Miramichi Advance,

Only a Few Flowers. Alice Montgomery had been brought up when she was a wee blt of a girl, her man's helper; very soon she was able to save him many steps, and as she grew older she learned to take care for the flowher quick eyes were all of great service in BARGES, Etc., and about the greenhouses. The first time I saw her was when she was grown up. It was a morning in early spring; indeed the snow was still upon the ground, and the air was filled with the chilliness which always lasts as long as the snow which always lasts as long as the snow of kidney and liver complaint and general stays. Alice was just setting out upon an errand. As my car halted at her signal, she was listening to the last words of instruction which her grandfather was "It always acted like magic, 1 had scarcely ever need to give the second dose of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Straw-'Now remember!' I heard him say as he left the sidewalk to enter the car.

'Yes, Grandpa, she called back, smiling berry for summer complaints."

ter Govenlock, of Ethel, Ont. she left the sidewalk to enter the car. Mechanical Sup, and nodding to the watching figure as the car moved on. She was daintily dressed, though quite plainly; but the bunch of flowers which she wore, would have | been the envy of many a better dressed girl. There was where Alice Montgomery 1 ad take it. the advantage. She always wore flowers, the prettiest ornaments a girl can wear, not much of a story 1 have to tell you about this girl who won my admiration that morning; it was a little thing. I cannot tell how far-reaching may be its results. It showed to me the girl's kindly thoughtful nature. Many of us would do kind things if only we thought of it. It 1s just this thoughtlessness that oftentimes makes one girl differ from another. A forlorn looking child came into the car. She had a heavy bundle of finish 1 work which she was evidently carrying nome. She sat down opposite the young flower maiden, and soon her attention was riveted upon the flowers; indeed their rare perfume was filling the car, and more than one heart was gladdened by the beauty shel for all alike. Something in the wist ful gaze of the child attracted the attention of the young girl, and presently lean ing forward she said in a low tone, -'I see you like my flowers; would you

Who is Harry? 'He is my brother; he is sick and never sees any flowers; only sometimes I pick up one to take home.' 'Take them all,' sail Alice, putting the ounch into her hand. 'And I think if you will put the pink ones, and the green slips, into water, they will grow; then when they have put out little rootlets you can place them in a tin can, or jar, with earth in it, and after a while you will have some flo ers growing.' I have seldom seen a more radiant face than that of the child as she timidly expressed her thanks. The young girl went n her way without the flowers which had made her the best dressed woman is the car. I think she mirsed them; she inust have known that they were a great addition to her attractiveness that March morning. But I have no idea she regretted

Just a word of something that I saw the next winter. A Mrs. Gates had been recommended to me as the proper person to do some plain sewing, which I wished to send out of house. One cheerless morning I took my way in a part of the city quite new to me. I found my number in a long row of somewhat dilapidated tenement houses, and made the ascent of the rickety stairs to find Mrs. Gates. In course of the interview I noticed two or three thrifty plants in the window, and near by, on a rude couch, by a pale, sickly looking boy. As I admired the fr sh, strong growth of the plants, noticing them more particularly as my own were always sickly-looking, Mrs. Gates said: 'The slips were given to she met in the street car. We do not know who she is, but I have often thought if she could only know how much good those flowers have done, she would feel repaid for giving them away. I know | flowers are very dear in winter, and the large bunch Lizzie brought home must have cost a great deal. Lizzie said the young lady did not look like a rich person, either. The slips have grown nicely, and we have given some away. When Mrs.

Perkins' baby died, we had two or three

To the Warlen and Councillors of the Municipal Council of Northumberland.

Gentlemen: At last July session I made an application to the Council for a reduction in the rent paid by me for the Public Wharf property. The matter was referred to a committee who recommended a considerable reduction in the rent. This the Council did not adopt. As state I may petition last year, I have spent a large amount in repairs to the property and since last July have gone to considerable expense in keeping it in good condition. I now pay $125 per annum rent to the County. The revenue derived from the wharf during late years is trifling and would not pay for repairs. This is caused by the immense falling off in wharfage, owing to the building of railways. For the purposes of incompate property is worth much less than it was ten years ag₂. Under these circumstances I think the present rate is much more than ought to be charged for the property I beg therefore again to bring the matter before your notice and to request that you make a reasonable reduction in the amount of rent.
