Dennis was there in the best of good humors, and Mrs. Sykes was all of a flutter. Her bright eyes shone like twin stars, and the snowy curls were all a quiver.

The doctor seemed delighted as he chatted with his little favorite.

"I'm not going to have you spoiling my David that way, Dimple. You are much too pretty and he is much too young, for that. So now I shall send you down to the parlor to wait till I come. Perhaps you will find something to amuse yourself with."

And Dimple went, wondering what the surprise was to be. She closed the door softly and then looked up. And there before the bright open fire stood Maurice Weldon, his soul shining in his eyes. He held out his hands to her, and she ran forward, stopping suddenly in the middle of the room.

He went to her and took her little hands.

"Are you glad to see me, Dimple?" She lifted her face in her own pretty way. "Glad? Was I ever happy before?" she said.

"Then you are glad. Are you going to let me stay with you always, little girl?"

"With me? Why?"

"Because I love you."

"Ma?"

"Yes. Will you give yourself to me?"

Her manner changed instantly.

"I don't know about that," she said archly. "I might be persuaded to take you if you want to give yourself away, but—"

"That arrangement is even better. So it is settled."

And then Mrs. Sykes and Mr. Dennis came and after awhile Maurice and Dimple started home, and the old lawyer was going their way, the three walked on together.

At the rectory gate Mr. Dennis thought of something he wanted to say to the Rector and decided to go in.

That was how it came that they walked into the dingy old study where Mr. Annesly was toiling over one of his illegible manuscripts.

Dimple ran forward eagerly. "See, papa, who has come!"

The old man looked up absently.

"It is Mr. Weldon come home! And now we have only to find Elsie Raymond's daughter," she went on.

The Rector had risen to welcome Maurice, but he fell back into his chair, his eyes on Dimple's face.

"Whose daughter? What do you know of Elsie Raymond?"

"Do you know her, sir?" the lawyer asked.

"Yes. Elsie Raymond was my wife's sister. Why do you ask?"

"She was the wife of Howard Wright?"

"She was."

"Mr. Annesly, did you ever know Howard Wright?"

"I have never seen him. He stole Elsie away. She said, poor thing, that he married her."

"And he did marry her. And there was a child?"

"Yes."

"Do you know where she is?"

"Yes."

"Mr. Annesly, Howard Wright and Howard Drayton are two names that belonged to the same man. This girl is the daughter we are searching for. Will you help us to find her?"

"Poor Elsie," said the old man dreamily. "I had forgotten it till now. It is years since I thought of it. She gave the little child away, poor thing, but there are diaries and letters—hundreds of proofs, if you require them—Elsie's baby!"

"But where is she, papa?"

"Why, Dimple, little girl, you are Elsie Raymond's daughter."

Mr. Dennis turned to the two young people, catching a hand of each he exclaimed:

"The lost heiress of Wildmere! The spell is broken!"

THE END.

The Art of Carving.

Now that "little dinners" and luncheon parties are so popular among the ladies, the ideal hostess has added the art of graceful carving to her many other accomplishments. And the "head of the household," too, will realize, if he is at all observing, that there is decidedly a right and a wrong way to accomplish this important part of the dinner service, and if he is wise he will practice only the right methods; for what makes a dinner more "homey" and inviting than artistic carving of the meats served at the table?

The dish should always be of a good size, and should always be placed so near the carver as to give him or her full control of it. For carving a loin of veal, begin at the small end and cut the ribs apart; cut off a small piece of the kidney with the fat and serve on each plate with the veal.

A fillet of veal should be cut first from the top, and in a breast of veal the breast and brisket should be separated and then cut in pieces.

A saddle of venison cut thin, even slices from the tail toward the upper part on each side. Venison should always be served hot on well-warmed plates.

Loins of veal, mutton or venison should always be jointed by the butcher before cooking and then they are readily carved.

A sirloin of beef should be placed on the dish, with the tenderloin underneath. Thin-cut slices should be taken from the side next the carver, then turn over the roast and carve the tenderloin. A portion of both should be helped. Be careful to cut across the grain of the meat.

A leg of mutton should be carved across the middle of the bone first, and then from the thickest part until the gristle is reached. A few nice slices can be cut from the smaller end, but it is generally hard and stringy.

A ham can be served in several ways—by cutting long, delicate slices through the thick fat down to the bone; by running the point of the knife in a circle in the middle and cutting thin, circular slices, thus keeping the ham moist, or by beginning at the knuckle and slicing upwards. The last mode is considered the most economical.

A tongue should be carved in very thin, delicate slices, its delicacy depending very greatly upon attention to this. The slices from the centre are considered the most tempting, and should be cut across, and the slices taken from each side, with a portion of the fat which is at the root.

In carving fish some practice is useful in order to prevent the flakes from breaking. The choicest morsels of all large fish are near the head; then the thin parts come next; and the flavor of the part nearest the bone is never equal to those on the upper part. Fish is usually placed on a dish under part uppermost, as there lies the best part. In carving fish a fish-knife should be used, and if handled with lightness of touch and dexterity the person using it will find very little trouble in carving it.

Fowls should be placed breast up. Put the fork into the breast and take off the wings and legs first, without turning the fowl; then cut out the breast-bone, so as to leave the well-browned skin over it, as also the white meat; then cut off the side bones and divide the carcass which is left in two from the neck down, leaving the rump on one part to be served as a separate portion; then remove the second joint from the leg and wing, as they are much more easily managed when thus thoroughly dissected.—Home Queen.

POETRY.

Story of the Bells.

There's a bell that hangs in the high church tower
And rings with a steady tone;
It strikes a blow for each passing hour,
Through the darkness all alone.

There's a bell that rings in the wild, dark night,
When the flames mount up still higher
In the lurid glare and the crimson light,
To the startling cry of "fire."

There's a peaceful chime of the vesper bell,
When the hilltop hides the sun;
And the curfew bell, with its warning note,
That calls from the games and fun.

And the solemn tone of the funeral bell,
And its stroke falls on the heart,
For the message sad is for it to tell,
How loved ones are swept apart.

There's the harbor bell, through the mist unseen,
Tied fast where the breakers roar,
And its cry warns out o'er the waves of green,
To the requiem on the shore.

But sweet and clear as the robin's cry,
Far up on the mountain side,
Is the tinkling bell near the deep blue sky,
By the pine trees dark and wide.

And its rich tone carries me home again
To the hills, where the flocks and herds
Lie down to rest; while a glad refrain
Flaunts out from the singing birds.

SELECT STORY.

Wildmere.

CHAPTER VI.

Failing to quiet her, Loys went away, leaving her alone. It was here that Mr. Annesly found her half an hour later.

"It was too much for you child. You were not strong enough to come home after that terrible ordeal."

"Oh, you don't know, papa! It was a little thing to find poor Mr. Drayton. I hurried to tell Loys such good news, and she doesn't care!"

"She is disappointed, dear. She has counted on Wildmere."

It was after Loys had gone that Dimple received a little note from Mrs. Sykes. She wanted to see her and promised her a pleasant surprise.

And Dimple, to gratify her old friend, went to the pretty cottage. Mr.

upon her, that yaller gal jess laff in my face and eyes, sah!"

"Am dat so?" said Uncle Romulus. "She wouldn't hab you?"

"No, sah, she wouldn't hab me, and she said de law nor gubberment couldn't tetch her!" said Mr. Black, with increasing moroseness. "And when I took dat paper back to de office, I found dat gal spoke de truf. De gubberment couldn't make her marry me, and what's more, sah, dey wouldn't gib me back dat fifty cents for dat license dat wasn't worth any more dan joss so much waste paper. No, sah! I tell you de gubberment ob dis United States am as weak as water, and dat's de truf!"

The Child Life of Queen Victoria.

For the first four years of her life all the expenses of the Princess' establishment and education were paid for by the Prince Leopold. He took a father's interest in his niece, and devoted himself to her, but after a while another uncle, who had now become King George IV., began to think that the child's own country might well contribute to her maintenance. Accordingly, Parliament was asked to grant an allowance for her support and education. The proposition was readily granted, and the sum of six thousand pounds annually was settled on the Duchess for this purpose.

The Duke of York was also very fond of his little niece. He bore a strong resemblance to his brother, the Duke of Kent, and he always took great interest in her growth and education.

When she was five years old the Rev. George Davys was appointed preceptor to Her Royal Highness. He found his pupil "well grounded in all the requirements suited to her age; quick, intelligent, and generally very docile, though not, at this early age, much given to application"—a fact one can readily believe. Who would expect an active, high-spirited child five years old to be "much given to application?" The Duchess of Kent's mother wrote to her daughter, when the Princess was four years old, "Do not tease your little pup with learning, she is so young still, but this good advice seems to have been disregarded, for they commenced to give the child regular instruction when she was a mere infant. Small wonder that she objected, and asked in baby language, "What good this? what good that?"—Harper's Round Table.

As Gold is Tried.

It is only the pure hearts that can endure unharmed the tests and trials that come in life. A lady picked up a ring on the street and took it to a jeweler to know if it were of any value. He decided that it was gold, but to make sure for her said: "I will put it in acid. If real, there will be no change; if imitation, the acid will corrode and destroy it." The ring was dropped in, the lady watched anxiously and received back her treasure uninjured, only purer and brighter for the testing. In this way our hearts are sometimes tested in this sinful world. Pure hearts will stand the test and come out bright and clear. We ought often to examine our hearts to see if they are the pure metal that can go through this world without being corrupted. A pure heart is an invaluable jewel.

County Registrar.

All Else Failing Mr. Geo. C. Ward is Cured by Eight Boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Port Hope (Special) July 5.—No case of recovery from serious illness that has ever occurred in this community has caused as much talk as that of our esteemed fellow townsman Mr. George C. Ward, Registrar of this County, residing here. For a long time it had been well known to his intimate friends that he was a sufferer from kidney disorder. But for the past year he has been and all efforts to regain his strength were without avail. He is now cured, as he says, by using eight boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills, and it is as well as ever he was in his life.

Prince Bismark was once asked by Count Enzenberg, formerly Hessian envoy at Paris, to write something in his album. The page on which he wrote contained the autographs of Guizot and Thiers. The former had written, "I have learned in my long life two rules of prudence. The first is to forgive much; the second is never to forget." Under this Thiers had written, "A little forgetting would not detract from the sincerity of the forgiveness." Prince Bismark added, "As for me, I have learned to forget much, and to ask to be forgiven much."

This Hot Weather

YOU ARE PHYSICALLY AND MENTALLY EXHAUSTED.

Paine's Celery Compound is the Great Builder and Recuperator.

As a rule there is no pain following physical and mental exhaustion and debility.

You know you are weak, faint, languid, have loss of memory, depression of spirits, with a wasting of flesh. Your troubles proceed simply from nervous exhaustion, and though you are not suffering pain and agony, be assured your condition is extremely perilous, and demands immediate attention.

This wonderful stream (the blood) that runs to every part of the body, supplying the most minute nerves and tissues, is foul and poisoned. In your present condition your blood is not a life stream; it is a stagnant pool of disease and death.

The healthy, hale and strong, that bear up during the hottest weather, and that are blessed with clear, pure blood and steady nerves, are the people who make use of Paine's Celery Compound, the only medicine that revitalizes the blood, that fortifies the nervous system, that gives perfect digestive power, sound sleep, and a new lease of life to those advanced in years.

Paine's Celery Compound is truly the great modern elixir of life, and no wonder that doctors approve of it and strongly recommend it.

Why go on in wretchedness and misery when such a medicine promises health, vigor and new life? We recommend you no untired remedy. Every bottle of Paine's Celery Compound is warranted to do the work it promises. There is health and life in every drop.

Do You Use It?

It's the best thing for the hair under all circumstances. Just as no man by taking thought can add an inch to his stature, so no preparation can make hair. The utmost that can be done is to promote conditions favorable to growth. This is done by Ayer's Hair Vigor. It removes dandruff, cleanses the scalp, nourishes the soil in which the hair grows, and, just as a desert will blossom under rain, so bald heads grow hair, when the roots are nourished. But the roots must be there. If you wish your hair to retain its normal color, or if you wish to restore the lost tint of gray or faded hair use Ayer's Hair Vigor.

Lady Henry Somerset as a Witness.

Within a few days, Lady Henry Somerset appeared before the Royal Commission on the Licensing Laws—a commission appointed by Parliament and presided over by Lord Peel, the former speaker of the House of Commons.

One of the London daily papers says: "As an expert student, Lady Henry was an eminently proper witness to call, and her appearance enlivened the commonly prosaic sitting of the commission."

Lady Henry occupied the witness chair from 11 to 4.30, and a capital witness she made.

None of the parliamentary experts could hurry her or catch her napping.

Indeed, she succeeded in turning the questions upon her interrogators with a neatness and dispatch that many times drew wholesale laughter from her auditors."

Ten brewers were on the commission, and a saloon kept by one of them had been watched for twelve hours by Lady Henry's orders on the day previous, so that she was able to show the numbers coming and going and the demoralization resulting from the attractions of this remarkably well conducted public house."

Lady Henry bases her evidence chiefly on the argument that the licenses being given and protected, it had always been understood that competition in the ordinary sense of "pushing the trade" among publicans was absolutely unfair, and not contemplated by the state, so that, therefore, unless the drink traffic was conducted on the same lines as a postoffice or telegraph office, or any other employment which was contemplated by the state because there was a demand to supply but not a demand to create, it was absolutely contrary to the legislation that governed the traffic.

This was apparently a new point of view. Her point was that the number of licenses should be diminished. Lady Henry had the best possible maps prepared, of all the congested parts of London, with the public houses colored thereon, and these were handed to the commissioners. Almost all of her evidence was, therefore, shown through the eye as well as the ear, and this had a remarkably good effect.

It was stated by leading men of the commission that the argument made by Lady Henry had given them a light on the subject that had not been before elicited, and several said that the temperance cause had, in their opinion, gone up twenty per cent.

The annual meeting of the British Women's Temperance Association was largely attended than ever before and gave no uncertain sound on any of the vital principles of the temperance and purity movements.

Resolutions on political and social questions were carried with very little discussion. The council recognized with satisfaction that the cause has so far advanced that one of the great parties incorporated this reform in a government measure in 1895.

It reaffirmed its adherence to the principle of the Direct Veto bill, expressed gratification that the Women's Suffrage bill passed its second reading in the House of Commons by the large majority of seventy-one and emphatically declared that the parliamentary franchise was "strongly desired by the great majority of earnest thinking women, because, more than any other measure, it will raise the position of the working women of the country, and promote the passage of social reforms."

Under this caption the New York Sun tells of an ordinance adopted by the City Council of Jamaica, California.

It provides for licensing two saloons. Each is to pay $1,000 per year in advance. The saloon-keeper must give bonds in the sum of $5,000 that shall be forfeited in case he fails to observe the law under which he is licensed.

The saloons must be run in single apartments with no annexes or wings, and in buildings fronting on streets. Half of the front of the saloons must be of glass, no painted or frosted glass or screens being allowed.

The view from the street must be free and unobstructed, and no billiards, cards or any game shall be played.—Com-Fr.

Wendell Phillips ones, when he was interrupted by an unfriendly audience, stooped down and began talking in a low voice to the men at the reporters' table.

Some of the auditors, becoming curious, called "Louder." Whereupon Phillips straightened himself up and exclaimed: "Go right on, gentlemen, with your noise. Through these pencils" pointing to the reporters—"I speak to forty million people."

Ladies should remember that the Diamond Dye is the only pure, true and unadulterated dye in the world. The imitation dyes sold under various names have bulk enough, but three-fourths of the imitation dye is composed of cheap and worthless ingredients most dangerous to use and handle.

Diamond Dye, prepared according to scientific principles, are always the same in color and strength; these great advantages the women of Canada fully appreciate.

An Ontario lady writing about Diamond Dyes says: "I have ever used it. It is so harmless to work with and never irritates the skin. I had occasion to use a package of common, cheap dye that was sold me as being equal to the Diamond, but it proved a source of great trouble. After using it a severe rash appeared on my hands, showing that it contained poisonous matter."
