harbour, bar none.

Hon. Mr. Isnor. For how long?

Hon. Mr. Horner: Men sailed into Churchill three or four hundred years ago in wooden ships, and certainly without radar. Vessels sailing on the St. Lawrence River require the services of a pilot for about two days, but those plying the Churchill route need a pilot for only about five minutes. So there are no extra costs involved at Churchill. It is a beautiful, sheltered harbour in a perfect setting. No dredging is required in the river mouth, and there is little doubt that a proper icebreaker could make the harbour navigable during the entire year.

The Government is making a wise move in appointing a Royal Commission to inquire into the whole economy of Canada. I hope the inquiry will accomplish a great deal in answering the question whether this country is going to be turned into a purely industrial nation at the expense of agriculture. It is deplorable that all over Canada farms where large families were raised have been abandoned. This is especially so in Eastern Canada. I understand that the Royal Commission will endeavour, among other things, to establish what is the best economic farm unit. Economics involves the question of trade, which is bound up in the fact that, as pointed out recently by the honourable senator from Toronto-Trinity (Hon. Mr. Roebuck), we endeavour to maintain industry that is not natural to this country. In spite of the drought and other obstacles to growth, with which every agricultural country has to contend, Western Canada still grows the finest grain in the world—there is no doubt of that. Even the United States is anxious to secure the better quality and heavier oats which is grown in our Canadian West.

Honourable senators, I hope the Government will be very careful in its selection of the personnel to be appointed on this Royal Commission. I hope it will not limit appointments to lawyers and judges, but that it will include at least one practical farmer. Recently I read a very interesting article in the Saturday Evening Post about a man who made a huge success in clearing land and planting trees for the purpose of obtaining turpentine. He went to work tapping trees and catching the gum when he was only ten years of age, and he became so good at it that he could tap more trees than any man on his father's plantation. At the age of twenty he decided to study law, and later he became a judge, but that did not prevent him from taking a practical viewpoint of things and being a successful businessman. He insisted on giving his sons a good education, but he also required them to tap trees and work in the woods from ten years of age, in the hope that it would make men of them.

Honourable senators, this country is travelling at a great pace, and I hope it will continue to do so, but I am somewhat concerned about its progress in relation to farming. The part of the country I rode over as a boy is now practically all staked for uranium. A lot of people have traded in uranium stocks, and I trust their hopes will be realized. However, I think it would be safer to invest in a little farm land.

I will now go back to the subject I started with, that is buying from Britain and selling to her in return. For the past eight years there has been a so-called cement shortage, and people who have been in a hurry to build have, without justification, been charged two prices for cement, sometimes paying up to $3 a bag. Anyone going up to Churchill would perhaps see some British ships coming in, and notwithstanding the fact their owners would like to bring over a full cargo—for instance, a cargo of cement, costing about 80 cents a bag—some of the ships come in ballasted with water. That is the sad part of the story. Captains of ships have told me that if they could have a cargo both going and coming they would prefer Churchill to any other port in Canada. Now, why could those ships not bring in cement, which is so badly needed here? Of course, Canadian cement companies announce that they can supply our requirements; but whether they can or not they seem to be doing pretty well—I notice that the Canada Cement Company has been paying a nice dividend. I wish my honourable friend from King's (Hon. Mr. McDonald) would do all he can to encourage imports from Britain of cement and other commodities that are scarce here. I might mention that when I was trying to do some building on my ranch I was told that the shortage of cement in Canada accounted for the high price charged in this country for American cement. I have heard it said that in some cases Canadian cement was put into American cement bags so as to obtain the difference in price of a dollar a sack.

These are matters that we in this chamber should give some thought to. I know that I have been out of order in discussing them at this time, but to my mind they are of vital importance to our economic welfare. I am delighted that the Government is setting up a Royal Commission, the first of its kind, to inquire into the whole Canadian economy. I repeat that I hope the Government will exercise care in the selection of its personnel and make sure that men of the right type are appointed.

Thank you, honourable senators, for your patience.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 5.45 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, earlier today Her Honour the Acting Speaker informed us that His Excellency the Administrator was due to arrive at this Chamber at five o'clock. It was hoped that by that time the Appropriation Bill would have passed the House of Commons and been received in this house. However, the House of Commons has not finished its consideration of certain estimates, and in the circumstances I would suggest that we rise now, to re-assemble at eight o'clock this evening.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 8 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, may I be permitted to revert to routine proceedings, to present an answer to an inquiry?

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

BRITISH MARKET FOR CANADIAN APPLES

INQUIRY AND ANSWER

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Recently, the honourable senator from King's (Hon. Mr. McDonald) inquired of the Government:

What are the latest developments regarding the possibility of marketing Canadian apples in Britain next fall and winter?

I have now received the following answer through the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce:

It is anticipated that a decision will be taken by and advice received from the Government of the United Kingdom at an early date relating to the marketing of Canadian apples in the United Kingdom during the forthcoming season. Officers of the Department of Trade and Commerce in London, England, are maintaining close contact with the British authorities and keeping them currently informed of our position.

This information is probably not as complete as some honourable senators would desire, but nevertheless we know that the Department of Trade and Commerce is doing all that is possible to obtain a market for apples in the United Kingdom.

Hon. John A. McDonald: I wish to thank the honourable leader, and through him the appropriate officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce, for securing this information.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, may I at this time refer to the remarks—the very interesting remarks—made by the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) this afternoon. I did not speak at that time, as I did not have at hand information which I wanted to give to the house. I agree entirely with my honourable friend that it is advisable that members of the Senate who have special knowledge on certain subjects should give to the Senate, and in that way to the country generally, the advantage of this knowledge. The honourable senator from Blaine Lake was not here last Thursday when the honourable senator from Medicine Hat (Hon. Mr. Gershaw) spoke on prepaid health insurance, a subject on which he has special knowledge. It was a very interesting discussion that we had at that time. I notice the honourable senator from Blaine Lake nods his head. No doubt he has read what took place on that occasion. I hope that next session other senators will give us the advantage of special knowledge which they possess.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON CANADIAN ECONOMY

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, earlier today the honourable senator from Blaine Lake (Hon. Mr. Horner) referred to the Royal Commission to inquire into the economic potentialities of our country. I might say that the commission has already been set up.

Hon. Mr. Horner: I did not know that.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: With the consent of the house I should like to place on our records a copy of the Order in Council setting up the commission, listing its powers and generally setting forth the problems which it is to study and report upon. This document could appear in Hansard or in our Minutes of the Proceedings, as the house desires.

Hon. Mr. Turgeon: Put it on Hansard.

For text of Order in Council, see Appendix to today's Hansard, p.825.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I now table the Order in Council, P.C. 1955-909, in English and in French.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: Will the honourable leader tell us who the members of the commission are?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes, I will be be glad to do that. The Chairman of the commission is Walter Lockhart Gordon, of Toronto, Ontario, a chartered accountant; and the other members are: Omer Lussier, of Quebec City, a forestry engineer; Albert Edward Grauer, of Vancouver, British Columbia, President of British Columbia Electric Company Limited; Andrew Stewart, of Edmonton, Alberta, President of the University of Alberta; and Raymond Gushue, President of Memorial University, St. John's, Newfoundland.

I am sure that the report of this commission will be very useful indeed.

Hon. Mr. Roebuck: In general, what is the purpose of the inquiry? What is the commision to study and report on?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: According to the Order in Council, the commissioners are:

To inquire into and report upon the long-term prospects of the Canadian economy, that is to say, upon the probable economic development of Canada and the problems to which such development appears likely to give rise, and without limiting the generality of the foregoing, to study and report upon

(a) developments in the supply of raw materials and energy sources;

(b) the growth to be expected in the population of Canada and the changes in its distribution;

(c) prospects for growth and change in domestic and external markets for Canadian productions;

(d) trends in productivity and standards of living; and

(e) prospective requirements for industrial and social capital.

I think that sets forth generally what the commission is authorized to make inquiries into.

Hon. Mr. Horner: Certainly the problem is an immense one. I am personally acquainted with one of the commissioners—Dr. Stewart, of the University of Alberta. May I seriously suggest to the Government that more commissioners should be appointed to deal with a task of such magnitude? I would recommend the addition of six competent persons, including agriculturists. I suppose the commission will be required to go into the whole question of the future development of this country; for instance, what type of immigrants should we bring in, and in what numbers, to fill our vacant spaces and to assist in the cultivation of our farms?

I thank the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) for the information he has given, and I would press my suggestion that additional persons be appointed to the commission.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: Including some lawyers?

Hon. Mr. Horner: Possibly a lawyer would not do any harm.

Hon. Mr. Connolly: That is quite a concession.

Hon. Mr. Horner: I hope that the commission will include at least one practical farmer, as well as a lawyer to keep the members in line and ensure that their findings are in strict accordance with law. In my opinion the size of the commission as at present constituted is not adequate to so extensive an inquiry.

Hon. J. Adelard Godbout: Honourable senators, the proper number of commissioners is a matter of opinion. Speaking personally, I never knew of a very big commission which did very much work. It must be remembered that the members of this commission will not be working entirely by themselves, but will be consulting with advisers.

As a farmer myself, I think the agricultural industry is well represented on the commission, both as to numbers and quality. Mr. Omer Lussier, of Quebec, an excellent forestry engineer, is also a farmer; and Dr. Stewart, President of the University of Alberta, is also an agriculturist. About three weeks ago I had the pleasure of meeting Dr. Stewart, when he was presiding over a convention that I attended, at Edmonton; and I understand that he is one of the most highly regarded men in the agricultural field in all Canada.

As to numbers, I certainly think that five members are sufficient to carry on the work of a commission of this type.

Hon. Mr. McDonald: May I ask the honourable leader if he knows what itinerary and meetings have been decided upon by the members of the commission

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I have no information with respect to that. I understand the commission has held one meeting, but I do not know how it proposes to proceed with its investigation. No doubt the Press will carry this information when it is disclosed by the commission.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, the Appropriation Bill has not yet reached us, so there is no business for us to attend to at this time. I do not know just when the bill will come over from the House of Commons, but I trust that honourable members will remain in the building, for I have every reason to believe that Parliament will be prorogued today. I therefore suggest we rise now, to reassemble at the call of the bell.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 10.05 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, the Committee of Supply in the House of Commons has not yet completed consideration of the estimates, and therefore the Appropriation Bill is not before this house. Under the circumstances, I move, with unanimous consent, that when the Senate rises this evening it stand adjourned until tomorrow at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until tomorrow at 12 o'clock noon.

APPENDIX

(Referred to by Hon. Mr. Macdonald. p.823)

P.C. 1955-909

Certified to be a true copy of a Minute of a Meeting of the Committee of the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Administrator on the 17th June, 1955.

The Committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report from the Prime Minister stating that it is desirable that the Canadian people should be more fully informed of the long-term economic prospects of Canada, and that it is in the national interest to initiate, examine and publish studies of Canada's economic potentialities, including developments in productive capacity, the growth and distribution of the population, the direction and nature of our internal and external trade, progress in standards of living and expanding requirements for industrial and social capital.

The Committee, therefore, on the recommendation of the Prime Minister, advise that Walter Lockhart Gordon, Toronto, Ont.

Omer Lussier, Quebec, P.Q.
Albert Edward Grauer, Vancouver, B.C.
Andrew Stewart, Edmonton, Alta., and Raymond Gushue, St. John's, Nfld.

be appointed commissioners under Part I of the Inquiries Act (Chapter 154 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952) to inquire into and report upon the long-term prospects of the Canadian economy, that is to say, upon the probable economic development of Canada and the problems to which such development appears likely to give rise, and without limiting the generality of the foregoing, to study and report upon

(a) developments in the supply of raw materials and energy sources;
(b) the growth to be expected in the population of Canada and the changes in its distribution;
(c) prospects for growth and change in domestic and external markets for Canadian productions;
(d) trends in productivity and standards of living; and
(e) prospective requirements for industrial and social capital.

The Committee further advise:

1. That the Commissioners be authorized to exercise all the powers conferred on them by section 11 of the Inquiries Act;
2. That the Commissioners adopt such procedure and methods as they may, from time to time, deem expedient for the proper conduct of the inquiry and sit at such times and in such places in Canada as they may decide;
3. That the Commissioners be authorized to engage the services of such counsel, staff, clerks and technical advisers as they may require at rates of remuneration and reimbursement to be approved by the Treasury Board;
4. That the officers and employees of the departments of the Government of Canada render such assistance to the Commission as may be required for the inquiry;
5. That the Commissioners be directed to report to the Governor in Council; and
6. That Walter Lockhart Gordon be Chairman of the Commission and Douglas V. LePan be Secretary and Director of Research.

R. B. Bryce,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

THE SENATE

Thursday, July 28, 1955

The Senate met at 12 o'clock noon, Hon. Cairine R. Wilson, Acting Speaker, in the Chair.

Prayers.

Routine proceedings.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, as Her Honour the Speaker has not yet received the Appropriation Bill from the House of Commons, there is nothing before the Senate for consideration at this time. I hope the bill will reach us early this afternoon, and accordingly I would suggest that we rise now, to reassemble at the call of the bell.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

At 12.35 p.m. the sitting was resumed.

APPROPRIATION BILL NO. 5

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill 510, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1956.

The bill was read the first time.

SECOND READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the second time?

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald: Honourable senators, I move the second reading now.

Though this is the fifth appropriation bill that we have had before us this session, it is only the fourth one voting moneys for the present fiscal year. Appropriation Bill No. 2 provided funds to cover the supplementary expenditures made during the fiscal year 1954-1955. Appropriation Bills Nos. 1, 3 and 4, based on estimates for the current year, were interim supply bills. The first of these, as honourable senators will recall, provided supply for two months, with a few additions to meet expenditures which are greater in the early part of the year than later on; and the other two each provided interim supply for one month.

Section 2 of the bill provides for expenditures amounting to $2,055,741,938.07. Details of these expenditures will be found in Schedule A, which contains the estimates that were tabled in the House of Commons and, subsequently, here. They are in all respects similar to the estimates originally tabled, with the exception of two items—a reduction of $30,000 in vote No. 331, and of $199,999 in vote No. 544. The first reduction is in a grant to the pulp and paper industry, for research; and the second has to do with the Canadian International Trade Fair.

Section 3, providing for a grant of $147,724,276, is based on supplementary estimates which have been tabled and copies of which all honourable senators have received. The items are set forth in Schedule B.

Section 4 authorizes a vote of $500,000, which is a further supplementary estimate towards defraying the several charges and expenses of the public service, details of which are set forth in Schedule C to the bill. This vote is to provide for assistance to producers of salted fish.

The total expenditure authorized by this bill, covering the three items which I have mentioned, is $2,203,966,214.07. The three previous appropriation bills for the current fiscal year which we passed during this session voted a total of $1,036,498,806.93, so the grand total of appropriations for the year is $3,240,465,021.00.

Section 5 of the bill enables the Governor in Council to raise money by loan to the extent of $500 million during the present fiscal year.

Honourable senators, with the brief time at my disposal I feel I have given as satisfactory an explanation as I can of just what this bill contains. I suppose that if we had time it would be desirable to go through all the items, but I would remind the house that during the session we referred the estimates to our Standing Committee on Finance, which was chaired by the honourable senator from Churchill (Hon. Mr. Crerar). He and his committee examined the estimates very carefully and brought in a report to this house, which became the subject of debate. At that time I commended the chairman and the members of the Finance Committee for the splendid work which they had done. I am sure all honourable members studied the estimates and read the report before it was concurred in; so in considering this bill we are not dealing with something which is entirely new.

The bill authorizes quite a large expenditure, but I feel confident that the revenue will be forthcoming. The economy of the country is buoyant. Honourable members will recall that when the budget was brought down there was considerable unemployment and uncertainty as to what the future held in store for us. The Minister of Finance, however, was quite confident we would weather the temporary storm, and he assured us conditions would improve throughout the country. His forecast was very accurate. I doubt whether employment in Canada has ever been at a higher level, and the future is indeed bright. I feel we can pass this bill giving the Government the power to expend the money, knowing that our economy will remain on a high level. I also feel sure that the money will be wisely spent by a provident Government whose only interest is the welfare of all the people of Canada. I therefore move the second reading of this bill.

Hon. R. B. Horner: Honourable senators, I do not propose to say very much on this occasion. I admire the optimism of the honourable Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), but at the same time I cannot entirely share his belief that all the money spent by this Government will be wisely spent, having regard to some of the transactions that have taken place so far. However, far be it from me to sound a discouraging note. I hope that the economy of the country will warrant the expenditure of this huge sum of money and that we shall be able to make the payments. May I remind honourable senators, however, that this time of year is the season of full employment, although I notice that some of the automobile manufacturing companies have been laying off a considerable number of employees. I have expressed before my anxiety with regard to the pace at which the national housing scheme has progressed, and I think a similar anxiety is warranted with regard to the manufacture of automobiles. We should concern ourselves with the question of whether there is a saturation point. Unless there is a great flow of new people to this country, I wonder if the expansion can be continued and how secure will be the ownership of all these houses that have been built under the National Housing Act with the help of loans guaranteed by the Government. That will depend primarily on continuous employment of the people who are paying for the houses.

I fear that the farming communities will be faced with the prospect of reduced income next year. Countries which formerly purchased grain from Canada are trying to solve currency and other problems by becoming as self-sufficient as possible, and if they are able to produce more grain for themselves the Canadian economy will inevitably be affected.

Honourable senators, I think we should also be concerned about the inflationary tendencies in this country. Some thirty years ago the value of the dollar was much higher than it is today, and many people would have made better provision for their old age if they had invested in bank shares instead of life insurance.

With regard to Government expenditures, I now express the hope that at the beginning of next session the Leader of the Government will move that the Standing Committee on Finance be authorized to examine the expenditures proposed by the estimates, so that the committee will continue to perform its useful function as in the past, for it is impossible to make a thorough inquiry into the estimates during the last days of the session. I hesitate to refer to the necessity for the committee to study Government expenditures in great detail because I am mindful, for instance, that a big sum of money was expended upon the construction of a large ferry to operate from Sydney, Cape Breton, to Part aux Basques, Newfoundland, and when the ferry was completed it was discovered that there was no room for it to dock at Port aux Basques.

Honourable senators, I do not think I can serve any useful purpose by making further remarks at this time.

Hon. Norman P. Lambert: Honourable senators, at this very late hour in the life of the session one hesitates to say even a few words in relation to the supply bill. However, certain references have been made by my honourable friend the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) to the work of the Standing Committee on Finance to which I feel in duty bound to make some allusion even at this time.

The supply bill represents practically half of the budget for the current year; it includes many very substantial amounts involving expenditures which have been the subject of some discussion in the other place. But to say, or to imply, that these and other items of the estimates have been thoroughly examined by our Finance Committee is to take a little too optimistic a view of the committee's work.

My honourable friend the leader knows very well the circumstances under which the Finance Committee performed its functions this year. As its report very eloquently shows, it attempted to consider only three examples of spending, and expressed the hope that it would be possible for the public, through its moral influence, to do much in turning the trend away from excessive spending and toward economy. But far from having any opportunity or disposition to examine closely into the estimates that were published, it was expressly stated by the chairman and members, both when the committee started and in its report, that it had no intention of making such a general examination. Even if it had done so it would have been to no purpose in reducing the estimates, because they had already been determined and published as the financial policy of the Government for the current year.

I do not intend to try to take the place of the honourable Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Haig) in making his yearly complaint that these important matters are left until the last hours of the session and thrust in front of us when we have not an adequate opportunity to consider them. I think we all understand the situation and the reason for it. But as a sort of vague hope for the future I should like to say that it might be a good thing to consider the possibility of giving more adequate opportunity to members of Parliament to pass on estimates before they become part of the budget. I have thought of this problem for a long time, and if I may say so I think our system in this respect is defective. Without any apology I would draw attention to the practice that has been established in the neighbouring republic to the south in relation to its budgetary matters.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: Do you think the system prevailing there, in the United States, is satisfactory?

Hon. Mr. Lambert: The system prevailing there of appointing a standing committee on finance in both the Senate and the House of Representatives, to examine into the proposed budget submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury, to summon officials, so as to get their approval or disapproval of items, and finally to report back to the Treasury is, I think, a system which allows the representatives of the people a better opportunity to consider the country's financing than is given under our system.

I am not criticizing the extent of this budget. I know that many items are included in it as a result of demands, and a good many of them have public approval.

Reference has been made to the extent of the examination into the estimates by our Standing Committee on Finance. I believe that if that committee, acting with a similarly constituted committee of the House of Commons, were to work in closer co-operation with the Department of Finance in relation to the budget and the estimates of the year, it could do more satisfactory work than it now does. If such committees had an opportunity of closely examining into the various items of expenditures, took the time necessary to do it thoroughly, and were not crowded out of the picture by some more extemporaneously appointed committees, the results would be more favourable. Certainly that system would at least give us an adequate opportunity of considering the finances of the country before the proposed expenditures came before us in their final form. I think also that the objectives so often expressed in connection with the function of our Finance Committee would be more accurately carried out in encouraging economy and in creating more popular feeling about curtailing expenditures.

Now, honourable senators, I make these references to the Finance Committee because I do not think the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) intended to convey the impression that the committee conducted an exhaustive inquiry into all the items in the estimates. I do think, though, that it would be a step forward if in the future our system of examination could be adapted so as to make it possible, with the leadership of the Department of Finance, to examine into the estimates more closely.

Hon. A. K. Hugessen: Honourable senators, perhaps as an example of what the honourable senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert) has just said, there is one item in the estimates which interests me a good deal and I am sure interests every member of this house, an item which the Finance Committee did not have an opportunity to consider and which this house has not so far had any occasion to deal with. I refer to the estimates for the Federal District Commission of Ottawa, item No. 340.

I read with a good deal of interest the statement made by the Prime Minister in the other place yesterday when he introduced the estimates of the Federal District Commission. He referred to the general plan for the development of Ottawa as a national capital, and the attempts that are being made to preserve around the city a green belt which will ensure that the city and its environs will always be a credit to our country. The part of the Prime Minister's statement which particularly interested me had relation to the problem of railway traffic in and around the city, and I noticed that he tabled in the Commons a document entitled "Traffic and Transportation Plan for Ottawa, Canada", prepared by Wilbur Smith and Associates. Also he stated that at the next session of Parliament a joint committee of the two houses will be established, as I understand it, to make a general inquiry into the basic plans for the development of Ottawa and its environs. I wonder whether the honourable Leader of the Government would consider tabling that document here, so that we might have an opportunity to examine it.

As I said, I was particularly interested in the Prime Minister's remarks on the problem of railway traffic in and around Ottawa. Honourable senators will recall that the original Greber plan, produced a number of years ago, envisaged a number of admirable proposals and suggestions, but it included one recommendation with which I have always found myself totally unable to agree, and that was that the railway station, now situated in the middle of the city, should be removed to some place on the other side of the Rideau River, two or three miles away. I gathered from the remarks of the Prime Minister in the other place that that part of the Greber project, at least, is not to be proceeded with at the present time, and I shall be very glad to hear that it has been abandoned. It is proposed, however, as the Prime Minister said, to remove as much as possible of the freight trackage from the centre of the city to the southeastern boundary; and with that change, I think, all of us will be in agreement. But for the life of me I have never been able to see whose advantage would be served, unless it be that of the taxi drivers of Ottawa, by removing the passenger station two or three miles out of the centre of the city. I know of no capital in the world which has its railway passenger station or stations remote from the centre of the city. For example, take Washington, or London, or Paris. There are very good reasons why that is so. Honourable senators who travel to and from Ottawa can readily appreciate that it is an enormous convenience, not only for legislators but for business men who have to visit the capital, that the station at which they arrive shall be close to the government offices. That is the situation which exists here. It is true that for a time there was a good deal of complaint about smoke from trains in the middle of the city, but that condition is in process of being rapidly extinguished through the substitution of diesel engines for steam engines.

The principal object for which I rose was to say that I am delighted to find—assuming it is a fact—that the original proposal to remove the passenger station from its present location has been abandoned, at least for the time being, and I trust that it will be abandoned permanently.

Hon. Gordon B. Isnor: Honourable senators, I rise for the purpose of offering, very briefly, a different view from that expressed by the honourable senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert) as to the system of preparing the budget estimates. For the past twenty-five years or more I have followed the American system very closely, and I am at a loss to understand why the honourable senator from Ottawa, with his long experience, should advocate a change from what, I feel, is regarded by Canadians as a whole, and by the whole of North America, as a system very much superior to that of our neighbours to the south.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Would my honourable friend indicate his authority for saying that everybody in North America regards our system as superior?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I did not say that. I said the great majority, the people as a whole.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I would like some authority for that other than his own.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I can refer to as good authority as my honourable friend relies on when he expresses an opinion. Honourable senators will no doubt recall that during World War II the United States sent a team of experts to study our financial system, particularly in relation to wartime expenditures. They examined into our system down through the years, and I think it is generally accepted that there has been little if any criticism of it by American financial authorities.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: May I interrupt my honourable friend again? Would he agree that that delegation from the United States studied our monetary policy rather than the machinery of Parliament as related to finance?

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I think perhaps the honourable senator is right in that; but, after all, the effect of our monetary system upon our general expenditures involves the basic principle. That is why I feel that our system—

Hon. Mr. Lambert: I do not want to persist in interrupting my honourable friend, but I should like to clarify a point he is bringing up. I remember quite well the visit of the American financial experts, for I met some of them in conjunction with the late Deputy Minister of Finance, Dr. Clark. The whole purpose of their visit here was to examine into the existing situation in Canada that made it possible for this country to pay a larger measure of the current expenses of the war as it went along than the United States was able to do.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: That is quite right. I did not raise that point at all. My honourable friend is only enlarging the thought I was expressing. I did not think time permitted to go into details. If the policy advocated by the honourable member from Ottawa were put into effect here, and a committee were set up to handle our budget items, we would have the same experience as they have in the United States: large pressure groups would come into existence and certain demands would be made, and many matters would become public—and this is very important—that are now kept secret until the budget is brought down.

I sincerely hope that we shall continue under our present system as long as we have such experienced advisers as we now have in the Department of Finance. The honourable senator from Ottawa referred to the late Dr. Clark. We are all familiar with the splendid reputation he had and the high esteem in which he was held throughout this country. His advice was widely sought, and not in Canada alone. I think we are equally fortunate in our present advisers.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Isnor: I sincerely trust that the Leader of the Government (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) will not be carried away by the appeal made by the honourable gentleman from Ottawa and suggest to the Government that a change be made in our system.

Just a word now in regard to the report of our Finance Committee. I do not think it was ever intended that the committee should deal with each and every item of the estimates; the purpose was that it should scrutinize the financial accounts of the various departments and then make its report. Of course, the committee called experts as witnesses to explain various items of expenditure. On the whole, the report was well received and covered the ground as well as it could be covered in the time the committee had at its disposal. I believe, however, that the committee could go further and that its recommendations could be broader and more helpful in future sessions.

I was interested in the reference by the Acting Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Horner) to the expenditure on the ferry between Cape Breton and Newfoundland. We all have our own ideas with regard to certain expenditures. I wish to say, in the most friendly way, that I wonder if the money spent on elevators at Churchill was wisely spent. Maybe it was wasted, because of the little use to which the elevators have been put. I am not going to discuss that, however. I wish to say that on the whole the financial items in the budget were, in my opinion, very well prepared.

I should like to inquire of the Leader of the Government if the $500 million which the bill authorizes to be raised by way of loan is included in the gross total he mentioned, or whether that is another amount to take care of maturing loans? Perhaps he would be good enough to answer that question?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The honourable senator refers to the loan of $500 million authorized by section 5 of the bill. That sum would be in addition to the appropriation; that is an amount which the Government is empowered to borrow in the fiscal year if the money is required for public works and general purposes.

Honourable senators, if no one else wishes to speak, I will now close the debate.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, if the honourable leader speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I have just a few words to say at this time. I was glad to hear the Acting Leader of the Opposition (Hon. Mr. Horner) speak; his remarks were restrained. Of course, he did not express the complete confidence in the Government which I did. Nevertheless, I think he can be fairly well assured that the money voted in the estimates will be reasonably and wisely spent. The other evening he spoke of crop conditions in the West, and although he did not make a bold statement as to the possibility of a bumper crop, he did not say that a very poor crop was expected. My information is that this is an uncertain period in which to make a forecast, and that the size of the crop will depend to a large extent on the weather during the next two or three weeks. Let us all hope that Western Canada will be blessed with good weather during that time.

The honourable senator from Ottawa (Hon. Mr. Lambert) referred to my remarks in connection with the study of the estimates by the Finance Committee. I hope I did not give the impression that the committee had examined all the items in detail. If I loosely said so, I am sure that no one took my remarks in this respect at their face value. Honourable senators know that the committee does not have time to make a minute examination of the expenditures, such as is done in the House of Commons. To be very frank, I do not think it would be practical for the Senate to do so. I have heard suggested many plans by which this house could give more consideration to the estimates, but I think the way we handled them this year is about as good as any. The reference of the estimates to the Finance Committee commenced with these words.

That the Standing Committee on Finance be authorized to examine the expenditures

It was full authority to examine the expenditures.

proposed by the estimates laid before Parliament for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1956,

And the following words are important.

in advance of the bills

One of which is the bill now before us.

based on the said estimates reaching the Senate; . . .

Hon. Mr. Lambert: Will my honourable friend give me the date on which that reference first appears in our records?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: March 16.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: The house commenced to sit early in January, I think.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Yes. I do not know what is the point.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: It is a matter of time. My friend says the reference was not made until March 16.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: But I am not sure when the estimates were tabled.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: My point is that the estimates were not referred to the committee until March 16, and the committee did not commence its work until some time after that date.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: That is certainly true; it could not sit before it was empowered to do so, and it could not consider the estimates until they were brought down. Just when that was, I am not sure.

Hon. Mr. Lambert: The estimates appear on our desks at the opening of the session, and this committee was discouraged from attempting to look into them until we were well into the session.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: The members of the Senate know whether they discouraged the committee from examining the estimates. In any event, I did not do so. The fact is that I made the motion by which the estimates were referred to the committee. Also, I would remind honourable senators that the estimates are not tabled on the first day on which Parliament meets. However, I do not want to get into a controversy with my friend from Ottawa, because there is nothing between us. I repeat, if I said the committee examined minutely into all the details of the estimates, I am frank to admit that I did not mean that.

I should like to take this opportunity of again congratulating the members of the Finance Committee on the work they did in their examination of the estimates.

The honourable senator from Inkerman (Hon. Mr. Hugessen) referred to a document which was tabled yesterday in the other house by the Prime Minister with reference to a traffic and transportation plan for Ottawa. I have not the document before me at the moment, but I feel reasonably sure I can get it. Would it meet with the approval of the house if, upon my receiving it, I placed it with the officials who receive documents that are tabled? I do not know whether the honourable senator would like the document to be printed in Hansard or the Minutes of the Proceedings.

Hon. Mr. Hugessen: No.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I shall endeavour to obtain the document, and if I do I shall deliver it to the officials who receive such documents.

Hon. Senators: Agreed.

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: With leave of the Senate, it is ordered that the document entitled "Traffic and Transportation Plan for Ottawa, Canada", prepared by Wilbur Smith and Associates for the City of Ottawa, be obtained and, when received, placed with the Officers of the Senate who receive documents that are tabled.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the second time.

THIRD READING

The Hon. the Acting Speaker: Honourable senators, when shall this bill be read the third time?

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: I move the third reading now.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read the third time, and passed.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

NOTICE

The Hon. the Acting Speaker informed the Senate that she had received a communication from the Secretary to the Governor General acquainting her that the Honourable Patrick Kerwin, Chief Justice of Canada, in his capacity of Administrator of the Government of Canada, would proceed to the Senate Chamber this day at 12.45 p.m. for the purpose of proroguing the Second Session of the Twenty-Second Parliament.

Hon. Mr. Macdonald: Honourable senators, I understand that His Excellency the Administrator has arrived and that prorogation can take place almost immediately.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Macdonald, the Senate adjourned during pleasure.

THE ROYAL ASSENT—SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

His Excellency the Administrator having come and being seated upon the Throne, and the House of Commons having been summoned and being come with their Speaker, His Excellency was pleased to give the Royal Assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Radio Act.
An Act to amend the Prairie Farm Assistance Act.
An Act to amend the Income Tax Act.
An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act.
An Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Railway Act and the Tariff Board Act in respect of salaries of certain public officials.
An Act to amend the Transport Act.
An Act to amend the Customs Tariff.
An Act to amend the Defence Production Act.
An Act to amend the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act.
An Act for the relief of Donald John McGillivray.
An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1956.

After which His Excellency the Administrator was pleased to close the Second Session of the Twenty-Second Parliament with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

Since we first met earlier this year there has been considerable evidence that the policies of the free nations to combine their strength in order to deter any threat from a potential aggressor have been successful. My ministers believe that the more encouraging signs of international harmony are proof of the wisdom of the measures thus taken in co-operation with other democracies. While continuing to support the United Nations and to use all available diplomatic channels for the easing of international tensions, they remain convinced of the necessity of continuing to improve the combined defence power of the North Atlantic Alliance. Towards the fulfilment of this aim you have approved the Paris agreements which ended the occupation of Western Germany and which enabled the German Federal Republic to join the defensive alliance of the West.

During the session several of my ministers met with representatives of the ten provincial Governments to make arrangements for a federal-provincial conference which will take place this autumn.

Meetings between the federal and provincial representatives were held in June for the purpose of determining a plan to share the costs of assistance to unemployed persons in need. The suggestions put forward at these meetings are now being studied by the provincial Governments and the acceptances of three of them have already been received.

In the early months of the session the employment situation gave some concern but more recently the requests for labour have greatly increased and the expanding production, rising exports and prospects of bountiful crops indicate a continuing healthy state of the Canadian economy.

Because the economic well-being of the nation depends to such an extent on a high level of foreign trade, the Government has pursued policies aimed at securing the most favourable export markets for the products of our labour and our land. At the international review of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade which took place last fall and winter, Canadian delegates were active in supporting a policy of removing trade restrictions and negotiating improved tariff arrangements.

A substantial revision of the Unemployment Insurance Act has been made in the light of past experience with this legislation. The coverage of the act has been broadened, the periods of entitlement to benefits revised and the amount of both regular and supplementary benefits augmented.

To maintain the high standards of welfare measures in this country you have made amendments to the Blind Persons Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Veterans Benefit Act.

Legislation has been enacted to provide for the inspection of meat and the establishment of standards for other agricultural products.

The amendments made to the Municipal Grants Act increase substantially the amounts to be paid by the Government annually to the municipalities for their services to public buildings.

The various enactments relating to the Canadian National Railways have been consolidated in one statute.

You have passed a measure amending the National Parks Act and making provision for the establishment of a national park in the province of Newfoundland.

Other measures you enacted include: the International River Improvement Act, the Foreign Aircraft Third Party Damage Act, the Canadian Forces Act, 1955, the Great Lakes Fisheries Convention Act and the Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas Act.

Amendments have been made to the Criminal Code, the Canada Grain Act, the Railway Act, the Radio Act, the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, the Defence Production Act, the Judges Act, the Canada Elections Act, the Transport Act, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act.

A Royal Commission has been set up to inquire into and report upon the prospects for Canada's economic future.

A committee has been appointed to advise upon a uniform system of establishing manufacturers' prices for the application of the sales tax.

Members of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the provision you have made for all the essential services for the current fiscal year.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

In taking leave of you at this time I pray that the blessing of Divine Providence may attend you.

50437—53

INDEX TO DEBATES OF THE SENATE

SECOND SESSION, TWENTY-SECOND PARLIAMENT, 1955

Abbreviations:—1r, 2r, 3r,=First, second and third reading. Amdts=Amendments. Com=Committee. Div=Division. M=Motion. Ref.=Referred. Rep=Report. r.a.=Royal Assent.

Acadians, 200th anniversary of expulsion, 479, 500

Address in reply to Speech from the Throne at opening of session
- Motion for, 12; adopted, 201
- Speakers: Hon. Senators Aseltine, 187; Baird, 184; Barbour, 158; Connolly, 168; Duffus, 48; Euler, 176; Fergusson, 146; Gershaw, 58; Haig, 30; Hodges, 12; Horner, 115; Howard, 194; Macdonald, 43; McDonald, 65; McKeen, 160; McIntyre, 141; Pratt, 179; Reid, 134; Ross, 123; Tremblay, 18; Vaillancourt, 154
- Message of thanks from Governor General, 231
- See Speech from the Throne

Adenauer, Dr. Konrad, Chancellor of Western Germany—leadership of, 91, 92, 102

Administrator of the Government, Hon. Patrick Kerwin, Chief Justice
- Prorogation of Parliament, 820, 831-2
- Royal Assent, 719, 732, 832
- Deputy of Administrator, Hon. Mr. Justice J. W. Estey
- Royal Assent, 783-4
- See Governor General

Aging of population. See Older Citizens

Agriculture
- Apple industry in Nova Scotia—losses due to Hurricane "Edna", 65, 66
- Marketing of 1955 crop in Britain, 815
- Beef and butter subsidies—supplementary estimates, 376
- Butter surplus, reduced price to hospitals, etc., 120
- Subsidy on, 376, 380, 389
- Cost of living and agricultural prices, 158
- Export trade, 590, 596-7-8
- Farm income, 156; statistics, 157
- Income tax, amount paid by farmers in various provinces, 188
- Farm loans, 180
- Government guarantee to banks, 180, 186

Agriculture—Con.
- Fertilizer, 815-17
- Grain shipments and freight rates, inquiry, 179, 271, 307; answer, 308
- Meat smuggling, 595
- National standards for agricultural products, 589-92, 596-9, 611
- New Brunswick Potato Marketing Board, inquiries and answers, 470, 589
- Prairie Farm Assistance bill, 569. 622, 653, 733
- Red Fife Wheat—proposal to commemorate discovery of, 48-53
- Quality of, 121-2
- Subsidies on feed grains, inquiry, 115; answer, 209
- Sugar beet industry, 623-4
- Western farming, 735
- See Canada Agricultural Products Standards bill; Canada Grain bill; Food and Agricultural Organization; Meat Inspection bill; Wheat

Alberta
- Boundary between British Columbia confirmed, 511
- Health insurance, 812
- Rural municipal hospitalization, 814, 817
- See Prairie Provinces

Alberta-British Columbia Boundary bill, 1r, 436; 2r, 511; 3r, 515; r. a., 732

Alcohol
- Alcoholics Anonymous and Narcotics Anonymous, 693-4, 731
- Liquor, adulteration of, 122-3; increase in sale of, 243

Aluminum Company of Canada (Alcan), 13
- Development at Kitimat, 14

Appeasement, 183-4

Appropriation bills
- No. 1. 1r, 361; M for 2r postponed, 372; 2-3r, 390; r. a., 398

50437—53½

Appropriation Bills—Con.
No. 2. lr, 372; 2r, 373-390, 3r, 390; r.a., 398
No. 3. 1-2r, 547; 3r, 548; r. a., 550
No. 4. 1-2-3r, 704; r. a., 733
No. 5. 1-2r, 826; 3r, 831; r. a., 832

Armistice Commissions, 2

Aseltine, Hon. W. M. (Deputy Leader of the Opposition)
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 187-193
Appropriation Bill No. 2, 386
Bread, origin of, in Egypt, 190
British North America Acts Amendment bill, 477
Canadian Forces bill, 604-5
Common-law wife—adultery, 604-5
War marriages and divorce in England, 604
Criminal Code bill—effective date of revised Criminal Code, 254
Customs bill, 572, 579
Customs Tariff bill, 793, 795-6-7
Defence Production bill, 783
Divorce bills, 270, 373
Committee reports, 269, 373
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 179, 210-20, 260-2, 265-6, 326-7, 329, 344-52
Australia, grounds for divorce in, 215, 348-9
Avoidance of marriage, 215, 351-2
Bill of 1938, 211-12, 344
British Columbia, Divorce Reform League of, 218, 345
Canadian Bar Association resolution, 218, 345
Canadian Legion resolution, 345
Childless marriages, 348
Dissolution of marriage—presumption of death, 215, 219-20, 350-1
English law, 211, 213, 216, 345, 349
Gallup Poll, 219, 345-6
Grounds, proposed for divorce, 213-17, 342, 348, 350-1
Historical background, 210
Letters from citizens, 218, 348
Newspaper article—Question of privilege, 361
New Zealand, grounds for divorce in, 215, 217
Press, quotations from the, 345-7
Quebec and Newfoundland, bill would not apply to, 212-13
Religious denominations of petitioners before Divorce Committee, 349
Statistics, 343, 348-50
Emergency Gold Mining Assistance bill, 412-13
Employment, Canadian statistics, 187

Aseltine Hon. W. M.—Con.
Foreign Aircraft Third Party Damage bill, 273, 276-7-8
Insurance, 275
Income tax
Appeal Board—important work of, 786-7
Farmers—amounts paid in various provinces, 188
Arm's-length clauses, 189
King, the Hon. James H., the late—tribute to his memory, 803
Macdonald Brier Canadian Curling Championship at Regina, 187
Meat Inspection bill, 588
Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances bill, 358
National Parks bill, 585
Newfoundland National Park, 585, 613
Waterton Lakes National Park, 586, 612-13
Prisons and Reformatories bill, 481
Saskatchewan, Golden Jubilee of province, 187
Succession Duty Act, 189
Trans-Prairie Pipelines Ltd. bill, 431
Unemployment Insurance bill (No. 328), 658
War Veterans Allowance bill, 392, 394-7
Wheat, 189-93
Different types of—Red Fife, Marquis, Thatcher and Selkirk, 190-1
Early crop reports harm grain trade, 192
Importance of to Canadian economy, 189-90
Italy, harvesting method in, 190
Markets—British, Japanese and Oriental, 193
Palliser Triangle, 190
Prices, 192-3, 797
Quota system, 191-2
Rust, 191-2
Storage, quantity in, 192-3
Story of wheat is story of civilization, 189
Wilson, Hon. Cairine R., congratulations on 25th anniversary as member of Senate, 255
Yukon bill—suggested amalgamation of Yukon and Northwest Territories with four western provinces, 422

Atlantic Union Committee Award to Hon. Mr. Robertson (Speaker), 65

Atomic bomb
Preventive of war, 95
Unsuccessful attempts at international control of, 89

Atomic energy
Atomic-powered submarine, 115
Atomic power in Canada, 725
Canada's program, 175
Development for peaceful purposes, 48
Industrialization of Asia, 770

Atomic war, 177-8

Auditor General—increase in salary, 352-3

Australia
Compulsory voting legislation—increased exercise of franchise, 69
Divorce, grounds for, in, 215, 348-9

Automobiles
Excise tax reduced on automobiles, tires and tubes, 782
See Highway accidents and traffic

Aviation
Canadian Pacific Air Lines—polar route, 134
Foreign Aircraft Third Party Damage bill, 4, 271-8
Gander airport, 614
International Civil Aviation Organization, 3

Aylesworth, Sir Allen, the late, on Senate accomplishments and outlook, 508

Baird, Hon. A. B.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 184
Appeasement, 184
Canada's defence program, 184
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 280-1
Changing conditions, 281
"Divorce evidence", 281
Formosa, President Eisenhower's policy in regard to, 184
National Parks bill, 584-7
Approved by Alberta, 585
Broder Island withdrawn from St. Lawrence Islands National Park, 585
Hospital services within parks, 585
Newfoundland National Park, to be established, 584, 586
Water, use of in parks, 585
Waterton Lakes National Park, exchange of land with Blood Band of Indians, 584-5

Banking and Commerce Committee
Appointment, 12; quorum, 57; reports, 75, 209, 257, 307, 337, 369, 403, 459-60, 483, 526, 555, 580, 583, 594, 611, 624, 657, 734, 767, 791
Addition to membership, 338

Banks, Canadian
Lenders under Fisheries Improvement Loans bill, 750-1, 763-4
Newfoundland branches, 180, 764
Origin of many banks in Maritimes, 751

Barbour, Hon. George H.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 158-60
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 242-3, 291
Desertion, suggested amendment to Criminal Code, 243
Divorce statistics, 242
Liquor, excessive use of, cause of broken homes, 242-3
Question of privilege, 310
Highway accidents, 159-60
Prince Edward Island
Charlottetown Centennial, 160
Ferry service, 159
Longevity and employment in, 160
Transportation problems, 159
St. Laurent, Right Hon. Mr. (Prime Minister), given Freedom of City of London, 159
Unemployment—bank deposits, 159

Baudette and Rainy River Municipal Bridge Company bill (Hon. Mr. Paterson). 1r, 555; 2r, 565; ref to com, 568; rep of com-3r, 583; r.a., 733

Beaubien, Hon. A. L. (Chief Government Whip)
Acting Speaker, 105, 203, 246, 657, 672, 704, 719, 734, 746, 753, 767, 776, 783, 785, 791, 802, 808, 809
Divorce bills from Commons, 767
Royal Assent, notice of, 719, 783
Committees
Appointment, 42; report of Committee of Selection concurred in, 42
Banking and Commerce—addition to membership, 338
Transport and Communications, addition to membership, 338
Criminal Code, Joint committee on certain questions of criminal law—change in Senate membership, 232
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 219, 292-3
Finance Committee, addition to membership, 320
International Trade—report of committee, 807
Joint Committees on Library, Printing and Restaurant—Messages to Commons, 42-3

Beaubien, Hon. A. L.—Con.
Narcotic Drug Traffic Committee
Additions to membership, 319
Manitoba representation on, 226
Senate, adjournment, 398
Tourist Traffic Committee—addition to membership, 232; change in membership, 282
War Veterans Allowance bill, 393
Winnipeg and St. Boniface Harbour Commissioners bill, 239, 241

Beauregard, Hon. Elie, P. C., the late—tributes to his memory, 4-10

Bell, Marilyn
Attacked by lamprey on Lake Ontario swim, 562

Bennett, Right Hon. Viscount, the late
Appointment of judge in Manitoba, 713
Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act sponsored by, 622
Public demand for greater expenditures—quoted on, 668, 670
Royal commission on grain trade (1931), 363

Berkinshaw, R. C., President, Canadian Council, International Chamber of Commerce, 768

Bills (Divorce). See Divorce bills pp. 888 to 895

Bills (Private)
Baudette and Rainy River Municipal Bridge Company (Hon. Mr. Paterson). 1r, 555; 2r, 565; ref to com, 568; rep to com-3r, 583; r.a., 733
Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company (Hon. Mr. Bouffard), 1r, 203; 2r-ref to com, 221; rep of com-amdts concurred in, 237; further admts concurred in, 237; 3r, 241; Commons admts concurred in, 361; r.a., 398
Caledonian-Canadian Insurance Company (Hon. Mr. Farris). 1r, 209; 2r-ref to com, 233; rep of com-3r, 257; r.a., 426
Canadian Premier Life Insurance Company (Dominion General Life Insurance Company)—(Hon. Mr. Hayden). 1r, 540; 2r-ref to com, 554; rep of com-amdts concurred in-3r, 583; Commons amdts concurred in, 753; r.a., 784
Canadian Union Conference Corporation of Seventh-day Adventists (Hon. Mr. Roebuck). 1r, 415; 2r, 442; ref to com, 444; rep of com, 484; com amdt concurred in-3r. 503; r.a., 733

Bills (Private)—Con.
Commercial Travellers' Association of Canada (Hon. Mr. Hayden). 1r, 405; 2r, 429; ref to com, 430; rep of com-3r, 459; r.a., 732
Consolidated Pipe Lines Company (Hon. Mr. Hayden). 1r, 515; 2r, 548; ref to com, 549; rep of com-3r, 555; r.a., 733
Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company (Hon. Mr. Campbell). 1r, 415; 2r, 440; ref to com, 441; rep of com-3r, 483; r.a., 733
Equitable Fire Insurance Company of Canada (Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt). 1r, 415; 2r-ref to com, 432; rep of com-3r, 460; r.a., 733
Fredericton & Grand Lake Coal & Railway Company (Hon. Mr. Veniot). 1r, 320; 2r, 353; ref to com, 354; rep of com, 369, 372; 3r, 373; r.a., 426
Gerling General Insurance Company of Canada (Hon. Mr. Connolly). 1r, 64; 2r-ref to com, 109
Gillespie Mortgage Corporation (Hon. Mrs. Hodges). 1r, 427; 2r, 457; ref to com, 458; rep of com, 483; com amdt concurred in-3r, 503; r.a., 733
Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation (Hon. Mr. Euler). 1r, 27; 2r, 53; ref to com, 54; rep of com-3r, 75; r.a., 360
London and Port Stanley Railway Company (Hon. Mr. Taylor). 1r, 204; 2r, 226; ref to com, 227; rep of com-amdt concurred in, 237; 3r, 238; r.a., 398
Petroleum Transmission Company (Hon. Mr. Lambert). 1r, 399; 2r, 428; ref to com, 429; rep of com-3r, 459; r.a., 732
Plains Eastern Pipe Lines Ltd.—refund of fees, 238
Provident Assurance Company (Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt). 1r, 569; 2r, 581; ref to com, 582; rep of com-3r, 594; r.a., 784
Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Pembroke (Hon. Mr. Bishop). 1r, 167; 2r, 184; ref to com, 185; rep of com-3r, 209; r.a., 360; refund of fees, 406
Royal Architectural Institute of Canada (Hon. Mr. Farris). 1r, 209; 2r, 233; ref to com, 234; rep of com-3r, 257; r.a., 426
S & M Pipeline Limited (Hon. Mr. Stambaugh). 1r, 391; 2r, 423; ref to com, 424; rep of com-3r, 460; Commons amdt, 551; concurred in, 559; r.a., 732
St. Mary's River Bridge Company (Hon. Mr. Farquhar). 1r, 238; 2r, 253; ref to com, 254; rep of com, 307; com amdts concurred in-3r, 336; r.a., 426

Bills (Private)—Con.

Sharp & Dohme (Canada) Ltd. (Hon. Mr. Connolly). 1r, 355; 2r, 366; ref to com, 368; rep of com-com amdts concurred in-3r, 403; r.a., 426

Stanmount Pipe Line Company (Hon. Mr. Euler). 1r, 405; 2r, 439; ref to com, 440; rep of com-3r, 502; r.a., 733

Trans-Border Pipeline Company Ltd. (Hon. Mr. Bouffard). 1r, 415; 2r, 444; ref to com, 445; rep of com, 483; com-amdt concurred in-3r, 514; Commons amdt, 589; concurred in, 610; r.a., 733

Trans-Prairie Pipelines, Ltd. (Hon. Mr. Crerar). 1r, 406; 2r, 430; ref to com, 432; rep of com-3r, 459; Commons amdts, 569; concurred in, 599; r. a., 733

Victoria Insurance Company of Canada (Hon. Mr. Farris). 1r, 209; 2r-ref to com, 233; rep of com, 307; 3r, 320; r. a., 426

Westcoast Transmission Company Limited (Hon. Mr. Farris). 1r, 470; 2r, 511; ref to com. 513; rep of com, 526; 3r. 541; r. a., 733

Westspur Pipe Line Company (Hon. Mr. MacKinnon). 1r, 295; 2r-ref to com, 318; rep of com, 338; 3r, 356; Commons amdt, 483; concurred in, 513; r. a., 549

Yukon Pipelines Limited (Hon. Mr. Reid). 1r, 415; 2r, 432; ref to com, 434; rep of com-3r, 459; Commons amdt, 551; concurred in, 559; r. a., 732

Bills (Public)

Alberta-British Columbia Boundary. 1r, 436; 2r, 511; 3r, 515; r. a., 733

Appropriation

No. 1. 1r, 361; M for 2r postponed, 372; 2-3r, 390; r. a., 398

No. 2. 1r, 372; 2r, 373-90; 3r, 390; r. a., 398

No. 3. 1-2r, 547; 3r, 548; r. a., 550

No. 4. 1-2-3r, 704; r. a., 733

No. 5. 1-2r, 826; 3r, 831; r. a., 832

Blind Persons. 1r, 594; 2-3r, 705; r. a., 733

British North America Acts Amendment bill. 1r, 361; M for 2r postponed, 423; M for 2r, 447, 461, 474, 484, 502, 515; M for 2r negatived (div), 526, 540

Canada Agricultural Products Standards. 1r, 552; M for 2r, 589; 2r, 596; ref to com, 599; rep of com-amdts concurred in, 611; 3r, 612; amdts concurred in by Commons, 644; r. a., 733

Canada Elections. 1r, 663; 2r, 738; 3r, 747; r. a., 784

Canada Grain. 1r, 337; 2r, 361; ref to com, 366; rep of com-3r, 372; r. a., 398

Bills (Public)—Con.

Canada-Ireland Income Tax Agreement. 1r, 282; 2r, 332; ref to com, 335; rep of com-3r, 369; r. a., 398

Canada-Ireland Succession Duty Agreement. 1r, 282; 2r-ref to com, 335; rep of com-3r, 369; r. a., 398

Canadian Forces. 1r, 405; 2r, 541; ref to com, 547; rep of com, 555; report referred back to committee, 600; rep of com-3r, 657; r. a., 733

Canadian National Railways. 1r, 644; 2r, 682; ref to com, 683; rep of com-3r, 719; r. a., 733

Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee. 1r, 594; 2r, 684; ref to com, 686; rep of com, 719; 3r, 720; r. a., 733

Canadian National Railways Refunding. 1r, 594; 2r-ref to com, 684; rep of com-3r, 719; r. a., 733

Criminal Code. 1r, 241; 2r, 254; 3r, 258; r. a., 360

Criminal Code (Race Meetings). 1r, 663; 2r, 747; 3r, 755; r. a., 784

Customs. 1r, 555; 2r, 570; ref to com, 579; rep of com-3r, 580; r. a., 733

Customs Tariff. 1r, 783; 2r, 792; 3r, 806; r. a., 832

Defence Production. 1r, 783; 2r, 799; 3r, 806; r. a., 832

Divorce and Matrimonial Causes. 1r, 179; 2r, 210, 227, 234, 242, 246, 258, 278, 284, 298, 321; M for 2r negatived (div), 338; newspaper article—question of privilege, 361

Emergency Gold Mining Assistance. 1r, 337; 2r, 406; ref to com, 414; rep of com-3r, 459; r. a., 549

Excise Tax. 1r, 746; 2r-ref to com, 782; rep of com-3r, 791; r.a., 832

Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas. 1r, 231; 2r, 316; ref to com, 318; rep of com-amdts concurred in, 337; 3r, 355; amdts concurred in by Commons, 399; r. a., 426

Financial Administration, 1r, 319; 2r, 352; 3r, 356; r.a., 360

Fisheries Improvement Loans. 1r, 719; M for 2r, 749; 2r, 755; ref to com, 766; rep of com-3r, 767; r. a., 784

Foreign Aircraft Third Party Damage. 1r, 4; 2r, 271; 3r, 284; r. a., 426

Government Employees Compensation. 1r, 515; 2r, 556; ref to com, 559; rep of com-3r, 561; r. a., 732

Great Lakes Fisheries Convention. 1r, 515; 2r, 561; ref to com, 565; rep of com-3r, 580; r. a., 733

Bills (Public)—Con.

Historic Sites and Monuments. 1r, 405; 2r, 478, 499, 508; 3r, 515; r. a., 550

Income Tax. 1r, 753; 2r, 776; ref to com, 782; rep of com-3r, 791; authority to print com proceedings, 791; r. a., 832

International River Improvements. 1r, 594; 2r, 720; 3r, 738; r. a., 784

Judges. 1r, 672; 2r, 705; M for 3r postponed, 720; 3r, 734; r. a., 784

Library of Parliament. 1r, 4; 2r, 204; M for 3r, 207; M for 3r stands, 226; 3r (div), 238; question of privilege—report by British United Press regarding staff, 208; r.a., 733

Meat Inspection. 1r, 552; 2r, 587; ref to com, 588; rep of com, 594; com amdts concurred in-3r, 624; amdts concurred in by Commons, 644; r. a., 733

Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances. 1r, 319; 2r, 357; ref to com, 359; rep of com-3r, 369; r. a., 398

Municipal Grants. 1r, 611; M for 2r, 655; 2r, 673; ref to com, 682; rep of com-3r, 734; r. a., 784

National Harbours Board. 1r, 246; 2r, 331; 3r, 338; r. a., 360

National Parks. 1r, 405; 2r, 584; ref to com, 587; rep of com-3r, 612; r. a., 733

New Westminster Harbour Commissioners Loan. 1r, 405; 2r, 580; 3r, 581; r. a., 732

Northwest Territories. 1r, 397; 2r, 415; ref to com, 421; rep of com-3r, 427; r. a., 549

Prairie Farm Assistance. 1r, 657; 2r, 726; ref to com, 727; rep of com-amdts concurred in-3r, 746; amdts concurred in by Commons, 785; r. a., 832

Prairie Farm Rehabilitation. 1r, 569; 2r, 622; 3r, 653; r. a., 733

Precious Metals Marking. 1r, 4; 2r, 356; ref to com, 357; rep of com-3r, 369; r. a., 549

Prisons and Reformatories. 1r, 436; 2r, 480; 3r, 484; r. a., 732

Public Officials Salaries. 1r, 719; 2r, 785; 3r, 792; r. a., 832

Public Service Superannuation. 1r, 337; 2r, 399; ref to com, 402; rep of com-3r, 403; r. a., 426

Radio. 1r, 405; 2r, 437; ref to com, 439; rep of com, 672; com amdt concurred in, 717; 3r, 718; amdt concurred in by Commons, 785; r. a., 832

Railway. 1r, 502; 2r, 615; ref to com, 621; rep of com-3r, 672; r. a., 733

Railways (pro forma). 1r, 3

Representation. 1r, 295; 2r, 335; 3r, 338; r. a., 360

St. Lawrence Seaway Authority. 1r, 704; 2r, 808; 3r, 814; r. a., 832

Bills (Public)—Con.

Territorial Lands. 1r, 4; 2r, 320; ref to com, 321; rep of com-3r, 355; r. a., 426

Toronto Harbour Railway Tracks Agreement. 1r, 470; 2r, 654; ref to com, 655; rep of com-3r, 672; r. a., 733

Transport, 1r, 783; 2r, 787; ref to com, 790; rep of com-3r, 806; r. a., 832

Unemployment Insurance (No. 6). 1-2r, 27; 3r, 29; r. a., 29

Unemployment Insurance (No. 328). 1r, 594; M for 2r, 657; 2r, 686; ref to com, 689; rep of com, 746; 3r, 753; r. a., 784

Veterans Benefit. 1r, 470; 2r, 552; ref to com, 553; rep of com, 555; 3r, 570; r. a., 733

War Veterans Allowance. 1-2r, 391; 3r, 397; r. a., 398

Winnipeg and St. Boniface Harbour Commissioners. 1r, 4; 2r, 239; 3r, 241; r. a., 360

Yukon. 1r, 398; 2r, 421; ref to com, 423; rep of com-3r, 427; r. a., 549

Bishop, Hon. Charles L.

Private bills—extension of time for filing petitions, 257, 427

Rainy River Bridge—substitution of petition, report of committee, 427, 446

Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Pembroke bill, 167, 184, 209

Corporation enabled to give guarantee to religious organizations, institutions and schools, 184

Refund of fees, 406

Blais, Hon. Aristide

Fafard, Hon. J. Fernand, the late, tribute to his memory, 471-3

Blind persons allowances, 3, 16, 21, 136; age of eligibility lowered and income ceilings raised, 705

Blind Persons bill. 1r, 594; 2-3r, 705; r. a., 733

Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company bill (Hon. Mr. Bouffard), 1r, 203; 2r-ref to com, 221; rep of com-amdts concurred in, 237; further amdts concurred in, 237; 3r, 241; Commons amdts concurred in, 361; r. a., 398

Borden, Sir Robert L., the late—stand taken at Versailles Peace Conference, 529

Bouffard, Hon. Paul H.

Bonaventure and Gaspe Telephone Company bill, 203, 221, 237

Authority to increase capital stock, 221, 241

Bouffard, Hon. Paul H.—Con.
Canadian Forces bill, 545
Canadian Union Conference Corporation of Seventh-day Adventists—rep of com, 484
Customs Tariff bill, 792-4, 798-9
Dumping duty, 794
Fishermen, aid to, 799
GATT, 792-3, 799
Anti-subsidy duty, 792-3
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 258-68
Annulment, 259; grounds for, proposed, 267-8
Canadian Bar Association, 263
Divorce
Effects of in England and France, 260; United States, 261-2; Russia, 262; on birth rate, 263; on family life and children, 262
Grounds, proposed, for, 263-5
Presumption of death, 266; unconstitutional, 267
Quebec and Newfoundland affected through courts, 259
Social standpoint, 258-63
Fafard, Hon. J. Fernand, the late, tribute to his memory, 474
Railway bill, 789
Royal Architectural Institute of Canada bill, 257
Trans-Border Pipeline Company Ltd. bill—Commons amendment—pipeline to be entirely within Canada, 610

Bradette, Hon. Joseph A.
Emergency Gold Mining Assistance bill, 406-12
Gold mines—high cost of production, 406
Investing public, 412
Management and labour, negotiations between, 411
Ontario Government committee report on gold mining industry, 410-11
Ore blocking, 409-10
Price of gold, 407-9
United States market, 408
Rate of assistance and part of production to which it is applied, 407
Silicosis, 408-9
Workmen's Compensation Board report, 408
Control of disease; statistics, 409
Subsidies, 407; cost of present subsidy, 411
Value of industry to Canadian economy, 411
Feed grains, freight subsidy beneficial, 384
Germany, Federal Republic of, accession to North Atlantic Treaty, 88-93
Atomic and hydrogen bombs, 89
Disarmament, 89

Bradette, Hon. Joseph A.—Con.
France, military losses, 90; political situation in—communists, 90
Great Britain, leadership of, 91
Hoover, Herbert, Ex-President of United States, quotation from Bonn speech, 92
Unification of Germany, 92
United Nations—world government, 89
Hurtubise, Hon. Joseph Raoul, the late, tribute to his memory, 112
Northwest Territories bill, 417

British Columbia
Annacis Island—Causeway from New Westminster to, 581; industrial project of Duke of Westminster's Estate, 581
Boundary between Alberta confirmed, 511
Columbia River project, 12, 116-17, 127-9, 722-6
Fisheries—halibut and salmon—regulation of, 565
Floods—expenditure on dyking, 654
Fraser River Basin Board—inquiry and answer, 673
Health insurance, 810-12
Industrial development, 13-15
Population—over-65 age group, 16-18
Unemployment, 16
See Alberta-British Columbia Boundary bill

British Commonwealth of Nations
Canada's influence in, 530
Prime Ministers' Conference, 2, 107, 179
See Great Britain

British Empire and Commonwealth Games
Duke of Edinburgh, present at, 1
Financial deficit, 135-6
Outstanding success—fostered much good will, 135
Televised by Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, inquiry, 58; answer, 111

British market for Canadian apples, inquiry, 820; answer, 823

British North America Acts Amendment bill. 1r, 361; M for 2r postponed, 423; M for 2r, 447, 461, 474, 484, 502, 515; M for 2r negatived (div), 526, 540
Speakers: Hon. Senators Campbell, 495; Connolly, 521; Crerar, 450; Euler, 361, 423, 447, 534; Farris, 464; Golding, 508; Haig, 453; Hayden, 474; Horner, 530; Howden, 457; Hugessen, 489; King, 453; Kinley, 485; Lambert, 502; Macdonald, 515; Reid, 455; Roebuck, 461; Ross, 521; Turgeon, 526
See Senate, Vacancies

Brussels Treaty, 79, 80-3-4

Buchanan, Hon. W. A., the late, tributes to his memory, 4-10

Budget Speech, accommodation for senators in Commons Gallery, 372, 402

Burchill, Hon. G. Percival
Beauregard, Hon. Elie, the late, tribute to his memory, 10
Buchanan, Hon. W. A., the late, tribute to his memory, 10
Canada Agricultural Products Standards bill, 612
Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee bill, 684-5
Capital expenditures, additions and betterments, branch line construction, etc, 684-5
Canadian National Railways Refunding bill, 684
Criminal Code (Race Meetings) bill—running races and harness races, 748
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 214, 243, 268-9
Experience in Canada, United States and England, statistics, 269
Further study of question needed, 269
Historical background, 268
No substantial public demand for change in law, 269
Estimates, report of Finance Committee, 668-9
Public demand for greater expenditures, 668; Viscount Bennett quoted on, 668
Excise Tax bill—rep of com—3r, 791
Fisheries Improvement Loans bill—rep of com—3r, 767
Health Insurance, Prepaid—rural districts in New Brunswick, 813
Income Tax bill—rep of com—3r—authority to print com proceedings, 791
Judges bill—non-political appointment, 714
King, Hon. James H., the late, tribute to his memory, 804
Representation bill, 335-6
Northumberland constituency, New Brunswick, name changed to Northumberland-Miramichi, 336
Toronto Harbour Commissioners bill, 655
Unemployment Insurance bill, 746, 753
Abuses—more inspection needed, 754
Guaranteed annual wage, 754
Unemployment insurance stabilizer of world prices, 753

Burns, Robert—196th Anniversay of birth, 64

Caisses Populaires
Amounts loaned in provinces by caisses populaires and credit unions, 755
Assets of, 752

Caisses Populaires—Con.
Fishing industry, work on behalf of, 752, 755-6
Founders, tribute to, 756
La Caisse Populaire of Quebec—welcome to members in Senate gallery, 461
Loss on loans, 763
Moral guarantee, 756, 763
St. Francis Xavier University, organizational work, 750, 752, 756, 762
See Credit Unions

Caledonian-Canadian Insurance Company bill (Hon. Mr. Farris). 1r, 209; ref to com, 233; rep of com—3r, 257

Campbell, Hon. G. Peter
Baudette and Rainy River Municipal Bridge Company bill, 555
Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company bill, 415, 440-1
Senate, Vacancies—British North America Acts Amendment bill, 477, 495-9
Constitutional aspect, 498
Principle of bill, 495
Purpose of Senate to represent all sections of country, 496
Responsibility to public, 496
Senate work, special examples, 496; Shipping bill, 497; Income War Tax bill, 497-8
Toronto Harbour Railway Tracks Agreement bill, 654
Trans-Border Pipeline Company Ltd. bill, 415, 444-5
Transport bill, 787-90
Agreed charges, simplification of procedure, 787, 790
Agreement by both railways, necessary, 788
American railways operating in Canada, 789
Shipper may apply to Transport Board to have rate fixed, 789

Canada Agricultural Products Standards bill. 1r, 552; 2r, 589, 596; ref to com, 599; rep of com-amdts concurred in, 611; 3r, 612; amdts concurred in by Commons, 644; r.a., 733

Canada Gazette—publication costs, 387, 390

Canada Elections bill. 1r, 663; 2r, 738; 3r, 747; r.a., 784

Canada Grain bill. 1r, 337; 2r, 361; ref to com, 366; rep of com-3r, 372; r.a., 398

Canada-Ireland Income Tax Agreement bill. 1r, 282; 2r, 332; ref to com, 335; rep of com-3r, 369; r.a., 398

Canada-Ireland Succession Duty Agreement bill. 1r, 282; 2r-ref to com, 335; rep of com-3r, 369; r.a., 398

Canadian Bar Association, resolution in re divorce law, 218-19, 263, 269, 292-3, 312, 341, 343, 345

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation
British Empire Games, televising of—inquiry, 58; answer, 111
Revenue derived therefrom, 136

Canadian Economy, Royal Commission on, 821, 823-5, 833

Canadian Forces bill, 1r, 405; 2r, 541; ref to com, 547; rep of com, 555; ref back to com, 600; rep of com-3r, 657; r.a., 733

Canadian Legion
Canada's divorce law, resolution in re, 345
Veterans Benefit bill—representations re unemployment insurance, 553-4

Canadian Medical Association
Opposed to state medicine, 809
Sponsor of Trans-Canada Medical Plans, 810

Canadian National Railways
Auditors, George A. Touche & Co., 684-5
Capital expenditures: additions and betterments, branch line construction, new equipment, 684-5
Gordon, Donald, President
Evidence before committees, in re
Capital revision, write-offs, 374, 685
Competition with Canadian Pacific Railway, 375
Sale of four hotels, 375, 379, 382
Labour costs, two lines of approach to reduction of, 141
Hotels
New hotel at Montreal, 377-9; inquiry, 167; answer, 194
Sale of four, 374-5, 379, 382, 685-6
Loss of expected revenue, 375
Motor vehicles, authority to operate, 682-3
Officers and employees may act as directors of partially owned companies, 682
Price Edward Island, ferry and transportation service, 159
Rolling stock, Halifax to Montreal, improved, 686
Securities, refund and guarantee of, 684-5
Short lines, railway may construct without reference to Parliament, 682
Supplementary estimates, 374

Canadian National Railways—Con.
Taxes, 376
Telecommunication system, authority to operate, 682
Toronto harbour railway tracks, agreement in re, 654-5
Write-offs
Capital debts, 374, 685
Hotels, 685-6
See Appropriation Bill No. 2; Railways; Transport bill

Canadian National Railways bill (To consolidate various statutes). 1r, 664; 2r, 682; ref to com, 683; rep of com, 3r, 719; r.a., 733

Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee bill. 1r, 594; 2r, 684; ref to com, 686; rep of com, 719; 3r, 720; r.a., 733

Canadian National Railways Refunding bill. 1r, 594; 2r-ref to com, 684; rep of com-3r, 719; r.a. 733

Canadian Pacific Air Lines—Polar route, 134

Canadian Pacific Railway Company
Competition with Canadian National Railways, 374
Fredericton and Grand Lake Coal and Railway Company—ownership transferred, 354
St. Mary River Bridge Company bill, 336
Taxes, 376
Toronto harbour railway tracks, agreement in re, 654-5
See Appropriation bill No. 2; Railways; Transport bill

Canadian Premier Life Insurance Company bill (Dominion General Life Insurance Company bill) (Hon. Mr. Hayden). 1r, 540; 2r-ref to com, 554; rep of com, amdts concurred in-3r, 583; Commons amdts concurred in, 752; r.a., 784

Canadian Press, story of the, 9, 10

Canadian Trade Relations Committee
Appointment, 56; quorum, 57; M for power to conduct inquiry into international trade, 203; agreed to, 222; M for authority to print procedings, 447; agreed to, 469; rep of com, 791; amended and concurred in, 806

Canadian Union Conference Corporation of Seventh-day Adventists bill (Hon. Mr. Roebuck). 1r, 415; 2r, 442; ref to com, 444; rep of com, 484; com amdt concurred in-3r, 503; r.a., 733

Canadian Welfare Council—Committee on aging, 151-2

Charlottetown, P.E.I., Centennial, 160, 187

Chignecto Canal, long-delayed project, 142-3

China. See Formosa

Churches. See Canadian Union Conference Corporation of Seventh-day Adventists bill; Roman Catholic Espiscopal Corporation of Pembroke bill

Churchill, port of, 117-18, 615, 821-2
- Cargoes from Great Britain, 822
- Customs office required, 118
- Insurance time limit extended, 821
- Railway from Flin Flon, 118
- Salvaging operations, ocean-going vessel needed for, 615

Churchill, Right Hon. Sir Winston
- Leadership of, 91
- Originator of NATO idea, 105. See 77, 107, 144
- Yalta Treaty, opposed to, 104

Civil Service
- Accidents, claims in respect of, 556
- Civilian employees, Department of National Defence, 665, 669
- Civil servants, increase in number of, 663, 665, 669-70
  - Efficiency of, 669
- Commission, proposed investigation into administration of, 57
- Compensation in event of accidents or disease, 556-9
- Number of employees, Government departments and Crown corporations, 1935-55, 629
- Salary increases, 625; future increases, 786
- Superannuation
  - Actuarial position of fund, 400
  - Former civil servants now on pension, 400
  - Newfoundland—benefits extended to former employees of, 400
  - Permanent and temporary employees; contributions by, 400
  - Retired civil servants, 709

See Government Employees Compensation bill; Public Officials Salaries bill; Public Service Superannuation bill

Civil Service Administration Committee—appointment, 56; quorum, 57; report, 57

Colombo Plan, 2, 66, 67, 163, 164, 175

Columbia River Dam, 12-14, 115-16, 136-9
- General McNaughton's report, 137-9, 720, 722
- Kaiser Dam, 13, 115, 116, 136-9
- Potential water power, 137
- Salmon fisheries, effect on, 137-9, 722-5
- United States and Canada Treaty, effect on, 138

See International River Improvements bill

Commercial Travellers' Association of Canada bill (Hon. Mr. Hayden). 1r, 405; 2r, 429; ref to com, 430; rep of com-3r, 459; r.a., 732

Committees
- Appointment of, 3, 12, 42-3, 55, 70, 74, 145
- Quorums reduced, 57
- Report of Committee of Selection, 12; concurred in, 42, 55
- Sittings, 458
- (For individual committees, see items under their names)

Commonwealth Prime Ministers, Conference of, London, 2, 107, 159, 179

Communism, 155-6
- Canadian communists opposed to German rearmament, 83, 103
- Narcotics and, 155
- Not stopped by wars, 177
- Revolt in East Germany, 101
- Russian aggression and domination—Czechoslovakia and Poland, 100

Connolly, Hon. John J.
- Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 168-176
- Atomic energy program, Canada's, 175
- British North America Acts Amendment bill. See Senate Vacancies below
- Canadian Forces bill, 541-7, 603-4
  - Defence Services Pension Act amendments
    - Common-law wife, 545-6, 603-4
      - Similar provision in other acts, 604
    - Pension regulations, 546-7
  - National Defence Act amendments
    - Civilians with Forces abroad subject to Canadian civil courts, 545

Connolly, Hon. John J.—Con
Court Martial Appeal Board, 544
Judge Advocate General, 543
Minister may correct illegal finding and order new trial, 544
Reinstatement, 541-2
Suspended sentences, 544
Commercial Travellers' Association of Canada bill, 429
Consolidated Pipe Lines Company bill, 548-9
Customs bill, 571
Defence
Armed services, strength of, 173
Canada's policy, 169
Defence of North America—radar stations, 173
Defence Research Board, 175
Distribution of "defence dollar", 174-5
Expenditures, 169, 170, 172-6
NATO commitment, 173
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 249-53
Children and family life, effect of divorce upon, 250-2
Divorce Committee, work of, 250
Statistics, Canada and other countries, 251
Natural law, 250, 252
Relationship between number of divorces and liberality of laws, 251
Dominion General Life Insurance Company bill—rep of com-3r, 583
Excise Tax bill-reduction and repeal of certain taxes, 782
Feed grains—freight subsidy should be discontinued, 380
Foreign Aircraft Third Party Damage bill—courts, 276
Gerling General Insurance Company of Canada bill, 64, 109
Income Tax bill, 776-81
Additional exemption for single person supporting a dependant, 777
Corporations with taxable income in excess of $20,000, 778
Deductible expenses, companies, 776
Depreciation of capital assets in estates, 778-9
Earned surplus, 780-1
Investment companies, 779
Mines, new, 3-year exemption, 779
Personal income tax reduction, 776-8
Profit-sharing plan, 779, 781
Provincial income tax, 776, 778
Tax reductions, 776-81
Judges bill, 714-15
Supreme Court of Canada, 714
Sir Lyman Duff, Right Hon., the late, 714

Connolly, Hon. John J.—Con.
NATO—Canadian commitment, 173
Change in emphasis in planning, 173
Public Service Superannuation bill, 399-402
Actuarial position of fund, 400-1
Armed forces and Royal Canadian Mounted Police, 401
Newfoundland civil servants, 400-1
Sessional employees of Senate and House of Commons, 400
Temporary employees, 400
Royal Commission on Canadian Economy, 823
Senate, Vacancies—British North America Acts Amendment bill, 521-5, 550
Bill would not be enforceable, 523-4
Cabinet ascendancy, 522
Constitutional amendment should be approached with great caution, 524-5
Euler, Hon. Mr., withdrawal of statement, 550
Senate, method of appointment to, 522
Summons under present Act should be issued "within reasonable time", 522
Sharp & Dohme (Canada) Ltd. bill, 355, 366-8, 403

Consolidated Pipe Lines Company bill. 1r, 515; 2r, 548; ref to com, 549; rep of com-3r, 555; r.a., 733

Consumer prices and inflation, 627
Consumer expenditure, 643
Consumer price index for Canada, 1945-55, 643

Cost of living, 119
Agricultural prices and, 158

Credit buying, 34

Credit unions
Assets of, 752
Development of in Maritimes, 752, 756, 762-3
Founders, tributes to, 750, 752, 756
Lenders under Fisheries Improvement Loans bill, 750-2, 755-6, 764
Loss on loans, 763
Moral guarantee, 756, 763
St. Francis Xavier University, organizational work, 750, 752, 756, 762
See Caisses populaires

Crerar, Hon. T. A., P.C.
Appropriation bill No. 2, 379-81
British North America Acts Amendment bill. See Senate, Vacancies, below

Crerar, Hon. T. A., P.C.—Con.
Canada Grain bill, 361-5
Commissioners, increase in salary, 363; appointment of additional Assistant Commissioner, 363
Commissions, appointment of, 364
History of development of Act, 362-4
McKenzie, D. G., Chief Commissioner, tribute to, 364
Surplus grain, disposal of, 363
Canadian Forces bill, 541
Canadian National Railways bill, 682
Consolidates various legislative acts into one statute, 682
Officers and employees may act as directors of partially owned companies, 682
Railway may construct short lines without reference to Parliament, 682; operate motor vehicles, 682-3; telecommunication system, 682
Canadian National Railways hotels, 379
Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company bill—rep of com-3r, 483
Estimates, the
Committee on Finance, estimates referred to, 296; rep of com-authority to print proceedings, 337, 614
Final rep of com, 614, 625; exhibits, 629; report concurred in, 663-7, 670-1
Final report
Civil servants, increase in number of, 663-4, 670
Civil Service administration, 664
Department of National Defence, civilian employees, 665-6
Distribution of report, 671
Gross national product and relationship to Canadian economy, 666
Public buildings in Ottawa, cost of construction—Printing Bureau, 665
Public demands responsible for high government expenditures, 670-1
Statistical services of Government, 666
Feed grains, freight subsidy should be discontinued, 380
Foreign Aircraft Third Party Damage bill—no explanation of convention, 275-6
Germany, Federal Republic of, accession to North Atlantic Treaty, 99-103; documents, 58, 62-3
Adenauer, Chancellor Konrad, 102
Communist aggression and domination—Czechoslovakia and Poland, 100
Rearming of Germany, 101; limitations, 102
Russia, 100-1
United Nations, efforts to ban atomic warfare, 100

Crerar, Hon. T. A., P.C.—Con.
United States, aid to Europe, Marshall Plan, 101
War and German people, 99
Yalta Conference, obligations not honoured by Russia, 100
Gillespie Mortgage Corporation bill, rep of com, 483; 3r, 514
Historic Sites and Monuments bill, 479-80
Hurricane "Hazel", 380
Indians, welfare of, 380
Narcotic drug traffic, 225
National Parks bill, 613
NATO, 58, 63, 101
Northwest Territories bill, 418-19
Council, 418
Sessional indemnities, 419
Senate
Rules, suspension of in re public bills—delay in receiving legislation from Commons, 371
Vacancies—British North America Acts Amendment bill, 450-3
Criticism of Senate, 450-2
Freedom, dangers to cause of, 451, 453
Method of appointment to Senate, 452-3
Prime Minister, tribute to, 450; problem of filling vacancies, 450
Role and importance of Senate, 450-2
Territorial representation, 453
Subsidies—feed grains and butter, 380
Trans-Border Pipeline Company, Ltd. bill, rep of com, 483; 3r, 514
Trans-Prairie Pipelines, Ltd. bill, 406, 430-2, 569, 599-600

Crime comics and salacious literature, 155-6

Criminal Code bill. 1r, 241; 2r, 254; 3r, 258; r.a., 360
See Northwest Territories bill, 416

Criminal Code (Race Meetings) bill. 1r, 663; 2r, 747; 3r, 755; r.a., 784

Criminal Code—Joint Committee on certain questions of criminal law
Appointment of, 42, 70
Members: House of Commons, 110, 208, 355; Senate, 70-4, 232
Quorum, 110
Reports:
First—evidence from an executioner, 436
Second, 734, 744
Approach to and method of inquiry, 745
Interim recommendations, 745
Organization and summary of meetings, 744

Crowsnest Pass Agreement (on freight rates), 385

Curling, Canadian Championship Playoffs
Tributes to competing teams, 282-4

Currencies, convertibility of Congress of International Chamber of Commerce at Tokyo, 772
Currency conditions in United States, 798

Customs
Anti-subsidy duty, 792-3, 796
Dumping, 736, 794
Obstacle to trade, 772
Smuggling, 595
See Customs bill; Customs Tariff bill

Customs bill. 1r, 555; 2r, 570; ref to com, 579; rep of com-3r, 580

Customs Tariff bill. 1r, 783; 2r, 792; 3r, 806; r.a., 832

Cyprus
Suez Canal and Great Britain, 199

Czechoslovakia—Benes and Masaryk, 100

Daigle, Hon. Armand
Fafard, Hon. J. Fernand, the late, tribute to his memory, 473

Dandurand, Right Hon. Raoul, P.C., the late—quoted on independence of Senate, 507

David Fife Memorial—Proposal to commemorate discovery of Red Fife Wheat, 48-53

Davies, Hon. W. Rupert
Appropriation Bill No. 2—supplementary estimates for Canada Gazette, 387
Beauregard, Hon. Elie, the late, tribute to his memory, 9
Buchanan, Hon. W. A., the late, tribute to his memory, 9
Canada-Ireland Tax Agreement bill, 333
Divorce and Matrimonial causes bill, 278-80, 302
Amendments suggested, 280
Bill long overdue, 279
Public demand for more liberal divorce laws, 279
England, income tax on Canadians resident in, 334
Foreign Aircraft Third Party Damage bill, 278

Davies, Hon. W. Rupert—Con.
Radio bill, 437-9
Radio communications, penalty for unlawful interception of, 437
Television antennae, control of erection of, 437
Sharp & Dohme (Canada) Ltd. bill, 367
Territorial Lands bill, 320-1
Trans-Border Pipeline Company, Ltd. bill, 445
War Veterans Allowance bill, 392, 394, 396-7

Defence
Armed Forces—Public Service Superannuation bill, 401
Canada's policy of, 169
Canadian Forces bill, 405, 541-7
Civilian employees, Department of National Defence, 665, 669
"Defence dollar", distribution of, 174-5
Defence Research Board, 175
Defence Services Pension Act amendments
Common-law wife, 545-6, 601-10
England, marriages in, and divorce, 603-4, 606-7
Pension regulations, 546-7
Expenditures, 169, 170, 172-6
National Defence Act amendments
Act virtually Criminal Code for three armed services, 547
Civilians with forces abroad subject to Canadian civil courts, 545
Court Martial Appeal Board, 544
Judge Advocate General, 543-4
Minister may correct illegal finding; may order new trial, 544
Reinstatement, 541-2
Suspended sentences, 544
Northwest Territories, use of, 416
Radar stations, 173
Taxation and, 155
Three Services, strength of, 173
See Canadian Forces bill; Veterans Benefit bill

Defence Production bill. 1r, 783; 2r, 799; 3r, 806; r.a., 832

Defence Production, Department of Minister—salary, 799; wide powers, 799-800
Right Hon. C. D. Howe, tributes to, 799-801

Disabled Persons Act—All provinces participating in program, 2

Disarmament
Canadian resolution at United Nations, 2
Will follow, not precede, peace, 89

Divisions—recorded votes. See Senate

Divorce
Annulment of marriage, 259, 627, 285-6
Archibald petition, refund of fees, 370
Australia, grounds for divorce in, 348-9
Avoidance of marriage—epilepsy, proposed ground for, 229, 244
Bills: See Divorce Bills, pp. 888 to 895
Canadian Bar Association resolution, 218-9, 263, 269, 292-3, 312, 341, 343, 345
Canadian law, historical background, 210, 268, 285
Canadian Legion resolution, 345
Cancer on body social (conditions leading to divorce), 249, 289, 303, 330
Committee
Appointment, 12; quorum, 23; authorized to sit during Senate adjournments and to appoint subcommittees, 23-6
Procedure and work, 648-53, 767
Criticism of—by radio, 650-3; in Commons, 648-9, 767; challenge to Commons to do divorce work if not satisfied with that of Senate, 648-9; conference on procedure early next session suggested, 649, 767
Reports, 23, 30, 53, 64, 75, 94, 110, 114-15, 127, 130, 144-5, 152, 165, 203, 220-2, 231, 236, 240, 246, 282, 319, 353, 370, 373, 399, 436, 458, 474, 501, 526, 549, 552, 559, 569, 581, 589, 614, 644, 656
Services, appreciation of—members, 645-6; staff, 647
Statistics, 94, 203, 399, 644
Delorme case, 652
Dissolution of marriage—presumption of death, 215, 219-20, 266-7, 292, 302, 316, 341
Domicile, 247-8
Effects of divorce in England, 326; France, 260; United States, 261-2, 269; Russia, 252, 262
English law, 214-16, 265, 325, 327, 343, 345, 349
Evidence, printing of, 127-9; typewritten copy, 128
Family life and children, effect of divorce on, 250, 262-3, 266, 304, 339, 348
Fees for printing and translation costs increased, 26
Gallup poll, 219, 245
Grounds, proposed:
Cruelty, 213-15, 228, 246, 265, 280, 290-1, 302
Desertion, 215-17, 229, 247, 264, 280, 286-90, 301, 315, 341-2, 348
Insanity, incurable, 214, 229, 235-6, 244, 264-5, 280, 302
Hart case—radio broadcast—Question of privilege, 650-3
Increase in divorce, 243, 249-53, 269, 303, 314, 326, 349
L'Esperance case, 651

Divorce—Con.
National Council of Women, resolution in re desertion and presumption of death, 316
New Zealand, grounds for divorce in, 217
Petitions
Extension of time for filing, 257, 427
Withdrawn, refund of fees, 26
Procedure—Queston of privilege, 767
Quebec and Newfoundland, 212, 219, 259, 265, 293, 304, 314-15
Statistics, 242, 251-2, 262, 269, 281, 343, 348-9

Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill. 1r, 179; M for 2r, 210-20, 227-9, 234-6, 242-5, 246-53, 258-69, 278-81, 284-94, 298-306, 321-31; M for 2r negatived (div), 338-52
Speakers: Hon. Senators Aseltine, 210, 344; Baird, 280; Barbour, 242; Bouffard, 258; Burchill, 268; Connolly, 249; Davies, 278; Euler, 313; Farris, 284; Fergusson, 325; Gershaw, 227; Haig, 338; Hodges, 234; Horner, 305; Howard, 248; Howden, 244; Lambert, 245; McIntyre, 243; Reid, 321; Roebuck, 298; Ross, 246; Wilson, 315

Dominion General Life Insurance Company bill. See Canadian Premier Life Insurance Company bill

Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company bill (Hon. Mr. Campbell). 1r, 415; 2r, 440; ref to com, 441; rep of com-3r, 483; r. a., 733

Dominion-Provincial Agreements (Tax)
Correspondence between the Prime Minister and the Premier of Quebec, respecting provincial tax, 30, 36

Duff, Right Hon. Sir Lyman P., the late (Former Chief Justice of Canada), 256, 714

Duffus, Hon. J. J.
David Fife Memorial—proposal to commemorate discovery of Red Fife Wheat, 48-53
Discovery revolutionized world wheat farming, 49
Effect on development of Prairie Provinces and national prosperity, 50
Memorial Society and project, 51-2
Fafard, Hon. J. Fernand, the late, tribute to his memory, 471
Senate—work of, 133

Duke of Edinburgh—British Empire and Commonwealth Games, 1

Dulles, Hon. John Foster, United States Secretary of State—Visit to Parliament Buildings, 307

Dupuis, Hon. Vincent
Canada-Ireland Tax Agreement bill, 334
Canadian Forces bill, 542
Customs bill—delegation of powers to ministers and departmental officials, 579
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 347
Foreign Aircraft Third Party Damage bill, 272
National Parks bill—Newfoundland National Park, 586
Prince Albert National Park—Lake Waskesiu, 587
Northwest Territories bill
Hudson's Bay Company, 417
Indians, 421

Eden, Right Hon. Sir Anthony
Influence and leadership of, 91
Paris Agreements, 85

Eisenhower, General Dwight D., President of the United States
Address to Parliament in 1953, televised, 68
Far East policy, 182-4

Elections
Apathy and indifference of electorate, 67-9, 451-3
Australia, results of compulsory voting legislation, 68-9
Chief Electoral Officer, status and salary, 739
Costs, 67-9, 739-40
Personal expenses of candidates, 739
Northwest Territories Council, members elected in 1954 and votes cast, 417
Public affairs—need for greater interest in, 68-70
Transferable vote, 740
Voters in last federal election
National average, 68
Provincial percentages, 68
Yukon Council, members elected in 1952 and votes cast, 422
See Canada Elections bill; Northwest Territories bill; Representation bill; Yukon bill

Electric power
See Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas bill; St. Lawrence Seaway

Emergency Gold Mining Assistance bill. 1r, 337; 2r, 406; ref to com, 414; rep of com-3r, 459; r.a., 549

Employment, 832
Longevity and employment, 147-8, 160
Statistics, 44, 119, 133, 187

Equitable Fire Insurance Company of Canada bill (Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt). 1r, 415; 2r-ref to com, 432; rep of com-3r, 460; r.a., 733

Eskimos
Resident in Northwest Territories, 419-20
Survival of party in Northland, 70

Estimates, The
Committee on Finance, reference to, 295; authority to print proceedings, 337, 614
Final report of committee, 614, 625; exhibits, 629; concurred in, 663-71; distribution of, 671
Civil servants, increase in number of 663-4, 670; decreases and increases in various departments, 664
Civil Service administration, 664
Department of National Defence, civilian employees, 665-6, 669
Gross national product and relationship to Canadian economy, 666
Provinces, payments to, 670
Public buildings in Ottawa, cost of construction, 665
Printing Bureau, 665, 669
Summary of Government expenditures by departments, 668; suggested division of expenditures into two classes, 670
Statistical services of Government, 666
Committee on Finance, 1943, 131
Doubt as to wisdom of discussing Estimates prior to Budget Speech, 131

Euler, Hon. W. D., P.C.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 176-8
Appropriation bill No. 2, 374-6, 381-2, 384-5
Atomic war, 177-8
Baudette and Rainy River Municipal Bridge Company bill, 569
British North America Acts Amendment bill—See Senate Vacancies, below
Canadian Union Conference Corporation of Seventh-day Adventists bill, 444
Communism, not stopped by war, 177
Criminal Code—Senate membership on Joint Committee on certain questions of Criminal Law, 70-3
Customs bill, 575

Euler, Hon. W. D. P.C.—Con.
Divorce Committee—suggestion that senators from Quebec and Newfoundland constitute membership, 650
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 212-13, 247, 259, 261, 301, 313-15, 343-4, 348
Divorce, a corrective, 313; laws antiquated, 313
Increase in divorce, chief reasons for, 314
Quebec and Newfoundland, one section of bill would discriminate against, 314-15
Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company bill, 440-1
Formosa
China's position, 177
United States policy, 176-8
War, risk of, 176-8
Germany, Federal Republic of, accession to North Atlantic Treaty, 95-9
German Canadians, 97
NATO influence in preventing war, 95
Propaganda, effect of, 97
Rearmament—German people now fear war, 96
Russia—co-existence with, 98
Unification of Germany, 98
United States and Russia, 99
World government would be great boon, 99
Yalta Treaty—alienation of Germany territory, 96
Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation bill, 27, 53, 75
Municipal Grants bill—rep of com-3r, 734
Prairie Farm Assistance bill, 727
Senate Vacancies—British North America Acts Amendment bill, 361, 423, 447-50, 494, 517-21, 523, 534-40
Bill not a criticism of Prime Minister or Government, 448, 539
Constitutional aspects, 539-40
Efficiency of Senate would be increased if vacancies filled, 449, 538-9
House of Commons Act, precedent in amendment of, 447-8
Moral force of proposed amendment, 536, 539
Parts of country now unrepresented in Senate, 539
Political reason for vacancies, 536-7
Resolution suggested by Hon. Mr. Farris, 536
Senate reform, 448
Time limit for filling vacancies, 447, 449, 535-6, 538
Vacancies—at present, 447, 449, 538-9; previous accumulations, 449, 476
Withdrawal of statement, 550

Euler, Hon. W. D. P.C.—Con.
Stanmount Pipe Line Company bill, 439-40
Construction of pipe line to connect with Interprovincial Pipe Line, 439
Proposed route would save construction costs, 439
Subsidies—unsound practice, 385
Unemployment Insurance bill (No. 328), 660-1
United States
Influence on Canada, 176
Policy regarding Formosa, 176-8
Victoria Insurance Company of Canada bill, 307
Yukon Pipelines Limited bill—reference to committee, 435

European Defence Community (EDC), 1, 77, 107
France's position, 78, 85

Exchequer Court. See Judges bill

Excise tax, repealed or reduced on certain commodities, 782

Excise Tax bill. 1r, 746; 2r-ref to com, 780; rep of com-3r, 791; r.a., 832

Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas bill. 1r, 231; 2r, 316; ref to com, 318; rep of com-amdts concurred in, 337; 3r, 355; amdts concurred in by Commons, 399; r.a., 426

Fafard, Hon. J. Fernand, the late—tributes to his memory, 470-4

Farm income, 156, 707-8, 712, 734-5
Income tax paid by farmers in various provinces, 188
Income Tax bill—business on cash basis, 780
Statistics, 157

Farm loans
Govenrment guarantee to banks, 180, 186
See Prairie Farm Assistance bill; Prairie Farm Rehabilitation bill

Farquhar, Hon. Thomas
St. Mary's River Bridge Company bill, 238, 253, 336
Important international border crossing, 253
Motor traffic, increase in, 253

Farris, Hon. J. W. deB.
British North America Acts Amendment bill. See Senate, Vacancies, below

Farris, Hon. J. W. deB.—Con.
Caledonian-Canadian Insurance Company bill, 209
Criminal Code, Joint Committee—first report, 436
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 212, 265, 284-94
Canadian Bar Association resolution, 292-3
Divorce law of Canada
History of, 285; need for improvement, 286
Husband's domicile, 217
Grounds, proposed, for divorce, 286-91
Moral standards, 294
Nullity of marriage, in Quebec, 285-6
Quebec and Newfoundland, suggested amendment to prevent extension of bill to, 293-4
Foreign Aircraft Third Party Damage bill, 271-8, 284
Convention, ratification of, 272; signatures, 276
Insurance, 274-5
Liability, extent of, 273
Northwest Territories bill, 420
Petroleum Transmission Company bill, 428
Royal Architectural Institute of Canada bill, 209
Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Pembroke bill, 209
Senate, Vacancies—British North America Acts Amendment bill, 464-9, 491-2
Appointment to Senate great honour, 466
Constitutional aspects of bill, 465-7, 477
House of Commons and Senate, distinction between constitutions of, 465
Integrity and composition of Senate involved in consideration of bill, 464
Non-partisan appointments desirable, 468-9
Opposition should be stronger, 465, 467
Prime Minister—problem of filling vacancies, 467-9; tribute to, 465-6
Resolution, suggested as preferable to bill, 466
Sharp & Dohme (Canada) Ltd. bill, 367
Stanmount Pipe Line Company bill, 439
Victoria Insurance Company of Canada bill, 209
Westcoast Transmission Company bill, 470, 511-13

Federal District, 655, 674-82
Commission, 3, 674, 678
Estimates for, 828
Expenditures by, 674
Federal-municipal relations—Joint Committee of 1944, 47, 655, 674-5, 677-8; proposed Joint Committee, 3, 47

Federal District—Con.
King, Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie—speech of 1944 quoted, 676
Municipal services, cost of, 679-80
See Municipal Grants bill; Ottawa, City of Federal-Provincial conference, 832

Fergusson, Hon. Muriel McQ.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 146-52
Divorce
Bills, 93, 185-6, 582
Committee reports, 581
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Bill, 325-31, 342-4
Bulletin, Council of Social Service, Church of England in Canada, 325
Conciliation proceedings might reduce number of petitions, 330
England, conditions in, 325-7
Further study and investigation should precede any change in present law, 328-31
Public demand for bill lacking, 330-1
United States, divorce laws, 329
Foreign Aircraft Third Party Damage bill—explanation of word "person", 276
Government Employees Compensation bill, 556-9
Compensation and medical aid—occupational accidents or diseases, 556
Definitions of "compensation" and "industrial disease", 557
Employee injured by an outside party, 557-8
Employees assigned to work outside Canada, 557
Government employees under Workmen's Compensations Acts, 557
Minister may encourage accident prevention and safety programs, 556
Library of Parliament bill, 206
Meat Inspection bill—licensing, 588
Older citizens
Aging—Canadian Welfare Council Committee on, 151-2; United States Committee on Aging and Geriatrics, 151
Efficiency of, 147-8
Employment problem, 146-8, 150-1
Day Care Centres, 150-1; National Council of Jewish Women, 151; Soroptomist Clubs, 151
Geriatrics, 147, 151
Housing, 149
Longevity, 146
Number of, increasing, 146-7, 150
Recreational and educational projects, 151
Retirement, 148-9

Fergusson, Hon. Muriel McQ.—Con.
Unemployment Insurance bill, 686-9
Act abused, 687-8
Woman should be member of Commission and Advisory Committee, 688
Women
Married, contributions and benefits, 686; discrimination against, 687
One-quarter of total insured labour force, 687
Women employees, retirement of, 149

Fertilizers
See Potash and Phosphoric Acid

Fife, David, Memorial—Proposal to comemorate discovery of Red Fife wheat, 48-53

Finance
Farm loans, 180; government guarantee to banks, 180, 186
Government expeditures, 826-7
See Appropriation bills; Estimates; Financial Administration bill; Insurance

Finance Committee
Appointment, 55; quorum, 57; addition to membership, 320; reports, 57, 337
Estimates referred to, 295
Authority to print proceedings, 337, 614
Final report on estimates, 614, 625; exhibits, 629; report concurred in, 663-71
Work of, 826-31

Financial Administration bill. 1r, 319; 2r, 352; 3r, 356; r.a., 360

Fisheries
Bassano dam, Alberta, fishing at, 624
British Columbia halibut and salmon, 564-5, 722-3
Clam industry, 759-61
Columbia River Dam, effect on salmon, 137-9, 722-5
Conservation and research, 757-61, 765
Credit unions and caisses populaires—loans to fishermen, 750-2, 755-6, 764
Customs Tariff bill—machinery and apparatus used in fishing industry, 795, 798-9
Fish—greatest untapped source of wealth in food; 761; nutritional value, 761
Great Lakes Fisheries
Convention between Canada and United States, 561-5
Lampreys, problem of, 561-5
Herring industry, 758-61

Fisheries—Con.
Insurance coverage, 750
Intermediate credit to fishermen, 749
International control, 765
International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission, 137, 139, 722-5
International River Improvements bill, 722-5
Loans to fishermen, 180, 749-50, 763-5
Maritime provinces, 750-1, 763-5
Newfoundland, 180-1, 763-5
Research, extension of, necessary, 757-61, 765
Salted fish, 180; assistance to producers, 826
Sockeye salmon industry on Fraser river, 137-9, 722-5
Unemployment insurance necessary for fishermen, 181

Fisheries Improvement Loans bill. 1r, 719; 2r, 749, 755; ref to com, 766; rep of com-3r, 767; r.a., 784

Floods and Storms
British Columbia, Fraser River—expenditure on dyking, 654
Manitoba, expenditure on reclamation, 654
Nova Scotia—assistance to apple producers, 2; damage to crop by hurricane, 65-6, 815
Ontario—assistance to hurricane sufferers, 2
Western Canada—damage to crops, 746

Food and Agricultural Organization (FAO), 162
International trade, report of committee, 791
Locust plagues, international control, 163
United Nations, 196
Work of, 163
World food production and food surpluses, 66

Foreign Aircraft Third Party Damage bill. 1r, 4; 2r, 271; 3r, 284

Formosa
China's position, 177
United States policy re, 176-8, 182-4
War, risk of, 176-8

Fournier, Hon. Sarto
British North America Acts Amendment bill, 537
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill—domicile, 248

France
European Defence Community (EDC)—France's position and refusal to enter, 78, 85
Franco-German Agreement on Saar, 78, 80
Mendes-France, Prime Minister, leadership of, 82, 85
Military losses, 90

Fraser River Basin Board, inquiry and answer, 675

Fredericton & Grand Lake Coal & Railway Company bill (Hon. Mr. Veniot). 1r, 320; 2r, 353; ref to com, 354; rep of com, 369, 372; 3r, 373; r.a., 426

Free trade, 736; outmoded, 797-8

Freight rates
Agreed charges, 787-90
Grain shipments and freight rates—inquiry, 179, 271, 307; answer, 308
Subsidies on feed grains—freight rates, 115, 209-10, 380, 382-5, 387, 389

See Transport bill

Gander airport, 614

Gas
British Columbia, natural gas, 424
See Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas bill; Pipe Lines

GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade), 576, 832
Congress of International Chamber of Commerce at Tokyo, 768, 773, 775
Customs Tariff bill, 792-9

Geriatrics. See Older citizens

Gerling General Insurance Company of Canada bill (Hon. Mr. Connolly). 1r, 64; 2r-ref to com, 109

Germany, Federal Republic of
Accession to North Atlantic Treaty, 58, 62, 832
Approval of protocol, 76-93, 95-108
Armament control and Control Agency, 79
Canada, responsibility of in regard to accession, 34-5
Canadian forces in, 79-80; token force, 106
Communists opposed to approval of protocol, 103
European Defence Community (EDC), 77-8, 85, 107
Franco-German Agreement on Saar, 78, 80, 96

Germany, Federal Republic of—Con.
German Canadians, 97; German people, 91-2; fear of war, 96, 99
NATO—influence against war, 95
Military forces, supra-national army, 106
Obligations assumed by Germany, 80
Principles of federal union, 107
Rearmament, 66, 81-3, 85-8, 96, 101-2, 107
Russia—lack of co-operation, 100-4
Supreme Allied Commander in Europe (SACEUR), 79
Territory alienated by Russia, 96
Unification, 78-9, 92, 98, 102
United States—Marshall Plan and aid to Europe, 101
Western European Union, 78-9
Yalta Treaty—Churchill, Sir Winston, opposed to, 104

Gershaw, Hon. F. W.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 58-62
Archibald divorce petition—refund of fees, 370
Beauregard, Hon. Elie, the late, tribute to his memory, 8
Buchanan, Hon. W. A., the late, tribute to his memory, 8
Divorce bills, 370
Committee reports, 370
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 227-9
Adultery a crime, 228
Divorce Committee, careful hearing of cases by, 228
Divorce not a disease, but a remedy, 227
Family, foundation of society, 228
Grounds, proposed, for divorce and avoidance of marriage, 228-9
Health insurance, prepaid, 809-14
Death, main causes, 811
Former scourges now under control, 810
Poliomyelitis serum, 810-13
Rural municipalities, services in, 812, 814
Salk vaccine, 812-13
Sickness and accident insurance, statistics, 811
State medicine—not acceptable to Canadian Medical Association, 809
Trans-Canada Medical Plans, 810-13
Historic Sites and Monuments bill, 508-9
Northwest Mounted Police, early heroes in Western Canada—memorials to, recommended, 509
Kenya, 58-62
British accomplishments in, 60
Game and wildlife, 59
Grievances of natives, 60-2
Hospitals and public health, 58, 60
Living conditions, 59-61
Mau Maus, 59, 61-2

Gershaw, Hon. F. W.—Con.
Kenya—Con.
Owen Falls reservoir and dam—Lake Victoria, 59
Plural marriages, 60
Prairie Farm Assistance bill, 726-7
Crop insurance, 727
Government contributions and amounts paid in, 727
Prairie Farm Rehabilitation bill, 622-4, 653-4
Expenditures by federal Government, 623-4; by provinces, 623, 653
Flood damage, Manitoba and British Columbia, 654
Irrigation schemes, 622-3
Water conservation, 622-3
War Veterans Allowance bill, 393

Gibraltar, British colony of, 177

Gillespie Mortgage Corporation bill (Hon. Mrs. Hodges). 1r, 427; 2r, 457; ref to com, 458; rep of com, 483; com amdt concurred in, 503; r.a., 733

Godbout, Hon. J. Adélard (Deputy Leader of the Government)
Criminal Code bill, 241
Defence Production bill, 783
Excise Tax bill, 746
Feed grains, subsidies on—answer to inquiry, 209
Felicitations on appointment as Deputy Leader of the Government, 19
Fisheries Improvement Loans bill, 719
Meat Inspection bill, 587-8
Registration of establishments, 587-8
Public Officials Salaries bill, 719
Railways bill, 3
Royal Commission on Canadian Economy, agricultural industry well represented on, 824
St. Lawrence Seaway Authority bill, 808
Authority for expropriation of land on Indian reserves, 808
Senate Committees, appointment of, 3
Speech from the Throne, consideration of, 3
Transport bill, 783

Golding, Hon. William H.
Canada Agricultural Products Standards bill, 592
Canada Elections bill, 738-40, 747
Chief Electoral Officer, status and salary, 739
Costs of elections, 740
Personal expenses of candidates, 739
Nomination day, 739
Department of National Defence, civilian employees, 665-6
Hart divorce case—radio broadcast, 652-3

Golding, Hon. W. H.—Con.
St. Catharines Collegiate students, visitors in Senate gallery, 461
Senate, Vacancies—British North America Acts Amendment bill, 508
Divorce Committee, work of, 508
Yukon Pipelines Limited bill, 415, 432-5, 559

Gold Mining
High cost of production, 406
Investing public, 412
Marginal properties, 412-13
Negotiations between management and labour, 411
Ore blocking, 409-10
Ontario Government report on industry, 410
Price of gold, 407-9, 413; American market, 408
Rate of assistance—new formula, 407
Silicosis, 408-9; report of Workmen's Compensation Board, 408; statistics, 409; control of disease, 409
Subsidies, 407, 411, 413
Value of industry to Canadian economy, 411, 413
See Emergency Gold Mining Assistance bill

Gordon, Donald, President, Canadian National Railways
Evidence before committee—capital revision write-offs, 374, 685; competition with Canadian Pacific Railway, 375; sale of four hotels, 375, 379, 382
Labour costs, two lines of approach to reduction of, 141

Gouin, Hon. L. M.
Beauregard, Hon. Elie, the late—tribute to his memory, 7
King, Hon. James H., the late—tribute to his memory, 803-4
Public Service Superannuation bill—rep of com-3r, 403

Government Employees Compensation bill, 1r, 515; 2r, 556-9; ref to com, 559; rep of com-3r, 561; r.a., 732

Governor General, Right Hon. Vincent Massey, C. H.
Opening of Parliament, Speech from the Throne, 1; message of thanks for Address in reply, 231
Deputy of Governor General, Hon. Patrick Kerwin, Chief Justice
Royal Assent, 29, 355, 359, 372, 398, 415, 424, 541, 549
See Administrator of the Government

Grain
Commissioners, Board of
Salary increases and appointment of additional commissioner, 363
Tributes to Donald McKenzie, Chief Commissioner, and R. W. Milner, Commissioner, 365
Feed Grains—subsidies on, 115, 209, 380, 382-5, 387, 389
Suitability of light weight wheat, 817-18
Historical survey of development of Canada Grain Act, 362-4
Marketing, 363; early marketing, 365
Shipments and freight rates, inquiry, 179, 271, 307; answer, 308
See Canada Grain bill; Wheat

Great Britain—See United Kingdom

Great Lakes Fisheries Convention bill. 1r, 515; 2r, 561; ref to com, 565; rep of com-3r, 580; r.a., 732

Grenfell, Sir Wilfred, tribute to work in Newfoundland, 764

Guaranteed annual wage, 754

Haig, Hon. John T. (Leader of the Opposition)
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 30
Appropriation bills
No. 1, 390
No. 2, 374-6, 381
No. 3, 548
No. 4, 704
Blind Persons bill, 705
British North America Acts Amendment bill. See Senate, Vacancies, below
Canada Agricultural Products Standards bill, 597-8
Export trade, 597-8
Maintenance of standards necessary, 597-8
Canada Grain bill, 365-6
Chief Commissioner, D. G. McKenzie, and Commissioner, R. W. Milner, 365
Early marketing, 365
Canadian Curling Championship—tribute to competing teams, 282
Canadian Forces bill, 555
Amendment proposed, 600-3; negatived, 609-10
Common-law wife, pension rights, 601-2
Rep of com-3r, passed on div, 657
Canadian National Railways
Financing and Guarantee bill, 685
Gordon, Donald, President—Evidence before committee:
Capital revision, write-offs, 374, 685

Haig, Hon. John T.—Con.
Canadian National Railways—Con.
Gordon, Donald—Con.
Competition with Canadian Pacific Railway, 375
Sale of four hotels, 375, 379, 382
Canadian Premier Life Insurance Company bill, 753
Credit buying, 34
Criminal Code—Senate membership on Joint Committee on certain questions of criminal law, 72-3; committee quorum, 110
Customs bill, 578-9
Divorce
Committee, work of, 648-50
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 211, 215, 322, 338-44
Bill of 1938, 342
Canadian Bar Association, 341, 343
Domicile—wives should have same rights as husbands, 343
Grounds, proposed, for divorce, 341-2
Women, position of under present law, 339-41
Evidence, printing of, 127-9
Petitions, deadline for completion of, 24-6
Procedure, 767; attitude of certain members of House of Commons, 648-9, 767; challenge to Commons to do divorce work if not satisfied with that of Senate, 648-9
Estimates, the, 130-1
Referred to Committee on Finance, 296; rep of com, 667
Supplementary estimates, 374-6, 381
Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas bill, 318
Farm loans, Government guarantee to banks, 180, 186
Farmers' incomes—British Wheat Agreement, 712
Federal district—cost of municipal services, 679-80
Floods
Damage to crops in Western Canada, 746
Expenditures on dyking and reclamation in Manitoba and British Columbia, 654
Germany, Federal Republic of
Accession to North Atlantic Treaty, 81-3
Canada, responsibility of, 34
France, political situation in, 82
Germany, fear of, 81, 83
Rearmament, 34-5
Great Lakes Fisheries Convention bill, 563
Historic Sites and Monuments bill, 499
Monument commemorating first survey in Western Canada, 499
Need for caution in widening definition of "historic place", 499

Haig, Hon. John T.—Con.
Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation bill, 54
Internal Economy Committee—report, 561
International River Improvements bill, 722
Judges bill, 708-9, 711-14, 716
Bench, impartiality of, 712
Increase in salaries, 712, 714
Political appointments, 711, 713-14
King, Hon. James H., birthday felicitations to, 30
Labour—high wages and taxation, 31
Library of Parliament bill, 205-7, 226
Reconstruction, completion of, 206
Staff, 208
Municipal Grants bill, 678, 679-80
Municipal services, 678-9
Narcotic Drug Traffic Committee, 224; Manitoba representation on, 224-5
Northwest Territories bill, 416-17, 421
Ottawa, traffic conditions in, 680
Parliament—forecast date of closing, 593
Petitions for Private Bills, inquiry, 194; answer, 201
Petroleum Transmission Company bill, 429
Pipe Line bills—two companies in same district, 434
Prairie Farm Rehabilitation bill, 624, 654
Queen Elizabeth, Queen Mother, visit to Canada, 31
Railway bill, 621
S & M Pipeline Limited bill—Commons amendment, 551
Senate
Procedure—placing of statement on record, 170-1
Rules—explanation of bill on second reading, 578
Vacancies—British North America Acts Amendment bill, 453-5, 491, 520
Manitoba, representatives of, 454
Opposition not strong enough, 454-5
Prime Minister, tribute to, 454-5; problem of filling vacancies, 454-5
Senatorship, qualifications for, 454-5
Senators, work of, 648-9
Tributes to deceased senators, 6-7, 111-12, 471
Sharp & Dohme (Canada) Ltd. bill, patent fee, 367
Stanmount Pipe Line Company bill, 439
Subsidies, beef and butter, 376
Supply bills—more time needed for study of by Senate, 548
Taxation—income, corporation and sales tax, 32-3
Trans-Border Pipeline Company Ltd. bill, 445

Haig, Hon. John T.—Con.
Unemployment, 32
Insurance bill (No. 6), 28-9; (No. 328), 663
United Nations
Budget—contributions of member states, 201-2
Canada's representation at, 33, 48
War Veterans Allowance bill, 394, 396
Common-law wife, 395
Winnipeg and St. Boniface Harbour Commissioners bill, 239
Winnipeg—Post Office building in, 680
Yukon Pipelines Limited bill, 434-5, 559

Hardy, Hon. A. C., P.C.
Divorce Committee report—debate far afield, 650
Parliamentary restaurant and Senate chamber, temperature of, 415

Harbours
See New Westminster Harbour Commissioners Loan bill; Toronto Harbour Railway Tracks Agreement bill; Winnipeg and St. Boniface Harbour Commissioners Loan bill

Hawkins, Hon. Charles G.
Historic Sites and Monuments bill, 478-9, 515
Acadians, 200th anniversary of expulsion, 479
Board
Basis of payment to members, 479
Representation on, 479
Work of, deserves highest commendation, 478
"Historic place", definition broadened, 478

Hayden, Hon. Salter A.
Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company bill, 237
British North America Acts Amendment bill, See Senate Vacancies, below
Caledonian-Canadian Insurance Company bill, 233, 257
Canada Agricultural Products Standards bill, 611
Forfeiture of vehicle or other thing used in violation of act, 611
Governor in Council, powers of, 611-12
Canada-Ireland Income Tax Agreement bill, 332-5, 369
Double taxation, avoidance of, 332
Exemptions, 333
Witholding tax on dividends, 332
Canada-Ireland Succession Duty Agreement bill, 335, 369
Agreed situs of property, rules for, 335
Double taxation, avoidance of, 335

Hayden, Hon. Salter A.—Con.
Canadian Forces bill, 605-8; rep of com, 555; bill ref back to com, 600; rep of com-3r, 657
Common-law wife, pension rights, 606-8; same provision in other acts, 606
Treasury Board, discretionary power, 607
Commercial Travellers' Association of Canada bill, 405, 459
Consolidated Pipe Lines Company bill, 515
Customs bill, 555, 570-7, 579, 580
Appeals, procedure for, 573-5
Goods, value of for calculation of duty, 570-3; reappraisal within two years, 574-5; importer and purchaser jointly and severally liable for payment of additional duties, 576-7
Race horses, 573
Refund, 576
Smuggling, 576
Dominion General Life Insurance Company bill, 2r-ref to com, 554
Emergency Gold Mining Assistance bill, 412-14, 459
Industry, valuable to Canada, 413
Marginal properties, 412-13
Proposed formula might not benefit enough producers, 413
Subsidies, 413
Equitable Fire Insurance Company of Canada bill, rep of com-3r. 460
Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas bill, rep of com, 337
Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation bill, rep of com-3r, 75
Meat Inspection bill—rep of com, 594-5
Smuggling, 595
Standards of products, 594
Members of Parliament Retiring Allowance bill, rep of com-3r, 369
Petroleum Transmission Company bill—rep of com-3r, 459
Precious Metals Marking bill, rep of com-3r, 369
Provident Assurance Company bill—rep of com-3r, 594
Royal Architectural Institute of Canada bill, 233-4
Building fund, 234
Senate
Rules—explanation of bill on second reading, 558
Vacancies—British North America Acts Amendment bill, 474-8
Constitutional aspects, 477
No legal sanction for failure to fill vacancies, 476-7
Public reaction if bill rejected, 475-7
Territorial representation, 474
Work of Senate affected by vacancies, 475

Hayden, Hon. Salter A.—Con.
Trans-Prairie Pipelines Ltd. bill, rep of com, 459; 3r, 460
Unemployment Insurance bill (No. 328), 658
Veterans Benefit bill, rep of com, 555
Victoria Insurance Company of Canada bill, 2r, 233; 3r, 320
Yukon Pipelines Limited bill, rep of com-3r, 459

Health Insurance, Prepaid
Canadian Medical Association, 810-11
Individual and group insurance, 813
Poliomyelitis—serum, 810-13
Provinces, work accomplished by, 812, 814
Rural municipalities, services in, 814, 817
Salk vaccine, 812-13
Sickness and accident insurance statistics, 811
State medicine, 809
Trans-Canada Medical Plans, 810-13

Highway accidents and traffic, 159, 160, 821
Railway grade crossing accidents, 615-19

Historic Sites and Monuments
Acadians, 200th anniversary of expulsion, 479, 500
Board of, representation on and basis of payment to members, 479-80
Definition of "historic place" broadened, 478-9, 499-500
Monument commemorating first survey in Western Canada, 499
Northwest Mounted Police—early heroes in Western Canada, 509
St. Roch, Royal Canadian Mounted Police schooner, site for, 510
Saskatchewan, places commemorated in, 510

Hodges, Hon. Nancy
Address in reply to Speech from the throne—motion for, 12-18
Aluminum Company of Canada, 13
Development at Kitimat, 14
British Columbia
Industrial development in, 13-15
Population, over-65 age group, 16-18
Unemployment, 16
British North America Acts Amendment bill, 492
Columbia River project, 12-14, 116-17
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 213, 215, 234-6, 331
Circumstantial evidence, 235
Cruelty, definition of 213, 215
Grounds, proposed, for divorce, 235; incurable insanity, 235-6

Hodges, Hon. Nancy—Con.
Foreign Aircraft Third Party Damage bill, 273
Geriatrics, 17
Gillespie Mortgage Corporation bill, 427, 457
Longevity, 16-18
Municipal Grants Act—federal properties, 15
Older citizens, employment problem of, 16-18
Ripple Rock, proposed removal of, 15-16
War Veterans Allowance bill, 392-6
Casual earnings, 392
Death-bed marriage, 395
English divorce, recognition of, 396

Hogs
See Canada Agricultural Products Standards bill, 590-2; Meat Inspection bill, 588

Hoover, Herbert, former President of United States—Quotation from speech on Germany, 92

Horner, Hon. R. B.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 115-23
Appropriation bill No. 5, 827
Government expenditures, 827
Alcoholic liquors, adulteration of, 122-3
Atomic power, 115; Dr. Benjamin Ralph, 116
Baudette and Rainy River Municipal Bridge Company bill, 566
Bread, brown—colouring of, 122
British market for Canadian apples, inquiry, 820
Trade with Great Britain, 821-2
British North America Acts Amendment bill. See Senate, Vacancies, below
Butter, Canadian, surplus of, 120
Canada Agricultural Products Standards bill, 590-2, 599
Bacon, Canadian and Danish, 590
Hogs, grading of, 591-2
Livestock, standards and grading of, 590-2
Canadian National Railways Act—interprovincial trucking traffic, 683
Churchill, Sir Winston, originator of NATO idea, 105
Churchill, Port of, 117-18, 615
Cargoes for Great Britain, 822
Conditions at, 615
Customs office required, 118
Hudson Bay-Churchill route, time limit for insurance extended, 821
Railway from Flin Flon, 118

Horner, Hon. R. B.—Con.
Columbia River project, 115-16, 138-9, 725
Cost of living, 119
Customs bill, 574, 577
Divorce Committee report—work of the Senate, 650
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 305-6, 311-13, 321, 323
Canadian Bar Association resolution, 312
Changed social conditions, 306, 311
Doukhobors—marriage and family life, 305
Public opinion, 312
Withdrawal of statement, 310
Eskimos—survival of party in northland, 70
Estimates, the—report of Finance committee, 670
Farmers, income declined, 707-8, 734
Problems of in Western Canada, 735
Fertilizer—potash, 815; smelting process by-product, 816
Germany, Federal Republic of—accession to North Atlantic Treaty, 105
Valuable ally in defence of Europe, 105
Highway accidents, 618-19, 821
Historic Sites and Monuments bill, 510
Immigration, 119
Income tax, 119
International River Improvements bill, 725
Judges bill, 706-8, 716, 720, 734-6
Amendment for six months' hoist, 736
Bill presented at inopportune time, 706-7, 735
Canada's economic picture, 707-8, 736
Good candidates for Bench, no evidence of shortage of, 707-8, 735
Lawyers, earnings of, 707, 735
Library of Parliament bill, 205
Meat Inspection bill, 588
Grading of hogs, 588
Municipal Grants bill, 676, 682
Narcotic drug traffic
Addicts, number of, 225
Idleness one of chief causes of addiction, 731
Institutional treatment desirable, 731
Personal determination necessary for cure of addiction, 731-2
National Parks bill, 586
Newfoundland National Park, 586
Waterton Lakes National Park, 586
New Zealand cheese, 120
Prairie Farm Rehabilitation bill, 623-4
Irrigation, 624
Sunnybrook dam, 624
Queen Elizabeth, the Queen Mother—visit to Ottawa—suggested as next Governor General, 115
Railway bill—grade crossing accidents, 618

Horner, Hon. R. B.—Con.
Red Fife Wheat, 121-2
Royal Commission on Canadian Economy, 821-2, 824
Russian proposal for Parliamentary visits, 167
St. Lawrence seaway, 117
Saskatchewan
Access to northern territory, 558
Golden jubilee of province, 510
Historic sites, 510
Potash deposits, 815
Senate, Vacancies—British North America Acts Amendment bill, 492, 530-4
Age limit for senators, 531
Effect of vacancies on committee work, 531
Newfoundland, appointees from, 532
Non-partisan appointments, desirability of, 532-3
Political affiliations, changes in, 533
Public reaction if bill rejected, 534
Territorial representation, 532-3
Toll roads and toll bridges, 122, 566
Unemployment, 119-20, 827
Unemployment Insurance bill, 660, 662
United Nations budget—Russia's contribution to, 198
Wheat
Crop estimate, 818
Feed grain—light weight wheat, 817, 821
Rust, 817, 821

House of Commons
Members' criticism of Senate Divorce Committee procedure and work, 648-9, 767
Money bills originate in, 46
See British North America Acts Amendment bill, 447-8, 465, 517-18, 524-5

Housing, 2, 827
Bank loans, 762
Crown-owned dwellings—equivalent of full taxes paid by Government to municipality, 656
Increase in, 67
Insurance, self-liquidating policy covering balance of payments, 200
Insured loans under National Housing Act, 457
National Housing Act, 20-1, 67, 136, 149, 155
Older citizens, 149

Howard, Hon. Charles B.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 194-201
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 248-9
Marriage vows, respect for, 249
Fafard, Hon. J. Fernand, the late, tribute to his memory, 473

Howard, Hon. Charles B.—Con.
Foreign Aircraft Third Party Damage bill, 277
Housing—self-liquidating insurance policy, 200
St. Lawrence Seaway, 199-200
United Nations, 195-202
Asian situation, 198
President Eisenhower's prompt action regarding fleet, 198
Budget, contributions to by member countries, 197
Russian, 197-8, 200-2
Building, site of, 195
Canada's donation to, 195
Canada's favoured position, 198
Canadian delegation and Parliamentary observers, 196-7
Economic and Social Council and specialized agencies, 196
Pearson, Hon. Lester B., tribute to, 195
Quotation from speech at opening of General Assembly, 195
Problems of—Cyprus, 199; West New Guinea, 199
San Francisco Conference, 197
Security Council, 196
Special Fund for Economic Development of under-developed nations (SUNFED), loans, 199
Technical assistance, 161
War, causes and preventives of, 198-9

Howden, Hon. John P.
Canadian National Railways hotel system, operating loss, 378
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 244, 248-9
Domicile, 248
Epilepsy and insanity, 244
Feed grains, freight subsidy on, 385
Narcotic Drug Traffic, 224
Committee report, 740-1
Institutional isolation of addicts—National Institute of Mental Health, Lexington, Kentucky, 741
Senate, Vacancies—British North America Acts Amendment bill, 457
Bill does not go far enough, 457
Winnipeg Free Press editorial, "The Senate's Future", 457
Territorial Lands bill, 320

Howe, Right Hon. C. D., P.C. (Minister of Trade and Commerce, and Minister of Defence Production)—tributes to, 21, 799-801

Hudson's Bay Company—purchase of prairies from, 123-5

Hudson Bay incident—plane immobilized on ice floe, 615

Hugessen, Hon. A. K.
Appropriation bill No. 5, 828-9
Baudette and Rainy River Municipal Bridge Company bill, rep of com-3r, 583
Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company bill, 237
British North America Acts Amendment bill, 489-95. See Senate, Vacancies, below
Canadian Forces bill—Common-law wife, 603
Canadian National Railways bill—rep of com-3r, 719
Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee bill, rep of com, 719; 3r, 720
Canadian National Railways Refunding bill, rep of com-3r, 719
Consolidated Pipe Lines Company bill, rep of com-3r, 555
Criminal Code—Senate membership on Joint Committee on certain questions of criminal law, 73
Customs Tariff bill, 795-6
Interests of consumer, 796
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill—desertion, 216
Federal District Commission, estimates for, 828
"Traffic and Transportation Plan for Ottawa", 828; railway station, 829
Fredericton & Grand Lake Coal & Railway Company bill, rep of com, 369; rep of com-3r, 373
Germany, Federal Republic of—accession to North Atlantic Treaty, 83-8
Brussels Treaty, 83-4
European Defence Community—France's rejection, 85
German rearmament, 86-8
NATO, 83-7; Canada's declaration as party to, 84
Paris Agreements, provisions of, 83
Russia, attitude of, in international affairs, 87
Western European Union, 83-5
Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation bill, 54
International River Improvements bill, 720-2
Columbia River and tributaries, proposed development of, 720, 722
Federal control, 720-2
Irrigation, British Columbia and Saskatchewan, 721
McNaughton, General—evidence before Commons committee, 720, 722
Provincial rights, 721-2
Judges bill, 708-9; M for 3r postponed, 720
Increased salaries justified by increase in cost of living, 708
Pensions should be proportionately increased, 709

Hugesson Hon. A. K. —Con.
King, Hon. James H., the late, tribute to his memory, 805
London and Port Stanley Railway Company bill, 237
Northwest Territories bill—protection of interests of Indians and Eskimos, 419
Public Service Superannuation bill, 401
Radio bill—rep of com, 672; 3r, 718
Apparent interference with liberty of subject, 438, 717
Secrecy of private communications necessary, 717
Railway bill—rep of com-3r, 672
S & M Pipeline Limited bill—rep of com-3r, 460
St. Mary's River Bridge Company bill—rep of com, 307; 3r, 336
Senate
Rules—explanation of bill on second reading, 559
Vacancies—British North America Acts Amendment bill, 489-95, 535-6
Bill would not be enforceable, 491-2, 535-6
Constitutional aspect, 491
Legal implications and effect, 489-94, 535
Moral and practical effect, 491-2, 536
Prime Minister would not be embarrassed by bill, 493
Resolution suggested by Hon. Mr. Farris, 493-4
Time limit for filling vacancies, 490, 494
Sharp & Dohme (Canada) Ltd. bill—rep of com, 403
Stanmount Pipe Line Company bill—rep of com-3r, 502
Toronto Harbour Railway Tracks Agreement bill—rep of com-3r, 672
Transport bill—rep of com-3r, 806
Westspur Pipe Line Company bill—rep of com, 338

Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation bill (Hon. Mr. Euler). 1r, 27; 2r, 53; ref to com, 54; rep of com-3r, 75; r. a., 360

Hurricanes—See Floods and Storms

Hurtubise, Hon. Joseph Raoul, the late—Tributes to his memory, 11-13

Hydrogen bomb—unsuccessful attempts at international control of, 89

Immigration, vigorous program needed, 119

Immigration and Labour Committee
Appointment, 56; quorum, 57; reports, 561, 746

Income Tax
Appeal board
Salary increases, 785-7, 792
Work of, highly important, 786-7
Business on cash basis, 780
Corporations with taxable income in excess of $20,000, 778
Depreciation on insured property, 777; on capital assets in estates, 778-9
Double taxation treaties, 773
Earned surplus of company taken over by another, 780
England—tax on Canadian residents in, 334
Exemption—new mines, 779; single person with dependant, 777
Farmers—amounts paid by in various provinces, 188; arms-length transactions, 189
Federal-provincial problem, 67
Investment companies, 779
Labour and, 139
Low salary group, 32-3, 44
Profit sharing plans, 779, 781
Provincial tax, 776, 778
Correspondence between Prime Minister and Premier of Quebec, 30, 36
Rates in Canada and other countries, 45, 119
Reductions—personal, 776-7; corporate, 776, 778, 781
Rents, surtax removed, 778
Sales of inventories and accounts receivable on winding-up, 780
See Canada-Ireland Income Tax Agreement bill

Income Tax bill. 1r, 753; 2r, 776; ref to com, 782; rep of com-3r, 791; authority to print com proceedings, 791; r. a., 832

Indemnities
Legislative Assemblies of provinces, table of rates, 419-20
Northwest Territories Council, 416
Yukon Council, 422
See Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances bill

Indians
Lands on reserves, power to expropriate for St. Lawrence seaway, 808
Northwest Territories, Indians resident in, 419-21
Prairie provinces, problem of Indians in, 123-7
Red River Colony
Government of, 123-6
"Rebellion", historical survey, 124-6
Riel, Louis, 123-6
Treatment of Indians and Metis by British Government, 124; by Canada, 125-6

Indians—Con.
Roving tribes on prairies in early days, 509
Waterton Lakes National Park—exchange of land with Blood Band, 584-6
Welfare, supplementary estimates for, 380, 389
See National Parks bill; Northwest Territories bill

Inquiries
British market for Canadian apples, inquiry, 820; answer, 823
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Televising of British Empire Games, inquiry and answer, 58, 111
Congress of International Chamber of Commerce at Tokyo, inquiry, 767; answer, 774
Fraser River Basin Board, inquiry and answer, 673
Grain shipments and freight rates, inquiry, 179, 271, 307; answer, 308
New Brunswick Potato Marketing Board, inquiries and answers, 470, 589
Opium and narcotic drug traffic, inquiry, 43; answer, 47
Petitions for private bills, inquiry, 194; answer, 201
Subsidies on feed grains, 115; answer, 209
Transcontinental rail schedules, inquiry, 76; answer, 94

Insurance
Caledonian Insurance Company of Canada bill, 64, 109
Canadian Premier Life Insurance Company (Dominion General Life Insurance Company) bill, 540, 554
Commercial Travellers' Association of Canada bill, 430
Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company bill, 415, 440, 483
Equitable Fire Insurance Company of Canada bill, 415, 432, 460
Fisheries Improvement Loans bill, 750
Gerling Insurance Company of Canada bill, 64, 109
Housing—self-liquidating insurance policy covering balance of payments, 200
Income Tax bill—insurance, annual depreciation on property, 777
Provident Assurance Company bill, 569, 581
See Unemployment Insurance bill

Internal Economy Committee
Appointment, 55; quorum, 57; reports, 57, 241, 561, 580, 776, 809, 820
Three senators to act during recess of Parliament, 809, 820

International bridges
See Baudette and Rainy River Municipal Bridge Company bill; St. Mary's River Bridge Company bill

International Chamber of Commerce, Congress of, at Tokyo, 767-75
Inquiry, 767; answer, 774
See Trade

International Finance Corporation, 771, 774-5

International Monetary Fund, 772

International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission, 137, 139, 722-5

International River Improvements bill. 1r, 594; 2r, 720; 3r, 738; r.a., 784

International situation
Suez Canal and Cyprus, 199
See Formosa; France; Germany; Russia; United Nations; United States

International trade—See Trade

International Trade Fair—reduced appropriation for, 826

International waters
Columbia river and tributaries, 720-4
Definition of international river and boundary waters, 720-1
Federal and provincial jurisdictions, 721-2
International Joint Commission, 720, 722
Mica Creek, proposed dam, 722, 724-5
Saskatchewan, irrigation, 721
Sockeye salmon industry on Fraser River, 722-5
See International River Improvements bill; St. Lawrence Seaway

Ireland
Canada-Ireland Income Tax Agreement bill, 282, 332, 369
Canada-Ireland Succession Duty Agreement bill, 282, 335, 369
Tributes to Ireland's Patron Saint, 308-10

Iron ore—development of in province of Quebec, 21

Isnor, Hon. Gordon B.
Appropriation bill No. 5, 829-30
Canadian National Railways—improved rolling stock in Maritimes, 686
Canadian Premier Life Insurance Company (Dominion General Life Insurance Company) bill, 583

Isnor, Hon. Gordon B.—Con.
Customs bill, 573
Customs Tariff bill, 795
Loss leaders, 795
Machinery for fish products, 795
Estimates, the Finance Committee, report of, 669-70
Civil Service, 669
Department of National Defence, civilian employees, 669
Expenditures, suggested division of, 670
Printing Bureau, 669
Provinces, suggested inclusion of all payments to, 670
Work of, 829-30
United States budgetary system compared, 829
Fisheries Improvement Loans bill, 761-3
Clam industry, 762
Credit unions, 762-3; St. Francis Xavier University, work of, 762-3
Loans to fishermen, 762-3
Grain shipments and freight rates, inquiry 179, 271, 307; answer, 308
Historic Sites and Monuments bill, 499-501
Acadians, 200th anniversary of expulsion, 500
Board—provincial representation on, 500
Definition of "historic place", 500
Nova Scotia—many historic sites, 500-1
Income Tax bill, 780-1
International Chamber of Commerce—query regarding Poland, 775
Library of Parliament bill, 205
London and Port Stanley Railway Company bill, 227
Meat Inspection bill—licence fee, 588
Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances bill, 358
Municipal Grants bill—grants to municipalities, 682
National Harbours Board bill, 331, 338
Increase in membership of Board, 331
Radio bill—authority for inspection, 438
Railway bill—Grade Crossing Fund, 620; reference to committee, 621
Senate
Delay in receiving War Veterans Allowance bill from Commons, reason for, 371
Rules—explanation of bill on second reading, 559
Toronto Harbour Railway Tracks Agreement bill, 655
Tourist Traffic Committee—sitting postponed, 458; empowered to make inquiry, 555
Transport bill, 788-9
Competition between railways and truckers, 789
Water carriers, 788

Isnor, Hon. Gordon B.—Con.
Unemployment Insurance bill (No. 328), 660, 662
United Nations budget—contribution by Canada, 200; Russia, 200; United States, 197
War Veterans Allowance bill, 371, 395
Yukon Pipelines Limited bill, 433, 435
Provisions covering radio, telephone and telegraph communications , 433
Pipeline licences, issuance of, 435

Japan
Congress of International Chamber of Commerce, at Tokyo, 767-75
Canada-Japan trade treaty—unbalanced trade, 773
Hospitality of Japanese, 774
Societies, Japanese, for cultivating international good will, 773-4

Jodoin, Hon. Mariana B.
Beauregard, Hon. Elie, the late—tribute to his memory, 7

Judges bill. 1r, 672; 2r, 705; M for 3r postponed, 720; 3r, 734; r.a., 784

Judiciary, The
British Columbia Court of Appeal and Supreme Court, one additional Judge each, 706, 734
High calibre of Judiciary, 712, 715-16, 737
Northwest Territories, additional Judge, 706, 734
Pensions, 706, 709, 716
Political appointments, 711, 713-14, 716
Salaries, increase in, 706-17
Standard of living, 708, 711, 738
Travelling allowances, increase in, 706

Kaiser Dam, 12-13, 115-16, 136-9

Kenya
British accomplishments in, 60
Game and wildlife, 59
Grievances of natives, 60-2
Hospitals and public health, 58, 60
Living conditions, 59-61
Mau Maus, 59, 61-2
Owen Falls reservoir and dam—Lake Victoria, 59
Plural marriages, 60

King, Hon. James H., P.C.
Acting Speaker, 459
Birthday felicitations, 30
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 213

King, Hon. James H. P.C.—Con.
Estimates, the
Discussion of should not precede Budget speech, 131
Reference to Finance Committee in 1943, 131
Narcotic drugs—more effective control over manufacture, sale and distribution needed, 225-6
Senate
Rules—explanation of bill on second reading, 558
Vacancies—British North America Acts Amendment bill, 453
Continuing vacancies not in best interest of Parliament, 453
Prime Minister—problem of filling vacancies, 453
Time limit—not advisable to insist on, 453

King, Hon. James H., P.C., the late—tributes to his memory, 802-5

King, Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie, P.C., the late—Federal district—quotation from speech delivered in 1944, 676

Kinley, Hon. John J.
Canadian Forces bill—amendment to refer bill back to committee, 605; agreed to, 610
Customs Tariff bill, 796-8
Dumping duties, 797
Fish trade with United States, 797
Free trade outmoded, 797-8
United States tariff, 797
Fisheries Improvement Loans bill, 749-52, 765
Banks, 751, 765
Conservation of fisheries, 759, 765
Credit unions, 750-1
Insurance coverage, 750
Intermediate credit, 749
International control of fisheries, 759, 765
Loans, 749, 750, 766
Maritime provinces—co-operative system, 750-1; Lunenburg merchants, 751
Newfoundland fisheries, 765-6
Senate, Vacancies—British North America Acts Amendment bill, 484-9, 493-5
Amendment of constitution should be matter of government policy, 485
Bill unwise at this time, 485; resolution preferable, 485
Non-partisan appointments, 487, 489
Prime Minister—practice regarding appointments accords with precedent, 486; prerogative, 486, 489; problem of filling vacancies, 487
Territorial representation, 487-8

Labour
Costs, 141
Technological advancement in industry, 140-1
Unions, demands by, 140
Wages
Canadian economy, high wages in relation to, 666
Lower wages, 707-8, 734, 736
Taxation and high wages, 31, 139

Lambert, Hon. Norman P.
Appropriation Bill No. 5, 827-31
Baudette and Rainy River Municipal Bridge Company bill—international bridges largely financed by American capital, 566, 568
British North America Acts Amendment bill. See Senate, Vacancies, below
Buchanan, Hon. W. A., the late, tribute to his memory, 11
Canada Elections bill—costs of elections, 740
Canada Grain bill—reference to committee, 366
Canadian Forces bill—right of appeal to civil court, 543
Civil Service—salary increases, 785-6
Customs bill—no discussion of principle, 579
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 244-5, 265, 322-3, 347
Bill of 1938—important debate on, 245
Post-war social and economic dislocations, cause of many ill-advised marriages, 245
Quebec and Newfoundland, lack of divorce courts in, reason for number of petitions to Parliament, 265
Estimates, the
Background of reference to Committee on Finance, 297-8
Closer study by Senate desirable, 828
Report of committee
Summary of government expenditures by departments, 668
Tribute to Chairman (Hon. Mr. Crerar), 668
Work of committee
Estimates not fully examined into, 827-8
United States budgetary system commended, 828-9, 831
Fafard, Hon. J. Fernand, the late, tribute to his memory, 473
Federal District—Municipal Grants bill, 677-80
Fisheries Improvement Loans bill, 752
Foreign Aircraft Third Party Damage bill—status of the convention, 277
Health insurance, prepaid—rural municipal hospitalization, 814

Lambert, Hon. Norman P.—Con.
International trade—resolution for appointment of committee next session, 807
Library of Parliament bill, 204-7, 226, 238
Librarian and Associate Librarian, 204, 206
Question of privilege—press report regarding staff, 208
Reconstruction of Library, 205
Municipal Grants bill, 677-9, 680
Federal District Commission, 678
Grants to municipalities in lieu of taxes, 678-9
Joint Committee of 1944 on federal-municipal relations, 677-8
Municipal services, 679
National Capital—unsatisfactory progress toward objective, 677-8
School facilities, 678
Ottawa, City of—Municipal Grants bill, 677-80
Petroleum Transmission Company bill, 399
Potash and Phosphoric Acid, inquiry, 816
Public Officials Salaries bill, 785-6, 792
Salary increases—Income Tax Appeal Board, Board of Transport Commissioners, Tariff Board, 785-6
Tributes to chairman of Tariff Board, Hector B. McKinnon, 786; Chairman of Transport Board, 786
Senate
Internal Economy Committee—three senators to act during recess of Parliament, 808-9
Vacancies—British North America Acts Amendment bill, 361, 494, 502-8, 517
Bill would improve usefulness and strengthen status of Senate, 502
Constitutional aspects, 502, 504-5
Federal system—important place of second chamber in, 504
Functions of Senate, 504; opinions on, quoted, 507-8
Practical and political aspects, 502, 506-7
Prime Minister, 503; tribute to, 504
Senate reform, 502-4, 508
Work impaired by vacancies, 506, 508
Territorial Lands bill, 321
United Nations budget, Russian contribution to, 200
Westcoast Transmission Company, Limited bill—rep of com, 526
Yukon bill, 422

Land values, increases in, 737

Library of Parliament
Joint Committee—Senate members, 43; Commons members, 145; addition to Senate members, 746
Librarian and Associate Librarian, 204, 206
Question of privilege—press report regarding staff, 208
Reconstruction of, 205, 222
Report tabled, 11

Library of Parliament bill, 1r, 4; 2r, 204; M for 3r, 207, stands, 226; 3r (division), 238; question of privilege—press report, 208; r.a., 733

Livestock
Standards and grading of, 590-2
See Canada Agricultural Products Standards bill; Meat Inspection bill

London and Port Stanley Railway Company bill (Hon. Mr. Taylor). 1r, 204; 2r, 226; ref to com, 227; rep of com—amdt concurred in, 237; 3r, 238; r.a., 398

Longevity. See Older citizens

Macdonald, Hon. W. Ross, P.C. (Leader of the Government in the Senate and Solicitor General)
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 43-8
Alberta-British Columbia Boundary bill, 436
Appropriation bills,
No. 1. 361, 372, 390
No. 2. 372, 373-4, 379-80, 388-90
No. 3. 547-8
No. 4. 704
No. 5. 826, 830-1
Atomic energy for peace, 48
Baudette and Rainy River Municipal Bridge Company bill, 567-8
Blind Persons bill, 1r, 594
British market for Canadian apples—inquiry stands, 820; inquiry and answer, 823
British North America Acts Amendment bill. See Senate, Vacancies, below
Budget Speech—accommodation for senators in Commons gallery, 402
Burns, Robert—196th anniversary of birth, 64
Butter, floor price, 389
Canada Agricultural Products Standards bill, 1r. 552
Canada Elections bill, 1r, 663
Canada Grain bill, 1r, 337
Canada-Ireland Income Tax Agreement bill, 1r, 282

Macdonald, Hon. W. Ross, P.C.—Con.
Canada-Ireland Succession Duty Agreement bill, 1r, 282
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, televising of British Empire Games—inquiry stands, 58; inquiry and answer, 111
Canadian Curling Championship—tribute to competing teams, 283
Canadian Forces bill, 405, 608
Amendment procedure, 609-10
Common-law wife, 601, 603, 605
Canadian National Railways
Bill (consolidating various statutes), 1r, 644
Finance and Guarantee bill, 1r, 594
Hotel, new, in Montreal—inquiry, 167; answer, 194
Hotels, sale prices, 379; operation, 388-9
Refunding bill, 1r, 594
Churchill, Right Hon. Sir Winston—shared with Canada's Prime Minister (Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent) in creation of NATO, 107. See 77
Commonwealth Prime Ministers, Conference of, London, 107
Criminal Code—Senate membership on Joint Committee on certain questions of criminal law, 70-4; motion, 70; amended, 74; committee quorum, 110
Criminal Code bill, 254, 258
Customs bill, 572
Customs Tariff bill, 783, 796, 806
To prevent unfair competition, 796
Defence Production bill, 799, 806
Minister of Defence Production, increase in salary, 799
Tribute to present Minister (Right Hon. Mr. Howe) and Parliamentary Assistants, 799-800
Wide powers, extended for three years, 799
Regulations, tabling of, 799
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 212-19, 361
Newspaper article—question of privilege, 361
Divorce Committee
Evidence—typewritten copy, 128; printing of, 129
Final report, 647-50
Appreciation of services, 647
Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company bill, 441
Emergency Gold Mining Assistance bill, 1r, 337
Estimates, the Finance Committee, reference of Estimates to, 295-6
Work of, 667, 826, 830-1
House of Commons, change in procedure, 132, 295-6

Macdonald, Hon. W. Ross, P.C.—Con.
Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas bill, 1r, 231
Federal District Commission, 655
Feed grains, subsidies, 115, 389
Felicitations, 35; on appointment as Leader of the Government, 18
Financial Administration bill, 319, 352, 356
Auditor General, salary increase, 352
Foreign Aircraft Third Party Damage bill, 4, 278
Fraser River Basin Board—answer to inquiry, 673
Germany, Federal Republic of, accession to North Atlantic Treaty, 58, 62; motion for approval of protocol, 76-81, 107
Brussels Treaty, 78-80
Canadian Forces in Europe, 79-80
European Defence Community (EDC), 77
Franco-German Agreement on Saar, 78, 80
NATO, 76-80
First envisaged by the Prime Minister (Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent), 77; creation of shared by Mr. St. Laurent and Sir Winston Churchill, 107
Obligations assumed by Germany, 80
Rearmament, 79
Unification, 78
United Kingdom, commitment of, 79
Western European Union (WEU), 78-9
Government Employees Compensation bill, 1r, 515
Grain shipments and freight rates—inquiry, 179, 271; answer, 308
Great Lakes Fisheries Convention bill, 1r, 515
Health insurance, prepaid—appreciation of address by Hon. Mr. Gershaw, 813
Historic Sites and Monuments bill, 1r, 405
Income Tax
Correspondence between Prime Minister and Premier of Quebec regarding provincial tax, 30
Low salary group, 44
Rates in Canada and other countries, 45
Tax dollar, spending, breakdown, 45
Income Tax bill, 1r, 753
Indians, welfare of, 389
International River Improvements bill, 594, 738
International trade—report of committee, 792
Judges bill, 672, 705. 734
British Columbia, two additional Judges, 706, 734
High calibre of Judiciary, 716
Northwest Territories, additional Judge, 706, 734
Pensions, 706, 716
Salaries, increase in, 706, 708, 715-16
Travelling allowances, increase in, 706

Macdonald, Hon. W. Ross, P.C.—Con.
King, Hon. James H., birthday felicitations, 30
Library of Parliament, reconstruction of, 207, 222
Library of Parliament bill, 4, 207
Question of privilege—press report regarding staff, 208
Macphail, Agnes, Memorial, 255
Meat inspection bill, 1r, 552; rep of com-3r, 624
Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances bill, 319, 357-9
Withdrawal allowance, 358
Municipal Grants bill, 611, 655, 681-2, 704
Crown-owned buildings, payment of full taxes equivalent on, 656
Grants to municipalities in lieu of taxes, formula, 656
Amounts paid in 1954, 704
Joint Committee of 1944 on Federal-Municipal Relations, 655; proposed new committee, 47
Parliament Buildings, standard assessment procedure not applicable to, 681
Narcotic Drug Traffic—inquiry, 43, 47; special committee, suggested, 47; appointed, 222; committee report—appreciation of services of members, 741
Addicts—number and classes of, 223-4
Federal responsibility for control, 223
Royal Canadian Mounted Police report, 47, 223
Treatment of addicts, provincial responsibility, 223
National Harbours Board bill, 1r, 246
National Parks bill, 1r, 405
NATO. See Germany, Federal Republic of, above
New Brunswick Potato Marketing Board—inquiries and answers, 470, 589
New Westminster Harbour Commissioners Loan bill, 1r, 405
Northwest Territories bill, 397, 415-17, 419-21
Council members, 416-17
Indemnity, 416
Votes cast in 1954 election, 417
Districts, number of voters in, 417
Indians and Eskimos, 420-1
Revenue and expenditure, 420-1
Ottawa, city of—scenic beauties, 681; See Municipal Grants bill, above
Parliament
Opening of, 1
Prorogation of, 831
Petitions for private bills—inquiry, 194; answer, 201
Potash and Phosphoric Acid—answer to inquiry, 815

Macdonald, Hon. W. Ross, P.C.—Con.
Prairie Farm Assistance bill, 1r, 657
Prairie Farm Rehabilitation bill, 1r, 569
Precious Metals Marking bill, 1r, 4
Prime Minister (Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent)—departure for Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference, London, 107
First to envisage NATO, 77. See 107
Prisons and Reformatories bill, 436, 480-2, 484
New Brunswick—Parole Board—authorized to release inmates of Boys' Industrial Home, 481; penal system, modernization of, 481
Public Officials Salaries bill, 787
Public Service Superannuation Bill, 1r, 337
Radio bill, 405
Railway bill, 502, 615-20
Grade crossing accidents, statistics, 618-20
Grade Crossing Fund, increase in grant to, 615-16
Method of payment, 617, 621
National Safety Conference—motor vehicle accidents, 615-16
Transport Commissioners, Board of, recommendations, 616
Representation bill, 1r, 295
Royal Commission on Canadian Economy, 823-4
Russian proposal for parliamentary visits, 168
S & M Pipeline Limited bill—Commons amendment, 551
St. Lawrence Seaway Authority bill, 704, 814
St. Patrick's Day— tribute to Ireland's Patron Saint, 310
Senate
Business of, 27, 370, 403, 614, 671, 783, 806, 818, 820, 822, 824, 826
Committee sittings, 458
Easter recess, 404
Emergency sittings—authority to convene during adjournment, 371; sitting, 783
Internal Economy Committee—sixth report, 580; eighth report—three senators to act during recess of Parliament, 820
Legislative measures—initiation of in Senate, 46-7, historical sketch, 46; delay in receipt of bills, 388
Procedure
Discussion on Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 168
Placing of statements on Hansard, 170-1
Rules—in re public bills—suspension of, 371, 705

Macdonald, Hon. W. Ross, P.C.—Con.
Senate—Con.
Vacancies—British North America Acts Amendment bill, 448, 515-21
Bill would be ineffective, 518, 520
Constitutional aspects, 515, 517-19
Dignity of Senate not affected by vacancies, 516, 538
Opposition performing proper function well, 516
Practical considerations, 519
Prime Minister—problem of filling vacancies, 519; refusal to fill vacancies on eve of election, 519-20
Work of Senate not impaired by vacancies, 515-16
Senators, work of, 649-50
Tributes to deceased senators, 4, 111, 470, 802
Social security, expenditures for, 45
Territorial Lands bill, 4, 321
Toronto Harbour Railway Tracks Agreement bill, 470
Transcontinental rail schedules—inquiry, 76; answer, 94
Transport bill, 789-90
Trans-Prairie Pipelines Ltd. bill, 431
Unemployment, statistics, 44
Unemployment Insurance bill (No. 6)—increase in supplementary benefit rates, 27-8
Unemployment Insurance bill (No. 328), 594
United Nations
Canadian representation at, 47
Germany, adherence to principles of Charter, 80
Veterans Benefit bill, 471, 553, 570
Provisions of Reinstatement in Civil Employment Act and Unemployment Insurance Act, ineffective after July 1, 1955, 553-4
War Veterans Allowance bill, 391-7
Allowances increased, 391
Casual earnings, 392
Chairman and members of Board—increase in salaries, 394
Children of deceased veterans, 393-4, 397
Common-law widow, 394-6; legal wife, 396
Widows of veterans, 393-4, 396
Wilson, Hon. Cairine R., congratulations on 25th anniversary as member of Senate, 255
Winnipeg and St. Boniface Harbour Commissioners bill, 1r, 4
Women—"persons" under British North America Act, 255
World conditions, improvement in, 48

Macdonald, Hon. W. Ross, P.C.—Con.
Yukon bill, 398, 421-3
Council members, 422; indemnity and living allowance, 422
Population, 422
Yukon Pipelines, Limited bill—radio, telephone and telegraph communications, 433; ref to com, 434-5

MacKinnon, Hon. James A., P.C.
Beauregard, Hon. Elie, the late, tribute to his memory, 9
Buchanan, Hon. W. A., the late, tribute to his memory, 8
Precious Metals Marking bill, 356-7
Quality marks—methods of application to certain articles, 356
Trade marks, 357
Westspur Pipe Line Company bill, 295, 318, 356, 483, 513

Macphail, Agnes, the late—First woman member of House of Commons, 231
Memorial to—Unveiling ceremony, 231, 255-6. See 532

Manitoba
Health insurance, 810
Hudson's Bay Company rule, 123
Provincial representation in Senate, 454
Red River Government, 123-5; rebellion, 124
Wheat, 597
See Floods and Storms; Indians; Prairie Provinces

Maple products industry—replacement of buckets, 381

Marcotte, Hon. Arthur
Birthday congratulations, 248
Canadian Curling Championship—tribute to Saskatchewan, 284
Civil Service Commission, administration, 57
Hurtubise, Hon. Joseph Raoul, the late, tribute to his memory, 113
Library of Parliament bill, 238
Senate—Internal Economy Committee, sixth report, 580; eighth report—three senators to act during recess of Parliament, 820
Unemployment Insurance bill (No. 328), 658

Maritime Provinces
Canadian apples—marketing of in Great Britain, 815, 820, 823
Canadian banks, origin of many in Maritimes, 751

Maritime Provinces—Con.
Canadian National Railways—improved rolling stock, 686
Canso causeway, 2
Chignecto canal, long-delayed project, 142-3
Clam industry, 759-62
Confederation promises to, not realized, 142-3
Credit unions, development of, 750-2, 755-6, 762-3
St. Francis Xavier University—organization work, 752, 756
Ferry services, 2, 159
Herring industry, 758-61
Train services, 159

Mau Maus, 59, 61-2

McDonald, Hon. John A.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 65-70
Apple industry of Nova Scotia—government assistance to—losses incurred through Hurricane "Edna", 65-6, 815
British market for Canadian apples—inquiry, 815; inquiry stands, 820; inquiry and answer, 823
Colombo Plan, 66-7
Criminal Code—second report of Joint Committee, 734, 744
Crop prospects in Western Canada, 818
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 286
Dominion-provincial agreements, taxation, 67
Elections
Apathy of electorate, 67-9
Australia, results of compulsory voting legislation, 68-9
Costs, 67-9
Public affairs—need for greater interest in, 68-70
Voters in last federal election—national average, 68; provincial percentages, 68
Fertilizers—potash and phosphoric acid, 815-17
Fisheries Improvement Loans bill, 752
Credit unions, growth of, 752
St. Francis Xavier University, organization work, 752
German rearmament, 66
Health insurance, prepaid—Salk vaccine, attitude of Great Britain, 812
Housing, increase in—National Housing Act, 67
Judges bill, 706, 709, 711
National Parks bill—Newfoundland National Park, 586

McDonald, Hon. John A.—Con.
Potash and Phosphoric Acid—inquiry and answer, 815-17
Commercial fertilizers—important for farmers to study proper use of, 817
Potash—price reduction, 817
Robertson, Hon. Wishart McL. (Speaker), felicitations on receiving Atlantic Union Committee Award, 65
Royal Commission on Canadian Economy, 824
Televising—President Eisenhower's address to Parliament in 1953, 68; opening of Parliament, 68
Westcoast Transmission Company Limited bill, 541

McGuire, Hon. William H.
First to recommend memorial to David Fife, discoverer of Red Fife Wheat, 52

McIntyre, Hon. James P.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 141-4
Confederation promises made to Maritime provinces not realized, 142-3
Chignecto Canal, long-delayed project, 142-3
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 219
Based on British Act of 1937, 243
Present Canadian law satisfactory, 244
Senate bill of 1938, 244
NATO—The Prime Minister (Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent), originator of idea, 144
Provinces, debts of, 143-4
St. Lawrence seaway, 142

McKeen, Hon. Stanley S.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 160-5
Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company bill—Commons amdts, 361
British Empire and Commonwealth Games at Vancouver, 135
Canada-Ireland Tax Agreement bill, 333, 335
Ships—place of residence, head office of company, 333
Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas bill, 318
Great Lakes Fisheries Convention bill, 564-5
Halibut and salmon fisheries in British Columbia, regulation of, 565
International Chamber of Commerce, Canadian Executive, member of, 768
National Harbours Board bill, 332
Territorial Lands bill, 321
United Nations, 160-5
Business opportunities in Asia, 162
Canada's contribution, 161, 165

McKeen, Hon. Stanley S.—Con.
United Nations—Con.
Canadian delegations—Senate representatives, 161; daily procedure, 161
Food and Agriculture Organization, work of, 163
Technical Assistance Program—operations in various under-developed countries, 161-5

McLean, Hon. A. Neil
Canada Agricultural Products Standards bill, 596-7
Brand names well known to foreign buyers, 596
Canadian trade commissioners efficient, 596
Export trade—unnecessary restrictions should be avoided, 597
Violations of Act—heavy penalties, 597
Customs Tariff bill, 798
Foreign currencies, non-acceptance of, deterrent to trade, 798
Machinery and apparatus used in fishing industry, 798
Fiscal policy of Government, 757; national debt, 757
Fisheries Improvement Loans bill, 756-61
Clam industry, 759-61
Conservation, 759, 765
Herring industry, 758-61
Research into fisheries, extension necessary, 757-61
International Trade
Notice of motion to empower Canadian Trade Relations Committee to conduct inquiry into, 203; motion agreed to, 222; rep of com, 791; amended and concurred in, 806-7

McNaughton, General A. G. L., P.C., Chairman, Canadian section, International Joint Commission
International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission—conference with, 722-5
International River Improvements bill—evidence before Commons committee, 720, 722

Meat Inspection bill. 1r, 552; 2r, 587; ref to com, 588; rep of com, 594; com amdts concurred in-3r, 624; amdts concurred in by Commons, 644; r.a., 733

Meighen, Right Hon. Arthur, P.C.
Quotations from speeches in re
Government legislative measures amended by Senate, 507
Matrimony and the home, 322

Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances bill. 1r, 319; 2r, 357; ref to com, 359; rep of com-3r, 369; r.a., 398

Mendes-France, Mr., Prime Minister of France—leadership of, 82, 85

Metis, 123-6. See Indians

Mining
Income Tax bill—new mines, 3-year exemption, 779
See Emergency Gold Mining Assistance bill; Gold Mining

Miscellaneous Private Bills Committee
Appointment, 55; quorum, 57; reports, 257, 403, 484

Municipal Grants bill. 1r, 611; 2r, 655, 674; ref to com, 682; rep of com-3r, 734; r.a., 784

Municipalities
Federal Government grants to, in lieu of taxes, formula, 656
Amounts of grants in 1954, 704
Crown-owned dwellings, payment of full taxes equivalent on, 656
See Federal District; Municipal Grants bill; Ottawa, City of

Narcotic Drug Traffic
Addiction—definition of, 691; extent of, 692; drugs of, 692; causes of, 731
Addicts—classes of, 223; number of, 223, 225
Interviewed by Special Committee, 728, 731
Treatment—British and French systems, 694, 729; British Columbia pilot plan, 742; proposals, 693; institutional—Lexington, Kentucky, 731, 741
Clinics, 693, 729, 741, 743
Committee, Special, to inquire and report—suggested, 43, 47, 134; appointed, 222; quorum reduced, 237; authorized to print proceedings, 237, 580; to retain counsel, 257; change in membership, 258; empowered to sit during Senate adjournments, 319; additions to membership, 319; question of privilege—committee plans, 355; sittings, 458, 728; sittings at Vancouver, 404, 436, 461, 728; witnesses, 701-3, 728
Report, 672, 690-703; considered, 727-32, 740-3; concurred in, 743
Conclusions and recommendations, 695-700, 729
Services, appreciation of—members, 730, 741; staff, 730

Narcotic Drug Traffic—Con.
Communist propaganda, one means of, 155
Community action, 695
Control, international, 691-2
Education, 694
Jurisdictional responsibilities, federal and provincial, 223, 695-8, 729
Law enforcement—R.C.M.P. and municipal police, 693
Narcotics Anonymous and Alcoholics Anonymous, 693-4, 731
Penalties for trafficking, 698-700
Research in British Columbia, 695
Situation in Vancouver, Montreal and Toronto, 696
Training personnel, 694

National Council of Jewish Women—workshops for older citizens, 151

National Council of Women—Resolutions respecting divorce, 316

National Debt, 757

National Defence—See Defence

National Harbours Board—increase in membership of, 331

National Harbours Board bill. 1r, 246; 2r, 331; 3r, 338; r.a., 360

National Parks
Broder Island, withdrawal from St. Lawrence Islands National Park, 585
Hospital services within parks, 585
Newfoundland National Park, proposed, 584-7, 613; location, 584, 586, 613-14
Waterton Lakes National Park—exchange of parcel of land with Blood Band of Indians, 584-6
Reduction in area of Prince Albert, Banff and Waterton Lakes Parks, 612-13

National Parks bill. 1r, 405; 2r, 584; ref to com, 587; rep of com-3r, 612; r.a., 733

National product, gross, 21, 626
National income and, 640, 641, 666

National unity, 156

NATO (North Atlantic Treaty Organization), 2
Accession of Germany, 95-108
Armed forces, 175
Canada's commitment, 106, 173
Capacity of countries to bear defence burdens, 175

Nato—Con.
Change in emphasis in planning—European defence, 173; continental defence in North America, 173-4
Convention of delegates from democracies, called by United States, 106
Originator of NATO idea, 77, 105, 107, 144
Parliamentary Association—attendance of Hon. Mr. Robertson (Speaker) at meetings abroad, 611
Trade between member countries—inquiry by Canadian Trade Relations Committee, 203, 791, 806-7
See Germany, Federal Republic of Natural Resources Committee

Appointment, 42, 55; quorum, 57; reports, 355, 372, 427, 580, 612, 746

New Brunswick
Clam industry, 759-61
Fish canning facilities—Bay of Fundy communities, 759
Health insurance, 810, 813
Herring industry, 758-61
Northumberland constituency — name changed to Northumberland-Miramichi, 336
Potato Marketing Board—inquiries and answers, 470, 589
See Maritime Provinces

Newfoundland
Banks in, 180, 764-5
Coal movements to, removal of subsidies on, 386-7, 389-90
Co-operative movement, 764
Sir Wilfred Grenfell, tribute to, 764
Fisheries, 180-1; assistance to, 386, 826; importance of to province, 765
Fisheries Improvement Loans bill, 763
Former civil servants—benefits of Public Service Superannuation Act extended to, 400
National park, proposed, 584, 586-7, 613-14
Senators from—nominees suggested, 532
See National Parks bill

Newspaper Publishers and Editors, late members of Senate, 11

New Westminster Harbour Commissioners Loan bill. 1r, 405; 2r, 580; 3r, 581; r.a., 732

New Zealand
Cheese, 120
Divorce—grounds for, 215, 217

Northwest Mounted Police
Heroes of early days on prairies, memorials to, recommended, 509-10

Northwest Territories
Council members, 416-17; indemnity, 416, 418-19; votes cast in 1954 election, 417
Districts, number of voters in, 417
Indians and Eskimos, 419-21
Municipal centres, 417, 420; lack of, 418
Purchase of from Hudson's Bay Company, 123-5
Revenue and expenditure, 420-1
Suggested amalgamation of Northwest Territories and Yukon with four Western provinces, 422
Territorial Court—appointment of Judge for, 706
See Indians

Northwest Territories bill. 1r, 397; 2r, 415; ref to com, 421; rep of com-3r, 427; r.a., 549

Nova Scotia
Apple crop, damage by hurricane, 65-6, 815
Apples, marketing of in Great Britain, 815, 820, 823; assistance to producers, 2
Canso causeway, 2
Chignecto canal, long-delayed project, 142-3
Clam industry, 759-62
Health insurance, 810, 812-13
See Maritime Provinces

Older Citizens
Aging—Canadian Welfare Council Committee on, 151-2; United States Committee on Aging and Geriatrics, 151
British Columbia, problem in, 16-17
Efficiency of, 147-8
Employment problem, 17, 146-8, 150-1
Geriatrics, 17, 147, 151
Housing, 149
Longevity, 16-18, 107, 146, 160
Number of increasing, 18, 146-7, 150
Prince Edward Island, older workers in, 160
Recreational and educational projects, 151
Day Care Centres and other organizations, 150-1
Retirement, 148-9

Oil
Oil fields of Western Canada, 423-4
Pacific Petroleums Limited and Frank McMahon, 428-9
See Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas bill; Pipe Lines

Ontario
Assistance to hurricane sufferers, 2, 380
Health insurance, 810, 812
Police salaries, 710
St. Lawrence Seaway, financing of power project, 142

Ottawa, City of
Federal District Commission, 3, 674, 678, expenditures by, 674; estimates for, 828
Federal-municipal relations—Joint Committee of 1944, 674-5, 677-8; proposed Joint Committee, 3, 47
Grants to city, 655, 674
Mayor and municipal government of, 677-8
National Capital—delay in realization of great dreams, 675, 677-8; federal district recommended, 676
Railway station, 829
Scenic beauties of capital, 681
Traffic and Transportation Plan, 828

Ottawa River, pollution of, 677, 681

Parliament
Delegation of powers to departmental officers, 578-9
House of Commons, legislative grant to, 383, 389
Library of, Joint Committee on, 43, 145, 746
Opening of, 1; prorogation of, 831
Supremacy of, 388
Taxation, Parliament alone should impose, 578
Televising of Opening, 68
See Library of Parliament bill; Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances bill

Parliament Buildings
East and West Blocks excluded from federal property, 675, 681
Fire of 1916—Unveiling of commemorative plaque, 551

Patents
Sharp & Dohme (Canada) Ltd. bill, 355, 366, 403

Paterson, Hon. Norman McL.
Baudette and Rainy River Municipal Bridge Company bill, 565-6, 568
Income from bonds tax-free in United States, 565
International vehicular bridge, 565
Toll bridge, 566

Paterson, Hon. Norman McL.—Con.
Great Lakes Fisheries Convention bill, 561-3
Lampreys—damage done by, to fisheries, 561-3; Canadian-United States efforts to deal with problem, 561-2
Bell, Marilyn, attacked by lamprey during Lake Ontario swim, 562
St. Mary's River Bridge Company bill—North Shore road, 254
Senate
Internal Economy Committee reports, 57, 241, 561, 776, 809
Three senators to act during recess of Parliament, 809
Vacancies, monetary saving by reason of, 449-50

Peace
Progress of Western nations toward, and Canada's part in, 19
World progress toward, 48

Pearson, Hon. Lester B., P.C. (Secretary of State for External Affairs)
Tribute to, 195; quotation from Speech at opening of General Assembly of United Nations, 195

Pensions
Blind persons, 16, 21, 705
Canadian Forces bill, 545-7
See Blind Persons bill; Judges bill; Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances bill; Public Service Superannuation bill; War Veterans Allowance bill

Penticton V's—World Hockey Champions, tributes to, 255

Petroleum Transmission Company bill (Hon. Mr. Lambert). 1r, 399; 2r, 428; ref to com, 429; rep of com-3r, 459; r.a., 732

Pipe Lines
Plains Eastern Pipe Lines, Ltd. bill—refund of fees, 238
See Consolidated Pipe Lines Company bill; Petroleum Transmission Company bill; S & M Pipeline Limited bill; Stanmount Pipe Line Company bill; Trans-Border Pipeline Company Ltd. bill; Trans-Prairie Pipelines, Ltd. bill; Westcoast Transmission Company Limited bill; Westspur Pipe Line Company bill; Yukon Pipelines Limited bill

Pirie, Hon. Frederick W.
New Brunswick Potato Marketing Board—inquiries, 470, 589

Polar Air Route—Canadian Pacific Air Lines new route, 134

Poliomyelitis
Treatment of with Salk vaccine and a placebo, 810
Vaccine
Excise tax repealed, 782
Production of, 811
Use of, 811-13

Postage rates between Canada and United States, 67

Potash and Phosphoric Acid
Germany, large deposits of potash, 815
Inquiry and answer, 815
Saskatchewan, deposits in, 815-16
Used as fertilizer, 815-17

Prairie Farm Assistance bill. 1r, 657; 2r, 726; ref to com, 727; rep of com-amdts concurred in-3r, 746; amdts concurred in by Commons, 785

Prairie Farm Rehabilitation bill. 1r, 569; 2r, 622; 3r, 653; r.a., 733

Prairie Provinces
Crop failure, relief, 726-7
Indians in, problem of, 123-7
Irrigation, 622-4, 721
Expenditures by federal Government, 624; by provinces, 653
Manitoba flood damage, expenditure on reclamation, 654
Purchase of prairies from Hudson's Bay Company, 123-5
Red River Colony—Government of and "rebellion"—historical survey, 123-6
Spring floods, crops damaged by, 746
Water conservation, 622
See Prairie Farm Assistance bill; Prairie Farm Rehabilitation bill

Pratt, Hon. Calvert C.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 179-84
Canada-Ireland Tax Agreement bill, 335
China and the Formosa question, 183
Bellicose attitude of Peiping Government, 183
Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference, 179
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 352
Farm loans, Government guarantee to banks, 180, 186

Pratt, Hon. Calvert C.—Con.
Fisheries
Assistance to, 386
Co-operative movement in Newfoundland, 764
Grenfell, Sir Wilfred, tribute to, 764
Industry—importance of to Newfoundland, 765; being abandoned by young men because of low returns, 180-1
Insurance plan, Government operated, 764
Loans by Government to fishermen, 180, 763-4
Banks in Newfoundland, 180, 764
Fisheries Improvement Loans bill not as beneficial to Newfoundland as to other provinces, 763, 765
Unemployment insurance should be made available to fishermen, 181
Judiciary, Canadian, high calibre of, 715
Newfoundland
Civil servants, superannuation rights, 401
Gander airport—role in world travel, 614
National park, proposed, 613; location of, 613-14
Prime Minister, the (Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent)—granted Freedom of City of London, 179
Subsidies, 385-6; removal of on movements of coal to Newfoundland, 386
Trade, International
International Chamber of Commerce, Congress of, at Tokyo, 767-75
Asian problems, 770-3
Canada-Japan, unbalanced trade, 773
Convertible currencies, 772
Double taxation treaties, 773
Freedom of shipping, 772
GATT, 768, 770, 773, 775
International Finance Corporation, 771, 774-5
International Monetary Fund, 772
Societies, Japanese, for cultivating international good will, 773-4
Removal of trade barriers should be major policy of government, 181
Unemployment Insurance bill (No. 328), 754
Lack of adequate inspection facilities, 755
United States
Benefits to Canada of more intimate association with, 182-3
"Canadian Day" at Atlantic City, 183-4
Far East policy, 182-3; conciliatory, 183
Motives misunderstood and misinterpreted, 182

Precious Metals Marking bill. 1r, 4; 2r, 356; ref to com, 357; rep of com-3r, 369; r.a., 549

Press, the
Arrow Lakes News—Kaiser Dam, 116
Brantford Expositor—divorce grounds, 346
British United Press—report regarding Library staff, 208
Canadian Bar Review—drug addiction, 224
Canadian Journal of Public Health—aging population, 146
Canadian Unionist—compulsory retirement, 148
Canadian Press, the story of the, 9, 10
Collier's—divorce in Russia in first days of Soviet revolution, 262
Coronet—Marilyn Bell, swim across Lake Ontario, 562
Financial Post—senior citizens, 149-50
Globe and Mail—war propaganda, 97; recognition of women as persons under B.N.A. Act, 255; Narcotic Drug Traffic Committee sittings in Vancouver, 437
Labour Force—employment statistics, 187
Lethbridge Herald—published by late Senator Buchanan, 5, 8, 9, 10, 11
Liberty—Canadian divorce law, 345
Life—General MacArthur's speech on necessity of abolishing war, 178, 184
Lifetime Living—story of wheat, 189-90
London Evening News—presentation of Freedom of City of London to Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent (Prime Minister), 159
Maclean's—suggested appointees to Senate, 454; work of the Senate, 529
Manchester Sunday Chronicle—drug addicts, 729
Montreal Gazette—wheat situation, 192-3; arrest of divorce detectives, 235; alcohol cause of domestic troubles, 242; Narcotic Drug Traffic Committee plans, 355; appointments to Senate, 527
Newsweek—Russians fear rearming of Germany, 104
New York Times—President Eisenhower's message to Congress, 182
Press, the (publications unnamed)—Narcotic Drug Traffic Committee—sittings in Vancouver, 404, 742-3
Rosetown Eagle—advertising medium, 191
Saskatoon Star-Phoenix—Red Fife wheat, 50; blessings of work, 121
Saturday Evening Post—growing of trees for production of turpentine, 822
Saturday Night—employment of older workers, 148; Canadian divorce law, 346
Times, London—Canadian development in past decade, 67
Winnipeg Free Press—wheat surplus, 192; "the Senate's Future", 457

Prime Minister, the See St. Laurent, Right Hon. Louis S.

Prince Albert National Park, 586-7

Prince Edward Island
Charlottetown Centennial, 160, 187
Older workers in, 160
See Maritime Provinces

Printing of Parliament, Joint Committee on Senate members, 43; Commons members, 145

Printing Bureau, new—cost of, 665, 669

Prisons and Reformatories
Federal and provincial jurisdictions under penal system, 480
New Brunswick Central Reformatory, 481
Parole Board—authority to release inmates, 481

Prisons and Reformatories bill. 1r, 436; 2r, 480; 3r, 484; r.a., 732

Private Bills
Extension of time for filing petitions, 257, 427
Petitions for private bills, inquiry in re time limit, 194; answer, 201
See Bills (Private)

Propaganda—effect of, 97; hatred, 105

Provident Assurance Company bill (Hon. Mr. Vaillancourt). 1r, 569; 2r, 581; ref to com, 582; rep of com-3r, 594; r.a., 784

Provinces
Boundary between Alberta and British Columbia confirmed, 511
Debts of, 143-4
Income tax, provincial, 30, 36, 776, 778
Indemnities, Members of Legislative Assemblies, 419
Provincial rights—International River Improvements bill, 721-2
Trucking traffic, interprovincial, control of, 683

Public Bills
Suspension of Rules, 371, 705
See Bills (Public)

Public Health. See Health

Public Health Committee
Appointment, 56; quorum, 57

Public Officials Salaries bill. 1r. 719; 2r, 785; 3r, 792; r.a., 832

Public Service Superannuation bill. 1r, 337; 2r, 399; ref to com, 402; rep of com-3r, 403; r.a., 426

Quebec
Caisses populaires, 752, 755-6; work on behalf of fishing industry, 752, 755-6
Health insurance, 810
Income tax—correspondence between Prime Minister and Premier of Quebec, 30, 36
Iron ore, development of, 21
Maple products industry—replacement of buckets, 381

Queen Elizabeth (Queen Mother)
Suggested as Governor General of Canada, 115
Visit to Canada, 1, 31, 44, 115, 194

Quinn, Hon. Felix P. (Chief Opposition Whip)
Canadian Forces bill—Common-law wife, pension payable to, 602
Canadian Union Conference Corporation of Seventh-day Adventists bill, 443-4
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill
Desertion, 342
Wars, effect on increase in divorces, 351
Foreign Aircraft Third Party Damage bill, 278
Northwest Territories bill, 416
Railway bill—reference to committee, 621
St. Patrick's Day—tribute to Ireland's Patron Saint, 308
Salmon spawning, 139

Radio
Authority for inspection, Department of Transport, 438
Control of erection of television antennae, 437
Penalty for unlawful interception of communications, 437

Radio bill. 1r, 405; 2r, 437; ref to com, 439; rep of com, 672; amdt concurred in, 717; 3r, 718; amdts concurred in by Commons, 785; r. a., 832

Railways
Agreed charges, 787-90
Churchill—railway to, and suggested railway from Flin Flon, 118
Crowsnest Pass agreement, 385
Freight rates, 179, 210, 271, 307-8
Level crossings, 3, 616, 618-20
Motor vehicle accidents, 615-16, 618
Transcontinental rail schedules—inquiry, 76; answer, 94
Trucking, 683

Railways—Con.
See Appropriation bill No. 2; Canadian National Railways; Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee bill; Canadian National Railways Refunding bill; Canadian Pacific Railway; Fredericton and Grand Lake Coal and Railway Company bill; London and Port Stanley Railway Company bill; Railway bill; Toronto Harbour Railway Tracks Agreement bill; Transport bill

Railway bill, 1r, 502; 2r, 615; ref to com, 621; rep of com-3r, 672; r. a., 733

Railways bill (pro forma), 3

Rain making, 134-5

Rainy River bridge—substitution of petition, 427, 446. See Baudette and Rainy River Municipal Bridge Company bill

Red Fife Wheat. See Wheat

Red River Colony. See Indians

Reid, Hon. Thomas
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 134-141
Alberta-British Columbia Boundary bill, 511
Appropriation Bill No. 3, 548
British Empire and Commonwealth Games, 135-6
Financial deficit, 135-6
Outstanding success—fostered much good will, 135
Televised by Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, 58, 111
British North America Acts Amendment bill. See Senate, Vacancies, below
Burns, Robert—196th anniversary of birth, 64-5
Canada Agricultural Products Standards bill—so-called "Canadian bacon" in United States, 598
Canada Grain bill—"eastern" and "western" grain, 364
Canadian Forces bill, 542, 544-6
Common-law wife, 603
Canadian National Railways
New hotel in Montreal—inquiry, 167; answer, 194
Parliament lacks information on, 382
Trucking business, 683
Civil servants, retired, superannuation rates, 709

Reid, Hon. Thomas—Con.
Columbia River project, 136-9, 722-5
General McNaughtons' report, 137-9
Kaiser Dam, 139
Salmon fisheries, effect on, 137-9, 722-5
Criminal Code—Joint Committee on certain questions of criminal law, interim report, 72
Customs bill—value of goods, 573
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 321-5
Adultery only divorce ground authorized by Scriptures, 322
Divorce not a new matter, 322
Moral laws, 323-4
War marriages, 324
Federal District—See Municipal Grants bill, below
Feed grains, freight subsidies, 382-3
Inquiry, 115; answer, 209
Fraser River Basin Board—inquiry and answer, 673
Germany, Federal Republic of, accession to North Atlantic Treaty, 103-4
Canada's contribution, World Wars I and II, 103
Russia, fear of German rearmament, 104; military strength, 103; opposition to Germany's admittance to NATO, 103; Yalta conference, 104
Gibraltar, held by Great Britain, 177
Historic Sites and Monuments bill, 509
Royal Canadian Mounted Police schooner St. Roch, site for, 510
Hockey, world championship—tribute to victorious Canadian team, Penticton V's, 255
Housing—further amendment of National Housing Act needed, 136
Income tax—correspondence between Prime Minister and Premier of Quebec, respecting provincial tax, 30
International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission, 137, 139, 722-5
International River Improvements bill, 722-5
Columbia river power development, 723-4
Fishways, 724
McNaughton, General, conference with, 722-5
Mica Creek, proposed dam, 722, 724-5
Power interests—Alcan and B. C. Electric Co., 725
Sockeye Salmon industry on Fraser River, 722-3
Judges bill, 709
No dearth of applicants for judgeships, 709
Retired civil servants—superannuation value reduced by cost of living, 709

Reid, Hon. Thomas—Con.
Labour
Displaced by technological devices, 140-1
Gordon, Donald—lines of approach to reduction of costs, 141
Industry and "cold war", 140
Library of Parliament bill—completion of reconstruction, date of, 204
Meat Inspection bill, 588
Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances bill, 358
Municipal Grants bill, 673-6
East and West Blocks of Parliament Buildings, transfer to municipal jurisdiction, 675
Federal District Commission, 674; expenditures by, 674
Grants to Ottawa, 674; no federal control over expenditure, 675
Joint committee of 1944 on Federal-Municipal relations, 674-5
King, Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie—speech of 1944 quoted, 676
National Capital—delay in realization of great dreams, 675
Ottawa should be federal district, 676; provisions regarding Ottawa should be in separate bill, 675
Narcotic Drug Traffic Committee, 43, 47, 134; quorum reduced, 237; empowered to retain counsel, 257; question of privilege, committee plans, 355; statement on committee sittings in Vancouver, 436; committee sitting, 458; newspaper report, 461; authority to print committee proceedings in blue book form, 580; report of committee, 672-3, 690-703, 727-30, 742-3
Appreciation of services—of members, 730; of staff and others, 730
Federal and provincial government responsibilities, 729
Illegal traffic
Control—Canada ahead of United States, 728
Seriousness of problem, 742
Meetings, and witnesses heard at, 728
Recommendations, 729
Treatment of addicts—British system, 729; Brtish Columbia pilot plan, 742; clinics, 729, 743
Vancouver—reasons for meetings at, 727-8
Newspaper comments, 742-3

Reid, Hon. Thomas—Con.
New Westminster Harbour Commissioners Loan bill, 580-1
Annacis Island, industrial project of Estate of Duke of Westminster, 581
Causeway built by Harbour Board—Federal Government loan for, 581
New Westmnister, city of, 581
Ottawa—See Municipal Grants bill, above
Polar Air Route—Canadian Pacific Air Lines, 134
Prisons and Reformatories bill, 481-2
Railway bill—Grade Crossing Fund, increase in grant to, 617-18
Rain making, 134-5
Royal Commissions, 730
Senate
Rules—explanation of bill on second reading, 578
Vacancies—British North America Acts Amendment bill, 455-7
Criticism of Senate, 456
Opposition, insufficient members of, 456-7
Prime Minister, the—problem of filling vacancies, 456-7
Senators, work of, 133, 649
Transcontinental rail schedules—inquiry, 76; answer, 94
Unemployment—statistics, 140; unemployment insurance, abuse of, 141
Unemployment Insurance bill (No. 328), 658
War Veterans Allowance bill—Common-law wife, 395-6; divorced wife, 396
Westcoast Transmission Company Limited bill—dispute in British Columbia, 513
Winnipeg and St. Boniface Harbour Commissioners bill, 239

Representation bill. (To change name of Northumberland constituency, New Brunswick, to Northumberland-Miramichi). 1r, 295; 2r, 335; 3r, 338; r.a., 360

Restaurant of Parliament
Joint Committee—Senate members, 43; Commons members, 145
Temperature of, 415

Riel, Louis, 123-6
Popular hero, 124-5
Possibly high rank in history, 126
Role of in Red River "rebellion", 125; in colonial government, 126
See Indians

Ripple Rock—removal of, 2, 15

Robertson, Hon. Wishart McLea, P.C. (Speaker)
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne adopted, 201; message of thanks from His Excellency the Governor General, 231
Budget Speech—accommodation for senators in Commons gallery, 372
Canadian Forces bill—review of events of debate, 609-10
Criminal Code—message from Commons, Joint Committee on certain questions of Criminal Law, 42; membership, 110, 208; change in membership, 355
Dulles, Hon. John Foster, United States Secretary of State—visit to Parliament, 307
Felicitations, 35; on appointment as Speaker, 18; on receiving Atlantic Union Committee Award, 65
Germany, Federal Republic of—accession to North Atlantic Treaty, 105-7
NATO
Control over German armed forces, 107
Convention of North Atlantic democracies called by United States in 1950, 106-7
Military clause—commitment of treaty signatories, 106
Supra-national army, 106
Library of Parliament—report tabled, 11
Joint Committee, list of members, 145
Library of Parliament bill, 238
Macphail Memorial—invitation to attend unveiling ceremony, 231
Meat Inspection bill—consideration of report, 595
Narcotic Drug Traffic Committee—addition of Manitoba senator to, 226
NATO Parliamentary Association, attendance at meetings abroad, 611
Parliament, opening of, message from Secretary of Governor General, 1
Parliament Buildings—Fire of 1916, unveiling of commemorative plaque, 551
Printing, Joint Committee on—list of members, 145
Restaurant, Joint committee on—list of members, 145
Royal Assent—notice of, 29, 355, 372, 415, 541
Rulings and statements
Amendment referring bill back to committee, 605
Committee's action limited by terms of amendment, 605

Robertson, Hon. Wishart McLea, P.C.—Con.
Rulings and Statements—Con.
Amendments—Con.
Committee must obtain authority of Senate to reverse decision previously arrived at, 605
Committee amendment not considered on day report presented, except with unanimous consent, 483
Editorials—Not good parliamentary practice to refer in detail to editorial opinions on matter immediately before the house, 347
Instruction to committee, day's notice necessary, 600
Interruptions during debate—Senator may not be interrupted, except to be questioned with his consent, 323, 649-50
Motion for second reading—Difficult to explain some bills other than clause by clause, 558
Placing of tables on the record, may be done by consent, 170, 172
Private bills must be referred to committee, 513
Question of privilege
Discussion permissible by consent of house, 208, 652
Senator rising must state his point, 310
Senate—accounts tabled and referred to committee, 399

Roebuck, Hon. Arthur W.
Baudette and Rainy River Municipal Bridge Company bill, 566-8
Toll bridges increase land values, 567
British North America Acts Amendment bill. See Senate, Vacancies below
Canada Agricultural Products Standards bill—broad powers over trade given to Governor in Council, 598-9
Canada Elections bill—voting system, 740
Canadian Forces bill, 542-4
Civilians with forces abroad subject to Canadian civil courts, 545
Criminal Code, virtually, for Canadian Forces, 547
Judge Advocate General, 543-4
Canadian Union Conference Corporation of Seventh-day Adventists bill, 415, 442-4
Canadian church, 443
Canadian Conferences to be united into one Conference, 442
World-wide membership and churches, growth in, 442
Commercial Travellers' Association of Canada bill, 430
Criminal Code (Race Meetings) bill, 747-9, 755

Roebuck, Hon. Arthur W.—Con.
Criminal Code—Con.
Amounts wagered, assessments, etc., 1953-4, 748
Pari-mutuel system—supervision, departmental fee, 747
Provincial tax levies, 748
Customs bill, 574-7
Importer and purchaser jointly and severally liable, 577
Deputy Minister, power to reappraise value of goods, 574-6
Customs Tariff bill, 793-4
Protective legislation, 794
Defence Production bill, 800-1
Conscription of manpower and industry in war, 800
Term of legislation, 800
Tribute to Minister, Right Hon. Mr. Howe, 801
Divorce
Bills, 64, 75, 95, 108, 110, 113, 127, 130, 133, 145, 152, 154, 165, 167, 168, 220, 229, 231, 241, 319, 353, 390, 391, 405, 424, 460, 552, 589, 610
Committee—quorum reduced, leave to sit during adjournments, authority to appoint subcommittees, 23-6; Easter adjournment, 404
Reports, 30, 53, 64, 75, 94, 110, 114, 115, 127, 130, 144, 145, 152, 165, 203, 220, 222, 231, 236, 240, 246, 282, 319, 353, 399, 436, 458, 474, 501, 526, 549, 552, 559, 569, 589, 614, 656
Evidence, printing of, 128-9; typewritten copy, 128
Fees, Parliamentary, for printing and translation, raised, 26
Hart case, radio broadcast—Question of privilege, 650
Delorme case, 652
L'Esperance case, 651
Petitions withdrawn, 26-7
Statistics, 94, 203, 399, 644-7
Attendance of committee members, appreciation of services, 645-6
Commendation of staff, 647
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 211-12, 216-18, 220, 298-305, 328
British law, 302
Divorce Committee and courts, consideration of cases by, 300
Federal jurisdiction, 303
Grounds, proposed, for divorce, 301-2
Increase in divorce, indictment of existing conditions, 303
Mandate to deal with subject, 298
Marriage, vows and responsibilities of the parties to, 300-1
Presumption of death, 219-20, 302

Roebuck, Hon. Arthur W.—Con.
Estimates, the—Finance Committee, 132
Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas bill, 337
Great Lakes Fisheries Convention bill, 564
Fisheries, hoped-for revival of, 564
Lampreys, problem of—spawning ground, 564
Health insurance, prepaid—age limit for individual insurance with companies—committee of inquiry suggested, 813
Income Tax bill, 777, 780-2
Insurance, depreciation on property, 777
Provincial income tax, 778
Unearned income, 778
Industry and labour—"cold war", 140
Internal Economy Committee—three senators to act during recess of Parliament, 809
International trade—procedure for appointment of committee next session, 806
Judges bill, 710-11, 716, 736-7
High standard of living in Canada, 711, 739
Police salaries, 710
Land values, increases in, 737
Library of Parliament bill, 204
Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances bill—necessity for close scrutiny of all bills by Senate, 358-9
Narcotic Drug Traffic Committee report, 741
National Harbours Board bill, 332
Northwest Territories bill, 417
Council, undemocratic form of government, 418
Increase in indemnity, 418
Municipal organization, 417; lack of, 418
Surplus revenue, 421
Parliament, supremacy of—control over expenditures, 388
Prisons and Reformatories bill—Parole board, New Brunswick, 481
Public Officials Salaries bill, 785-6
Radio bill, 438, 718
Communication of information, 438, 718
Inspectors with authority of peace officers, 438
Regulations should be embodied in statute, 718
Royal Commission on Canadian Economy, 823
St. Lawrence Seaway Authority bill, 808
Senate
Business of, 819
Procedure—discussion on Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 168; placing of statements on Hansard, 170-1

Roebuck, Hon. Arthur W.—Con.
Senate—Con.
Rules—discussion of bill on second reading, 577
Vacancies—British North America Acts Amendment bill, 461-4
Bill would help maintain integrity of Senate, 464
Constitutional aspects, 461-2
Danger arising from vacancies unfilled for unreasonable time, 464
Senators, responsibility to determine question, 463
Subsidies, in general, unfair, 387-8
Territorial Lands bill, 320
Textile industry, not indigenous to Canada, 710
Transport bill—agreed charges—competition between railways, 788; limitation on term of agreement, 789
Unemployment, 133
Unemployment Insurance bill (No. 6), supplementary benefits, 28-9
Unemployment Insurance bill (No. 328), 657-63
Administration costs, 658
Benefits, 661-2; reduction of period. 662; seasonal benefits, 662
Commissioners, retirement age, 658-9, 689
Contributions—Government, employers and employees, 660; weekly rates, 660; present and new rates of contribution and benefit, 661
Coverage, 659
National Employment Service, 659
Unemployment Insurance Fund, 662
Woman member of Commission, in re this suggestion, 689
Women—discriminated against, 688; abuse of Act by married women, 689
Veterans Benefit bill, 554
War Veterans Allowance bill, 392-4, 396-7
Westcoast Transmission Company bill, value of shares of capital stock, 512-13
Winnipeg and St. Boniface Harbour Commissioners bill, 239-40

Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Pembroke bill (Hon. Mr. Bishop). 1r, 167; 2r, 184; ref to com, 186; rep of com-3r, 209; r.a., 360; refund of fees, 406

Ross, Hon. George H.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 123-7
Alberta-British Columbia Boundary bill—to delimit boundaries, 511, 515

Ross, Hon. George H.—Con.
Customs bill—GATT, 576
Divorce—bills, 186, 201, 583-4
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 246-8, 352
Amendments suggested, 246-7
Application of bill should be restricted to provinces requesting it, 246
Domicile—Canada-wide domicile should be considered, 247; province-wide domicile discriminates against women, 247-8
Feed grains—freight subsidy should be discontinued, 383-4
Indian problem in Prairie provinces, 123-7
Emancipation should be encouraged, 127
Maltreatment of Indians and Metis, 126
Red River Government and "rebellion", 123-6
Trial of alleged culprits, 126
Unjustified cruelty of Canadians, 125
Riel, Louis, 123-6
Senate, Vacancies—British North America Acts Amendment bill, 521
Appointments to Senate are business of Prime Minister and Cabinet, 521; Senate has no legal duty or jurisdiction in matter, 521
Bill would be futile, 521
Trans-Prairie Pipelines, Ltd., bill, 600

Royal Architectural Institute of Canada bill (Hon. Mr. Farris). 1r, 209; 2r, 233; ref to com, 234; rep of com-3r, 257; r.a., 426

Royal Assent, 29, 359, 398, 424, 549, 732, 783, 831-2
Notice of, 29, 355, 372, 415, 541, 719, 783, 820, 831

Royal Canadian Mounted Police
Narcotic drug traffic, 47, 691-3, 696, 699, 730
Northwest Mounted Police—early heroes of western Canada, memorials to, recommended, 509
Schooner St. Roch, historic site for, 510
See Public Service Superannuation bill

Royal Commission on Canadian Economy, 821, 823-5, 833

Russia
Aggression, 93; Czechoslovakia, 100
Co-existence with, 98
Contribution to United Nations budget, 198, 200-1
Divorce law, 252, 262
German rearmament, opposition to, 102-4

Russia—Con.
Military strength, 103
Parliamentary visits, proposal for, 167
United Nations—power of veto, 89
United States and Russia, 99
Yalta Treaty—obligations not honoured by, 96, 100

S & M Pipeline Limited bill (Hon. Mr. Stambaugh). 1r, 391; 2r, 423; ref to com, 424; rep of com-3r, 460; Commons amdt, 551; concurred in, 559; r.a., 732

St. Catharines Collegiate Students—visitors in Senate gallery, 461

St. Francis Xavier University—organization of credit unions, 752, 756

St. Laurent, Right Hon. Louis S., P.C. (Prime Minister)
Commonwealth Prime Ministers Conference, London, departure for, 107
Federal-provincial Conference of 1950—speech at quoted, 505
Freedom of City of London conferred on, 159, 179
NATO idea, originator of, 77, 144. See 107
Senate
Prerogative of making appointments to, 462-3, 486, 489, 521
Problem of filling vacancies, 450, 453, 467-9, 485, 487, 494, 496, 502, 506-7, 519-20, 537, 539
Tributes to, 20, 179, 454-5, 462-3, 465, 485-6, 504, 519-20, 536

St. Lawrence Seaway, 2, 585
Building of, 117, 142, 200
Power project, financing of, 142

St. Lawrence Seaway Authority bill. 1r, 704, 2r, 808; 3r, 814; r. a., 832

St. Mary's River Bridge Company bill (Hon. Mr. Farquhar). 1r, 238; 2r, 253; ref to com, 254; rep of com, 307; com amdts concurred in—3r, 336; r. a., 426

St. Patrick's Day
Tributes to Ireland's Patron Saint, 308-10

St. Roch—Royal Canadian Mounted Police schooner—historic site for, 510

Salacious literature and crime comics, 155-6

Salk vaccine, 810-13

Saskatchewan
Golden Jubilee of province, 187, 510
Historic sites, 510
Macdonald Brier Canadian Curling Championship play-offs at Regina, 187, 282-4
Potash deposits, 815
See Prairie provinces

Senate
Accounts tabled, referred to committee, 399
Bills
Private—petitions for—inquiry regarding time limit, 194; answer, 201
Extension of time for filing petitions, 257
Public—suspension of Rules, 371, 705
Business of, 27, 370, 403, 614, 671, 806, 818, 820, 822, 824, 826
Chamber, temperature of, 415
Divisions (recorded votes)
British North America Acts Amendment bill—M for 2r negatived, 540
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill—M for 2r negatived, 352
Library of Parliament bill—M for 3r agreed to, 239
Divorce Committee, procedure and work, 648-53, 767
Criticisms of—by radio, 650-3; in Commons, 648-9, 767; challenge to Commons to do divorce work if not satisfied with that of Senate, 648-9; conference on procedure early next session suggested, 649, 767
Easter recess, 404
Emergency sittings—authority to convene, 371; sitting, 783
Internal Economy Committee—reports, 241, 561, 580, 776, 809, 820
Three senators to act during recess of Parliament, 809, 820
Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel, John F. MacNeill, Q.C.,—appreciation of services of, 254, 647
Legislative measures, initiation in Senate, 46-7; historical sketch, 46; delay in receiving bills from Commons, 132, 371, 374, 376, 388, 828
Newspaper publishers and editors, late members of, 11
Rules
Discussion of bill on second reading, 558-9, 577-9
Suspension of rules relating to public bills, 371, 705
Sessional employees enabled to qualify under Public Service Superannuation Act, 400

Senate—Con.
Staff—appreciation of services of, 254, 647, 730
Vacancies
British North America Acts Amendment bill. 1r, 361; M for 2r postponed, 423; M for 2r, 447, 461, 474, 484, 502, 515, 526; motion negatived (div), 540
Age limit, senators, 448, 487, 525, 531
Appointment to Senate great honour, 466, 709
Appointments—prerogative of Prime Minister, 462-3, 486, 489, 521; Senate has no legal duty or jurisdiction in matter, 521; non-partisan appointments, discussed, 487, 489, 496; recommended, 454, 468-9, 522, 527, 532
Bill would not be enforceable, 476, 490-2, 520-1, 523-4, 535, 539
Constitutional aspects, 462-5, 477, 491, 498, 502, 504-5, 515, 517-19
Criticisms of Senate, 452, 457, 485, 503, 649
Dignity of Senate not affected by vacancies, 516, 538. See 464
Elective chamber discussed, 452, 457, 488
Functions of Senate, 358-9, 451-2, 467, 475, 496, 502, 504, 507-8
Importance in democratic government, 451-2, 503-4
Integrity of Senate involved, 464. See 516, 538
Legal implications and problems of proposed amendment, 476, 489-91, 494, 523-4, 535, 539
Monetary saving through non-filling of vacancies, 449, 466
Moral and practical effects of proposed amendment, 481-2, 496, 519, 539
Number of vacancies—at present, 284, 447, 449, 463, 474, 486, 488, 490, 538-9; previous accumulations, 449, 476, 519-20
Opposition in Senate not strong enough, 453-4, 456-7, 465, 467, 487, 528, 533
Personnel, changing, 487
Prime Minister—problem of filling vacancies, 450, 453-5, 457, 467-9, 485, 487, 494, 496, 502, 506-7, 519-20, 537, 539; tributes to, 450, 454-5, 462-3, 465-6, 485-6, 504, 519-20, 536
Qualifications for senatorship, 454-5, 489, 519, 531
Reform, 448, 457, 494, 502-3, 516
Resolution—suggested by Hon. Mr. Farris, 466, 493, 536; suggested by Hon. Mr. Kinley, 485
Territorial representation, 453, 462, 467, 474-5, 487-8, 532-3, 539

Senate—Con.
Vacancies—Con.
Work of Senate—impaired by vacancies, 449, 464, 475-6, 488, 506, 508, 521, 531, 538-9; not impaired, 487-8, 515-16
Work of—special examples, 496-8, 506, 529, 786

Senators
Deceased, 4-11, 111-13, 470-4, 802-5
Publishers and editors, late members of Senate, 11
Work, 132-3, 648-50

Seventh-day Adventists. See Canadian Union Conference Corporation of Seventh-day Adventists bill

Sharp & Dohme (Canada) Ltd. bill (Hon. Mr. Connolly). 1r, 355; 2r, 366; ref to com, 368; rep of com—com amdts concurred in—3r, 403; r.a., 426

Sifton, Sir Clifford, the late quoted in re Senate, 507

Social Security, 2, 3
Blind persons allowances, 3, 16, 21, 136; age of eligibility lowered and income ceilings raised, 705
Disabled Persons Act—all provinces participating in program, 2
Expenditures, 45
War veterans allowances, 3, 21, 136, 392-7; basic rates increased and income ceilings raised, 392
See Older citizens; Pensions; Unemployment Insurance bills

Speaker, The
See Robertson, the Hon. Wishart McLea, P.C.
Acting Speakers:
Beaubien, Hon. Arthur L., 105, 203, 246, 657, 672, 704, 719, 734, 746, 753, 767, 776, 783, 785, 791, 802, 808, 809
King, Hon. James H., P.C., 459
Wilson, Hon. Cairine R., 405, 815, 820, 826

Speech from the Throne
At opening of session, 1-3; consideration of, 3
At prorogation, 832-3
See Address in Reply

Stambaugh, Hon. J. Wesley
Canada Grain bill—reference to committee, 366
Customs Tariff bill, 798
Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas bill, 318
Feed grains—freight subsidy, 387; light weight wheat, 818
Health insurance, prepaid—Alberta rural municipal hospitalization scheme, 814, 817
S & M Pipeline Limited bill, 391, 423-4, 551
Commons amendment, 551; concurred in, 559
Natural gas in British Columbia, 424
Oil fields of western Canada, 423
Subsidies, 387
Territorial Lands bill—to permit sale of Crown lands in Yukon and Northwest Territories prior to survey, 320-1
Trans-Border Pipeline Company Ltd. bill—all pipe line bills should be referred to same committee, 445
Yukon Pipelines Limited bill—reference to committee, 434

Standing Orders Committee
Appointment of, 42, 55; quorum reduced, 57; reports of, 257, 427, 446

Stanmount Pipe Line Company bill (Hon. Mr. Euler). 1r, 405; 2r, 439; ref to com, 440; rep of com-3r, 502; r.a., 733

Submarine
Atomic powered, United States, 115

Subsidies
Beef and butter, 376, 380, 389
Coal movements to Newfoundland, 386, 389
Feed grains—freight, 115, 209-10, 380, 382-5, 387, 389
Fisheries, 386
Gold mining, 407, 411-14

Succession duties
Amount exempted, 189
See Canada-Ireland Succession Duty Agreement bill

Suez Canal—Great Britain and, 199

Sugar Beet industry, 623-4

Supreme Court of Canada—See Judges bill

Tariff Board
Chairman, Hector B. McKinnon, outstanding services rendered by, 786
Right of appeal to in re customs duties, 575
Salary increases, 785-7, 792

Tariffs
Dumping, 736, 797
Freer trade for world prosperity—discussed at congress of International Chamber of Commerce, Tokyo, 770, 772-3
Textile industry, 710
United States tariff based on protection, 797
See Customs bill; Customs Tariff bill

Taxation
Bills:
Canada-Ireland Income Tax Agreement, 332
Canada-Ireland Succession Duty Agreement, 335
Customs, 570
Customs Tariff, 792
Excise Tax, 782
Income Tax, 776
Defence and taxation, 155
Double taxation treaties, 773
Excise tax on certain commodities repealed or reduced, 782
Income tax
Low salary group and, 32-3, 44
Reductions—personal, 776-7; corporate, 776, 778, 781
Provincial income tax, 30, 36, 776, 778
Revenue dollar, breakdown of spending of, 45

Taylor, Hon. William H.
Committees, Standing, report of Committee of Selection, 12; motion of appointment, 12
Dominion General Life Insurance Company (Canadian Premier Life Insurance company) bill, 540
Joint Committee on Library, 746
London and Port Stanley Railway Company bill, 204, 226
To confirm agreement between City of London and company, 227
Narcotic Drug Traffic Committee—change of membership, 258

Telecommunication
Canadian National Railways bill—authority to operate system, 682

Television
Antennae, control of erection of, 437
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, televising of British Empire Games, inquiry stands, 58; inquiry and answer, 111
Opening of Parliament, 1955, 68
President Eisenhower's address to Parliament in 1953, 68
See Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone bill, 221

Territorial Lands bill. 1r, 4; 2r, 320; ref to com, 321; rep of com-3r, 355

Textile industry, 707, 710, 736

Toll roads and bridges, 122
Government-built bridges, 567
Toll bridges increase land values, 567
See Baudette and Rainy River Municipal Bridge Company bill

Toronto Harbour Railway Tracks Agreement bill. 1r, 470; 2r, 654; ref to com, 655; rep of com-3r, 672; r.a., 733

Touche, George A. & Co.
Auditors, Canadian National Railways, 684-5

Tourist Traffic Committee
Appointment, 55; quorum, 57; addition to membership, 232; change in membership, 282; sitting postponed, 458; empowered to make inquiry, 555

Trade
Great Britain, trade with, 820-2
International, 21, 181, 589, 596-8, 707, 712, 715, 767-74
Canadian Trade Relations Committee—authority to conduct inquiry, 203, 222; to print proceedings, 447, 469; rep of com, 791; amended, 806
International Chamber of Commerce, Congress of, at Tokyo, 767-75
Asian problems, 770-3
Canada-Japan, unbalanced trade, 773
Convertible currencies, 772
Double taxation treaties, 773
Freedom of shipping, 772
GATT, 768, 770, 773, 775
International Finance Corporation, 771, 774-5
International Monetary Fund, 772
Societies, Japanese, for cultivating international good will, 773-4
Tariffs, 771-3
United States, fish trade with, 797
Unemployment insurance, stabilizing effect on world prices, 753
See Canada Agricultural Products Standards bill; Customs bill; Customs Tariff bill; Meat Inspection bill

Trade Marks
See Precious Metals Marking bill

Trans-Border Pipeline Company Ltd. bill (Hon. Mr. Campbell for Hon. Mr. Bouffard). 1r, 415; 2r, 444; ref to com, 445; rep of com, 483; com amdt concurred in-3r, 503; Commons amdt, 589; concurred in, 610; r.a., 733

Transcontinental rail schedules—inquiry, 76; answer, 94

Transport and Communications Committee
Appointment, 55; quorum, 57; addition to membership, 338; reports, 209, 237, 307, 338, 369, 460, 502, 555, 583, 717, 719, 806

Transport bill. 1r, 783; 2r, 787; ref to com, 790; rep of com-3r, 806; r.a., 832

Transport Commissioners, Board of Agreed charges by railways, 788-9
Chairman, distinguished career of, 786
Salary increases, 785-7, 792
Work of Board—important new class of recent cases, 788

Trans-Prairie Pipelines, Ltd. bill (Hon. Mr. Crerar). 1r, 406; 2r, 430; ref to com, 432; rep of com-3r, 459; Commons amdts, 569; concurred in, 599; r.a., 733

Tremblay, Hon. Leonard D. S.
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, motion for seconded, 18-22
Housing, increased construction, 20
National Housing Act, 20-1; indifference of Quebec authorities toward, 21
Industrial growth of Canada—gross national product, 21; iron ore development in Quebec, 21
Peace, progress of Western nations toward, 19; appreciation of efforts of Prime Minister (Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent) and Cabinet, 19-20
Social legislation—Disabled Persons Act and Blind Persons Act, 21
Trade, international, 21; tribute to Minister of Trade and Commerce (Right Hon. Mr. Howe), 21
Unemployment, 20; unemployment insurance, 20

Trucking
Competition with railways, 789
Interprovincial traffic, control of, 683
See Canadian National Railways bill, 682-3

Turgeon, Hon. J. Gray
Borden, Sir Robert L.—stand taken at Versailles Peace Conference, 529
Commonwealth of Nations—India and Pakistan, Canada's influence on, 530
Exportation of Power and Fluids and Importation of Gas bill, 316, 355
Removal of authority to impose export duty on gas, oil and other fluids, 317
Transmission of electric power at high voltages, 317

Turgeon, Hon. J. Gray—Con.
International trade—motion to print proceedings of inquiry by Committee on Canadian Trade Relations, 447; concurred in, 469
King, Hon. James H., the late—tribute to his memory, 804
Locke, Hon. Mr. Justice Charles H., tribute to, 713
Narcotic Drug Traffic Committee—sittings in Vancouver, 404
Northwest Territories bill—voters' qualifications, 417
Senate, Vacancies—British North America Acts Amendment bill, 526-30
Bill would be ineffective, 530
Non-partisan appointment recommended, 527-8; but not of members of political Opposition parties, 528, or of provincial government nominees, 528
Public confidence in Senate not increased by long-standing vacancies, 529
Work of Senate, important—some examples, 529-30
Yukon Pipelines Limited bill, 433

Turgeon, Hon. W. F. A.
Investigation into and report on agreed charges under Transport Act, 787

Unemployment, 2, 32, 119, 120, 133, 827
Bank deposits and, 159
British Columbia, 16, 31
Employment statistics, 187
Statistics, 44, 140
Wages, demand for higher, 140

Unemployment Insurance, 2
Administration costs, 659
Benefits, 661-2
Commissioners, retirement age, 658-9, 689
Contributions—Government, employers and employees, 660
Fishermen, insurance necessary for, 181
Fund, 662
National Employment Service, 659
Stabilizing effect of insurance on world prices, 753
Woman should be member of Commission and Advisory Committee, 688-9
Women—discrimination against, 687-8; abuse of Act by married women, 141, 689

Unemployment Insurance bill (No. 6). 1-2r, 27; 3r, 29; r.a., 29

Unemployment Insurance bill (No. 328). 1r, 594; M for 2r, 657; 2r, 686; ref to com, 689; rep of com, 746; 3r, 753; r.a., 784

United Kingdom
Cargoes from, to Port of Churchill, 822
Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference, 2, 107, 159, 179
Cyprus and Suez Canal, 199
England—Income tax on Canadians resident in, 334
Gibraltar, 177
Kenya—British accomplishments in, 60
NATO commitments, 79
Trade with, 815, 820-3

United Nations
Asian situation, 198
Atomic energy, efforts to control, menace of, 100
Budget, contribution of member states, 197-202
Building, New York, 195; Canada's donation to, 195
Canada's representation at, 2, 33, 47, 77, 160-1, 196-7; position in, 198
Charter—armed forces of member countries, 89
Colombo plan, 163-4
Communist China, lack of co-operation, 183
Cyprus and Great Britain, problems of, 199; West New Guinea, 199
Defensive alliances within — Mr. St. Laurent's suggestion, 77, 144. See 107
Disarmament—Canadian delegation's resolution on, 2
Economic and Social Council and specialized agencies, 196, 691, 773, 791
German adherence to principles of Charter, 80
International Finance Corporation endorsed by General Assembly, 771
Narcotic drugs—importation of heroin by member countries banned, 692; Narcotic Committee's views on education, 694
San Francisco Conference, 197
Security Council, 196
Special fund for economic development of under-developed nations, loans by, 199
Technical assistance, 161-5

United States
British Commonwealth loyalties enhanced by association with, 183
China and, 177
Currencies, foreign, accepted by, 798

United States—Con.
Far East policy—Formosa, 176-8, 182-4
Fish trade with Canada, 797
Freedom-loving countries, encouragement given to, 101
Friendly relations with Canada, 183-4
"Canadian Day" at Atlantic City, 183-4
Great Lakes fisheries—convention with Canada, 561-5
Influence on Canada, 176, 183
International rivers, flowing from Canada, 720-6
MacArthur, General Douglas—quoted on necessity of abolishing war, 178
Marshall Plan—aid to Europe, 101
Motives misunderstood and misrepresented, 182
Objectives, peace and order—no imperialistic designs, 101
Postage rates between Canada and, 67
Railways, American, in Canada, 789
Salmon fisheries—treaty with Canada, 138, 723
International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission, 137, 139, 722-5
Submarine, atomic powered, 115-16
Unemployment insurance in, 754
See Baudette and Rainy River Municipal Bridge Co. bill; Foreign Aircraft Third Party Damage bill; International River Improvements bill; St. Mary's River Bridge Company bill

Vaillancourt, Hon. Cyrille
Address in reply to Speech from the Throne, 154-8
Agricultural prices and cost of living, 158
Agriculture, most important basic industry, 156-7
Farm income decreased, 156-8; further decrease harmful to national economy, 157
Beauregard, Hon. Elie, the late, tribute to his memory, 10
Buchanan, Hon. W. A., the late, tribute to his memory, 10
Canada Grain bill—rep of com-3r, 372
Canadian Forces bill—legal wife and common-law wife, 608
Caisse Populaire of Quebec—welcome to members in Senate gallery. 461
Caisses Populaires, 752, 755-6
Loans by, 755-6
Work on behalf of fishing industry, 752
Credit unions, 752, 755
St. Francis Xavier University, organization work, 756

Vaillancourt, Hon. Cyrille—Con.
Crime comics and salacious literature—perversion of youth, 155-6
Divorce—reason for Quebec's opposition to, 315
Equitable Fire Insurance Company of Canada bill, 415, 432
Extension of time for granting certificate of registry, 432
Fisheries Improvement Loans bill, 752, 755-6
Great Lakes Fisheries Convention bill—rep of com-3r, 580
Housing, importance of to family life, 155
King, Hon. James H., the late—tribute to his memory, 805
Maple production equipment—replacement of buckets, 381
Narcotic drug traffic—means of Communist propaganda, 155
Special Committee's report—congratulations to Chairman (Hon. Mr. Reid), 730
National Parks bill—rep of com-3r, 612-14
National unity, 156
Northwest Territories bill—rep of com-3r, 427
Prairie Farm Assistance bill—rep of com-3r, 746
Provident Assurance Company bill, 569, 581
Federal incorporation, 581
Taxation and defence, 155
Territorial Lands bill—rep of com-3r, 355
Yukon bill—rep of com-3r, 427

Veniot, Hon. Clarence J.
Blind Persons bill, 705
Allowances—age of eligibility lowered and income ceilings raised, 705
Criminal Code—Joint Committee on certain questions of criminal law—Leave to sit beyond precincts of Parliament to take evidence from an executioner, 436
Fredericton & Grand Lake Coal & Railway Company bill, 320, 353-4
Ownership of company transferred to Canadian Pacific Railway, 354

Veterans Benefit bill. 1r, 470; 2r, 553; ref to com, 554; rep of com, 555; 3r, 570; r.a., 733

Victoria Insurance Company of Canada bill (Hon. Mr. Farris). 1r, 209; 2r-ref to com, 233; rep of com, 307; 3r, 320; r.a., 426

Vien, Hon. Thomas, P.C.
Archibald divorce petition—refund of fees, 370
Canadian National Railways, 377-9
Hotel operations, 377-9
Minister—right to withhold information, 377
Not function of Parliament to give administrative directions to Government or railway management, 377-9
Canadian Union Conference Corporation of Seventh-day Adventists bill, 443-4
Customs bill, 575-8
Blanket authority to deputy minister to redetermine tax classification, 575
Parliament alone should impose taxation, 578
Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 212, 218, 347
Condonation, 218
Provincial jurisdiction—constitutional question, 218
Divorce statistics, provincial—inquiry in re, 203
Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company bill—technical point, 440-1
Judges bill—high calibre of Canadian Judiciary, 737; standard of living, 738; increased salaries justified, 738
Library of Parliament bill—status of librarians and other employees, 206
Radio bill, 438-9
Proposed regulations—detailed explanation required in committee, 438
Senate Rules
Discussion of bill on second reading, 577-8
Reading of editorials during debate—point of order, 347

Voting. See Elections

War Veterans allowances, 3, 21, 136, 392-7; basic rates increased and income ceilings raised, 392

War Veterans Allowance bill. 1-2r, 391; 3r, 397; r.a., 398

War, 48
Atomic, 177-8
German people and, 96, 99
Horrors of, 89, 93, 177-8
Modern, 105
NATO's influence against, 95
World Wars I and II, 81-2, 86
Canada's response, 90; and contribution to, 103

Waterton Lakes National Park. See National Parks bill

Westcost Transmission Company Limited bill. 1r, 470; 2r, 511; ref to com, 513; rep of com, 526; 3r, 541; r.a., 733

Western European Union (WEU), 78-9, 83-4, 195

Westspur Pipe Line Company bill (Hon. Mr. MacKinnon). 1r, 295; 2r-ref to com, 318; rep of com, 338; 3r, 356; Commons amdt, 483; concurred in, 513; r.a., 549

Wheat
- British agreement, 712
- Crop estimates, 192, 818
  - Early reports harmful to grain trade, 192
- Durum wheat, origin of, 190-1
- Feed grains
  - Freight subsidies on, 115, 209, 380, 382-5, 387, 389
  - Suitability of light weight wheat, 817-18
- Importance of wheat to Canadian economy, 189, 190
- Italy, harvesting method in, 190
- Markets, 193; loss of British, 193
- Palliser Triangle, 190
- Prices, 192-3, 797
- Quota system, 191
- Red Fife
  - Discovery of, 48-51, 189, 191
  - Effect on development of Prairie Provinces and national prosperity, 50
  - Proposal to commemorate discovery, 48-53
- Rust, 191-2, 817, 821
- Storage, quantity in, 192-3
- Surplus, quantity overestimated, 192
- Types of—Red Fife, Marquis, Thatcher, Selkirk, 190-1
- See Canada Grain bill; Grain

Wilson, Hon. Cairine R.
- Acting Speaker, 405, 815, 820, 826
  - Ordered that "Traffic and Transportation Plan for Ottawa", be placed with officers of the Senate, 831
  - Prorogation of Parliament, notice of, 820, 831
- Beauregard, Hon. Elie, the late, tribute to his memory, 10
- Buchanan, Hon. W. A., the late, tribute to his memory, 10
- British North America Acts Amendment bill, 450

Wilson, Hon. Cairine R.—Con.
- Canada Agricultural Products Standards bill, 589-90
  - "Agricultural product" defined, 590
  - Inspectors, power to enter premises, 590
  - Interprovincial and export trade, regulation of, 590
  - Statutory consolidation of standards and grading, 590
- Customs bill, 573
- Divorce and Matrimonial Causes bill, 315-16
  - Desertion, 315-16
  - National Council of Women, resolutions by, 316
  - Women, status of, 315
- Government Employees Compensation bill —rep of com-3r, 561
- Health insurance, prepaid—rural service, 812
- Library of Parliament—reconstruction, 205
- Macphail, Agnes, the late—first woman member of Commons, 256
- Ottawa river, pollution of, 681
- Twenty-fifth anniversary as a member of the Senate, 255
- Women—successful efforts for recognition as "persons" under British North America Act, 255-6

Winnipeg and St. Boniface Harbour Commissioners bill. 1r, 4; 2r, 239; 3r, 241; r.a., 360

Women
- Divorce—province-wide domicile discriminates against, 247-8
- Macphail, Agnes, the late—first woman member of House of Commons—memorial to, 231, 255-6
- National Council of Jewish Women—workshop for older citizens, 151
- National Council of Women—resolutions regarding divorce, 316
- "Persons" under British North America Act, 255-6, 736
- Retirement of, 149
- Status of, 315
- Unemployment Insurance bill (No. 328), 687-9
  - Married women, discrimination against, 687-9
  - Woman member suggested for Commission and Advisory Committee, 688
  - Women one-quarter of total insured labour force, 687-8

Wood, Hon. Thomas H.
- Plains Eastern Pipe Lines Ltd. bill—refund of fees, 238

Work, blessings of Newspaper article quoted, 121

Workmens' Compensation Boards, provincial —agents for federal Government in adjusting claims under Government Employees Compensation Act, 556

World
Conditions, improvement in, 48
Health Organization (WHO), 163-4, 196
Drug addiction, definition of, 691
Hockey Championship—tribute to victorious Canadian team, Penticton V's, 255

Yalta Treaty
Churchill, Sir Winston, opposed to, 104
Obligations not honoured by Russia, 96, 100

Yukon, The
Council members, 422
Indemnity and living allowances, 422
Votes cast in 1952 election, 422
Population, 422
Radio, telephone and telegraph communications, 433
Suggested amalgamation of Yukon and Northwest Territories with four western provinces, 422
See Northwest Territories bill

Yukon bill. 1r, 398; 2r, 421; ref to com, 423; rep of com-3r, 427; r.a., 549

Yukon Pipelines Limited bill (Hon. Mr. Golding for Hon. Mr. Reid). 1r, 415; 2r, 432; ref to com, 434; rep of com-3r, 459; Commons amdt, 551; concurred in, 559; r.a., 732

DIVORCE BILLS

Abrams, Ethel Dworkin. 1r, 406; 2r, 424; 3r, 428; r.a., 732

Alarie, Vivian Ruth Law. 1r, 406; 2r, 424; 3r, 428; r.a., 732

Allen, Sidney Robert. 1r, 569; 2r, 582; 3r, 583; r.a., 784

Allton, Harry Elsworth. 1r, 220; 2r, 230; 3r, 232; r.a., 425

Andreis, Delmar Ross. 1r, 406; 2r, 424; 3r, 428; r.a., 732

Archambault, Joseph Albert Roland. 1r, 145; 2r, 165; 3r, 168; r.a., 360

Arkin, Doris Wagner. 1r, 232; 2r, 240; 3r, 241; r.a., 425

Divorce Bills—Con.

Aronovitch, Anne Roitman. 1r, 282; 2r, 306; 3r, 311; r.a., 425

Atkinson, Gweneth Leslie Clarke. 1r, 76; 2r, 108; 3r, 114; r.a., 359

Austin, Maria Christina Vettore. 1r, 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a , 359

Awner, Aba. 1r, 391; 2-3r, 402; r.a., 426

Bailie, Margaret Francis Kennedy. 1r. 570; 2r, 582; 3r, 584; r.a., 784

Baillargeon, Joseph Flavian Denis Rheo. 1r, 583; 2r, 592; 3r, 593; r.a., 784

Barnes, Kathleen Dallas White. 1r, 584; 2r, 592; 3r, 593; r.a., 784

Baron, Roma Gisser. 1r, 246; 2r, 270; 3r, 271; r.a., 425

Barre, Lena Robitaille. 1r, 232; 2r, 240; 3r, 241; r.a., 425

Barry, Georges Etienne. 1r, 526; 2r, 549; 3r, 552; r.a., 732

Bateman, Olive Gertrude Meredith. 1r, 406; 2r, 424; 3r, 428; r.a., 732

Beal, Phyllis Lucy Stiles. 1r, 526; 2r, 549; 3r, 552; r.a., 732

Beatty, Phyllis Lilian Buck. 1r, 569; 2r, 582; 3r, 584; r.a., 784

Beaudoin, Joseph Adelbert, otherwise known as Georges Beaudoin. 1r, 589; 2-3r, 610; r.a., 784

Becker, Ross Harold. 1r, 370; 2-3r, 373; r.a., 425

Belanger, Clare Taylor. 1r, 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359

Belanger, Elizabeth Jane Marcelin. 1r, 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359

Bell, Mary Madeline Collings. 1r, 583; 2r, 592; 3r, 593; r.a., 784

Benjamin, Mary Ritchie Fleming. 1r, 231; 2r, 240; 3r, 241; r.a., 425

Berger, Patricia Galley. 1r, 246; 2r, 270; 3r, 271; r.a., 425

Bernard, Jane Schubert Clark. 1r, 130; 2r, 153; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

Bessey, Ronald Elikum. 1r, 570; 2r, 582; 3r, 584; r.a., 784

Best, Sheila Kathleen McNaughton, 1r, 76 2r, 108; 3r, 114; r.a., 359

Bishop, Katharine Hamilton Ellis. 1r, 76; 2r, 108; 3r, 114; r.a., 359

Blais, Martin Yvon. 1r, 370; 2-3r, 373; r.a., 426

Bochna, Nickola, otherwise known as Nicholas Bockan. 1r, 319; 2r, 353; 3r, 356; r.a., 425

Boisclair, Gabriel. 1r, 391; 2-3r, 402; r.a., 426

Divorce Bills—Con.

Boisclair, Paul-Emile Roland. 1r, 220; 2r, 229; 3r, 232; r.a., 425

Bouchard, Beatrice Edith Paige. 1r, 186; 2-3r, 201; r.a., 360

Boulet, Gabrielle Dallaire. 1r, 282; 2r, 306; 3r, 310; r.a., 425

Bowen, Dawn Elsie Coles Ekers. 1r, 220; 2r, 229; 3r, 232; r.a., 425

Brawerman, Bela Koschitza. 1r, 64; 2r, 93; 3r, 95; r.a., 359

Bray, Enid Gertrude Brooks. 1r, 405; 2r, 424; 3r, 428; r.a., 732

Brenner, Rose Blum. 1r, 111; 2r, 127; 3r, 134; r.a., 359

Broadbent, Barbara Louise Bartlett. 1r, 569; 2r, 582; 3r, 584; r.a., 784

Bromby, Irene Annetta Thomas. 1r, 130; 2r, 153; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

Brooks, Cecil. 1r, 569; 2r, 582; 3r, 584; r.a., 784

Brophey, Marilyn Irene Damer. 1r, 569; 2r, 582; 3r, 584; r.a., 784

Brown, Edith Isabella Bond. 1r, 460; 2r, 482; 3r, 484; r.a., 732

Brown, Jeanne Jacqueline Content. 1r, 569; 2r, 582; 3r, 584; r.a., 784

Brunelle, Joseph Edouard Alexandre. 1r, 145; 2r, 165; 3r, 168; r.a., 360

Buium, Lorna Greenberg. 1r, 526; 2r, 549; 3r, 552; r.a., 732

Butler, Kathleen Swanson. 1r, 220; 2r, 229; 3r, 232; r.a., 425

Callahan, Robert Fraser. 1r, 319; 2r, 353; 3r, 356; r.a., 425

Campbell, Ada Garland Skakle. 1r, 111; 2r, 127; 3r, 134; r.a., 359

Campbell, Mary Veronica Hamilton. 1r, 391; 2-3r, 402; r.a., 426

Campeol, Joseph Antonio. 1r, 406; 2r, 424; 3r, 428; r.a., 732

Carrier, Joseph Louis Armand. 1r, 526; 2r, 549; 3r, 553; r.a., 732

Cartier, Georges-Etienne. 1r, 583; 2r, 592; 3r, 593

Cashman, June Patricia Potter. 1r, 220; 2r, 229; 3r, 232; r.a., 425

Cermak, Anton Josef. 1r, 186; 2-3r, 201; r.a., 360

Chabotar, Elie. 1r, 569; 2r, 582; 3r, 584; r.a., 784

Chadsey, Roberta Margaret Gilpin. 1r, 370; 2-3r, 373; r.a., 425

Chaffey, Dorothea Josephine Forbes. 1r, 569; 2r, 582; 3r, 584; r.a., 784

Divorce Bills—Con.

Chapman, Winnifred Herbert. 1r, 370; 2-3r, 373; r.a., 426

Clark, Hazel Miller. 1r, 167; 2r, 185; 3r, 186; r.a., 360

Cloutier, Marie Anna Migneault. 1r, 370; 2-3r, 373; r.a., 426

Cobel, Gisela Kunz. 1r, 167; 2r, 185; 3r, 186; r.a., 360

Cohen, Marian Toba Wolfe. 1r, 370; 2-3r, 373; r.a., 425

Cohen, Ruth Barsuk. 1r, 319; 2r, 353; 3r, 356; r.a., 425

Cohen, Susan Frosst. 1r, 319; 2r, 353; 3r, 356; r.a., 425

Collins, Phyllis Elizabeth Warner. 1r, 282; 2r, 306; 3r, 310; r.a., 425

Colucci, Giacinta Villarosa. 1r, 167; 2r, 185; 3r, 186; r.a., 360

Comis, Margaret Aitken Robertson. 1r, 110; 2r, 127; 3r, 134; r.a., 359

Comm, Bernice Noble. 1r, 319; 2r, 353; 3r, 356; r.a., 425

Connell, Beatrice Teressa Mathewson. 1r, 319; 2r, 353; 3r, 356; r.a., 425

Coolon, Mary McKinnon McEachran. 1r, 570; 2r, 582; 3r, 584; r.a., 784

Coss, Sieglinde Rosa Wolf. 1r, 110; 2r, 127; 3r, 133; r.a., 359

Couttie, Mary Lee Wilson. 1r, 167; 2r, 185; 3r, 186; r.a., 360

Craddock, Shirley Patricia King. 1r, 130; 2r, 153; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

Dardano, Nicole Emile. 1r, 569; 2r, 582; 3r, 584; r.a., 784

Davies, Barbara Norma Demaine. 1r, 130; 2r, 152; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

D'Avignon, Joseph Leon Gilles. 1r, 231; 2r, 240; 3r, 241; r.a., 425

Dawe, Mary Leona Dalton. 1r, 76; 2r, 108; 3r, 114; r.a., 359

Day, Bernice Elizabeth Lunan. 1r, 370; 2-3r, 373; r.a., 425

De Board, Marie Rose Barsey. 1r, 110; 2r, 127; 3r, 134; r.a., 360

Delorme, Joseph Delphis Guillaume. 1r, 526; 2r, 549; 3r, 552. See p. 652

Denis, Rhoda Beatrice Cree. 1r, 246; 2r, 270; 3r, 271; r.a., 425

Derbridge, Myrtle Ada Lewin. 1r, 526; 2r, 549; 3r, 552; r.a., 732

Deschesnes, Jean Eudes. 1r, 319; 2r, 353; 3r, 356; r.a., 425

Deschesnes, Rose Marie Lescarbeau. 1r, 391; 2-3r, 402; r.a., 426

Divorce Bills—Con.

Desjardins, Albina Legault. 1r, 186; 2-3r, 201; r.a., 360

Desjardins, Lucille Grenier. 1r, 282; 2r, 306; 3r, 311; r.a., 425

Deslauriers, Eva Lilly Ware. 1r, 220; 2r, 229; 3r, 232; r.a., 425

Deslauriers, Marcel. 1r, 406; 2r, 424; 3r, 428; r.a., 732

DesMarais, Anna Pearl Lingo. 1r, 220, 2r, 229; 3r, 232; r.a., 425

Devlin, Rita Barlatti. 1r, 130; 2r, 152; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

Disken, Dorothy Winnifred Patricia Lawson. 1r, 220; 2r, 230; 3r, 232; r.a., 425

Distelman, Regina Wiener Strelezky. 1r, 526; 2r, 549; 3r, 552; r.a., 732

Dmysz, Antoni. 1r, 145; 2r, 165; 3r, 168; r.a. 360

Donaghy, Harold Archie. 1r, 110; 2r, 127; 3r, 134; r.a., 359

Doucet, Joseph Roger Gerard. 1r, 76; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359

Douglas, Eileen Beatrice Sloan. 1r, 391; 2-3r, 402; r.a., 426

Downie, Donald William. 1r, 130; 2r, 152; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

Doyle, Meyer Francis. 1r, 64; 2r, 93; 3r, 95; r.a., 359

Dragon, Joseph Telesphore Origene. 1r, 220; 2r, 230; 3r, 233; r.a. 425

Drennan, Lillian Dorothy Menzies. 1r, 130; 2r, 153; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

Duhamel, Marie Vina Lebel. 1r, 110; 2r, 127; 3r, 133, r.a., 359

Dunsmuir, Hugh McCrone. 1r, 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359

Ellis, Francis Joseph. 1r, 111; 2r, 127; 3r, 134; r.a., 360

Ellmaurer, Elsa Kremer. 1r, 130; 2r, 153; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

Farley, Norva Florence Lemon. 1r, 460; 2r, 482; 3r, 484; r.a., 732

Ferron, Claude. 1r, 570; 2r, 582; 3r, 584

Finkelman, Ruth Nathan. 1r, 145; 2r, 165; 3r, 168; r.a., 360

Finlayson. Harry Evert. 1r, 64; 2r, 93; 3r, 95; r.a., 359

Fishman, Molly Wineberg. 1r, 584; 2-3r, 593; r.a., 784

Flintoft, Sheila Elsie Clarkson. 1r, 145; 2r, 165; 3r, 168; r.a., 360

Foran, John Edward. 1r, 146; 2r, 166; 3r, 168; r.a., 360

Divorce Bills—Con.

Fox, Rose Bowman. 1r, 552; 2r, 560; 3r, 561; r.a., 732

Frankenburg, Katharine Leitner Bouchard. 1r, 460; 2r, 482; 3r, 484; r.a., 732

Friedman, Bernice Balinsky. 1r, 391; 2-3r, 402; r.a., 426

Froment, Marie Therese Jeannette Mainville. 1r, 526; 2r, 549; 3r, 552; r.a., 732

Fullerton, Clara Gaetan Milot. 1r, 460; 2r, 482; 3r, 484; r.a., 732

Gagnon, Desneiges Primeau. 1r, 110; 2r, 127; 3r, 134; r.a., 359

Gagnon, Lucien. 1r, 146; 2r, 166; 3r, 168; r.a., 360

Garayt, Glennice Maude Hunter. 1r, 406; 2r, 424; 3r, 428; r.a. 732

Gardner, Florence Aleatha Geraldine Hamilton. 1r, 391; 2-3r, 402; r.a., 426

Garoff, Gladys Krassner. 1r, 110; 2r, 127; 3r, 134; r.a., 359

Gauthier, Mary McDonald. 1r, 145; 2r, 165; 3r, 168; r.a., 360

Gibbons, Elizabeth Coyle Ellis. 1r, 319; 2r, 353; 3r, 356, r.a., 425

Giguere, Joseph Henri Marcel, 1r, 460; 2r, 482; 3r, 484; r.a., 732

Gilbert, Madelyn Jane Picard. 1r. 391; 2-3r, 402; r.a., 426

Gilhooley, Joyce Hodkin. 1r, 145; 2r, 165; 3r, 168; r.a., 360

Gillen, Annie Laker. 1r, 76; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359

Glancy, Dora Helen Simmons. 1r, 526; 2r, 549; 3r, 553; r.a., 732

Goldenstein, Nomi Meijerowicz. 1r, 130; 2r, 153; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

Goldschmied, Myriam Micheline Weil. 1r, 186; 2-3r, 201; r.a., 360

Goupil, Berthe Montpetit. 1r, 145; 2r, 165; 3r, 168; r.a., 360

Graham, Eleanor Grace Jones. 1r, 282; 2r, 306; 3r, 310; r.a., 425

Grandillo, Yolande Segatore. 1r, 76; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359

Grandjean, Elizabeth Annabel Clouston. 1r, 110; 2r, 127; 3r, 134; r.a., 359

Grant, Marie Joyce Kane. 1r, 186; 2-3r, 201; r.a., 360

Grayburn, William Michael. 1r, 460; 2r, 482; 3r, 484; r.a., 732

Griffin, Meta Avard Wheatley. 1r, 130; 2r, 152; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

Grimsdale, Marguerite Gladys Letitia Mathers. 1r, 552; 2r, 560; 3r, 561; r.a., 732

Divorce Bills—Con.
Gunston, Dorothy Katherine Beattie. 1r, 231; 2r, 240; 3r, 241; r.a., 425
Guthrie, Mary Black. 1r, 246; 2r, 270; 3r. 271; r.a., 425

Hamilton, Ellis. 1r, 231; 2r, 240; 3r, 241; r.a., 425
Harrigan, Mayo Arthur Perrin. 1r, 552; 2r, 560; 3r, 561; r.a., 732
Hart, Muriel Claire Wilson. 1r, 76; 2r, 108; 3r, 114; r.a., 359
Hartberg, Eugen. 1r, 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359
Hawkins, Marie Laurenza Suzanne Bolduc. 1r, 130; 2r, 153; 3r, 154; r.a., 360
Helakos, Elias, otherwise known as Louis Childs. 1r, 186; 2-3r, 201; r.a., 360
Higgins, Francis Ambrose, 1r, 319; 2r, 353; 3r, 356; r.a., 425
Hiscock, Sheila Winnifred Richardson. 1r, 282; 2r, 306; 3r, 311; r.a., 425
Hocaloski, Olga Mailkowski. 1r, 220; 2r, 229; 3r, 232; r.a., 425
Hoffman, Isidore. 1r, 406; 2r, 424; 3r, 428; r.a., 732
Holowaty, Stella (Stephania) Burnatowska. 1r, 64; 2r, 93; 3r, 95; r.a., 359
Howell, Lois Audrey Jemima Patch. 1r, 130; 2r, 152; 3r, 154; r.a., 360
Hunter, George Reilly. 1r, 130; 2r, 152; 3r, 154; r.a., 360
Huot, Rita Ursule Labadie, 1r, 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359
Hutchinson, Shirley Elizabeth Saul. 1r, 111; 2r, 127; 3r, 134; r.a., 360

Jakobszak, Alexander. 1r, 220; 2r, 230; 3r, 232; r.a., 425
Janson, Joyce Hilda Street. 1r, 319; 2r, 353; 3r, 356; r.a., 425
Javallas, Joyce Davies. 1r, 406; 2r, 424; 3r, 428; r.a., 732
Jefford, Irene Joan Fabian. 1r, 130; 2r, 153; 3r, 154; r.a., 360
Johnson, Margaret Moffat Wilkie. 1r, 370; 2-3r, 373; r.a., 426
Johnston, Arthur. 1r, 76; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359
Jones, Barbara Elinor Richardson, 1r, 64; 2r, 93; 3r, 95; r.a., 359

Kaczmarek, Maria Lutz. 1r, 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359
Kaczynski, Mary Jagiello. 1r, 130; 2r, 153; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

Divorce Bills—Con.
Karibian, Frances Marguerite Beaudin. 1r, 570; 2r, 582; 3r, 584; r.a., 784
Kastelberger, Erna Reiter. 1r, 319; 2r, 353; 3r, 356; r.a., 425
Katz, Gertie Tryansky. 1r, 406; 2r, 424; 3r, 428; r.a., 732
Katz, Goldie Moscovitch. 1r, 526; 2r, 549; 3r, 552; r.a., 732
Katz, Rosalind Elaine Beinhaker. 1r, 220; 2r, 229; 3r, 232; r.a., 425
Kelecsenyi, Bela Antal. 1r, 76; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359
Keller, Doris Lydia Kimber. 1r, 370; 2-3r, 373; r.a., 425
Kennedy, Veronica Forrester Rose. 1r, 460; 2r, 482; 3r, 484; r.a., 732
Keyton, Eva Amelia Richardson. 1r, 220; 2r, 229; 3r, 232; r.a., 425
Kezber, Maureen Demers. 1r, 391; 2-3r, 402; r.a., 426
King, Amy Joyce Markham. 1r, 370; 2-3r, 373; r.a., 426
Kingsley, Isabel Taylor Page. 1r, 220; 2r, 230; 3r, 232; r.a., 425
Kirby, Pansy Joy Cowen. 1r, 220; 2r, 230; 3r, 232; r.a., 425
Kotsos, Demetra Denis Varverikos. 1r, 186; 2-3r, 201; r.a., 360
Kowalew, Maria Camko. 1r, 370; 2-3r, 373; r.a., 426
Krysko, Marie Blanche Dionne. 1r, 370; 2-3r, 373; r.a., 425
Kulczycki, Theophile. 1r, 460; 2r, 482; 3r, 484; r.a., 732

Labelle, Blanche Mary Shurge. 1r, 319; 2r, 353; 3r, 356; r.a., 425
Labreche, Andre. 1r, 583; 2r, 592; 3r, 593; r.a., 784
Laffin, Kathleen Gertrude King. 1r, 282; 2r, 306; 3r, 311; r.a., 425
Lafrance, Joseph Rene Romeo. 1r, 76; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359
Lajeunesse, Lili Gourd. 1r, 391; 2-3r, 402; r.a., 426
Lalonde, Marie Irma Marquette. 1r, 391; 2-3r, 402; r.a., 426
Lange, Francois-Xavier. 1r, 220; 2r, 229; 3r, 232; r.a., 425
Langton, Donald Muir. 1r, 220; 2r, 229; 3r, 232; r.a., 425
Lanz, Letitia MacDonald. 1r, 370; 2-3r, 373; r.a., 425
Laporte, Aline Rousseau. 1r, 167; 2r, 185; 3r, 186; r.a., 360
Larose, Jean Louis. 1r, 584; 2-3r, 593; r.a., 784

Divorce Bills—Con.

Lasnier, Henry Edwin. 1r, 130; 2r, 153; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

Laurin, Louis Kenneth. 1r, 220; 2r, 229; 3r. 232; r.a., 425

Lavoie, Elsie Amelia Armistice Wood. 1r, 76; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359

Lebegue, Ginette Monique Cornu. 1r, 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 113, r.a., 359

Leblanc, Rita Forest. 1r, 146; 2r, 166; 3r, 168; r.a., 360

Leclere, Augustine Denonville. 1r, 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359

Lees, Carmen Lister. 1r, 220; 2r, 229; 3r, 232; r.a., 425

Lefebvre, Roland. 1r, 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359

Lefebvre, Yvette Cayer. 1r, 526; 2r, 549; 3r, 552; r.a., 732

Leinonen, Joanna Florence Ritchie. 1r, 220; 2r, 230; 3r, 232; r.a., 425

Lemieux, Marie Jeanne D'Arc Marcelle Bernier. 1r, 130; 2r, 152; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

Le Moyne, Marie Mae Seguin. 1r, 370; 2-3r, 373; r.a. 426

Lenetsky, Dorothy Izenberg. 1r, 130; 2r, 152; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

Lepage, Ernest Augustus. 1r, 526; 2r, 549; 3r, 552; r.a., 732

Levine, Rejane Plamondon. 1r, 391; 2-3r, 402; r.a., 426

Levine, Ruth Steirman. 1r, 569; 2r, 582; 3r, 584; r.a., 784

Liebman, Annie Kofman. 1r, 220; 2r, 230; 3r, 232; r.a., 425

Lindsey, Norma Constance Parsons. 1r, 319; 2r, 353; 3r, 356; r.a., 425

Linehan, Clifford Joseph. 1r, 406; 2r, 424; 3r, 428; r.a., 732

Lupovitch, Freida Schecter. 1r, 406; 2r, 424; 3r, 428; r.a., 732

Lutterman, Julia Hut. 1r, 570, 2r, 582; 3r, 584; r.a., 784

Lynes, Glendon Joseph. 1r, 552; 2r, 560; 3r, 561; r.a., 732

Mallozzi, Elizabeth Blanche Nelson. 1r, 406; 2r, 424; 3r, 428; r.a., 732

Mantha, Eugene Theodore. 1r, 569; 2r, 582; 3r, 584; r.a., 784

Marchand, Greta Irene Kokko. 1r, 76; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359

Marchand, Joan Shirley Davies. 1r, 231; 2r, 240; 3r, 241; r.a., 425

Marcoux, Elizabeth Glencross. 1r, 246; 2r, 270; 3r, 271; r.a., 425

Divorce Bills—Con.

Markowitz, Sybil Lavine. 1r, 391; 2-3r, 402; r.a., 426

Markus, Pearl Mendelson. 1r, 76; 2r, 108; 3r, 114; r.a., 359

Marshall, George James. 1r, 391; 2-3r, 402; r.a., 426

Marshall, Mabel Kinghorn. 1r, 130; 2r, 153; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

Masterson, Alsye May Lissemore. 1r, 460; 2r, 482; 3r, 484; r.a., 732

Martallino, Luigi, otherwise known as Louis Martellino. 1r, 391; 2-3r, 402; r.a., 426

Mastrocola, Rocco Aldo Amaedeo. 1r, 370; 2-3r, 373; r.a., 426

Meister, Annie Esther Vetter. 1r, 220; 2r, 229; 3r, 232; r.a., 425

Menard, Albert. 1r, 246; 2r, 270; 3r, 271; r.a., 425

Michetti, Antonio. 1r, 232; 2r, 240; 3r, 241; r.a., 425

Midlick, Margaret Thomson Kelso. 1r, 220; 2r, 230; 3r. 232; r.a., 425

Miller, Juliette Bertha Langlois. 1r, 76; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359

Mizener, Shirley Norah Farrar. 1r, 130; 2r, 153; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

Moffit, Reta Muriel Hadden. 1r, 130; 2r, 152; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

Mooney, Christine Bennie Kelly. 1r, 130; 2r, 153; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

Moore, Gerald Willy. 1r, 110; 2r, 127; 3r, 134; r.a., 359

Morash, Carmela Lanza. 1r, 64; 2r, 93; 3r, 95; r.a., 359

Morrow, Robert Irvin. 1r, 569; 2r, 582; 3r, 584; r.a., 784

Moscovitch, Gitel Shepsel. 1r, 319; 2r, 353; 3r, 356; r.a., 425

Moshonas, Paraskevy Moshonas. 1r, 167; 2r, 185; 3r, 186; r.a., 360

Mullins, Margaret Durning. 1r, 526; 2r, 549; 3r, 552; r.a., 732

Myre, Aline Pelland. 1r. 220; 2r, 229; 3r, 232; r.a., 425

Macaulay, Velma May Robinson. 1r, 145; 2r, 165; 3r, 168; r.a., 360

MacGregor, Violet Doris Hubbard. 1r, 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 114; r.a., 359

MacIver, Margaret Violet Oswald Nicol. 1r, 461; 2r, 482; 3r, 484; r.a., 732

Mackay, Irene Christina Edwards. 1r, 64; 2r, 93; 3r, 95; r.a., 359

MacLean, Daniel Joseph. 1r, 130; 2r, 153; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

McDerment, Pauline McDonald. 1r, 145; 2r, 165; 3r, 168; r.a., 360

Divorce Bills—Con.

McDougall, Evelyn Woolls Gallagher. 1r, 146; 2r, 166; 3r, 168; r.a., 360

McGillivray, Donald John. 1r, 589; 2-3r, 610; r.a., 832

McGurk, Winnifred Blanche Brook. 1r, 319; 2r, 353; 3r, 356; r.a., 425

McKinnell, John. 1r, 111; 2r, 127; 3r, 134; r.a., 360

McLean, Phyllis Geraldine Brown. 1r, 220; 2r, 229; 3r, 232; r.a., 425

McMartin, James. 1r, 589; 2-3r, 610; r.a. 784

Nadler, Shirley Pollack. 1r, 405; 2r, 424; 3r, 428; r.a., 732

Nangreaves, George James. 1r, 64; 2r, 93; 3r, 95; r.a., 359

Neftin, Mania Rissman. 1r, 146; 2r, 166; 3r, 168; r.a., 360

Newton, John William. 1r, 146; 2r, 166; 3r, 168; r.a., 360

Normand, Georges Ovide. 1r, 111; 2r, 127; 3r, 134; r.a., 359

Norris, Gordon Stewart. 1r, 282; 2r, 306; 3r, 311; r.a., 425

Oakes, Beatrice Ellis. 1r, 111; 2r, 127; 3r, 134; r.a. 359

Oliver, Arthur Edmund. 1r, 130; 2r, 153; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

O'Ranski, Florence Mary Ann Meakin. 1r, 460; 2r, 482; 3r, 484; r.a. 732

Paquin, Mary Matilda Getto. 1r, 460; 2r, 482; 3r, 484; r.a., 732

Page, Aline Sauve, 1r, 584; 2r, 592; 3r, 593; r.a., 784

Paradis, Marcelle Topping. 1r, 146; 2r, 166; 3r, 168; r.a., 360

Pare, Therese Deschamps. 1r, 186; 2-3r, 201; r.a., 360

Pasmore, Beatrice Macdonald Stewart. 1r, 583; 2r, 592; 3r, 593; r.a. 784

Paul, Maia Piibe. 1r, 186; 2-3r, 201; r.a., 360

Pearson, Irene Dora Baker. 1r, 167; 2r, 185; 3r, 186; r.a., 360

Pellerin, Freda Margery Turton. 1r, 110; 2r, 127; 3r, 133; r.a., 359

Perras, Real. 1r, 583; 2r, 592; 3r, 593; r.a., 784

Perzow, Freda Lutsky. 1r, 220; 2r, 229; 3r, 232; r.a., 425

Peterkin, Grace Elizabeth Sinclair. 1r, 391; 2-3r, 402; r.a., 426

Phaneuf, Joseph Armand Jacques. 1r, 570; 2r, 582; 3r, 584; r.a., 784

Divorce Bills—Con.

Picktell, Marjory Grace Darling Downey. 1r, 111; 2r, 127; 3r, 134; r.a., 360

Pitt, Carmen Cortez Leigh. 1r, 167; 2r, 185; 3r, 186; r.a., 360

Plourde, Joseph Marcel. 1r, 552; 2r, 560; 3r, 561; r.a., 732

Popadick, Agnes Rose McKiernan. 1r, 220; 2r, 229; 3r, 232; r.a., 425

Pope, Eldora Mary Mills. 1r, 370; 2-3r, 373; r.a., 425

Powell, Nora Elizabeth Wolverson. 1r, 167; 2r, 185; 3r, 186; r.a., 360

Prescott, Gardner Hinckley. 1r, 282; 2r, 306; 3r, 311; r.a., 425

Puttee, Hazel Irene McKay. 1r, 186; 2-3r, 201; r.a., 360

Pytel, Andrew Henry. 1r, 145; 2r, 165; 3r, 168; r.a., 360

Rabinovitch, Mollie Litvack. 1r, 146; 2r, 166; 3r, 168; r.a., 360

Rabow, Marion Tannenbaum. 1r, 391; 2-3r, 402; r.a., 426

Ramsay, Mary Elizabeth Lorraine Callard. 1r, 526; 2r, 549; 3r, 553; r.a., 732

Rappoport, Frances Kellerman. 1r, 282; 2r, 306; 3r, 310; r.a., 425

Rashcovsky, Jennie Switzman. 1r, 552; 2r, 560; 3r, 561; r.a., 732

Rawlings, Joyce Gertrude Haworth. 1r, 320; 2r, 353; 3r, 356; r.a., 425

Redburn, Marion Murray. 1r, 220; 2r, 229; 3r, 232; r.a., 425

Reed, Maureen Theresa May Baker. 1r, 110; 2r, 127; 3r, 134; r.a., 360

Reidt, Veronica Vera Bordenuik. 1r, 461; 2r, 482; 3r, 484; r.a., 732

Resseguier, Maxine Samuels. 1r, 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359

Reynolds, Anna Cibula. 1r, 570; 2r, 582; 3r, 584; r.a., 784

Rheaume, Joseph Pierre Emile Jasmin. 1r, 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359

Richard, Mary Theresa McSheffrey. 1r, 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359

Ritchot, Albert. 1r, 220; 2r, 229; 3r, 232; r.a., 425

Roberts, Eileen Bayliss. 1r, 526; 2r, 549; 3r, 552; r.a., 732

Robinson, George Angus. 1r, 110; 2r, 127; 3r, 134; r.a., 359

Robitaille, Jean Claude. 1r, 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359

Rose, Julia Mary Collen Dwyer. 1r, 64; 2r, 93; 3r, 95; r.a., 359

Divorce Bills—Con.

Ross, Edith Dora Hyndman. 1r, 130; 2r, 153; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

Ross, Mary Evelyn Martinson. 1r, 220; 2r, 299; 3r, 232; r.a., 425

Rowlatt, Margaret Pearl McNamara. 1r, 130; 2r, 153; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

Roy, Joseph Andre Roland. 1r, 232; 2r, 240; 3r, 241; r.a., 425

Roy, Marie Merilda Longval. 1r, 552; 2r, 559; 3r, 561; r.a., 732

Ruttenberg, Susan Waldman. 1r, 583; 2r, 592; 3r, 593; r.a., 784

Rutwind, Pearl Raicek. 1r, 569; 2r, 582; 3r, 584; r.a., 784

Ryshpan, Anne Wahl. 1r, 370; 2-3r, 373; r.a., 425

Salotti, Marie-Angeline Delledonne. 1r, 246; 2r, 270; 3r, 271; r.a., 425

Sandler, David. 1r, 406; 2r, 424; 3r, 428; r.a., 732

Satel, Edward. 1r, 146; 2r, 166; 3r, 168; r.a., 360

Sauer, Kurth. 1r, 370; 2-3r, 373; r.a., 425

Scally, George Gerald Melville. 1r, 461; 2r, 482; 3r, 484; r.a., 732

Schoen, Henry. 1r, 110; 2r, 127; 3r, 134; r.a., 360

Schulman, Evelyn Held. 1r, 145; 2r, 165; 3r, 168; r.a., 360

Schwartz, Betty Weiner. 1r, 391; 2-3r, 402; r.a., 426

Scullion, Michael Moses. 1r, 406; 2r, 424; 3r, 428; r.a., 732

Segal, Ethel Tietlebaum. 1r, 76; 2r, 108; 3r, 114; r.a., 359

Seguin, Fernand. 1r, 220; 2r, 230; 3r, 232; r.a., 425

Seligman, Lillian Greenberg. 1r, 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359

Sevigny, Alfred. 1r, 583; 2r, 592; 3r, 593;

Seward, Anne Gorin. 1r, 246; 2r, 270; 3r, 271; r.a., 425

Shanassy, William Edward. 1r, 220; 2r, 230; 3r, 232; r.a., 425

Shapiro, Eva Lepine. 1r, 391; 2-3r, 402; r.a., 426

Shea, Ruby Kitts. 1r, 130; 2r, 153; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

Short, Pierrette Marsan. 1r, 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359

Silver, Ruth Evans. 1r, 145; 2r, 166; 3r, 168; r.a., 360

Silverton, Lily Shenker. 1r, 460; 2r, 482; 3r, 484; r.a., 732

Divorce Bills—Con.

Simard, Joseph Alexandre Roland. 1r, 319; 2r, 353; 3r, 356; r.a., 425

Simoneau, Aline Mailloux. 1r, 461; 2r, 482; 3r, 484; r.a., 732

Slesicki, Zofia Janina Hurny. 1r, 167; 2r, 185; 3r, 186; r.a., 360

Smith, Edna Florence Helen Dawson. 1r, 370; 2-3r, 373; r.a., 425

Soule, Roscoe Winston Percy. 1r, 220; 2r, 229; 3r, 232, r.a., 425

Southam, William Watson. 1r, 186; 2-3r, 201; r.a., 360

Spighi, Ann Mary Allward. 1r, 526; 2r, 549; 3r, 553; r.a., 732

Sponagle, Pauline Alice Leduc. 1r, 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359

Squires, Christina Mellis Campbell. 1r, 76; 2r, 108; 3r, 114; r.a., 359

Staniforth, Sheila Edith Emily Little. 1r, 186; 2-3r, 201; r.a., 360

Stanistreet, Daisy Ruth Kirk. 1r, 64; 2r, 93; 3r, 95; r.a., 359

Stein, Sara Beiss. 1r, 461; 2r, 482; 3r, 484; r.a., 732

Stewart, Charles Ryerson. 1r, 552; 2r, 560; 3r, 561; r.a., 732

Stewart, Vera Grace Westley. 1r, 110; 2r, 127; 3r, 133; r.a., 359

Stinson, Franga Beryl Harker. 1r, 405; 2r, 424; 3r, 428; r.a., 732

Stone, Sheila Mary Power. 1r, 76; 2r, 108; 3r, 114; r.a., 359

Stonehouse, Joseph Willie Walter. 1r, 220; 2r, 230; 3r, 232; r.a., 425

Storey, Freda Marie Johnston. 1r, 460; 2r, 482; 3r, 484; r.a., 732

Story, Kenneth Rae. 1r, 552; 2r, 560; 3r, 561; r.a., 732

Sutcliffe, Eleanor Honor Connolly. 1r, 130; 2r, 153; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

Sutcliffe, Leslie. 1r., 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a,. 359

Szabo, Desire Cherry. 1r, 220; 2r, 230; 3r, 232; r.a., 425

Szer, Izrael. 1r, 583; 2r, 592; 3r, 593; r.a., 784

Tanney, Joseph William James. 1r, 461; 2r, 482; 3r, 484; r.a., 732

Taylor, Evelina Dixon. 1r, 570; 2r, 582; 3r, 584; r.a., 784

Taylor, Hilda Emmalin Christensen. 1r, 552; 2r, 560; 3r, 561; r.a., 732

Tereshtshenko, Wira Pushkar. 1r, 64; 2r, 93; 3r, 95; r.a., 359

Divorce Bills—Con.

Tero, Ethel Elizabeth Smith. 1r, 110; 2r, 127; 3r, 133; r.a., 359

Tetrault, Rosaire Jacques Rene. 1r, 526; 2r, 549; 3r, 552; r.a., 732

Therrien, Fleur-Ange Francoeur. 1r, 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359

Thibodeau, Charles Edouard. 1r, 552; 2r, 559; 3r, 561; r.a., 732

Thompson, Jack Beattie. 1r, 460; 2r, 482; 3r, 484; r.a., 732

Thompson, Yolande Joos. 1r, 460; 2r, 482; 3r, 484; r.a., 732

Tilga, John. 1r, 584; 2r, 592; 3r, 593; r.a., 784

Tomlinson, Richard Robert. 1r, 145; 2r, 165; 3r, 168; r.a., 360

Torunski, Lois Silby Walker. 1r, 130; 2r, 153; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

Towes, Irene Jessie Hillson. 1r, 406; 2r, 424; 3r, 428; r.a., 732

Tremblay, Isidore. 1r, 370; 2-3r, 373; r.a., 425

Tremblay, Marie-Louise Ashby. 1r, 526; 2r, 549; 3r, 552; r.a., 732

Umansky, Irving. 1r, 461; 2r, 482; 3r, 484; r.a., 732

Urban, Charles John. 1r, 589; 2-3r, 610; r.a., 784

Vairogs, Emma Melite Latvaityte. 1r, 130; 2r, 152; 3r, 154; r.a., 360

van der Beek, George Daniel. 1r, 246; 2r, 270; 3r, 271; r.a., 425

Varden, Florence Pearl Loder. 1r, 110; 2r, 127; 3r, 133; r.a., 359

Veary, Ethel Cope. 1r, 282; 2r, 306; 3r, 311; r.a., 425

Verge, Edwin Albert. 1r, 584; 2r, 592; 3r, 593; r.a., 784

Vigeant, Marie Antoinette Demers. 1r, 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359

Vincent, Anne Rynski. 1r, 526; 2r, 549; 3r, 553; r.a., 732

Walker, Joan Audrey Baur. 1r, 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359

Wallace, Marian Douglas Jodrey. 1r, 569; 2r, 582; 3r, 584; r.a., 784

Walters, Irene Furlong. 1r, 406; 2r, 424; 3r, 428; r.a., 732

Divorce Bills—Con.

Watanabe, Yoneyuki. 1r, 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359

Watson, Evelyn Robert Hurst. 1r, 569; 2r, 582; 3r, 584; r.a., 784

Watt, John Russell. 1r, 186; 2-3r, 201; r.a., 360

Webb, Rotha Dodgson. 1r, 111; 2r, 127; 3r, 134; r.a., 360

Weisberg, Lorraine Bella Spegel. 1r, 282; 2r, 306; 3r, 310; r.a., 425

Welcher, Hazel Winifred Edwards. 1r, 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359

White, Ida Rose Amyot. 1r, 246; 2r, 270; 3r, 271; r.a., 425

Williams, Lorraine Bennet Favreau. 1r, 569; 2r, 582; 3r, 584; r.a., 784

Williams, Margaret Gwendoline Turner. 1r, 282; 2r, 306; 3r, 311; r.a., 425

Williamson, Violet Ruby Baxter. 1r, 569; 2r, 582; 3r, 584; r.a., 784

Williamson, Walter. 1r, 391; 2-3r, 402; r.a., 426

Wilson, Ruth Nourse Tomlinson. 1r, 460; 2r, 482; 3r, 484; r.a., 732

Wintrobe, Dorothy Arlin. 1r, 167; 2r, 185; 3r, 186; r.a., 360

Wiseman, Sylvia Knelman. 1r, 460; 2r, 482; 3r, 484; r.a., 732

Wong, James, otherwise known as Yon Hong Ark. 1r, 145; 2r, 165; 3r, 168; r.a., 360

Wooden, Ida Meitin. 1r, 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359

Woods, Helen Margaret Robb. 1r, 584; 2-3r, 593; r.a., 784

Wynter, Mary Ferguson. 1r, 282; 2r, 306; 3r, 311; r.a., 425

Yampolsky, Miriam Rabinovitch, otherwise known as Miriam Rabinovitch Pollack, 1r, 110; 2r, 127; 3r, 134; r.a., 359

Yelin, Eunice Levine. 1r, 145; 2r, 165; 3r, 168; r.a., 360

Young, Susie Earle. 1r, 220; 2r, 230; 3r, 232; r.a., 425

Zawiski, Joseph. 1r, 130; 2-3r, 153; r.a., 360

Zolotas, Evangeline N. Rodinos. 1r, 75; 2r, 108; 3r, 113; r.a., 359