THE CIVIL SERVICE.
The system of examining candidates for offices in the civil service, is something like that of holding out false lights for the bewildered mariners. It is only this year that it has been introduced. Through means of it hundreds, if not thousands, of young men are lured to disappointment, if not ruin. After succeeding in passing an examination, it seems to them like a pass-port to success further on. Their qualifications, they think, being complete, nothing now stands in the way, but the opportunity to fill the next vacancy upon which they eye of a great many other expectants no doubt are also fixed. Thus young men are diverted from thoughts of a legitimate and more permanent independent business calling, and this for the sake of getting a government office, which never comes to them, or which at best if obtained is one of servile dependence upon the caprices of politicians, whenever they choose to be ugly and exacting, cases of which will suggest themselves to the minds of many of our readers. No doubt there are hundreds of young men throughout the dominion who are living in hourly expectation of being sent for to fill some office, because they think they are looked as qualified candidates. A great mistake this—for it is only one in a hundred who succeeds in getting in. Better far, young man, to turn your thoughts to something higher and nobler than the quest of a government office, where you become a drone for life or a servile squire of your patron, for all mankind to entertain or express your own free opinions are taken out of you the moment you cross the threshold of your future dependence for a living in the way of a clerkship. It is true persons should not be engaged to fill a public office unless fairly qualified in an educational way to discharge the duties. A fair English education and a knowledge of figures are all that is required, and these branches we may fairly assume almost every young man possesses; but even then, incompetent persons succeed in getting in, through the efforts of influential political friends, while far better men have to step aside, cases of which have recently come to light. Therefore it is time enough to examine a candidate by the head of a department as a vacancy occurs, instead of at present keeping a great number of young men waiting outside the door knocking and thumping for admission.

A DANGEROUS PLACE.
The road leading past Morrison's Mills is in much too close proximity to the railroad, for vehicles passing along. The main road should be carried over the hill in continuation of the road leading to the cemetery, or perhaps to avoid the steep grade a little to the east of it. What with the noise of the mill and the confusion, it is as much as one's life is worth to walk along the track, (to say nothing of passing teams) especially when a train is coming along, for the escaping steam from the mill deadens all sound of an approaching engine, and it is a wonder that people have not been killed long ere this. But after all there is some comfort as informed by a sign placed in the neighborhood of the track, which reads that "Before purchasing your offine and caskets elsewhere please call at the establishment of—where bargains are to be had." Even under such circumstances it is doubtful if a person likes to be killed.

FATHER CHASTISES.
A large number attended the meetings in the Temperance hall last Tuesday and Wednesday to hear Father Chastisey, Tuesday evening he addressed his audience on the subject, "Why I left the Church of Rome," speaking upwards of an hour. He stated in his remarks that he was born in 1810 and was ordained a priest in 1833, and remained such for a period of twenty-five years. He found quite a number of buyers for his books and pamphlets which he sold at the close of his address.

Alcohol in Wines.
Every pint of port, sherry, or madeira has four ounces of alcohol every pint of champagne has three ounces every pint of burgundy has two and a half ounces every pint of claret has two ounces, and every pint of moselle has an ounce and three-quarters. There are approximations, it is true, but they are nearly correct.

CRUELTY TO SEAMEN.
It appears by an article in the St. John Sun, that another case of cruelty to seamen by their superior officers, has been brought before a Court of Justice in Philadelphia. This poor fellow, referred to has been the victim by the Captain and mate of the most barbarous treatment that any human being could endure and live, such as tying him up by the thumbs with his feet not touching the deck, at other times knocked down and kicked, compelled to work when in a state of bodily suffering, and such other cruelties and indignities heaped upon him, as no hot tented world likely be guilty of. It is strange that men, if they can be called men, having power over others away from land and beyond the reach of just ice for the time being, can exercise such barbarities over poor, weak human beings, even suppose the victim has been somewhat inebriated. On board of men-of-war vessels, the punishment for offences, real or imaginary, against authority is met not by brute force, but by imprisonment for a given time, as on land. Merchants ought to be particular in selecting their captains and consider their dispositions and tempers as well as their nautical skill—even further, they as well as their captains ought to be held legally responsible for the good conduct of their employes.

ASPHALTING.
The work goes bravely on. Several of the sidewalks have been done, and no doubt the plan of half covering them will answer well enough, although we must say we would have liked the job much better if, on some of the walks, the asphalt had been made a foot or so wider. It is to be hoped the work will stand our arctic winters—at any rate we should hope for the best. A number of the street crossings, we understand, are to be done in the same way, which will be a great improvement. But first of all the crossings on Queen Street should be undertaken—then in front of City Hall, where the old planks are, surrounding the fountain and in front of the entrance. This is very much needed and would be much better than the present uneven walk. Should the domestic article prove efficacious, and not too expensive, we would suggest that next spring a block be done on Queen Street from York to Carlton or from Carlton to Regent as an experiment—and if it should prove satisfactory we believe it would be money saved besides giving us a good street. A very large amount of money has been expended in trying to keep Queen Street in proper condition, and after all it is anything but satisfactory. We would like to see the suggestion acted upon and think it would prove a good one and be money well laid out.

CIVIC INSTABILITY.
The only thing the people of St. John seem to be united in, is upon the question of taxation—here all are agreed to disagree, and yet united, as they grumble and still elect the same aldermen over and over again to spend their money ad libitum. Upon other questions they fight like cats and dogs, whether it be in building wharves or docks, handing their harbor over to commissioners, or what not. The Board of Trade meets occasionally and talks. The people not long since decided against placing their harbor in commission, and yet the Common Council was to have before them the other day a revival of the old story, no doubt at the instigation of the wharfmen or capitalists for the office under the government to manage the business. It is not known yet what was done. But the scratching will still continue until the people sell themselves out and out. They are not yet agreed as to a site for the Young monument. In the meantime the rival St. John dailies keep on blacking each others eyes over dominion politics, hoodlumism, the loaves and fishes until neither can see what is going on locally or mischievously in St. John.

How the Domestic, Social and Literary World is Wagging.
Kate Field wants the women of this country to wear pants, not such as the masculines do, but Turkish trousers, which she thinks are quiet as becoming as skirts and a great deal more convenient.
Prince Bismarck has left King's Hill. He has been greatly benefited by the waters. His hair has become snow white, but he has all his old fire and determination. It is reported that General Count Von Waldersee is trying to effect a reconciliation between the Emperor and Bismarck, but it is not likely that the overture will be successful.
The steamer "Loch Lomond," Captain Stephen, from Montreal, on August 7th, which has arrived at Dundee, experienced hurricanes during the voyage, and the weather encountered was so severe that the men having charge of the cattle on board were unable to approach them for two days. Seventy-seven head of cattle were lost and scarcely one head escaped injury. There was a sickening scene as the vessel was discharging her cargo, the men being engaged for several hours in slaughtering cattle, both aboard the steamer and on the quay.

Second Hen: "Yes, and she's picking up a stone, too. Let's fly out quick."
First Hen: "No, no, stay here."
Second Hen: "But she's aiming right for us."
First Hen: "Yes, and if we move we might get hit."
A country parson, in pulling a certain soap, says: "It is the best ever used for cleansing a dirty man's face. We have tried it, and therefore we know."

The Tunnel Was Forgotten.
At Brussels the visitor is often struck by the extreme thinness of the earth covering the Braine le Comte tunnel, and wonders why the common sense of the engineers who made the line did not direct them to continue the cutting, and thus avoid a subterranean passage.

An Important Case. Persons have been in the habit of depositing night soil and manure at the foot of the hill leading to Forest Hill Cemetery. The indictable secretary of the Board of Health, Mr. James Farrell, has at last upon one of the guilty parties and brought him before the police magistrate yesterday, in the person of George Peters, colored, who lives near Morrisson's Mills; and it appears as evidence that he deposited loads of night soil in the place above mentioned, and when questioned as to who authorized or employed him to dump the laws in this way, he gave the name of Mr. Woodbridge, keeper of the dead and dumb institution, and it is to be hoped that gentlemen as well as Peters will be brought to account for the principal of such an institution should know that a thoroughfare like this, leading to a cemetery, ought to be held sacred. If correctly informed this gentleman's attention was directed to these nuisances some time ago, but it seems to have produced no effect. Peters was fined $10 and $2.50 costs, or 20 days jail. There is another lot of manure in the same locality, which has got to be followed up likewise. Where is the roadmaster, living in that neighborhood, is it not his business to bring up such persons?

Inquest on the Body of Andrew A. Hendry. Monday evening Coroner Dr. Coulthart empaneled a jury composed as follows: Andrew Lipsett, foreman; J. D. McKay, John McLaughlin, James Dunlop, Dennis O'Brien, N. J. Smith and John A. Segue to hold an inquest on the drowning of Allan Hendry. The only witness called was Fred Nixon, who was in the canoe with Hendry at the time of the accident.

The verdict was that the said Allan Hendry came to his death by drowning in the river St. John, on August 29th and that no blame attaches to any one. The jury are also of the opinion that the city should provide, in each ward near the river front in some accessible place, suitable grappling irons for the recovery of individuals who may have been submerged in the water, and upon whom, if in the water but a short time, restorative remedies might be successfully used.

It was suggested that grappling irons should be distributed as follows: One each at the water works, city hall, military hospital, Undertaker Adams' and at the caretaker of the railway bridge.

The inquiry began as Mrs. Lakin alleges, about four years ago in a game of croquet.

The mystery surrounding the tragedy in Ironton, O., Friday, of last week, in which the three children of Mr. and Mrs. George Hamilton were found smothered to death in a chest in which they had been fastened, has been cleared up. Willer Warwick, a playmate of the children, and the boy named Pemberton, together with himself, while playing "gass," locked the unfortunate children in the chest, and, being called by their mother, pulling him against the bars with one paw, hit him some terrible blows with the other, laying bare the scalp, tearing his neck in a fearful manner and wounding him severely about the face. The other woman rushed in and saved him or he would doubtless have received fatal wounds.

UNDER A SHADOW.

Continued.

'It was cruel,' cried Alison, with flashing eyes—'mean and cruel!'

'That was cruel,' said Alison, sadly. 'The other case was more cruel still, he continued; I knew the lady well—she was beloved, honored and esteemed by all who knew her.'

'And he, who would have given his life to please her, obeyed her at once. 'It was a sad story, madame. When she was quite young—so young as to be almost a child—one who ought to have known better persuaded her to run away with him.'

'How did it end?' asked Alison. 'Sadly as possible. She denied the truth, and her husband, infuriated against the second who had betrayed her, brought an action against him for libel. Slowly and surely the truth came out at first she denied it, then suddenly gave way and owned that it was true.'

'The last rays of the setting sun fell upon the windows of Alison's painting-room. Such picturesque disorder, such magnificent disarray! Here one saw the head of a Florentine saint, with a nimbus round the hair; here a copy of one of Raphael's virgins, pure, serene, and lovely; there on the canvas glowed rich colors that would have shamed Titian; here was a woman's face, with playful eyes and sweet, and lips, here a sketch of a Spanish cavalier, dark, proud, haughty; there stood an antique vase, and behind it hung a fold of ancient tapestry.'

any other is that I love you so truly, so devotedly, that I would give my whole life for you—that I love you so no other could. You are my first love, Asallia; I have known no other; all the strength of my manhood, all the fervor of my soul, all the passionate love of my heart, have gone to you. Will you give me nothing in return?'

'I cannot thank you, Asallia,' he said, in a broken voice; 'there are some things which words cannot express; I cannot thank you, but I would give my life for you; always remember that, my love. I would give you my life.'

'I shall be content with your love,' she replied. 'Now, can it really be true, he continued, that I will have nothing in the wide world to recommend me, have won the most beautiful and the most gifted woman in all the world to be my wife?'

'I am so happy, said Lord Carlyton, as he stood by her side, that my happiness unnerve me, Asallia; I have not deserved it, you love me—you will be my wife!'

from one step to another, she had to choose hangings for her own hood, furniture from the great Harwell's, carriages, horses—everything was left to her. It was not until her lover had gone from her that she had any leisure for thought. He had asked her where she would spend the honeymoon; he had suggested Paris, or her own home, beautiful Italy, wondering why she shrunk with a shudder from the bare idea of it. She preferred to go home—to his home, to Haute, where their life was to be spent; that was her ideal of most perfect bliss. No sooner did he hear that than Lord Carlyton hurried down to Haute, to see himself that all the preparations were made for his beautiful bride.

'I shall be content with your love,' she replied. 'Now, can it really be true, he continued, that I will have nothing in the wide world to recommend me, have won the most beautiful and the most gifted woman in all the world to be my wife?'

honed. Surely, surely all is forgotten now! Lord Carlyton had been immensely touched and amused by these evidences of his beautiful wife's popularity. 'Queens, princes, dukes, duchesses,' he said—'no one has forgotten you; authors, artists, actors—what a world-wide reputation is yours, Asallia! I should not think that any one ever had so many wedding presents before.'

'I shall be content with your love,' she replied. 'Now, can it really be true, he continued, that I will have nothing in the wide world to recommend me, have won the most beautiful and the most gifted woman in all the world to be my wife?'

may help them to make their toilet sweet—act as stewards of the riches God has given me. 'That is what I mean, Asallia; Heaven has indeed given me a helpmate. But, my wife, my darling, you must pursue your art; that is a gift you must not neglect.'
