

IMAGE EVALUATION
TEST TARGET (MT-3)

Photographic
Sciences
Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET
WEBSTER, N.Y. 14580
(716) 872-4503

1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0

CIHM/ICMH
Microfiche Series.

CIHM/ICMH
Collection de microfiches.

Canadian Institute for Historical Microreproductions / Institut canadien de microreproductions historiques

01
02
03
04
05
06
07
08
09
10

© 1985

Technical and Bibliographic Notes/Notes techniques et bibliographiques

The Institute has attempted to obtain the best original copy available for filming. Features of this copy which may be bibliographically unique, which may alter any of the images in the reproduction, or which may significantly change the usual method of filming, are checked below.

L'Institut a microfilmé le meilleur exemplaire qu'il lui a été possible de se procurer. Les détails de cet exemplaire qui sont peut-être uniques du point de vue bibliographique, qui peuvent modifier une image reproduite, ou qui peuvent exiger une modification dans la méthode normale de filmage sont indiqués ci-dessous.

- Coloured covers/
Couverture de couleur
- Covers damaged/
Couverture endommagée
- Covers restored and/or laminated/
Couverture restaurée et/ou pelliculée
- Cover title missing/
Le titre de couverture manque
- Coloured maps/
Cartes géographiques en couleur
- Coloured ink (i.e. other than blue or black)/
Encre de couleur (i.e. autre que bleue ou noire)
- Coloured plates and/or illustrations/
Planches et/ou illustrations en couleur
- Bound with other material/
Relié avec d'autres documents
- Tight binding may cause shadows or distortion along interior margin/
La reliure serrée peut causer de l'ombre ou de la distortion le long de la marge intérieure
- Blank leaves added during restoration may appear within the text. Whenever possible, these have been omitted from filming/
Il se peut que certaines pages blanches ajoutées lors d'une restauration apparaissent dans le texte, mais, lorsque cela était possible, ces pages n'ont pas été filmées.
- Additional comments:
Commentaires supplémentaires:

- Coloured pages/
Pages de couleur
- Pages damaged/
Pages endommagées
- Pages restored and/or laminated/
Pages restaurées et/ou pelliculées
- Pages discoloured, stained or foxed/
Pages décolorées, tachetées ou piquées
- Pages detached/Pages détachées
- Showthrough/
Transparence
- Quality of print varies/
Qualité inégale de l'impression
- Includes supplementary material/
Comprend du matériel supplémentaire
- Only edition available/
Seule édition disponible
- Pages wholly or partially obscured by errata slips, tissues, etc., have been refilmed to ensure the best possible image/
Les pages totalement ou partiellement obscurcies par un feuillet d'errata, une pelure, etc., ont été filmées à nouveau de façon à obtenir la meilleure image possible.

This item is filmed at the reduction ratio checked below/
Ce document est filmé au taux de réduction indiqué ci-dessous.

10X	14X	18X	22X	26X	30X
<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input checked="" type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>
12X	16X	20X	24X	28X	32X

The copy filmed here has been reproduced thanks to the generosity of:

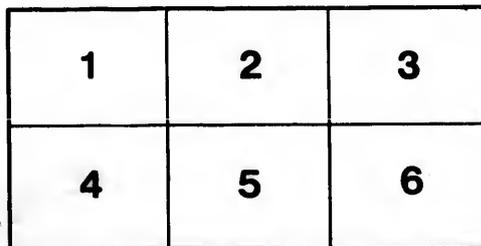

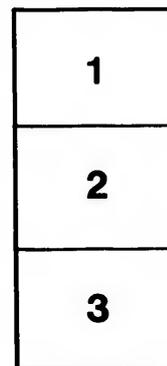

National Library of Canada

The images appearing here are the best quality possible considering the condition and legibility of the original copy and in keeping with the filming contract specifications.

Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the back cover when appropriate. All other original copies are filmed beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression.

The last recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol \rightarrow (meaning "CONTINUED"), or the symbol ∇ (meaning "END"), whichever applies.

Maps, plates, charts, etc., may be filmed at different reduction ratios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as many frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

L'exemplaire filmé fut reproduit grâce à la générosité de:

Bibliothèque nationale du Canada

Les images suivantes ont été reproduites avec le plus grand soin, compte tenu de la condition et de la netteté de l'exemplaire filmé, et en conformité avec les conditions du contrat de filmage.

Les exemplaires originaux dont la couverture en papier est imprimée sont filmés en commençant par le premier plat et en terminant soit par la dernière page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration, soit par le second plat, selon le cas. Tous les autres exemplaires originaux sont filmés en commençant par la première page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration et en terminant par la dernière page qui comporte une telle empreinte.

Un des symboles suivants apparaîtra sur la dernière image de chaque microfiche, selon le cas: le symbole \rightarrow signifie "A SUIVRE", le symbole ∇ signifie "FIN".

Les cartes, planches, tableaux, etc., peuvent être filmés à des taux de réduction différents. Lorsque le document est trop grand pour être reproduit en un seul cliché, il est filmé à partir de l'angle supérieur gauche, de gauche à droite, et de haut en bas, en prenant le nombre d'images nécessaire. Les diagrammes suivants illustrent la méthode.

ails
du modifier une nage

rata
o elure, à

32X

Truly yours
Alfred B Street.

FRONTENAC
A POEM OF THE IROQUOIS.

By Alfred B. Street.

ALBANY.

JOEL MUNSELL.

1856.

FRONTENAC

POEM OF THE IROQUOIS

BY

ALFRED B. STREET

ALBANY
JOEL MUNSELL
MDCCLXVI

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1866,
By ALFRED B. STREET,
in the Clerk's Office of the District Court of the United States, for the Northern District of New York.

REFACE.

Our tale is based upon the following chapter of history. In the month of June, 1696, Count Frontenac, then Governor-General of Canada, assembled an army at Lachine, a few miles from Montreal, for an expedition against the Iroquois, who, from the earliest settlement of the province, had been inimical to the French.

The army consisted of the regular troops, the habitans or militia of the province, and some of the Indian tribes, who were the allies of the French, and who entertained an hereditary hatred against the Iroquois, by reason of their nations having, in former times, been conquered by the Confederacy. Frontenac, with this army, ascended the St. Lawrence, in bateaux and canoes, carrying with him, in addition to light arms, cannon, mortars, and grenades. Making the customary portages, he reached Lake Ontario, coasted its eastern waters, ascended the Oswego River, crossed Onondaga Lake, and encamped upon its borders. He then plunged, with his forces, into the vast wilderness, in search of the Iroquois. Arriving at the principal castle or village of the Onondagas, into whose particular canton or country he had penetrated, he found it deserted. Pushing farther then into the wilderness, Frontenac discovered nothing of his wild enemies, and finally, in disappointment, he retraced his march. On his return path, however, the Iroquois way-laid his steps, killed a number of his men, and did not cease their attacks until he had entirely left their territory.

The Iroquois at that time consisted of five nations, viz.: the Mohawks, Oneidas, Cayugas, Onondagas, and Senecas, occupying a territory which they figuratively called their Long House, extending from east to west over what is now the State of New York, from the Lakes Erie and Ontario to the Hudson River.

These Indian nations had banded themselves into a League or Confederacy, at first for protection against their common enemies, continuing it afterwards for conquest. The time of the formation of this League is not known, but is supposed to have been ages before the white man appeared among them, and it has given birth, on account of its value and importance, as well as its being involved in the mist of uncertainty, to a wild mythology concerning it among themselves.

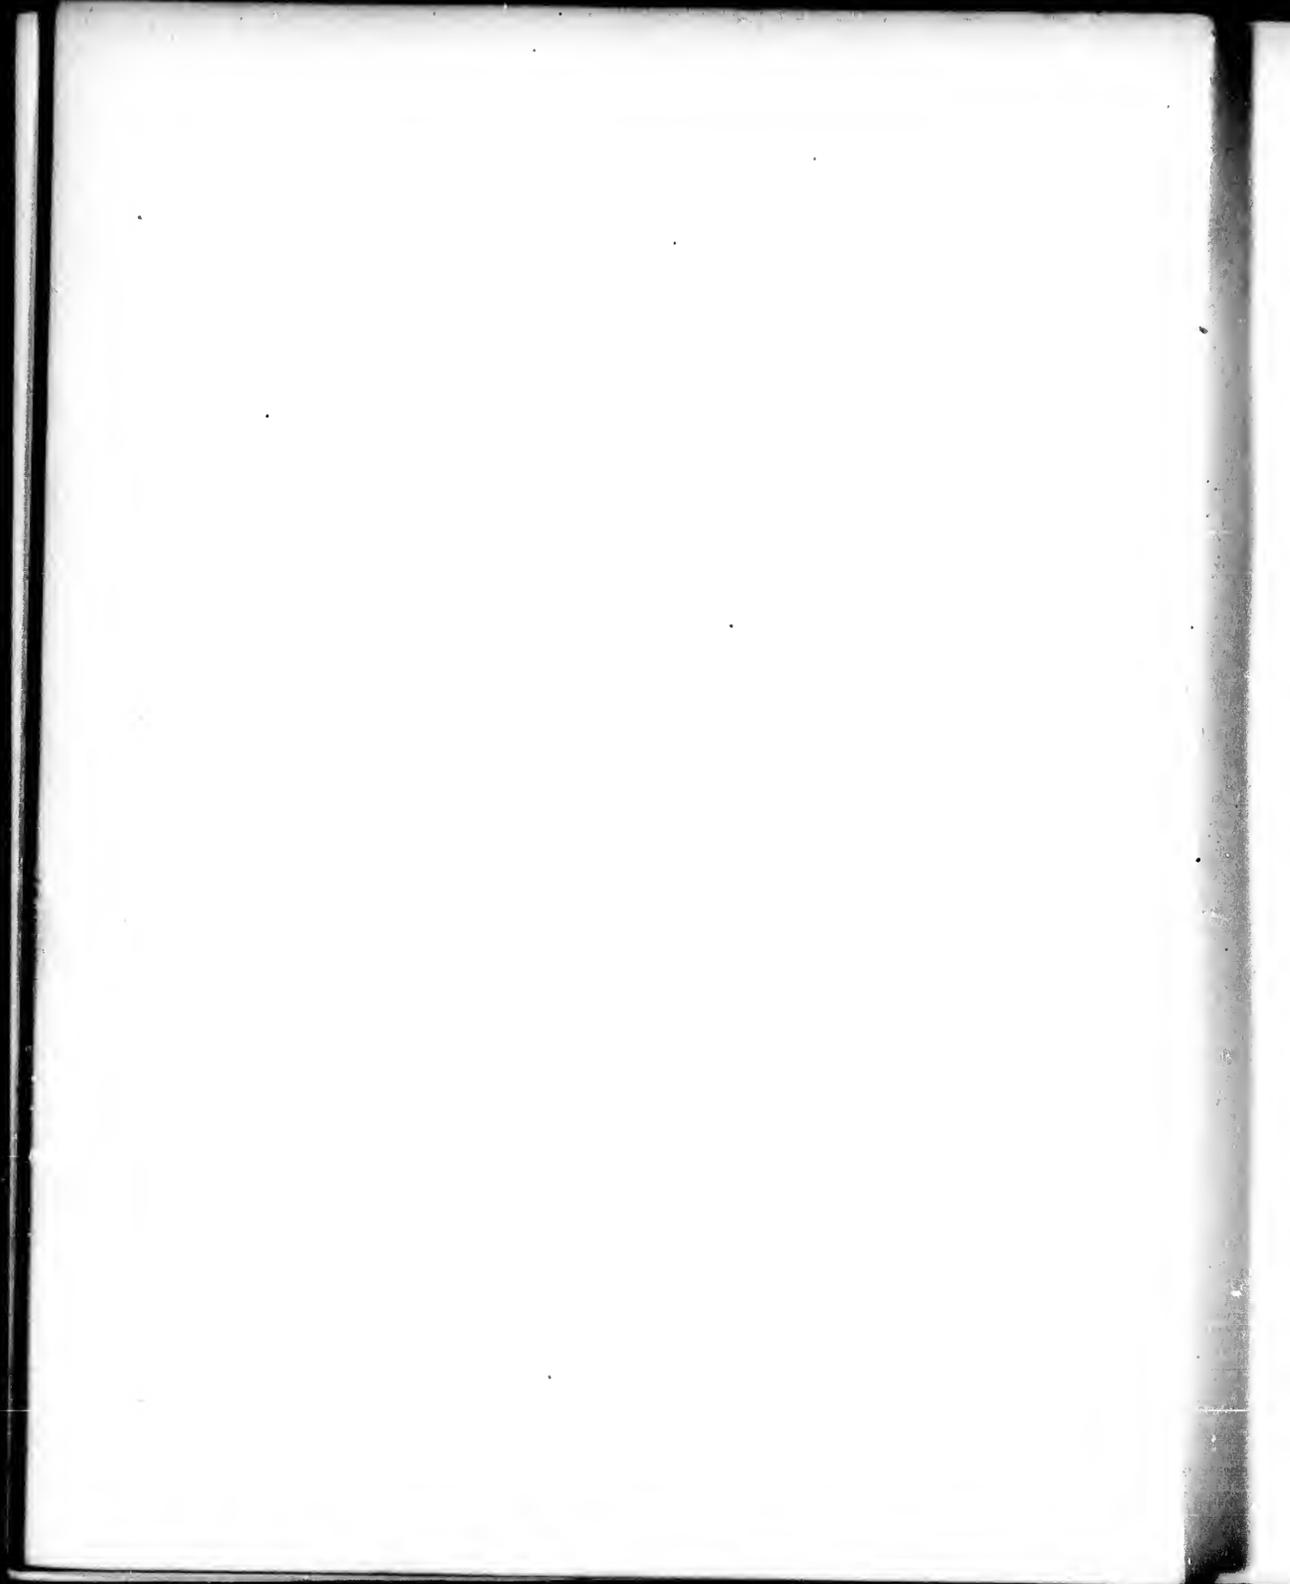

When Champlain first came to Quebec, he found the Confederacy at war with the Hurons and Adirondacks, then warlike and powerful nations. Having allied himself to the Adirondacks, he joined them in an expedition against the Iroquois; and, by reason of the fire-arms he carried, then totally unknown to the warriors of the Confederacy, he was the means of defeating the latter on the borders of the very lake which now bears his name. This kindled an animosity against the French on the part of the Iroquois, which was never forgotten. Receiving, a few years afterwards, fire-arms in their turn from the Dutch, who, in the meanwhile, had penetrated the forests along the Hudson and Mohawk Rivers in New York, the confederated warriors commenced their attacks upon the French at every post and settlement. So serious did their inroads become, that at times the very province itself was in jeopardy. And not only did these warlike savages annoy the French, but they turned their arms against all the neighboring tribes, driving the Hurons and Adirondacks, their former rivals, from their villages and hunting-grounds, and absolutely exterminating many of the savage nations around them. Pushing their conquests in all directions, they at length mastered every Indian tribe residing, not only in New York, but every other, as far as Carolina to the south, and the Mississippi to the west. The Governors-General of Canada made frequent incursions into their territory or Long House, but those incursions only served to stimulate the wrath of these haughty and powerful savages, without weakening their strength or diminishing their power. That strength and power had arrived at their height when Frontenac took the reins of command for the second time, in 1689. The Iroquois had now assumed so threatening an attitude, that this stern and proud noble thought it advisable to penetrate their fastnesses and crush them, if possible, at a blow. Hence the expedition above detailed, which was, however, as fruitless as those of the former Governors-General De La Barre and De Nonville.

In the meanwhile the Confederacy (its good-will and friendship having been transferred by the Dutch to the English) proved itself as faithful to Corlear, the name it gave to the English Governor, as hostile to Yon-non-de-yeh, its title for the Governor-General of the French. Consequently, in 1776, when the war of the Revolution broke out, true to their old friendship, the Iroquois sided with England. This led to the expedition of Sullivan, the American General, into the heart of their country. Sullivan desolated their fields, destroyed their villages, and exterminated the warriors they brought against him. From this period they began to decline. With the return of peace, civilization commenced hewing down their forests, and taking possession of their hunting-grounds; and the unwelcome sight of the Pale-face met them in every direction beside their beautiful streams and romantic lakes. Their Long House, to use their own pathetic language, was broken open at both ends, and the storms of destruction made it desolate for ever. The Mohawks abandoned their lovely valley in a body, and settled upon Grand River, in Canada, on territory granted them by the British Government. The rest of the Confederacy, although it had been previously increased by the accession of the Tuscaroras, a reclaimed original tribe, gradually diminished, and has still continued to waste away until now only a few individuals remain, haunting their smiling valleys, and hovering around their sparkling waters, miserable spectres of the former greatness of the Iroquois. A few more years, and even they will disappear. The memory of the Confederacy only will remain to furnish fit theme for song and story, and one more melancholy instance of a once powerful and happy people entirely disappearing from the face of the earth.

CONTENTS.

CANTO FIRST.

	PAGE
LITTLE — FRONTENAC	1

CANTO SECOND.

THE IROQUOIS — THE CANADIAN SPRING — THE PEACE BELT — ON-ON-DAH-GAH — THE AT-O-TA-HO — THE ROBIN — THE MESSAGE — QUEBEC — THE CALUMET — THE TALK	23
---	----

CANTO THIRD.

THE WAR SONG — THE HUNTERS — THE BATEAU -- THE CAHIGNAN VILLAGE — THE BRIGANTINE	61
---	----

CANTO FOURTH.

THE THANKSGIVING DANCE — THE DANCE OF THE GREAT SPIRIT — KOLAH — THE EXPEDITION — THE BIVOUC — THE ABDUCTION — THE RESCUE AND DEATH	89
---	----

CANTO FIFTH.

THE INN OF THE CANOE — WE-AN-DAH — THE SUMMONS — THE ENCAMPMENT — THE MARCH	125
--	-----

CANTO SIXTH.

	PAGE
THE WAR-HATCHET—THE WILDERNESS—THE CATA- RACT—THE SENECAS—LEAPING PANTHER—CAY- UGA LAKE—THE CAYUGAS—THE ONEIDAS—THE STRAWBERRY DANCE—THE CANOE VOYAGE—THE MOHAWKS' SCALP DANCE	153

CANTO SEVENTH.

THE MARCH—THE WAR-DANCE—THE COUNCIL—THE QUARREL—THE PRIESTESS—THE SACRED FLAME	189
---	-----

CANTO EIGHTH.

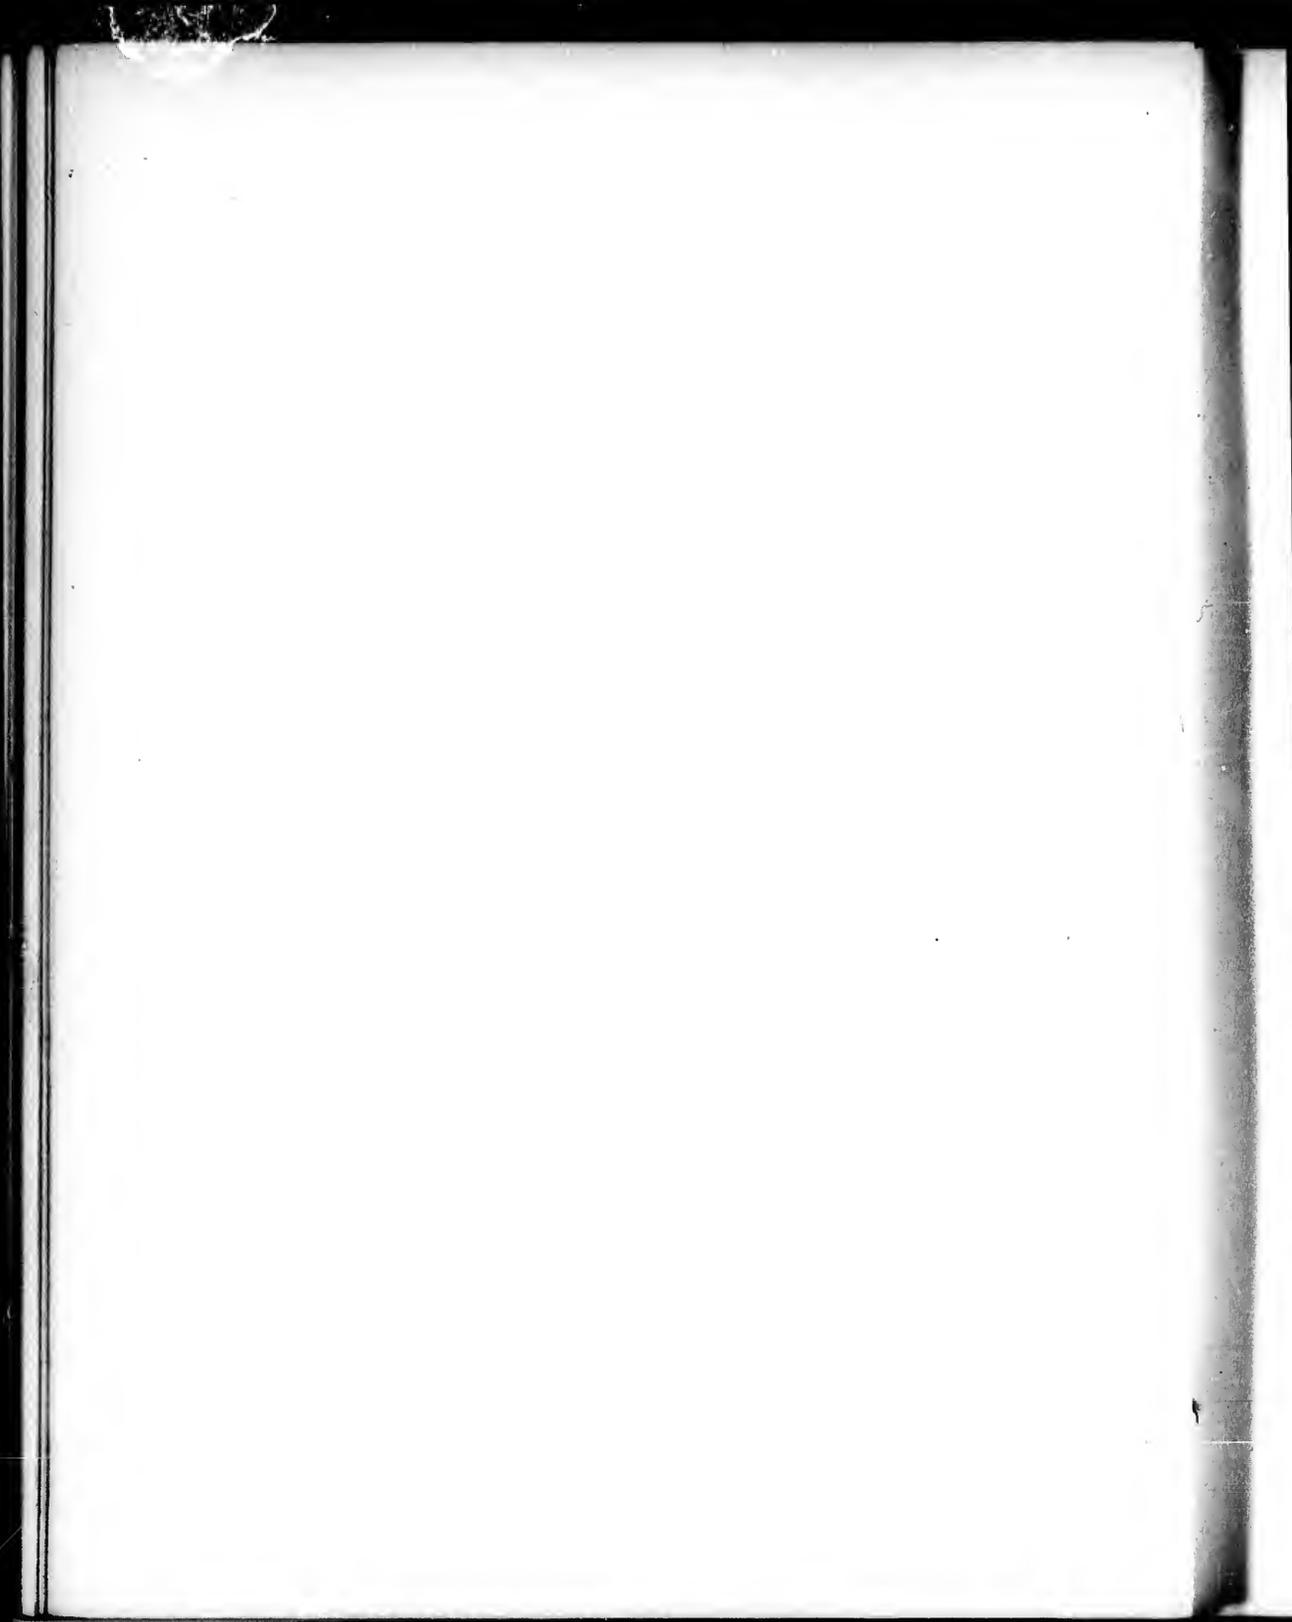

THE MARCH—THE MEETING—THE MARCH—THE MOCCASIN-PRINT—THE NIGHT-WATCH	227
---	-----

CANTO NINTH.

THE BATTLE—THE TORTURE—THE DEFLANCE—THE DEATH—FRONTENAC—MASS FOR THE DEAD	255
--	-----

CANTO FIRST.

—
LUCILLE,
FRONTENAC.

CANTO FIRST.

LUCILLE.

I.

WAS in June's bright and glowing prime
The loveliest of the summer time.
The laurels were one splendid sheet
Of crowded blossom everywhere ;
The locust's clustered pearl was sweet,
And the tall whitewood made the air
Delicious with the fragrance shed
From golden flowers all o'er it spread.

II.

In the rich pomp of dying day
Quebec, the rock-throned monarch, glowed —
Castle and spire and dwelling gray
The batteries rude that niched their way
Along the cliff, beneath the play
Of the deep yellow light, were gay,
And the curved flood, below that lay,
In flashing glory flowed ;

FRONTENAC.

Beyond, the sweet and mellow smile
Beamed upon Orleans' lovely isle;
 Until the downward view
Was closed by mountain-tops that, reared
Against the burnished sky, appeared
 In misty dreamy hue.

III.

West of Quebec's embankments rose
The forests in their wild repose.
Between the trunks, the radiance slim
 Here came with slant and quivering blaze;
Whilst there, in leaf-wreathed arbors dim,
 Was gathering gray the twilight's haze.
Where cut the boughs the back-ground glow
 That striped the west, a glittering belt,
The leaves transparent seemed, as though
 In the rich radiance they would melt.

.IV.

Upon a narrow grassy glade,
Where thickets stood in grouping shade,
The light streaked down in golden mist,
Kindled the shrubs, the greensward kissed,
Until the clover-blossoms white
Flashed out like spangles large and bright.

V.

This green and sun-streaked glade was rife
With sights and sounds of forest life.

A robin in a bush was singing,
A flicker* rattled on a tree;
In liquid fife-like tones round ringing
A thrasher† piped its melody;
Crouching and leaping with pointed ear
From thicket to thicket a rabbit sped,
And on the short delicate grass a deer
Brushing the insects from off him, fed.

VI.

Sudden he paused with lifted foot,
Then, like an arrow, away he shot;
Robin and flicker and thrasher were mute;
The rabbit glided from the spot —
The next an Indian, from the shade,
Came bounding out upon the glade.

VII.

A warrior was he, armed for strife,
With tomahawk and scalping knife
Thrust through his wampum-belt;
The long lock crowned his shaven head;
Bare, save the belt, his form of red,
And where around his loins was spread
A stripe of shaggy felt.

*The golden-winged woodpecker of the American forests.

†The brown thrush of the same.

VIII.

With head aside he stood intent
An instant, then he stooped and bent
His ear upon the ground ;
Then looking forth with piercing eye,
Entered a laurel thicket nigh
So subtly, to the breeze's sigh
More motion 'twould have found.

IX.

Silence fell deeply down once more,
Till fluttering sounds among the trees
Told that the woodland fright was o'er
And soon would swell fresh harmonies.
The robin's warble was renewed,
The flicker's hammer tapped again,
And once more through the solitude
Rang out the thrasher's splendid strain ;
But the sweet sounds had scarcely filled
The place, when they again were stilled.
On the green glade two figures came ;
One of a tall and stalwart frame,
With sword and plume and martial air ;
The other scarce four summers old,
Whose coal-black eyes and raven hair
And features — though of loveliest mould,—
O'er-tinted with a light red shade,
Blood of the native race betrayed.

X.

The soldier, on the grass reclined,
Viewed the glad gambols of the child,
Who, to each impulse of her mind,
Now, gave her shout of pleasure wild,
As the rich red-bird in his flight
Passed with a flash some streak of light
Slanted in hazy sheen ;
And now, with footstep bounding free,
Chased the fleet squirrel to its tree,
Across the sylvan scene.

XI.

Tired with her sports, at length the girl
Paused at the leaning soldier's side,
Brushed from his brow a silvery curl,
And then her panting efforts plied,
Until she bared his glittering brand,
And sought to poise it in her hand.

XII.

Closer the child the senior drew
And with delight carressed her head ;
"Thou would'st have been a soldier too
Had'st thou been born a boy!" he said ;
"Thy sire's brave blood within thee glows
Too strong for peaceful dull repose ;

FRONTENAC.

And the wild nature I espy
Of thy red mother in thine eye.
Listen! I'll tell the tale again
I told thee yester-night,
When proudly on the battle plain
France stemmed the dreadful fight,
And heard at last the clarion strain
Of victory crown her might!
And then commenced the legend old:
The girl's red features flushed more red,
Brightened her eye more wild and bold
As on the story sped,
Until with sight that fairly blazed,
The blade with both her hands she raised
And waved it o'er her head.

XIII.

At the first words, a thicket's screen
Had moved behind the pair,
And then two eyeballs fierce and keen
Like spots of fire gleamed there;
Out came a scalp-lock — then a head —
Then was put forth an arm of red,
And, like the cowering panther's tread,
The Indian left his lair.

XIV.

Stilly, as glides o'er earth a shade
From bush to bush along the glade

The stealthy savage went:
A snap, the girl half turned; his crouch
Was like the spider's, when a touch
Its filmy snare has rent.
Then, rising from behind the bank
Where for an instant's space, he sank,
Again he glided low;
The tremble of the leaves and grass
Telling alone his snake-like pass,
So viewless, silent, slow.

XV.

Near and more near, with eyes of flame,
The Indian creeping, creeping, came,
Until he paused and drew
His hatchet, then leaned quickly back
And from his clutch in whirling track
The glittering weapon flew;
It fell upon the soldier's head,
Who, as gushed out a stream of red,
Groaned deep, and started from his bed
Convulsive to his knee;
In vain, in vain; the hatchet drank
Again his blood, and down he sank
Beneath his enemy.
And, as in pangs of parting life
The quivering soldier lay,
The savage drew his gleaming knife
And wrenched the scalp away.

XVI.

The child, transfixed in mute surprise,
Had viewed the scene with staring eyes;
But, as the fearful Indian shred
The scalp from off that honored head,
Then, wakened from her trance,
Lifting the weapon, at the foe
She leaped, and sought to aim her blow
With stern defying glance.

XVII.

The savage gazed; across his brow
A look gleamed proud and high;
'Twas vivid admiration now
That glittered in his eye;
And with a guttural of delight,
The child, again o'erwhelmed with fright,
But holding still the blade,
He swept upon his stalwart arm,
And, as she shrieked in wild alarm,
Plunged with her in the shade,
Leaving the scene to its repose
In the soft hue of twilight's close.

XVIII.

Over the glade the laden bee
Darted straight forward to its tree;
Each bird low twittered on its perch;
The night-hawk flew in jarring search

FRONTENAC.

11

The crow flapped o'er with solemn croak;
The frog its clamorous piping woke;
The wolf drew out his plaintive howl;
Shouted, in pauses brief, the owl;
Her wail set up the whippoorwill;
The tree-toad swelled its hollow trill,
The fire-flies shined, in thickening flight,
Their gold-green intermittent light
Until the gray and glimmering haze
With fairy meteors, seemed ablaze;
And once another deer stepped out,
But as he stooped to feed, about
 He swerved with snort of dread,
And through the darkening forest waste
Dashed far away in frenzied haste —
 There lay the bloody dead.

FRONTENAC.

XIX.

Reared on the cliff, at the very brink,
Whence a pebble dropped would sink
 Four-score feet to the slope below,
 The Castle of St. Louis caught
Dancing hues of delicate pink,
 With which the clouds o'erhead were fraught
From the rich sunset's streaming glow.

XX.

Opposite, in the soft warm light
The Recollets' steeple glittered bright;
And tipped with gold was the Convent by,
Whilst both threw a mantle of raven dye

The broad Placo d'Armes across,
That up to the massive curtain lay,
Save where a slanting and hazy ray,
Shooting between the buildings gray,

Streaked it with yellow gloss;
The bastions threw on the Castle court
Crescents of shade, whilst the sallyport

Open, was filled with a golden glare
That made the sentinel's cuirass glow
With transient flashing, as to and fro
Trod he monotonous there.

XXI.

Within a room of the Castle, bright
From a ray of rich ruby light,
That caused great tremulous blots to fall
On raftered ceiling and oaken wall,
And touched the weapons in nooks arranged,
Till keen quick winkings they exchanged,
Frontenac sat at a massive desk,
Carved all over with shapes grotesque.

XXII.

Around him were splendor and rudeness at strife,
Signs of the savage and civilized life.

Here branched, for some gay garment's use,
The broad flat antlers of the moose;
There, o'er some painting rich were hung
Wampum in varied colors strung;
Whilst moccasins and blanket red
By corslet and steel pike were spread.

XXIII.

A will, restraint that could not brook,
And pride that downward frowned on all,
Gleamed in his stern and haughty look
And breathed around his figure tall,
Although his bended eye and brow
Were fixed in anxious musing now.

XXIV.

The Iroquois in their dread and might
Stood frowning in his mental sight;
Onward and onward their power had pressed;
Upward and upward had risen their crest;
Nought in the woods now their might could oppose,
Nought could withstand their confederate blows;
Banded in strength and united in soul,
They moved on their course with the cataract's roll.

XXV.

Wherever the banner of France was reared,
The blood thirsty hate of the Braves appeared;
Kindled against Champlain when first
His lightning death on their sires had burst,
Years had not quenched it, for never depart
Thoughts of revenge from the Indian heart.

XXVI.

Frontenac long, with care, had tried
 To win their kindness to his side ;
 But the stern Nations in disdain
 The proffered belt cast back again.
 If he uttered wrathful threat,
 With a taunting scorn 'twas met :
 And if he sent, in a burst of ire,
 A sudden foray of sword and fire,
 Everywhere up the wild warriors stood,
 And rushed in fierce joy to their banquet of blood.

XXVII.

From ceiling and wall the light vanished away,
 The room now began to grow dusky and gray ;
 Sculptured desk and high-backed chair
 Strange wild figures seemed to wear ;
 Branching antlers round the wall
 Seemed to wax more wide and tall ;
 Weapons in their corners made
 Faint dull glimmerings in the shade :—
 Still sat Frontenac motionless,
 Still thought's burthen seemed heavy to press.
 Hark ! a sudden cry ! a beat
 In the court of many feet —
 He glanced through the casement — amid a throng
 Of soldiers, a figure was borne along —
 A drooping figure, the glimmering light
 Yielding the outlines alone to sight.

XXVIII.

E'en as he looked the portal jarred,
 A hurried step at the door was heard,—
 Hastily entered a pallid guard,
 With a soldier's salute at the bidding word;
 "That form — whose is it? — this stir why made?"
 "The Sieur Lavergne's! ho is!"— "What, speak!" — "Dead!" —

"Dead?" —

— "Found by the hunter Bizarre in the glade
 Where he used at sunset to ramble, with head
 Showing the knife of the Iroquois wild!" —
 "Dead! found in the glade! but where is my child!
 Lucille! my daughter! together they left
 The castle at sunset!" The father bereft
 Struggled with groans that the soldier suppressed;
 "Send the scouts quickly and bid them not rest
 Till the forests are scoured! let Count Lavergne
 Be brought in the room!" The spirit stern
 Of the warrior seemed again to sway,
 While on the table they placed the dead,
 Lighted the cresset swung overhead,
 Then hastened with soft falling footsteps away.
 Seizing the hand of his early friend,
 Again did the soul of proud Frontenac bend;
 He pressed that mangled and clotted head,
 There were the muscles all bare and red.
 "Those Iroquois fiends!" — he muttered low —
 "Lucille, Lucille, did the murderous blow
 "Fall on thee! ho! without there! haste!

Let the hunter Bizarre in our presence be placed!—
 Tell me," as low the rough woodsman made
 Obeisance uncouth, "didst thou traverse the glade?
 Was there none other lying there?"
 "None!"

"Leave me!" No eye must behold his despair.
 The ruthless stern Frontenac bent o'er the dead
 With a heart from which all but deep sorrow was fled;
 That arm, cold and stiff, had once sheltered his life
 In a whirlwind of bloody and desperate strife;
 And Lucille the loved child of Sa-ha-wee!* too gone!
 Must his winter of life be left cheerless and lone!
 The Iroquois! up flashed his fury! he sprung,
 Clutched his sword until in its steel scabbard it rung;
 And on through the room with quick gestures he strode,
 As though some fierce demon was plying his goad.

XXIX.

Scarcely a fleeting three months glide
 Since his murdered Sa-ha-wee died,
 Struck by the hand of Ta-yo-nee † while seeing,
 (So her Iroquois handmaid said),
 Seated upon Cape Diamond's head,
 Slowly the beautiful sunset fleeing
 From the landscape below her spread.
 "You-non-de-yoh's slave no more,"
 Hissed the fierce Brave as his hatchet flashed o'er—
 "Die!" and bleeding, Sa-ha-wee fell;
 Then pealing a wrathful triumphant yell,

* A vine, in the On-on-dah-gah tongue.

† A wolf, in the same.

And spurning the shrieking attendant away.
Off bore the chieftain the lifeless clay.
Ta-yo-nee! her brother! and could it be
That he again was the enemy!
The On-on-dah-gah fierce, whose hate
To the French race had visited
The vengeance of such dreadful fate
Upon a sister's head!
And then the thoughts of that sister stole
Like music e'er Frontenac's tortured soul.
A captive brought to the shores of France
By noble De Tracy with her sire,
In his stern bosom her fawn-like glance,
Kindled at length delicious fire;
And when, heart-broken, her father died,
He wooed the red maiden to his side;
In his gray castle beside the Rhone
Five bright summers above them shone;
Decked with his Sovereign's trust, he bore
His destinies then to Canada's shore
With Sa-ha-wee and little Lucille; and the moon
That saw them drop anchor, her beautiful boon
O'er the brow of the night had ceased scarcely to spread
E'er the blood of the first was thus ruthlessly shed.

XXX.

And now too the fate of Lavergne! Lucille
Torn from him! his over-wrought senses reel.
But hark! on his ear a pealing swell;
The neighboring Recollets' vesper-bell!
And soon, through the open casement, song

Comes like the blessing of peace along ;
 Pouring on his heart like balm,
 Spreading a delicious calm,
 Hushing every thought of pain,
 " Mary Mother !" swelled the strain.

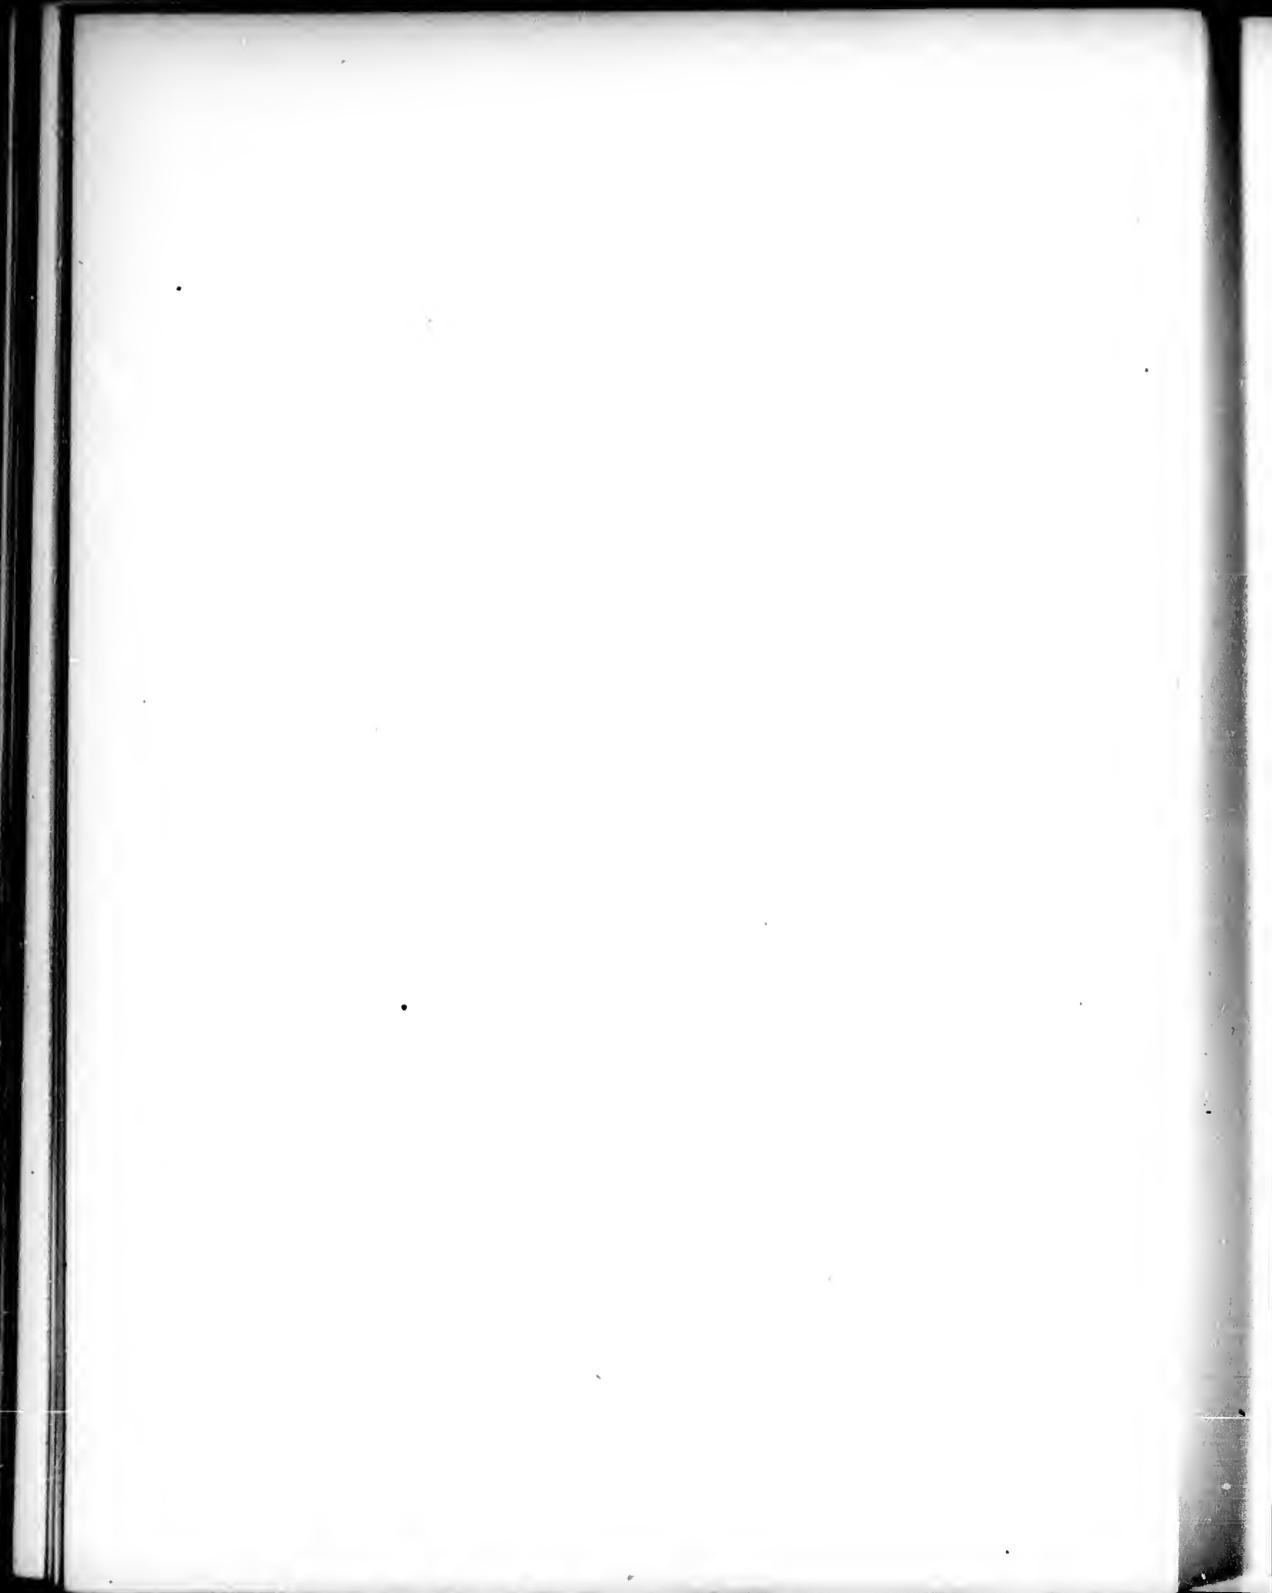

" Mary Mother ! from thy dwelling
 Look with soft and smiling eye !
 Us, thy humble suppliants telling
 Thou dost watch us from the sky.
 Ever be thy presence near us !
 Ever o'er us be thy care !
 Mother of Him who perished ! hear us !
 Mary Mother, list our prayer.

" Honored above all, yet lowly
 Bend the sweetness of thy brow,
 Mary Mother ! Virgin Holy !
 On thy waiting children now,
 Let thy smile, sweet Mother ! cheer us !
 To our souls thy blessing bear !
 Mother of Him who perished ! hear us !
 Mary Mother ! list our prayer."

He glanced without — the splendid moon
 Was climbing to her gorgeous noon ;
 The massive church and convent bright
 Reared their tall summits in her light ;
 Whilst on the court the castle laid
 The sharp cut blackness of its shade ;
 The sentry still with measured stride

Passed and repassed the portal wide;
All, all was beauty, light and peace,
He felt his feverish throbbing cease.
"Mary Mother!" seemed to bear
Still upon the balmy air;
Now to rise along the sky,
Now to tremble from on high;
Falling, swelling, echoing round,
Till the moonlight changed to sound;
Sound that told of heaven above;
Sound that told of guardian love;
Off from his bosom rolled the gloom,
The wrath, the anguish, the despair;
And in that still and lonely room
The stern old soldier knelt in prayer.

END OF CANTO FIRST.

CANTO SECOND.

THE IROQUOIS.

THE CANADIAN SPRING.

THE PEACE-BELT.

ON-ON-DAI-GAH.

THE AT-O-TA-HO.

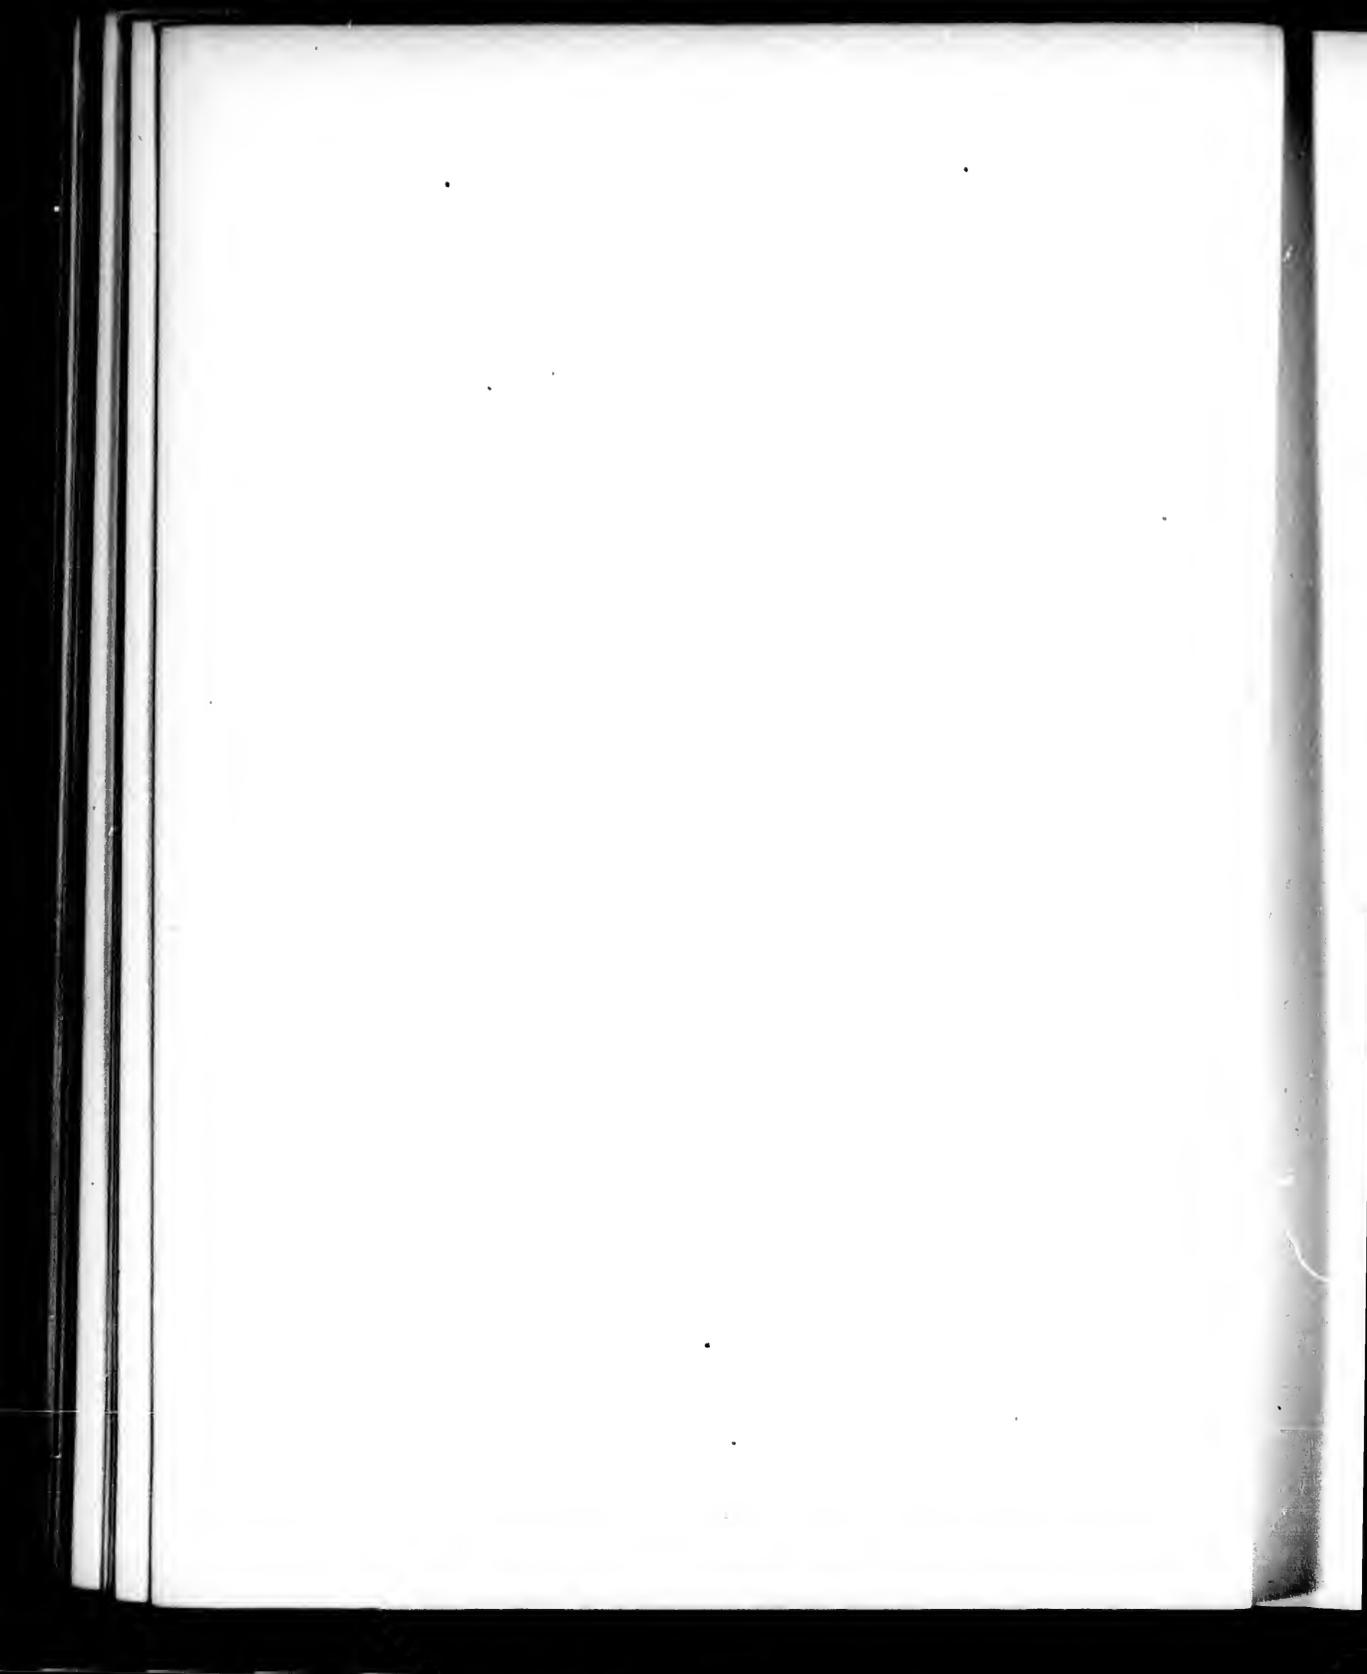

THE ROBIN.

THE MESSAGE.

QUEBEC.

THE CALUMET.

THE TALK.

CANTO SECOND.

THE IROQUOIS.

I.

WENTY-FOUR years! a fleeting span
In the fleeting career of man,
Twenty-four years have passed along
In the flow of my humble song.

II.

Oh the Eagle is swift when he sweeps from his height,
With his wing to the wind, and his eye to the light,
Darting on, darting on through his empire of air,
With nought to oppose him — his pathway to share;
But the king of the sky would have drooped on his way
E'er his wing could have measured the Iroquois sway.
The League — the prond summit had clambered at length,
Sought so long by their firm banded wisdom and strength;
Their Long House extended now, spacious and high.
The branches its rafters, its canopy, sky,
From the grand Mountain River's* full oceanward bed,
To where its great bosom Ontario spread.

* The Hudson, called in old chronicles The River of the Mountains. The Iroquois name is Co-ha-in-te-yah.

The fierce Adirondaeks had fled from their wrath,
The Hurons been swept from their merciless path ;
Around, the Ottawas, like leaves had been strown ;
And the lake of the Eries sat silent and lone.
The Lenape, lords once of valley and hill,
Made women, bent low at their conquerors' will ;
By the far Mississippi, the Illini shrank
When the trail of the TOBTOISE was seen on the bank ;
On the hills of New England the Pequod turned pale,
When the howl of the WOLF swelled at night in the gale ;
And the Cherokee shook in his green smiling bowers,
When the foot of the BEAR stamped his carpet of flowers.

III.

Death, death to the tribes that now lingered behind
When the Iroquois young men came on like the wind.
The forests were filled with affright and despair
When the whoops of the braves keenly rolled on the air ;
They looked—at their frown the whole region grew black ;
They rose—and their way was the hurricane's track.

IV.

Stern Frontenac saw, from the walls of Quebec,
This flood from the woods dashing on without check.
His forts were surrounded, his outposts were burned,
French blood he saw flowing wherever he turned,
Now here, and now there, as clouds flash in their strife,
Was the dart of the foeman, the flash of their knife ;
The hunter, whilst tracking the Hudson Bay snow
In search of the ermine, sank under their blow ;

The settler whilst plying his ax in the wood,
 At the skirts of Quebec, dyed the earth with his blood;
 The bateau-man, pushing his craft to its goal
 Up the swift Cataract,* fell dead at his pole;
 The sentry, whilst guarding Fort Frontenac's wall
 By Ontario's waters, felt death in the ball;
 The fur trader, skimming with blanket and bead
 The Lake of the Hurons, was followed to bleed;
 Blood crimsoned the earth, and cries burthened the air,
 Until Frontenac, lashed into maddening despair,
 Raged round like the lion foes gird in a ring,
 His mane bristling fierce, yet in doubt where to spring,
 Here opening his roar and there glancing his eye,
 With the circle still growing more threatening and nigh.

V.

The proudest of all in the hostile array
 Was young † Dawn of Morning, the Red of the Day,
 The League's At-a-ho! the boldest in fight!
 The wisest in council! in form the most bright!
 The fleetest of foot, the most skilled in the chase!
 The glory and boast of the Iroquois race!
 Day after day to fierce Frontenac's ear
 Was the name of the chieftain borne loudly by fear;
 With the rush of the blast trod the Bravo on his path,
 Slaughter and flame were the marks of his wrath;
 In silence of midnight his war-whoop arose;
 In brightness of noonday were stricken his blows;

* The St. Lawrence in the Iroquois tongue.

† Thu-ren-se-rah in Iroquois. In the On-on-da-ga language The Dawn of Day.

Woe to the French! for a demon seemed sent
On its way of dark horrors wherever he went;
Woe to the French! for the hatchet he bore
Wearied not, spared not, streamed ever with gore;
Woe to the French! for their ramparts of stone
Saved them from utter destruction alone.

THE CANADIAN SPRING.

VI.

'Twas May! the Spring with magic bloom
Leaped up from Winter's frozen tomb.
Day lit the river's icy mail;
The bland warm rain at evening sank;
Ice fragments dashed in midnight's gale;
The moose at morn the ripples drank.
The yacht, that stood with naked mast
In the locked shallows motionless
When sunset fell, went curtsying past
As breathed the morning's light caress.
The woodman, in the forest deep,
At sunrise heard with gladdening thrill
Where yester-eve was gloomy sleep,
The brown rossignol's carol shrill;
Where yester-eve the snowbank spread
The hemlock's twisted roots between,
He saw the coltsfoot's golden head
Rising from mosses plump and green;

Whilst all around were budding trees,
And mellow sweetness filled the breeze.
A few days passed along, and brought
More changes as by magic wrought.
With plumes were tipped the beechen sprays;
The birch long dangling tassels showed;
The oak still bare, but in a blaze
Of gorgeous red the maple glowed;
With clusters of the purest white
Cherry and shadbush charmed the sight
Like spots of snow the boughs among;
And showers of strawberry blossoms made
Rich carpets in each field and glade
Where day its kindest glances flung.
And air too hailed Spring's joyous sway;
The bluebird warbled clear and sweet;
Then came the wren with carols gay,
The customary roof and porch to greet;
The mockbird showed its varied skill;
At evening moaned the whippoorwill.
Type of the Spring from Winter's gloom!
The butterfly new being found;
Whilst round the pink may-apple's bloom
Gave myriad drinking bees their sound.
Great fleeting clouds the pigeons made;
When near her brood the hunter strayed
With trailing limp the partridge stirred;
Whilst a quick feathered spangle shot
Rapid as thought from spot to spot
Showing the fairy hummingbird.

THE PEACE-BELT.

VII.

In the same room where Frontenac stern
 Heard the loss of Lucille and the death of Lavergne.
 Twenty-four rapid years ago ;
 In this same room where his footsteps bent
 To and fro, to and fro ;
 Over his visago shades came and went ;
 Now thought in his wrinkles crouched low like a snake,
 Now venomous fury all up and awake,
 Now death-like pallor, now crimson glow.
 Those years have dimmed his eye's quick flame,
 Whitened his brow, and bent his frame,
 For more than the threescore-and-ten had been given,
 Whether in favor or anger, by Heaven,
 Within these years had the staff of command
 Been wielded by another's hand,
 But once more at his sovereign's word,
 O'er Canada's destinies stood he lord.

VIII.

To and fro, to and fro,⁴
 Frontenac strode through light and shade
 Hastily, heavily, still and slow,
 As thought or passion within him swayed.
 Now, chafing fierce, and treading high,
 Like a roused lion in his den ;

Now, like the panther creeping nigh
The hunter slumbering in the glen.
He! governor of the province! ho
The sport of Iroquois enmity!
He clenched his teeth, and his sword half drew,
Whilst darkened his brow to a swarthy hue:
"Oh, that this Dawn of Morning stood
Before me, e'en in his native wood,
This aged arm — but slumber pride,
'Twere best to win him to my side."
He stamped his foot, "Without that wait!"
A guardsman in his presence bent;
"The Otter * bid attend us straight!"
Then on again the stridings went.
The door reöpened; with a tread
Noiseless as snow-flakes in their fall
And bowing scarce his haughty head,
Near came an Indian grim and tall.
With one proud step the noble met
This Huron runner of Lorette,
Holding a wampum belt in sight,
Of braided colors black and white,
"List Otter! take this belt of peace;
Rest not till Dawn of Morning's found;
Tell him, we wish the storm to cease;
The hatchet bury in the ground.
Tell him, the At-o-ta-ho proud,
Forgetting enmity and wrath,

* Ta-wen-dah in the Huron tongue.

Should from our sky sweep every cloud,
 Should clear all briars from off our path.
 Tell him to seek this lodgo of stone,
 Where oft the council fire has shone;
 That Yon-non-de-yoh asks a talk
 The tree of peace between to set,
 Beneath to smoke the calumet,
 And wipe from blood the tomahawk !"

ON-ON-DAH-GAH.

IX.

The sunset, from his rainbow throne,
 On On-on-dah-gah Hollow shone.
 A double ring of palisade
 Enclosed within one-half its bounds
 A round-topped Indian village, made
 Of mats and branches; scores of mounds
 Told that the other yielded space
 To the thrice hallowed burial-place;
 Thence maize, ris'n newly, spread each way,
 (Save where the usual ball-green lay),
 The earth-domes tipped with golden glow;
 The whole shaped like the Indian bow
 By the curved forest, and a stream
 That stretched below its sunset gleam.

X.

Along the castle's beaten square,
 Displaying marks of skill and care,

The famous Temple of the Glow*
 Extended its long log-built frame;
 Shrining with the Sacred Flame,
 Whose star it never ceased to show.
 Type of the ancient leaguo that bound
 The five Red Nations into one,
 Ages had seen its light cast round
 Successive forms of sire and son
 In countless councils bearing part:
 The Feast of Union every year
 Renewing by the radiance clear
 The tie in each confederate's heart.

XI.

Ever on high the smoke-cloud streamed.
 In summer's sun it richly gleamed;
 Against stern winter's sky of gray
 In wreaths condensed and pale it lay;
 In midnight's bushed and solemn gloom
 It touched the heavens with sable plume;
 Like ocean's surges wild it cast
 Its rolling fragments on the blast;
 And pointed upward deep and proud
 Toward the black frowning thundercloud.

XII.

All eyes, but one, were barred the Flame,
 Save when the Feast of Union came;
 And if the portal oped perchance,
 Or, through some crevice, streaks of red

* Tear-jis-ta-yo in Iroquois.

Broke out, away was turned the glance,
Quick from the precincts passed the tread.

XIII.

Unceasing sustenance it found
From the vast forests spread around.
The boy had seen it with awed sight;
It shone upon his locks of white;
Still glowed its undiminished light
When death its trophy won;
Another generation passed,
And still the ruddy gleams were cast,
Unwasted as the sun.

XIV.

A priestess watched with tireless care
That the pure splendor of the fire
Should never, day or night, expire,
And always was her presence there.
The At-o-ta-ho's mother—she Cherished with pride the dignity
To keep alive the blaze;
And, save for him, her heart had not
A thought or wish beyond the spot
So sacred to her gaze.

XV.

Once every year a glowing brand,
Whose sparkles from the Flame had birth,
Was borne by *Spark of Sunlight's hand.

* To-na-sa-ha in Iroquois.

To every On-on-dah-gah hearth ;
 And there again the wigwam-fire,
 For this end suffered to expire,
 At the brand's touch its radiance threw
 The hearth thus sacred made anew.
 Emblem how all is cold and black

When Hah-wen-ne-ye's smile is o'er,
 And then how warm and bright, when back
 Flashes his glorious glance once more.
 Thence through the Long House went the tread
 Of the gray priest, the brand made red
 By the whirled wheel, and everywhere
 Again he made the dark hearths bright
 With the fire emblem, whilst the air
 Rang with the usual festal rite.

THE AT-O-TA-HO.

XVI.

Upon the square's opposing side
 The At-o-ta-ho's lodge arose!
 Its domed shape also, greater pride
 And skill displaying far than those
 On either side the space that flanked,
 And into ways broad trodden ranked,
 Each warrior's totem rudely cut
 Above the porch of every hut,
 With narrow transverse lanes between,
 Till the slant pickets closed the scene.

XVII.

The entrance of the lodge before
Hung a gigantic panther skin,
— Spoil of the At-o-ta-ho's might
Won in a desperate mountain fight,—
While beaver furs the earthen floor
With delicate softness robed within.
The walls with deerskins were o'erspread,
White as the snow the lake-marsh shed.
Impending from moose-antlers, shone
The League's great Calumet, its stem
Plumed like the feathery diadem
The At-o-ta-ho on his throne
Of branches in the square displayed,
When for the Union Feast arrayed.

XVIII.

His own rich pipe was hung below,
Its bowl and stem one general glow
With thickly pictured tints of red,
Telling of actions stern and dread.
On one side was the bearskin couch,
Above it his fusée and pouch ;
Around were ranged the war-club strong
And curved, with its wrist-looping thong ;
The bow with deeds all over dyed,
The flint-head arrows at its side ;
Leggings of crimson, mantle felts ;

Snowy and purple wampum-belts;
Moccasins quilled in rainbow hue;
Broad sinewed snow-shoes; girdles blue;
Sharp scalping-knives and hatchets keen;
And Feast-Crown rich in feathery sheen;
Whilst from the floor a sapling sprung
With human scalps upon it strung;
Age's gray locks, long woman's hair,
Childhood's and manhood's blended there.

XIX.

No wife the warrior's wigwam shared,
His venison or his maize prepared;
No gentle accent welcomed him
When from the chase came weary limb;
No soft hand bound his wounds when back
Returned from battle's bloody track;
Sweet woman's eye — that household star,
Driving all household gloom afar —
Within his bleak walls never shone;
The At-o-ta-ho lived alone.

XX.

And yet more bright each maiden's glance
When moved his figure in the dance;
More eager bent each listening ear
When rose his war-song high and clear;
Each maiden's tongue was loud to tell
His feats, so bold, so terrible,
The foemen slain, the castles won,
Within the frequent war-path done.

XXI.

When through the ways and lanes he went,
Dark sparkling eyes were on him bent;
Soft hearts beat wheresoe'er he trod;
Sweet cheeks blushed sweeter at his nod;
For as the League's young men beyond
In deeds, in beauty was he too;
But yet affection's gentle bond
The graceful warrior never knew.
He—the proud At-o-ta-ho—kept
No thoughts within his heart for love;
His spirit with the eagle swept,
It cowered not to the cooing dove.

JISKOKO.

XXII.

Still for that nature stern and high,
One loveliest of the maiden train,
In secret heaved the burning sigh,
In secret felt the tender pain.
Her mother, captive in some strife,
In youth had been a white man's wife.
Then, hurried to a bloody grave
By a fierce On-on-dah-gah Brave,
Who said she had forgot her pride
To slumber by a Frenchman's side;
And in another war-path brought
The infant to her tribe, that she,

Though with the hated blood so fraught,
An On-on-dah-gah still should be.

XXIII.

Since, eighteen springs their blossoms sweet
Had twined around The Robin's* feet.
Her large soft elk-like eye the race
Of the Ho-do-no-sonno showed,
While on her sunny cheek the trace
Of her pale lineage—rose-like—glowed.
She followed ever with her eye
The At-o-ta-ho passing by;
When'er his look was on her turned,
Her downcast brow with blushes burned;
In the wild dance she marked his grace,
Her whole roused soul within her face;
When'er he struck the battle-post,
She hung delighted on his boast;
When on the war-path stern he went,
She frequent hid to weep the while;
But when his scalp-whoop high he sent,
Returning, oh! how bright her smile;
And the glad maidens she would leave,
As if for very joy to grieve.
Then when she joined the praising throng,
Amid the tinkling Indian lute,
Or the loud swell of joyous song,
To him, she, she alone was mute.

*Ji-ko-ko in On-on-da-ga.

Yet there, e'en there, so seeming cold,
The sigh and blush their story told.
But though the At-o-ta-ho blind
 To her deep love appeared, his tone
And look were ever, ever kind,
 Telling warm friendship held the throne.

XXIV.

Thus, while The Robin loved in vain,
She wildly was beloved again,
By Ko-lah of fierce desperate mood,
Whose fiery will and vengeful blood
Caused her to shudder and turn pale,
Whene'er he told his hated tale.

XXV.

His sire The Raven was a Brave,
Noted, yet to vile passions slave.
Traucherous, blood-thirsty as a wolf,
 Yet full of deep deceit and guile,
A calm look veiled the boiling gulf,
 Murder was hidden in his smile.
But still, when on the war-path rushed
 His feet, so just his after boast,
All blame was in his praises hushed,
 The wretch was in the warrior lost.

THE MESSAGE.

XXVI.

The sun his journey bright had bent
So low, a level ray he sent,
Tipping the forests with the glow,
While twilight gathered gray below.

XXVII.

Upon the pleasant outside green
Two shouting bands, the gates between,
With their broad rackets, sent on high
The ball now soaring to the sky,
Now falling, to again be caught
And sent aloft with speed of thought,
Ever upon its whizzing wing
As though it were a living thing.

XXVIII.

Here, through the alleys, warriors bore
Short scarlet cloaks their shoulders o'er,
Arrow and bow in either hand,
Yet wearing nought of war's command;
There, others strove in mimic fray,
Wrenching the fancied scalp away,
Casting their tomahawks about,
And quavering war-whoops pealing out.

XXX.

Boys also in the mocking strife
Whirled the dull hatchet, aimed the knife;
Whooped shrill, the scalp in gestures rent,
From the twanged bow the arrow sent,
Or, with strained strength, and flying feet,
Shot on, the distant goal to greet,
While with their pipes the old men sat,
Each at his entrance on his mat.

XXX.

Upon the straggling trees that flung
Their boughs outside, upon the maize,
Infants in their lashed back-boards hung
Asleep, or with dull patient gaze;
While grouped their mothers gossiping,
The corn to golden powder pounding,
Drawing the water from the spring,
Or the bright kettle's* flame surrounding.

XXXI.

Over the river's surface flew
Youths in the rapid birch canoe;
Or floated for their finny prey;
Or lurked, the feeding duck to slay.

* Ku-na-tah in Onondaga.

XXXII.

Suddenly through the maize, where led
A pathway to the neighb'ring shades,
A stranger's form was seen to tread,
Approaching toward the palisades,
And lifting, as he came, on high
Wampum of black and snowy dye.
A ringing whoop of warning swelled
From those the figuro that beheld.
The ball plunged down, and lay in sleep;
The mock fights ceased, ceased whoop and leap;
The warriors checked their sauntering strides;
Sought the canoes the river side.

XXXIII.

The eomer was an Indian tall,
And on him curiously gazed all;
Grave through the palisades he passed,
And paused within the square at last.

XXXIV.

There followed too the village crowd;
And, though the warriors silent gazed,
The women, boys, and children loud
Their voices in enquiry raised.
But mid the wild and chattering din,
The grim and frowning panther skin
Of Dawn of Morning's lodge was reared,
And at the threshold he appeared.

XXXV.

Of beauty high and rare was he;
 A deer-skin shirt of white was spread
 Close round his frame from neck to knee.
 Meeting his leggings richly red.
 Delicate were his features, yet
 A haughty soul was in them set;
 The customary paint in trace
 Of red and black was o'er his face;
 And while a slender form he reared,
 Lithe as a panther's it appeared.

XXXVI.

Upon his heart his hand he pressed,
 And to the stranger bowed his crest;
 Then to the tall pipe-bearer* said,
 Who near him stood, "My Sachems call!"
 Next to the stranger, "Come!" his tread
 Bent toward the palisaded wall,
 Where the long council-house appeared
 Beneath a row of hemlocks reared.

XXXVII.

They entered, soon the Sachems came;
 The circle crouched upon the floor;
 The pipe its customary circuit bore;
 And then the stranger reared his frame,

* Ha-ya-do-ya, or aid to the At-o-ta-ho.

Extended in his brawny hand
The wampum, and in accents bland
To Dawn of Morning said, who sat
In front upon his tufted mat,
"Ta-wen-deh Yon-non-de-yoh's talk
To the great At-o-ta-ho brings;
He seeks to plant the tree of Peace,
Water it, bid its boughs increase,
And then to hide the tomahawk
Under the pleasant shades it flings,
And hard the earth above to tread,
Until it is like rock o'erspread!
Then round the tree lock Friendship's chain,
And never let it break again.
'Great At-o-ta-ho come!' says he,
'To my stone lodge upon the rock,
And there together will we lock
This chain unbroke and bright to be,
Until the grass shall cease to grow,
Until the waters cease to flow!'"

XXXVIII.

A guttural quick "Yo-hah!" awoke
From the dark ring; still no one spoke;
Once more the pipe breathed round its smoke,
Then Dawn of Morning rose;
His eye each Sachem's countenance
Sought, and each Sachem to his glance
Said "Good," and his repose
Vanished into a lofty air;

FR. ATENAC.

His head he reared, his arm he spread,
" Good words speaks Yon-non-do-yoh" said,
" The At-o-ta-ho will be there !"

QUEBEC.

XXXIX.

The fresh May morning's earliest light,
From where the richest hues were blended,
Lit on Cape Diamond's towering height
Whose spangled crystals glittered bright,
Thence to the castle roof descended,
And bathed in radiance pure and deep
The spires and dwellings of the steep.
Still downward crept the strengthening rays;
The lofty crowded roofs below
And Cat-a-ra-qui caught the glow,
Till the whole scene was in a blaze.
The scattered bastions — walls of stone
With bristling lines of cannon crowned,
Whose muzzles o'er the landscape frowned
Blackly through their embrasures — shone.
Point Levi's woods sent many a wreath
Of mist, as though hearths smoked beneath,
Whilst heavy folds of vapor gray
Upon St. Charles, still brooding, lay;
The basin glowed in splendid dyes
Glassing the glories of the skies,
And chequered tints of light and shade
The banks of Orleans' Isle displayed.

XL.

To active life the scene awoke ;
A brigantine her canvas spread,
And as her sailor-songs outbroke
Down toward the southern channel sped.
A courier in his bark canoe
From Skan-na-da-rio's boundless blue,
Measured his oars, as swift along
He glided, to his frontier song ;
And a bateau forth slowly slipped
Its little wooden anchors tripped,
The boatmen at their poles low bending
Their chorus in rude music blending.

XLI.

Quebec's great thoroughfare within
Rose to the usual stir and din :
With flowing plume, and mantle gay,
The mounted noble went his way ;
Chanting, with crucifix on high,
A train of monks swept slowly by ;
With pike and corslet, grim and scarred,
And measured step, on strode a guard.
Couriers de bois, loud chattering, went
Beneath their packs of peltry bent ;
The half-blood scout, with footstep light,
Passed glancing round his rapid sight ;
Hurons quick boro, with loping tread,
Rich beavers toward the trader's shed ;

Woodmen with axes in their hands,
Hunters with hounds and rifles long,
And rough bateaumen, grouped in bands,
On sauntering, swelled the motley throng.

XLII.

Suddenly rose a murmur through
The busy street; a word passed on;
Eyes glanced around; together drew
In groups the crowd; with visage wan
At doors and windows mothers pressed
Their screaming infants to their breast;
Here, with clenched teeth men grasped the knife.
As if to rush on desperate strife;
Whilst others, there, cast looks of fear
On wives and children shuddering near;
What word was that, so quick had made
The sun-bright scene so dark with shade!
'Twas Dawn of Morning! uttered now
In whispers deep, with cowering brow,
And spoken now in anger loud
With hand tight clasped and bearing proud.
"Ha! here he comes!" exclaimed the scout,
"See how he throws his glance about!"
"The dog! here, midst us, in Quebec!"
Muttered the noble, sudden check
Giving his steed, "as proud his feet
As though the forest leaves they beat;
He seems to heed us with that tread,
And how he lifts his haughty head!"

"The demon! see his glittering knife!"
Murmured a female casting look
On her pale child who by her shook,
"Christ save us from this murderous strife;"
"St. Francis, keep it far away!"
Exclaimed a passing Recollet.
"Ho, comrado!" a bateauman said,
"How feels the scalp upon your head!
Creeps it, as on that stormy night
We tugged upon St. Peter's lake
When the moon showed with fitful light
That fearful savage in our wake?"
"Milet! dost thou remember Roux,
Scalped by this fiend in his canoe?"
A courier asked, his bonded back
Freeing an instant from his pack:
"Ashes are where Moyne's cabin stood,
And his the torch that waked the fire,
His hatchet drank Le Renault's blood,
His stake saw La Montayne expire,
Tho time our village in the dell
A prey to his wild fury fell!"
A rough Carignan settler said,
In a low voice of rage and dread,
To a fur-trader at his shed;
"Allaire! I'd give a year to strike
That haughty Indian with my pike!"
A youthful guardsman fiercely cried,
To an old veteran by his side,
"Hush Merle! the Calumet behold,
Besides there tread his followers bold!"

Such sounds proclaimed the warrior's way,
Rising and sinking as his feet
Passed crouching hut and building gray,
That walled the long and winding street.

THE CALUMET.

XLIII.

On came the At-o-ta-ho's tread,
Leading the file of his tawny band;
Like the crest of the elk rose his haughty head,
While high he lifted in his hand
That sign of peace, the calumet,
So sacred to the Indian soul,
With its stem of reed and its dark red bowl,
Flaunting with feathers white, yellow, and green,
Which seemed as if jewels were over them set,
As they glanced to the sun in their changeable sheen.

XLIV.

Courage that danger ne'er disturbed,
And a proud spirit never eurbed,
Were throned upon his forehead bold,
And in his dark wild glance were told.
His usual close white robe he wore,
Its hue in emblems nearly lost;
A short fusee his shoulders crossed;
His head the bristling scalp-lock bore;

A heron plume of snow hung o'er;
Memorial of that bird that swept
Its way to Hah-yoh-wont-hah dread,
And whose pure plumage long was kept
To deck the bravest warrior's head.
Behind, his mat hung, richly dyed,
And dangling loosely at his side,
His pouch of rabbit skin was seen;
His limbs bright crimson leggings graced,
Worked moccasins his feet encased,
And in the sunshine gleaming keer
His hatchet o'er his mat was slung,
While his long knife before him hung.

XLV.

His warriors also bore fusée,
Hatchet and knife, with bearing proud;
But not a sign showed enmity,
"Hai! hai!" they sounded oft and loud.
Thus down St. Louis' street, that led
To the Place d'Armes all slowly sped,
And there they checked their lofty tread.

THE TALK.

XLVI.

The castle's council chamber, long
And narrow, raftered low and strong;
On a raised chair sat Frontenac,
A score of nobles at his back,

While pikemen in two rows before
Stretched to the threshold of the door.

XLVII.

The sunshine through the casement streamed,
Filling with golden glow the room,
On corselet, casque, and pikehead gleamed,
And danced on sword, fusée, and plume.
But the wide portal open flew;
Five forms strode up the avenue
By the grim bristling pikemen made,
The file the At-o-ta-ho leading,
The rest close after, each a brave,
In a brave's weapons each arrayed,
Seeming to see nought, stern and grave,
Yet subtly every object heeding.

XLVIII.

As Dawn of Morning slowly passed,
Around his eagle look he cast,
Smiling with scorn as pike and gun
Flashed all around him in the sun.
No pause he made, until his tread
Placed him two paces from the chair
Where Frontenac, with kindling air,
Sat gazing; then in broken speech,
While swept his arm a haughty reach,
The youthful warrior said:
"Great Yen-non-de-yoh whispered 'Come!'
To Dawn of Morning: he is here,

E'en in great Yon-non-de-yoh's home ;
The At-o-tu-ho knows not fear,
For a great brave is Dawn of Day :
What doth my Canada father say ?”

XLIX.

A breathless pause ; at length 'twas broke
By Frontenac, as thus he spoko :
“ My Sachem, dwelling o'er the sea,
To his red children speaks through me —
Why should the Ongue-Houwee host
Against me strike the battle-post !
Why should my young men vainly cry
For sneecor at their burning stake !
Why should my lightnings round them wake,
Bidding their boldest warriors die !
Why should our pathway with a cloud
The brave Ho-de-no-sonne shroud !
I listen as the west wind comes,
Its errand in my ear it hums ;
It says — I bear the shriek and groan
From distant Missillimakinak
To Yon-non-de-yoh's lodge of stone,
A dreary, long, and bloody track.
These things have riven my heart with pain,
But let us now make bright the chain,
And smoke the Calumet together,
While on our path will rest the glow,
The soft warm glow of Summer weather,

Not Winter's chilling robes of snow.

This belt preserves my words!
 We'll plant the peace-tree deeply now,
 So that its shade shall steep each brow;
 And no more let the fires of wrath
 Be kindled in the battle-path

By deeds or singing-birds.

See, Dawn of Morning! you bright pile
 Of gifts will make thy warriors smile!
 Fuseses, to bring the fleet moose low;
 Rackets, to hunt him in the snow;
 Blankets, within whose downy fold,
 The sires can brave the bitterest cold;
 Sashes, to bind the robes of skin;
 Beads for the tawny moccasins;
 Trinkets to make the squaws more bright;
 Paints fitting warriors for the fight;
 Powder and ball, to sear with flame
 The foe, and heap the lodge with game;
 Leggings that match the ruddy blaze;
 Kettles to boil the golden maize;
 And look! let Dawn of Morning spread
 Round him this mantle rich and red,
 Worthy an At-o-ta-ho's sight,
 Whose deeds have made his name so bright."

L.

The warrior stirred not from his place,
 But reared his tall light form more tall,

And said, while letting, with free grace,
Upon his arm the mantle fall:—
“ When, in his snowy-winged canoe,
First Walking Thunder* crept to view,
On Cat-a-ra-qui's flood,
The Adirondack dogs the knife
Against my people held in strife,
Red ever with their blood.
So by the oldest sires avouched,
In winter, in the lodges crouched;
And though those dogs now trembling, feel
The scornful stampings of our heel,
Then did our fathers know their wrath,
And die within their bloody path.
Beside that broad and lovely lake
Where dwells the prophet of the winds,
Who, if no offering mortals make
Passing his lodge of rock, unbinds
His rushing fury o'er the wave,
And whelms them in a watery grave;
Herding with those base dogs, the fires
Of Walking Thunder fiercely flashed
Against the bosoms of our sires,
And down to earth their bravest dashed,
Sudden, as when the lightning's bound
Cleaves the proud hemlock to the ground.
They made our trembling warriors bow,
Warriors who only bowed before
To I-lah-sun-ne-yo; from the roar

* Champlain.

And flash of Walking Thunder's wrath,
 Their feet flew o'er a briery path,
 And long they veiled their humble brow.

L.

" But tho' wise Charistooni * came,
 And gave the dust where slept the flame
 To our awed sires; from that bright hour,
 Their scalp-locks loftier, loftier, rose,
 They climbed the mountain of their power,
 They poured destruction on their foes;
 Each warrior's lodge with scalps was filled,
 We swam within the blood we spilled.
 Not only Adirondacks bowed,
 When o'er them passed our tempest-cloud,
 But Huron, Erie, Illini,
 Ottawa, Pequod, bent the knee,
 Until turned every red man pale,
 Where'er was seen our stealthy trail;
 And where our wandering footsteps led,
 The earth was strown, like leaves, with dead.

LII.

" Then the good Charistooni placed
 The chain in Corlear's friendly hands;
 We since, heart linked, the game have chased,

* The Dutch were so called by the Iroquois.

And still the tree we planted stands,
This belt preserves my talk!
Oft has the At-o-ta-ho smoked
The pipe with Corlear, his white brother,
And oft have we the smiles invoked
Of Hah-wen-ne-yo on each other;
Deep lies our tomahawk!
If Yon-non-de-yoh, then, the chain
Would place in Dawn of Morning's grasp,
And make it free from every stain,
The links must Corlear also clasp,
And Yon-non-de-yoh, with his hand
Upon his heart, by Corlear stand,
A brother."

—"Nay, it cannot be!"

Thus broke in fiery Frontenac:
"The mighty sachems o'er the sea
Have dug the hatchet from the ground,
The knife must gleam, the war-whoop sound;
Ne'er Yon-non-de-yoh bends the knee,
Or from the war-path turns him back!"
"Then!" and the At-o-ta-ho dashed
The mantle down, with eye that flashed,
And spurned it with disdain;
"Then shall the hatchet still be red,
And still the sky with clouds be spread;
See! Dawn of Morning's scornful tread
Is on the broken chain!"
"This to my face!" cried Frontenac,
Upstarting, "Seize him!"—In his track
The savage turned—one bound he made,

His hatchet gleamed, and low was laid
A pikeman on the floor ;
Another bound, another blow,
Beneath his feet another foe
Was gasping in his gore ;
A third, and, with a war-whoop shrill,
That pierced all ears with deafening thrill,
He vanished through the door ;
Over his tribesmen fierce, who stood
Stern, fighting, till they fell in blood,
Nobles and pikemen pour.
Across the court the chieftain flies,
One struggle more — the sentry dies ;
Haste, haste, thy need is sore !
Ope, ope the sally port ! thy flight
Thy foemen press with stern delight,
Thy warriors are before.
Joy, joy ! the sally port is spread !
And, with loud whoop and winged tread,
He plunges midst his tribesmen red,
And with quick words he points ahead —
All vanish from the square ;
Up through St. Louis' street they dash,
Corset and pike behind them flash,
And shots at rapid periods crash,
But onward still they bear.
All, wondering, view the warriors flee,
In their left hands the clutched fusee,
The hatchet in their right,
Bateauman, hunter, courier, scout,
Show their surprise by clamorous shout,

Women shriek wild with fright;
Yet scarce is marked the tawny crowd
Before, like passage of a cloud,
They shoot athwart the sight;
But ere they gain the walls, a band
Of hunters in their pathway stand,
Poured from a little inn at hand,
And deadly fire throw in;
Hatchets and knives and wood-blades flash,
Fuses and rifles blend their crash,
Whoop, shout, and scream their din;
Bosom to bosom, eye to eye,
Pale-face and red-skin sink to die,
Blood gushes through the street;
Near and more near the armed array
Of guardsmen come to grasp their prey;
Still cut, still cut, wild braves! your way!
Still urge, still urge your feet!
Haah!* Hah-wen-ne-yo's smile is cast
Upon them yet — they reach at last
The walls — the sentries low they bring,
The massive gates they open swing,
Nought now their way retards,
And turning, Dawn of Morning throws
His hatchet with a look that glows
In glaring fury at his foes;
Then, as dash near the guards,
Vanishes with his dusky band
Amid the tangled woods at hand.

* An exclamation in Iroquois, expressive of joy or triumph.

END OF CANTO SECOND.

CANTO THIRD.

THE WAR-SONG.
THE HUNTERS.
THE BATEAU.

THE CARIGNAN
VILLAGE.
THE BRIGANTINE.

CANTO THIRD.

THE WAR-SONG.

I.

OOH! hoooh! how the panther springs,
As flies the deer on affrighted wings!
Hoooh! hoooh! how he rends his prey!
So will the On-on-dah-gahs slay!
Hoooh! whoop! how he rends his prey!
So will the On-on-dah-gahs slay!

“Hoooh! hoooh! how the eagle screams,
As the blood of the fawn from his talons streams!
Hoooh! hoooh! how the woods ring out!
So will the On-on-dah-gahs shout!
Hoooh! whoop! how the woods ring out!
So will the On-on-dah-gahs shout!”

II.

Thus the next morning that beheld
The At-o-ta-he safe again
At On-on-dah-gah, loudly swelled
The war-song in its angriest strain.

Revenge on Yon-non-de-yoh! high
 Went up the fierce and bloody cry;
 Revenge on all his race! their ire
 Flashed into furious, frenzied fire;
 Revenge! revenge! it filled the day,
 It e'en disturbed the midnight's sway,
 Its sound the At-o-ta-ho swelled,
 The echo wild his warriors yelled,
 The old men, women, children, all
 Blended their voices in the call,
 Revenge! revenge! till every breast
 Had but that passion for its guest.

III.

And now round flame and war-post red
 Within the castle's crowded square,
 The wrathful At-o-ta-ho led
 His braves, and raised his chauntings there,
 Joined by their tones, whilst every bound
 Beat to the song with muffled sound.

I.

"Hoo! hoo! how the sharpened knife
 Will gleam again in the war-path's strife!
 Hoo! hoo! like the lightning red,
 The On-on-dah-gahs will flash in dread!
 Hoo! whoop! like the lightning red,
 The On-on-dah-gahs will dart in dread!

2.

"Hoo! hoo! how the hungry fire
 Will wrap the French in its leaping ire!
 Hoo! hoo! like the torrent's flood,
 The On-on-dah-gahs will rush in blood!
 Hoo! whoop! like the torrent's flood,
 The On-on-dah-gahs will rush in blood!"

Breaking the song, above his head
 The At-o-ta-ho flashed a sweep
 With his bright hatchet; down it sped,
 And in the post was buried deep.
 The next one gave a piercing yell,
 And down his hatchet also fell.
 Another struck — another — shrill
 Whoop upon whoop resounding, till
 Blows rained upon the post so fast,
 In fragments round 'twas strown at last

IV.

The At-o-ta-ho clutched his axe
 And shook it high with fiercest gaze,
 Then — scores of warriors in his tracks —
 Rushed through the palisades, the maize,
 And bounding to the water-side
 Where, from the soft white bass-wood hollowed,
 Three war canoes with withes were tied,
 Entered the first; his warriors followed

Till all were filled, and the furious throng
 With flashing paddles then left the shore,
 Skimming the river with whoop and song
 Upon their war-path of flame and smoke.

THE HUNTERS.

V.

'Twas one of June's delicious eves ;
 Sweetly the sunset rays were streaming,
 Here tangled in the forest leaves,
 There on the Cataract gleaming.
 A broad glade lay beside the flood
 Where tall dropped trees and bushes stood.
 A cove its semicircle bent
 Within, and through the sylvan space,
 Where lay the light in splintered trace,
 A moose, slow grazing, went ;
 Twisting his long, curved, flexile lip
 Now the striped moosewood's leaves to strip,
 And now his maned neck, short and strong,
 Stooping, between his fore-limbs long
 Stretched widely out, to crop the plant
 And tall rich grass that clothed the haunt.
 On moved he to the basin's edge,
 Nowing the swordflag, rush, and sedge,
 And, wading short way from the shore
 Where spread the waterlilies o'er
 A pavement green with globes of gold,
 Commenced his favorite feast to hold.

VI.

So still the scene — the river's lapse
Along its course gave hollow sound,
With some raised wavelet's lazy laps
On log and stone around ;
And the crisp noise the moose's cropping
Made, with the water lightly dropping
From some lithe, speckled, lily stem
Entangled in his antlers wide,
Thus scattering many a sparkling gem
Within the gold-cups at his side.
Sudden he raised his head on high,
Spread his great nostrils, fixed his eye,
Reared half his giant ear-flaps, stood,
Between his teeth a half-chewed root,
And sidelong on the neighboring wood
Let startled glances shoot.
Resuming then his stem, once more,
He bent, as from suspicion free,
His bearded throat the lilies o'er,
And cropped them quietly.

VII.

Minutes passed on in such repose,
No sound within the scene arose,
Save, as before, the river's tinklings ;
The rustling that the feeding moose
Made in the lilies, and the sprinklings
Each mass of roots he reared let loose ;

But now a rife cracked — he started,
And through the ruffled basin darted,
Found quickly the opposing side,
And, hoofs loud elicking, left the spot,
His frame extended in a wide,
Headlong, yet awkward trot;
But scarce an arrow's flight he bore,
When burst another quick flat sound,
And, with drawn limbs, and gushing gore,
He floundered on the ground.
Two hunters rushed then from the shade,
And while one drew his woodman's blade
Across the victim's throat,
The other whooped out shrill and keen,
That rang along the silent scene
In startling, deafening note.

VIII.

As from their prey they strip the skin,
Two other hunters enter in,
Bearing a deer with staggering strength,
And on the greensward cast their length.
Now voices all around are heard,
The leaves by hasty feet are stirred,
And soon the whole gay hunter band
Within the sylvan hollow stand,
Casting their wildwood game around
Until it thickly strews the ground.

IX.

Now the golden light has slid
From the hemlock's pyramid ;
Now the maple's dome is dark,
Flashing late with lustrous spark ;
And within the solemn woods,
Twilight, dusk and shimmering, broods.

X.

Soon the pile of sticks and leaves
Fire from flint and steel receives,
And the flesh, in juicy flakes,
Odors rich and pungent makes ;
Seated on the pleasant grass,
Jest and song the hunters pass ;
Then, the rites to hunger paid,
Careless every limb is laid
On the sweet and dowy glade.

XI.

" 'Twas a long shot which struck that goose,"
Says one, " he beat the air so far !"
" Yes," eries another, " and the moose
Some caution cost us ; hey, Bizarro ?"
" Had he but been that fiend-like boy,
The At-o-ta-ho, greater joy,"
Answered Bizarro, " within would glow !
I saw a wolf, an hour ago,
Down in the Wild-cat streamlet's glen,

And his fierce rolling eye was like,
 I thought, to that young demon's, when
 I saw him low Jerandeu strike,
 Before the Inn of the Canoe,
 When his wild band came trooping through
 St. Louis' street, like panthers leaping;
 Oh, that an instant brief he stood
 In my good rifle Bee-flight's keeping,
 He'd never spill another's blood!"
 "Why did not," gay another cried,
 "Bee-flight bore through him in the strife?"
 "As hard as gun e'er did it tried,
 But fortune favored not; beside
 It had to guard its master's life!"
 "Well, let the At-o-ta-ho go,"
 A third one said; "we cannot reach
 His fierce bloodthirsty heart with speech —
 Come, come, Bizarre, let pleasure flow!
 Sing, sing! the 'Happy Hunters' swell,
 We all can trip the chorus well!"

XII.

Bizarre hemmed loud, then poured a main,
 Till the woods rang, his forest strain: —

I.

"Happy and free
 Hunters are we,
 Free as the winds that roam so wide;

THE HUNTERS.

69

Camping at night,
Up with the light,
Hunters are happy whatever betide!
Shout out the chorus then,
Swing it out louder, men!
Sorrow or care cannot with us abide,
Hunters are happy whatever betide!

2.

"Happy and free
Hunters are we,
Free as the clouds that above us glide;
Scorning the worst,
Hunger and thirst,
Hunters are happy whatever betide!
Shout out the chorus then,
Swing it out louder, men!
Sorrow or care cannot with us abide,
Hunters are happy whatever betide!"

XIII.

On pass the hours: the camp-fire bright
Steeps the near leaves in bronzing light,
And shifting, plays o'er the figures laid,
In the generous glow, on the grassy glade.
The whetsaw's tinkle, the owl's loud shout,
And the ceaseless chime of the frogs, ring out;
With the neighboring Cat-a-ra-qui's rush
Making profounder the midnight hush.

XIV.

Silent are the sentries sitting ;
One feels dozing visions flitting
O'er his brain, while Fancy teeming,
Riots through the other's dreaming.

XV.

Creeping, creeping, onward creeping,
Toward the sentries, helpless sleeping.
Through the gloom
Two figures come—
Are they wolves upon their way?
Creeping, creeping, on still creeping,
Then, like lightning, upward leaping,
Fall they on their slumbering prey.

XVI.

Two flashing blows, two gasps, once more
Silence broods for an instant o'er ;
Wild forms are then in a circle round
The slumbering hunters—a blended sound
Of crashing rifles, a whooping bound
Of the figures wild, and the camp-fire's ground
Is covered with shapes that fall and rise,
Rise and fall, with shouts and cries
Pealing, while savage fury plies
Its murderous work : as Bizarre sank low,
An ember launched upward a tongue-like glow ;

He saw above him, in glimmering trace,
 The hated, yet feared, At-o-ta-ho's face ;
 The next, and the swift curved knife is gleaming,
 His scalp at the belt of the chief is streaming,
 Out peals the Iroquois' war-song,— their feet
 In a dance of mad joy the green forest-glade beat.

“ Hoooh! hoooh! how the panther springs,
 As flies the deer on affrighted wings!
 Hoooh! hoooh! how he rends his prey!
 So do the On-on-dah-gahs slay!
 Hoooh! whoop! how he rends his prey!
 So do the On-on-dah-gahs slay!”

Then Dawn of Morning points before
 With his red knife, and in the wood
 Darts with his tawny braves once more
 For other scenes of woe and blood.

THE BATEAU.

XVII.

Morning is brightening with golden smiles
 The beautiful “ Lake of the Thousand Isles.”
 Scattered all over the green flood lie
 Islands profuse as the stars in the sky ;
 Here, scarce yielding a few trees room,
 There, bearing upward a forest of gloom,

Breaking the wave, now, in broad expanses,
 That flashed out like steel in the morning's glances,
 And now into vistas whose either side
 Darkened with intermixed shadows the tide.

XVIII.

A sheldrake by an isle of wood,
 Within a watery streak was steering,
 Dipping his green head in the flood,
 When, quick his bill of yellow rearing,
 With a loud whiz he flew away,
 As a gigantic war-canoe
 Filled with a grim and plumed array
 Of warriors wild came shooting through :
 Amidst them, with his look of pride,
 Was Dawn of Morning, his keen eye
 Scanning the tangled shore beside,
 Till, toward a weeping elm-tree nigh,
 Which in a thickly foliaged wreath
 Down to the wave its branches threw.
 He waved his arm, and underneath
 Instantly vanished the canoe.

XIX.

It was not long ere voices gay
 Broke on the air, and a bateau
 Moved up the furrowing narrow way
 With its rough crew in double row,
 Each bending shoulder strongly bracing
 Against the pole with struggling strain,

Then, every one his way retracing,
 To stoop down to the toil again.
 The long curved craft, the jackets red
 Of the bent boatmen, gliding, spread
 In sharp, soft lined, yet shaken trace
 Upon the water's rippling face.

XX.

"The sunset's light, I trust," said one,
 "Antoine, will see our toiling done."
 "Aye, Vigne, sound sleep this night we win
 Fort Frontenac's strong walls within."
 "Much more than we," Vigne answering cried,
 "Gained the last night—these screams and whoops
 We heard, though in the distance, tried
 My manhood, comrades,—deeply droops
 My heart within me as I think
 Of those poor hunters that we saw
 At noon along the river's brink;
 For, comrades," and a look of awe
 He glanced around him, "we all know
 That Dawn of Morning and his braves
 Are on the war-path!"
 "Be it so,"
 Broke in a third, "we'll not be slaves,
 We, boatmen, we, to abject fear;
 I did not, Vigne, thy whoops e'en hear:
 Those maringouins!* swarm on swarm

* A little white goat found on the banks of the St. Lawrence.

Thronged all the night about my form;
 The little white fiends seemed as mad
 To drink up all the blood I had."
 "Cease," said Antoine, "the morn, at least,
 Is bright; we taste it like a feast;
 I'll sing the boatman's well known air,
 And you must all the chorus bear."

"Push along, boys, push along, boys,
 Merrily, cheerily push along;
 And while our prow makes merry music,
 We'll too raise the song.
 We'll too raise the song, my boys,
 Swift as we push along;
 Each to his pole, boys, bend to each pole, boys.
 Merrily, cheerily push along;
 And while the waters ripple round us,
 We'll too raise the song.

"Push along, boys, push along, boys,
 "Merrily, cheerily" —
 "Hush!" said Vigne,
 "I saw a flash amidst those leaves
 Beside, as of some weapon keen!"
 "Pshaw! some white birch thy sight deceives," Impatiently another spoke —
 "On, let the song again be woke!"

"Push along, boys, push along, boys,
 Merrily, cheerily push along;

And while the wave"—

"Stay! stay the strain!

There is no wind, and yet I see
Yon thicket fluttering! Mark again
That gleam. Ha! from behind this tree
I saw a scalp-lock peer! Beware!
My comrades." Just then on the air
Broko crashes quick, with yell on yell
From the close banks; the boatmen fell—
Some dead, some on their knees; once more
A volley rings, and from the shore
To the bateau fierce figures bound,
Swift weapons flash—shrieks, groans, resound.

XXI.

"Spare! spare! great At-o-ta-ho," cries
Vigne, as his throat a warrior grasps;
But the knife falls; in death he gasps
His rent scalp swinging to his eyes—
Then whoops the At-o-ta-ho keen,
The warriors vanish from the scene;
And the wild isle its echoes wakes,
As forth the savage war-song breaks.

"Hoo! hoo! how the eagle screams,
As the blood of the fawn from his talons streams!
Hoo! hoo! how the woods ring out!
So do the On-on-dah-gahs shout!

Hooh! whoop! how the woods ring out!
So do the On-on-dah-gahs shout!"

While the bateau with its strowed dead,
Now straight, now sidewise, swiftly sped,
A face here hanging — there a limb,
O'er its stained sides: a picture grim;
Down at the merey of the flood,
Marking its course with trickling blood.

THE CARIGNAN VILLAGE.

XXII.

The sun had vanished — a golden rim
Striped the western horizon's wall;
Tho forest arbors were fading dim,
Twilight was letting his mantle fall.

XXIII.

'Twas a sweet landscape. A village stood
In a rough clearing enclosed with wood.
Log-built cabins, a palisade,
Pierced with two gateways, around arrayed;
Thence to the Cat-a-ra-qui's glass,
Were wavelike meadows of velvet grass;
Grain fields growing, and pastures green,

Fallows spotted with stumps and black,
And forest-choppings — a choked-up scene,
Showing the axe's recent track.
All else was a wilderness, thickening to sight,
Each moment beneath the first shadows of night.

XXIV.

Oxen were plodding like snails along
To the open gates; and with careless song
The settler was lounging behind; the bleat
Of flocks approaching their folds was sweet.
Along the paths of the winding lanes
Herd-bells were tinkling in fitful strains,
The kine now stalking, now stopping to feed,
While frequently neighed some scampering steed.
Hunters from woodland avenues came
Followed by hounds, and burthened with game;
And from the far hill-tops echoed free
The sounding axe and the crashing tree.
A sylvan picture, this wildwood land
Sketches alone with its rough fresh hand.

XXV.

Over the brow of a hill that towered
Above this landscape — in woods embowered,
The shaggy head of a cedar shot
In a slanting line from a hollow spot,
Tangled with brushwood, and in its breast
Deeply his limbs had an Indian pressed;

Cautiously, steadfastly, through the green,
 He drew his eye o'er the village scene,
 Then gliding down to the hollow, where
 Each shadowy bush was an Indian's lair,
 The At-o-ta-ho also found
 The depths of one of the thickets round.

XXVI.

A youthful couple beguiled the night,
 With talk by the social candlelight.
 "One short year, as man and wife,
 We, Marie, have skimmed the stream of life;
 One short year from to-day: hast thought
 Of the lovely picture the sunset wrought
 The eve we wed? My sire, who then
 Danced at our gl'd merry-making, said
 It put him in mind of the day he wed!
 You know he was one of Carignan's men!
 And old Lemoyne says, none more brave
 E'er saw the flag of Carignan wave.
 There hangs his sabre, all rusty and dull!
 I wonder if ever the blade I'll pull
 From its steel scabbard! Ta-wen-deh the scout.
 I hear, a week since told a few,
 Within the Inn of the Canoe,
 At Quebec, that again with the Iroquois out;
 That Dawn of Morning, inflamed with wrath
 From Frontenac's treatment, had taken the path;
 And furthermore, Marie, a courier saw,

Whilst threading the Thousand Isles above
 With his loud oarskins, a sight of awe,
 He pointed the current drove.
 He remembered the large bateau
 That he had seen in the village two nights ago,
 Where the dance on Le Bas, and Vigne,
 A merry dance with the dance on the starlit green!
 Well, the bateau was, stained with gore,
 With heads and limbs hung ghastly o'er —
 Beached on the point: he approached with dread,
 There lay the crew — our poor boatmen — dead,
 Scalped and mangled, displaying plain
 That Iroquois devils his friends had slain.
 Well, Marie, I'm ready to draw at word,
 With my father's heart my father's sword!
 Hark! the wind rages, a stormy night!
 I trust that to-morrow will rise up bright!"
 To-morrow! Ah, folly! Ah, vanity!
 Who — who can be sure that to-morrow he'll see!

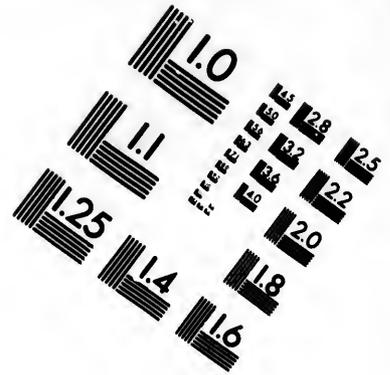

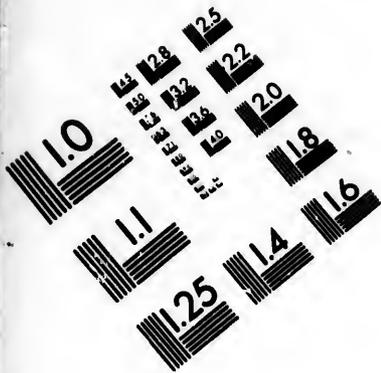

XXVII.

Midnight came, in its sablest hue,
 With clouds on a roaring wind that flew;
 Nearer and nearer the dawn of day,
 Wrapped in its slumber the village lay.

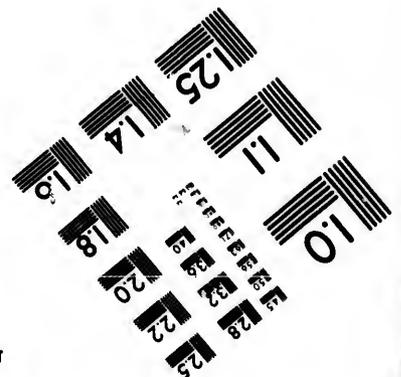

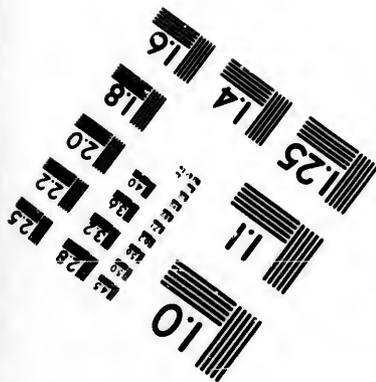

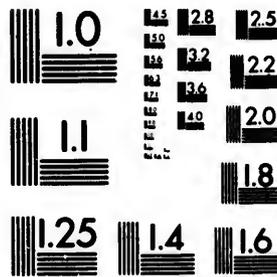

XXVIII.

From the gusty forests passed
 Swift approaching shapes at last.

IMAGE EVALUATION
TEST TARGET (MT-3)

Photographic
Sciences
Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET
WEBSTER, N.Y. 14580
(716) 872-4503

15 128
16 132
17 136
18 140
19 144
20 148
21 152
22 156
23 160
24 164
25 168

10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19 20
21
22
23
24
25

They force the gates of the palisade —
There stand the dwellings in gloomy shade;
Scatter the Iroquois far and near;
A moment more, and their whoop of fear
Peals out, succeeded by crash on crash,
As inward their hatchets the frail doors dash;
To his rifle in vain the Carignan flies,
The hatchet gleams after — he sinks, he dies!
The daughter is brained as she shrieks in dread,
The hairs of the grandsire are steeped in red,
Mothers, imploring in anguish, fall,
Infants are dashed against threshold and wall.
Ah, the young husband! he starts from his dream!
Ah, the young wife! she but wakens to scream!
Those whoopings and shriekings, and groans all around!
The Iroquois! God! can no refuge be found!
They glance from the casement, wild forms here and there
Shoot past, weapons glitter, shots stream through the air!
The husband has drawn forth the sword of his sire,
And he stands by the barred door with aspect of fire,
While trembling, half frenzied, his Marie is nigh.
“Oh, husband! oh, husband!” her agonized cry;
“My brain reels! oh, Virgin, most holy! we flee
In this time of our need for protection to thee!
Let us hide! no, the torch will be here too, we'll gain
The forest, we'll steal through the herds in the lane!
Come, husband! oh, husband, come! haste! let's begone!
Oh, God! 'tis too late! here their glances are drawn!”
Ha, that shock! she screams wildly, down crashes the door,
And a brave bursts upon them with tomahawk o'er.

"Spare, spare, Dawn of morning!" but downward it sinks,
The blood of the husband laid prostrate it drinks;
The brave plants his foot on the neck of the slain,
And down falls the gore-dripping hatchet again;
The wife plunges headlong, her sorrows are o'er,
The couple shall sit at the hearthstone no more.

XXIX.

Still flies round with delight the brand,
Flames flash out upon every hand;
Over, the clouds are bathed in red;
A glaring horizon around is spread;
The tops of the woods seem to stagger in smoke;
All the wild life of their depths has awoke,
Eagle and panther, and wolf and bear,
Screaming and howling and snarling there;
Blent with the Iroquois war-song loud,
Pealing from out of the smoky shroud.

"Hoo! hoo! how the sharpened knife
Has gleamed again in the war-path's strife!
Hoo! hoo! like the lightning red,
The On-on-dah-gahs have flashed in dread!
Hoo! whoop! like the lightning red,
The On-on-dah-gahs have flashed in dread!"

At midnight the village drew slumber's sweet breath,
At dawn it was hushed in the stillness of death ;
At midnight roofs rose in the wild gusty air,
At dawn a wild waste of dark ashes was there ;
While the fierce At-o-ta-ho, more vengeance to claim,
Was again on his war-path of carnage and flame.

THE BRIGANTINE.

xxx.

In the soft twilight's darkening glow,
Near the wild shores of Ontario,
Where points of wilderness form a bay,
Now changing its hues to one shade of gray,
Three crowded canoes of Iroquois braves
Are gliding ; in one Dawn of Morning, now
Bending his ear to the glassy waves,
In front then looking with anxious brow.
Sudden he speaks, and the prows turn quick
To where a cluster of spruces thick
Slants o'er the waters, their shaggy woof
Shaping there an impervious roof,
And in the black shadow beneath it thrown
Each glides, and the scene to all seeming is lone.
But dashes are heard, and a brigantine creeps
Round one of the points to the push of her sweeps ;

Then dropping her anchor the beautiful bark
Motionless sits in the gathering dark.

XXXI.

A group of seamen surrounds the mast;
The stream of their converse is free and fast.
"The Griffin," says one, "was strong and fleet;
I saw her, some two-score years ago,
Launched on Niagara's rapid sheet,
Near where the cataract rolls below;
The Sieur La Salle and his gallant crew,
And good father Hennepin, learned and meek,
Stood on her decks as she downward drew,
And kissed, with a curtesy, the river's cheek;
The Iroquois At-o-ta-ho too,
Ku-an was there, and with his glance
Of dread scowled Ta-yo-nee beside, who slew
His sister whom Frontenac brought from France.
They were then on the war-path in which they fell,
Both of the chieftains knew I well!"
"What tales," said another, "of blood we hear
From the now At-o-ta-ho; deeds of fear
By this young Dawn of Morning so constant are done,
That a score of warriors he seems in one!
The Carignan village St. Mié you know,
Near the foot of the Thousand Isles—it stood
In its pleasant clearing three days ago,
'Tis a waste of ashes now, slaked with blood;

The At-o-ta-ho led his band
 On it with hatchet and with brand ;
 Not a dwelling now rises there —
 Not a soul did his fury spare —
 Frontenac well the day should rue,
 When the wrath of the savage he kindled anew."

XXXII.

The frog's hoarse bassoon, the loon's sorrowful shake,
 Alone the deep hush of the scene now awake ;
 The sailor thinks fond on his watch, of the spot
 Where rises mid vineyards his dear native cot.
 Once more his free footsteps press valley and plain ;
 Once more the glad harvest is sounding its strain ;
 He is there — he is there in his home of delight —
 He starts, he looks round, the lake gleams on his sight,
 But the starlighted hush again falls on his soul,
 And his thoughts again fly far away to their goal.

XXXIII.

A haze has now spread a thick mantle of gray,
 The waters are hidden, the stars shrink away ;
 From the roof of dark cedars quick movements begin,
 How silently, silently, onwards they win !
 Still silently, silently, every canoe
 Still urged the gray waters invisibly through,
 Like barks from the spirit-land, spectral and dim,
 So still fall the paddles, so light is their skim ;

Still silently, silently, onwards they glide,
They reach without question the brigantine's side;
Forms spring up the vessel — hush! hush! not a sound!
They peer o'er the bulwarks, the sleepers are round:
They grasp now their hatchets, all caution is past,
To the deck, to the deck, they are bounding at last!
Up, up! Dawn of Morning the foremost is there!
Quick, quick! how their shouts ring abroad on the air!
Upstart the pale sleepers, and wildered by fright,
And with senses still swimming, they stand to the fight,
Hand to hand is the battle, clash outlass and knife!
Clash steel-pike and hatchet; wild, wild is the strife!
Ho, the young At-o-ta-ho! his eyeballs are flame,
And the blood of his foes is splashed over his frame!
At the sweep of his hatchet one plunges in death!
At the dart of his knife gasps another for breath!
God save the poor seamen! no succor is nigh!
Christ save the poor seamen! they struggle to die!
They are borne to the deck, o'er the sides are they cast;
The water grows red round the brigantine fast,
Till nothing remains of the crew but the dead,
Then over the vessel deep silence is spread.
Off darts the canoes, smoke the doomed bark surrounds,
On the lines of the rigging flame flashes and bounds,
Red ponnons stream out from the red-circled mast,
A glare all around on the vapor is cast,
The waters blush crimson; but wildly and high
The Iroquois war-song goes up to the sky.

“Hooh! hooh! how the hungry fire
Has wrapped the French in its leaping ire!

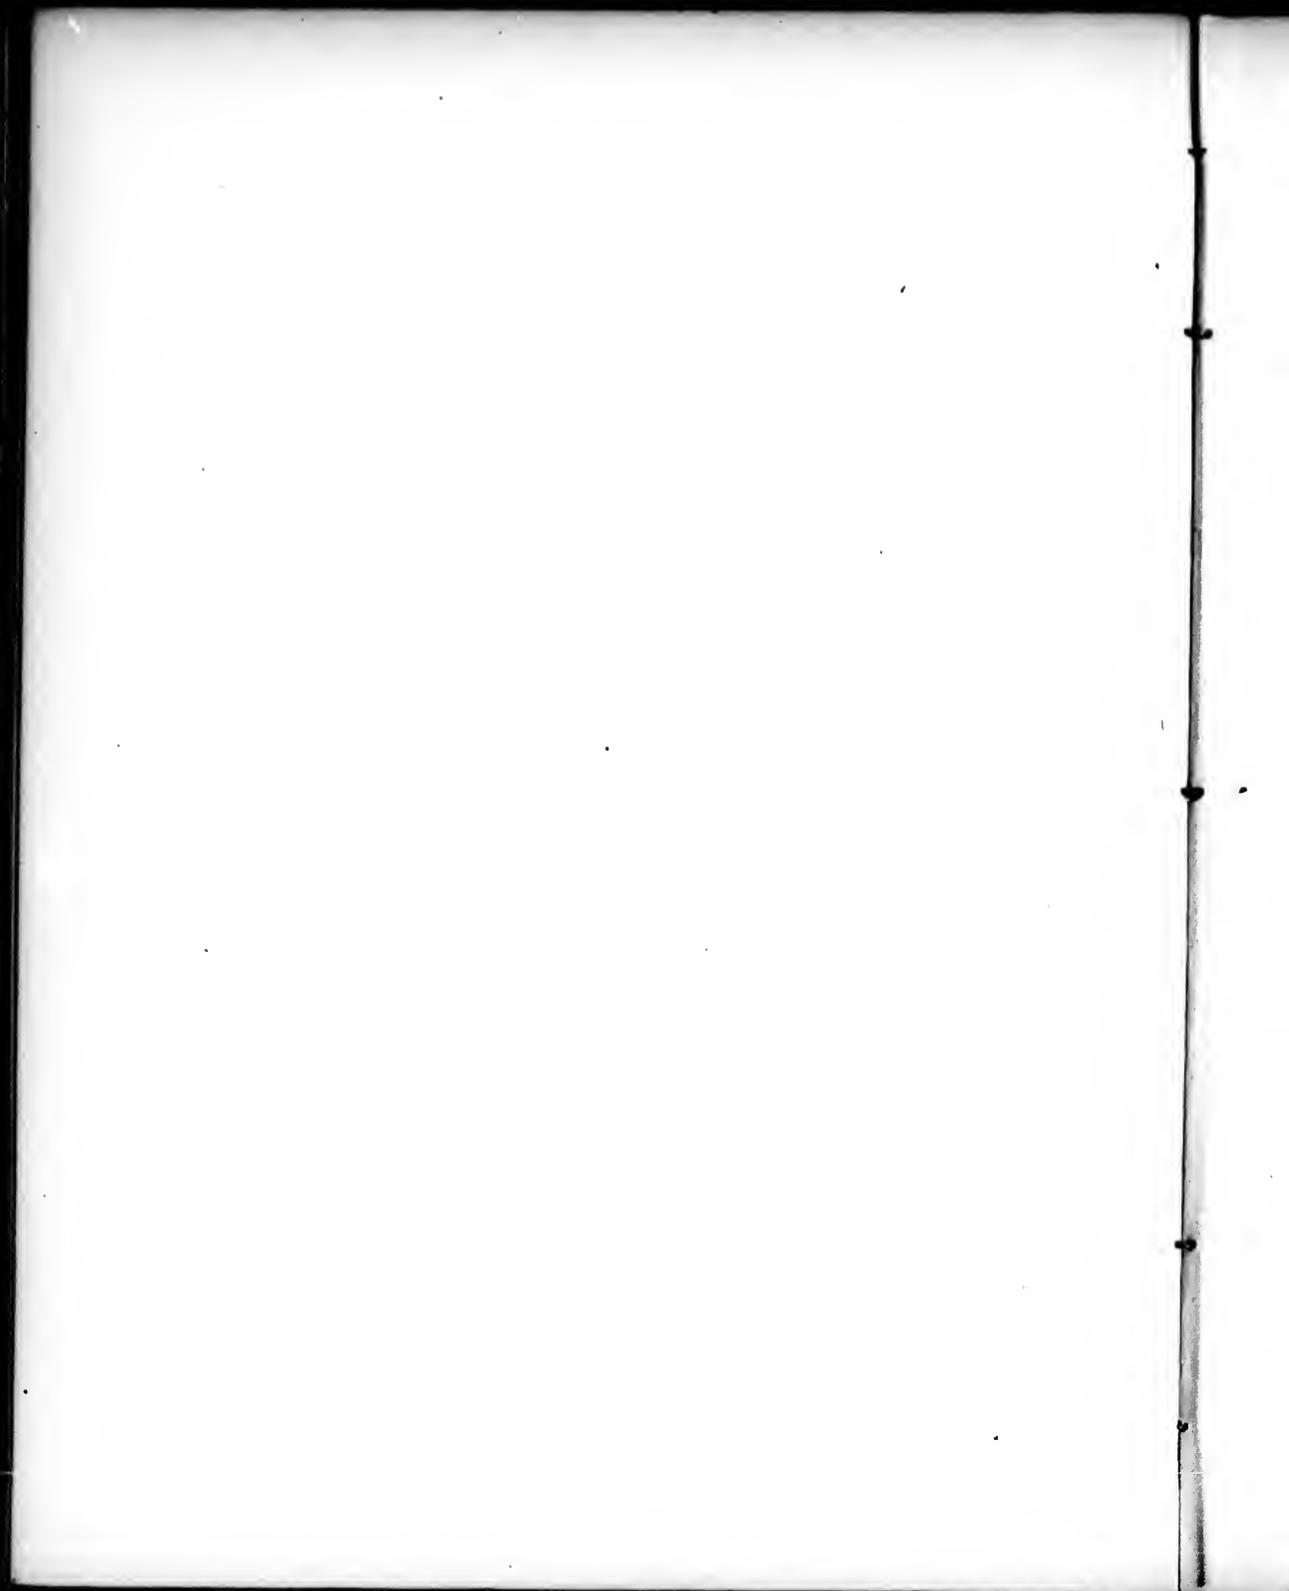

Hoo! hoo! like the torrent's flood,
The On-on-dah-gahs have rushed in blood!
Hoo! whoop! like the torrent's flood,
The On-on-dah-gahs have rushed in blood!

END OF CANTO THIRD.

CANTO FOURTH.

THE THANKSGIVING
DANCE.
THE DANCE OF THE GREAT SPIRIT.
KO-LAH.

THE EXPEDITION.
THE BIVOUC.
THE ABDUCTION.
THE RESCUE AND DEATH.

CANTO FOURTH.

THE THANKSGIVING DANCE.

I.

RIGHT ushering in the day of feast
For Dawn of Morning's safe return
From his red path of anger stern,
Tho dawn was flickering in the east.
As the rich tints began to spread,
Brave, sachem, sire, boy, matron, maid,
By the Priest To-ne-sah-hah led
In a long file, slow treading, wound
Thrice the Tear-jis-ta-yo around ;
Then through the maize fields sought the shade,
Where lay the custom'd offering-glade.
There at a pile of faggets dry,
Heaped with dew-spangled forest flowers,
Just gathered from their sylvan bowers,
The At-o-ta-ho standing by,
As the sun showed its upper rim,
The gray-haired priest, with upturned eye,
To Hah-wen-ne-ye raised the hymn,
The sun-tired calumet he bore,
Sending its light smoke-offering o'er.

1.

Hah-wen-ne-yo! Mighty Spirit!
 Humble thanks to thee we render.
 Hah-wen-ne-yo! Spirit vast!
 That to our loved At-o-ta-ho,
 At-o-ta-ho, great and high,
 Thou hast been a kind defender
 In the war-path that is past,
 War-path stained with deepest dye.
 And that safe, O wise Creator!
 Wise Creator, dwelling o'er!
 He returns to us once more.

2.

"Hah-wen-ne-yo! Mighty Spirit!
 Thou art to our league a father,
 Hah-wen-ne-yo! Spirit good!
 And around our At-o-ta-ho,
 At-o-ta-ho, chief of fame,
 Thou dost robe of safety gather
 In the war-path past of blood,
 War-path filled with blood and flame.
 And thus safe, wise Hah-wen-ne-yo!
 Wise Creator, dwelling o'er!
 He returns to us once more.

THE DANCE OF THE GREAT SPIRIT. 91

II.

He ceased — struck steel and flint, and fire
Glittered in dots upon the pyre;
Then, as the offering sent its smoke
On high, the braves their dance awoke;
Whilst Spark of Sunlight by the flume,
The rocking stamping ring within,
Praised still the Hah-wen-ne-yo's name,
Amid the drum's* pulsating din.
But, as passed off the morning's shade,
The sacrificial rites were stayed
Until the sunset's dipping light,
When Dawn of Morning, at the head
Of all his braves, would, in its sight,
The dance of Hah-wen-ne-yo tread.

III.

Pleasure meanwhile ruled every soul,
The bird-like ball swift soared on high;
The straining racers sought the goal,
And mocking war-whoops rent the sky.

THE DANCE OF THE GREAT SPIRIT.

IV.

But now the sun, in its descent,
Its rich and stretching radiance bent;

* Ga-nu-yah in Iroquois.

Suddenly Spark of Sunlight beat
 A great drum, planted in the square :
 Ceased war-whoop shrill, paused flying foot,
 The ball no longer whirled in air ;
 And as once more together came
 The village throng, his lodge from out,
 A loud a general joyful shout
 Stepped Dawn of Morning's graceful frame,
 The close white robe was o'er his breast ;
 The snowy plume beside his crest ;
 His right hand grasped a bow sketched o'er
 With deeds ; his left an arrow bore.

V.

He strode with slow majestic pace
 To where his chiefest warriors * stood
 Armed like himself ; then all the place
 Left for the sacrificial wood.
 Heading the long and dusky file,
 At length the At-o-ta-ho checked
 His footstep in the glade now decked
 With the soft sunset's sinking smile.

VI.

The women lined in groups the scene,
 Fastening upon the braves their sight,
 As they upon the floor of green,
 Prepared to celebrate the rite ;

* Ko-so-no-wahns in the On-on-dah-gah tongue.

THE DANCE OF THE GREAT SPIRIT. 93

While age and childhood sought the shade
That thickly edged the sylvan glade.

VII.

The braves, with arrow and with bow
In either hand, gazed steadfastly
Upon the sun, whose parting glow
Streamed down the glade's green vista free.
And as the west's rim felt its flame
The At-o-ta-ho forward came,
Quick swinging in a dance his frame;
And in a mild and mellow blaze,
Where a soft golden carpet shone,
Began, in quavering guttural tone,
The Hah-wen-ne-yo's hymn to raise.

I.

"Mighty, mighty Hah-wen-ne-yo!
Spirit pure and mighty! hear us!
We thine own Ho-de-no-sonne,
Wilt thou be for ever near us!
Keep the sacred flame still burning!
Guide our chase! our planting cherish!
Make our warriors' hearts yet taller!
Let our foes before us perish!
Kindly watch our waving harvests!
Make each sachem's wisdom deeper!
Of our old men, of our women,
Of our children be the keeper!
Mighty, holy Hah-wen-ne-yo!
Spirit pure and mighty! hear us!

We thine own Ho-de-no-sonne,
Wilt thou be for ever near us!

2.

"Mighty, mighty Hah-wen-ne-yo!
Thou dost, Spirit purest, greatest!
Love thine own Ho-de-no-sonne,
Thou as well their foemen hatest!
Panther's heart and eye of eagle,
Moose's foot and fox's cunning,
Thou dost give our valiant people
When the war-path's blood is running;
But the eye of owl in daylight,
Foot of turtle, heart of woman,
Stupid brain o' bear in winter,
To our valiant people's foemen!
Mighty, holy Hah-wen-ne-yo!
Spirit pure and mighty! hear us!
We thine own Ho-de-no-sonne,
Wilt thou be for ever near us!"

VIII.

As ceased the strain, a warrior band,
Arrow and bow reared high in hand.
Arranged their files, and wildly dashed
Into a dance with eyes that flashed:
Now toward the west, and now o'erhead.

Timing their chantings to their tread;
 While frequently the war-whoop rung
 In thrilling cadence from their tongue;
 The dull dead drum-stroke sounding low,
 Like the deep distant partridge-blow.

IX.

With mingled grace and dignity
 The At-o-ta-ho led the dance;
 To Hah-wen-ne-yo now the knee
 Bending, with lifted reverent glance,
 Now springing to his feet, with eye
 Fixed where the sun had fall'n below,
 Leaving within the cloudless sky
 A spot of tenderest, yellowest glow.

KO-LAH.

X.

The rite was o'er—the throngs were gone;
 The lovely sylvan glade was lone.
 The air grew dimmer yet and dimmer,
 Till outlines all began to glimmer;
 The saffras commenced to mingle
 With the soft air-breaths fluttering round,
 O'erpowering, with its fragrance single,
 The other odors of the ground;

While a young moon, with timid glance,
 Looked down from heaven's undimmed expanse;
 Her touch so faint on all beneath,
 It seemed 'twould vanish at a breath.

XI.

By On-on-da-ga's* grassy side,
 An arrow's passage from the glade,
 In melting tints the waters dyed,
 The sad but lovely Robin strayed.
 Oh, did she come of him to dream
 Beside the solitary stream!
 Her sighs to mingle with the breeze
 That crept so softly through the trees!
 She heard the river's murmuring flow,
 Filling the spot with music low;
 She saw the branches by the wind
 In light and graceful motions moved.
 And all were blended in her mind
 With him so fondly, deeply loved.
 The sound was like that voice her ear
 Oft bent in breathless joy to hear;
 The softly swaying branch o'erhead
 Was like that lithe and springing tread;
 Yet ah! in vain, in vain, she knew
 Love o'er her heart its witchery throw;
 The eagle with his soaring crest,
 Disdained the robin's lowly nest.

* Kun-da-qua in Iroquois, name for the On-on-da-ga river or creek.

XII.

As thus she mused, from out the wood
 Sudden a brave before her stood.
 Hatchet, fusee, and knife he bore,
 With the red cloak his shoulders o'er;
 His brow was frowning, yet a smile
 Seemed called upon his face the while,
 Like a pale straggling moonbeam shot
 Within some wild and gloomy spot.

XIII.

She started, and a scream suppressed,
 Then lifted high her form, and turned;
 But in her path, with laboring breast
 And a fierce eye like fire that burned,
 The warrior planted firm his tread,
 And in soft honied accents said:
 "The Robin seeks to leave in fear
 One who has loved her deep and long;
 Will ne'er in Ko-lah's raptured ear
 The Robin trill responsive song?"
 "Has not The Robin, Ko-lah oft Told that she cannot love?"
 "Her heart
 At Dawn of Morning's glance is soft!"
 "Cease, cease, The Robin will depart!"
 "Not till she, Ko-lah hears! — that slave,
 That At-o-ta-ho! that mock brave!
 That coward dog! who does not dare

Like us to leave his bosom baro,
 But ever with that robo of white
 Keeps it close hidden from the sight,
 As if he feared an eye should see
 The deer-like heart within him — he Shall not The Robin have!"

 " Away,
 The Robin will no longer stay!"
 The warrior's strong grasp stayed her path,
 His shape dilated with his wrath;
 He clenched his hand as if to beat
 Her trembling frame beneath his feet;
 Then swept the frenzied tempest o'er,
 And in soft tones he spoke once more:
 " Listen! thou know'st a moon ago
 We young men went to striko a blow
 Against the distant Cherokees.
 Look! the sweet, warbling Robin sees
 This little flower! their grassy floor
 Of open woods is covered o'er
 With blossoms thick as Night's bright eyes,
 And brilliant as the glorious dyes
 Of Hah-wen-ne-yo's bow, when he Makes the red lightning* backward flee.
 Their breath scents every wind that blows,
 Like that The Robin's lips unelose;
 The moon is like The Robin's face,
 The morn and eve her blushing cheeks,

* Ta-wen ne-wus in Iroquois.

And birds the hours with music chase,
 Sweetly as that The Robin speaks ;
 Look ! my war-pirogue * floats below,
 The Robin will with Ko-lah go
 To that bright land."

"Unclasp thy hold,
 How darest thou ! Set The Robin free !
 She will not go, fierce brave, with thee !"
 "Then Ko-lah takes thee !" In the fold
 Of his strong arm her trembling frame
 He swept, and toward the river went.
 The Robin shrieked, and forth the name,
 The deepest in her bosom shrined
 The foremost ever in her mind,
 Of Dawn of Morning loud she sent.

XIV.

As if that cry his presence woke,
 Out from the woods a figure broke.
 One hand a glittering hatchet clenched,
 The shrieking maid the other wrenched
 From the base Ko-lah, who, thus foiled
 In his dark purpose, back recoiled
 With burning rage, yet abject dread,
 Stamped wildly on his visago red,
 And gazed in fixed affrighted stare
 On Dawn of Morning towering there ;
 Who looked on him in turn, his form
 Loftily swelling with a storm

* Kah-we-yah in Iroquois.

Of high disdain, yet bursting wrath,
As if the reptile in his path
To crush; but from his features passed
The anger, and he said at last,
Lifting his figure to his height,
With eye that shed disdainful light
And pointing his contemptuous finger
Before him, "Why does Ko-lah linger!"
Then as the wretch shrank, cowering low,
As if he would, yet dared not spring,
He felt in heart so base a thing,
The At-o-ta-ho uttered "Go!"
And looked at him so stern and high
That, shuddering from his searching eye,
The savage turned; and when again,
In accents of more deep disdain,
The At-o-ta-ho his command
Spoke, sweeping out his pointing hand,
With a low cry of rage, yet mien
Weighed down by fear, he left the scene.

xv.

The At-o-ta-ho, with a look
Of deep and pitying kindness, took
The hand of the half shrinking maid,
With pleasure blushing, trembling now,
Longing to thank him, yet afraid
To lift her moist eyes to his brow,
Or speak lest glance or word betray
How deep within her heart his sway;

THE EXPEDITION.

101

Then left the river — passed the glade
And belt of wood — and trod the maize
By one of its four quartering ways
All steeped in dusk, until he made
The glimmering palisades — then straight
Both entered at the closing gate.

THE EXPEDITION.

XVI.

Paeing the Castle's gallery,
Over the verge of the rock outspread,
Wheneo the vision roamed far and free,
Slow passed Frontenac's musing tread.
Back in golden and sapphire blaze
Sent the river the sunset rays ;
Below were the roofs of the warehouses, bright
In straggling and long-reaching pensiles of light,
Though dim were the streets, with forms dwarfed small
Creeping between the buildings tall ;
Down the vale of St. Charles shot a mellow beam,
But hid in the depths of its bed was the stream ;
Above it a pinion of hovering mist
By the soft yellow sun into splendor was kissed ;
Between, broad meadow and level grain
Smiled in the hour's enchanting reign ;
While on the basin's lake-like breast
Was the long spread island in lustre dressed,
Dividing the flood that but parted to meet,
And sink like a vassal at Ocean's feet.

XVII.

It was a sweet and placid hour,
When purest feelings and thoughts had power,
And the stern old soldier felt his breast
Hushing itself into holy rest ;
But the cares of his rule again bore sway —
The angels flew from his heart away —
A figure approached him : " Ha, Lavergue !
Welcome ! for thee is a duty stern !
Band thee together a hundred men !
Hasten and sweep every hill and glen
Where'er thou canst meet with the Iroquois foe,
And scourge them with bloody unsparing blow !
Take too this Ko-lah to be thy guide,
The Indian who joined us last even-tide ;
I think we may trust him ! Some wrongs, he said,
The proud At-o-ta-ho had heaped on his head.
Away, and when next thy face I see,
Thou knowest what tidings will gladden me !"

THE BIVOUAC.

XVIII.

The moon in glorious beauty glowed ;
The heavens were one resplendent sheet,
And her white lustrous mantle flowed
Over the forests at her feet.

But only here and there a ray
Of silver pierced a sunken glen
O'erhung by trees, scarce light by day,
In which were hid a throng of men.
Couriers de bois with hunting-shirt,
Blue-girdled Hurons of Lorette,
And pikemen in their buff-coats girt,
Were in this gloomy hollow met,
Armed with their different weapons all,
As if prepared for instant call.
A youth beneath a hemlock's height,
Stood with plumed hat, and cuirass bright,
With an old pikeman at his side,
Erect and grim in martial pride,
Each viewing the wild bivouac round;
Some stretched at ease upon the ground;
Some busy at their sylvan meal;
Some causing fragrant wreaths to steal
Their hatchet-calumets from out;
With others, chattering, grouped about.
At length he spoke: "No more delay,
La Croix! this moon will guide our way!
We-an-dah — such our captive's name,
Doubtless a chief of power and fame,
So high his pride — by morning's light
May by his tribe be missed, and thus Lingering near Dawn of Morning, might
To my small force prove dangerous.
And Ko-lah! he is gone I hear.
The dog! his treachery too I fear!

Haste, haste to Croix! prepare the men!
This instant must we leave the glen."

THE ABDUCTION.

XIX.

The same broad moon — night's radiant queen!
Was smiling on a different scene.
The On-on-dah-gah maize-fields gleamed,
The river flashed, the woods were bright,
And the low rounded lodges seemed
Great silver helmets in the light;
Great as those casques the forms of stone
Displayed — forms terrible, unknown!
Told by the sires with shuddering fright,
That came in their destroying might,
Till pitying Hah-wen-ne-ye cast
Destruction on their heads at last.

XX.

Within the slanting picket's shade,
Outside the gate, The Robin strayed
In all her sorrowing beauty's pride,
Her friend, The Blossom,* at her side;
In silence both were bound; — the one
Was dwelling on her being's sun,

* O-tah-sa in On-on-dah-gah.

Whose kind, kind looks and words, when last
By his her timid footstep passed,
Had deepened love within her heart,
Which only could with life depart;
With Ko-lah rising like a cloud,
Ever that hour's sweet light to shroud;
The other, in her sympathy,
Mute in her speech, but with quick view
Noting the distant stream — the tree
At hand — the maize — the moon — the dew —
And thinking with delight perchance,
Upon some future feast-day dance,
Or on some youth whose deeds had wove
Around her heart the net of love.

XXI.

The two alone disturbed the scene,
Sleeping beneath the dreamy sheen;
The sunset breeze had sank to rest
Upon the forest's leafy breast;
While the field-cricket's silvery trill
Made the deep silence deeper still.

XXII.

But as they passed a thicket, dashed
An Indian out,— his hatchet flashed,—
The Blossom fell in blood;— he caught,
The swooning Robin,— then like thought
Rushed through the maize, and struck the woods,
And skimmed the moonlight solitudes

With a fleet foot that, as it sped,
Seemed drawing strength at every tread,
Till a short league had flown, and then
Entered a gloomy, shaggy glen ;
Through a wild throng, unheeding, passed,
Who seemed in preparations fast
About to leave the shadowy dell ;
And, striding where a moonbeam fell
Upon a plumed and cuirassed youth,
"Ko-lah" exclaimed, "would prove his truth !
See, brave of Yon-non-de-yoh ! here" —
Down placing as his feet the maid
Who, now recovering, looked in fear
Bewildered round, while accents strayed
Hurried and broken from her lips,
Betokening the mind's eclipse ;
"Is Dawn of Morning's pulse of life !"
Then his fierce eye more venomous grew,
He hissed the words his clenched teeth through,
"Hooh ! Yon-non-de-yoh has a knife !"

THE RESCUE AND DEATH .

XXIII.

Up Mountain street's steep winding track,
As evening's mists began to curl,
Two of the guards of Frontenac
Went with a stag-like Indian girl.

Upon their left, in glimpses seen,
The low and straggling huts between,
The rock, where stood the castle, stooped
Sheer down, then sloped with thickets grouped.
The battery flanking it they passed,
Entered the Place d'Armes spreading vast,
Thence, through the opened sallyport,
And, crossing the broad castle court,
Said to the sentry at the door,
"Speech of the noble Governor!"

XXIV.

Within a room, the gallery next,
Where hung a cresset from its beam,
Sat Frontenac, his forehead vexed
With musing, in the ruddy gleam
That faded gradually away,
Till lost in nooks and angles low
Save where glanced back by antlers gray,
Or where a corselet caught a glow.
Upon a map his eye was placed,
On which were lakes and rivers traced,
With Indian trails all o'er that wound,
And Indian castles scattered round,
Bearing the well-known names that showed
There made the Iroquois abide.

XXV.

He struck the floor — a guardsman came.
"Meux! tell the Count Lavergne I claim

His presence here in two hours' space!"
And down once more he bent his face.

XXVI.

A rap!—the door at his command
Opened—the bending guards there stood,
The Indian girl erect, at hand.
“Your errand speak!”

“Within the wood
That stretches by St. Charles's flow,
Where he had gone to hunt the deer,
Ko-lah was found an hour ago
Dead, by the young Carignan Pierre.
Scarcely had Pierre told to us the tale,
Meeting us by the water-side,
When o'er the basin, from a veil
Of shadow a canoe we spied.
This Indian girl alone it bore,
And near our post it found the shore;
She Yon-nou-de-yoh sought, she said,
And here direct we bent our tread!”
Frontenac waved his hand—“Depart!”
Upon the girl then glanced his eye;
Still reared erect, her Indian heart
Shown in her presence proud and high.
Her features wore a lighter hue
Than that her forest sisters knew,
But her full eye was dark and clear
As the orb'd splendors of the deer.

From her dark hair a feather sprung,
Behind, the usual roller hung;
While fell a light loose dress of skin
Down to her brodered moccasin.

XXVII.

"What seek'st thou?"—the deep voice was kind,
And slight the girl her head inclined,
Answering in tones so soft and low
That Frontenac scarce heard their flow.
"The Robin's voice is very sweet,
Like the bird's flight her gliding feet,
Her eye is like the star which ne'er
Moves from its lodgo within the air:
But now that voice no more is heard
Where late each heart to joy it stirred;
No more those light feet make the ground
Burst into laughing flowers around;
The eye no more is sparkling bright,
'Tis filled with tears, and dark with night;
Will not great Yon-non-de-yoh's ear
The Robin's sorrowing sister hear?
So great a warrior will not keep
The bird to tremble and to weep!
He will not let The Robin's trill
Be longer moan of whippoorwill!
No! he'll restore the bird its tree,
He'll set the poor lone Robin free!"
"Never!" fierce shouted Frontenac,
While his eye flashed, his brow grew black,

" Girl! daughter of a hated race!
How hast thou dared to seek this place!
How, bold one, how! art not afraid?
Thou seek'st thy sister! know'st not thou
That Dawn of Morning loves the maid?
The dog! who, could I clutch him now,
I'd tread beneath my feet, and make
His death-song echo at the stake!"
A wild light glanced his features o'er,
And sternly stamped he on the floor,
While the girl's eye with sidewise lift
Glared with a furious fire, and swift
Glided her hand within her dress.
Downcast the eye, hand motionless
Again, as Frontenac his glance
Turned once more on her countenance:
" But yet I will not harm thee, girl!"
His eye grew soft, his features caught
A shado of pensive struggling thought:
" There's something that subdues the whirl
Of passion in me as I gaze,
Leading me back to former days!"
" Then Yon-non-de-yoh will set free
The Robin!" flashed the wild fire back
Into the face of Frontenac:
" Not till thy At-o-ta-ho's knee
Is bent, acknowledging my sway!"
Again the maiden's covering eye
Shot its keen, furtive, sidewise ray
Like some fierce serpent's crawling nigh;

Again within, quick glanced her hand,
Then all once more was still and bland :
" My Canada father then will let
The Blue-bird * on The Robin look !"
Frontenac's eye the maiden's met,
The wrath his face once more forsook ;
His dirk a corselet struck — with speed
Entered a guard — with softened tone :
" This maiden to The Robin lead,
Let them remain an hour alone !"

XXVIII.

The guardsman through the gallery led,
Until he reached and oped a door,
And when passed in the maiden's tread,
He locked and barred it as before.
The Robin on a couch was leaning,
Her long black hair her features screening ;
A single lamp with feeble light
Yielding the bleak bare walls to sight ;
But as the maid with noiseless tread
Approached, and soft " Sweet Robin ! " said,
Up to her feet she instant sprung
With a wild cry upon her tongue ;
Amazement, deep amazement took Possession of her staring look ;
Then joy in brightest flash shot o'er
Her face, and then a blush it bore,
A blush so deep, brow, neck, and breast
The rich and radiant tint confessed ;

* Jo-gwe-yo.

She trembled, shrank, as half afraid,
 When took her timid hand the maid;
 Her bosom heaved with quick delight,
 Then down she dropped her sparkling sight,
 With heart and soul all wrapped to hear
 The low tones whispering in her ear:
 "Listen! when Ko-lah's hatchet fell!"

The Robin here suppressed a cry —
 "Thy friend, The Blossom, did not die
 At once — she lived her tale to tell.
 By her poor sorrowing mother found,
 At morn stretched bleeding on the ground.
 The Arrow* on a deer's trail — then
 Saw thee with Yon-non-de-yoh's men;
 With speedy foot and heart with flame,
 Hither the At-o-ta-ho came
 Garbed as thou see'st him, with a band
 Of his best braves to aid his hand.
 He met the base dog Ko-lah — low
 He brought him with one hatchet-blow;
 But e'er our Evil Spirit's † ire
 Plunged the base warrior's heart in fire,
 The At-o-ta-ho made him tell
 Where was the sorrowing Robin's cell;
 And, now the At-o-ta-ho's here,
 The Robin will no longer fear;
 Ere Kah-qua ‡ brings another day,

* Ka-hais-kah in On-on-dah-gah.

† Ha-no-ga-ale-geh in On-on-dah-gah.

‡ The Sun in On-on-dah-gah.

With Dawn of Morning, far away
Will fly The Robin, and again
Will On-on-dah-gah list her strain!"

XXIX.

The maiden listened — every word
Delicious joy within her stirred;
That he, the At-o-ta-ho, he
The worshipped of her every thought,
Should dare so much to set her free,
Perilling life; — her heart was fraught
With deeper, tenderer love, imbued
With warmer, holier gratitude.
Ah, did he also love! her eye
Was raised a moment to his face,
But glowing kindness, with a sigh,
She there could only, only trace;
The same that ever spread his brow,
But sweeter, stronger, livelier now!
Away with him — she did not ask
The means — she knew, fond maid, she knew
That Dawn of Morning told her true;
He would perform his promised task,
And nerved to strength her drooping frame,
To act when time for action came.

XXX.

The warrior ope'd his dress, unwound
A deer-skin line of braided strength
Knotted to scores of feet in length,

Close swathed his slender form around ;
Then grasping it in folds, he drew
His knife, approached the massive door,
And stood ; the faint lamp fainter grew,
At last its flickering light gave o'er ;
A plaintive wind commenced to sweep,
The room was filled with darkness deep,
Save where the loopholes, pierced on high,
Let in some glimmerings of the sky.

XXXI.

At length they glared, and fell the bar,
Quick rattled in the lock the key,
Opened the door with sullen jar,
A gasp — a fall — and instantly
The At-o-ta-ho, with a stamp,
Extinguished the slain guardsman's lamp ;
Across the jutting gallery thence
Drew him with hurried violence ;
And, heaving with convulsive strength,
Lifted him o'er the rails at length,
Into the chasm, — one murky frown, —
Then pitched the body headlong down,
Lashed to the rails the line, and then
Rushed to The Robin's side again.
He took the maiden's hand : " Fear not !"
He said, then bore her from the spot.
" Now cling to me !" The maiden clung.
And soon upon the line they swung ;

The trembling girl gave one swift glance —
Round was a rainy black expanse ;
Above, dark outlines on the air
Told that the castle's mass was there ;
Near to the left, with shuddering awe
The battery's frowning line she saw,
The muzzles filled she knew with death,
And scarce she drew her very breath ;
By swept the wind with rushing sound,
 Dashing the rain upon their forms,
 In one of May's most furious storms ;
Far swung they out, swift whirled they round ;
She closed her eyes again, her eling
Drawn closer with each whirl and swing ;
And yet, e'en yet, her sore affright
Yielding at times to wild delight,
Though blushing shame, that she, most blest,
Was clinging, clinging to his breast.
Down still, nought hearing but the wind ;
Still down, down through the darkness blind ;
At last they touched the lesser steep,
Where scarcely could Jiskoko keep
Her foothold, though her stumbling tread
Was by the At-o-ta-ho led,
And slowly worked their laboring way
Down the rough sloping rocks that lay
Towards the dim huts in straggling rank,
Between them and the river bank.
The shrieking, howling, sweeping blast,
The rain in dashes on it cast,
Keeping beneath each reeking roof

All from the miry street aloof.
 Reaching the marge, the warrior drew
 Out of the thickets a canoe,
 And, placing quick within the maid,
 The paddle seized; but e'er the blade
 The water struck, he glanced around,
 His ear bent down—no sight, no sound,
 But the slant rain, the dwellings grouped,
 And blast like that a warrior whooped.
 He stood an instant—muttered low,
 "Should Dawn of Morning strike the blow
 To You-non-de-yoh's heart, how high
 Would rise the League's triumphant head!
 How Hah-wen-ne-yo from his sky,
 His glorious smiles would on us shed!
 He goes! but yet"—he looked to where
 The maiden sat—"she claims my care!
 Still did not You-non-de-yoh boast,
 That underneath his feet he'd tread
 Me, Dawn of Morning! me, a brave!"
 His knife here glittered in the wave.
 "The Dawn of Morning of the dread
 And prond Ho-do-no-sonne host!
 He goes! The Robin will not wait,
 But seek the other side—she'll find
 There well-known braves. Let Te-yo-ayt*
 Bring the canoe again: the wind
 Has ceased, its rush of fury o'er!"
 He said and bounded from the shore.

* Light.

XXXII.

On mid the scattered roofs he went,
Lights, sparkling in the casements, lent
Quick gleamings to the rainy street,
But none were there to stay his foot.
Winged with fierce speed he shot along,

While a low cabin here and there
Gave forth some swinging hunter-song,
With shout and laughter on the air.

XXXIII.

He clambered up the bushy steep,
With tug and scramble, pull and leap.
Until he reached the cliff he found
The line still swinging in the blast;
Around a rock its end he wound,
Knotting the yielding texture fast,
And then with Indian skill and strength,
Commenced to climb its slender length.
He saw a black stripe drawn on air:
The battery's dreaded guns were there,
Which into death-winged lightning broke,
And with stern voice of thunder spoke;
The wind but uttered feeble howl,
But still the heavens showed sable scowl,
And the rain beat; up, up he went
His steady eye above him bent,
Foothold receiving from the knots
Set on the line in bulging spots.
The castle blackened now the air,

But one bright spot was glittering there;
It shone in that same room where he Stood by his hated enemy,
And heard those threats that made his ire
Blaze into fierce though smothered fire.
Still up he went; the gallery now
Broke forth, then level with his brow;
Over the rails he leaped — his tread
Skimmed the broad space beneath him spread;
He glanced within the casement, there
Frontenac with his face of care
Over the map still bowed his frame;
He struck the door, the bidding came;
"Again, sweet maid!" said Frontenac!

 Rising with face of kindling glow; —
The Indian crouched his figure low
Like the roused panther drawing back
For his dread leap upon his prey: —
"Did not great Yon-non-de-yoh say
That he would underneath his feet

 The At-o-ta-ho tread? Hooh! look!
I am the At-o-ta-ho!" Fleet

 As a deer's bound his leap he took
Full at the startled noble's breast; —

 But ere the destined blow could fall
A form, unseen before, with call
For help, the chieftain backward prest,
And drew a sword, while too the hand
Of Frontenac found ready brand.
The Indian gave one cry of wrath
When thrust thus backward in his path;

Then, with a face all flame that grew,
Leaped like a wild cat on the two,
With gnashing teeth and glaring eye,
And knife and hatchet flourished high;
Frontenac's thrust he parried, stayed
The other's quick descending blade.
With furious violence for life,
Here — there — all round — now raged the strife;
The Indian's form seemed plumed with wings,
So swift his rushings, high his springs;
In flashes of quick light, his blows
He rained upon his pressing foes,
Till, in his blind haste, Frontenac

 Stumbled and headlong past him fell.

 The savage gave one smothered yell,
And, as the other crossed his track,
Sank his keen hatchet in his head,
And toward the Yon-on-de-yeh sped;
But wide an inner door now swung,
And in the room two guardsmen sprung.
The At-o-ta-ho wheeled and flew
Like light the outer portal through;
Swift to the gallery's end he went,
And down the line commenced descent,
His knife between his teeth, and slung

 His tomahawk upon his arm;

But as in middle air he swung,

 The castle bell rang out alarm.

Stern clanged the tones along the air;

 Down past him dropped a torch's light
Tossed from the gallery; quick a glare.

Burst from the battery on his sight,
 Smiting into a splendor keen
 All the stern features of the scene:
 Instant a ball above him screeched—
 Echoed a deep and stunning roar;
 Still down, still down he gliding bore,
 But now the line was severed o'er,
 And with slight shock, the slope he reached.

XXXIV.

Out still the bell's stern clangor rung,
 As down the slope himself he flung;
 Before, amid the scattered way
 Of roofs through which his pathway lay,
 He heard loud calls, and saw the glow
 Of torches passing to and fro.
 He paused—long, deep, full breaths he drew,
 His knife and hatchet grasped anew;
 Then, like an eagle in its wrath,
 He dashed along his forward path.
 Hurrying and bustling forms were there,
 Scores of red torches fired the air,
 Gleaming on halberd, gun and knife,
 Hastily snatched for unknown strife;
 The courier wild, the keen-eyed scout,
 Hunter, bateauman, trader, all
 The dwellers of the suburb, call
 On one another, peer about,
 Wondering what enemy so bold
 The castle's tongue of iron told
 Within their strong and guarded hold.

XXXV.

Near and more near, with flying frame,
The fierce and desperate Indian came ;
Near and more near, each sinew strung,
Each thought on fire, still, still he sprung,
And now within the space he rushed
Where bright the flaring torches blushed ;
Shouts rang out boldly on the night,
And gathered all to bar his flight.
Swinging his weapon right and left,
On, on, the At-o-ta-ho dashed.
Amid the crowd his path he cleft,
Forms dropped, cries pealed, and weapons clashed.
On, on, the At-o-ta-ho still,
Right, left, his weapons swinging yet.
And, er a blow his form had met,
His pathway through the throng was won.
On, on, the At-o-ta-ho still,
There was his bark, a figure light,
With vigorous and determined will,
Eagerly gazing, grasping tight
The loop of a descending root,
Steady for the approaching foot.
He enters with a ringing cry,
Meets with a smile The Robin's eye,
Then grasps the paddle — from his bow
Swifter his arrow never flew,
Than o'er the Cat-a-ra-qui's flow
Shot Dawn of Morning's winged canoe.

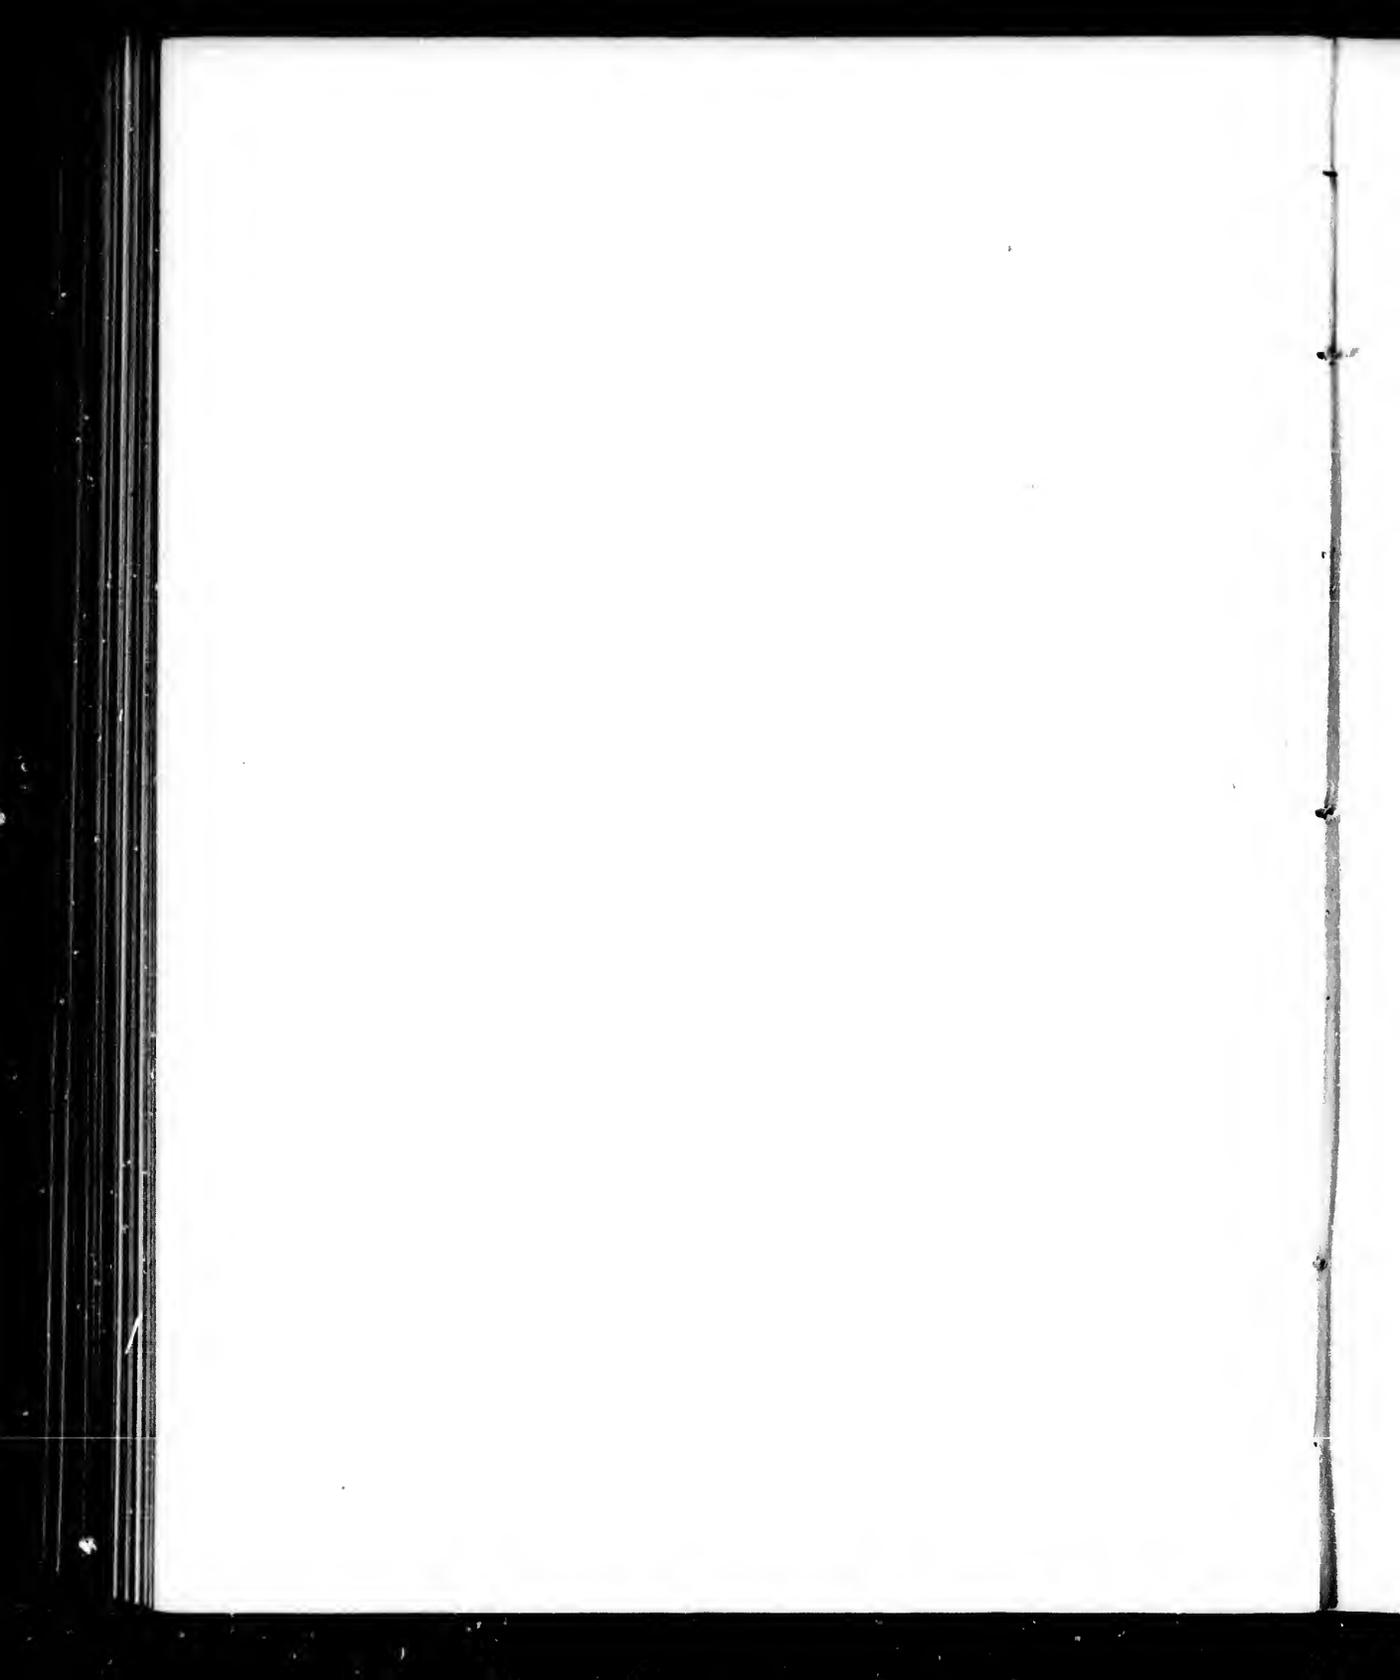

But quick a rifle rang — with cry
Jiskoko dropped — a gasp, a sigh.
Poor loving maid! poor loving maid!
His mandate she had not obeyed,
But with an anxious heart had staid
The watch herself for him to keep,
Poor loving maid! to look and weep,
Alive to every sound and sight,
Hearing the tumult with affright;
And Dawn of Morning, as the bark
Turned round Cape Diamond's profile dark,
Projecting boldly from the beach,
Where not a shot the place could reach,
Beheld, as down he bent his head,
By the faint radiance of the stars
From the rent storm's swift floating bars,
But the locked features of the dead.

END OF CANTO FOURTH.

CANTO FIFTH.

THE INN OF THE CANOE.
WE-AN-DAH.

THE SUMMONS.
THE ENCAMPMENT.
THE MARCH.

CANTO FIFTH.

THE INN OF THE CANOE.

I.

T the rude suburb's western end
A little inn of logs was set,
Where oft, a social hour to spend,
Bateamen, hunters, couriers met.
Above the porch, in rough daubed hue,
Outside was painted a canoe;
Within, a table stretched mid floor,
With benches ranged at either side;
While shelves, in one paled corner, bore
Flagons in glittering tints that vied.
The carcass of a slaughtered deer
At one side, carelessly was flung;
A bow, a pouch, a fishing-spear
And Indian paddle, round were hung
As afternoon its shadows wrought,
The customer through the tavern sought;
The courier rude, his coarse blue cheek
Spread from his bare and sunburnt neck;
The hunter in his green-fringed skirt,
To match the forest leaves in hue;

And the bateau-man in his shirt
 Of red, and tasseled cap of blue.
 Glasses were in each hand, while rung
 In loud confusion every tongue.

II.

"Ho, Bœuff!" a courier said, "how now?
 Why dost thou show so grave a brow?
 A moon ago I saw thee track
 The Huron islands — thy canoe
 Heaped up with blankets, and thy crew
 So jovial! Did the Hurons back
 Without a barter turn thee?"

"No!

But when their usual haunt I gained,
 The Bell-rock, empty huts to show
 Where they had been alone remained.
 At last, as close we searched about,
 We found an aged sire; he said,
 While shook his aged frame with dread,
 That the fierce Iroquois were out
 Upon the war-path, and were near,
 And off his tribe had fled in fear.
 He told us then to strike the rock,
 And, short time after, to its sound,
 Sending o'er isle and wave its swell,
 We saw the frightened warriors flock
 From all the neighboring coverts round.
 Their safety-sign that rocky bell.
 To quiet then their fears we tried,

But from their hearts had vanished pride :
And finding talk of barter vain,
We with our load turned back again !”
“ And others,” a bateaman said,
“ Can of the Iroquois own dread !
Late at the setting of the sun,
Within the Thousand Islands lake,
Our crew had landed upon one,
Our fires to light and suppers take ;
But e'er we struck a flint in brush,
I chanced to look between a bush,
And there I saw a great canoe
Filled with the fiends swift paddling through.
With Dawn of Morning casting look,
The curst young At-o-ta-ho round ;
Close our bateau was in a nook,
But never gave we sight or sound,
And the whole band passed through the same,
In wisdom as the demons came !”
“ How strange that Bell-rock. I have heard”—
Thus thrust another in his word :
“ The Hurons say, a towering form
Is seen beside it, stand to take,
Foretelling, though the winds are warm,
And skies are blue, that some fierce storm
Upon the scene is soon to break ;
And then he wakes a sound so clear
And loud, it pierces every ear ;
Warning his children on the wave
To hasten homeward, ere the blast

Upon their lingering barks is cast,
Too quick and fierce for skill to save.
Exclaimed a hunter, "As I went
Basquet! along St. Charles's side
This morn, I saw thy rifle bent
To shoulder."

"A huge panther died
Beneath my aim, whose whine all night
Plunged me, the beast! in sleepless plight.
Fiends are these Indians to 'ho core!"
Spoke the bateaman giving o'er
A draught, and deeply breathing—"Hush!
We-an-dah there is lying!"—

"Tush
For him, the drunken wretch! so low
He's fall'n, he's man no longer! ho!
Here's drink for thee, We-an-dah! sleep
No more!" With swiftest, eagerest leap,
An Indian left a nook, and flew
To where the glass was held to view.
Quickly the rosy stream he quaffed,
Then with delirious pleasure laughed.
"Good, good, fire-water's good!"—his clutch
Another cup held towards him gained,
And then a third one wild he drained—
"Wo-an-dah loves the Pale-face much!"
Then staggering back, his knife he drew,
And in a dance his liubs he threw,
While the rough concourse round him stood
And mocked him in their reckless mood;

"See! ha! ha! see him as he bounds!
And hark! his war-whoop now he sounds!
Ha! ha! ha! mark him reel! look, Flee!
Look, Vaux! a great brave have we here!
A valiant warrior! hear him shout,
'More, more fire-water!' Give it out,
Good landlord! fill it to the brim.

It vanishes at his lips as fast
As rain-drops on the water cast,
Ah! that has proved too much for him!"
And headlong on the floor he fell
Stretched out, relaxed, insensible;
And as beneath their feet he lay,
They spurned him to a nook away.
Ah, forest chieftain! noble brave!

Wert thou, indeed, so mean a thing!
Better have filled a warrior's grave,
Thou eagle with a broken wing!

III.

Now, round the table, each one held
A goblet, while a courier swelled
His rough, free song, all joining in
The chorus with tumultuous din.

"Over the waters now we dash,
Ever sing merrily, boys, sing merrily!
Ripples around our paddles flash,

Onward so merrily, thus go we!
Round let the bowl fly,
Quaff, boys, quaff!
Ha! ha! ha! ha!
Laugh, boys, laugh!"

A hunter then took up the strain,
And pealed it till all rang again.

"Through the thick forests now we tread,
Ever sing merrily, boys, sing merrily!
Crack goes the rifle! the game falls dead,
Onward then merrily, thus go we!
Round let the bowl fly,
Quaff, boys, quaff!
Ha! ha! ha! ha!
Laugh, boys, laugh!"

Then a bateauman passed the song,
Rolling a volume full along.

"Up, up the waters pole we now,
Ever sing merrily, boys, sing merrily!
Tramp, tramp, tramp on each side of our prow,
Onward so merrily, thus go we!
Round let the bowl fly,
Quaff, boys, quaff!
Ha! ha! ha! ha!
Laugh, boys, laugh!"

And then all joined their tones so deep,
The very glasses seemed to leap.

“Thus with our paddle, our rifle and pole,
Ever sing merrily, boys, sing merrily
We go through life, with the grave for our goal,
Onward so merrily, thus go we!
Round let the bowl fly,
Quaff, boys, quaff!
Ha! ha! ha! ha!
Laugh, boys, laugh!”

WE-AN-DAH.

IV.

Frontenac, in his usual room,
Sat with a brow of deepened gloom:
June's sunshine lay upon the floor,
Through the open casement came the breeze,
And the broad transverse gallery o'er
He saw the distant tops of trees.
A dark ancestral portrait glowed
As, searching out each hidden dye,
The sunlight o'er the surface flowed,
And woke to life brow, cheek, and eye.

Beside a table where he sat,
A wolf-hound crouched upon a mat,
While parchments, maps, and volumes lay
Around in negligent array.

V.

At length he rose, the threshold passed,
And on the gallery stood, where vast
The prospect opened to his view,
Steeped in the sunshine's golden hue.
Below him was the chasm of air
Where the cliff fell; thence sloped the steep,
Rocky and grouped with thickets, where
Browsed the quick goats with many a leap.
The lower city's chimneys rose
Along the marge in long array,
While in its calm and smooth repose,
Like air the broad curved river lay.
A brigantine was creeping round,
With its one sail, Capo Diamond's bound;
By Orleans' Island a bateau
Was, like a lazy spider, slow
Crawling — the boatmen, spots of red,
Pushing their poles of glimmering thread,
While field, roof, forest filled his gaze,
Till vanishing in the soft gray haze.

VI.

But nought was there to charm his eye,
His mind lent darkness to the sky;
A brooding shade was o'er the scene,
So glorious in its summer mien.
Again his gloomy room he sought.
His brow o'erspread with drearier thought:—
“Poor, poor Lavergne! poor youth! that he Should die, brave boy! defending me!
And by that bloody demon too!
That Dawn of Morning!”—Deeper hue
Fell on his visage like a pall.
“The sire, and now the son, to fall
Beneath the tomahawk!”—Again
That dark deed of the distant past
Was on his shuddering memory cast!
Lavergne's dead form—his harrowing pain—
His loneliness—the evening gloom
Darkening within this self-same room—
The lost Lucille— that radiant child!
And she, the young, the perished mother,
Loved with such depth of passion wild,
Slain, slain, and, heaven! by her own brother,
And he an Iroquois! That trick
Of Dawn of Morning's too! Thus mocked!
Cheated! The Robin's cell unlocked
Before his very eyes, and he Attacked by his fierce enemy
In his own room.—“Without there, ho!”

A guard obeyed. "The Otter, quick!"—
 The usual strides went to and fro
 Until the Huron runner came.
 "Brave Otter!"—with an eye of flame—
 "Thy foot be now the eagle's wing!
 Take the war-wampum! my command
 Bear, that the hatchet through the land
 Unburied be against my foe,
 The Iroquois! This arm shall bring
 At last these haughty nations low!"
 The Otter vanished, and once more
 His tread he to the gallery bore.

VII.

At length in Mountain street he spied
 We-an-dah, with his sauntering stride.
 Across him seemed to flash a thought;
 His room regained he. "Ho, Allaire!"
 Again the guardsman entered there.
 "Haste! let We-an-dah here be brought!"

VIII.

The Indian came—his flushed swoll'n face
 Of deep debauch showed wildest trace.
 His scalp-lock down neglected hung;
 Round him a blanket soiled was flung;
 His once rich leggings now were torn;
 His moccasins to tatters worn;
 Ah, forest chieftain! noble brave!
 Wert thou, indeed, so mean a thing!

Better have filled a warrior's grave,
Thou eagle with a broken wing!

IX.

'Twas but one fleeting week ago
That, capturing him in chase, Lavergue
To Frontenac the chief had brought,
Soaring in soul, unbowed in thought,
Reared before Yon-non-de-yoh stern
And fierce, a foe, a fearless foe!
Taunting him as a brave should taunt,
A brave whom danger ne'er could daunt.
Yea! hurling scorn, as if he stood
Within his native forest free,
Frontenac captive at his side,
Showing, through all, such glorious pride,
That Dawn of Morning's self, had he Stood in his place, had not defied
With sterner, higher, haughtier mood
Or loftier wrath, his enemy.

X.

That very night, as with his wound
Lavergue's sword gave him in the fray,
Fainting within his cell he lay,
The guardsman, as the hurt he bound,
Offered, alas! the fatal draught,
Which for the first time now he quaffed.
As the fell fire within him ran,

He sank at once to less than man;
He chattered in delirious glee
Amid his feverish agony;
And, as the first delicious glow
He felt, first poison of the foe!
He thought the white man, that could make
Such draught as this, his thirst to slake,
Had greater power and skill to lift

 The soul on soaring wing, than even Great Hah-wen-ne-yo, who had given
Only his tame and tasteless gift.

Hour after hour he drank the flame;
More strong the horrid thirst became;
More eager did he grasp the bowl;
Deeper and deeper sank his soul;
While Frontenac, with scornful smile,

 Marking by what a weapon he
 Could strike down his red enemy,
One of the hated race, in guile
Hour after hour the stream supplied,
Then for a time withheld the tide,
Until the brave! the warrior proud!
The strong-winged eagle of the cloud!
Au Ou-on-dah-gah! — he that late
Dared Yon-non-de-yoh in his state,
And would have strode to fiery death
With the stern war-song on his breath,
He, he; oh, shame! oh, shame! subdued!
Slave-like! scourged hound-like! lowly sued
At the contemptuous guardsman's foot,
 That Yon-non-de-yoh still should give

The stream by which he ceased to live,
Save as an abject, groveling brute,
Till Frontenac, in deep disdain,
Yielded the devilish draught again,
And, in pure scorn then made him free
To roam Quebec at liberty,
The mark—the sneer—the jest of all—
How could an Iroquois so fall!
Ah, forest chieftain! noble brave!
Wert thou, indeed so mean a thing!
Better have filled a warrior's grave,
Thou eagle with a broken wing!

XI.

But now before stern Frontenac,
The chief seemed struggling sore to call
Some of his ancient spirit back;
He strove to lift his figure tall
To its full height, and make his mien
Show the proud warrior he had been;
But ah, in vain, in vain, his eye,
From Frontenac's now lenient gaze,
When he would seek its glance to raise,
Cowering and dim, away would fly,
And there he stood, an humbled slave,
Not a Ho-de-no-sonne brave.

XII.

"We-an-dah!" Up the chieftain rolled
His eye at the commanding tone,

"A sweeping cloud of midnight fold
 Within thy people's sky has grown
 And Yon-non-de-yoh's; in the trail
 Between us, sharp thick barriers prevail,
 And soon will Yon-non-de-yoh's tread
 Be on the war-path stern and dread;
 But thou! thou art my brother, brave!
 We've buried in one common grave
 The hatchet, trodden it down deep,
 And still between us will we keep
 The chain of friendship! thou wilt go,
 My friend and guide against my foe!"

XIII.

"Hoo!" and the warrior reared his frame
 Proudly, while flashed his eye with flame,
 "Hoo!" and he flung his arm on high,
 As if to soar up to the sky,
 "As Yon-non-de-yoh"—and his look
 Was lofty and sublime, as down
 On Frontenac it wildly flashed,
 Then changed it to a mighty frown,
 His lip with rage impetuous shook,
 And on the floor his foot he dashed—
 "Think thou! We-an-dah is a dog!"
 He clutched his knife with fury, "Rather"— Grated his teeth—"my Canada father
 "Back to his cell the brave shall flog,
 Than he will lift the hatchet red
 Against his tribe or League!" And dread

Rang his shrill whoop, so loudly pealed,
It seemed all objects round him reeled.

XIV.

Frontenac started as at first
This fierce defiance on him burst,
Then, smiling in derision grim,
Signed to Allaire close by, who took
A cup and flagon from a nook,
A: I filled the goblet to the brim;
The Indian threw one eager glance
On it, in proud restraint then turned,
And with majestic aspect stood;
Then viewing it again askance,
He clutched it, whilst his features burned,
And drank it as a wolf drinks blood.
Another draught then down he flung,
And then another, still another,
Then reeling up, with stammering tongue,
Said, "Yes! We-an-dah is the brother
Of Yon-non-de-yoh! whitemen all
His brothers are the brave feels tall!
His heart feels big! fire-water's good!
It fills his veins with leaping blood!
He goes where Yon-non-de-yoh goes!
His foes shall be We-an-dah's foes!
Whoop! whoop! fire-water's good! more, more!"
And down he pitched upon the floor.
Ah, forest chieftain! noble brave!
Wert thou, indeed, so mean a thing!

Better have filled a warrior's grave,
Thou eagle with a broken wing!

THE SUMMONS.

XV.

Ho! ho! to the war-path! with high lifted head,
The Huron unburied the tomahawk red;
The bowed Adirondaek looked up with the knife
Clutched keen in his hand for the pitiless strife;
The Ot-ta-wa's wild war-paint glowed fresh on his cheek
As he came the fierce hatred of ages to wreak;
The rough hardy boatmen left river and lake;
The trapper the beaver; the woodman the brake;
The noble clasped corselet of steel on his breast,
For the glory that gave to existence its zest;
The artizan closed his dim workshop, and took
His arquebuse rusting for years in its nook;
The soldier, who followed on Hungary's plain
Carignan's spread flag, grasped his musket again;
The husbandman, singing gay Normandy's songs
In Canada's grain-fields, rose too with the throngs;
The axe in the stumps of the clearing was flung;
No longer the hunter's sharp rifle-crack rung;
The village was empty; deserted the glade;
All came where the banner of France was displayed;
Ho, ho, to the war-path! stern Frontenne's tread
Will dash to the earth the leagued enemy's head.

THE ENCAMPMENT.

XVI.

The summer sun was sinking bright
Behind the woods of Isle Perrot ;
Back Lake St. Louis gleamed the light
In rich and mingled glow ;
The slanting radiance at Lachine
Shone on an animated scene.
Beside the beach upon the swell
Scores of canoes were lightly dancing,
With many a long bateau, where fell
The sun, on pole and drag-rope glancing.
Throngs were upon the gravelly beach
Bustling with haste, and loud in speech ;
Some were placing in rocky bateaux
Cannon and mortars and piles of grenades ;
Some were refitting their arrows and bows,
Others were scanning their muskets and blades ;
Some were kindling their bivouac fire,
Others were blending
Their voices in song ;
While others, contending
With utterance strong,
Scarcely kept from blows in their reckless ire.

XVII.

Scabbard touched hatchet, and scalp-lock plume ;
Wheeling platoons here and there forced room ;

The Indian with girdle and knife was here ;
There was the buff-coated musketeer ;
The pikeman's steel breastplate here flashed in the sun,
By the swarthy Canadian's rude halberd and gun ;
The noble's gay mantle and sabre passed there,
By the hunter's rough deerskin and long shaggy hair ;
Couriers de bois and bateaumen, made gay
By their sashes and caps, swell'd the mingled array ;
While guttural accents and laughter loud,
 Blent with the tones of stern command ;
 Loudly arose upon every hand
 From the quick, busy, and eager crowd.

XVIII.

O'er a fur trader's cabin, spread broadly on high,
France's white standard saluted the eye ;
Below were the griffins of Frontenac gleaming
In gold, on the breast of a pennon outstreaming.
Before the threshold the sentries went,
 Two of the guardsmen grim and tall ;
There were the steps of the leaders bent,
 In and out of the audience-hall.

XIX.

The sunset tints from the lake withdrew,
 And now on the broad expanse were seen
Here, rough Ot-ta-wa's tawny hue,
 There Cat-a-ra-qui's splendid green.
Onward flowing, disdainful to mingle,
 Either color distinct and single ;

And not till leagu on leagu were passed,
Did the hues, so separate, blend at last.

XX.

As the twilight darkened round,
Flame on flame existence found ;
Stir and bustle ceased, and all
Welcomed night's slow gathering pall.

XXI.

Circling a fire up merrily streaming,
A group of pikemen and musketeers
Sat with their corselets and weapons gleaming
Red in the light.

" 'Tis a sight that cheers
My bosom, to see this warlike host
Cooped so long in one dreary post !"
Said old Allaire.

" Yes ! well sayest thou,"
Answered La Croix. " I've vowed a vow
To holy St. Ursula, that this pike
Shall ten of the whooping demons strike !"
" Ten, sayest thou ! should there be but one,
And he Dawn of Morning, thy prowess were done !"
" What know'st thou of my prowess !"

" Naught.

But if thou the Iroquois often hadst met,
Less wouldst thou boast ! De Nonville sought
Our Seneca fœmen ! I cannot forget
The combat we waged in the thickets and trees,

With our creeping and serpent-like enemies,
 Their bullets pattered like hail about;
 And then their hideous battle shout.
 It cleaves the brain like a fiery dart:
 In many a battle I've borne a part,
 I followed Turenne and great Condé, but ne'er
 Strove I before with empty air,
 And death all about me!"

"Allaire was in fear,
 Methinks!" said the pikeman, around with a sneer.
 "In fear! base hound!"

"Nay, nay!" outbroke
 The others, "La Croix was but in joke!
 Men should not act like thoughtless boys;
 Sing us, Allaire, the soldier's joys!"

XXII.

Allaire had started to his feet,
 Clenching his hand, while the other stood
 Smiling, yet holding his arm, as though
 To intercept a threatened blow;
 But quickly calmed the old guardsman's blood,
 And again on the grass he took his seat;
 And clearing his voice with an effort, sang
 In tones that aloud o'er the bivouac rang.

1.

"Banners all around us flying!
 Trumpets all around us ringing!"

Weapons gleaming! chargers springing!
Comrades! who's afraid of dying!
Forward march! quick on we go,
Gladly, freely, breast to foe;
Forward, forward, on we go,
Such the joys we soldiers know,
Honor bright to fleeting breath,
Give us victory or death;
With our bosoms to the foe,
Such the joys we soldiers know!

2.

"When is past the conflict gory,
And our veins have ceased their leaping,
Then the watch-fire redly heaping,
Round fly merry song and story;
Frowning care behind we throw
As our gleaming glasses glow;
Backward march we bid it go!
Such the joys we soldiers know!
Ever ready for the field,
Ever ready life to yield;
Onward, onward, breast to foe,
Such the joys we soldiers know!"

XXIII.

In the room of a lonely roof that stood
Beside the rapid and sounding flood,
Around a board with glasses set,
A joyous company were met;
The noble leaders of the array

Speeding a few bright hours away,
 Here sat de Gras and Vaudrenil ; there
 Callières and Bekancourt mocking at care.
 Sparkling jest and witty gleam
 Shot o'er the winecup's ruddy stream ;
 And story, debate, and legend old,
 With frequent song time onward rolled.
 Hark ! a voice sounds merrily ;
 'Tis Bekancourt singing in light-hearted glee.

1.

" Lovely France ! my native France !
 At thy name my bosom bounds !
 To my eye sweet visions dance !
 In my ear soft music sounds !
 Hail ! thy purple vineyards flowing !
 Hail ! thy bright-eyed daughters glowing !
 Of my life thou seem'st a part,
 Lovely France ! Ah, la belle France,
 Glorious France, how dear thou art !

2.

" Lovely France ! my native France !
 Famous are thy battle-fields ;
 And where points thy glittering lance,
 Victory there her trophy yields.
 Hail ! thy high historic story !
 Hail ! thy legends rife with glory !
 Shrine, where bends my willing heart !
 Lovely France ! ah, la belle France !
 Glorious France ! how dear thou art !"

XXIV.

As sinks the voice upon the applauding throng,
The young De Gras takes up the thread of song

1.

“What thought makes my heart with most tenderness swell?
’Tis the thought of thy beauty, my sweet Gabrielle!
To the soft wind of summer swings lightly the tree,
But the glide of thy step is far lighter to me.

2.

“Oh! the breeze when it meets thee takes sweeter its flight!
And the sun glows more warmly when rising thy sight!
The nightingale chants her melodious glee,
But the sound of thy voice is far sweeter to me.

3.

“Thou hast circled thy chain — thou hast woven thy spell
For aye round this bosom, my own Gabrielle!
The star of the evening is brilliant to see,
But the glance of thy eye is far brighter to me.

4.

“In life, my loved angel, when struggling in death,
Thy dear name will dwell on my last ebbing breath.
Heaven’s bliss would be clouded and dark without thee,
The step, voice and eye, that make heaven to me.”

THE MARCH.

XXV.

Day after day, on Cat-a-ra-qui's breast,
The embattled host their upward pathway pressed.
All the noblest of the land
Mingled in that warlike band;
Gallant men, whose blood had poured
Where'er France had drawn the sword.

XXVI.

In the bright midst was gray-haired Frontenac,
His fiery soul in arms for the attack.
Long had he burned his vengeful hate to shower
On the wild foes so scornful of his power;
To crush and whelm them in one doom of dread,
Of blood and flame, and now the hour had sped.

XXVII.

On the flotilla passed — sword, pike, and gun
Traced on the wave, and glittering in the sun.

XXVIII.

Now by green islands, where the feeding deer
Looked, and was gone ere arquebuse could bear;
Now by still coves, upon whose mirrors clear
The glossy duck seemed gliding through the air;
Now o'er some lake, whose broad expanded breast,
As came the breeze, to white-capped waves was driven,

And on whose distant flood appeared to rest
The hazy softness of the summer heaven ;
Athwart the mouth of some fierce river, now
Hurling its foaming, tumbling tribute in,
And marking with its stain its conqueror's brow,
Beheld for hours before the spot they win.
Merrily now some basin o'er,
Borne with paddle and oar quick dashing :
Turning now to the tangled shore,
Where the cataract down came crashing ;
And while a part, with weary struggling care,
Across the portage wild the burthens bear,
The rest, waist-deep, in whirling foam, drag slow,
Thus lightened of their loads, canoe and huge bateau.

XXIX.

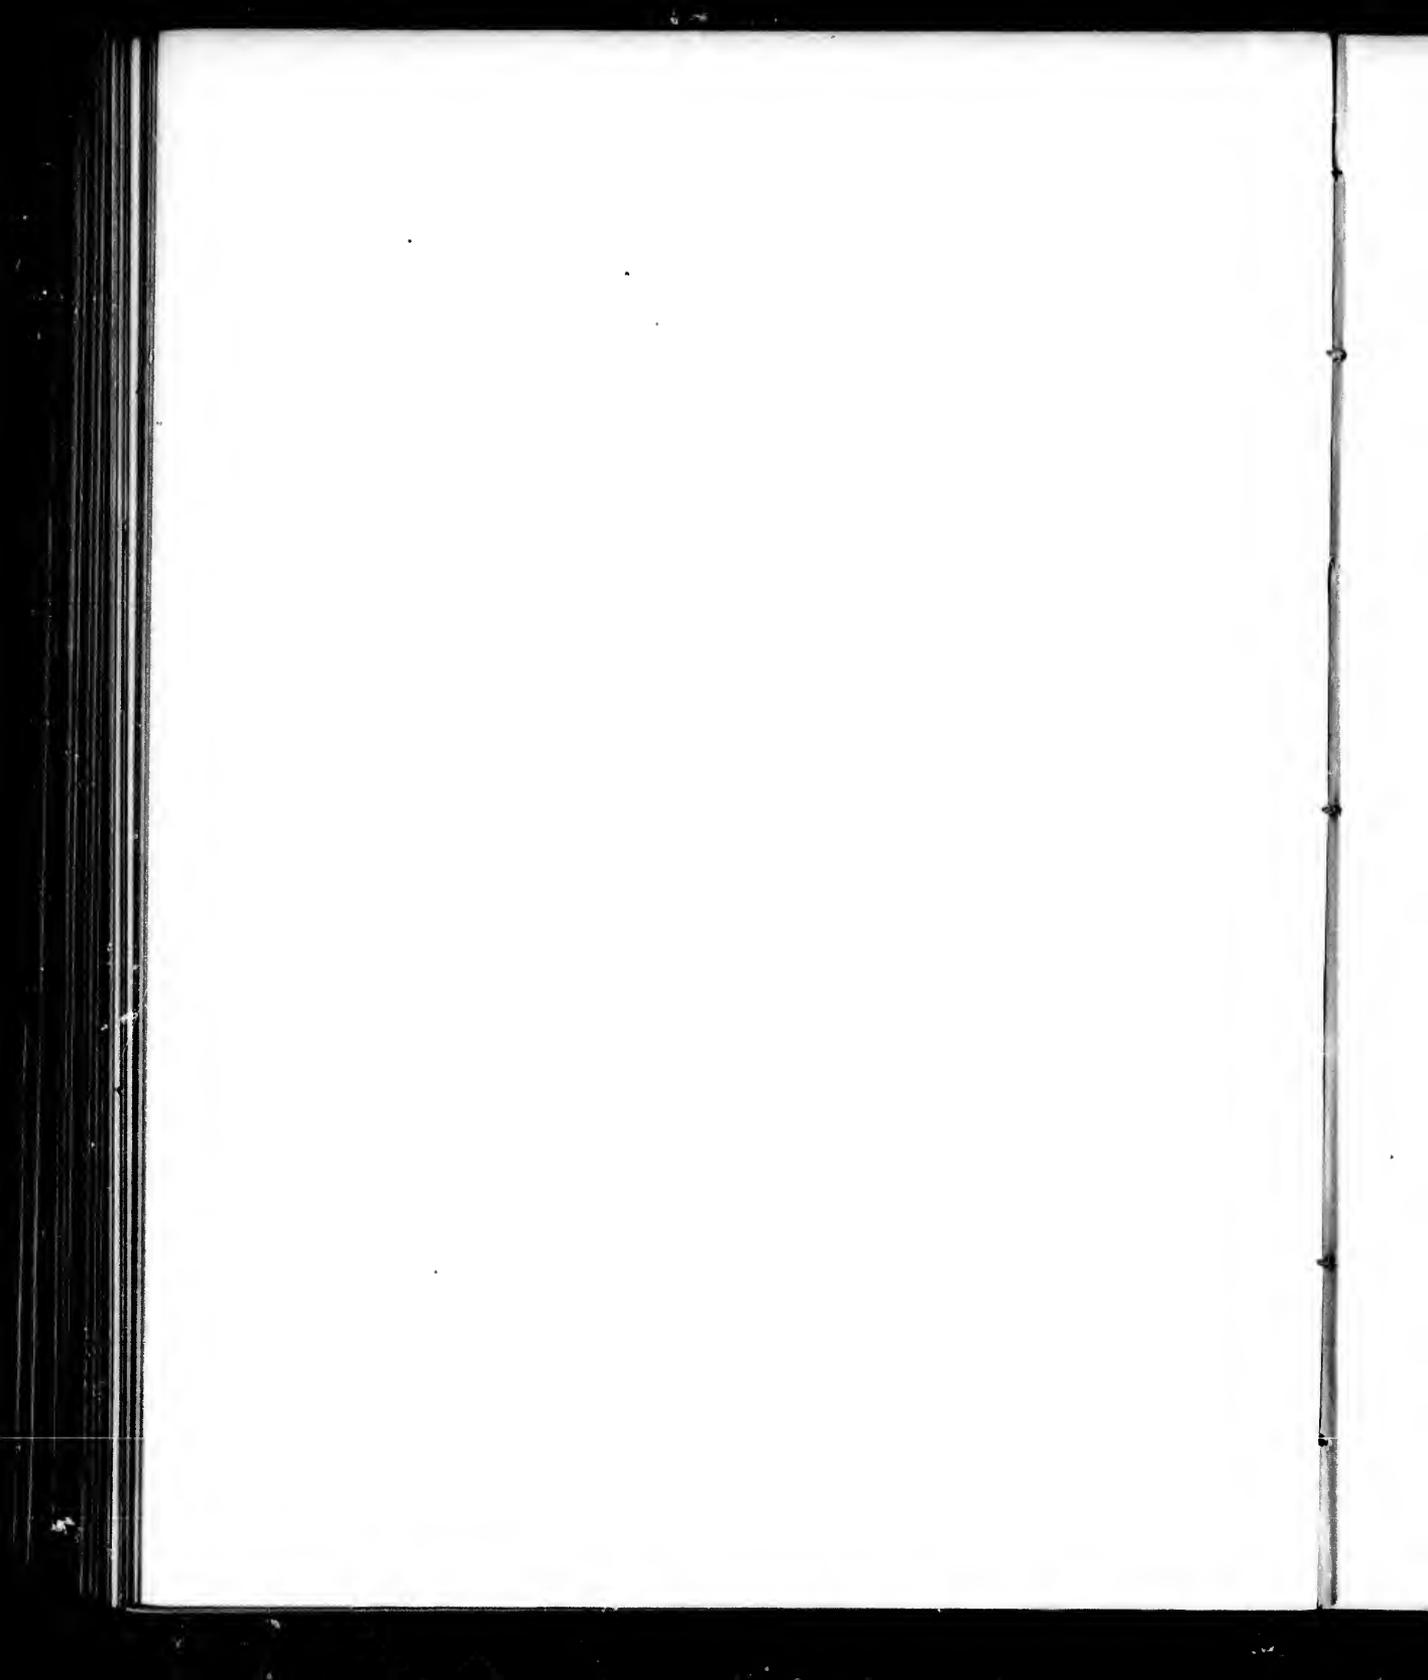

Now by smooth banks where, stretched beneath the shade,
The Indian hunter gazed with curious eye ;
Now catching glimpses of some grassy glade,
Rich with the sunshine of the open sky ;
Now by the vista of some creek, where stood
The moose mid-leg, and tossing high his crown
Hazy with gnats, and vanishing in the wood.
Waking to showers of white the shallows brown.
Thus on they passed by day — at night they made
Their bivouac-fires amid the forest shade,
Scaring the wolf and panther, till the reign
Of morning bade them launch upon the flood again.

END OF CANTO FIFTH.

CANTO SIXTH.

THE WAR-HATCHET.
THE WILDERNESS.
THE CATARACT.
THE SENECA.
LEAPING PANTHER.
CAYUGA LAKE.
THE CAYUGAS.

THE ONEIDAS.
THE STRAWBERRY
DANCE.
THE CANOE VOYAGE.
THE MOHAWK'S SCALP
DANCE.

CANTO SIXTH.

THE WAR-HATCHET.

I.

PON a gorgeous woodland scene,
Whose limits mocked the eagle's sight,
A billowy sea of differing green,
The sun looked downward from its height.
Along an Indian trail, that traced
Its seam amid these forests vast,
A narrow furrow, through the waste,
Swiftly the At-o-ta-ho passed.
The war-paint's black and crimson streaks
Gleamed fiercely on his brow and cheeks;
Upon his custom'd robe were spread
His battle deeds in tints of red;
Hatchet, fusee, and knife he wore,
His shaven head the war-tuft bore;
While a roused spirit, fierce yet high,
Sat, like couched flame, within his eye.

II.

With a red girdle round his frame,
Behind the tall pipe-bearer came.

Nodded a crimsoned eagle plume
 Over a brow of crimsoned gloom;
 No weapon bore he, save on high
 A hatchet of vermilion dye.

THE WILDERNESS.

II

Innumerable vistas far
 Extended, myriad trunks between,
 Eye-tangling and irregular
 Till closed by hillock or ravine.
 Trees, trees, a verdant world, were round,
 Straight, crooked, slant, each seeking light;
 With some all splintered, bare and white,
 Telling the lightning's blasting bound.
 And now and then was seen a path
 Of prostrate trunks in chaos cast,
 With upturned roots, dark circles vast,
 Signs of the fierce tornado's wrath.

IV.

Pines met the eye all tasseled o'er;
 Hemlocks that fringed cones upbore;
 Oaks with their scalloped verdure; beeches
 Whose moss the northward pathway teaches;
 Poplars, light-haired and sensitive,

To every air-breath all alive;
Maples, their red-stemmed foliage flickering
To downiest winds like streamlets bickering;
Striped dog-woods, birches sweet, that stood
The incense bearers of the wood;
Grim lurching firs and laurels green,
Showing the swamp's wet, clustered scene.

V.

Through this gigantic roof, the light
Here, made some natural opening bright;
Here, down a narrow vista swept;
Here underneath dense thickets crept;
Here, broken, struggling being found,
Sprinkled like fire-flies on the ground.
But scarce these colors few the sway
Broke off the general hue of gray,
That filled, subdued and soft, the air,
Making a solemn twilight there.

VI.

This glorious sylvan scene showed rife
Each stage of vegetable life.
The downy sprout, the ground-bird trod
Elastic to the downy sod;
The sapling with faint verdure crowned,
Low bending to the squirrel's bound;
The tree, that towering strong and high
Spread its green standard to the sky;

Then the dead top with lichens dressed ;
Then the dark hollow in the breast ;
At last the lead prone log, with moss
Flung like a shroud, its form across.

VII.

As by the Indians passed, its lay
The robin ceased and shot away ;
Off, like a flash the red-bird flew ;
Its gambol scared, the rabbit threw ;
The crackling of the under-brush
Told of the deer's retreating rush ;
With heavy wing, and croaking hoarse,
The mountain raven urged its course ;
While now and then the eagle gray
Pointed his beak and soared away.

VIII.

O'er some green glade now went their tread,
Spotted with strawberries pouting red ;
Now by a fountain clear as dew
Trickling its mossy channel through ;
Now in a broad and sweeping aisle ;
Now in a deep and dark defile ;
And now across the jagged bridge
Of some tree fall'n from ridge to ridge,
Forming between the hollow black,
Where crept the sedgy streamlet's track.

THE CATARACT.

IX.

A steady sound, whose rumble deep
Had long been mingling with the air,
More loud and stern commenced to sweep,
Till on the ear it seemed to bear
A mighty load; the woods it filled
With its grand volume of stern sound;
Nature's most secret heart seemed thrilled,
And every other tone was drowned.
To the light wind the branches shook,
Down sparkled on its way the brook,
Flew in and out each merry bird,
But not a sigh, dash, chirp, was heard.

X.

Over the trees a form of snow
Was towering, by the sunny glow
Kissed into flashing diamonds; bright
That silvery shape of glancing light,
Seeming as changing, quivering, there,
Some hovering spirit of the air.

XI.

Well, well the At-o-ta-ho knew
That shape, thus glittering to his view;
Oft had he stood and on it gazed,
As in its noontide pomp it blazed;

And when the moonlight o'er it threw
 Its delicate robe of silvery hue;
 In contrast sweet and bright, to where
 The crashing, flashing, plunging form
 Of floods rush'd down in fearful storm,
 One mighty curve upon the air.
 The first seemed telling him to rise,
 Until his fame should reach the skies;
 The last in thunder seemed to say,
 Kneel, At-ota-ho! kneel and pray!
 Forget thy deeds, and with low brow,
 Think of the Mah-wen-ne-yo now!

XII.

'Twas O-ni-ah-ga-rah there that hurled
 Its awful grandeur down its rock;
 Dim sign of that dread shape a world
 Reeling, shall see, when with fierce shock
 He plants His tread on sea and shore,
 And swears that Time shall be no more.
 Farther my harp is mute to tell
 Of the Sublime — the Terrible.

THE SENECA.

XIII.

The westering sun shot slanting beam
 Along a narrow winding stream,
 Bathing the basswoods of the bank,
 Beading in interlacing fold,

LEAPING PANTHER.

159

Whose rich and pendent clusters drank
The light, till seemed they wrought of gold.

XIV.

An Indian castle clustered by,
Girdled with palisadoes high.
Within a grassy space that lay
Next to the forest, an array
Of warriors in a circle sat,
Each crunched upon his bear-skin mat.
Solemnly passed the wreathing pipe
Adorned with many a blazoned type;
While each fixed eye and rigid face
Of deep abstracted thought bore trace.

LEAPING PANTHER.

XV.

At length a warrior rose, his breast
Bearing a snake, tattooed, its crest
And forked tongue ready — with a brow
Where care had driven its furrowing plough,
And with a keen heart-searching eye
That flew around, each point to spy,
As if some danger near to find
Lurking beside him or behind.

XVI.

'Twas Leaping Panther, chieftain famed!
 Who mid the League's stern warriors, claimed
 To Dawn of Morning next, the meed
 Of honor and authority
 By the fierce nations yielded free
 To wisdom and to valorous deed.

XVII.

Yet though in council eloquent
 And wise, and on the war-path brave,
 To venom'd envy's thralldom bent
 Dark Leaping Panther, veriest slave;
 And hatred fierce with envy came,
 Kindling his breast with blended flame.
 'Twas Dawn of Morning's fame that fraught
 With venom foul his every thought;
 His power and sway within his heart
 Rankled in sleepless, ceaseless ire,
 But yet, so matchless was his art,
 He veiled from all the fiendish fire.
 Oft in the Union Feast would sneer
 Or gesture of disdain appear
 When Dawn of Morning met his eye;
 But with such quickness passed they by
 That scarcely could the sight desery.
 He seemed a shadowy scorn to throw
 Upon the At-o-ta-ho's state
 By quick grimace — eye's sidewise glow,

Or tone's slight sarcasm—yet his hate
Was ne'er displayed in open word;
And all these signs so slightly stirred
The mind, none heeded at the time;
And still, so lurking was the slime,
That memory by unwitting spell
On those strange shrugs and smiles would dwell,
But then some action high and proud
Of the young At-o-ta-ho far
Swept every doubt as from a star
The strong blast sweeps the transient cloud.

XVIII.

For a brief instant silently
Like a tall form of bronze stood he,
Then rearing more erect his head
And stretching out his arm, he said:—

XIX.

“Sachems and warriors! each his eye
Cast round; the sun about to die
Once more, sends out his loveliest blaze
Lighting our lodges, graves, and maize.
Where these stand now, ye oft have heard,
Brothers! this heart holds every word,
In time of snows our old men tell,
How by our sires the Kah-kwabs fell;
Their sons will ne'er then slumber long
De-o-se-o-wah's luts within;
Rouse warriors; to the war-path throng!

Here, glory braves can never win!
 Our tomahawks are thirsty! see
 How bright they are! we'll let them drink
 Deep of the blood of Illini!
 Will any of my young men shrink?
 No! Nun-do-wah-gahs never fail
 When points Agreskoué* the trail.
 Never the war-path did they shun!
 Sachems and warriors! I have dono!"

XX.

A loud "yo-hah!" burst out, but e'er
 Another could his mind declare,
 A form strode in with lofty tread,
 A crimson hatchet in his eling,
 Glanced for a moment round the ring,
 Then waved the weapon o'er his head.

XXI.

"The At-o-ta-ho!" pealed on high;
 Each brave leaped upward with the cry;
 "The At-o-ta-ho!" every head
 Was bent; again arose the shout
 "The At-o-ta-ho!" quick it spread
 Till every quarter pealed it out;
 "The At-o-ta-ho!" matrons, maids,
 Children, old men, youths, warriors, all

* The war-god of the Iroquois.

Came rushing from the palisades,
Roused by that loved and well known call.
While the lean dogs that glanced about
Joined their loud barkings to the shout.

XXII.

Grim Leaping Panther's eye flashed fire,
As Dawn of Morning first strode in
And burst on high the joyful din,
Then lost his brow all trace of ire,
And, bowing, he stood waiting till
He heard the At-o-ta-ho's will.

XXIII.

Slow Dawn of Morning swayed around
The hatchet, hushing every sound,
While every eye to his was turned;
And, by the crimson hatchet woke
To flame anticipating, burned
Flashing more fierce as now he spoke:
"Braves! Yon-non-de-yoh comes to slay
And burn! hoo! N-un-do-wah-gah braves!
To On-on-dah-gah! up! away!
Fly warriors! for your fathers' graves!
Let every young man seek the trail!"
Out burst the warwhoop's quavering wail,
Forth knives and hatchets flashed, once more
The whoop, keen echoing, trembled o'er,
Lodges and palisades rung,
Each tree seemed gifted with a tongue,

Each face grew wild, the very air
Gleamed with the weapons wielded there,
Till twilight, soft and gentle, drew
Across the scene its shimmering hue.

CAYUGA LAKE.

XXIV.

Another lovely sunset beamed
Upon Gwe-u-gwe's glassy breast,
Which in responsive lustre gleamed
As if there glowed a second west.
The forests on the Eastern shore
Half robes of golden radiance bore;
Harsh sights and sounds with melting day
Had from the lovely scene been driven.
Nature seemed kneeling down to pray
In praise and gratitude to Heaven.

XXV.

Sweet sylvan lake! in memory's gold
Is set the time, when first my eye
From thy green shore beheld thee hold
Thy mirror to the sunset sky!
No ripple brushed its delicate air,
Rich silken tints alone were there;
The far opposing shore displayed,
Mingling its hues, a tender shade;

A sail scarce seeming to the sight
To move, spread there its pinion white,
Like some pure spirit stealing on
Down from its realm, by beauty won.
Oh, who could view the scene nor feel
Its gentle peace within him steal,
Nor in his inmost bosom bless
Its pure and radiant loveliness!
My heart bent down its willing knee
Before the glorious Deity;
Beauty led up my heart to Him,
Beauty, though cold, and poor, and dim
Before His radiance, beauty still
That made my bosom deeply thrill;
To higher life my being wrought,
And purified my every thought,
Capt like soft music through my mind,
Each feeling of my soul refined,
And lifted me that lovely even
One precious moment up to heaven.

XXVI.

Then, contrast wild, I saw the cloud
The next day rear its sable crest,
And heard with awe the thunder loud
Come crashing o'er thy blackening breast.
Down swooped the eagle of the blast,
One mass of foam was tossing high,
While the red lightnings, fierce and fast,
Shot from the wild and scowling sky,

And burst in dark and mighty train
A tumbling cataract, the rain.
I saw within the driving mist
Dim writhing stooping shapes — the trees
That the last eve so softly kissed,
And birds so filled with melodies.
Still swept the wind with keener shriek,
The tossing waters higher rolled,
Still fiercer flashed the lightning's streak.
Still gloomier frowned the tempest's fold.

XXVII.

Ah such, ah such is Life, I sighed,
That lovely yester-eve and this!
Now it reflects the radiant pride
Of youth and hope and promised bliss; —
Earth's future track and Eden seems,
Brighter than even our brightest dreams.
Again, the tempest rushes o'er,
The sky's blue smile is seen no more,
The placid deep to foam is tossed,
All trace of beauty, peace, is lost,
Despair is hovering, dark and wild,
Ah! what can save earth's stricken child!

XXVIII.

Sweet sylvan lake! beside thee now,
Villages point their spires to heaven,
Rich meadows wave, broad grain-fields low,
The axe resounds, the plough is driven;

Down verdant points come herds to drink,
Flocks strow, like spots of snow, thy brink;
The frequent farm-house meets the sight,
Mid failing harvests scythes are bright,
The watch-dog's bark comes faint from far,
Shakes on the ear the saw-mill's jar,
The steamer like a darting bird

Parts the rich emerald of thy wave,
And the gay song and laugh are heard,

But all is o'er the Indian's grave.
Pause, white man! check thy onward stride!
Cease o'er the flood thy prow to guide!
Until is given one sigh sincere
For those who once were monarchs here,
And prayer is made beseeching God
To spare us his avenging rod
For all the wrongs upon the head
Of the poor helpless savage shed;
Who, strong when we were weak, did not
Trample us down upon the spot,
But weak when we were strong, were cast
Like leaves upon the rushing blast.

XXIX.

Sweet sylvan lake! one single gem
Shines in thy liquid diadem.
No sister claims this little isle
To yield its beauty smile for smile;
With it to hear the blue-bird sing;
"Wake leaves and flowers! here comes the Spring!"

FRONTENAC.

With it to weave for Summer's tread
Mosses below and bowers o'erhead;
With it to flash to gorgeous skies
The opal pomp of Autumn dies;
And when stern Winter's tempests blow
To shrink beneath his robes of snow.

xxx.

Back to the evening of my strain!
Back to the sunset hour again!

THE CAYUGAS.

xxxI.

Amid the lake's rich jeweled hues
Moves a flotilla of canoes
Toward the green shore; the sinking light
Paints Ko-lan-ne-kah's lodges low;
Makes clustered apple-orchards bright,
And maize-fields bathes with rosy glow.

xxxII.

From the pure grass-green depths all day
The young men had been drawing prey;

The greedy pike in mottled vest,
The perch in golden armor drest,
The trout in bronze and crimson dight,
The bass in streaks of blue and white,
And now, as homeward course they take,
They raise their anthem to the lake.

1.

Gwe-u-gwe the lovely! Gwe-u-gwo the bright!
Our bosoms rejoice in thy beautiful sight;
Thou bear'st our kah-we-yahs, we bathe in thy flow,
And when we are hungered thy bounties we know.

2.

In peace now is spread the pure plain of thy waves,
Like the maidens that cast their kind looks on their braves;
But when the black tempest comes o'er with its sweep,
Like the braves on their war-path fierce rages thy deep.

3.

Thou art lovely, when morning breaks forth from the sky,
Thou art lovely, when noon hurls his darts from on high,
Thou art lovely, when sunset paints brightly thy brow,
And in moonlight and starlight still lovely art thou.

4.

Gwe-u-gwe! Gwe-u-gwe! how sad would we be
Were the gloom of our forests not brightened by thee;

Hah-wen-ne-yo would seem from his sons turned away ;
Gwe-u-gwe ! Gwe-u-gwe ! then list to our lay.

XXXIII.

As the kah-we-yahs touched the shore,
A band of other warriors came
From the thick rank of woods before,
Bending beneath their forest game ;
The slender deer, soft, elon-eyed,
As if in sorrow he had died ;
The long-eared rabbit dangling down,
The partridge in its mottled brown,
The slaggy bear in sable coat
Gaping with white-fanged crimson throat,
The wild-cat with its eyes' green gleam,
And wolf with jaws one foamy stream.

XXXIV.

Pausing upon a little glade
That edged with grassy stripe the shade,
In one great pile their game they threw,
Around it in a circle drew,
Then in wild dance their forms they flung,
While one, the ring that headed sung :

1.

“ Kind Kah-hah-goh !*
 Our glad praise to thee we send,
 Thou art the Gwe-u-gwes' friend,
 Saying, ‘ Warrior, bend thy bow !
 Look, brave, look ! the bear is low !’
 Saying, ‘ Warrior, aim thy gun !
 Look ! the deer's swift course is run !’

Kind Kah-hah-goh !
 Thus our praise to thee we send,
 Thou art the Gwe-u-gwes' friend.

2

“ Kind Kah-hah-goh !
 In thy robe of summer green
 Thou dost o'er our ambush lean,
 Saying, ‘ Warrior, grasp thy axe,
 Hush ! the foe is on thy tracks !’
 Hush ! hoooh ! now in blood he lies !
 Wave his scalp before his eyes !

Kind Kah-hah-goh !
 Thus our praise to thee we send,
 Thou art the Gwe-u-gwes' friend !”

XXXV.

Ceases the deep and droning strain,
 The hunters claim their loads again,

* The spirit of the forest, in the Cayuga language.

Joining the braves then from the lake,
All to the castle, pathway take.

XXXVI.

But words that told surprise and awe,
Burst from the front, and each one saw
Upon a naked mound that stood
Like a green bastion from the wood,
Against the background rich and warm,

In posture of supreme command
Reared to full height — a warrior form,

A hatchet lifted in his hand,
Red as the blushing clouds that threw
Upon the lake their gorgeous hue.

XXXVII

A moment's silence fell about
'Twas broke by Breton's Tempest's shout,
"The At-o-ta-ho!" our quick yell
Burst then from every warrior there —
"The At-o-ta-ho!" far the swell
Rolled on the soft and slumbering air;
"The At-o-ta-ho!" deep the woods
Thrilled to their inner solitudes;
"The At-o-ta-ho!" e'en the lake
Seemed into that one sound to break;
Then the shout fell, as, flashing, sped
The comer's eye across the cloud,

And with his hatchet o'er his head,
 He spoke in tones that rang aloud
 To every bosom, "Behold
 The bloody You-nos-see-y
 To seek us in our forest
 Warriors! love ye
 To On-on-dah-gah, br. haste!
 Each foot upon the trail be
 Gwe-u-gwes, rouse! like eagles go!
 Warriors, all haste! all meet the foe!"

THE ONEIDAS.

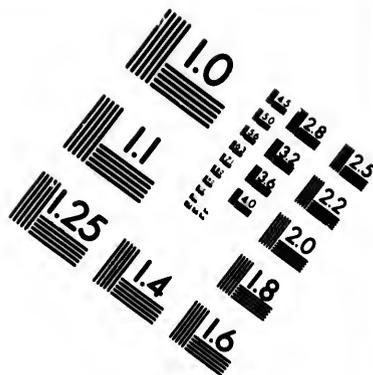

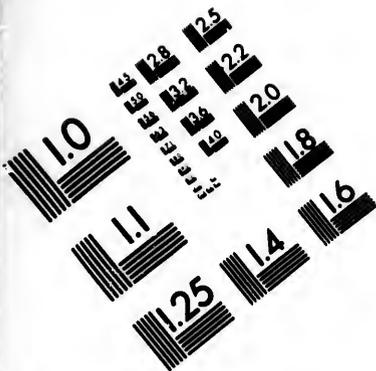

XXXVIII.

Morning had winged its radiance down,
 Bathing one half the hemlock's head,
 Tipping the dogwood's lowlier crown,
 The laurels then beneath it spread.
 The mist had furled its plumes on high,
 Blue robed the late flushed, varied sky,
 And the glad birds their chorus gay
 Had ceased, to flit from spray to spray;
 The deer had left the grassy glade
 And crouched again within the shade,
 And the whole forest realm once more
 A summer day's rich lustre wore.

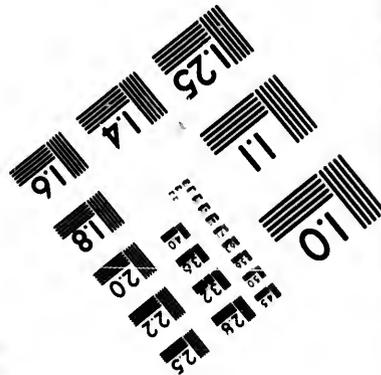

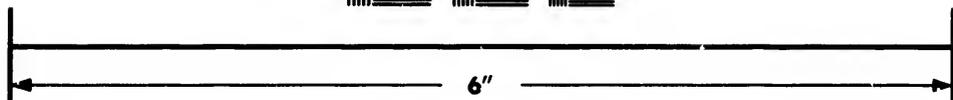

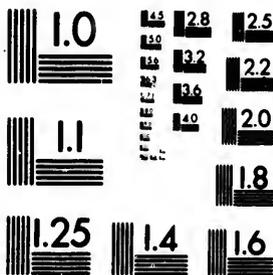

XXXIX.

Ku-na-wa-lo-ah's lodges too
 Were glittering in the golden hue;

IMAGE EVALUATION
TEST TARGET (MT-3)

Photographic
Sciences
Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET
WEBSTER, N.Y. 14580
(716) 872-4503

1.5 1.8 2.0 2.2 2.5
2.8 3.2 3.6 4.0

10
11
12

The circling palisades were bright
And the short lanes were streaked with light.

XL.

As the great orb on tiptoe stood
Upon a neighboring knoll of wood,
The prophet, a black bearskin spread
Around his form, with solemn tread
Came to the council house, reared low
And long amidst the trodden square ;
Pealed out a cry drawn shrill and slow,
And as the echo died in air,
Warriors in pomp of paint and plume,
Sires in bright robes that decked their gloom,
Matrons and maids displaying head
And crimson skirt, round every head
Thick strawberry-leaves in garlands spread
The rich ripe fruit amongst, with speed
The narrow ways came thronging through,
And in the square their numbers drew.

XLI.

There the young Roll of Thunder proud,
Whose deeds were on the war-path loud,
Stood in his plumaged, painted pride,
With the grim prophet at his side.

THE STRAWBERRY DANCE.

XLII.

Now must the Council square's expanse
Echo the usual Strawberry dance,
And thanks each bosom render there
To Fire and Water, Earth and Air.

XLIII.

The file, the council house around
Was ranged :—first, Roll of Thunder high,
Looking the brave, his actions showed ;
The bear-robed prophet next him frowned,
Upon the Orient fixed his eye ;
And then, with sight that eager glowed,
The stalwart warriors ; then the sires,
Burning with all their manhood's fires ;
And last the women, every glance
Flashing impatient for the dance.

XLIV.

Beside the council building's door
The rude bowl-drum a patriarch bore,
While took a youth beside him stand,
With the gourd-rattle* in his hand.

* Gus-ta-we-sa, a gourd filled with dry beans.

XLV.

Upon them, from the eastern sky,
Looked Hah-wen-ne-yo's blazing eye ;
His azure breast was o'er them gleaming
 With clouds in wreaths of spotless hue,
A band of his good geni seeming
 The coming grateful rite to view.

XLVI.

The soft yet brilliant sunshine streamed
 On round-topped lodge and palisade ;
In rising quick pulsations gleamed
 O'er the domed maize-fields next arrayed,
And flashed upon the leafy dress
 Of the encircling wilderness.

XLVII.

First, Roll of Thunder bowed his head
To where the sun its splendor shed,
Then waved his arm — the drum awoke,
The rattle into clatterings broke ;
And forward, with his rocking feet,
The chief began the ground to beat,
Swelling his guttural anthem strain,
Followed by all the stamping train,
Each joining in at every close
Where Hah-wen-ne-yo's praise arose ;
While the long ring the square around
Like a slow coiling serpent wound.

1.

" Earth, we thank thee ! thy great frame
Bears the stone from whence we came,
And the boundless sweeping gloom,
Of our glorious League the home ;
Thou the strawberry's seed dost fold,
Thou its little roots dost hold,
First of all the fruits that raise
Gifts for us in summer days.

Thanks, too, thanks we give thee, lowly,
Hah-wen-ne-yo great and holy !
Maker, wise ! of all the sire,
Earth and Water, Air and Fire !

2.

" Water, thanks ! we safely glide
On thy bosom long and wide ;
In thy rills their way that take
Through sweet flowers our thirst we slake ;
Thou dost give the strawberry-vine
Drink, when hot the sunbeams shine,
Till its leaves spread fresh and bright,
And its buds burst forth in white.

Thanks, too, thanks we give thee, lowly,
Hah-wen-ne-yo, great and holy !
Maker, wise ! of all the sire,
Earth and Water, Air and Fire !

3.

" Air, we thank thee ! for the breeze
 Sweeping off the dire disease ;
 Thou dost bring the gentle rains ;
 Thou dost cool our feverish veins ;
 Thou dost kiss the strawberry-flower
 Nestling in its grassy bower,
 Till its little wreath of snow
 Swings its fragrance to and fro.

Thanks, too, thanks we give thee, lowly,
 Hah-wen-ne-yo, great and holy !
 Maker wise ! of all the sire,
 Earth and Water, Air and Fire !

4.

" Fire, we thank thee ! for thy ball
 With its glory brightening all,
 And the blaze which warms our blood,
 Lights our weed and cooks our food,
 To thy glance the strawberry swells
 With its ripening particles,
 Till the fruit is at our tread
 In its beauty rich and red.

Thanks, too, thanks we give thee, lowly,
 Hah-wen-ne-yo, great and holy !
 Maker, wise ! of all the sire,
 Earth and Water, Air and Fire !"

XLVIII.

The last loud strain had scarcely died,
 When a light form, with hurried tread,
 Strode to the panting chieftain's side,
 Uplifting high a hatchet red,
 A look — a pause of silence brief,
 And then "The At-o-ta-ho!" rung
 In voice of thunder from the chief —
 Forth, warrior, sire, maid, matron, sprung;
 "The At-o-ta-ho!" echoed high;
 It filled the woods, it filled the sky,
 With manhood's shout, and woman's cry.

XLIX.

"Hark, Oncoctas!" * loud and clear
 Now swelled on every listening ear
 The At-o-ta-ho's clarion tones —
 "Hark! Yon-non-de-yoh comes to tread
 Into the dust your father's bones;
 Up, warriors! ere the day be sped!
 To On-on-dah-gah as for life,
 Agreskoué calls out for strife!"

THE CANOE VOYAGE.

L.

Two Indians in a bark canoe,
 Went skimming up a rapid stream

* The Onetdas.

That lay in many a winding gleam,
 The dark primeval forest through,
 Here on the brushwood-tangled banks,
 Rose the tall trees in column'd ranks ;
 While slauting, there, they closely wove
 A thick and bowery roof above.
 Frequent some great elm, undermined,
 Within the wave its boughs inclined,
 Causing the water, sliding dark,
 To wheel and fret in flashing spark.

Dead jagged logs lay all about,
 Black from the shores protruding out ;
 The tips light tilting as the furrow
 Caused by the paddles, on them bore,
 Or, as the musk-rat scampered o'er,
 Scared by the dashing to its burrow.
 Now the stream slumbered in a mass
 Of shade, like polished sable glass :
 And now it fluttered o'er its stoncs,
 In hollow and reolian tones.

LI.

The Tall Pipe-bearer's paddles wide,
 With rapid dips the waters spurn,
 While with his usual look of pride,
 Sits Dawn of Morning at the stern.
 Each side the climbing laurels spread
 Their pink-tinged chalices o'erhead ;
 And now and then the thickets fling
 So low across their sylvan bowers,

The Tall Pipe-bearer's feathers bring
The spangled dogwood's creamy flowers
Showered, like a sudden fall of snow,
Upon the wrinkled glass below ;
While in some sweeping aisle of green,
The tasseled chesnut on their sight,
Where a long sunbeam casts its sheen,
Sends flashes quick of golden light.
The broken, glancing rift from out,
At the white moth low quivering o'er,
Leaps like a flying-fish the trout,
Then falls with echoing plash before :
As threads the prow some channel narrow,
The snipe darts from it like an arrow ;
To his deep den of knotted roots
The otter, a swift shadow, shoots ;
Startled from his o'erhanging limb,
The blue kingfisher leaves the flood ;
Wades from the marge the heron slim,
The gorgeous sheldrake seeks the wood.

LII.

But thickets, spotted all around,
Dividing into threads the course,
Till scarce a struggling way is found,
Proclaim them near the river's source ;
And scarce the shallow waters now
Float o'en their bubble of a prow,
They seek the marge, the bark they lift

O'er Deo-wain-sta * tread they swift,
 Threading the solemn trees that rise
 In shapes majestic to the skies;
 And in the stooping light they glide
 Down wild O-wah-nah-dah-gah's † tide,
 That steals, with broader breast, between
 The same close wilderness of green.
 Over this wild magnificence,

Laced by the bright meandering streak,
 Solitude broods unbroke, intense,

Save when some speeding eagle's shriek
 Startles the air, or howl of wolf
 Issues from some black bordering gulf.

LIII.

Now liquid alleys pass they through,
 Mid sylvan islets set so near
 That, frightened by the swift canoe,
 From one another leaps the deer.
 From tree-top to its opposite
 They see the flying-squirrel flit
 Slant on its membrane wings across
 The narrowed strip of ruffled gloss,
 Then, down the sparkling frothing rift,
 The quivering bark shoots free and swift,
 The Tall Pipe-bearer's ready skill

* The Iroquois name for the portage between Wood creek and the Mohawk river.

† The Iroquois name for the Mohawk river.

Wielding the frail light thing at will;
The pointed rock avoiding now,
Foam, like some angry bear's tusk, churning,
In its blind pathway, then the prow,
As if by instinct, safely turning.

LIV.

As sunset flushed the sky with red,
They came to where a lakelet spread,
With domes of clay 'twas spotted o'er,
Where beavers plunged and skimmed the wave,
Whilst others, busily on the shore,
The sapling gnawed, or dragging, gave
Its leafy honors to the tide,
Towards the twined dam their prize to guide;
But as the bark amidst them passed,
The sentry struck his blow, and fast
Amid a shower of strokes all vanished,
Till every sight and sound were banished
Of the late bustling scene to tell,
With silence settling like a spell,
Whilst passed the prow the lakelet calm,
And, bowing, crossed the crashing dam.

LV.

Then, as the night its shadows wrought,
The dim tree-slanted brink they sought,
Where some wide spruce above them bent
Its bristling branches for a tent;

And slumbered till the morning came
 Firing the heavens with cheerful flame,
 And sent them once more on their way,
 With woods and waters glittering gay.

THE MOHAWK'S SCALP DANCE.

LVI.

At last, as in the glowing west
 The sun once more rolled down its crest,
 They came to where a creek laid down,
 At the broad stream, its subject crown.
 Upon the bank, with maizefields green,
 An Indian palisade was seen ;
 Between it and the brink, a ring
 Of painted braves e'en now was forming ;
 As sought the bark a bush — the swing
 Began, the dance each moment warming ;
 Till, while the drum gave measured stroke,
 The scalp-song of the warriors woke.

1.

“ Whoop the whoop ! dance the dance !
 Let the knife and hatchet glance !
 Peal aloud, aloud, the strain !
 Pequod dogs ! they mourn their slain !
 Mourn their slain ! the Pequod dogs,
 How they seek the clustered bogs !

THE MOHAWK'S SCALP DANCE. 185

Wave their bloody scalps on high !
Pequod dogs ! how low they lie !
Low they lie ! the ground is red !
Pequod dogs ! they mourn their dead !
Great Agreskouè ! to thee
Swells our song of victory !

2.

" See our war-path ! far it winds,
Pequod hunting-grounds it finds ;
Scarcè our mark on earth we make ;
Now we glide as glides the snake.
Pequod dogs are slumbering deep,
Near, still near, more near we creep :
Now we climb the palisades ;
Not a sound the air invades.
Not a sound ! crash, crash !
In the lodges now we dash !
Now we dash ! our hatchets fly,
Gleam our knives ! They die ! They die !
Gleam our knives ! their scalps we wrench !
Blood in streams their castle drench !
Pequod dogs, like leaves around —
See ! they pile the very ground !
See ! they bend like women now !
Whoop ! our foot is on their brow !
Great Agreskouè ! to thee
Swells our song of victory !

LVII.

Ere the last shrill-toned echo sank,
 A figure climbed the shelving bank,
 Holding a tomahawk on high,
 Gleaming in deepest vermeil dye,
 "The At-o-ta-ho!" loudly sounded
 From every lip, and toward him bounded
 The Knotted War Club.*

"Mohawks, hear!"

The At-o-ta-ho, uttered shrill —
 "Your battle-whoops peal louder still,
 To red Agreskouè so dear.
 Braves! Yon-non-de-yoh comes! His feet
 Are on the war-path! Men of blood!
 To On-on-dah-gah like a flood
 This Matchi-Manitou † to meet!
 Away! stern Bears! in all your might,
 Ere on ye dawns again the light!

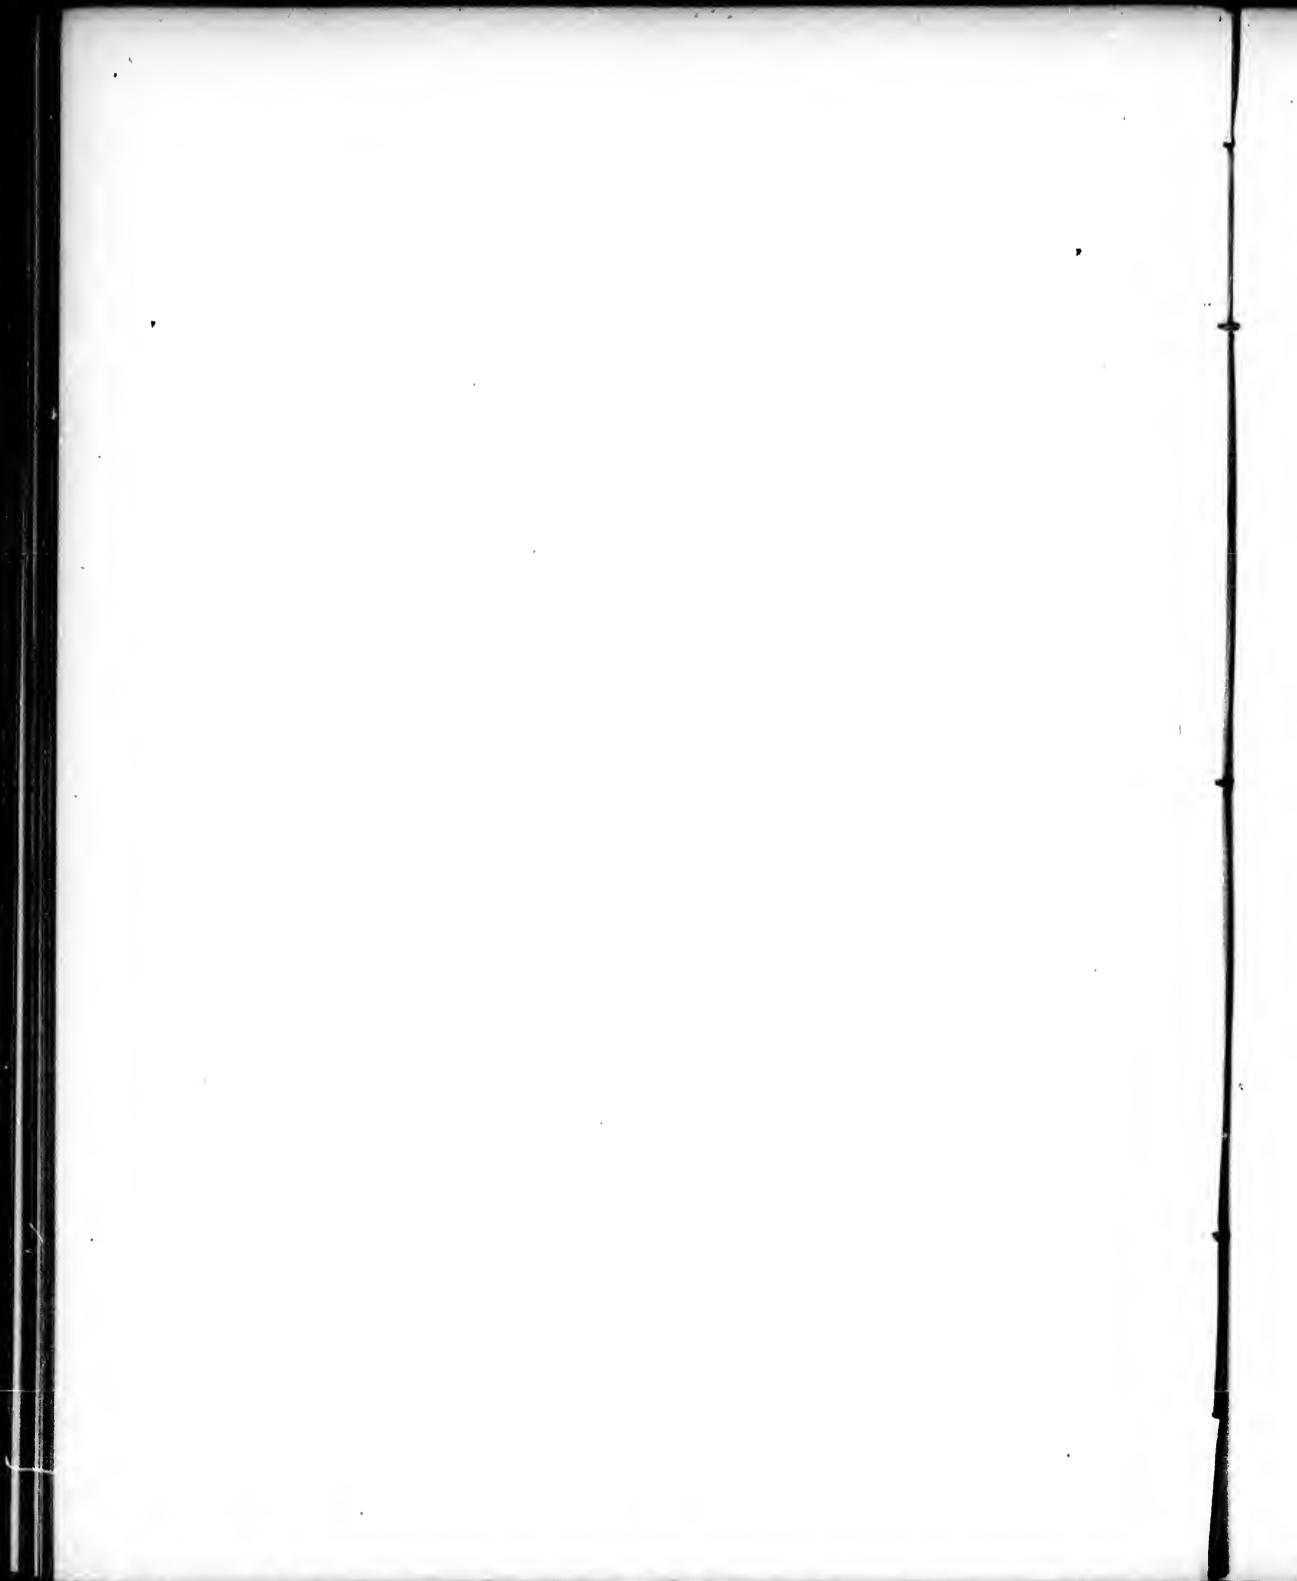

* Ye-an-te-ka-no in Mohawk.

† Matchi-manitoo, bad spirit.

CANTO SEVENTH.

THE MARCH.
THE WAR DANCE.
THE COUNCIL.

THE QUARREL.
THE PRIESTESS.
THE SACRED FLAME.

CANTO SEVENTH.

THE MARCH.

I.

AYS sped along, the rude flotilla traced
The shoreward waters of Ontario's waste.
Up the Oswego's narrow rapid tide
With struggling efforts the invaders glide;
On either hand the crowded forests gave
A sombre darkness to the rushing wave;
Banner and cannon, pike and corselet cast
Unwonted glitterings as the foemen passed;
Upon the oak-tree's scaly breast they flashed,
Out with a scream the startled eagle dashed,
Within the thicket's depths a gleam they flung;
Forth with a snort the brown bear awkward sprung,
Quick slid the otter down the shelving brink,
Back shrank the doe and fawn about to drink,
The beavers plunged within each mud-built hut,
As through their dam of trees a path was cut.
Ha! look, proud Frontenac! upon yon tree
The haughty savage still casts scorn at thee!
Drawn on its naked wood in tints of red
Thou, with the warriors of thy host, art spread;

While at the roots the bundled rushes show
The stern defiance of thy tawny foe.

II.

Broader gleamings upon them break,
Through the thick forest — "The lake, the lake!"
Over its wide and lucid glass
Gallantly, swiftly, now they pass;
Dash and ripple, and ripple and dash,
How the depths tumble, and sparkle, and flash!
Hushed so the silence, at every sound
Echo is up and away with a bound;
Solitude tangible seems to their gaze,
Starting from sleep to shrink back in amaze;
Hundreds of water-fowl rise from the sheet,
Screaming and soaring on pinions fleet;
In the deep waters of purest green,
Fishes in myriad swarms are seen;
Along the margin, a tract of white
Glitters like silver beneath the light.
A shout went up — were the old dreams true?
Was treasure there flashing its dazzling hue?
Boat after boat to the margin shot,
Numbers thronged to the sparkling spot;
And the salt springs shone to their curious eye,
Mantling all over their pearly die.
But away at last the sunbeams shrank,
And the whole fleet moored to the marshy bank.

THE WAR DANCE.

191

Night closes round, the splendid moonlight beams :
The leaf-roofed tents are chequered with the gleams ;
Beneath the gorgeous diadem of the skies
The whole wide scene in delicate beauty lies ;
One blaze of silver Gar-noh-gwe-yoh glows,
Its bosom hushed in beautiful repose ;
Mid the grand woods the light its quiet weaves,
Save where the watch-fires gleam in crimson through the leaves.

THE WAR-DANCE.

IV.

The mellow sunset glow that lay
On Frontenac's debarked array,
The On-on-dah-gah Hollow too,
Suffused with soft and lovely hue.
The maize-fields wore a roseate flush,
The placid stream displayed a blush,
While the surrounding forests seemed
As if with slanted spears they gleamed.

V.

Swarms of dark figures roamed around
Within the castle's spacious bound.
The warriors of the league had all
Obeyed their At-o-tu-ho's call.
The Mohawk, oldest brother keeping

Watch the Long House's east porch o'er;
 The fierce, wild Seneca, unsleeping,
 Making his breast the western Door;
 The Onoia, offspring of the Stone,
 The mother now alas left lone;
 And the Cayuga from that flood,
 With color of the summer wood.

VI.

Of the eight Totems, one each breast
 Displayed, in blue tattoo impressed.
 Here crawled the TORTOISE, glared the BEAR;
 The WOLF there lurked within his lair;
 The CRANE on slender limb stood here,
 Here bowed the SNIFE, there leaped the DEER;
 The BEAVER here made waddling walk,
 And high in air there soared the HAWK;
 While frequently was seen the mark
 Of the HO-NONT-KOH next the other,
 Which none decyphered but a brother;
 Order mysterious, secret, dark!
 Each making— all save this unknown,
 And this by only actions shown—
 The other's weal or woe his own.
 The At-o-ta-ho was its head:
 And through the league its members spread,
 The head chiefs of the other nations
 Holding within next highest stations;
 Save Leaping Panther who kept free,
 From craftiest, basest policy.

All at their backs the hatchet bore,
The curved knife keenly gleamed before.
War-paint on every face was spread,
 Though showed the form the naked skin,
Save the blue waist-cloth, legging red,
 And the rich quill-worked moccasin.
Fusces were in each hand, each eye
 Was flashing fierce with swarthy fire;
All showed that danger, threatening nigh,
 Had roused their deepest martial ire.
While womanhood, age, childhood lay
 Within the Oneidas' neighboring woods,
Until the storm should sweep away,
 Now rising o'er their solitudes.

VIII.

In the broad square a post was placed
 With stripes of red — war's hue — arrayed,
Save in one spot where, rudely traced,
 Was the league's coat of arms displayed.
Five braves that in a circle stood
 With hands tight grasped in one another's —
 A heart amidst them — tribal brothers,
Banded in one firm brotherhood.

IX.

The broad moon's sweet delicious light
Began to bathe the summer night;

Upon their domes the maize-plants glowed,
The stream a track of diamonds showed,
And the still, windless forests stood
Entranced within the pearly flood.

X.

As the sky kindled to the moon's rich flame,
Within the area throngs of warriors came;
Around the post in mazy file they wound,
Then couched in rings successive on the ground,
Within, two gaunt and withered figures sat,
With drum and rattle, each upon his mat,
While upward streamed in one high ruddy spire
Beside the post the usual war-dance fire.
The dusky ring wore looks of fixed repose,
Until at last a tall young warrior rose;
With hatchet, knife, and war-club armed was he,
A snowy mantle falling to the knee
Upon his breast the totem of the BEAR,
The Ho-nont-koh stripe too, placed conspicuous there
Mid record of his deeds, one crimson blaze;
Dress worn alone on most momentous days!
'Twas the young At-o-ta-ho! slow and grave
He reached the fire, and then one whoop he gave,
And, as his brow grew dark, and wild his glance,
He broke into a stamping swinging dance;
From right to left he went, the hollow beat
Of the rude drum dull echoing to his feet
Chaunting in measure to his rocking frame,
While from the two old forms a ceaseless drouing came.

" Dawn of Morning smiles to hear
Agreskoué within his ear
Whisper, ' warrior foes are near !'
Eat their flesh, and drink their blood !
Eagle, there'll be dainty food
When thou stoapest to the wood !
Dawn of Morning smiles to know
Blood shall at his hatchet flow ;
Blood, blood, a crimson flood ;
Dawn of Morning smiles to hear
Agreskoué within his ear
Whisper, ' warrior, foes are near !'
Hush, hush ! foes are near !
Whisper, ' warrior, foes are near !'

" Bends Agreskoué his crest
At the deeds upon my breast,
Fifty death-screams have I woke !
Fifty scalps are in my smoke !
Eat their flesh, and drink their blood !
Frenchmen will be plenteous food
For the eagle in the wood ;
Dawn of Morning listens low,
In the grass he hears the foe,
Quick he sees the ambush ! see !
Now he aims the quick fusée !
Now he fires — the foe is dead —
Off his dripping scalp is shred —
Now beside the lodge he creeps —
Hush ! within, the foeman sleeps —

Now ! he dashes down the door !
 Now ! the foeman drops in gore !
 See ! the wife beside him dies !
 See ! beside the infant lies !
 Eager now the torch is gleaming !
 See ! see ! the lodge is streaming !
 Eat their flesh ! and drink their blood !
 Blood, blood, a crimson flood !
 Dawn of Morning smiles to hear
 Footsteps sounding in his ear,
 Telling that the foe is near ;
 Hush, hush ! the foe is near.
 Telling that the foe is near."

XI.

Thus far the strain had made advance,
 When forth the Leaping Panther bounded,
 And joining in the stamping dance,
 His war-song too he loudly sounded.
 Till the first ring of braves was springing
 Wildly around, all wildly singing ;
 Their limbs in strange contortious flinging,
 Plunging their knives, their hatchets swinging,
 While rose the chaunt, and thrilled the yell,
 And on the post the war-club fell.

XII.

And now the mimic fight begun ;
 They strike, they scalp, they meet, they shun,

They creep on the earth, and they bend on the knee,
Tomahawk launching, and aiming fuses,
Pealing their war-whoops, and striking their blows,
As in eye to eye, hand to hand strife with their foes;
The shake of the rattle, the drum's rapid beat,
Blending with weapon clash, war-shout and feet;
Till, faint with exhaustion, they reel from the ring,
While others impatient, in place of them spring.
On went the war-dance — the beautiful moon
Poured down the sweet quiet smile from her noon;
On went the war-dance — she stooped to the west;
On went the war-dance — she shrouded her crest;
And not till the east was made bright with the sun,
Did the lone silent spot tell the war-dance was done.

THE COUNCIL.

XIII.

The glorious day resumed its bright dominion;
Hues, such as tremble o'er the flashing pinion
Of the archangel nearest to the throne,
Along the rim of the horizon shone.
Now the rich colors deepen in the sky,
Now the hill-pines have caught a golden dye,
And now a glorious burst of light
Makes the whole sylvan landscape bright;

FRONTENAC.

Leaves in the downy-winged breezes quiver;
Mist curls up from the dimpling river;
And out breaks dew-spangled thicket and tree
Into a chorus of harmony.

XIV.

Now was displayed to many a gaze
An Indian coming through the maize.
A nearer view, "We-an-dah!" high
Arose the joyful welcome cry;
The warriors rushed to meet him, each
With outstretched hand and kindest speech,
For, towering in the tribe, stood he
A brave of wide authority;
His a strong heart that ne'er had drooped,
His a proud soul that ne'er had stooped.

XV.

He strode along with hasty tread
And in his cowering look was dread,
Dread blent with shame as if he strove
To lift his heart the fear above,
But could not; still, while welcomes warm
Gave the glad warriors, crowding nigh,
He for the instant, reared his form,
As in his past days flashed his eye,
And, with his usual mien, he gave
Salute in turn to every brave.

And gone the craven sign that must
At the first sight have roused distrust
Had they not in the unlooked-for meeting
Of nothing thought but joy of greeting,
For on We-an-dah every breast
Reposed in full implicit rest ;
And all were filled with deep delight
That he, escaping from the foe,
Had come to aid them with his might
At Yon-non-de-yoh's threatened blow.
Ah, forest chieftain ! noble brave !
Wert thou indeed so mean a thing !
Better have filled a warrior's grave
Thou eagle with a broken wing !

XVI

Where the grim war-dance lately whirled around
Once more the warriors crouched upon the ground ;
The tints retouched on every thoughtful face
And every weapon quiet in its place ;
Sachems, and those in years and wisdom old
Whose thoughts in council had been often told,
And braves whose deeds amidst their enemies
Were traced in crimson on the annal-trees,
And by the old men of the nations laid
In memory deep for song, the circles made ;
While gathered throngs around these circles, some
Striking the war-post, but in council dumb ;
Some neither known for wisdom or for deed,
The others, youths, who glowed for glory's meed.

XVII.

Upon a rich beaver-skin was set
The gorgeous pride of the calumet :
As the light touched its feathers, like sunlit dews,
It glittered all over with flashing hues.
Beside, shone the flame of the council, its gleams
Ghastly and pale in the morning's beams.

XVIII.

Head of the circle, on a rich stained mat
With his proud look, the At-o-ta-ho sat,
At length a sign he gave, and forward came
The Tall Pipe-bearer with a torch of flame,
Who seized the calumet, and with the weed
Filled the red bowl and kindled it; as through
The air meandered the light wreaths of blue,
He pointed towards the sun the feathered reed,
Then toward the earth, and then around in air;
The first imploring Hah-wen-ne-yo's earo,
The next, to sooth his brother's enmity,
The last to make all evil genii flee;
To Dawn of Morning then the pipe he gave,
Toward heaven, on earth, the smoky volumes wave;
Then to We-an-dah next the chieftain seated,
Who the same solemn offering act repeated;
To Leaping Panther then, the next beside,
Till the rich bauble passed the circuit wide.

Then rose We-an-dah, now his mien was high,
Yet quick and restless oped and shut his eye,
And as with dignity his arm he spread
"We-an-dah greets the At-o-ta-ho!" said.
"In Yon-non-de-yoh's dungeon dark and low,
We-an-dah languished like a toad in stoue,
Until he blinded Yon-non-de-yoh's eyes,
For the fox taught We-an-dah to be wise:
He sang a song in Yon-non-de-yoh's ear,
For he has stopped the mocking-bird to hear;
He spun a web meaut only to beguile,
For he has watched the enning spider's wile;
On Yon-non-de-yoh smiled his lips, not heart,
Until he bade him from his cell depart,
Placed him a brother at his hated side,
And of his host then wished him to be guide;
We-an-dah would not lead their bloody tread,
And when night filled their eyes with slumber, fled.
Great At-o-ta-ho! 'tis We-an-dah speaks!
A warrior's paint is glowing on his cheeks,
He in the dance a warrior's deeds has sung,
He is no snake! lies sit not on his tongue!
We-an-dah says then, fly! wait not the foe!
In crushing wrath will fall his dreadful blow.
See'st thou yon leaves? — as thick his warriors crowd
With their great guns that speak such thunder loud;
Balls too that falling burst in flames, and dash
Destruction round them like the lightning's flash;
Stockade and lodge will shrivel at their breath,
And every warrior find a speedy death."

XIX.

He ceased — low guttural sounds ran through
The startled circle; eye sought eye
In doubt; each thoughtful visage grew
Darker, as though the very sky
Had with a sudden drop let fall
Over the scene a shadowy pall.
That he, We-an-dah, thus should speak,
The valiant warrior, just and true!
Whose spirit like an eagle flew,
It made their hearts turn faint and weak.
Glances began to falter round,
Ears bent as if on distant sound,
And, midst the outer dense array,
Movements began to gather way,
As though to scatter in dismay.
But Dawn of Morning rose, his arm
He waved; it was as if a charm
Held the assemblage; every eye
Was fixed upon him as he stood,
And looked around him proud and high,
As though to shame their fearful mood;
Then, striding in mid-ring, he spoke
In tones that fire in all awoke.

XX.

“Sachems and warriors! can it be
You tremble at an enemy?
What! On-gue-Honwee crouching low

In fear before the threatened blow !
Shall a few paltry words of air
Down to the dust your courage bear ?
Have you not grasped the hatohet red ?
Have you not struck the battle post ?
Scarce have you ceased your war-dance tread !
Scarce wind has lost your song and boast.
Shame, warriors of the Long House ! shame !
Scorn Yon-non-de-yoh's thunder flame,
Have you forgot that here is burning
The pure Ho-de-no-sonne fire ?
Rather than, from its splendor turning,
Leave it to Yon-non-de-yoh's spurning,
Around it glad should all expire !
See ! streams its smoke before your eye
Like Hah-wen-ne-yoh's scalp-lock high !
Remember, far as step your feet
From Winter's snow to Summer's heat,
Scatter the tribes like frightened deer ;
Wherever turns our frowning brow,
The boldest young men shake with fear,
The woods as though with tempests bow.
How often has the Great White Bird
Seen us returning from our path
Loaded with scalps, and, joyful, heard
The songs that told our warrior wrath.
Senecas ! in the month of snows
Our old men chaunt that time of pride,
When the last Yon-non-de-yoh rose,
To dash beneath his wrathful stride
Ye — the strong, fast-closed, mighty Door

Of our Long House, within to tread ;
 No Ho-ne-ho-ont basely fled,
 But bloody Yon-non-de-yoh tore
 His flesh among your briars, till lame,
 Wearied, and frightened he became ;
 And like a footsore dog he turned
 From a few huts and cornfields burned,
 Back on his war-path, while ye hung
 Your pole with scalps — your songs ye sung.

XXI.

" Gwe-u-gwes ! often have ye fought
 Beneath your At-o-ta-ho's eye !
 Glorious the deeds you oft have wrought,
 Gwe-u-gwes ! braves ! ye will not fly !

XXII.

" Oft Oneotas ! on your path
 Has At-o-ta-ho seen your wrath,
 When breast to breast the foe were met,
 He ne'er has seen you falter yet.

XXIII.

" Mohawks ! stern men of blood ! ne'er ye
 Have fled before your enemy !
 From Hah-rah's drift-wood stream, to where
 The Pequods on the salt waves sail,
 Your scalp-whoops oft have filled the air,
 There oft has led your bloody trail.
 Fierce Bears ! shall Yon-non-de-yoh say
 ' Women ! ' to ye, ' away, away !'

XXIV.

"Last, On-on-dah-gahs! always true!
Proud people of the hills! to you
Your At-o-ta-ho speaks;—the knife
Of Yon-non-de-yoh gleams above
This your own castle; let your love
Be shown for it in deadliest strife.
Remember! in yon palisade
Your fathers' sacred bones are laid!
Oft has De-kan-e-so-ra's voice
Of music made your souls rejoice.
If from Sken-ec-ta-da his speech
Upon the wind your ear could reach,
How would it echo to your heart?
'My On-on-dah-gahs! act your part
As should ye, when upon his path
Comes Yon-non-de-yoh in his wrath,
And his stern hand with torch of red
Is raised above your castle's head.'
Heart of the league! which holds the glow
Of the pure flame! ye'll brave the foe!

XXV.

"Grasp all then tomahawk and knife,
Amid the leaves like serpents hide,
As Yon-non-de-yoh comes in pride;
Then leap like panthers to the strife.
And our deep forest's frowning gloom
Will rest on Yon-non-de-yoh's tomb."

XXVI.

He ceased — the wild "yo-hah" burst out
From the whole crowd in blended shout,
Their flashing weapons waved about;
Away their sudden panic bore,
Up rose their faltering hearts again,
And their stern native pride once more
Rushed back to all its former roign.

XXVII.

Next, Shining Hatchet slowly went
Within the ring, looked slowly round —
Each weapon fell, sunk every sound,
And every eye was on him bent.
The At-o-ta-ho, while the thrall
Of childhood Dawn of Morning claimed,
High as a chieftain was he famed,
Wise too and just, and loved by all.

XXVIII.

"Sixty long years have in their flight
My scalp-lock streaked with threads of white.
But never," said he, "have these eyes
Beheld a chief so great and wise
As Dawn of Morning; to his words
Listen; they come like songs of birds
In time of blossoms to my ear,

My arm to nerve, my soul to cheer.
 Dread Yon-non-de-yoh's thunder! who
 Will in this ring of warriors stand,
 And own his heart e'er fainter grew
 At death; shall Yon-non-de-yoh's hand"—
 And here his stern and flushing eye
 Rolled round the ring in scornful glow,
 " Fright us with his uplifted blow
 From where our fathers' ashes lie?
 No! let his great guns shake our woods,
 We'll crouch within their solitudes;
 And, as comes on his haughty tread,
 From tree and bush our shots will gleam,
 And in his bosom's dearest stream,
 Our knives and hatchets will be red!"

THE QUARREL.

XXIX.

At the brave Shining Hatchet's close,
 Again the deep "yo-hah!" arose.
 But while each savage eye was beaming
 With thoughts that for a time had slept,
 And knife and tomahawk were gleaming,
 Up the fierce Leaping Panther stepped.
 In all its foulest venom now
 His soul sat coiled upon his brow;
 Away had vanished caution's power
 That held his face and tongue alike,

For now he thought had come the hour,
The At-o-ta-ho down to striko.

xxx.

"Brothers! when frowns the tempest-cloud,
And lightnings gleam as air grows black,
The very eagle fierce and proud,
Sweeping high up in boundless track,
Turns his keen pinions to the peak,
Ere the wild storm its wrath shall wreak.
When the red flame with flash and roar,
Wrapping the crackling woods is near,
The famished panther flies before,
E'en though beneath him lies the deer;
Brothers! stern Yon-non-de-yoh's wrath
Will, like the tempest, sweep our path,
Like the red flame will burn his eye;
A bird is singing in my ear,
'Death and destruction hover near,
Wait not the foe! fly, brothers, fly!'"

xxxI.

"Coward!" a fierce keen voice rang out,
And Dawn of Morning with his shout,
High bounding to his warrior sped;
In frenzied fury blazed his look,
For rage the very hatehet shook,
He held above his head;
"Back! am I not, base creeping thing,
Thy At-o-ta-ho, and thy king?"

Back from my sight!" terrific flame
From Leaping Panther's eye-balls came.
"Ho will not back! ho seorns thy pride!"
Then die, foul dog!" the hatchet fell,
And headlong with a broken yell
The traitor fell and died.
Up to their feet the circle sprung,
The outer crowd a moment hung
Bewildered, then tumultuous swung,
Like some great billow in;
Voice upon voice contending rose,
Eye flashed to eye like mortal foes,
And now and then came sound of blows,
But pealing o'er the din,
The tones of Dawn of Morning bore:
"Braves! Yon-non-de-yoh is before!
Your At-o-ta-ho calls once more,
To ambush for the foe!"
A crowd of warriors round him pressed,
The Ho-nont-koh stripe on every breast,
Fierce eye, spread nostril, towering crest,
Showing their martial glow.
Just then, from out the jostling throng,
A rapid hatchet whirled along
Close to his ear, and bounded nigh
A warrior with a whoop, and cry —
"Revenge!"—'Twas Leaping Panther's brother;
On sprang another — then another —
And still another; flame on wind
Not sooner wraps the withered wood,
Than through the untamed Indian mind

Rush passion and desire for blood.
 We-an-dah's words had soon quick seeds,
 Which Dawn of Morning's utmost skill
 Had but sufficed to check, not kill,
 And now they bore their fruit in deeds.
 Dark Leaping Panther's wily art
 Had also gained him many a heart,
 And when they saw him in his gore,
 And heard the brave, his brother, call
 For vengeance, then, forgetting all,
 These wild hearts boiled in frenzy o'er.

XXXII.

Brave Shining Hatchet at a stride
 Stood by the At-o-ta-ho's side.
 "Ho-nont-koh! Brothers!" shouted he,
 "Peel out your whoops!" and loud and free,
 The brothers swelled the piercing sound,
 Crowding the At-o-ta-ho round.
 All save The Raven — (though by none
 Beloved, he too, through courage rare
 So prized by Indian minds, had won
 At length a slow admission there,
 And yet scarce trusted) —
 Struggling through
 Toward Dawn of Morning and his band,
 Braves sent back whoops at every hand.
 Wilder the wild contention grew,
 Forth in each grasp keen weapons flew,

Forms struggled, hatchets whizzed in air,
In lifted clutches knives were bare,
Fuses were aimed, shots rang around,
Heads dropped, blood gushed upon the ground,
And death-screams, blent with war-whoops, rose
Frequent from those unnatural foes ;
In vain the At-o-ta-ho sprung,
From point to point his arms outflung,
As if to court the blow.
"Slay me, but oh, these murders cease!" —
The strife seemed only to increase,
Brave upon brave sank low ;
While Shining Hatchet clung beside,
Seeking each threatened blow to ward,
As if all danger he defied,
His At-o-ta-ho's life to guard.

XXXIII.

The Raven, in his hand his knife,
Was quiet midst the desperate strife,
But following, following, following still
Where'er the At-o-ta-ho went,
Struggling to come more near — until
O'er the chief's back his knife was bent ;
It fell but in the opposing breast
Of Shining Hatchet who had pressed
Between, as down 'twas sent :

Dead fell the good old chief; and on
The unconscious At-o-ta-ho won
Still mid the crowd his way,
While glanced The Raven swiftly round,
And thence once more with stealthy bound
Plunged after through the fray.

THE PRIESTESS.

XXXIV.

But as the storm of whoop and blow
Raged wildest — shrieked a voice in air,
In wild and thrilling tones, "Forbear!"
Reared on the Temple of the Glow
Where a small platform crossed its height,
A woman's form met every sight
With rolling eye and outstretched head,
And hair — a black veil — o'er her spread.
"The Priestess!" burst with loud exclaim
Around and at the dreaded name
Ceased whoop, and blow; and every frame,
Quickly so motionless had grown,
Some with a limb advanced — with arm
Uplifted some — it seemed a charm
Had changed them into stone.
In attitude of stern command,
Towards the fixed throug she stretched her hand,

And cried again more shrill, " Forbear !
Like the blind rattle-snake will ye,
With your sharp fangs your own flesh tear,
When near ye frowns the enemy !"
As though borne downward by a spell,
Each form bent low, each weapon fell ;
On went the voice, " I see a cloud
O'er the Ho-de-no-sonne head !
Is every warrior's spirit cowed ?
Is every warrior's courage dead ?
Up Dawn of Morning's hatchet rose,
Up Roll of Thunder's at his side,
The braves of the Ho-nont-koh close
Around with looks of flashing pride,
Rearing their tomhawks, and then
Burst from these stern devoted men
The thrilling war-whoop, rolling keen
Far o'er the distant forest scene,
Causing the eagle hovering near,
With a quick flap to disappear.

XXXV.

The priestess raised her smiling face,
But the loud whoop no echo finds
Among the rest ; deep, deep the trace
Both by Wo-an-dah, who from sight
Had vanished in the late wild fight,
And Leaping Panther left in minds
Untaught, impulsive ; then the breath
Of the great guns that winged such death

With terror ever had been fraught,
Within their simple savage thought;
The combat also had renewed

Suspicion of Ho-nout-koh sway
Which Leaping Panther had imbued,

Thinking this too might open way
At Dawn of Morning; and the pain
Of their fresh wounds, friends, kindred slain
Old rankling wrongs, and private feud,
Jealousy, envy, all the brood

Of passions wakened in their might,
Spread their fierce withering influence now,
And each bent eye and sullen brow

Told of submission, or of flight.

XXXVI.

"And can it be," the Priestess said,
That the league's braves would to the tread
Of Yon-non-de-yoh leave the flame!"

A breathless silence reigned around,
Each clouded look was on the ground
And quiet every frame.

XXXVII.

Once more extended she her hand
And said in tones first winning, bland,
Then rising loudly on the air

Till like a trumpet rang they there,
"From you tall pine the feeblest eye
Can view the waters of the lake

Where the three Wise Ones formed the Tie
They fondly trusted naught would break;
Whose records ye at feasts have heard
Ho-no-we-na-to oft repeat!
De-kan-e-so-ra! tongue of bird!
How often has thy music sweet
In praise too of that League been given.
Ah why, when darkness now is driven
O'er the Ho-de-no-somme day
Are both of ye so far away!
Warriors, ye will not break that Tie
And from stern Yon-non-de-yoh fly,
As if he were O-yal-kher black
Coming on his devouring track!
No! when he comes, ye'll be, oh braves!
Like that bold creature from the waves,
That rose and made the enemy
Fierce as he was, back, bleeding, flee.

XXXVIII.

Still from them not a voice was heard,
Still no one from his posture stirred;
Although the Ho-nont-koh with quick breath
Clutched weapons, and fixed eyes of flame,
Shoulder to shoulder every frame
Stood the tall temple underneath,
Looking mute scorn at those so base
Who clung like cowards to their place.

XXXIX.

But once more was the silence broke,
 As once more thus the Priestess spoke.
 " Braves ! hear again the words of dread
 By bright To-gan-e-we-tah said
 A hundred hundred moons ago,
 ' When the White Throats shall come, if ye
 Shall separate, then yourselves will throw
 The Long House down, destroy the Tree
 Of Peace, and trample out the Flame !'
 Must now this doom our people claim ? —
 Must ye with fierce and wicked will
 This awful prophecy fulfil ? "

XL.

Then the Grand Sachem rose, a sire
 Of wisdom ! — " Eyeball* will not linger
 Until the blasting Thunder-fire
 Of You-non-de-yoh comes ; the finger
 Of Hah-wen-ne-yo points the way
 Into the deepest woods ; delay
 Brothers, no longer ! I have said !"
 And down once more he bent his head.
 Next rose The Wampum † — " Scaree has moved
 You thin white cloud an arrow's flight
 Since I, the only friend I loved,
 Saw perish ; hooh ! I will not fight ! "

* O-kah in On-on-dah-gah.

† OI-ko-ya in Cayuga.

The Tamarack * then : " I ever thought
 That the Ho-nont-koh evil wrought;
 A warrior's heart is open ! I
 Wait not ; my council is to fly !"
 Then Lightning † : " From his hunting-grounds
 The voice of Leaping Panther falls
 Within me ! ' Brother ! ' low it sounds,
 ' Fight not where Dawn of Morning calls !"
 The Serpent ‡ last : " A Mohawk brave
 You know am I, and yet "—his teeth
 He ground till foam flew forth—" beneath
 The knife of yon Ho-nont-koh slave
 Who from me stole fair Min-na-soh
 (But I repaid her with my blow)
 In the late strife I bleeding fell.
 Hoooh ! whoop ! I will not fight !"—his yell
 High bursting forth in fiendish swell.

XLI.

" Then"—and the loud indignant tongue
 Thrilling again—" let warriors fly ;
 " I, a weak woman"—and she flung
 Her arm toward heaven and raised her eye —
 " Come Yon-non-de-yoh's scorned array,
 Beside the Sacred Flame will stay !"
 Again she tossed her arm in air,
 And the slight platform then was bare.

* Kul-ho-an.

† Ee-no in Seneca.

‡ Ou-yar-he in Mohawk.

XLII.

Away the recreant warriors fled
To plunge within the neighboring wild ;
Some bending underneath their dead ;
Some with turned look and lingering tread,
As if, had not forbidden pride,
Back to their At-o-ta-ho's side
Would now have come their willing stride.

XLIII.

Sorrowing mid his Ho-nont-koh band
Bent Dawn of Morning, brow on hand,
While stood the baleful Raven near,
Foremost of all with scornful sneer
And jibe at their mean dastard tread,
Who from their At-o-ta-ho fled.

XLIV.

Now from the Temple of the glow
Faint stepping, came the Priestess nigh ;
Gone were prond front and fiery eye,
Naught, naught was there but deepest woe ;
She paused at Dawn of Morning's side,
And placed her hand upon his head,
And in soft tones of tender pride,
"Come to thy lodge, my son!" she said.

XLV.

They entered, and her arms she pressed
Around him : "Child, my dearest child !

Thy mother loves thee now, far more
 Than when thy infant form she bore
 Weeping and helpless in her breast;
 How bravely"—and she fondly smiled

Upon him—"hast thou done to-day,
 My own true noble child! but still
 Thou must with thy bold band away,
 Though I—'tis Hah-wen-ne-yo's will,

I—Priestess of the Flame must stay."
 "But Yon-non-de-yoh, mother!" low
 The Priestess bent in crimson glow.

"He will not harm me! Safely round
 Will Hah-wen-ne-yo's arm be found,
 Though death should come to claim its prey,

'Twould come like that swift Bird of snow.

By the Great Spirit sent to say
 To Hah-yoh-wont-hah, 'Come away!'

And I, oh glad, as he will go—
 And waiting thy loved presence there
 The endless strawberry will prepare—
 But thou must Yon-non-de-yoh flee.
 He is thy deadliest enemy!

Yes, thou must flee him—thou, who late"—

She shuddered deep—"didst raise the knife
 Against him, thou hast roused his hate!

Yes, thou must go, but at his life
 Thou ne'er again, my child, must aim,

For"—dropped her voice till scarce he heard—

"Late Hah-wen-ne-yo's whispered word
 I heard while kneeling at the Flame.
 It said, 'Ho-de-no-soune hand

Ne'er Yon-non-de-yoh's blood shall shed;
 My arm shall deal with him! — a brand
 Broke in the depths — the whisper fled.
 Go! but I do not say thy wrath
 Shall hover not around his path,
 From ambush deep the ball to wing,
 Upon his straggling young men spring,
 And on them in their wearied sleep
 With thy still wild-eat tread to creep;
 I might as well bid life depart
 From thy Ho-de-no-sonne heart.
 At night let thy unslumbering eye
 Be like the owl's; thy feet by day
 Be like the tireless moose's way;
 And Hah-wen-ne-yo, from his sky,
 Oh! may he be for ever nigh!
 And when again thy feet shall roam
 To thy loved On-on-dah-gah home,
 Once more, she trusts, thy mother's voice
 Will glad thine ear — the Sacred Flame
 Its rich, grand glow as ever claim,
 To bid the league again rejoice!"
 She ceased — both left the lodge — and bore
 Their footsteps to the band once more.

XLVI.

The other victims of the fight,
 By the deserters left, were laid
 Within the burial-place — the rite
 Hasty, and short, and simple paid,

And then was every narrow mound
By the rude sorrowing emblems crowned.
Then— Roll of Thunder at the head,
And the sad At-o-ta-ho's tread
Heavy and oft-checked in the rear —
Filed the Ho-nont-koh from the secue,
Each stepping in the other's track,
And Dawn of Morning paused when near
The forest, gazed long lingering back
On the lone mother — then between
The thronging trunks his figure light
Was hidden from her loving sight.

XLVII.

The Priestess glanced her thoughtful eye
Above, around; within the sky
The sacred smoko was curling high;
One pearly cloud was melting there
Like Hah-yoh-wont-hah's white canoe,
When upward through the summer air,
He vanished from his people's view
Amid the sky's triumphal strain,
Its welcome to his home again.
The sun threw soft and reddened flood
O'er huts, stockade, maize, stream and wood,
As if the expanded flame was shed
By Hah-wen-ne-yo's kind command,
Protection o'er the scene to spread,
From the approaching spoiler's hand;
The river's voice was in her ear,

Seeming To-gan-a-we-tah's own,
 Thus to her heart: "Thou art not lone,
 True Priestess! I am with thee here!"
 She stood a moment, turned, then slow
 Entered the Temple of the Glow.

THE SACRED FLAME.

XLVIII.

A hollow shaft of stone stood there
 Upon a hearth in spaces hewed,
 Hollowed beneath, through which the air
 Unceasing gushed, a furnace rude.
 From the barred hearth, the sacred blaze
 Streamed up in broad and splendid rays;
 Before it reached the shaft, it showed
 A spot that like an eye-ball glowed,
 So keen, away recoiled the sight
 Before the fierce and blasting light.
 A low deep rumble from it came,
 The voice mysterious of the Flame;
 As though To-gan-a-we-tah wise,
 Ere went he to his native skies,
 Had left, with deep and tender care,
 His warning voice for ever there.
 Each Union Feast it seemed to wake
 To the crouched ring of warriors near:
 "Never the league, my children, break,
 If Hah-wen-ne-yo's frowns ye fear:

And never let my gleaming eye,
Kindled by the red lightning first,
When on the mountain pine it burst,
And dashed it into atoms, die!"

XLIX.

Deep to the floor her brow she bent,
A glance imploring upward sent,
And then took down her tufted mat
Passed out, and by the portal sat.
Down shed the sunshine greater strength,
The shades commenced to shrink in length,
Shut were her eyes, scarce flowed her breath,
She seemed as though reclined in death;
Not e'en the slightest muscle stirred;
Around her tripped and searched the bird,
Leaped to her knee and then her head,
And then unscares its pinion spread;
Still lightly rose the sacred smoke,
And in the soft wind gently broke,
And o'er her wreathed, as if to bear
Away her spirit through the air.
Noon passed — the building's shadow deep
Began around her form to creep;
A fresher wind allayed the heat,
The sun sent beam more mild and sweet;
Farther the shadow stole — its trace
Was now o'er all the area's space;
Beside her paused the butterfly,
The sounding bee went swerveless by,

Even the humming-bird, most shy
Of all winged things, whizzed fearless nigh,
Until at last her raven hair
Turned golden in the sunset glare.

END OF CANTO SEVENTH.

CANTO EIGHTH.

THE MARCH.
THE MEETING.
THE MARCH.

THE MOCCASIN-
PRINT.
THE NIGHT-WATCH.

CANTO EIGHTH.

THE MARCH.

I.

N Frontenac's camp the gray morning arose,
And the drum-rattle broke on its heavy repose,
The Indian was wrenching red scalps in his dream;
The hardy bateauman was battling the stream;
Fame pealed in the ear of the noble her strain;
And the pikeman was swelling his chorus again.
Up sprang the fierce Indian and felt for his knife;
Up sprang the bateauman all armed for the strife;
The noble donned sabre and corselet once more;
And the pikeman again his long weapon upbore.
The tents disappeared, and the war-like array,
In splendor and rudeness, passed slow on their way.

II.

Strange was the sight! rough trunks between,
 Beneath fresh boughs, deep thickets through,
Musket and breastplate cast their sheen,
 Mantle and flag displayed their hue.
Now on some low hemlock's cone,
Arquebuse an instant shone;

Now against a streak of light
 Glanced the uniform of white ;
 And some tawny buff-coat now
 Gleamed upon the streamlet's brow.
 On the forest-earth were feet
 Bloodiest battle-fields had beat,
 And had bounded in the dance,
 Mid the gay saloons of France ;
 Instead of the trumpet and shout of blood,
 Was the soothing peace of the quiet wood ;
 Instead of rich arras and waxen gloss,
 Were the fleece-like leaves and the silk-like moss ;
 Instead of soft voices and footsteps gay,
 Were the song of the bird, and the dance of the spray.

III.

Upon their creaking wheels the cannon rolled,
 Jolting o'er roots, or sinking in the mould ;
 In a carved chair behind, amid a throng
 Of nobles, Frontenac was borne along ;
 While in the van We-an-dah slowly went,
 His deep-flushed brow upon his bosom bent.
 Passed was the pine reared proudly in the air,
 Whose top the eagle claimed — whose trunk the bear ;
 Passed was the mining streamlet flowing deep
 Below its alder roof with sullen creep ;
 Passed were wet hollows, dry and mossy knolls,
 And grassy openings set with pillared bolls ;
 Passed great prone trunks with emerald coats o'erspread,
 And swamps where trees stood lichen'd, gaunt and dead ;

Passed sunlit vistas reaching far away,
And glades spread broadly to the golden day;
"Onward!" shouts Frontenac, as here and there
His numbers hesitate the depths to dare;
Thus was each mile of struggling labor won;
Up to its noon arose the fervid sun,
Then it commenced the curve of its descent,
And grew more golden as it downward went;
Still on they struggled, all array were lost,
And each as willed it, ridge and hollow crossed,
The pikeman lagged amid wayward roam,
And sang the vineyard melodies of home,
While the grave Indian passed with stag-like stride,
Nor deigned a glance in his majestic pride.

IV.

Varied the talk the reckless bands exchanged
As through the woods thus brokenly they ranged.
"See in yon covert where those maples meet,
That startled deer! how fiercely doth he beat
With his black hoofs the earth — hark, hark, how shrill
His whistle! now he darts behind the hill.
Yon partridge by that bush, a mottled speck,
He's upon tiptoe! view him stretch his neck!
List to his startling clap! he shoots away.
Hear that black squirrel hissing on the spray!
View master hawk! what long sharp yellow claws!
He whets his beak! he's off! Those deafening caws
Tell of the crow! yes, there they swift retreat,
Warned by their sentry of our coming feet!
That snort and blow! off bruin waddles there —

You're a strong wrestler, Merle! a chance so rare
 You have but seldom! Head him! show your hug!
 He seeks yon windfall through the hollow dug
 By the tornado. Haste! or in jammed bough
 And root he hides! yes, yes, he's vanished now!"—
 "Why dost thou start thus backward, Meux? with fear!
 The rattle-snake! beware! the monster's here!
 Here in this nook! hark now the note he springs,
 His warning, like the song the locust sings!
 Ha! the coiled monster! see his tongue of flame!
 His flattened head! his striped and swelling frame!
 Back flies his jaw! that missile mark him strike,
 Falling beside him! thrust him with thy pike!
 Well done, Meux! how he darts! give thrust once more!
 He sinks! he writhes! his mischief now is o'er!
 Though hours he'll linger. Hark! that distant song!
 It is the thrasher's thrilling thus along.
 How sweet the warble! now so high its shake,
 It seems its fine-drawn delicate thread will break;
 Now in full ring comes on its liquid swell,
 Like the rich music of some silver bell;
 And now the strain drops low, yet full and round,
 The listening soul dissolving with its sound!
 Is it not sweet, Allaire?"

"Ah yes, Merle, yes!

How oft when eve commenced on day to press,
 I from the gallery at Quebec have heard
 The soft pure flute of this enchanting bird,
 And thought of home upon the smiling plain
 Beside the Loire, and I was young again;
 My boy came bounding toward my homeward feet,

THE MEETING.

281

My wife was there her weary one to greet,
While the low vesper bell was on the air,
And all things round me seemed to whisper prayer.
Oh then I lived in long departed years,
My eyes were filled with sad delicious tears,
And not until that woodland strain was o'er
Did the dream pass and leave me old once more!"

THE MEETING.

v.

The afternoon breathed cool among the shades,
And sunset now was streaming through the glades.
The western foliage gleamed in golden gloss,
And sifted sprinklings on the grass and moss;
Now the grim cannon blinking sparkles showered
Its ponderous wheels in leafy gloom embowered!
Now, where some hollow poured its slanting rays,
Gun, flag, and corselet, all were in a blaze.
On, on they pressed, but patches now of light
Gratefully cheered their gloom-accustomed sight;
Broad glitterings through the trees, and murmurs low
Bleat with the wood's hum, told a river's flow;
And now, in front, a slender thread of smoke
On the sky's rich and golden back-ground broke.
The stealthy scouts crept every eye to shun,
And told by signs the welcome goal was won.

A brightness passed across each weary brow,
Ranks were reformed, and all was order now.
Swift they approached the opening glimmering wide,
Kun-da-qua's ripples glancing by their side.
They left the woods, the maize-fields spread their green.
An On-on-dah-gah Castle there was seen.
Whoops burst out wildly from the Indian throng,
Like famished wolves they howled and leaped along,
All save We-an-dah,—with inverted gaze
He crept and hid among the phalanx'd maize.
On through the gateway of the palisade,
On through the lonely lanes their way they made,
Until at last they burst upon the square;
The high-roofed Temple of the Glow was there;
That shrine so famed throughout the Red-men! shrine
Which held the Flame so hallowed, so divine!
Known in all tribes by legends strange and dark,
Of mystery, wonder, dread, yet hate, the mark!
On toward the porch they sprang, but who sits there
With such composed and yet majestic air!
The Otter, leader of the savage bands,
Stops, looks, advances, stops, extends his hands.
"Back, slave! touch not the Priestess! back!"—with awe
That rising form the startled Indians saw,
And not a weapon stirred nor war-whoop rang;
It seemed as if a spell were o'er them flung,
The mastery of the mind; once more she spake:
"Lead me to Yon-non-de-yoh!"—just then broke
The throng for Frontenac; she met his eye;
He bounded from his chair with one wild cry
"Ha!"—then he checked himself with effort strong;

"Ho! Otter! take from hence thy warrior throng!
 Guards, draw around!"—then to the Priestess turning,
 "Enter!"

"Not where the Sacred Flame is burning!"
 Grasping her arm, yet gently, then he led
 Swift within Dawn of Morning's lodge her tread.

VI.

"Sa-ha-wee! Can it, can it be
 My loved, my long lost!"—and he threw
 His arm around her passionately;
 But up her slender form she drew,
 And with a sternly frowning brow
 Broke from his arm, and waved him back:
 "Sa-ha-wee is the Priestess now;
 O-nuh-tah* is fierce Frontenac,
 Red Yon-non-de-yoh!"—but he still
 Exclaimed in tones of tenderest thrill,
 "Oh do not, do not turn from me!
 Long years have passed, how drear and long,
 My bird! since last I heard thy song!"
 And once more to his bosom he
 Her form caught wildly; in his face
 Sa-ha-wee looked with softening eye,
 A moment stood in his embrace,
 Then breathed a quick and yielding sigh,
 While wakeful feeling on her cheek
 Commenced in rising hue to speak;

* The pine-tree in On-on-dah-gah.

And then a second rush of thought
A deeper kindlier color brought,
Although a lingering sternness yet
Within her eye the softness met.
"But how Sa-ha-weo! dearest, how,
How hast thou risen thus from the dead?"
The Priestess swept from off her brow
The long black hair across it spread,
And there displayed a deep-marked scar:
"Ta-yo-nee's hatchet did not slay!
But when Sa-ha-wee woke, afar
In her own lodge once more she lay
At On-on-dah-gah; the stern mood
Of the stern brother soft was made
When by his arm he saw, in blood,
His once loved, only sister, laid.
Long were the hours 'twixt life and death
I hung; O-nah-tah seemed to stand,"
And a soft loving eye she now
Turned on his earnest listening brow,
"My head oft holding with his hand,
And words of love upon his breath;
But always, always was my child
Around — my neck her little arm
Now circling, now her kisses warm
Touching my lips as sweet she smiled.
I rose; Ta-yo-nee by my side
Had kept a never ceasing watch
Lest other ears the tale should catch
My ravings told; he wished to hide,

He said, my burning shame that I,
The daughter of The Sounding Bow,
His sister should have fallen so low
In Yon-non-de-yoh's breast to lie
Unwedded! I deserved to die!
He told that I had been the wife
Of a French soldier lately o'er
In the new Yon-non-de-yoh's train,
From where the last one basely bore
Myself and sire; my husband's life
Had watched, and him at last had slain
In our own lodge; by accident
One of the blows his arm had dealt,
Had from my husband's head been bent,
And thus my brow the weight had felt.
All this time too within my ear,
Against thee he was whispering, till
Against my strong and struggling will,
The tall O-nah-tah, loved so late,"
Here on his hand a kiss she pressed,
And strained it fondly to her breast,
"To Yon-non-de-yoh changed, and fear
Chased love away, then blent with hate.
But still my child so sweet so bright,
Was never absent from my sight;
In thought by day in dreams by night,
I saw her, and so deep my pain.
Ta-yo-nee left to pluck my flower
From hated Yon-non-de-yoh's bower;
He brought her and I smiled again!"

"What! doth she live?" in quickly broke
 Here Frontenac. Sa-ha-wee's face
 An instant's painful thought bore trace,
 She bowed and hid it — then she spoke:
 "No, no, O-nah-tah! she is dead."
 Frontenac bent his silvered head:
 "'Tis as I deemed; my scouts I sent
 On every side; but first they went
 To On-on-dah-gan, for I thought
 Ta-yo-nee too this deed had wrought;
 They bore back tidings he had died
 In some late war-path"—

"True, most true.
 The very night that by my side
 My child he placed, the war-path drew,
 With Ku-an, At-o-ta-ho then,
 My brother's warrior tread away
 To a far Adirondaek glen,
 And both braves perished in the fray!"
 Frontenac's eye a moment flamed:
 "Heaven took the vengeance that I claimed;
 But let him rest in peace. No word
 Of my lost little one I heard
 Through thy Long House, my scouts in vain
 Made search, no tidings did they gain,
 Till hope at last I ceased to feel,
 And the blind fruitless search gave o'er;
 Since then I've only thought Lucille,
 Like thee, Sa-ha-wee, was no more.
 My scouts too told me in their tale,
 When at thy village ceased their trail,

It was a day of feast and glee
 For the new Priestess of the Flame.
 Ah! little did I deem that she
 And thou, my lost one, were the same."

VII.

He ceased—and each a moment stood
 In silence by deep thoughts subdued:
 Then low the Priestess bent her frame,
 And taking in both hers his hand,
 Exclaimed in tones of music bland,
 "One boon, one boon, the Sacred Flame Spare, spare, O-nah-tah!"

"For thy sake,
 Thy sake, Sa-ha-wee!—ha! that glare,
 Those whoops!"—they saw a fierce light break
 O'er the dim space of twilight air,
 Through the smoke-opening overhead,
 And both rushed forth with startled tread.
 Alas, poor Priestess! one keen glow
 Wrapped thy loved Temple of the Glow,
 While wildly round the red expanse,
 Writhing in fast and frantic dance,
 The Otter and his Hurons went,
 And high triumphant whoopings sent
 That with the fire's loud cracklings blent;
 Alas, poor Priestess! fiercely sprung
 Frontenac forward, fiercely rung

His loud harsh tones : " What daring hand
Has done this deed without command ?"
The Priestess gazed — that Flame so long
Watched o'er by her with love so strong,
For whose loved sake she'd sought this hour
To save it by O-nah-tah's power,
The star to which the nations turned,

 Sign of the league ! so deeply cherished !
Which for unnumbered years had burned,
And which she hoped would ne'er have perished.

 Eye of the Long House ! kindled there
By Hah-wen-ne-yo's loving care,
To be extinguished, spurned beneath

 The feet of foes most scorned, who fled
 Before her people's very tread
Ere this — she reeled — she gasped for breath,
And, mid the wild and stunning swell
Of savage joy, she, swooning fell ;
And quick his kindling rage forgot,
Frontenac bore her from the spot,
And his old, faithful, staid Allaire
Meeting, consigned her to his care.

THE MARCH.

VIII.

Before the tent of Frontonae
Pitched in the square, the sentry Merle
Saw, striding in his weary track,
Slowly the wings of darkness furl.
The watch-fires that around him burned
Wasting to ghastlier color turned ;
The tent, bathed late in ruddy light,
Stood in its graceful folds of white ;
A crimsoned object in advance
Changed to the snowy flag of France ;
The lodges, where the whole array
Save the disdainful redskins lay
In slumber, through the shimmering air
Their customed shapes commenced to wear ;
Its redly-flickering, chequering shade,
Threw off the neighboring palisade ;
Spectres, that back and forward ranged,
To brother sentinels were changed ;
The barky emblems, shapes grotesque,
Upon the mounds of burial placed,
In the wild light so picturesque,
Were in the brightness fully traced.
A shadow, wavering motions making
To the wind-moulded watch-fire's shaking,
Shrank to the drum that, near, had found

Again its native figure round,
Displaying even the tife within
Its ring of beaten tawny skin ;
A crimson flash that oft had shot
Into Merle's eyes as past the spot
He strode, to steely glow turned now
Upon a breast-plate cast below ;
The bugle lying by it, slung
Upon its strap, a glitter flung ;
The casque, thrown near, keen rays flashed out ;
Dark brands of fires showed, strewed about ;
While numerous figures round the square
Told that the wild men of the host,
Scorning all roof but sky, were there
In sleep, weighed down by orgies, lost.
Spots in the area's midst, deep gleaming,
Eyeballs of lurking monsters seeming
Within Merle's wandering, idle dreaming,
Mammoth or serpent terrible,
These forests' former habitants,
He oft had heard the Hurons tell,
Devouring all within their haunts,
Turned to pale coals ; while, midst them reared,
A tall and blackened shaft appeared,
The sole memorial left to show
Where stood the Temple of the Glow.
Not this alone, but his keen eye,
Once by a shoot of scarlet light
Sent by the watch-fire, chanced to spy
A crouching figure ; through the night
He oft had thrown his curious look

Upon that black and frowning nook
Where saw he first the form, a gleam
Would now and then across it stream
And still he saw the figure there
Bent as if crushed by deep despair.
No foe he deemed it, yet 'twas strange
There without motion, without change,
By the red glow which o'er would flit
He viewed that dark weird figure sit.
The dawning light disclosed at last
The drooping Priestess who, while fast
Allaire, toil-spent with searching, slept,
Away with stealthy steps had crept
In her unslumbering grief to brood
Amid the wrecks around her strewn;
Wrecks of what lately was the frame
Of its, she thought, undying flame,
Flame of her glory! holding place
Next Dawn of Morning in her heart,
Which, woe most deep! most foul disgrace!
Had seen its last faint flash depart.
Flame of her glory! oh, how prized!
Amid the foes the most despised!
Never again to show its light
Unless in pity to the night,
Shrouding the Long House from his eye
Should Hah-wen-ne-yo cease to fly
The lightning as in days of yore,
And give the sacred light once more,
That would once more with sparkling power
Make summer of the winter bower,

FRONTENAC.

Make daylight of the midnight hour,
With its rejoicing blaze
And gladness through the Long House shower,
As in its brightest days,
Ere treacherous counsels had prevailed,
Ere craven terror had assailed,
Or evil passions had burst out,
Scattering their awful fruits about,
Causing the Long House now to lie
In gloom beneath a gloomy sky.

IX.

Still, still the east horizon grew
More soft and clear and bright in hue ;
The clouds displayed a dappled mien ;
The forests changed from dark to green ;
While in full joyous chorus there
Burst warbles on the dewy air ;
At last the clouds with light were laced,
On gold and pearl the woods were traced,
The Orient seemed of rainbows wrought,
Gold seemed across the trees to run,
And then, like some majestic thought
Kindling the brain, Merle saw the sun.

X.

As on the hill-top's loftiest pine it glowed,
The wide encampment stir and bustle showed ;
Frontenac, restless, with a picked array

Of pikes and muskets, quick his vengeful way,
The Adirondack and the Huron band,
Fiercest of all his tribes! to aid his hand,
Was now, among the endless woods to push,
The Oneidas in their fastnesses to crush,
Leaving his ordnance, and remaining train
At On-on-dah-gah till he come again.

XI.

Seated within his chair of state once more
Frontenac takes his pathway as before;
Sa-ha-wee, still the object of his care,
Near him is placed, protected by Allaire;
The yet soft sunbeams of the morning strike
Again on moving musket, flag and pike,
And once more do the numbers onward press
Amid the vast and solemn wilderness.

THE MOCCASIN-PRINT.

XII.

Noon's burning eye was now refulgent o'er,
Sprinkling with light the variant sylvan floor;
The hemlock's myriad particles of green
In tiny flashes, glinted back the sheen;
The long-leaved polished laurels to the sight
Sent rapid glances of keen dazzling light;
The beech's moss was turned to golden fringe,

And the air's gray suffused with emerald tinge;
The straggling numbers still their path pursued
Amid the crowded columns of the wood,
The deep-trod trail they followed, winding, here,
Around some swamp extending wild and drear,
Bristling with tamaracks and with hemlocks dead,
And by one sea of laurels overspread,
And seaming, there, some swelling ridge's back
With yawning hollows either side the track.
Unceasing on the air arose the beat,
Upon the forest earth, of trampling feet,
With rustle, brittle snap of twig, and crush
Through the dry leaves and tangled underbrush:
Shrill chirping voices, sudden whirring wings,
Told the quick flight of frightened woodland things.
While the mosquito, ever hovering near
With its fine twanging, teased the shrinking ear.
We-an-dah, near the head of the array,
With cowering footstep stalked upon his way;
His shrinking figure, and his drooping crest,
Showing he wished no eye on him to rest;
Sorrow and conscious guilt upon his face,
In furrows sunken deep, had left their trace:
But sudden flashed his dim blank countenance,
Round him he cast a quick and furtive glance;
A pikeman, treading near, was making bare
His forehead from his iron pot, for air;
Another, with low-bended back had stopped
To lift the long buff gauntlet he had dropped;
Another, making of his sword a staff,
Was joining in a fourth one's careless laugh;

Slow, sauntering onward went a musketeer,
His huge piece slung within his bandoier;
While a young noble, pausing at a tree,
His gorget was adjusting busily;
The rest were hidden in the trail that wound
Its crooked way through thickets grouped around:
He looked again on what his eye first met,
And then his moccasin upon it set,
Turned round a laurel-clump, and, bending low,
Surveyed the slope with glances keen and slow;
Again — but 'twas a faint, a scarce-marked trace,
And nearly hid below a dock-leaf's face,
A moccasin's light print,— so faint, so light,
Naught but an Indian could have caught the sight,
Eagerly glanced he further down,— a brook
Its rushy way along the hollow took,
A wide leap's distance from the print, but not
Another foot-trace marked the tangled spot;
He lifted every spreading plant, he drew
Aside each thicket, cluster, bush in view,
He lightly scooped the dead fall'n leaves away,
But nothing more did his close search repay;
If other trace remained, with such deep care
And cunning was it hid, that in despair
We-an-dah, noted for his eye-sight keen,
Refrained his search and turned him from the scene.
Climbing once more the ridge, the eye he caught
Of Merle by passing. "Ha! what hast thou sought
In those thick laurels, redskin? I'll be bound
Fire-water cannot in those depths be found —
Here, in those never ending woods! — but look!"

And lifting up his buff coat-flaps, he took
From his trunk-hose a flask of blushing hue,
And held it smiling to the Indian's view ;
"What, redskin ! dost thou turn away ? wilt not
The flagon taste ? thou ! why, We-an-dah, what,
What has got in thee, man ! that eye of thine
I've never seen with such sharp glances shine !
Thy forna seems loftier too : thy native woods
Have given thee one of thy best warrior moods !
What has got in thee, man ! I thought thy throat
Long us my pike when wine was down to float !"
Thus as the gay and reckless soldier talked,
Mute by his side We-an-dah proudly walked ;
His figure, lowly bent for many a day,
Seemed towering now, beneath the wakened sway
Of some strong feeling, while around his eye
In subtle glances never ceased to fly.

XIII.

Thus hours passed on, until the sinking sun
Told that the long day's march was nearly done.
They now another ridge were crossing o'er,
On either side deep hollows as before.
Sudden We-an-dah's roving eye beheld
On a steep hill, that, scarce a gunshot, swelled
Beyond the hollow on whose edge he went.
A moving object ; keener search he sent,—
A snowy feather from behind a tree
Was thrust, and then a dark face cautiously

Peered forth; upon the bands was fixed its gaze,
 Seeming with anger and disdain to blaze;
 But, as he looked, back shrank the head, and there
 Again the pine-tree reared its column bare.
 We-an-dah cast round furtive glance once more:
 Distant, short way, a pikeman strode before,
 His back-plate, casque and pikehead glancing back
 Rays of keen radiance in the sunset's track;
 Another, pausing, was refitting, nigh,
 The thick plume in his skull-cap jerked awry;
 Another, loud protesting he would melt,
 Was loosening the broad buckle of his belt;
 While Merle, low humming some familiar song,
 Strode with his heavy jack-boots slow along,
 Stamping his prints upon the fern and grass,
 The air thus flavoring with crushed sassafras.
 None heeded him, he turned a thicket near,
 And down the ridge-side urged his fleet career.

THE NIGHT-WATCH.

XIV.

Night, in its earliest watch, was glowing now,
 And on a lofty summit's wooded brow
 The At-o-ta-ho stood: the cloudless arch
 Glowed with its stars in their majestic march,
 Here sketching outlines,—strewed, disordered there—
 Some quick pulsating, others fixed in glare,
 While through the whole, in gorgeous broad array
 Sprang, linked in snow-white light, the Milky Way,

XV.

As Dawn to Morning view'd the lovely sky,
 It look'd, to his wild fancy-rapt eye,
 Like holy Hah-wen-ne-yo's bosom, bright
 With his thick crowded deeds, one glow of light —
 And his rich belt of wampum broadly bound,
 White as his pure and mighty thoughts around.

XVI.

But other feelings came, and sad his view
 He turn'd; below; there stood in glimmering hue
 Frontenac's tents, while, flaming keen and red,
 Watch-fires beneath the wood's lopped boughs were spread,
 In which the pike and musket ruddy glow'd.
 As slow athwart each blaze the sentries strode,
 Frequent loud song and careless laughter broke
 From the encampment in commingled strain.
 While cricket, owl, and whip-poor-will awoke
 The night-wood's stillness round him holding reign.
 As there the frowning Indian gazed, he thought
 Of all the hated scene beneath him, brought;
 Of that strange pale-face race which, years ago,
 Were seen on Cat-a-ra-qui's heaving breast.
 As the Great Bird with spreading wings of snow,
 Bearer of grief and evil, upward pressed;
 First, creeping on the earth, with whispered words
 Small in his race's ear as chirp of birds,
 Then, rearing high their haughty fronts, and loud
 Speaking their will, as speaks the thunder-clap
 First, stretching trembling hands of feeblest clasp,
 Extending then their pity-granted bounds.

Until they threatened, with insatiate grasp.

All, all, yes, all the red-man's hunting grounds.

And here, oh burning, burning thought! below

Was You-non-de-yoh, that detested foe!

Here, in the forest's most profound retreat!

While of the host of warriors he had won
Together, this proud enemy to meet,

All but his true and brave Ho-nont-koh, gone!

And they, and he, close hiding in their fear

As from the prowling panther hides the deer.

His mother too, whose bent and weary tread

He saw near You-non-de-yoh, captive led;

And then, those cunning, base and treacherous arts

Which in their net had trapped his warriors' hearts.

Vile Leaping Panther! here he grimly smiled;

We-an-dah! clutched his fingers fierce and wild.

His tomahawk in vengeful, deadly wrath,

Whom he had marked throughout the livelong day.

As close he hovered round the invader's path,

Guiding, and he an Iroquois! their way;

Oh could his thirsty hatchet drink his gore!

But just then from a neighboring thicket sprung

A form, and trembling, cowering, stood before,

We-an-dah! high his tomahawk he swung,

But still with spreading hands and head bent low,

His recreant warrior stood and trembled there,

The At-o-ta-ho stayed the falling blow,

He could not strike at that meek, offering air,

But in his sternest tones of anger said,

"Why comes fork-tongued We-an-dah here?" the chief

Answered, but lifted not his humbled head —

"As the last sun was pouring his hot sheaf
 Of arrows from mid-sky, We-an-dah caught
 A print which he the At-o-ta-ho's thought,
 And keeping watch as neared the sun his grave,
 Beheld the At-o-ta-ho's white plume wave
 From the pine's ambush, while he viewed the way
 That Yon-nou-de-yoh took with his array.
 This foot has tracked, eye dwelt on him, since then,
 And when We-an-dah saw him leave the glen,
 He followed to yield up his wretched life
 To his wronged At-o-ta-ho's vengeful knife."
 "We-an-dah!"—lowlier bent the Indian's head—

"The Chieftain and the Warrior! he whose whoop
 Had rung so often on the war-path red,
 Suffered his crouching broken soul to stoop,
 The burning fire-water's slave to be;
 The crawling serpent loftier far than he;
 That made him coward, woman, when his word
 Of warning fear was in thy council heard;
 We-an-dah meant not treachery! no! he felt
 His prostrate soul within his bosom melt
 With fright at Yon-nou-de-yoh's numbers! he Spoke as he felt—he wished the braves to flee,
 To save them from the lifted arm whose blow
 He thought would lay the League for ever low;
 But when they fought among themselves, in dread
 Some knife might reach his quailing heart, he fled;
 His fiery thirst its reign claimed also o'er,
 And Yon-nou-de-yoh thus he joined once more.
 "But," here he lifted up his frowning brow,
 "We-an-dah's all Ho-de-no-soune now,

His warrior heart once more has come to him ;
His blinded eyesight is no longer dim ;
Great At-o-ta-ho, listen then ! again
Will the next sun light You-non-de-yoh's train,
Threading our people's forests in their pride,
We-an-dah still their seeming friend and guide.
Listen ! as shuts that sun once more his eye,
The At-o-ta-ho with his faithful band
In the Wolf's throat like lurking snakes will lie,
Hatchet, fusee, and knife in every hand ;
And when We-an-dah, You-non-de-yoh there
Conducts, the At-o-ta-ho's whoop in air
Will burst and pierce his ears with fiercest wrath,
While glad We-an-dah by another path
Than the up-cavern's found one day by him,
Chasing a fleeing wolf, will with swift limb
Leave You-non-de-yoh trapped, and scale the height
To join his valiant brothers in the fight !"
Within the thicket once again he sprung,
As the last words fell rapid from his tongue ;
And slowly down the hill's opposing side
The At-o-ta-ho bent his thoughtful stride,
And plunged within the tangled glen beneath,
Where the night's silence brooded, hushed as death ;
But, as if wakened by his gliding tread,
From some black bush would rise a frequent head,
Until he reached a grape vine's arbor vast,
And there, as if for sleep, his form he cast.

END OF CANTO EIGHTH.

CANTO NINTH.

THE BATTLE.
THE TORTURE.
THE DEFIANCE.

THE DEATH.
FRONTENAC.
MASS FOR THE DEAD.

CANTO NINTIL.

THE BATTLE.

I.

THE sunset was pouring its yellow flood
In a long deep glen of the boundless wood,
A precipice sought on one side the sky,
The wall on the other arose less steep
With great rocks broken, and ledges high,
With tall trees clustered and thickets deep:
The dark Wolf's throat, and slept it still,
Naught heard but the tap of the woodpecker's bill,
And naught in the narrow vista seen
But birds in and out of their dwellings green.

II.

Now slow from a bush on the sloping side
Was thrust a savage's plumaged head;
Along the passage his eye he sped,
And "Roll of Thunder!" he quickly cried.
Another grim Indian arose from his lair,
And instantly then were uplifted in air,
From jutting rock and from hollow trunk,
From the head of the hemlock downward sunk,

From bush of cedar and mossy mound,
Scalp-locks bristling in scores around ;
The next all vanished, rock, bush, and tree,
Resuming once more their tranquillity.

III.

Next snapping of twig and careless song,
And beating of steps from a trampling throng,
Waving of feather and shining of brand,
Frontenac with his approaching band.

IV.

Through the hollow they crowding tread,
Which seems a torrent's abandoned bed,
With rock and gravel to form its floor,
And spotted with pools and thickets o'er.
Birds from the bushes loud chirping dart.
Rabbit and squirrel affrighted start ;
Save these, deep silence and solitude
Seem o'er the gloomy scene to brood.
Still in they tread, till a rocky wall
Blocks up the passage with sudden fall.

V.

At once the air is filled with cries
That from the broken steep arise,
Pealing and echoing to the skies,
While on the startled crowd,
From rock, and tree, and bush, and mound,
Comes one quick simultaneous sound ;

Though not an enemy is found ;

All is confusion loud !

Down sinks the dying musketeer,
The pikeman stands aghast with fear,
The Indian seeks the thicket near,
But keen in every deafened ear

The warwhoops rise once more ;
Again rock, tree, and thicket gleam,
Again the shots upon them stream,

Again forms drop in gore ;
Frontenac's voice calls out in vain,
" Stand to your arms ! "—the wildered train
Hear the stern warwhoops ring again,
And feel once more the leaden rain,

Fall back, sway to and fro.
All gaze around, but naught they see
But rock, and bush, and bank, and tree,
Whence shoots the flame of the fusee,
And deadly balls shower fearfully ;

No mark for aim or blow,
Save now and then a plumaged head,
A tawny arm, a legging red,
A muzzle bent, an eye of dread,
An instant seen, an instant fled,

Ere gun or pike can bear.
Although six hundred gallant men
Were gathered in that narrow glen,

All yielded to despair ;
Veterans of many a bloody field,
Whose creed, to mortal foe than yield
Was with stern pride to die ;

And redmen, burning to oppose
Their fierce hereditary foes,
With wild and craven terror shook,
And cast round many an anxious look
Where, where to hide or fly;
Destruction seemed to hover round,
Though such their numbers, scarce was found
Room for the fall'n to lie.

VI.

The Otter, with his eager hand
On his fasces, defying stand
Had taken, where in crowded band
Had paused his tawny host,
All cowering, as amongst them came
Death borne upon the frequent flame,
Forgotten song and boast,
When, lo! a thicket, clustering dense
Upon the side, was scattered thence,
Planted by mocking art, and there,
Ah, treachery! ah, treachery!
Was the fell Raven, pointing where
A slanting cavern opened free
A passage up the rugged steep
Then leading way with struggling leap;
Safe from the death all round that fell,
The Otter entered with a yell,
And echoing it with piercing swell
Each redman leaves the fatal dell.

Following The Raven up they went,
The cavern's roof above them bent,
Till suddenly it ceased, and round
Ledges and trees were only found;
But still The Raven for their guide,
They turned their bosoms to the side.
Now to the pino's great roots they clung,
Now to the elm's drooped branches hung,
Now by the hemlock up they swung,
And now from rock to rock they sprung,
Till all firm footing made;
Then each one sought his bush and tree,
And sent the deadly bullet free
In turn upon the enemy,

Whose coverts were betrayed.
Then shrub and grass shot startled look,
Then rose plumed heads from many a nook.
Trees with descending figures shook,
Wild warriors crouching lairs forsook,
And sought each open space;
Then closed the foes in desperate strife,
With hatchet, clubbed fusee and knife,
Fierce struggling face to face.

VII.

From the impending death relieved,
The soldiers new-born hope received,
And, shaming of their late despair,
With braeing strength they upwards bear,
Climbing the cavern high;

The fray above fills eye and ear,
Now far — now nigh — now there — now here
Shot, clash and groan and cry.
Between the trees quick figures dash,
Echo fuseses and hatchets flash,
Blood pattering, falls from o'er;
The dead and dying now and then
Roll past them downward to the glen,
Marking their path with gore.
Still up they climbed, and now their sight
Embraced in widening scope the fight.
Here on the ground writhed, snake-like, foes;
There face to face, exchanged they blows;
With aimed fusee, here, crouching deep,
There, bounding on with hatchet's sweep;
One shout for France, the air that rent,
The flushed and eager soldiers sent,
And in the furious combat blent,
O'ernatched in numbers now, and caught
In their own ambush, wildly fought
The brave Ho-nout-koh, but for naught;
Hemmed in on every hand,
Each desperate effort only brought
Thicker the knife and brand.

VIII.

At the first burst of the attack,
From his spurned chair had Frontenac
Sprung to his feet, and round, on high,
Had swept his fierce unquailing eye.

And sent his loud and stern command
Among his rocking, jostling band,
To brave the worst, unflinching stand.
As still within the glen he stood,

He saw, above, a swaying throng,
Passing a broad-spread ledge along,
Bare from the usual cloak of wood,
Where pikes and blades and hatchets rose,
Darted and fell, one storm of blows ;
That instant broke the clustered strife,

And a young warrior met his sight,
Hewing his way through with hatchet and knife,
Pikemen and Indians surrounding his flight ;
Another savage beside him clung,
And fiercely his knife too and tomahawk swung ;
Foe after foe about them fell,

But pike and hatchet still barred their path.
The young brave's struggles were terrible,

While battled the other with dogged wrath ;
The face of that other met Frontenac's eye,
He started, and pointing his sword with ery,
" We-an-dah ! base wretch ! slay the treacherous hound !"
Sprang toward the cavern with feeble bound,
But just then came flashing a tomahawk's blow,
On the head of We-au-dah who dropped below,
While broke the young brave with a mighty bound
From the cluster of foes that were pressing him round.

From thicket to thicket, from ledge to ledge,
Now seen and now lost, dashed the warrior free,
Leaping now from some dizzy edge,
Swinging now by some hanging tree ;

Bullets cut branches beside his head,
Hatchets whirled past him, but still he fled;
At length through the cavern that opened at hand
Emerged the fierce savage by Frontenac's side;
The veteran flashed at his bosom his brand,

But on, without check, went the warrior's stride:
Forward through the hollow's gloom,
Like a white bird skims his plume,—
But the foremost of those that came,
After him bounded The Raven's frame;

Onward, onward through the dell
Fleet the At-o-ta-ho went,
But now The Raven's fusee was bent,
The bullet in Ko-lah's revenge was sent,
And, amidst the father's triumphant yell,
The Dawn of Morning headlong fell.

THE TORTURE.

IX.

Night was around, the moon serene
Shed o'er all objects her beautiful sheen;
On the tents, through the boughs of the forest she beamed;
On the weapons up-piled, and round scattered, she gleamed;
In a small hollow, a pillared blaze
Blotted the silver with ruddy glaze;
Scowling Hurons a stake stood round,
Where, branches piled round him, We-an-dah was bound.

X.

Hundreds were crowded to view the sight,
The buff-coat and corselet were bathed in light
Borne by the pikemen and musketeer ;
And in the radiance ruddy and clear,
The face of the wild Adirondack was keen
As he waited impatient the torture-scene ;
While loftily in his chair placed high,
Frontenac sat with a gleaming eye.

XI.

Shouting and leaping the Hurons went,
Wildly and fiercely their limbs they bent ;
As each one passed he thrust his knife
 Deep in the stern We-an-dah's flesh,
Who, though all over were wounds from the strife,
 Though at each thrusting burst out afresh
In torrents the smoking and purple gore,
Unflinching, unshrinking, the torture bore.
As peeled from his body the skin in strips
The death-song rose to his scornful lips,
Rose to his lips, while his haughty eyes
Sought the pure depths of the rosy skies.

XII.

At length from the stamping circle bounded
 The Otter, head of the savage baud,
Close to We-an-dah ; his whoop resounded
 As he kindled the pile with a fiery brand.

But as shot a red streak the doomed chieftain around,
 He leaped with a mighty convulsive bound,
 The shrivelled thongs parted—swift forward he sprung,
 From the belt of The Otter the hatchet he tore,
 One moment in air the keen weapon he swung,
 And headlong the Huron fell dead in his gore.
 Then, with a staggering faltering force
 He cast the red hatchet; in wavering course
 It circled by Frontenac's head so near,
 That he sprung from his chair with a look of fear,
 Then plunging down, with his arms outspread,
 Prone on his face lay We-an-dah dead.

THE DEFIANCE.

XIII.

Again rose the morn! From the pine-top she bent
 Her rich golden glory on Frontenac's tent;
 The Griffins were drooping the canvas o'er,
 Two of the guardsmen were striding before:
 Within sat Frontenac; on each hand
 His leaders, arrayed with plume, mantle, and brand.
 The Raven, vile traitor! was cowering nigh,
 With gratified hate in his sullen eye.
 Full in Frontenac's flashing view
 Dawn of Morning, the hapless stood,
 A bandage showing in ruddy hue,
 Where the fell bullet had drank his blood.

Strove he to rise to his fullest height,
 Yet over his slender and graceful frame,
 Swaying it with a fearful might,
 Droopings and totterings frequent came.
 "Wolf!" burst Frontenac out at length,
 "Caught at last in thy den of strength!
 Quaver thy fierce, wild death song now!
 And yet"—a tenderness touched his brow,
 A softness grew in his gleaming eye,
 "I know not, but scarce would I have thee die!
 Answer! Why didst thou my young men slay?—
 Why didst thou keep on thy vengeful way,
 With hatchet and torch, when I wished my hand
 Knit with thine own in friendship's band?"

XIV.

The At-o-ta-ho manned his frano
 And said, while glowed his eye with flame,
 "From You-non-de-yoh's lodge of pride,
 The Cat-ra-qui swift beside,
 To where the birds forever sing,
 And flowers their sweets unceasing fling,
 The Ongue Honwee sway the knife
 Won by long years of bloody strife;
 The streams our swift ka-we-yahs skim,
 Our war-whoops wake the forests dim,
 The vales and mountains hold our game;
 And should the tribes lift hatchet red,
 Their lodges melt in midnight flame,
 Heaped are their war-paths with their dead,

Yet Yon-non-de-yoh to the sky
 Lifts his proud front, casts round his eye,
 And says, "These hunting-grounds are mine!
 And bids his deadly lightnings shine;
 Rears his stone huts within our woods,
 Sends his winged pirogues o'er our floods,
 And threatens in his burning wrath
 To sweep e'en Corlear from his path.
 Does not the panther guard his den?
 Nay, does not e'en the timid deer
 Turn when the hunter comes too near?
 And shall not Dawn of Morning, then,
 With his best blood protect the earth
 Owned by his people, whence their birth?
 And did not Yon-non-de-yoh spread
 In Dawn of Morning's path a snare,
 E'en while the calumet he bore?
 Sa-ha-wee too!"—a look of care
 Dwelt transient on his features red,
 Then grew they calm and high once more.
 "And has not Yon-non-de-yoh come,
 With all his warriors in array,
 To Dawn of Morning's forest-home,
 His huts to burn, his people slay?
 Where are his brave Ho-nout-koh! those,
 Who round their At-o-ta-ho stood
 When friends proved false, and threatened foes;
 Low lie they in their blood.
 And Roll of Thunder! of the band
 The loftiest! in the Wolf's throat too

THE DEATH.

267

He lies; and gone We-an-dah, who,
Midst the scorned Huron dogs upflew,
To Hah-wen-ne-yo's Spirit-land.
But yet, though Yon-non-de-yoh's knife
Points at the At-o-ta-ho's life,
Though Hah-wen-ne-yoh's smiles depart,
Though storms upon his head have burst,
Up Dawn of Morning lifts his heart,
And proud and lofty as when first
He braved the white man's power and art,
Dares Yon-non-de-yoh do his worst!"

XV.

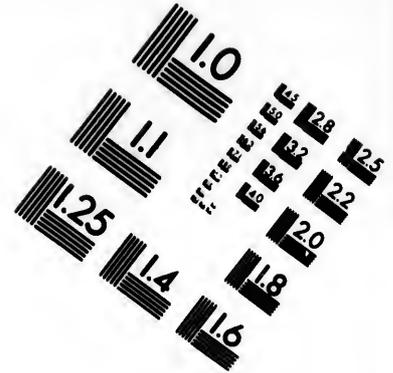

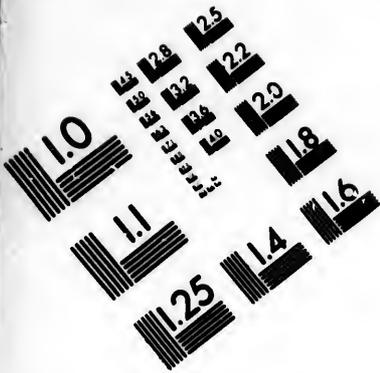

"Ha! speak'st thou words like these to me?"
Frontenac thundered. "Dar'st thou, slave?
Ho, Raven! bear him to the stake!
We'll see if there he'll tower so brave—
If flame will not his spirit break.
Haste! let us from his prute be free!"

THE DEATH.

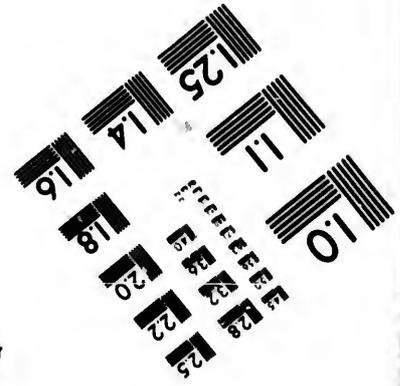

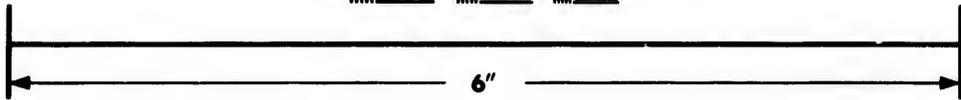

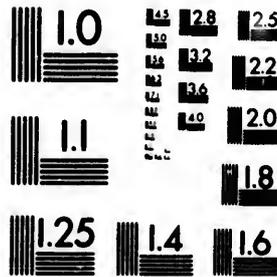

XVI.

In a green opening by Frontenac's tent,
Circling a stake, in their varied mien,
Again was the throng of the army blest,
Seemingly waiting a coming scene.

IMAGE EVALUATION
TEST TARGET (MT-3)

Photographic
Sciences
Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET
WEBSTER, N.Y. 14580
(716) 872-4503

18 20 22 25
18 20 22 25
18 20 22 25

10
10
10

Suddenly shrill whoops rent the sky,
And mid an advancing Indian host,
The At-o-ta-ho met each eye,
Treading in majesty towards the post.
Beside him The Raven, fierce frowning, came
With a pine-torch flaring in smoky flame ;
Louder and louder the whoops pealed out,
Wildly flashed hatchets and knives about,
But calmly his way the young warrior took,
Forward he gazed with a steadfast look,
That look from all traces of passion exempt,
Save that of freezing and lofty contempt,
Trampling beneath o'en the weakness and pain,
So late before Frontenac claiming their reign.

XVII.

Now to the stake is bound his waist,
Leaves and branches are round him placed ;
Then as ceases the whooping din,
The Raven's revilings and taunts begin.
" Kooh ! dog and coward ! he fears to die !
He cannot look in a warrior's eye !
" Kooh ! trembling deer ! when he comes to his pain,
His moans will echo, tears fall like rain !
That the great At-o-ta-ho ! shame !
I see but a coward who fears the flame !
That Dawn of Morning proud and high !
I see but a coward who fears to die ! "

XVIII.

Down in disdain the young warrior gazed,
 At first on The Raven; his brow then he raised,
 As if lifting his soul o'er the jeer and the taunt,
 And from the bright hunting-grounds waiting him, he
 Was scenting the feast of the strawberry,
 And forth rushed his death-song in rapturous chaunt;
 Ringing more loud, as his foe more fierce
 Hurl'd his scorn, till The Raven pressed
 Close to his victim, to tear from his breast
 The close white robe, that his knife might pierce
 The naked flesh e'er he kindled the fire,
 Where the proud At-o-ta-ho was doomed to expire.

XIX.

Forward across his tent and back,
 With hurried stride went Frontenac.
 Deepest determination now
 Was seated on his frowning brow;
 Doubt wavered then within his eye —
 "So young, so gallant! thus to die!
 And yet!" — his face again grew stern,
 Until it worked with passion's strife —
 "Did not his hatchet seek my life?
 Did it not strike down young Lavergne?
 And" — here his wrinkled brow was fraught
 With weblike lines of crafty thought —
 "Daring and wise! he's formed to lead

The Iroquois to greatest deed;
 Escaping now, he'll tread some hour
 Upon my neck to loftiest power.
 He dies!"— Just then a figure dashed
 Within the tent, "Sa-ha-wee!"— wild
 Her starting eyeballs on him flashed.
 "Fly! save her! haste! my child! our child!
 O-nah-tah, hear'st thou! ours! she dies!"—
 "Who, who, Sa-ha-wee!"—
 "She! Lucille!"—
 The At-o-ta-ho!" Shrill her cries
 On his bewildered senses peal.
 "Lucille! the At-o-ta-ho! quick,
 Explain— quick, woman!"—

From her tongue

The rapid words in torrents sprung,
 Although with anguish hoarse and thick,
 Whilst at his feet her form she flung;
 "When Ku-an— At-o-ta-ho— fell,
 Had not Ta-yo-nee died as well,
 He would the dignity have worn
 By our law's course, and next, my child,
 Had she— thou hear'st—a son been born;
 A thought flashed o'er me quick and wild!
 When came Ta-yo-nee with her, night
 Wrapped all, none saw, her life knew none,
 And at first tidings of the death
 Of him and Ku-an, with loud breath
 From the Flame-Temple's sacred height,
 As Priestess, armed thus in my might,
 Her life I told but as a son,

All their young At-o-ta-ho hailed,
 The Union Feast approved the claim,
 And while his boyish years prevailed,
 Bade Shining Hatchet bear the name;
 Still stand'st thou here to see her die!
 Fly! on my knees I ask it! fly!"—
 "Woman! thou told'st me she was dead!"—
 "I did! my secret still to keep!"—
 Bewilderment, amazement deep,
 Yet Frontenac's pale visage spread.
 Knows she, Sa-ha-wee, I'm her sire?"
 "No! like the league she only knew
 Her father in the paleface brave,
 In his false tale Ta-yo-nee slew—
 Haste, haste, they'll kindle soon the fire;
 Will not his child a father save?
 Fly, fly, O-nah-tah! fly!"—

A shout
 Broke just then from the crowd without—
 A shout of wonder wild—he sprung,
 The tent's front folds he open flung,
 There, Heavenly Powers! St. Francis! there!
 There, with a woman's breast made bare
 By the recoiled fierce Raven's hands,
 The mighty At-o-ta-ho stands,
 Stands with a shrinking drooping frame,
 As if crushed down with deepest shame;
 But as looked Frontenac, like thought
 Lucille leaned forward, stretched her arm,
 The torch light from The Raven caught

And fired the pile; in mad alarm
Forward the father leaped with cry
Of "Pluck him thence!" yelled shrill and high,
"Ho! Pluck him thence!" his hair streams out,
"His arms he stretches,—but the shout
None of the crowd wild-rooking hears;
All is confusion clamorous there,
Eyes forward fixed, tongues rending air,
The fires dread crackling fills his ears,
And on he struggles, "pluck him thence!"
None heed, obey none, still he calls,
Till darkness sweeps o'er every sense,
And, fainting, mid the throng he falls.
A form springs past with frantic force,
Through the dense crowd it cleaves-its course.
"The Priestess!" on—down gleams her knife,
The Raven yields his groaning life;
Into the fire she dashes now,
And, nerved with all her mad despair,
One flashing wreath around her brow,
Around her form one blazing glare,
She breaks from out the scattered flame,
And forth she drags a blackened frame
Which, staggering wildly to its knee,
An arm throws proudly to the skies,
Sounds a low war-whoop brokenly,
Then drops and, struggling faintly, dies.
Turned into stone, with frenzied gaze,
The talons of the ravenous blaze
Keen in her flesh, the Priestess kneels

Beside her child, a shriek then peals,
A shriek of agony, so shrill,
It made the hearts all round her thrill,
Then swift as light, her knife she sheathed
 Within her breast, her blood gushed red,
And as "I come, Lucille!" she breathed,
 She fell across her daughter, dead.

FRONTENAC.

XX.

Years, alas! how fast they fly!
April's clouds along the sky!
Bubbles on the gliding stream!
Dyes that in the rainbow gleam!
Leaves that autumn's tempests sever!
Thus they fly, and fly for ever!

XXI.

Five rapid years have passed away,
And on Quebec's embattled height
The sunset sleeps with mellow ray,
 Making the mountain soft and bright.
Rich rose is on Cape Diamond's head,
Glints, here and there, the river's bed,
While to the voyageur's rude eye,
 Paddling along his birch canoe,

A streak of silver, curving high
 The gold enamelled foliage through,
 Tells the tall Montmorenci's leap
 From its sunk valley down the steep.

XXII.

The wide Placo d'Armes in shade was cast,
 And on it was a concourse vast.
 Bateauman, hunter, courier, scout,
 Noble and monk, were grouped about,
 Whispering and pale as if in fear
 That some calamity was near.

"He's dying, Merle!" with sorrowing air
 The young Carignan Pierre said low,
 "How know'st thou?"

"The old guard Allaire

Told me a brief half-hour ago!"

"Has he not seemed to waste away,
 Since the strange dreadful scene that day
 Down in the On-on-dah-gah woods?"

"Yes! all through those grim solitudes
 Haggard his visage was and wild,
 And since that hour he's never smiled.
 Well, mainly he's been just and good,
 Though fierce and hasty in his mood;
 The Holy Virgin waft his soul
 Up to its pure and happy goal!"

"Hark!" just then came a deep stern swoll

Along the air, a heavy clang:
 It was the castle's giant bell,

And loud, slow, startling tolls it rang.
Clang, clang again — clang, clang again —
It seemed to strike to every brain,
The low vibrating hum between
Quivering along the awe-struck scene.
Stirred by one impulse stood the crowd
With brow uncovered, shoulders bowed;
They knew the tale that solemn bell,
The sorrowing tale 'twas swung to tell;
Quebec rang out in every street,
Cape Diamond back the volume beat,
The walls spoke forth in deep rebound,
The river's breast returned the sound;
It needed not that gray Allaire,
 With trembling voice and bended head,
Should from the sally-port declare
 That noble Frontenac was dead.

MASS FOR THE DEAD.

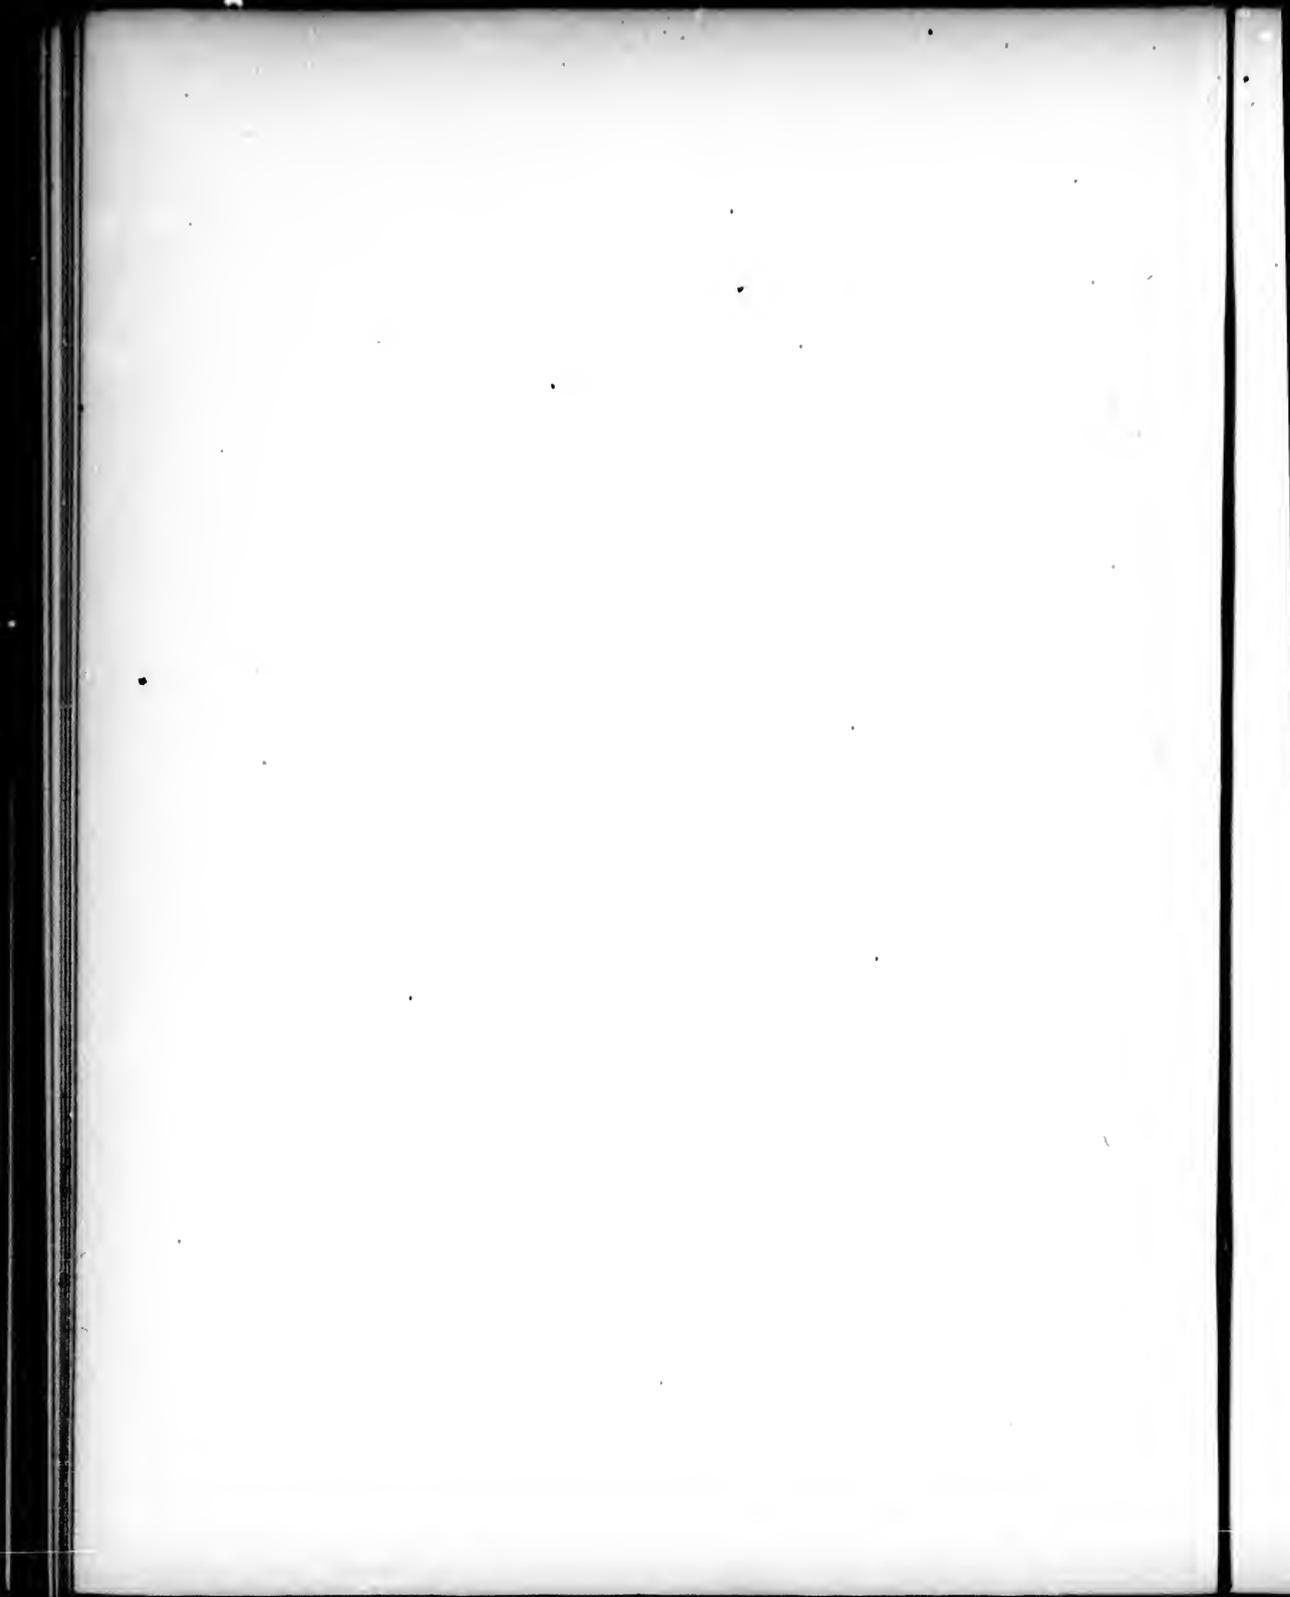

XXIII.

Sunset again o'er Quebec
 Spread like a gorgeous pall;
Again does its rich glowing loveliness deck
 River, and castle, and wall.
Follows the twilight haze,
 And now the star-gemmed night;

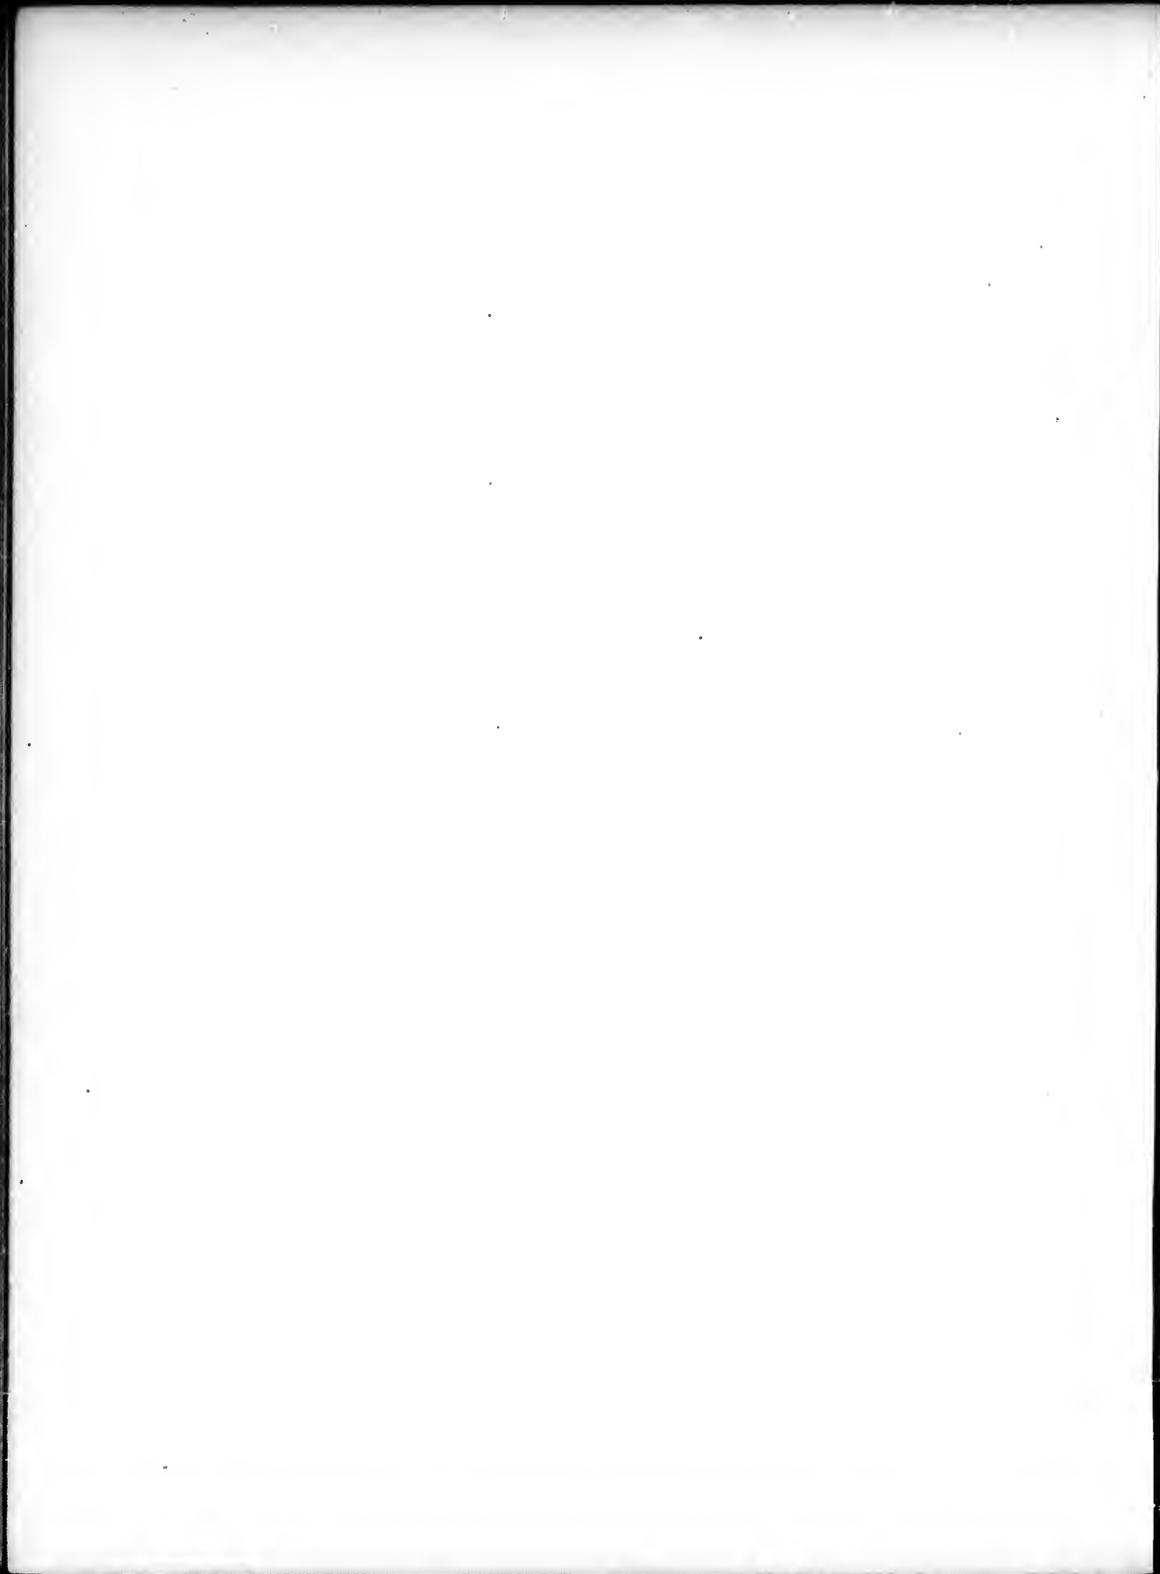

And outbursts the Recollets' church in a blaze
Of glittering spangling light.
Crowds in the spacious pile
Are thronging the aisles and nave,
With soldiers from altar to porch, in file,
All motionless, mute, and grave.
Censers are swinging around,
Wax-lights are shedding their glare,
And, rolling majestic its volume of sound,
The organ oppresses the air.
The saint within its niche,
Pillar, and picture, and cross,
And the roof in its soaring and stately pitch
Are gleaming in golden gloss.
The chorister's sorrowing strain
Sounds shrill as the winter breeze,
Then low and soothing, as when complain
Soft airs in the summer trees.
The taper-starred altar before,
Deep mantled in mourning black,
With sabre and plume on the pall spread o'er,
Is the coffin of Frontenac.
Around it the nobles are bowed,
And near are the guards in their grief,
While the sweet-breathing incense is wreathing its cloud
Over the motionless chief.
But the organ and singer have ceased,
Leaving a void in air,
And the long-drawn chaunt of the blazon'd priest
Rises in suppliancè there.

Again the deep organ shakes
The walls with its mighty tone,
And through it again the sweet melody breaks
Like a sorrowful spirit's moan.
A sudden silence now;
Each knee has sought the floor;
The priest breathes his blessings with upturn'd brow,
And the requiem is o'er.

END.

NOTES.

NOTES.

CANTO FIRST.

STANZA I.

WAS in June's bright and glowing prime,
The loveliest of the summer time.
The laurels were one splendid sheet
Of crowded blossom everywhere;
The locust's clustered pearl was sweet,
And the tall whitewood made the air
Delicious with the fragrance shed
From golden flowers all o'er it spread."

The appearance of the American forests in June is truly magnificent. The fresh leaves are so closely set, and are so bright in hue, as to cause the branches to look as if clothed in an emerald fleece. The laurel thickets are one sheet of superb blossom, whilst the locust and the whitewood display their white and yellow flowers in unison with the dogwood, linden, and chestnut, as if the wood genii had scattered gigantic bouquets among the green summits.

STANZA II.

"In the rich pomp of dying day
Quebec, the rock-throned monarch, glowed."

"Quebec is from Quebeco, which in the Algonquin language signifies contraction." — Charlevoix's New France.

"The batteries rude that niched their way
Along the cliff."

The fortifications of Quebec at this period of our tale (1672) were very incomplete, consisting of batteries scattered along the edges and inequalities of the cliff, with here and there palisades between, and embankments of earth and stone upon the landward end of the town.

"Beyond, the sweet and mellow smile
Beamed upon Orleans' lovely isle;
Until the downward view
Was closed by mountain-tops that, reared
Against the burnished sky, appeared
In misty dreamy hue."

"The river itself (the St. Lawrence) which is between five and six miles wide, visible as far as the distant end of the Island of Orleans, where it loses itself amidst the mountains that bound it on each side, is one of the most beautiful objects in nature."— Weld's Travels in North America.

STANZA XIX.

"Reared on the cliff, at the very brink,
Whence a pebble dropped would sink
Four-score feet to the slope below,
The castle of St. Louis caught."

The castle of St. Louis was built upon the edge of a rock which fell sheer down for about eighty feet, and then sloped more gradually until within a short distance of the river side. The narrow strip of level ground immediately along the river, was in line with the rock, scattered with huts and cabins of a rude description.

STANZA XX.

" Opposite, in the soft warm light
 The Recollets' steeple glittered bright;
 And tipped with gold was the convent by,
 Whilst both threw a mantle of raven dye
 The broad Place d'Armes across,
 That up to the massive curtain lay."

" The fortress of St. Louis covered about four acres of ground and formed nearly a parallelogram; on the western side, two strong bastions on each angle were connected by a curtain in the centre of which was a sallyport."— Bouchette's Canada.

The castle of St. Louis stood within this fortress. " Care should be taken," says Hawkins, in his Picture of Quebec, " to distinguish between the castle and the fortress of St. Louis."

" Twenty paces further we arrive at two pretty large squares or openings. That on the left is the Place d'Armes, which is before the castle where the governor-general resides. The Recollets are opposite."— Charlevoix's Description of Quebec in 1711.

" The Recollets' church is opposite the gate of the palace on the west side, looks well, and has a pretty high-pointed steeple."— Kalm's Travels in North America.

Both these authors wrote some time after the periods of our tale, and probably the curtain and bastions which composed the fort were removed before their visits.

" Immediately in front of the castle was an esplanade or open space still called the Place d'Armes, on one side of which stood the church and convent of the Recollets."— Hawkins' Picture of Quebec.

STANZA XXII.

" Wampum in varied colors strung,"

" Belts of wampum are made of shells found on the coasts of

New England and Virginia, which are sawed out luto beads of an oblong form about a quarter of an inch long, and round like other beads. Being strung on leather strips, and several of them sewed neatly together with blue sluewy threads, they then compose what is termed a belt of wampum."—Carter's Travels.

STANZA XXIV.

"The Iroquois in their dread and might Stood frowning in his mental sight."

"The name of Iroquois is purely French, and has been formed from the term hiro or hero which signifies I have said, and by which these savages terminate their discourse, as the Latins sometimes did by their dixi; and from koué, which is a cry as well of distress when it is pronounced long, as also of joy when they pronounce it shorter."—Histoire et Description de la Nouvelle France, par le P. De Charlevoix.

"Naught in the woods now their might could oppose,
Naught could withstand their confederate blows;
Banded in strength and united in soul,
They moved on their course with the cataract's roll."

The Iroquois were formerly separate nations, and for a long time not only warred amongst themselves, but were driven from point to point by their common enemies, the Adirondacks, the Hurons, &c. They at length, however, for the purpose of healing their own dissensions and to protect themselves against their enemies, formed themselves into a league or confederacy. By thus concentrating their power, they were not only enabled successfully to resist aggression, but to drive, in their turn, their enemies before them, the fire-arms given them by the Dutch assisting them materially in so doing. When this league was formed is uncertain. "Pyr-laus, a missionary at the ancient site of Dionderoga or Fort Hunter, writing between 1742 and 1748," says Schoolcraft in his Notes on the Iroquois, "as the result of the best conjectures he could form, from information derived from the Mohawks, that the alliance took place 'one age' or the length of a man's life, before the white people came into the country. Taking 1609, the era of the Dutch discovery, and estimating a 'man's life' by the patriarchal and scriptural rule, we should not, at the utmost, have a more remote date than 1539, as the origin of the confederacy."

STANZA XXV.

"Wherever the banner of France was reared,
The blood-thirsty hate of the braves appeared;
Kindled against Champlain when first
His lightning death on their sires had burst."

"The progress of its (Quebec's) aggrandizement was slow, for the new settlers, and indeed Champlain at their head, were not only so impolitic as to encourage the prosecution of hostilities between the two neighboring nations of Algonquins (Adirondacks) and Iroquois, but even to join the former against the latter. This interference drew upon the French the hatred of the powerful Iroquois, and was the means of involving the whole colony in a long and most destructive warfare, which at an early period rendered some defensive fortifications necessary to protect Quebec from the enmity of her new but implacable enemies."—Bouchette's Canada.

STANZA XXIX.

"A captive brought to the shores of France
By noble De Tracy with her sire."

The governors-general of Canada were accustomed in those days to send or take with them as captives to France, those of the native race who had fallen into their hands. See the histories of the period.

CANTO SECOND.

STANZA II.

"Their Long House extended now, spacious and high,
The branches its rafters, its canopy sky,
From Co-ha-ta-te-yah's full oceanward bed,
To where its great bosom Ontario spread."

The term Long House was used by the Iroquois symbolically, to denote the league they had formed, and also to describe the continuity of their possessions or territory. The Long House was constantly alluded to by their orators, and also in conversation amongst themselves.

"To the league which was formed on the banks of Onondaga lake," says Schoolcraft in his Notes on the Iroquois, "they in time gave the name of the Long House, using the term symbolically, to denote that they were tied and braced together by blood and lineage as well as political bonds. This house, agreeably to the allusion so often made by their speakers during our colonial history, reached from the banks of the Hudson to the lakes."

"The fierce Adirondacks had fled from their wrath,
The Hurons been swept from their merciless path."

"The Iroquois, after they confederated, drove the Adirondacks from their ancient hunting-grounds around Quebec, and under its walls defeated the Hurons in a dreadful battle beneath the very eyes of the French, who dared not leave the protection of their embankments to assist their allies. They destroyed the nation called the Eries on the borders of the vast lake known by their name. They made the Ottawas abandon their river, humbled the Lenni Lenape or Delawares, once strong and powerful, to such an extent as to force them to declare themselves women, and place themselves under the protection of their haughty conquerors, and at last carried the terror of their arms even amongst the distant Illini, Pequods, and even Cherokees."—See Colden's History of the Five Nations, Schoolcraft's Notes on the Iroquois, and other histories of the time.

"By the far Mississippi, the Illini shrank
When the trail of the TORTOISE was seen on the bank ;
On the hills of New England the Pequod turned pale,
When the howl of the WOLF swelled at night on the gale ;
And the Cherokee shook in his green-smiling bowers,
When the foot of the BEAR stamped his carpet of flowers."

"Each of these nations (the Five Nations or Iroquois) is divided again into three tribes or families, who distinguish themselves by three different arms or ensigns — the TORTOISE, the WOLF, and the BEAR."—Colden's History of the Five Nations. (They are called the Five Nations by the English, and the Iroquois by the French).

There were five other totems than those mentioned by Colden, but these three were the most ancient and the highest in rank, the totem of the TORTOISE being the highest of all, on account of the belief of the Iroquois that the earth rested on the back of a tortoise.

The order of the eight totems resembled somewhat that of the tribes of Israel, amongst which the tribes of Benjamin and Judah occupied the highest grade.

"They (the Five Nations) carried their arms as far south as Carolina, to the northward of New England, and as far west as the river Mississippi, over a vast country which extends twelve hundred miles in length from north to south, and about six hundred miles in breadth, where they entirely destroyed many nations, of whom there are now no accounts remaining among the English."—Colden's History of the Five Nations.

STANZA V.

"The league's At-o-ta-ho."

The At-o-ta-ho is the head chief of the Iroquois. The history of this rulership is as follows:— Just before the formation of the confederacy, a most extraordinary and formidable warrior was heard of amongst the Onondagas. Living serpents composed the hairs of his head, which so entangled and knotted themselves up in their motions, that he acquired the name of At-o-ta-ho, meaning entangled. Not only was his head a mass of writhing reptiles, but his fingers and toes were terminated by them, hissing and launching out their tongues perpetually. So dreadful was his aspect that the very sight of him caused instant death. When the two other projectors of the alliance, however, visited him, protected by Hah-wen-ue-yo in their divine mission, they approached and divested him of his snaky trappings, unharmed. At the completion of the alliance he was made Grand Sachem of the confederacy, his two brethren supernaturally disappearing. He still preserved the name of At-o-ta-ho, and when he died his name and office were continued. A long line of At-o-tahos thus succeeded, extending down in a regular chain to the present day.

STANZA VI.

"'Twas May! the Spring with mangle bloom
Leaped up from Winter's frozen tomb."

"Scarcely is the ground cleared of snow in Canada, when vegetation breaks forth, not gradually as with us, but with almost preternatural rapidity."—Murray's British America.

"The yacht, that stood with naked mast."

The yacht was a species of vessel much used in the rivers and lakes of Canada at that period, and frequently mentioned by the old writers. It had one high mast, and much resembled the sloops that ply on the Hudson and other rivers in the United States.

"The brown rossignol's carol shrill."

This is one of the earliest, if not the earliest spring bird in Canada. It is of a brown color, and sings sweetly.

"He saw the coltsfoot's golden head."

"The coltsfoot is the first flower of spring. It is a low, yellow, syngenesious flower, much resembling the dandelion."—Gosse's Canadian Naturalist.

STANZA VIII.

"The Huron runner of Lorette."

The Hurons of Lorette were the fast allies of the French, and resided in the little village of Lorette a few miles from Quebec. A runner was a messenger, and selected for his speed of foot and endurance of hunger and fatigue. These runners would frequently travel from a hundred to a hundred and thirty miles between sun and sun.

"Holding a wampum belt in sight,
Of braided colors black and white."

"Wampum is of several colors, but the black and white are chiefly used. Those given to Sir William Johnson were in several rows, black on each side and white in the middle; the white being placed in the centre was to express peace, and that the path between them was fair and open."—Long's Travels.

"That Yon-non-de-yoh aska a talk."

Yon-non-de-yoh was the name given by the Iroquois to the governor-general of Canada. Hennepin says it signifies a fine mountain.

"The tree of peace between to set."

"The tree of peace is a symbolic metaphor for peace itself."
—La Montan.

STANZA X.

"Along the castle's beaten square."

The Indian villages are called castles by the old writers. "Their castles," says Colden, "are generally a square surrounded with palisades without any bastions or outworks."

"The famous Temple of the Glow
Extended its long log-built frame."

In Onondaga, Tear-jis-ta-yo, signifying the house of the sacred flame."

"Shrining within the sacred flame
Whose star it never ceased to show."

The Onondaga canton was the central one of the Five Can-tons of the Iroquois. This Canton, from its position, was the place of the general council fire, a seat of government of the nations. The castle or village in Onondaga Hollow was the particular spot of this council fire. Here it was kept, according to the histories of the period "continually burning." This was probably a metaphorical term to show the perpetuity of the league, but I have chosen, for poetical purposes, to consider it literal. I am justified in this by the fact that amongst the Chippewayans there was a fire kept perpetually burning, answering somewhat to the vestal fire of the Romans, and also that the Natches nation preserved a continual fire in their sacred temple.

"The feast of union every year
Renewing by the radiance clear
The tie in each confederate's heart."

"The feast of union is a term used by the Iroquois to signify the renewing of the alliance between the five Iroquois nations. Every year the Five Cantons send deputies to assist at the union feast, and to smoke in the great calumet or pipe of the five nations."— La Hontan.

STANZA XV.

"Once every year a glowing brand,
Whose sparkles from the flame had birth,
Was borne by Spark of Sunlight's hand
To every On-on-dah-gah hearth."

It was a striking peculiarity of the ancient religious system of the Iroquois that once a year the priesthood supplied the people with sacred fire. "For this purpose, a set time was announced for the ruling priest's visit. The entire village was apprised of this visit, and the master of each lodge was expected to be prepared for this annual rite. Preliminary to Howe's ~~the~~ his lodge fire was carefully put ~~off~~ and ashes scattered ~~about~~ it."— Schoolcraft's Notes on the Iroquois.

"The brand made red
By the whirled wheel."

The mode, as I was informed by a Cayuga sachem, of supplying fire, by a wheel turned rapidly round.

STANZA XVII.

"White as the snow the lake-marsh shed."

The salt marshes of the Onondaga lake, white with the crystallized salt.

STANZA XVIII.

"His own rich pipe was hung below,
Its bowl and stem one general glow;
With thickly pictured tints of red,
Telling of actions stern and dread."

The Iroquois warriors covered their garments, pipes, bows and tomahawks, with the emblems or representations of their deeds on the war-path. These were stained red, that being the favorite war color.

"Broad shewed snow-shoes; girdles blue."

The snow-shoes which the savages used, were calculated to bear their weight on the deep snows of a northern winter, when chasing their game.

The girdle, or waistcloth, was a strip of cloth or skin, twined around their loins, and used by the warriors both on their war-paths and in their villages.

When made of cloth they were generally of a blue color.

" Whilst from the floor a sapling sprung,
With human scalps upon it strung."

It was the custom of the Iroquois to plant a long pole in their lodges, and string upon it the scalps they had taken in the war-path.

STANZA XXIII.

" Whene'er he struck the battle-post,
She hung delighted on his boast."

The Iroquois warrior on the eve of an expedition always danced his war-dance around the war-post, boasting of his exploits, and striking at the same time the post with his tomahawk or war-club.

STANZA XXVII.

" Upon the pleasant outside green,
Two shouting bands, the gates between,
With their broad rackets sent on high
The ball now soaring to the sky."

Ball-playing was a favorite pastime amongst the Iroquois.

They played with rackets (which resembled the tennis rackets or the battledoors of the whites, only larger), fixing two sticks upright in the earth several inches apart, and then planting similar ones five or six hundred paces opposite. These were called gates. The art of the play consisted in keeping the ball by the aid of the rackets continually in the air, and if it passed or fell beyond the gates, the party or band whose duty it was to keep it within, lost the play.

STANZA XXVIII.

"Here through the alleys warriors bore
Short scarlet cloaks their shoulders o'er."

"Both the young and the old hang upon their backs, in a careless way, a covering of hide or scarlet, when they go abroad to walk or make visits."—La Montan.

STANZA XXXVIII.

"A guttural quick 'yo-hah!' awake
From the dark ring."

"Yo-hah! denotes approbation, being a loud shout or cry consisting of a few notes pronounced by the Indians, in the nature of our huzzas."—Collen's History of the Five Nations.

STANZA XXXIX.

"Thence to the castle roof descended,
And bathed in radiance pure and deep
The spires and dwellings of the steep.
Still downward crept the strengthening rays;
The lofty crowded roofs below."

"Quebec is divided into the upper and lower city. The merchants live in the latter for the conveniency of the harbor, upon which they have built very fine houses three stories high, of a sort of stone that is hard as marble. The upper or high city is full as populous and well adorned as the lower. Both cities are commanded by a castle that stands upon the highest ground. The castle is the residence of the governors."—La Montan's Description of Quebec in 1684.

"And Cat-a-ra-qui caught the glow."

The Iroquois name for the river St. Lawrence.

"The scattered bastions — walls of stone
With bristling lines of cannon crowned."

"A little above the bastion on the right, they have made a bastion in the rock. There is a little square fort still above this called the citadel. From the angle of the citadel they have made an oriel of a bastion, from whence they have made a curtain at right angles."— Charlevoix's Description.

"As the place (Quebec) obtained consequence, and became an object of desire to other and far more powerful enemies than the native savages, it was in the last mentioned year (1691) fortified in a more regular manner by works according to the rules of art, built of stone, which from that period have been attended to."— Bouchette's Canada.

"The basin glowed in splendid dyes."

"The wide part of the river immediately below Quebec is called the basin."— Weld's Travels in Canada.

"And chequered tints of light and shade
The banks of Orleans' Isle displayed."

"The island of Orleans is seven leagues in length, and three in breadth. It is surrounded with plantations that produce all sorts of grain."— La Montan.

STANZA XL.

"A brigantine her canvas spread,
And as her sailor-songs outbroke
Down toward the southern channel sped."

"A brigantine is a small vessel with one deck, built of light wood, which piles both with oars and sails. It is equally sharp at bow and poop, and is built for a quick sailer."— La Montan.

"At Quebec the river divides itself into two branches. The ships sail through the South channel, for the North channel is so foul with shelves and rocks, that the small boats can only pass that way."— La Montan.

"From Skan-na-da-rio's boundless blue."

"The Iroquols name for lake Ontario, meaning a very pretty lake."— See Hennepin.

"And a bateau forth slowly slipped
Its little wooden anchors tripped,
The boatmen at their poles low bending."

The bateau was a long flat boat sharp at both ends, used to transport heavy articles along the rivers and shores of the lakes. They were propelled by long poles, against which the boatmen placed their shoulders and pushed with all their strength. In smooth deep places they used oars, and in the broad breezy reaches hoisted a sail.

"About midnight we weighed our little wooden anchors, and one half the men rowed, whilst the others were at rest."— La Montan.

STANZA XLI.

"With pike and corselet, grim and scarred,
And measured step, or, strode a guard.

Frontenac had a body of soldiers who were immediately armed around his person, called his guards. "Count Frontenac," says Hennepin, "gave me two of his guards, who understood very well how to manage a canoe, to carry me to Quebec." La Montan also mentions them.

"Couriers de bois loud chattering went,
Beneath their packs of peltry bent."

"Couriers de bois, i. e. forest rangers, are French or Canadese; so called from employing their whole life in the rough exercise of transporting merchandize goods to the lakes of Canada, and to all the other nations of the continent in order to trade with the savages." They exchanged their goods for beaver skins, and ran in canoes hundreds of leagues up the rivers and lakes of the country.— See La Hontan.

"The half-blood scout, with footstep light,
Passed, glancing round his rapid sight."

Scouts were much employed by the French at that period to track the forest. They were generally half-breeds.

"And rough bateaumen, grouped in bands."

The bateaumen constituted, as well as the couriers de bois, a distinct class by themselves. They associated together, and were rude in speech and manner.

STANZA XLII.

"'St. Francis! keep it far away,'
Exclaimed a passing Recollet."

The Recollets were monks of the order of St. Francis. They were the first priests that settled in Canada, and were employed as missionaries generally amongst the Indians.— See Hennepin, who belonged himself to the order.

"A rough Carignan settler said."

"The Carignan Salières were a French regiment which on its return from Hungary, was sent to Canada to make war against the Iroquois, and the greater part of the regiment, after the war, remained in the country and became settlers."—Charlevoix's Nouvelle France.

The descendants of this regiment were ever afterwards, and are to this day, called Carignons.

"Hush, Merle, the calumet behold!"

"The savages make use of the calumet for negotiations, and state affairs; for when they have a calumet in their hand they go where they will in safety."—La Hontan.

"One with the calumet may venture amongst his enemies."—Marquette.

It was, in fact, the Indian's flag of truce.

"Passed crouching hut and building grey."

Quebec in 1696 (the time of the greater portion of our tale) consisted of houses built of grey stone, interspersed with the sheds and cabins of the fur-traders, hunters, &c., &c.

STANZA XLIII.

"On came the At-o-ta-ho's tread,
Leading the file of his tawny band."

The Indians always march in single file, so as to tread in each other's footprint, and thereby conceal their numbers, and also their trail as much as possible.

"Whilst high he lifted in his hand
That sign of peace, the calumet,
So sacred to the Indian soul,
With its stem of reed, and its dark red bowl,
Flaunting with feathers, white, yellow, and green."

"I must here speak of the calumet, the most mysterious thing in the world. The sceptres of our kings are not so much respected, for the savages have such a deference for this pipe that we may call it the god of peace and war, and the arbiter of life and death. They adorn it with feathers of several colors."—Marquette.

"The head is finely polished; and the quill, which is commonly two feet and a half long, is made of a pretty strong reed. They tie to it two wings of the most curious birds they find."—Hennepin.

"The red calumets are most esteemed. It is trimmed with white, yellow, and green feathers, and has the same effect amongst the savages that the flag of friendship has with us; for to violate the rights of this venerable pipe is amongst them a flaming crime."—La Hontan.

The calumet is a large smoking-pipe made of marble, most commonly of dark red."—Colden.

STANZA XLIV.

"A short fusee his shoulders crossed."

"Short and light fusees are in use amongst the savages."—La Hontan.

"His head the bristling scalp-lock bore."

"The Indian warrior shaves his head, with the exception of a long lock upon the crown, to facilitate the taking the scalp, should he fall into the power of his enemy.

"A heron plume of snow hung o'er,

(Memorial of that bird that swept

Its way to Hah-yoh-wont-hah dread,

And whose pure plumage long was kept

To deck each bravest warrior's head.")

Hah-yoh-wont-hah was one of the three projectors and makers of the league, or confederation, of the Iroquois. The other two were At-o-ta-ho and To-gan-a-we-tah. The three were considered of preternatural origin, and possessed of preternatural qualities. Hah-yoh-wont-hah, however, had dwelt long amongst them, choosing the Onondagas for his nation, and Onondaga lake for his residence. Here he married and had a daughter, who was regarded almost as divine. He instructed his people in the arts of hunting, agriculture, and war, was deeply venerated, and at last proposed, with the two others, the alliance. Whilst standing in the midst of the assemblage of the Five Nations which was congregated on the shores of the lake to join in the league, with his daughter by his side, a rushing sound was heard, and a great white bird swooped from the heavens and fell at the side of Hah-yoh-wont-hah, crushing his daughter in its fall. The warriors around him rushed to pluck the plumes from the wings of the bird to place by their scalp-locks, and the feathers were preserved afterwards to adorn the heads of the most valiant warriors of the confederacy. When these feathers became destroyed the plumes of the white heron supplied their places. In process of time, the At-o-ta-ho alone acquired the right to wear the white heron plume, in his capacity of head sachem, as well as head war-chief of the confederacy.

The name of this bird was Sah-dah-ga-ah in Seneca, and Hah-googhs in Onondaga. The meaning in both dialects is the bird of the clouds.

"Behind, his mat hung, richly dyed."

The Iroquois warrior always hung his mat, stained with rich colors, at his back when equipped fully for his talks, or ceremonial visits to the high personages of the white race.

"And dangling loosely at his side,
His pouch of rabbit skin was seen."

The pouch held the tobacco for his pipe. It was generally made of the whole skin of some small animal — a rabbit, fox, or the largest species of squirrel.

"His hatchet o'er his mat was slung,
Whilst his long knife before him hung."

The hatchet or tomahawk, was carried slung at the back, with the handle up ready for the hand, and the scalping-knife, for the same reason, was placed in the wampum belt before.

STANZA XLV.

"'Hai! hai!' they sounded oft and loud."

The cry, Hai! hai! in the Iroquois language is the sign of peace. "There was an Iroquese captain," says Hennepin "who, one day wanting his bow, entered into the town of Montreal, in Canada, crying 'Hai! hai!' which, in their language, is the sign of peace; he was received with many caresses of kindness."

"Thus down St. Louis street, that led
To the Place d'Armes, all slowly sped."

The long street that led from the walls of Quebec to the square or Place d'Armes, was called in Frontenac's time, as it still is, St. Louis street.

STANZA XLVIII.

"What doth my Canada father say?"

The governor-general was styled by the Iroquois Canada father, as well as Yon-non-de-yoh.

STANZA XLIX.

"Why should the Ongue Honwee host?"

"The Five Nations (or Iroquois) think themselves superior to the rest of all mankind, and call themselves Ongue Honwee, that is, men surpassing all others."—Colden.

"Why should our pathway with a cloud
The brave Ho-de-no-some shroud!"

The confederated nations, although called Iroquois by the French, never adopted the name. The name they bore among themselves was the Ho-de-no-sonne, meaning, the United People, or the people of the Long House. They took this name after they had formed themselves into the league, so often alluded to. The term Ongue Honwee was a phrase, not a name.

"From distant Missillimakinak."

"The couriers de bois have a small settlement at Missillimakinak."—La Hontan.

"We'll smoke the calumet together."

Smoking the calumet together is, with the Indians, a sure sign of friendship.

"This belt preserves my words."

"This collar (belt of wampum) confirms or contains my words." This expression frequently occurs in the speeches of La Barré and Garangula, in their celebrated interview, as described by La Hontan. "Without the intervention of these collars," says La Hontan, "there is no business to be negotiated with the savages; for, being altogether unacquainted with writing, they make use of them for contracts and obligations. In regard that every collar has its peculiar mark, they learn from the old persons the circumstances of the time and place in which they were delivered."

"By deeds or singing-birds."

Singing-birds mean, figuratively, tale bearers.

"Fusces, to bring the fleet moose low;
Rackets, to hunt him in the snow."

Fusces were most generally amongst the gifts to the Indians. The snow-shoes were called, as well as the ball-clubs, rackets by the French, and were used by the savages to hunt the moose and deer in the deep drifts of the winter forests.

STANZA L.

"When, in his snowy-winged canoe,
First Walking Thunder crept to view."

Walking Thunder was the name given to Champlain, by the Iroquois, on account of the fire-arms he carried when they first came in contact with him.

"The Adirondack dogs the knife
Against my people held in strife,
Red ever with their blood."

Champlain, on his first arrival in Canada, found the Adirondacks and Iroquois at war; the former had driven the latter from their hunting-grounds, and were generally successful in their encounters with them.

"Beside that broad and lovely lake,
Where dwells the prophet of the winds."

"There is a rock in this lake (Corlear's lake, or lake Champlain, as it is now called), on which the waves dash and fly up to a great height when the wind blows hard. The Indians believe that an old Indian lives under this rock, who has the power of the winds; and, therefore, as they pass it in their voyages over, they always throw a pipe or some other small present to the old Indian, and pray a favorable wind."—Colden.

"Herding with those base dogs, the fires
Of Walking Thunder fiercely flashed
Against the bosoms of our sires,
And to the earth their bravest dashed,
Sudden, as when the lightning's bound
Cleaves the proud hemlock to the ground."

"Monsieur Champlain, the first governor of Canada, joined the Adirondacks in an expedition against the Five Nations. They met a party of two hundred men of the Five Nations in Corlear's lake, which the French on this occasion called by Monsieur Champlain's name, and both sides went ashore to prepare for battle, which proved to the disadvantage of the Five Nations. The French began to join battle; and their fire-arms surprised the Five Nations so much that they were immediately put into confusion, for before that time they had never seen such weapons."—Colden.

"Warriors who only bowed before
To Hah-wen-ne-yo."

Hah-wen-ne-yo is the name of the Iroquois Creator, or Great Spirit.

STANZA LI.

"But the wise Charlstoont came,
And gave the dust where slept the flame
To our awed sires."

"Charlstoont, or the Iron Workers. This was the name the Iroquois gave the Dutch, according to the Rev. J. Megapolensis, the first clergyman in Rensselaerwyck."—See Moulton's History of New Netherland.

It was from the Dutch that the Iroquois first received fire-arms, from which time they began their conquests.

STANZA LII.

"Then the good Charlstoont placed
The chain in Corlear's friendly hands."

After the English conquered the Dutch in 1664, the latter transferred the good-will of the Iroquois to the former. On the 24th of September in that year, the first convention was held between the English and the Iroquois, and a treaty of peace entered into at Albany.

"It was in honor of Corlear, a Dutchman, who was a great favorite with the Indians, that the governors of New York were named Corlear by the Iroquois."—See Smith's History of New York.

This name was soon extended by them to the English generally.

Corlear was drowned whilst crossing the lake, now known as Lake Champlain. The Indians said, according to Colden, that he was drowned for not only disregarding to make the customary present to the old Indian of the rock (see note to Stanza L.), but absolutely mocking him. The lake is, however, to the present time called by his name by the Iroquois.

"Have dug the hatchet from the ground."

Digging the hatchet from the ground means, figuratively, according to Indian ideas, to declare war.

"And, turning, Dawn of Morning throws

His hatchet, with a look that glows

In glaring fury, at his foes."

"Their (the Iroquois) hatchet, in war time is slung in their girdle behind them; and besides what use they make of this weapon in their hand, they have a dexterous way of throwing it which I have seen them practice in their exercises, by throwing it into a tree. They have, in this way, the art of directing and regulating the motion, so that though the hatchet turns round as it flies, the edge always sticks in the tree, and near the place at which they aim it."—Colden.

CANTO THIRD.

STANZA III.

"And now round flame and war-post red."

A large fire is always kindled whenever the war-dance is to be danced, and beside it a post is planted painted red, and called the war-post; and around these two objects the Iroquois warriors perform the ceremony.

STANZA V.

"A moose, slow grazing, went."

The name moose is a corruption of the Indian appellation musee or wood-enter.

STANZA XX.

"Those maringouins! swarm on swarm
Thronged all the night about my form!"

Gnats found on the banks of the St. Lawrence in great numbers. La Hontan mentions them as objects of great annoyance, and so does Kalu. "The maringouins," says La Hontan, "which we call midges, are insufferably troublesome in all the countries of Canada. We were haunted with such clouds of them that we thought to be eat up."

STANZA XXXI.

"The Griffin," says one, "was strong and fleet."

This was the name, according to Hennepin, of the first vessel of civilized man that navigated the great lakes. It was fitted out for a voyage of discovery under the command of the celebrated La Salle; Father Hennepin (who was one of the number that embarked with him, says, "The ship was called the Griffin, alluding to the arms of Count Frontenac."

CANTO FOURTH.

STANZA I.

"The sun-fired calumet he bore,
Sending its light smoke-offering o'er."

In the Iroquois dances of thanksgiving to Hah-wen-ne-yo, it was customary for the presiding priest to present him, according to La Hontan, with pipes of tobacco lighted at the sun.

STANZA II.

" Until the sunset's dipping light,
When Dawn of Morning, at the head
Of all his braves, would, in its sight,
The dance of Hah-wen-ne-yo tread."

" When the sun is almost down, the warriors march out of the village to dance the dance of the Great Spirit."— La Hontan.

STANZA XVI.

" Along the castle's gallery,
Over the verge of the rock outspread,
Whence the vision roamed far and free."

" A fine gallery with a balcony runs the whole length of the castle. It commands the road (harbor), and the lower city appears under your feet."— Charlevoix.

" Whilst on the basin's lake-like breast,
Was the long spread island in lustre dressed."

" The wide part of the river immediately below Quebec is called the basin."— Weld's Travels in Canada.

" Between the city and the Isle of Orleans there is a basin a full league in extent every way, into which the river St. Charles discharges itself."— Charlevoix.

STANZA XIX.

" Great as those casques the forms of stone
Displayed — forms terrible, unknown."

There is a tradition amongst the Iroquois that their ancestors were invaded a long while ago by giants covered with garments made of stone. These invaders were called the Ot-ne-yar-he, or the Stonish Giants. They were very fierce and terrible, and moreover cannibals, devouring men, women, and children, and depopulating in this way whole villages. Against their stone armor, the arrows of the Iroquois rattled harmlessly and in vain. At length Hah-wen-ne-yo took pity upon their distress, and, assuming the shape of one of these giants, pretended to lead them in search of the Iroquois, and at night induced them to lie down together in a hollow. Ascending then an eminence, he rolled great rocks upon them, and buried them underneath.

STANZA XXVI.

"From her dark hair a feather sprung,
Behind, the usual roller hung."

The hair of the Iroquois women "is rolled up behind with a sort of ribbon," says La Hontan, "and that roller hangs down to their girdle."

STANZA XXVIII.

"But ere our Evil Spirit's ire."

The Evil Spirit is brother of Hah-wen-ne-yo the Good Spirit.

"Ere Kah-qua brings another day."

Kah-qua means the sun. The Iroquois personify almost every object in nature of importance, such as the sun, moon and stars, mountains, &c.

STANZA XXXI.

"The battery's frowning lines she saw."

"By the side of the gallery of the castle there is a battery of twenty-five pieces of cannon."—Charlevoix.

STANZA XXXIII.

"Instant a ball above him screeched."

A cannon-ball in passing through the air gives a keen screeching sound.

CANTO FIFTH.

STANZA II.

"The Bell-rock —

Sending o'er isle and wave its swell."

Upon the island of La Cloche in lake Huron, there is a rock, which, when struck, yields a metallic sound like the toll of a bell.

The Indians look upon the spot as subject to supernatural influences, and have a great many superstitions and traditions connected with the rock.

STANZA VI.

"Take the war-wampum! my command
Bear, that the hatchet through the land
Unburied be against my foe!"

The wampum belt is a sign of war as well as of peace, and is sent by means of a runner amongst those who are to be notified of the expected hostilities, so as to rouse them against the common enemy. The sight of this mute messenger is well understood.

It is also sent to the tribes against whom the hostilities are to be directed, to inform them. The unburying the hatchet is, as before explained, a figurative expression denoting a declaration of war.

STANZA XII.

—————"in the trail

Between us sharp thick briers prevail."

"There are briers in the trail between us," is the metaphorical expression of the savages to signify that difficulty and trouble are between two tribes.

STANZA XV.

"His arquebuse rusting for years in its nook."

The arquebuse was a clumsy hand-gun, the pioneer of our musket, and was used in the wars of that period.

STANZA XVI.

"The summer sun was sinking bright
Behind the woods of Isle Perrot;
Back lake St. Louis gleamed the light
In rich and mingled glow."

Isle Perrot is situated in the upper or western part of lake St. Louis, where the Ottawa river empties into the lake. The lake itself stretches its expanse to the westward of Lachine, which is situated upon a small bay of the former.

"The slanting radiance at Lachine
Shone on an animated scene."

Lachine was the place where Frontenac assembled his army, and whence he embarked on his expedition against the Iroquois.—See the histories of the period.

STANZA XVIII.

"Beneath were the griffins of Frontenac gleaming
In gold, on the breast of a pennon outstreaming."

"The arms of Count Frontenac have two griffins for supporters."—Hennepin.

STANZA XIX.

"The sunset tints from the lake withdrew,
And now on the broad expanse was seen,
Here rough Ottawa's tawny hue,
There Cataragui's splendid green."

This is a remarkable sight. The Ottawa dashes into the St. Lawrence with such force and volume that the discoloration of its waters is seen for a great distance, in contradistinction to the pure beautiful green of the river which receives it. It seems as if the latter shrank from the contact, to protect its purity as long as possible from the pollution of the stranger.

STANZA XXI.

"De Nonville sought
Our Seneca foemen!"

Several years previous to Frontenac's expedition De Nonville, the immediate predecessor of the former, made a descent upon the Iroquois, which proved disastrous to him.

CANTO SIXTH.

STANZA I.

"Along an Indian trail, that traced
Its deep seam through these forests vast."

The trails of the Iroquois, in the time of their power, wound in every direction of their Long House, and, trodden for centuries, were worn deeply in the earth. In some places they were worn three or four feet deep, and were quite narrow. Dr. Wilson, a Cayuga chief, told me that he had seen parts of these trails sunk knee-deep in the ground, with large trees growing in them.

STANZA XV.

"At length a warrior rose, his breast
Bearing a snake tattooed, its crest
And forked tongue ready."

The Iroquois warriors were in the habit of tattooing upon their skin their individual totem, which was generally the sign of some beast, bird or reptile. This was in addition to the totem of their clan or family.

STANZA XIX.

"In time of snows our old men tell
How by our sires the Kah-kwahs fell."

The Kah-kwahs were an Indian nation residing on the banks of Buffalo creek, which was called by the Iroquois De-o-se-o-wah, or the place of basswoods. They were defeated in a great battle near where their chief village was situated, by the Senecas, who took possession of the locality, reared their own village upon it, and made it the seat of their government or council fire. "It is a site," says Schoolcraft, "around which the Senecas have clung as if it marked an era in their national history."

"De-o-se-o-wah's huts within."

The Senecas called their village mentioned, De-o-se-o-wah.

STANZA XXI.

"Quick it spread,
'Till every quarter peeled it out."

The Iroquois villages were divided into quarters or districts.

STANZA XXII.

"Makes clustered apple-orchards bright,"

Remains of the apple-orchards of the Cayugas are still seen in the neighborhood of the village of Aurora, which itself occupies the site of the chief village of the nation, which was called Ko-lah-ue-kah. The trees are mossy, and gnarled, and not inapt emblems of the race whose fathers planted and reared them.

STANZA XLVII.

"Earth, we thank thee! thy great frame
Bears the stone from whence we came."

The Oneidas deduce their origin from a stone. They call themselves Oncota-aug, people sprung from a stone.

"This stone," says Schoolcraft in his Notes on the Iroquois, "is in Stockbridge, Madison county, New York. It lies on a very commanding eminence, from which the entire Oneida creek valley, as far as the Oneida lake, can be seen in a clear atmosphere. There, in seclusion from their enemies, the tribe expanded and grew in numbers. Time and usage rendered the object sacred, and as they expanded into nationality and power while located around it, their sages asserted with metaphorical truth that they sprung from this rock.

"It is a large but not an enormous boulder of syenite of the erratic block group, and consequently, geologically foreign to the location. There are no rocks of this species in situ, I believe, nearer to it than the Kayaderosseras, or the Adirondack mountains."

STANZA LVII.

"Men of blood!"

The Mohawks were an exceedingly fierce and warlike nation. They were a terror to their enemies for a great distance, and were known by the appellation of men of blood. This title was a source of great pride to them.

"Away! stern Bears!"

The word Mohawk is supposed to be derived from the Mohegan word Muk-wa, a bear.

The Mohawk chiefs, in their speech at Albany, in 1690, sympathizing with the whites on the burning of Schenectady, said, according to Colden, "We are all of the race of the bear; and a bear, you know, never yields while one drop of blood is left. We must all be bears!"

CANTO SEVENTH.

STANZA I.

"The beavers plunged within each mud-built hut,
As through their dam of trees a path was cut."

"As we came down the river (Wood Creek) the dykes, formed of branches and clay, which the beavers had made in it, produced new difficulties. We could not get forward with the boat till we had cut through them."—Kalm's Travels in North America.

"Ha! loek, proud Frontenac! upon yon tree
The haughty savage still casts scorn at thee!
Drawn on its naked wood in tints of red,
Thou, with the warriors of thy host, art spread;
Whilst at the roots the bundled rushes show
The stern defiance of thy tawny foe!"

"The army moved slowly along the Oswego river. They found a tree as they passed along, on which the Indians had, in their manner, painted the French army, and had laid by it two bundles of cut rushes. This was a defiance in the Indian manner, and to tell them by the number of the rushes that fourteen hundred and thirty-four men would meet them."—Colden.

STANZA II.

"Broader gleamings upon them break,
Through the thick forest —' the lake, the lake!'"

This was Onondaga lake, through which Frontenac passed with his flotilla, and encamped upon its borders near where the Onondaga creek joins the lake, and close to the celebrated salt licks.

"Along the margin, a tract of white
Glitters like silver beneath the light;
A shout went up—were the old dreams true?
Was treasure there flashing its dazzling hue?"

"About this time (1600) a party of Spaniards, consisting of twenty-three persons, arrived at the village, having for guides some of the Iroquois, who had been taken captives by some of the southern tribes. They had been informed that there was a lake to the north whose bottom was covered with a substance shining and white, which they took from the Indian's description to be silver. Having arrived at Onondaga lake and the French village, and finding no silver, they seemed bent on a quarrel with the French, whom they charged with having bribed the Indians, so that they would not tell them where the silver might be found."—De Witt Clinton's Memoir on the Antiquities of Western New York.

STANZA III.

"One blaze of silver Gar-noh-gwe-yoh glows."

This is the Onondaga name for the Onondaga lake, according to a sachem of the same nation, known to the whites as Colonel Silversmith. His Indian name, however, is Ho-no-we-na-to, keeper of the records, which title he bears in accordance with the laws of the Iroquois, which makes the sachemships descend from father to son, like the titles of nobility amongst the whites. Ho-no-we-na-to is a respectable looking, grey-haired man, introduced to me by my friend Dr. Wilson. In the course of our interview he sang a war-song for me.

STANZA V.

"The Mohawk, oldest brother, keeping
Watch the Long House's east porch o'er."

The Mohawks were considered, according to Cusick and Schoolcraft, as the oldest brothers, and were appointed to keep a watch towards the sunrise. They were called by the rest of the confederacy, with reference to their locality, Do-de-o-gah, meaning message-bearers.

"The fierce, wild Seneca, unsleeping,
Making his breast the western Door.

The Senecas, according to Dr. Wilson, are not the Door-keepers of the Long House, but the Door itself. They were called Swan-ne-ho-ont, meaning the door on the hinge. A single Seneca was called Ho-ne-ho-ont.

STANZA VI.

"Of the eight totems, one each breast
Displayed in blue tattoo impressed."

The confederacy was subdivided into eight distinct clans or families, without reference to the five tribal distinctions. These subdivisions were distinguished by eight totems, viz: the Tortoise, Bear, Wolf, Crane, Snipe, Deer, Beaver, and Hawk, of which the first three, as before observed, (see Stanza II, Canto II), were the highest in rank. These totems were tattooed, in addition to their individual ones, upon the naked skin; generally upon the breast.

"While frequently was seen the mark
Of the Ho-nont-kou next the other,
Which none deciphered but a brother;
Order mysterious, secret, dark!"

The Ho-nont-koh, or secret order of the Iroquois. This was an order answering to our Masonic institution. It was secret, the members bound by the closest ties. Its objects have never transpired. Their sign, according to Dr. Wilson, was a stripe tattooed upon the skin.

STANZA VIII.

"Was the league's coat of arms displayed."

The coat of arms described in this stanza was given me by my friend, Ely S. Parker, a young Seneca of great intelligence and talent.

STANZA X.

"Upon his breast the totem of the BEAR."

The At-o-ta-ho of the confederacy belonged to the clan of the Bear.

STANZA XI.

"Till the first ring of braves was springing
Wildly around, all wildly singing."

This was the Was-sas-sa-o-nah, or Osago war-dance; so called from its having been borrowed by the Iroquois from the Osago nation. It is more expressive than their own war dance.

STANZA XVI.

"And braves whose deeds amidst their enemies
Were traced in crimson on the annal-trees."

The Iroquois represent on trees peeled of their bark, in red colors, their expeditions, the deeds of their warriors, the scalps taken, &c. "These trees," says Colden, "are the annals of the Five Nations. I have seen many of them, and by them and their war-songs they preserve the history of their achievements."

"Some

Striking the war-post."

Striking the war-post means that those doing so are fitted to be warriors.

STANZA XX.

"How often has the Great White Bird
Seen us returning from our path
Loaded with scalps, and, joyful, heard
The songs that told our warrior wrath!"

This is the bird of the Great Spirit, and is several times

alluded to in the poem. It takes note of the Iroquois warriors returning from the war-path with scalps, and bears their names to Hah-wen-ne-yo, the name of the Great Spirit of the Iroquois.

STANZA XXIII.

"From Hah-rah's drift-wood stream, to where
The Pequods on the salt waves sail."

Hah-rah is the Mohawk name for Schoharie creek, meaning drift-wood, from the quantities of floating trees and branches that were in it.

The Mohawks extended their conquests to the sea-side in an easterly direction, overcoming the Pequods, who were the largest and most formidable of the tribes in that direction.

STANZA XXIV.

"Last, On-on-dah-gahs! always true!
Proud people of the hills!"

The Onondagas were called among the confederacy, the people of the hills, the word On-on-dah-gah, meaning literally in Iroquois, on the hill.

"Oft has De-kan-e-so-ra's voice
Of music made your souls rejoice;
If from Sken-ec-ta-da his speech."

De-kan-e-so-ra was an Onondaga sachem, living at the period of our tale, and was very celebrated as an orator. Colden frequently mentions him, and said that "he resembled much the bust of Cicero." He generally represented the Onondagas at the conventions at Albany, between the Iroquois and the English, and was very frequently there. Sken-ec-ta-da was the Iroquois name for Albany,

"Heart of the league."

The Onondaga canton was the central one of the confederacy.

STANZA XXXIV.

"Like the blind rattlesnake, will ye
With your sharp fangs your own flesh tear!"

The rattlesnake, at a certain period of the year, becomes blind. It is then more ferocious than ever; and, if attacked, in rage at not being able to see its enemy, it will strike its fangs into its own flesh.

STANZA XXXV.

"The combat also had renewed
Suspicion of the Ho-nont-koh sway."

The order of the Ho-nont-koh was always regarded with suspicion by those of the Iroquois who were not members of it. To this day some of them assert it was instituted for wicked purposes.

STANZA XXXVII.

"From yon tall pine the feeblest eye
Can view the waters of the lake
Where the three wise ones formed the tie."

Onondaga lake, from which the chief village of the Onondagas was situated only some five or six miles, was the spot where the league was formed under the direction and superintendence of Hah-yoh-wont-hah, At-o-ta-ho, and To-gan-a-we-tah.

"Whose records ye at feasts have heard
Ho-no-we-na-to oft repeat."

The only records of events which the Iroquois, as a people, possess, are the records of that, by far the most important epoch of their history, the formation of their confederacy. A sachem of the Onondagas was appointed to keep them, called Ho-no-we-na-to (meaning literally keeper of the records), and at feasts, and other important assemblages either of the nation or whole league, he was accustomed to repeat them for the information of his hearers, and to instil in them love and veneration for the confederacy itself and the objects of it.

"And from stern Yon-non-de-yoh fly
As if he were the O-yal-kher black
Coming on his devouring track.
No! when he comes, ye'll be, oh braves!
Like that bold creature from the waves,
That rose and made the enemy,
Fierce as he was, back, bleeding, flee."

"Rumors began to be rife of the appearance of an extraordinary and ferocious animal in various places, under the name of the great O-yal-kher, or Mammoth Bear. One morning while a party of hunters were in their camp, near the banks of a lake in the Ononda country, they were alarmed by a great tumult breaking out from the lake. Going to see the cause of this extraordinary noise, they saw the monster on the bank rolling down stones and logs into the water, and exhibiting the utmost signs of rage. Another great animal, of the cat kind, with great paws, came out of the water and seized the bear. A dreadful fight ensued; and in the end, the bear was worsted, and retired, horribly lamed."—Schoolcraft's Notes on the Iroquois.

STANZA XXXIX.

"Braves! hear again the words of dread,
By bright To-gan-a-we-tah said,
A hundred hundred moons ago!"

To-gan-a-we-tah was regarded by the Iroquois as a preternatural being; he is described as a young man of a remarkably beautiful person, so beautiful that Hah-wen-ne-ye himself might envy him—very good and very wise. He was, as before stated, one of the three makers of the league, and appeared suddenly amidst the people, just before the agitation of the subject, no one knowing whence he came. After the formation of the confederacy, he uttered the following extraordinary prophecy. Said he, "When the white throats shall come, then, if ye are divided, you will pull down the Long House, cut down the tree of peace, and put out the council fire."

These words (given to me by Dr. Wilson, an Iroquois chief, as before stated, as the literal prophecy) made a deep and lasting impression upon the minds of all who heard them. To-gan-a-we-tah, as soon as he had uttered the prophecy, disappeared as suddenly as he appeared, and was seen no more, but his prophecy was remembered.

The Iroquois had never heard of the existence of the whites, and could not therefore understand what the term white throats meant. They kept looking out, however, from that time, during generations, for the appearance of the objects described in the saying, and when the white men came, they discovered at last the meaning of the words. How the prophecy has been fulfilled, is now a matter of history.

STANZA XLV.

"'Twould come like that swift bird of snow,
By the Great Spirit sent to say,
To Hah-yah-wont-hah, 'Come away!'"

(See note to Stanza xlv., Canto li.) This bird was supposed by the Iroquois to have been sent by Hah-wen-ne-yo to tell Hah-yoh-wont-hah that his mission being accomplished he must return to the happy hunting-grounds.

"And waiting thy lov'd presence there
The unfalling strawberry will prepare."

The Iroquois believe that when they reach the happy hunting grounds, the Great Spirit will provide for them the most delicious fruits known to their woods, chief of which will be the strawberry. One large berry of the latter will be placed before each, divided into four parts which, as fast as they are consumed, will be successively renewed, thus making one un-failing and eternal strawberry for the recipient's use.

"Thy feet by day
Be like the tireless moose's way;"

La Hontan relates that the Indlans told him "the moose could trot three days and nights without intermission."

STANZA XLVII.

"One peazly cloud was melting there
Like Hah-yoh-wont-hah's white canoe,
When upward through the summer air,
He vanished from the people's view
Amid the sky's triumphal strain,
Its welcome to his home again."

The traditions of the Iroquois concerning the three framers of the league are exceedingly interesting and romantic. After the accomplishment of the confederacy, To-gan-a-wetah, as before remarked, on the delivery of his extraordinary prophecy, suddenly disappeared, and was supposed to have returned to the heavens, whilst Hah-yoh-wont-hah was seen by the assembled multitude to ascend amidst bursts of the sweetest melody, in a snow-white canoe which had suddenly shot down from the sky, rising higher and higher, until he melted away in the upper distance. At-o-ta-ho alone remained to place himself at the head of the confederacy, and leave his name and authority to a long line of successors.

CANTO EIGHTH.

STANZA III.

"Upon their creaking wheels the cannon rolled,
Jolting o'er roots, or sinking in the mould;
In a carved chair behind, amidst a throng
Of nobles Frontenac was borne along,"

"The Count de Frontenac was carried in a chair directly after the artillery."— Colden.

"Still on they struggled, ranks and files were lost,
And as chance willed it, strode the motley host."

"It was impossible to keep order in passing through thick woods, and in passing brooks."— Colden.

STANZA IV.

"That startled deer! how fiercely doth he beat
With his black hoofs the earth — bark, bark, how shrill
His whistle!

The American deer, when suddenly startled, stamps with his fore-feet violently, and gives birth to a shrill, whistling noise.

STANZA XII.

"Slow sauntering onward went a musketeer,
His huge piece slung within his bandoleer;"

The bandoleer was a strap attached to the person, and used to support the weight of the ponderous musket of those days.
This name was also given to a strap slung around the shoulder containing charges of ammunition.

CANTO NINTH.

STANZA XVIII.

" And in the bright hunting grounds waiting him, he
Was scenting the feast of the strawberry."

When an Iroquois is dying with a calm and tranquil countenance, those around him say, "he is scenting the strawberry of the Great Spirit!"

