Littell's Living Age. The last two numbers of Littell's Living Age, (bearing date Nov. 2nd and Nov. 9th respectively) have some noteworthy articles, among which are the following:—"The Sixteenth Century arranged before the Nineteenth: a study on the Reformation," by Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Contemporary Review.

THE CRAIG FARM. About a mile further out David Craig (another applicant under the "Free Grants Act") has upwards of 15 acres under cultivation, besides a meadow of 20 acres, and a house, besides erecting a house and other buildings.

THE BAY PILOT, a little paper for which we have entertained a friendly regard, receives due notice on our first page.

PUBLIC HOLIDAY.—His Honor, the Lieutenant Governor, has appointed Thursday next as a day of Thanksgiving for an abundant Harvest and manifold blessings during the year, recommending the general observance thereof throughout the Province and proclaiming it a Public Holiday.

THE BANKS.—A Winnipeg despatch of Nov. 6th says:—"The local branch of the Bank of Montreal changed the combination of their safe, and have been unable to open it for a whole week. This explains a good deal that has been a mystery to us heretofore. We have heard about the difficulty of obtaining money at the banks. They must have 'lost the combination of their safe.'"

THE I. C. R.—The Fredericton Star says:—"It is rumored, semi-officially, in Montreal, that Mr. Mitchell will be appointed general superintendent of the Government Railways for the present, and that in time a Railway Department is to be formed of which Mr. Mitchell will be Minister."

ROUND THE MOON. CHAPTER XVII.

And now Nichol sighted a point like a brilliant watch-fire. This point could not be confounded with a star. It was a reddish incandescence which increased by degrees, a decided proof that the projectile was shifting towards it and now falling normally on the surface of the moon.

"A volcano! it is a volcano in action!" cried Nichol. "a disemboled action!" cried Nichol. "a disemboled action!" cried Nichol. "a disemboled action!" cried Nichol.

The fiery mountain must have been situated about the 45th south latitude on the invisible part of the disc, but, to Barbicane's great displeasure, the curve which the projectile was describing was taking it far from the point indicated by the eruption. Thus he could not determine its nature exactly.

Suddenly, in the midst of the ether, in the profound darkness, an enormous mass appeared. It was like a moon, but a more brilliant moon, whose brilliancy was all the more intolerable as it cut sharply on the frightful darkness of space.

"The sun!" he exclaimed. "The sun!" answered Nichol and Michel Ardan.

"Yes, my friends, it is the radiant orb itself lighting up the summit of the mountains situated on the southern borders of the moon. We are evidently nearing the south pole."

"After having passed the north pole," replied Michel. "We have made the circuit of our satellite, then?" "Yes, my good Michel."

"Then, no more hyperbolas, no more parabolas, no more open curves to fear!" "No, but closed curves!" "Which is called—?"

"An ellipse. Instead of losing itself in interplanetary space, it is possible that the projectile will describe an elliptical orbit around the moon."

"Indeed!" "And that it will become her satellite."

"Moon of the moon!" cried Michel Ardan. "Only, I would have you observe, my worthy friend," replied Barbicane, "that we are none the less lost for that."

CHAPTER XVIII. TUCHO. At six in the evening the projectile passed the south pole at less than forty miles off, a distance equal to that already reached at the north pole.

"At this moment the travelers once more entered the blessed rays of the sun. They saw once more those stars which move slowly from east to west. The radiant orb was saluted by a triple hurrah. With its light it also sent heat, which soon pierced the metal walls. The glass resumed its accustomed appearance. The layers of ice melted as if by enchantment; and immediately, for economy's sake, the gas was put out, the air apparatus alone consuming the small quantity."

"Ah!" said Nichol. "These rays of heat are good. With what impatience must the Selenties wait the reappearance of the orb of day."

"Yes," replied Michel Ardan, "imbiting as it were the brilliant ether, light and heat, all life is contained in them."

"At this moment the bottom of the projectile deviated somewhat from the lunar surface, in order to follow the slightly lengthened elliptical orbit. From this point, had the earth been at the full, Barbicane and his companions could have seen it, but immersed in the sun's irradiation she was quite invisible."

Mount Doerfel and Leibnitz formed two separate groups very near the south pole. The first group extended from the pole to the eighty-fourth parallel, on the eastern part of the orb; the second occupied the eastern border, extending from the 65th of latitude to the pole.

Was it an illusion, a mistake, an optical illusion? Could they give a scientific assent to an observation so superficially obtained? Dared they pronounce upon the question of its habitability after so slight a glimpse of the invisible disc?

But the lightnings in space subsided by degrees; its accidental brilliancy died away; the asteroids dispersed in different directions and were extinguished in the distance. The ether returned to its accustomed darkness; the stars, eclipsed for a moment, again twinkled in the firmament, and the disc, so hastily discerned, was again buried in impenetrable night.

The projectile had just escaped a terrible danger, and a very unforeseen one. It was then half past three in the afternoon. The projectile was following its surveillance direction round the moon. Whatever had been its speed (and it could not have been insignificant) its period of occultation continued. That was evident, but perhaps that would not have been the case in a supposed rigidly parabolic trajectory, a new problem which tormented Barbicane's brain, imprisoned as he was in a circle of unknowns which he could not unravel.

Neither of the travelers thought of taking any rest. Barbicane, each one watched for an unexpected fact, which might throw some new light on their untragic studies. About five o'clock, Michel Ardan distributed, under the name of dinner, some pieces of bread and cold meat, which were quickly swallowed without either of them abandoning their scuttles, the glass of which was necessarily encrusted by the condensation of vapor.

About forty-five minutes past five in the evening, Nichol, armed with his glass, sighted towards the southern border of the moon, and in the direction followed by the projectile, some bright points cut upon the dark shield of the sky. They looked like a succession of sharp points lengthened into a tremulous line. They were very bright. Such appeared the terminal lines of the moon when in one of her extreme positions. They could not be mistaken. It was no longer a simple meteor. This luminous ridge had neither color nor motion. Nor was it a volcano in eruption. And Barbicane did not hesitate to pronounce upon it.

"The sun!" he exclaimed. "The sun!" answered Nichol and Michel Ardan.

"Yes, my friends, it is the radiant orb itself lighting up the summit of the mountains situated on the southern borders of the moon. We are evidently nearing the south pole."

"After having passed the north pole," replied Michel. "We have made the circuit of our satellite, then?" "Yes, my good Michel."

"Indeed!" "And that it will become her satellite."

"Moon of the moon!" cried Michel Ardan. "Only, I would have you observe, my worthy friend," replied Barbicane, "that we are none the less lost for that."

CHAPTER XIX. TUCHO. At six in the evening the projectile passed the south pole at less than forty miles off, a distance equal to that already reached at the north pole.

"At this moment the travelers once more entered the blessed rays of the sun. They saw once more those stars which move slowly from east to west. The radiant orb was saluted by a triple hurrah. With its light it also sent heat, which soon pierced the metal walls. The glass resumed its accustomed appearance. The layers of ice melted as if by enchantment; and immediately, for economy's sake, the gas was put out, the air apparatus alone consuming the small quantity."

"Ah!" said Nichol. "These rays of heat are good. With what impatience must the Selenties wait the reappearance of the orb of day."

"Yes," replied Michel Ardan, "imbiting as it were the brilliant ether, light and heat, all life is contained in them."

"At this moment the bottom of the projectile deviated somewhat from the lunar surface, in order to follow the slightly lengthened elliptical orbit. From this point, had the earth been at the full, Barbicane and his companions could have seen it, but immersed in the sun's irradiation she was quite invisible."

Mount Doerfel and Leibnitz formed two separate groups very near the south pole. The first group extended from the pole to the eighty-fourth parallel, on the eastern part of the orb; the second occupied the eastern border, extending from the 65th of latitude to the pole.

On their capriciously formed ridge appeared dazzling sheets, mentioned by Pons Secchi. With some certainty that the illustrious Roman astronomer, Barbicane was enabled to recognize their nature.

The projectile was high above all the landscape, and the projections disappeared in the intense brilliancy of the disc. And to the eyes of the travelers there reappeared that original aspect of the lunar landscape, new in tone, without gradation of colors, and without degrees of shadow, roughly black and white, from the want of diffusion of light.

Michel Ardan, however, thought he recognized a heap of ruins, to which he drew Barbicane's attention. It was about the 80th parallel, in 30th longitude. This heap of stones, rather regularly placed, represented a vast fortress, overlooking a long rift, which in former days had served as a bed to the rivers tincts, large dark masses, looking like immense forests under the rapid illumination of a brilliant sun.

Asiatic Caucasus. Michel Ardan, with his accustomed ardor, retained the "evidences" of his fortress. Beneath it he discerned the dismantled ramparts of a town; here the still intact arch of a portico, there two or three columns lying under their base; farther on, a succession of arches which must have supported the conduit of an aqueduct; in another part the sunken pillars of a gigantic bridge, run into the thickest parts of the rift. He distinguished all this, but with so much imagination in his glance, and through glasses so fantastical, that we must distrust his observation. But who would dare to say, that the amiable fellow did not really see that which his two companions would not see?

Moments were too precious to be sacrificed in idle discussion. The Selentic city, whether imaginary or not, had already disappeared and off. The distance of the projectile from the lunar disc was on the increase, and the details of the soil were being lost in a confused jumble. The reliefs, the circles, the craters and plains alone remained, and still showed their boundary lines distinctly. At this moment, to the left, lay extended one of the finest circles of lunar geography, one of the scutellates of this projectile was still advancing, and this movement did not subside.

Circles, craters, and uprooted mountains succeeded each other incessantly. No more plains; no more seas. A never ending Switzerland and Norway. And lastly, in the centre of this region of crevasses, the most splendid mountain on the lunar disc, the dazzling Tycho, in which posterity will ever preserve the name of the illustrious Danish astronomer.

In observing the full moon in a cloudless sky no one has failed to remark this brilliant point of the southern hemisphere. Michel Ardan used every metaphor that his imagination could supply to designate it. To him this Tycho was a focus of light, a centre of irradiation, a crater vomiting rays. It was the tire of a brilliant wheel, an asterisk enclosing the disc with its silver tentacles, an enormous eye filled with flame, a glory carved for Plato's head, a star launched by the Creator's hand, and crushed against the face of the moon. Tycho forms such a concentration of light that the inhabitants of the earth can see it without glasses, though at a distance of 250,000 miles! Imagine, then, its intensity to the eye of observers placed at a distance of only fifty miles! Seen through this pure ether, its brilliancy was so intolerable that Barbicane and his friends were obliged to blacken their eyes with the gas smoke before they could bear the splendor. Then silent, scarcely uttering an interjection of admiration, they gazed, they contemplated. All their feelings, all their impressions, were concentrated in that look, as under any violent emotion all life is concentrated at the heart.

What this incomparable mountain really is, with all the projections, a verging towards it, and the interior excessiveness of its crater, photography itself could never represent.

"Ah!" exclaimed Michel Ardan, enthusiastic at the sight; "what a grand thing might be constructed with that ring of mountains! A quiet city, a peaceful refuge, beyond all human misery. How calm and isolated those misanthropes, those haters of humanity might live there, and all who have a distaste for social life!"

"All! it would be too small for them," replied Barbicane simply. Long did the travelers, whom such a sight could never weary, admire the splendors of Tycho. There projectile, saturated with luminous gleams in the double irradiation of sun and moon, must have appeared like an incandescent globe. They had passed suddenly from excessive cold to intense heat. Nature was thus preparing them to become Selentic!

"Good!" replied Nichol. "First let us see whether the moon is habitable."

"To tell the truth, I know nothing about it," answered Michel.

"And I answer in the negative," continued Barbicane.

"Very well," continued Michel Ardan; "the scientific Commission assembled in the project of the Gun Club, after having founded their argument on facts recently observed, decide unanimously upon the question of the habitability of the moon—No! the moon is not habitable."

This decision was confirmed by President Barbicane to his note-book, where the process of the sitting of the 6th of December may be seen.
