Mr. Gleave: The hon. member flatters me but I believe he is dead right. The Saskatoon Board of Trade wrote and complained about the changes to the newly adopted customs clearance schedule at Saskatoon Airport. They said that the schedule will prove to be of great inconvenience to many businessmen and private flyers alike and will also endanger the lucrative air charter business into and out of Saskatchewan. The latter goes on to say:

> In case you are not aware . . . the Saskatoon airport is the only facility in Saskatchewan capable of handling large aircraft such as DC-8s and upwards. It is the officially designated alternate terminal for Air Canada DC-8 aircraft between Winnipeg and Alberta points. Runways in Regina are not sufficient for this purpose.
> It is inconceivable that your office in Saskatoon would be closed at a time when a large charter or a re-routed aircraft had to land and custom clearance was unavailable.
> Many charter flights are now being scheduled now for 1970 to Japan and Europe. They will be hampered by the regulations now set down.
> Potash company aircraft and others flying into Saskatoon after 5:00 p.m. would be required to pay extra landing charges in Regina for customs clearance before continuing on to Saskatoon, and what happens if Regina is fogged in? This seems to us to be an unnecessary inconvenience and expense. The situation will worsen as the northern resource development increases.

The letter goes on to make a plea for adequate service for the city of Saskatoon. I think the government should be aware of the need for services in some of our smaller airports. The report accompanying the letter shows that in the period July to September, 1969, the total number of itinerant aircraft handled was 65 and the total number of charter aircraft was 10. The report lists the number of flights prior to 9 a.m. Monday to Friday, and the number of aircraft landings during the week end, that is on Saturday and Sunday. It also lists the number of aircraft landings during the period when customs services are available between 9 a.m. and 5 p.m., Monday to Friday. During that period are listed 25 itinerant and 5 charter aircraft. The number of aircraft landings after 5 p.m. Monday through Friday is as follows: itinerant aircraft, 16; charter aircraft, 3. Those landing in the later period would be put to the added expense and inconvenience of finding customs officials and paying for their services so that clearance could be obtained. I fully support the hon. member in seeking to obtain adequate service at airports like this. There are not enough commissionaires at Saskatoon airport to look after it properly. There we have what is called a long-term parking place. I parked my car there last winter and someone stole the battery out of it.

An hon. Member: Hard luck.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gleave: Is that funny? I have talked to people at the airport who say that because there is no protection for cars it is customary to have paint scratched off them, tires are slashed and because no commissionaire is on duty after midnight, gas is often stolen. I ask, what is there to prevent someone going to the landing-strip and stealing gas from an aircraft that may be parked there? Surely there ought to be round-the-clock protection for the property of the Department of Transport and for the property of those who use the services of the department in places like Saskatoon, Calgary, Edmonton, Regina, and so on. This is part of the service to which people who use the airport are entitled. We should upgrade the customer service at these airports, and not downgrade it.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, what business concern would downgrade services at the very time when its business was expanding? This is precisely what is being done. Air travel is on the increase. Airports in western Canada are being increasingly used, and when this is happening we are downgrading the services available. We are providing less protection for the customer who may for one reason or another have to leave his motor vehicle or goods at the airport. What we are really saying to the customer is, "Leave your things here at your own risk. If your motor vehicle is out of commission when you come back, if the paint has been scraped off and if the gas has been stolen out of your tank, that is just too bad for you. You may call a service truck and pay the fees necessary to get your car going again." By the same token we are saying to the man who wants to use the customs facilties at the airport, "This is too bad for you. Pay for the cost of getting an official here and pay for his time; then you can get out of the airport and go on your way." I submit that is simply ridiculous.

Mr. Barney Danson (York North): Mr. Speaker, this is a rather interesting debate. Perhaps it is not as earth-shattering as the debate that will develop with respect to the white paper on tax reform or debates wherein our foreign and defence policies are being reviewed. This debate deals with a facet of Canadian life which is of interest to many Canadian people. Perhaps it does not command the attention it deserves. The hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Pringle) is indeed a pioneer of the air age. Had he been born in another generation, I am sure that today he would be halfway to the moon. I think he has made a most imaginative proposal. The discussion that has surrounded this proposal has been most interesting and enlightening.

The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) suggested that lands and forests officials could be used in the province of Ontario. I might tell the hon. member that in his own constituency there is a lake-landing facility with customs facilities operating from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. As I found out to my discomfort this summer, R.C.M.P. are also stationed there. When they are available, they also could fill this role. That would be very interesting because these men are federal officials.

I do not think we realize the effect that operators of small, private aircraft are having upon our economy and society. I am particularly interested in the comments of the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka with reference to small aircraft operators from other countries poaching our fish. As a fisherman, I fear these people entering Canada. There are hundreds, possibly thousands of poachers using our virgin lakes in the north and I resent the fact that they are stripping these lakes.

There is another element of this question which concerns small aircraft. I refer to the bush pilot who is part of our Canadian heritage. This facet of Canadian development was exemplified recently in a movie starring James Cagney. These small aircraft are vital to our north. I am referring to the new frontiers in our northlands where there is no other means of transportation. The motion before us deals with the people who operate these small aircrafts which are vital to opening up the north. This is also of vital importance to our tourist industry. A facet we seem to have overlooked is that which has built a great portion of the small aircraft industry in the United States. In this respect they are perhaps a generation ahead of us. Industrial expansion in the United States has to a very large extent moved out of the northeast corridor. The New England textile mills have moved into the south, the petrol industry has moved from Texas into the mid-west and the great national and international corporations have established branch plants near their raw materials and markets. The officials of these industries must commute by small aircraft. This is part of their everyday life. It does not affect everyone. Those who are dealing with far-flung businesses and have experience with the private jet or propeller aircraft and appreciate them. The private or corporate aircraft is a very important part of our industrial complex.

Canada is embarking upon a program of regional economic expansion. We should bear in mind what the hon. member for Fraser Valley East has said because he is opening up another facet of this program which will be very important to us. There is not much point in spreading our industries into the Maritimes, remote areas of Quebec, Ontario, the western provinces and even as far as British Columbia without providing the facilities with which to make them operative in the twentieth century. This is an important fact that we should not forget. We will be spending hundreds of millions of dollars to upgrade industry in outlying areas. This is how it should be. We must recognize the fact we are living in the latter part of the twentieth century. We have to deal with the communications systems that exist, of which private and corporated aircraft are a very important part.

The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) mentioned the potash development in northern Sastatchewan. This is an indication of the way in which the world is moving. We should pay attention to the proposals suggested by my colleague the hon. member for Fraser Valley East and this matter should be seriously considered. It is with pleasure I support his motion.

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I also support this motion. I do so for a number of reasons. First, I believe in the underlying principle of the suggestion made by my colleague, the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Pringle), that we should by all practical means facilitate the visits of border-crossing aircraft to Canadian airports. I also believe we should plan on removing as best we can the numerous light aircraft from the vicinity of our high-density traffic, international airports. This was cogently pointed out by the hon. member.

I also believe in the practicality of the hon. member's suggestion that the government of Canada should deputize qualified personnel who are working in the vicinity of these airports to handle customs clearance. I go further and say I believe this principle, namely that of allowing government officials to double in brass or wear two hats, is one to which we should give more expression in the days ahead. It is not a new principle, Mr. Speaker. Customs and excise officers are already handling immigration checks at border-crossing points. I also have knowledge that there are part-time customs clearance officials handling customs clearance at some British Columbia ports. Your Honour may recall that I have on one or two occasions in this chamber suggested that this principle should be extended to lighthouse keepers in the vicinity of sports fishing grounds. They should be given the power and provided with the means and equipment to make searches of sports fishing craft and, if necessary, to arrest persons contravening our sports fishery regulations. By following this principle we can extend in a quick and comparatively inexpensive way the federal presence and provide services which the federal government ought to provide over the wide areas of Canada wherein they are required.

I do not want to leave hon. members with the impression that by asking properly qualified personnel to undertake additional tasks within their competency I am recommending they do so without proper compensation. Surely, the extra compensation required by this dual-tasking would be considerably less than a complete duplication of personnel. I must be brief because time is running out, Mr. Speaker. I close by reiterating that I subscribe to the thought behind the hon. member's motion. I believe in the principle of dual-tasking of properly qualified personnel. We should think of using this principle more in the future. I hope hon. members will see fit to vote on and pass this significant notice of motion.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to participate in this debate. Earlier today I asked two questions of the hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Pringle). The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) wondered out loud why I was asking those questions. He intimated that I opposed the motion of the hon. member for Fraser Valley East. The exact opposite is true. I support the hon. member for Fraser Valley East, and I asked my questions in order to emphasize some of the points which I thought he had not stressed sufficiently in his argument. I know that the hon. member for Fraser Valley East is one of the most experienced pilots in this House and that he has done more flying than most other members of Parliament; I did not want him to sit down without answering some important point relating to his motion. Under the rules of the House he has no right to reply in this debate and I wanted to make sure he had advanced what I thought to be two important considerations. I feel the hon. member for Fraser Valley East is looking forward in presenting his motion. Unfortunately, I believe the Department of National Revenue in introducing the policy it did last September was looking backward.

As the hon. member told us, the volume of flying in Canada is increasing in a phenomenal way. He gave the exact figures and told us that private flying will probably double or triple in the years ahead. If there is evidence that the government is adopting a policy which looks backward instead of forward, it is up to us to encourage the motion put forward by the hon. member for Fraser Valley East. I am not supporting him for any parochial reasons. I have examined the statement put out by the Department of National Revenue when the policy was changed. I understand that in only one private airport were the hours of attendance increased, namely, at St. Hubert in Montreal; the hours there had been from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. but under the new policy a 24-hour service was instituted. I do not know whether this was due to the fact that the St. Hubert airport is in the minister's constituency, but I would support the extension of hours anyway. What was done at this airport should have been done at many airports in the vicinity of Montreal.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The change may be accounted for by the fact that in this respect the Department of Transport took over from the Department of National Defence last year.

Mr. Allmand: That may be the case. Anyhow, I would support the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Côté) if he had also extended the hours at the other airports. I think it was a wrong policy to restrict the hours of customs service at Lachute, St. Jerome, St. Jean, Shawinigan, Trois-Rivières, Sherbrooke and Cowansville. These airports are essential in meeting the needs of the tourist industry and of those who come to Canada on vacation. Other hon. members have pointed out that recreational facilities in Canada ought to be used to a greater extent for hunting and fishing than they are at present. The policy adopted by the department in restricting the customs service on week ends is really, as I say, a backward-looking policy. As the hon. member has pointed out, most of the private flying is done between 5 p.m. Friday night and Monday morning. If a man has a private aircraft and wants to go fishing or hunting, of if he is making a visit to Sherbrooke or Trois Rivières from the United States or from Toronto, he would likely choose a weekend—

Mr. Danson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, those of us who live in Toronto do not consider crossing an international border in order to go to Trois-Rivières or Sherbrooke.

Mr. Allmand: If the department continues this policy maybe we shall have to cross an international border when we go from Toronto to Montreal. The point put forward by the hon. member for Fraser Valley East, by others in the Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party, and by my hon. friend to the right—

An hon. Member: To the rear.

Mr. Allmand: The hon. member who spoke on behalf of the NDP—I forget his constituency—

An hon. Member: Saskatoon.

Mr. Allmand: —said that the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney) was dead right about something. I say it is better to be dead right than dead left. In all seriousness, I want to say that some of the arguments used by the department in favour of closing service at these airports are not valid. They said the decision was made because administrative officers had to be trained before they could be deputized as customs officials. However, during the summer, students and others are brought in to work as customs officers on a part-time basis and they do not need long or arduous training.

An hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Allmand: The argument is not a good one. The department also stated that it has carried out a cost analysis and come to the conclusion that expenditure on these customs services was not warranted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour for private members' business has expired and I do now leave the chair. The House will resume at 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING HATE PROPAGANDA

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-3, to amend the Criminal Code, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. McQuaid: Mr. Speaker, when the debate was adjourned at five o'clock I was relating what I conceived to be some of the dangers inherent in the bill, particularly in proposed section 267B. I pointed out that according to my interpretation of this provision its terms were wide enough to prohibit me as a private citizen, within the confines of my own home, from inciting even the members of my immediate family to hatred or contempt of any kind. I feel that this would be a very serious infringement of my privilege of free expression. I would agree that statements inciting hatred of any kind should certainly not be allowed to be expressed in public. On the other hand, I submit, and I propose so to argue very strenuously before the committee, that this provision should be restricted to statements made in public, and that I should be allowed to speak as I like within the confines of my own home.

I am supported in this contention by a statement made before the Senate committee that was studying the precursor of this bill on April 22, 1969, as reported in report No. 7 of the Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs of the Senate at page 148, in a brief presented by Professor H. W. Arthurs, who was at that time, and I presume still is, Associate Dean at Osgoode Hall Law School of York University. This man is very learned in the law; he made a very complete study of this matter prior to appearing before the Senate Committee, and I suggest his opinion should be given some weight. This is what his brief says regarding proposed section 267B of the Criminal Code:

> Subsection (2) is also open to serious objection. There is no limitation as to the time, place, or circumstance of the communications which are forbidden. Surely we do not wish to come to the point where casual conversation, or even formal communication, within the confines of a self-restricted group becomes a matter for regulation ... The section, as drafted, invites snooping, an informer system, and ultimately an awareness by each citizen that words spoken by him may be reported to "Big Brother".

This is the danger I see in regard to this provision. I quite agree that a restriction of this kind has no place in casual conversation within the confines of a self-restricted group. I suggest to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), and I will so suggest to the committee, that this section as drafted would be a very dangerous provision for Parliament to enact. Furthermore, as now drafted the bill is open to the interpretation that as soon as a police officer thought that a speaker at a public meeting was saying something that could possibly be considered as incitement, he would have authority under the bill to intervene and force the speaker to withdraw. I think that is a reasonable interpretation of this particular provision, and I contend that conferring such power would be very dangerous.

I have every respect for police officers. In many cases they are doing their best to carry out what is a very difficult job. But let me warn the House of the danger of giving police officers too much power. Despite the fact that most police officers are sincere, human nature being what it is there is a danger that they may not exercise with discretion the power conferred upon them. The Criminal Code provides that any person who, by speech or otherwise, incites a disturbance of any kind is subject to the penalties provided by the Code. But the big difference is this: under the Code a person must incite a disturbance, whereas under the terms of this bill a police officer in attendance at a public meeting has it entirely within his discretion to stop a speaker proceeding if he thinks that such continuance might incite the audience.

I do not have anything more to say about the bill, Mr. Speaker, other than this. While we on this side of the House agree for the most part with the principle of the bill and are prepared to give it very close scrutiny in committee, I am not at all convinced that the present provisions of the Criminal Code do not already adequately cover the ground this bill is attempting to cover. Some may ask: "Well, what if it does? What harm is done if we also pass this bill?" To that argument I would reply that we must not clutter up the statute books of Canada with duplicate legislation.

Heaven knows, the Criminal Code is already in bad enough shape in many respects; it is archaic, outmoded and outdated. I even venture to recommend to the Minister of Justice that he get to work as quickly as possible on revising the Code so that these outmoded, archaic and outdated provisions are removed. They are a source of confusion, and any lawyer practising today will confirm that our Code is cluttered by things that have absolutely no significance in present day circumstances. It would be a very serious mistake to enact another law covering something that the present Code covers; things this bill purports to cover. For that reason we propose to give the bill very close scrutiny in the committee. We will insist that expert evidence be presented to us in order that we may be convinced there is no duplication.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, five years ago this month I was invited by the late Hon. Guy Favreau, then Minister of Justice, to become a member of what was formally appointed in the following January as the Committee on Hate Propaganda. At that time I was appointed to the committee. I was of the opinion that hate propaganda was not a very serious matter, if only because no reasonable person could take it seriously. I think it worthy of note that at that point I had never seen a piece of hate propaganda.

Subsequently, as a result of the work of the committee, along with other members I closely examined hate materials of a great many different kinds and variations that had been distributed in Canada. We studied the data of social psychology which made us aware of the effect which abusive and hateful material of this kind could have on society. In the course of our studies we naturally also reviewed the law. As a result the committee unanimously recommended to the Minister of Justice that certain changes be made in the Criminal Code of Canada. These changes are reflected almost exactly in the bill now before this House.

There are a few changes from the recommendations of the Cohen committee in the bill now before the House, but they are not matters of great importance except where they improve the bill, such as the additional requirement for the approval of the attorney general before a prosecution can be brought. In all major respects the bill and the recommendations of the Cohen committee are the same.

It is not a good idea to confuse political and legal truths with eternal verities, and I am hesitant to say anything which may sound that way. However, as a result of my experience, I believe that any person who approaches this subject with an open mind, and sees the material to which the committee was exposed, and holds the same basic value position, that is, that civil liberties are not absolutes but are to some extent modified by the rights of others in societies—I believe anyone who approaches the subject in this way will come to the same conclusion that we as members of the Cohen committee came to some five years ago.

The thrust of this bill is the creation of a legal concept of group defamation. All the clauses of the bill fit in, in some way or other, with this concept. In its purity, if I may put it that way, it is found in the definition which is described as the wilful promotion of hatred to be found in the proposed section 267B(2) of the Criminal Code. It is also found with some modifications in the offence described as public incitement of hatred. Group defamation as described by that definition must take place in public and must be such as is likely to lead to a breach of the peace.

This principle is also found in the offence which is described as advocating genocide. This section does not prohibit that which is prohibited in the Criminal Code, that is, murder; it does not prohibit the killing of an individual or members of a group. It prohibits a certain kind of advocacy or promotion of an idea which is intrinsically vicious, an idea that is often identifiable with the hypothesis that a possible solution to our social problems is the killing of members of a social group in whole or in part. It is the advocacy or promotion of this idea which the government proposes to make illegal by the Criminal Code of Canada.

This is also within the concept of group defamation. It goes beyond our normal understanding of that concept because it not only defames the group—there is defamation because the promoters of genocide would say a group was so unworthy and hateful it did not deserve to live any longer. It goes beyond the notion of group defamation to include the idea of killing, but it reflects the basic purpose of the whole amendment by incorporating the concept of group defamation.

It is interesting to note that the common law does not contain a concept of group defamation. Traditionally, of course, we have had an offence of defamation. It has been a matter for civil action. Defamation has, also, throughout the history of the common law involved a criminal action, one which could be brought by the state against those who defame others. I include both libel and slander when I use the term "defamation". Traditionally, the common law did not in this respect apply to a group. Those whose minds the common law reflected did not believe that it hurt a man when you said something about his group. Individually he could be hurt and his reputation could be ruined; therefore, he could be seriously affected by something which was said against him as a person. That is, if it were said that an individual was a liar or a dishonest man, this was something that could reflect on him. But if he was a member of group "X", and the statement was made that all the members of group "X" were liars, thieves, prostitutes or whatever, in the view of the common law this did not touch the individual.

It is now clear, in light of the new discipline of social psychology, that this is simply not true. We now know from our studies of society, and of individuals who have been adversely affected by a denigration of their group, that what is said against a group is something that is said about a man himself. It may not affect him directly, and its effect may depend on how directly he associates himself with his group, but what is said about his group affects him as well.

Our group associations are deep-seated and, naturally, as far as the individual is concerned, depend upon his tradition and upbringing. Social psychology can no longer, as the common law suggested, support the view that group defamation does not matter. We thus know from recent science that group defamation is a very serious thing indeed.

[Mr. MacGuigan.]

The interest, one might even say the right—although it does not yet exist legally—of a group, quite possibly a minority group, not to be defamed or to have their persons affected by what might be said about them as members of a group, should be protected.

• (8:20 p.m.)

There is a real deficiency in the law. It simply does not take account, except in very tangential ways, of the members of a group. Some authorities believe that if a group is as large as 20 people the law might go that far, but when it becomes a multitude or a significant group in our society it is not protected. Therefore it is no exaggeration to say that our law, as it is now, really is not aware of group defamation.

We have an interest to be protected which is not now protected in our legal system. This would suggest that some protection should be put into the law. Before we can come to that conclusion with any certainty we must, as the Cohen committee did, look at the other side. We must see what adverse effects could result from inserting a concept of group defamation into our law, because any change made in our legal traditions could have a considerable effect on many aspects of our life. It would be foolish to assert that such legislation as this would not in some sense infringe on free speech. This is obvious, and was fully accepted by the members of the Cohen committee. Then the present offence of criminal defamation has the effect of limiting the free speech of an individual. Of course, all such offences have only a subsequent effect in that the act is committed before the penalty is attached. In other words, there are not prior restraints nor should there be. Yet it is quite reasonable to say there are limitations on free speech, because if there is anything men cannot say in social or individual dialogue without a legal consequence, then their liberty is infringed.

Is it wise to have this type of legislation which infringes on our existing freedom of speech? We cannot answer that question, I submit, unless we consider the other side of the question as well. We have a situation in which, while a man cannot slander another as an individual, he can do so as a member of a group. It is only by looking at the two interests which are to be protected together that we can hope to come to a reasonable solution.

I admit that if we introduce the concept of group defamation into our law, this would represent a greater curtailment of freedom of speech than exist in the present law of criminal defamation. I would admit this because it appears to me that when one speaks in a more general or universal sense, which is the way normally one would speak about a group—the very notion of a group suggests that one must make a generalization about it and not just refer to a particular incident involving a particular individual—you get close to the area of philosophical thought, political generalization or religious opinion and argument. One then has gone further into generalization, so that there is a greater danger to free speech from a concept of group defamation than from a concept of individual or criminal defamation.

The fact, however, is that the legislation proposed to this House contains safeguards of a kind which have never been found in the common law. It was because of the greater danger to freedom of expression which occurs with the concept of group defamation that the Cohen committee recommended these safeguards. For example, the common law never had a defence of truth per se to a concept of defamation. It was never a defence to excuse yourself by saying something was true—civilly it was, but not criminally. This bill proposes that a person who can prove to the satisfaction of a court that his statements were true is exempt from any legal liability.

This legislation which would offer more than the traditional protection of the common law reads as follows:

(i) that the statements communicated were true, or

(ii) that they were relevant to any subject of public interest, the discussion of which was for the public benefit, and that on reasonable grounds he believes them to be true.

I would be the first to admit of subsection (ii) that it is not crystal clear, and undoubtedly the members of the committee in their consideration will look at all such details of this bill. It is, however, the traditional statement of the common law in statutory form in our present Criminal Code. It is the one which in respect of criminal defamation has been found to give more or less adequate protection to the interests of freedom of speech.

In addition, this bill provides—and this is new provision over and above the recommendations of the Cohen committee—a further exemption for a person who expresses in good faith and in decent language, or who attempts to establish by argument used in good faith and conveyed in decent language, an opinion upon a religious subject. The whole realm of religious opinions, provided they are held in good faith and expressed in decent language, is exempt from the effect of this bill.

These are very considerable limitations upon the possible scope of the bill, but in my opinion they are limitations which are fully justified and which indeed are made necessary by the very desire to protect to the widest feasible extent the freedom of expression which truly is a very important part of our democratic heritage. Similarly, in respect of the offence of public incitement of hatred there are protections. These protections have not been noticed, I might add, in all of the discussion which has revolved around this bill. Recently, for example, we had a newspaper editorial—I do not seem to have the editorial but I can refer to it from memory—to the effect that if at a recent hearing of the Gendron commission someone had uttered a word of English, because the audience was composed of French-speaking people who were in a very hostile mood toward the English the speaking of the word of English and the consequent uproar would make the utterer of the word of English guilty of an offence. This is the sheerest nonsense.

First of all, it is rather unlikely that this type of group will be protected. The type of group which is under the protection of this legislation is distinguished by colour, race, religion or ethnic origin. The government has dropped the notion of "linguistic group" which the Cohen committee suggested should also be given protection. It has also dropped the notion of "national origin" which was recommended by the Cohen committee for inclusion in the definition of the protected group. But much more important, any utterance which would lead to liability has to be one which would objectively, that is to the mind of the reasonable man, be considered to be one inciting hate or contempt, one which is viciously abusive of the opposing group.

It is true that in England in the Burgoyne case the court, interpreting similar legislation, held that you have to take the crowd as you find it and that the crowd is not subject to the test of a reasonable man, so that if you say something which will disturb one crowd and not another you will be guilty if you say it before the more volatile crowd. But that applies only if what you have said is itself objectively abusive. If it is not objectively abusive, if it would not be abusive to the mind of a reasonable man, no liability is possible. That is why so much of the interpretation which has been given to this section and so much of the argument which has surrounded it has been wide of the mark. As a matter of fact, if I may draw the attention of the Minister of Justice to this, there is a section in the Criminal Code which does not have the same protections. It is section 160 which reads as follows:

> Every one who . . . causes a disturbance in or near a public place, by . . . using insulting or obscene language, . . . is guilty of an offence punishable on a summary conviction.

It does not apparently have the same type of protections with which we have surrounded this bill. The section on genocide also well protects the interests of any who are concerned that their freedom of expression will be reduced by this bill, because here we see the operation of the broad section of the bill defining the group which is protected, which as I have mentioned is any section of the public distinguished by colour, race, religion or ethnic origin.

It must be a Canadian group, "a section of the public"—that is the Canadian public —and only such a section of the public which is distinguished by one of those four qualifiers. The definition of genocide is also extremely limited. Of the five-part international definition, three parts of which were retained by the Cohen committee in their recommendations, only two parts now remain in the bill which is before us. They include an act of killing members of the group or one of deliberately inflicting on the group conditions of life calculated to bring about its physical destruction. Much of the argumentation which has revolved around this proposal related to the earlier version of this bill which was introduced in the Senate, but the bill was amended there and is now presented in its revised form to the House.

There are those who feel that a government which is as dedicated as was this government last year to keeping the law out of the household, out of the domestic community, is being inconsistent if it proposes in another bill to make illegal something such as the distribution of hate propaganda which would conceivably occur in private circumstances—not of course under the public incitement of hatred charge, but under the wilful promotion of hatred section. It is argued that the state should have no role therein. I do not believe that anyone has ever contended that there is any area of human conduct which is completely exempt from the reach of the law. It is pretty obvious that if there were a murder in a house this act would fall under the present criminal law of Canada.

The question to which we must address ourselves is, what is the public interest even in a situation which may be a relatively private one: is this a matter in which there should be a continuing public interest or is it a matter which is better left to the disposition of the parties involved? I believe that there is such a public interest in the matter of hate propaganda. I believe this because it is indeed a serious matter.

Some critics of the Cohen report have said that the distribution of these materials across Canada has not been so very wide after all, only some 20 or 30 communities have been affected. They have been among our largest cities, but only a limited number of cities have been affected and only a limited number of people have even seen hate propaganda. One of the special techniques of the purveyors of this horrible material is to send it to the members of the group which is being attacked—not to distribute it to the public at large but to seek out deliberately members of the Jewish or Negro community and to send the material to them.

Some have thus argued that because of the limited distribution of these materials and because of the limited number of years over which distribution has occurred—although it is continuing and we have no reason to think it is going to stop—because of the limited number of people who have been involved in its distribution, and because indeed of the limited number of different hate publications, this is a matter which is not serious. I dispute that view.

This is a serious matter, not perhaps quantitatively but certainly qualitatively. It is a serious matter because of what it may do to brutalize the sensitivities of the majority group to the feelings of the minority. Over a period of time, as a result of the constant distribution of this kind of material, it may make the majority unaware of the feelings of the minority. In some cases it may indeed be sufficient further to inflame an already prejudiced majority against a particular minority, at least in a particular community.

But it is not the effect on the majority of the public which is the most serious. What makes hate literature so intrinsically awful is the effect which it can have on the minority group, the fact that as a result of a constant series of encounters which involve hate propaganda—and indeed which come as well from other sources in a society—a group can be made to feel completely unworthy, completely inhuman. We know, from what we now see in the United States, that when a group is thus affected its reaction may turn into aggression. When this happens, obviously the problem is brought very forcibly to our attention. When the negroes, a group which has been subject to so much of this vilification in the United States, rather than turn the other cheek turn to violence, this is when our society sits up and takes notice. At this point the majority can no longer ignore the feelings which the minority have.

But, Mr. Speaker, instead of turning to aggression, which makes the matter clear to all of us, the minority can turn within itself; it can retreat upon itself; it can be affected internally; it can be affected in such a way that it is unable to function properly in society. I would not want to build up a case which suggests that these hate materials are the only cause of this kind of effect in our society. Obviously this is part of a larger problem which the institutions of law cannot deal with completely. Hate propaganda is not the whole problem of hating. Law is not the only solution to hate in our society. But hate propaganda is an important part of the problem and law is one of the most effective ways in which our society can deal with it.

This is not only because of the effect of law itself through proscribing a particular offence, through making it go underground if you will, though if the law does this it achieves its purpose in part because if hate material goes underground and ceases to be circulated the law has achieved what it is trying to do. But it is not only the punitive effect of law which is important; there is also the educational effect. If the punitive effect is not justified, the law would not be justified for its educational effect alone. But given the validity of the punitive effect of the law, which I believe is here amply justified, the educational effect must not be ignored.

In this law we have an appeal to the conscience of the Canadian people, an appeal to all of us to put our convictions in writing, in the Criminal Code of Canada, to make them part of the moral code of our society and to display them in a way which will be plain not only to ourselves but also to those of the minority group who may be attacked by less well informed and less well intentioned members of society.

I submit in conclusion that in this age we can no longer ignore psychological effects. We can no longer think that the law has to deal only with the obvious things. This is an age which is becoming increasingly more subtle, and the means both punitive and educational by which the law deals with social problems must also grow in subtlety. This bill, I submit, is an example of a new subtlety in the law.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I most certainly agree with the statement made this afternoon by my colleague from Greenwood that Bill C-3 is entering into a very sensitive area of legislation. I believe that I fully understand and appreciate the motive behind the introduction of this bill. I feel absolutely safe in saying that every member of this House despises the dissemination of hate whether it is by voice or by writing. However, sir, having said that I have some doubts about the application of the bill should it become law.

I believe there are some questions that need to be answered, some problems upon which we need more information. I am one of those who think that you cannot legislate hate from the minds and the hearts of mankind. I am one of those who believe that in order to completely eliminate hate from mankind we will require in our country a change in environment, in atmosphere, and indeed in the form of society itself.

I believe this is similar to the fact that you cannot legislate out of the minds of some people a desire to gamble, a desire to smoke cigarettes or to enjoy alcoholic drink. Admittedly, we do have legislation that tries to control certain aspects of gambling and the use of hard liquor, so I assume that the purport of this legislation is to try to control the dissemination of hate attitudes and literature. But there is a difference between trying to legislate control in the sensitive field that we are now discussing and trying to do it in the field of gambling, etc.

Some of the questions which I think have not been answered are: just what is the line of demarcation between liberty and licence? What would be the line of demarcation as to what would be permissible and what would not be permissible in the individual or collective expression of a strongly held point of view, whether by voice or by demonstration?

I imagine the answer would be, "The decision will be made by the attorneys general of our country, and by the judiciary." That would not satisfy me, Mr. Speaker, because in the past we have known attorneys general to give different interpretations of the same law. Just prior to the amendments we made to the Criminal Code last session I do not believe there were two attorneys general in Canada who made the same interpretation or took the same action with respect to such a simple matter as the law dealing with bingos and raffles. Of course, when it comes to the judiciary there are examples galore of how different judges interpret the law. On the one hand you may find a man who has stolen millions being fined—that being nothing more than a licence to steal—being given a few months in jail or two or three years in the penitentiary. On the other hand you may find a hungry man who has stolen a loaf of bread receiving a suspended sentence or being punished with the full weight of the law. These differences arise from differences in interpretation and application of the law. Often we find that judges in different parts of the country hand down different sentences for similar crimes committed in similar circumstances. I hope, and I believe others share my hope, that sentences will be meted out and decisions handed down according to an accepted principle, and that these sentences and decisions will not vary from coast to coast.

It is important for us to consider the question of hate. Hate is not new in our society; it arises from antagonisms and to some extent from policies of governments. Those policies engender the antagonisms which sometimes develop into hate. Indeed, how can one forget that a quarter of a century ago the Japanese in our country were uprooted, interned and not treated as good citizens. Their assets were sold at give-away prices. Nevertheless, in this country at that time not one Japanese was found to be a spy or saboteur. But the government's policy engendered antagonism and hate.

I see the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) looking at me. I remind him that not too long ago we had in force a quota system governing the entrance to Canada of immigrants from many countries. Many who lived here were unable to bring in their loved ones, even though they came from some part of the famed British Commonwealth of Nations. Need I remind hon. members that until a few years ago the Chinese, East Indians and native Indians of democratic Canada did not have a vote. The government has a responsibility in this field, because antagonism and discrimination are the forerunners of hate Luckily the circumstances I have alluded to have now changed. Government policy has changed; there is no longer a quota system, and citizens of various countries desiring to be admitted to Canada have the right to apply for admission and to be considered. Under our federal law all people except those who are under 21 years old or who are state wards in insane asylums and penitentiaries have the right to vote. Having lived in Canada since I was three years old, I have become convinced that with the change in government policies and the removal of prejudice and discrimination, a new attitude has dawned among our people. By removing discrimination we have removed those antagonisms that lead to hate. Those words apply particularly to ethnic groups as well as individuals.

During my childhood, and indeed up until a few years ago, one could note the existence of antagonisms and hate on Canada's Pacific coast. For instance, an Italian was a Dago, a Chinese a Chink, a Japanese a Jap, a Scandinavian a Bohunk and a Catholic a Dogan. Such terminology applied to human beings brought about an atmosphere of antagonism and hate.

In the last few years the use of these terms, in my area of the country at least, has died out. Very rarely do you hear now such terms used. The result is that we live in a better atmosphere. A better environment has brought with it a lessening of hate. I feel certain that these great advances have been made through education and understanding, and that greater advances will be made in the future. Eighteen months ago hardly a week went by when I did not receive despicable and vicious hate communications. By invoking a section of the Post Office Act dealing with scrurrilous literature I was able to stop the flow of some of this literature. Now I can say that I have not had a letter of this type for the last year—not one. That leads me to believe that in our country we are experiencing a greater degree of human feeling, understanding and brotherhood. For that reason I think we ought not to tackle this matter so much by legislation as by education.

An hon. Member: Right.

Mr. Winch: We will solve this problem by improving the national environment and atmosphere. I believe that education is as important as legislation in this field. Instead of asking our attorneys general and our judges to make decisions in these areas, we would be better employed in trying to bring about greater intermingling between the various ethnic groups in this country. Let us try to avoid isolating ethnic communities, even in our urban areas. I believe most strongly that you cannot do those things by legislation alone. If we want to counteract the effects of antagonism and hate in this country, let us stop calling ourselves English Canadians, French Canadians, Italian Canadians, Chinese Canadians or Japanese Canadians. Let us call ourselves Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winch: In that way we can do more good in this country than we can by any legislation.

It is because of my feelings in this matter and because I have the honour of representing a riding which contains the largest number of ethnic Canadians west of Toronto —a riding which contains thousands of Italians, Chinese, Ukrainians, Scandinavians and people of Germanic origin—that I find myself in a somewhat difficult position this evening. Because of the views I have tried to express, I hesitate to support second reading of this bill. At the same time I recognize that there still exists a problem. I recognize and appreciate the motive which is activating the Minister of Justice. Because of this I do not feel I can vote against the bill.

Hon. members will understand how great my interest will be in the hearings, discussions and deliberations of the standing committee of this House of Commons to which this bill will be referred. I hope the committee will not only consider this bill but all aspects of hate and the dissemination of hate. I hope as a result of its deliberations a recommendation will be made to this House which will include the two suggestions of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), namely, the injunction policy and a policy of committee review if this bill becomes law so that judgments can be made on the experience gained from its application. We will then learn whether the bill has provided the right approach to the problem.

I do not have a closed mind on the issue before us. It is one of great concern to us all. I hope the minister and the government will be amenable to the suggestion of a full study by the committee. I hope some thought will be given to policies of greater education, integration and achieving more understanding among our people. Some hon. members might feel I am indulging in wishful thinking and idealism, maybe clichés, platitudes, generalities or whatever term they like to use but, Mr. Speaker, I feel most intensely that the solution to this violent, vicious problem will only be achieved by a changed environment, atmosphere and society. Each and every one of us should do our part in expressing two main points of view. First, a wonderful way to abolish the attitude of hate by an individual or a group is to place less emphasis on preaching the principles of Christianity and to start putting them into practice; second—and this is a repetition of what I said—in the final analysis the solution to the problem is a recognition that irrespective of where we were born, our colour, race or religion, the future of Canada relies upon our being proud that we are Canadians.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the representative of the federal constituency of Parkdale, within whose boundaries live many people who suffered persecution because of their race, religion, ethnic or national origin, and whose relatives and friends were victims of genocide, I consider it my duty to participate in this debate.

During this discussion on Bill C-3, amending the Criminal Code and indeed strengthening it to deal with the dissemination of varieties of hate propaganda, I wish to commend the government, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and his predecessors for proposing this legislation. We also owe our deep gratitude to those of our colleagues who have served in this House and the other place, to all organizations, churches, writers and individuals in our country who have clamoured for and supported the principles of this legislation.

For those who have survived the Nazi concentration camps and for those of us who have visited these camps or who have first-hand contact with people who have suffered racial, ethnic or religious persecution, this legislation has not come too soon. After visiting the Nazi concentration camp of Auschwitz with some of my colleagues from this House, I cannot understand the indifference of so many people, especially those who have tried to delay this legislation and those who are indifferent to the victims of Nazi persecution.

There are still many people in our country who suffer the effects of the tortures, persecution and the memories of an evil society that failed to exercise its conscience in the face of moral perversion. While many have suffered because of anti-semitism, I wish to emphasize that hate propaganda affects Canadians of all origins. If anything, recent history has taught us that racial hatred and inter-group hostility cannot be confined within tight limits, but appears to be frequently seeking new targets.

The terrible risks of anti-racial incitement, while at present directed only against a few groups are a threat to all Canadians. It is no exaggeration to say, Mr. Speaker, that however confident we are of the strength of our democracy, any hate movement, if it is not stopped, bears within itself a potential threat to our society. While we may feel certain that the healthy fabric of our democratic society will be able to withstand the assault of hate propaganda, surely our citizens have the right to protection against this affront to basic human dignity. Canadian citizens should be able to live in this country without being submitted to vicious baiting and incitement which is degrading to the whole concept of the human personality. A just society must be able, through law, to offer its citizens at least this minimal protection and safeguard.

Every law is in some way an encroachment on certain freedoms but I believe Canadians as a whole have been ever conscious of the need to preserve their precious heritage of liberty, freedom of speech and freedom of expression. Only in the context of such freedom shall we be able to preserve our society from the disease of hatred and prejudice which can destroy our nation.

Bill C-3 follows several pieces of legislation introduced by Canadian governments and enacted by the Canadian Parliament to protect human rights and the dignity of the individual. I believe this bill discharges Canada's obligation to the United Nations convention on the crime of genocide which was tabled in this House on March 2, 1950, and approved by resolution of both Houses in 1952. This law and others like it will not eliminate those whose twisted minds lead them to sow hatred and spew the venom of racial prejudice and hatred. Such despicable behaviour and thought are symptoms of racial tension. I consider this lunatic behaviour to be a dangerous poison which must be eliminated.

We should seek out the causes of such behaviour and eliminate them as soon as possible. In this task, education in good citizenship and devotion to the principles of justice, tolerance, mutual understanding and respect are necessary. Every Canadian must look into his conscience and be ever vigilant against the subtle infection of prejudice; our happiness and survival as a nation demand it. That is why this evening I should like to appeal to all in the chamber to support the legislation now before us, to make sure it gets a good hearing in committee and, finally, to approve its passage in this House.

[Mr. Haidasz.]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I want to say a few words on this bill, Mr. Speaker, because of the importance which it obviously has, and because, like so many others in this House, I have studied for some years the problem with which it deals. I want to begin by saying that I greet with pleasure the concern evident all around this chamber about the infringement of freedom of speech and freedom of assembly. I think I can say that the members of the party to which I belong, those who will sit on the committee which is to consider this bill, will enter into the discussion with open minds and a determination to support any reasonable additional safeguards, if such are proposed, to make certain that the bill cannot be abused in such a way as to abridge freedom of speech or freedom of assembly, provided this does not hurt the objectives which this measure seeks to realize.

To all hon. members who have spoken along this line, and whose judgment I respect, and to all those who gave evidence before the Senate committee on this bill, whose judgment I respect, I want to say we should not allow ourselves to be blinded by generalizations in such a way as not to deal with abuses of freedom which threaten civilized behaviour and the social fabric of a civilized society. There is a danger—and certain episodes in recent history have shown this to be the case—that genuine democrats become so complacent about freedom and democracy that they permit those who are determined to destroy freedom to abuse the democratic rights and eventually to cast down democratic society itself.

There is a great deal of talk about whether or not the present criminal law is adequate. I am not an expert in criminal law, Mr. Speaker, and I do not pretend to be; my legal practice has been in another field. Nevertheless, I have read carefully the report of the Cohen committee and the appendices to that report, and I have had occasion over the last number of years to read the opinions of eminent lawyers in the criminal field all of whom are agreed, as the report puts it at page 40:

> In sum it is evident that the Criminal Code even on the widest interpretation does little or nothing to protect groups from the evils of hate propaganda.

I suggest that these studies and this conclusion are sufficient at least to cast doubt on the assumption that the present law covers the situation. Since there is doubt about it, surely one cannot oppose an attempt to clarify the situation and remove that doubt by enacting specific legislation to deal with the particular subject with which we are concerned.

The other point I wish to make is that as a matter of fact, and this is surely important, a great many civilized democracies in the world have enacted this kind of law—LAW—countries and societies which respect freedom of expression and freedom of assembly just as much as we do, and which have found it necessary, particularly since the end of the second world war, to take action along these lines. I have in mind the Netherlands, Sweden, Denmark, France, Norway, Switzerland and the United Kingdom, to mention only a few, all of which have introduced legislation to deal with group defamation and the spreading of hatred based on race or religion or ethnic origin.

My fourth point is that we have an international obligation to pass a law similar to the bill which is before us. As the hon. friend for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) pointed out, on November 21, 1963, a United Nations declaration against discrimination was adopted unanimously. Canada was there, and voted for it. Article IX of that declaration—my hon. friend read part of it—required member nations to take immediate and effective measures, including legislative and other measures, to prosecute and/or outlaw organizations which promote or incite racial discrimination or incite or use violence for reasons based on race, colour or ethnic origin. We voted for this declaration. We gave an undertaking that in our own country we would make laws along these lines. If I remember correctly, the convention concerning genocide, adopted in 1949, was ratified in both Houses of Parliament in 1952. In that convention on genocide, articles IV and V require the contracting parties to undertake to enact in accordance with their respective constitutions legislation to give effect to the provisions of the convention and in particular to provide effective penalties against persons guilty of genocide or any of the other acts enumerated in article III.

I do not say this is conclusive, but it seems to me that one of the things we suffer from in this world is this: Members of the United Nations vote for international conventions and for international undertakings; this implies that member states should do something to implement such undertakings. Nevertheless, when the representatives at the United Nations return home, nothing is done in this regard. This is one of the evils of the present situation that we ought to rectify. Having undertaken these international obligations, I would suggest to hon. members that we have a duty to carry them out.

I wish that this kind of law were not necessary. I wish I could share entirely the optimism of my hon. friend and colleague from Vancouver East (Mr. Winch). However, it has been my experience, perhaps because I am a member of one of the minority groups affected by hate propaganda, that racial and religious prejudice is present in most people just beneath the skin and that it does not take very much to evoke some active expression of racial or religious prejudice.

I forget exactly when, but some months ago one of the Toronto papers took a survey of school children at high schools and public schools in Toronto and found there was a disturbing and widespread form of racial prejudice against Negroes, Jews and other minority groups. So I suggest it is a mistake to assume that this kind of prejudice cannot exist in Canada. I am confident that under present circumstances in the world today—I say this without reservation—Canada is one of the freest of communities and societies. Its society is less cursed with the kind of active and overt racial and religious prejudice that is existent in other societies. But it is a mistake to be complacent about this. It is a mistake not to realize that it is there none the less. This curse of racial and religious prejudice is present in our society today. The hon. member for Vancouver East indicated in his speech that the expressions "Dagos", "Japs", "Chinks", "Sheenys" and "frogs" have now disappeared. With all respect to the hon. member, I wish what he said were true, but it is not.

Too often one finds it is possible for the best of people with the broadest of outlook to give expression to the sort of thing that feeds racial prejudice and religious antagonism, and this sometimes unconsciously. I have been in the company of people who were aware of my origin, and some of the "best" people in the gathering made jokes about the Jews, or about the "niggers", or somebody else, which shocked me because I was sensitive to this sort of thing. No doubt they would not raise anything to hit me on the head; I have no fear of that. Nevertheless it is a fact—every member of the House who is objective about this knows it to be a fact—that our society is not yet clear of this sort of prejudice. Our society is still full of the sort of antagonism that is based on racial, ethnic and religious grounds, and these antagonisms are transmitted to our children. There are teachers still in our schools who are guilty of this sort of thing; it has not been eradicated.

My thinking on this subject has always been affected by personal experience in the early 1930s. At that time I was studying in England and had occasion to visit Germany as a student. At that time I spoke German fairly fluently. I visited various parts of Germany and saw what was happening there, particularly in the summer of 1934. When I returned to Oxford and made some speeches about what I had seen, people in the audience would frequently come up to me and say: "Oh, come on, David! Don't exaggerate. The Germans are cultured people, highly educated. They are a scientific race. Sure, this crazy guy Hitler has been promoting these ideas, but the majority of the German people cannot possibly accept them. How can a cultured people that nourished Goethe and Beethoven accept this kind of nonsense?"

An hon. Member: The great, silent majority.

Mr. Lewis: The great, silent majority, as someone at the back suggests. All this is history now. I think no country can boast greater tolerance than Great Britain, but even in that country it did not require much immigration of coloured people to have a minister of the Crown defeated on that very issue, as was Patrick Gordon Walker. There have also been near-riots as a result of this kind of racial discrimination.

When I returned from England in 1935 and made the same kind of statements to people in Canada, I got the same reaction. Such a suggestion was incredible. The fact is that decent people have not the evil imagination that can conceive of the kind of terrible things that happened in Germany, or that happen in South Africa or Rhodesia. Although we read about them and understand the situation, it is very difficult for us to conceive, in our feelings and in our emotions, of people acting in this way. However, history has shown that people do act in this way.

Some 30 or more years ago a book was written by a great theologian and teacher of ethics in a Christian seminary in the United States, and I am sure the name is familiar to all members of this House, Reinhold Niebur. The title of his book is "Moral Man and Immoral Society". The thesis proposed by the book, which has been proven sociologically time and again by history, relates to what an individual in his own home and in his private behaviour may not be prepared to do but who, if he is a member of a mob in a certain sociological and economic situation, will do such things. The evil that is in him will come to the forefront as a member of the mob in a way that would never happen when he is merely a private citizen. Social conditions which produce that kind of expression can occur in any country, including this great country.

I ask hon. members to take every precaution possible to defend freedom of speech and freedom of assembly. Let us take every precaution possible to prevent the abuse of legislation so as to abridge such freedom unnecessarily and unjustifiably. But I beseech hon. members not to sit complacently in their seats and think that in this great Canadian society we do not need to worry about this problem, because we do. If we are to build a genuine, even better civilized society than we have now, we must deal with this matter. I make no apology for saying that I know of no greater social evil than racial and religious prejudice and intolerance. There is no greater evil.

I can and do criticize the social evils in our society that are derived from economic inequality, from social inequality, from inadequate treatment of the poor and from the great, and I consider unnecessary, concentration of economic and with it of political power in the hands of a group that is not responsible to the people. All these are evils against which, with or without the approval of the majority of the people in Canada, some of us have fought all our lives and will continue to fight. These are evils derived from society as a whole. They are not equal to the vicious evil which is racial prejudice, racial antagonism, religious prejudice and religious antagonism. I say this as dramatically as I know how, Mr. Speaker.

No society can ever be quite civilized so long as there is in it that kind of prejudice and intolerance. Who could disagree with the eloquent and relevant language of my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver East, who said that education is more important than this law? I do not disagree with that and I do not think anyone could. Obviously you cannot legislate hatred out of people. You might be able to legislate other things, including some of the things he mentioned, but you certainly cannot legislate hatred out of people. You can do that only as society improves its environment and its administration and as our educational system does its job more adequately for our children. This situation will continue a couple of generations before that end can be accomplished, and I hope it will be accomplished in years to come. There is value in legislation, none the less.

I would be surprised if the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) claims for his bill the attribute that it will solve the problem of racial discrimination or the spread of hatred. I am sure he does not claim that. I am sure he is as aware as the rest of us that much more will have to be done in society. But there is value in legislation, particularly in legislation which takes the necessary safeguards against abuse. I should like to mention three obvious results of good legislation along this line. The first relates to those people who follow the leadership of hatred peddlers. Among them are a good many people who are innocent and decent but have been sold an idea. I have met many of them at my doorstep in the religious sphere. I have met some of them who are anti-Semitic and I have met some who have talked about the negro in a manner in which it is uncivilized to speak. Many of those I have met are not really vicious people; they have been sold a bill of goods and have accepted it.

I suggest that legislation on the statute books will tell those otherwise decent and law-abiding citizens who have been sold a bill of goods that what they have been doing is contrary to the moral sense of the society in which they live, and is against the law. Many of these people will simply quit because it is against the law, and that is what the law is for. That is the first obvious consequence which is desirable in any society.

The second thing is that those who have no regard for the law, and those who will not be influenced by an appeal to morals in our society, will have the dissemination of this literature stopped by law. The third and equally important result of legislation like this is what several members, and most eloquently if I may say so, the hon. member for Greenwood pointed out, namely, the educative value of the presence of the law on the statute books of the country. If we enable the teachers of the country to point to this law in the classrooms, there will be great educational value to it. The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) also stressed and emphasized this important point.

Finally, I say that every law can be and has been abused. I know of no good law that has not known abuse in the past, and I imagine none in the future will ever know the lack of abuse. We have the Unemployment Insurance Act, a piece of social legislation obviously of importance to people who are unemployed, but it has been abused. It has been abused by people who take advantage of the law and by those who administer it whose hearts were often in the wastebasket and whose heads were somewhere else than on their shoulders. One can think of no law, no matter how good, which has not been abused by administrators, by the judiciary, by lawyers and by citizens of the community.

However, the possibility of abuse should not stand in the way of a law which is socially necessary and desirable. This should make us do everything we can to provide all possible safeguards against the likelihood of abuse. Having done the best we can, we ought to pass the legislation and make it the law of the land. I wish this kind of law were not necessary in Canada or anywhere else in the world, but I am afraid I am pessimistic enough to think it will be needed for some years to come.

Mr. Hyl Chappell (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière on a question of privilege.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I would like that together we take the count of those who have taken part in the debate on Bill C-3. I wish to point out that only one Créditiste member has spoken on the subject and that many others would like to do so before the debate comes to a close. To maintain proportions, it might now be in order to let the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise) speak.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows that, according to Standing Orders, the Chair has the exclusive right to recognize the speaker who will take part in the debate. The hon.

member who has risen on a question of privilege must take into account, not only the number of members in each political group, but other considerations as well which have prompted the Chair to recognize the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Chappell).

[English]

Mr. Chappell: Mr. Speaker, I shall be quite brief. Many fine arguments have been advanced in favour of the bill. I shall not repeat those but will add one more. I have been pleased to study the bill, and I have read a number of letters from various groups. Some of those letters expressed the fear of an invasion of private rights; others contained imagined reasons for fear, and still others showed or contained sheer emotional nonsense. I think all these people are entitled to be reassured, and for that reason I now speak.

I cannot see anything to be concerned about. The bill intends to curb the intended activity of an individual by making it a crime to make a vicious attack on a group. This bill is an attempt to prevent a criminal act which is about as anti-social as any activity could be, and I have noticed that those who oppose the bill do not come from any minority group.

Let us hope it will never be necessary to use this new legislation or the power provided by it; or if this does become necessary, let us hope that very seldom shall we have to use this power. Surely in a nation as advanced as Canada the time has come to state in the form of a statute that we stand very firmly against such behaviour. If we do this we may lead the way for other nations.

I support the bill. My only regret is that it does not go further and supply some restraint against those who recklessly, and often with venom perhaps because of their own distorted thoughts, attack individuals. The bill covers certain groups. The individual is not covered. At times an individual is unable to defend himself, perhaps because of his position in society or because he cannot afford the expense of fighting a libel action, if that should be a sufficient means of fighting back.

When a man's reputation has been destroyed, is it good enough to say to him that he can institute a libel action and perhaps receive a judgment in the amount of $5,000? We must realize that many of those who would attack someone in this way usually are judgment-proof; in other words, the judgment or assessment cannot be recovered.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I suggest that today the libel action is obsolete in respect of protecting a man's reputation. There was a time when if a person committed slander or libel he was faced with paying a lawyer and proving his statements or paying damages. Today the situation probably is that the man who is libelled pays a lawyer and commences an action, while the man who was responsible for the libel is carried by legal aid and thereby does not pay. If he does not have any money, he is unable to pay a judgment against him. The person who has been libelled has been involved in a great deal of time and expense in defending himself.

This is one step, but I believe we must take the next step. Bills have been presented in this House to the effect that we should compensate victims of crime. Is it any worse to lose an arm or have your reputation destroyed by one of these hate dispensers who distributes libellous publications? I suggest to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) that 1969 is not too early to draft legislation with sufficient sophistication that it will protect people who are attacked in this manner and at the same time not take away the civil liberties of honest people.

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of taking part in this debate, but certain remarks made in the house prompted me to give my opinion on Bill C-3.

To begin with, I must tell the house that I am not a lawyer. I feel that our laws would sometimes be better if we took into account some of the comments made by the public at large.

I would like to say something about certain remarks made by the previous speaker. He discussed an aspect which is not covered by this bill, namely the protection that the law must provide for the individual who is a victim of libel, slander or statements which affect his reputation. This bill is incomplete because it does not mention the kind of libel and slander that can be made against an individual.

In his speech, the previous speaker said, and I quote from memory:

[English]

If the character of the person is destroyed, the judgment passed by the accuser is not correct, or something of this sort.

[Translation]

I readily accept the hon. member's statement, because it reminds me of the misfortune which beset a whole family. The reputation of a prominent Canadian was affected, and the result was to ruin him as a public figure. Also, the reputation of a family highly regarded in the province of Quebec and throughout Canada was greatly prejudiced. It is with regret that I recall here the unfortunate Munsinger affair. It offers an excellent opportunity to show how little legislation takes into account the individual and the protection it should vouchsafe him against libel and defamation of that kind.

As we all remember, documents of public interest were involved. We all know the name of the citizen whose political and personal reputation was attacked and destroyed, I am afraid, for the rest of his life.

That was one of the most painful things we have experienced in the history of Canadian politics. What is intolerable is the reason for which use was made of this man, with a world-wide reputation in the military field, who had earned the world's most valued decorations during the last war. The man was painfully and cruelly wronged in his reputation. His family suffered greatly and his life, both social and private, was unjustly affected.

In my opinion, this bill should have been the opportunity for the minister and the government—allegedly seeking the just society and the protection of the citizen's basic rights—to provide adequate protection not only to the groups defined in the bill but also to the individual.

Hon. members will recall that when the Munsinger affair broke out, the desired objective was not only to tarnish a man's reputation but also and above all to destroy a political party.

While I refer to that matter, I do so with much restraint. I do not intend to attack anyone, but this incident shows that if the minister had readily wished to respect the basic rights of the individual and to protect him against defamation, he could have provided in Bill C-3 some protection against that kind of abuse.

By the way, I should like also to refer to defamation which is often in the form of cartoons. During his political career the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) as well as other people may have been the victims of cartoonists working for newspapers or magazines who very often use their talents to circumvent the law relating to defamation or even the bill which is now before the House.

I have seen in newspapers cartoons directly attacking the reputation of some people. And since the law is made in this way, the authors of such cartoons could not be prosecuted because it could not have been proven that there had been dishonest intent.

The minister should really take note of these remarks that are not made in a legalistic spirit, since I am not a lawyer. But my experience in political life has perhaps taught me a few things, and I think the minister should certainly amend his bill or else make some recommendations to the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, in order that this aspect of the problem of libel and defamation be thoroughly examined.

It is quite easy to kill a political man, an opponent or a personal enemy through the use of cartoons and, in this way, get around the law and avoid the penalties provided in this bill or in any other provision of the Criminal Code which deals with libel and defamation.

I had not intended to speak for any length of time, but I owed it to myself to make these comments. And I think it is unfortunate that the minister has restricted the application of Bill C-3 to some groups, when, in my view, it should be extended to a number of others.

In my opinion, this bill on hate literature should also apply to political parties.

I remember another example too. During the last election campaign, a member of this government—and I am sorry that he is not sitting here today because I would have liked him to correct me if need be—the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) said in a speech at the Colisée in Quebec City these words that I quote from memory. The substance of his remarks could be summed up thus: The time is past when an English-speaking Prime Minister would come and talk to us in broken French to put forward political arguments.

In my opinion, the effect of such a statement will be to incite a collectivity or a group of individuals to hate. One individual will be hated because others do not share his ideas. Maybe that was the type of example the minister had in mind when he prepared Bill C-3. I hope my remarks will have the result of alleviating the minister's omissions when drawing up his bill.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Organized groups often have legal and financial means to fight their cases in court. Unfortunately, the isolated individual who must appear in court must pay for the proceedings. This is a somewhat heavy burden for individuals and the law which seeks to establish a just society could protect not only integrated and organized groups but also the individual who might be the victim of injustice as in the cases I mentioned earlier.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

GRAIN—BOX CAR DISTRIBUTION—OPPORTUNITY FOR OPPOSITION MEMBERS TO MEET RAILWAY OFFICIALS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, on November 4 I posed a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) with regard to the opportunity of holding a meeting with the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific managements to discuss the distribution of box cars in the prairies. The question was as follows:

I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the meeting called by the Minister of Transport with Canadian Pacific and Canadian National management concerning distribution of box cars to grain shipping points in southern Saskatchewan, to which only Liberal Members of Parliament and Senators from Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba were invited, would the minister now arrange a similar meeting for opposition M.P.'s and Senators in order that we may tell railroad management the problems in our constituencies as well?

Since the question was not allowed at the time, I asked that it be put on the late-night show. In an article of October 30, 1969, the Moose Jaw Times Herald reported the following:

Canada's two major railways came under criticism here Wednesday at a private meeting called to discuss the distribution of box cars to grain shipping points in southern Saskatchewan.

The meeting was called by Transport Minister Donald Jamieson . . . Besides Mr. Jamieson, Agriculture Minister H. A. Olson and the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, Otto Lang, attended, together with Liberal M.P.'s and senators from Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

[Mr. Valade.]

The Canadian National Railway was represented by its president, N. J. McMillan and a vice-president, Eric Stevenson and the C.P.R. by S. Gossage and M. W. Malcolm.

During the two hour discussion, which Mr. Douglas described as a frank exchange of opinions, Mr. Douglas read a five page brief which he had prepared. He outlined the general problem of box car distribution and cited a number of specific cases where there had been very few box cars available at certain shipping points in the present crop year. These cases had been brought to his attention by farmers in his own riding—

I should like to suggest that if it is the responsibility of M.P.s and the rest of Canada to be considered, why was not an open meeting held at that time? I suggest that the Minister of Transport had ample opportunity to refer the specific item to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, at which there could have been a frank discussion of the whole situation regarding the distribution of box cars. Instead of that, a meeting was held to discuss this problem—a secluded, private, invitational, furtive meeting at which only closed-mind Liberals were present. This is a further indication of the fear of this government to face problems with which we are confronted today. Further, it is contempt of the elected representatives of this nation, and it is outright discrimination by the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) against this democratic institution of the people of Canada.

It has always been my opinion that once the election is over we should unite together in this House, face problems as a group and try to do something about them. In this particular situation all we had was an invitation sent only to Liberal M.P.s from the prairies, plus some Senators, and no invitation extended to anyone else. Surely the Minister of Transport must know better than that. Surely the release issued at the end of this secluded meeting proves that the government is to blame for the disposition of box cars.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) has the floor, and the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) should know that it is unusual to raise points of order, except in extreme circumstances, at this time during the adjournment proceedings. The hon. member for Moose Jaw has the floor.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, I hope I may be allowed the one minute of my time which was used up when the hon. member interrupted me. I was just saying that in my opinion the government has a responsibility to co-ordinate the movement of box cars.

If at any time the top management of the CPR and CNR appear before a committee of this House, or any other meeting in this House, the people we represent are entitled to a fair representation at that meeting. I quote further from the newspaper article to which I referred:

He—

Meaning the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas).

—said the railways pointed out that there were many organizations involved in the problem and that there was often not enough information passed along. They denied that the fault could be laid at the door of the train crews themselves.

This was an inquisition with respect to the train crews who were not able to defend themselves, but the railway management corrected the record when they said that the blame could not be laid at the door of the train crews. It is highly disorganized government when a situation like this is allowed to exist, when the people of Canada are not given adequate representation.

I ask the minister in all sincerity to make sure that in a similar situation in the future, fair representation is given to all of us. Further, I ask him to bring in terms of reference that will allow this House to call the management of the CPR and CNR before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, where we can have a thorough and open-minded discussion about the entire situation.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin where my hon. friend left off by saying to him that of course he can have full and complete representation at any discussions of this kind that occur. However, I have a slight problem and I would be grateful for his advice regarding it. When I am asked by a member or members of Parliament to interview or to meet with various people in order to help them with their problems, with their constituencies or the areas they represent, I am not quite sure if in all such cases it is necessary for me to make certain that there is all-party representation at such meetings.

Mr. Lewis: Even if the president of the railway is there?

Mr. Jamieson: May I say that in many other cases I have included members of the hon. member's party and have brought together all people that I could get hold of, anyone who would be involved in the matter, to discuss it with them. For instance, I recall that in the matter of the tugboat problem in the city of Vancouver I arranged meetings for representatives of the hon. member's party, and may I say there have been many other cases where at the request of members I have gone into their constituencies. In fact, I see one hon. member present, a member of the Progressive Conservative Party, with whom I met a very large delegation.

All I am saying is that in this particular case I followed what has been my custom ever since I have had these responsibilities, and that has been to do the best I could to answer the request of a specific member. I want to commend the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) for having had the initiative to ask if such a meeting could be arranged in this case. It was arranged at his instigation.

So far as members of parties opposite are concerned, if the hon. member would like the same kind of consideration, and if indeed he had asked me for it I think the record reveals he would have obtained it. There was nothing in this particular incident that was any different from the half dozen or more I have already mentioned, and in fact from many more which do not come readily to my mind at the moment.

The simple truth of the matter is that the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) asked for this; I was able to arrange it for him and was glad to do so. I remind the hon. member that if he wants the same kind of discussion on this or any other subject, I shall do my best to do as much for him. Of course, I cannot command. Perhaps I might be able to use more persuasion with the CNR than with the CPR, but certainly I will be happy to help the hon. member.

If my hon. friend feels that is not an honest representation of the facts, I can only ask him to go back to the record and talk to the members of his party. If at any time a request has been made to me, to any official of any government agency or to any private organization, which directly relates to transportation and I have turned him down or tried in any way to evade that request, I will be glad to apologize to him or any other member in this House.

I repeat this, because it is all I can say: if any request comes from the hon. member or any other hon. member opposite which is of legitimate concern to his constituents, he will get fair treatment from this department.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize for having to interrupt the minister's eloquent remarks, but I must now call on the hon. member for Hillsborough.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The Speaker is always right.

POST OFFICE—REQUEST FOR REDUCTION OF RATES ON NON-PROFIT PUBLICATIONS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I have to keep my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) up late, as I did on more than one occasion in the previous session. The questions discussed and matters raised were of importance, and for me it was an education to be called the many names that I was called in the previous session by the minister. I was designated as a Cassandra, as Falstaff and as the Merry Monk of Hillsborough. As I heard this and my education broadened, I declared that even members of the opposition should have at their disposal large cadres of speech writers and public relations men that they, too, could find such charming names for other people. I am wrong, perhaps, in not indulging in name calling but I feel that by pointing to the administration of the minister's department I have said enough. I know the minister grows impatient and wishes to express his displeasure at hearing the same problems aired time and again. May I say that the only solution is for him to cure the ills of which we speak.

One of the consistent themes which I and others in this House have stressed has been the danger to the free flow of ideas resulting from severe restrictions on many publications in this country. Indeed, the minister was consistent, too—I give him credit for that—because he shrugged off our warnings and declared that for a few cents more this or that publication could meet the new impositions. But while he was going about reassuring the House and country, important organs of thought and opinion were dying, as we said would be the case and as the publishers told him would be the case. But the minister knew better; he knew more than the publishers, more than the people and more than the opposition. And what happened?

May I read a few excerpts from the press which tell the unhappy tale. The Gazette of July 9, 1969, carries this headline over an article: "Mail purge killed 2,500 publications". An earlier report indicates that Montreal, that most interesting magazine, has gone out of business because of cost. Another headline of October 21, 1969, reads: "Death of 30 publications blamed on mail rate rise". In the body of the article is found the following:

> A Cross-Canada Survey by The Canadian Press shows at least 30 publications of this type ceased publication this year, their deaths attributed to the higher rates.

Another headline carried in the Toronto Telegram of October 2, 1969, reads: "Postal rate jump lethal for some trade magazines". So the story goes; so we see the diminution in the number of these very important organs of thought and opinion, and so the unhappy tale grows more and more unhappy.

Only last week, Mr. Speaker, a concerned and well informed group of Canadians, the Committee for Fair Postal Rates, came to Ottawa. They argued cogently and well. They were well received by many members, but when they presented their case to the Postmaster General they received not encouragement but rejection. The minister became the rejector general of publications, so to speak. In addition to that they were given a little lecture on, of all things, the perils of exaggeration. The minister said, as reported by Donald Newman of the Globe and Mail:

> "You would do your case much more justice if you didn't exaggerate . . . this kind of exaggeration makes us doubt anything you say."

This warning against exaggeration, believe it or not, was delivered on the day following the Postmaster General's Toronto dissertation where he raised those unhelpful and unwarranted problems about the work of the provinces in the field of constitutional reform. That speech will not go down in history as an example of measured appraisal or balanced judgment. The warning came from the man who in the last session used to tell us how well things were working out in his new department, how the new sorting procedures were so happily received by the workers, how well everything was going in terms of administration. We were told at length of all the improved techniques and management, but there was a pause in these rosy declamations after the blistering report of chief adjudicator Martin.

In fact, all is not well in the non-profit publications field. There is great danger that this continuing rigidity of attitude will diminish still further the flow of informed thought and opinion so essential to a true and enlightened democracy. While orders of government still are disseminated freely and easily—and on occasion I understand some organs of the national Liberal party have the same blessing—opinions of private groups are diminished in their effectiveness as they seek to stimulate public opinion and to provide background information.

I think instead of lecturing, the minister would have been well advised to listen. Despite the glamour of other esoteric means of communication—and we hear a lot about those fascinating and delightful objects of exultation—there is still a place for the written word in our society. Old-fashioned mail is still important and Canadians still like to receive it.

A man in Toronto heard so much about the mail delays that he sent a letter to himself with a six cent stamp on it. He got it back in Toronto in ten days. He now has some means of measuring the delays. Opinion magazines and publications—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I object to the hyperbole, rhetoric and coarse exaggeration within which the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) shrouds his questions. I wish to give two examples of the kind of statements the hon. member makes. At page 687 of Hansard the hon. member made the statement that when he returned to Parliament this fall he found that about one-quarter of the floor space in the foyer, that is the wash room, had been pre-empted. When he asked about this he was told that it was to be the new domain of the Minister of Communications, so he said the expansion was indeed physical as well as intellectual and jurisdictional. I was in the House at the time. These words would have remained in Hansard had I not risen to my feet and said, "Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the information is false." I was not only shocked by that statement but deeply shocked by his reply. The reply was:

> I have been corrected, Mr. Speaker, and I stand corrected. As I stand crowded in the future I will remember that it is not this minister . . . who is responsible.

At page 769 of Hansard the hon. member made another statement which is equally false. It reads in part:

> —not a free rate, like the National Liberal Federation, but a much better rate than they are now paying?

The hon. member said the Montreal magazine had gone out of existence because of the increase in postal rates. But as I have said before, the decision affecting that magazine had been taken months earlier. He quoted two headlines, one saying that 2,500 publications had gone out of existence and another, over a CP article of a later date, stating that 30 publications had gone out of existence. Which is true? One of them is exaggerated. Are these equivocal statements meant to be misleading and inaccurate? Is this a deliberate attempt to deceive?

The hon. member relies on the group which came to see me. They, too, exaggerated, but they could only bring forward the cases of four periodicals which they said had ceased publication, including La Tere de Chez Nous. But it has not ceased publication, Mr. Speaker, and the mere statement that it had done so caused La Terre de Chez Nous to take advertizing space at great expense to say: All is going well with us, thank you.

The hon. member mentioned a British Columbia trade union publication. All that was necessary in that case was to increase the subscription rate from $1.00 a year to $1.43. Mr. Speaker, we were carrying 770,000 issues of that publication in a year for $1,000. I ask you, is there anyone in this House who would undertake similar work on those terms?

In conclusion, may I say this: It is easy for certain publishers and hon. members to bring pressure against increases in postage rates and lead the public to believe that the Post Office is crushing Canadian publications. It is most difficult to get over to them the fact that it costs money to carry newspapers and periodicals in the mails, and that if they do not pay for it the taxpayers generally must do so.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister's time has expired.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—POSSIBLE NICKEL AND COPPER PRICE INCREASES—ACTION BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Gaétan-J. Serré (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, Friday last while the union membership was voting in favour of a new contract providing for a substantial wage increase, I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) what action the government was contemplating to prevent a subsequent increase in the cost of nickel and copper. The Prime Minister told me that he would make sure that the question would be brought to the attention of the minister concerned.

I am pleased to have the opportunity to discuss this matter in the house this evening and to set forth during the few minutes at my disposal the baneful consequences that such a price increase would have on the cost of living not only in the Sudbury area but also throughout the country.

Mr. Speaker, the precedent is well established throughout the country. Indeed, when a company grants a salary increase to its employees, an increase in the prices for consumer products follows almost automatically. I suggest that this vicious circle must be broken at all costs if there is to be an end to inflation.

The problem is getting more and more serious in the Sudbury area. Lately, many groups of organized workers have obtained fairly large increases in salary and I am happy about it for their sake. However, such increases become meaningless as a consequential increase in prices immediately follows. And to make the situation more abnormal still, a large number of unorganized workers do not get equal increases in salary but have to pay the same prices as the others for products and services, and as a result the number poor people increases considerably.

Mr. Speaker, following this new contract at the International Nickel Company, in Sudbury, one may expect an imminent increase in nickel and copper prices. Moreover, it is well known that such an increase will automatically bring about a similar increase in consumer prices in the Sudbury area. One fears, and not without cause, that companies, distributors, tradesmen, realtors, contractors, professionals, will take advantage of that rise in the workers' income to increase their prices sharply.

That is a most alarming situation if one takes into account that the cost of living in the Sudbury area is already higher than in the most areas of Ontario. Therefore I insist firstly that the Prices and Incomes Commission investigate the matter and determine immediately whether at present an increase in the price of nickel is warranted, so that the increase does not threaten the economic stability of the country; and secondly, that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs bring every necessary pressure to bear on companies, distributors, dealers, etc., so that they do not take advantage of the situation by increasing their prices.

Mr. Speaker, it is my opinion that government leaders will have to take a firmer stand and exercise more control if they are to break up the vicious circle of the wage-price spiral and thus bring to an end this frenzied rush towards inflation.

According to recent statements by the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) had the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford), we have every reason to believe that the government is more willing than ever before to take whatever steps are necessary and I dare hope that my representations will be followed up.

Mr. Paul Langlois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am well aware of the interest the hon. member for Nickel Belt takes in the consumers of Canada, and particularly in those of his constituency.

He gives a clear and detailed account of a situation, and he also proves all the consideration he has for his fellow citizens.

[English]

We all, of course, deplore unnecessary price increases, and I am sure that the House is well aware of the need for restraint at this time. The comments of the hon. member will be drawn to the attention of the minister and they will receive every attention.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, November 18, 1969

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

CHANGES IN DEPARTMENTAL PROGRAMS

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): In the forthcoming year a number of changes will be made in programs of the Department of Agriculture so that the maximum assistance can be given to producers with the money which has been allocated to the department under the government's policy of budgetary restraint. These will include program adjustments, curtailment of travel, construction and acquisition of equipment, controlled expenditure on some cost-sharing programs, and increased fees for certain services performed by the department. Changes are aimed at increasing efficiency of operation and at terminating or reducing longstanding programs which have tended to reach their objectives or the applicability of which has become less appropriate in the context of current departmental and governmental objectives.

Adjustments in programs will, of course, cause adjustments in staff, particularly since there will be staff expansion for programs providing essential services to the public and, as indicated above, for those of high priority. Thus, while staff reductions in most cases will be met through normal staff turnover and staff transfer within the department or government service, there will be some lay-offs of staff employed on lower priority programs.

A start on farm adjustment programs is planned as well as the rapid expansion of CANFARM, the national farm management program.

In order to implement and expand these programs, adjustments will be made in the support provided to dairy and sheep producers. For 1970-71, $115 million is being budgeted for dairy support. These changes in price support will provide between $10 and $11 million.

I should note that the wool support level will be continued during the current year at 60 cents per pound.

In the research program there will be a continuing policy of work realignment. The following specific actions will be taken: experimental farms at Mile 1019, Alaska Highway, Yukon Territory; Fort Simpson, Northwest Territories, and Caplan, Quebec, will cease to function as research farms of the department.

In the production program there will be the elimination of grants to a few organizations and less funds available for the loaning of beef sires. The specific associations will be advised where grants are being eliminated. Another step will be taken in the new year toward the previously announced phasing-out of hog premiums. The premium of $3 will continue to be available but only on higher index hogs effective January 5, 1970.

Two open-end, cost-sharing programs are under review and for the new year a ceiling will be placed on these expenditures. These are the assistance programs to fairs and exhibitions and the federal-provincial 4-H programs. Discussions are being, or will be, held with the appropriate representatives so that the action to be taken can be as satisfactory as possible to all concerned.

Fees will be increased for certain services to bring them more in line with the benefits that accrue to the individual obtaining these services. The ones to be adjusted in the new year are: record of performance (dairy cattle), seed potato inspection, ship inspection, field inspection of certain crops, shipping-point inspection of fruits and vegetables, the registration of certain products and facilities, and the inspection and quarantine of animals.

The nature of the actual change in the programs for those items where I have indicated only a reduction in expenditures will be announced at an appropriate time as well as the details concerning the changes in the costs of services, etc. In the meantime consultations will be undertaken with applicable groups in order that their views may be obtained as to the most appropriate use, in keeping with the objectives of the program, which can be made of the funds that are to be provided in the forthcoming year.

In conclusion, may I say this is the first time the department has announced well in advance—several months in advance—the changes which it is intended to make in these programs. We hope this early notice will be useful not only to members of the House but to the public who are affected, enabling them to make their views known to us before the date on which the changes are actually made.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, this announcement by the minister amounts to nothing more than a statement couched in flowery departmental language saying, in effect, that for the sake of political expediency the department is sharply curtailing its expenditures during the coming year. It means that at a time when agriculture is facing its worst problems of development, the government is withdrawing from research, withdrawing services to the farming communities, and withdrawing from subsidization programs indiscriminately. We find it is even shutting down some experimental farms.

The government has indicated that there is going to be some shifting of staffs and perhaps some lay-offs. Experience has taught us that this will disrupt the entire department. It is unfortunate indeed that at a time when agriculture most needs help the government is withdrawing from its responsibilities and obligations. May I also point out that this announcement today is in direct violation of all the advice sought by the government at the congress that they said was so successful last spring.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, if we had more days for opposition motions perhaps we might receive more statements of policy. This statement is notable in that it provides no hope for positive action for an industry that is in trouble. The adjustments proposed are negative. It is not a forward-looking statement. It will not give the farmers confidence that the government has a grasp of the problems facing agriculture and is determined to do something about them.

The statement indicates that a start is to be made on adjustment programs, but we will have to wait to see just what these adjustments are since the statement itself does not give any details. Adjustments are going to be made in the support for dairy and sheep producers, but all we know is that cuts are going to be made somewhere.

The whole tenor of the statement is that cutbacks are going to be made in the department and in the services to people who depend on the department. In other words, the document simply is an innocuous one which gives no hope to agriculture and farmers for the immediate future.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I cannot congratulate the minister on the statement he has just made.

Right now, in eastern, central or western Canada agriculture is in trouble. The minister's long statement will bring us another deception since it tends to provide maximum assistance to producers with the credits allocated to the department under the government policy of restraint. In fact, the minister seems to say that we will grant more subsidies with less money.

Mr. Speaker, it is too bad that in 1969, a Minister of Agriculture as competent as the present one could not turn aside from the beaten path and suggest a financial policy in accordance with the overabundance of products our farmers are able to offer the population.

In the field of dairy products, for instance, we are not facing a production surplus, as indicated in the statistical data of the federal government, but rather a problem of under consumption.

The minister has also announced a curtailment of travel expenses. We could understand that but, on the other hand, he said that subsidies of $115 million will be granted to the dairy industry to support the price of milk, which will result in savings of $10 or $11 million for 1970. This means that in April 1970 our deception will be more bitter on account of the quotas on manufacturing milk.

I regret that in 1969-70 we have no better announcement to make to farmers than this unfortunate statement which bears no relation to the progress and problems of agriculture in 1969.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A), 1969-70

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting Supplementary Estimates (A) for the financial year ending March 31, 1970, was presented by Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the House.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, these supplementary estimates contain budgetary items in the amount of $66 million, which brings the total of estimates tabled to date for the fiscal year 1969-70 to $11,924 million. They also contain loans, investments and advances amounting to $25 million.

Last February when I tabled the main estimates for this fiscal year in the House of Commons I indicated that there might be a need for supplementary estimates in the course of the year and spoke of the government's determination that such supplementary estimates would be held to a figure consistent with the declared objective of a balanced budget. I may say now that the total estimates to date of $11,924 million, plus additions that may be made in final supplementary estimates, will be consistent with the government's determination to achieve a budgetary surplus for the year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Drury: I would be pleased to supply any additional information that may be required when I appear before the appropriate Parliamentary committee.

Mr. Stanfield: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the motion to table and refer the supplementary estimates is not debatable, and I am puzzled that the minister should be permitted to make a statement when there is no provision in the rules for discussion or debate. Your Honour should settle the matter so that either the minister is not permitted to make a statement of this sort or—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The matter is easily settled. The minister has made a statement and according to the rules hon. members of the opposition may also make statements.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the Leader of the Opposition wishes to make a statement. It was my understanding that when each of the opposition representatives has made his statement I would move the motion, which by the rules is not debatable. If the Leader of the Opposition is going to make a statement I will not move the motion at this time; otherwise it is my intention to move the motion.

Mr. Speaker: The procedure suggested by the President of the Privy Council might be followed.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, under the new system whereby estimates and supplementary estimates go to a committee and Parliament has lost control of the pursestrings, it seems to me that when the minister makes this type of statement representatives of the opposition parties should have the opportunity to comment.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's point is redundant. The point has been made by his leader and I have agreed with him.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite as accustomed as are some members on the other side of the House to making a speech without having full information—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: —or to comment on something I have not yet seen. However, as a matter of courtesy, if a minister is to make a statement in the House in regard to supplementary estimates, or a statement such as was made by the Minister of Agriculture, copies of such statements should be sent to the Leader of the Opposition or the official opposition spokesman on this side of the House so that the matter can be discussed. I do not wish, sir, to take the time of the House to discuss something I have not yet seen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE ON MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I move, pursuant to Standing Order 59:

That the Supplementary Estimates tabled this day be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Motion agreed to.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES AND YUKON— DEVELOPMENT OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, because this is the first day this week that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is scheduled to be in the House, at this time I should like to table two copies of the New Democratic Party statement regarding self-government in the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may wish to distribute this in an unofficial way, but I doubt that the rules permit him to make an official tabling of the document to which he referred. If he did, I am afraid the table would not be large enough to receive all the papers members would place on it.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—FORECAST PRICE INCREASES—DEFINITION OF ACCEPTABLE RESTRAINT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped we would have present in the House today either the Minister of Finance back from his pilgrimage or the Minister without Portfolio whose day it is to be in the House. However, I shall direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the forecast by more than 250 manufacturing firms that the prices of their products will increase from 1 per cent to 25 per cent in 1970, what is the position of the government? Specifically, will the government, in co-operation with the Prices and Incomes Commission, undertake to define what constitutes acceptable restraint so that those concerned will know what is consistent with public policy in the view of the government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that the Prime Minister has to take as notice a question on a policy concerning which he has been saying so much. Specifically, will the Prime Minister also take this question as notice? Is he prepared to advise the House whether the government has supported or is prepared to support the suggestion made earlier today in a speech by the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission, and put forward by the commission, of a 5 per cent limitation on wage and salary increases and a 2½ per cent ceiling on price increases for a limited period of time?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Howard (Skeena).]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SAC BOMBER BASES—POSSIBLE LOCATION IN CANADA

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Last July he indicated that the United States government had requested permission to locate a number of dispersal bases in Canada for the use of Strategic Air Command bombers. At that time the minister indicated that no decision had been reached by the Canadian government. Has any decision been reached, what is the nature of that decision, and has any agreement been signed between the two governments in question?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, first of all I must inform my hon. friend that no decision has yet been taken. I should also correct the impression he left by saying that the request was not for SAC bomber bases but for refuelling facilities.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the minister a supplementary question. Does the request from the U.S. government envisage the stationing of U.S. troops on Canadian soil to man these dispersal bases or are they to be operated in some other manner?

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): The request was to provide facilities for refuelling only in emergencies and also for exercises. The stipulation was that whatever U.S. personnel would be needed for such operations would be flown in for the operations, and therefore there was no requirement for stationing U.S. personnel on our bases for refuelling aircraft.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES

TRANSFER OF FEDERAL PROGRAM TO QUEBEC

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Has he been consulted by the Quebec Minister of Family Affairs and Social Welfare or the officials of his department about the transfer of the federal allowance plan to Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Could the Prime Minister tell us whether the government intends to give effect to a recommendation contained in the white paper submitted to the government about the transfer of powers for family allowances to the provincial government?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, two questions arise in that connection.

The first, which is a constitutional one, will be answered in the document which the federal government intends to make public when the federal-provincial conference meets in December. The hon. member knows that one of the items on the agenda is precisely the question of social legislation. Consequently, the House of Commons will then get acquainted with the government position.

As for the general intention of the government with regard to social security, the hon. member also knows, since the Minister of National Health and Welfare has announced it, that we are now preparing a white paper on the federal position in the social security field.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

With regard to the further request made by the Quebec government for the transfer to the province of the family allowance program, would the Prime Minister tell us whether the Canadian government is of the opinion that it is not advisable to discuss the matter until all the provinces have submitted their proposals concerning the distribution of powers between the two levels of government, as stated in a booklet published at the time of the federal-provincial conference last June?

Mr. Trudeau: The answer is contained in the question, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the federal government wishes to discuss with all the provinces the question of the distribution of powers between the federal government and the provincial governments when the constitution comes under discussion.

But since the hon. member referred to a booklet published by the federal government, I could tell him about another one that was published in February 1968, in which we show that in order to ensure the existence of a healthy federalism, it is necessary for the central government to keep the power to distribute the wealth between rich and poor, between rich and poor areas, in such a way as to give all Canadians a greater degree of equality.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, may I ask another supplementary question. Considering that the authorities of the province of Quebec claim that the transfer of the family allowance program is the main spring of the social insurance system in Quebec, does the Prime Minister think that the thousands of people on social welfare in Quebec can wait without suffering for the result of this endless constitutional wrangle between experts?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think that this question, as asked, is admissible.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question arises from the reference the Prime Minister made a moment ago to the government's proposed white paper on social legislation. May I ask whether a decision has been reached concerning the tabling of the Willard Report, upon which I believe that white paper will be based, in the same way that both the Woods Report and the government's white paper on veterans pensions were tabled?

Mr. Trudeau: There has been no decision to table this report, Mr. Speaker, nor do I currently expect any such decision to be made. But, as I replied to the previous question, the House will know the federal government's constitutional position on these matters by the presentation of documents to the constitutional conference in December, and we would gladly table these in the House.

TRANSPORT

ALLEGED LACK OF ENFORCEMENT OF REGULATIONS, ETC. BY AIR TRANSPORT COMMITTEE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the Minister of Transport back from his rovings and direct this question to him. In light of the very recent unanimous adoption of a resolution by the Air Transport Association of Canada expressing loss of confidence in the Air Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission, what specific steps has he or his department taken to overcome this very grievous situation in the Canadian aviation industry?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I answered a similar question the week before last. I have met with the President of the Air Transport Association and requested him to come to Ottawa at his convenience to discuss the matter with my officials and the CTC. In the meantime, and perhaps more important, the gap in the legislation which caused some of the difficulties to which they referred has been rectified, and we hope the position will be better for the ATC and, indeed, for the commission in the future.

Mr. Forrestall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether or not it was implicit in his reply that directions were issued by his office to the Air Transport Committee, through the Canadian Transport Commission, to do something about tightening up existing rules and regulations and to enforce them rigidly, because it was on that ground that the unrest arose in the industry?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure it would be appropriate for me to instruct the CTC on this matter, but even before the ATA complaint was received the necessary changes were being made and I will make every effort to have them speeded up.

TRADE

NICKEL—PROTECTION OF EXPORT POSITION

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I gave notice earlier today and was advised an acting minister would be in the House to answer it. In the light of the imminent rise in the price of Canadian nickel and new developments in Australia and elsewhere that threaten our export situation, what action is the government taking to protect the Canadian position in the world market?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge there has been no increase in nickel prices in Canada, so the question is speculative at worst. I would have thought that the developments in Australia to which the hon. member refers would have a tendency, if anything, to moderate prices for nickel in the world market.

Mr. Aiken: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister or his department had consultations on the matter with the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to establish a Canadian approach in order to maintain our position in the world market?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that it is not in order to put a question in that way. The hon. member is asking whether there has been consultation between ministers. I doubt whether the question is acceptable in those terms.

HARBOURS

VANCOUVER—REPORTED LEASING OF PIERS TO PRIVATE OPERATORS

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Is he in a position to answer at this time and, if not, would he agree to make a statement on motions at an early date regarding the report that the government intends to introduce a new system of leasing the major publicly-owned piers in Vancouver to private operators, the wharves affected being Lapointe and Ballantyne piers and berths one to three at the Centennial pier?

Mr. Speaker: I think this is a question that could be debated at the time of adjournment if there is urgency.

Mr. Winch: Ten o'clock.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

OPERATION OF TURBOTRAIN

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

Can he tell the House what has become of the CNR's Turbotrain that was to operate between Montreal and Toronto?

Mr. Speaker: I think this question could also be put on the order paper.

[English]

INDUSTRY

LOWER PRODUCTION INDEX—INQUIRY AS TO ACTION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who is supposed to be in the House today, but in his absence I will address it to the Prime Minister. As the index of industrial production has fallen for the second quarter in a row, the first time this has happened in the past ten years, and as this is an important factor in the increasing unemployment that has been taking place over the last four months, would the Prime Minister have the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce take the first opportunity on motions to outline to the House what steps the government is planning in the near future to overcome this very serious trend?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister will be very glad to do everything to keep the hon. member informed about the many things being done by the department in regard to industrial production in this country.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As it is not particularly important to keep the hon. member informed but very important to keep the country's economy rolling at a high rate, and not to laugh and pay no attention to this problem like the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon-Humboldt does, will he please get on with the job and see that something is done?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VISIT BY PROFESSOR LIN TO PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Has the government of Canada received any report from Professor Paul Lin, professor of Asian problems at McGill University, following his recent visit to Communist China?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know of no such report having been made to the government of Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, he reported the last time he was over there to the great Tiger, to the Prime Minister—

Mr. Trudeau: To you?

Mr. Diefenbaker: —and I thought possibly he would do so again. I ask the Prime Minister this question: Is there any foundation for the generally accredited story that Professor Lin, as a result of his visit to Mao, or at least to Communist China, is to be appointed the first ambassador from Canada to Communist China?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. gentleman to my left knows that the question cannot be asked in those terms.

Inquiries of the Ministry

BIAFRA—CANAIRELIEF REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT SUPPORT

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the International Red Cross, the agency preferred by the government for conveying aid to the people of Biafra, has not operated since June, has the government come to any decision on the request of Canairelief, which was made, I understand, about three weeks ago, for support in carrying on its mercy flights into Biafra?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Brewin: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In coming to a decision on the request of Canairelief, has the government taken into account that the United States government is supporting similar American agencies that are carrying on relief operations in Biafra?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): My supplementary question is also for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of recent reports that difficulties have arisen with regard to the relief program in territory held by federal Nigeria, has the government made any plans to reactivate its relief program to that part of the war-torn area?

Mr. Trudeau: I would have to discuss this with the department, Mr. Speaker. I know of no recent action.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question on this matter. At page 872 of Hansard the Prime Minister told the House yesterday that the government of Canada had made certain suggestions for bringing help to Biafra in other ways, such as the use of helicopters, river crossing, and so on. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether these suggestions were made in writing and if so, whether he would consider tabling any relevant documents. If they were not made in writing, would the Prime Minister inform the House how and by whom these suggestions were made to the Biafran authorities and if they were also made to the Nigerian authorities?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, they were not made in writing that I know of but they did arise in discussions between officials of the federal government and other governments, notably that of the United States. Various measures such as those mentioned were discussed.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the right hon. Prime Minister arising out of the announcement by the appropriate British ministry yesterday that the government of Great Britain proposes to increase substantially the shipment of arms to Nigeria. Is the government of Canada making any representations to Great Britain in this connection?

Mr. Trudeau: We have no such plans, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, arising directly out of the answer by the right hon. gentleman to my question, if I heard his answer correctly he said that these suggestions arose in discussions between the United States government and the Nigerian government, whereas his answer of yesterday suggested that they were conveyed to the Biafran authorities. What I should like to know, Mr. Speaker, is whether these suggestions were made to the Biafran authorities and, if they were, how and by whom were they made?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, what I said was that the discussions arose in meetings between Canadian and United States officials and that some of the United States officials made us aware of certain propositions. We discussed others as well. Various plans have been looked at practically on a continuing basis by several governments, including ours. Some of these plans have been discussed with the Biafran authorities. One that comes to mind is a proposal for the Cross River. I cannot give specific dates and details of such representations made to the Biafran authorities by other governments, but I do know that our government has not had direct contact with them. I believe the exception is the occasion when the Secretary of State for External Affairs spoke with these representatives in New York city.

Mr. Lewis: I have a further supplementary. I apologize to Your Honour and to the House for pursuing this matter, but I think it has very great relevance. In the statement the Prime Minister made yesterday he referred to these alternatives and then added that "it always happens that the Biafran authorities do not see their way clear to accept these alternative ways." Does the Prime Minister's answer today mean that he made a general statement which was far wider than the facts warranted and that his mind is completely closed on this important humanitarian matter?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's East.

POLLUTION

HIGH SEAS—CANADIAN POSITION AT BRUSSELS INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I have a question for the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister in a position to report to the House on the stand taken by Canada at the Brussels conference on oil pollution of the high seas at which he represented Canada? If not, would he be inclined to give consideration to making a statement on motions?

Mr. Speaker: I feel that if the minister is to make a statement in reply to the question it should be made on motions, and the minister might wish to reply in those terms.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a copy of the statement is available. I shall consider whether anything would be gained by making a statement on motions when the conference is concluded and the various countries involved have stated their positions.

TAXATION

TAX REFORM—VALUATION DAY—DISCLOSURE OF MINISTERS' HOLDINGS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. As the Minister of Finance is having a tough, rough time selling some parts of his white paper, would the Prime Minister be prepared to suggest and direct that all his cabinet ministers be prepared to publish their equities and holdings prior to valuation day so that no individual may benefit from prior knowledge of the date?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary South.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question. Would the Prime Minister not reconsider his silence and give an answer? The fact is that this information would likely be fully known to the cabinet but not to the taxpayers. Therefore would he suggest to his cabinet that their holdings be published prior to valuation day?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, valuation day will not necessarily be set as a result of cabinet discussion. It is more likely to be announced in the usual manner by the Minister of Finance in a budgetary statement or some other way.

Regarding the previous question, if the minister is having trouble selling some parts of the white paper perhaps the hon. member could talk to some of his friends about whether progressive measures are a good thing for Canada.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary? It was not my friends who objected, it was the Prime Minister's Liberal friends in Calgary.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase my question?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government has yet received the report of Professor Jeremy Williams on the subject of conflict of interest legislation and whether the government would be prepared to table that report?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): The report has been received, Mr. Speaker, and we will be considering the hon. member's notice of motion for production of papers on this subject and perhaps be able to respond to it tomorrow.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder if I might ask one supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Will the Prime Minister inform us in clear terms as to who in the government or outside it will set valuation day?

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES AND YUKON—INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): My question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Mr. Speaker. Now that the minister has made his statement in Yellowknife and in the Yukon to the legislative councils to both territories with respect to self-government and the advance of self-government in those territories, when does he intend to introduce for first reading the two pieces of legislation mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, the bill to amend the Northwest Territories Act and the bill to amend the Yukon Act?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): As soon as possible, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Has he received a telegram or other communication from the Yukon Council or its members requesting a personal interview and reconsideration of the policy enunciated by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development? If so, has he replied and to what effect?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I entered the House I was told that such a telegram had arrived in my office. However, I did not see it and have not replied to it yet but I shall consider it and reply.

Mr. Speaker: Before the hon. member puts his supplementary, we have reached the point where I take the liberty of reminding hon. members that we will soon have used up all our available time and I know many members still have questions to ask.

Mr. Nielsen: Just one supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since in that communication the council requested a personal interview with the Prime Minister in order to express their regret as to the policy and discuss its reconsideration, is he able to inform the House whether the request will be granted?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the interview is merely for the purpose of expressing their regret, it is not necessary that I meet them. I shall accept their regret and discuss the matter with the minister.

Mr. Hees: Is that the Prime Minister's idea of participatory democracy?

POLLUTION

REGULATIONS RESPECTING AUTOMOBILES—INQUIRY AS TO ACTION

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. It arises out of the action taken in the last day or two by the United States government to bring an automobile manufacturing company to court in order to make it live up to anti-pollution regulations. What is being done or considered in that field in the Department of Transport?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt whether the question as asked is acceptable at this time. Perhaps the hon. member might give notice for consideration at the time of adjournment.

TRANSPORT

CARIBOU-WOOD ISLANDS FERRY SERVICE—IMPROVEMENT OF FACILITIES

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport regarding a matter to which he recently indicated he and his departmental officials have been giving attention, namely, the upgrading of the Wood Islands-Caribou ferry service so heavily used last summer. Can the minister advise if a decision has been made to augment and improve this important transportation link and, if so, can he indicate the extent of the Canadian government's participation in this good work?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that this question could also be placed on the Order Paper. There may be some urgency that is not readily apparent. If there is, perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply at this time.

FISHERIES

SUPPLYING OF WATER TO RUSSIAN FLEET BY HARBOURS BOARD

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Has the National Harbours Board been supplying fresh water to the huge Russian fishing fleet on the west coast at a price lower than that at which British Columbia fishermen can obtain fresh water?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I am afraid I cannot answer that, Mr. Speaker. It may be heavy water from Glace Bay. I will be glad to look into the matter and provide an answer for the hon. member.

OIL

STRAIT OF GEORGIA—ISSUANCE OF DRILLING PERMITS

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): As the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is absent today I will direct my question to his Parliamentary Secretary. In view of the reported statement by the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry in Vancouver on November 13 that his department will not allow oil drilling permits in Georgia Strait, are the required drilling permits in such areas still issued by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources?

Mr. R. J. Orange (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think the minister stated in the House last week there had been no change of policy in the department.

Mr. Harding: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the department require clearance from the Department of Fisheries and Forestry before pemits are issued for drilling in our continental shelf areas?

Mr. Speaker: This question could be placed on the Order Paper.

GRAIN

BOXCAR UTILIZATION—REQUEST FOR REVIEW

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, this must be the Minister of Transport's day in the House. I also wish to direct a question to him. In light of current reports that there is heavier than usual utilization of Canadian boxcars in the United States, will the minister take immediate steps to review this matter with officials of the United States with a view to establishing a more equitable formula for the use of Canadian rolling stock?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to look into it.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the suggestion I made a year ago regarding the appointment of a transport controller to direct the allocation of boxcars receiving the attention of the government?

Mr. Jamieson: I think that question might be more properly answered by the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatchewan.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): This question, of course, has frequently been put. It has been and still is our position that the appointment of a transport controller would not add anything to the movement of grain at the present time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In view of the fact the minister represents Saskatchewan and is a member of the same party as the Premier of Saskatchewan, does he think that government was not intelligent in making that recommendation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

POST OFFICE

NON-DELIVERY OF MAIL TO BROCHET, MANITOBA

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): My question, Mr. Speaker, is directed to the Postmaster General and Minister of Communications. I have just received a telegram which I would like to send to the minister. I ask him to look into the fact that the community of Brochet, Manitoba, has not received mail since October 17 despite the fact that aircraft are landing daily and taking passengers and freight in and out of this community.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may have a grievance, but I would not think his point is acceptable as a question. In any event, he has made a representation and has to assume it will be taken into account by the minister.

Mr. Simpson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the Minister of Communications. Is the minister aware of the fact that there has been no mail service to the community of Brochet since October 17?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): I will certainly find out about it in a few minutes, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ST. PIERRE—REPORTED DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): In the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I address my question to the Prime Minister. Has the government been officially made aware of an agreement entered into between the government of France and an international cartel for a $400 million promotional program for St. Pierre which will include the building of a gambling casino, a free port, an international airport, motels, hotels and nightclubs?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—POLICY ON SPECIFIC RESTRAINTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister to which I would like to receive a serious answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: That will be hard to get. He will just laugh it off.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I ask this question in view of the statement by Mr. Young that in the event of the failure of a policy of restraint the authorities may have to resort to a degree of unemployment which will be unacceptable to all concerned. Will the Prime Minister accept his responsibility to the House and to the country and, in view of his emphasis upon restraints, make a statement in the House tomorrow or the day following as to what the policy of the government is with regard to specific restraints so that this policy may have some chance of succeeding and the degree of unemployment indicated by the chairman may be avoided in the fight against inflation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): In due course and if necessary, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC SERVICE

DELAY IN ISSUING RETROACTIVE PAY CHEQUES

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): My question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. In view of the assurances previously given in the House, how much longer do civil servants have to wait for their retroactive pay increases?

Mr. Speaker: The question as asked is in an argumentative form. Perhaps the hon. member might like to ask it in the usual unargumentative way.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak more softly. I will try to bury the big stick in the question. In view of the fact that some of these cheques are now three months late, will the minister please specify what steps the department is taking to end this problem?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking for a statement which normally ought to be made on motions.

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

ARCTIC EXTRATERRITORIAL WATERS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Following his recent meeting with the Secretary General of the United Nations, could the Prime Minister tell us whether the Secretary General agrees to the principle recently stated by the Canadian government of Canada's sovereignty over the so-called extraterritorial waters of the Arctic Ocean?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we never asserted our sovereignty over Canada's extraterritorial waters.

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF COMMUNICATIONS RESPECTING CONFEDERATION FOR TOMORROW CONFERENCE

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): My question is to the Minister of Communications. It concerns the minister's Toronto speech of last Wednesday in which he described the Confederation for Tomorrow Conference as a grandstand performance. Will the minister be good enough to table the text of that address so that we all may peruse his latest contribution to co-operative federalism?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): I must explain the context in which the remark was made. I can do so briefly.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister says he can answer briefly, but even in those circumstances I do not think he can make a statement at this time explaining a speech. It would not be in accordance with the rules of the House.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INUVIK—PROVISION OF ELECTRIC, SEWER AND WATER SERVICES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. During his recent trip did he ensure that the Indian and Eskimo population of Inuvik will in future be supplied with hydro, water and sewage facilities in the same way as civil servants living in the town so that they do not remain second-class citizens?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, Indians, Eskimos and white people are treated the same way at Inuvik. A problem arose which did not only involve the Indians and the Eskimos but also a certain portion of the white population and it is now about to be solved.

[Mr. La Salle.]

[English]

Mr. Hees: Is the minister not aware that in the northern half of the town the Indians and the Eskimos are the only people without these facilities?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

TRANSPORT

INADEQUACY OF PASSENGER TRAIN SPACE

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): I have a question for the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. In view of the impossibility of obtaining space on CNR trains as far ahead as December 21 and later, will the minister move positively to require the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific to put more cars on their passenger trains to handle the demands of the travelling public?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): I shall be glad to make representations to the railways as I did at the end of the summer vacation with some success, I think.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON CONSOLIDATION OF BASES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax East): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister indicate when he will be in a position to read the next chapter of the base consolidation program to us?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): I am still writing it, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PESTICIDES

DISPOSAL BY CROWN ASSETS DISPOSAL CORPORATION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): May I direct a question to the Minister of Supply and Services arising out of a question I addressed to the Prime Minister several days ago concerning the government's policy of restricting the use of DDT? Can the minister tell the House whether or not Crown Assets Disposal Corporation is still calling for public tenders to purchase government stocks of DDT at Prince Albert National Park or anywhere else in Canada or whether the government will cease to call for such tenders?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): The call for tenders for pesticides containing DDT has been withdrawn.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—LACK OF EFFECTIVE AGRICULTURAL POLICIES

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex) moved:

That in the opinion of this House the government has failed in its duty to the Canadian farmer by its neglect to initiate and promote adequate marketing and distribution of food and agricultural products and the adoption of effective international policies with respect to agricultural commodity arrangements.

He said: In the light of events which have taken place since 1963 with regard to the agriculture industry, events which have accelerated drastically in the past few months, I consider it a real privilege to be in a position on behalf of that industry to move a motion of non-confidence in this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Danforth: The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam) has done me the honour of seconding my motion.

If there had been any doubt whatever in my mind about the wisdom of making such a motion it was completely dispelled by the statement the minister made this afternoon on behalf of this so-called government, a statement which amounted to nothing less than a declaration that the government has closed the doors on attempts to solve the major problems facing agriculture today and is resorting to an undignified retreat from its responsibilities and obligations. It is my considered opinion, an opinion shared by all my hon. friends on this side of the House, that these decisions were taken solely for reasons of political expediency in a desperate attempt to balance the federal budget without giving consideration to the implications as they affect the agricultural industry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Danforth: During the past six years we on this side of the House have tried desperately to bring what is happening in agriculture to the attention of the government. We have pointed out that the industry is in a flux of evolution. We have pointed out that measures which might have met some of the problems to a certain extent prior to 1963 are no longer sufficient to meet the demands of 1969 and 1970. We have tried to make it clear to members of the government that the problems which bear on agriculture today affect every field of Canadian life—that the consumers are directly affected by price changes and food costs, that health and welfare measures are directly concerned when farmers are forced to leave the so-called poorer farms of this country and migrate to the urban centres to become, for the most part, welfare cases; that the Department of Labour is concerned when it is called upon to find employment for these people or retrain them because they can no longer make their own living on the farms.

Especially during the past months we have sought to bring home to the government the fact that agriculture as a whole is in dire financial straits, and whenever we have done so government spokesmen have attempted to prove that the gross income of the farming community was much greater than ever before and that the net income is growing every year. I contend this is just a method of book-keeping which is used by government supporters to conceal from the Canadian public as a whole exactly what is happening in the agriculture industry. It makes not one bit of difference if a farmer receives 5 per cent more gross income during a year if his expenditures rise by 10 per cent and if his interest charges have increased from 6 per cent to 11 per cent in a single year; his "take-home" pay is far less than it was a year earlier. It is hard to convince such a man that he has never had it so good.

Isn't it strange that when we point to one of the greatest industries in Canada, the industry which exports more goods than any other, the industry which employs more people than any other, we should find that the increase in the inventory value of the holdings in that industry has, over the last ten years, been almost identical with the increase in borrowings by the industry from government sources? Speaking from memory, I think the figure is around $1,800 million.

Through the years the government has indicated to leaders in agriculture that it is aware of the problems and is attempting to do something about them. The fact is that today leaders of farm commodity groups and farm marketing organizations are no longer coming to Ottawa to present the facts, make their requests and offer advice and suggestions to the government. They have found from bitter experience that all they get is a pleasant hearing and absolutely nothing else.

Most of us concerned with agriculture were invited to attend the agricultural congress, and for this we thank the minister for his courtesy. In his opening address, which was excellent indeed, the minister stated that the three main objectives of the congress were, first of all, to deal with matters realistically; second, to approach the problems in a practical manner, and third, to look at agricultural needs not in the short term but in the long term. This is very commendable.

The minister also indicated to the assembly that he was not interested in political expediency but in the long term approach to agriculture that he, as minister, wished to adopt. In other words, he left the impression—and I admire him for this—that he was not interested in extending his own political career or the political life of his party; he was acting solely for the good of agriculture.

Within three weeks, contrary to every indication in the congress report, the minister took it upon himself, without consultation with the industry, to reduce the subsidy on the hog program, one which he had said 90 days previously had been formulated after consultation with the industry. The minister reduced this subsidy unilaterally, without consultation even with the members of the agricultural committee in whom he said he had greatest confidence. The minister took it upon himself to reduce this subsidy in order to cut expenditure in the Department of Agriculture.

This is the man who said we must speak with realism, in a practical manner, and deal with the long time good of agriculture. If this sort of action is repeated, there will be no farmers and no need for a long term policy. The Canadian agricultural industry as such will be finished.

There is no doubt that this congress, to which all leaders of agriculture and allied industries were invited, reflected the desire of the government progressively to withdraw from the financial support of agricultural institutions and to drop, as I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) put it, the paternalistic approach to the industry. Otherwise, how could the government, which has been supporting the agricultural industry in Canada for 100 years, now tell that industry it is no longer interested and is going to withdraw its support? I say the government cannot withdraw and will not withdraw.

An indication of the government's intentions was given the other day when the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) stated in this House that preferential tariffs were going to be applied by Canada and developing nations to the mutual benefit of both. Those who have engaged in agriculture or any of the allied industries know that the prime exports of developing countries in the world are agricultural products. In other words, the government has issued an invitation to these countries to export agricultural products to Canada. This is a direct intervention by the government over which the industry has little control.

First of all, the government said it would not intervene in this way. Then, the government said it would withdraw from its responsibilities. The government is also attempting to establish a new price for potash, one of the prime products used by farmers. It is proposed to increase the price $6 a ton for farmers in eastern Canada, and in my province alone the average quantity used per year is 150,000 tons. In other words, production expenses of farmers in Ontario next year will be increased by $1 million as a result of direct government intervention. I ask the government how it can even think of withdrawing assistance from agriculture.

The Liberal party has been in office for about six years, and I should like to know what they have in store for agriculture. It was indicated yesterday that there would be another federal-provincial conference of agricultural ministers this week, something that is an annual occurrence. As I say, we attended this great agricultural congress that was going to discuss agricultural problems and find solutions thereto. The Standing Committee on Agriculture has travelled the country from coast to coast. The government has set up a task force to study agricultural problems, but this body has failed to report since it started work three years ago. The government also set up a royal commission to study the high price of farm machinery, and the only report during its life span of two years has been an interim one. This interim report consists of about 640 pages, and what does it indicate? In short, it is an indication to the government that there are problems facing Canadian agriculture that should be investigated. The commission recommends that an investigating body be set up. Perhaps we should set up another royal commission and also concentrate research upon the marketing field.

Today, the minister stated that all financing of agricultural research and farm subsidies is going to be curtailed. Changes will be made. There will be further cut-backs, even to the extent that staff will be dismissed and personnel will be deployed within the department.

Mr. Olson: Read the statement again.

Mr. Danforth: Some experimental farms might even have to shut down at a time when agriculture needs every bit of scientific research that we can afford in order to introduce new packaging methods, new varieties of crops, additional sales promotion on the domestic market, while at the same time emphasizing new competitive methods for securing international markets.

This government seems to think that we are still in the 1950's or 1960's. We are talking about the 1970's, about a brand new ball game. We are talking not about free trade but about managed markets. We are talking about the buying and selling of food by international food chains. We are talking about sales not by individual farmers and marketing groups, but by countries. We are talking about international distribution. But the government is running to its little corner, holding up and umbrella and hoping that the rain will go away. This is why this House should have absolutely no confidence in government policy. Frankly, I do not understand how hon. members on the government side who come from rural areas can any longer support this type of approach to agricultural problems. They are knowledgeable men and know, or should know, what is going on in the industry in their ridings, but we do not hear from them in the house. They are not actively promoting methods which will save this great farm industry from actual annihilation.

What has this government finally decided after years of investigation, procrastination and alibis? It has come to the conclusion that what we need is perhaps national marketing schemes and supply management. This approach could possibly provide some help, but I gravely suspect that when the government talks about national marketing schemes and supply management what it means is that we are going to curtail production to meet demand. When the government talks about demand it is not talking about national markets, as we learned from bitter experience, it is talking about domestic demand which is becoming increasingly smaller each year because of pressure from imports into this country under the impetus of international food chains buying cheap food everywhere in the world. This is what agriculture is faced with today.

I should like to quote two sentences from publication No. 12 by the Agricultural Economics Research Council of Canada. It is entitled "Evaluation of Objective for Agriculture" by J. C. Gilson. In it he quotes from Professor Cochrane's recent book "A City Man's Guide to the Farm Problem". This quotation sets forth the problem very simply and eloquently and indicates where this proud agricultural industry stands today. These are the sentences:

> Farmers stand hopelessly divided and badly confused before their problems; their political power is dissipated and their understanding is muddied.

To my mind this is the position in which this government has put this once proud industry. So, it is with pride that today I propose a motion of non-confidence in a government which has regimented the agricultural industry to such an extent it has been put not just in the position of second class citizens but on the road to destruction.

This government talks about the movement of small farm operators into the city, and encourages this movement. It talks about those small farm operators making $2,500 a year, as though they have no right to be on the farm any more. We are facing a new age. There are going to be far more farmers living on farms making under $2,500 a year than there were in the past. This is the type of farmer who will accept full or part time employment in an adjacent city. He will, because of the high cost of living and inflation, be forced to do both jobs. This type of existence is not the exception, it is rapidly becoming a way of life.

In the interests of farmers as a whole, the government must reach the decision that we cannot have any over-all legislation for farmers. It must recognize that there are three distinct types of farmers in this nation for whom something must be done. First, there is the large commercial entity composed of a number of groups of farmers banding together for the purpose of operating a common feed plant, a food processing plant or a cattle feeding operation. That is one type.

We then have the family type farms. My definition of a family farm perhaps differs from that of other hon. members in the House. Under today's circumstances, a family farm is a farm that utilizes to the "nth" degree every possible mechanical and technical advantage but where the labour input exceeds that of purchased labour.

Alleged Lack of Agricultural Policies

Finally, we have the small farmer who lives on the fringe of suburbia or an urban centre in which there are commercial and industrial enterprises. He augments his income by working in the factories or in industry. He might even drive a school bus in order to provide, in his own fashion, for his family.

The government cannot adopt one policy in respect of these three types of farmers. These people have various problems, both agricultural and social. This government must make a decision. Perhaps during its term of office it can make one decision. It must decide to put farmers in training programs and provide adequate employment so they can furnish their families with the necessities to which they are entitled. The government must evaluate the cost of such a program and decide whether it would be cheaper for the taxpayer and better for the welfare of small communities to introduce programs which would keep the small farmer and his family on the farm. It is very easy to say we are going to retrain this group of farmers in order to move them into the cities where unemployment is increasing even for those who are specialists, and where we have not got adequate housing. Under this program we would put farmers out of their homes, which would fall into disrepair very quickly, and put them into other areas which also have problems. The result will be to increase the problems of the small municipalites which will lose their tax base and thus be unable to support community life.

We have a Liberal government today which, after nearly seven years in office is still trying to ascertain the problems. This is the same Liberal party that assured the people in 1963 it knew all the answers. Seven years later we are staggering blindly along unable to reach concrete decisions, even after months and months of deliberation. The policy the government has evolved amounts to a withdrawal of financial support from the agricultural industry, and a withdrawal of its responsibilities and obligations. It proceeds with blind faith that perhaps tomorrow will be a better day.

I have no confidence in this government. I have no confidence in the plans it has put forward for the future of agriculture. When I note that the very knowledgeable leaders of this agricultural industry in Canada refuse to come to Ottawa because they feel that would be of little value, I am sure that standing in my place here I speak for the Canadian farmer.

[Mr. Danforth.]

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the motion and in due course will move an amendment. I am amazed that within the year, or better than a year now, that this government has been in office it has not brought before this House a clear enunciation of a policy to meet agricultural problems as members of the government see them. A year ago members of the Standing Committee on Agriculture looked at the agricultural scene in Canada. During that study members of the Standing Committee, not only of the opposition but also of the government, agreed there was a necessity to take a look at what was happening to the farming industry in Canada. So, we travelled to western Canada and to eastern Canada. Some areas still remain to be visited. The committee has not even yet made its final report. Members were ready to comment on some of the things they saw. I am sure there were some things upon which members of the committee, in their extended tour, could have agreed to make recommendations to the government of the day. As a result of their tour, the members of the committee did recommend some things to the government, very few of which have been implemented.

When we met here on September 23, I thought one of the top priorities for the government would have been to have this committee meet, bring in a final report on eastern Canada and cover some of the very important issues on which the committee has not yet reported. One of these issues, notably the feed grain situation, was left until the committee made its final report. The government, however, apparently feels there is no urgency for action in this particular field, otherwise it would have acted. Yet, I do not suppose there is any facet of agriculture in which there is a greater disarray or a worse situation than that which exists in respect of feed grains in western Canada today. One hears of farmers selling feed grain, wheat, oats and barley, at prices that are simply give-away prices, such as 50 cents and 60 cents a bushel for wheat. One wonders how those who buy this feed grain have the gall to go into the yard, load it up and haul it away. But I guess there is no limit.

One hears complaints, some of which were also heard by members of the standing committee. It was obvious from our discussions with the officials of the Board of Grain Commissioners that feed grain was bypassing the regular trade channels and appearing in eastern Canada where it offered competition to those manufacturers who made their purchases through the Wheat Board. In view of this situation one would have thought the government would have considered it urgent to ask the members of the committee for advice on how to deal effectively with the problem. But no, that was not done. If the government did not want the advice of the members of the committee, then one would be led to believe the government itself would make a proposal for dealing with the situation. But, no. So, like Mohammed's coffin, the problem hangs half way between heaven and hell, waiting for someone to bring it down to earth.

As members of the committee travelled about the country there were other things they saw which required attention. One of these was the abattoir in Nova Scotia which is seeking to deal with the problem of marketing livestock in Nova Scotia and perhaps part of New Brunswick. This abattoir is in need of some aid for its effort to serve that area. But I suppose this problem also has been lost in limbo. One could go on and mention other things we saw on that tour, such as the change that is taking place in agriculture. After looking at the big processing plant in New Brunswick, we could see the close tie-in there is now between marketing and production. Policies are needed to deal with this situation. Only this morning representatives of the National Farmers Union appeared before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to ask for consideration of the high interest rates which now prevail and with which farmers are trying to deal and live. Some farmers will not be able to cope. I do not know the number of farmers who will be in extreme difficulty because of the interest rates which now prevail in Canada.

Some sectors of Canadian business and Canadian industry probably will be able to live with this type of interest rate structure without too much difficulty. I would not venture to pass an opinion on that, but I will venture to pass the opinion that agriculture will not survive and be healthy with the interest rate structure which it now faces. That same interest rate structure will prove to be one of the factors that will prevent the adjustment to other forms of production which some farmers are having to make in Canada today, and more particularly in western Canada. A farmer is a pretty flexible individual. He can adjust to a great many different conditions. He is pretty resourceful, but the one thing he cannot adjust to is a zero income. That is what many farmers in Canada are trying to do today; they are trying to adjust to a zero income. This is impossible.

I could provide figures, but why bother. They have all been quoted in this House before, and, indeed, many times during the last year. Is it necessary to put more on the record? I doubt it. Perhaps a brief example might be sufficient. Last spring the price of beef was $35 per hundredweight. When it reached that point the head of one of the great chain stores in Canada advised that there should be a boycott. One minister said he thought this would be a good idea. Well, it was effective within six weeks. The price went down to the neighbourhood of $29 and now is down to $28. Some farmers who put cattle in their feed lots last spring will be lucky when they bring them out this fall if they are able to repay their loan. These are the men who are attempting to adjust to a new set of circumstances.

In wheat and coarse grains, there is a marketing crisis which has existed for almost two years and which is getting worse rather than better. We have had recurring crises in transportation and grain handling, and every once in a while one hears that this or that grain is not in position for this or that market. I will not take the time now to say who was right and who was wrong in the last crisis with regard to flax because what we really need to do is to look at the grain marketing and transportation facilities and make them into an effective working mechanism. Flax rye and rapeseed should be handled by the Canadian Wheat Board. How can the program work well when, on the one hand, there is the Canadian Wheat Board administering quotas allowing one to put so much into the pipeline and giving permission to move it here and there while, on the other hand, there is another agency doing the selling and pricing and governing itself, strictly according to the profit on the day's operations? That is their only concern. If something goes wrong with their operation, the Canadian Wheat Board gets the blame. It is the biggest thing in sight and it is always a handy whipping boy.

I say to the government that if they continue their present policies they will invite this sort of circumstance. We need a clear statement of policy from the government. The Globe and Mail carries a story under a byline which indicates there is going to be a big shake-up and much friction between the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Therefore, a secretariat will have to be set up. I do not know how closely this reporter has his ear to the ground, but a little over a year ago this government set up the Canada Grain Council in Winnipeg. Perhaps some day when the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon-Humboldt (Mr. Lang) is in a good mood he will tell us what that council has done in the intervening time. I see occasional press reports stating that they have some money, but perhaps we should be told of their activities. Apparently they are not doing the job because, according to the Globe and Mail press report, there has been too much friction and another secretariat will have to be set up.

Alleged Lack of Agricultural Policies

The news release of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool of November 7 stated that Mr. John W. Channon advocated a change in the selling policy of the Canadian Wheat Board. According to that report:

> In its place Mr. Channon suggested a bid-and-ask type of pricing. Under this system he said, the Board's average price may fall but revenue to producers would increase because more sales would be made.

I wonder who gave him a crystal ball and I wonder if he looks into it every morning on rising. How does he know that more sales will be made through that method? I would not set myself up as a judge but I suggest that the two departments should agree on the policy that should be applied and should try to be more consistent.

The main point that should be recognized in the selling of wheat and coarse grains is that we are in a new ball game in terms of trade, and that is the new circle in which the Wheat Board operates. I suppose none of us really has a crystal ball, but following the second world war we should have foreseen that markets in western Europe were not going to expand. Certainly, when the Chinese and Russian sales took place, the clear indication was that we were going to have to reorient ourselves toward new markets and their development. Unfortunately, instead of doing that we considered those sales as windfalls. I do not propose to make any criticism of that but I say that we emerged out of the Kennedy round without any advantage. The Kennedy round was essentially a continental policy and we are still going to have to live with it because it oriented us one way, but the western grain producer will have to start looking to the east. I do not see any other alternative for us, if we want to sell grain in those markets, but to increase our trade and our willingness to do business with these eastern countries. I do not see any signs yet that we are willing to do that.

There are no news stories about the promotion of improved rapeseed, and so on, or action parallel to that undertaken by the Americans when they negotiated an agreement which gave them further chances to export their soya beans and other products. They got real concessions from the Japanese in return, I suppose, for concessions which they gave the Japanese. We have before us the alternative of expanding our trade in these areas in order to find new markets for our coarse grains, both in the east and in Europe, or else to cut back production in western Canada. If the latter course is followed the economy of that part of Canada will suffer great damage and, not only will farming operations be eliminated but business people and whole communities will go out of business. At this time of crisis it does not make sense to cut back on research and development in the Department of Agriculture or to cut back the subsidies and aids to agriculture. We need all the brains and all the effort that we can muster to pull our farmers through in a rapidly changing agricultural economy.

Even without that crisis, agriculture would have had enough troubles because of the pressure of technology and of the industrial society, of which farming is now only starting to become a part. Agriculture is ill-equipped to become part of a highly technical and highly organized industrial society. If the government were aware of this fact and acted on it, then I think the farmers in this country would have more confidence in the future and in this government. But the farmers have yet to be shown that the government is aware of these circumstances.

Having said this, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move an amendment to the motion, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) as follows:

> That the motion be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma, and by adding immediately thereafter the following words:
> "and by its failure to take adequate steps to provide the additional cash income urgently required by the farmers of this country."

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, this motion and the amendment relate to a serious matter of deep concern to the people of Canada and in particular to the farmers of Canada. It is a striking circumstance that at a time like this, with agriculture in the doldrums to an extent we have not seen in many, many years, the House of Commons by its attendance gives little indication that there is any realization of the serious situation in which the farmers find themselves. When one looks across at the government side and finds there is one minister in the House, the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt (Mr. Lang), one is given an indication of the attitude of the government towards the serious situation faced by farmers everywhere in the country, and in particular in western Canada, of which I intend to speak.

The hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) seconded by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam) moved the motion to which an amendment has been moved. The hon. member who moved the motion made a striking contribution to the problem. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have to correct myself. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) is back on the scene.

Mr. Olson: I have been here all the time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: So, they have doubled their representation in a few moments.

Mr. Stanfield: You cannot tell whether he is here or not.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is the best record the government has had so far. I know the Minister of Agriculture is here today because earlier he made a statement, more vacuous than any produced by any minister of agriculture in the last 35 years. Indeed, it was a mimicry of Parliament to produce a statement as vacuous and vapid as was that statement and expect it to bring any hope to the farmer. It cannot bring anything else but a deep and abiding feeling of frustration.

Mr. Olson: Come now!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would be glad to hear the minister. I would like to hear him defend the indefensible because that is what he will be doing if he rises to speak in support of what he said this afternoon. So far as western Canada is concerned, it is all in keeping with the immortal words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at Winnipeg when he asked, "Why should I sell wheat?" That was the attitude of the government. When asked what he intended to do about selling Canadian wheat he replied, "Why should I sell wheat?" I quote:

> According to press reports Mr. Trudeau added that although selling wheat was a national problem, first and foremost it was the farmers' concern.

The farmer has nothing to do with the selling of his wheat. It is done through the instrumentality of the Wheat Board, but the Prime Minister is apparently unaware of this. Again, I quote:

> He said that selling wheat was the farmers' problem, because the only case in which it would be the government's responsibility would be if the state owned the land, the wheat, and hired the farmer to produce it.

That ejaculation of his is indicative of the complete indifference the government has to the problems of the western farmer.

Mr. Lang: You left out something.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There are two ministers present and I will welcome any interruptions from either of them because then I can always clarify and deal with matters that otherwise would not receive attention. There they sit. I think they are men of deep concern.

Mr. Lang: May I ask the right hon. member a question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh yes, welcome.

Mr. Lang: I would just like to ask, Mr. Speaker, if he would care to read the other sentence of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in which he referred to the Wheat Board on that occasion?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, the Wheat Board. I am reading from the report by Canadian Press.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Apparently, I am reading the entire report, and the hon. gentleman knows that what the Prime Minister said rankles in the hearts of western farmers so he produces that little alibi, "What did the Prime Minister say about the Wheat Board?" I will refer to the Wheat Board a little later on.

Mr. Olson: Please do.

Mr. Lang: Yes.

Alleged Lack of Agricultural Policies

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would like to hear from the minister. I have a high regard for him in an intellectual way. He went from Dean of Law at the university to a high position. I sometimes wonder whether the Prime Minister gave him the wheat problem so that he would be suffocated in endeavouring to solve it.

It is an interesting situation in which the minister finds himself. Well, I shall now deal with some of his recent observations. He issued a Press release the other day, November 5, in which he——defended the work of the Canadian Wheat Board, called on farmers to adjust their production to market forecasts, urged pooling of terminal resources and suggested that the wheat situation calls for the use of computers, unit trains and very large country elevators.

There is the solution: more computers, larger country elevators and unit trains. That will put money into the farmers' hands! That is the solution of an intellectual wandering into the fields of practical politics in agriculture. He gave advice. He said that farmers must adjust production to meet market needs.

The farmers must be completely aware of the probable sales opportunity for the crop to be produced and a means will be sought to provide this information in advance of the critical time for farmers to make their decisions.

What was the hon. gentleman's advice in 1968, during the election campaign? He told the farmers, as did all of the Liberal members from western Canada, "Produce your wheat and we will sell it." The difference is that when we got that pile of wheat in 1957, we sold it. We did away with that tremendous avalanche of wheat.

Mr. Olson: Do you want to compare the figures?

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I hear the ejaculations of the minister? I do not want to miss any of his words. They have been very costly to the western farmer. I have listened to him, and I have also listened to his confrere, the solver of the farm problems in my own province and in all of Canada. They are now faced with this wheat situation and they give the farmers explanations that have no basis in fact. They say, "If you only wait long enough we are going to act". When? I will deal with the declaration made today by the minister.

I don't often give quotations, but here is one from the Western Producer. I think the Minister of Agriculture is a consistent reader of the Western Producer. I recall that in the past, as he sat here in the darknesses of opposition, he often quoted the Western Producer. It was his Bible until he changed his location. The article is headed, "No Help for Farmers", and reads in part:

• (4:00 p.m.)

Have these cabinet ministers who have been assuring us that help will be forthcoming for farmers at the new session of Parliament been deliberately misleading us?

That is dated November 13. "Have these cabinet ministers who have been assuring us help will be forthcoming"—one of whom was the Hon. Mr. Pepin. When Pepin found he could not put any pep in the Wheat Board to sell wheat the responsibility for that Board was transferred to the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt (Mr. Lang) and ever since then he has been producing alibis—alibis for inaction. I feel sorry for him because I have a fondness for him which is the result of non-bias and the propinquity of our adjacent constituencies. However, I find he is an automaton; he gets pushed around. For the past several weeks the farmers producing rapeseed have been endeavouring to get action from him and he has told them they should be able to deliver their quota, providing it would not be using up space. After weeks of telling the farmers he agreed with them, that he was sympathetic—

Mr. Lang: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I should like the record to show that I did not make those statements.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will have the letter in a moment. Did the hon. gentleman say that he was sympathetic to them? He did. What did he mean by sympathy—inaction? Oh, I am glad to hear that.

An hon. Member: He is all heart.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Action was circumscribed by his political position. I have the letter here you know. When I read it I could just see the lachrymose words that he uttered—"I am sympathetic to you but I can do nothing. If I do anything I will get in trouble."

What about the rapeseed farmers in Saskatoon-Humboldt who have tens of thousands of bushels that will not be sold unless action is taken to look after the damp rapeseed at the present time? Action? He said to them, "I am sympathetic". These are farmers in his own constituency as well as all over Saskatchewan who have this damp and wet rapeseed. Is that all they will get from this government? Sympathy? It is not sympathy they want. Why does he not give the order? Is he afraid he is going to antagonize somebody? He knows it is right. He told them he knew that. He said, "I am all for you but come around tomorrow."

Now, let me read on:

Mr. Peters: I am all heart, to the last drop of your blood.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It reads:

Delivery quotas are almost non-existent; country elevators are plugged; desperate farmers are selling good wheat, according to reports, for 30 cents a bushel, some barley for 20 cents. Business in country stores has slowed to a mere trickle. Many merchants have gone bankrupt and many others are facing bankruptcy in a matter of a few months.

We are told what the government is going to do. We are going to have the Canada Grain Act changed to suit the times. Mr. Speaker, the minister is representing the province of Saskatchewan and also the province of Alberta in this matter, but when the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas), is outside this House he rides the white horse of action against this government. Let him speak up today. Let him tell this government exactly what he says outside this House.

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): Do you mean what I said in the House the other day?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did not hear from the hon. member—

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): Where the hell were you?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Peters: You did not like that, Douglas. You just cannot take it.

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): Where the hell were you?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I invite hon. members to kindly remember that only one member at a time has the floor. The right hon. member for Prince Albert has the right to speak now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member for Assiniboia makes his best contribution when he is sitting down.

I proceed to read from an editorial which says:

The thing that bothers us is this: the present farm income situation is such that government failure to introduce sound and effective policies immediately will be disastrous. We may assume that Mr. Trudeau's farm policy statement was in line with his concept of a "just society". Farmers in this case can scarcely be blamed for being totally disillusioned.

That is the feeling out in western Canada. This government could not elect a member on the prairies today if there were an election, and in that I include the Minister of Agriculture who crept in by 400 votes the last time. They know that and still they will not act.

Here is what the Winnipeg Free Press says:

The problems of the Canadian farmer today are usually associated with a slumping market for wheat. Certainly this is the number one problem, but it is by no means the only one. The whole agricultural economy is in bad shape and it has not been improved by the policies of government or the advice of the experts.

There has been no guidance to the farmer, and may I read the exact words? "...he received no guidance on these matters." The reference is to the question of what he should or should not produce or what alterations he should make.

He continued to produce high quality wheat and, as recently as two years ago, was advised to increase his production.

And so it goes, down the line. Western Canada's dairy market has been destroyed by this government and by the tinkering of the Minister of Agriculture. Here is what the article says about that:

Even dairy production has its problems. When Canada had a huge butter surplus, farmers were urged to reduce their production of milk for manufacturing purposes. Western farmers did this; those in the east did not. Now with fixed quotas the order of the day, all the large quotas are in eastern Canada; the prairies caught in a straitjacket, are no longer allowed to produce enough butter for prairie needs.

No longer allowed to produce sufficient butter! That newspaper, the Winnipeg Free Press, can never have ascribed to it the heresy of Conservatism.

Every year Manitoba is forced to import millions of pounds of butter from Quebec—butter on which the western consumer has to help pay the subsidy as well as the freight. In the meantime, unable to get quotas, thousands of milk and cream producers in the prairies are being forced out of business every year.

That is true. What is the government doing about it? In effect, the minister says, "That is the rule and we cannot change it." But they can change it, so why don't they?

Mr. Olson: You describe it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the minister not receive hundreds and hundreds of letters from dairy farmers in western Canada protesting this injustice to them?

Mr. Olson: And from eastern Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I know, and from eastern Canada too. That proves exactly the point made by the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth). Things are bad in eastern Canada, too. I thank the minister for that interpolation. Out of the mouth of babes comes wisdom. The minister has again proved that aphorism.

Mr. Lewis: Don't exaggerate the situation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What about the wheat situation? The hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt is apparently satisfied, but I intend to refer to the position in which we now find ourselves. Canada, in the last year and a half, has lost its reasonable and fair share of the world wheat market. It has fallen by approximately 9 per cent or 10 per cent. At the same time the United States is increasing its share. I have before me an extract from the Southwestern Miller of Kansas City dated September 23, 1969 which reads:

• (4:10 p.m.)

Bookings of flour and wheat for export last week were largest in some time, and additional sizeable volume is pending. Major business in flour was purchase by A.S.C.F. of 1,318,000 cwts of bread and all-purpose flour for October export relief. Bookings by Brazil and Japanese Food Agency comprised major portion of export wheat business.

The article goes on to tell of the increases. The United States sold to Saudi Arabia, Bahrein, Congo, Dominica, by barter as a matter of fact, to Colombo, the Netherlands, Surinam, Honduras and a tremendous amount to Brazil. While all this was happening the government of Canada stood back and did not give to the Wheat Board the support that it should in order to assure that Canada got its fair and proper share.

There are those who criticize the Wheat Board. I am not one of those because if it had not been for the Conservative party, there would not be a Wheat Board. The Board was established by the Bennett government in July of 1935. The Liberal party did everything they could to throw monkey wrenches in the way to prevent the implementation of that act. Then, for a period of years—

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Olson: Which one was that?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. Minister of Agriculture was not a member of the Liberal party at that time. I recall he was one of the directors along the line and I am now referring to when he sat in a more accustomed place.

There have been nine months of waiting with regard to Communist China. I am not going to discuss the cowering attitude of the government of Canada as it goes before Mao and asks for the right to recognize the government of Communist China. I ask, what are they going to get? What is a quid pro quo? Are they going to sell extra amounts of wheat to Communist China? Do they know? We were able to bring about sales as a result of extending credit at a time when recognition was not even regarded as being within the realm of possibility.

The same is true of Australia. Australia is getting the orders, but they wait. I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) if during these deliberations in Stockholm, either on the street or in some building in Stockholm, he were discussing the possibility of Communist China buying wheat. Do we get any trade out of it? Not a bit! Those countries that have recognized Communist China have not increased their trade. What was the reply of the Secretary of State for External Affairs at a time when we have over a billion bushels of wheat piled up? He said, we have not talked about wheat. I suggest these two ministers should get together with the Secretary of State for External Affairs and point out to him that there is a market that might be secured.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the right hon. gentleman at this point to remind him and the House that his time has expired. Unless he has the unanimous agreement of the House—

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I always appreciate acts like that, but they always have the result of making it impossible from then on to be in any way seriously critical.

I feel that something has happened in connection with the Wheat Board. I think the ministers of this government sit in the shadows and are not giving support to the Wheat Board. They are playing around and giving lip service. The whole problem of wheat marketing must be reviewed. There can be no delay.

The other day I asked the hon. Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon-Humboldt whether consideration was being given to setting up a royal commission. He swept that aside by saying, no, we do not go in for that. Well, there were more royal commissions under the Pearson government and since the present government came into office than in any similar period of time. The minister said that today we have task forces. What is needed today is a royal commission to investigate the whole marketing problem and to place the responsibility for the loss of Canadian markets abroad where it deserves to be.

One of the reasons the government is opposed to setting up a royal commission, a commission which should be able to report within a period of three months, is the fact that they realize such an action would be a condemnation of this government. The statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) "If you expect me to sell wheat..." was an obvious and clear indication of the attitude of this government.

I mentioned something about the problem of sales. Imagine the advertising Canada received through an article which appeared in the Wall Street Journal headed "Bartering with grain helps Saskatchewan weather wheat glut". The article states the only way prairie merchants can keep alive today is by bartering wheat. It mentions one merchant in the city of Regina, a furniture dealer who, because of the serious shortage of cash was unable to sell his merchandise. Having learned either to swim or drown, he now barters furniture for wheat. This is happening all over the province. While this happens government members simply smile and smirk.

Why doesn't the government do something? Members of the government have been out west. They have left with the farmers the hope that something is going to be done. When the Prime Minister returned to Ottawa his words became clear and definite, "Do you expect me to sell wheat?" The situation on the Prairies is critical beyond words. There has been nothing to equal the fear and frustration that exists with these people today. When they look to tomorrow, they wonder what is next. They have a right to expect action.

Now then, what is the reason for this situation? Is it the Wheat Board? The Agricultural Economic Research Council of Canada brought the Canadian Wheat Board under fire for alleged timidity in the struggle for world grain markets. It emphasized the serious situation that is resulting through the failure of the Wheat Board, as I understand it, to get out of the tentacles that have held it back in the last two or three years and to start to sell wheat.

What about the possibility of persons or organizations outside of Canada selling our wheat? Why should there be organizations from every country but Canada endeavouring to get orders for wheat? There is a list of five or six of these international traders. Let us give private industry the opportunity to go and look for markets. Other nations have these corporations in various other countries. It is time we in Canada did something similar.

I will conclude by simply summarizing what I have endeavoured to suggest to the House should be done. First, we should have aggressive policies for sale and not just the evasive answers we receive in this House for failure to act. Second, there should be an acreage payment of $2 an acre—something the wheat farmer has a right to expect under present conditions, third, the implementation of a system of farm storage involving accelerated depreciation of multiple-use farm buildings in addition to that already in existence. Next, we should give to the farmer market outlines and guidelines in co-operation with the provinces which would enable him to know the direction in which the industry is moving and to make the most effective use of his land, farm resources and labour. Fifth, the government should improve road and port facilities—and use Fort Churchill, extending the period during which Fort Churchill can be used. By putting modern technology into effect, the port could be open for at least six or eight weeks longer during each season. Let the government do this. It would mean a saving to the western farmer. It would also mean the use of the installations we have there, facilities which are virtually not being used at present. Twenty million bushels or so a year does not begin to cover the situation.

• (4:20 p.m.)

I think the time has come when sales of all wheat for domestic human consumption by the Wheat Board should be fixed at a price of $2.95½ per bushel. I remember that when the hon. member for Medicine Hat was sitting in the Social Credit party this was something he advocated. He wanted a two-price system and he advocated a responsible price for the wheat which was used in Canada.

Alleged Lack of Agricultural Policies

Finally, there should be on the part of this government a four year commitment of more than $100 million to be used for assistance, development and adjustment of the prairie farm economy. Some have asked for more. I believe this amount, if used properly and appropriately would bring about a rejuvenation of agriculture in western Canada. I say to this government: if you do not act you will encounter a revulsion of feeling in western Canada on the part of responsible people, people who follow the law, such as I fear to mention; you will add to the fires of that group which today throughout western Canada is preaching secession. It is becoming a subject of discussion. It must be met. It would be met if this government would take off the shackles which have prevented some of its members, however estimable they might be, and however desirous of action, from doing that which in their own hearts they realize should be done.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, during the course of my contribution to this debate I want to say something by way of rebuttal, if that is the right word, of the charges which have been made by those who have taken part in the debate so far. In addition, I want to make a statement respecting the condition of agriculture in Canada today and to make some comparisons related to the contents of the motion and of the amendment to that motion which are before us.

What is more, I have been invited by the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) and by the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) to make some comparisons as between the five years immediately past and the five years preceding them. Each of those hon. gentlemen repeatedly referred to the fact that this government had been in office for five years. Then they went on, I suppose, to deprecate the record during those five years. Perhaps it would be as well if I were to make some of the comparisons they suggested, focusing them on the particular periods to which hon. members opposite referred.

Before doing so I think I ought to say a word or two about the statement I made on motions earlier today because, as usual, it has been interpreted in a completely contradictory manner by hon. members opposite. Just for the record, and, perhaps, for their information, I should like to ask them to read some of the observations I made a little more carefully. Obviously, they have not done so. The right hon. member for Prince Albert said just now that there should be farm adjustment programs and that money should be put into the setting up of programs of that kind by the federal government. If he would look at the statement I made—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, I read that vacuous document. There is not a figure in it.

Mr. Olson: It says that a start on farm adjustment programs is planned—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Planned!

Mr. Olson: —as well as a rapid expansion of CANFARM, the national farm program. The right hon. gentleman knows it is not proper to go into a great amount of detail in statements on motions, but I have said on many occasions that we intend to ask Parliament this year for authority to embark on a program which would be of assistance to small farmers so that they can withdraw resources including, indeed, human resources, from agriculture in a dignified way.

An hon. Member: A burial service.

Mr. Olson: The statement I made earlier today has been distorted further by charges that there is a great cut-back in funds for agriculture.

Mr. Danforth: There is.

Mr. Olson: The hon. member says there is, which again illustrates his inability to read and comprehend the statement. I hope that when he sees the blue book in February the hon. member will do as he has done in the past, that is, apologize for having misunderstood and misinterpreted me.

What I said was that there were some changes in staff requirements. Staff increases will be needed for such things as meat inspection in various parts of Canada. This is an essential public service—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Where are the decreases going to be?

Mr. Olson: All the decreases were spelled out in that statement. The right hon. gentleman, when he was prime minister, never did that; it was always government by surprise. As I said, we have chosen to make these program changes known well in advance so that members of this House and members of the public who are affected might have the opportunity to make representations and express their views as to the best way of making the adjustments. This needs to be done so that the position does not become so hard and fast that it cannot be changed. The alternative would be for an announcement to be made to the effect that these changes would be made effective at a certain date—

Mr. Diefenbaker: When will this become effective?

Mr. Olson: Most of it will become effective in the new year, 1970-71.

Now, I should like to turn to some of the matters which were discussed by hon. members opposite. Since hon. gentlemen opposite have this uppermost in their minds, I will have to spend some time on it.

• (4:30 p.m.)

The hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) repeatedly suggested that since the government took office in 1963 allegedly terrible things had been taking place. In response to that statement made by the mover of the motion I think the appropriate thing to do is to make some comparisons on either side of the year 1963, say five years before and five years after.

The average cash income from sales of wheat in the years 1958-62 amounted to $464,378,000. The average between the years 1964-68 was $715,255,000, an increase of 54 per cent. The average cash income from the sale of oats in the period 1958-62 was $26,334,000. Between the years 1964-68 this cash income rose to $30,226,000, an increase of 14.8 per cent. Cash income from barley during the first period was $70,595,000, and this rose during the second period to $84,570,000, an average increase of 19.8 per cent.

Mr. Danforth: What about net income?

Mr. Olson: The hon. member wants me to talk about something else now, yet a few minutes ago it was he who was making comparisons. Since he has not had time to do his homework, perhaps I can help him. The average income from sales of rye between 1958 and 1962 was $5,663,000; in the period 1964-68 it rose to $9,305,000, an increase of 64.3 per cent.

Hon. members opposite also mentioned rapeseed, and I should like to put on the record the average cash income from rapeseed sales during these periods.

Mr. Yewchuk: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member for Athabasca is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Olson: He might as well sit down, Mr. Speaker, because I know what he is going to say. Every time I get up in this House the hon. member asks me questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. Does the hon. member wish to ask a question?

Mr. Yewchuk: I would like to ask the minister a question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Olson: I do not have the time, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): At this point may I refer hon. members to Standing Order 12 (3), which reads:

> When a member is speaking, no member shall pass between him and the Chair, nor interrupt him, except to raise a point of order.

I ask hon. members to abide by this rule.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, this happens every time I speak on agriculture. Hon. members opposite make a lot of complaints but they have not done their homework. As soon as a member on this side presents them with the facts, they adopt this kind of diversionary tactic. It is an old practice very familiar to me; in fact, I used to participate in the practice myself.

Hon. members opposite also complained about rapeseed sales, but I would ask them to look at the facts. The average cash income from sales of rapeseed during the years 1958-62 amounted to $11,180,000. The average for the period 1964-68 was $35,632,000 an increase of 218.7 per cent.

I do not have time to put all the figures on the record, although I should do so. I will have to content myself by making a quick reference to the relative increases.

Mr. Yewchuk: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member for Athabasca on a point of order.

Mr. Yewchuk: I suggest the minister is deliberately trying to mislead both the House and the country by refusing to give the net income received by farmers for the same years to which he referred.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I have a note dealing with that and I will come to it. The hon. member will have an opportunity later in the debate to deal with this, that is, if he has done his homework. I hope that somebody on this side will be able to follow him and straighten out some of his twisted statistics.

With regard to soybeans, the average cash value showed an increase between the two groups of years I referred to of 54.7 per cent. The increase in the cash value of corn between the two periods was 139.2 per cent, and for potatoes, 38.8 per cent. Fruits showed an increase of 48.8 per cent. These figures do not represent tonnage but cash value to farmers from the sale of these products.

Let me put on the record some other statistics in which hon. members might be interested. The increase in the cash value received by farmers from the sale of cattle and calves between the two periods I have referred to has been 46.2 per cent. Income received from hogs has increased by 24.9 per cent, dairy products by 20.1 per cent and poultry by 46.3 per cent.

I now come to another matter with regard to which hon. members have not done their homework, the federal government deficiency payments. The average annual deficiency payment made by the government during the period 1958-62 was $2,692,000, compared with $6,421,000 for the period 1964-68, an increase of 138.5 per cent. In addition, of course, there was the dairy program, a program that was non-existent when hon. gentlemen opposite were in office. I am sure that any reasonable person, looking at the facts, would agree it is obvious that the comparisons between the years either side of the year 1963 invalidate the arguments that have been raised. I am not saying that things are going well in all sectors of agriculture.

Mr. Danforth: You said that the farmers had never had it so good.

Mr. Olson: No, I did not say that at all. I have heard the hon. gentleman attempt once in a while to put those words into my mouth, but without success.

Mr. Danforth: That is what you are saying right now.

Mr. Olson: I am not. What I am saying is that there has been an increase in the cash flow received by farmers from the sale of their products, and the hon. gentleman knows that is a fact.

Let me just restate the motion that has been moved:

> That, in the opinion of this House the government has failed in its duty to the Canadian farmer by its neglect to initiate and promote adequate marketing and distribution of food and agricultural products and the adoption of effective international policies with respect to agricultural commodity arrangements.

Total Canadian exports and exports of agricultural products to all countries, by major groupings, are as follows. Again I am using the year 1963 as the pivot. Between 1958 and 1962 average exports of all commodities amounted to $5.4 billion. The average between 1964-68 went up to $10.2 billion, representing an increase of 89 per cent in Canada's exports of all commodities. With regard to agricultural products, average exports between the year 1958-62 amounted to $1.052 billion; the average between 1964-68 increased to $1.607 billion, or by 52.7 per cent. The argument is not valid that there has not been a very significant increase in the export value of Canadian agricultural products.

After putting those facts on the record, I want to comment on some of the other matters we are also dealing with, and which urgently need some intensive attention because they relate to these problems. There is orderly marketing, for example of farm products. There have been many serious attempts, I suggest, in the past by both individuals getting together and through their groups—co-ops, or whatever they call them—as well as by governments both provincial and federal to introduce more orderly marketing of farm products in this country as well as exports. There has been an attempt to rationalize production with consumption.

I can understand a lot of the difficulties that people have been confronted with in the past in trying to resolve these problems. The division of powers under the constitution is one of them. I do not believe that we in agriculture should wait, however long it may be—a matter of a few months or a few years—in order to obtain complete agreement among the 11 governments on the constitutional changes necessary to accomplish a new division of powers which would enable us to overcome these problems. We can continue the negotiations which we have been carrying on in a more active way, I am told, in the last year and a half than has ever been the case before. Indeed, I have had five meetings with all the Ministers of Agriculture across Canada or their representatives in order to work out the problems we will have to meet in respect of these constitutional difficulties.

I say that because it will not be good enough to attempt to pass legislation, regulations or an administrative authority based on the present division of powers if someone can successfully take us to the courts and have such legislation ruled ultra vires of the federal jurisdiction. Such action has been tried in the past. We want to do this in co-operation with the provinces. As I have said many times, we think the best course to follow is to ask this house for enabling legislation under which we can set up a marketing council and, subsequently, particular marketing groups, agencies commissions or boards, whatever they may be called. We can then set them up under that legislation in such a way that these specific commodity groups can receive delegation of power from both levels of government. We could then get around the Constitutional problems and attempt to bring in legislation that exceeds the authority in this area.

Mr. Stanfield: That is an amazingly new idea.

Mr. Olson: It is not all that new, as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has indicated. Let me say to him that I think this time it is going to work, maybe because co-operative federalism is now at its best. Perhaps one of the reasons for the earlier failure was the former position of the hon. member, I do not know. That is what we are attempting to do.

I do not think there is validity to the argument that this government has failed. This government has gone a lot further in attempting to set up a satisfactory and orderly marketing arrangement than any government in history. By the way, I hope hon. gentlemen opposite will support us when we come to this House asking authority to do these things, since they have made a complaint about them in this motion.

We have also made changes under the Agricultural Products Marketing Act now in existence. For example, at the present time there is in force a delegation of authority under this Act to 56 provincial boards and commissions which gives these agencies power to exercise some control over interprovincial export marketing boards. This authority is similar to that which they can exercise in respect of products while they are within the jurisdiction of their own provinces.

We have also been helping through the Agricultural Products Co-operative Marketing Act. This Act provides a guarantee by the government of initial payments to producers. It has been used regularly by this government to support producers in improving their marketing programs. An agreement was undertaken during the current marketing year relating to white beans in Ontario as well as such things as apples, maple syrup and a number of other commodities which have received guarantees by the government in respect of initial payments through the marketing agency to the producer.

In addition to that, we recently amended the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act so that farmers who want to get together to process will have an opportunity to do so. That was not provided for before and I think it has been useful to some farmers. I have not enough time today to go into all the details in relation to some of these groups who have taken advantage of this act, but certainly improvements have resulted.

In addition we brought in a new system of hog carcass evaluation. This was done about a year ago, in fact last December. At this point I want to challenge the statement made by the honourable member for Kent-Essex who said we had a great agricultural congress. I agree it was great. He said a few weeks later I announced a reduction in premiums on hogs. That is not right because we made the announcement before April 1. As a matter of fact, we made it when the congress was taking place here. I suggest that hon. members must do their homework because they are getting all fouled up in their arguments.

We announced at that time, and I announced again today, that under the new marketing system there is a built-in incentive right at the market place to produce high quality hogs. Indeed, that is what is happening under the new grading system. This premium was introduced a long while ago for the purpose of encouraging Canadian farmers to produce higher quality hogs. Now, we have the premium included in the marketing structure, and this is why I referred to it as one of those programs which had achieved its purpose. Hogs are at a very satisfactory price now and we hope this will continue. Whether hogs stay at this very high level, slip some or even increase in relation to demand, the fact remains that there will still be a very significant incentive to produce a high quality product in order that the rates will go up on back fat measurements.

We have also announced that we intend to bring in amendments to the Canada Grain Act. Again, I have not got sufficient time to go into the details, but these are designed to help farmers achieve adequate marketing in both domestic and international trade. What is more, the right hon. gentleman, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) as well as others referred to the matter of giving some advance notice of what ought to be grown at any given time. We have changed the format of the "Outlook Conference" on agriculture to be held in Ottawa next week. We feel that this will in fact be more meaningful and useful to producers in planning production. The 1969 conference format and content has been revised to provide producers in agri-business and other policy makers with more timely and complete information about the situation. There were three conferences or regional meetings held with officials of the provincial governments, farm organizations, field staffs and so on.

• (4:50 p.m.)

As a matter of fact, a total of 144 officials attended these meetings. As hon. members know the conference is scheduled for November 24 and 25. This will be followed by outlook meetings in the various provinces across Canada. The Canadian Department of Agriculture will participate in most of these meetings by aiding the agricultural sector to improve decisions wherein commodities would be produced for the market patterns, national and international. So, we want to be helpful and will be substantially more helpful. One of the problems faced by a minister of agriculture or any minister who makes predictions that there will be a more brisk market for any particular commodity is that if too many farmers take this advice then of course there is a difficulty.

Mr. Stanfield: Therefore, you do not tell them anything.

Mr. Olson: That is not so. We have tried to tell them more than any government in history has. Indeed, the advance information we have given not only today, but today was a good example, is far more than any government in history has given, particularly the government of members across the way when it was in office which, thank goodness, was only for a short while.

I should like to conclude by saying that we are also substantially increasing the economics branch of the Department of Agriculture. This is the branch which does most of the work in so far as marketing research is concerned. That information was also contained in the statement that was made, but perhaps it was not spelled out well enough for hon. members. There will be a reorganization and expansion of this branch, not only for market research but also so that it will be of greater assistance to farm producers in reaching management decisions based on a wider selection of information.

A great deal should be said to members of the House and the people about the particular needs of the grain economy, wheat and other grains. I have not done this in the few minutes at my disposal because the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt (Mr. Lang) will enter the debate later and will deal particularly with that subject. In his amendment the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) states:

> and by its failure to take adequate steps to provide the additional cash income urgently required by the farmers of this country.

That may be true; there may be an element of truth in it. I do not deny that. However, in many parts of western Canada, and some other parts of Canada, although there is a critical shortage of cash I can say that no other government, under any other program any time in Canadian history, has come anywhere near providing the amount of cash that this government has made available to the wheat economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Olson: I am not sure of the exact figure because it keeps changing from day to day, but there has been well over $200 million in cash advances since August 1. There is no interest on that money because it is not in the form of loans.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister but his time has expired.

Mr. Stanfield: Go on.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Gleave: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the minister does not wish to mislead the House.

Mr. Stanfield: Sure, he does.

Mr. Gleave: These advances are payments which the farmers have to repay if they deliver grain. Would the minister agree to that?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the minister knows just as much, and perhaps a little more than the hon. member, about the way these cash advances are made. The fact of the matter is that the amendment of the hon. member contains the words, "additional cash income urgently required by the farmers of this country". I am saying there has been a greater volume of cash made available to the grain, particularly the wheat, economy in the last five months than in any time in history by any government. It is also a fact that these cash advances are interest-free.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): May I rise on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. The minister may know what he is talking about, but what he is doing now is confusing and frustrating the public.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please.

Mr. Olson: The only people I am confusing or frustrating are those people who want to distort our program.

There are a number of other matters with which we have not dealt. We have some harvesting problems in parts of western Canada. A week ago Friday I announced a program which we think will be helpful in this situation. I think it is generally recognized that the cost-price squeeze on the farmers of Canada today is very severe. There is no question about that. But when hon. members say this government has failed to come forward with programs that are helpful, they are wrong. We might look at the record of this government over the past year. There have been such things as the change in cash advances. I do not have time to repeat the record. Last winter things were done for several commodity groups. Then, there was the action taken this fall by the government which, while it has not solved all the problems, has received a sympathetic response. This government has taken more action than any other government of which I know.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to open my remarks on the no-confidence motion made by the Progressive Conservative party not only by blaming the government for not having taken the necessary action to assure the farmers of a fair share of the national income, but also by making suggestions for the building of a truly just society for every social class and for every category of workers, including farmers.

It is disappointing to realize that from year to year the farmer's share keeps on decreasing.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) has quoted meaningful figures and I think he has proved his honesty by refuting the charge that the government did not take the required steps to solve that problem.

Undeniably, attempts have been made, but without succeeding in making the farmer derive more profit from his work, from his efforts to participate in the national activity, producing the foodstuffs required by the population.

I would like to give an example of concern to both housewives and meat producers. The steadiness of retail prices of beef over the past three months reminds us of the gradual rise in the marketing costs of foodstuffs. Among these costs, a difference must be made between the price to the consumer and the price paid to the farmer.

It is common knowledge that a 1000-lb. steer on the hoof cannot supply 1000 pounds of prime steak. The ratio is in the vicinity of 125 pounds, or 10 per cent of the total weight of the animal. But nobody understands that the retail price of a very good roast is kept at the supermarket at the level of June last, namely $1.59 per pound, while from mid-June to the beginning of October, the price of steer on the hoof decreased by some $10 per 100 pounds.

The middlemen, and in particular retailers, submit that none of their customers has to buy beef at $1.59 per pound; there is a wide variety of cuts, less expensive from which they can choose. To that one could retort that no customer has to believe either that a grocery store is right to keep the price of its beef at the same level while the price of a steer decreases by $10, at least on the hoof.

Yet, all those people in the trade: commission salesman, slaughter house operator, wholesaler, retailer, in short all of them dismiss that responsibility.

The fact is evident: grocery stores quickly and often boost prices whenever farm prices go up ever so slightly. Conversely, retailers seldom pass reductions on to customers when farm prices go down. This trend does not apply to beef only; it goes for all foodstuffs and is more prevalent as years go by.

It is logical and normal for processors and bank agents—the intermediaries, in other words—to receive more today than yesterday because they have more expenses, wages are higher, packaging has improved, processing is more elaborate, the food is pre-cooked, etc. However they have taken the necessary steps to increase their profits by raising their prices to consumers.

In fact, all increases in retail prices are absorbed by the intermediaries. None of them reach the farmer. Yet, God knows how much production costs have climbed. Interest rates are also higher. You will recall that during the last session bills were introduced in the House for the purpose of modifying interest rates on farm loans. Ceilings were lifted in order to allow financial institutions to get better returns on their money.

But these higher interest rates are a contributing factor in the increased production costs of farmers, and as the latter are unable to recuperate these higher production costs when they market their commodities, they inevitably suffer a reduction in their income. This is what we are now complaining about and it is the reason why we would like to see, besides current measures, additional steps taken to guarantee to the farmer the possibility not merely of keeping body and soul together for a while, but also of enjoying a decent standard of living.

When asked why the interest rates were raised, the minister answered that the financial institutions no longer agreed to make loans at rates of 5 or 6 per cent as they brought them no profits. I remember telling the Minister of Agriculture that the government was much more anxious to please high financial circles asking for higher interest rates because of allegedly insufficient profits, than to satisfy the farm people who, for the same reasons, asked that prices be raised to provide them with a better income.

As far as we, the farmers, are concerned, we stand in a somewhat unique position. We cannot indefinitely store farm products. Indeed, we have to market them, whether the sales are profitable or not, and to suffer the losses as they come.

Farm machinery costs more also. So does mill-feed this year, especially since the subsidy for the transportation of feed grain from west to east has been reduced to $1 a ton. The minister did not mention it a few minutes ago, he did not have the time. In any event, this is one of the factors that contribute to the increase in production costs. I am asking the Minister of Agriculture if it is all possible for him to come back on his decision, in order to facilitate the transportation of feed grain that the western farmers would be quite happy to sell to the eastern farmers, but at prices that will enable the latter to produce meat, eggs, etc., at reasonable prices while still making a profit. This reduction will necessarily have disastrous effects on the Canadian economy.

From 1949 to 1967—I know it is always boring to hear statistics, but it is thanks to them that one can make fair comparisons—the volume of marketed food increased by 74 per cent but, quantity for quantity, marketing costs increased by 137 per cent according to a federal government document. In 1949, Canadian consumers bought food for a total of $2,064 million. On that amount, $1,243 million were returned to farmers. The middleman's part amounted to $821 million, that is 40 per cent. Now, in 1967, the retail value of food sold in Canada exceeded $5.9 billion on which $2.5 billion, that is approximately 43 per cent, were returned to farmers and nearly $3.4 billion, that is 57 per cent, to middlemen.

This is one of the causes that could explain why the condition of the farm workers deteriorates every year, as is clearly shown indeed by the continuing decrease in the return share that ought necessarily to go to farmers or producers.

Finally, I blame the government for doing nothing to improve the lot of farm producers, in order that they may get a fair reward. I do not say that the government does absolutely nothing, for this would not be true, but I do say that they must be guaranteed a fair reward for their work, so as to be assured of an income at least equal to that of their fellow-citizens who work in other sectors of the economy.

In the dairy industry, the curtailment of subsidies and the increase in the export premium on the 1968 equivalent production constitute by themselves a cause for the deterioration of the economic situation. The new 52 cent tax on the surplus production on the quota allowed by the Canadian Dairy Commission for 1969 because of the dairy surplus, makes the farmers' situation even more difficult, even though they must work more.

The substitute milk products imported from abroad, as reported by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, are also a reason for the deterioration of the farmers' financial situation.

That famous matter of substitutes for dairy products was brought up at the general convention of eastern farmers.

Here is what La Terre de chez nous has to say on the subject:

The influx of ersatz products that threatens both the consumers' health and the farmers' future—

Therefore, both the consumers and the consumer-producers are involved

—did not fail to move the convention members and they unanimously passed a resolution calling on the responsible governments to take whatever steps are necessary to enforce the act and the regulations governing substitutes. One of the requests was that, before any new product is marketed, checks should be made to determine its effects on the health of the consumers and that the findings of those checks be given wide publicity.

We therefore require the public, the consumer to co-operate, in order that he may be well aware of what he is buying and able to compare it with Canadian manufactured dairy products.

Several agencies, agricultural and otherwise, have put forward very valid suggestions to help the government in solving problems.

Once more, I would like to urge the Minister of Agriculture to see that the Standing Committee examines as promptly as possible all briefs submitted in order to evaluate the suggestions put forward, particularly by the C.F.U., the Quebec Federated Cooperative, whose thoughtful and well prepared briefs offer a solution for the problem of milk surpluses. In fact, those agencies ask for a distribution in the schools. This suggestion could be examined. I think it is a sensible suggestion. In the United States they do that and, as far as we know, there is no waste. What are the terms? I do not know. But, at any rate, I should like to invite the Minister of Agriculture and the officials of his department to examine that policy in order to determine whether it could not be applied in Canada. Would it not be possible to distribute these food products in homes and charitable institutions whose resources are not sufficient? Moreover many families have an insufficient income. I think it is not necessary to mention statistics as I am certain that the House knows already that studies have been made and that in the city of Montreal alone there are, for instance, more than 100,000 families which have an insufficient income and live in dire poverty according to the report submitted last year by the Economic Council of Canada.

If there are surpluses, it is because it is impossible to reach the consumer and fulfil all his needs. A wide gulf separates the consumer who is in a position to buy and who has requirements to be fulfilled and the producer who has products to sell.

One should not imagine that I am referring to the governor of the Bank of Canada who already gets a sufficient salary and is not compelled to deny himself, because he has a purchasing power which enables him to meet his needs. However, in a family with 5, 8 or 10 people to feed and an inadequate income, it is understandable that all the needs cannot be met, whereof under-consumption and over-production.

It would also be possible to make lengthy comments on the assistance to underdeveloped countries. All the inhabitants of this world are entitled to a minimum of well-being and their prime right is surely to be properly fed.

At a Commonwealth Parliamentary Conference held in Nassau last fall, and which I attended as a member of parliament and as the representative of the Canadian parliament, 30 countries were represented. For eight days, I heard the delegates talk about the problems they had in their countries in producing the goods essential to the subsistence of their people and ask better off countries to help them provide the necessities of life so they could better develop and improve their existence.

We had a work paper entitled "Aid—Its efficiency".

That paper was well prepared, and a number of sittings were devoted to determine whether the aid from Canada, the United States, Great Britain and France was effective. We found out that unfortunately, in too many cases, the aid given out was not sufficiently co-ordinated to prove effective.

I have been impressed by a letter published in the newspaper La Terre de Chez Nous under the heading "What Do Those People Think of It?"

Here are some excerpts:

I have the translation of an article published by Time, October 3, page 32. I would like you to print it in your paper.

There are 3.5 billion people in the world who go to bed hungry.

It is unbelievable and even if there were only half as many such people it would still be too many. Indeed, is there not enough food in the world to feed all humans? He goes on to say:

A survey made by the United Nations reveals that the world will no longer be able to feed itself in ten years because of the wide gap between the population increase and the food available to certain nations.

I think that at one time President Johnson said about the same thing when he pointed out that recent increases in farm production would give us a mere breathing spell before the population explosion. And I continue with the quotation:

—It is said that Latin America only produces 25 per cent of the food it requires, due to deficient crops, particularly last year, when production slumped by 2 per cent. The most developed African countries do not produce more than 2 per cent of their food requirements. In the greater part of Asia, there is food for 5 per cent of the population and it is produced by archaic methods. It is only the second year that they are practising row planting. The most progressive countries are Malaysia with 11 per cent and Thailand with 8 per cent.

What do those people feel when they hear that in Canada, the United States, Australia and Western Europe granaries are full to capacity and wheat is left to rot in the fields?

If we really want to be looked upon as a civilized nation, if we have the privilege to live in a wealthy country, we should after having read such a letter seriously consider the possibility of increasing our help to those people as well as giving them every opportunity to help themselves, because, we must not forget that the economic system in which we live everyday, without being aware of it, is capable of great things.

We can produce, thanks to science, progress, the will and brains of the individual. We are capable of doing much more. As far as production goes, we are extraordinarily efficient. In fact, we are forced to hold back our eagerness. There are 400,000 unemployed who are not producing, because our system is unbalanced where distribution is concerned.

Goods should be distributed in Canada, and elsewhere, where there are needs to be met. It is in the field of distribution that our economic system is sadly lacking. Unless we straighten things out, I am afraid that before long, others will come and try to do so, but not in the way we should hope to see.

If we are unable to share our wealth freely, peacefully and efficiently, we must of necessity some day share it against our will, and then it will be in disorder, at the cost of the freedom we cherish so, and not for the greater good of our families or Canada.

There is one obstacle to all that. It lies in the field of finance. It needs tidying up. Why accuse us of repeating the same things: as long as the doctor treats his patient without success, he must necessarily repeat the same advice and give the same medication.

To my mind there are enough intelligent people in Canadian finance who are capable of bringing in the necessary reforms, and I am convinced—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired, unless he has the unanimous consent of the House to continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues. I think that their generosity is especially attributable to the fact that we try sincerely to contribute to the solution of our problems, while helping to solve those of others.

Some people boast of having made extraordinary discoveries like the province of Quebec which can claim to be the first to conquer the moon, since it is in Quebec that the landing gear of the device which landed on the moon was manufactured.

All this is so remarkable that we are right to rejoice about it and to speak of it. But if we really want to be up to date, we must be so till the end. Let us reform our obsolete monetary system. Why? Because a few years ago, as I remember, everybody was busy producing. The salaries enabled the people to live and to buy the production.

I read this week in an American magazine, that if they used all the science that is known, only 5 per cent of the working population of the United States would be required to produce all the things that are necessary to feed the American people.

I would like to end my remarks by suggesting, as a solution, that we study seriously and as soon as possible the suggestions made in this house and to adopt immediately the motion which is being studied by the House as well as the amendment in order to increase the income of the farmers to enable them to work for their country. So, we will be really proud to say that we have reached our purpose, that our production and our distribution are well organized and that the needs of all people are satisfied, in short, that we enjoy an efficient economic system which answers the aspirations of one and all, in peace and freedom.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, first of all I must say how disappointed I was with the attitude adopted by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), which I can only describe as flippant. I have heard him before and read speeches which he has made outside this House. I have searched them for some constructive program in connection with agriculture but have not found it. In the light of the seriousness of this situation, such flippancy seems very much out of place.

Mr. Olson: There was no flippancy at all, not even a suggestion of it.

Mr. Stanfield: I read the speech which he made at Chatham on November 7. I was seeking enlightenment but I found nothing but broad platitudes. Part of that speech reads:

This then, is the first guideline. Policy and programs must be based on a realistic assessment of the future developments in agriculture.

Now, this is a rather profound statement, Mr. Speaker.

Another group that we have to take into consideration is the consumer.

That is pretty profound, too.

Mr. Olson: Why don't you read the part in between? That is really a good speech.

Mr. Stanfield: If I read the part in between I would put the House to sleep even faster than usual, Mr. Speaker.

I also feel that farm policy must be flexible.

An hon. Member: What have you got to say?

Mr. Stanfield: I am going to say plenty in a minute. You people over there had better attend to the script.

Then we come to the final principle—I looked for the principles in between.

This leads us to the final principle which I wish to mention. That is obvious, in my view, that we need two fundamental policy directions for agriculture. One for the commercial or potentially commercial farmers and the other designed for those farmers who are non-commercial in that they could never hope to make their living solely on the returns of the marketplace.

An hon. Member: Communal farms.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am not interested in standing here bantering back and forth with the minister. This is a serious problem and I say in all earnestness that neither in that speech nor today have I heard or seen anything that sounds like a serious approach to the problems of the farmers. The minister spent a good deal of time today talking about the past, comparing four-year periods, 1958 to 1962, 1963 to 1968 or 1964 to 1968, I forget which. I am not interested, nor is the Canadian farmer, in talking about conditions in 1965, 1966, 1967, or even 1968; we are talking about conditions in 1969 and the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: I have heard the minister play this record before. It is not very helpful; he seems to be looking backwards rather than forwards. He talks about the exports of grains but he talks about two or three years ago or a four-year period ending in 1968 when we are all concerned with the outlook today. That is what this is all about. Where are these two programs, one for the small farmer and one for the large farmer?

Mr. Olson: On the order paper.

Mr. Stanfield: On the order paper, Mr. Speaker? The minister says he is bringing in a program but he wants representations from the industry and he wants all kinds of discussions. Now, I do not want to be flippant, Mr. Speaker, but what has he been doing? There has been lots of time for discussions. That is a feeble excuse for this delay. When I asked if there was anything novel about the approach he admitted there was not; it had been talked about before. He suggested that it had not worked because when I was in a previous office I had made it impossible. That is the explanation given by the minister for not taking action.

An hon. Member: The reason is obvious.

Mr. Stanfield: I think the gentlemen who are calling out might at least take part in the debate.

What I am saying to the minister in all seriousness is that he has not produced a program for either of these groups of farmers. All that has happened has been that the minister has sat idly by watching the farmers being crushed by the markets and by the price squeeze which this government has failed to check.

I am not suggesting that the minister is not interested, but I do not see any sign that the government as a whole treats the problem of agriculture in this country with any high degree of priority; just the opposite, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: The flippancy which the minister exhibited earlier this afternoon when dealing with the subject was also shown by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). We hear a great deal of talk about restraints and trying to bring in an effective policy to deal with inflation without creating an unacceptable amount of unemployment, but all we get from the Prime Minister is a flippant attitude and a refusal to give serious answers to questions asked of him. As to forecasting, I think this is a year in which the minister and his department could be much more helpful to farmers than they have been. The minister says, give a farmer too much information and he may grow too much.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Olson: I did not say that at all.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister will not tell the farmer where there are opportunities for him, because he may grow too much.

Mr. Olson: I said if we do not want them to over-produce—

Mr. Stanfield: The minister had the floor; he might now listen for a while. The point I want to make is that the government of this country ought to give the farmer much more accurate information than it has given about prospects. This requires a much greater dissemination of information about the government's intentions. It is just not good enough for the minister to say, in effect, that information will not be of much help because too many farmers may take advantage of it and they may grow too much. If the minister would give the farmers the information they require, including information about government intentions, he would be performing a valuable service. I see no indication of the program the minister talked about bringing in to help the small farmer, and I see nothing but difficulties in connection with the larger farmer.

Let us consider the actions that have been taken with regard to the so-called two-price system that the government adopted. That, of course, is a joke. This country is involved in an international grains arrangement which it is unable to enforce. I see no sign of any effective policy to encourage diversification to the extent that is practical and appropriate in the west.

The minister talked about the price of cattle. How many people are able to move into the cattle business under current capital conditions? What program is the government suggesting that enables any diversification or any new directions to be followed by the farmer? I did not hear the minister mention one today; I did not see any mention of it in the speech he made at Chatham.

I have not seen anything to suggest that the government has any positive measures which will enable farmers to work out some of their present difficulties in terms of diversification to the extent this is helpful. I believe there are possibilities, within certain limits, in this respect. There was no indication, for example, that the government was prepared to make appropriate loans to encourage diversification. There has been no indication that the government might be prepared to make acreage payments in a manner that would be suitable not only for bridging income gaps but for the purpose of enabling farmers to diversify.

There has been no indication of any move in connection with farm storage of grain, and no indication of cash advances being made available on commercial grains in order to encourage diversification rather than the contrary. It may be the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) will say something about these matters tonight. I hope he will say something constructive because I did not find very much that was constructive in the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: I want to be serious because this is a very serious problem. I recognize that it is not an easy problem and that the same problem does not exist in all parts of the country or even in all parts of the same region. The problem requires serious consideration by Parliament.

Inflation has a part to play in this problem, as well as the effect of fighting inflation. I have not seen any proposal of constructive programs of marketing, in terms of both eastern and western agriculture, which will enable farmers to diversify to the extent which is feasible. I did not see any of these things, Mr. Speaker. I have sat in this House during the last year and a half and heard the Minister of Agriculture bring forward proposals relating mainly to loans. The only result has been to increase the cost of money to the farmers concerned. The ministers responsible have a duty to explain the government's policy to the House, not just to talk about conditions between 1964 and 1968 in comparison with previous conditions.

I do not mind if the ministers spend a good deal of their time talking about the difficulties that exist in working out some of these problems but they are duty bound to come to this House, particularly at this time of great difficulty in agriculture, not with an attitude of flippancy but to explain, after five years in office and a year and a half for the Minister of Agriculture, precisely how they propose to tackle the problems that exist. They should not give excuses about having to hear representations from everybody. Many representations have been made over the years. It is high time the Minister of Agriculture told us what his program is with relation to the smaller farmer and the commercial farmer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: I mentioned, Mr. Speaker, that the farmer is caught in the cost-price squeeze brought on by inflation. That poor fellow is not only caught in the cost-price squeeze, but the government is using as an excuse to cut back on its programs the necessity to reduce its expenditures in order to fight inflation. The farmer is not only caught directly by inflation, but also indirectly in the sense that agricultural programs are being cut back. If the minister tries to interrupt, I still say they are being cut back. The amount of assistance on feed grain moving east is being reduced. The minister cannot deny that this is so. That is only one example of the way in which the farmer is being caught directly in the price-cost squeeze, but he also catches it in the neck because of the implementation of the austerity program to fight inflation. At the same time, the minister refuses to discuss the program of restraints in this country. This is not good enough. It is not acceptable to this House and it is not acceptable to the country.

The motion put forward is well justified. I certainly support it and I hope the House will support it. I hope a minister or a spokesman for the government will today give the farmers of this country some encouragement which does not consist of a lot of palaver, jocularity and talk about the past. The government should indicate it is really prepared to face the difficulties and the House should be told of its program. I cannot condemn the Minister of Agriculture too strongly for his failure to do this. I hope that when the other minister concerned enters this debate he will not only talk about his immediate responsibility but will try to rectify some of the damage done here today by the Minister of Agriculture. Under the circumstances I hope not too many farmers in the country read what the minister has said today. I ask someone on the government side to put forward a constructive program indicating what is intended so that the farmers of this country, even with their present difficulties which are not easy to correct, can look forward to having something intelligent, interesting and sympathetic to work with.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I have listened this afternoon, as have other hon. members, to a variety of speeches on the motion and the amendment before the House. I was glad to hear at last the words of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) who asked that we face reality and examine the problems affecting agriculture.

I must say he did not sound like members of his own party earlier today; this was not the tone used in the past by far too many politicians in his own party and others. In recent times, far too many people were interested in speaking about the agricultural situation in tones of complete optimism or in terms of unmitigated, unavoidable disaster. It was as bad and as wrong to talk about the situation in language of unrealistic optimism, to overlook information, already available, about the changing situation, persuading farmers to ill-advised courses of conduct with regard to their equipment, land assembly, and so on, as it is today to speak as though the situation has no possible solution and disaster is inevitable.

The truth lies between these extremes. The situation is indeed serious; in the eyes of some of the farmers facing it, it is overwhelming. It is important for the government and for all associated with the agricultural industry to look at the situation realistically and to give both leadership and hope to the farmers who face these difficulties most directly.

The gloom expressed by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) is not helpful. Nor would it be helpful to pretend that there was no information available to counter some of the optimistic statements which were made in the past. I would refer hon. members to the outlook papers of 1967 and 1968; in each case the experts indicated that the production of grain would probably continue to outstrip sales and that increases in stocks would take place accordingly. There were some who were interested in taking an optimistic view and whose urgings of different courses overshadowed these forecasts. This in itself contributed to the surplus, the presence of which is so direct and so overwhelming to the farmer who faces it.

We in this government are firmly confident that there is a significant and happy place for the farmer and his farm in our society. We are satisfied that the problems which confront him can be attacked and dealt with when they are examined realistically. I should also like to say that this government stands four square behind the Canadian Wheat Board. We do not hesitate to say this flatly. We shall not use the weasel words of some hon. gentlemen opposite who say they support the Wheat Board and then point the finger of dark suspicion at something which seems, they infer, to be influencing it. Those may be proper tones for people who intend to destroy the Wheat Board, but not for those who are determined to support it.

There is no doubt about the seriousness of the situation facing the farmer. This has been recognized by the government. The government has been on record on this issue for many months past; we are on record as recognizing the problem created by the surplus, by low prices and by high costs as these seriously affect the industry in the area of grain production and, more particularly, of wheat.

I would refer hon. members to the statement made in August by my colleagues the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) which referred to the cash position of western farmers, indicating at the same time that the government would hold the price of wheat on the domestic market to that fixed under the International Grains Arrangement. This is the one price which we can, in fact, control. This statement also recognized that the government must keep a constant watch on the cash position of farmers. We were aware that though the cash advance program would provide immediate cash assistance, it would not solve the cash shortage over the period of a whole year. I refer hon. gentlemen to the portion of the statement in which this is recognized.

I should like you to know, Mr. Speaker, the way in which the flow of cash advances is moving. According to the latest report I have, on November 14 the figure stood at $227 million, or slightly more, an increase of some $2.5 million over the previous week which itself represented a rise of some $5 million over the preceding week, and that was a rise of $8 million compared with the week before that. This indicates the nature of the cash flow under the cash advance arrangement.

It is important to remember that in these circumstances the farmer is facing difficulties arising from many factors around the world including the total world production situation. We should bear in mind that in the past four years world production exceeded ten billion bushels each year: It had not done so before and, indeed, it increased to that figure from an average of 8.6 billion bushels in the previous four years, a production which itself represented a new plateau.

It is important to remember that world trading in wheat decreased last year compared with the previous year as a result of the increase in production of wheat by exporting countries, but more particularly by countries that might normally have purchased wheat from the wheat exporters. Canada's share of the world wheat market held up amazingly well under these strains. It is true that our total sales of wheat, for instance, dropped from 335 million to 305 million bushels. At the same time, total United States exports were dropping from 760 million to 543 million bushels, and Australia's exports dropped from 256 million to 195 million bushels. I do not suggest that these figures solve the farmers' problems, but they do recognize the magnitude of the task of accurately calculating sales prospects, dependent as they are on conditions all over the world.

May I repeat what the Minister of Agriculture said and which the Leader of the Opposition treated so lightly. We must do the best possible job of ascertaining market prospects and keeping the farmers informed. We must look realistically at the very fundamental question of how large a grain inventory we should carry in this country. We should also look at the results of our examination rather than, as has happened far too often in the past, simply ignoring them.

Both the government and the Wheat Board have been working very hard to expand our sales internationally and to bolster prices. I should like to remind hon. members again that we have had a trying time in regard to world wheat prices. But this country has faith in international grain agreements. We believe they make economic sense, and that we exercised very significant restraint in the face of breaches of the agreement by some of our competitors. Eventually, when we could not persuade them to return to the minimums, on March 14 we indicated with reluctance that we had to meet their prices even though this meant going below the IGA minimums.

The result has been that the exporters of the world have seemed to learn the lesson that no one gains from that particular game. I am happy to be able to report that as a result of very hard work, and following a period when we might have been quite pessimistic, progress is now being made toward the stabilization of world wheat prices. I am confident that any future movements in price will more likely be in an upward direction.

I would also mention a few other things that have been done in the cause of improving both wheat sales and the lot of the grain producer. For example, there is now a regular form of credit such as that used in sales to Poland and China, and under which government liability now stands at $200 million. An additional credit facility has been made available for sales by the Canadian Wheat Board. The sum of $6 million is included in the estimates of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to enable lower interest rates to be used in areas where commercial sales cannot be made at regular rates. By using this facility recently a sale of 5.5 million bushels was made to the Philippines, which was a re-entry by Canada into an important market. Even more recently there was a sale of 7.5 million bushels to Peru.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, before you call it six o'clock, so that the minister does not mislead the House would he indicate in his remarks this evening whether it is the disclosed or undisclosed policy of the government to re-introduce the poverty-box?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock I do now leave the Chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I have been looking at some of the specific things which the government has done for the grains industry. I have not done so with the view of suggesting that they have solved the problem, but rather to make the very clear statement that there is in this area a large problem to be examined and dealt with and we must rebut the claim which some people, particularly those opposite, will spread about the problem itself when they suggest that the government does not care. Nothing could be further from the truth. That the government does care has been demonstrated by these first steps. It will continue to demonstrate this attitude. It is important that the farmers understand and appreciate this fact, and that they have the appropriate amount of hope.

Included in the things the government has done of importance are the food aid programs which this year will be in excess of $85 million with the bulk of that amendment being in wheat and flour. This part of the program is conducted in this way for reasons that have to do with the grain problem rather than for reasons directly related to the interests of the recipients. I could also mention the payments which are made to the Wheat Board under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act, which it is estimated this year will amount to $72 million. This is a direct transfer from the treasury to the grain operation. It has gone on quietly for many years but the program is now being stepped-up.

I could refer to the transportation system which has taken up so much of our time in the past year or so, and the development of the block system—that imaginative forward step in the movement of grain from the local elevator to the terminal. Where the block system has been put into effect, it has worked extremely well and gives every indication of living up to its promise in allowing the expedition of the movement of much more grain than was possible under the previous helter-skelter system. The block system is now in effect in over half the prairie region and will be in full effect before the opening of the navigation season.

I could refer to the creation of the Canada Grains Council which itself is directly related to the examination of the serious problems facing agriculture, and the hope that it can bring together the whole of the grain industry to examine these problems. I could refer to such lesser items, yet important to individual farmers, as deferred delivery payments which were allowed those farmers who did not make their full five-bushel delivery last year. This program represents an important equity matter to them.

This question of equity leads me to recall for hon. members the fact that the quota system requires a thorough examination. I should like to remind hon. members, particularly the Conservatives, that when the Bracken commission was sitting in 1957-58 the commissioner indicated that the quota system, which was designed to do certain social things, failed almost intentionally to do certain economic things. If you look at his report you will find that he said a quota system such as this could not be in existence and could not be used over a protracted period of time without causing intolerable distortion.

After he had said that there was a period when the quota system was not a crucial matter because of the movement of grain. We now have to again face up to those words and examine the system to see how it can in fact be revised in order to avoid economic distortions. It is in that context—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. minister but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the minister shall continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lang: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank hon. members for the opportunity to conclude my remarks. It is in that context that we will have to look at the question of oats and barley and the extent to which they should be fully on quota and fully controlled as Wheat Board grains. I would remind hon. members that when they refer to distress selling of these grains under the Wheat Board, it is by and large, a transfer of benefit from one type of agricultural producer to another and is itself reflected in certain distortions in the cattle industry. For instance, the price of feeder cattle, which is high compared with the price of finished animals, is perhaps a distortion; but it indicates that the producer of meat does indeed benefit from these distressed prices. No one says the prices are tolerable at their low level; they are in themselves a sign of the serious situation which faces the farmer.

It is important for us to create conditions which will not lead the grains producer to dispose of his inventory of feed grains at prices at which he could not possibly replace that inventory. It is in this context of quotas and these fundamental questions that we will have to look at the question of how best to handle rapeseed, flax, and so on. We will also have to look at these questions from the point of view of enforcement problems in regard to quotas. We all know that the quota system has been badly breached in the prairie region in terms of producers complying with it. It seems to me that in the immediate future we must encourage farmers to follow the rules such as they are, even while they are being re-examined. A breach of the rules leads without doubt to unfair distortions in favour of those who break them, and at the expense of those who do not. It is, therefore, a very important matter economically to many farmers.

In conclusion I should like to say just a few words about prospects. We will hear more about this matter before the month is out. Present indications are that this year's sales of grains will meet or exceed last year's totals. Barley sales abroad will surely go above last year's total, and wheat sales could and should, indeed, be somewhat higher depending on certain specific developments. But this—I wish to emphasize this point—does not mean that the problem of the surplus is a quickly vanishing one, because we are all aware of and must remember the size of the surplus on the farms and in the elevator system.

This means—and I return to where I began—that we will continue to do everything we possibly can in our sales effort. I believe the Wheat Board has been doing a good job, indeed a very good job, but they will join with me in agreeing that we must make an effort to do even better. I believe the trade commissioners within the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce who are posted all over the world have been serving very well indeed the cause of the Wheat Board and the farmer in selling grain, but they will join with me in agreeing that they should do even better. When this has all been done and when we have looked at our prospects for sales, we must realistically examine the consequences in terms of future production because surely no one will challenge the logic of the statement that over any period of years production and sales must be brought into equilibrium. When you have done everything you can in respect of sales, you must look at the production in that light.

This examination of production possibilities will lead to other consequences. It will help the agricultural community, and that great community which is dependent upon the agricultural community, to see the problem in proper perspective. I do not think anyone will have any doubt that in examining the problems facing the grain industry we must not hide from the facts. We must be prepared to look at every inefficiency in the handling and transportation systems and we must work to remove those inefficiencies. Then removal is more vital now because of the economic situation in which the grain industry finds itself.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the minister? I do not wish to misunderstand him. I believe he said that the matter of barley and oats under quotas must be looked at, and the question of barley and oats being Wheat Board grains. Does he mean they should be taken from the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board, or does he mean they should be turned over to the feed grains trade? I think he should clarify that statement.

Mr. Lang: I believe I should repeat what I think I said. In relation to barley and oats we must look at the extent to which the quota regulations should be varied. With regard to flax and rapeseed we must look at serious questions such as whether they should be dealt with in another fashion.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, I should also like to ask a question of the minister. In view of the fact that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) welched on his promise to give us some figures on the net income, I wonder whether the minister from Saskatoon-Humboldt would be willing to do that.

Mr. Lang: I have many figures here, but I do not have the time to go through them. I am sure the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) will be responding to the challenge of the Minister of Agriculture to do his homework himself and we will have some comment on his figures.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I was sorry to hear the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) in concluding his remarks say that he would return to where he began, because he started from nowhere and returned to nowhere. The remarks on this subject from both the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) and the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon-Humboldt have been repeated ad nauseam in the past. Not one iota of real evidence of a policy to promote adequate marketing, the distribution of food and agricultural products and the adoption of effective international policies with respect to agricultural commodity arrangements has been brought forward.

If the Minister of Agriculture wishes to ask me a question I will try to answer it, but if he does not stand up and catch the Speaker's eye I will not pay any attention to him. Frankly, there was nothing to pay attention to this afternoon when he was on his feet; therefore I do not intend to pay any attention to him when he is in his seat.

Coming from the east and having been associated with the west, I have no hesitation in supporting wholeheartedly the motion of the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth), seconded by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam), that this House has lost confidence in the Minister of Agriculture and that the government has failed and neglected to initiate and promote adequate marketing and distribution of food and agricultural products and the adoption of effective international policies.

This is not the old game of musical chairs when one could quote figures of what happened in 1955, 1963, 1965 or 1968. Those elections have been fought and the people have made their judgment. We are now in the year 1969. This government has been in power five years. We on this side of the House, Canadians across the country and especially the farming community are still awaiting declarations of policy from the government which instituted the great task force which investigated almost every segment of the agricultural industry, and which called the agricultural conference which met in Ottawa not too long ago. There has been time for even this government to adopt policies so that the average Canadian from coast to coast would know what is going to happen to the farmer.

In fact, the subject of the motion put forward by the hon. member for Kent-Essex is the concern of many people not only in this House but all across the nation. Notwithstanding the empty seats and spaces across the way, it surely involves all of us. Whether a man lives in the city or in the country he has to be concerned with the whole framework of the nation, which starts with the farming community from coast to coast.

When the Minister of Agriculture started, because of his interest in agriculture and the fact that he comes from the west I almost started to have some sympathy for him, because like Job and the afflictions of Job it is very difficult for a minister of agriculture in this land with conflicting policies from coast to coast to administer his department. I thought perhaps we should not be too hard on the minister, but I was saddened when he spoke not one iota about this problem, apart from trying to rebut my colleague the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). Really, the minister should try to leave that to somebody else.

Instead of telling us what is in the future, the minister quoted the same old stories I have heard for four or five years. The basic question is not the gross income of farmers. I do not care about my gross income and I do not think the Minister of Agriculture concerns himself about his gross income. The figure which must be considered is that of gross expense. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) realizes that the relevant figure is the net income, the money a person has in his pocketbook. If you do not have any money in your pocketbook, what is the use of talking about gross sales? I suggest it is a gross insult to this House to suggest this is an answer that makes up for the vacuum of ideas in the head of the Minister of Agriculture.

Therefore, I lost my sympathy for the minister because instead of being like Job with the afflictions of many, he is more like Moses in the bullrushes—and not even Moses in the bullrushes, but rather "Bud" in the bullrushes, caught in the weeds and experiencing the rare and transitory applause of the few members who stayed to listen to him. This is what he does instead of giving us policies and programs that will make the agricultural community, which is the backbone of Canada, move ahead.

There are opposite members from farming areas whom I think secretly in their heart of hearts would agree with me, if they were not afraid of being caught by their party whip, that the farmer in Canada is forgotten by the cabinet which is preoccupied and dominated by constitutions of all sorts, civil rights, no matter how good or bad, and camouflage. Frankly, I suggest to the Canadian people that the farmers are getting mighty restless while the government is still thinking of theories of federalism and is afraid to practise some of them. It is preoccupied with bluff and bluster before television, but when its members come to the House they are silent with regard to policy. That is not the type of government that the people of Canada elected in June of 1968 to lead us on to new plateaus and vistas. Instead of that, "Bud" in the bullrushes is staying in the background, inactive and with no policy.

Ever since I have been here, whenever we have had a debate on agriculture it has been a patchwork one. I suggest that even the Minister without Portfolio, who at least tried to come to grips with a few basic issues, gave us facts and statistics of what the government has tried to do on an ad hoc basis, putting its thumb in the dyke like the little Dutch boy. The government is trying to cure this problem by giving a little advance here and helping out the farmer there. But these are only reaction policies, reflex actions. There has not been any positive policy to begin with; that is where the real problem lies. The government has not stopped to ask itself some basic questions and to set out some basic objectives of an agricultural policy for this country.

The government has not even posed the question: What is the place of the family farm in this country? It has not asked itself what should be done with the surplus wheat and the blossoming and expanding production of soft cereals in markets where former importers are now exporters of grain. Is there going to be freedom for the farms, or shall we let the government control and dictate policies? What are the trends of farm production for the future? What do we do with export excess? What international policies do we have, if any? Can we produce without subsidies? This is a very urgent problem in the east.

Do we have production in some areas that is to the detriment of other areas? Do we produce for and distribute to the developing nations sometimes to the detriment of their own production? These are some of the questions that should be asked by the government, which should develop policies in answer to them. But no, those questions have not even been put.

We all agree that the country is changing, indeed the world is changing. Hopefully, men will land on the moon at one o'clock this morning, and yet we are still talking about the policies and fighting the election battles of 1962, 1963, and 1965. We are not talking about future policies with a view to helping us elevate our sights—not as high as the moon: we do not want to get to the moon; the cow jumped over the moon years ago and people may have gone over the moon in expectation of what this government would produce after June, 1968. As the leader of our party said today, all we want is the Minister of Agriculture to at least come to the House and be candid with us and with all Canadians from coast to coast, as was the Minister without Portfolio who started to tell us about the problems and the difficulties of agriculture.

Men on this side of the House know as well as the minister does and as their geographical mates do, even though they may be political enemies, that there are problems in agriculture which may not be insurmountable but which are difficult to solve at this time of change and transition. There is a movement from the farms to the urban areas; there is consolidation of little units into big units; there is an advancing technology which has developed production beyond our dreams of 20 years ago. But even allowing for this transition and change, agricultural policies cannot be turned on and off, as was said in the pathetic statement made by the minister today with regard to further changes.

I could make a whole speech about the minister's sentence in which he said there will be cut-backs in agriculture because of the present policy of austerity. I suggest that it is penny wise and pound foolish to strike at such a basic industry as agriculture and make cut-backs in this area when it takes many years to develop a milk herd, production facilities for grain, drying facilities or any other element of agriculture. One does not start a program one year because there is a surplus or a deficit in the national budget and then change the whole program next year because, owing to the munificence of the Minister of Finance there is a little extra money available with which to help the farmers.

The two announcements made recently have caused confusion and concern in the agricultural community. I refer to the turning on and turning off of policies and to the two most recent statements on agriculture made by this government. One statement was with regard to the dairy policy which was to become effective on April 1, 1969, and the second was with regard to the hog premium policy which was to become effective on March 31, 1969. In the case of the dairy policy, farmers across this country were given one day in which to readjust to the new policy. So far as the hog premium policy was concerned, they were given the grand total of six days before the policy became effective.

I am not arguing the right or wrong of either of these policy changes. What I am saying is that even if you are a Member of Parliament trying to organize your mixed-up life between the House of Commons and your constituency, between being here, in your constituency, in your office and attending committee meetings, you have to plan a little. If you are a business man, you also have to plan, so why expect something else from the farmer? He has to plan also. He has to plan a longer time ahead than just season to season. But in two basic elements of agriculture, the dairy industry and the hog industry, the farmer was given one day to adjust to the new policy with regard to the former and six days to adjust to the latter. I suggest that this does not show the concern that we have heard professed by members opposite, and we cannot believe them when they say they have a sense of reality about the agricultural situation in Canada.

In the few minutes I have remaining to me I should like to direct my remarks, not to the over-all situation in the west because there will be others more familiar with the intimate details concerning the west, but to the problems confronting farmers in the east, be it Ontario, Quebec or the four Atlantic provinces. There are in these areas farmers who are going through the same transitional period and the same changes. The figures here and there may differ greatly; they may involve a few acres to a few hundred acres as compared with a few hundred acres to a few thousand acres in the west, but the relative problem remains the same. It is the same for the man who is trying to work the land. These men are not afraid of the challenge of change. They are prepared to meet it. But they do not want that challenge of change compounded by confusion within the Department of Agriculture, by constant reviews by either the task force on agriculture, committees or all the other study groups, let alone by the retreats in policy which we heard announced today or the two changes in policy to which I referred a moment ago.

But because of these elements there is very deep concern in the east, and in the far east, with respect to three particular matters. One of these is the feed grains policy about which the minister made an announcement a few weeks ago. The second is the question of export markets, which is one of the basic areas to which the motion is directed, and the third is the question of imports into Canada which affects farmers in the east, in the central parts of Canada and elsewhere. We would like to know just what the future will be for the farmer on P.E.I. growing potatoes, for the farmer in the Saint John valley, and the farmer in the Annapolis valley, which I have the honour to represent. Where do we go with respect to poultry, eggs, and potatoes, not to mention apples?

Dealing first with feed grains, I do not suppose there is any other policy in agriculture that involves as many political cross-currents as the feed freight assistance act whereby the eastern producer gets feed grain from the west so that he can develop an industry in the east. In the 28 years since that policy was developed in 1941, a viable livestock industry with all the products inherent therein has been developed in the east, and so much so in the province of Nova Scotia that livestock and products, including poultry, make up 80 per cent of the total farm income and form the basis for any further expansion.

There are conflicting problems involved. You have the western producer to consider, the Ontario corn producer and the eastern farmer who must have transportation help known as feed freight assistance. A viable policy has been developed, and even though it has involved political cross-currents it is fundamental to the east. If we are to have any meaning behind the purpose of regional development—which is one of the two things a certain gentleman parroted around the country in June, 1968—we must realize we have to walk carefully before change is made in any fundamental policy such as that respecting eastern feed grains. Unfortunately, confusion has developed in the Department of Agriculture, and among certain farmers, between the question of feed freight assistance and a viable land use development policy.

The result is that some people in Ottawa think that since eastern farmers are arguing about a land use development policy, designed to utilize the land in more progressive ways, they may discontinue or discard the eastern feed grains policy. If that ever happens, and if some of the inklings recently dropped by the minister bear fruit, there would be a backward, negative reaction in the eastern farming community, so great that a whole new department of regional economic expansion would be required to take care of that problem alone.

However, it appears that we will not have any viable land use development policy for some time, because everything is being cut back by the government. But let us not confuse that issue—particularly when we consider that we have so much land use in the west that the result is that grain is piled up sky-high—with feed freight assistance for viable industries that are producing such a large amount of farm income in the east, particularly in Nova Scotia.

There is another area I know something about, Mr. Speaker. It concerns export markets, and here I have particular reference to the apple industry in the east. It covers other commodities but I am more acquainted with the apple situation. Here I refer to national marketing policies. Again the minister has dropped a few tidbits to the effect that some time some statements may be made on national marketing policies.

We need some direction, not only on national marketing policies within the country designed to control cut-throat competition between one part of the country and another but also on external marketing wherein this country must face the subsidized products of other nations. Make no mistake, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian producer is meeting subsidized products from France, Germany, Italy—you name the country and it has its subsidized products. I want to know what policies the government has to encourage and develop export assistance for our producers in meeting competition in outside markets. Another element which causes concern in the east is the importation of concentrates, either in the form of apple-paste or tomato-paste—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired, unless he has consent to continue. Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the House for allowing me this consideration, and I will not trespass too long on it. Instead of addressing the House on the large apple and poultry industries in my riding, and the effect which imports have on them, I wish to conclude by suggesting that when we come to engage in an agricultural debate in this House we should stop playing musical chairs with old figures.

This House awaits with interest the definition of new policies. If the Minister of Agriculture will stop playing musical chairs with old figures and past battles, and instead develop new policies to meet some of the problems that have been increasing in perplexity over the years, he may be pleasantly surprised at the reaction from this side of the House. There is not a member on this side, or in fact in any part of the House, who does not appreciate that we are talking about a basic industry, agriculture, and that it is no good seeking short-term partisan political gain when talking about something so fundamental to our country. All Canadians, whether they live in the cities or on the farms, have a vital interest in the agricultural policies that the government should be announcing and which we are awaiting.

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to discuss agricultural problems and policy, as I have done at every opportunity since I became a Member of Parliament in June, 1968. I can agree with many things that have been said by the mover of the motion, the mover of the amendment, and by some other opposition speakers. But I must take strenuous exception to a statement made by the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) who early in his remarks said he was moving his motion "on behalf of the farmers of Canada." What an unmitigated presumption! He cannot produce any mandate from the farmers of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): He certainly is not speaking for me, and I am one of the farmers of Canada; and he is not speaking for a great many other farmers whom I know. I was also surprised to hear the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) speak so disparagingly of myself, a backbencher on the government side. At other times, when it suits him, he poses as the protector and champion of the backbencher. He sought to give the impression that I never got on my feet in this House. As some hon. members know, I have spoken out in this chamber on numerous occasions on behalf of my fellow farmers. However, I am not surprised that he is not aware of this, because I do not recall his presence in the House at any time when I was speaking. In fact he is not here tonight, and about the only time he is present nowadays is when he has something to say himself.

The right hon. member for Prince Albert wept crocodile tears because some farmers were selling their wheat at reduced prices. I believe he used the figure of 50 cents per bushel. Mr. Speaker, I was farming in the early thirties when the Conservatives were in power both in Ottawa and Regina. Nobody came to my yard to pick up my wheat at 50 cents per bushel I hauled many loads of wheat, with horses, five miles to the elevator and received less than 30 cents per bushel.

• (8:40 p.m.)

An hon. Member: You are pretty old.

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): I am. It is true that the Bennett government established the Wheat Board on its deathbed in 1935. But it was set up on an ineffectual, voluntary basis, on a renewable five-year term. It remained for succeeding Liberal governments to make the Wheat Board effective by requiring all wheat to be marketed through it, and later giving it responsibility for barley and oats. In recent years, too, a Liberal government put the Wheat Board on a permanent basis. Mr. Speaker, the farmers of western Canada recognize that these are the actions of a government and a party that is fully committed to the Wheat Board system of orderly marketing. I was pleased to hear the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) this afternoon reaffirm that stand.

The opposition further damages its credibility as a possible alternative government by condemning this Government in such sweeping generalities in the motion we are discussing today. The mover of the motion had no alternatives to present. It is the easiest thing in the world to court popularity with those people who are in difficulty, by loudly criticizing the government. This is one of the favourite indoor sports of many people. It is quite another thing to propose workable and practical solutions. These were notably absent so far today from opposition speakers.

My remaining remarks will be directed to the grain producing sector of the agricultural economy. It is the area of agriculture that has the greatest problems. The situation is not good, but to say that it is worse than ever before, or worse than it was in the thirties, is completely absurd. In 1967-68 we exported 336 million bushels of wheat. In the 13-year period, 1950-51 to 1962-63, this total was exceeded in only four of those years, 1951, 1952, 1960 and 1961, two years under a Liberal government and two years under a Conservative government. In 1968-69 our exports dropped to an estimated 306 million bushels, which is about 26 or 27 per cent of the total exported by the four main world wheat exporters that year. That is about the same percentage of the world wheat trade which we experienced from 1959 to 1963.

Alleged Lack of Agricultural Policies

Most farmers are encouraged because of the appointment of the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon-Humboldt (Mr. Lang) as minister with exclusive responsibility for the Wheat Board—the first time a minister has been given exclusive responsibility for the Wheat Board. This was the immediate action of the government in response to the statement made in the Speech from the Throne that steps would be taken to maximize sales of grain. The Wheat Board says it is doing everything possible to sell grain, and I know the new minister will give it his undivided assistance and encouragement.

The government has taken the advice of farmers and farm organizations and appointed a farmer, Mr. Charles Gibbings, to the Wheat Board as of last July 1. If there was any need to have a farmer's viewpoint heard within the councils of the Wheat Board, we certainly have it now. This was an extremely commendable appointment and it demonstrates the government's concern about the needs and wishes of farmers.

As on previous occasions, I am going to take this opportunity not only to praise the government for some of the many positive things it has done, and is doing, such as doubling cash advances, making them available on unharvested grain, making interim payments under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, crop insurance programs and stimulating credit sales of grain, but also to offer what I believe to be constructive criticism of various policies.

I should like to refer to the deferred delivery plan, under which farmers who were prevented from delivering the promised five-bushel quota last year were to be given permits to deliver the balance during this crop year. When the plan was first announced it provided that no farmer could deliver more than one bushel per specified acre, no matter how far short of the five-bushels he might have been. That unjustifiable and unfair restriction was removed and I learned just this morning that the limit has been set at two bushels. Let this be the opening shot in my campaign to have this arbitrary restriction removed.

In many remote areas on out-of-the-way branch lines, the elevators were almost constantly plugged throughout the year. Farmers who were at some distance from their elevator, who had no phone or who happened to be ill on the wrong day, had great difficulty getting their grain in. Remember that at many of those points the quotas were still at one, two and three bushels in June and even into July. I find it completely understandable and believable that many farmers had grain on hand but were unable to deliver even three bushels per acre. Now these same farmers are being arbitrarily cut off at a maximum of two bushels.

They had already been three-time losers, in comparison with the majority of farmers who were able to sell the five-bushel quota before the end of July because (1) they lost the use of the money they should have received for several months; (2) they now take over 20 cents a bushel less on their initial payment, and (3) they had a much larger storage problem than their more fortunate neighbours. I think that the last that should be done is to allow them to deliver the full amount they were short of five bushels on July 31, and to assure them that they will ultimately get at least as good a price for wheat delivered in 1969-70 as they would have had they been able to deliver it in 1968-69.

An hon. Member: What does the minister say to that?

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): Another point I wish to mention has to do with the current supplementary quotas on durum and barley, and any new supplementary quotas which may be announced. Last year such quotas were unceremoniously cut off at a predetermined date, even though many farmers did not have an opportunity to deliver their grain because of the lack of space at their delivery point. They were understandably incensed at losing this eagerly anticipated income opportunity because of the vagaries of boxcar distribution.

I protested this insensitive attitude most vigorously last year, and I was afraid there might be a repetition this year. However, I am pleased to note that the Wheat Board has now agreed to extend the durum quota to the end of July and has decided to suspend, perhaps temporarily, the special quota on feed barley, which may be reinstated later this year when barley stocks become depleted. I like to think that my representations in this matter have had some effect, possibly through the new minister in charge of the Wheat Board.

I would like to revert to the deferred delivery plan for a moment and register my objection to deductions from the cheques for these deferred deliveries, to be applied on cash advances, when there was no liability existing on account of cash advances as of July 31, 1969. These deductions are a further discrimination against those who were prevented from delivering their five-bushel quota last July. It might take a slight amendment to the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, but I understand it is to be opened up very shortly anyway for amendments having to do with advances on unharvested grain; therefore, this small amendment should cause little difficulty.

I should now like to make a few remarks about box car allocation. I think the authorities responsible, mainly the railways, did a terribly poor job in this regard last year. There was the excuse last year that the tough and damp grain upset their procedures, but so far this year there is no such excuse. When I am critical of the railways in this regard I am not alone. When the agricultural committee interviewed the Canadian Wheat Board in Winnipeg on April 18, 1968, I asked the chief commissioner if he thought the railways should take some blame for the poor distribution of box cars last year. He said, and I quote from page 1257 of Report No. 32 of the Proceedings of the Standing Committee on Agriculture:

> Mr. McNamara: I certainly do. We cannot direct the railways on where to put their cars. We have no power. We can direct the distribution of the cars between the elevator companies and the stations and I certainly want to go on record that I am not congratulating the railways on their distribution of cars between stations but, in the over-all, we cannot direct them on this.

In my opinion, confusion and discrimination still exist in the distribution of box cars. As some hon. members know, I asked for and received a meeting with top railroad officials. This was discussed last evening during the adjournment debate on a question raised by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg). I attempted, unsuccessfully, to correct the quotation the hon. member used. The quotation listed some of the people who were present at that meeting. It mentioned the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson), the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board. It mentioned members of parliament from the prairies, including myself, and some prairie Senators. The omission I wished to correct was the fact that one Member of Parliament, the hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner) was also at the meeting. The railways were represented by four of their top executives, including Mr. McMillan, president of Canadian National Railways and Mr. Gossage, vice-president of Canadian Pacific Railway, in charge of rail operations.

It is true that no opposition members were there. I believe we had a very frank and beneficial exchange of opinions and ideas, probably much more so than would have been the case if opposition members had been present. I think there have been indications in the past two weeks that some improvements are now in prospect, and indeed may already be evident in some areas.

The block system which will soon cover the prairies may be an improvement, but I think we farmers should not be under any delusion that the block system is designed to allocate box cars more fairly between points and between farmers. It may do what it is meant to do, namely, make better use of our rail system and our country and terminal elevator systems. I hope it does, because this will benefit farmers generally. However, farmers are individuals and require, deserve and expect fair treatment. I intend to do my best to see they receive that kind of treatment. If discrimination and hardship continue to be visited upon individual farmers and individual communities, even under the block system, I will renew my request for a transport controller.

We need a national policy for Canadian agriculture. It is long overdue. The report of the task force on agriculture is due within a few weeks. The government would be subject to justifiable criticism if it proclaimed a comprehensive farm policy before this task force makes its report and before the new Canada Grains Council has a chance to make any recommendations. I am sure the opposition would be foremost in such criticism. I look forward to some significant policy announcements by the government in the next few months.

Also needed are more reliable forecasts of production goals and some realistic programs to assist farmers to diversify in order to meet these goals. I was pleased to hear today from the ministers that steps are being taken to provide this guidance and assistance. I renew my plea to the government to support the price of wheat at $1.95½ for export as well as domestic consumption. Agriculture is in great difficulty, mostly because of world conditions, but I do not think it is quite as bad as this exaggerated motion tries to indicate. I will not support the motion, Mr. Speaker, or the amendment.

Mr. Ricard: We knew that before you started.

Alleged Lack of Agricultural Policies

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, citation 144 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition states:

> It is a rule in both Houses of Parliament that a member must address the House orally, and not read from a written, previously prepared speech, for the reason that, "if the practice of reading speeches should prevail, members might read speeches that were written by other people, and the time of the House be taken up in considering the arguments of persons who were not deserving of their attention."

We have listened, Mr. Speaker, to a paper-tiger.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I was referring to my notes fairly closely, but I would challenge anyone else to read them. I wrote them myself; no one else wrote them.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I have heard the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) on a number of occasions state what in my opinion is probably a fairly good assessment of the problems of agriculture. I have never seen the particular hon. member put his vote where his mouth is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Peters: If the hon. member knows these things are wrong, obviously he should not stand as he has tonight and whitewash the department. I have no objection to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) doing that, Mr. Speaker. I remember when he was a colleague of mine. We were both opposition members and both spokesmen for agriculture. I always listened carefully to the Minister of Agriculture as he understood many of the problems of agriculture in Canada. His difficulty now is that he is taking instructions from a department. He is not really facing the problems of agriculture in Canada today; he is selling policies that have been developed in the department for which he is responsible.

The Minister of Agriculture could do a great service to this country if he made a break with tradition and decided to raise in this House a number of problems which he knows exist. If he honestly listened to the arguments surrounding the problems he raised, he could formulate a new program. The last speaker stated there is a problem in the world today, especially in western Canada, of having more produce than we can sell.

It has often been suggested that the problem in Canada is not producing wheat, but selling it. This has been a fact since the 1920s. I am sure the minister and the hon. member for Assiniboia know this. What is being done about it? I have listened to these problems being discussed for 10 or 11 years. I have often heard the silly remark used by the previous speaker, that if we cannot solve the problem any other way, we will appoint a transport controller. Why have we not appointed one? Every time we had a problem with boxcars in the past we appointed a transport controller, and when the problem was solved he was dismissed. If this has always solved the problem, why the hell do we not have a permanent one?

This is a small problem, but I am sure the Minister of Agriculture and the former member for Assiniboia talked a great deal about box cars. I am sure there have been more discussion in this House on the subject of box cars and the inequality to western farmers caused by the inability of the railroads to have the box cars at the right place at the right time than there has been on any other subject. The hon. member represents a riding in western Canada. He says that if the problem cannot be solved in any other way, he will agree to the appointment of a transport controller. What kind of representation is that for western Canada?

An hon. Member: Just a big bubble.

Mr. Peters: It is obvious the hon. member will vote with the government. Why? I am not sure why. I really would like to know why. There are many problems in agriculture, Mr. Speaker. The problem we are faced with today is that we have a surplus. We have often had a surplus. I was surprised to learn that Ireland has a surplus of agricultural commodities. I understand they are selling butter to Chile at 11.8 cents a pound. The problems of agriculture are not the same as those in industry and other fields. The problems in agriculture are over-production and inability to sell.

The Minister of Agriculture has known about these problems for a long time. I am sure the minister responsible for the Wheat Board also knows of them. If he does not know of them, he need only turn to his deskmate who for years has been connected with the selling of grain. These are the people who make their total fortunes from selling grain.

It is a complicated problem. Obviously there will be trouble attempting to sell grain at a given price in a glutted market. However, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the new department, whatever it is called, have been coasting in this respect.

I think everyone would agree that we should put some money into our efforts to sell agricultural commodities. We should be honest about what we do with wheat. The Wheat Board does not sell wheat; James Richardson & Sons sells wheat. The brokers sell it, but the Wheat Board does not sell it. In my opinion, McNamara never sold a bushel of wheat in his life, though he has sold other things. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) is a good salesman. It seems to me he might well do as other ministers have done, including a former minister of trade and commerce now sitting to my right, the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees), and call together the people responsible across the world for the operation of our trade. When it was last decided to put on such a campaign, sales were made. It is true there was a lot of mumbo-jumbo about who actually made the sales, but we did embark upon a policy of salesmanship and it was successful.

We shall always have bumper crops periodically in Canada, and the more plentiful harvests will probably fail to coincide with years in which the largest sales are made. We must therefore find some way of equalizing the returns.

An hon. Member: Both the ministers have gone out.

Mr. Peters: They can go out and have a conference. Their way of solving this problem was to pay the farmer a cash advance. The hon. member for Assiniboia said he would recommend that they go back to last year's quotas, and that he would press for this. He is not being honest. He has already done so, and the Wheat Board has told him to go to hell. I got this information from his own paper, the Assiniboia Times. We are now dealing with dilemmas which face all governments, not only the government in office. I suggest the minister would do well to turn his attention to solving some of the long-term difficulties. His department will give him all kinds of reasons why nothing can be changed, but I put it to him that he should examine some completely new propositions.

One of these would involve the provincial governments. If hon. members believe that agriculture is in trouble only in western Canada, they are wrong. The same difficulties arise from coast to coast, stemming from our ability to over-produce and our failure to sell. The agriculture committee travelled from one part of Canada to another, and during these journeys, I, as a member, learned of the great change which has taken place in eastern agriculture from the individual farm unit to the agro-industrial complex.

The family farm was in trouble because the farmer could not get enough for his produce to pay the cost of producing it. When the cream cheque is not providing enough to pay for the farm, or when the cheque for fluid milk is not large enough to enable a farmer to keep going, the whole industry is in desperate straits. There are, I suppose, some farmers who can carry a certain proportion of the burden of a low income by cutting their standard of living still further, but the big businesses are geared to producing at a high level of efficiency for markets which offer them a certain price—and if this price changes, the industry is in an extremely difficult situation.

Take the broiler industry and consider its relationship to egg production. Quebec controls the production of broilers and Ontario controls the production of eggs. The interests of egg producers in one province can be played against those of the broiler producers in the other, to the point at which the agencies which have been set up can no longer make a reasonable profit. I was surprised to learn that in Quebec they are not interested in establishing marketing boards for the various commodity groups. The provincial minister of agriculture said he was not interested in establishing a marketing board but that he would support any proposition which the federal government might have to put forward in this field.

Surely, the minister has heard similar stories from the conferences which have been held. Surely he is aware that this bugaboo about the constitution is not the barrier it used to be. We have learned that this is the case, and we shall tell him so if he allows the committee to make a report. If he is willing to bring in marketing legislation on a national scale, the provinces will accept it. This is the only way in which we shall be able to operate effectively.

We, the people of Canada, should be responsible for the orderly marketing of our agricultural produce. Today, the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang) indicated we should cut back production if a market did not appear to exist. But how in hell do we cut back? Suppose a wheat farmer has a thousand acres lying idle: the minister says he should plant only 100 acres because a good market does not appear to be likely. So far no provision has been made for a guaranteed annual wage, and unless he puts in a crop, this farmer will be on welfare.

Already the Wheat Board is selling wheat at prices which will not pay for the gasoline and the costs of putting the crop in and taking it off. Meanwhile, much of the grain remains on the farms. It may be cash in the bank, but the farmer would like to spend some of it; he is not getting enough cash to carry on. The minister is advising him to take land out of production. But is he telling us, at the same time, that he intends to announce a greenbank program? Almost every country in circumstances similar to ours has decided to embark on programs designed to take certain agricultural land out of production with provision for its use later if that should be in the national interest.

No such program has been announced here. In the meantime, who will keep our farmers if they do not plant grain? Who will pay back the cash advances we made available this year on top of the cash advances which were extended last year, advances which in many cases have yet to be repaid? The government would have us believe that these cash advances are a wonderful thing. I suppose it is a wonderful thing I should be able to go to Household Finance and borrow money, but I would do that only if it were really necessary. In the long run there is nothing particularly beneficial about getting cash advances if one has no way of paying back the money.

The only reason farmers get these cash advances is that they would be unable to keep going at all without them. The minister knows these things. I listened to him talk about them for years when he was on this side of the House. Now, apparently, he finds it easier to have the deputy minister and the departmental officials give him advice as to how he should run his department than for him to determine what is really in the interest of Canadian agriculture and make policies accordingly.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) decided there should be an austerity program and that some programs should be cut. One of the first things to suffer will be the agricultural fairs throughout the rural communities, which are the show places of agriculture. The minister is also going to suspend grants to the 4-H clubs, which are junior farmers' clubs. These clubs teach our farmers of tomorrow the skills and crafts to enable them to operate farms. If the minister beheads all the farmers, he will certainly solve their problems for them, though the nation would hardly be a contented one. However, every few years the public have an opportunity to make their decision. Revolutionary ideas of this nature would produce counter-revolutionary ideas, and the result would not be as anticipated.

Let us not talk about what this person did or that person did, about the lean years and the fat years. As far as farmers are concerned, every year is a lean year. I have not heard one farmer admit that times were good. Even if times were good, the farmers would not admit it because they know that the next year will not be good. Looking back over the past 50 years our farmers have not been wrong yet.

I suggest to the minister that long-range programs are required. The minister's policy in regard to the cream producers and farm separated milk has resulted in half of the small farms in Canada going out of operation. In my own area even a farmer on an unproductive piece of land cannot be driven off his farm. You cannot help him, neither can you hurt him very much. You just cannot get rid of him.

Almost $2 billion has been lent to the farmers for the purpose of developing economic farm units. I suggest we have an obligation to ensure that the products the farmers produce are sold at a reasonable profit, and that farmers are able to operate viable units. Let us talk not about yesterday but about tomorrow. One of the worth-while things that the minister did was to organize the agricultural congress. At this congress the minister heard about the problems of the farmers and how they could be solved. In spite of this, not one solution has been presented to the members of the House for their support. I suggest this is what the minister should be doing in the very near future.

Mr. Jerry Pringle (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, now that we are debating agriculture I observe it is opposition day again. I have been engaged in agriculture all my life, and having listened to this debate it seems to me that the abilities of an organized group of individuals who through the years have been the backbone of Canada are being downgraded. Hon. members suggest that since the farmers do not know what to do, we should tell them. They suggest that the farmers overproduce because we tell them to; that they are unable to appraise a given situation and have to come to us for guidance.

What the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) has been trying to do for a year or so now is to give the farmers an opportunity to express their problems. He invited them to the agricultural congress. He has visited agricultural communities. The agricultural committee has traipsed around Saskatchewan walking in the fields and talking to farmers. We have seen financial statements of farmers and we are aware of their problems. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has visited the west, where he was pelted with wheat and shown obscene signs. I was talking to a young man from Saskatchewan the other day who told me that those involved are still apologizing to Canada for some of the actions that took place during the Prime Minister's visit. These people were not necessarily farmers. In fact, I would be prepared to say that they were not farmers but agitators who claimed they supported the farmers.

Agriculture today is experiencing a revolution; indeed, it has been for the last five or six years. The farmers have realized that technological advances have made over-production possible. They also realize external aid has meant that the underdeveloped, needy countries have been enabled to produce the agricultural products they need. The farmers know there is a world wheat problem and that something must be done about it.

Certain sectors of the agricultural industry have done something about this problem. I should like to inform the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) that the broiler industry in Quebec is not controlled as it is in Ontario. Every province but Quebec has a marketing system for broilers. The price of these broilers is higher in the rest of Canada than in Quebec simply because there is no Quebec marketing board and broilers are being over-produced. Broiler growers in the rest of Canada are operating viable farm units. This means that banks are prepared to lend them money. No longer are they so dependent on farm improvement loans or the Farm Credit Corporation. In consultation with government officials they have evolved a broiler industry that pays. The same can be said of the egg producers. A few years ago there was over-production and the price was low. Today eggs fetch a good price, and this is because the egg producers got together and solved their particular problems.

I recognize that hon. members of the opposition are sincere and dedicated to the agricultural industry of Canada. I refer particularly to the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth). I say this, not because he is bigger than I but because I meet him in the agricultural committee and I went to Saskatchewan with him, along with the hon. member for Timiskaming.

The Minister of Agriculture cannot be expected to shoulder all of the problems of the agricultural industry. But he does want to talk over his policies with the farmers to see whether they are appropriate. As hon. members know, the government is proposing to introduce some national marketing legislation, and it has been criticized for not bringing it in sooner. I wonder whether hon. members realize why this legislation has not yet been presented to the House. The reason is that the plan is still being discussed throughout the length and breadth of the land among the farmers themselves. How many members of the opposition can show me a copy of the draft of the national chicken marketing commission act which has been presented to Department of Agriculture officials for their consideration?

• (9:20 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pringle: How many hon. members have investigated that aspect? This matter will be considered by the government in a very short time. How many hon. members have visited these people?

Let us consider the situation facing the hog industry. I have heard talk about cutting off hog subsidies. This was never considered a hog subsidy. Very good breeders in my riding have told me they never considered it to be a subsidy; it was an incentive or bonus to breeders who improved the quality of their hogs. That is all it was. If you produce a better hog, you get more money. The idea of subsidizing a hog grower for producing a poor product is simply outdated. You do not subsidize a chicken grower who produces eggs at a loss but makes a profit because the government picks up the tab. That idea has gone by the board. The same argument applies to the turkey industry.

Let us now consider the problem facing the grain industry. I realize it is a tough one. I intend to refer to the supply-management program. We should try to produce for a market. It was stated earlier that we lacked the ability to sell our product, that we over-produce and undersell. That is the phrase used by the hon. friends. There is another phrase we can use: we over-produce and under-consume. There is just no way you can shove food down the throats of people. We keep referring to the fact that a great percentage of the population of the world is starving and hungry. We realize this. Members on this side of the House are just as responsible for this situation as anyone else. You are members of a political party, Members of Parliament, and when and if you come up with a really bright idea and turn on a 500-watt light which lights the way to a proper distribution of world food, without wrecking the economy of underdeveloped and other countries, you will be surprised at the reception you will get.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pringle: I received a letter just the other day from an old colleague of mine who is in the chicken business in Spain. One of the first things he said was: Jerry, I am in Spain and we have a problem here regarding the over-production of broilers and eggs. Would you get a hold of some of your marketing board acts and the natural produce marketing acts and send them to me so that we can find out if we can do something about this?

Only a couple of weeks ago I received a reply to my letter, saying that in Spain they had invoked a marketing act and a marketing board in order to handle this surplus. I was told today that there was a surplus, believe it or not, of chickens in India. Of course, these chickens are perhaps not too good by our standards. I am not sure they are particularly edible, but there is a surplus. There are surpluses everywhere because we over-produce and under-consume. The main problem is created by an under-consumption of the products we produce. We should produce to a market.

We have a peculiar situation in the House of Commons today. I do not intend to take up much more time because I know there are others who want to speak, but let me liken this situation to what takes place on a football field. On an opposition day hon. members on this side seem to pick on agriculture, and there is no greater political football than the situation in which our agricultural industry finds itself. This bothers me because I am a great friend of many of those who do a great job to produce food for people here. Unfortunately, you sit here and tell them they are doing everything wrong. There are problems, but as long as you insist on telling them they do everything wrong the problems will continue.

It is surprising that a number of members in the opposition who represent grain farmers keep telling them they do not know what they are doing. They insist that the government should be telling these people what they must do in order to operate their businesses successfully. This whole business reminds me of a Grey Cup game; we have interceptions, we have piling-on and we have interference. The only thing we do not have is a scoreboard, and we will probably get that before the evening is over.

Let me refer to an article published in the Western Producer. It states in part, under the heading "Favourable report for UFA despite farm income problem", that their financial position was reported by the United Farmers board of directors at the opening session as having been assisted by sales of $24 million, which is $2,635,000 more than the year before. Let me refer to another article which appeared in the Western Producer which refers to what Mr. Turner, president of the Wheat Pool, had to say, as follows:

> To those who say the board should have sold more last year he pointed to the high world production and lower world trade in wheat and said that in the face of these adverse conditions Canada's exports actually represented an increased percentage of the total in 1968-69 over the year before.

Again I should like to commend the hon. member for Kent-Essex for bringing this subject to the attention of the House. I could not possibly agree with the wording of his motion. I would not except him to commend the government; although I am new here, I do not think that is done by anyone in the opposition. As a member of the agriculture committee I know we have a big job ahead of us this year. We must do what we can. When we are planning our program of work I hope we will not do it in this chamber. We should go to the farmers and have the farmers come to us. In this way I think we will be able to work out a program to make the agricultural industry viable again. Perhaps we can elevate this industry to an advanced position through technology. In this way perhaps we can increase the income of those who participate in agriculture.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to participate, in a very modest way, in this debate. I heard a number of speeches this afternoon, some of which were more brilliant than others. As in any other debate, many things were said, and we always hope that, by the end of the day, solutions that may prove helpful to the Canadian farmers, will have been found.

First of all, may I say that I believe I am the second opposition member from Quebec to speak today. I deplore the fact that a large number of government members from that province have not seen fit to take part in this debate.

Several members from different regions have spoken. I would have hoped to see other government members from Quebec take part in this debate instead of implying that the situation of farmers in Quebec is far better than that of the farmers in the rest of the country.

I do not usually criticize for the sake of criticizing, but it seems to me that the people in Quebec had reason to believe at one time that Quebec members would have made every effort to make the Minister of Agriculture understand that in their province the situation is not better than in the rest of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy) is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the hon. member for Joliette. I just returned from Montreal, and I have therefore not been able to participate in the debate this afternoon. Since I have not heard the speeches that have been made, I must say at any rate that I have met farmers—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please, the hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I accept the comments of my good friend, the member for Laval, but even though the absence of a government member was justified, there were 55 others here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. La Salle: I have no fault to find with the member for Laval.

In any case, I clearly have the impression that Quebec farmers will keep on worrying about their representation and questioning the commitments made during an election campaign, namely that they would be given the consideration they deserve in Canada.

I would like, for a few minutes, to go back 20 years when I was working in a slaughter house, which gave me the opportunity to meet many farmers and to talk with them. Things were not easy in those days. The difficulties were many, and we would always hope that our leaders and our governments would find solutions capable of improving the lot of farmers.

This was a time—many will remember it better than I—when many farmers, on the occasion of the Christmas and New Year's festivities—some might think it is funny, but it was nevertheless more serious for others—would slaughter one of their cows to feed their families.

And if we consider what has happened in the last 20 years, we notice that most of the farmers have not improved their lot, very much, since on account of the present policy, the farmer has to sell for instance not only one cow occasionally but must get rid of the whole herd.

This debate gives us the opportunity to express certain opinions and to ask the minister to consider more thoroughly possible solutions to the problems of the agricultural community. Some will say it is not an easy task, but one must not infer therefrom that it is an impossible one. I am not so unkind as to say that the minister is the only one responsible for the present state of affairs, but he will surely need the advice of his experts and will have to resort to the solutions that all hon. members are prepared to bring forward.

I say with pleasure to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) that we have heard for a long time about a new dairy policy providing price support for certain products, but nothing tangible is ever done.

In the province of Quebec the situation is uncertain, but it must not be better in New Brunswick where people have to sell potatoes at 60 cents for 75 pounds. I wonder how the potato producers will be able to pull themselves out of that again this year. Try as they may to make the potato producers and other farmers believe that they will eventually adopt a price policy, I believe they will have to act as soon as possible if they want their position to improve.

May I bring to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) the situation of the tobacco growers. We have talked about several areas of production but the growers of cigarette tobacco, whether in Ontario or in Quebec, are facing serious difficulties which slow down the development of this very important industry and I would ask the Minister of Agriculture to discuss the matter thoroughly with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) and to make him soften his stand.

Incidentally, I would like to commend the Minister of Agriculture who last year granted additional subsidies to improve the soils and to increase the acreage devoted to growing tobacco in some areas of the country. On the other hand, I am very much concerned, and so are the tobacco growers, about the stand taken by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It is the second time I stress the point for I believe this industry is of major importance for some areas in Canada.

In my constituency there are more than 95 per cent of the cigarette tobacco growers of the whole province of Quebec, this means that it is an area more important still than Ontario in this respect, in spite of the great number of major tobacco producers in the latter province. While it is one of the very few productions able to survive without any government assistance, the attitude displayed by the minister during this past year is bound to be of great concern to us since the future of this industry is at stake.

I hope that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Côté) will answer a request I made not so long ago when I asked him how much money he was getting from that industry.

Of course we are willing to help the Minister of National Health and Welfare fight against abuses which, unfortunately, are not restricted to the use of cigarettes.

All hon. members agree that abuses must be checked, but there is no conclusive proof that cigarettes cause cancer. Several other products would probably have the same effect. I dare hope that the Minister of Agriculture will see to it that tobacco growers no longer have cause for worry, that they can count not only on the government but on all hon. members to continue operating in an industry that enables many Canadian citizens to earn a living.

I would also like to say a few words on the responsibilities of the Canadian Dairy Commission. For a long time, the milk producers have asked for an emergency debate, but the government did not think it was advisable to hold it. Personally, I agree entirely with the dairy producers who asked that their government explain clearly the policy of the Commission.

It is unfortunate to note that the Canadian Dairy Commission has been entrusted with the announcement of some kind of policy that is every year a bit more harsh and drastic. It is even suggested that there are 2,000 or 2,500 milk producers too many, but the officials have not yet had the courage to say it quite clearly, for reasons of political expediency.

However, the Canadian Dairy Commission is acting as the mouthpiece of the government, and I wonder if we cannot demand that our leaders have at least the courage and the honesty to explain clearly the dairy policy and to make the producers—however small—understand that they can no longer maintain their activity.

An hon. Member: What do you think of it?

Mr. La Salle: What do I think of it? I think that the existence of a surplus was too easily admitted and that nobody thought of using it by providing all the school boys of our country with free milk.

Furthermore, why should we not attempt to process this milk to feed cattle, as was done successfully in the United States? In Canada, we talked about it a year ago but nothing was done. I wonder if the government intends to do something in that respect. If it were simply a matter for an individual member of a rural riding to make such a recommendation, I would feel privileged to suggest it. As the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce must be very interested in the development of the tobacco industry, I wonder what will become of that support price policy and the restrictions on imports. To talk about it is not enough, action should follow.

I am deeply convinced that one of the ways to help the producers would be to limit our imports of truck-farm products. The committee on agriculture on which sit a number of government members, recognized that fact. It was noted, for instance, that on the south side we had 50,000 acres of humus—a black dirt very good for truck gardening—of which 15,000 acres only are in cultivation. It goes without saying that a policy restricting imports of such products would enable Quebecers to till the soil to its full capacity and thus lead a more decent life.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It being 9.45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 58 (9), to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith any questions necessary to dispose of the motion now before the House. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Gleave) which was negatived on the following division:

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, before we adjourn could I just confirm the order of business for tomorrow. As the first item we would call the Ways and Means motion, item No. 2, to be followed by the resolution standing in my name, item No. 30, in regard to the Canada Elections Act. As the third item of business we would call item No. 29, with respect to the National Parks Act.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I paired off with the hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Comtois); had I voted, I would have supported the motion.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: It being after ten o'clock this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

It being twenty minutes after ten o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, November 19, 1969

The House met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DIEFENBAKER, MR. STANFIELD—CLARIFICATION OF QUESTIONS TO PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Yesterday I put some questions to the Prime Minister, and one word that makes all the difference in the world to the statement I made has been omitted on page 931 of Hansard. In the U.S.S.R. Mao is known as "the great tiger". Yesterday I said, referring to Professor Lin, that the last time he visited Communist China "he reported on the great tiger to the Prime Minister." The words in Hansard carry a meaning that was never intended. I was referring to the last time he went there to visit the great tiger. I want to make that clear.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to point out that in asking the question yesterday the right hon. member conveyed to the House false information. Because Your Honour ruled the question out of order I was not able to correct this information. This sort of thing happens all the time, of course.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: We get it from the Prime Minister every day.

Mr. Trudeau: When members of the opposition ask loaded questions and convey false information, Your Honour rules them out of order. Again, this is a perfect example of the right hon. member having stated a falsehood in his question and I was not—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I now rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The right hon. gentleman had risen on a question of privilege and the Prime Minister rose on a point of order. I hope we are not going to get involved too much in this sort of thing, but the right hon. gentleman is now seeking the floor on a question of privilege.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I am not going to enter into an argument with the Prime Minister as to the making of false statements. We have had that experience with him, and regularly. I was simply pointing out that Mr. Lin was a close friend of the Prime Minister and had reported to him the last time on his visit to Communist China.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. At some point I must intervene to suggest to hon. members that I do not believe there is a question of privilege or a point of order here. We are having a discussion regarding an interpretation of what was and what was not said. This type of discussion should really not give rise to questions of privilege. I suggest to hon. members that perhaps not much will be gained by pursuing the matter further.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I must rise on a question of privilege. The right hon. member has just stated two new falsehoods. First of all, he said that I was a friend of Professor Lin.

An hon. Member: We don't want excuses.

Mr. Trudeau: You are not interested in the truth? Then I will tell it to somebody else. The right hon. member said that I was a friend of Professor Lin, a person I have never met and whom I do not know. Second, the right hon. member stated that he had reported to me. That is another falsehood. I have never met him nor read any of his papers. Therefore this is falsehood compounded on the part of the right hon. member.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that statement—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the right hon. gentleman to my left in a moment; he is rising on another question of privilege. I certainly do not think we are going to achieve very much by a succession of alleged questions of privilege. In my view they are not questions of privilege at all. The right hon. gentleman is seeking to rise on another question of privilege. I will hear him and determine whether he does have a question of privilege.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the statement that a report was made by Mr. Lin to the government appeared in the press months ago.

Mr. Trudeau: In the press! So what's new?

Mr. Diefenbaker: And the Prime Minister never denied it. Now he does deny it because he knows the implication.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if I were to spend my time denying statements that appear in the press, or saying whether what is said in the press is false or not, I would have time for nothing else.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to maintain my suggestion that there was no question of privilege. Once again this is a dispute between the two right hon. members as to alleged facts. There is therefore no privilege and I have to so rule. I hope no member will want to raise a question of privilege on behalf of the Press Gallery.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I assure you I do not rise to attack the press or anybody else.

Mr. Trudeau: That's nice.

Mr. Stanfield: There is an inaccuracy in Hansard. Unfortunately I do not have a copy in front of me and cannot refer to the page number. In a question addressed to the Prime Minister I referred to a statement made by Dr. Young, the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission, with regard to an unacceptable rate of employment. I now have a copy of Hansard, and at page 935 I am reported as follows:

> —in view of the statement by Mr. Young that in the event of the failure of a policy of restraint the authorities may have to resort to a degree of unemployment which will be acceptable to all concerned.

I believe I said "unacceptable". This is clear from the question. It only makes sense that way; otherwise it does not make sense.

Mr. Trudeau: They don't always, though.

Mr. Stanfield: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, if I am offending the Prime Minister. I request that Hansard be changed to read "a degree of unemployment which will be unacceptable", rather than "acceptable."

[Mr. Speaker.]

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

AIRPORT GROUND TRANSPORTATION—PROPOSED REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the House will recall an announcement by the Minister of Transport some days ago proposing that the question of ground transportation at airports in Canada should be the subject matter of a committee study. There has now been consultation with the representatives of the various parties and I believe there might be unanimous consent to an order in the following terms:

> That the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications be directed to examine the subject matter of ground transportation at airports in Canada;
> And that during its consideration of the aforementioned matter the committee be empowered to adjourn from place to place within Canada.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I have to apologize to the minister in this regard. I was not present at the House leaders' meeting that took place yesterday. The order is in fact acceptable except for the clause with regard to adjourning from place to place. I regret having to tell the minister this because he did consult with me immediately before the House sat.

I must say that the latter part of the order which provides for adjourning from place to place in Canada is not acceptable. I do not need to say why. If an application is made by the chairman to concur in a report of the committee which so suggests, we will deal with it at that time.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the point being made by the hon. member for Peace River. The motion is not before the House. The President of the Privy Council sought unanimous consent of the House to put the motion. There does not appear to be unanimity on the motion. I assume it is not being put.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON VISIT TO MIDDLE EAST

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a brief report upon my visit to the Middle East which took place last week.

Canada has been closely concerned in Middle Eastern affairs since we participated in the activities of the United Nations Special Commission on Palestine, which drew up the Palestine partition plan of 1947. We voted for the United Nations resolution setting up the State of Israel in 1948. Recognition of the right of the State of Israel to exist remains an essential feature of our Middle Eastern policy. At the same time, we try to maintain an objective approach to the current problems of the area. Our essential objective is that all states there should be enabled to live in peace and security, free from threats of war or territorial encroachment.

For two decades, Canada has had military personnel in United Nations peacekeeping operations in the area. Canada is also the third largest contributor to the United Nations agency working for the relief of the Arab refugees.

Our Middle Eastern policy has largely found expression through the United Nations in New York. It was there that we took part in the steps which led to the birth of the State of Israel; it was there that the United Nations Emergency Force was established. More recently, as a member of the Security Council, it was there that we took part in drafting Resolution 242 of November 1967, the resolution that we feel offers the best available framework for progress toward peace in the area.

My visits were a reflection of our long involvement in the affairs of the Middle East, in response to invitations from the foreign ministers of Iran, Israel and the United Arab Republic, and in return for visits paid to Canada by the Shah of Iran, the President, the late Prime Minister and Foreign Minister of Israel, and the Foreign Minister of the United Arab Republic. More particularly, I wished to learn at first hand the attitudes and policies of the governments concerned with regard to the Arab-Israeli conflict.

I return from my visit both saddened and discouraged. Prime Minister Meir and President Nasser both told me that they seek a peaceful solution to the Arab-Israeli conflict. It is very hard to see how useful negotiations can begin when the preoccupations of the parties are in direct confrontation. Israel is preoccupied with the security of her boundaries and her insistence upon direct negotiations with her neighbours. The United Arab Republic is preoccupied with the withdrawal of Israel to its pre-1967 boundaries and the fate of the Arab refugees. I can see no immediate resolution of this confrontation.

When I went to the Middle East I had no solution to offer and no proposals to make; I went to inform myself on the situation as seen, first, by Iran, a nation which does not take sides, and by the two main protagonists. In every country visited we were received with great courtesy by the head of state, the principal minister and the foreign minister. In each country the heads of state and their ministers devoted many hours to concentrated conversations. The views I expressed in outlining Canadian policy were given thoughtful consideration and the questions I asked answered fully and forthrightly. Wherever I went I found a manifest wish to have Canada understand the positions taken. This reminds us of Canada's special standing as a peaceseeking and peacemaking nation and is evidence, perhaps, of the need for understanding on the part of the nations in conflict.

My first visit was to Iran, where I saw a nation preoccupied with the advancement of its economy and the improvement of the conditions of life of its people. Its geographical location requires Iran to be intimately involved in the problems of the Middle East. I found a nation some 6,000 miles from Canada, in the heart of the Middle East, pursuing a Middle Eastern policy closely parallel to our own. In my subsequent visits I found my discussions in Tehran most useful both for the information I drew from them and for the political attitudes expressed.

In Israel I was moved, as anyone must be, by the sense of pride in nationhood that characterizes that country, and deeply impressed by what has been achieved in nationbuilding in 20 years. In Egypt I saw a nation where the evidences of ancient glory are very much present, contrasting cruelly with the present-day struggle to evolve a better standard of living for its people.

The situation in the Middle East today is tragic. There is so much to be done in that part of the world and the will and technology are there. The tragedy is that in so many of the countries the resources needed for development are tied up in an arid confrontation which threatens to burst into violent conflict.

I left the Middle East with a profound sense of disquiet. Effective negotiation is not an immediate prospect. Escalation of the conflict is an immediate danger. In these circumstances, perhaps the best role for Canada to play in the foreseeable future is that of an understanding, compassionate, and objective observer, ready to assist if and when there is a specific task for us to undertake at the instance of both sides.

Let us hope that notwithstanding the present difficulties, counsels of moderation will prevail, and that some day, somehow, peace will come to the Middle East.

It would not be appropriate in a statement on motions to review in detail the bilateral discussions we had in each capital. There are great trading opportunities, particularly with Iran and Israel, and some important possibilities with the United Arab Republic. All three countries are eager for increasing contact with us. Perhaps one of the ways in which we can help is to be more of a presence in the Middle East, a part of the world that needs friends and cherishes friendship.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fairweather: There is no need for applause; I have not been away anywhere.

We welcome the minister back to Canada and to Parliament. I am sure he would agree that most Canadians expect two things in the pursuit of our policy toward the Middle East. The first is the right of the state of Israel to exist in the community of the world. The second is the solution of the refugee problem which has plagued the ingenuity of statesmen but, more important, has caused severe hardship and privation to the people concerned. One author stated that the symbol of the twentieth century, he suspects, will prove to be the refugee. The people of Israel have more reason than most to know that this is true.

The minister speaks of his profound sense of pessimism. We can only hope that this will prove not to be justified because we recognize that war is no longer an acceptable way to solve conflicts between men.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, we also would like to welcome the minister back to the House. We are pleased that he was able to visit that part of the world which, as he said and as we all know, is of vital concern to world peace. The situation in the Middle East at present constitutes the greatest threat to world peace. I think the minister must feel sometimes that their internal problems seem almost insoluble, but because the peace of the world depends on it they must be solved.

I am glad to note that the minister concentrated in his statement upon the United Nations. It may well be that the agreement of the two super-powers, the United States of America and the U.S.S.R., is necessary to a solution of this problem, but the solution must be within the framework of international order.

One of the things that some members of the House, including myself, who were in New York recently at the United Nations were told when we were discussing peacekeeping was that the eventual solution of this problem would require an enlarged and enhanced peacekeeping force. We think that perhaps the greatest contribution Canada could make, as the minister's statement seems to indicate, would be to assist in the provision of such a force when and if it can be used in these countries.

I join the hon. member for Fundy-Royal in urging once again an increased effort to deal with the festering sore of the refugees, which is essential to the solution of this problem.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, like the two members who spoke previously, I shall say that we are also pleased by the return to Canada of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp). However, as he confessed that during his trip to the Middle East, he had no solution to offer nor any proposal to make, I wonder what business he had going to that part of the world. In my opinion, it would have been rather difficult, for a country that contributed to the partition of Palestine in 1947, to go and offer reparation for what was destroyed at that time.

The spark which threatens to ignite the Middle East at any moment is a great concern to us, but if the minister made the trip to study the situation instead of finding a solution, I hope that his meetings with heads of state in those regions helped him find a fair settlement the Canadian government could bring forward.

We noticed lately that upon a suggestion of the minister, Canada was willing to offer a peace-keeping force similar to the one we sent to Cyprus. Not very long ago, in the spring of 1967, the president of the United Arab Republic himself drove the Canadians out of his country.

I ignore whether President Nasser is now ready to accept the dispatch of a peace-keeping force from Canada or elsewhere.

Anyhow, it is urgent to solve the problem raised there which is not only a problem of borders. There is also indeed a problem of refugees. This year, Canada will be paying over $12 million as assistance to Palestinian refugees. This condition has been existing since partition and it seems that the problem will never be settled.

A great number of Palestinian refugees are now suffering from hunger as a result of that partition and I feel that it rests with those who are responsible for that unfortunate situation to cope with it.

IDENTIFICATION OF CRIMINALS ACT

RESTRICTION OF RIGHT TO FINGERPRINT ACCUSED BEFORE CONVICTION

Mr. Douglas A. Hogarth (New Westminster) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-154, to amend the Identification of Criminals Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Speaker, the effect of this bill generally is to amend the Identification of Criminals Act so that no person can be fingerprinted by the police without his consent until after he has been convicted of an indictable offence unless a judge under certain circumstances otherwise orders. As the law now stands he can be fingerprinted before he is convicted.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

ORDERS IN COUNCIL PASSED

Question No. 15—Mr. Skoberg:

How many orders-in-council were passed by the federal government for the years 1950, 1955, 1960, 1963, 1964, 1966, 1967 and 1968?

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Total number of orders-in-council for the years indicated are:

15,121	3,963	3,674	3,757	3,994	4,827	4,056	3,582
			of which
8,938	2,116	1,877	1,836	1,951	2,364	1,654	1,230

were Treasury Board Minutes approved by the Governor in Council.

*NATIONALIZATION OF YUKON ELECTRICAL COMPANY

Question No. 32—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

Is the federal government presently giving favourable consideration to the nationalization of the Yukon Electrical Company?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I can advise that nationalization of the company referred to should not be ruled out, but no decision has been taken at this time.

*NATIONALIZATION OF WHITE PASS AND YUKON CORPORATION

Question No. 33—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

Is the federal government presently giving favourable consideration to the nationalization of the White Pass and Yukon Corporation?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I can advise that nationalization of the company referred to should not be ruled out, but no decision has been taken at this time.

INVESTIGATION OF DRUG ADVERTISING

Question No. 51—Mrs. MacInnis:

Is the Combines Investigation Branch of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, under the Criminal Code provisions regarding deceptive advertising presently investigating the drug advertising in Canada and, if so, when will the investigation be completed, and will the results of the investigation be made public?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Investigation Act has no authority to investigate offences under the Criminal Code. However, inquiries under the misleading advertising provisions of the Act, sections 33C and 33D, the latter of which came into force on July 31, 1969, and is the successor provision to section 306 of the Criminal Code, are instituted by the Director whenever he has reason to believe that an offence against either or both of these provisions has been committed. It is the practice, however, that no information is given out as to whether inquiries are being pursued in a particular industry unless and until a report is published or proceedings are instituted in the Courts.

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION INVESTIGATIONS

Question No. 54—Mrs. MacInnis:

1. Has the Commission on Prices and Incomes undertaken investigations or studies on any specific sectors, areas or industries in Canada and, if so, what are these areas, and on what criteria or basis were they selected?

2. Which personnel are involved in each of these areas?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I have been informed by the Chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission as follows: 1. and 2. On October 29, the Commission announced that it was undertaking a fact finding study of the Canadian steel industry. The purpose of this study is to investigate price, wage and other cost increases in the Canadian steel industry. This area was selected for study because it was felt that it would provide a good example of wage and price behaviour which has become very widespread in recent years. Commission personnel who are involved in this study include Mr. Leslie Reed, Mr. Donald Brazier, Mr. John Hague and Mr. Tom Houston. The study is under the supervision of the Vice-Chairman of the Commission. Personnel from government departments and private groups will be involved in this study as required. Other areas of study are now being considered.

TEST CASES ON MISLEADING ADVERTISING

Question No. 57—Mrs. MacInnis:

1. Which test cases are presently being prepared by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs regarding misleading advertising in Canada under section 306 of the Criminal Code?

2. On what basis are each of these cases being prepared?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. In view of the lack of jurisprudence relating to section 33D of the Combines Investigation Act and its predecessor, section 306 of the Criminal Code, virtually every case under inquiry by the Director of Investigation and Research which reaches the Courts will be a test case. It is the practice that no information is given out as to inquiries being pursued with respect to particular companies or individuals unless and until a report is published or proceedings are instituted in the Courts.

2. Inquiries under section 33D of the Act are instituted by the Director of Investigation and Research whenever he has reason to believe that an offence against the section has been committed.

TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS ON INTELSAT

Question No. 62—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Is the Government of Canada, through the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Corporation, giving favourable consideration to the task force recommendations on Intelsat (a) that Intelsat should be transformed into a bigger, more comprehensive and better integrated system capable of providing total communications services for all nations (b) that no single country has the right to veto over any Intelsat decision and (c) that there be an international managerial staff for Intelsat?

2. If not, what is the position of the Government of Canada on the above three areas?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): 1 (a) (b) and (c) Three inter-governmental meetings have been held this year for the purpose of preparing definitive agreements that would supersede the interim agreements of 1964 governing the affairs of the International Telecommunications Satellite Organization (INTELSAT). Canadian delegations to these meetings have included representatives from the departments of Communications, External Affairs and the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation.

2. The positions taken by our delegations are along the general lines set forth in 1 (a), (b) and (c) of the question.

CANADIAN COMMUNICATIONS SATELLITE—DISCUSSIONS WITH U.S.S.R.

Question No. 68—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Have there been any discussions between the Government of Canada and the Government of the U.S.S.R. regarding the launching of the Canadian communications satellite and, if so, what were the results of these discussions?

2. If no discussions were held, when did the Government of Canada change its policy as announced to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts on April 22, 1969, page 1,485 of the Committee's Proceedings, and for what reasons?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General and Minister of Communications): 1. No.

2. The Government of Canada has not changed its policy regarding the launching of the Canadian communications satellite. Only two countries are able to place satellites in a geostationary orbit: the U.S.S.R. and the U.S.A. In fact, only the U.S.A. have achieved this objective. We have negotiated with success an agreement in principle and now Telesat is negotiating the commercial details.

DRUG PATENT LICENCES

Question No. 74—Mr. Saltsman:

1. What applications have been received under the revised Patent Act for licences from the Patent Commissioner to manufacture or import and sell patented drugs, up to September 30, 1969?

2. What applications have been approved or refused by the Patent Commissioner?

3. What reasons were given for those drug patent applications that have been rejected?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. Up to September 30, 1969 the Patent Office has received 50 applications for the grant of licences to manufacture or import and sell patented drugs under the revision to Section 41 of the Patent Act which became effective on June 27, 1969.

Applications have been received from the following applicants: 1 application from Compagnie Pharmaceutique Vita Ltée, St. Romuald, Que.; 1 application from Frank W. Horner Limited, Montreal Que.; 4 applications from Inglis Pharmaceuticals Ltd, Rexdale, Ont.; 1 application from Laboratoire Medic Ltée, Ville de Laval, Que.; 1 application from Laboratoires PRO-DOC Ltée, Ville de Laval, Que.; 2 applications from Micro Chemicals Limited, Toronto, Ont.; 2 applications from Mowatt & Moore Limited, Pointe Claire, Que.; 1 application from Neo Drug Company, Montreal, Que.; 9 applications from Novopharm Limited, Scarborough, Ont.; 1 application from Rocke William Cie Ltée, Montreal, Que.; 25 applications from S. & U. Chemicals Limited, Toronto, Ont.; 1 application from Trans-Canada Dermapeutics Ltd., Montreal, Que.; 1 application from Verdun Pharmaceutical Laboratories, Montreal, Que.

2. No applications approved or refused up to September 30, 1969.

3. Answered by 2.

COPPER PRICE INCREASES

Question No. 76—Mr. Saltsman:

Is the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs presently investigating the recent increases in copper prices in Canada and, if so, what have been the results of this investigation and is action contemplated under the Combines Investigation Act?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): It is the policy of the Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Investigation Act to scrutinize all significant price movements which come to his attention and he is charged with the responsibility of initiating an investigation whenever he has reason to believe there has been an offence against the Act. It is the practice, however, that no information is given out as to whether an inquiry is being pursued with respect to a particular group of companies or individuals unless and until a report is published.

ATOMIC EXPLOSION BY U.S. IN ALEUTIAN ISLANDS

Question No. 126—Mr. Rose:

Was the Government of Canada given any details or information by the United States Government why the Atomic Blast in the Aleutian Islands near Alaska was terribly important to the national security of the United States and, if so, what was this information?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No.

FALSE ADVERTISING BY JACK ANTHONY

Question No. 155—Mr. Saltsman:

1. What criteria was used by the Combines Investigation Branch in charging Jack Anthony with false advertising?

2. Did Mr. Anthony claim that the "jet ignition unit with transistors" would give "better gas mileage, easier starting and better performance"?

3. Were tests undertaken by the Combines Investigation Branch to determine whether Mr. Anthony's claims were justified?

4. If so, who undertook these tests, and what were the results?

Questions

5. Is it the intention of the Combines Investigation Branch to test advertising claims made by manufacturing and other firms that "our gas gives better mileage" or that "our tires last longer", and similar advertising claims?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. Jack Anthony was charged with an offence under section 33D of the Combines Investigation Act following an investigation initiated by the Director of Investigation and Research. It was considered that the information obtained in the inquiry disclosed prima facie evidence of an offence.

2. The advertisement published on an Ottawa television station on behalf of Mr. Anthony which gave rise to the charge claimed that a "new jet ignition unit with transistors" was "Engineered to give better gas mileage, easier starting and better performance".

3 and 4. The Office of the Director of Investigation and Research arranged for tests to be made by the National Research Council. The tests showed the performance claims advertised were not true.

5. The Director of Investigation and Research will investigate any advertising claim whenever he has reason to believe that any representation therein amounts to an offence against section 33C or 33D of the Combines Investigation Act.

COLOUR TELEVISION SET FIRES

Question No. 236—Mr. Mather:

1. Has the Department of National Health and Welfare investigated reports of fires caused by colour television sets in the United States to determine whether similar occurrences have happened in Canada?

2. If so, what are the results of this investigation and what action is contemplated by the Department?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes, the Department has investigated reports about spontaneous fires in color and black-and-white TV sets in the United States.

2. Information received from U.S. government agencies and the Canadian Electronics Industries Association, indicates 700 cases of fire among about 85,000,000 TV sets in use. Comparable figures for Canada are not yet complete. Inquiries with provincial health departments and fire marshals have so far revealed at least 12 cases. No action is contemplated by the Department of National Health and Welfare at the present time. The Department has been informed that the Canadian Standards Association is actively discussing the problem with Canadian suppliers with a view to minimizing the hazard.

APPOINTMENTS TO FEDERAL POSITIONS

Question No. 241—Mr. Mather:

In appointments to federal bodies, including the Economic Council of Canada, the Diplomatic Corps, the Judiciary, the Canadian Radio and Television Commission, is the government giving consideration to naming a due proportion of qualified women?

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Yes.

AGRICULTURE—TASK FORCE STUDIES

Question No. 243—Mr. Skoberg:

1. What special studies have been commissioned by the federal task force on agriculture?

2. Were these studies competitively tendered and, if not, for what reason?

3. What firms and/or individuals conducted the commissioned special studies?

4. What was the completion date of such studies and how many are still being carried on?

5. What is the expected completion date of all such studies presently commissioned?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1, 3 and 4.

2. The studies were not competitively tendered in the sense of a public invitation. In view of the urgency of the work, time limitations and the need for research expertise in specialized areas of study, the Task Force solicited study proposals from persons known to be knowledgeable in particular subjects. The proposals were examined critically for content and cost and in some cases rejected or revised and new proposals solicited from the same or other parties.

Questions

5. Only one study (Demand and Supply) is outstanding. Completion date is uncertain.

EMIGRATION OF CANADIAN DOCTORS TO THE UNITED STATES

Question No. 247—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. Was the statement of the Minister of National Health and Welfare that Canada would lose doctors to the United States of the government exerted pressure to lower doctors' fees based on a study done for the government and, if so, is the government prepared to table the study?

2. Has the government discussed with the United States the possibility of joint action to lower doctors' fees and, if so, what has been the response?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. No.

2. No.

DAIRY INDUSTRY—SUBSIDIES PAID TO DAIRY PRODUCERS

Question No. 250—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. What is the amount of the subsidy paid by the Canadian Dairy Commission to commercial milk producers between April 1, 1969 and August 31, 1969?

2. What amount was deducted from the subsidy for export duty during the same period?

3. What amount was deducted from the subsidy by virtue of the .52¢ per 100 lb. tax for production exceeding quotas?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Net subsidy payments to milk and cream shippers, after deductions of holdbacks for export equalization costs, covering deliveries reported for the months of April to August, inclusive, totalled $44,350,000.

2. Deductions for export equalization costs on account of deliveries during the period were $13,022,000.

3. Deductions by virtue of the 52 cent holdback on milk deliveries in excess of quota are not recorded separately.

AIR POLLUTION—AUTOMOTIVE CONTROLS

Question No. 253—Mr. Saltsman:

1. Has the Combines Investigation Branch of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs undertaken an investigation in Canada to determine whether the four leading auto manufacturers have been conspiring for over a decade to delay the development and use of devices to control automotive air pollution and, if so, what are the results of this investigation and what action is contemplated?

2. If no investigation has been undertaken, what are the reasons?

[Mr. Olson.]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. The Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Investigation Act is aware of the proceedings in the United States. In accordance with the usual practice, any information of this nature coming to the attention of the Director is carefully considered to determine whether he has reason to believe there has been an offence against the Act so as to warrant formal inquiry. The practice is, however, that no information is given out as to whether an inquiry is being pursued with respect to a particular group of companies unless and until a report is published or proceedings are instituted in the Courts.

2. See answer to 1.

INVESTIGATION INTO PRICE FIXING BY NEWSPRINT COMPANIES

Question No. 254—Mr. Saltsman:

Is the Combines Investigation Branch undertaking an investigation into the recent announced identical price increases on newsprint to determine possible price fixing among the newsprint companies and, if so, what are the results of this investigation and what action is contemplated?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): It is the policy of the Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Investigation Act to scrutinize all significant price movements which come to his attention and he is charged with the responsibility of initiating an investigation whenever he has reason to believe there has been no offence against the Act. It is the practice, however, that no information is given out as to whether an inquiry is being pursued with respect to a particular group of companies or individuals unless and until a report is published.

EQUIPMENT, DEFENCE AND COASTGUARD SHIPS AIDING FISHERIES DEPARTMENT FLEET

Question No. 271—Mr. Crouse:

Will the ships from National Defence and the Coast Guard to be used in aid of the Department of Fisheries and Forestry fleet be supplied with the technical equipment that Fisheries Department boats now carry?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Defence and Transport as follows: Consolidation of the Federal Fleets is under study. It is not possible at this time, to say whether or not Canadian Forces vessels will require to be fitted with technical equipment in support of the Department of Forestry and Fisheries' fleet. Any Canadian Coastguard vessels used to assist the Department of Fisheries from time to time would be supplied with appropriate technical equipment to the extent that the Department of Fisheries require.

RENOVATION OF OLD CUSTOMS BUILDING, CALGARY

Question No. 289—Mr. Harkness:

1. What was the cost of the renovation of the top floor of the old Customs Building in Calgary which was carried out approximately a year ago?

2. What is the estimated cost of the renovation now taking place on the first and second floors?

3. What use is to be made of this renovated building?

4. Is a cafe or cafeteria being provided for in this building and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. $110,140.15.

2. A contract for $411,996 has been awarded for renovations on the first, second and third floors.

3. The Customs Building, located at 11th Avenue and First Street will house offices for Customs, the Food and Drug Directorate, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Department of Public Works.

4. An area is being provided in this building that can be used as a lunchroom or a canteen, but the level of service, if any, that will be provided is dependent on an investigation that is now underway.

PATROL OF ARCTIC WATERS

Question No. 294—Mr. Thomson:

With reference to a question asked of the Minister of National Defence at page 25 of Hansard, what are the reasons the Canadian Government does not engage in regular patrols of Canadian Arctic waters?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): The Canadian Forces carry out a planned surveillance patrol program in the Arctic. To be effective the patrols must be carried out at irregular intervals, on ever changing geographical patrol patterns.

NEW ARMED FORCES UNIFORMS

Question No. 302—Mr. Harkness:

1. What is the total dollar value of clothing now on order by the Department of National Defence to convert all our armed service into green uniforms in place of khaki, navy blue and air force blue?

2. How much money has now been spent and how much more will be spent during the next twelve months to purchase green great coats for all defence personnel?

3. How many great coats in the old colours of khaki, navy blue and air force blue are presently in service and how many of these coats are in stores?

4. How many great coats for army, navy and air force have been destroyed, condemned or otherwise disposed of during the past two years; how many of these coats were actually worn out and how many of them were destroyed, condemned, sold or otherwise disposed of simply for reasons of colour?

5. On whose orders are uniforms and great coats condemned, destroyed or disposed of?

6. What inspection authority certifies that uniforms and great coats are worn out or unserviceable?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): 1. Treasury Board has approved procurement of the new uniform at a maximum cost of $25 million. As of September 30, 1969, $17,840,317 had been committed to this program. The total estimated cash expenditure for this program is now $22.4 million. During the re-equipping period, expenditures on the old style uniforms will be sharply reduced, and partially offset the cost of the new ones by some $14 million.

2. As of September 30, 1969, $79,031 has been spent against a commitment of $1,812,500. Depending on deliveries, expenditures over the next twelve months, will probably increase to between $800,000 and $900,000.

3. All serving male members of the Armed Forces, as of July 31, 1969, are equipped with the old style service greatcoat. Current depot holdings are Navy, 3,257; Army, 199,422; Air Force, 22,876. Attention is directed to the reply given to part 5 of Mr. Marshall's question 2,654, at page 11689, in Hansard dated October 22, 1969. The large army holdings are a direct reflection of former policies concerning mobilization reserves.

4. The policy outlined in the above reference has been in effect for two years. Therefore, with the exception of worn out garments deemed to be unfit for future use or long term storage, no greatcoats have been disposed of, and none in any event because of colour.

Questions

5. Worn out clothing is condemned and disposed of as complete items through CADC on the direction of the local Base or Station Commander in accordance with established Canadian Forces Headquarters directives and policies. Surplus clothing at Bases, Stations, or Depots is disposed of on direction of CFHQ only.

6. The senior Supply and Technical Officer at each Base or Station is charged with the responsibility of determining whether used clothing is serviceable and suitable for further use or non-serviceable.

DESIGNATION OF LOYAL EDMONTON REGIMENT

Question No. 369—Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West):

If the Queen's Own Rifles of Canada are to be redesignated as the 3rd Battalion PPCLI, what is the proposed designation of the Loyal Edmonton Regiment now the 3rd Battalion of the PPCLI?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): It is probable that the Loyal Edmonton Regiment (3rd Battalion PPCLI) will be redesignated as the 4th Battalion, but this question is now under study in consultation with the Colonel of the Regiment.

CUMBERLAND-COLCHESTER NORTH—HARBOUR AND RIVER PROJECTS

Question No. 382—Mr. Coates:

1. What projects have been carried out by the Harbours and Rivers Division of the Department of Public Works in the present fiscal year in Cumberland-Colchester North and what has been the cost of each project undertaken?

2. How many projects wil be undertaken in Cumberland-Colchester North before the end of the present fiscal year that have not as yet been either started or completed and what is the estimated cost of each?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1.

Location	Project	Cost
Parrsboro	Wharf repairs	$ 300.00
Spencer's Island	Approach repairs	50.00
Joggins	Barricade	75.00
Pugwash	Paving	28,518.85
Pugwash	Dredging	46,993.00
Wallace	Derricks	724.00
2.
Five Island	Wharf repairs	3000.00
Pugwash	Freight Shed repairs	800.00

*LEASING OF STANLEY ISLAND

Question No. 396—Mr. Nesbitt:

Have leasing arrangements been made with respect to Stanley Island on the St. Lawrence River, being part of the St. Regis Indian Reserve and, if so, what measures are being undertaken by the government to ensure that the situation is remedied and that such exploitation does not take place in the future?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, yes, a lease has been in effect since 1899 for a term of 99 years. The St. Regis band council has retained a firm of solicitors to act on its behalf to inquire into the validity of the leasing arrangement. For some years the department has endeavoured to discourage long-term leases but in the final analysis the decision remains with the Indian people in keeping with the policy of encouraging them to make their own decisions.

[Mr. Cadieux (Labelle).]

SALES TAX ON AIRCRAFT PURCHASES

Question No. 402—Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West):

1. Did the Minister of National Revenue or any of his officials have discussions with or consult with representatives of Canadian airlines before rescinding the imposition of a 12 percent sales tax on aircraft purchases destined for international flights and, if not, what were the reasons for such non consultation?

2. Have representations since been made outlining the serious financial hardship imposed on many airlines who are committed to purchases based on the prior regulations and suggesting an extension of some months to allow the airlines time to arrange for these additional funds, not otherwise budgeted for?

3. Why was the decision made to now impose the sales tax and why by administrative action?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): 1. The 12 percent sales tax has not been descinded on aircraft purchased for international flights. Order in Council P.C. 1966-18/1495 was the result of a series of discussions with the airlines and was designed to exempt from sales tax aircraft used both in domestic and international services based on the percentage of total mileage logged in international service. After two years of operation in this manner, one of the airlines challenged our procedure and contended that the Order in Council completely exempted aircraft even though they were used domestically as well as internationally. We are requiring payment of sales tax at time of importation as provided in the Customs Act and the Order in Council, with subsequent refund on the basis outlined above.

2. No.

3. See answer to Question 1.

PLANS FOR POST OFFICE BUILDING, VEGREVILLE

Question No. 414—Mr. Mazankowski:

Have any concrete plans been considered for the construction of a federal post office building in Vegreville and, if so, when might construction commence?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): This project is now being reviewed as to economic advisability and priority. The date of commencement of construction is dependent upon the results of this review.

NATIONAL DEFENCE BUILDING CONTRACT

Question No. 458—Mr. Simpson:

1. 2. If no tenders were called, what method was used to award the contract?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes. (a) Yes; (b) Louis Donolo Inc., Montreal, Que.; (c) $27,127,000; (d) Five; (e) Louis Donolo Inc., $27,127,000; Foundation Co. of Canada Ltd., $27,761,000; Pigott Construction Co. Ltd., $28,100,000; V. K. Mason Construction Ltd., $28,425,000; Omega Construction Co. Ltd., $28,600,000.

2. Not applicable.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

RESEARCH STUDIES, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Question No. 37—Mr. Gleave:

1. For the fiscal years 1968-69 and 1969-70, what specific research studies have been undertaken by the Economic Branch of the Department of Agriculture?

2. Who are the individuals involved in these studies and when is it anticipated that these studies will be completed?

Return tabled.

Motion agreed to.

Motions for Papers

NATIONAL DESIGN COUNCIL SCHOLARSHIPS

Motion No. 79—Mr. Barnett:

That an Order of the House do issue for a list of the 43 National Design Council scholarships and grants referred to in the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce press release of August 27, 1969.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, notice of motion No. 82 is acceptable to the government subject to the usual reservations concerning confidential documents and to the authorization of the government authorities concerned.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations and conditions expressed by the Parliamentary Secretary, is it the pleasure of the House that Notice of Motion No. 82 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MISTASSINI INDIAN TRIBE

Motion No. 82—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence since January 1, 1966 between the Government of Canada and the Government of Quebec regarding the Mistassini Indian tribe in northern Quebec.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notices of motions Nos. 6, 7, 12, 21, 33, 46, 52, 57, 65, 74, 78, 84, 91, 98, 99, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 126, 129, 148, 162, 172, 175, 203 and 204?

I ask that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

TELESAT CANADA—FINANCIAL PARTICIPATION OF COMMUNICATION COMMON CARRIERS

Motion No. 6—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence between the Department of Communications and common communication carriers regarding financial participation in Telesat Canada Corporation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I move this motion on behalf of the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Communications I wish to report the following: The correspondence requested relates to matters of a commercial character concerning negotiation between private companies and Telesat Canada, an independent corporation, and it would accordingly not be appropriate or in the public interest to publish it. I would, therefore, hope that the hon. member would consent to withdraw this motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I would rather that you put it to a vote, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish that the matter be transferred for debate?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, Mr. Speaker. I ask that it be put to a vote.

Mr. Speaker: If that is the hon. member's request, I wonder if there is a corresponding request to have it transferred to debate. All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Knowles, Winnipeg North Centre, for Mr. Orlikow) which was negatived on the following division:

TELESAT CANADA—UNDERWRITERS' PROPOSALS REGARDING ISSUE

Motion No. 7—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all proposals submitted to the Government of Canada by various underwriters regarding the handling of the Telesat Canada Corporation issue.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I move the motion on the hon. member's behalf.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Communications I wish to report the following. No proposals have been received by the government of Canada from underwriters regarding the handling of the Telesat Canada Corporation issue. I would, therefore, hope that the hon. member would consent to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I agree.

Mr. Speaker: Motion withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

INTERNATIONAL RESEARCH INSTITUTE

Motion No. 12—Mr. Nystrom:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the report by Ronald Ritchie on an international research institute for Canada.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I move this motion on behalf of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no report by Ronald Ritchie on an international research centre for Canada. Mr. Ritchie was engaged, however, by the government, as announced by the Prime Minister on November 7, 1968, to prepare a report on "the establishment of a Research Institute where long term research and thinking can be undertaken on governmental matters of all kinds". That report is not yet available, but is expected to be submitted shortly. The government will then have to consider whether it is in the public interest that it be made public. I would hope that in these circumstances the hon. member would agree to withdraw his motion at this time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I will withdraw the motion subject to the right of the hon. member to put it on the order paper later if he feels he should.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

NATO COMMUNICATIONS RESEARCH PROGRAM

Motion No. 21—Mr. Lewis:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of the memorandum of agreement among eight participating NATO countries, including Canada, regarding the second phase of the NATO communications research program established in 1967.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the document referred to in this motion is a memorandum of understanding between the governments concerned and is classified confidential. Subject to the receipt of unanimous consent of the participating governments, I have no objection to tabling this document.

Mr. Lewis: I am satisfied to allow this motion to stand until the minister has found out whether he has consent.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed the motion will stand?

Mr. Lewis: Agreed.

Motion stands.

MINAS BASIN POWER STUDY

Motion No. 33—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the feasibility study on Minas Basin power prepared in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

[Mr. Walker.]

Mr. R. J. Orange (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the report on Minas Basin power is now being completed by the Atlantic Tidal Power Programming Board.

This report was to have been completed within the next three or four weeks, but its completion is not now anticipated until the end of the calendar year. On completion, the report will be printed as rapidly as possible.

Once the report has been printed, the board is required to submit it to the governments of Canada, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. The consent of all three governments will be required to have this report made public; and presumably such consent will not be given until appropriate representatives of the three governments concerned have had an opportunity to examine the report and to assess its implications. Under the circumstances, I ask the hon. member to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Skoberg: I agree, Mr. Speaker.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

INFORMATION

Motion No. 46—Mr. Mather:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the special task force report on Information.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the House knows, the report of the task force on government information was tabled in the House by the Prime Minister on November 4. Perhaps, therefore, the hon. member will agree to withdraw this motion.

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, in agreeing to withdraw the motion I should like to expess regret that the government is not in a position to produce as speedily the reports in the other 100 motions.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

SUPPLY OF NATURAL GAS TO UNITED STATES

Motion No. 52—Mr. Harding:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of recent correspondence between the Canadian Energy Board and the United States Federal Power Commission regarding the supply of natural gas from Western Canada to the United States.

Mr. R. J. Orange (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that no correspondence has passed between the National Energy Board and the United States federal power commission regarding the supply of natural gas from western Canada to the United States. Under the circumstances, I ask that the hon. member be requested to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Harding: Agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

FORMULATION OF NEW PETROLEUM POLICY

Motion No. 57—Mr. Thomson:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the special task force report on the formulation of Canada's new petroleum policy.

Mr. R. J. Orange (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources knows of no special task force concerned with the formulation of Canada's new petroleum policy. I therefore request that the hon. member withdraw his motion.

Mr. Thomson: Agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

INDIAN AFFAIRS POLICY STATEMENT

Motion No. 65—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all notes made at all meetings or conversations between the government or any agency or department thereof and any provincial government or agency or department thereof since June 25, 1969 relating to the policy statement on Indian Affairs made in the House of Commons by the Hon. Jean Chrétien, Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on June 25, 1969.

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The hon. member is requesting copies of notes or conversations between the federal government and the provincial government. Conversations which have taken place up to now, other than that correspondence which will be tabled in the motion for the production of papers No. 63, are considered privileged information and it would not be in the interest of the governments or indeed the Indian people to table this information at this stage of negotiations. Under the circumstances, I would ask the hon. member to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I oppose that request. I simply say the government has no right whatever to engage in negotiations regarding the rights of the Indian people and keep them secret. I cannot accept the request to withdraw the motion. It is too important.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

NATIONAL HEALTH MANPOWER CONFERENCE

Motion No. 74—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all reports and papers presented to the National Health Manpower Conference in October, 1969 which was sponsored by the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare has advised the hon. member for Winnipeg North that a report containing this material will be published a little later. In the light of that assurance, the member for Winnipeg North would like me to ask that the motion be withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CABINET COMMITTEES

Motion No. 91—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of a list of all Cabinet Committees of the Government of Canada and the federal Ministers belonging to each of these committees, as mentioned by the Prime Minister at a Press Conference on October 15, 1969 at the National Press Building.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move this motion on behalf of the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it has always been the position of this House that the arrangements made by the cabinet for the discharge of the business for which it is collectively responsible are matters for the cabinet itself and are not customarily disclosed. Perhaps, therefore, the hon. member will agree to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

Motions for Papers

SENATE SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON NEWS MEDIA

Motion No. 98—Mr. Orlikow:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House the amount of estimated expenditures for the Senate Special Committee on the Media for the fiscal years 1969-70, 1970-71.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I move this motion, sir, on behalf of the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, which relates to this motion and motions numbered 99 and 148, the hon. member is requesting information which relates to proceedings in the Senate. I wish to refer to citation 212 at page 178 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which reads:

If one House desires any return relating to the business or proceedings of the other, neither courtesy nor custom allows such a return to be ordered; but an arrangement is generally made, by which the return is moved for in the other House; and after it has been presented, a message is sent to request that it may be communicated.

At page 282 of Bourinot's fourth edition, there are words to the same effect. There are also words to the same effect at pages 271 and 272 of May's 17th edition. That passage refers to the courtesy and custom in this regard. I ask the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, on behalf of the hon. member for Winnipeg North, to agree to withdrawing motions numbered 98, 99 and 148 and I will undertake to have the Government Leader of the other place present the appropriate motions in the other place so that the information will be forthcoming.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In the light of that undertaking, I am happy to agree.

Orders discharged and motions withdrawn.

CONSULTANT STUDIES, DEPARTMENT OF CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

Motion No. 104—Mr. Skoberg:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all outside consultant studies undertaken for the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs as mentioned in answer to Question No. 1,323, tabled on June 25, 1969, as reported in Hansard on page 10597.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, motion No. 104, and indeed the succeeding 19, will be recognized as motions upon which the House made a decision on the last day of the last session.

[Mr. Speaker.]

The House will recall at that time I suggested the hon. member might indicate specific reports to which he would like a response. I note that in motions 183 to 193 inclusive and 209 to 235 inclusive, the hon. member has specifically requested some of the same documents. On the basis of that I wonder if the hon. member would be agreeable to withdrawing this request in motions 104 to 123 for this great volume of material. We then would give consideration to the new requests he has made.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could allow these motions to stand while I consider them.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

Motions stand.

"TELECOMMISSION" REPORT

Motion No. 124—Mr. Peters:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the report of the Department of Communications "Telecommission" regarding the relationship between common carriers and computer companies.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Communications I wish to report the following: The Department of Communications Telecommission study regarding the relationship between common carriers and computer companies is still in progress. When completed it will be made available unless the authors or sources specifically withhold prmission.

I would, therefore, hope that the hon. member would consent to withdraw this motion.

Mr. Peters: Stand.

COMMON CARRIERS AND COMPUTER SERVICE COMPANIES

Motion No. 129—Mr. Gilbert:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the special study undertaken by the Department of Communications regarding the relationship between common carriers and computer service companies.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Communications I wish to report the following: would the hon. member please see the statement concerning Notice of Motion 124 of the hon. member for Timiskaming, dated October 23, 1969, which refers to the same subject. I would, therefore, hope that the hon. member would consent to withdraw this motion.

Mr. Gilbert: Stand the motion.

Motion stands.

MESSAGE TO GENERAL GOWON

Motion No. 162—Mr. Nystrom:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the message sent by the Prime Minister to General Gowon, as reported in Hansard on July 2, 1969, page 10751.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I move this motion on behalf of the hon. member.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, communications between heads of government are normally confidential and their contents not made public. In any case, such action cannot be taken unilaterally. In the circumstances I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary has just said action cannot be taken unilaterally. Could not the Prime Minister request the consent of General Gowon to this?

Mr. Walker: That is another question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it dropped?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No. Put it to the vote, please.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

LETTER FROM PRIME MINISTER TO CHAIRMAN OF SCIENCE COUNCIL

Motion No. 203—Mr. Broadbent:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the November 4, 1968 letter by the Prime Minister of Canada to the Chairman of the Science Council of Canada as mentioned in the Third Annual Report of the Science Council.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I move this motion for the hon. member, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the letter from the Prime Minister to the Chairman of the Science Council of Canada is related to the internal functions of the government and not in the public interest to be released. In view of the long established principle of the House that such documents are privileged perhaps the hon. member would be agreeable to having his motion withdrawn.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Perhaps he would not be.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps it should be transferred for debate.

CABINET DIRECTIVE ON SUMMER EMPLOYMENT FOR STUDENTS

Motion No. 204—Mr. Broadbent:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the Cabinet Directive on summer empolyment for students referred to by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in his Press Release of April 30, 1969.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I move this motion for the hon. member.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a cabinet directive is a cabinet document. It has always been the position of this House that cabinet documents would not be included among those documents covered by motions for the production of papers. I would hope, therefore, that the hon. member would be agreeable to withdrawing the motion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of the fact that this was referred to in a press release I do not think this caveat covers the situation. Perhaps you would put this to a vote, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

INFLATION—FORECAST PRICE INCREASES—DEFINITION OF ACCEPTABLE RESTRAINT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped we would have the privilege of having the Minister of Finance in the House today. In his absence, perhaps the Prime Minister would answer the questions of which he took notice yesterday. I asked these questions: In view of the forecast of substantial price increases ranging from 1 per cent to 25 per cent in 1970, what is the position of the government and, specifically, will the government, in cooperation with the Prices and Incomes Commission, now define what restraint consists of so that corporations and others will know what is expected of them by the government?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the question would appear to come primarily within the responsibility of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He was here a moment ago. I understand he will be prepared to deal with it.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be argumentative, but how is one supposed to get an answer relating to government policy when the ministers seem to be so difficult to find?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the reappearing Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the indicated intention of some 250 corporations to increase their prices substantially in 1970, what is the position of the government? Is the government now prepared to define what restraint consists of so that corporations and others will know what the government expects of them in complying with a policy of restraint?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I explained before in the House, the Prices and Incomes Commission is trying to negotiate with private interests or economic groups a definition of what is acceptable restraint or constraint. I am hopeful—and I am sure the Leader of the Opposition joins me in this—that the work of the commission on this project will succeed.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether the position of the government is that announced by the minister the other day, that any increase in price constitutes a violation of restraints, or does the government support the position taken by the Prices and Incomes Commission that increases up to 5 per cent in the case of wages and 2½ per cent in the case of prices would appear to be a reasonable ceiling?

Mr. Basford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have read the speech of the chairman of the commission, which was made in Regina. The figures the Leader of the Opposition quotes were mentioned in that speech as only one proposal the commission was discussing. I think it was made clear in the speech that that was a negotiating position. My position simply is I would hope that those making price and income decisions would sit down as quickly as possible with the commission to work out what would be acceptable restraint.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question in an effort to make sure there is no misunderstanding. The government, in fact, has no specific policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the speech made by the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission, has the government decided that under certain conditions it proposes to introduce legislation to provide that there will be a ceiling of 5 per cent on wage increases and 2½ per cent on price increases per annum? Has this decision been reached, and under what conditions does the government propose to proceed with such a program of restraint?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government's position has not changed since a few weeks ago when I answered that the government closes no door on any procedure to combat inflation, I mentioned the defects in the approach suggested by the leader of the New Democratic Party, but I have not excluded any alternative open to the government which we will consider and use if necessary.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the speech by the chairman of the Prices and Incomes Commission dealt solely with a ceiling on prices and wages, is the government directing the Commission to study, or is the government itself making a study, of the question of restraints upon other forms of income such as corporation profits, dividends, interest and rents, or is any study of restraints being restricted entirely to salaries, wages and prices?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the constitutional difficulties are as great whether we are dealing with wages or with rents.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): In view of the constitutional difficulties which always seem to arise when the question of prices or incomes control is brought up, can the Prime Minister indicate whether he is meeting with the provinces in order to bring about some changes in the constitution along this line?

Are the federal government and the provinces trying to reach agreement on this subject?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member might have heard that we have been discussing the constitution with the provinces for some time.

Mr. Saltsman: Can the Prime Minister indicate specifically what progress the federal government is making with the provinces along these lines?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED STATES NUCLEAR TESTS

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Can he tell this House whether the United States have violated the Treaty prohibiting nuclear tests, signed in 1963, by carrying out the Schooner Project in 1968 which caused radioactive fallout in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: May I say to the hon. member that his question, as it is phrased, is out of order.

[English]

BIAFRA—AID FOR STARVING CHILDREN

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but before asking it I should like to join in welcoming him back to the House. Can the minister say whether or not during the course of his visitations in the Middle East he communicated at any time with any representatives of Biafra or of Nigeria in order to bring about some arrangement whereby action will be taken by Canada to diminish some of the awfulness of the escalating suffering and death among children in Biafra in consequence of the shortage of food?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I found myself fairly busy in looking into the problems in the Middle East when I was in that area, but before I went there I had extensive discussions with all those concerned, the Nigerians, the Biafrans, the great powers and the representatives of Africa. I probably spoke to 25 or 30 of the leading spokesmen concerned with this problem. In my absence, of course, the Prime Minister and my officials have been carrying on these discussions. Unfortunately, while there seems to be some indication of progress toward a settlement, one cannot be very sure. There have been so many disappointments in the past. But I do think it is wise, if possible, to depend upon the immediate neighbours of Nigeria to take on the prime responsibility, as has been urged upon us by the Secretary General of the United Nations.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Would the Secretary of State for External Affairs let the House and the country know the names of the representatives of Biafra with whom he spoke at the United Nations or before the meeting of the United Nations? To whom did he speak from Biafra?

Mr. Sharp: I have forgotten their names for the time being, Mr. Speaker, but tomorrow I will be happy to give them. There were five of them and they included the leading representatives of Biafra in New York.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, shortly before the minister left for his tour of the Middle East he indicated that he was awaiting a report from General Wrinch on the possible resumption of air operations by the International Red Cross. Now that General Wrinch and the minister have returned, I wonder whether the minister has received a report from the general and what prospects there are in that direction.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I met General Wrinch this morning in my office and he continued his discussions with my officials after I had to move on to another meeting. I discussed with him the possibilities of an air drop and of other forms of help which the International Red Cross might undertake in co-operation with the local authorities on both sides of the conflict.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did General Wrinch indicate to the minister when the Red Cross will be able to resume operations and whether or not they have obtained the necessary agreement from the combatants for such a relief operation?

Mr. Sharp: That is the subject matter about which I spoke to General Wrinch, particularly today. Needless to say I was not very hopeful because we do not seem to have been able to put enough pressure upon the Biafran régime to agree to daylight flights, which is the only way I know by which sufficient aid can be brought to those starving people.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister indicate whether agreement was obtained from the Red Cross according to a plan negotiated with the Biafrans in mid-August of this year?

Mr. Sharp: The only agreement that was reached by the Red Cross was a signed agreement with Nigeria.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Which one?

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Lotbinière have a supplementary question?

Mr. Fortin: No, Mr. Speaker.

OIL

INQUIRY AS TO CONTINENTAL POLICY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I was going to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, but since he is absent I will put it to the Prime Minister. It relates to the government's policy for the petroleum industry. I see the minister has promised to set up an advisory committee to the government to be drawn from the Canadian Petroleum Association. Is the Canadian government now suggesting and advocating a continental oil policy and has the United States indicated that they too favour such a policy at this time?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The department will be answering questions tomorrow and on Friday with regard to this matter.

Mr. Woolliams: May I put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister? This is his government. I am asking whether this is the policy of his government, and has there been any discussion with the United States with regard to a continental oil policy? Surely, that is a simple question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the pledge of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to draw the oil industry into government policy-making in a forceful and visible manner, can the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs indicate whether he has any intention of ensuring that the consumers' interest is also represented?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The consumers' interest is always represented in this government.

An hon. Member: I think the word is "misrepresented".

Mr. Saltsman: We know that the government has been making statements to this effect, but we want more specific evidence of it—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Saltsman: May I rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member kindly resume his seat? The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Calgary North on a supplementary question.

Mr. Woolliams: May I put this question to the Prime Minister? Can he assure us that the discussions between Canada and the United States regarding a continental oil policy are not connected directly or indirectly with the question of water export from Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, I know of no such connection.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is there any effort on the part of the government or is it a matter of government policy to create a relationship between the export of natural gas from Canada on the one hand and the raising of the upper limit on imports of Canadian oil by the United States?

Mr. Trudeau: I cannot answer this question, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister may be able to do so when he is in the House.

Mr. Saltsman: I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the reports that the price of natural gas will increase sharply, is it the minister's intention to intervene in this area to ensure that the cost of natural gas does not increase as a result of the demand in the United States?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member asked a similar question, I believe, in the last session there has been consultation between my officials and those of Energy, Mines and Resources on this question.

Mr. Saltsman: As a supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we might return to the hon. member if there is time, but at this point we are running short of time for the question period.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—FURNISHING OF INFORMATION TO CIA BY BRIGADIER KETCHESON

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It has been reported that a Brigadier Donald Ketcheson has said that during his time of service with the International Control Commission in Viet Nam, in 1958 and 1959, he regularly furnished the American CIA with information about troop movements and that the Canadian Department of External Affairs was aware of this and looked the other way. Would the minister investigate this matter, report to the House and give an assurance that this sort of conduct will not be tolerated in the future?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As I understand it these events related to the period 1958-59, and as far as I know the Canadian government has always acted scrupulously in this respect. Certainly, I know of no repetition. As I read the report it concerned an officer who said he had done this, not with the consent of the Canadian government but behind their backs.

CYC—SUGGESTED BROADENING OF COMMITTEE'S TERMS OF REFERENCE

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister? Considering that the serious charges made by the chairman of the Executive Committee of Montreal against the Company of Young Canadians are of a judicial nature, and considering that the committee which is investigating this matter is concerned only with the legislative and administrative aspects, does the Prime Minister intend to extend terms of reference of the committee so that Mr. Saulnier can testify without interfering with the committee's proceedings?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that a similar question has been asked a few days ago. I am not sure whether it has been answered but, if an answer has not already been given, it could perhaps be given now.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not remember either whether this particular question has been answered, but the situation remains the same. Parliament has given the committee terms of reference it thought justified. We believe that it belongs to the committee to examine the organisation and operation of the Company of Young Canadians and to submit a report to the government. We believe that this parliamentary committee should not inquire into matters of subversion and other indictable offences. Of course, the administration of justice is aimed at insuring that those who might be found guilty of indictable offences are prosecuted in court. It is not the role of the parliamentary committee, as we understand it, to inquire and make sure that such prosecutions are carried on.

GRAIN

STATEMENT BY MINISTER TO WINNIPEG "FREE PRESS" ON SALES

Mr. A. C. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang), but in his absence possibly the Prime Minister would like to answer it. I want to ask if he was stating government policy when he told the Winnipeg Free Press the other day that grain sales would not help the farmers?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for South Shore.

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Prime Minister think that farmers can make a living for themselves and their families running skating rinks or trout farms on their land?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the hon. member is seeking to continue the debate we had yesterday. I suggest this cannot be done during the question period.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

STATUS OF WATERS BETWEEN ST. PIERRE-MIQUELON AND CANADA

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Did he or any of his officials hold discussions recently with officials of the French government concerning the status of the water which lies between St. Pierre and Miquelon and Canada and, if so, will fishing be permitted in this area? Will it be within the traditional three-mile limit or will the 12-mile limit apply?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, quite obviously there is a problem related to the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon because we have a 12-mile fishing limit around our coast. We would therefore, have to negotiate a median line between those islands and Newfoundland. We have been having some discussions with the French government, but these discussions are not yet concluded.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, would the minister discuss with his colleagues the possibility of resolving these problems by making an offer to the French government to buy these islands?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

NATIONAL REVENUE

DELAY IN FEDERAL SALES TAX AUDITS OF COMPANIES

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the fact that federal sales tax auditors have not made annual inspections or audits of many Canadian companies, for up to as long as four or five years, and that in many cases when they do these audits they reassess the companies for thousands of dollars in taxes, what steps is the minister taking to overcome this problem and to make sure that there will be more frequent and regular inspections?

Mr. Speaker: I would like to indicate to the minister and to the hon. member who asked the question that it should be more properly answered by way of a statement on motions or, if there is urgency to it which is not apparent to the Chair, the matter might be debated at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Hales: Ten o'clock.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

GRANT FOR BILINGUAL PROGRAMS—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Secretary of State.

Can he tell the House whether the government has consulted the provinces and has been able to reach a consensus prior to announcing the grant of $50 million for the promotion of education in the official language of Canada's minorities?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker, consultations were already under way. For instance, the ministerial committee on the constitutional conference had already met on this subject at the end of last May. The provincial ministers had then asked the federal government to clarify its attitude with regard to the royal commission's recommendations and state a policy giving figures on the financial contribution it intended to make.

This was done at the last meeting held on November 6, and the department is now conducting negotiations with almost every provincial government, as requested by them.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Would the Secretary of State tell the house why exchanges and agreements are so hard to come by, at the secondary level, with respect to university students of a province following university courses in another province? Universities have run into an impasse.

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I do not think this problem is related to the policy involved. This matter seems to come under provincial jurisdiction and I could not explain to the hon. member why they encounter such difficulties, since these have not been engendered by nor are they known to the federal government. As a matter of fact, this matter does not come under its purview.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

REQUEST THAT HUMAN RESOURCE DEVELOPMENT BE PLACED ON CONFERENCE AGENDA

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister agree—he shakes his head already, Mr. Speaker, even though I have not asked my question—to consult with the provinces with a view to having the area of human resource development placed on the agenda for the upcoming federal-provincial conference so that Bill C-179, which has been withdrawn, and the whole matter of involvement in education of human resources will be discussed with the provinces?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not know what that is supplementary to, but the question having been asked I suppose we should not lose the time and should allow the question to be answered.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, at some point we will have discussed with the provinces all aspects of the constitution, including the one mentioned by the hon. member. The agenda which has been agreed to at this stage between the provinces and the federal government does not include this particular subject for the December conference, but of course there will be subsequent conferences.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, Your Honour wondered what the supplementary was about. Frequently when we raise questions relating to education—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I did not wonder what it was about. In any event, it might be simpler if the hon. member would recognize that I have allowed the question. Now I have to give my daily admonition that we will shortly be running out of time for the question period and I have to count on the co-operation of hon. members.

BROADCASTING, FILMS AND ASSISTANCE TO THE ARTS

CYC—SUGGESTED BROADENING OF COMMITTEE'S TERMS OF REFERENCE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question resulting from the answer he gave to an hon. member of the Creditiste Party in connection with the examination of the activities of the Company of Young Canadians. As I understood him, he said that it was not proper for a committee of this House to inquire into certain types of activities of the CYC and I should like to ask him why this should be so and if he feels that it is proper for him, as chief commoner in this House apart from yourself, Mr. Speaker, to give directions to any committee as to what it should or should not examine.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not give any directions, Mr. Speaker. I said quite the contrary, that the terms of reference of the committee had been given by this House and that we do not propose to change them at this time.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sainte-Marie will excuse me—

[English]

—but the hon. member for Skeena is rising on a point of order. Order, please. We now have two points of order. I believe the hon. member for Sainte-Marie has priority since he rose first.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, here is my point of order. In his reply to a question put to him by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), the Prime Minister stated that he had given no instructions to the Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts and, if I am not mistaken, when he replied to the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), the Prime Minister said that it was not within the committee's terms of reference to scrutinize criminal or legal files in order to study matters deferred to it. I believe those were the very words used by the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Ah, ah!

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I rose on a point of order and it is my right to express my opinion. By giving instructions in advance in this House to a committee which is in session, the Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, could we have more decorum from those rude and cowardly members who are unable to observe order in the House?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would invite the hon. member to indicate his point of order to us as soon as possible.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I refer to citation 288, on page 237 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Procedure, and since I have the English version, I will quote in that language:

[English]

Committees are regarded as portions of the House and are governed for the most part in their proceedings by the same rules which prevail in the House. Every question is determined in a committee in the same manner as in the House to which it belongs.

This means that every matter is decided by the committee and not by the House or by the Prime Minister. I think that the Prime Minister, by expressing his opinion in the House on the way the committee should conduct its business, is breaching the privileges of the committees of this House.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member from the Créditiste party asked me if it would not be expedient to change the terms of reference of that parliamentary committee, in order to ask it to study another matter. Your Honour nearly decided that this question had already been answered and that it was not necessary to give it an answer today. I should have relied on your instinct. I tried to explain to the hon. member the terms of reference which we had given the committee. I did not comment any further to say that we were to tell it to do something. I merely indicated that those terms of reference existed, that we did not see any reason to change them for the time being, and that we were hoping that they would be construed in the spirit in which we had given them.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: On that point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member raised the point of order in the first instance. He made his contribution, and we have heard from a number of members on the same point, so I doubt very much if anything will be gained by pursuing the matter. It seems to me that every one is agreed on the principle enunciated originally by the hon. member for Peace River, by the hon. member for Sainte-Marie, by the Prime Minister and by the hon. member for Lotbinière, that these questions have to be decided by the committee and not by the House. This being so I think we should return to the question period, especially in view of the fact there are only six minutes left.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I must rise on a question of privilege. The privileges of this House and the members of this House, and in particular members of Standing Committees, is largely founded on the respect which members pay to the Standing Orders, which establish the independence of committees. On that question of privilege, I know what the Prime Minister said and what the terms of reference are. The terms are wide enough to inquire into the operation of the Company of Young Canadians, Mr. Speaker. It is a breach of privilege for the Prime Minister or anybody in this House to attempt to influence what anybody else should do.

Mr. Speaker: I might say that is not my interpretation of what was said by hon. members. I must suggest that basically we are still all agreed on the point at issue. I would hope that we might return to the question period.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, may I first be permitted to express my thanks to all members for their greeting, including the Prime Minister who seems to be glad to see me back and to let bygones be bygones. My original question was not for him but since he has shown such spirit I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. Is the federal government spending or planning to spend several million dollars on a motion picture starring Louise Marleau?

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid that is irrelevant.

STATUTES OF CANADA

COMPLETION OF WORK OF REVISION

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. When will the commission which was appointed several years ago to revise the statutes complete their work, and when is it expected that copies of the revised statutes will be available?

Mr. Stanfield: They are long since forgotten.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a more precise date for the hon. member than I can give him now and I hope to have this for him in the not too distant future.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—RAIDS ON FOREIGN SHIPS —EFFECT ON TRADE

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Since his return to Ottawa, has the minister looked into the complaints made by some residents of St. John's, Newfoundland, about the searches made by the RCMP aboard foreign ships which load supplies in the harbour of that city, searches which endanger trade at St. John's?

[English]

SPORTS

AID TO HIGH SCHOOL HOCKEY

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the statement made in Winnipeg yesterday by Mr. Charles Hay, President of Hockey Canada, to the effect that a program to improve the quality of hockey in Canada would be commenced immediately, with emphasis on high school hockey, can the minister state whether consideration is being given to additional funds for Hockey Canada for this purpose?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON AREA DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVE PROGRAMS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the growing rate of unemployment, especially in the slow growth areas, and the minister's responsibility in relation thereto, would the minister make a statement on motions regarding the area development incentive programs presently under way or planned so that the House may involve itself in this very important subject?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member probably knows that several programs are aimed at reducing unemployment and creating jobs.

For his information, since January 1969, there have been four times as many projects approved by my department as compared with 1968. There are four times as many new jobs, nearly 18,000 a year. I think—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the question asked by the hon. member was whether a statement could be made on motions. I do not think the statement should be made at this time.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, may I repeat my question to the minister and ask whether he will make a statement on motions on this important subject?

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order which arises from the fact the minister answered the original question. I therefore do not see why the hon. member should be denied the opportunity of asking a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member will kindly consult the rules and precedents he will realize that, fortunately or unfortunately, supplementary questions are at the discretion of the Chair. I have indicated before that when we are running short of time we really ought to reduce the number of supplementary questions and go on with other matters.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

DELAY IN PUBLICATION OF MENTAL HEALTH STATISTICS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister received any complaints regarding the long delay in the publication of Mental Health Statistics, volumes 1 and 2, which were to have been used as future guidelines but which are now rapidly becoming ancient history? Can the minister give us any idea as to when these publications will appear?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge I have not received any complaints.

Mr. Rynard: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister look into the matter and see when these volumes will appear. That information is three years old now.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—OFFER OF ASSISTANCE IN RESOLVING ARAB-ISRAELI CONFLICT

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In his discussions with Mrs. Meir and Mr. Nasser, did he make any direct offer of the good offices of Canada in solving the great dispute existing between the countries these persons head?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did not go with any proposals for peace. I think the fact that we were interested, and that we took the time to go, may make it clear to the countries concerned that we are taking an objective view and, therefore, that we stand ready, if there is any service that we can perform, to perform it.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

REQUEST FOR TERMS OF REFERENCE FOR COMMITTEE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, some days ago I asked the government House Leader when we might expect terms of reference with respect to the Public Accounts Committee in order that that committee might begin its work. He indicated that he would take the matter under consideration. Could he now indicate to the House when these terms of reference will be introduced?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, when the original question was asked I indicated that I would take the matter up with the House Leaders, and I did.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister assure us that these terms of reference will be brought in promptly, so that this very important committee can begin its important work?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, that will be done as soon as I receive a response from the House Leaders, among whom is included the hon. gentleman's colleague, his party's House Leader.

Mr. Baldwin: That is quite all right. You can go ahead.

TRANSPORT

OIL—OFFER TO SELL INFORMATION ON "MANHATTAN" TRIP

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the minister responsible for northern development. Does the government look with favour on the offer of Humble Oil to sell to Panarctic Oils Limited information and analyses gathered on the recent Arctic trip of the tanker Manhattan?

[Mr. McCleave.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as asked is hardly in order. The hon. member is inviting the minister to give an expression of opinion, so the question is not in order.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO TRANSCAN CUSTOM HOMES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of Transcan Custom Homes of Kenora, Ontario, having developed a new concept in prefabricated homes, as a result of which homes will be available for little as $8,000, and in view of the fact that production and distribution of these homes hinges on an industrial incentive grant from the federal government, will the minister assure the House that this application from Transcan will receive extremely sympathetic consideration and, if possible, approval, so that lower income families of Canada may experience some relief from their housing difficulties?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, all applications receive sympathetic consideration from the department.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

ESTABLISHMENT OF HOUSE COMMITTEE—AGENDA OF FORTHCOMING CONFERENCE

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): I would like to address a question to the Prime Minister.

Could he state whether the creation of a committee on constitutional affairs will be discussed at the federal-provincial conference in December and when he will produce the agenda of the conference?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this matter will not be discussed at the conference itself because it obviously only concerns the federal parliament. However, as I have mentioned in this House, we hope that the discussions between the leaders of the various parties will allow us to decide the appropriate time for instituting such a committee.

I only mean to say that perhaps, as usual, after the federal-provincial conference parliament may wish to devote one or two days to discussing such matters, and if it is the wish of the house it will be done after the December conference, as was the procedure in the past.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question period expired some minutes ago. If there is unanimous consent of the House, perhaps the hon. member for Hamilton West might be allowed to ask a supplementary question.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO TRANSCAN CUSTOM HOMES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I wish to direct another question to the minister who answered the first part of my question. We all know that his department treats all applications with great sympathy, but I wish to know whether his department will approve the application being made by Transcan Custom Homes in order that the housing shortage experienced by low income families may be relieved?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I know most of the problems. The application will be processed as soon as possible.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member kindly resume his seat. No doubt he will have noticed that quite a few other hon. members are still anxious to ask questions. Generosity has been shown by hon. members in allowing the question period to go well beyond its allotted time. I think we should go on with the business of the House at this time.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I tried today to have the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion say if he would be prepared to make a statement on motions. This question, Mr. Speaker—and that is why I am now raising my point of order—was prompted by the fact the minister released a statement to the press at three o'clock this afternoon. I think the House is entitled to have the information first, so that appropriate comment may be made here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the apparent interest in the question period, could I ask for unanimous consent to extend the period?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I doubt whether there would be unanimous consent. There might be opposition from the Chair. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

WAYS AND MEANS

EXCISE TAX ACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of a ways and means motion to amend the Excise Tax Act.

Hon. Herb Gray (for the Minister of Finance) moved:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Excise Tax Act to provide

(1) that a tax of five per cent be imposed on each amount paid or payable in Canada for transportation of a person by air where such transportation

(a) begins at a point in Canada and ends at a point in the taxation area,

(b) begins at a point in the taxation area outside Canada and ends at a point in Canada, or

(c) begins at a point in the taxation area outside Canada and ends at a point in the taxation area outside Canada,

(2) that a tax of five dollars, or such lesser amount not less than two dollars, as the Governor in Council may determine, be imposed on each amount paid or payable in Canada for transportation of a person by air where such transportation begins at a point in the taxation area and ends at a point outside the taxation area,

(3) that the expression "taxation area" shall mean Canada, the United States (except Hawaii) and the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, and

(4) that the legislation based on this resolution shall come into force on a day to be fixed by proclamation.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I was rising to speak just as Your Honour put the motion. I was hoping to hear the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Gray) make a statement of explanation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister would be out of order if he attempted to do so. There is no provision for that to be done under Standing Order 60(10).

Privileges and Elections

EXCISE TAX ACT

Hon. Herb Gray (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-155, to amend the Excise Tax Act be read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

REFERENCE OF CANADA ELECTIONS ACT AND REPORT OF REPRESENTATION COMMISSIONER TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections be empowered to study the following matters and to report to the House such proposals as the Committee may deem advisable:

1. The Canada Elections Act, exclusive of Sections 62 and 63;

2. The Report of the Representation Commissioner on Methods of Registration of Electors and Absentee Voting, 1968, made pursuant to Section 9 of the Representation Commissioner Act;

And that the evidence adduced by the Committee in its study of the aforementioned items during the First Session of the Twenty-Eighth Parliament be referred to the Committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to go into the substance of the motion since it is moved really for a procedural purpose, that of empowering the committee to study and consider all those aspects of the Canada Elections Act except the two sections which are related to the question of election expenses. As the House will recall, a previous motion in the last session empowered the committee to consider questions under the Canada Elections Act. On that basis the committee carried out hearings. The purpose of this motion really is to continue that mandate.

Some of the questions of greater significance will involve the voting age and absentee voting. At the same time, the committee will have the opportunity of hearing the recommendations of the Chief Electoral Officer on a number of changes in detail which he is proposing to the Elections Act. To review the timetable, it is the intention to refer the question of election expenses to a special committee of the House to be established when this study is completed. This particular study is important, and comes first, principally because of the nature of the changes contemplated and the time which will be needed by the Chief Electoral Officer to prepare the electoral system for an election in 1972 or 1973. Extensive changes in the electorate and in election procedures may be required, involving the electoral officer and creating a time problem; changes in the regulations would be called for, and it would be necessary to ensure that all returning officers had been advised of the new procedure. It is, therefore, important in our minds that, if possible, the committee should arrive at a determination of its deliberations before Christmas, or, at any rate, as soon as possible, in order that the amending bill founded on the committee's study can receive legislative sanction by the end of this session.

I might refer to the position of the Representation Commissioner which, under the terms of the legislation establishing his office, should be considered during the current session, and, indeed, to the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act in addition to a number of other electoral matters which are of interest. It would be the intention of the government after the first two studies, the current one and the study of election expenses, have been completed, to undertake an examination of these further questions to determine whether changes in legislation are necessary.

I shall conclude by saying that it is hoped the committee can proceed with all deliberate speed in its work and that in due course, later this session, we shall be able to look at a draft bill founded on its recommendations.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): This is an important matter, dealing, as it does, with electoral machinery—a vital issue in any functioning democracy. Certainly, this motion cannot be considered as in any way premature. There was a fairly well established tradition in this House that after general elections the Elections Act would be sent to the committee for review. Often this procedure allowed for the remedy of errors, omissions or inadequacies which had become apparent during the exercise of the franchise by the voters of Canada.

Not since the election of 1962 has there been a complete overhaul of the Act. The elections of 1962, 1963, 1965 and 1968 were conducted on essentially the unrevised Act of 1961. Those who have been in this chamber for some time will recall how often I and other hon. members have urged that the committee be set to work. I noted from the comments of the minister that there now seems to be a great hurry; we must function, deliberate and recommend before Christmas. But there was no hurry in the past. I had the honour of chairing the committee which, in a sense, gave birth to the present act and I have some idea of the immensity of the work involved and the number of sittings required for a careful study to be made of this important matter.

Though I welcome the motion before us as a green light for action toward an updating of our electoral machinery, I cannot say "aye, aye" and figuratively salute the motion as it goes through. Things have happened in recent weeks and months which must be considered very carefully as the House moves toward action by one of its committees in connection with this serious matter. For this motion, and the circumstances preceding it, reveal the stark inadequacy of the committee system and the extent to which the denigration of standing committees has been fostered and furthered by the government. More than once hon. members have risen to protest about the contemptuous disregard which the government has accorded to the considered views of the committees of this House.

Hon. members may recall the lack of respect accorded the External Affairs and National Defence Committee's recommendation on this country's defence role in NATO and Europe generally. Consider the affront which the executive handed the committee on Transport and Communications! That group made a serious on-the-spot study of transportation problems in the Atlantic region. They heard many well-informed and concerned groups and citizens. Some of them were from the Province of Prince Edward Island and therefore they were particularly well-informed, possibly because they faced particularly acute problems. Among the major transportation projects studied was the Northumberland causeway, but the committee did not even have time to return to Ottawa to prepare its report before the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced the repudiation of the government's commitment to build that much needed and much promised crossing. To ignore is bad enough. In this instance, the government has pre-empted the committee's area of study and possible recommendations.

In the weeks just prior to the opening of this session, and while the committee was studying the Elections Act under reference from the first session, the Prime Minister was quoted as declaring that the government was sympathetic to the idea of lowering the voting age in federal elections.

The Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Andras) was reported as making a similar intimation. Later on the Liberal-Labour member from Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), who apparently attends the Liberal caucus rather than the Liberal-Labour one, went a little further and gave an interesting blessing to the Prime Minister and the minister, of which latter hon. gentleman's utterance he said: "It's a good thing he made that announcement. It has already been decided."

In the Speech from the Throne, among all the forecasts of white papers, studies and reports, appeared this item, indicating that on one matter at least, the government had made up its mind:

> The government believes that the time has come to extend the franchise in federal elections and it will therefore recommend to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections of the House of Commons that the voting age be lowered to eighteen.

Hon. members will note the phrase "the government will recommend". Now, when the present Act was passed, following the Speech from the Throne of 1959, the government of that day adopted a less domineering attitude. I quote from the Speech of 1959:

> It will be proposed that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections review the Elections Act in preparation for subsequent legislation.

The committee was not told, then, that the government would recommend what it ought to do. Mr. Speaker, if there is to be any value attached to the committee system we must be clear about its functions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macquarrie: A committee is an emanation of this House and not a creature of the executive. It is for a committee, within its terms of reference, to recommend, and it is up to the House to adopt or reject committee reports and recommendations. Unless this part of the exercise is made meaningful we talk in vain about revitalizing the committee system of this parliament. Here, we have a case in which the government has clearly reached down into the area of the committee's reference and has declared its policy before the committee goes to work. In these circumstances, how realistic can the committee be as it faces its deliberations on the question of the voting age and the extension of the franchise? What importance could be attached to its studies following, as they would, a declaration of government policy in that very field?

I am confident I could predict with accuracy that the committee and the House are in favour of the franchise at the age of 18, and that the committee would probably recommend that candidates, too, should be eligible at the age of 18. Certainly, some of us would, but what if the committee should recommend 17 years of age, or 19, or 21? What if the House adopts a report containing such a recommendation, one, in other words, that would be contrary to that placed by the government in the throne speech? Would this constitute non-confidence in the government? Perhaps this is an academic question, but I say it is a fundamental one. The relationship of the executive to the legislative branch always is fundamental in any system of representative and responsible government.

We hear today much discussion about this country moving closer and closer to the presidential system. Papers are being written on the subject by some eminent scholars. There is a good deal of discussion of the question in the media, and there are developments worth reflecting upon in this very important field.

The presidential system as practised in our great neighbouring democracy has much to commend it; but the evolution that we see in this country lacks one essential ingredient, namely the recognition that the legislative arm—in the United States they call it Congress; here, we call it Parliament—must be strong, too. In this country we see a growing strength in the executive and a continuing decline in the strength of the legislative arm, and this is the danger. This is why this particular motion today, focusing as it does on this dangerous development, is worthy of the consideration and reflection of all members of this House.

This tendency is all the more serious in a country like Canada where the executive, unlike that in the United States, is not directly elected, and the legislature or a part of it is the one body that is representative of the sovereign people. So that this diminution is a matter that we ignore at our peril.

The kind of presidential systems seen in certain countries of Latin America and on other continents is not one to be cherished by any lover of democracy or any champion of popular will. Developments in this country are, I fear, far more akin to these than to any emulation of the presidential-congressional system of the United States under which freedom has survived for many generations.

If there is one aspect of the business of Parliament that should be free from partisan bitterness, it is the examination of the organs and institutions of electoral choice. We should approach the machinery of elections in the very best possible atmosphere, and this important committee, above all others, should not start its deliberations under any shadow of inhibition or executive diktat.

In session after session, members from all parts of the House have advanced private member's bills on lowering the voting age. How much more appropriate and decent it would have been to adopt one of these bills. Instead, they were with painful consistency and dogged regularity talked out by government-supporting members.

In the last session a group of these bills were referred to the committee as part of its terms of reference. In this session, in light of these terms of reference, apparently even this courtesy has been denied. These bills rest at this moment, lonely and unattended, on the Order Paper as the committee is projected into its study of the subject matter with which they deal.

The motion before us does not reflect any nice regard for the place and responsibility of the committee and of the House. It does not even show consistency for the actualities of the situation. In the face of a declared statement of government policy, again I ask how meaningful can the committee's study of the voting age really be? One might have thought that the government would find some way to deal with this situation a little more honourably. It might have included this directive in these terms of reference. Or it might have excluded section 14 (a), which deals with the voting age, as it excluded sections 62 and 63. The government might have told the committee not to bother with this section since a decision had already been made from on high, that the committee could fiddle around with other items if they wished. But the government did not do that.

One question above all concerns me, and it is this. I wonder why, after years of lassitude on the matter, there should now be such a rush to support extension of the voting age to 18. Ministers were falling over themselves during the summer to disclose what was going to happen. Private members were indicating that they knew even more than the ministers; they knew this decision had already been made in that inner Sanhedrin of power, the Liberal caucus.

Session after session and year after year members on both sides of the House have made this suggestion and introduced bills to give effect to it. But no support was forthcoming from the government. Is there some reason why that which was so casually disregarded the summer before became a hot issue this last summer? I have searched and researched, studied and inquired, but the only answer I got was from my study of the Canadian Institute of Public Opinion poll. Last Saturday's Montreal Star published a poll that had been conducted recently. The heading is "Disenchantment with Trudeau" and this question was asked: "Would you say that your opinion of the Prime Minister has gone up or gone down in the last six months?" Canadians seem to indicate that there is a downward movement, and the greatest decline is shown among the younger group.

Does it mean that because there is disillusionment among the youth with their one time hero, their "swinger of yesteryear", and with the Company of Young Canadians likely to go into the limbo of disregard and discard, compensation is offered in the form of this sudden interest in the extension of the vote to the 18 year olds? I cannot be sure. I do not attend the Liberal caucus and I do not know the inside story, but I think this question would bear reflecting upon.

Some of us have been very concerned with what has been happening to the committee structure of this Parliament, about which much talk was heard some months ago. We were told that this restructuring was going to make the House more efficient, more democratic, more relevant, more meaningful. But how much reality lies behind all these proclamations? The bugles have sounded, but how much advance has taken place? I fear very little.

We apparently have a government that believes that matter is inconsequential, provided the message is widely disseminated. Dissemination of messages is not sufficiently proficient at the moment they feel, though we hear it is going to become more highly organized at some time in the future. The illusion of activity is more valuable and easier of attainment than the reality of action. So, in this Parliament today we dwell on a mound of white papers buffeted by a hurricane of press releases.

Again, I say that this is one area from which the hands of the executive should be removed as much as possible. If there is one officer in the service of Canada who should be removed from the intrusion of the government, it is the Chief Electoral Officer, who is the servant of Parliament, not of the government. He is the man most involved in what will take place in this committee, at least as far as this type of reference is concerned. He is the man whose work is most vitally affected by the committee's deliberations.

There are many things that one might say about the performance of the committee last year, and I do not intend to involve myself in this except to make one point. I was very much concerned that the committee traversed the country at great expense to see the electoral officers of the provinces. I am not an economist, but it would strike me a more rational procedure to invite the electoral officers to Ottawa. When members of the New Democratic Party and my party attempted to halt the pilgrimage, we almost won out, but lost by a nose. Surely, the electoral officers would have come. I do not take the view however that the committee must necessarily be Ottawa-bound, but it should not leave Ottawa and traverse the country at great expense to the Canadian taxpayer unless these deliberations are open to representations from the Canadian public. We want no sashaying around the country for closed sessions with one or two officials.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macquarrie: The electors, and not just those who operate the electoral machinery, should be heard. They are often the ones who have personal knowledge of the inadequacies because often they have been disfranchised as a result of flaws in the Act or may know of others who have been similarly denied. Possibly the public might be able to tell the bureaucrat something he did not already know.

We have, basically, a splendid election Act. Indeed, in many ways it is an exemplary one. We are fortunate, too, in the quality and competence of the men who have administered it. Jules Castonguay, Nelson Castonguay and J. M. Hamel have a deservedly high repute. I think anyone involved in any way would attest to the impartiality and efficiency with which the present Chief Electoral Officer and his predecessor discharged their important duties. Heaven knows, they are difficult duties.

As the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) mentioned, there are places where improvements can be made. We won't go into them here of course, but there is surely ground for improvement in the efforts we make to extend ever wider the opportunities for Canadians to cast their ballots.

There was a very painful experience in 1965, during that hasty and unnecessary election, when thousands of students were disfranchised. Canadians abroad, not just public servants, but many Canadians in this mobile age are alike quite often voteless. The separation of the military from the civilian is an unfortunate situation. The problem of the Canadian abroad, civil servant, external affairs officer, private citizen and military servant, could all be covered by a system of absentee voting. I am very pleased there is special reference to this matter in our term of reference.

We should move forward to a scrutiny of our elections Act. I cannot too strongly urge the House to look carefully at, and think seriously about, what governmental arrogance is doing to committees, the creatures of this House and, indeed, to this House itself. I think the work of this committee, and the place and function of committees generally, are being vitiated and circumscribed by a government led by a man who told the House, when only a part of the cabinet instead of its head, "We are your masters". This is where the problem arises. It is just another illustration of the difficulties through which the representative institution is passing in this particular age.

Since this motion calls for a House decision, I ask hon. members to reflect, consider and weigh the implications of what can happen when Parliament, the essential instrument and institution of representative government, is down-graded and its committees diminished in their effectiveness and restricted in their usefulness. What has been done and predeclared by the government just to this particular committee?

What happens to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections may be visited upon another committee tomorrow. A vital, properly functioning committee system could strengthen Parliament and make it a more relevant, meaningful institution. Further weakening of the system will weaken Parliament. More tokenism will mean less freedom. At a time when this historic institution is assailed sufficiently from without, let none of us be a party to undermining it from within.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it cannot be stated too often that a piece of legislation such as the Canada Elections Act is not the property of the government or any one party, but belongs to Parliament and the people as a whole. I, therefore, welcome the very strong statement that has just been made by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) in support of the proposition that this committee should continue the traditions of the past and approach its problem free of partisan conflict.

I would like to suggest, Mr. Speaker, as one step that might be taken to symbolize the acceptance of that proposition that, like the public accounts committee, this is a committee of which it might be appropriate to name an opposition member as the chairman. I have looked over the list and there are a number who could qualify among those of the opposition parties. I hope it will not be the kiss of death for him if I suggest that the preceding speaker, the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), who has had experience in the past with such a committee, would make an excellent chairman of this committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Why not a non-partisan person?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I heard a remark suggesting that it should be a non-partisan person. I think the hon. member for Hillsborough has demonstrated that when there is at stake a matter of party principle he can fight like any of us, but when it is a matter above party he demonstrates that he can fill that role very ably.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I should also like to support the contention made by the member for Hillsborough that the rights of committees deserve all the respect that we can muster. This should apply in a particular way with respect to this committee on the Canada Elections Act.

It so happens that my colleagues and I support the proposition that the voting age should be lowered to 18. My former colleague, the present premier of Manitoba, introduced a bill to that effect several times. My colleague the member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has a bill to that effect on the order paper on the present time. I can think of other former colleagues who have done likewise. We have taken this position for a long time. It was my leader who brought in the voting age of 18 in provincial elections in the province of Saskatchewan. We are in support of it.

But I quite agree with the position taken by the previous speaker that it is hardly in keeping with the important role of committees for the government to announce it is recommending any course of this sort. It is hardly appropriate for the government to tell the country, as has been done, that the decision has already been made. I am glad to know the government has a position. I think it would have been more appropriate for that position either to have been brought out in a government bill amending the Canada Elections Act or to have been put forward by those who speak for the government on the committee.

It is also a fact that we very strongly support the idea of legislation to permit absentee voting. Again, I wish to thank the President of the Privy Council for the favourable response he made to a question of mine during the late show a week or so ago when I raised this matter particularly on behalf of disabled persons. I think that is a better way to do it. The matter has been raised in Parliament, suggestions have been made about it and the minister has said he favours the idea. But it has been left to the committee to decide whether or not there will be such a move. I hope there will be, and that it will provide not only for disabled persons on whose behalf I spoke some nights ago but also on behalf of other people who because of absenteeism in other parts of Canada or outside Canada are unable at the present time to cast their votes in federal elections.

As I say, on these two matters which apparently will come before the committee we feel very strongly. We support the proposed motion in both cases but we think it is terribly important that the operations of the committee not be interfered with by means of directives from on high. As the hon. member has said, how Parliament operates in respect of its freedom from control by the executive is very important. We feel there are a number of instances in which this has not been recognized by the present government.

The third thing I wish to say has to do with the timing of this whole matter. I do not blame my friend from Hillsborough for having something to say about how slow the government has been acting up until this point. This is in contrast with its desire now suddenly to move fast. This happens so often. The government drags its feet and then a point comes when it wants something done and we are expected to speed up. In this particular case it is seven, eight or nine months since the President of the Privy Council made a statement to the House on the whole question of amending the Canada Elections Act.

The President of the Privy Council set out a time-table and pointed out that unless we move fast we will find ourselves up against the next election without being ready for it in terms of these legislative changes. Yet, although that plea was made many months ago, precious little has been done up until this point. I think it is in order to criticize the government for this delay. I do not think, however, this gives us the right to add to the delay. I believe we should do all we can to have this motion approved, to have it referred to the committee, and to assist the committee in getting this job done. Indeed, it must report back to parliament as soon as possible so that we can get on with one other matter in particular, to which I shall refer in a moment.

I realize that when one sets out to amend the Canada Elections Act one becomes involved in much detail. If one wants to spend time on the details, then time ad infinitum can be expended. I think it can also be said that in the main the routine technical improvements which need to be made have been drafted by previous committees and by the Chief Electoral Officer. I believe that with some sense of urgency this can be handled rather quickly. So far, there would seem to be only the two issues of policy facing us now, namely the voting age and the absentee ballot. There should be plenty of time to dispose of these issues and cope with them in a satisfactory way. For example, with regard to absentee voting there is the question of whether it is to be done by an absentee ballot, a vote by proxy, or what have you.

I believe that if the members of the committee are seized of the importance of getting this job done with reasonable expedition, and if they have the excellent guidance of the chairman I have nominated, there is no reason this job could not be done before the House rises for the Christmas recess. I urge as strongly as I can that a timetable of this kind be adopted. I do so because I think this question of what we do about election expenses is more important than any of the things we have talked about thus far today with regard to the elections Act. It is important how old people are when they vote. The details of how they mark their ballots and who places the ballot in the box are also important. All these things are important. But one of the dangers which faces democracy particularly in this age of modern methods of advertising and the huge sums of money spent on advertising is that men's minds can be bought. In a very real and subtle way, elections can be bought and unelss we do something about election expenses real damage can be done to democracy as we know it in this country.

It is now several years since the the government of Mr. Pearson set up a committee on election expenses which made a very important and voluminous report. This report went into this whole question, dealt with the issues at stake and made some clear and precise recommendations. Year after year, Mr. Pearson promised us that once this report had been made it would be referred and that something would be done. Time went by and nothing was done. When the President of the Privy Council raised this issue during the last session, I suggested that he divide it into the two questions of general routine matters on the one hand and election expenses on the other. He graciously accepted that suggestion and has confirmed today that the proposal is that the terms of reference now before us are such that all the other matters would be dealt with by this committee and that a special committee would be set up to deal with the question of election expenses. I still support that proposal. But, unless we get the first job done, unless we get the routine things out of the way, Parliament will not get at the other job and there is a real danger it might not be completed in time for the next election.

This is the reason I urge that the committee deal with these present problems with expedition and that it get these matters out of the way so that it can get at this question of election expenses. I address this challenge, if you like, not just to the members of the committee but to the government itself. I listened very carefully to the words of the President of the Privy Council. I was not quite sure what he meant. If he wishes to interrupt and correct me he is free to do so. I see he is wide awake now. He talked about legislation by the end of the session. I take it he meant by next June. I had the impression he was referring only to legislation that would be based on this present motion. I think the government should state whether its goal is to have legislation in respect of the elections Act generally and legislation with regard to election expenses both passed through parliament by the end of this session, let us say by the summer of 1970.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

If we are to go into the next election, whether in 1972 or 1973, with a new approach to the question of election expenses, we must know about this not just the day before dissolution but months, perhaps a year or two, in advance. This involves the whole question of how much people are to be permitted to contribute to various parties, the whole question of disclosure, income tax deductibility, the whole question of how much out of public funds should be spent in terms of broadcasting, printing and mailing and so on, so that there may be equality among the parties.

If we are going to go in for that kind of a régime—and I think we have to if we are going to keep democracy democratic—then it is no use coming out with that kind of legislation just a month or two before the dissolution of the present parliament. The goal for a complete package of both routine matters and legislation on elections expenses should be no later than next summer. Therefore, I call upon the committee to get these routine jobs done as expeditiously as they can. I call upon the government to bring in the other motion to deal with election expenses not later than on our return after the Christmas recess, and that it set a goal for that as well, so that the total job can be done.

As people who are involved in elections, we are all very conscious of all the various details. We are particularly conscious of the people who lose their vote on election day because the lists were not made up properly, because they were ill, away, or for a dozen other reasons. Our machinery should be amended to take care of all these grievances. But over and above all of that is the big question of controlling elections expenses in such a way that elections cannot be bought. Our elections should be run in such a manner that they really reflect the democratic views of a democratic society.

Therefore, we are happy to support this motion to give the committee this important job, but we call for the other important job to be done also with the greatest possible expedition.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I fully agree with the remarks of the previous speaker. Naturally, we cannot but approve the government's decision to review the Canada Election Act. We all know that there are inadequacies in that act, so serious that they affect the very principle of democracy.

I pointed out in the last session, that the provisions on the military vote were more or less sound especially as the results are made known only a week after election day. To my mind, this leads to fairly serious consequences at times, since some riding change allegiance precisely because of that. Surely, that is something that must be taken care of.

There are, obviously, a whole series of solutions which the committee will study. We hope that the recommendations which are made will fill in the gaps and improve the Canada Election Act.

With regard to lowering the voting age to 18 years, we are not opposed to it in principle; still, every aspect of this new ruling should be studied.

Some way should also be found to enable every Canadian to cast his vote at election time. Perhaps the possibility of making voting compulsory, in some way or other, could be considered.

The most important aspect of all this, however, is the one on which the previous speaker dwelt, namely, the two provisions that are excluded, according to the resolution now under study.

Even if the Canada Election Act were to be a masterpiece of perfection in all its other sections, the fact remains that we will destroy their value if we do not improve the wording of sections 62 and 63, because we know full well that through election funds we can unfortunately act against democracy. It is unfair that the election of representatives of the people should depend exclusively on publicity—and to speak of publicity is to speak of expenditures—not only for the candidate who can suffer from a lack of publicity, because of a shortage of funds, but especially for the people whose judgment can be misled at election time by slanted publicity.

There is no need to give too many examples on this subject. We all know that it is very easy to get round section 62 and 63. One only has to examine the report on election expenses which has to be submitted by all candidates, to realize that this is a monumental farce. Several thousands of dollars are sometimes spent in some ridings, while only a few are declared.

If, as I said before, harm is being done to democracy, it is certainly when elections are won with election funds and misleading publicity.

This is easy to explain since with advertising we buy products for which we have absolutely no need. It happened again in 1968. Through advertising, a product was forced upon us. This is psychological: under the pressure of advertising, people finally give in.

And we end up with the following results: too often, the leaders are not necessarily those the people would like to have.

Therefore, the process of democracy is distorted by the action of election funds and election expenses. We should delay no longer in finding solutions to this problem, otherwise we will keep on making a laughing-stock of ourselves. As far as I am concerned, I have figured out certain very obvious expenses and if I compare them with those which have been declared, I cannot help laughing. Should we keep on showing the people that this is a mere sham? Let us be sensible, let us think about it carefully and take it upon ourselves to change such situations which I would term as odious.

Personally I would not want to have to admit that I have been elected thanks to an election fund. In fact, I can honestly say in this House that the amount of $1,344.50 which I have declared in my report on election expenses, is quite accurate. I have not spent an extra cent in the Champlain riding and I challenge anyone to prove the contrary. Thus, people who honestly try to make their opinions known to the people, in accordance to their means, have to struggle against an infernal machine driven by almighty financial interests.

There is a problem much more serious than to know if we must have the young vote at 18, 19, 20 or 21. Indeed, we must find means to discover what representatives the people want and this, without undue pressures, without any false publicity, without anything but sheer honesty.

On this subject, the Ralliement créditiste has always showed, for a few years, that it was possible to wage an election without money or with a minimum of money.

It would thus be advisable to start immediately to study the advisability of limiting election expenses and to think immediately of determining the means of giving everybody an equal opportunity to express his opinion and this, in an adult and equitable way.

It is possible to achieve this result. For instance, we are all required to contribute to the financing of the C.B.C. Why should we not use the services of this corporation when it is a question of an election or simply of politics so as to avoid useless expenses?

I would be very glad, for instance, if the C.B.C. put every week a free period at the disposal of all the parties, in an equitable way, in relation to the four parties represented in the House of Commons. During a quarter of an hour a week, for instance, the political parties could express their opinion on what is happening in the House of Commons, on the bills, etc., in order to inform the public and to keep in touch with it in a certain way. It could be done without any expenses involved, on either side.

The C.B.C. which is so often criticized should devote one hour every week to each and every political party. During an election campaign, extra broadcasting time could be allotted to all, thus doing away with those times when he who had the money won the day. Can you dream of anything more ridiculous? Should we not rely on the ability and honesty of the individual, when we are about to elect a member of parliament, rather than entrusting it to the electoral fund?

In my opinion, the real problem of the Elections Act lies with sections 62 and 63 for, even if we do change all the others, the problem shall not be solved for that matter.

It could happen, Mr. Speaker, that both go together. I do not quarrel with that. We know that citizens in some areas of this country are able to recognize the merits of certain political opinions, whenever they are given the opportunity to be told about them. If the various political parties had a better opportunity to express their political ideas, in a fair way, the government would be a little more balanced.

[English]

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, six years ago, when I was first elected to this place, I served on a committee which was charged with the responsibility of reviewing the elections Act. That committee reported and made a number of recommendations. Unfortunately, because of the way in which the business of the House was conducted at that time and with the log jam on the Order Paper, the difficulties with the procedures were such that its report could not get priority translation into legislation.

I am sure the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), to whom I listened with some interest some time ago, would be the first to admit that today we have a reasonable prospect of this legislation being enacted in the near future, thanks to the improvement in House procedures and rules, thanks to the new life which has been given to committees, and thanks to the active work of the committee in the last session of this Parliament under the distinguished chairmanship of the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Laflamme).

I had the privilege during the month of September and early October of serving with the committee when its members made a trip to speak to some of the electoral officers and to do some first-hand investigation of the problems, dealing particularly with the matter of lowering the voting age and of absentee ballots. I am sure that the hon. member for Hillsborough, who seems to feel such a trip was not productive, would at the very least concede we had most informative sessions with the electoral officer in the province of Quebec and, with his assistance, assessed the documents and information given to us. There was a full and frank exchange in a closed session that would have been almost impossible if the hearings had taken place in Ottawa, as some hon. members seem to think should have been the case. I am sure the hon. member for Hillsborough will agree with me that members of the committee were most conscientious in attending, with one or two exceptions. Certainly, the information and experience gained will be most valuable to the committee in bringing forward its recommendations.

There is one small point, Mr. Speaker, however, which I do not believe has received attention to any degree and which I would ask the committee to consider. During an election a candidate has the right to name an agent who may go into every polling booth to act as a scrutineer. This is provided for very conscientiously in the Act which spells out the form of the oath, the candidate's admission record to be given to every such agent, and so on. However, I have had the experience, having requested that such agent be placed in the returning officer's premises on election day—the most important single place in that riding on that day—of being told by Mr. Castonguay that the Election Act did not provide for the agent of a candidate to be present in the office of the returning officer, although an agent could be present in the office of each deputy returning officer in the constituency. I hope the committee will recommend some modification to the Act to rectify this omission. There can be no possible objection to it.

When I was with the committee I asked the returning officers of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec whether they could see any reason why a candidate should not have the privilege of having an agent in their offices as well as those of the deputy returning officers. They assured me they could see no objection to this. I hope that when the report of this committee comes to the House such a provision will be recommended.

I know there is a great deal of anxiety and concern felt by all members of the House that this matter should receive prompt attention. As hon. members on the other side have indicated, a substantial period of time has passed since this act was amended. It is hoped that those sections of the Act referred to in the resolution will be dealt with now, and the sections dealing with electoral expenses will be dealt with later. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that as indicated by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) this matter will be referred to the committee for immediate attention.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say two or three words to associate myself with the remarks of the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) who, in a most outstanding manner, has placed before the House the objections of most members to a principle which is much broader than the mere reference of the Canada Elections Act to the committee. The impression I received from his remarks was that there is danger of the committee system becoming nothing better than a joke. We hear a great deal about the downgrading of Parliament and the downgrading of the committee system. I have heard members of the various parties indicate that this is not too serious a matter. But I say right here and now, and I think this is a fairly non-partisan point, that out of the total of 264 members, at the moment there are only 25 members present. Indeed, at one point this afternoon there were only 16. This at a time when we are considering one of the most fundamental rights of the people, the right to vote. Surely, this is an example of the way Parliament has been downgraded.

There is absolutely no enthusiasm in this House, Mr. Speaker. If someone were to stand up and state that we were about to spend a billion dollars to encourage the development of the English language in St. Pierre, no one would get excited about it. The legislation would go through in a couple of hours and that would be the end of it. There is a complete lack of enthusiasm for the committee system. I get fed up to the gills with hearing about this committee system day after day. We just do not have one, Mr. Speaker. Last year I sat for weeks and weeks on the fisheries committee discussing the seal fishery. We interviewed many eminent people in the field of animal culture, the humane societies and people from all across Canada. We made a unanimous report to the House of Commons but the House, just weeks later, acted without any reference at all to that report. For goodness sake, Mr. Speaker, let us tell the people of Canada that the committee system is a farce.

When I came here last year I had already heard of participatory democracy and how there were going to be great changes in the rules. The hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald), is it—rosebud or rose something—told us, especially the backbenchers, "Don't worry, we are going to bring in rule changes to give you a much more important function in the House; you will no longer be frustrated because under the committee system you will have a chance to voice your opinions and give direction to the legislative process." That was what we heard and what we told the Canadian people.

Today we are being asked, as the representative body of the Canadian nation, to refer the Canada Elections Act to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Mr. Speaker, that is false. The government has stated in the Speech from the Throne that the time has come to extend the franchise in federal elections and that it will, therefore, recommend to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections of the House of Commons that the voting age be lowered to 18. But, Mr. Speaker, note that the government did not say it would make this recommendation to Parliament. Now, I do not come from the most democratic part of Canada, but in my province the Speech from the Throne refers matters to the legislature, the body elected to represent the people. We know that, according to the Speech from the Throne, the government intends to recommend to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections that the voting age be lowered to 18.

• (5:20 p.m.)

The government did not tell the House that there would be revisions to the Canada Elections Act, nor that the voting age would be lowered. We did not even know that the government intended to refer the matter of changing the elections act to the committee or that the committee was to deal with the reduction of the voting age. All we heard was that the reduction of the voting age to 18 was to be studied. How much more discreet can the government be, Mr. Speaker? In those circumstances, how is it possible for the Committee on Privileges and Elections to study the Canada Elections Act and report to Parliament? I submit that the principle under which this committee is to work is a farce. The committee cannot function effectively. Can anyone imagine the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand), if he were on the committee, saying, "No, no; I do not think we will go along with the government's recommendation. The voting age should be 19 years." Can you imagine the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) saying, "I disagree. The voting age should be 20 years."

All this is a farce, because a decision has already been made and someone obviously is trying to play the role of God around here. No doubt if the Prime Minister were here he would blush. Perhaps his parliamentary assistant is blushing a little.

Since other hon. members wish to speak in this debate, I will limit my remarks. I say, Mr. Speaker, that our House of Commons committees, as they are now, are not useful instruments. Take, for example, the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, or on Fisheries and Forestry, or on Transport and Communications. On many occasions we have seen how those committees have failed to function as useful instruments. Approximately $25,000 or $30,000 was spent on ferrying members of the transport committee to and fro across Canada. They talked about transportation, but when they came back they found that some of the matters they had been talking about were fait accompli. What kind of nonsense was that?

It is our duty to tell the Canadian people that the parliamentary committee system really is a farce. I remember attending a committee meeting one day at which we spent five hours deciding the wording of a resolution. Finally, being thoroughly fed up, I said, "Gentlemen this is nonsense; you are wasting time." They thought me a pretty awful fellow because I left. We finally discovered that the question had already been decided in a manner completely opposite to the unanimous recommendation of the committee. Many of those committee members are not here but I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that some of the members came to me and said, "We have made a mistake. We recommended something to the government but the government refused to go along with us. We are upset and, at the first chance we have, we will place our views on record." As far as I am concerned, and I speak as a representative of the people of Canada, we have a responsibility to tell our people that our committee system has failed.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. I wish to bring out three or four points. One of those has been touched on by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie).

May I begin by saying that if there is one matter that is the business of everybody in Canada, that is the matter of how we conduct elections. It is the responsibility of parliament to see that our people have the maximum opportunities for casting ballots in an election.

Parliament only revises our election machinery in a major way once in every ten or twelve years. No one here will disagree, I think, that this is a big job and that when we undertake it, the members of the committee and of the House of Commons, should pay the maximum attention to it. This question ought to be dealt with in a non-partisan way. If there is one matter that needs to be dealt with in a non-partisan way by any committee, it is the matter of election reform.

The hon. member for Hillsborough spoke about lowering the voting age to 18 years, and I wish to say something about that. On October 3, 1969, I addressed a letter to the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections and sent copies of it to all committee members, to the Prime Minister, to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of housing (Mr. Andras) and to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). In the letter I pointed out that there are numerous private bills dealing with the matter of lowering the voting age to 18 years and that parliament has referred a number of matters to the standing committee. I said that in light of remarks made by the Prime Minister and the Minister without Portfolio, it was passing strange that those remarks should be followed by this statement which was made by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. I quote:

> It's a good thing he made that announcement. It's already been decided.

I then said in my letter that if the matter has already been decided, why should we waste the taxpayers' money and the time of committee members in dealing with it. I do not for one moment question the prerogative of the government to make decisions on any matter. Having once made its decision, it seems to me, the proper way for the government to act would be to remove that part already decided upon from the terms of reference of the committee. The committee should not be asked to deal with the matter.

In that context, sir, I agree that the committee was badly treated. The chairman of the committee, the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Laflamme), properly brought my letter to the attention of the committee when we were meeting under terms of reference which had been established during the previous session. We were assured that the statement of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River was not in accordance with the facts, and that the matter had not been decided. Actually, there were assurances that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River did not know what he was talking about. Then, within a matter of days, we were able to read the Speech from the Throne. Included in it was the subject matter we are now discussing. I submit that fact indicates some members of the committee did not know what they were talking about, either. That is all water under the bridge, now, Mr. Speaker. But it is not too late for us to make sure that this committee functions in the manner our committees ought to function. In reviewing something as vital as electoral reform, it is not too late for this committee to act in a non-partisan fashion.

I note that in the motion moved by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) nothing was said about the committee members travelling from place to place. I agree that if the committee's travelling will mean unnecessary expense, then it should not travel. My colleague, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), made a good point when referring to a committee's trip to the Maritimes. There was terrible waste and little point in half-filling an expensive aircraft with 24 members and then flying them about the country so that in four days they could meet three people. Let me not be misunderstood on this point. I agree with the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), that the meetings with the chief electoral officers of those three provinces were valuable. I agree that those meetings had to be held in camera. While travelling about the country, I think the committee should also have heard briefs and submissions from members of the public on the subject of electoral reform, because that subject is the business of everyone.

Committee members are as anxious as any to avoid unnecessary jaunts which waste time and money. Nevertheless, there are sometimes good reasons for having the committee move from place to place. For example, there is the whole matter of the proxy voting system about which I know little. It has been said that the committee would be wise to meet with the committee of the Ontario government which has considered this whole matter at great length. It seems to me it would be valuable to obtain the views of that committee; it would save some time, at least. Similarly, I know of at least two organizations which have made surveys and which are now preparing briefs many hundreds of miles from here—one of them is in fact 2,000 miles from here—in the hope that they can appear before the committee and present their views. I suppose they could come to Ottawa, but again I suggest that this is the business of the people of Canada, even before it is the business of this House or of the committee. If arrangements can be made for submissions and presentations to be heard not only from electoral officers but from individuals and public groups, it seems to me the expense would be worth while. If, on the other hand, the only people we are to hear from are electoral officers I do not think it would be necessary for the entire committee to travel. It would be better to bring those persons to Ottawa.

If the leader of the House is not prepared to make changes in the terms of reference I hope the committee itself will request additional room in its terms of reference.

Mr. Francis: May I ask the hon. member a question? He said he did not think a trip to the Atlantic provinces would be making the best use of public funds. Does he feel that interviewing a committee in Ottawa on the results of its trip to Australia might be of help to our committee?

Mr. Benjamin: I said that. I said this was one instance where there would be ample justification. I doubt very much that the entire committee of the Ontario Legislature would be willing to come to Ottawa. But I do not see any justification for taking the entire committee from Ottawa into those three provinces to hear three people, though I am not questioning for a moment the value of hearing those three people.

On the question of electoral expenses, I think hon. members will agree that we have often found it difficult to keep this subject apart from our considerations of the elections Act generally. The chairman has been very lenient—

Mr. Francis: I am afraid I did not put my question well. The Ontario committee made a trip to Australia which is a substantially greater burden on the public purse than anything contemplated by this committee.

Mr. Benjamin: I never mentioned anything about Australia, Mr. Speaker. I did mention that proxy voting was a subject we might have to consider, and that this subject has already been studied in depth by another legislative body whose findings we could quickly obtain without putting the federal House to additional expense. This is an area in which a short trip to Toronto lasting a day, or two days at the most, would be justifiable.

As I was saying, the subject of election expenses kept creeping into our discussions while we were dealing with other sections of the act. It is difficult to keep the subject out of our discussion of other provisions in the legislation. This is a hazard which the poor chairman of the committee will have to live with—some aspects of this topic are bound to be discussed because of their direct relationship with other sections of the act.

I mention this as a reminder to the President of the Privy Council that it will not be easy to get through this work quickly before we deal in any manner with election expenses. I would point out that the report of the Election Expenses Commission, which has been gathering dust now for three years, will take a great deal of examination. It runs into two volumes. More than two years ago the political science department of the University of Saskatchewan held a two-day seminar to which it invited representatives of political parties, of the radio, television and newspaper media. One member of the commission was present, together with a number of the commission's staff. Mr. Speaker, we found loopholes in that report that one could drive a tank through. I am not criticizing the commission; it was impossible for them to take account of every variation involving election expenses. This work will take time. I submit it is necessary to set up a special committee now, so that we can get moving.

A while ago I used the word "bi-partisan". At this point I want to say we have a good chairman on our committee—in addition, he is a nice fellow and he is very patient. Our committee is moving in a good direction when it comes to bi-partisan activity in the field of electoral reform. When we held our first meeting, purely for organization purposes, a member of the Official Opposition, the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) was elected vice-chairman. I want to compliment the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Jerome). I feel he was quite sincere when he moved that the election of the hon. member for Edmonton-Centre be made unanimous. He did not say this because he knew he could not win election; I believe he said it because he was sincerely anxious to have the best possible work done by the committee in as bi-partisan a manner as possible. In saying this, I in no way denigrate the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) or disagree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles); I would be the last person in this House or anywhere else to question for one moment the capability of the hon. member for Hillsborough to be chairman. I just want to tell the House that the committee now has a vice-chairman at least from the Official Opposition.

I suggest that the President of the Privy Council ought to amend this motion by deleting from the committee's terms of reference the clause pertaining to the lowering of the voting age, since the government's intention has been made clear already in the Speech from the Throne. The matter has already been decided. For all the committee knows, the necessary legislation has already been drafted and is ready to be brought to the House for first reading and subsequent reference to the standing committee. In these circumstances, it is pointless for the committee to continue to deal with the subject of the lowering of the voting age. The intention of the government is perfectly clear, and I hope it is unchangeable. It has decided to bring in legislation lowering the voting age and in these circumstances this reference, too, in addition to those concerning sections 62 and 63 of the act, could be deleted from the terms of reference.

Further, it is incumbent on the President of the Privy Council to tell the House now whether there are any other matters affecting electoral reform on which the government has already made up its mind—as it has a right to do; after all, it is the government. Let us not go through all this again. If there are matters upon which the government has already reached a decision, the minister should inform us now and delete those subjects from the committee's terms of reference. Even better, he should bring in a bill dealing with those matters which have already been decided, and the committee could consider it while it is considering the other sections of the Act. The President of the Privy Council owes this to the House, if for no other reason than as a gesture of sincerity and intent. Let us not bypass the terms of reference of a standing committee. No matter how minor the decision, let the government disclose it, instead of allowing the committee to spend fruitless hours debating the subject.

I have said all I want to say for the moment on this matter. I hope the motion will pass and that the government will recognize the points made this afternoon by members on this side of the House. While there may be difficulties of a partisan nature with other committees, this is surely one committee where there should not be such difficulties. The government should feel free to be completely open and honest with the opposition. If they are, the committee will accept its proposals on those terms and will be able properly to deal with matters put before them.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Like so many others, Mr. Speaker, I want to underline what the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) said in rather moderate terms, namely that this is a tough act to follow. I had hoped there would not be quite so wide-sweeping observations about the actions of various committees because, if one looks at the committee system as a whole, some committees are working very well. I have had a fair amount of experience with committees over the years, and while some can stand a great deal of improvement, others are operating smoothly. I, too, have some very grave reservations about some of the decisions that have been taken by committees, decisions that were more or less unilateral, taken without consulting Mr. Speaker, whose budget is thereby affected.

For those who feel that committees should remain chairbound in Ottawa, let me say there are far too many regions of this country that are a big blank map to the majority of members. Very shortly we will be considering a bill dealing with national parks. I remember a committee visiting some of our national parks, and it was just as well it did because two thirds of the members had never been in a mountain national park in their lives. Yet they were being asked to declare their views on government policy on national parks.

This also brings to mind a newspaper article I saw the other day written by a political scientist from the University of Toronto, who thought that committees were benefiting far more from actions of government members on the committees. On the broadcasting committee two years ago, 26 out of 29 amendments accepted by the committee were moved by government members. What happened was that amendments were typed out on slips of paper and handed to government members to put forward, and this is how they were accepted. This sort of thing happens all too often. Someone whose knowledge of this institution is in inverse proportion to his distance from the institution comes here to present general statements and observations, and this sort of thing does more harm than good.

In regard to the terms of reference of this committee, I, too, would have preferred to see the government move in a much more acceptable way than referring to this matter in the way it did in the Speech from the Throne. I should have liked to see the government accept certain recommendations made by the House. After all, the cabinet is responsible to the House. This House does not exist as a mere rubber stamp for the executive. If you try to get that point across, frankly you are looked at with wide open eyes by certain members of the cabinet.

I think other matters should have been included in the terms of reference. I would have thought the whole question of elections should have been examined, outside of the question of election expenses which are not relevant to this discussion at all. We might also have had the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act referred to the Committee for examination. I say that because this legislation has received but one test in practice. Immediately the electoral boundaries commissions made their reports, we saw how impractical was the method adopted. It left members of this House completely defenceless in the face of independent commissions that all too often demonstrated no rhyme or reason for the decisions that were made. The burden seemed to be on us to prove that the commissions were wrong.

I have on the Order Paper a public bill which I trust will be debated later this session dealing with the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act. However, this is but one point in the Act that needs attention; there are others. It seems to me that the whole election machinery should be judged as a package, and this can only be done if the legislation is referred to committee. If it is impossible to do this now, then I trust the government will decide that this is the next item to be referred to the committee.

In the committee's examination of the Act I hope attention will be paid to one very difficult problem, and this concerns the broadcasting of election results on the Atlantic coast before the polls on the prairies and the Pacific coast have closed. As long as we had only radio and the CTV and CBC television systems to contend with, there was no worry because they were able to impose a news blackout. I think it is quite right that they should.

The system that prevails in the country to the south of us, is, I think, absolutely ludicrous. For example, people in California know hours before their polls close what the early trends are in the Atlantic states. In this day and age people tend to vote during the remaining three hours of election day, especially in urban centres. All they need to see how things are progressing elsewhere is to turn on the television set. This is particularly the case in summer elections. A great number of people who are trend followers are going to change their minds; that is a foregone conclusion.

One way to circumvent this dissemination of election information is to impose a similar ban on cable networks. We cannot, of course, control news services of the United States. If election results from the Atlantic provinces are broadcast by U.S. networks, are flashed to Montana or Washington and picked up by Canadian television viewers, then the whole exercise is for nought. But I do suggest that in Canada we should impose not only a news blackout by the two main broadcasting systems during polling hours, but also by cable television networks. Every effort should be made to block the news getting south to the United States networks so that they can flash it across the northern part of the United States for easy reception by Canadian television viewers whose sets can capture the United States signals.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that this resolution will pass and that in due course the committee will come up with a number of changes, including those in connection with hospital voting and service voting, particularly those overseas. Consideration should also be given to individuals travelling overseas and members of the public service who, by reason of their duties, have been posted abroad. These people should also have the right to vote. I know it would not be easy to have such a system, but surely with a little bit of ingenuity something could be done to enable these people to record their vote without being identified as a particular group.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, in a very few moments I wish to make some of the points that I believe should be of concern to the committee. There should be the widest possible franchise for the electorate.

The hon. member who preceded me mentioned the fact that our foreign service people should have an opportunity to have their say in domestic affairs, an opportunity they now do not have. Yet, it was borne in upon me, by reason of a trip just completed to India and Ceylon, that in high commission offices the military attaché has the preferred privilege of a vote in a federal election while third secretaries do not. It seems that any sensible committee of this House of Commons should be able to straighten that problem out in no time at all.

I wish to point out the poll system is not always suitable for those who are ill or not able to attend easily at a poll. There are paraplegics who find it difficult to attend most polls and impossible to attend others. There should be two approaches to this problem. First, I suggest a system similar to what we have in Nova Scotia, a transferable vote. I think the committee would do well to look at the Nova Scotia practice in that regard. It is much better than the federal practice. Second, a conveniently located special poll should be set up in each constituency for people who attend by car or ambulance. They should be able to cast their vote outside instead of being put through the torture of being carted up a narrow staircase and put into very narrow quarters to cast their vote.

On an earlier occasion when we were discussing electoral reform, I mentioned the situation which occurred in one of my early election campaigns. A lady who certainly disagreed with my points of view did everything she could to defeat me. She went to the polls in an ambulance and was carried in on a stretcher. The poor soul did vote and that was actually the last act she performed on earth. She died on the way out of the polling booth. I have never forgotten that. I do not see why the process of voting cannot be made more civilized for those who have a disability.

Finally, with regard to lowering the voting age to 18, I cheerfully, willingly and gladly support it. I suspect if anyone could be disfranchised, it is those in older age brackets. After all, our children in Nova Scotia are now going to school with history books containing the actual words of the astronauts during the first moon landing earlier this year. History books are pretty well up to date. They are bright youngsters, very bright youngsters. I have seen a model Parliament in the Queen Elizabeth High School, which is a few blocks away from my house in Halifax. I have attended these sessions at least once every year. I have been thoroughly impressed with the calibre of debate. These teenagers want to consider the problems which concern them, such as drugs and the like. They put forward sensible resolutions and make their decision in the best way possible.

With these thoughts, I endorse the resolution before us.

Mr. Macquarrie: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. With reference to the flattering offer by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) I wish to assure the house in the immortal words of Calvin Coolidge, "I do not choose to run".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, this house stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, November 20, 1969

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

AIRPORT GROUND TRANSPORTATION—
REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, let me try a motion again in respect of airport ground transportation. If the House gives unanimous consent I should like to recommend the following order:

That the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications be directed to examine the subject matter of ground transportation at airports in Canada,

And that during its consideration of the aforementioned matter the committee be empowered to meet in Toronto and Montreal.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in view of the changes that have been made the motion is more acceptable to us. One hon. member of this party wishes to make a comment. I recognize that this is out of order but—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think comments should be made or that a debate should take place until there is either unanimous consent or some other disposition.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We do not want to withhold unanimous consent to this motion because we realize it is important. At the same time, I want to point out to Your Honour and the House that the committee has already been given a reference but has not yet had the opportunity of considering it. This reference was put forward by the Acting House Leader on November 3.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that this is a matter of debate which might be considered when the motion is put to the House. There is a very simple matter to be considered now, whether or not there is unanimous consent. If there is no unanimous consent, the motion will not be put. If there is, I will put the motion and then the hon. member for St. John's East and all other members of the House, if they wish, can take part in the debate and present arguments such as those the hon. member is now trying to make by way of a point of order, which is entirely irregular. Is there unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications be directed to examine the subject matter of ground transportation at airports in Canada,

And that during its consideration of the aforementioned matter the committee be empowered to meet in Toronto and Montreal.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I merely wanted to ask, at the time the Government House Leader was seeking unanimous consent, for an assurance before I gave consent. I wanted him to agree that the committee would in fact take under consideration the reference it now has as set out in Hansard for November 3 at page 398.

This reference has to do with a study by the committee of the subject matters referred to it at the last session in relation to the Great Slave Lake Railway line and transportation problems in the Atlantic provinces. It also is to consider the evidence presented to the committee last session. Let me point out to the House that the committee has not yet considered this reference. I should like to extract from the Government House Leader an assurance that before the committee considers the new reference it will give priority to the reference now before it as set out on page 398 of Hansard.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I should not like to follow the hon. member's suggestion that I should give instructions to any committee. I am sure his remarks have reached the ears of the members of the subcommittee on procedure and organization of that committee and that they will make a decision in this regard.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to comment on this motion. I agree completely with the hon. member for St. John's East in respect of his reservations about giving unanimous consent. We have now given unanimous consent that this subject matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

In the past month this committee has had ample opportunity to sit. It has not sat to consider the matters that were put before it and has not brought down a report on its trip to Labrador and northern Quebec. Since that trip there has been an airplane crash at Labrador City which could well indicate that there is a great need for the Department of Transport to provide better services at that airport. During last year's sittings of the committee evidence was heard with regard to the Great Slave Lake Railway claims. I think these two matters particularly should be dealt with first.

I do not in any way wish to suggest that the complaints of many citizens of Montreal against the Murray Hill taxi operation from Dorval airport to downtown Montreal should be set aside for any length of time. I do suggest, however, that there are other important matters before the committee. It is a question of priority with us on this side of the House. We believe that those matters which came up first should be dealt with first. Perhaps the Government House Leader and the committee chairman will see that these matters are dealt with in that order. If they do, we will do our best to facilitate the work of the committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the discussion on this point should not proceed further. It seems to me hon. members are attempting to debate the order of business of a committee. If I recollect correctly what occurred yesterday, it seems to me the argument put forward for consideration by the Chair was that these matters ought to be left to the committee to decide. If hon. members were correct yesterday, as I thought they were, they are equally correct today. I believe these matters should be considered by the committee and not by the House at this time.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

IMPLEMENTATION OF SUPPLEMENTARY AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND SWEDEN

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (for the Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-156, to implement a supplementary income tax agreement between Canada and Sweden.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EFFECTIVENESS OF HOSPITAL PLANS OPERATED BY PROVINCES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I thought I saw the Minister of National Health and Welfare in the House a moment ago. Now that he has returned I should like to ask him, in view of certain remarks he made yesterday in Winnipeg, whether it is his position and the position of the government that the hospital plans operated by the provinces are generally inefficient in terms of operation and particularly in terms of cost control?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I did not say they were generally inefficient.

Mr. Stanfield: I did not say the minister said that.

Mr. Woolliams: Another misquote.

Mr. Munro: No, I do not think it was even stated in the press.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Munro: Perhaps the hon. member cannot read the press very accurately, but I did say—and I think it is acknowledged by many in the field including many representatives of the provinces—that there are very sizeable areas within the whole hospital structure in the provinces where substantial waste could be eliminated, and it is one of the purposes of the meeting next week between myself and the provincial Ministers of Health to study the reports we have and try to isolate these areas to see what can be done about them.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question. As I interpret the minister's answer, he is in effect saying yes, but in his own way. I should like to ask him whether, for example, in lieu of suggesting to the doctors how they should conduct their practices, the minister would consider increasing the federal government funds available to assist and encourage the construction of institutions which can be operated at a lower cost than active treatment hospitals?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, this will be one of the items that will undoubtedly be raised for consideration at the conference.

Mr. Stanfield: I am sure it will be. I asked the minister whether he and the government are considering increasing the funds available, not whether the subject will be raised at the conference.

Mr. Munro: As I endeavoured to indicate, we have just received these reports. The various provincial governments and ourselves have had them for about three or four weeks, and until we make a joint analysis of them and determine what are the appropriate remedies that can be applied the federal government can make no decision, nor can the provincial governments, with reference to the matter which the Leader of the Opposition has just raised or with reference to any other matters.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a supplementary question for the minister. Can he indicate what the government's plans are for the introduction of medicare in the northern territories?

Mr. Munro: I cannot give a definite decision on that matter at the moment.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister elucidate whether he implied in his remarks that he intends to establish some sort of system of policing what type of patients should be admitted to hospitals?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must intervene at this point and apologize to the House, particularly to the Leader of the Opposition, for the fact that I allowed his question in the first instance. It is well known to hon. members that normally questions cannot be asked directly about statements outside the House except for questions asked of the Prime Minister inviting him to indicate whether a statement represents government policy. However, I was not quite prepared when the question period started and that is why the question was allowed. But I do not think the supplementary question should be allowed, certainly not in the way it was asked.

Mr. Stanfield: If I may say with respect, Mr. Speaker, I do not think you should apologize for making any error in allowing the question because the question I asked was directly related to what is in fact the attitude and the policy of the government. It is true I did not succeed in getting an answer.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Leader of the Opposition. I feel much better now that I know I was in order.

TRADE

EXPORT OF ARMS TO UNITED STATES— INQUIRY AS TO SELECTIVE EMBARGO

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister arises out of the annual report of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce which indicates that Canada's exports of arms to the United States last year amounted to $320 million, bringing to a total of over $2 billion our exports of arms to the United States over the last ten years. Having in mind the growing disenchantment both in the United States and in Canada with the Viet Nam war, I want to ask the Prime Minister whether the government is giving consideration to following the example of Sweden and imposing a selective embargo upon exports of arms to the United States for the duration of the present hostilities in Viet Nam?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Then, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if his answer indicates the logical fulfilment of the principle which he enunciated last year with reference to Canada's complicity—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question being asked by the hon. member is surely couched in an argumentative form. Perhaps it might be asked more directly.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister if his statement today means that the government's policy is summed up in his own phrase, that Canada's complicity in Viet Nam must be measured in terms that we have to choose between dirty hands or empty bellies?

WATER RESOURCES

GRAND CANAL—DISCUSSIONS WITH QUEBEC AND ONTARIO

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, on November 6, I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether officials of his department have been in touch with the governments of Quebec and Ontario regarding the diversion of the waters of the James bay basin called the Grand Canal project. I also asked him whether the federal government was carrying on the studies conducted on the subject.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, during these past two or three years, some officials of my department have had discussions on several occasions with representatives of the governments of Ontario and Quebec about various questions regarding water resources but not about the diversion project called "Grand Canal" nor any other such project.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his answer and I wish to ask him a supplementary question.

I would like to know whether it is a fact that the government of Canada is sharing in the cost of the studies made by the Ontario government and whether, according to the announcement made by the Minister of Natural Resources of Quebec, the government of that province can expect to receive the same assistance that was granted to Ontario?

Could the minister tell us whether the government is giving financial assistance to Ontario and Quebec concerning the diversion of waters from James bay?

Mr. Speaker: I think the supplementary question could be put on the order paper or debated at the time of adjournment.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SUPREME COURT JUDGMENT UPHOLDING EQUAL RIGHTS FOR INDIANS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. It has to do with the epochal judgment rendered today by the Supreme Court of Canada in the case of an Indian, Joseph Drybones, of the Northwest Territories, in which that court upheld the authority of the Canadian Bill of Rights in providing and assuring that all Canadians shall have equal rights and that Indians shall not be placed in a lower category because of the provisions of the Indian Act. If he is not in a position at the moment to deal with this momentous decision upholding the Bill of Rights in its entirety so far as discrimination is concerned, would the minister be prepared to make a statement on motions in a day or so?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the right hon. gentleman that this is a very important decision rendered by the Supreme Court of Canada. I happen to have followed the course of that decision since it was first rendered by Mr. Justice Morrow of the Northwest Territories Court. I would like to read the judgment and consider the right hon. gentleman's suggestion.

JUDGMENT IN CASE OF HUNTING INFRACTION BY ESKIMO

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which is so closely related as to be supplementary, dealing with a judgment of the same Mr. Justice Morrow of the Northwest Territories which held that an Eskimo was guilty of a hunting infraction under the Territorial Ordinance Act despite the fact that the offence took place on an ice floe more than three miles from the shoreline. Would the minister indicate if instructions were given to counsel to prosecute and secure conviction in spite of that fact?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I had better take that one as notice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baldwin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister consider the possibility of facilitating any appeal on this issue and, if such appeal is taken, is it the intention of the minister to continue to instruct counsel for the Crown to press for maintenance of the conviction despite the fact that the alleged offence took place more than three miles from the shoreline on an ice floe? It is time this government substituted some backbone instead of the wishbone it has shown on this issue.

SPORTS

ASSISTANCE TO CANADIAN SKI PATROL

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the rapid approach of winter, may I ask if reconsideration will be given to assisting the Canadian Ski Patrol financially? This organization has won acclaim all over the world and will now have to cut back on its work if it cannot get assistance.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): We have not heard of any request made to the government by the Canadian Ski Patrol, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

RECOMMENDATIONS TO U.S. CONGRESS REGARDING TARIFF REDUCTIONS

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Has the minister received from the United States government a detailed list of the recommendations made to Congress by the late President Kennedy in regard to tariff reductions, removal of non-tariff areas and other related matters which have a considerable effect on Canadian trade?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether it came from the United States government or the Canadian Embassy in Washington, but I have the list of presidential suggestions here. Generally speaking we consider that they are favourable in the sense that they would lead the United States toward freer trade with the world.

Mr. Harkness: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. After the minister and his officials have studied these proposals, would he make a statement on motions indicating to the House what is likely to be the effect on Canadian trade?

Mr. Pepin: I shall consider that, Mr. Speaker.

DECLINE IN EXPORTS TO GREAT BRITAIN

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that up to last August Canadian exports to Britain had declined by $35 million from a year earlier, is the minister taking any special steps to improve our export performance in this area?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is inviting the minister to make a statement which should be made on motions. The minister said he would consider doing so and I assume he will include the point raised by the hon. member.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RELATIONSHIP WITH COMMONWEALTH CARIBBEAN COUNTRIES

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and is prompted by the recent and most welcome intimation that the government is studying a report on the establishment of a free trade area with Commonwealth countries of the Caribbean. Can the minister advise if any consideration is being given, even in a preliminary way, to exploring the possibility of closer relationships, even political union, with any of the smaller Commonwealth Caribbean islands?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): To the final part of that question, Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

CANADIAN PRICE OF FORD "MAVERICK"

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether his department is investigating the charge made by the Canadian director of the United Auto Workers that the Ford Maverick car produced at St. Thomas and exported to the United States is sold there for $380 less than in Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): This point has been raised on a number of occasions recently, Mr. Speaker. These things happen. It is quite possible that a company's general marketing policies give rise to this situation. It arises in other Canadian industries also.

Mr. Orlikow: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. If the charge is true, will the government reconsider its position under the United States-Canada auto pact?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question is hypothetical.

Inquiries of the Ministry

GRAIN

ACCEPTANCE OF PAYMENT IN SOFT CURRENCIES

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Mr. Speaker. In light of the serious lag in Canadian wheat sales and the resulting economic plight of western farmers, would the minister give consideration to taking so-called soft currencies in payment for wheat and other cereal grains and oilseeds?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I shall pass this question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, of course the question of sales of grain is in the hands of the Canadian Wheat Board, as the hon. member knows. Sales have in the past been made for currencies other than dollars and will be so made in the future.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of complaints being made about the growing cost of marketing grain, would the minister recommend to the appropriate committee that it take a look at the Canadian Wheat Board and the question of marketing costs at this time in order to find out what it actually costs to market a bushel of wheat? I ask that because we are in competition with the rest of the world.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to give consideration to that representation.

FLAX—REPORTED LACK OF SUPPLIES FOR EXPORT

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): May I direct a supplementary question to the Minister without Portfolio, Mr. Speaker. Further to the question I asked on November 7 in regard to adequate supplies of flax at the Lakehead, and in view of the fact that at present there are approximately only 1.4 million bushels of flax in position for export there, can the minister tell the House what steps have been taken to ensure that additional supplies of flax are moved into export position at that point?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my answer to the previous question, the Canadian Wheat Board has been giving top priority to the movement of flax. Accordingly, any handler or owner of flax in the market can move flax into position. The actual movement of the flax then depends on the decision of that owner or handler.

Mr. Gleave: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am aware of how this grain is called forward. I asked the minister what additional steps have been taken to ensure that something happens.

[Later:]

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Further to the question asked by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, may I ask the Minister without Portfolio if he has now completed his investigations and determined if flax sales were lost, as reported? Also, has the government given active consideration to placing flax and other oilseed crops under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, my investigations have gone so far as to indicate that a definitive answer to that question is not likely to be possible. With respect to the other issue involving flax and rapeseed, I have indicated previously that this is the sort of question which deserves fundamental examination.

REQUEST FOR APPEARANCE OF WHEAT BOARD BEFORE COMMITTEE

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): May I direct another question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, Mr. Speaker. Since the agricultural committee did not complete its studies of the annual report of the Wheat Board, can the minister assure the House at this time that during the fall and winter months the Wheat Board will be called before that committee so that the annual report can be thoroughly studied and so that future actions of the Wheat Board can also be taken into consideration?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Wheat Board will be available for the committee to question. Of course, I should like to leave the question of specific timing for discussion with the committee itself.

SASKATCHEWAN PLAN TO BARTER WHEAT FOR MACHINERY

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Have the Canadian Wheat Board and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce worked out any arrangement with the Saskatchewan government whereby they can facilitate its program of exchanging wheat for power generating equipment purchased outside Canada?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask if any request has come from the Saskatchewan government to have such an arrangement facilitated by the government of Canada?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, discussions have taken place between the department and various members of the government and the government of Saskatchewan in connection with the issue of barter wheat. It was indicated to the government of Saskatchewan that no one can, of course, stop the Saskatchewan Power Corporation or any other similar body or company in Canada from buying Canadian wheat and doing whatever they like with it. But we also indicated to the government of Saskatchewan that the question of the barter of wheat was a very delicate one and that barter is not in the interests of the farmer in view of the stability now being developed in regard to the price of wheat in the world.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Stability indeed!

MOVEMENT FROM NORTHERN ALBERTA—ACCEPTANCE OF INITIAL QUOTA—AMENDMENTS TO WHEAT BOARD ACT

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since it is well known that in northern Alberta the harvest has been only 20 per cent of what was expected and that the elevators are still filled to capacity, will the minister indicate why grain has not been moving out of northern Alberta? What is he prepared to do about this matter at this time?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Well, Mr. Speaker, the movement of certain grains, wheat in particular, has been somewhat slower for a part of this year, but it is now picking up with the Chinese deliveries now coming on line. Grains such as barley, rapeseed and flax have been moving more rapidly than in the previous year.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell the House and country when the Wheat Board will be able to accept the initial quota for this crop season from the farmers?

Mr. Lang: Well, Mr. Speaker, the Wheat Board is making every effort to have shipment of sufficient grain from every point in order to allow a unit quota to be delivered by all farmers. This is a high priority item and boxcars are being allocated to this end but of course in a manner that is consistent with the demands of the market for particular types of grain.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps one last supplementary question might be allowed at this time. If there is time we could return to this subject in a few moments.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the minister is reported to have stated outside the House that the government intended to bring in certain amendments to the Wheat Board Act which I understand would have the effect of restricting the general ambit of the powers now being exercised by the Wheat Board. Will the minister not say what the nature of the contemplated changes is and when the amendments will be brought before the House?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I presume that since the right hon. gentleman reads my clippings he will have read the second clipping which indicated exactly what in fact we had in mind. It said that many questions relating to the sale and marketing of wheat would be considered. The answer to which the right hon. gentleman is now referring was an answer to the effect that the Canadian Wheat Board does a very good job indeed, in my opinion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Baldwin: And what did the third clipping say?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before we go further I think I should caution both the right hon. gentleman and the hon. member that we cannot allow a debate on what was said and what was not said. Perhaps the question might be asked directly.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I want to get this clear, because there was an original version and now there is a revised version.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And now there is a revised, revised version.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I realize that the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar is anxious to ask a supplementary question. I said a moment ago that perhaps we might return to the subject in a few moments and allow other hon. members to ask questions about other subjects for a few minutes.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

REQUEST FOR REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Government House Leader, who is in the House but not in his seat. It is a very important and urgent question, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Tally-ho! Here he comes.

Mr. McGrath: I put it to him with all the sincerity and humility I can muster, Mr. Speaker. Will he bring in appropriate terms of reference as soon as possible so that the Standing Committee on Regional Development can continue its important work of pointing the way to the groping Minister of Regional Economic Expansion?

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In light of the interest being shown by district six of the United Steelworkers of America in the Prices and Incomes Commission, will the "minister of consumer affairs and high prices" inform the House if the commission has been instructed to investigate the inflationary price increases announced by Inco?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I cannot accept the question as asked.

PENSIONS

RECIPROCAL AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It relates to a matter which has been the subject of questions on the Order Paper and also the subject of correspondence. It is of great urgency to quite a few people. Can the minister say when a reciprocal agreement between Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany on the question of pensions will be concluded?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to inform the hon. member that negotiations are now going on between the West German government and Canada to this end. It is hoped that this agreement can be concluded shortly.

TRANSPORT

BORDEN-CAPE TORMENTINE SERVICE— PROVISION OF RESERVE FERRY

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): I wish to direct a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport. Perhaps he would be kind enough to take it as notice if he does not have an immediate reply. What provision is being made to have immediately available a reserve ship on the Borden-Cape Tormentine run this winter in case of a breakdown of either of the two operating ships, in view of the fact that apparently it is the intention to have the Confederation and the Lucy Maud Montgomery tied up in Halifax for the winter months?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the Minister of Transport is not required to be in the House on Thursdays, but I will be pleased to bring the matter to his attention and he will provide an answer in the next few days.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State.

Could the minister tell us if he has decided who will be appointed language commissioner and, if so, when can we expect that appointment?

An hon. Member: Be patient!

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the choice has not yet been made, but I think the hon. member will not have to wait too long.

[English]

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the importance and sensitivity of this appointment, does the minister plan to follow the example of the Minister of Justice and consult with the provinces before the appointment is made?

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, all necessary consultations will take place; as a matter of fact they are already under way.

CANADA COUNCIL

INQUIRY AS TO INCREASE OF CERTAIN SUBSIDIES

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State.

The Canada Council has just increased its grants in aid of publishing and University exchanges from $119,300 to $800,000 and has announced that other grants would be increased later. Would the minister tell us whether such increases are permissible under the austerity program?

Mr. Speaker: As this question appears controversial, I do not believe it is in order at the present time.

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES— INQUIRY AS TO STATEMENT

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): My question is for the Minister of Justice. Can the minister tell the House whether it is his intention to make a statement with respect to the constitutional and administrative reform of the administration of justice in the Yukon and Northwest Territories?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I had not anticipated doing so, but I did today issue a release simultaneously in Ottawa, Yellowknife and Whitehorse expressing the willingness of the federal government to negotiate with the territorial governments of the Yukon and Northwest Territories toward a gradual transfer of the function of administration of justice, short of the office of the Attorney General, to the territorial governments, based on the premise that the transfer of these functions would also entail negotiation under the general financial agreements between the territories and the federal government.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Since the minister has made this release and since tomorrow we will have a debate with respect to government policies concerning northern development and constitutional development generally, would the minister please make a statement on motions tomorrow as a kick-off for that debate?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Thanks for the leak.

Mr. Nielsen: Could the minister say, Mr. Speaker, whether he would be disposed to make such a statement tomorrow morning?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): The hon. member for Yukon, whom I am delighted to see here, wants to involve me in a statement on motions. It might well be that the proper place would be in the debate. I want to consult with my colleague the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Nielsen: I just wanted to make sure the minister would not high-tail it off to Harrison Hot Springs tomorrow.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

HIRING OF EMPLOYEES FROM OVERSEAS

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. I ask the minister to look into the practice followed by Devco of hiring employees from overseas while there are qualified men in Cape Breton who can do the work and have been doing it for years.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I have not looked into that, Mr. Speaker. I am not aware of it. Has the hon. member any information to supply to me?

An hon. Member: You are the minister; wake up.

OIL

INQUIRY AS TO CONTINENTAL POLICY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I directed a question to the Prime Minister with reference to a continental oil policy. I see the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is in the House. Perhaps I could direct the same question to him. Is the Canadian government now suggesting and advocating a continental oil policy and has the United States indicated that they too favour such a policy at this time?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Since the initiative of the Prime Minister on March 24 and 25 in his meeting with the President of the United States, we have been having mutual discussions with our United States counterparts with respect to our oil and energy policies. We are pursuing full negotiations with our United States counterparts in that regard. The term "continental oil policy" means different things to different people. I am not quite sure just what it means to my hon. friend, but we have been exploring the fullest possible access for Canadian oil to be exported to the United States market. That is the purpose of our discussions and the Canadian posture in this regard.

Mr. Woolliams: I thank the minister for his statement and I hope he is successful in this regard. I wish to follow through with the supplementary question I directed to the Prime Minister. I asked whether this is the policy of the government and whether the discussions with the United States with regard to the export of crude petroleum and natural gas involve the export of water from Canadian rivers and other sources?

Mr. Greene: There have been no discussions with respect to the export of water, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I asked the Prime Minister a question which was referred to the minister. Therefore I ask the minister this important question. Is the export of natural gas being left entirely to the provinces for decision or is the federal government taking an interest in permits to export natural gas with a view to raising the ceiling on the amount of oil imported from Canada by the United States?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, the export of natural gas is under the authority, control and jurisdiction of the National Energy Board. We have not considered in our discussions with the United States, and I do not think it should be done, the question of using gas as a weapon in order to achieve a greater oil market. We have been discussing mutual energy policies in general, which include gas, oil, coal—the full complement of energy. We are quite prepared to discuss with our United States friends all these items in concert for the greatest benefit of the producers in Canada as well as Canadian people generally.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): A supplementary question concerning the pricing of natural gas. In view of the indication that because of the demand from the United States the price of natural gas may rise in Canada, is the minister considering a two-price policy for natural gas to maintain a preferred price in Canada?

Mr. Greene: We have not considered such a policy, Mr. Speaker. I doubt very much whether an efficient industry able to compete in the United States market as well as our own could be conceived on a two-price system, but certainly we will take the hon. member's suggestion into consideration.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What about automobiles?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO WHITE PAPER

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): My question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the Speech from the Throne it was stated that white papers would be presented as part of a comprehensive revision of government policy on a number of subjects, including external affairs and defence. Is this comprehensive white paper on external affairs in the course of preparation, and how soon may we expect it in the House?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The answer to that question is yes. The question we have not decided is whether there will be one or more papers; I expect there will be more than one.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PLYWOOD PRICE INCREASES—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. J. G. Lind (Middlesex): My question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Is he aware of the situation that is developing in the plywood industry which will have the consequence of inflating the cost of shelter or housing across Canada, since manufacturers of fir plywood are increasing their prices by 5 to 10 per cent on sheathing and finished grades of plywood? Will the minister have his department investigate this exorbitant increase?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I have not seen the report to which my hon. friend's question refers. I appreciate his deep concern about the price of plywood, which he has expressed to me on a number of occasions, and I will see that my officials look into the matter.

Mr. Lind: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member kindly resume his seat? There are just two minutes left of the question period, and unless there is unanimous agreement that the hon. member should be allowed—

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Lind: Since all the manufacturers of fir plywood have raised their prices within a few days, would the minister investigate the possibility that some association is co-ordinating and controlling these prices?

Mr. Basford: I am not sure what is implied in the hon. member's question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: I will certainly consider it; I am anxious to consult with my hon. friend on his ideas.

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): My supplementary question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and it follows an earlier question on the price of the Maverick, is the minister aware that the Ford Motor Company of Canada has increased the prices of certain 1970 models during the last month. This is in addition to the increases announced on the introduction date.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

APPOINTMENT OF COUNTY COURT JUDGE, P.E.I.

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan): My question is for the Minister of Justice. I would ask him whether a selection has yet been made to fill the present vacancy on the county court bench in Prince Edward Island, and how soon we can expect an announcement in this respect?

Mr. Speaker: That question should be placed on the Order Paper. Does the hon. member raise a point of order?

Mr. McQuaid: Yes, Your Honour. The urgency of the question arises from the fact that I have some personal business to attend to.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: On those very valid grounds the question might be allowed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

DRUGS

TETRACYCLINE—ALLEGED FRAUD BY U.S. COMPANIES IN OBTAINING PATENT

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): This question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this year I questioned the minister concerning a United States government damage suit for $25 million against American Cyanamid and Charles Pfizer and Company for fraudulently obtaining a patent for the antibiotic drug tetracycline. I asked the minister whether his department was investigating possible similar fraudulence in Canada with respect to the same companies—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member kindly put her question.

Mrs. MacInnis: I hope I shall get there soon. The minister assured me that his officials would be getting in touch with United States officials to determine whether there was a basis for investigation in Canada. Now I come to the punch line.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mrs. MacInnis: Could he now inform us of the result of this action.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The assurance I gave the hon. member at that time still stands but, as she knows, actions taken under the Combines Investigation Act are not made public until revealed in the director's annual report or until action is instituted in the courts.

PUBLIC SERVICE

POLICY AS TO WORKING LANGUAGE

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): I have a question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. On Monday, November 17, I asked the Prime Minister whether the Secretary of State was extending government policy beyond the present practice when he reportedly said that French would be used as the working language in units of the Public Service. The right hon. gentleman informed me that he would look at the statement and tell the House what the Secretary of State had said and whether it amounted to an extension of government policy.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): After the question was put to me I immediately asked the Secretary of State about the matter and he said he could not identify precisely the statement quoted by the hon. member. If the hon. member will try to find the source and help the Secretary of State identify it, we might be able to reply.

Mr. Nowlan: A supplementary question to the Secretary of State. At the opening of the Public Service Language School a week ago last Wednesday, was the hon. gentleman speaking from notes or from a prepared text when he was reported, in three press reports, to have said that French would be, or could be expected to be, the working language in units of the public service?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I was speaking from a text and I will gladly refer to it to see whether I expressed myself exactly in the form quoted.

Mr. Nowlan: I do not remember receiving the text on this occasion. Could the minister send copies of that address to myself and perhaps to other hon. members, as is customary?

Mr. Pelletier: With pleasure, Mr. Speaker.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

WATER RESOURCES

PROVISION FOR MANAGEMENT INCLUDING RESEARCH AND PLANNING AND IMPLEMENTATION OF PROGRAMS

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-144, to provide for the management of the water resources of Canada including research and the planning and implementation of programs relating to the conservation, development and utilization of water resources, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peace River on a point of order.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I feel I must rise and say to Your Honour and to the House that in my submission this question can not properly be put before the House because it is in violation of Standing Order 62 and is also in violation of the British North America Act in that it provides, within the four corners of the bill, for an imposition of taxation and the appropriation of tax moneys for purposes not covered in the message sent to this House by His Excellency the Governor General.

There has been no previous opportunity to raise this matter because, of course, on first reading we do not really know what are the contents of the bill; this is the first occasion upon which the measure has really been put to the House. I say, too, that unlike the somewhat similar case I raised with regard to Bill S-3 from the Senate, the defect which, I contend, does exist could be cured by an amendment to the recommendation and/or an amendment to the legislation.

So, I preface my argument by pointing out that I do not intend to suggest this debate should not proceed. If Your Honour feels there has been a substantial case made, and decides to give the matter further consideration after subsequent argument, the debate should not be held up. It should proceed, and if Your Honour and the House feels I am right, the government may then consider what amendments should be introduced. My duty is to place suitable restraints on the government when I think it is not complying with our rules.

Just so the record will show this, the pertinent authorities are contained in Section 54 of the B.N.A. Act which states:

It shall not be lawful—

I emphasize those words.

It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any Vote, Resolution, Address or Bill—

In my submission, any bill brought before this House which is not properly authorized should be identified as such. This is true not only in respect of the passage of this bill but in respect of the responsibilities that accompany its passage. It is not for Your Honour to consider the constitutionality of this measure. That may be decided as a result of people challenging the law later in the courts. The words are very pertinent. The section reads:

It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any Vote, Resolution, Address or Bill for the Appropriation of any Part of the Public Revenue, or any Tax or Impost, to any Purpose that has not been first recommended to that House by Message of the Governor General in the session in which such Vote, Resolution, Address or Bill is proposed.

In confirmation of that, Standing Order 62 reads:

This House shall not adopt or pass any vote, resolution or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended to the House by a message from the Governor General in the session in which such vote, resolution, address or bill is proposed.

There is, in fact, a recommendation from His Excellency, which appears at the appropriate place in the printed form before us, and which provides—I am skipping the formal part:

—has recommended . . . the present measure to provide for the management of the water resources . . . including research and the planning and implementation of programs relating to the conservation, development and utilization of water resources—

The recommendation also indicates that this measure is:

—to provide also that all expenditures for the purposes of the Act including any expenses or allowances of any advisory committee, shall be paid out of moneys appropriated by Parliament therefor.

I think the common sense meaning of these words is in accordance with their interpretation by the late Auditor General, Watson Sellar, that there must be a vote in respect of the appropriation. It is inadequate to provide that these payments be effected without an annual vote because the recommendation also indicates:

—all expenditures for the purpose of the Act, including any expenses or allowances of any advisory committee shall be paid out of moneys appropriated by Parliament.

There cannot be any statutory appropriation, but must be an annual vote.

Let me refer directly to what I consider to be the repugnant parts of clause 16(2)(d) which reads:

The Governor in Council may make regulations prescribing with respect to each water quality management area,

(d) the effluent discharge fees, if any, to be paid by any person to the agency incorporated or named in respect thereof for the deposit of waste in the waters comprising such area and the persons by whom such fees are payable and the time or times at which and the manner in which such fees will be paid.

Clause 8 reads:

Except in quantities and under conditions prescribed with respect to waste disposal in the water quality management area in question, including the payment of any effluent discharge fee prescribed therefor, no person shall deposit or permit the deposit of any type in any waters comprising a water quality management designated—

My submission is that these clauses, when read together, suggest that under certain conditions, and on the payment of what is improperly described as a fee—it really constitutes a toll or a tax—individuals or corporations may in fact deposit polluted material, waste or effluent discharges under the conditions which are laid down. The payments or fees may be prescribed from time to time by the Governor in Council. This is like saying we give you in advance a dispensation for the sin you may be committing. At this time let me give you the closest example I can think of which resembles this situation. In some of our public washrooms, on payment of a specified amount we can make use of the facilities. One might think that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), after leading the nation out of the bedrooms, may have deposited us in a rather difficult position in the bathrooms.

Mr. Greene: Put in your dime.

Mr. Baldwin: When reading these two clauses of Bill C-144 together, they indicate that permission is given to the Governor in Council to set a tariff of tolls payable by persons designated by the Governor in Council in respect of the deposit of pollution of a stated kind and under conditions which may be set down. We are giving these persons permission to pollute our waters, and forgiving them on the payment of an appropriate toll. You may call it a fee or anything you want, but it is the character of that payment we must consider.

I suggest to you with all the sincerity I can command that these fees, as they are called, are not in fact fees. They are tolls in respect of which there is a right to commit a breach of our regulations. This permits one to legally commit a breach of the prohibition against the discharge of polluted material.

There are technical arguments I could make and I may have an opportunity to do so later. Anyone examining the definition and the use of the word "fee" knows that it simply means you pay money for a specific purpose. If I pay a fee, the State provides me with a service. These charges are not fees or service charges. Let me point out to Your Honour the very close resemblance the regulations for the use of the waters of the St. Lawrence seaway have to the principle of this measure. I am referring to the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act of 1951, as subsequently amended. That act provided that those waters could be used for the purposes of navigation for the benefit of the people on the payment of a tariff of tolls, and a tariff of tolls was imposed. If one examines the surrounding document one will find that the recommendation of the Governor General provided that it would be expedient for the government to establish a tariff of tolls.

If it was considered essential in 1951 that the use of these waters for one purpose required the payment of a toll and the Governor General should make a recommendation covering this, why should it not be essential that the use of water for the carriage of effluent material requires precisely the same treatment? I suggest that by calling this a fee we cannot cover the situation. The name means nothing; it is the character of the imposition that is important.

The other side of the coin must also be considered. What is going to be done with the money collected? Let me refer Your Honour to clause 16(2)(d) which provides that these fees shall be collected by an agency to be constituted under the provisions of this act. Such an agency would in fact be the agent of Her Majesty, and the fees would then be utilized by that agency or authority for such purposes as it saw fit, including the payment of salaries and other things it deemed essential.

Here we have a device whereby the government could collect fees from individuals and corporations without any appropriation, without any message from His Excellency and without any authorization to collect such fees. The fees may be then appropriated in such form as the Governor in Council may have authorized the agency to provide through proper by-laws. If that is the case, what is to stop our very genial Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) saying that no person shall dispose of any property, real or personal, without first securing a permit from him, and that he shall not secure that permit until the property has been valued and a fee paid amounting to 50 per cent of the increase in value. Does calling the amount sought to be obtained as a condition precedent to the sale of real or personal property make it any less a tax? It is a tax; it is a toll. We had an example of this type of tax in my province some years ago when we collected an unearned increment tax. It was a tax which provided for a 10 per cent charge on the increased value of real property. That was collected by the land titles office at the same time that office collected a fee in respect of registration. A solicitor would go there on behalf of a client and give one payment to cover both.

There was a clear distinction between paying the unearned increment tax and paying the fee. I suggest the government cannot bring in this bill in this way unless it first secures from the Governor in Council an appropriate amendment to the message or amends the Act. If the bill is allowed in this form, then I point out to Your Honour that any private member would be free to bring in a bill which would provide for the imposition of what the private member considered to be a fee, without the appropriate message from His Excellency, and the officials of this House would be obliged to receive it. I ask Your Honour once more to read and reflect upon the limitations in the wording of the message:

> —including any expenses or allowances of any advisory committee, shall be paid out of moneys appropriated by Parliament therefor.

This device to raise money in the way suggested does not comply with the recommendation set out here because it cannot in any sense be considered as moneys appropriated by Parliament. I suggest Your Honour might consider these arguments and hopefully rule as I have requested you to do.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has pointed out, the matters he has raised relate to a technicality which he believes can be cured and which need not stand in the way of the House proceeding today with a debate on second reading. Nevertheless, I support his contention that the technicality is an important one. It may be argued that the requirement of approval from the Governor General is antiquated and is something we should do away with in our procedures because, after all, the Governor General approves whatever the government wants him to approve. But so long as the technicality is there, it seems to me we should observe it.

It strikes me also that Your Honour would have a particular interest in this matter because we who are private members do our best to propose matters which cost money. It is amazing the number of problems which could be solved if we could just get the money for them. Your Honour has repeatedly told members of the House that that right is reserved to those in this House of Commons who can obtain a recommendation from His Excellency the Governor General. Therefore, it seems to me there is an importance about this matter that deserves the attention the hon. member for Peace River has asked you to give it.

As has been pointed out, Section 54 of the British North America Act is quite clear. It reads:

> It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any Vote, Resolution, Address, or

Bill for the Appropriation of any Part of the Public Revenue, or of any Tax or Impost, to any Purpose that has not been first recommended to that House by Message of the Governor General in the Session in which such Vote, Resolution, Address, or Bill is proposed.

Standing Order 62, I believe it is, brings forward the same language. It is on the basis of this section in the British North America Act, and our own rule, that great care is always taken with the resolution to see to it that the Governor General's recommendation does cover all the points in a proposed bill that involve the appropriation of money or the imposition of a tax, fee or what have you. As I say, that is clear. Your Honour has to rely frequently on that provision when you rule out of order amendments or bills proposed by private members.

I believe it is also clear that the Governor General's recommendation attached to Bill C-144 does not include the aspect of the bill to which the hon. member for Peace River has drawn attention. Let me read that recommendation:

His Excellency the Governor General has recommended to the House of Commons the present measure to provide for the management of the water resources of Canada, including research and the planning and implementation of programs relating to the conservation, development and utilization of water resources; to provide also that all expenditures for the purposes of the Act, including any expenses or allowances of any advisory committee, shall be paid out of moneys appropriated by Parliament therefor.

Now, that is very clear. It indicates that the Governor General has approved of a proposition under which all the moneys to be used for the purposes of this Act shall be paid for out of moneys appropriated therefor by Parliament. But the bill provides that in addition to that there is another way in which money can be raised. It can be raised by agencies set up under this bill which have the right to collect a sin licence fee in advance. We must not get too much into the substance of this bill; we can deal with that later. But an interesting question is raised when we say, in effect, that it shall be unlawful to pollute the waters of Canada but if you pay a licence fee in advance you may do so. That is a matter of substance. We can go into that later.

• (3:20 p.m.)

My professorial friend behind me says it is a matter of syntax. Syntax, or sin tax. I shall be interested in seeing how Hansard spells it.

Mr. Baldwin: Too much of it will be "sewer side".

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): There is an "effluence" of bad jokes over there.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am enjoying it too, and I suspect that no one in the place enjoys these puns more than Your Honour. Some of us who have been with you on social occasions know your predilection for them.

However, to get back to the argument, which after all is more important than the puns, my friend the minister says the argument is not good. It seems to me that it is simple and clear. The constitution and our rules say that the Governor General's recommendation must cover all appropriations provided in the bill, all moneys to be raised under the bill. But the Governor General's recommendation provides that the only way that the money is to be obtained is through appropriating it by parliament. Then, the bill comes along and provides that a fee or a tax can be imposed on people for the right to evade certain clauses of the bill. The clauses that bring this point out into the open are clause 8, which refers to the possibility of the people who are managing our water having the right to require payment of effluent discharge fees provided under this bill; clause 14 which makes certain provisions for the same type of thing, namely fees for putting effluents into our waters; and clause 16 (2) (d) which provides for effluent discharge fees.

It seems to me that these provisions are beyond what has been spelled out in the Governor General's recommendation, and that in that sense the bill is defective. Like the hon. member for Peace River, I do not think that this fact should deter the House from going on with the debate today, but at some point the government should wait upon His Excellency the Governor General to see if he will not approve of this other aspect of the bill or perhaps an amending bill will have to be introduced. Alternatively, perhaps the government will decide that a sin tax is not really a good things to put into our laws.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): It has been agreed among representatives of the parties that the debate on this bill will go beyond one sitting day. Therefore I agree that, as hon. members have suggested, we should proceed with the debate. I will have the opportunity of consulting counsel on this question and deciding whether or not it would be appropriate for the government to bring in an amended recommendation.

Mr. Baldwin: I will be available tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members for the advice given me. I may say that at first blush, and even without the benefit of the advice of the President of the Privy Council, I have serious doubts about the point raised by the hon. member for Peace River. It seems to me that there may be a misapprehension as to what is sought by this bill. Without going into the matter in great detail or at length, may I say that a recommendation was obtained from the Governor General, as is indicated in the bill itself. It covers apparently those aspects of the bill where a charge on the treasury is sought. My understanding of both the constitutional requirement and the Standing Orders and procedures of the House is that this is required only when a charge is made on the treasury. The particular aspects of the bill to which the hon. member referred do not claim to impose a tax or a charge on the treasury; they seek to indicate another way whereby money can be raised. In this sense, perhaps the prior recommendation of the Governor General was not required at all.

As I said, this is what comes to mind at first blush. It may be that the bill should be understood in this way. I feel that there is more than a technicality involved but, in any event, in view of the fact that there is agreement between hon. members, we should proceed with the debate on this bill. I will have an opportunity to look into the matter later this afternoon and perhaps bring down a ruling later on in the day. For the moment, the discussion on the bill will be allowed to proceed.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, since this is probably the first opportunity I have had to do so, I should like to thank hon. members opposite for their great courtesy and consideration to me, personally, during some portions of the past year which in some ways has been the winter of my personal discontent. I think there is a spirit of consideration, courtesy, and kindness in this House that sometimes is not appreciated by those who are not of this House, irrespective of how often or how completely they may observe its doings. Certainly, the fact that hon. members felt that I was not ready for the fray gave to them an opportunity to show this kindness and consideration. For this I thank them very deeply. I thank in particular the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) who is the official opposition spokesman for the particular portfolio which I have the honour to hold. The hon. member held his guns in some way, having shared some of the same troubles—the only difference being that he displayed much more good sense than I did, because at least he had the good sense only to be kicked by the horse once while I had to have two of the same before I learned any lesson at all.

As all hon. members of this House, I am here because I feel there is some purpose that I want to fulfil in being here. And certainly one of the reasons for which I am very happy to be back, and for which I was anxious to come back, is that I could play some small part in the fulfilment of the great need that exists in our country to improve the quality of our environment, of our waters, and to enable the passage of this Canada water bill, which I think will be a considerable step in that direction.

I look upon this measure as a great test of the ability of our instruments of government and legislation in Canada to deal with the real problems that affect human beings in this so-called post-industrial era. It was Carlyle who said that "the history of the world is but the biography of great men". In our reading of history to date, Carlyle's cynicism would probably be substantiated. The test of the todays and the tomorrows, I suggest, is whether or not we have moved beyond this stage of human development; whether ordinary men, such as most of us are, can move the instruments of State to meet the human problems which affect the quality of life, and will make this planet a fit, gracious and worthy place for the family of man. The quality of our environment, and our ability to control its use for mankind, is one of the great tests of the times on this issue of the adaptability of our instruments of government to improve the quality of life.

We are far from the first to see the problem, or we are certainly not the first to act upon it, though clearly not enough has been done. As early as 1876 a forward looking Tory government—and there were forward looking Tory governments in those days—by an Act of the government of prime minister Disraeli in the United Kingdom passed the Rivers Pollution Act. So, even that early the problem was seen and action was taken.

As early as 1866, John Ruskin, who has sometimes been hailed as "the most complete human being since Da Vinci"—be that as it may, there is no doubt but that this sensitive and learned critic of the arts, economist, social philosopher and philanthropist—was one of the most perspicacious and articulate observers of the human scene. In his preface to the "Crown of Wild Olives" written in 1866 he wrote the following:

> Twenty years ago, there was no lovelier piece of lowland scenery in south England, than that immediately bordering on the sources of the Wandle, and including the lower moors of Addington and the villages of Beddington and Carshalton with all their pools and streams. No clearer or divener waters ever sang with constant lips of the hand which "Giveth Rain from Heaven . . .". I have never seen anything so ghastly as the slow stealing of aspects of reckless, indolent animal neglect over the delicate sweetness of that English scene; nor is any blasphemy or impiety, any frantic saying of godless thought more appalling to me, than the insolent defiling of those springs by the human herds that drink of them. Just where the welling of stainless water, trembling and pure like a body of light enters the pool of Carshalton—just in the very rush and murmur of the first spreading currents, the human wretches of the place cast their street and house foulness, heaps of dust and slime, and broken shreds of old metal, and rags of putrid clothes; they have neither the energy to cart it away, nor the decency to dig it into the ground, thus shed into the stream to diffuse what venom of it will float and melt, far away, in all places where God meant those waters to bring joy and health.

These words were not written about Lake Erie or the Ottawa River or St. Lawrence River last week; as indicated, they were written by Ruskin in 1866. But we, of course, have done an even better job than was accomplished by that "human herd" to which Ruskin refers. With all the advantages of industrial and technological progress we have been able to do a real job on our waters. We have accomplished this more perfect desecration in the name of the twin deities of our times, namely, "Profits" and "Standard of Living."

Now I suggest, Mr. Speaker, has come the time of reckoning. The date has arrived when the debt must be paid, the mortgage must be discharged, or foreclosure is at hand—not only foreclosure with respect to the waters themselves, but even the foreclosure of those very twin deities themselves, of profits and standard of living. Because, of course, there will be little of either profits or standard of living unless we do, in fact, reclaim our environment in general, and our waters in particular.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege today to move second reading of the Canada water bill, the most extensive piece of water legislation since Confederation. I begin the debate on this bill with a great sense of urgency, and with the knowledge that what we say and do here over the next few weeks will affect the lives of all Canadians for decades to come. We must act, and we must act today, to rehabilitate, to protect and to develop our priceless national heritage and our most important single natural resource, our water. The Canada water bill is put forth as the basic policy instrument for all federal water programs, and I think hon. members will agree that we must assure ourselves that by our best efforts here in this house, and in committee, we bring forth the best legislation we can conceive in this complex and often highly technical field.

[Translation]

Water is the medium in which life itself was spawned. It is the major constituent of the human body, an essential ingredient of the air we breathe, the principal feature of our weather, the habitat for a myriad varieties of life forms and a major factor in all of man's undertakings.

It is, on the one hand, a source of awesome violence through deluge and flood and, on the other, an object of unparalleled natural beauty and the fount of spiritual rejuvenation for people of all ages.

For millions of years, man, like the more primitive animals before him, has lived along the shoreline of waterways. It is no accident that the great citadels of every civilization are almost without exception located in the vicinity of a major water body. But, as with so many of the bounties of nature we have grown so accustomed to its presence that we fail to give it the attention and respect it deserves.

In time our indulgence, apathy, neglect and abuse have produced a resource that has sunk from being an object of beauty and utility to an unsightly and malodorous witness to the failure of man on his own planet. Far from being a source of inspiration, many of our rivers and lakes are the source of discontent and frustration and at times even a danger to our health and well being.

This is the situation with the once beautiful waterways that surround this very House. Debris, odour, dead fish, and high bacteria count are the normal summertime conditions surrounding many of the country's finest cities and even the very capital of this nation.

The time has come when every government, every industry, and every citizen must act in concert if we are to roll back pollution and thereafter manage our water resources for the optimum benefit of those who would use this precious heritage today and who will require it in our tomorrows.

[English]

Yes, Mr. Speaker:

The tide of public opinion has risen sharply on this issue and we must, as Shakespeare warned us, take it "at the flood" for if we do not do so now we shall indeed, in the words of the Bard, find our lives "bound in shallows and in miseries."

How did all this happen? How has this most urgent of national problems arisen in this, as well as other, lands? At the beginning of the nineteenth century, when all of Canada was sparsely populated and none of her waters congested, there was water enough to drive logs, turn water-wheels and provide fish for our ancestors. But I have mentioned already, Mr. Speaker, our ancestors were then few, and the industries were indeed tiny. Waste, both human and industrial, was swallowed up by our rivers and quickly purified.

But as the population grew, villages expanded into cities and little saw mills became huge pulp and paper factories. However, our attitudes with respect to water and our practices did not change thereby. The new cities assumed that the nearby waterbody could still easily dispose of their waste, and they dumped in their leavings, in new abundance and untreated. Small industries, grown large, assumed that because a river could handle a few tons of sawdust and bark chips a day, it could as easily handle several hundred tons of wood fibres and sulphite effluent. More industries and more cities joined those already there. Hydro plants converted the fast flowing rapids, which rivers once used to cleanse themselves, into stagnant head-ponds, and each time another rapid was castrated bringing more hydro power, we cheered—and called it progress.

The process went on and on with few attempts to alleviate it—and few people really cared. Until one day in the late 1960's, we awoke to find parts of the great lakes choked with the algae grown on the phosphates from millions of automatic washers. Then, we paused and rubbed our eyes and looked at the Ottawa River flowing by the very windows of our own Parliament Buildings. Once the noble and mighty, roaring stream that Champlain saw had now turned into something short of a waste disposal ditch.

[Mr. Greene.]

I believe we now realize that we have all erred. We have failed to plan the use of our waters. The time has surely come to pay the piper and redeem the wrong of yesterday.

For our flowing waters have many uses. Most of our rivers and lakes are used for recreation; for drinking water; for fishing; for irrigation; for hydro power generation; and yes, quite properly also for the disposal of waste. Not all of these uses can be reconciled easily. And yet they must be. This is our task. We do not question the use of streams for recreation or drinking or irrigation or hydro power or waste disposal. Yet each one of these uses may conflict with all of the other uses.

Seeing the pollution, many people now consider waste disposal to be an illegitimate use of water. But waste is an unavoidable factor of our modern way of life. Matter cannot be created or destroyed. Whatever we build, whatever we use, must somehow be disposed of, and disposal to most of us means getting our ugly discards out of our sight. We inevitably turn to water to transport this residue to the sea.

Waste disposal is not necessarily an illegitimate use for water and it does not necessarily interfere with other uses for water because our waterways, if not overloaded, can purify themselves. It is only when the natural ability of water to cleanse itself is surpassed that we find this use of water interfering with other uses of that precious resource.

All of this makes one point very clear. Our water must be so used as to ensure the maximum stream of benefits to all of the users for all of the purposes for which water is required. This optimization can only occur if we have comprehensive planning to achieve our goal of multi-purpose use. We must look at each basin as an integrated whole. We must examine all the uses which can be made of each basin. We must plan for the future so as to achieve the greatest long-term net social benefit of our water resources. The Canada water bill will allow us to do this—to plan together with the provinces firstly the optimum utilization of our water resources, taking into account all the uses which can be made of our water; and secondly, the re-establishment of water quality to preserve the best balance among these uses.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are facing a costly problem and we shall not avoid it. It will cost Canadian society some billions of dollars over a period of time to deal with its water resources in a rational way, and to undo the damage we have done in the last hundred years. But let us think of the alternate cost, that of doing nothing. To begin with, doing nothing is a threat to our entire way of life, and, yes, perhaps to life itself. Eventually, if we do not act to clean up air and water pollution, if we allow our environment to run down further we may upset the ecological and climatological balances of nature upon which life itself depends.

But even if the problem we face has not yet reached this peak, there are huge social costs involved. It is not hard to imagine the day—nor far off if we do not act—when there will be no place within easy range of our cities where a person can go to swim in a natural river or lake, or any accessible place where fish can still live, or any place to just walk beside a pleasant stream. Our society will have its two cars in every garage but there will be no fit outdoor place to which to drive them. Yes, we will have our superclean, automatically washed clothes, but will there be any place fit to walk in these snow white garments? These are staggering social costs, costs that neither we nor our children will have to pay, if we act now.

Then, too, there are the purely monetary costs. Water despoiled by man must be cleaned again for his own use. The cost of purifying the water we have first made dirty is high. How much better to clean up our effluents before we put them into our rivers. For we then have the double benefit of clean water while it is in the stream, and drastically lowered purification costs when we want to use it again.

There are other monetary costs as well. The salmon run in certain maritime rivers may be dying because of our pollution. With it would die a source of revenue as well as of pleasure. Our other fisheries are also threatened by pollution, and with them would go the livelihood and the way of life of thousands of Canadians. Our tourist industry depends in no small part on the cleanliness of our streams, rivers and lakes, and I need not remind this House of the importance of that industry. I say this, Mr. Speaker, we cannot afford not to plan for the future! For that future, without the use of our most important single resource, water, would be a bleak one indeed!

The problem has arisen from the unwise use of resources that come to us free of charge. The lesson which we can learn from the past is a vital one. It is simply this, that the unplanned and uncontrolled use of our resources, even though they come free, as does water, can lead us to disaster. The first principle of the Canada water bill, and of the thinking of experts of all persuasions across Canada, is that no longer can we afford the unplanned and uncontrolled use of our water resources. No longer can each individual, each industry, each municipality, use our water resources as each sees fit. In that absolute and laissez-faire freedom lies the mistake of the past, and the disaster of the future. Those who use our waters must pay for that use, either by cleaning up what they discharge into our river basins, or by paying others to clean it up for them. This is the very gist of the Canada Water Act and the essence of its structure, that the user must pay for cleaning the water, for putting it back into the condition in which he found it and for improving it if indeed it requires improvement. The result, it is true, may be higher direct costs for certain goods and services. But as we look at these costs, we must remember that there will be savings to other users of the water who also have a right to expect that the water they receive will be clean and in good condition when it reaches them. We must remember, too, that there is no way we can avoid these costs and still maintain the quality of life. Everyone in society must eventually pay; this is the thing we must remember, and all of society will thereby gain.

How do we plan to proceed to achieve these things to which I have referred in general under the Canada Water Act? We have been engaged for many months in developing a plan of attack on these problems. This plan is encompassed in the Canada Water Act. But before I describe the bill to you in some of its major aspects let me describe for you—because it may be helpful to hon. members of the House—how we approached our problem.

Physically or geographically, Canada represents in some ways a highly unique case in the problems of water resource management. We have a small population, yet we are endowed with huge river basins and enormous water resources. We have exploited these water resources one at a time to further our economic development. Our rivers have been transportation routes for our largest single industry, pulp and paper. They have provided the vast amounts of hydroelectric power necessary to operate the extractive industries which have helped to give us the standard of living we enjoy. Yes, in some ways our waters, and our rivers in particular, have been the very backbone of our economic development.

Water Resources

However, the magnitude of our water resources and the exceptionally heavy use we have made of them have produced problems of proportional magnitude. So, the first factor we must face is that of the enormity of the problem and the historical nature of the background which has led to it.

The second factor we must face is that, by its very nature, water admits of many uses. Not all, as I have said before, are compatible one with the other. This problem is compounded by the fact that our water resources are so large that a single river may be called upon to fulfil many uses in its journey to the sea. It may be used to transport logs, cool a thermal electric plant, generate hydroelectricity, provide water for cities, irrigate farm lands and carry industrial waste. Each of these different uses requires a different standard of quality and different controls of river flow volumes. Moreover, different river basins will have different mixes of these uses.

This suggested to us and to the planners, the key principle that must be incorporated into the act. Obviously, the key principle is that of flexibility. This we tried to build into this legislation. We cannot impose the same formula on all waters in Canada, because our diverse waters have widely divergent uses and pass through widely different areas. It would, for example, be unreasonable and impractical to expect a busy harbour surrounded by a large city to attain the same degree of purity as a mountain trout stream. Its uses are vastly different. Society would be ill served by imposing the level of quality appropriate to Lake Louise on Hamilton Harbour. Nevertheless, because of their great volume, the effluents entering Hamilton Harbour will very likely require more treatment, and to a higher standard, than will the small volume of effluents entering Lake Louise. The Canada water bill, therefore, provides that we undertake comprehensive planning on a basin-by-basin basis.

There is a second key factor in the bill as we have conceived it, Mr. Speaker. It postulates that we first establish the present and future uses of a body of water. Then, in consultation with all interested parties, we plan comprehensively to optimize its use so that we may derive the maximum benefits.

The second problem we were faced with, was a problem that is very unique to Canada. Just as Canada faces a unique physical environment, so too does it face another unique situation. When the British North America Act was written, no one could possibly have anticipated the problems we face today over water resources. Indeed, in 1867, water was so plentiful and clean that it would have been difficult to imagine that it could ever require the attention it now does. Consequently, little attention was paid to water as such in the B.N.A. Act. The right hon. gentleman opposite has sometimes suggested that the Prime Minister of that time was not much interested in water, anyway. Perhaps that had something to do with the constitutional deficiency.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He probably thought it was not pure.

Mr. Greene: In some ways, Mr. Speaker, water was a natural resource and as such came within the ambit of provincial responsibility under the B.N.A. Act. The boundary water treaty, and the realities of the situation itself, gave to the federal government many responsibilities concerning our boundary waters with the United States. International waters, in many of their aspects, came under federal jurisdiction by virtue of our constitutional responsibility for international affairs. The B.N.A. Act did, indeed, assign to the federal government specific legislative authority over certain aspects of our waters. In particular, it gave us control over navigation, fisheries, and over waters which cross from one province to another and which are subject at least to federal mediation and, for some purposes, federal control.

Thus, as with many other subject matters, the jurisdictional responsibility for water is divided between the federal and provincial governments. This is the most important single aspect of the constitutional environment within which we must work. This situation suggested another vital principle which had to be incorporated into the Canada water bill, namely, that we in the federal government must approach water problems in a co-operative spirit with the provinces. No one level of government is capable of handling all problems pertaining to a river, especially if they pertain to an inter-jurisdictional river.

The bill, accordingly, has been conceived to take clear recognition of the fact of the split responsibility. Responsibility is split between the provinces and the federal government and we must recognize that if we are really to do the job of re-establishing our waters. The bill establishes the framework for intergovernmental co-operation which is vital to its success and the management of our waters. We have invited the provinces, municipalities, the private sector, and citizens generally to comment upon the bill and suggest changes they feel are necessary. We have had discussions and experienced excellent co-operation with the provinces. I feel very certain that this kind of co-operation will continue because they are as determined as we are to get at the source of this problem and do the job that is required.

In the past, Mr. Speaker, our constitution has been both a stumbling block and whipping post when we talked about questions of water. I am confident, in view of the urgency of the problem, that we can look forward to a sense of dedication and co-operation which will enable us to overcome any constitutional problems in this area. We have found in great measure, as I have said, in our discussions with the provinces this desire to overcome constitutional limitations in order that we can get on with the job. I firmly believe that whereas the constitution in the past may have been a barrier to action, under the aegis of the Canada Water Act it can be a bridge towards co-operative action and the solution of these problems.

We must also accept the fact that there is obsolete legislation, and that there have been obsolete ideas in the realm of government itself, especially with respect to questions concerning water. The obsolete ideas revolve around the concept of non-comprehensive or single use planning as well as the concept that one level of government can take sufficient action to remedy the defects.

Consequently, the Canada Water Act replaces and repeals the Canada Water Conservation Assistance Act which was based on single purpose planning and used largely to build small flood control works. For today's pressing need, that act is too rigid and narrow. Its basic concept, that the federal government was excluded from participating, except as a banker, limited the ability of the federal government to tackle the real problem.

It is encouraging to note that already we have commenced co-operative joint studies on the Okanagan and Fraser Rivers in British Columbia and that consultation on the Qu'Appelle River in Saskatchewan and the Saint John River in New Brunswick are under way. All around us there is reassuring evidence of the willingness of the provinces to co-operate and of moves in new legislative directions. The Canada Water Act will enable the federal government to do its share.

How do we envisage that the Canada Water Act will operate? What will be the mechanics of establishing and ensuring federal-provincial co-operation; of determining priorities, of planning and implementing our plans?

We envisage ten federal-provincial joint consultative committees, one for each province. On each of these committees there will be three federal and three provincial members from high official levels. These committees will be charged with determining priorities for research data collection, planning and implementation, and they will report directly to the provincial ministers in charge of water, and to the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. They will meet frequently enough to decide on what new projects or plans need be undertaken or to hear progress reports on those already under way. We must no longer allow conflicts in objectives and priorities to hinder co-operative action. These must be resolved by continuing discussions and negotiations.

Let us suppose, so that we will understand it better, that a joint consultative committee has decided to assign a high priority to a particular river basin. In all probability a joint planning board would then be established by formal agreement for that particular basin. The members of these boards might come from both the federal and provincial governments, and from the private sector as well if that would be beneficial. It would be the task of each board to draw up a series of detailed plans for the comprehensive management of the resources of that river basin, for the alleviation of problems which may have arisen and for capturing the full potential of each basin. A report from this board would also include recommendations as to cost benefits, an examination of alternatives and a plan for implementation.

The planning report would then be submitted to the appropriate governments for approval of any plans and a detailed agreement for implementation could then be signed by the appropriate governments, federal and provincial. Once such an agreement had been signed, implementation could begin, supervised either by the planning board or by a similar implementing board.

Even though the pervading spirit of the bill is co-operation, the federal government cannot avoid its ultimate responsibility to take decisive firm action when and where necessary. Two such actions are provided for in the bill.

First, if a recalcitrant individual, firm, or agency persists in depositing wastes in contravention of the prohibition, specifically included in this federal statute, a fine of $5,000 per day for the initial day and each subsequent day can be levied in the courts. Furthermore, the courts are empowered to order compliance and to order cessation of activities if necessary.

Second, if a province steadfastly refuses to co-operate where the federal jurisdiction is clear, and where there is a significant national interest involved, the federal government reserves unto itself the right to move unilaterally on certain aspects of water resource management.

No other position is open to us. We must have the ultimate power to clean up international and boundary waters and major interprovincial rivers. In particular, we must be able to say to our southern neighbours soon "We are cleaning up and managing our portion of these shared waters and we expect you to do the same." I believe that under the aegis of the Canada Water Act we can in fact develop these international waters jointly with the United States and thereby gain a greater net benefit for both countries. We could not allow an unco-operative provincial government to veto such action indefinitely to the detriment of Canada as a whole. But this situation, we expect, will never occur, as the enthusiasm and co-operation we have to date found in the provinces indicates very clearly that unilateral action is not likely to be required.

These are the general provisions of the Act for comprehensive planning based upon maximizing the utilization of a water basin in the best interests of the people who live along it, and of Canada as a whole. I am sure we all agree, as I have tried to state earlier in general terms, the single gravest water problem we face today is the problem of pollution. To this end, we have included in the bill a number of special provisions for dealing with pollution.

There are only four things man can do with the vast tonnage of waste he produces daily; burn it, bury it, wash it away, or put it into orbit. He is busy doing all four but by far the greatest quantity is washed away into our lakes, rivers and groundwater, each draining eventually into the sea.

The problem before us is to devise a method compatible with our free enterprise system that efficiently and effectively yields optimal levels of water quality under a wide variety of conditions. We have also sought to leave industry a series of options and yet to distribute the cost of pollution abatement equitably throughout society. We have sought also to allow local views and opinions to be registered without permitting any region to choose the course toward gradual environmental degradation.

The essential elements of this federal model for pollution control, or as we prefer to call it, water quality management, are as follows:

1. We will designate each water body jointly after consultation with the provinces, and where necessary with the provinces, on a sequential basis so that we can concentrate on the most serious pollution problems first.

2. We will negotiate agreements establishing joint water quality management agencies for each area or collection of areas using provincial machinery as the basis whenever and wherever it is adequate and adaptable. Local participation, which is essential, will be strongly encouraged.

3. The senior levels of government will jointly establish guidelines and procedures to be used by these agencies in arriving at water quality objectives, effluent standards, effluent fees and treatment charges. This procedure is provided in lieu of rigid uniform standards, which economists and ecologists both insist are inefficient and impractical in a country as large and varied as Canada.

4. Each agency will be instructed to develop and to submit water quality management plans for the designated area recommending the optimal level of water quality for a series of target dates and taking into account the full range of future uses for the water body considered. This same plan will project future waste loads along the entire water body, the degree of treatment required, the schedule of fees for the deposit of wastes in the water body, the additional waste treatment facilities required, and charges for the use of these facilities.

5. These plans will be submitted to the federal government and the provincial government in question for approval. At this point the senior levels of government can insist upon equity, consistency, and avoid the dangers of pollution havens by insisting upon high levels of quality and treatment.

6. Once the plan is approved the agency would be instructed to implement it and enforce the standards contained therein.

Each agency will be provided with the capability for analyzing and planning its own water quality program for subsequent governmental approval, and thereafter for constructing and operating waste treatment facilities. In most instances existing provincial and municipal pollution control authorities and facilities can be utilized. Then, too, agencies will be required to enforce the regulations including the inspection of plants and the analysis of water quality. Some of these functions can be centralized. Others will be more efficient if decentralized. The precise arrangement can be worked out through negotiations with the provinces under the flexible terms of the Act. To repeat, the objective is to achieve optimal water quality levels for each water body efficiently and effectively. This new statute is the enabling framework, the vehicle for joint co-operation.

Once a water quality plan is implemented, the producer of goods and services who must dispose of wastes will have four options:

(A) to treat his wastes to such a high degree of purity that he would be permitted to discharge them freely into the receiving waters.

(B) to partially treat his wastes and pay a fee for depositing these wastes into the water body.

(C) to deliver his wastes to communal treatment facilities and pay the appropriate charges.

(D) to change the waste producing process so that the waste is eliminated or changed to a harmless form.

With these alternatives, the waste disposer can opt for that scheme or combination of schemes which best suits his own situation. No central authority dictates the selection. Indeed, it is inconceivable that the federal government could make such decisions efficiently for the thousands of waste disposers across Canada.

I think a word of explanation is required here, Mr. Speaker, in respect of these fees. One of the hon. gentlemen opposite has already expressed some fears in this regard. At first glance they may appear to those not familiar with pollution control as a licence to pollute. On the contrary, they are the device which forces the waste disposer to pay the full cost of maintaining water quality, because the fees paid are used by the agency to construct plants or to take other action to provide a better quality of water.

By carefully constructed schedules of fees, depending upon the quantity and kind of waste, and the self-purifying character of the receiving water body, the waste disposer can be forced to pay a fee sufficiently high to permit the water quality management agency either to treat the waste itself or cleanse the entire water body if necessary. We shall not dictate the method to the firm or the municipality but we shall insist, as I said earlier, on the first principle of the bill, which is that the polluter pay the full cost of cleaning up the waste. Indeed, the schedule of fees can be set prohibitively high for certain wastes to ensure that such wastes are totally excluded from water bodies, if necessary.

Because these schedules of fees can be periodically revised upward, a higher degree of treatment of wastes can be induced as needed to achieve the water quality objective even when additional industries and municipalities continue to crowd around a water-body. In this way, the entire process is self-adaptive, an essential feature for a country like Canada that has vast undeveloped areas and yet a rapidly expanding population and a dynamic industry.

Furthermore, this system of fees and charges will permit each agency to become self-supporting after an initial transitional period. In addition, this scheme forces the waste disposer, whether an individual, a firm or a municipality to pay the initial cost of pollution abatement directly. The waste disposer may transfer these costs to the consumer of the goods and services he produces either through consumer prices or local taxes. In this sense, as I said earlier, pollution will become, as it should always have been, a cost of production. The forces of the open market, so essential in a free enterprise system, will be brought to bear to bring efficiency into pollution abatement.

The statute permits regulations to be promulgated from time to time to prevent certain substances from being deposited in designated areas. I would call Your Honour's attention to a specific problem which has been highlighted in recent weeks as a result of the report on the Great Lakes by the Advisory Board to the International Joint Commission. Phosphates from detergents and fertilizers, as well as human and animal wastes, have been identified as the culprit in the aging of lakes and particularly in fostering the growth of algae. Two courses seem open to us: either to call for more extensive treatment of wastes containing phosphates or to restrict the use of phosphates. Either of these courses is possible under the Canada Water Act in areas designated as areas of water quality management. Only in those areas can we restrict or regulate the injection of phosphates. The more general approach of a nation-wide restriction on use is not provided for under the act as it now stands; as I say, we approach this from the water basin standpoint. The committee hearing this bill may well want to explore the possible advantages of a national approach in respect to some general regulatory power. It may wish to suggest additions to the bill to cover phosphates and other chemicals which fall in future into the same category on a national basis rather than on the basis of a water basin approach affecting particular chemicals.

It will be most interesting to hear the views of the committee on this question because we must take remedial action in connection with phosphates in the immediate future.

[Translation]

Clearly, the federal government cannot and should not be involved in every small basin in the country. It must concentrate its human and financial resources on those areas where the federal responsibility is paramount. I think, for example, of the great lakes—St. Lawrence system where navigation, fishery, agricultural, international and interprovincial matters are of great concern.

The problems of pollution and maintenance of water levels are major issues that the province of Ontario cannot be expected to cope with alone. The very size of the problems involved, aside from the federal government's clear jurisdiction over many of these problems in boundary, international and interprovincial waters, dictates the logic of a strong federal role in the comprehensive solution of these problems.

Management of the Ottawa River cannot be divorced from that of the St. Lawrence. Pollution control problems on this river are some of the most difficult to solve in the country, as has been demonstrated by the frustrated pleas of the municipalities along its course seeking leadership from the federal government in bringing the expertise of Quebec and Ontario together with its own, to solve the problems in a comprehensive way. Again, federal jurisdiction and its responsibilities concerning many aspects are very clear.

• (4:20 p.m.)

[English]

The problems of the Fraser River involve major fisheries interests, an enormous hydro power potential, navigation and harbours, river and estuarial pollution, and flood control. These problems are all interrelated and can be dealt with effectively only within a comprehensive regional framework and with joint federal-provincial action. The federal government is, of course, already deeply involved in the Fraser River problem. An agreement signed a year ago with the province of British Columbia is providing some $18 million for a joint program—50 per cent of the cost—for dyking along the lower Fraser River and adjacent areas of the lower mainland.

The Saskatchewan-Nelson River system crosses three prairie provinces and is the major water source for this vast region. The federal government has legislative authority respecting navigation, fisheries, and agricultural uses of the water as well as pollution which derives from or affects these uses. A number of possible water diversion schemes involve more than one province or the Northwest Territories. Federal involvement, therefore, is required, not only because of the possible size and financial implications of the development, but also because federal jurisdictions are involved.

Several important rivers in the Atlantic region, such as the Saint John, have problems that are both national and international in character and for which federal responsibility for fisheries and navigation are important.

Mr. Speaker, we are active in other areas and on other river basins as well. I have mentioned only some of the most important and biggest projects here. It is our intention, under the Act, to concentrate the resources of the federal government on the large multidimensional problems usually found in international, interprovincial and some major intraprovincial river basins. We believe this focus will yield a greater return on the funds that will be available than would any attempt to assist in solving the multitude of minor issues that are of a more local nature and properly the responsibility of the provincial water authorities.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, from what I have said here today and from what you all already know, it is clear that the problems we are discussing are grave and urgent. Equally, the solutions we must produce are momentous in their scope. It is impossible to make an exact estimate of what it will cost us to pay for our past sins and establish a sound program for the future, but estimates range to billions of dollars.

Nor can we complete the job overnight. The damage it took us decades to do, will, even with our best efforts, take us years to undo. The 1970's in Canada will have to be dedicated to the eradiction of pollution and the rational and comprehensive management of our resources.

Who will pay the gigantic costs involved? The answer to that is that just as everyone is responsible, so in the end everyone must pay.

[English]

Municipalities which deposit human and industrial waste in our waters must do their part. Here very special responsibilities for the clean-up and treatment of domestic and industrial sewage fall upon a level of government that is at the bottom of the fiscal totem pole and often finds itself in difficult financial straits. Through the provinces, which are responsible for the municipalities under our constitution, they will be consulted and must do their part. They must join the national effort, must plan for the future of theirs and our water resources. Yet we realize that the municipalities face a grave financial situation. Consequently, we are taking steps through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to make a large and expanding fund available from which municipalities may borrow under favourable circumstances in order to finance the construction of sewage treatment facilities. The present shortage of loan funds, which some have pointed to as a result of the present financial difficulties and the determination of the government to fight the war on inflation, is temporary and will be rectified.

And what of the individual citizen? What does he contribute to this program and to his challenge of the times? First, we must remember that it is he who makes up the totality of our body politic, and so the quality of our environment must depend ultimately upon him. Each of us has exploited our environment for too long and the cost has become evident. Dying lakes and rivers surround us and the smell of pollution is everywhere. The cost of phosphate-filled detergents is algae choked lakes. The cost of the sixty-page coloured advertising supplement in our daily paper is sulphite liquor and wood fibres in once clean rivers. The eventual cost of our way of life may be its extinction unless the individual citizen is willing to pay the price of cleaning up our environment. It is ultimately a matter of the attitude of the private citizen that will control the whole success of this venture. Public opinion must remain strong on this issue. We must all demand that the job be done and the price be paid if we are to win the struggle.

Having spoken of the responsibility of municipalities and of the individual himself in this struggle, may I now concern myself with industry, so often a whipping boy when we talk of questions of pollution. How often in recent months have I seen the ire of citizens directed at polluters in everything from letters to the editors, to the learned articles and academic publications, and inevitably industry is the villain, industry is the sinner and industry must pay, then all our troubles will be over. How easy and happy the solution would be. Yes, industry must pay its burden of the costs. We must recall that industry in fact is all of us as employers, employees and consumers of industrial products. It is all of us as recipients of the vast sums and taxes paid by industry.

Millions of Canadians work in industry and hundreds of thousands, at least, are owners of industry within the framework of the capitalistic system. Each and every one of us consume the products of industry. To indict industry as the sole culprit, is little more than indicting ourselves, as industry does little more or little less than public opinion demands. More than this, industry has surely not behaved much differently than have we, as individual citizens.

Yes, industry is bigger and will have to be cleaner, and accordingly its clean-up costs will be greater than that of individuals. This is not to defend industry but rather to point out that the corporate citizen has done little different but is only bigger than the individual citizen and must bear the cost in proportion.

Yes, industry must in fact indicate its willingness to co-operate in this great effort to improve the quality of our environment. The private enterprise system, with its inherent freedom, giving the maximum choice to the individual, rewarding initiative and industry—that very freedom and incentive which the capitalistic system has given—has provided a real reward in the highest standard of living that any system known to man up to the time of this system has given.

The system unquestionably has faults. There are those who claim the private enterprise system has lost its sense of purpose and morality. Hence, to some degree the disaffection of youth who refuse to subscribe to its purposes, and the unrest on the street and on the campus. Dissenters from Eugene Debs to the current disciple of dissent, Paul Goodman, have railed at its deficiencies; but perhaps Galbraith has put dissent in more useful terms in pointing to the deficiencies by refusing to tear down the house merely that we might repair the plumbing. He has, as I understand it, suggested reform rather than demolition. He has urged that the great corporations of the private sector who play a paramount part in the direction and purposes of our economy and society must devote a far greater proportion of their leadership, drive and productivity to the public sector as well as to private profit and the benefits to be derived from insiders of the system if the system is to survive in the tomorrows.

This surely is the great test of our times. Those of us who believe in the freedom and the individuality and the productivity of that system know full well that it must divert some of the great energies and production it unleashes to the quality of our life and our environment, as well as to the corporate profit motivation and to the financial well-being of its own. If it does not do so, the alternative will clearly be a greater control by government, more state-ism, and possibly an ultimate state control of the instruments of production which has nowhere, to my knowledge, proved either conducive to freedom or productivity. But if the system fails in these measures and in these directions to play a more useful part in the public sector then it will pass from the scene of history as did the systems of Egypt, the Byzantine empire, Rome or Greece when they failed to serve the people they purported to serve.

I suggest that here, in the Canada Water Act, we have one of the public documents which will help to determine in our time whether industry or the great corporations can in fact play their part in the public sector in helping to bring to our society a quality of life and an environment which is worthy of a great people. I believe they can and will do so. I believe that under the aegis of this bill we will find the co-operation of the corporations and the private sector and that they will play their part in this area of public demand to make this a better land and create an environment worthy of our tomorrows. I think hon. members will agree that this problem is too urgent and too important to become the playground of partisan bickering. I look for no politics in this and I doubt if anyone will derive any great political advantage from a bill as large as this and as costly as this to all Canadians. For this reason I welcome with an open mind suggestions from everyone, and particularly hon. members of this House, on how this Act may be improved and upon what further steps we can take to solve our problems.

We have no clear pattern to present. I do not think any country in the world on either side of the iron curtain has a clear, definite and perfect plan in respect of questions of environment and water control in particular. So, we have created a framework which we think is a valid one and have taken an approach after a very considerable study which we think is best for Canada, but we know we do not have all the answers. I have been in close touch with the provinces. I have received valuable suggestions from them and I expect to receive more. Indeed, it is only appropriate that the provinces have much to contribute to this bill for many of them have already taken great steps in the fight to preserve our priceless water resources. They recognize the problem as we do. Their work in the past has been vital and in the future, in co-operation with the federal government, their work will become invaluable.

I am sure hon. members of this House will also have a great contribution and input to make to the problem and to the ultimate detail of the bill. The fundamental significance of this bill precludes any dogmatic partisanship and I intend to consider all suggestions carefully. I will welcome them all. Oliver Goldsmith, two centuries ago, in bemoaning the loss of spirit and vitality of man in the face of industrialization, said:

> Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
> When wealth accumulates and men decay.

It may well be that in Canada we do have decay in our purposes and in our spirit, with our high standard of living, in respect of things as important as protecting our environment and our water. But I do believe we in Canada have the will to act, and to act in time, if our spirits have decayed and if we have permitted the despoilation of our waters. I believe the will exists and, in fact, that the Canadian people demand that we act and act now to restore and preserve our waters and the quality of our environment.

We are no longer willing to sacrifice the health and beauty of our surroundings on the altar of economic growth or so-called standard of living which serves self but takes little care of the environment and replacing things for those who come after. Here in Canada we have continued for so long to search for that elusive Canadian identity. May I have the temerity to suggest that no identifying characteristic of Canadians would be more worthy than our observable commitment to a recognizable Canadian ethic which proclaimed that henceforth we will include the quality of our environment in our calculus of progress. This, Mr. Speaker, is the essential spirit of the Canada Water Act.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, before I begin my remarks may I ask the minister a question. I hesitate to ask him such a crass question at this time. I wonder whether he could enlighten the House concerning the sum of money the government has in mind as the federal cost of this program in its first year of operation.

Mr. Greene: The Act quite clearly provides a framework. The very gist of it is that polluters will pay for the cleaning of the water. As they dirty it, they clean it up again or pay for the cost of cleaning it up. As I said earlier we do not have all the answers. It may be that public bodies—and I am thinking in particular of municipalities—may require financial help by way of long-term loans or otherwise. I think it should be borne very clearly in mind, however, that the whole basis of the bill is that polluters must pay for the cleaning of the water and the cost they would pay is the cost of production which would be in the future.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I wholeheartedly agree with everything the minister has said concerning the common objective of everyone in this House to maintain the best environment in which Canadians can live. The minister has given us an idea of what he sees in the Canada Water Act and an idea of what he thinks may develop as a result of this legislation. Certainly, no one in this House and no one in Canada will question the objective and the need of keeping our environment clean and our waters from becoming polluted. But whether or not this objective is being achieved in the bill before us is what we are here to discuss and what the committee, to which I assume this bill will be sent, has to determine.

In my view, the bill which we are discussing, the future Canada Water Act, does not fulfill the objectives that the minister has set for it. I believe that the Canada Water Act is a complicated, devious, vague and ineffective piece of legislation. It is complicated because it proposes to set up local water boards which will derive some authority from the federal government, some authority from the provincial governments, but no real authority from anyone. It does nothing to unwind or cut through the maze of jurisdictional division, but in fact compounds the present jurisdictional uncertainty by adding to it.

The bill is devious because it pretends to provide a federal initiative and support for pollution control in the water field, but in fact its provisions are so worded that the federal government gives no leadership and provides no effective financing. The bill is vague because the water quality management agencies which it purports to establish are given no authority or guidance. The powers to raise money are not defined, and these agencies will be left to work out for themselves solutions to problems which the federal government itself should settle for them.

The bill is ineffective because it is based in large part upon federal-provincial agreements, and lacking such agreement in any province the whole bill will falter and fail. No effective consultations with the provinces in order to ensure the success of the bill were undertaken prior to announcement of the government's intention, and the success of the bill is now a matter of pure chance. Support of this bill will be forthcoming from the Official Opposition solely because the government has apparently decided that this is the only basis on which they will proceed, and we must have some action, however feeble, in the hope that the committee hearings will convince the government to make major revisions and to take more positive action in the area of pollution control. Having made this initial description of the bill, I now turn to some more general comments.

The problems of our environment and its pollution are generally considered to be one of the major concerns of Canada and in fact of North America in the seventies. In the past we have had other major problems. In the fifties we were concerned with highways and transportation; in the sixties it is and has been education that has drawn the minds of the people; and in the seventies it will be questions of environment and pollution control.

Control of pollution in the waters, both international and national, of the air, and of the soil, were determined at the Niagara conference of the Progressive Conservative Party very recently to be one of the highest priorities of our party, and to be urgent in the maintenance of the quality of our life. Federal involvement in matters of pollution control has been spotty and uncertain in the past. The first positive steps were taken in 1960 by the former Progressive Conservative government when grants and loans to municipalities for installation of sewage disposal facilities were authorized by legislation. There has been a tremendous advance in municipal treatment and disposal facilities since that legislation was introduced. I was pleased to hear the minister say today that this assistance will be continued and enlarged, so that the municipalities may carry on this very urgent work.

During the past few years there has been an increasing demand for the federal government to involve itself in pollution control as a national priority. There has been insistence that the federal government should take firm action toward co-ordination of its efforts to end the jurisdictional maze in which half a dozen federal departments pass the problems back and forth, and that there should be one agency with which provincial and international bodies can deal. Numerous concrete suggestions have been made, beginning with the establishment of the Council of Resource Ministers in the early 1960's and the Resource Ministers Conference on Pollution in 1966, for the exercise of the federal authority, particularly in areas of national standards, co-ordination of efforts among the provinces, research, monitoring standards, enforcement, and the provision of funds as a national priority. Whenever the subject of pollution control has been raised during the past two years, the shortly-to-appear water act has been quoted as the answer to the problem.

As against this background of desirable objectives which I have just given and which the minister himself has so ably stated today, I would like to look at the shortcomings of this bill, as I see them. While it may seem trite to mention it, the bill deals only with water and does not touch on any of the other problems of pollution which many feel are so inter-related that they cannot be dealt with separately. Even as it concerns water, the bill does nothing to improve the great problems of the Canadian constitution, particularly within the federal area, the jurisdictional maze among the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Department of Fisheries, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Department of External Affairs, the Department of Transport and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. All these branches of the government have pollution control sections, in many cases working independently of and separately from, the other departments and without knowledge of the exact work that the other departments are doing.

The bill does not make provision for the establishment of national standards for water quality, equipment or monitoring. It does, in fact, still leave it for one province or one area of the country to encourage industry because of lower standards of pollution control. In his opening statement the minister stated that there was no provision for the national elimination of detergents, for example, and this, I feel, is one of the obvious shortcomings in the bill.

Neither the papers presented this summer on the Canada water bill nor the bill itself indicate that the federal government is going to put up any money for pollution control projects. This impression was greatly confirmed by the minister's answer to my question. I venture to say that what the provinces want, as a quid pro quo for the entry of the federal government into the pollution field, is money. They and the municipalities feel that they are presently overburdened and that they have a need for a broader tax base which will encourage them to say, "Yes, the federal government should be involved."

This may be a very crass statement, it may be very financially oriented, but I believe it to be a fact. I think that the provincial authorities, in some cases if not in all, will be very difficult to deal with unless they find some financial resource is being made available to them. The financial clauses of the bill, clauses 31 and 32, are vague in the extreme. They are meaningless in the absence of a firm commitment of funds by the federal government.

The general problems of water quality control throughout Canada are not covered by this bill. The scope of the bill is limited to those areas in which a water quality management agency is established. Presumably, other parts of the country will have to wait until their waters are in danger of being polluted or have become polluted before they get attention under this bill. I do not see this as a desirable feature in a federal bill.

No fixed cost sharing formula is set out in the bill for the federal-provincial agreements. This leaves implementation of agreements from province to province and from area to area in a state of confusion. The whole question of financing the agencies is completely left up in the air. The federal government has not accepted any responsibility for financing water quality projects. By this I mean that the federal government has undertaken to pay the cost of incorporating these agencies, $100 or $500 at the most. It has agreed to pay their operating expenses, which I assume are the routine ones of personnel and equipment, but it has not undertaken to provide any assistance whatsoever for projects that may be required.

The provincial authorities may or may not have authority or be willing to put up a share of the projects costs. This is another thing which the bill leaves very much up in the air because the provincial contribution is purely a matter of negotiation. The local agencies are authorized to collect fees and charges, as well as effluent discharge fees, but it is not specified whether they can do this by taxation, and certainly they are given no legislative authority to tax. In fact, it would appear that if the agencies are to operate their projects by taxation on real estate such authority would have to come from the provincial legislature. It is not clear whether the cost of water quality projects is to be borne by taxpayers in general within the water quality area, by those bordering upon the waters in question, or by those who are discharging pollutants into the water.

Speaking of the effluent discharge fees, which have been mentioned several times today, under no circumstances could I approve of such fees for new industries or for any situation arising in the future. I could not agree to creating pollution problems by paying effluent discharge fees. They might be justified in some cases where existing industries or municipalities have done everything they can to eliminate pollution, where the agency can effectively undertake treatment, and where there is no other alternative except closing down and creating unemployment. But I repeat that under no circumstances should this legislation permit a new industry, a new project, to discharge pollutants into our waters simply by paying an effluent discharge fee. I feel the bill should specifically spell this out. This is certainly one of the amendments that ought to be proposed in committee.

I see it is five o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and so I will resume my remarks later.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before calling private members' hour, I might recognize the hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Clermont).

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker by leave of the House, I would ask to revert to Routine Proceedings in order to present a committee report.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present, in English and French, the second report of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

[Editor's Note: Text of foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, Notices of Motions for Papers.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO POLICY STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all notes made at all meetings or conversations between the government or any agency or department thereof and any provincial government or agency or department thereof since June 25, 1969 relating to the policy statement on Indian Affairs made in the House of Commons by the Honourable Jean Chrétien, Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on June 25, 1969.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as the motion indicates it has its origin in the policy statement on Indian affairs presented to parliament by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) on June 25. I am sure that a number of government members, in anticipation of this motion being called, have on their desks copies of that policy statement since it now appears to me, in Indian Affairs activities, the gospel according to St. Jean.

In order that there appear some continuity in the context of my remarks, may I be permitted to read the motion again so that it will appear at this particular place? Disregarding the "humble Address" part, what I want laid before the House is:

—a copy of all notes made all meetings or conversations between the government or any agency or department thereof and any provincial government or agency or department thereof since June 25, 1969 relating to the policy statement on Indian Affairs made in the House of Commons by the Honourable Jean Chrétien, Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on June 25, 1969.

Yesterday the Parliamentary Secretary, in replying to that motion, said, and I think I should insert his exact words here:

The hon. member is requesting copies of notes or conversations between the federal government and the provincial government. Conversations which have taken place up to now, other than that correspondence which will be tabled in the motion for the production of papers No. 63, are considered privileged information and it would not be in the interest of the governments or indeed the Indian people to table this information at this stage of negotiations. Under the circumstances, I would ask the hon. member to withdraw the motion.

Might I comment in passing that, as indicated in the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary, there had been conversations with provincial governments and presumably there are notes as a result of those conversations.

May I reiterate what I said yesterday, and underline the proposition that the government has no right whatsoever, no moral right and no ethical right, to arrogate unto itself the authority to enter into negotiations with provincial governments regarding the affairs of at least a quarter of a million Indian people, plus another quarter million who do not have Indian status as defined in the Indian Act. It is typical of the technocratic and arrogant attitude of the government that it wants to conduct negotiations with the provincial government in secret. That is the sense of the answer given yesterday, that they are not going to disclose to the Indian people any conversations the minister or any member of the government has had with the provincial governments. This information is too good, too cherished, to publish but it is something that deals with the fundamental rights of the Indian people, and is information developed as a result of the policy statement made in this House by the minister.

It is the same old story so far as this bunch of Liberals is concerned. As an example, let us look at 1943 when the federal government, a Liberal government at that time, entered into secret negotiations with the provincial government in British Columbia which was a Liberal dominated coalition in those days. These negotiations resulted in the native Indian peoples in British Columbia losing their rights over mineral resources and reserves. Today, we have the same story, another set of closed door discussions and a contradiction between what the Parliamentary Secretary said yesterday and what the minister has said on this matter. I have here a press release from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development entitled "The Government Policy on Indians—What is the Debate About? A Speech by the Honourable Jean Chrétien, Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to the Saskatchewan Women's Liberal Federation, Regina, Saskatchewan, October 2, 1969."

Now, if the minister was really going to tell the truth about his feelings why tell the Liberal women in Regina—why not tell his own party? I might add, Mr. Speaker, that this speech was so precious that a David A. Munro, who is presumably Dr. Munro, Assistant Deputy Minister of the Indian Consultation and Negotiations Group in the department—there is that word "negotiations" again—saw fit to send the same speech out again under a covering letter of October 30, stating that it was an extremely valuable and important speech which had not been widely reported. I should like to quote from this important speech. Right at the start the minister says:

In June I announced the government's proposals for an Indian policy. I had hoped that a vigorous debate might start over the policy proposals put forward. The debate has appeared, but much of it is not over the proposals advanced by the government. The debate has become clouded because of misunderstandings, misinterpretation, and a lack of knowledge on the part of the Canadian public of the Indian situation.

Today I would like to try to penetrate this cloud and explain to you what was proposed by the government.

This is a speech to clarify the policy statement made on 25 June. The minister then said, "Let me explain", and in a number of short, terse statements tells what is not in the policy. Then, on page 2, there is another series of short, terse and succinct statements, mostly cliches but not beclouded by details, after which the minister asks, "What did the policy say?"

It says that the proposals contained in the policy statement are to be discussed with Indian people, provincial governments and the Canadian public before any of them are implemented.

That is the important part, Mr. Speaker. Then he goes on:

It says that representatives of the Indian people should be involved in discussions with the provinces.

But yesterday the Parliamentary Secretary told the Indian people that it was none of their business what took place during discussions with the provinces, that it was privileged information which it would not be in their interest to disclose. Here are two statements in conflict with each other which reflect on the part of the government, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien)—I regret he is not here to listen to my remarks but I would be prepared to say the same thing if he were here—and on the part of the Parliamentary Secretary, a deliberate, conscious and overt effort to mislead the Indian people and a deliberate, conscious attempt to mislead Parliament. I would not go so far as to say that the government or the minister are not telling the truth but the minister either must be very dumb or be deliberately trying to establish a course to mislead us.

At page 4 of this clarifying statement of October 2 to that great group in Regina called the Liberal Women's Federation we find this:

Indian people, because of past experiences, have a deep distrust of governments, both federal and provincial, and tend to regard the proposals with suspicion.

Well, Mr. Speaker, in contrast with the minister's statement, the statement issued yesterday is certainly not doing anything to move the native Indian people away from their suspicion and distrust.

Mr. Gibson: Why don't you read the rest of it?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): My friend asks why I don't read the rest of it—

Mr. Gibson: The next sentence.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): If my friend would not mind containing his enthusiasm I will get to the next sentence, and a few others too. I know my hon. friend is champing at the bit. He wishes to comment about this notice of motion. He can read what he wants from the statement. I say again that the statements emanating from the government are contradictory. We had one from the government to the effect that the native Indian people should be involved in the discussions with the provinces; yet nothing has been done about getting them there. The minister refused to let them come. Then, we had a statement yesterday from the Parliamentary Secretary to the effect that these negotiations are not the business of the Indian people, and that the government will not disclose what happened. I simply say that this manner of acting contributes to the deep distrust our native Indian people feel for governments, federal and provincial. In case my hon. friend cannot read for himself, the next sentence reads as follows:

• (5:10 p.m.)

In private meetings with representatives of the Indian people I have explained the policy proposals, and I have listened to their comments and criticisms.

Does the hon. member want me to read the next sentence too? It reads:

These meetings have been helpful and many more will be held.

Those statements do not detract one bit from the minister's twin suggestions. He suggested that the native Indian people should be involved in the discussions with the provinces. Neither can one deny that these negotiations touch on the rights of the Indian people and that the Prime Minister, the minister, the Parliamentary Secretary and the whole kit and caboodle of the government and Liberal party have not lifted a single, solitary finger in order to bring one native Indian person into these discussions. Our Indians have been denied that opportunity.

The minister goes on to say as follows, and I am quoting from the last paragraph:

At the root of the Indian reaction to the proposals is distrust of government and Canadian society as a whole. This must change.

What the House heard yesterday, when added to the statements the minister has made about this matter, will go a long way towards substantiating that distrust and suspicion. Is the minister really concerned about his policy statement? I really believe he wishes to bring it into effect. We must not forget that the native Indian people of Canada have generally rejected that policy statement. They say, "Do not proceed in this direction until, in conscience, you have dealt with our fundamental hereditary, treaty and land rights first." If the minister is sincere and honest in his wish to proceed with his policy on Indian affairs and see the matter come to some conclusion, and if he and the government really, honestly want to do something worth while in the field of Indian affairs so that we can adopt a posture towards the Indian people that will not lead them to distrust and suspect us more, then I ask, how can he square that desire with the declaration made to that great group, the Liberal women of Saskatchewan, yesterday? By making such declarations he is not doing a single, solitary thing to promote his cause or the cause of the Indian people. This is a disastrous situation and reflects what I consider gross dishonesty on the part of the government.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. May I at this time announce what the business will be tonight at the time of adjournment. The questions are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—old age security—inquiry as to amending bill; the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch)—federal buildings—Vancouver—new project and "Project 200"; the hon. member for Surrey (Mr. Mather)—pollution—regulations respecting automobiles—inquiry as to action.

The House will now continue with private members' hour.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO POLICY STATEMENT BY MINISTER

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all notes made at all meetings or conversations between the government or any agency or department thereof and any provincial government or agency or department thereof since June 25, 1969 relating to the policy statement on Indian Affairs made in the House of Commons by the Honourable Jean Chrétien, Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on June 25, 1969.

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it might be helpful in my initial remarks if I were to attempt to deal with what seemed to be the point of the argument of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). As I understand it, he contends that there is a contradiction as between the statement made by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) and the statement I made yesterday in this House with respect to the return of his motion. I should like to deal with that. Then, I should like to deal with what I consider is the real subject matter this House must determine with respect to this motion. I might say, in an aside, that I do not think we have to determine whether there is a contradiction, as my hon. friend suggested. That was an interesting point and I shall have no difficulty in demolishing that argument.

What is the narrow point of this motion, Mr. Speaker? Is it whether or not the notes and conversations the hon. member asked for are indeed privileged, or does it turn on whether they should be produced? I shall deal with that matter in the second phase of my remarks.

To illustrate the contradiction, my friend of course went to some lengths in quoting the minister. He also quoted from the report of my remarks in yesterday's Hansard. What the hon. member requests in his motion, Mr. Speaker, and this is a matter of record, is a copy of all notes or conversations between any federal government agency and the agency of any provincial government. This matter, of course, is related to the white paper on Indian policy that was presented to this House by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

The hon. member took some time in making the point that the Indians were not a party to these conversations or negotiations. Of course, that is not the case, and my hon. friend knows it. After all, he should know it best because of the experience of the Indian band in his own riding. He knows well that the Nishga tribal council stated publicly that they accepted the general principle of the new Indian policy. That happened after negotiation and after consultation, and I think my hon. friend knows it.

I think my hon. friend also knows that part of the white paper on Indian policy suggested that it would be desirable for us not to have separate sorts of services for Canadians, that we should consider all Canadians equal, that they are in fact equal, and that they should all have the same sorts of services. For reasons set out in the white paper and enunciated by the minister in subsequent speeches, we were told that those services could best be provided by the respective provincial governments and that if the Indian people agree, in consultation with the provincial and federal governments, there must be a three part agreement with respect to these services, so that over a period of time there may be an orderly transfer.

There has never been any suggestion that there would not be a three party negotiation. In fact, it involved three parties. In his motion, my friend asks for all notes made at meetings between officials of the federal and respective provincial governments.

There is no inconsistency in this matter because the white paper and the minister's subsequent statements have made it very clear that the negotiations would be on a three party basis and that any transfer or change of any kind would only take place with the express consent of the Indian peoples. As a matter of interest, I think the first Indian nation to say publicly that there have been consultations with respect to the new policy was the Nishga nation. The tribal council made that announcement, and that nation is located in my hon. friend's riding.

May I now deal with the other aspect of my hon. friend's argument? There have been, of course, conversations and discussions between the two levels of government and the Indian people. He raised the matter of notes and conversations and also, I believe, the question of memoranda and working papers resulting from the discussions. I suppose the hon. member is asking for conversations and memos made during conversations.

The second matter I now want to argue is whether these should be produced. Possibly I should preface my remarks by reading two paragraphs from the white paper presented by the minister. These come under the general heading of "Foreword". I will read these two paragraphs into the record:

> The government does not wish to perpetuate policies which carry with them the seeds of disharmony and disunity, policies which prevent Canadians from fulfilling themselves and contributing to their society. It seeks a partnership to achieve a better goal. The partners in this search are the Indian people, the government of the provinces, the Canadian community as a whole and the government of Canada. As all partnerships do, this will require consultation, negotiation, give and take, and co-operation if it is to succeed.

That is the end of the first paragraph I wish to read. I halt for a moment in order to underline the fact that the whole matter of negotiations is predicated on a partnership. It is referred to as a partnership between the two levels of government, federal and provincial, and the Indian people. The white paper sets out in the first page that this partnership must be achieved by consultation between those three groups. I now quote the second paragraph:

> Many years will be needed. Some efforts may fail, but learning comes from failure and from what is learned success may follow. All the partners have to learn; all will have to change many attitudes.

The white paper points out it will take some time for this process of negotiation. We all know it will take some time. We cannot change overnight attitudes of 100 years, policies, and conditions which have unfortunately lasted far too long. The white paper sets out, and the minister has said repeatedly, that this is a matter of negotiation between the three partners. During the negociations there will probably be memoranda. When I speak about negotiations between the three parties, I include the ten provincial governments. Negotiations will be carried on with innumerable Indian bands. Therefore the memoranda, working papers, telephone conversations and all the paraphernalia that accompanies modern day negotiations will pile up. The point I want to make, Mr. Speaker, is that the federal government is one of the parties to these negotiations. If we are going to enter into these negotiations with the hope there will be agreement and unity between these three parties at the conclusion of the negotiations, we must not prejudice or compromise the position of any part at this time.

I know the interest of the hon. member for Skeena in the Indian people. I am aware of the interest of every member in this House. I say this as kindly as I can, and with the greatest respect, that by asking at this point in the negotiations for these documents to be produced the hon. member is not acting in the best interests of the Indian people. This sort of process is necessary in order to reach the objective for which all Canadians hope, including the Indians of Canada.

Possibly I could draw an analogy for a moment, Mr. Speaker. These are the things we do every day in our professions, our dealings between federal and provincial governments, dealings between international governments and between private individuals who may have a cause of action one against the other in a civil law suit. These things which are negotiable must be done without prejudice to the rights of another party. Successful negotiations cannot be carried on when one party runs and tattles to the judge about what another party said or did. Negotiation must be conducted in an atmosphere of good faith and mutual confidence.

Although I do not think the hon. member for Skeena intended to do so, it may be inferred from his remarks that the Indian people are not being involved and are not a part of the negotiations. That, of course, is not the case. They are parties to the negotiations. There has been no agreement to change the services provided to them, their status, ownership or title to land, the rights or privileges that they have enjoyed over the years. These will not be changed.

Discussions are being carried on with the provinces and no changes will be made without the consent of the third party because this is a tri-party arrangement. All parties have to be in agreement before any changes can be made.

The hon. member for Skeena referred to a speech made by the minister in Regina. I think it is helpful. The parts my friend quoted were helpful, but they were more helpful to his case and the argument that he advanced. I wish to quote from the same speech. I want to underline what is said in the white paper, that there would be continuing negotiations and consultation with the Indian people before any change is made or any transfer of services is made from the federal department to a provincial government. It is important that we underline this and subsequent statements made by the minister.

I will not quote the same sections as the hon. member. I made a note of what he quoted. I think we both have copies of that speech. On page 4 of the minister's speech we find this:

> What is needed now is a sensible and meaningful discussion about the steps to be taken and to separate the principal components of the problem so they can be dealt with appropriately.

How are we going to do this if, every time a suggestion is made by one party and a counter-suggestion made by another party, or a discussion is held with an Indian band or an Indian band makes a proposal to the federal department, one of the parties, on the basis of proposals which are tentative and subject to ratification and approval by the Indian people, makes them public?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Will the hon. member permit a question? I ask this question because the copy of the speech which I have does not coincide with what the hon. member just read. I believe he read:

> What is needed now is a sensible and meaningful discussion about the steps to be taken and to separate the principal components of the problem so they can be dealt with sensibly.

• (5:30 p.m.)

The copy I have reads: "So that they can be dealt with one after another, or jointly where possible."

Mr. Honey: Well, Mr. Speaker, my copy is exactly the same as that of the hon. member, except for the last word, which is "appropriately".

Mr. Howard (Skeena): It says "one after another" here. More double talk.

Mr. Honey: Anyway, the point with which I want to close my remarks is this: we all have an interest in seeing there is meaningful discussion between the federal government, the provincial governments and the Indians. We all have an interest in making a sensible, new approach. It may well be that the agreements ultimately reached will vary from band to band, or from province to province. It may be these agreements will turn out to be different from the proposals made in the white paper. But we all have a stake in this and we must try to make it work. We must sit down with each other and work matters out, carry on conversations in confidence, respect each other and try as best we can to find a solution to old problems and improve on the old ways of doing things. I do not believe this is possible unless we are able to negotiate on the basis of respect and mutual confidence, as is the case in all other kinds of negotiation.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Would the hon. member mind answering another question before he ends his remarks? It relates to some words I took down; I believe I have them exactly as they were spoken by the hon. member. If he did not use these precise words, he said something very like them. Though he said it kindly, he said I was not acting in the best interests of the Indian people by asking for the notes of the conversations with the provincial governments at this stage of the negotiations, or at this point of time. May I preface my question by saying I spent a fair part of the summer talking with a large number of Indian people in my own constituency and in other areas. I talked to officers of the Nishga tribal council to which the hon. member has referred, and I also spoke to some of the chiefs of the Nass River band which is covered by the Nishga council. It was at the request of a great number of Indian people who wanted to know whether or not they could have this information—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member knows he is not entitled to make a second speech; he has to ask a question.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Coincidentally, I was just reaching that stage, Mr. Speaker. I ask the hon. member this question: If the native Indian people who are concerned about these negotiations were themselves to request this information, these notes about the conversations, would he provide them?

Mr. Honey: I made the comment to which the hon. member referred respectfully and kindly; I want to make that clear. We do not agree but I know the hon. member is acting in what he feels to be the best interest of the native people. To answer his question specifically, I could give no such undertaking because I feel that in negotiations of this sort it is important that the discussions be privileged.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to say a few words about the treatment of our native people. The white paper purports to look toward a three-party agreement. As far as the hopes of the government for the future are concerned I, like the Indian people, cannot be anything but happy about the objectives set out in the white paper. However, I am quite sure that what is bothering the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) and a great many of the Indian people is not the objectives of the white paper but the methods by which we hope to achieve them.

The federal government has offered the Indian people full Canadian citizenship and participation. In this context I realize that some of the native people do not think of themselves as Canadian in the sense that we do. The hon. member for Skeena and I are concerned that in our desire to achieve this end we may in fact take steps which will delay the progress we desire to make by approaching the question strictly from the white man's point of view. If we do not enter into negotiations in the spirit of accepting Indians into the Canadian family, or milieu, as complete equals they will be the first to draw the proper conclusions. At the present time they are experiencing a deep feeling of uneasiness; indeed, this feeling has never left them since the white man set foot in this country.

If we take the attitude that this uneasiness arises from the fact that the Indian is a backward man, incapable of accepting our way of life and, therefore, incapable of becoming a fully-fledged Canadian, we shall fail as miserably as we have failed in the past. I am not here to criticize the white paper but to help put a few guidelines along the nebulous path we are treading. I know the Indian people and I have no hesitation in saying that I love them and they love me. The reason is this: from the time of my birth I have never tried to make an Indian into a poor white man. I love and admire the Indian people because they are great individuals on their own ground; they are great citizens in their own right. As displaced persons from Europe, every one of us, we have no right to tell the North American how he must behave in this country unless we can show him something better and finer. So far, our treatment of them has been far from acceptable to these people. No matter how high and mighty we talk, we are not treating them as equals, we never did, and we are not doing so today. Their distrust is, accordingly, well-founded.

We talk about consultation and we talk about co-operation; we talk about meaningful discussion, but this can begin only from one ground—that of mutual trust. I shall not throw any names around but I know certain people in this country adopt the attitude that in a great many instances the solemn treaties which most of the Indians recognize as their bill of rights are entirely out-of-date and meaningless. If we enter into discussions with the Indian people with this attitude in mind we might as well have stayed home; it would be better to let them suffer the neglect which they have suffered for hundreds of years. We can no longer talk to them with a forked tongue, leading them along like bad children and suggesting in a condescending manner that we are bringing them up to the standards of the white man in the twentieth century. The leaders of the Indian people know they are equal, but it is very difficult to pass this feeling on to the children who are living under disgraceful conditions, in poor housing and in the most degrading circumstances of any citizens of this country.

Mr. Honey: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to be unduly critical or seem to be putting forward a narrow interpetation in respect of this debate, but with great respect to the hon. member it seems to me he is not addressing himself to the point of the debate. The point is whether in fact the government should be required to produce the documents asked for by the hon. member for Skeena. This is not a general debate on the white paper, and I respectfully suggest that the hon. member confine his remarks to that point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I think the hon. member is coming to the point.

Mr. Bigg: I do not intend to get into a technical argument as to whether I am referring to the specific point of the motion. I am here to present, in my inimitable way, several guidelines in respect of the treatment of Indians. I ask Your Honour's indulgence because this type of quibbling prevents us getting down to the meat of the matter.

I believe the hon. member for Skeena is not only trying to flay this government and put it in an embarrasing position but he is trying to get from all levels of government a complete and frank understanding of the Indians' problems. If anything is going on behind closed doors regarding Indians, you can be sure they know about it. I presume the hon. member for Skeena has been asked by the Indian people to attempt to clarify this matter. I go along with his request. As hon. members of this house well know, I do not always agree with that hon. member but I give him the same benefit of the doubt that the minister is requesting. The hon. member wants a similar co-operative attitude to be adopted, and a detailed discussion of this matter.

I am not castigating the ministers of the Crown and I am quite willing to overlook discussions behind closed doors among ministers, deputy ministers and officials of provincial governments so long as the discussions benefit the Indian people. Let me warn the government that it must be made abundantly clear to these people—not necessarily clear to me or to the hon. member for Skeena—that discussions behind closed doors or at open assemblies are taking place for the benefit of the Indian people.

I do not think for one minute that the minister intends, as the white paper suggests, that the Indian people should be allowed to remain in their present abject state. Great efforts are being made to provide them with proper housing. Up to now these people have not trusted us because they have not had the opportunity to raise their families in a way worthy of Canadian citizens. If we want them to trust us in the future, we must make every effort to assure them that we respect their treaties. The Indian people believe they have a broken treaty as far as their rights are concerned.

Mr. Gibson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I submit the hon. member is not addressing himself to the issue before the House.

Mr. Bigg: If in the opinion of the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Gibson) I have not been addressing myself to the issue before the House, I suggest he must be deaf. There are 21 Indian reservations in the district of Athabasca and I assure hon. members that I have the confidence and respect of the Indian people. I am attempting to give first-hand information in respect of what these people think. They think this government and all the members of the House have little or no interest in their welfare.

Mr. Gibson: The minister has been travelling all over the county speaking to Indians. He has done more in this regard than any other minister.

Mr. Bigg: I know he has been speaking to the Indians and I know what he has said. I have read everything he has said to them. I am just giving the opinion of one of 264 representatives in this House. The minister is not on the right track.

Mr. Gibson: That is not an issue of the debate.

Mr. Bigg: You will have an opportunity to speak later. I will be about five minutes concluding my remarks.

Mr. Aiken: They are just trying to stall you.

Mr. Bigg: I understand and appreciate what they are doing, but my skin is thick. It has been toughened by the western winds and the cold of the western north, but I do not speak with a forked tongue. I do not believe this government recognizes Indian treaties. I intend to soon resume my seat, but if I did not say this the rocks of Canada would cry out in defence of the Indian. We must start with a solemn recognition of their treaties before the Indians will listen to us. I know these people very well. They sit quietly and listen; their manners are better than ours. They will sit and listen to the minister and the deputy minister, but they would listen more intently if the government assured them that their treaties would be honoured. If it is suggested that their treaties, signed by the great white mother in England, have no meaning or validity, we will get nowhere.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. Has the hon. member completed his remarks?

Mr. Bigg: No, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Let me remind the hon. member that the debate at this time refers to the production of papers. The hon. member should confine his remarks to that specific subject.

Mr. Bigg: There would be no purpose asking for the production of papers unless the hon. member had a specific point in mind. I believe that his purpose is nothing less than an attempt to prove to the Indian people that we are of good faith. The keystone of good faith in this regard is the recognition of Indian treaties. Unless I am sadly mistaken, my words are easily understood. I refer to the rights of the Indian people.

Let me try in my own inimitable fashion to explain this situation. If there is nothing in those papers which goes against the welfare of the Indian people, they should be made public. If there is anything of this kind in them, we should know about it. Many documents which pass between government departments should not be divulged. There are certain delicate matters which if made public might be disadvantageous to the Indian people. They do not trust us now. They do not believe that when two groups of white people get together they should be trusted.

I do not intend to castigate the government for not producing these documents if someone can prove to me there is good reason for not producing them. I am easily convinced, and I would not be unhappy about such a decision because I respect secrecy in certain matters. This debate has given me a wonderful opportunity to suggest why the hon. member for Skeena moved his motion. The Indian people in Canada are alarmed, and no matter how polite they may be to ministers of the federal and provincial governments, I assure the House that they are deeply disturbed.

We speak of equality. It is not sufficient to speak of equality to these people. We must firmly and ably demonstrate to them that we believe in equality We speak of improving their status. We do this behind closed doors. Such action suggests only that they are not equal and that their status is not clearly defined. Until we demonstrate to these people that we intend to honour their treaties, they will have every reason to be suspicious of us. The key to this whole problem is the matter of the treaties. I say this after 57 years experience of these people and because I love them. I would not have bothered getting to my feet today were it not for the fact that I want to state the truth and the simple fact.

We must make the Indian people believe we intend to honour the treaties no matter how out-of-date they may be. They have lived up to their obligations under the treaties, and if we do not sit down with them and discuss these questions it will be clear to them that we have broken the treaties. We must sit down with them as our ancestors did and make a solemn agreement with them. If we do not start there, I do not think we will get anywhere.

Mr. Colin D. Gibson (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, the belief in free access to government documents is based on the principle that monopolistic control of information, a policy of secrecy, is in fact truly undemocratic and reactionary. Such a policy breeds distrust and contempt for the civil service and government departments. However, I do not advocate the "open access" theory which makes virtually all government files of any description subject to public scrutiny at any time. Such a principle is a denial of the freedom to express thoughts, and inquisitorial attitudes can only spread alarm and a rush to the fireplace with documents. Those who have responsibility for long-term and detailed working papers must be protected from unfair prying and ineffective interference.

Consider, for example, an economist who is preparing a working paper for his department. Suppose he needs the opinion of officials in other departments and in assessing his interim opinion he names certain people as expressing views pro or con on a certain position: then suppose he expresses his interim view and views which are frank but not final. Should those working papers be scrutinized before the official has had an opportunity to fully develop his research material, weigh all considerations and make a decision free from outside, public pressure? I say no, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, such a policy of premature disclosure would inhibit free thought and independent judgment; it would only discourage frankness of expression by civil servants. I respect the right of the expert to work on his projects with that freedom of thought and expression which goes with the nature of his responsibilities.

Surely we have not reached the point where a politically unpopular idea cannot in private be expressed and weighed as to its merits by the officer of a government department. Otherwise all thoughts, ideas and expression of ideas would be weapons to be used in the glare of publicity and in the public, political forum. Government officials are not to be pillaried and spied on. They must be allowed to deliberate in a democratic way as is the case in nearly all businesses and professions. I should like to quote from page 30 of the report of the Task Force on Government Information:

> The Report of the Royal Commission on Security (Abridged) acknowledged the fact of the Swedish system of open access but it did not approve of the principle behind the system.
> "We would view suggestions for increased publicity with some alarm. We think the knowledge that memoranda might be made public would have a seriously inhibiting effect on the transaction of public business. We believe that the process of policy-making implies a need for wide-ranging and tentative consideration of options, many of which it would be silly or undesirable to expose to the public gaze . . ."

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I oppose this motion and suggest it is six o'clock.

[Mr. Gibson.]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

WATER RESOURCES

PROVISION FOR MANAGEMENT INCLUDING RESEARCH AND IMPLEMENTATION OF PROGRAMS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Greene that Bill C-144, to provide for the management of the water resources of Canada including research and the planning and implementation of programs relating to the conservation, development and utilization of water resources, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, I wonder whether the hon. member would mind my not accepting his suggestion that it is six o'clock. If hon. members would bear with me, I should like at this point to deliver words of wisdom which are the result of serious consideration of a point of order raised earlier today by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

When the motion for second reading of Bill C-144, an act to provide for the management of the water resources of Canada including research and the planning and implementation of programs relating to the conservation, development and utilization of water resources, was proposed this afternoon, the hon. member for Peace River raised a point of order to the effect that certain financial provisions contained in that bill were outside the terms of the recommendation of the Crown, and that the bill should be set aside or a supplementary royal recommendation should be presented before the bill be finally passed.

The hon. member went on to say that some clauses of the bill provided for certain fees which in his view constituted an imposition of taxation. The hon. member cited Standing Order 62 which is in effect a restatement of section 54 of the British North America Act. That Standing Order reads in part as follows:

> This house shall not adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue, or of any tax or impost, to any purpose, that has not been first recommended to the House by a message from the Governor General in the session in which such vote, resolution, address or bill is proposed.

In effect the hon. member suggests that a taxation provision must be recommended to the House by His Excellency. In that regard I might read an excerpt from a ruling given by Mr. Speaker Anglin as long ago as April 24, 1878. Hon. members may think it curious that I would make use of such an ancient reference, but the matter was so clearly stated by the then Speaker that I have little hesitation in using it at this time:

> The whole question occurs to me at the present moment in this light. In the first place, I may say that the 54th Clause of the British North America Act, 1867, has no bearing whatever, in my opinion, on the case. It relates merely to appropriations. Honourable Members in reading it over rather cursorily are led into a mistake owing to the peculiar reading of it as follows: "It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any Vote, Resolution, Address or Bill for the appropriation of any part of the Public Revenue, or of any tax or impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended to that House by Message of the Governor General, in the Session in which such Vote, Resolution, Address or Bill is proposed."
> This Clause does not bear on the Question of the imposition of taxes at all; it merely relates to appropriations.

The same principle is set forth in citation 263(3) of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, which reads as follows:

• (6:00 p.m.)

> The 54th Clause of the British North America Act, 1867, merely relates to appropriations, and does not bear on the question of the imposition of taxes.

Again I might refer to Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure, Fourth Edition, footnote (b) on page 412, which reads as follows:

> In the journals of 1873 the governor-general's recommendation is signified to a resolution relative to customs duties in the North-West, through a misapprehension of the meaning of the section which refers only to the "appropriation of a tax or impost," and not to one "imposition" of the same.

May I now deal with the question as to whether the fees proposed in the bill are, in effect, a method of imposing taxation. If we assume for a moment that the proposed fees are a taxation measure, it is my opinion that proceedings on the bill could continue since the only condition imposed on a taxation measure is that it be introduced by a minister of the Crown. Here I would observe that citation 269 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition states:

> No augmentation of a tax or duty asked by the Crown can be proposed to the committee, nor tax imposed, save upon the motion of a Minister of the Crown; nor would an amendment to extend the imposition of a tax to persons enjoying an exemption therefrom be now permitted.

In other words, only the government or a member of the government can introduce a taxing measure and the Governor General's recommendation has no direct bearing on this procedure. On the other hand, I have given very careful consideration to the most important point raised by the hon. member for Peace River in relation to whether the proposed fees do in fact constitute taxation as understood under our practice and procedures. I must say that I am not convinced that they are taxation. May I refer to page 504, Bourinot's Fourth Edition, where it is stated:

> The correct practice, as in the English Commons, is not to require a previous committee when the bill exacts fees for services performed, and when they are not payable into the treasury or in aid of the public revenue. For instance, the "act to regulate expense and control charges of returning officers at parliamentary elections" contains a schedule of charges and expenses, which was not previously considered in committee.

In conclusion, I may say that the terms of the royal recommendation appear to be wide enough to cover any expenditures that may form a charge on the public revenue, and this is the requirement of our practice of the B.N.A. Act and of our standing orders.

Second, it is my opinion, supported by the several authorities to which I have referred, that a specific recommendation of the Crown is not required for the imposition of a tax or for the charging of fees by an agency of the Crown in relation to services rendered by such an agency. For the reasons stated, I suggest that the financial provisions of the bill have been introduced in accordance with the usages and privileges of the House. The bill, in my opinion, is properly before the House.

I thank hon. members for their forbearance. It being long after six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At 6.05 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, when we rose at five o'clock I was speaking of the difficulties in making the water quality agencies work as intended by the bill. In order for an agency to become operative in any given area there must first be a federal-provincial agreement. Next there must be an application to incorporate the proposed water quality agency, presumably followed by the appointment of the members to the agency. The agency will then prepare its administrative structure, hire personnel and start holding meetings. It will then start to prepare plans for water quality control within its boundaries, and such plans will require a great deal of consideration, surveys and research. After plans have been promoted they must be submitted to the federal department for approval, and presumably to the provincial government. Both these governments will have to review the plans, which no doubt will require a further feasibility study within the federal and provincial departments.

I could point out many of the other problems that will be faced when getting into the business of pollution control, but the main point I am trying to make is that this bill adds to jurisdictional red tape rather than taking away from it. While the relationship between the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and the water control agencies is fairly well spelled out in the bill, there is nothing in it which sets out the relationship of these agencies with other significant federal departments which have jurisdiction, such as fisheries, transport and health, and with the provincial and municipal agencies. In other words, the water quality management agencies will in a sense be foundlings and will not have very much assistance or support from anyone else. Their connection with other federal departments and with provincial departments is not defined.

I could point out further inadequacies in the bill, but others of my colleagues will be taking part in the debate and the bill will be studied clause by clause in the standing committee. It is fairly clear, from the preliminary reaction, that some provinces will not easily be persuaded of the federal government's good faith in this bill. I can foresee interminable negotiations with the provincial governments over many of the local agencies. There will not be just ten agreements; there will be many more than that—one for each of the local agencies.

The federal government's austerity measures at the present time, and the minister's own words, give no assurance of concrete financial support for this whole concept, without which I believe no province could reasonably be expected to make an agreement. The lack of a cost-sharing formula and the complications of the bill itself must make many provinces suspicious. But nothing effective can be done under this bill within a province except by a negotiated agreement. Where the agreement fails, the effect of the bill is diminished, and in the meantime pollution problems will mount.

Having made these very broad and severe criticisms one may properly ask whether we have a better solution or a reasonable alternative. I believe that we have. First, we would set up a national department or agency to co-ordinate pollution control efforts in all departments and to deal with water quality as part of this over-all approach. The proposed Canada Water Act is not part of any integrated plan to deal with pollution control; it is just another of the bits and pieces of pollution control legislation that we now have in Canada.

Second, we would deal with water quality as part of a national priority for pollution control, and commit the necessary funds from federal taxation. Third, there is clear and well defined federal jurisdiction over and responsibility for pollution control and water quality management within the provinces, independent of provincial jurisdiction, as well as in the territories and coastal waters. The federal Parliament should be asked to assume this jurisdiction and to act upon it directly.

To be specific, Mr. Speaker, the federal Parliament has strong powers through its jurisdiction over sea coast and inland fisheries, navigable waters, national health, transportation, agriculture, national research, international and interprovincial works and undertakings, the criminal law and law for the peace, order and good government of Canada.

The scattered and widespread federal powers in regard to pollution control—which it has been so difficult to manage—could be the strength of the federal case, not its weakness. These powers, many already exercised independently by numerous departments could, if welded together, form a strong base for a federal pollution control bill. It could assume powers concurrent with, but not superseding, provincial powers. Where provinces are acting, the federal agency could work with them to prevent duplication. Where provinces are not acting, the federal government could proceed within its own field of jurisdiction, at its own expense and on its own initiative, to deal with pollution control as a matter of federal and national concern. I cannot see any province objecting to the federal government going about its own business within a province.

For example, Ontario has an excellent Water Resources Commission which has been dealing with pollution control for about 14 years. At the same time, the federal government has under the aegis of the minister established at Burlington the Canada Centre for Inland Waters and has proceeded with its water quality research and control program without any question or hesitation. The federal government acting within its own jurisdiction set up this centre and there is no objection to it whatever; indeed, the province of Ontario has a centre right beside it. Another example is this: we did not hear the province of Newfoundland objecting when the Department of Fisheries effectively stopped the pollution of Placentia Bay. We have not heard the government of Ontario object when the federal government has taken charge in many of these areas. They recognize that there is a federal responsibility in this area, and I believe they are prepared to accept it.

The federal government is not the natural enemy of the provinces, especially when it is spending money within its own jurisdiction. Neither should the federal Parliament, acting in its own field, be subservient to or dependent upon provincial legislation. That is exactly what we are doing in this bill, because provincial refusal makes the bill useless. At the same time, provinces which are proceeding to combat pollution within their own field should not be limited by federal legislation.

Our alternative to this bill is simply this: we should have a federal pollution control act, or water act, in which the federal power is declared and acted upon. The federal government could then proceed with its own program, at its own expense and in its own way. Provinces willing to act, or which are already acting within their own field, would welcome a partnership with the federal government. A significant example was quoted by the minister himself this afternoon: there is no authority under this act to ban the use of detergents or other polluting agencies throughout Canada.

The federal government certainly has the power, and I believe it could and ought to assume that power under any bill passed by Parliament. The government has the authority to do this, and it is not too late to do so. I suggest that such a provision could very well be included in the bill and that it would be welcomed. In provinces not active in their own field, and there are undoubtedly examples, Canadians would have the benefit of the federal work and protection.

Mr. Speaker, with this clear alternative before it—it has been suggested that the authority is there—and in view of the introduction of this complicated, difficult and ineffective bill, we can only assume that the government is not prepared to spend money or to take responsibility for pollution control, but intends to pass the problem as quickly as possible to provincial and local agencies.

A start has been made. The minister has set forth on a difficult course. We hope he will have a different bill to administer when we have finished dealing with it. Whatever program we end up with, I think I can assure him that this House will wish him well and support him in carrying out the best legislation that Parliament can produce.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have an opportunity to speak in the debate now taking place in the House. Before I proceed any further I should like to say a word or two about the preceding speakers. This afternoon we heard from the minister. I must say it is good to see him becoming increasingly active in the House. We all sincerely wish him a full and complete recovery of health. While I intend to be rather critical of several aspects of the legislation which we are discussing this afternoon, I am quite certain that the minister realizes there is nothing personal in my remarks about the draft legislation before us.

In his speech this afternoon the minister was rather poetic in spots but his message came through quite clearly. It seemed to me the message was that this federal Liberal government has no real plan for solving Canada's pollution problem. It has given up any pretext of leading a vigorous fight against pollution. It is to a large extent unloading the problem of pollution and the related costs on to the provinces and the municipalities. If there are no national anti-pollution standards, there can be no enforcement under an amendment to the Criminal Code. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this government has again proven itself ineffective in dealing with one of the major problems facing this nation, that of the pollution of our environment.

The preceding speaker, a spokesman for the official opposition, made a number of interesting points and I agree with most of them. I, too, feel that this bill in its present form will be ineffective in tackling the grave pollution problems our nation faces. It seems to me that the government has almost deliberately passed the pollution problem on to the provinces. Of course, in doing this it escapes an onerous financial burden which it might not wish to assume at this time.

I listened with interest to the speeches made in this debate. I believe in co-operation with provincial and municipal authorities. We have had too little co-operation in the past. I am not opposed to our setting up groups to co-ordinate federal and provincial activities at any level. However, if we read the debates of three or four months ago we find that the government said there was considerable difficulty in establishing groups which could take joint action on pollution problems. As reported at page 10554 of Hansard, the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatoon-Humboldt (Mr. Lang) said:

> Two years ago the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, now Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), proposed to the provinces that the senior governments endorse the establishment of a national advisory committee on water pollution, with representation from the federal government, the provinces and the universities. This committee would have included in its functions studies on various aspects of water pollution, such as regional and national water quality objectives, the costs of pollution, and the benefits to be reaped through pollution control. The terms of reference of this committee have recently been expanded to include air and soil pollution as well as water.

He went on to say:

> Our proposal included an offer to finance the committee and provide it with a secretariat. Although most provinces seemed to favour the proposal, others did not. This stalemate is much regretted by us since it has blocked one avenue of joint action.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, it has blocked one avenue wherein the provinces and the federal authority could undertake joint action. This afternoon the minister told us that a committee will be set up with each province; we are to have ten separate committees. This clearly indicates that there will be many major areas of Canada wherein there will not be any pollution control at all.

Mr. Lewis: Hear, hear.

Mr. Harding: There will not be any action, nor co-operation between federal and provincial authorities.

An hon. Member: Read the bill.

Mr. Harding: I have read the bill very carefully. It seems to me that many Liberal backbenchers have not taken the time to read the bill or the speeches some of them have made inside the chamber and outside it before the legislation came down would not have been worded so optimistically.

Before dealing with the bill itself, I wish to say that members on all sides of the House have said on numerous occasions that pollution problems in this nation are growing increasingly grave, as they are in other nations of the world. Warnings are coming from any sources. A very interesting scientific report from the United Nations points out that mankind is in serious trouble as a result of pollution. We are polluting our environment to the point that our destruction is inevitable unless immediate and drastic steps are taken to protect every part of our environment. Speaking on the subject of oceanography yesterday, a Canadian scientist said that unless action is taken very, very quickly, the internal combustion engine could spell the end of mankind. He pointed out that not only Canada but the whole world is in trouble in this respect.

Also, Mr. Speaker, one can readily see that there is a problem resulting from toxic pesticides. This government has given precious little leadership in the control of those pesticides which infect our environment. About ten days ago the Prime Minister said that the use of DDT was to be cut back and that the government would consider the problem of other toxic pesticides. This has long been overdue. We should have been doing research into this subject months and months ago. We have waited for the provinces and other countries to take action on DDT and have followed lamely along in the rear. We follow after irreparable damage has been done to our environment.

It seems to me that we have acted this way in almost every field. Take, for example, the matter of air pollution. What is the government doing about air pollution? One or two committees have been set up and there has been a bit of investigation here and there; but no standards are being set. Because in our country a small portion of the population live in a vast area, we seem to think that these problems may escape, may go away for a period of time. You have only to look around to see what is happening in some areas and realize how much they are affected by air pollution. Take, for example, the United States and the pollution in the Los Angeles area. The motor vehicle, chiefly, has created the smog in that area, as has industrial waste. Air pollution has now reached the point where school children under 21 years of age are afraid to exercise for fear of damaging their lungs. This problem is affecting every urban area of this and other continents. How long do we have to wait for some type of leadership to be given by governments in regard to this problem? This government should be giving leadership.

I shall now deal with the problem of water pollution. This bill is supposed to deal with that problem. The problem of industrial wastes, sewage and phosphates lacks any action by the federal, provincial and municipal authorities. This fact is apparent everywhere we look. For example, action must be taken with regard to phosphates; the problem must be corrected now. The detergent manufacturing companies must be approached. New products must emerge from the research which I hope is being carried on and should be carried on with increasing tempo. Reports received by the various agencies indicate that we do not have much time in which to find a solution to this problem.

I wish to point out one or two examples of what is occurring through stupidity, not only the stupidity of this government but the stupidity of people in general who have ignored the problems of pollution. The Great Lakes system is the greatest body of fresh water in the world, yet we have almost completely destroyed it. We do not have to look very far from Ottawa to be aware of the pollution problems that exist. The problem is apparent in the Rideau River and the Gatineau River. It is disgraceful to have a river in the national capital area in such a condition. Nothing has been done to clear up these problems. In my home province of British Columbia there is the great Fraser River, one of the greatest salmon rivers on the North American continent. The lower reaches of this river are nothing but a running sewer. These are the problems that worry Canadians.

I now wish to deal with the Canada Water Act which is now before us and discuss several of its sections. I wish to point out to hon. members where in my opinion the act is weak, in the hope that amendments will be suggested when it gets to the committee stage. The bill we are now debating deals with only one aspect of pollution, namely, water pollution. This is normal; we do not expect everything to be covered under the one act. It is difficult to disagree with the bill, which in my opinion is scarcely more than a new administrative framework set up by the government in the hope that it will eventually solve the grave pollution problems of this nation. No doubt it will provide better federal-provincial co-operation, and no one is opposed to this.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, is certainly not the tough, no-nonsense, no-deal legislation we expected for solving our water pollution problems. It is not the type of legislation the people of Canada were led to believe they would get in the Canada Water Act. This act must be a bitter disappointment to the Canadian people because it does nothing about pollution; it merely sets up another administrative framework to deal with our water pollution problems. As I said before, the bill sets no uniform Canadian standards, no regional standards and gives absolutely no leadership in this regard.

The bill will allow industry to pay for the right to pollute. I repeat, it will allow industry to pay for the right to pollute. This anaemic approach to our water pollution problems is being abandoned by those governments which have tried it. The bill places most of the onus for pollution control on the provinces and municipalities. There is only a vague, general outline of the federal government's position in dealing with the tremendous financial problem which will be caused by pollution control when it comes into effect. It is crystal clear from the bill and the minister's remarks this afternoon that the bulk of the cost will be borne by the provinces and municipalities. This fact alone is enough to severely restrict any major attack on pollution problems for years to come.

I now wish to go back and cover one or two points which I dealt with rather quickly. I wanted to make these points before my time expired. I indicated that I felt the act would be a bitter disappointment to the Canadian people because it does nothing about the problems of pollution; it merely sets up another administrative body. I now wish to state why we are apprehensive. This government has in the past had a bad record which leads me to believe that permissive and not direct legislation is just another stalling tactic. To date this government has had a poor showing in the pollution battle. As a result, Canadians everywhere are suffering from a reduction in the quality of their lives. I feel this permissive legislation is merely an appearance of action on the part of the government.

Time and again this government has had an opportunity to act on the problems of pollution, but it has failed the Canadian people. A number of acts already on our statute books could have been used for pollution control. Hon. members know they have been almost totally ignored. I wish to give several examples of this: we have the Fisheries Act, the Navigable Waters Protection Act, the National Harbours Board Act, the Migratory Birds Convention Act, the National Health Act and a number of others. Each act has a set of regulations that could and should be taking care of the pollution problems facing this nation. In addition to these acts, there are about 14 government departments directly involved in the problems of pollution. However, action by them has been totally lacking. They have been ineffective because of the lack of government initiative. If we get from the Canada Water Act the same results that we have had from the enforcement of the acts already on our statute books, our pollution problems will remain unchecked. We have the power to check pollution, but that power has seldom been used.

The federal government prefers to pass the buck to the provincial and municipal authorities. The question I should like to leave with the minister is: Where do the government departments now fit into the pollution picture? Has the co-ordinating committee been set up? What about the regulations we already have and the various acts covering a variety of government departments? How do they fit into solving Canada's pollution problems?

A very interesting article appeared in the Globe and Mail of last August, written by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis). In his opinion there was virtually no body of water anywhere in Canada under either federal or provincial jurisdiction which did not come within the provisions of the Fisheries Act. He suggested in the article that one or two minor changes might be made, but that the Department of Fisheries was the logical department to deal with water pollution. This suggestion has been ignored. I find myself wondering how the Fisheries Act fits in with the pollution legislation now proposed.

I intend to read one or two excerpts from this article because I think they should be placed on the record. I shall not read the whole of the article because it is too lengthy. I will start with the part dealing with pulp mills, which is as follows:

> Canada's No. 1 chemical process industry is busy putting its own house in order. Let us hope that other chemical-type industries will follow suit:

[Mr. Harding.]

> But why focus on pulp and paper? The reason, in quantitative terms, is obvious. We have no less than 170 pulp mills in this country. They use up more than 80 per cent of all the water consumed by industry in Canada. Also they are responsible for dumping well over half of all the decomposable material thrown into our water courses each year. No wonder that we in the Fisheries and Forestry Department in Ottawa are concerned about the pulp and paper industry and the way it is dealing with its pollution problem.

The article continues:

> The Fisheries Act, must, of course, be applied uniformly across the country.

The minister is calling for uniform standards across Canada. The article goes on:

> New plants should be up against uniform standards wherever they locate. They must be up against the same laws and the same regulations. Otherwise they will be able to seek out the provinces which have poorer standards and exploit their pollution laws.

He is pointing out, with crystal clarity, what we should be doing—the very opposite of what this bill proposes. He goes on to say, as reported in this article:

> Pollution abatement, of course, costs money. And in order to escape these costs new industry has a tendency to go to those places where it can use our fish-bearing rivers as a dumping ground. This must be stopped and the uniform application of the Fisheries Act can be very helpful in this regard.

He then makes other points. I shall read a little further on in the article:

> Our Fisheries Act can, of course, stand improvement. It should include clauses which are anticipatory in nature. And with these amendments, we will no longer have to find dead fish in order to prove our case. We will no longer have to wait until the damage is done to our waters.

The point the minister is making very clearly is that we must insist on uniform standards Canada-wide. What do we get in this bill? Regional bodies are to be set up in the various river basins and will set their own standards. The result will be a hodgepodge of different standards from one end of Canada to the other.

Mr. Gibson: The water is not the same.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Harding: This is one of the weaknesses of the present bill.

Mr. Gibson: You will not strengthen it.

An hon. Member: Look at your own water in Hamilton.

Mr. Harding: Other things have been done by this government. A cabinet decision passed on February 9, 1967, gave the Department of National Health and Welfare primary responsibility for abating water pollution resulting from the operation of federal government facilities. Though we had a different Prime Minister in 1967, a Liberal government was in power. Many hon. members now in the chamber were here in 1967. The decision taken then applied to the departments, the Crown corporations and the Crown agencies.

Since then, reports have been received. Time does not permit me to go into them in detail, but the crown corporations are among the worst offenders in Canada as far as pollution is concerned. There are army camps which run raw sewage into our rivers; yet here we have a cabinet decision giving a government department the right to ensure that things of this kind do not happen. If hon. members wonder why we are critical and apprehensive when we see a new administrative structure being set up, it is because the government has done nothing with the power it already possesses. These are the things that worry our party and which I know concern the general public of Canada.

An hon. Member: There is a difference.

Mr. Harding: I could deal with a whole series of acts bearing on this question. There is the National Harbours Act. What about the dumping of 150,000 tons of acid into Hamilton Bay? What was done about that? Nothing.

Mr. Gibson: You know nothing about it. We are working on it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Harding: In 1909 the Boundary Waters Treaty was signed with our neighbour to the south. It provided for the creation of a commission. The treaty states:

• (8:50 p.m.)

—boundary waters and waters flowing across the boundary shall not be polluted on either side to the injury of health or property on the other side.

Consider what we have in the Great Lakes system. The situation in the United States is as bad or worse than it is in Canada. We have a treaty which prohibits the polluting of these waters, but it has never been enforced because we have a weak administration. This point should be made crystal clear to the people of Canada.

One thing that has worried me is that we have not had any uniformity of standards. I should like to deal with this matter before my time expires. The minister said this afternoon that this measure will lead to the controlling of pollution. That is a little different from my interpretation of the bill. Let me quote from an article which appeared in the Toronto Telegram of November 4 regarding a meeting held to explain the provisions of the Canada Water Act. I am now more apprehensive about the situation, having read the words of some officials of the department. These people were attending a Great Lakes conference at the education centre in Toronto. While newspaper articles can be misleading, this article states that Dr. Prince, a very fine and capable individual, said:

Dr. Prince, an expert in water resources said industries and municipalities and other sources of waterways pollution would be charged fees for the right to pollute.

The article continues:

He said, too, that pollution would not be defined by the Act, but would be determined instead by regional water quality management boards. These boards would determine how much pollution was acceptable in any of their areas of reference.

The article goes on to state:

"If people are not prepared to put any substance, any part of the gross national product into their environment, then they can wallow in their own juices until kingdom come," he said.

That is not my interpretation of the minister's remarks this afternoon. I understood this money was to be used to clean up the problem of pollution. As I read the act, it is to be left to the regional boards to decide upon the fee to be charged in respect of pollution. The article then states:

His evaluation of the act ... caused shock and disappointment among many at the conference.

The article says, further:

—as Dr. Prince explained it, polluters will be able to continue polluting by paying fees to the regional water board "commensurate with the degree of pollution".

The regional boards—whose composition has not been determined—would decide how much the levy would be and how it would be used.

He anticipated that the money would be used by the boards to fight the pollution caused by the feepayer. He suggested the fees would be high enough to make the polluter look to installing his own control.

The regional boards would also have the right to prosecute offenders—and would have the right to do so with degrees of discrimination. They could not, however, force offenders to install pollution control equipment or get out of the business.

What this means, Dr. Prince admitted, is that one regional board, going on its self-established definition of pollution, could force a firm into major expense or even out of business, while a similar firm could pollute with impunity in another region.

Those are not my words; it is the interpretation of a man in the minister's own department. Let me also refer to what Dr. Lee said. He is in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. He said, according to the article:

—the new Water Resources Act was, among other things, a true attempt at creating participatory democracy.

He said that in regions depending heavily on one major industry for prosperity, residents might have to choose pollution over the possibility that the industry would cease operation rather than control its effluents.

"One has to get the consensus as to what an area is prepared to back", he said. "We must sell the idea to the man in the street, who must put his taxes and behaviour toward a better environment.

Mr. Kelly, a member of a group in Toronto carrying out a pollution probe, is reported in the article as having——attacked the requirement for control as unequal and asked: "Should anyone have the right to pollute anything?"

Dr. Prince said they did, if they wanted to pay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House give unanimous consent to the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Harding: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will not abuse the privilege given by hon. members, but there are one or two points I wish to make. As I mentioned earlier, industry knew that a new bill was to be presented. Some people in industry felt that the idea of looking to industry is not the best arrangement of controlling pollution.

There are a number of other quotations I could present to the House this evening. I shall refrain from doing so, on the understanding that I will have an opportunity to read them later on. I should like to point out what I think is a very weak part of this measure. We are allowing effluent to flow into our rivers. Industry is to be given the opportunity to violate the law by paying a fee. The Ontario government has taken some action in pollution problems. Let me read from an article which appeared in the Toronto Star of August 28. It is not a direct quotation of the minister's words but I presume he gave this information to the press. The article states in part:

Ontario companies convicted of pollution offenses should be forced to clean up instead of paying fines and staying dirty, Resources Minister George Kerr said yesterday.

He said his department is considering changes in legislation to force companies to clean up pollution instead of paying up. The changes should be ready for the mid-January session of the Legislature, he said.

I endorse that position. I think it is a very good idea, and that the firms polluting our waterways should be made to clean up rather than continuing to pollute them and merely paying a fee so to do.

Very briefly, I should like to say a word or two about the financial problems, which has probably worried me most. We are passing on to the provinces and municipalities a tremendous bill in respect of pollution. They do not have sufficient money to take adequate steps in respect of pollution problems. Just last summer a number of municipalities made requests for loans to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. In the province of Alberta 12 municipalities had their loan applications turned down because the supply of money had run out. The minister indicated today that more money will be made available. But here we have been set back because of the lack of available financing at reasonable interest rates for municipalities. If the action on the part of the government in the inflationary period this current year is to be the same as it has been in the past few months, we will see on the part of municipalities a slowdown in the establishment of facilities for the treatment, primarily, of sewage.

In closing there is one further point I should like to make. We have a committee on national resources. That committee drafted some recommendations which were presented to this House. They were unanimous recommendations. The committee was composed of members from all parties. I shall not read all the recommendations but I should like to refer to the pertinent ones. The committee recommended that the government draft a code of standards for the cleaning up and the future protection of all Canadian waters. These are not my words; they are the words contained in the recommendation of the committee. The committee further recommended that provincial approval of such a code be sought and that the federal government provide an enforcement procedure, if necessary by means of an amendment to the Criminal Code.

I endorse the whole of the committee report. That particular recommendation, however, runs afoul of this bill. Here a multiplicity of regions are to be established, with each setting its own standards. There is to be no national standard, no national enforcement—nothing. This is what we protest and will continue to protest through organizations all over the country which are becoming interested in fighting pollution and are demanding, regardless of jurisdictional difficulties, that the problem be solved. We shall not let the government get out from under this problem by saying it is a constitutional one which it cannot tackle and which it will pass on to the provinces, thus avoiding giving proper leadership.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, we now have before us a bill on water pollution and water resources, etc. There is no doubt that such a bill is necessary.

At the rate we are polluting our rivers, though knowing that the population in Canada and in the United States is bound to increase, we can ask ourselves what we are heading for if we persist in so doing.

I feel that the bill introduced by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) will not be opposed, although it cannot by itself settle the complex problem of water pollution, since the federal government has no exclusive jurisdiction in that field. In fact, we should ask ourselves to what extent the provinces are willing to fight water pollution.

In my opinion, the provincial governments are aware of this problem. But the provinces, municipalities and industries do not always have at their disposal the necessary means to fight water pollution nor do they have the engineers or technicians required. It is those who are able to pay, those who do research work and give advice who should take the situation in hand.

I was reading recently that only 3 per cent of all the water in the world is fit to drink, of which 2 per cent is made up of ice at the poles or on high mountains. Therefore, there is very little drinkable water available and if we do not take the necessary steps to protect this element essential to life, we will soon be faced with very serious problems since water pollution already exists.

I live in a rather new and small town of northwestern Quebec through which runs a small river. At the very beginning of colonization, sewage facilities were rather primitive, as can be expected; everything went into the river. Today, if a human being or an animal falls into a river, even if it does not get drowned, it is almost condemned to death, so polluted is the water.

This water at home flows into lake Abitibi which is fairly large. It gets cleaned up there, it evaporates but if several towns were established in this region or if the population increased and kept on acting in this way, within a very short time water from lake Abitibi would no longer be usable.

Similar cases are to be found almost everywhere. What proposals are made? Municipalities are invited to build water treatment plants. The National Housing Act suggests a plan under which loans may be granted to municipalities that wish to benefit from such services. Considering that nearly all municipalities are already deep in debt, that they have to borrow money at prohibitive rates of interest, and that most of them cannot pay for the construction of water treatment plants, they must get better assistance.

According to the information the minister sent us before introducing the bill in the House, industries are requested to arrange for used water treatment. This could be the best solution. It remains that production costs will necessarily increase and finally, the consumer will be the one to pick the tab.

We should therefore invite those who are in a position to do so to contribute to that project, either by levying some new taxes in order to help the municipalities to treat their sewage or by making grants and offering tax exemptions to the industries for that purpose.

The Canadian citizen will be unable, in my opinion, to avoid the cost of treatment in spite of the steps which could be taken. There are some technical methods to treat sewage and clean up the water but such facilities can entail considerable expenses.

In my municipality, a saw-mill was set up only a few months ago and it was necessary to equip it with a garbage incinerator. Knowing that he would shortly be compelled to install an incinerator to avoid polluting the air, the owner took the necessary steps in order to ensure the immediate treatment of smoke and waste.

If the new industries at least did the same, it may be that in a few years, the problem of air pollution would be solved. Any new industry could be prevented from locating anywhere unless it committed itself to taking the means required to avoid polluting the air and the water.

According to a summary of biological culture there are three main causes of water pollution. I quote:

First cause of pollution: degradation of the cultural balance.

Second cause: the use of chemical fertilizers which are all acidic and provoke the introduction of minerals into seepage. These minerals are almost always ammoniacs, potash, lime. Yet drinking water has to have among other things high electrical resistance and few electrolytes. Only then can it be safe to health.

Third cause: the disposal of human waste into rivers (fermented dejections from septic tanks and sewage). This practice is perhaps necessary because of the human concentration in cities.

But it is perhaps possible to avoid this latter cause by purifying the waters.

I go on:

Fourth cause, which is probably the most serious and over which we have absolutely no control at present: pollution by industrial waste.

Big industry uses enormous quantities of water for every kind of production: metal, cement, pulp and paper, leather or plastics. Food industries, be it dairy products, meat or sugar, have similar requirements and every time the plant waste water flows into the river without being treated or sufficiently treated. Industrialists find it more immediately profitable to pay fines rather than change their facilities to meet vital requirements.

So, in view of those sources of pollution, I feel that the act must be firm enough and strong enough to minimize loopholes. As far as rivers are concerned, for instance, we hear from time to time of ships' masters being fined for polluting rivers with hydrocarbon waste. And still such infractions seem to continue and be quite frequent in spite of the fines. Apparently it is cheaper to pay the fine than not to throw the waste into the river and therefore the ship masters adopt the cheapest way. I feel that the government is not being firm enough, strict enough.

In studying the legislation which is before us tonight, I wonder whether it has been made firm enough. At any rate, we will be able to go thoroughly into it in committee. We will be able then to ask for further information from the minister and the officials who will be called upon to give us a word of explanation. However, I wish to tell the minister that, as far as offences are concerned, when the act is in force, it will be absolutely necessary for us to take a very firm stand.

We must eradicate completely every cause of water pollution. The Canadian Water Pollution Control Institute moved a resolution that was agreed to on October 26, 1965, and subsequently published in the Canadian Worker in June 1966.

I am convinced that the minister has read that resolution, but I should like to quote it in part tonight for the information of hon. members.

Item (3) particularly, states the following, and I quote:

(3) It is for industry, regional, provincial and federal governments, individually and collectively, to ensure adequately the treatment and control of sewage in order to prevent pollution;—

—and Item (5), on which I spoke earlier, is to the effect that

(5) Pollution control has to be administered firmly, efficiently and equitably;

As to Item (8), it is worded as follows:

(8) As sewage represents an increasing proportion of water resources as a whole and since it could very well be recuperated and re-used through its restauration to a sufficient degree of quality, it is advisable to promote the perfecting of methods for the treatment of sewage and the adoption of standards so that they may be used again.

Of the 14 sections, those struck me particularly even though the others are interesting.

The City of Chicago, for example, was drawing large quantities of water from Lake Michigan to supply its municipal services, but the waters were later discharged into a river flowing south, so they did not come back into Lake Michigan. Some people submitted a project for replacing the water taken out of Lake Michigan by Chicago and other industrial cities.

As the minister said in his speech this afternoon, people are moving towards water bodies, and it has been like that since the beginning of the world. Industrial cities use up tremendous quantities of water which must be replaced.

An engineer from Sudbury, Mr. Kierans—not the Postmaster General and Minister of Communications but an engineer—put forward the so-called "Grand Canal" project. Its purpose would be to draw the water discharged in James Bay by a number of rivers, to pump it as far as Amos and from there to direct it to Lake Nipissing and Georgian Bay in order to feed at least that body of water as well as the St. Lawrence River whose water level dropped considerably for a few years.

The problem of the drop in the water level in the St. Lawrence River and in Montreal harbour seems less acute than it was for the last two or three years, but nothing seems to indicate that it will not come up again.

If we diverted the fresh water that is presently being lost in James Bay and Hudson's Bay to the Great Lakes, that might also help control pollution.

In industry as well as in domestic work, cleaning requires frequent rinsing. The large quantity of recoverable water that discharges in James Bay could, as it were, serve to rinse the waters of lake Ontario and make them at least purer.

This project, I am told, is being studied by the government of Ontario, thanks to federal grants, according at least to a statement by the Quebec minister of Natural Resources.

It seems the study on this project has not progressed as fast at Quebec government level, because the federal government did not grant any subsidies.

In this bill, it is stated that agreements must be reached between the federal government and the provinces.

To my mind, unless there is agreement with all the provinces, the industry no longer cares about the pollution problem.

I am confident that the interest of all Canadian provinces in the fight against pollution and in the conservation of our waters is such that they will not refuse to participate in this fight.

To date, some federal-provincial conferences afforded the ministers of natural resources the opportunity of consulting with each other. Such conferences should be held more frequently so that all the knowledge might be pooled, with a view to checking that serious problem.

The Ralliement créditiste feels that this bill is necessary to complete other imperfect acts; the government can always change it to improve it.

We feel that this bill should be given second reading, and referred to the Committee on National Resources and Public Works for a study in depth. If we feel that it is necessary to amend it, we will not hesitate to do so.

• (9:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Keith Hymmen (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, may I take this opportunity to congratulate the minister on his excellent and detailed presentation this afternoon on the introduction of this legislation. I am sure all hon. members agree that it is very nice to see one who is genuinely respected in all corners of the House, in this portfolio as well as the one he held previously, and as a backbencher, returned to something like his old form. We certainly wish him well.

Mr. Speaker, in addressing myself to Bill C-144, which primarily concerns the conservation of our Canadian water resources, I am naturally very much aware of the mounting anxiety in regard to pollution, which problem I believe brought about this legislation. No doubt I shall be tempted, as will other hon. members, to refer to the larger, over-all field of pollution which of course includes air pollution, soil pollution, water pollution and environmental pollution generally. However, I shall try to resist this temptation.

Water pollution in itself is not merely one of local concern; it is a global problem. The continued concern for this problem, both on a national and a world-wide basis, may well mean the difference between life and death for many. Malthus might have presented his famous revelation to the world in even more startling terms by saying: "The population of the world increases geometrically while the water supply on the earth is constant."

Fresh water is, of course, a very important and precious commodity, not only to us as Canadians but to every citizen and every nation in the world. We in Canada have perhaps been fortunate in this respect, as we have been in so many other ways. It is a fact that all the available fresh water on earth is only 0.325 per cent or one-third of 1 per cent of the earth's entire water supply. The Great Lakes, that important body of water which means so much to us on the North American continent, contains 25 per cent of the total of all fresh water found in all the lakes of the world. That is 25 per cent of all the water, Mr. Speaker, for one-half of 1 per cent of the world's population. This is why the action of the government in introducing this legislation and the provisions of the bill itself are so important, if not for ourselves then for the world at large.

I mentioned that I would try to refrain from diverging from the subject matter of the bill. However, may I make one brief reference. I have been reading a book by Dr. Paul Ehrlich, called "The Population Bomb". This is a challenging publication put out for the American public, and is in some respects rather frightening. By the author's own admission, it perhaps portrays the very worst situation which one might expect on this planet in the not-too-distant future. While the general subject matter is not for this debate, I should like to make one brief reference to this book. On page 66, Professor Ehrlich says:

> I have just scratched the surface of the problem of environmental deterioration, but I hope that I have at least convinced you that subtle ecological effects may be much more important than the obvious features of the problem. The casual chain of the deterioration is easily followed to its source. Too many cars, too many factories, too much detergent, too much pesticide, multiplying contrails, inadequate sewage treatment plants, too little water, too much carbon dioxide—all can be traced easily to too many people.

While this statement, in relation to Canada as a whole, certainly can be questioned, he is perhaps right in one respect. Our present, very serious water pollution problem, which I believe can be generally pinpointed to the Great Lakes basin for the most part, has no doubt been brought about by the presence of too many people in one place. There are, of course, secondary factors which I would like to mention later.

The deteriorating situation in regard to the Great Lakes is of course shared equally with the United States of America. We must halt this degradation. Thirty-five million people live close to the Great Lakes. This is more than half as much again as the total population of this vast country. Over 3.5 million people in the United States, and something like 150,000 in Canada, take their domestic water supply from Lake Erie which is presently the most polluted of the whole Great Lakes system.

I mentioned the population factor because, of course, the recognized primary cause of water pollution is improperly treated domestic sewage or raw sewage, which can only be found where people are. An indication of sewage pollution is expressed by coliform count and biochemical oxygen demand, called BOD; the latter expressing the resulting decrease in the normal dissolved oxygen content of the water by the decomposition of organic matter. A related pollution problem—and possibly the most difficult one to deal with in the Great Lakes—is the one of eutrophication. This is the chemical enrichment of fertilization of the water, providing a highly undesirable medium for the promotion of algae growth. In Lake Erie it has been estimated that 72 per cent of these plant nutrients have come from municipal sewage, especially detergents. Detergents have contributed about two-thirds of the phosphates in sewage and nearly one-half of the lake's total input. Another 17 per cent comes from agricultural run-off, 7 per cent from city streets and urban property and only 4 per cent from industrial waste.

The second major source of water pollution has been from industrial operations—industrial chemicals, mine drainage, pulp and paper mill effluent, plating waste, etc. While our steel mills, pulp and paper mills, packing plants and many other industrial operations have been most important to the economy of our nation and to the well-being of our workers, no industrial firm has had a God-given right to pollute our waters; neither has any municipality or any other level of government. Steps must be taken by whatever means at our disposal to bring this action to a halt. This must be done, and can be done if we have the will to do it.

I was interested to learn recently that one of our important Canadian paper mill operations—the Ontario Paper Company in Thorold, Ontario, a firm that I happened to be connected with some years ago—recently announced a $5,000,000 program to remove suspended and dissolved solids from their effluent. I should also like to mention that a new, $500,000 waste treatment plant was recently opened at the J. M. Schneider packing plant in Kitchener, one of my valued constituent firms.

These are only two examples, and I am sure there are many more, where industrial initiative and co-operation has indicated acceptance of responsibility for the proper disposal of waste. The public has allowed us to become a little careless over the years. The waste factor and the provision for disposal of waste must be of equal importance to the providing of employment and the marketing of primary and manufactured products. It must not be subservient to the profit factor which is, of course, the essential feature of our industrial economy.

The initiative must be encouraged by provincial legislation for situations beyond the purview of this bill. It no doubt has been assisted by the federal tax regulations providing for accelerated two-year depreciation on industrial waste installations. Consideration can no doubt be given to other methods.

However, the important decision which the public is now demanding must be made. No matter who pays for it, the guidelines and the goal must be set. This is, again, a question of priority. However, if we can put men on the moon with our present scientific know-how, we can do anything that we have the will to do.

Without detracting in any way from this scientific achievement and with every good wish to Messrs. Conrad, Bean and Gordon for their safe return to this planet, I am sure there are, in the United States of America, many people who wonder whether a portion of the $24 billion spent on the space program might not have been put to better use in cleaning up some of their water and other pollution problems. There are other forms of pollution, Mr. Speaker, which must continually be examined.

A progressive step in regard to the use of the latter has, of course, been taken with the recent announcement in regard to the use of DDT. I believe I can remember when DDT was first introduced. It was a great boon to the agriculture industry. However, from the very beginning we have heard warnings from wildlife people to which, in retrospect, too little attention was paid. It has taken at least ten years or longer to realize what we should have known from the beginning, namely, that the benefits from the use of any new commodity must outweigh the adverse effects.

I mentioned agriculture run-off and the problem caused by phosphate fertilizers. With all the problems existing in our agricultural sector, which we heard so much about earlier this week—and I am sympathetic for the most part toward these problems—I do not seriously recommend taking away these fertilizers. However, with tongue in cheek might I suggest doing this as a rather naive way of solving the problem of over-production and the bulging elevators on the western prairies.

If I may get back to the bill before us, it provides the mechanism and framework for a great deal of consultation and co-operation among all levels of government and is, in my opinion, a giant step forward. For the first time penalties are to be imposed in order to make sure that the job can be done. Some will say that the penalties are too high, and others that they are too low. I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that with interest already growing on the part of the general public, we can set ourselves to the necessary task without the penalties having to be imposed.

While this act will apply primarily to major interjurisdictional waters, to international, interprovincial or boundary waters, the use of which significantly affect waters outside a particular province, I would hope that in time the provisions of this act or similar legislation could with the co-operation of the province be extended to cover all Canadian waters. We are possibly in a grey constitutional area. Nevertheless, contrary to what some believe, I think that until we change or re-write our constitution we should live with the one we have. The provinces have for many years accepted responsibility for water resource management. Most of them have appropriate legislation and have designated ministerial responsibility. Some have done an outstanding job. This bill, when enacted, will complement and assist their efforts.

When a bill such as this is introduced it must, to have any hope of success, anticipate a great deal of co-operation at all levels of government. Now is not the time to poke a finger at any particular area for what has not been done. Rather, we as Canadians should gird ourselves for the important task which lies ahead, in the interest of present and future generations. I am very proud on this occasion to represent a municipality which since 1905, for almost 65 years, has accepted full responsibility for the treatment of its domestic waste. While I admit that the initial efforts may not have been too sucessful, we have progressed as a progressive community should. For some time now we have had complete secondary treatment of domestic waste for our community of over 100,000 people. I should also like to record the objection of His Worship, Mayor McLennan, to the summary omission in this connection of the city of Kitchener from the latest report of the Economic Council.

Bill C-144, when enacted, will repeal another federal statute, the Canada Water Conservation Assistance Act. It may be rather unusual to make reference to legislation on the way out. However, in the few minutes left at my disposal I should like to speak about the Grand River basin. This, of course, covers an important area in the heart of central Ontario which has played a significant part in the development of our Canadian industrial economy and has an important continuing role in this respect. We have the Golden Triangle consisting of the cities of Kitchener, Waterloo, Guelph, Galt, the down-river industrial community of Brantford, plus a very rich agricultural area.

The Canada Water Conservation Assistance Act has been extremely important to us in the past. We in the area had hoped that this could continue to be a medium for the conservation and preservation of our inland water resource, the Grand River. The Grand River Conservation Commission was incorporated under provincial charter in 1935, well in advance of the provincial conservation act and the establishment of other provincial conservation authorities. Over the years three important dams have been constructed on the river, the Shand, the Luther, and the Conestoga. The main purpose of these dams was flood control, but other important ancillary benefits were also derived. A total of over $8 million had been invested, in capital and operating costs, up to the beginning of 1966. Five and a quarter million dollars in capital costs was provided by the two higher levels of government; over $3 million was raised by eight area municipalities for capital and operating costs. Since these dams were initially constructed and the capital funds supplied up to the end of 1965, not one cent had been provided or asked for with respect to operating costs from the two higher levels of government.

Under the existing legislation, the Canada Water Conservation Assistance Act, work had been in progress for an extended program to provide additional dams on the river. While this program had been approved by the government of the province of Ontario in January, 1967, one of the designated participants under the act, and the submission had been subsequently forwarded to the federal government, neither I nor any of my colleagues representing constituencies on the river have had any success in persuading the ministers responsible, or the government, that federal participation should be approved.

One of the problems of which I have been very much aware in regard to the existing statute and others involving shared programs is a complete lack of awareness or consultation among the three levels of government in the early stages of planning. If Bill C-144 provides for nothing more—and I am sure it will provide for a good deal more—than consultation, co-operation, research and planning at all levels of government and industry, including research establishments, the universities and the private sector, as indicated, in my opinion a great deal will have been accomplished.

[Mr. Hymmen.]

The introduction of Bill C-144 and the indicated repeal of the existing statute is not merely a summary abrogation of federal financial responsibility. It indicates a change in thinking which, perhaps, after all may be in the right direction. If the federal government through the new legislation accepts full responsibility, as indicated, for international, interprovincial or boundary waters with or without the co-operation of the provinces—which in itself is a large and expensive undertaking—perhaps the provinces will agree to retain their already accepted responsibility for purely provincial and inland waters.

All is yet not lost in regard to the Grand River valley. The Grand River Conservation Commission has been dissolved and has been replaced by a larger body representing, I believe, some 70 urban and rural municipalities, the Grand River Conservation Authority. The government of the province of Ontario has already offered to increase its share of the proposed program from 37½ per cent to 60 per cent, and I believe is presently considering the possibility of filling in the 37½ per cent gap of permissive funds by the federal government under the existing statute.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, like the other hon. members who sat on the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, I am looking forward to the second reading of this bill and to its reference to the committee.

• (9:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might rise on a point of order at this time. It is nearly ten o'clock and I understand the government house leader has an announcement on the business for next week. I wonder if it might be called ten o'clock at this time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member. I think it was agreed among representatives of the parties that this debate would continue on another day; therefore, I concur in the hope that it might be called ten o'clock.

With regard to the business for the coming week, the first item to be called on Monday will be the Expo Winding-up Act which was reported back to the House today. This will be called on Monday for report and third reading. In the two successive days in that week, perhaps even on Monday as well as on Tuesday and Wednesday, it is the intention to call the three budget bills resulting from the June 3 budget. These will be called in the following order: No. 27, the Customs Act amendment; No. 34, the Excise Tax Act amendment; and No. 26, the Income Tax Act amendment. As I indicated, it is hoped that business will be completed by the adjournment on Wednesday.

On Thursday and Friday of next week we intend to call the motion to refer the white paper on taxation to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs in order to permit the House to debate in general terms the tax proposals contained in the white paper. I hope some time during the course of the week to propose to the House the making of a special order on speech time limits to permit the maximum number of members to participate. As I indicated, I concur with the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) in calling it ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: If it is the desire of hon. members, we will now call it ten o'clock and proceed to the adjournment debate. I fear there may be a slight difficulty. On the basis that we would proceed at ten o'clock with the first question on the agenda, the minister who would normally reply to this question is not yet in the House. Normally the minister would be here at ten o'clock. I wonder whether the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) wants to proceed at this time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Could we not just sit for two or three minutes, Mr. Speaker, and wait for the minister to arrive? There is no law against it.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I wonder if there is more than one question. We might perhaps juggle the order.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the second question has been withdrawn. With regard to the third question, the same difficulty arises as with the first. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre says there is nothing in the rules which states we cannot just sit around and say nothing. It may be legal, but it certainly will be very unusual.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Maybe we could sing something.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

OLD AGE SECURITY—INQUIRY AS TO AMENDING BILL

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think we have proven something, namely, that it does not hurt us to sit and meditate for a moment or two. I hope the result will be a favourable answer from the government side. I gather that although we were waiting for the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), we will hear from his parliamentary secretary instead. My question this evening arises from a question that I asked on Wednesday, November 12, as recorded in Hansard at pages 738 and 739. The entry in Hansard is as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Toward the end of last session there was a list of bills given, many of which were not reached. One of them was a bill to amend the Old Age Security Act. In view of the fact that such a bill was not included in the list of bills that the Prime Minister tabled on the first day of this session, may I ask the minister whether there will be such a bill during the course of this session?

The Minister of National Health and Welfare replied as follows:

> It is highly unlikely, Mr. Speaker.

The point of my question and my reason for raising it again tonight is surely quite clear. Toward the end of the last session we were given a list of bills that it was hoped would be dealt with before the first session prorogued. That list included a bill to amend the Old Age Security Act, but we did not reach it. Whenever I see something of that nature, I hope for the best. I hope it means a substantial increase in the pension paid under that legislation. I must say, however, that I knew that was too much to hope for last session.

I understood the purpose of that proposed bill was to deal with certain anomalies in the Old Age Security Act, and I had hoped those anomalies would have been dealt with during the last session. I was therefore quite surprised when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on the first day of this new session in tabling a list of bills for us to deal with did not include that piece of legislation which was tidying-up in its nature. Accordingly, I had hoped that the Minister of National Health and Welfare would have assured me when I asked this question on November 12 that we would at least get this tidying-up business before us in this session.

A number of members have asked questions from time to time which have brought out these anomalies. Of course, the one that hits us the hardest is the fact that there is in the Old Age Security Act a provision to increase the pension each year as the cost of living goes up, but never by more than 2 per cent in any one year even if the cost of living increases by 4 or 5 per cent. That is a major anomaly I wish the government would correct.

However, I wish to spend these three or four minutes on another anomaly, that is, the provision in the guaranteed income supplement part of the Old Age Security Act which declares that in most cases pensioners get their income supplement based on what their income was last year. There are two exceptions, two instances in which a pensioner can get a supplement for the current year based on his anticipated income for the current year. These are, first, if you retire from employment in the current year, and second, if you change your marital status in the current year. In all other cases it is the income from the previous year that counts.

As a result of this, some serious situations develop. There are people who have allowances of one kind or another—widows who have an allowance from the death of a husband which lasts only four or five years and ends in the middle of the year. The widow finds for that year her income drops because the allowance is stopped, and the next year, when she applies for a full supplement because she has nothing else, she is told it has to be claimed on the basis of her income for the previous year, so she has to wait for a further year before she gets the full amount.

In the same vein there are people who in the course of a year will take a little job and make $40 or $50, in the whole year, just enough to amount to more than should have been made under the terms of the income test. When a person does that, at the end of a year he is penalized twice; he has to make a back payment because he got too much and then, for the next year, he has to apply for a guaranteed income supplement on the basis of the income he got the previous year even if he does not intend to work again. No one denies the double penalty aspect of this. We have had this out on the floor of the House and with the officials of the department. The kindliest answer we have received is that this is one of those anomalies that was not intended and which will have to be straightened out. We have been told several times that some day it would be straightened out.

I was not privy to any secrets in the matter, but I certainly got the impression that this was the kind of thing which would be dealt with in the bill proposed last year to amend the Old Age Security Act. In the meantime, many are suffering because anomalies of this kind have not been straightened out. I hope that even if the government takes longer than it ought in getting around to the larger question of increasing the basic amount of the old age security pension, it will not put off any longer an amending bill to deal with these anomalies which are really quite cruel. I hope the parliamentary secretary will be able to assure us tonight that these matters will be attended to during the course of this session.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): First, Mr. Speaker, I should like to assure the hon. member that we all share his concern about matters affecting the welfare of the Canadian people, including our senior citizens.

I have noted his remarks, especially those anomalies which he mentioned. I wish to state that his comments tonight will be brought by myself to the attention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro). Although no bill was presented to the house on matters of social welfare at the opening of the present session of Parliament, I am sure the hon. member has noticed in the Speech from the Throne the following paragraph which I shall quote. This can be found at page 2 of Hansard for October 23, 1969. It states:

> Changes in the patterns of need in our society call for a more equitable social policy which will offer assistance and security to people unable to work or to provide for themselves and their families. A white paper on social security will be presented—

This white paper will deal with all matters of welfare including old age security. These measures will be made known through this white paper and, of course, all consequent legislation will be closely related to it. In view of these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat tonight, on behalf of my minister, what he has already stated to the hon. member, that it is highly unlikely a bill to amend the Old Age Security Act will be presented to the House this session.

POLLUTION—REGULATIONS RESPECTING AUTOMOBILES—INQUIRY AS TO ACTION

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, the other day I asked what the government was doing in respect of outlawing car exhausts which produce air pollution. I had in mind the situation in the United States where the federal authority has recently settled out of court an action against a car manufacturing company in respect of this very matter. I also had in mind tougher action by New York state, which at this moment is taking a car manufacturing company to court to enforce the New York anti-pollution car exhaust act.

The question I tried to raise was not acceptable during the question period, so I raise it again this evening. With the few moments I have available I want to remind hon. members in the House that until recent years the North American car industry has had practically a free hand in regard to the design of component parts for its products, so far as safety is concerned. To underline the significance of that fact let me state that there are three main ingredients in car accidents: the first is the car, the second is the driver and the third is the road. For years in Canada we have been killing 100 persons a week, wounding 3,000 a week and losing millions of dollars in economic tolls due to car crashes, a great many of which were avoidable. In the last four years, the period in which many of the present members came into the house, no fewer than 20,000 Canadians have been killed, 600,000 have been wounded and billions of dollars have been lost through car accidents.

Air pollution from car exhausts is part of this general problem. My question was, what is the federal government doing to give leadership and co-ordination to provincial authorities to enforce realistic anti-pollution air exhaust legislation? There are enough cars sold in Canada to have a significant effect on the total North American car market. Cars sold in Canada could be fitted with safety features even though Washington fails to act. It is disturbing to note that our new Canadian car safety standards, recently announced with a flourish of car horns, are simply extensions of the standards set in Washington, where the car industry has for many years dragged its feet in respect of public safety.

In the United States the industry's motive is still directed to eye and sales appeal rather than to safety. Car bumpers are actually decorations, a sort of cosmetic rather than a safety feature. A standard bumper height for all cars could save a great many lives and a great many millions of dollars. In conclusion let me repeat my question: What is the law of our land, and what is our federal authority doing to co-ordinate and give leadership to the provinces, which have a great deal of authority in this field, to enforce specific laws regarding air pollution and exhaust standards?

• (10:10 p.m.)

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish at the outset to congratulate the hon. member for Surrey (Mr. Mather) for bringing up this question, especially at this time, since there will be at the Chateau Laurier during the next three days the general annual meeting of the Ottawa district Ontario Motor League. That association concerns itself with all matters related to automobiles and I know the interest and importance the hon. member attaches to such a question.

However, I would not like him to believe that the Canadian government scorns all those good intentions and does not consider any change. As he knows, Bill C-137, entitled an "Act respecting the use of national safety marks in relation to motor vehicles and to provide for safety standards..." was given first reading on November 3.

With regard to safety and air pollution, here is what clause 2(h) of the bill says, and I quote:

> "safety standards" means standards regulating the design, construction or functioning of motor vehicles and their components for the purpose of protecting persons against personal injury, impairment of health or death.

If we talk about air pollution, this is an indication that there is an impairment of health and, under this clause of Bill C-137, the minister will have the authority to prosecute those who will not meet the required standards. I urge the hon. members of the opposition to show all their devotion, their goodwill and to offer their suggestions when this bill comes up for second reading in a week or two, and especially when it is sent to the Committee on Transport and communications.

Other countries have other standards with regard to noise, for instance. Following the passage of this bill, the minister will be able to make changes in the legislation or to deal severely with those who use motor vehicles which are too noisy because paragraph (h) which deals with the protection of people against personal injury and impairment of health or death, is broad enough to cover these cases. Therefore the minister will be in a position to deal severely with the manufacturers or the owners of exceedingly noisy vehicles.

If this bill is passed this year or early next spring, all the security standards with which it deals, will be imposed with regard to the construction of 1971 model cars.

I think this is a good answer to the question asked a while ago by the hon. member for Surrey about the legal proceedings taken in the United States against two automobile manufacturers because of air pollution. This clause covers the cases of noise because it deals with impairment of health or death. We can only hope that the hon. member and the members of his group will support the passing of this bill and will propose acceptable amendments in order to improve its contents. Thus, the government will also be in a position to claim that it has its own legislation to regulate the construction of motor vehicles in order to protect the health of our people. Indeed, it will be possible to take legal proceedings against those whose vehicles are the cause of air pollution or personal injuries if the standards set by the law have not been observed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, November 21, 1969

The House met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN THE GALLERY OF BAHAMAN MINISTER OF TOURISM AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence may I be permitted to call the attention of hon. members to the presence in the gallery of a very distinguished visitor, the Hon. Clement Maynard, Minister of Tourism and Telecommunications for the government of the Bahamas.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

TARIFF BOARD

TABLING OF REPORT ON FRACTIONS OF PETROLEUM

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table today copies in English and in French of the report by the Tariff Board on Reference No. 141, together with a transcript of the evidence presented to the Board at its public hearings. The report covers fractions of petroleum for use as feedstocks in the manufacture of organic chemicals.

I would like to assure the House that the Tariff Board's recommendations will be carefully considered by the government. Therefore interested parties who wish to comment on this report should bring their comments to the attention of the Department of Finance as soon as possible.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might have unanimous consent to introduce the following motion:

That the Public Accounts Volumes I, II, and III, and the abridged version for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1968, laid before the House on January 14, 1969, and the report of the Auditor General thereon, laid before the House on March 26, 1969, be referred to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

Mr. Winch: At long last.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) moved:

That the Public Accounts Volumes I, II, and III, and the abridged version for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1968, laid before the House on January 14, 1969, and the report of the Auditor General thereon, laid before the House on March 26, 1969, be referred to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

Motion agreed to.

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

ELECTRONIC EAVESDROPPING—REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could have unanimous consent for the following motion:

That the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs be empowered to study the subject matter of electronic eavesdropping;

That the evidence adduced by the committee in its study of the aforementioned matter during the first session of the twenty-eighth Parliament be referred to the committee;

And that the order of second reading of Bill C-116 be discharged, and the subject matter thereof be referred to the committee.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to propose this motion to the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) moved:

That the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs be empowered to study the subject matter of electronic eavesdropping;

That the evidence adduced by the committee in its study of the aforementioned matter during the first session of the twenty-eighth Parliament be referred to the committee;

And that the order of second reading of Bill C-116 be discharged, and the subject matter thereof be referred to the committee.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MEMBERS' ALLOWANCES—TABLING OF EXTRACT FROM MINUTES OF MEETING OF COMMISSIONERS OF INTERNAL ECONOMY

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to lay on the table an extract from the minutes of a meeting of the Commissioners of Internal Economy concerning allowances of members of the House.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCIAL AND MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENTS ON PROPOSED SITE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In the light of the statement by the minister regarding the proposed new airport for Toronto, is it the position of the government that the Ontario and municipal governments involved should not be consulted as to their views or have any say concerning the location of the site of the airport?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): No, it is not the intention of the government that they not be consulted. We have already discussed that with the provincial government and at the request of the provincial government of Ontario we have refrained from direct involvement with the municipalities.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister give assurances that this major airport project will not be proceeded with before representatives of the municipal governments and other affected people who live in the area are heard by him, by the government and by the Transport Committee of this House?

Mr. Jamieson: I cannot assure the hon. member that the committee will study the matter, but certainly I can give him an assurance in terms of representations to the government.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the minister. In view of the minister's statement on Tuesday with regard to the location of the Toronto airport that if the Ontario and municipal governments want a say in its location they should be prepared to participate in its management and help to cover any operating deficits that are incurred, is it the minister's intention now to advise all municipalities that want to participate in such projects that they will have to take part in the management and share in the operating costs if they want to have a say in the location of such airport installations?

Mr. Jamieson: No, Mr. Speaker, that is not my intention. What I said was that if there was to be local involvement, with which I agree, there should be responsibility along with that and they would have to help in the management. However, in so far as the involvement of municipalities is concerned, I have to advise the House that it is largely up to the provincial governments to decide on the extent to which the municipalities will be involved.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Can the minister assure the House that we will not have a scenario like the James Bond series in connection with the Ste. Scholastique airport?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPLACEMENT OF TRACKER AND ARGUS AIRCRAFT

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In order that it shall not be a fait accompli will the minister appear before and advise the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence as to the consideration being given by his department regarding the replacement or otherwise of the Tracker and Argus aircraft?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression that this question should be considered by the committee rather than determined by way of question and answer at this time.

Mr. Winch: In other words it will be a fait accompli so far as the committee is concerned.

An hon. Member: He is bilingual.

VIOLENT DISTURBANCES

MONTREAL—BOMBING AT LOYOLA COLLEGE—INCREASED CO-OPERATION BY RCMP

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General who is Acting Prime Minister today. Considering the fact that last night in Montreal one of the largest bombs yet was set off at Loyola College while 500 students were at that institution, would the Acting Prime Minister today get in touch with the premier of the province of Quebec and the mayor of Montreal to see how the RCMP can co-operate in a more complete way to crack down on the group that is carrying out these bombings and also to prevent further bombings?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the prime responsibility under the law lies with the provincial authority. But having said that I want to emphasize very strongly that there is very close working co-operation between the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the Quebec provincial police and the city of Montreal police in these matters, and in this particular instance there is, of course, that kind of co-operation.

I can assure the hon. member and other hon. members who must all be very concerned that there is the utmost co-operation as well in perfecting and improving ways of bringing about a satisfactory solution to these problems and the prevention of similar occurrences in the future is being pressed to the utmost.

Mr. Allmand: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that within the last few weeks Michel Chartrand announced in court, I believe, that if bill 63 was passed by the Quebec legislature there would be a new round of bombings directed at the English-speaking schools in Quebec, would the Acting Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice, who is supposed to be in the House today—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: Disgraceful.

Another hon. Member: Shocking.

Mr. Allmand: —get in touch with the Attorney General of Quebec to see that Michel Chartrand's bail is terminated? Also, would they please get in touch with the mayor of Montreal—he did not answer my first question, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the co-operation in matters of this kind is working extremely well—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McIlraith: —and is effected directly at the working level by the police authorities. If anything comes to my attention, or that I can ascertain from the police authorities, which requires communication by me with the Minister of Justice or Attorney General of Quebec, or the other provincial and civic authorities, that will be done. At the moment I am aware of nothing in connection with this particular bombing that would warrant that kind of communication, but I can assure the hon. member that if anything does occur to warrant it in the course of the investigation there will be such communication.

Mr. Allmand: As a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Sock it to him.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious matter and I wish the opposition would take it seriously too. It is not just the Loyola College bombing that is involved. Threats have been made against all English schools in Quebec.

SUGGESTED DISCUSSION WITH MR. SAULNIER

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister if next week, when Mr. Saulnier comes to Ottawa to testify before the Broadcasting Committee which is investigating the Company of Young Canadians, he will adopt the suggestion of the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce and discuss the matter with Mr. Saulnier at that time? Further, will he pay heed to the evidence that Mr. Saulnier will be giving about such activities in Montreal so that this problem will not develop in the serious way in which it appears to be heading at the moment?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be very willing to consider the hon. member's suggestion and the suggestions of other hon. members, but I must say I do not know what evidence Mr. Saulnier will be giving before the committee. I therefore cannot at this stage tell what action I will take as a result of the evidence given by him.

Inquiries of the Ministry

MONTREAL—PROTECTION FOR GREY CUP PARADE

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct an additional question to the Acting Prime Minister. Can he say whether the federal authorities are giving extra protection, in co-operation with the Montreal law enforcement department, to the Grey Cup parade next week?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is always difficulty in answering questions in the House as to investigations—

Mr. Baldwin: We have noticed that.

Mr. McIlraith: It is a good thing if the hon. member has noticed. It will serve him well if he has. As I was saying, it is always difficult at any given moment to give details of investigations being carried out by police authorities and to detail what protective steps are being taken in that part of the administration of justice. I therefore regret I am not able to answer the hon. member's question as fully as I would wish to answer it, but I do want to assure him that the working co-operation between the three police forces, in connection with the problems that may be anticipated on that type of occasion, is very close indeed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

PENSIONS

RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS—INQUIRY AS TO INCREASE

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board but in his absence I will direct it to the minister representing him during the Liberal thinkers' conference. What progress is being made with respect to a possible increase in the pensions of superannuated civil servants, and does the minister expect a decision on this issue before Christmas or the end of this year?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the hon. member is asking a question which was debated at the time of adjournment just a few days ago. Perhaps the hon. member might wait until next week and ask it then when the minister in charge is in the House.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

BAND COUNCIL BORROWING REGULATIONS—PROVISION OF FUND

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development arising from the newly enacted Indian band council borrowing regulations authorizing band councils to borrow money for housing and other purposes. Has the government established a fund from which band councils may borrow at a reasonable rate of interest? If not, from what source does the minister expect band councils to borrow?

[Mr. McIlraith.]

Mr. Speaker: I would think this question should be on the Order Paper.

TRADE

FINANCING OF SALE OF LOCOMOTIVES TO YUGOSLAVIA

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Is he in a position to answer the question I asked on November 13 which the acting minister said he would refer to the minister for answer? My question was: Will the minister look into the reasons why the Export Development Corporation has failed to provide financing for a very considerable sale of diesel locomotives to Yugoslavia? In view of the fact that considerable unemployment will be caused unless this sale goes through, would the minister make sure that the matter is reconsidered by the corporation?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The Export Development Corporation has not failed. The situation is that this contract with Yugoslavia was to include American materials. We tried, and rightly I think, to get the Export-Import Bank in the United States to do the financing for that portion of it. We had some difficulty but they have now consented to do part of it, part of their part if I may say, and The Export Development Corporation will do the rest so there is no reason why the deal should not be completed.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. Could the minister tell us if this transaction is now completed and will go ahead immediately or is there going to be considerable further delay?

Mr. Pepin: I do not think there should be any further delay, Mr. Speaker, but I am not informed on the very latest developments. I knew of the solution that was developing and I have so indicated.

TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED CURTAILMENT OF RAILWAY PASSENGER SERVICE—GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATION BY COUNSEL AT HEARINGS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it seems to be the Minister of Transport's day. I should like to direct a question to him arising out of the virtually general objection on the part of cities, towns, people in general and the employees of the railway companies against the applications that have been made by the Canadian Pacific Railway and Canadian National Railways to the Canadian Transport Commission to permit those companies to almost wipe out passenger transportation across Canada. With a view to assuring that every objection will be taken to these applications, and in the national interest, will the minister consider having counsel appointed by the federal government to place before the Canadian Transport Commission the general objection to action which is regarded as a cavalier disregard of the responsibilities of these railway companies?

Mr. Speaker: I have the distinct impression that this very question was asked last week. If I am wrong the minister should reply.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it was asked last week but perhaps the right hon. gentleman was not present so maybe you will permit me to answer again. Whether we will do this in precisely the way the right hon. gentleman has suggested I am not certain, but I can assure the House that every effort will be made to ensure that all representations are put to the commissioners in this regard. I should like to remind the House and the right hon. gentleman that there is an appeal from any judgment to the Governor in Council, and under these circumstances it would seem to me that the public interest in this matter is quite well protected. However, if there is some other course that needs to be taken I shall be more than happy to consider it.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker, and may I direct it either to the Minister of Transport or the Acting Prime Minister. May I now have an answer to the question I asked the last time the Solicitor General was Acting Prime Minister, whether an effort will be made to have these hearings in public?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House that where there is a contentious matter of any kind it is not within my purview to instruct the CTC to do so, but I have already made representations to them to ensure that where the public interest is demonstrably present there should be public hearings.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): A supplementary question for the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister assure the House that it is not his ambition to extend the present rail passenger policy in Newfoundland to the whole country?

SCIENCE SERVICES

TRANSFER OF QUEEN ELIZABETH OBSERVATORY ASSETS

Mr. Bruce Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has the announcement that Queen's University has indicated its intention of joining the western universities' telescope consortium in any way altered the government's intention to transfer the assets of the Queen Elizabeth Observatory to the consortium? If not, when can we expect the transaction to be completed?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure that this is a matter of urgency. I would think this question might be debated during the adjournment proceedings.

NATIONAL REVENUE

TOBACCO—EFFECT OF POSSIBLE ELIMINATION OF ADVERTISING ON TAX COLLECTED

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue.

Since the Minister of National Health and Welfare stated that it would now be possible to ban tobacco advertising on radio, does the Minister of National Revenue agree with this policy, taking into account the importance of this source of revenue for his department?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The way it was asked, I do not think the question should be allowed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

POLLUTION

BRUSSELS INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE—INQUIRY AS TO CANADIAN POLICY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is he in a position to tell the House what initiatives Canada is prepared to take as a result of the Brussels conference on oil pollution of the high seas?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the conference is still proceeding. As I indicated to the hon. member a few days ago, the various countries involved are continuing to make their statements and the negotiations are continuing as well. I consider it wiser to wait until the conclusion of the conference, which I believe will be one week from today, in order to find out exactly what agreement, if any, is reached at that time. As I have indicated in previous answers, if it should turn out that no definitive agreement is reached at that conference we are prepared to consider action in regard to territorial waters along the lines proposed.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. It is very simple and direct. Will the minister make a statement to the House at the conclusion of this conference and set out Canada's policy?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker; as soon as possible after that date.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a further supplementary question. The implications of my question are important. Would the Minister of Transport consent to invite Members of Parliament to his next press briefing so that we may obtain as much information about his negotiations as members of the press obtain?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and if the hon. gentleman would like to have lunch with me some day I will give him the whole story any time he wants it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, may I say on a question of privilege that I can well afford to pay for my own lunch. Ignoring that point for a moment, may I say that questions were raised in the House earlier this week about the minister's trip. At that time he refused to make any statement to the House, discuss the subject or make a statement on motions. We found out, however, that on that very afternoon at a press meeting the minister disclosed the nature of his trip. Information was given to the press before members of the House were advised—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

VIOLENT DISTURBANCES

MONTREAL—SUGGESTED USE OF ARMED FORCES BOMB DISPOSAL EXPERTS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Would the hon. gentleman arrange to have bomb disposal experts of the Canadian Armed Forces available for instant dispatch to the city of Montreal should the situation warrant such action?

INDUSTRY

POTASH—INQUIRY AS TO MEETING WITH PRODUCERS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Have the minister or his officials now had an opportunity to meet with the potash producers? Could he also indicate what progress has been made in resolving outstanding problems?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the regulations will be issued today in Regina, I understand. I am informed that they are concerned mostly with matters of conservation and proration. An advance copy was apparently made available to the Department of Justice. It was studied yesterday and the study is continuing today. It has to do with the legality, the constitutionality, of the regulations. It is too early yet for me to comment on that.

With respect to the economics of the regulations, I can only observe that the governor of New Mexico said yesterday: "I think it saved the industry in Carlsbad." That worries me a little.

Mr. Burton: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I take it from the minister's answer that he has not yet determined if the price guarantee arrangements which have been reached informally or semi-formally in fact apply to producers outside of Canada and whether in fact the interests of Canadian producers are adequately protected?

Mr. Pepin: There are apparently no price features in the proposed regulations. They are concerned only with conservation and proration. What effect the conservation and proration measures will have on pricing is still to be ascertained.

IMMIGRATION

ENTRY OF BLACK PANTHERS INTO CANADA

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question that concerns the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, the Solicitor General and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, so I will have the opportunity of directing it to the Acting Prime Minister. Will the government take active steps to prevent or at least carefully examine the entrance into Canada of members of the Black Panther Society who are attempting to enter Canada today? I ask this question, Mr. Speaker, because of the reported strong objections of the government of Saskatchewan to the federal government in this regard. Members of this society who have long criminal records are coming into Canada for the purpose of stirring up sedition among the Indian people.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Prime Minister): As I understand the law in this country, it is not the practice to admit persons with long criminal records, but the matter is determined on an individual basis. In any event, I will look into the whole matter raised by the hon. member as it does involve several departments.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the Solicitor General is making his inquiries, will he determine if in fact any specific complaints were made against the individuals who were in Saskatchewan and Alberta and about whom the Attorney General of Sackatchewan was complaining?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to do that. The question, of course, is whether the complaints were made before they were admitted.

POWER

MINAS BASIN—COMPLETION OF STUDY

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Can the minister now indicate when the House and the Canadian people can expect the feasibility study on Minus Basin tidal power?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the last information I received was that the study would not be available until the end of the year.

ATOMIC ENERGY

BRUCE NUCLEAR GENERATING PLANT—EFFECT OF FEDERAL SAFETY REGULATIONS

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. A couple of weeks ago I asked the minister a question regarding federal safety regulations and the moving of the Bruce nuclear generating plant in Ontario. He assured me he would investigate this matter. He stated he had not been aware of the matter. I wonder if he has information on it now?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I believe the question asked was whether there was any arrangement regarding the effect on the labour force by reason of moving the plant. In so far as the regulations are concerned, the Atomic Energy Control Board has very up-to-date and effective regulations for the protection of the public in these areas. The moving of the plant was as a result of the application of these longstanding regulations. I believe everything is being done according to the requirements of the Atomic Energy Control Board and the safety situation is satisfactory.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO FREEZE ON RECRUITING OF FOREIGN SERVICE OFFICERS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister who seems to be filling the post with deliberateness and with dignity. If he does not have the information today, I am free for lunch on Monday. In light of the closing of diplomatic missions abroad and the deployment of personnel in the Department of External Affairs, apparently for reasons of economy, can the Acting Prime Minister advise if a freeze has been put on the recruiting of foreign service officers for the current or upcoming fiscal year?

Mr. Speaker: I think the question should be discussed at lunchtime.

Inquiries of the Ministry

GRAIN

SASKATCHEWAN PLAN TO BARTER WHEAT FOR MACHINERY

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board. I refer the minister to his statement in the House yesterday:

—no one can, of course, stop the Saskatchewan Power Corporation or any other similar body or company in Canada from buying Canadian wheat and doing whatever they like with it.

Could the minister clarify this statement in view of the role of the Canadian Wheat Board as the sole agency responsible for marketing Canadian wheat?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am glad to do so. I was referring to the opportunity they would have of buying wheat from agents of the Canadian Wheat Board, in foreign countries, such as Japan, Germany or wherever the contractor who might be interested in the transaction is located.

Mr. Gleave: May I say, Mr. Speaker, that the answer intrigues me. I wish to ask a supplementary question. In view of the fact that according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics exports in August of this year were at the lowest level in 20 years, can the minister inform the House if specific negotiations are now under way with the U.S.S.R. on further sales of wheat to that country?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated previously, it is not my intention to comment upon negotiations in regard to the sale of grains which the Canadian Wheat Board may have under way until such negotiations are completed.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

FUTURE STRUCTURE OF MILITIA FORCES

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): My question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Is the minister yet in a position to assure the House and the country that any cuts which may be made in the strength of the reserve military forces will not be nearly as severe as those first considered?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I expect to have a report early in December from the study group that has been concerned with this matter. I believe I am right in saying that the cuts will not be as severe as predicted.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. MacLean: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

EFFECT OF SHIPPING CONDITIONS AT VANCOUVER ON GRAIN MOVEMENT

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio in charge of the Wheat Board. Has uncertainty of shipping conditions in the port of Vancouver affected the movement of grain into export channels? If so, what steps are being taken to rectify this?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to be concrete about the effect of strikes or threats of strikes upon sales of grain. It is quite possible, of course, that the expectation of difficulties could cause some people to hesitate about booking orders. However, the actions of the Minister of Labour in the past in seeing that wheat in fact continued to flow through Vancouver go a long way, I think, to allay those fears at the present time.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

NORTH VANCOUVER—ALLEGED FINANCING OF DEVELOPMENTS BY GAMBLERS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): In the absence of the Minister of Justice I direct my question to the Solicitor General. Is the minister aware of allegations being made that international gambling money is being used to finance real estate and recreation developments in the North Vancouver area? If not, will his office look into the matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think this question is the type that might be discussed at the time of adjournment if there is urgency. Otherwise it should be placed on the order paper.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON ARCTIC DEVELOPMENT—REPRESENTATION BY ESKIMOS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): My question is to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Is the minister aware of the International Congress on Arctic Development and the Future of Eskimo Societies taking place in France next week?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I agree—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A question asked in those terms cannot be accepted. The hon. member is asking whether the minister is aware of a situation. This is perhaps the same form used by the previous questioner. Questions asked in those terms are not acceptable at this time.

Mr. Dinsdale: Perhaps I could rephrase the question. Has the minister taken any steps to send official Eskimo representatives to this conference taking place in France next week?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, Mr. Speaker, a delegation will proceed next week to Le Havre and Rouen, and one of the delegates is Mr. Michael Salomoni, an Eskimo, an elected representative of Eastern Arctic.

PESTICIDES

DDT—DISPOSAL OF STOCKS ON HAND

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources related to the recent announcement of a major ban on the use of DDT and the developing concern about the disposal of stocks on hand. Are any arrangements being made by the government for collection of excess stocks of DDT so that they will not be dumped into rivers or thrown out in the garbage?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, since the question of the disposal of such stocks affects several government departments that have made a practice in the past of using this chemical, there will be an investigation and review at the interdepartmental level to determine a proper course of action for all departments regarding disposal of these stocks.

Mr. Aiken: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister be kind enough to make a report on this matter as soon as a decision has been reached?

Mr. Greene: I will be glad to consider that suggestion, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSPORT

BORDEN-CAPE TORMENTINE SERVICE—PROVISION OF RESERVE FERRY

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): I rise only to ask the Minister of Transport whether he is in a position to answer the question his Parliamentary Secretary took as notice yesterday.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The question had to do with provision of a standby service in regard to crossings to Prince Edward Island during the winter months. I should like to look into this matter in greater detail. I understand provisions have been made in this connection but I cannot answer fully at this time. I shall try to get a written answer to my hon. friend in a few days.

FORESTRY

VOLUNTARY BAN ON EXPORT OF LOGS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry and since I do not see his Parliamentary Secretary in the chamber, may I direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister to take as notice, or perhaps the acting minister could deal with the matter. It concerns the continuation of the voluntary export ban on logs on the Pacific coast, imposed last spring, which was to have ended on September 1. It is extremely important to the forest industry to know whether or not the ban is being extended. Has the acting minister any information with regard to this question?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Acting Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I do not have any information but I will bring the matter to the attention of the minister.

AIRPORTS

MANITOBA—ASSISTANCE TO PROVINCE IN BUILDING STRIPS

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that one of the many greatly needed airstrips for isolated areas in northern Manitoba has now been licensed at Norway House, is consideration being given by the federal government to making a financial contribution to assist in the cost of other airstrips being built by the provincial northern affairs department?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question should be placed on the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

SHIPBUILDING

ASSISTANCE IN FILLING EXPORT ORDERS

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. I am sorry he is so busy in the "hot seat" today instead of lying around at Harrison Hot Springs with his colleagues. In view of the recent indication by the minister of co-operation with our shipbuilders, particularly if they are able to obtain new export markets, can the minister say what he means in terms of aid to the industry since this information is needed by the industry when it is seeking new business?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think this question might more appropriately be answered by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I might say all departments, my own included, are co-operating, though I think this co-operation varies depending on the kind of request that comes to us from a shipbuilder when he does get an export order or there is the potential for an export order. However, I would be glad to refer this matter to my colleague for a more specific answer.

Mr. Bell: May I take this very fine gesture by the Minister of Transport and direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce since he has prime responsibility for shipbuilding. Would the minister take the opportunity now to reply to the question?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I lost the question. I was answering mentally the question on logs addressed to the Minister of National Revenue! Would the hon. member kindly repeat his question?

Mr. Bell: I was asking about inquiries of his department by shipbuilders. Can the minister give an indication to the shipbuilding industry of what is meant by aid and co-operation in seeking new export business?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hope the minister will reply to this question briefly because I have the impression that the question as asked is very general in nature and normally would be replied to by way of a statement on motions. The minister may give a short reply.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the implication of the question is that no help is given to the industry now and this, of course, is a wrong impression to give. The shipbuilding industry of Canada is subsidized at a very high level representing some tens of millions of dollars a year. The inquiry now being conducted is to find ways and means by which the subsidization program can be improved. I am working for shipyards on an almost daily basis. For example—

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the minister. If he wishes to go into the matter further he will have to do so by way of a statement on motions.

PUBLIC SERVICE

DELAY IN ISSUING RETROACTIVE PAY CHEQUES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Supply and Services. On October 29, in response to a question of mine, he said it was the objective of the central pay office to be current by the end of November in the matter of retroactive pay cheques. Can the minister say whether that objective is being achieved?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of Supply and Services): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are making progress toward achieving that objective.

TRANSPORT

NEWFOUNDLAND—APPLICATION BY PACIFIC HOVERCRAFT TO SERVICE SOUTH COAST

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the lack of proper transportation facilities on the south coast of Newfoundland, mainly as a result of indifference on the part of Canadian National Railways, would the minister undertake to get an early decision from the Canadian Transport Commission on an application submitted to that board by Pacific Hovercraft Limited to operate services in that area?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Long before the hon. member was even aware that this was happening, Mr. Speaker, I had made such representations to the CTC.

DEVELOPMENT OF TRANS-SHIPMENT FACILITIES AT GANDER AIRPORT

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for my good friend and benevolent colleague, the Minister of Transport. In view of the report that a consortium of French entrepreneurs is planning to spend $400 million in developing air trans-shipment facilities on St. Pierre and Miquelon, is the minister planning to support the concept of trans-shipment at Gander International Airport, which proposal has been investigated for several years now?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated to the very aggressive committee at work at Gander that as soon as they can provide, with our assistance, some tangible evidence that the airlines would be interested in this concept, we would be happy to go ahead as fast as we can. It is a question of finding out whether there is a firm interest on the part of the airlines. We are assisting the committee in this regard as well as undertaking some research on our own.

POLLUTION

LEGISLATION AGAINST USE OF PHOSPHATES IN DETERGENTS

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the statement by the Ontario energy and resources management minister yesterday that legislation regarding the banning of phosphates in detergents is being considered by the Ontario government for this coming January, would the minister indicate whether the government of Canada is also giving consideration to introducing at an early stage legislation to ban the use of phosphates in all detergents used in Canada?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday while speaking on second reading of the Canada Water Act, we are giving consideration to such action. I have asked for the views of the committee that will be studying the Canada Water Act. Whether this matter would be more effectively handled at the federal or at the provincial level is one of the questions very much in my mind at this time.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR PAYMENT ON FARM-STORED CROPS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister without Portfolio in charge of grain. In view of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics report that wheat stocks have risen 17 per cent, which represents a direct increase in farm-stored grain, would the minister say whether he will now recommend a payment on farm-stored grain to relieve the storage problem of the producers?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, any changes in policy with regard to existing situations will, of course, be announced by the government in due course.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO GRANT CONSTITUTIONAL AND ADMINISTRATIVE REFORMS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (for Mr. Stanfield) moved:

> This House condemns the constitutional and administrative policies of the government as enunciated by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development with respect to the Yukon and the Northwest Territories and rejects the pathological refusal of the government to end the colonial form of government which exists in the said Territories and this House adopts the desires and aspirations of the people of the Yukon and Northwest Territories as expressed unanimously by the resolutions of the Yukon Territorial Council and the Northwest Territorial Council requesting evolutionary constitutional and administrative reform.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to see the minister has foregone the pleasure of going to Harrison Hot Springs, where most of his colleagues are today, in order to participate in this debate, as well as the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange), whose participation is going to be rather painful, I am sure. I am just as sure he will be with us during the debate.

Mr. Orange: It won't be painful for me.

Mr. Nielsen: But it will be painful for me.

I should like to recall some of the events that have occurred before becoming critical of the policy of the government as enunciated by the minister in Yellowknife on the tenth of this month and in Whitehorse on the twelfth of this month.

It was in 1958, on September 26, that a former Prime Minister of Canada, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) said:

> This area, Yukon, will be a province surely in the fullness of time.

He said also:

It is my hope that by the time of Canada's centennial in 1967 the Yukon and Mackenzie will have gone a long way—if not all the way—toward self-government.

That was over a decade ago. In keeping with that expressed philosophy, the then government in 1958 did something positive about achieving that objective. I hear from some quarters that nothing was done. Let us examine the record for a moment.

The number of members on the council of the Yukon was increased from five to seven, and a blueprint was devised at that time which would lead to adding an additional member to the council with each progressive increase in the population. There was set up by legislation an advisory committee on finance. It was selected from among the elected representatives sitting on the council and consisted of three members.

This advisory committee on finance was to consult with the Commissioner. In fact, the legislative amendment to the Yukon Act at that time made it obligatory for the Commissioner to consult with the advisory committee on finance before he brought in a budget.

Another notable change was that the Commissioner, for the first time in history, was selected from among the people in the Yukon and was not a civil servant from Ottawa.

Then, also, there was a Court of Appeal set up for the Yukon so that we need not travel cap in hand to the province of British Columbia to take our appeals to their judiciary system. In addition, the franchise in the Northwest Territories was extended to the Keewatin and Franklin districts where hundreds of Canadians had been denied the vote for many, many years—in fact, since 1867. These are some of the reforms that were brought about and others would have followed had the government of that day continued.

What is the record since the change of government in 1963? All the amendments I can recall having seen was that sop of increased indemnities to the members of the councils of both territories. There was an increase in the number on the Council in the Northwest Territories, but it was really insignificant.

I want to make it clear from the outset that what the members of the Yukon council desire is not provincial status. There is no way their requests can be misconstrued and distorted to the extent that one can say they are seeking provincial status. In a moment I will read into the record a resolution passed by that Council, and which has been passed in successive years.

I want to make another distinction. Members of the Indian Affairs and Northern Development Committee who travelled to the Yukon last year heard the councillors themselves assure them, as members of Parliament, that this idea that there was a separate territorial government in the Yukon as distinct from the federal government was a fiction. This is wrong and a distortion of the truth. For a minister of the Crown, and for civil servants both here and in the Yukon, to deliberately attempt to create the image that there is a distinct form of territorial government is wrong; there is not, neither in the Yukon nor in the Northwest Territories.

The Commissioner in the Yukon and the Commissioner in the Northwest Territories are appointed civil servants who take their instructions from the minister and do exactly what the minister tells them to do; nothing more and nothing less. It is wrong for the minister to say that he has to abide by the decisions of the Commissioner of either territory. This is creating a false impression.

What is it that the council of the Yukon desires? As far back as ten years ago the strongest political party in the Yukon at that time, the Progressive Conservative Party, advocated a progressive evolution toward responsible government. That philosophy was embodied in a resolution which was passed by the Yukon territorial council, the last one on January 23, 1968, and it reads as follows:

Whereas the history of our nation serves as our proudest reminder of high endeavour and steadfast recognition of the great principles of Democracy; and

Whereas this Council desires to affirm its belief that the growth and full measure of the Canadian Nation cannot be achieved until the Seal of Democracy is set upon all corners of our land; and

Whereas to delay and frustrate the emergence of full partnership for any of our lands and peoples is alien to the principles which this Nation holds dear; and

Whereas this Council is desirous of accepting those principles of constitutional development that will result in the introduction of a responsible system of government to the Yukon territory; and

Whereas the wishes of the Members of the Yukon Legislative Council should be embodied in any planned constitutional changes;

Be it resolved that: The Commissioner be requested to forward to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for his submission to the Government of Canada on behalf of the council of the Yukon territory the accompanying resolution:

And be it further resolved that the Statutes of Canada be amended wherever necessary to give effect to the constitutional changes hereafter set forth.

A) The Council of the Yukon Territory to be known as the Yukon Legislative Assembly.

Surely, there can be no objection to that kind of change. The resolution continues:

B) The number of Members of the Yukon Legislative Assembly to be increased to 15 and the term of the Assembly to be increased to four years.

The minister, in his announcement in the Yukon, said that it is his intention to increase the term of the council to four years, but I ask members of the House how there can be any real division unless there are sufficient members in a democratic legislative body within which that division might be formed? Surely, it is redundant for me to suggest to members of the House that in order for there to emerge any kind of healthy policy on the part of any government there must be a clash of opinion brought about by division.

The resolution continues:

C) The Advisory Committee on Finance to be replaced by an Executive Council of not less than five members with full executive powers in the following classes of subjects

i) Education, Health and Welfare

Surely, the minister who has the responsibility for this portfolio can appreciate the desire of the people of the Yukon, and particularly the parents in the Yukon, to be able to set the curricula through their elected representatives rather than having the State tell them what their children are going to be taught. Surely, the minister understands that principle. I shall continue:

• (12 noon)

ii) Territorial resources including land.

I wish to make another thing quite clear here. The members of the council in the Yukon are not asking for control over natural resources. They do not ask for administrative responsibility over waters, mines, minerals, oil and gas. We say "territorial resources" because the skills that must be exercised in order to manage a resource such as water in the Yukon must be attained before accepting or even asking for that kind of responsibility. But surely we are mature enough to take over the management of our game, our forests and our lands, together with their disposition, to mention a few. We say, too, we are mature enough to take over public works, and the council requests that administrative responsibility. The fourth area is "justice and corrections". In that connection, I was happy to note the cautious announcement the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) made yesterday, but this does not change the existing system.

The fifth subject is revenue and finance. The sixth is forestry. The seventh is fisheries. The eighth reads as follows:

All residual executive and administrative functions including industry and labour controlled or performed by the federal government, and the Legislative Assembly to have exclusive legislative jurisdiction to make laws for the government of the territory in relation to the above classes of subjects in addition to the legislative powers existing under Section 16 of the Yukon Act as amended.

Then, there is the following:

D) The number of members of the Yukon Legislative Assembly to be further increased at such time as the Yukon Legislative Assembly determines it appropriate that all necessary legislative and other changes are to be effected to constitute the Province of Yukon with the same legislative and executive powers as those which exist in the provinces of Canada.

A careful reading of that part of the resolution will disclose to members that it is not a request for provincial status at this time, although a deliberate attempt I think has been made to convey that impression. Paragraph E reads as follows:

The members to be given all necessary authority analogous to that in provincial legislative assemblies to establish their indemnities and allowances and to have all the requisite powers to establish or participate in pension plan or group health plan.

I must say that the minister, in his announced intentions, has said that he intends to give the members of the council freedom to set their own indemnities and in that respect the council will be answerable to the electorate.

F) Section 24 of the Yukon Act to be repealed.

That section provides that an elected member sitting on the council of either territory shall not introduce a money bill. There is the rub. The only individual who can place any money legislation before the council of either territory is the Commissioner, and he only acts upon the instruction of the minister. The minister, in his speech at both Yellowknife and in the Yukon, to both councils, said there are many areas in which the elected representatives are not fully accountable to the electorate. Unfortunately, he said two such areas are the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories. I ask the minister where else in the free or democratic world is there any other area in which people tax themselves but are not permitted to spend a penny of the tax money. That is the situation in the Yukon Territory and in the Northwest Territories. We have a wholly elected council. All seven members are elected, but they are only rubber stamps for the policy enunciated to the commission by the minister. Then we have paragraph G:

The status of the Yukon Legislative Assembly to be enlarged so that it shall have full capacity to attend all inter-provincial and federal-provincial conferences and to participate in resulting discussions and agreements.

I ask, why not; why do not Canadians in the north, through their elected representatives, have a voice in such things as the constitutional conference? Why must the Yukon and the Northwest Territories be represented at constitutional conferences by a civil servant?

H) The Land Titles Act to be repealed in respect of the Yukon Territory and replaced by a Land Titles Ordinance.

I) All Crown land to be held in the name of the Crown in right of the Territory.

I should like to make another thing clear. In all these points I am making on behalf of the members of the council, they are not asking for the transference of all Crown land to their control. They merely ask that the land now held by the Crown in the right of Canada in the Yukon be transferred to the Crown in the right of the territory in the same way it is held in the provinces.

How different is that resolution from the official stand of the Yukon Liberal party? Let me read the resolution of the Yukon Liberal party which was held out to the electorate during the last election. It reads:

WHEREAS all indications point to a period of development in the Yukon Territory greater and more sustained than that of the Gold Rush;

I agree, as I am sure the minister does.

AND WHEREAS as a consequence of that development it is expected that the population of the Yukon will increase substantially;

It has. It is far greater than DBS has led the minister to believe it is. The DBS figure is 16,000 and the minister uses the figure 18,000. I suggest to the minister the figure is closer to 25,000 now. I suggest also that if the minister were really up-to-date in respect of the Yukon—I am sure he cannot live there—and were properly informed by the officials, he would know this. His departmental officials have no sympathy with this move because if it were adopted they would be out of a job eventually, and so far as we are concerned the quicker the better.

The minister has said that great strides have been made toward progressing to self-government in the Northwest Territories, but all that has happened has been that masses of civil servants have been moved from Ottawa to Yellowknife.

Mr. Orange: You should get your facts right.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member says I should get my facts right. I know that quite a number of these civil servants refused to go there because they did not want to live in that area. Otherwise, there has just been a transference of bureaucracy from Ottawa to Yellowknife. Duncan Pride, one of the members of the council—I do not know which area he represents—made a speech in Edmonton last night in which he called for the resignation of the minister. That indicates what the feeling is in the territories.

Let me read this:

AND WHEREAS it is recognized and desirable that the population of the Yukon Territory has and will continue to assume permanency and stability;

It has. The minister has been there and has seen some of our residential areas. He has also seen the growth of the business community. Another resolution reads as follows:

AND WHEREAS it is recognized that the problems of government and administration attendant upon this expansion pose special problems;

You bet they do!

AND WHEREAS it is recognized that, at present, the Yukon Territory should not assume provincial status, but that its people must be afforded a greater share of responsibility in Yukon affairs and a more effective voice in determining the destiny of Yukoners, as is the right of all free people everywhere;

That is a sentiment in which I am sure all of us concur. I shall continue to read from page 6:

NOW THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED THAT:

1. The membership of the Council of the Yukon Territory be increased to 15.

What has the Yukon council requested? Precisely what the Liberal association recommends.

2. That the Governor in Council appoint on the recommendation of a majority of the members of the Territorial Council of the Yukon Territory, a member of the said council to be chief executive of the Territory—

We have not gone that far.

—and who will hold and discharge all the present responsibilities and duties of the Commissioner of the Yukon Territory.

The request of the council falls far short of this Liberal resolution. It goes on to read:

• (12:10 p.m.)

3. That 4 members of the Territorial Council of the Yukon Territory be elected by a majority of the said Council to assist the Chief Executive and to be responsible for the administration of various departments of Government of the Yukon Territory.

The Liberal resolution refers to all departments, but the council only wishes at this time those which they enumerated in the resolution. Then, it goes on:

4. The necessary amendments to the Yukon Act and all other effective legislation be introduced forthwith to accomplish these aims.

That is the official stand of the Yukon Liberal Association. I can well remember the statements of the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) and of the candidate who ran for the Liberal party in the Yukon in the last election. They stated the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was in full sympathy with these objectives, and they were certain that once the Liberal government was formed these objectives would be achieved. That has been held out as reform. In the Yukon, the minister said he is prepared to set up immediately an executive committee to consist of the Commissioner and his two Assistant Commissioners, plus one elected member of the Yukon Council. You have three civil servants who take their instructions from the minister inviting one elected member of the council to sit in on the decision making process. That is like the conclave of the Mandarins in Ottawa, the deputy ministers of the various departments, asking one or two members of the House to step across to the Rideau Club or somewhere to take part in the decision making process.

What kind of topsy-turvy democracy is that? If the members of the council had bitten at that bait, they would have permitted the civil servants to be smuggled into the legislative arm of the government up there. This is, in essence, what the clever scheme was. The council rejected that idea, and quite properly so. All that would occur if they were to accede to that kind of so-called reform would be that the Commissioner and his two assistant civil servants would have an office boy to run back and forth to tell the council what decisions have been made from time to time. It is a completely backward idea of a real democratic reform.

The choice of both parties and the unanimous choice of the council is certainly for an executive committee. The council asks for an executive committee of five, and so do the Liberal and the Conservative Associations. What can be so abhorrent about that? Why is it that the government continually rejects the reasonable requests of the council to have the same powers as those which the municipality of the city of Whitehorse has?

Why is it that throughout this country, in every province, indeed throughout North America in all likelihood, every municipality that levies taxes upon its taxpayers is entitled to spend those revenues? If the municipal councils of the country and of the various cities across the land can have that power, why cannot the elected representatives sitting on the councils in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories have it? Why, indeed, can they not have the same powers as the school board? The school board in the city of Yellowknife has more power than the councils. Why should we be so backward, so pathologically reluctant to extend the same rights to individuals across Canada?

Let me quote what the Prime Minister had to say in his opening statement at the second meeting of the constitutional conference in Ottawa on February 10 of this year:

The federal government insists that a charter of human rights should be an integral part of the constitution because it believes that those rights are equally important for all Canadians. Whether he be from Churchill, Trois Rivieres, Kamloops, Medicine Hat, Richibucto or Port aux Basques, the Canadian citizen must be assured everywhere of and represent, his most essential rights?

These are noble sounding words. He went on to say:

And why should this not be so? Are those not values common to all, and in which we all believe? Of course. And so, I ask you, gentlemen, why do we hesitate? Why are we reluctant to join together in guaranteeing to the citizen, whom we all serve and represent, his most essential rights?

What right can be of more value to all Canadians than the right to govern themselves? What right could be closer to their hearts than the right to say to their elected representative what should be taught to their children, to say how the money that they give in taxes should be spent? Those are noble sounding words. If they mean anything, they mean much more than what the minister said that he was going to do and what he said was government policy in the two speeches which he gave.

I may say that the papers that have been distributed as background information on the Northwest Territories and the Yukon are grossly misleading. I will deal with the papers on the Yukon and let my colleague from the Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange) deal with the other paper. With respect to the Yukon paper, let me point out that the population figure is stated as being 16,000—a gross misrepresentation. In that background paper, the Indian population is stated to be about 16 per cent of the total population of the Yukon. Nothing is mentioned about the fact that number includes the Indian people from Atlin, Telegraph Creek and Lower Post—all B.C. locations. The fact is that it is closer to 10 per cent or 11 per cent, and believe me I have reason to make certain of the Indian population at the time of elections.

On page 2 of the background paper, there is a statement that agriculture is an economically marginal activity because of climatic conditions. That is simply not true, and the policy of the government in closing farms is certainly a negative one in that connection. The Yukon and the Northwest Territories lost their truest friend, and one dedicated to northern agriculture, when Mr. Nowasad passed away.

Throughout the paper the false idea is put forward that there is a distinct form of government in the Yukon. This is simply not so. It is a distortion to say that over the past five years the federal government has spent some $62 million in the Yukon to assist in resource development and to compare that with direct revenues of about $4,000.

Then, the background paper indicates that, in addition to game as a resource, land in the surrounding communities and settlements is being made the responsibility of the Commissioner, as if to say that these powers are being transferred to something distinct from the Government of Canada or the minister. This is the kind of invidious distortion that is made here.

I want to deal just for a moment with the speech which was made by the minister before the council. I am sure that my colleague, the hon. member for the Northwest Territories, has noticed that the so-called white paper is headed "Speech by the Hon. Jean Chretien, P.C., M.P., Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to the Council of the Northwest Territories" while his Yukon speech was "before the Territorial Council". He said, and I quote from the second page of his speech:

• (12:20 p.m.)

—I shared the confidence of my predecessor that government policy on the constitutional development of the north could be placed before you at an early date.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

I want to say this as kindly as I can, Mr. Speaker. His predecessor, now the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing), never had any intention of granting the smallest scintilla of reform in either territory.

The minister went on to say:

The first objective is to protect and further the legitimate interests of the Canadian people in developments in the north—in its economic development and particularly resource development and the potentially immense wealth that may result from this.

He went on to imply that because of the relatively small population in the Yukon, and because the Yukon can support itself economically, responsibility is not being passed to the elected members of the council. Indeed, in a recent press release it was said that these two factors were the ones that were preventing any kind of reform. That is the argument the Yukon councillors have been met with each time they have made their request. But now, all of a sudden, there is a burgeoning economic situation in the Yukon. In this connection I should like to quote from the Ottawa Citizen of November 13—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the House give unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nielsen: I thank hon. members for their indulgence, particularly in vew of the fact that this matter is so close to the hearts of the people of the Yukon and Northwest Territories. They want a fair hearing on it, and fair participation in the debate. May I quote from the Ottawa Citizen of November 13 as follows:

Secondly, the potential wealth of the Yukon, particularly the discovery of Prudhoe Bay oil in Alaska, is so great that the federal government simply can't go along with the idea that they should benefit a population that constitutes less than 0.1 per cent of the total Canadian population.

So, Mr. Speaker, we are struck by the swings and the roundabouts alike. On the one hand, we have been told for many years, "I am sorry, you cannot have any form of responsible government, any reform, because you are not paying your way." On the other hand, we are now told that because of these great discoveries, and the potential revenues from them, there is too much for us to handle, and much too much to be devoted entirely to the Yukon. But isn't that what our federal system is all about?

The minister stated in his speech or, if I may call it, his white paper:

> I am convinced that disposing of these alternatives—

These included the alternative of giving the Yukon to B.C., or extending the boundaries of the provinces northward to the Arctic Sea, or joining us with the Mackenzie or other parts of the provinces. He rejected all of these alternatives, and for that part of his policy I applaud him, as we all do the people in the Yukon. That is one nice thing I have to say about his remarks. But I continue with the quotation:

> I am convinced that disposing of these alternatives clears the way, simply and effectively, for the consideration of needed reforms that will give you a greater measure of territorial self-government—

I say that is unadulterated balderdash. The minister also says that one of the prime difficulties is bringing the executive and legislative arms of government closer together. This white paper, the minister's remarks, and the telegram which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) sent to members of the Yukon Council yesterday inviting their delegation to Ottawa to discuss these matters with him, all create the impression that the greatest difficulty we are encountering in the Yukon is getting the executive and legislative arms together. The impression is left that the executive is an elected executive. This is simply not so.

The so-called executive in the Yukon is the Commissioner and his two assistants. They are civil servants, and they are not really an executive. They are administrators, and they administer on the instructions of the minister. When the minister speaks of an executive in this white paper, let us call it what it is. Let us substitute the correct term for executive in his statement, and it then states that the difficulty is in getting the legislative arm of the government in closer tune with the civil servants. That is what is intended, and that is what is meant. That is precisely what this devious device would have accomplished if the minister's wishes had been accepted in setting up this committee.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the hon. member. He has just said that the civil servants act under the direction of the minister. Does he not agree that the minister is an elected representative, and has he such a low opinion of the federal representative elected in the Yukon?

Mr. Nielsen: I certainly do not. The minister will have noted that I have not said any unkind things about him in this House since he first sat on the treasury benches, nor have I done so in my riding. I will continue that course until I have cause to do otherwise. But surely this is what is preventing the minister from granting the legitimate desires of the Yukon. We think he is a great guy. We think he is rather too nice. But what is wrong with people who are elected from among themselves deciding what should be in the curricula of their schools? Why should we have the minister telling us that? The answer is abundantly clear. He would not want his children, no matter where they live, to be told by someone living in Ottawa what they were going to be taught.

It is wrong to have that power residing in the minister. This argument is very compelling and I am sure he must agree with me. He says he wants to strengthen the links between the so-called executive and the legislature. What he means is that he wants to strengthen and entrench the powers of the civil servants over the elected representatives of the people. That is what would be accomplished if this executive committee were set up. The majority of three would be civil servants.

But what is worse, the one elected member of the council invited to sit with these three civil servants would be given responsibility for a department or departments of the territorial government, but the rider is that would be subject to the control of the Commissioner. In plain words, that means subject to the control of the minister, and while we have every confidence in him we do not think that is responsible government.

There is only one body to whom an elected representative should be responsible, and that is the people who voted for him. It is not the civil service. Surely, that is the soundest principle. With great respect for the minister's abilities, capacities and integrity, it is not to him that the elected representative should be responsible. We want to have a word in deciding our own destinies. We want to play a part in making the decisions ourselves. That is our right. It is the right of free people everywhere. It is the right of every Canadian, and if we are to believe the words of the Prime Minister at the constitutional conference last February, it is a right that cannot be withheld from us any longer.

I do not intend to take up any more time, Mr. Speaker. I simply make this plea to members of the House, and in particular to members who sit on the treasury benches, that they heed the reasonable requests of the people of the Yukon and the reasonable requests of the people of the Northwest Territories. They are not asking for the impossible. They are asking for a gradual separation from civil service control.

They are asking for the gradual evolution of the decision making process from the bureaucrats to the elected representatives of the people. The people of the Yukon did not elect the minister; they elected me to come here and make this kind of plea to the minister. They elected seven members of the council and they do not want them just to be rubber stamps on federal decisions; they want to make their own decisions. They are not irresponsible people; they are not going to throw money out of the window or dump it into the Yukon River or raise their indemnities to three times what they are getting now. They are responsible, intelligent individuals with the capacity to make fiscal decisions, such as those made by municipalities or school boards or like bodies.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I will begin by saying that as I listened to the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) who commenced this debate, I was struck by what I consider the very important differences between the situation in the Yukon and that in the Northwest Territories resulting from the tremendous geographical differences between the two areas and the tremendous differences in the living conditions of the indigenous Indian and Eskimo people and the white people. It seems to me that these facts must be kept in mind in discussing the problems of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

If I understood the speeches made by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) in the Yukon and in the Northwest Territories, it seemed to me that there were two important points to be considered. One was his approach to the problems of self-government. He praised the Carrothers Commission and its recommendations but it seemed to me, as I tried to analyze how he intended to implement these recommendations, that 100 years from today the Canadian Parliament would still be discussing just when these recommendations should be implemented. That is the rate at which the minister seems to want to move.

I have to agree with the hon. member for the Yukon who said a few minutes ago that in effect the minister's policy leaves a tremendous amount of the power of decision-making and implementation to the bureaucracy, the civil servants, and not to the people of the territory nor the minister.

Mr. Nielsen: Oh, no.

Mr. Orlikow: As the Carrothers Commission recommended, a part of the administration has been transferred to Yellowknife. This has had some good and some bad effects. In some cases the decision-making process has been slowed down because Yellowknife has to consult Ottawa. The Commissioner has to get approval from the minister, the deputy minister, the assistant deputy minister and so on.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the hon. member will allow me a question at this point, while I can see the way he is directing his remarks. I should like him to explain to the House of Commons why the people of Churchill would rather be under the federal administration of the Territories than under the N.D.P. administration of the Manitoba government?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, if the minister wants to participate on a very partisan basis I am prepared to do that when we have the time, but not in the 20 minutes that I have now. If the minister is seriously suggesting that the government of Manitoba, which took over on July 15 this year, could have begun to solve the most elementary problems of Churchill, then I have even less respect for the minister's common sense and judgment than I thought I had. The minister should know that if the federal government would get off its butt and do a simple thing like extending the shipping season at Churchill, a great many of that town's problems would be solved. That is something for which the present N.D.P. government nor the former Conservative government of Manitoba cannot be blamed.

It seemed to me that the most important aspect of the problem of the indigenous people of the Northwest Territories, the Eskimos and the Indians, was completely ignored by the minister in his speeches in the north, to which I have referred. The minister has spoken frequently and with pride about the tremendous increase in federal government expenditures to improve the lot of the native people in the far north. A great deal more money is being spent on education, health services and housing than in the past. For this, the present government and the former one should be commended. However, when one compares that with what needs to be done to bring the standards of the native people up to the standards of the rest of the North American continent in 1969, one can see that there is a long way to go still. There was not a word about that in the minister's speech, Mr. Speaker.

Let me just summarize the situation and put on record some of the most recent figures. For the year 1964, the mortality rate of Eskimo children aged one to four years was 13 times the all-Canada rate. The average age for deceased persons in the Territories in 1964 was 19.3 years for Eskimos, 29.9 years for Indians and 34.3 years for whites, as compared with 61 years for all Canada. There are extreme income differentials between the native people and the white people in the Territories. The following figures are an excellent indicator of the very dangerous coincidence of social class and ethnic background. In 1963, the average income of whites in the Northwest Territories was $2,922, almost 70 per cent above the Canadian average. At the same time, the average per capita income for Indians was $510 and for Eskimos $426.

I cannot claim to be an expert like the member for the Yukon and the member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange), nor have I had the opportunity to visit the north like the present minister, but anybody who has been there knows of the tremendous difference in the housing facilities available for most of the native people as compared with that for the white people in the Territories, most of whom work for the government or private industry. I am sorry the minister has left the House, but I am sure it is for reasons which are important to him. Apparently at Inuvik, the show place of the far north created by past Canadian governments, virtually all the white population live in homes connected with the utilities provided by the government and nearly all the Indian and Eskimo people live in houses not so connected. It seems to me that this is the kind of thing we must face up to before we can claim that we are beginning to face up to the problems of the north.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to go back to some of the important recommendations of the Carrothers Commission and look at how the minister proposes to deal with them. We commend the government and the minister for approving the position of the Carrothers Commission and rejecting the idea that the territories should be divided into two or more political units. We commend the minister for giving assurances that the Commissioner is to be more accountable to the territorial council for his executive actions than was the case in the past. The Carrothers Commission recommended the appointment of an executive council which would advise the Commissioner and administer territorial affairs. We believe that the minister's decision to add two elected members to the territorial council, one of whom must be a member of the executive, is a policy of tokenism and is not acceptable to parliament in the year 1969. We believe that the proposal of the Carrothers Commission that there be a progressive increase in the legislative and constitutional powers of the territorial council, whenever that council is desirous of so increasing its powers, is good and should be given more consideration than the minister has apparently given to it.

It is fair to say, I suppose, that in this field the minister has left us with two alternatives. One is a continuation of the present situation, and the other is the creation of provincial status for the territories. Of course, someone more important than the minister has made a pronouncement in this field. Answering some questions several days ago, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) suggested that we want provincial status for the territories now but that the government is not prepared to give it. We have, to my knowledge, never said that provincial status now or in the near future for the territories is a viable proposal. The Prime Minister, when answering that question, set up a straw man to knock down. He is very good at that technique.

What bothers me is that the government's program, as enunciated in ministerial speeches, does not provide adequately for the orderly and sensible economic and social development of the northern half of Canada. True, we are making provision for much larger expenditures in the north, and I want to deal with those. The minister proposes, as the estimates indicate, to spend more government money on roads, airports, railways if railways are a feasible idea, water services, meteorological studies and all other services which are necessary if economic development is to go forward. These expenditures, we think, are necessary.

Having agreed to undertake the tremendous expenditures necessary if northern development is to be possible, the government says, "We will give to those who are searching for oil or minerals virtually a free hand. We will give them concessions. We will provide subsidies or loans to any who can find minerals, power, oil, natural gas or anything else of value in the north country." All these people may go in and enjoy the special advantages of tax provisions which allow for fast write-offs and fast depreciation.

The government will be spending the money, Mr. Speaker, on developing the north but the private entrepreneur, speculator or businessman will reap the harvest. We think that is not good enough. We think that if the government is to spend tremendous sums in installing basic services which are necessary for development, it, representing the people of Canada, at least ought to be a partner in reaping the harvest. The government should share in the benefits of development and not just put up the money.

May I now speak again of what I consider the basic defects in the minister's approach to the Carrothers Commission's recommendations. The Carrothers Commission said that education is the touchstone to the future of the north. That is true. I will not be unfair and say the government has done nothing about education. Of course, it has done a great deal about education. We spend more money educating our young people in the north than ever before. Indian and Eskimo children are staying in school longer than ever. But I am disturbed about the kind of education they are getting. It ignores completely their hereditary cultures and languages. I have heard of teachers not speaking one word of the Eskimo or Indian language teaching grade 1 Indian or Eskimo children who spoke not a word of English. Teachers go into the north country after going through, at most, a two or three week crash course designed to acquaint them with the problems, history and culture of the north country. That kind of thing just is not good enough—unless, consciously or subconsciously, we are trying to assimilate completely the native people of northern Canada and make their culture, language and way of life disappear completely. I do not know if that is the minister's approach but it certainly is not mine nor my party's. We believe that the Indians and Eskimos of the north have the democratic right of choosing their way of life. They have the right of choosing if they want to work as the white man works and live as the white man lives.

That choice must be left entirely to them. But it is our responsibility to make sure they have that choice. In other words, it is our responsibility to provide education, housing, health standards and employment opportunities so that if they want to adopt our way of life, they may do so.

I recognize our dilemma. I have said that we believe the territorial councils should be given more power; but we also recognize that if they are given more power immediately the white people in the territories, and I am speaking particularly of the Northwest Territories, will quickly control to a greater extent the destiny of the territories. As the Carrothers Commission said, the white people have the education, drive and know-how, and they are the ones who are elected to the territorial councils.

Speaking from memory, and I do not think I am wrong, I do not recall one Eskimo being included in the Northwest Territories Council—

Mr. Chrétien: One Eskimo is elected and one is appointed.

• (12:50 p.m.)

Mr. Orlikow: After listening to the people, one does not have to be an expert to realize that the real power rests with the white people because of their experience and background. We think this is wrong, Mr. Speaker. The majority of the people in the Northwest Territories are, and will continue to be for many years, of Indian and Eskimo origin.

How should we deal with this situation? We believe the way to do it would be to encourage a very rapid extension of local government to many more communities. The minister talked about doing this, but there is very little evidence that he has in fact done much to extend local government to the communities in a form appropriate to those communities. We believe the powers given to local government, whether it is called a municipal council, band council or local district, must be increased. We agree with the minister that the most important area for the growth of self-government lies with the local communities.

Many of the institutions of local government are unfamiliar to the native people. Both the institutions and the people will have to change. It is only when the native peoples have learned the lesson of political power and how to exercise it that the necessary redistribution of power in the north can take place.

If the minister and his administration would co-operate in providing the framework for meaningful local government in the Indian and Eskimo communities for a few years, these Indians and Eskimos would have the experience with our kind of government. They would then have the self confidence to nominate in large numbers Indian and Eskimo people for the territorial council, which has not been done up to now, and elect these people. After election, they would play a meaningful role in the government of the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Orlikow: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I will not be too long. We are concerned with the approach of the minister and his department to the demands of the white communities of the north. I am not being critical of these white communities. I understand to a large extent these demands for increased self-government are legitimate. This to a large extent is cultural. Unless we adopt a more aggressive policy than I feel is going to be adopted, there will be cultural genocide to a large extent for the native people of northern Canada.

What are the facts, Mr. Speaker? The nature of white culture allows the white man to prosper in the north. If the government of Canada provided the service I talked about, there would be a good deal of room for expansion of the so-called free enterprise system. The free enterprise system, whether it be the large mining, timber, oil or gas enterprise or the small businesses established to provide for the people who live in the territories, particularly the people who live in the wage economy, is made to order for the white people who go to the north country. I do not say this in a critical sense. It is a statement of fact. That kind of society, to a large extent, is foreign to the Indian and Eskimo people. They are either completely frozen out of that kind of society or have become the hewers of wood and the drawers of water.

The problem is not that the Indian and Eskimo people lack initiative. There is plenty of evidence of their initiative in the north country. An example of this is the way the Eskimo people moved in quickly to handle much of the work on the DEW Line, some of which was pretty skilled and complicated work. This indicates that, if given the opportunity, they fit into our kind of society. However, they have not up until now lived in this way and many of them simply do not understand this way of life.

We believe that the federal government has the prime responsibility for supporting the maximum retention of the cultural traditions of the native people in the Northwest Territories. We recognize that economic development will require many social and cultural changes, but these must not be imposed either by intent or by ignoring the background and tradition of the Indian and Eskimo people in the north country. As I said earlier, there must be a rapid expansion of encouraging local government by educating the Indian and Eskimo peoples to our way of life.

On the economic side of the problem, we suggest if the government really wants to bring about improved conditions for the Indian and Eskimo people of northern Canada, they should give a great deal more consideration to the encouragement of co-operative enterprise. The Indian and Eskimo people of the north have traditionally worked together. They work together in fishing, trapping and catching of seals and whales. The government should develop special programs for encouraging co-operative enterprise by the Indian and Eskimo people of the north.

To a large extent, we agree with the sentiments expressed in the motion moved on behalf of the leader of the official opposition. We have not all had an opportunity of seeing the resolutions passed by the territorial councils. Possibly, to a certain extent, that is our own fault. We may have some reservations about their views, some of which were dispelled by the hon. member for Yukon in his speech. We have great reservations about the ability of the native people of the north. Unless they are given a great deal more support to develop to the point where they can have a meaningful way of life, these problems will still exist in future generations.

The government must do a great deal more than it has done in the past. The minister must have more faith in the people of the north, both white and native, and a great deal less confidence in the idea that civil servants, the bureaucracy, whether they live in Ottawa or Yellowknife, are really competent to settle all the problems of the north.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock I now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, we are today looking into a motion brought forward by the Official Opposition, involving problems related to the Northwest and Yukon territories, with which I am not quite in agreement. Although it is vague, I feel the motion deserves our attention.

In the Northwest Territories, as in any of the ten Canadian provinces, there are problems related to finance and development, due to very low population density.

In fact, expanses as large as the Northwest Territories and the Yukon contain respectively 32,000 and 16,000 inhabitants only. It is therefore obvious that any mining or other development program, as well as the building of roads and the installation of modern facilities, involves substantial costs that should be spread in proportion to the population.

From the figures quoted by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien), on his recent trip to Whitehorse and Yellowknife, we realize that in 1969, for instance, the Canadian government spent in the Yukon a net amount of $2,250 per capita, and $2,281 in the Northwest Territories.

Those amounts may seem astronomical, but taking into account the size of the territories and the distances between towns and Indian or Eskimo posts, such expenses are explainable.

Is it absolutely necessary to push on mining prospection to that extent, since the southern regions are now being developed and there are still natural resources which have not yet been worked.

There is, for example, a rather important iron ore deposit near Val-d'Or, a town which is quite well organized and which is served by a railway, a road system and one of the nicest airports in Quebec. It also enjoys power and telephone services, hospitals, stores, in one word, all the facilities of a modern city.

Something should be done to get industrialists interested in mining in this region before they spend huge amounts to develop territories difficult of access, where people must be brought and cities built. In my opinion, it would be more profitable to develop the mines in the vicinity of organized centers.

For minerals, which are the main natural resources in these territories, the markets seem to be excellent, but foreign capital is necessary to exploit them.

At Whitehorse and Dawson City I noticed that to exploit its mines the Yukon has to rely mainly on Japanese capital. Canadian capital is undoubtedly lacking. American investors are reluctant, maybe because they are far away. However, since Japan needs copper and iron so much, it is ready to invest in Canada. In fact, the Japanese are interested in bringing into their country ore to be processed there and then put on the international market. That is how our ore comes back to us as manufactured goods.

Since we want to develop our natural resources—which is desirable—we should find a way to process on the spot as much ore as possible so as to create a great many jobs in Canada.

I know of a law passed recently in Ontario, under which in that province, at least as concerns provincial jurisdiction, all natural resources must be processed, whenever possible, on the spot where they are exploited. This legislation is therefore designed to benefit some areas substantially, including that part of Ontario located close to northern Quebec. I feel that such legislation ought to be enacted by the federal government.

I do not intend to elaborate on the problems of northern Canada and the Northwest Territories this afternoon. I know that other hon. members are better informed than I am of the conditions and problems particular to that area. I shall rather limit myself to listening to them and providing them with an opportunity to express their opinions and ideas.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. R. J. Orange (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, on entering this debate I should like to say that my first reaction when the opposition motion appeared on the order paper was that there would be a great number of bitter words said in this chamber regarding statements of the minister about the growth of self government in the Yukon territory and in the Northwest Territories. When I read the motion, it became obvious to me that we might become embroiled in a meaningless discussion during this valuable time for us from the north, and those interested in Canada's north, to express our views. Having listened to the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), who is obviously the man who convinced his party that this was an important subject—for which I congratulate him—and having listened to other members regarding their feelings about the north, I hope and know the minister will take into account the constructive suggestions made to him today.

These suggestions have related to self-government and policies regarding social, political and economic development of the north. Just before entering the chamber I found an ad in an Ottawa newspaper, dated November 18 which may have caused a little doubt about the motives behind the opposition motion.

Mr. Nielsen: Read it, Bud; read it.

Mr. Orange: I intend to.

Mr. Nielsen: Read the one I sent you.

Mr. Orange: It reads:

Wanted. One member of Parliament. Willing to represent the Yukon Territorial Council in its moves to achieve responsible government. Apply to Don Taylor, Room 207, The Taku hotel, Whitehorse, Y.T.

I am wondering whether there is not something more than coincidence in this regard. I should point out also—

• (2:20 p.m.)

Mr. Nielsen: Read the one in your hand.

Mr. Orange: —that the gentleman I just named is a prominent Liberal in the Yukon. I might suggest that he feels the same way as the hon. member across the way with regard to self-government in the Yukon Territory. When the minister made the statement—I regret it was long overdue; we would have liked to have had it a year or a year and a half before—he said a number of significant things to the people in the Northwest Territories. He mentioned the addition of two elected members to the territorial council. I shall come back to that later. He stated that the term of council would be increased from three years to four years. He left the council the option of reducing the voting age. He reduced the period for disallowance of legislation from two years to one year. He offered members the opportunity of setting their own indemnities. This is most important in relation to their responsibilites as elected members.

The minister set up a vehicle called a standing committee to be a committee of the territorial council to meet with the Commissioner to discuss the financial aspects of territorial operations. I regret that, in my opinion and in the opinion of the people in the Northwest Territories, the minister did not go as far as he should have gone. When he presents his legislation I would like to see a provision that the number of additional council members elected will be four rather than two. I serve notice to the minister now that when the legislation goes before a committee, if this provision is not contained in it, I intend to move an amendment in this regard.

Mr. Nielsen: Are you going to resign as parliamentary secretary, too?

Mr. Orange: In respect of the voting age, I believe it should be the responsibility of the council to make the decision. I do not think we, in this parliament, should say at what age people in the north should vote. I hope there will be provisions which would allow the Commissioners of both territories to borrow money without going through the tedious processes of the Treasury Board and the Department of Finance in Ottawa.

Mr. Nielsen: We have that power now.

Mr. Orange: We do not have it completely.

Mr. Nielsen: The Commissioner has the power now in the Yukon Territory.

Mr. Orange: The hon. member across the way says that in the Yukon Territory the Commissioner has that power. I hope the same situation will apply in the Northwest Territories. The most important power, however, is that the members of the council be able to participate meaningfully in government and have some say in the development of programs, policies and the spending of money.

At the moment, the council in the Northwest Territories basically is Her Majesty's loyal opposition to the Commissioner. In order to bring responsible government to the people in the north, this kind of philosophy must disappear. The Carrothers Commission suggested that an executive council be established which would do a number of things. According to the Carrothers Commission, a member of the executive council would not be required to be an elected member of the legislative assembly in order to qualify for appointment. The executive council would be presided over by the Commissioner. Each member normally would be charged with the administration of one or more departments in the territorial government. The executive council would co-ordinate finance, prepare the budget, prepare legislation in principle and generally tender advice on any territorial matter on which the Commissioner should seek advice.

I would ask the minister to take another look at the question of the establishment of an executive council in the Northwest Territories. Without breaking down the principles in which the minister believes, I think we could achieve some sort of accommodation which would bring about this meaningful participation in government by members of the council. If the minister does not wish to involve the members of the council in operating departments at this stage, the executive council could consist of elected representatives, the Commissioner, the deputy commissioner and the senior financial official who could carry out the co-ordination of financial papers, the budget, legislation in principle and generally tender views on any territorial matter.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the hon. member. In his view, who should be in the majority on such a council; should it be the elected members or the civil servants?

Mr. Orange: My idea is that members of council should be the majority with the deputy Commissioner as a member of council.

The government has gone a long way in northern Canada in terms of bringing meaningful government to the people. Let us look at the record. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) outlined the progress in the Yukon Territory. Let me say something about the Northwest Territories. Up until 1959 the council of the Northwest Territories consisted of five appointed civil servants from Ottawa and four elected representatives from the north. In 1959 with the exception of the deputy Commissioner who is a member of council the four appointed members of council came from outside the civil service. This was sort of a step forward. It was a meagre one but also an important one.

In 1962, the former government came up with a proposal to divide the Northwest Territories. In 1963, this was passed on to the new government and as a result of committee hearings, at which there was a good deal of objection on the part of the people in the north, the idea of dividing the territories was put aside. In 1965 the former minister, the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) came up with the idea of obtaining at first hand from the people of the north their ideas and views on the form and shape the government should take. The commission called the Carrothers Commission reported to the minister in 1966. Prior to the receipt of this report however, this government extended in the Northwest Territories the territorial franchise to the eastern and central Arctic by the addition of three more constituencies which brought the total of elected members to seven. This for the first time gave them the majority.

In 1967, the implementation of the Carrothers Commission recommendations was under way. First of all Yellowknife was declared to be the capital. A crash move to bring the government to the people in the north took place and in September 1967 the Commissioner arrived at Yellowknife with his staff to take up full time residence and work in the territories.

Let us look at some other aspects of the Carrothers Commission report as it affects us in the north. The first important recommendation was non-division. The minister supported this stand and went further. He reminded land hungry provincial premiers they should keep their eyes and hands off the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories. Yellowknife has been declared the capital of the territories. The Carrothers Commission—and there is general support in the House and from the people in the north—does not recommend provincial status at this time. I must take issue with the minister when in reiterating the principle in this statement he used the phrase "for the foreseeable future". The future is something we cannot predict. With the boom in economic development in the north, we believe the situation could change so rapidly that no government would wish to be locked into the position that there is no potential province or that there are no potential provinces in northern Canada. I would hope it would be the objective of all Canadians to see further provinces some day in northern Canada.

The recommendations with regard to the Commissioner and deputy Commissioner have been carried out. With regard to the suggestions of the Carrothers Commission concerning the legislative assembly, again I cannot understand why there is so much reluctance to changing the name "council" to "assembly". I may be missing the point, but it seems to me that it could have been handled in about 30 seconds time. We have extended the life of the council to four years and we have given the members of the council the right to set their indemnity. The transfer of public lands in and around municipalities is in effect. As suggested, a lands title office was established in Yellowknife in 1967.

With regard to the administration, the heart, the guts of a proper government structure, Carrothers said:

> We recommend that administrative functions be transferred to the territorial civil service on a specified schedule as soon as practicable.

He said this in 1966, and on April 1 of 1970 all of the former federal civil servants of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development will have been transferred, both in the Mackenzie district and in the eastern Arctic, and all the people who were formerly federal civil servants carrying out provincial type activities for the federal government will become territorial employees.

I must take issue at this time with a remark made by the hon. member for Yukon when he suggested that all we were really doing was to impose another level of bureaucracy by transferring from Ottawa to Yellowknife all the administration that was carried out here. He seemed to think that this would not work. I say that in order to carry out the functions of government, and to do the things that people want, one has to have a public service. Not only that, but the public service, as it has been developed and is being developed in the north, is going out to the private sector in the south and in the north. I suggest that of the former incumbents of positions who carried out territorial functions very few knew the north, and fortunately they are the ones who did not want to move north, who have stayed in Ottawa and are doing something else now.

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask the hon. member a question? I agree completely with what the hon. member said, but does he not agree with me that the real question is: who is to control that civil service, whether or not the Commissioner under the direction of the minister is to continue to control it or will it be the elected representatives of the people?

Mr. Orange: I am sure that the hon. member has been at Territorial Council meetings in both the territories and is well aware of the way in which the Territorial Council can control the public service through the finance committee, in the Yukon, the standing committee or, hopefully the executive council which we will have in the territories in the years to come.

Mr. Nielsen: Surely, the hon. member does not want to leave the impression there is a scintilla of control over the civil service in the Northwest Territories. There is not in the Yukon.

Mr. Orange: Is there any by this parliament of the federal civil service?

Carrothers made a number of recommendations regarding economic development and finance within the territorial government, and these have been implemented.

A Northwest Territories development board composed of representatives of the federal and territorial governments and Economic Council of Canada has not been created because, as I understand it, the Economic Council decided they did not want to be involved in regional development. However, the federal and territorial administrations are working closely together and in consultation with each other.

The Small Businesses Loans Act which should be in effect very shortly will be implemented under a combined federal and territorial jurisdiction, with the responsibility resting on the territorial government. Credit committees are to be established among private citizens from the north.

There is a recommendation that a department of local government be established in order to allow communities to participate more fully in the activities that affect their lives. Carrothers recommended that there be a department of public works, a department of welfare and social services, law enforcement and a judicial system. The Commission recommended that there be a department of justice, and that territorial magistrates and other judicial officers whose jurisdiction is equivalent to that of judicial officers appointed in the provinces by provincial authority be appointed by the Commissioner of the Northwest Territories. This week the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) released his recommendations with regard to the administration of justice as set out in the report of the Carrothers Commission. He said:

> The federal proposal is a matter for negotiation between the territorial governments and Ottawa and includes the following matters which could become the proper responsibility of local territorial officials:
> The appointment and payment of judicial officers except Judges of the Territorial Courts;
> The constitution of courts having civil as well as criminal jurisdiction, subject to the condition that the existing federal statutory provisions establishing the courts of original and appellate jurisdiction be part of relevant ordinances;
> The provision and maintenance of the necessary personnel and physical plant for the efficient administration of justice and the functioning of the judicial system;
> The provision of complete legal services to the Commissioner, the Council, and the several departments of local government;

So far the reaction to this statement in the Northwest Territories has been good. We have received a presentation today from the president of the Northwest Territories Bar congratulating the Minister of Justice as follows:

> NWT Bar welcomes the progressive proposal to transfer responsibilities to the Commissioner regarding justice.
> Mark Deweerdt,
> President.

I could go on at great length about the constitutional development. We know that much more must be done and that it must be done quickly. I recognize that there is a difference between the Northwest Territory and the Yukon with regard to the speed of political development.

I spoke today of the things which I would like to see happen in the Northwest Territories to speed up this process of political development without going beyond what I believe is the general government policy. I would also like to say to the minister that while we tend to become involved in constitutional arguments, there is still a great deal to be done in northern Canada. Those of us who have lived in the north know the frustration of trying to deal with a system which somehow or other sometimes does not seem to equate with the people. We know the frustration of going into a community where there is a housing program to learn that the program will not be completed this year and that 20 families may have to live in substandard housing for another winter. One knows, too, that only a few dollars were involved and, because of poor planning on the part of administrators, funds were not available when they should have been, so the program will not be completed until the following fiscal year. This is one example of the frustrations.

[Mr. Orange.]

From a community such as Inuvik, we had an appeal to the Commissioner and to the minister regarding improvement of housing conditions, living conditions, and the opportunity to make the town an integrated one in every sense. The appeal was that the people who live in the west end of Inuvik should receive the same level of municipal services as those in the government area on the east side, and that a program be launched to ensure that young graduates returning from universities in the south and from technical schools would find adequate housing. Then, when they secured jobs, decided to marry and raise families, they would not have to go back into substandard housing.

We know that the government is working in this direction. For example, with CMHC assistance, a rental housing project will open in Inuvik next year. But once again, Mr. Speaker, this to me seems a start, but things are not moving as fast as they should. I appeal to the minister to impress upon his officers, and upon those responsible to them, not only to do the job for which they are paid but to realize they have a mission, a mission to bring the Canadian north in every respect into the mainstream of Canadian life. This mission must involve not only economic development but also involve the people who were there first, the Indian people, the Eskimo people, the Métis people. I appeal to the minister to look upon inquiries from associations like Thebacha in Fort Smith, an Indian organization whose objective is the provision of fair wages and employment for its people, with the same kind of urgency as he looks upon other requests from other areas.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, much must be done. We have started to recognize what the north means to us as Canadians. I suggest that if anything will make us different from our neighbours to the south, if anything will give us a distinctive Canadian character, it is the fact that we are a northern nation, a people who inhabit the northern half of North America. That is something that can be the mainstay of our personality for years to come.

Mr. Nielsen: Before the hon. member resumes his seat, would he permit a question? I listened carefully but I did not hear him declare himself. Can he say whether he is in support of the resolution or not?

Mr. Orange: If the hon. member had been listening at the beginning he would have heard my remarks. When I first read the resolution I thought we would be in for a rather bitter afternoon. This resolution says nothing. It is an attempt to grab headlines. It talks about "the pathological refusal of the government to end the colonial form of government" which exists in the Territories. The Carrothers Commission recommended certain alternative approaches. These have been accepted. The spirit, yes, maybe; the words, no.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, right at the outset I want to indicate that I agree with the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange) that every time we discuss the subject of northern affairs and northern development the tenor of the debate reaches an unusually high level, and I want to thank the hon. member for the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) whose motion has made this debate possible. The hon. member for Yukon has now been in this House for a period of some 12 years and I think it is quite reasonable to state that he has been one of the leading innovators and creative forces with respect to the on-going process of northern development in Canada.

With reference to my good friend, the hon. member for Northwest Territories, as I listened to him on the subject of the minister's recent statement in Yellowknife, the new capital of the Northwest Territories, I felt my heart strangely warmed. I was almost persuaded to send him a little note and tell him to come across the aisle to join us.

I am sure the reason he fits so well into the Conservative thesis on northern development is that he was trained under the vision of northern development when he was the administrator of the eastern Arctic back in those great years of development, and during the period that I had the pleasure of being associated with him as the responsible minister. I know interjections have been made on the other side when I said that, Mr. Speaker, but I often wonder what led the hon. member astray in more recent years.

An hon. Member: Knowledge.

Mr. Dinsdale: I can only come to the conclusion that it was due to the fact that earlier in his years he had fallen into bad company. As they say, as the twig is bent so is the tree inclined. I am sure the hon. member for Yukon would agree with me in this regard that we would welcome him with open arms as he joins us in our crusade on behalf of northern development.

The only sour note in his presentation was his attack on the motion put forward by the hon. member for Yukon as being without any particular meaning and designed mainly for the purpose of headline seeking. I do not agree with the first part of the analysis, that it is without any significance, but I do agree with the last part of the hon. member's analysis. I think the more headlines we can get for the problems of northern Canada, the great Canadian frontier north of the sixtieth parallel, with its 3½ million square miles of largely uninhabited and undeveloped territory, the better it will be for the out-reaching of Canadian nationhood in this country. The reason I say this is because there is always a tendency, as Prime Minister St. Laurent said so wisely in 1952, for Canadian governments to occupy this territory in a state of absent-mindedness. This was the case in Canada except for one or two periods under the Borden administration, and the explorations of Stefansson, when the great period of Canadian occupation, particularly of the high Arctic, took place.

Other than that, until 1952 when the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources was established under the St. Laurent administration, no government of Canada had attempted to come to grips with what was described by the succeeding Diefenbaker administration as "the last Canadian frontier" embraced by what was cynically described by opponents as the vision of northern development. I was in this House when the department was established and that was the beginning of my interest in northern affairs. I took part in the debates at the time and I admired the initiative of the St. Laurent government in this respect. That is why I became such a strong supporter and advocate of the programs initiated during the Conservative administration of 1957 to 1963.

Unfortunately, following the change of government in 1963, the negativism that had become part of the Liberal opposition attack on the programs of northern development was carried over into the new administration. I am not going to harp on the negative aspects now because we want this to be a positive debate. But it was indicated by the fact that out of sheer cussedness more than anything else, the Conservative initiative in building the Pine Point Railway was unanimously opposed by the then Liberal opposition. We all know now that the Pine Point Railway has become that great transportation system which is the real catalyst in the tremendous upsurge that has taken place in the Great Slave Lake area of the Northwest Territories. This negative attitude was also involved in statements with respect to the roads resources program as being "roads from igloo to igloo". Unfortunately, the Liberal party was not able to bury that negativism when it assumed the responsibilities of office in 1963.

As has been demonstrated by the excellent speech of the member for the Yukon, and the statement by the member for the Northwest Territories, those of us who have had the privilege of travelling in the north know what has to be done. All we need now is to get on with the job. We do not need any more task forces or commissions to examine the problem; the problem has been examined to death. What we want at this stage of development in the north is government initiative with respect to the almost over-weening demand, the reasonable request and demand for greater autonomy and self-government in both the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories.

I am not going to take time to repeat the progress in this matter which has been cited by earlier speakers, but I do want to underscore that this is the essence of the need for development in the Northwest Territories at the present time. We have been following this subject in the House through questions for the last few days, ever since the minister made his two statements in the north. In reply to the supplementary question that I asked with respect to the resolution that had come out of the Yukon Territory—the resolution that was read in substantial part by the hon. member for the Yukon this afternoon—the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development—said:

> Mr. Speaker, I went myself to the Yukon. I met the council members there and I invited them to dinner—

If I may interpolate, this seems to be a general gesture on the part of Liberal cabinet ministers. We had several invitations to dinner earlier today.

Mr. Chrétien: What is wrong with it?

Mr. Dinsdale: The replies continues:

> —when we parted they said that even though we sincerely disagree on some points, we could still be very good friends and we parted amicably.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

That is the end of the quotation, Mr. Speaker. It is what is known as the proverbial hospitality, only exceeded by western hospitality. Everybody is friendly.

An hon. Member: What about the east?

Mr. Dinsdale: I am sure the east would compare very favourably, too, Mr. Speaker. Everybody in the north is overwhelmingly hospitable. No matter where you come from; good bad or indifferent, you are given a warm welcome to the northern territories. This just indicates that the minister does not really understand the essence of the problem and the desires and reasonable demands from the elected bodies in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory.

I think it is easy to understand why the demand is growing more vociferous at the present time. There has been a program of economic development for both territories, particularly since 1957, which has brought a substantial degree of growth and prosperity. This applies particularly in the Yukon Territory where schools, roads, airfields and all the infrastructure of national development have been proceeding over the past decade or so.

The hon. member who spoke for the Créditiste party referred to the desirability of getting Japanese capital to invest in the Yukon Territory. Well, Japanese capital is already there. Early in 1963 I made a trip to Japan. We also invited the Japanese Ambassador to the northern development conference in the Yukon Territory and, as a result of this interest, the New Imperial Mine has opened and the Anvil Mine is just getting under way in the Yukon. I am sure the hon. member for the Yukon would agree that these have been two of the most valuable infusions into the program of development in that territory. This development has already taken place.

I am not as intimately associated with these matters as I used to be, but I am impressed when I read articles by journalists who have travelled into the north. At one time the press used to be fairly negative on the prospects of the northern vision, but now they refer to the rush of tourists into the territories and the signs of development evident on all sides. I believe this is one of the reasons why the elected representatives of these territories have become so strong in their demands for greater autonomy at the present time.

Reference was made to Commissioner Gordon Cameron, who was appointed because he was truly representative of the people of the Yukon Territory. Gordon Cameron made a great contribution to the progress of the Yukon during his tenure of office. Unfortunately, he refused to accept reappointment because he found it impossible to carry on with the reins of government some 3,000 miles away in Ottawa. I am paraphrasing, Mr. Speaker, rather than giving the direct quotation.

That is the essense of the problem, but I will not spend too much time underscoring what should be obvious to those who are closely associated with the problems of northern development. It becomes harder to accept because during the period when there was great development in the territories they were promised that by centennial year, 1967, both territories would be afforded a considerable degree of autonomy and responsible government.

With regard to my own province of Manitoba, I recall reading in the discussions that led to Manitoba entering confederation—Manitoba being what we consider the keystone province in confederation—the arguments used by the federal government of the day. They were similar to those now being used, namely, that the financial and population resources of the area were not sufficient to warrant a move away from colonialism and toward greater independence. I remind the minister that when Manitoba entered confederation in 1870, only 25,000 people lived in the province.

Mr. Nielsen: It contained 1,051 voting people.

Mr. Dinsdale: It contained only 1,051 voting people, as the hon. member from the Yukon says. We failed to grasp the argument to which I have alluded. It was alleged that even if Canada were to be united from sea to sea, the provinces were barren, fruitless, subject to the chill blasts of the Arctic winter and would never be any use for economic purposes. The matter was summed-up in the famous quotation of the Macdonald era. When the Macdonald government decided to extend the Canadian Pacific Railway from sea to sea the liberal opposition said that the railway would not earn enough to even pay for its axle-grease; that it would be a railway running from wigwam to wigwam. This reminds one of the latterday Liberal "igloo to igloo" statement. I do not raise this matter of Manitoba because of personal or provincial pride; I raise it because a minister from Manitoba in this cabinet has in a speech put the situation much more effectively than I could. He was speaking to the Provincial Liberal Association of Manitoba last week end. I quote from the Winnipeg Tribune of November 17, 1969:

Federal Supply Minister Jim Richardson has made it clear western Canadians—

All one needs to do is substitute "north" for "west" and "northern Canadian" for "western Canadian", and the article will have equal application. I continue reading from the quotation:

—will not tolerate decision-making in Ottawa which denies the west—

Again, substitute "north".

—an equal partnership within Confederation.

In a strong speech to delegates attending the annual meeting of the Manitoba Liberal Party Sunday, Mr. Richardson warned that growth of eastern Canada at the expense of the western region must be brought to an end.

"The greatest single change required is that western Canadians—

Again, substitute "northern Canadians".

—must have more say, more control and more influence over this great western region—

Substitute "northern region".

—which they toil to build," the minister said.

It is an excellent statement. I shall invite the minister to come over to this side of the House with the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Orange: But we shall have no party left.

Mr. Dinsdale: I continue quoting:

"We should not forget that westerners"—

Again, please substitute "northerners".

—did not participate in the Confederation debates in the 1880s which resulted in the structures which have guided Canada through her first century." Mr. Richardson reminded.

"We cannot afford to be absent and we don't intend to be absent from the decision-making process which is now charting Canada's course into her second century."

The article goes on at length. The minister spoke to the Liberal Party as I would speak to the Liberal Party—kindly. I continue quoting:

"I want to see the Liberal Party become the champion of the west,"—

Make that "north".

—just as it has become the champion of French-speaking Canadians," he said.

"It is only in this way, by endorsing policies that are meaningful for the west"—

Please substitute "north".

—"and which bring meaningful change for the west, that the Liberal Party can truly become the party of national unity"—

Mr. Nielsen: Let's opt in.

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, let us opt into confederation. That expresses a viewpoint which must be clear—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I must remind him and the House that his time has expired, unless he has the unanimous consent of the House to continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dinsdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members. I will not trespass at length on the generosity of the House. I wish to make a brief reference to the Northwest Territories because its need, as the hon. member has indicated, is at least as great as the need of the Yukon. It has farther to go, Mr. Speaker. I underline this point, make this suggestion to the minister and hope he will accept it: next year, along with Manitoba—the keystone province which was carved out of the Northwest Territories in 1870—the Northwest Territories will be celebrating their centennial. I do not think you can give them a better birthday present than listening to the good advice of those hon. members who have spoken this afternoon.

The hon. member for Northwest Territories took issue with the hon. member for Yukon in denying that the shift that has taken place is merely one of bureaucratic exercise from Ottawa to the capital of the Territories, Yellowknife. I think the problem as outlined by the hon. member for Yukon was accurate. Once again he is supported by a statement made after the very heated and critical response to the statement the minister made in the Yukon. An article in the Globe and Mail of Thursday, November 13, 1969, reads as follows:

At the council meeting after Mr. Chretien's announcement, Norman Chamberlist, the leading Liberal on the council, put blame more on the Ottawa civil service than on the minister. "The civil service of Canada wishes to maintain the empire it has built up in the northern areas. The colonial status it has had for 100 years is being maintained."

I believe that touches on the precise point the hon. member for Yukon was trying to make today. I think it is quite valid, notwithstanding the criticism the hon. member for Northwest Territories levelled at that point.

The northern Canadian vision has now become a reality as a result of the development that has taken place. The Pine Point railway line has brought about a tremendous upsurge of development in the lower Arctic areas. The prospecting for oil in the high Arctic has focussed attention on this unexplored and largely unknown area of Canada as never before. We have had almost continuous discussions about the Manhattan and Canadian sovereignty in the north to conclude that great venture. I should like to conclude my remarks by referring to something that appeared in that great "Canadian" magazine, Time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Winch: Did the hon. member say "Canadian"?

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes, in quotation marks. It appeared after the Prime Minister's visit to Yellowknife. On page 14 of the August 16, 1968, edition of Time, "Canadian" edition, we find this interesting quotation:

Scout Jamboree at Yellowknife. 550 Boy Scouts from Alaska and all parts of Canada—

That was very interesting to read because the Scout movement got under way, as I think the hon. member for the Northwest Territories will recall, largely on the initiative of Air Force personnel stationed in the north. It grew rapidly, particularly among the native people, because it attracted their imagination immediately. Here is the punch-line of the quotation: "Few were unmoved by Trudeau's northern vision". Where there is no vision, the people perish. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has really captured the vision of northern development in the reasonable terms that have been placed before us this afternoon. If he has captured it, I hope he will communicate it to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. If he has not captured it and if that is a euphemistic statement on the part of Time magazine, I trust the minister will in turn communicate it to the Prime Minister and his colleagues in the cabinet.

Let us get away from negativism. Let us accentuate the positive. We have here a golden opportunity to move forward to greater autonomy, independence and responsibility. I would much rather trust the elected representatives of the Yukon and Northwest Territories in terms of quality, zeal and capacity than some of the members of this House. These elected representatives are a pioneering breed and I think the time has come to listen to their reasonable requests.

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): In the time I have available, Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to bring the debate back to the basis of the resolution in the name of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). I intend to confine my remarks essentially to the Yukon and in particular to the speech this morning by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I do so with the knowledge that my colleague the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange) has, as always, very capably defined and dealt with the problems and concerns of the people in his riding.

The remarks this morning by the hon. member for Yukon were essentially based on the resolution passed by the Yukon Council. I also have a copy of the resolution to which he referred. It seemed that his was the argument of a skilled advocate and I give my hon. friend full marks in that regard. He realized that in his opening remarks he overstated his case and did the best he could to produce some facts to back up his case. The facts were not necessarily those which he stated in his opening remarks. I suggest he was really trying to readjust the facts to fit the evidence before us today.

There has been legitimate concern in the north about the movement toward the area of self-government. There has been concern there over the announcement made by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) when he was in the Yukon last week. There was concern over the steps the minister indicated as government policy in his speech to the council; they did not go as far as the members of the Territorial Councils and some residents of the north would like to see. I think there is the concern that my hon. friend expressed in his remarks this morning, namely, that the position taken by the Northwest Territorial Council in its resolution really went much further than it could reasonably and rationally expect a responsible government to go.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member permit a question? He must have heard me read the resolution of the Yukon Liberal Association. Can the Yukon Liberal Association expect the support of the hon. member and his party?

Mr. Honey: Mr. Speaker, I have a copy of the resolution. I take it to be a valid resolution of a political association, in this case Liberal. My hon. friend based his argument essentially on the resolution of a duly elected body, the Yukon Territorial Council. That is what I want to deal with now. The hon. member for Yukon said—I think I can quote his remarks almost verbatim—that the members of the Yukon Council do not desire provincial status and in no way can their recommendations be construed as being a request for provincial status. Those were the remarks of the hon. member for Yukon this morning when he dealt with the resolution of the Northwest Territorial Council.

I wish to look at that resolution now because I think I can probably interpret it as well as the hon. member. I make the submission to Your Honour and hon. members of the House that the resolution is in fact a request for provincial status.

Mr. Nielsen: No.

Mr. Honey: The hon. member says "No". I think I am entitled to make an interpretation of the resolution. I am prepared to read the words. My hon. friend read some of them.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Honey: Mr. Speaker, I have the floor. The hon. member dealt with the resolution. If he will permit me to deal with it, the hon. members can form their own opinion. I quote from the resolution:

A) The Council of the Yukon Territory to be known as the Yukon Legislative Assembly.

Is there any difference, Mr. Speaker, between a Yukon Legislative Assembly and the Saskatchewan Legislative Assembly or the Nova Scotia Legislative Assembly?

B) The number of members of the Yukon Legislative Assembly to be increased to 15 and the term of the Assembly to be increased to four years.

That certainly is not inconsistent with provincial status. In particular, the suggestion of a four-year term indicates an attempt to bring it in line with other legislative assemblies.

(C) The Advisory Committee on Finance to be replaced by an Executive Council of not less than five members—

I want to underline this:

—with full executive powers in the following classes of subjects (i) Education, Health & Welfare—

I am sorry the hon. member for Yukon has had to leave temporarily. He will know the percentage of cost that these items represent.

I think we are probably talking there about 70 per cent of the budget of the Territorial Council. They also want full executive powers. The resolution reads in part:

(ii) Territorial Resources including Land (iii) Public Works (iv) Justice and Corrections (v) Revenue and Finance (vi) Forestry (vii) Fishery (viii) All residual Executive and Administrative functions including Industry and Labour controlled or performed by the Federal Government, and the Legislative Assembly to have exclusive legislative jurisdiction to make laws for the Government of the Territory in relation to the above classes of subjects, in addition to the legislative powers existing under Section 16 of the Yukon Act—

This section sets out the powers that they have.

(D) The number of Members of the Yukon Legislative Assembly determine it appropriate that all necessary legislative and other changes are to be effected to constitute the Province of Yukon with the same legislative—

There was an interjection there in the minutes from which I am reading. I may be mistaken, but when the member for Yukon was reading this resolution he did not read the areas with regard to the province of Yukon, the legislative assembly of the province of Yukon, and so on. I take it further because I think it is important to put before the House and on the record exactly what is being requested by the Yukon Territorial Council for which the member for Yukon this morning acted as an advocate. I continue:

(D) The number of Members of the Yukon Legislative Assembly to be further increased at such time as the Yukon Legislative Assembly determines it appropriate that all necessary legislative and other changes are to be effected to constitute the Province of Yukon with the same legislative and executive powers as those which exist in the provinces of Canada.

• (3:20 p.m.)

That clause asks for authority to determine when the province of Yukon will be fully constituted with all the legislative and executive powers that are possessed by other provinces of Canada. I do not know of better terminology with which to frame a request for full legislative and executive powers than to place the Yukon in the same position as the other provinces of Canada.

(E) The Members to be given all necessary authority analogous to that in Provincial Legislative Assemblies to establish their indemnities and allowances and to have all the requisite powers to establish or participate in pension plan or group health plan.

(F) Section 24 of the Yukon Act to be repealed.

As the hon. member said this morning, this clause would repeal the prohibition against elected members introducing money bills in the Territorial Council—I should not say "legislature".

Mr. Nielsen: Is that bad?

Mr. Honey: My hon. friend asks whether that is bad, and it is bad in this sense: this morning my hon. friend did not use the term "legislature" or the expression "province of Yukon", though they are in fact used throughout the resolution. So I think it is important—

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member will have to accept my word that I was reading verbatim the same resolution to which he is referring. I was not paraphrasing; I was reading the same material.

Mr. Honey: I accept my hon. friend's word. I do not know whether he read it in its entirety.

Mr. Nielsen: I did.

Mr. Honey: Very well; then I accept my hon. friend's word. Clause (G) provides:

The status of the Yukon Legislative Assembly to be enlarged so that it shall have full capacity to attend all interprovincial and federal-provincial conferences and to participate in resulting discussions and agreements.

I do not think I have to enlarge on that; it is self-explanatory.

(H) The Land Titles Act to be repealed in respect of the Yukon Territory and replaced by a Land Titles Ordinance.

The next is the last clause I shall read. I think it probably exhibits as well as any the difference in interpretation that the hon. member and I place on the resolution. It provides:

(I) All Crown Land to be held in the name of the Crown in right of the Territory.

It seems to me that that is a pretty basic step in the constitution of a province. Again I hope I am not misquoting the hon. member for Yukon, but when he dealt with this clause earlier in the debate, according to the note I made of his remarks he said, "What members of the Yukon Council desire is not provincial status. In no way can its recommendations be construed as being a request for provincial status". I think that is the position my hon. friend is taking. I take the position that it is in fact a request for provincial status.

Mr. Nielsen: Again on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has just misquoted me once more. I also said at the same time that the members of the council themselves, as individuals, had unanimously stated that they did not want provincial status at this time.

Mr. Honey: Then could I ask my hon. friend whether that decision was taken unanimously subsequent to this resolution?

Mr. Nielsen: No; it was their position prior to and subsequent to the resolution, and at the time the minister was there.

Mr. Honey: As I have already said, the hon. member is a very skilled advocate and he is arguing a case that was overstated by the Territorial Council. I think he said this morning that he had authority to argue it, and I think he did a good job. But at the same time he is arguing a situation that was overstated, and he is now bringing it back—I am pleased he is doing this—to a more reasonable and rational position.

The hon. member's case this morning was not far removed from the position of the government as stated last week by the minister when he visited Whitehorse. For the balance of the time remaining to me I would first of all reiterate and place on the record the position of the government as enunciated by the minister. I have put on the record the position of the Territorial Council. I repeat that I think my hon. friend in his speech this morning moved substantially from that position. I am very pleased he did. I now want to compare the position that he took this morning with the position of the government as enunciated by the minister.

I refer at this point to the speech of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development before the Yukon Territorial Concil on November 12. The minister first dealt with the matter of constitutional development and had this to say:

> It is becoming apparent to me that in considering constitutional development in the north we must keep two major objectives in mind. The first objective is to protect and further the legitimate interests of the Canadian people in developments in the north—in its economic development and particularly resource development and the potentially immense wealth that may result from this; in the economic and social condition of all residents of the north, as fellow Canadians, and particularly the indigenous peoples; in the development and maintenance of transportation, communication and all of the many social institutions that together form the necessary base for economic development and for further advances in social development; in that continued sovereignty over the Canadian north—on the continent and beyond it—that has been established by our presence and administration there; and in the role of the north in Canadian continental defence.
> The second objective, closely linked to the first, is to accommodate the desire of many in the north for a greater measure of self-government, and to do this within Canadian democratic traditions, institutions and values.

Mr. Nielsen: That should have been the first, not the second.

Mr. Honey: Perhaps it makes a difference, but in any event I want to put it on the record. This is the position of the government, and as I say, I do not think it is too much different from the position argued by the hon. member this morning. The minister then went on to ask for support, co-operation and consultation, having spoken of the measures of success that had been attained by the people of the Yukon, the civil service of the Territory and administration in the Yukon. The minister stated that these were matters that certainly weighed in favour of the argument for greater autonomy for the Territory.

Mr. Nielsen: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Honey: Yes.

Mr. Nielsen: If they had not been successful, surely the minister would have fired them. Thank goodness he does have confidence in these people.

Mr. Honey: As I have said, these were the things that impressed the minister in the movement for more autonomy in the Yukon. Having referred to these things, he went on to say:

• (3:30 p.m.)

> Yet despite this real measure of success there are clearly limits to the extent to which full responsible government can be vested in the people of the Yukon at this time. With the government of Canada you recognize, I am certain, that in a territory as large as the four Maritime provinces combined, of a physical rigour and hardship that poses a special challenge to government, and with a resident population of still fewer than 18,000 you cannot hope to provide from local revenues alone a level of public services that will maintain the social, economic and cultural development of all territorial residents at a level commensurate with the normal expectation of Canadian people generally. The heavy dependence on federal subsidies and on outside capital for resource development, and the uncertain revenue anticipated in return, moreover, places the responsibility for economic development beyond the competence of the people of the Yukon, working alone. For the current fiscal year, the total expenditures by the federal government and the government of the Yukon Territory on provincial-type programs will be in the order of $32 million. This compares with Territorial and other provincial-type revenues, including resource revenues of $12 million.

Having defined some of the difficulties in moving as quickly as some of the people in the Yukon would like the government to move, the minister did take some steps to ward closing the gap between what the government hopes reasonably and logically will be an orderly and progressive development and the goals that the people of the Yukon have in mind as delineated by the hon. member this morning. The minister made some announcements of government policy which will eventually find its way into legislation. I know hon. members are aware of these announcements but perhaps I should put them on the record of Hansard. He said that legislation would be adopted to set up an executive committee. Perhaps the hon. member is not satisfied with the type of executive committee envisaged. His reason for dissatisfaction may be that it should have more, or less power. In any event, this is a move to transfer executive power.

Mr. Nielsen: They are still civil servants.

Mr. Honey: The minister then said, and I think this is important:

I am hopeful that we can develop still more effective ways to extend local responsibility over matters which will affect the quality of life in the Yukon, to cover executive as well as the existing legislative powers. I will be seeking your support and co-operation—

This is the way we do things in this country, by co-operation and consultation. He then said:

I will be seeking your support and co-operation, therefore, in considering what additional changes can be made to give you greater territorial responsibility in the light of the experience gained from this first important step.

He did not close the door or bar the gate in respect of considering what additional changes might be made to give greater territorial responsibility in light of experience gained from this first step. The minister mentioned several other matters which would be included in the legislation, particularly the lowering of the voting age for territorial elections and the extension of the life of the Territorial Council—

Mr. Nielsen: Should we not be entitled to pass that sort of thing ourselves?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The parliamentary secretary has the floor. Unfortunately, his time has now expired. Perhaps we could ascertain whether there is unanimous consent to allowing him to continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Honey.]

Mr. Honey: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member has a question, perhaps I should accept it now and then try to be brief.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I should just like to ask the hon. member whether we should not be allowed, through our elected representatives in the Yukon, to set the voting age of those people who vote and elect the representatives forming the council.

Mr. Honey: That is a matter of personal opinion. I heard the remarks of the hon. member for Northwest Territories that he would make representations to the government, as I am sure the hon. member for Yukon will. The minister is not fixing the voting age, or anything definite; he has indicated an intention to do these things. Let me finish very quickly by putting these matters on the record. He said that it was intended——to extend the life of the Territorial Council to four years instead of the present three years; to permit the Council to set the indemnity of its members and to reduce the period of federal disallowance of territorial ordinances from two years to one year.

Then the minister in his closing remarks asked for co-operation and consultation. I will not take the time to read the whole of his remarks, but they were very much in line with the closing remarks of the hon. member for Yukon this morning. I want to refer to what the hon. member for Yukon said about the spirit in which we should approach this problem of constitutional involvement. This was his final plea for a gradual evolution of decision-making control from the bureaucrats to the elected council members. He then referred to the council members as being responsible, intelligent individuals who have the responsibility to make decisions. I agree with that, but from my observations it is not much different from what the minister said. We have from the minister a request for co-operation and consultation, and we have essentially the same thing from the hon. member for Yukon.

In closing let me say I am pleased the hon. member has moved drastically from the exact words of the resolution. Let me close on this theme. The previous Prime Minister and leader of my party referred to a particular party as "Liberals in a hurry". I think my hon. friend and the people he represents are moving in a bit of a hurry in their quest for self-government. I think the federal government has to take a balanced, rational, responsible position. I hope, and am sure, this will work toward a meeting of minds on the matter.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak in support of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) on behalf of those thousands of Canadians who appear to have been relegated to second-class citizenship by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) and his department. The thing that interests me most about the government's attitude to the Territory and people of the Yukon is that it reflects exactly the indulgent and patronizing stance that has for years characterized the permanent officials of the department.

Apparently the frontier of the just society lies along the line 60 degrees latitude. The people of the Yukon will have to be content with whatever benefits slop over from the south. I see that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has now been forced to intervene between the minister and his northern wards; the Prime Minister has graciously made it known that he will give audience to his Yukon subjects if they will journey to Ottawa and wait upon him.

The whole performance of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Northern Affairs and the officials of his department is incredible in this day and age. The recent appearance of the minister in the Yukon and Northwest Territories hardly fits this era of Canadian national development. His speeches up there and his reaction to the very reasonable proposals of the people of the Yukon indicate that he is a mere puppet of his permanent officials. He has apparently been so thoroughly brainwashed by the bureaucrats that he now reflects perfectly the status quo that pervades his department's offices in Ottawa.

After all, what tremendous concessions were the people of the Yukon seeking? According to the resolution unanimously adopted by the council last January, all that was sought was an increased measure of autonomy, a little touch of representative and responsible government and some say in how the taxes paid in the Yukon might be applied to Yukon problems. This resolution was forwarded to Ottawa. They received no answer until the minister's arrogant and inept performance of November 12. Is democracy no longer a desirable thing? Is individual freedom and responsibility foreign to the new order of the so-called just society?

The council of the Yukon—at least its token group of elected members—asked for an increase of membership from 7 to 15, and that the council be re-named the Yukon Legislative Assembly.

They wanted the present Advisory Committee on Finance to be changed to a five-man executive council with full executive powers in the fields of education, health and welfare, natural resources including land, public works, justice and correction, revenue and finance, forestry, fisheries, industry and labour. They wanted all Crown lands to be held for the Crown in the right of the Yukon Territory. They also asked that the Yukon be allowed to play a full part in interprovincial and federal-provincial conferences and discussions, and be permitted to determine when the Yukon should be granted full provincial status.

In this day and age, and in light of the development and tremendous potential of the Yukon, I can see nothing but good sense and sound reason in this proposal. But the reaction of the minister and his department was arrogant, insulting and stupid. It was arrogant because it displayed narrow preconception and stubborn inflexibility. It was insulting because it was delivered almost ten months late.

Mr. Nielsen: It was a year and ten months late.

Mr. Ritchie: I stand corrected. It was patronizing in its terms and derogatory in its inference that Yukon residents were incapable of adult responsibility. It was stupid because it created trouble where trouble should have been, and could have been, avoided. Now the Prime Minister has been forced to jump in and try to bail his fumbling minister out of the sinking departmental boat.

The minister, without any attempt at serious discussion, took his packet of carefully prepared speeches to the Territories and spread out his trade goods to catch the eye of the natives. Those trade goods were cheap and shoddy. They consisted of an offer to let the members of the Yukon Council serve one additional year, four years instead of three; to set their own indemnities and allowances and—this was a great concession to democracy—to allow one of their number to sit on a committee with the three permanent officials of government charged with running the territory. In a particularly matter-of-fact manner the minister turned down any thought of a move toward self-government "for the foreseeable future".

To add insult to a shaky knowledge of history, the minister said the Yukon could not aspire to provincial status for years because the territory "did not pay its way". This is a strange argument coming from the member of a government which recently approved a $500 million plan to salvage the province of Prince Edward Island. Does Prince Edward Island pay its way? Does Newfoundland pay its way? For that matter, does Quebec pay its way? The minister claimed the Yukon cost $32 annually per capita but returns only $12. He neglected to say, however, that the principal taxpayers of the territory, the mining and exploration companies, pay taxes outside the Yukon. There is sound reason to believe that if the taxes and revenue from such things as oil and gas leases were devoted directly to Yukon needs, the territory could carry itself.

Speaking of his proposal that one elected member of the Yukon council be allowed to sit with the Territorial Commissioner and his two assistants on the proposed executive committee, the minister suggested that future extension of responsibility would depend upon the experience of the operation of this committee. One Yukon resident, with some justification, termed this veiled blackmail. Future extension of responsibility for their own affairs and toward full self-government would be tied to the performance and good behaviour of the tame committee member forced to work in harness with three permanent officials.

The Carruthers report of a few years ago made recommendations for increased territorial independence and the growth of self-government. Commenting on this report in its November 13 issue, the Globe and Mail observed of the minister's answer:

> That answer is a poor compromise that offers very little change from the status quo.

The people of the Yukon asked Ottawa for blood and they were given a stone. The only power the council now has is to reject the annual budget. This is a considerable weapon and has been used time and time again throughout Canada's history. For years prior to the troubles of 1837 the Legislative Assembly of Lower Canada refused to vote the Civil List until given some say in the disposal of taxes so raised. This use of popular approval of the proposed expenditure of public moneys is a familiar tactic in the story of colonial development, particularly in North America. It has proved to be a potent weapon in the past and could be again.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

I would suggest that the Prime Minister has been wise in superseding his minister in the matter of relations between Ottawa and the Yukon. I think he would be wiser were he to appoint a new minister and transfer the present incumbent to a less sensitive portfolio. Whatever virtues the minister may have brought to his office, they have obviously been swamped by Ottawa officialdom. This is all the more tragic because the minister is of a province and generation which claims to abhor colonialism above all else. Yet, to judge from the most recent "Thoughts of Chairman Chrétien", he would have been perfectly at home in the British Colonial Office of the late 19th century.

It is time for a realistic appraisal of the future of the Yukon and the aspiration of that territory's citizens to full Canadian Citizenship. Now that he has personally taken over the problem, let us hope that the chief architect of the just society finds himself able to add another roof to the national structure in order to accommodate the people north of 60 degrees latitude. In this respect I heartily endorse the remarks of the hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very useful that we have had an opportunity to debate the subject of northern affairs in this House today. I believe the matter of northern development, northern government and the future of the north is one which concerns all Canadians. After all, Canada is a northern nation. Much of our future lies in the north. While we can take pride in some of our accomplishments to date, we can very easily see that much more remains to be done. In particular we can see that much remains to be done when we compare some of our accomplishments with those of other northern nations. I hope the minister will take part in this debate shortly. I believe I am the eighth speaker in the debate and as yet we have not had an enunciation of the minister's views on the subject of the debate.

Mr. Forrestall: He was about to get up to speak and you would not let him.

Mr. Burton: I am sorry; I did not notice that he was about to get to his feet. As Canadians we feel free to condemn nations in other parts of the world for carrying on the practices of colonial administration. We often feel free to do a little tongue-clucking because of minority groups in other countries which do not have equal opportunities and equal rights. We have situations and problems right here in Canada, some of which are embodied within the jurisdiction of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. These problems require great understanding and sensitivity if we are to reach adequate solutions.

The fact is that in many ways we do have a colonial-type administration in these areas. We find that very often the practice of the government has been to reluctantly grant concessions to representations from the north. These concessions often are made as a result of certain pressures. They are tossed out, I might say, as crumbs to appease the restless population. Possibly that is too strong a term; it might be better to say they are tossed out in a fashion which is somewhat less than generous. Unfortunately, the minister, who often I believe tries his best to do a good job and tries to wrestle with the problems he faces, seems to have a tendency to speak in the same vein as an old-time colonial governor.

I think that if one looks at the speeches he made in Yellowknife and Whitehorse recently, one will see a number of illustrations of this tendency. These may be small examples; nevertheless, I think they reflect a somewhat unfortunate attitude and approach to northern problems which I think is bound to give rise to a certain amount of resentment and hostility among the people in that part of Canada.

When I look at the minister's remarks at Yellowknife, for instance, I see he states that the government has two major objectives regarding the north. He goes on to describe some of his thoughts in terms of what the government envisages as being good for the north, and what it has decided. He goes on to state, in dealing with such things as the management and ownership of natural resources in the future:

—and this conclusion I support strongly both for the present and the preseeable future—

I will have something to say about that remark later. When one turns to page 3 of his address to the Territorial Council, one notes that the minister put forward a number of points every one of which starts with the pronoun "I". There is a continual repetition of the pronoun "I". Again I suggest that this is a reflection of an attitude which needs to be changed.

Mr. Nielsen: L'état c'est moi.

Mr. Burton: On page 4 of the minister's speech which was distributed to members, he takes note of other recommendations that were made and says:

The Commissioner and I have considered this recommendation.

How much more patronizing can one get? No one questions the existence of formidable and serious problems in the north involving the administration of the government and the development of adequate policies. There are a great many difficulties in this regard. We also have a great many problems involving the peoples of the north because of the great diversity of cultures, skills, education and understanding.

We also have economic problems to consider in the north. In many cases the costs of economic activity are higher there than they are in other regions of Canada and other parts of the world. Transportation costs in taking products to market and bringing in supplies, materials and services, also add greatly to the cost structure. In addition, the physical environment of the north itself poses a formidable problem in developing a public policy, for so many aspects of life exist on a frail and precarious basis. All together these create problems which are of concern to all of us and which we must take into account. The question is how to approach the matter.

I have already pointed out the minister's patronizing, condescending or concessionary approach to northern problems and to the representations and aspirations of the northern people. I suggest that a positive approach is required, one that includes flexibility because, after all, future events, particularly in the north, are very often unpredictable and therefore flexibility is required. But it seems to me that we need to develop a positive approach which sets out to achieve certain fundamental objectives, not in a haphazard, come-as-it-may or some far-off-distant-horizon type of objective but rather an approach which requires a planned and scheduled operation. This involves the determination of objectives and of steps required to reach those objectives, and a determination of programs which need to be carried out to enable the north to take the steps necessary to reach these objectives. We also need to set out a scheduled program which takes into account both time and functional developments.

The Carrothers Commission, to which reference has already been made today, set out some of the immediate objectives for government in the north. My colleague, the hon.

member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), in an excellent speech made reference to some of the critical objectives set out in the Carrothers report. He noted a rejection of the concept of the division of the Northwest Territories to more political units. We go along with the minister's decision in that regard. He noted a number of decisions involving government and the development of an executive branch of government in the northern legislative structure as it has developed to date and should develop in the future. Furthermore, he noted some economic programs which must involve northern people themselves and which also involve increased funds. The need for educational programs is, of course, fundamental and the need to develop local governments to carry on community development programs is also essential.

It seems to me that our efforts must go beyond these objectives to consider other facets of life in the north. The hon. member for Winnipeg North made a brief reference to some of these factors when he noted, for instance, that the nature of white culture allows the white man in the north to prosper in the free enterprise system as we know it in that part of the country. This is something to which we must give attention.

We must also take note of the cultural traditions and background of the native people who live in the north. We must take special steps to emphasize the encouragement of local self-government in both the short run and the long run. Furthermore, we must give a great deal of encouragement to co-operative and collective enterprise in the north because the people of the north have a very unique opportunity to avoid the waste, exploitation, pollution and some of the other problems which have beset the more industrialized areas of Canada and other parts of the world.

I should like to deal for a second with some of the problems of economic development and resource management as they affect northern Canada. Reference has been made to the transfer of resources to the administration, and control of governments in the north.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? It is for clarification. Members of the council have made it clear—as I thought I did today in the debate—that all they are asking for is the transfer of territorial resources, not national or natural resources.

Mr. Burton: I thank the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) for again noting this. I was about to note that we were very pleased that he had clarified some aspects of resource management and the interpretation to be placed on the resolution passed by the Yukon Territorial Council. I note—and this is in part what gave cause to my reference to this matter—that the minister said in his speech in Yellowknife:

> —if we accept the conclusion of the Carrothers Commission, that at the moment the ownership and management of natural resources in the Territories must remain with the Federal Government—and this conclusion I support strongly both for the present and the preseeable future.

I presume that was meant to read "foreseeable" future. I would like to draw attention to the Carrothers Commission report, where at page 18 of the summary of its report, talking about the ownership of natural resources, it noted:

• (4:00 p.m.)

> In our judgment it would be premature to make the transfer at this time.

I suggest that the implication of this statement is that at some foreseeable time in the future resources would be transferred to northern jurisdiction. I was particularly interested in this matter because I come from a portion of the prairie provinces which at one time was under the jurisdiction of the Northwest Territories. When the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta were created the federal government retained control over resources and resource management. This situation existed from 1905 until 1930 when jurisdiction was transferred to the provinces under an agreement which also involved a financial settlement. It seems to me this is the type of thing we need to keep in mind when considering the future of the north. But I want to make it clear that in terms of major resources, in terms of mineral resources, we need to maintain federal jurisdiction until northern governments are able to cope with the situation.

In the area of economic development I think the focus of economic development programs must be on the needs of people. I take note of the minister's statement in Yellowknife, where he said as appears on page 2 of the distributed text that as a federal government we have two major objectives regarding the north. I quote his words:

> The first objective is to protect and further the legitimate interests of the Canadian people in developments in the north—

Then he goes on to elaborate on his statement. While he does give recognition to the needs of people in some of the later statements made in that paragraph, at the same time the whole approach needs some refocussing because it seems to me the principal focus must be centred on people and their needs. In addition, we must give considerable attention to problems involving the physical environment. Pollution problems have been debated at length in this House over the past year and a half. I might just note, Mr. Speaker, that I was much surprised when I was with the Indian Affairs and Northern Development Committee of the House last January and we stopped at Norman Wells and saw the Imperial Oil refinery operation there. A pall of black smoke drifted lazily down the Mackenzie River valley as far as the eye could see to the north—a thick, black pall of smoke. In all fairness I should say that the manager indicated that steps were being taken to reduce the smoke and consequent pollution that was belching out from this refinery. Nevertheless, here in the far distant north we had a first-hand example of the problems of pollution. You could see the effect on growth in the surrounding area.

Reference has already been made in this debate to the role of private enterprise and the approach that should be taken in carrying on economic development in the north. Of course, some of our friends pay a great deal of tribute to the merits of private enterprise, of so-called free enterprise, in developing the north. I would suggest that this simply cannot be applied in the north under the conditions that exist. I would suggest this is the case, because first of all this system and approach tends to deny the public good and public needs in favour of private ones.

Secondly, the controlling assumptions of private enterprise do not hold true in the north. We know markets are monopolistic; they are not competitive. This situation will likely remain for a long time. Most shareholders of large developments in the north are not residents of the territories, and thus they have no motives other than their own personal or corporate gain. Large sections of the population in the north have no dollar power with which to influence the direction of development in that part of Canada. Third, I would suggest that the co-operative and collective approach is more appropriate to the traditional cultures of the Indian and Eskimo peoples of the north. I know some work has been done in this regard in the north, but I think this work needs to be intensified.

There are two basic types of economic development that are likely to take place in the north. The first is the community-oriented development which involves community efforts to improve the lot of people, to improve their living conditions and enable them to live a better life, and the second is the large mining development, of which we already have some examples and of which we are likely to see more in the future.

I would suggest there are some considerable problems to deal with in that regard. First I suggest that the position and strength of territorial governments at the present time are such that they would have great difficulty in carrying on negotiations with very large mining corporations or syndicates. They may lay down laws and regulations under which such corporations might carry on their activities, but there might be a considerable problem in enforcing regulations on such matters as pollution, an example of which I gave a couple of minutes ago.

I was pleased to note that the minister drew attention to employment problems in the mining industry. He dealt with these in his address to the Yellowknife Chamber of Commerce, and I was pleased he took this matter up very frankly with the mining industry. But I suggest we need something more than just a peanut approach, or a Walter Gordon type of approach to this problem.

It is not good enough simply to suggest, "You need to have a few native people on your work force. You need to train a few of these people. If you do bring a few of these people into your work force, then you are very good fellows; you are making a positive contribution to the problem." But this is not adequate. This is not good enough for the needs that exist, and in the north we have a few powerful corporations already operating and which in some respects I suggest are very much a law unto themselves. A certain amount of oil development is taking place in the north. Private companies are working there. We have examples of where they are doing their best to resist government efforts to ensure that oil pollution does not become a real hazard. There is an example of this just across the Yukon border in Alaska.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the House give unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Burton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I assure you that I will conclude my remarks in a few minutes. In Alaska at the present time oil companies are preparing to build an oil pipeline across the Alaskan mountain ranges to the Pacific Ocean. They are already shipping in pipe to build the pipeline, but according to the latest information which I received the United States government has not yet given approval for the construction of the pipeline because some of the oil companies had not agreed to some of the conditions that had been set out by the U.S. government, or that it was attempting to set out. Thus I suggest great care is needed to ensure that the legitimate aspirations of the northern people are recognized. Nevertheless, we must build for the future, taking into account the concerns and the needs of all people in the north and not just of those people who possess a degree of economic power.

• (4:10 p.m.)

One point I wanted to deal with very briefly, Mr. Speaker, was the source of revenues. It has been noted, for instance, that in the Yukon only a little over one-third of the revenues required for government come from local sources and the rest is financed basically by the federal government. It is also noted that the figure for the Northwest Territories is about one-fifth, or 20 per cent. I would suggest that this is not a valid argument for holding back an extension of powers to northern governments. What is the situation in some provinces at the present time? I do not have the figures in front of me but I believe that in the provinces of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, for instance, about 50 per cent of their revenue originates from the federal government.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the basic approach in dealing with northern problems must be to start with the people who live there and with their children; we must show concern for their future needs. We must do this if we are to develop an adequate approach which takes into account these concerns and considerations.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I wish to apologize to my colleagues for my grating voice. This slight indisposition is not due to my visit to the North but rather to a particular situation which prevailed in Ottawa. As a matter of fact, if I had stayed longer up North, I would probably have avoided this because of the dry and brisk climate in that region.

I have not immediately answered the previous speaker because I believe that it is wiser to wait and hear all the arguments of those who take part in the debate before answering. If I had made any comments at the beginning of the debate, I would not have had the pleasure of hearing all the arguments of the hon. members. That is why I waited a while before answering.

I wish to thank all hon. members who have taken part in this debate for their objectivity and sincerity.

I am surprised to find that once again we are, to a certain extent, having a debate on the constitution. During my numerous visits to the North, even if I have not lived there, I had the opportunity, as Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, to visit at least some 40 localities north of the 60th parallel. And I must say that during my talks with numerous Indians, Eskimos and other citizens of the Northwest Territories, as well with the representatives of the various councils, I was never asked any questions about constitutional problems.

On the eve of the day when I introduced the new government policy on constitutional matters for the Northwest Territories and the Yukon in particular, I had the pleasure to take part in a radio program during which the people of Whitehorse and the Yukon could call me in order to ask questions on topical issues which could be of interest to them. Everyone in the Yukon knew at the time that the next morning I was going to address the Territorial Council on constitutional development.

Mr. Speaker, the citizens of the Yukon did not ask me one single question on that subject. They talked to me about all their problems concerning education, housing, pollution but no one asked me a single question on the constitutional development of the territory.

Too often, in my own province I have seen too many good things sacrificed on the altar of autonomy or the constitution, to make me like this kind of debate. However, since the opposition has seen fit to bring up the subject today, I should like first to deal for a few minutes with the remarks made by my hon. friend, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), concerning the request of the elected representatives of the Yukon territory, in particular the resolution they passed early in 1969. It is not necessary for me to deal at length with this subject because my Parliamentary Secretary managed to prove in a very adequate way and beyond the shadow of a doubt that this resolution is nothing but an official request for provincial status for the Yukon.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard).]

Mr. Nielsen: No, no.

Mr. Chrétien: That is the meaning of the text of the resolution read by the Parliamentary Secretary. It asks for all the powers of a provincial legislature: the legislative assembly and the executive control upon the whole administration within the territories.

They say publicly that they do not want provincial status, but this is what is being asked in substance. What makes the debate even more difficult for me is the fact that people give usually more importance to the form of the problems than to their substance, and in the present case, the council members ask very cleverly for provincial status while they know that the citizens of the Yukon do not want it since they do not dare to ask for it officially.

Mr. Nielsen: That is not true.

Mr. Chrétien: That is what I learned by reading the resolution.

The hon. member mentioned certain conversations which we had and I must admit that every time I said to the elected representatives of the Territorial Council that the difficulty of the problem came from the fact that they were asking in substance, but not formally, for provincial status, they always answered me with a smile rather than with a denial.

Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dinsdale: Am I correct in interpreting the minister as having said the people of the Yukon do not want a greater degree of autonomy, responsible government, and that he bases his claim on the response to an open-line radio program in contrast with the official representations of the elected representatives on the council?

Mr. Chrétien: The hon. member should have listened to what I said, Mr. Speaker. I said the resolution called for the status of a province without the name, but I said that is not the prime concern of the people of the Yukon. To give an example, I said that I was on the hot-line for an hour and nobody asked me one question about the constitutional development of the Yukon. I did not say they did not want more power.

Mr. Dinsdale: Does the council not speak for the people, the same as the elected representatives in this House speak for the people?

Mr. Chrétien: I could let you have your debate, but I just say it is not the prime concern of the people of the Yukon. The people of the Yukon do not want the federal government to move out of there because they know that we can work with the representatives to get a better development of the Yukon and a better atmosphere for economic growth in the Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a further question?

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but it will be the last question because I would like to make my speech.

Mr. Nielsen: You can have all the rest of the time this afternoon as far as I am concerned. My question is this: Does the minister support the resolution of the Yukon Liberal Association which I read into the record during my remarks?

Mr. Chrétien: The resolution of the Liberal Party up there is something that I took into consideration. They expressed their view but we have not accepted it. We have not accepted all the views of Liberals across Canada, but the Liberals have great confidence in the judgment of this government and I do not think they will be disappointed.

Mr. Dinsdale: Does hon. James Richardson have the confidence—

Mr. Chrétien: If you want to be partisan, I too could be very partisan. We accept the view of everyone, and we are very proud to have the minister from Manitoba express his views. He is fighting the cause of the people in the west in a very able way, just as I am fighting the cause of my people. I do not always win; sometimes I have to abide by the views of the government. We are a very democratic party on this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Mr. Dinsdale: I was surprised to see the westerners applauding that.

Mr. Orange: He is not speaking for the government; he is speaking for himself.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) on a question of privilege.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Nielsen: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I was not endeavouring to be partisan but merely to point out—and I am sure the minister believes me—that all the Liberals and the Conservatives on the council are unanimous on the question of this resolution.

Mr. Chrétien: I was not referring to the hon. member's partisan approach; I was referring to something the hon. member for Brandon-Souris raised. He mentioned the speech made last Sunday by one of my colleagues. Expressing such views is a liberty which we in the Liberal party enjoy, and we are proud of it.

Mr. Dinsdale: There really was not any response from the government.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, it does not follow from the fact that the Territorial Council passed that resolution that the government had to accept it, because one should not confuse provincial status with democracy. According to the policy we advocated last week, an important step forward was made towards the establishment of a more responsible government in the Yukon.

We are going in the right direction. One may wonder why the executive power is not granted to the representatives of the Territorial Council.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: No, Mr. Speaker. If we are to say the executive committee is to be comprised of three civil servants and that one elected member is to be invited to serve on the committee, how can the minister interpret this as executive power residing in the council?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I will cover that point in a few minutes when I talk about the executive committee I am forming. We must not confuse democracy with provincial status. There are some people who are elected in the Yukon, and they are elected to do a certain job.

Mr. Nielsen: En français!

Mr. Chrétien: I can speak in both languages. As I say, they are elected to do a certain job. They pass legislation and have occasion to vote on the budget. Not only do they discuss the budget with the commission, but they perform their role in the same way that a Member of Parliament performs his role in the House. They fight their cases similarly.

Because the Yukon contains a small population in a vast territory, the people of the Yukon cannot generate enough revenue to run their own affairs. Even if the Yukon was a province of the same status as other provinces in Canada and was taking part in the same shared-cost programs, equalization payments, and so on, it would be in a position to obtain only $12 million. On the other hand, we are spending in the Yukon right now, under the heading of expenditures similar to those made in the provinces, more than $32 million.

Mr. Nielsen: That is a disgrace.

Mr. Dinsdale: This is the "igloo to igloo" philosophy.

Mr. Chrétien: Those expenditures come under provincial headings and do not include federal types of expenditure for things like transportation, resource development, and so on.

Mr. Nielsen: That is a distortion by the minister's officials.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Nielsen: It is not nonsense.

Mr. Chrétien: As a result of representations made to me, and discussions—and more than once I have discussed this matter with the hon. member for Yukon—I decided to take a step forward and form an executive committee. On that committee three people will be appointed by the federal government and one by the elected members. This is true, and I do not deny it; but I hope it will be a first step. It is important to consider who will be chosen by the elected members, because he will be a member of the executive committee. On an executive committee numbers are not important; the quality of the representative is important. If he has a valid case to present—and I shall appoint only those whom I think have judgment—he will be able to bring his case forward in the Assembly and I will be in a position perhaps to change what is complained of. So when the people of the area say there will not be representation, I say there will be representation.

The federal government is putting money into the area. The hon. member for Yukon can question me about the spending of this money. I am responsible to the Parliament of Canada and I am speaking as a member of a democratic institution. The hon. member for Yukon can put to us the case of the 18,000 citizens he represents. It is his job to do so.

An hon. Member: He is not here often.

Mr. Chrétien: He does so on many occasions quite ably. The hon. member himself has said that this is not the time to change the territory into a province, because it has neither the population nor the financial base.

Mr. Nielsen: I did not say that.

Mr. Chrétien: It is not a province, but a territory. We have given the Yukon a special status because of the different problems that exist there. The hon. member for Yukon represents a population of 18,000 people, while other members in the House are obliged by law to represent at least 50,000 people. He represents those people because we consider that the Yukon is a special case.

Mr. Dinsdale: What price democracy!

Mr. Chrétien: This is quite democratic and the hon. member is quite entitled to put his case here.

Mr. Nielsen: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Chrétien: At the end of my remarks, please. We have more than just an executive council, because we want to bring an elected member into the administration. This man will be given the responsibility of administering one or perhaps two departments. I do not know about that; I will discuss that with the other councillors. If that man chooses to administer education for example—and the hon. member referred to education—he will probably be involved with the equivalent local moneys collected in the Yukon—

Mr. Nielsen: Under the direction of the Commissioner, who takes orders from the minister.

Mr. Chrétien: And the minister is responsible to the most democratic assembly in Canada, the Parliament of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Dinsdale: That is colonialism.

Mr. Chrétien: That is not colonialism. An area in Canada can become a province, or not become one. Here we have a territorial government and we are trying to find a way to cope with problems of communication that have existed. If what we propose works well, then we shall take another step in that direction. I said to the hon. member for Yukon that this was a first step. From 1958 to 1962, when the hon. member sat on the government side of the House, he did not suggest a forward step in that direction.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, the minister knows that is not so.

Mr. Dinsdale: Ask Commissioner Gordon Cameron about that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I will ask the minister to reconsider what he said, because he knows as well as I do that between 1958 and 1960 the Yukon Act was amended precisely as I outlined in my remarks this morning. These were progressive steps. We introduced the Advisory Committee on Finance, the Court of Appeal, and increased the assets of the council.

Mr. Chrétien: Did the hon. member's party bring in an elected member who was to sit on an executive committee?

Mr. Nielsen: We brought in the Advisory Committee on Finance.

Mr. Chrétien: It is democratic?

Mr. Nielsen: It is not working.

Mr. Chrétien: I notice that the reforms put forward by the administration which the hon. member supported are not working. I am trying to bring in something new that will work.

Mr. Nielsen: It will not work.

• (4:30 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: At any event, Mr. Speaker, if we keep on exchanging interesting views, I will not be able to conclude.

As concerns the Northwest Territories, there was much talk about the Carrothers Commission and I must say that 19 out of the 28 recommendations that were made have already been implemented in an unquestionable way, five others were partially implemented while four were rejected.

Some of my colleagues gave the reasons for that but I should like to deal at this stage with the advisability of establishing an executive committee in the Northwest Territories. Some of the Carrothers Commission's recommendations dealt with the establishment of an executive committee. It was not even suggested that the members of such an executive committee be elected.

I could perhaps answer the argument of the hon. member for Yukon by saying that the Carrothers Commission suggested that an executive council be set up for the Northwest Territories, but without specifying that its members should be elected.

A committee was formed. It is the only major recommendation made by the Carrothers Commission that was not implemented. In fact, a committee made up of the members of the legislative council of the Territories was formed. It recommended specifically to the federal government, that ad hoc committees be set up, instead of an executive committee, to study various problems and allow the elected members of the Territories to work more closely with the executive of the Territories.

We will comply immediately with the request of the elected representatives of the Territories by setting up a finance committee which will work in co-operation with the commissioner. However, we cannot accept the idea that the Northwest Territories are on the verge of becoming a province.

To my mind, it was only fair for the government to tell the citizens of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories what its views were, instead of keeping them in suspense for several months or years.

That is why I knew that some of my recommendations would not be very popular because for three or four years we have spoken of the Territories as near-provinces; then, they are bluntly told that it is not the case and that it will not be. It is quite normal, in such cases, to expect negative reactions.

And even then, the population would be insufficient, for that land, which includes nearly one third of the whole Canadian territory, has only 32,000 inhabitants. Most of them are Indians, Metis or Eskimos. Now, despite the election system that has been in force for many years in the Northwest Territories, up to now only one Eskimo has been elected to the Territorial Council; by the way, he supported the government when the policy was announced. Another Council member, of Indian origin, who was not elected since he was appointed by the government, represents also the majority of the Northwest Territories population, which endorses the government's stand.

The revenues that the Northwest Territories could get, at the provincial level, amount to $19 million, as compared to current expenses of the order of $92 million. These figures cover assistance of all kinds which the federal government could grant them and which is exactly the type of assistance given to Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island and other low income provinces.

Only, it is a constitutional deficiency. Now the people of the territories know exactly where we stand. We have taken a new orientation towards a new democracy—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the minister but his time has expired, unless there is unanimous consent that he continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: I wish to thank hon. members for their kindness.

Until now we have worked at establishing a government more adapted to the circumstances, and if all is not well in the Yukon and in the Northwest Territories, nothing will prevent us from changing it later. Right now, the residents of those regions know exactly where they stand and I think that at least we have clarified the situation.

The important thing is the total development of the Territories. It is also important that the development of northern Canada which represents 40 per cent of our country, be progressive and rational. We must not engage in fantasies but rather implement programs for the development of the North.

At the present time, there are some problems which we would like to solve quickly. During one of my trips to Prince George, in British Columbia, I had the opportunity to explain the government policy on conservation of natural resources and pollution in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon.

In my opinion, we now have in the territories the opportunity to undertake an economic and social development which will enable us to preserve the natural beauty of that area and to assure the rational development of resources without the confusion and pollution which exist in other parts of Canada.

The economic development proper, is now simply fantastic in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, when one considers that in 1963, the value of the mining production in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon amounted to only $20 million; in 1969 our mining production will be over $200 million.

With respect to possible new developments, we are told every day that new minerals have been found both in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

I could likewise mention other important breakthroughs, such as the famous Mary River mine in Baffin island which is perhaps one of the world's most important iron ore deposits.

I could also list many other areas in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, a part of Canada that is promised to the most spectacular development in the years to come, as we learn every day from mining explorations.

And what about the black gold rush, I mean the oil rush, going on in the Territories, and in northern Yukon, in the Mackenzie Delta and the Arctic Islands as well.

It is still more interesting to note that the potential there is perhaps as big, or even bigger, than the important finds of the past years on Alaska's north shore.

And when Panarctic Oils Limited, in which the share of the federal government is 45 per cent, and that of private enterprise 55 per cent, started its operations in the North, the very first drilling uncovered a large concentration of natural gas of over 13 million cubic feet per day, which obviously means that the experts were absolutely right when they chose to drill at that all-important site for its sedimentary formation. This discovery of a large deposit of natural gas is perhaps not very significant due to the great distance from Melville islands. However, in view of the technological developments which make it possible to liquefy gases, and so on, the discovery may prove important for the future.

Another thing also is still more important: it is obvious that in these Arctic islands, the formation of hydrocarbons is highly important. In the near future, all Canadians will find new resources to compete or improve our balance of payments and our foreign markets.

Still, the socio-economic development of the North cannot be achieved unless all Canadians accept their responsibilities towards the first inhabitants of the Territories.

In that area, over 50 per cent of the residents are Eskimos or Indians, and in the Yukon the ratio is roughly 15 per cent.

• (4:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: That is not correct.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, this is not important. As far as the Yukon is concerned, the ratio may vary slightly.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: It is 10 to 11 per cent. The minister's officials have added in the background papers—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien).

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, this is not important. I shall refer to the speech I made in Yellowknife and I shall say that, as regards employment:

[English]

The government now has the opportunity to ensure that development of resources in the north will be to the benefit of all citizens of the north. I made the plea, and I repeat it today, that there be an orderly development of resources in the north so as to provide employment for Eskimos and Indians who want to take employment. I am not saying that all Indians and Eskimos must be miners; that is not what I have in mind. But if they do want to take jobs, we want to make sure they are employed in the development of resources of the north. We must make it possible to establish in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon the kind of society that we want in Canada. I have indicated to the mining industry many times since I have been minister that they have to work in that direction, and I must say some good progress has been made.

For example, in the Yukon I have communicated with all companies, and more and more of the Indian people are being employed in mining and related services. While I was in Yellowknife last week I had the pleasure of signing an agreement with Pine Point Mines and the union to enable Indians and Eskimos to receive training if they wished to take employment with the Company. I know one should not be obliged to sign a contract to that effect, but I hope the day will come when this kind of training will be normal practice in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon and ministers will not have to poke their noses into such matters as this.

I do not want to take too much time of the House, but I do think that development of the north is the concern of all Canadians. A few years ago we decided we were concerned enough to spend some of the money raised in Canada on the development of this last frontier. We had no selfish intentions; we did this because we believed the Canadian north should be developed, not just for this generation but for generations to come. We must bear in mind that more money will be required in the years ahead. We must evolve policies and an infrastructure to assist the development of mines, resources and other related industries. What is more important is to make sure that the Canadian north does not become the private preserve of just the few; we must endeavour to ensure that all residents of the north, indeed all Canadians, will benefit from this development.

In closing I should like to say something that reflects the attitude of both the government and myself. Even if we have been a little negative in regard to constitutional development, we feel the time has not yet arrived in the Territories to take the next step of granting status as a province. This is due to the lack of population and financial resources that can be derived from all sources of income in the Territories. Having said that, my attitude is not one of blind opposition to progress, but of opposition to blind progress. I would ask the federal government, those in charge of northern resources and the Territorial government in the north, to work together with the people of the north and their representatives. This I stress very strongly.

It has often been said that the Northwest Territories and the Yukon have insufficient representation. I have disagreed many times with the hon. member for Yukon over many issues. He is the elected representative of the case for the Yukon in this democratic institution which is the House of Commons.

When people say that Yukoners are not democratically represented, they are expressing a very low opinion of the hon. member for Yukon. The same can be said for the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange) who also made some constructive remarks this afternoon. I do not accept all his suggestions, but up to now I have accepted many of his recommendations. He is the representative of the people in the Northwest Territories, and in this democratic institution he puts his case very ably to the administration. This is why we in this House today are spending all day debating, progressively and responsibly, the development of the resources of the north and also constitutional questions. Together with the people of the north we will be able to develop what will become in a few years the most exciting part of North America.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, before the minister resumes his seat I wonder whether I might ask him two questions. The Prime Minister indicated in a telegram to the Yukon Legislative Council that he and the minister would be pleased to receive in Ottawa either members or a delegation of members to discuss what we have been debating today. Having heard the minister, can he tell me whether any useful purpose would be served in a delegation of councillors visiting the Prime Minister and the minister, or is it possible that his enunciated policy might alter as a result of such meeting?

My second question is this: Since we have been discussing these matters in Yellowknife, in Whitehorse and all day today in the House, and since the government's policy has come out in specifics, will the minister not introduce early next week legislation that he can assure us will go to the standing committee as soon as possible in order that we can obtain the widest range of views?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, to reply to the hon. member's first question, the councillors have asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to receive them. I agree that any discussion with the Prime Minister and myself would help the situation and clear up any confusion that might be in our minds. After all, we are not blind; we can look at our mistakes. However, we will stress our case to them as well. I think we should hear the arguments of both sides, not just of one side. The councillors are moving from their stand taken in the resolution adopted last year, which asked for provincial status without actually calling it such. We will discuss this with them if they come. We are always open minded. The legislation is not ready, but I hope it will be ready soon. This involves a matter of drafting, but we will refer it to the committee as quickly as possible. I will be delighted to appear before the committee and explain the government's stand on this matter.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Nielsen: I hope the minister—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am trying to be as generous as possible to the hon. member in view of his particular interest in the resolution, but I draw his attention to the fact that there are at least two hon. members who want to speak. I should like to recognize the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Lefebvre) and the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett). I am prepared to allow the hon. member another question if he insists, but I invite his co-operation.

Mr. Nielsen: I have a very short question to ask the minister. Will he assure the House that his bill concerning the Yukon will not be introduced until after he has spoken to the delegation of councillors, particularly in view of his reply to my previous question in that regard?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I do not know when this meeting will come about, so I cannot give that assurance. If the councillors come in a week or two, the bill will probably not be ready.

[Translation]

Mr. T. Lefebvre (Pontiac): Mr. Speaker, I am very much interested in this motion because I had the pleasure to visit the Territories with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) on November 10, 11 and 12. I was not long in noting that the minister is very well known in this huge country and that he had studied in detail problems concerning not only the citizens of the Territories but also all Canadians.

I notice that most of the people living in the Territories trust the minister and know that he is loyal, efficient and honest. We are really happy to have a man of his character to head such an important department, not only for the citizens of the Territories themselves but for all Canadians.

The minister has been holding his portfolio for less than two years and he has already visited the whole Territories. When you consider that this part of the country represents 35 per cent of Canada's total surface, you realize the size of the land the minister has to look after.

During the few remaining minutes at my disposal, I do not intend to give the impression that I have become an expert after spending only three days in the North.

I just want to share the memories I have from my discussions with the citizens of that part of the country.

I attended several meetings where the minister delivered speeches, for instance in Fort Smith and Yellowknife, in the Northwest Territories, and in Whitehorse in the Yukon.

Each time, people listened closely to those speeches, which were warmly applauded. Personally, I was in a position each time to observe the reactions of the citizens.

I had talks with dozens of people, before and after the minister's speeches, and I got the impression that the majority of these citizens did not expect the minister to announce the establishment of provincial status.

They certainly feel neglected sometimes, and if I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest to my colleagues that they visit that part of the country each time they have the opportunity to do it. I am sure that all those who will be able to go there will, like me, return from their visit with a feeling of satisfaction and will remember the warm welcome from the people of the territories.

The problems these people are facing are almost of the same nature as those of my electors: they are asking for more roads, better communications, a better standard of living, a promising future for their children and the opportunity to live in peace.

[English]

The minister also mentioned his participation in the hot-line program while he was on his northern visit. I was with the minister on that occasion and should like to endorse what he said. For almost one hour he received calls from citizens all over the north country, not one of whom raised the subject of wider powers for the council or provincial status for the Territories.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister had not spoken about constitutional development.

Mr. Lefebvre: The minister might not have spoken about it, but the way you talk one would think this was the only thing in the minds of the people up there. I endorse what the minister has said. They have problems similar to the problems in other parts of Canada. They do not think only about provincial status, as the hon. member is trying to make this House believe. They are thinking of many other things.

Mr. Dinsdale: Government by open line.

Mr. Lefebvre: You fellows have all made your speeches. I only have two minutes left and would like to use them, if you do not mind. In speaking of the Carrothers Report I should like to read a couple of lines.

Yukon and N.W.T. Government

[Translation]

All of us know that this Commission was created in 1965 at the request of the Territorial Council in order to suggest to the federal government the proper action to be taken to insure the Northwest Territories a greater share in government.

The best compliment the government can pay to those who work on such commissions is to give immediate consideration to their recommendations with a view to enforcing them with the least possible delay.

The evidence of the success achieved by Mr. Carrothers and his colleagues lies in the fact that a great many of the major recommandations were already being carried out the year following the submission of the official report, and that steps were being taken to carry out additional recommendations.

As regards the other suggestions, including those with long term effect on the territorial administration, the government awaited the proper time to put them into practice.

I intend today to inform the House of the federal government's intentions in regard to some of these recommendations as the minister himself announced in Yellowknife on November 10, 1969.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock?

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being five o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to section 11 of Standing Order 58 the proceedings on the motion are considered to have expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed the following bills to which the concurrence of this House is desired:

Bill S-2, an act to amend the Quebec Savings Bank Act;

Bill S-6, an act to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act and other statutory provisions related to the subject matter of certain of those amendments;

Bill S-7, an act to amend the Foreign Insurance Companies Act;

Bill S-8, an act to amend the Trust Companies Act, and Bill S-9, an act to amend the Loan Companies Act.

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.
