The Old Marquis

The Girl of the Cloisters

CHAPTER XXVII.
THE KISS OF JUDAS.

They reached the Albany, and Lord Edgar sprang out and helped her to alight.

"Home!" he whispered in her ear, and a scant flush dyed her cheek.

They went upstairs, and Lovel, who had been prepared in some measure, and whose faithfulness could be relied on to the uttermost, opened the door without the faintest trace of expression on his face to indicate that there was anything unusual or extraordinary in his master being accompanied home by a young and beautiful lady.

Lela entered the room, leaning on Lord Edgar's arm, and looked around with a thrill of love-like interest. She was in her lord and master's house; the room made sacred to her by the fact of his living in it.

It did not occur to her that she was sinning against the proprieties by entering the room until she had been made his wife; neither did it occur to him.

A neat-looking young girl, who had been standing in the background, now came forward. She was a niece of the housekeeper, and had been carefully instructed in her part.

"Go and take off your hat, dear," whispered Lord Edgar.

She went unhesitatingly, and Lord Edgar paced up and down the room.

"Is everything ready?" he asked of Lovel.

"Yes, my lord, the table is laid in the next room, and Mr. Revel—"

"Is here to answer for himself," said Clifford Revel, entering the room and grasping Lord Edgar's hand. He looked around the room questioningly, and Edgar nodded.

"All right," he said; "she is here." Clifford Revel smiled and pressed his hand again.

"And—and my friend the curate?" "Not here yet, sir," said Lovel.

Clifford Revel glanced at his watch. "He is not here yet," he said, quietly. "Don't be alarmed; he is a punctual sort of fellow."

He was carefully dressed in a frock-coat, which, if not of the regulation blue—why on earth a man's friends, as well as enemies, should be expected to wear a blue coat at his wedding is one of those social mysteries which no man can be expected to understand!—was rendered festive by a magnificent orchid in its button-hole. He held something wrapped in white tissue paper in his hand, and this he laid on a side table.

"And how is she?" he asked.

"Much upset and alarmed?"

"No," said Edgar, with quiet pride. "Lela is not of the hysterical sort. You will not go her justice, Clifford, until you know her."

Clifford Revel nodded, and his eyes wandered to the door of the dressing-room. There was a strange look in his eyes, as if he were trying to look self-possessed and thoroughly at his ease and was afraid that he should not succeed; but Lord Edgar was not in the frame of mind to be critical of any one's looks—excepting Lela's. He felt pleased with him for donning wedding attire, and showed it by a grateful nod and smile at the frock-coat.

Clifford turned to the table and began to undo the tissue paper parcel he had brought, when the dressing-room door opened and Lela glided in. She paused at the threshold, seeing a stranger in the room, and Lord Edgar took her arm through his and said:

"Lela, this is my cousin Clifford."

Clifford Revel turned—not suddenly, but slowly—and their eyes met. A swift chill, a sudden cold dread seemed to run through Lela's veins, and her eyes grew large as he came forward and bowed.

She inclined her head, but Lord Edgar laughed unsatisfied.

"Come," he said, in his impulsive way, "that's too formal a greeting for you two who will be such friends. Shake hands."

Lela extended her hand with a hesitation that was but momentary, and Clifford Revel took it and held it; and as his slim white fingers closed over hers she felt the chill again, though his hand was hot—almost feverishly so.

"I hope and trust Miss Temple will let me be her friend!" he said, in his low voice. "I can not tell how delighted I am to see her!"

Lela listened—as one does to some voice which one would fain find pleasant, which one would wish to like; but, for all its delicate modulation, it struck upon her like a discord. She felt ashamed of the feeling. It was sheer ingratitude to entertain such a sentiment toward this man who was Lord Edgar's tried and closest friend, the man who had done so much to prove his friendship, who had already planned and arranged her marriage!

And yet she felt she mistrusted him. "I feel already as if you and I were old friends," he said, giving her time to recover herself, for he saw the mistrust shining in her pure, candid eyes, and saw that she was struggling against it. "Edgar and I have talked about you so often and so much."

"And he has told me so much about you," she said, in her sweet voice.

Clifford Revel looked pleased.

"That was kind and good of him! But, indeed, we have been more like brothers than cousins."

As he spoke he drew a chair near for her and she sat down.

He looked at her more closely, and for the first time felt some respect for the man he was duping.

Fool as he was, Lord Edgar had won the love of a beautiful creature whom he, Clifford Revel, knew instinctively was as good and pure as she was lovely. He had wronged and misjudged her; he knew, as he looked at the beautiful face and listened to the sweet voice, that there was not an unworthy thought or desire in her mind or heart; that she loved Lord Edgar for himself, and not for his title or wealth. And yet he would not spare her!

Lord Edgar went into the next room, where the table was laid for the luncheon, and poured out a glass of wine and brought it to her.

She refused it at first, but in deference to the wish expressed in his eyes she put her lips to the glass.

"You are not tired with your journey, I hope," said Clifford Revel, and his manner, as he stood beside her, was as reverential as Lord Edgar's own.

"No," she said, "I am not tired. The time passed over quickly," she added, innocently.

Then she wondered why they did not start for the church. Nothing had been said about it, it was true, but she had a vague idea that they would proceed to some church at once.

She was thinking of this, with Clifford Revel still talking to her, and Lord Edgar, forgetting about and glancing at his watch, when Lovel opened the door and announced, "The Reverend Mr. Browne."

LIFT OFF CORNS!

Apply few drops then lift sore, touchy corns off with fingers—No pain!

Doesn't hurt a bit! Drop a little Frezzone on an aching corn, instantly that corn stops hurting, then you lift it right out. Yes, magic! No humbug! A tiny bottle of Frezzone costs but a few cents at any drug store, but is sufficient to remove every hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and the calluses, without soreness or irritation. Frezzone is the sensational discovery of a Cincinnati genius. It is wonderful!

She looked up and saw a tall, thin man enter. He was dressed as a clergyman and looked like one. His face was pale, almost unnaturally so, and his dark-eyes seemed to gleam and burn from the pallor of the face. His lips were tightly set, and she noticed that, as he entered the room, his eyes seemed to go straight for her face, and to linger there searchingly for a moment before he turned them to Clifford Revel.

Clifford Revel went up to him and shook hands, if the irresponsible way in which Mr. Browne gave his hand could be called "shaking."

"I said you would be punctual, Browne," said Clifford Revel, pleasantly. "This is my cousin, Lord Fane, and this is Miss Temple."

Lord Edgar shook hands in his usual hearty fashion, and Nagle's face seemed to turn paler, if that were possible, and his eyes to drop during the greeting. But he bowed calmly to Lela, and turned quietly to Clifford Revel with some remark about the time.

They drew apart to the window while they compared watches, and Lord Edgar bent over Lela and whispered:

"You are not nervous, frightened, my darling?"

"No," she said, though she was a little pale. "But I may be when I get to the church; and she smiled."

Lord Edgar started, but he recovered himself. It flashed on him in a moment that, in his excitement, he had forgotten to tell her that the ceremony was to be performed in private, in his own rooms. He touched her on the shoulder as a sign to rise, and draw her away.

"We are not going to a church, dearest," he said, in a low, gentle tone.

"Not—" She gazed at him, bewildered and surprised, but with not a trace of fear—only surprise.

"No!" he said. "I meant to have told you, my darling! It is just like me! Forgive me! You do not mind? It does not matter, you know, excepting as regards your feelings, Lela. I, and Clifford, too, thought it more prudent to arrange it as we have done! If you wish it, however—Clifford!" and he called to Clifford Revel.

He came with a calm smile, and Lord Edgar laid a hand upon his arm impressively.

"Clifford, Lela would prefer that we were married in a church."

"Why, Miss Temple—" began Clifford Revel, but Lord Edgar stopped him, almost curtly.

"Don't argue the point, Clifford," he said, quickly. "If she prefers it, that is reason enough. Let us speak to Mr. Browne."

Clifford Revel stopped him with the touch of a finger.

Clifford Revel, standing beside them, with downcast face and lowered eyes, thought what a wonderful actor he would have made, but his face indicated nothing of the splendid triumph that swelled his heart.

He was grave and solemn and gentle, as such a dear, close friend should be on such an occasion.

Long afterward Lela remembered the downcast face, with its thin lips and lowered lids, and remembered, too, that never once during the ceremony were the keen, hard eyes visible. With deep, grave voice, without hesitation or faltering, Nagle read the service, his eyes fixed on his book, even during the pause when Lord Edgar put the ring on Lela's finger; then, having finished, he closed the book and stood with folded hands and tightly closed lips. Clifford looked up. He was as pale as death, but a smile framed itself on his face.

"Wait, I'm awfully sorry. How is it you didn't tell Miss Temple before?"

"Because, like an idiot, I forgot it!" he said, regretfully.

Clifford Revel looked grave, and glanced at his watch. Lela looked from one to the other, pale and troubled, but with no trace of fear or suspicion.

Clifford Revel put up his watch and shook his head.

"I am sorry, very sorry—seeing that I am, in a measure, responsible for the arrangements—but it is impossible to alter them now."

"But why—but why?" demanded Lord Edgar, impatiently, and loud enough to be heard by Nagle, who stood looking out of the window, with his thin lips tightly compressed, his hands locked behind his back.

"Because," said Clifford Revel, "there is not time."

"Not time!" echoed Lord Edgar.

"No," repeated Clifford Revel, glancing at the clock on the mantel-shelf, and speaking with quiet regret: "not this morning; the ceremony must be performed before twelve—"

"Ah, yes!" exclaimed Lord Edgar, who knew about as little of the laws regulating the marriage ceremonial as could well be imagined, but who remembered to have heard something of this. "You see, Lela, that it is impossible to do as you wish now! Forgive me, darling! For Heaven's sake," he murmured, "do not throw any obstacle in the way! I could not endure any delay!"

What could she say? What could any girl, innocent, trusting, loving, say under the strange circumstances? She put her hands into his, regardless of those present, and looked up at him.

"It will be the same, Edgar?" she said. "Though we are not married in a church, it will be the same?"

"Yes, yes," he said; "of course! Why, here is the clergyman, and here is the license."

He was horrified even at the faintest doubt.

"Then I am ready!" she said, sweetly, and she did not turn away when he bent and kissed her, with passionate gratitude.

"Well?" said Clifford Revel, who looked anxious and troubled with regret for the little incident. "I am sorry! But what will you do?"

"We are ready," said Lord Edgar, drawing Lela's arm within his, and there was a touch of hauteur in his voice that was new to Clifford Revel. It sounded for the moment like the marquis.

Clifford signed to Nagle. He came to the table, and they saw that he had a book in his hand.

Lela, pale to the very lips, but fearing nothing, glanced up at his face and met his eyes fixed upon hers. They rested so for a moment, as if he were waiting to see if she shrunk from the ceremony, or offered any objection, but as she remained silent, he opened the book and commenced to read.

It is a magnificent service! It is profaned every day in the year by some who use its sacredness for the purpose of gain; by those who wed for power instead of love; by those who never intend to abide by the solemn vows they take so heedlessly; by those to whom its awful import means no more than the babbling of infants.

Every word fell upon Lela's ears and sunk to her heart. The man who read it possessed a voice of deep, grave music, which lent importance to every sentence; and his dark eyes seemed to glow with fervor as he pronounced the words which made Edgar Fane and Lela Temple man and wife.

Clifford Revel, standing beside them, with downcast face and lowered eyes, thought what a wonderful actor he would have made, but his face indicated nothing of the splendid triumph that swelled his heart.

He was grave and solemn and gentle, as such a dear, close friend should be on such an occasion.

Long afterward Lela remembered the downcast face, with its thin lips and lowered lids, and remembered, too, that never once during the ceremony were the keen, hard eyes visible. With deep, grave voice, without hesitation or faltering, Nagle read the service, his eyes fixed on his book, even during the pause when Lord Edgar put the ring on Lela's finger; then, having finished, he closed the book and stood with folded hands and tightly closed lips. Clifford looked up. He was as pale as death, but a smile framed itself on his face.

"Wait, I'm awfully sorry. How is it you didn't tell Miss Temple before?"

"Because, like an idiot, I forgot it!" he said, regretfully.

Must Decide Whether Unacceptable or Submitted --- T Air Flight.

GERMANY MUST DECIDE.

LONDON, May 28. The Allied Blockade Council has completed all arrangements for again putting the blockade of Germany into force in case the German delegates refuse to sign the Peace Treaty. While complete plans have been worked out for the fullest co-operation between the military and economic forces which will be employed in case of necessity, immediately following a failure of the Germans to sign the treaty, putting the Allied and Associated Governments to the necessity of acting, Germany will be given seventy-two hours' notice of the termination of the armistice. On the expiration of this period the British, French and Americans advance into Germany simultaneously, and the blockade will be enforced as tightly as possible.

GERMAN COUNTER PROPOSALS.

BERLIN, May 28. Germany's counter proposals to the terms of the peace treaty presented to her plenipotentiaries at Versailles, include the following points, according to an unofficial summary available to-day: Germany offers to disarm all of her battleships on condition that a part of her mercantile fleet be restored to her. She proposes that there be no territorial changes without consultation of the population affected. The secession of Upper Silesia and the claims to East Prussia, West Prussia and Memel are emphatically rejected. It is stipulated that Danzig shall become a free port, and the River Vistula neutralized. Occupied territory is to be evacuated within six months. If the League of Nations is established with Germany as a member, Germany shall continue to administer her colonies in accordance with principles of the League as its mandatory. Germany offers to pay twenty billion marks in gold by the year as indemnity and to make annual payments from 1927 onward to a total not in excess of one thousand billion marks in gold. It was expected to-day that the counter proposals would be officially made known on Wednesday.

GERMAN MERCHANDISE.

MILAN, May 27. Immense quantities of German products are stored in warehouses at Chiasso on the frontier between Italy and Switzerland, and it is supposed by Germany to renew immediately her commercial relations with Italy, according to Ulysses Bywater, of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America. These included thousands of bicycles and carloads of chemicals and dye stuffs.

TEXT OF COUNTER PROPOSALS.

PARIS, May 27. A Berlin despatch received in Paris gives some detail of the counter proposals to the Peace Treaty of the Allied and Associated Powers which were agreed on at the last conference of the Germans at Spa. The counter proposals will make a volume of respectable dimensions. Concerning the Sarre region, Germany will ask France to give up her territorial pretensions to this region and permit economic control over all coal output there. It is proposed that the German fleet be transferred to the international trust, managed by Americans and controlled by the League of Nations trust, which would be given mercantile fleets of all other maritime nations, and every nation would be represented in the central administration in a manner corresponding to the nation's tonnage. Germany announces its readiness to deliver up fifty per cent of the mercantile fleet, besides in conformity with the proposition made by a former director of the Hamburg-American line, Germany will pledge herself to build at her own expense in her own dock-

Germany announces its readiness to deliver up fifty per cent. of the mercantile fleet, besides in conformity with the proposition made by a former director of the Hamburg-American line, Germany will pledge herself to build at her own expense in her own dockyards and by her own workmen a number of ships necessary to compensate for diminution in the world's tonnage due to Germany's submarine warfare. In return Germany will ask to be allowed large credits for payment for raw materials required to carry out the undertaking, and to be allowed to give in payment some of her own raw or manufactured goods. As regards cable lines, Germany will suggest a system of internationalization which would not prevent Germany from participating in the general traffic of nations. Concerning the territorial question in East Europe counter proposals simply call the attention of the Entente to the state of mind of the German population in the contested territories of Upper Silesia and East and West Prussia and Danzig. These populations, it says, would be sure to take up arms in their own defence if they were to be annexed to Poland, and that this might lead to other wars.

THE AIRMEN'S STORY.

LONDON, May 28. Describing the trip of Hawker and Grievé in their attempt to cross the Atlantic in an airplane, the correspondent of the Daily Mail says that Hawker remained seated the whole time, and that Grievé moved about kneeling, to examine the drift indicator, standing up for observation, or going forward for the wireless. Each of them ate a sandwich and drank four cups of coffee out of a vacuum flask. "And the next thing I ate," said Hawker, "was about seventy-two hours later," adding with a laugh, "Yes, we did not take enough calories. The fact is I was very seasick when we got down to the water and afterwards for two days in the ship. It was like being in a small motor boat in a heavy sea, when we flew down to look for a ship; we were between high waves and were bumped quite badly." Describing the position when the plane alighted, Hawker and Grievé said they were in the water up to their knees and the waves were close to the upper plane. At times the nose of the machine was turned into the wind and now and again big waves dashed over it. "I had to laugh," said Hawker, "when one big wave, a real big one, came up under the top plane, which up to that time had been dry, and striking it, lifted us right out and I saw the trailing edge of the top plane broke clean away." Hawker said they spent their time discussing how the Mary was handled and whether she could save the machine and its appliances. All this time the little boat carried by the Sopwith machine was afloat beside the plane, dancing about like a cork. "When the ship's boat reached the plane," said Hawker, "she banged right into the machine and we were out and hauled the boat back and we climbed so long that we felt cautious to the whole thing. We had a jolly good feeling when we saw the ship missing about. Looking for a ship for two hours and being seasick the whole time, was not very merry and bright. We certainly had a feeling of thankfulness and relief when we saw the ship," said Grievé. After that we were all right. The machine was floating well on her general buoyancy. Even the engines held out and there were, of course, also air tanks. Grievé asked the captain whether he could save the machine, but the captain regretted his inability to do so, and said, "That was a narrow escape for you." We were rescued at 8:30 o'clock, Greenwich time, said Grievé, and lost everything. We went aboard the Mary without caps or boots. All my log had been washed out of my pocket, except one small page of rough notes. Both were reluctant to describe their feelings at the time, but summed them up as follows: Grievé, "I did not feel excited in the slightest, either at the start or when rescued," said Hawker. "It seemed a very uneventful affair. When we started we felt it was a hundred to one chance for us."

Describing the weather conditions at the start and how the airplane ran into strong northerly winds, Hawker said: "The weather was no hindrance and we should have made the flight but for the trouble occasioned by the water boiling in our cooling system. We could have got through the worst of the weather in a couple of hours." "The wireless was not a great success," said Grievé. "We had a new set from England, but a trial flight with it was impossible owing to the danger of risking the machine on limited airframe space. On starting we found the spark very feeble and only a weak current was obtainable owing to the under-sized propeller. We sent out messages every half hour and think they should have been heard if any ship had been near, but we never had any reply. My chief object was to let them know we were still in the air. During the last few hours when the engine was throttled down, the speed of the machine was insufficient for wireless equipment and no spark could be generated, but I sent S. O. S. signals every fifteen minutes on an off chance that the spark was operating. From the navigating point of view, I placed no reliance on the wireless other than as a means of asking the position on such ships as we might pass. The ships had previously been asked by wireless from St. John's to make known their positions if they saw us by day or if we fired lights by night. As we saw no vessel, no light was fired. One vessel was reported having seen a light, but observers on board may have mistaken the red glow of the exhaust. We preferred to navigate chiefly by celestial observations, and my position as I worked out by the stars was usually correct I found when picked up. I used a cloud horizon instead of a sea horizon, as sea was hardly suitable any of the time we were in the air. During the first four hours after leaving we passed over fog banks. The clouds below were like the sea, giving a perfect horizon. I had only to judge our distance above them and take the sun as on a sea horizon. About 7 o'clock G. M. T. I saw the sea for a few seconds through a hole in the fog or cloud bank. I thus obtained some idea of the drift of the machine by noting the breaking waves through the drift indicator. We were then at a height of 4,900 feet and climbing, the drift being ten degrees to the right of our course which I had already allowed for on starting owing to the northeast wind that was blowing up to 1.15 o'clock. We started to make a true east course not magnetic east. During that period I took sights every hour. At 10:15 I made out that we were 400 miles from St. John's. We then altered our course to north 73 degrees east true to keep in the track of ships, which we should just have entered. At that time the clouds were badly broken up and made sights impossible until about 1:30, when I managed to get the pole star down to a flat piece of cloud and was surprised to find we were about 150 miles south of our course. We immediately altered our course a little to the northward to counteract this drift, but from a further sight an hour later I found we were still settling southward and realizing that a very strong northerly gale must have been blowing made a decided alteration to the northward, and worked the machine up to latitude 50 degrees north and into the track followed by ships."

WHY HAWKER STARTED.

LONDON, May 28. In a statement made to the Daily Mail's correspondent at Edinburgh on Tuesday, Harry G. Hawker said regarding his attempt to cross the Atlantic: "We started because the weather was better and the moon was dying fast, and if we had not started then we might have missed the chance of being the first across. The Americans were off, they were very serious propositions, and they had one leg to go and we had one to go. We knew that one American machine had reached the Azores and reports came that all three were there. That was very serious, and we had decided overnight with Capt. Raynham, who was to attempt the flight from St. John's in a Martinsyde machine, that we would start if the weather was all possible. As a matter of fact we went away on fewer weather reports than we had any day previously. It was a splendid get off, much better than we had expected. We passed over Quidi Vidi at two thousand feet, being six miles from the airframe in a straight line, a fairly good climb with that load. We saw Raynham and his machine surrounded by a crowd, and kissed him good-bye."

CONTRA ACCOUNT.

VERSAILLES, May 28. The German peace delegation, it was learned to-day, will present a counter sum of twelve billion, eight hundred and fifty million marks for damages from the Allied blockade, as an offset to the reparations demands of the Allied Powers.

FEARS GERMAN ATTACK.

PARIS, May 28. Fears of a German attack upon Poland were expressed to-day by Paderewski, Polish Premier, who arrived in Paris to-day.

Paris from Warsaw last night. It is said the Germans were active in a preparatory way and might strike in several places.

STRIKE POSTPONED.

TORONTO, May 28. The general strike in Toronto which had been decided upon for Wednesday morning, has been postponed until Friday morning at ten o'clock. In the meantime Borden will be interviewed and a demand made for a forty-four hour week throughout Canada.

FLIERS HONORED.

PARIS, May 28. The crew of the American seaplane NC-4 has been decorated with the Grand Cross of the Order of Tower and Sword, says a message to the Wireless Press from Lisbon.

HAWKER TALKS AGAIN.

LONDON, May 28. Speaking at a luncheon given by the Daily Mail to-day in his and Lieut. Commander Grievé's honor, Harry G. Hawker deprecated the organization which had won for the United States the honor of the first crossing of the Atlantic by an air machine. He declared that it was not a serious attempt with a ship stationed at "every twenty yards." Hawker continued, "If you put a ship every fifty miles, it shows you have no fight in your motor." This was greeted with absolute silence on the part of the men gathered at the luncheon, numbering between 250 and 300, nearly all of whom were British. A few minutes before they had cheered heartily the statement that the American Navy aviators had been successful in reaching Europe. Hawker disclosed that on Saturday night immediately preceding his start, he and Raynham had agreed that unless the wind changed, they would variation Sunday for a flight by way of the Azores and Portugal. The wind veered slightly Saturday night, enough to give Hawker and Grievé the chance to start from their airframe, but there was trouble for Raynham. He declared that although the weather was unfavorable, the success of the Americans in reaching the Azores forced him to start. "Any Englishman here," he added, "would have done the same thing under the same circumstances." Lieut. Com. Grievé said he was very nervous over his navigational duties when he started, but soon ascertained that the navigating of an airplane was the same as of a ship. There were no difficulties until the clouds predicted the taking of sighting. He predicted that the navigating of airplanes would be a simple matter in the future. The Daily Mail's $5,000 consolation prize was presented to the two aviators. After their reception by King George, Hawker and Grievé saw Queen Mary, and the Prince of Wales. The car of the aviators was besieged by the crowd as it left the Palace, and it was with difficulty it was able to proceed.

ON THE LAST LAP.

WASHINGTON, May 28. The seaplane NC-4 will leave Lisbon for Plymouth on the last "leg" of the trans-Atlantic flight to-morrow morning, weather permitting, according to a despatch received at the Navy Dept. from Lieut. Commander Albert C. Read, commander of the plane.

BOLSHEVIK TROUBLES.

LONDON, May 28. The Bolsheviks are faced by further internal troubles, and the official statement received here by wireless from Moscow to-day refers to the internal front where "an advance against Vienna has been stopped." There has also been an uprising against the Soviet in the district of Shungu, around Lake Ona, northwest of Petrograd.

HAWKER FIRST.

LONDON, May 28. The news of the arrival of the American plane NC-4 at Lisbon, the completion of her trans-Atlantic flight, was entirely overshadowed in this morning's London newspapers by the voluminous detailed reports of the reception of Harry G. Hawker and Lieut. Commander Mackenzie Grievé, together with the narratives of the airmen. None of the newspapers comment upon the first air crossing of the Atlantic flight nor gives the news of the event the biggest headlines.

The following Regulation regarding the sale of Salt in St. John's has been approved by His Excellency the Governor in Council, viz:—
WHEREAS in the Summer months of 1917 and 1918 there was a shortage of Salt for the fisheries;
AND WHEREAS in order to prevent similar conditions occurring this year, the Government, in the Fall of 1918, induced importers of Salt to lay in large stocks with an understanding that Salt so imported should be protected against competition with Salt which might, owing to cessation of hostilities or other cause, be obtained at cheaper rates of freight or cost than that which applied to the Salt imported in 1918 and now in stock;
AND WHEREAS the Salt Importers have agreed to permit the Auditor General to fix the maximum price of the Salt in stock amounting to 29,243 tons, on the basis of cost and charges incurred, plus a fixed profit;
IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED under the War Measures Act, 1914, that, until further notice, no other Salt imported into St. John's shall be sold at any place without the consent of the Minister of Shipping.

The Select Committee's amendments to the Tenants' Bill were agreed to in Committee, and it was read a third time.

The Revenue Bill also passed through the remaining stages, and the House adjourned at 6 o'clock, to meet again the usual hour this afternoon.

THE IVORY SNUFF BOX—By Arnold Fredericks. A book that goes with a rush from the first chapter to the last. Price $1.25.
THE LITTLE FORTUNE—By Arnold Fredericks. "The Little Fortune" may be only a little silver franc piece of the great Napoleon, yet its potency was sufficiently great to cause the death of at least one man, to bring about an international plot and in the end to engage the attention not only of Richard Duval, the famous American detective, but the secret police of Paris as well. Price $1.25.
THE RED STAIN—By Achmed Abdullah. A story in which murder, mystery and crime prevail. One of the best detective stories ever written. Price $1.25.

Secrets of the Postal Censor.

Revealed for the First Time by a High Official.

The Department of the Postal Censor is about the last place one would expect to find a German agent employed in censoring letters that were being watched with the object of detecting spies, but that was the experience we had when the Department was in its infancy.

It was not altogether our fault. There was a dearth of really capable linguists who could deal quickly with letters submitted to them, and this woman came to us with good credentials, and she was unrivalled for the work we allotted her.

She soon proved to be unrivalled for other work of a less desirable character, and had it not been for the accident of someone who had known her in a former life meeting her in the street and acquainting me with his surprise on learning that this German lady was working with me, she might have continued a respected employee of the Department, instead of being an inmate of one of His Majesty's convict prisons with little hope of being released.

At first the German spies worked openly, because they did not know of the existence of the censorship, but after a time got more wary, and it was in apparently innocent letters relating to the consignment of butter, wines, fruits and other commodities that we had to look for information that might be of value to the enemy.

Often we had to work in the dark, because we ourselves didn't know the Government plans. For example, had we known of the projected expedition to the Dardanelles we might have had our suspicions aroused by the frequency with which we encountered letters referring to large consignments of goods that were being shipped to that region. It was only afterwards we discovered that these letters were means to convey to Germany the priceless information of the projected expedition and its composition.

Very soon our Department got on the track of all these bogus business letters, and it was not long before the enemy found that it was useless to send messages in that way. In the spring of 1916, when the German espionage system seemed to have broken down, the chemists of the Fatherland were asked to produce an invisible ink that would not be detected by the postal censors of Allied countries, but by one of those curious coincidences that sometimes happen, we had in our Department at the time, as expert adviser, a chemist who had studied this question in Germany in great detail, and it happened also that he had thought out the new invisible ink long ago.

Therefore, when we got the first sample of it through our hands this expert had no difficulty in detecting it, and the man who wrote the letter from an hotel in London to a friend in Denmark was one of the last of the German spies in this country to pay the penalty of his crime.

Sometimes we had to deal with the effusions of people with a perverted sense of humour who thought it a great joke to waste our time with bogus letters that appeared to be the work of spies.

At first we were contented to pass these practical jokers over, but when the nuisance got worse it was decided to make an example of the two men who appeared to be most addicted to this form of "wit."

They were both taken before a court-martial. When the court had done with their case they were glad to apologize and give an undertaking that the offence would not be repeated.—Pearson's Weekly.

Wash oilcloth once a month with equal quantities of skim milk and water. Rub once in a great while with linseed oil, boiled.

Lay blotting paper over a grease spot in a carpet, set flatiron, hot enough not to scorch, on it, and change the paper when it becomes greasy. Apply whitening to spot and brush off after a day or two.

The Shower of German Memoirs.

Perhaps knowing well that the evil they have done will live long after them, the German leaders seem fond that the good shall not be interred in their bones. Indeed, they now write books attempting to prove that evil is good. Memoirs are reported about to drop from the German press, with envious eyes on royalties from reprints abroad, enough to suggest the leaves for Vallombrosa. Or if one prefers to be sardonic, one can count the future prisoners in the Allied dock among these memoir-writers.

The New York Evening Post prints this Berlin despatch: "The spring book lists continue to feature memoirs by former governmental, political and military leaders, the newest acquisition being two comprehensive volumes by the former Imperial Chancellor Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg. The first volume deals with political developments preceding the outbreak of the war. Another work soon to appear will be by Gottlieb von Jagow, former Minister of Foreign Affairs, which is reported to be a plain defence of Germany's pre-war policies. German publishers are apparently putting an extraordinary appraisal on the foreign interest in these books, as they are demanding fat royalties from American and English editions. A Leipzig firm is offering the foreign rights on a combination work by Admiral von Tirpitz, former Minister of the Navy; Lieutenant General von Stein, former Prussian Minister of War and State, and Colonel von Lettow-Vorbeck, commander of German troops in German East Africa, for $250,000. . . . The speed with which distinguished authors are rushing into print has also prompted the suspicion that they are running to get to cover, and that forthcoming publications promise interesting recriminations and revelations. The latter is said to be especially true of the book by Admiral von Tirpitz, who is said to have been in a fighting mood when writing it. No popular editions have been announced for the forthcoming publications, and the public will be forced to pay high prices to satisfy its curiosity."

When Lunatics Paint.

(By an Eminent Brain Specialist.) I have never known of a lunatic who has been a really great artist, but I have known two whose work has been considered good enough to hang on the Royal Academy walls. Both artists were actually confined in asylums at the time their Academy pictures were painted; and probably not half-a-dozen people outside the asylum officials knew anything about the matter.

One of the lunatics, whose canvas was hung on the line, was an accomplished artist whose work had never been smiled on by the Hanging Committee until after he had been pronounced insane! The other was a lady, almost entirely self-taught, whose picture was a charming study of a young girl playing a violin.

But, as a rule, there is little art worthy of the name among lunatics. Some years ago a French artist who had made a considerable reputation by painting scenes from the eighteenth century, was shut up in a madhouse, where he continued his art-work. His pictures, however, although perfect in every other respect, had one fatal drawback. His characters had no noses. Where the nose should have been was a white spot.

When he was asked the reason of this peculiarity, he answered: "It has no importance. There is no need of a nose. Don't speak to me of noses!"

Speaking generally, a mad artist's pictures are as mad as himself. They are marked by grotesque exaggerations, insane fancies, and equally mad colouring. Some are perfect in drawing and composition—but the colouring! Crimson fields, yellow seas, green clouds, and blue animals—a perfect riot of insane colour. Or it may be that the whole picture is painted in red or black, or in both colours.

Just Who Are the Public?

Somehow They Seem Never to be Present When the Term is Employed—Possible Explanation.

We hear much about the public. It is seldom praised; often it is berated. The public will stand for anything, we are told. The public likes to be duped, said P. T. Barnum years ago in explanation of his success as a showman. The public be damned, said a corporation head a generation ago. Society never advances, declared the philosopher Emerson. The public is a huge beast, some one else has said.

Almost anybody who talks about the public or matters pertaining to the public will reiterate such opinions to-day, observes the Kansas City Star. And no offense is taken; no indignation meetings are held and no resolutions drawn up in condemnation of such insulting language. Apparently nobody feels insulted.

Who, then, is the public? Nobody can tell us; always the thing eludes our search.

But is not the public anybody but you and me, or anybody except the persons talking about it? Therefore, the public can never be found, though one should inquire all his days. Always the thing is further on, like the rainbow's end.

So there is little use relying on the public to do anything, to take the initiative, to start something, to rise up in rebellion against wrong oppression, outrage injustice. There has been much talk about rebellions, revolutions, when public indignation has reached the boiling point; but there never was and likely never will be a public uprising of any kind without a leader, without some individual working alone or in cooperation with a very few other individuals to organize "public sentiment," to give it form and substance, "a local habitation and a name."

Therefore all the abuse that has ever been heaped upon the public might be gathered into one mass and once more hurled at the thing's head and nothing would ever be heard of it and nobody hurt.

What recourse can be had, then, when the people suffers, when a community, a city, is oppressed by bad government, selfish and soulless corporations or what not? None at all by damning the public.

It all comes back to you and me who started the discussion. You are a vital part of the public; I am. You owe it to yourself and the cause of justice, as do I, to wait not a moment in doing something, in going straight to a neighbor and with him to somebody else, and on and on until an army is raised and the outrage put down. Let us realize our own individual responsibility to an abstract public. The public will do its duty when you and I act.

IN DEFENSE OF

It is, of course, a thing to preach against the folly of harboring dislikes and hates. There are so many perfectly good arguments against dislike, besides the moral argument, that they are wrong. For one thing, they take so much out of you. Again, when you actively dislike a person, you are apt to dignify him by talking and thinking about him instead of ignoring him.

But against these perfectly good arguments there is this to be said for dislikes and hates—they are, to many people, an inexpensive way (financially I mean) of getting a lot of fun.

Some People Have A Perfectly Gorgeous Time With Pet Hates.

Don't you know many people who have a perfectly gorgeous time over some pet hate? Such people think that they would be delighted if the obnoxious personality were removed from the face of the earth. As a matter of fact they would miss him much more than they would some of their friends.

I have in mind a certain man who is, in most ways, very well balanced. He has conceived an intense dislike for a rather silly woman who lives near him. This woman has a very inconsequential and illogical mind. She also has an almost childish reverence for anyone who is "in society" and talks perpetually about some of her friends who are on the fringes thereof. Most people recognize these weaknesses and accept her for what she is, not forgetting that she has good, as well as bad, qualities. Not so the man with the hate. He really made her quite a personage in the neighbourhood by his detestation of her presence and of everything she says and does.

Did You See It?

Early in May there was a big, ruddy-looking star low in the south-west, so isolated from the others that the ancients called it "The Solitary One."

A fearful catastrophe has taken place on this star, which is named Alpher. Being old, a sort of crust had been forming on it as its exterior became cooler, and there are now evidences that this crust has been partly blown away, with a speed of many millions of miles a second, thus allowing the long pent-up gases beneath to escape and give off such terrific heat that the planets circling round the star—which is a sun—with all their inhabitants, must have been entirely destroyed.

The star has always been looked upon as a very red one; so much indeed, that the Chinese many centuries ago christened it "The Red Bird." This fact was a clear indication that it was in a dying condition, that its fires were slowly burning out.

With the collapse of the encrustation, however, the light has revived—for a while—just as when a fire is stirred, and at the same time the redness is not nearly so noticeable. It may be to us only the brightening of a star and a change in its colour, but it has spelled death and ruin to the worlds in its vicinity.

PHILOSOPHY.

"This is a mighty world you're in. An' so don't spread yourself too thin. My wise old father used to say, 'Just do your best from day to day; Make sure of everything you touch. But never undertake too much. Remember as you go along To sing a cheerful snatch of song. But be contented if a few Into their hearts shall welcome you. Life has its tasks both great and small. But no one man can do them all. It's settled by a natural law. How much a willing horse can draw, And if beyond his strength he tries A failure, broken-down, he dies. Some men neglect the little things To seek the praise which greatness brings. And miss the goal, and in the end Find they have lost the near-by friend."

No man, however wise and strong, Can bear the burdens of the throng. Who seeks to serve too many here Brings no one happiness and cheer, And this is also truth, I tell. Who tries to do too much for all, God has assigned us certain tasks And nothing more of us he asks. He shall succeed by every test. Who does no more than just his best.

"This is a mighty world you're in. An' so don't spread yourself too thin."

Be good and brave and kind and true. Be satisfied to earn the praise. Of those who follow in your ways. If you bring happiness to them You need not care what tongues condemn.

This is the test for every man That he shall do the best he can.

Two Brothers Drowned.

Middleton, May 22.—An accident happened at Mt. Hanley, near here, last night, in which two brothers lost their lives. George Elliott and Max Elliott were fishing in Elliott lake when their boat capsized and both were drowned before help could reach them. Dr. Herman and a party of three were in a boat fishing about 500 yards away. When the Elliotts were thrown into the water they shouted for help and Dr. Herman and his party hastened to their aid. But they were too late to save the young men, neither of whom could swim. Both sank when the rescuing boat was within 200 yards of them.

George Elliott was 26 years old and was a mechanic science teacher. Max, who was only 23 years old, had returned only last Saturday from overseas. They were sons of Lemuel Elliott, Mount Hanley, and were young men of the character. The bodies were recovered this morning.

Wanted: Less Money.

The miners of Durham once dined on tools for less pay, and for twenty weeks they held out for a reduction of three shillings a day, their object being to make the work go round.

The Oakby sockmakers offered to take 5 per cent. less wages to attract work from Leicester, whereupon the Leicester operatives offered to take 5 per cent. less in wages if the masters did not send work to Oakby. On the masters declining the offer they went on strike.

In South Wales twenty years ago the miners went on strike because a pony had been removed to another mine.

Then a church at Preston witnessed a strike of the choir owing to the vicar charging the members with talking. The choir demanded an apology and refused to attend church. The apology was tendered and the matter settled.

Over eighty years ago an All-England cricket eleven refused to play against Lillywhite's innovation of over-arm bowling.

WATCH GOLDFISH.

Slickers are painting Minnows Colors That Soon Wash Off.

New York, N.Y., May 25.—The latest fraud of the street vendor is the painted "goldfish," the result of a shortage of these ornamental fish.

Minnows, or other small fish, are treated with a special preparation of paint, which washes off after a few days, revealing the fish in its true colors.

Preposterous Charges.

Mr. Coaker and his newspaper, The Advocate, has time and again made statements against political friends and opponents alike, that their sole purpose was the studied destruction of the Fishermen's Protective Union.

It has been impressed upon Union members time and again, by the press, from the platform and in the House of Assembly that the hostility of parties toward President Coaker is not to be construed into antagonism toward the Union.

The Advocate in flaring headlines yesterday announces that the sole object of the Government is to smash the F. P. U. and its investments.

The wish is the father to the thought. No Government ever did or would contemplate such a thing, any more than they would contemplate ruining any other firm doing business in Newfoundland.

so credulous as to be duped and led astray by such a catch cry, unworthy of the utterer, as this. The whole secret is that the position of the President is becoming untenable.

Militia Dept. Explains.

From Lieut.-Col. W. F. Rendell, Chief Staff Officer of the Regiment, we have received the following explanation as to the reason for the Militia Department's decision to have the disembarkation and reception of the returning soldiers purely a military one.

Proposed Aerial Mail and Passenger Service

In Newfoundland Within Next 12 Months. Traffic for Mails and Passengers.

Newfoundland will possess a daily Trans-insular aerial mail and passenger service within the next twelve months. Already Major K. E. Clayton Kennedy, late of the R. A. F., is here representing the Imperial Aircraft Manufacturing Company of London, England, which is the firm that is inaugurating the big system.

The machines of the Imperial Aircraft Company hold the world's record for comfort, regularity, speed and safety. A prouder boast would be hard to obtain. The London-Paris record is held by a De Havilland-4, which did the trip in 1 hour and 20 minutes.

AUSTRALIANS TOOK CHARGE.

LONDON, May 29. On their arrival at King's Cross station, which was densely thronged, Hawker and Grieve received one of the most remarkable ovations ever seen in London. They were seized by a booby of Australian diggers and carried shoulder high into Euston Road, crowned with slouch hats, the Australian custom of conferring the highest popular honor. It was intended to have a civic reception, and the Mayor was present at the station, along with a large number of distinguished military officers and civilians, but the Australians, declaring it Australia's day, took the affair entirely into their own hands. Dense masses blocked the thoroughfares. Similar scenes of enthusiasm were enacted along the whole route, Portland Place, Langham Place and Regent Street, to the club.

Channel Notes.

Mr. R. Moulton, M.H.A. for the district of Burgeo and LaPoile passed through Port aux Basques enroute to Halifax. He did not stay off, but promised to return later, possibly with the idea of again receiving the support of the electorate. Vain hope.

People here are wondering why any necessity should exist for the vexatious formalities of the years of war, and why passengers arriving by boat or train should be subjected to inconveniences and absurd regulations. There is no need for the petty exhibitions of authority that are in evidence. Since early in the spring the regular immigration officer appointed by the Government to supervise travelling traffic, has left this port and the present incumbent of the office must either be self-appointed or has only the authority of the Sub-Collector in charge. The Government should attend to this at once.

Codfish continues scarce, though there is a good supply of bait. Salmon have not yet struck. The power boat Luxor, owned by J. P. Chetwynd has been doing remarkably well with halibut, which fish are being shipped to Canada as caught.

The appointment of Miss Rebecca Carter to the Post Office, at Channel in succession to Mrs. Russ, meets with the approval of all classes and we congratulate the Post Master General on having found such a well qualified and affable young lady for the position.

I remember hearing years ago the definition of a diplomat. It was "one who takes your watch and you afterwards make him a present of the chain that goes with it." The Germans are just finding out that, after surrendering their army and navy to the diplomats of the Allies and the United States, they are going to "give up the chain," but, German-like, they are kicking on doing it. I cannot see what use the chain is to them without the watch.

President Wilson may have been fooled when the Allies agreed that his fourteen points should be submitted to the Germans. The Germans were no doubt in a present of the chain that goes with it." The Fall of Constantinople.

The fall of Constantinople on May 29, 1453, when Mahomet II. and his Turkish hordes captured the last stronghold of the once-mighty Greek Empire of the East, was an epoch-making event in the history of civilization, entailing consequences from which Europe was destined to suffer, with varying severity, even to the present day. It was through the disunion and apathy of Christendom that the catastrophe became possible, for when the end was visibly approaching, the Greek Emperor, Constantine Palaiologus, was left almost wholly to his own resources. Not unworthy of the purple, he rose nobly to the call, and was the animating spirit of the defence throughout the siege of fifty-three days. But all his exertions were in vain. The great Turkish cannon caused the walls to crumble, and all that remained was to die fighting in the breach. Constantine's last fear was of falling alive into the hands of the infidel, and accordingly, when all was lost, he threw away his purple. The object was achieved; he fell by an unknown hand, himself unknown, amidst a pile of the undistinguished slain. It is a curious coincidence that the last Emperor of the West was called after the founder of Rome, Romulus, and the last Emperor of the East after the founder of Constantinople—Constantine. With his death, all was over. Resistance was abandoned, and the Greeks fled towards the City, many of them being stifled in the press along the narrow streets. Many more fell by the swords of the pursuers, and their wives and children became the spoils of the victors, while the Crescent replaced the Cross over the great Cathedral of St. Sophia, and the Sultans entered upon the heritage of the Caesars.

Increase in Wages.

A deputation from the Bricklayers' and Masons' Union, composed of Messrs. J. R. Mullins, James J. Spratt and J. J. Cochrane, met a deputation from the Builders' Association in the Board of Trade Rooms yesterday afternoon, when matters in connection with the recent demand of sixty cents per hour made by the above union were discussed. The case for the masons was so ably presented by their delegates that the contractors and builders decided to meet their demand in full and pay the 60 cents per hour. The decision of the Builders Association was highly commended by the bricklayers and masons, and a more friendly feeling between employer and employee will exist in future as a result thereof.

The Yellowtail A-Bitin.

Oh, the news it is excitin', that comin' from the beach, How the yellowtails are bitin', every-thing that they can reach; And it makes me so uneasy to be with them in the fray I can hardly hold the scissors I am writin' with today.

For I seem to see them foppin' over everything I write, And their yellowtails a-shinin' and a flashin' in the light; And the ripple of the water, as it tosses in the sun, Is the music of the siren to a fellow that likes fun.

An' I'll cease the weary ravelin' for glory an' for wealth (This laborin' between meals is ruinin' my health); An' drop a line to yellowtails to celebrate with me, "Way down at Catalina, in the bosom of the sea."

Where Our Kings Get Spliced.

IT'S IN A TINY LONDON CHAPEL. There are probably few, even of those who think they know their London, who have discovered the Chapel Royal. It is possible, indeed, to wander again and again through the maze of St. James's Palace without even suspecting its nearness, although it looks out on you through a large window at the very portal. And yet this cunningly concealed chapel is one of the most historic and interesting buildings in England, well worth a long pilgrimage to visit.

For centuries it has been the matrimonial Mecca of Royalty. Queen Anne wore her bridal veil at its altar for George of Denmark; Frederick, Prince of Wales, put a wedding-ring on the finger of the Duke of Coburg's daughter; and George IV., too intoxicated to stand without support, hicoughed his vows to Caroline within its walls. It was the setting for Queen Victoria's nuptials eighty years ago; her daughter, the Princess Royal, stood at its altar with her German bridegroom; and our late King Edward was married there in 1863.

And not only has it been the scene of these and many other weddings of our Royalty and nobility; at its font scores of Princes and Princesses have received their christening.

And yet this ultra-Royal Chapel has no architectural pretensions to rival its splendid history. It is small—but twenty yards long, with accommodation for two hundred persons only. It is no larger in fact than many a parish room. Nor is it beautiful, apart from its painted and panelled Holbein ceiling, on which you may see the name of Henry VIII. and the date, 1540. And yet it boasts three galleries, one for Royalty, another for peers and peeresses and other distinguished personages; and the third for its organ, one of the finest in England.

Here generations of Kings have worshipped more or less reverently. Charles I. attended his last service in this chapel before taking his walk to the headsman's block in Whitehall; and George III. listened patiently to sermons two and three hours long, amusing himself by beating time to the anthem and boxing his pages' ears when they ventured to talk or giggle. And Queen Anne was so shocked by the ogling and sighing of the younger members of the congregation during the sermon, that she gave orders for the pews to be "raised higher and made into closets."

The Chapel Royal claims to have the best choir in London. It is composed of boy choristers, arrayed in gold and scarlet uniform, white ruffs and bands, knee-breeches and stockings.—Pearson's Weekly.

Winding Up Wars.

The delegates in Paris have already considerably exceeded the time spent on previous occasions in officially ending wars.

The Crimea was settled in two months. Hostilities ceased on February 29th, 1856, and peace was proclaimed in London on April 29th.

Only a little over three months were spent in winding up the Franco-German war of 1870. The armistice was signed on January 28th, 1871, and the final treaty on May 10th. There was still less delay after the Boer War. Negotiations opened on March 23rd, 1902, the peace was settled by May 31st, and by June 2nd Lord Kitchener was publicly welcoming the Boers as "citizens of the British Empire."

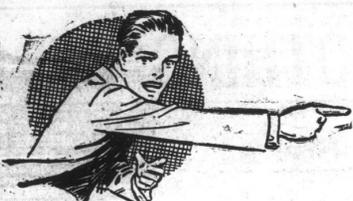

Already over six months have passed since Marshal Foch handed the armistice terms to the Germans.

Admiral of the Fleet.

How many people know that Admiral Sir Henry Jackson, who is about to be promoted to the rank of Admiral of the Fleet, nearly succeeded in forestalling Marconi in the invention of wireless telegraphy?

As long ago as 1895 he succeeded in sending wireless messages from one end of a torpedo-boat to the other.

He tells rather a good story, by the way, of a middy. "When I was your age," said an old sea-captain to him, "I was a sub-lieutenant." "Yes, sir," replied the boy. "But, then, is it not a fact that the Navy was never so efficient as it is to-day?"

MULLETT—HALL.
A very pretty wedding was solemnized at the C. of E. Cathedral yesterday evening by Rev. J. Brimton when Mr. John Mullett, of Wesleyville, led to the altar Miss Emily Hall, daughter of Darius Hall, of Newtown, B.B. The bride was most beautifully attired in a dress of white satin and Georgette crepe with bridal veil and wreath of orange blossoms and carried a lovely bouquet of lilies of the valley. The groom was supported by Mr. S. J. Hefferton, while Mrs. S. J. Hefferton acted as matron of honor. After the ceremony the bridal party drove to "The Nook," Circular Road, the residence of Mrs. S. R. Jones, where a reception was held and a most pleasant evening spent.

The bride worked for several years with the firm of Messrs. J. & W. Winsor, of Wesleyville, and on leaving that employ was presented with a cheque as a token of the esteem in which her employers held her. The groom's present to the bride was a cheque; to the bridesmaid a gold brooch, and to the best man a set of gold cuff links.

The wedded couple leave shortly for Wesleyville where they will in future reside. To the good wishes extended the new partners on life's journey we would add our felicitous greetings and trust that their years of married life may be long and full of happiness.—Com.

Rich Girls Chase Yanks.

War and revolution have reversed so many things that it is only mildly surprising to learn that they have upset the international marriage market. Alliances between rich American girls of plebeian birth (and all girls in this land of no nobility are of plebeian birth) and foreigners with plenty of blue blood but no money were once so frequent as to form the subject of gossip in every American home. It might have been said that as every American boy hoped to become President every American girl hoped to marry a duke. But recent news from embattled Hungary is that rich Hungarian girls are offering themselves to Americans and other acceptable foreigners in order to keep the revolutionary government from taking their money away from them.

Here is the plot for a new version of an old story, says the San Francisco Call. Let the popular fiction writers and scenario makers get out their typewriters and go to work. The hero is handsome, athletic, brave, and a veteran of the late war. He is poor but of good family—his ancestors were among the first to spring ashore on Plymouth Rock. He belongs to the Sons of the American Revolution and is an honorary member of the Colonial Dames. He is sent into Hungary on a military mission, preferably in disguise and is in great danger.

A beautiful mysterious female pursues him. What does she want? His watch? The papers? The can of condensed milk which he carries in his brief cases? Is she a German, Austrian, Hungarian or Bolshevik spy? He does not know. He feels it his duty to find out. To find out he must become acquainted with her. To become acquainted with her he must take her out to dinner, must go motoring with her, must hunt her up at all the parties. She is in trouble. She has enemies. Can he get her over the boundary into Jugo-Slavia? He does. All is over—they must separate. But no—something has happened, he has fallen in love. But can he support her on a second lieutenant's salary? Probably not, but he will try, and at the worst they will starve together.

Then the denouement. He has married an heiress in disguise. He will always be able to wear good clothes and never need to work again, and they will fit from summer home to winter home, from Florida to California, in a perpetual honeymoon. Sighs of relief from the audience. Surely this great dramatic opportunity will not be missed.

Bill, the bartender, was diligently polishing the glasses preparatory to placing them on the back bar. He gave a quizzical glance at Joe, the porter, then said: "What's the grouch, Joe?" "Ah guess you'd have a grouch, too if you lent money an' couldn't git it back."

"Who's the defaulter?" "Who's de w'at?" "Who borrowed from you and won't pay?" "Dat ornery Yaller Slim, he done borrowed some coin from me an' done promise to pay me last night. Dere'll be dat yaller man doan come across to-day."

"But, fob, Joe; that's no way to talk. Ain't Slim a brother of yours? Doesn't he belong to the same lodge as you do?" "Ah doan care 'bout no lodge, Ah wants mah money."

"Did you ask him to reimburse you?" "Ah doan know anything 'bout 'bursin'; he won't yap me, if dat's wot you mean."

Church-Goers Get Eggs.

One of London's Odd Easter Customs. There is only one church in England where Easter eggs are given away to the worshippers, and that is St. Mary's Woolnoth in London. These eggs are given away to every member of the congregation—children as well as grown-ups.

This ceremony has been observed at the quaint Lombard Street Church for nearly seven hundred years. Records of an Easter-egg presentation have been found as far back as the year 1235, and the custom has been observed without a break ever since.

For many years the eggs were provided in accordance with the terms of a legacy left by a certain Sir John Spence, but this legacy has lapsed long since, and the eggs have been supplied by the generosity of successive rectors.

No two eggs are identical in coloring, but all are alike in one particular, for every egg bears the words of the text from which the rector preaches on Easter Sunday.

Many members of the congregation have preserved their eggs for many years, and possess a long record of the church's Easter texts.

The secret of the wonderful coloring of the eggs is one which has always been carefully guarded.

Is Sleeping Flu Coming?

New Complaint the Doctors are Fighting.

An odd illness which the doctors call "sleeping influenza" has appeared in Vancouver. One two-year old child who has been attacked by it has already been sleeping steadily for three weeks.

These sleeping diseases are among the most puzzling of all to doctors, and more than once patients have actually slept themselves to death. At an inquest held at Tiverton not long ago on a girl of twenty, the doctor told the coroner that she had slept to death, and that there wasn't the slightest thing wrong with her in any other way.

The most amazing case of sleeping, however, was that of Caroline Ilson, a Swedish girl, who fell asleep in 1875 and did not wake up till 1907, thirty-two years afterwards! Doctors came from all parts of the world to examine her.

She was a perfectly normal child, till one day when she had just turned fourteen, she came home complaining of toothache. She went to bed, and during the night fell into her thirty-two-year sleep. During that time her only food consisted of two cupsfuls of milk a day.

When Caroline began to waken she called for her mother, who had died some years before, and when her brothers hurried to her side she waved them away, saying, "You aren't my brothers; they are quite small!"

A Country Hotel.

It was a beautiful day in July when a friend and I pulled up in front of a place that looked like a barn which had the following sign upon it: "Hotel," written on a piece of board.

"Shall we stop here?" I asked.

"Yes, we might as well stop here as any place," said Rivet Sawyer, who was very tired.

We both jumped out of the flivver and went inside, where we found a fellow standing inside of a box, which looked like a chicken coop, but over which was written, "Office."

"Say, have you got a good room we can hire?" asked I.

"Wes, sar. Here, John, take these here fellows up to Room 23."

There was a large, clumsy looking fellow came up to us and showed us into a room, where we found a bed, a washstand, in which there was some water that looked as the some one had washed dishes in it, and a chair.

"Say, do they think we are both going to sit in one chair?" queried Rivet.

The next morning the "bellboy" came up, ringing a cowbell, and we asked him what he was making such a noise for, and he said that breakfast was all ready.

We were down for breakfast in about five minutes. When the waitress came in she said: "Here is a set of rules we have adopted." She handed us a card-board, upon which was written the following rules:

1. In order to prevent the gentlemen from carrying fruit from the table, there will be no fruit.
2. Old and feeble gentlemen will not be permitted to play in the halls.
3. Guests will not be allowed to tip the waitress, as it is liable to cause her to break the dishes.
4. If you want a bellboy, wring the towel.

After breakfast we jumped into our flivver and were off, not a bit worse from our experience. — The Lone Scout.

'Plane Falls in Flames.

Faced by the dreadful alternative of being roasted alive or jumping to certain death, an airman flying over East Finchley deliberately took a leap to the more sudden and merciful end. The machine, owned by the British Aerial Transport Co., of Hythe-road, Willesden, and piloted by ex-Flight Commander Peter Legh, a nephew of Lord Newton, suddenly caught fire while undergoing an altitude test. A loud report was heard above the roar of the engine immediately before the occurrence, and flames burst over the machine. For a moment the burning mass appeared to remain stationary, and then dropped like a stone. At first it appeared likely to fall in the market place, which was crowded with people, but, fortunately, it passed clear of the buildings surrounding the square, and dropped into some gardens behind. When some distance from the ground the pilot was observed by eye-witnesses to climb out and walk along one of the planes before taking the terrific jump. His fall was unbroken, and he struck the ground with such violence that his body was partly buried in the earth. His body was conveyed to Finchley mortuary. The machine itself crashed into a vegetable garden abutting on the Great Northern Railway between two rows of villas, about a mile north of East Finchley Station. So narrowly did it miss the Postal Sorting Office that pieces of burning wreckage fell on the roof. It

Blazed So Furiously on the Ground that it was impossible to approach it until the flames began to subside. Buckets of water were then thrown on the wreckage. The Finchley Fire Brigade were called out, but their services were not required. In its fall the machine struck and completely demolished a large glasshouse. This seems to have turned the direction of the aeroplane, which then charged a large wooden shed, and set it alight. The machine—a new B.A.T. single-seater Scout—was afterwards examined by the military authorities from Hendon, and experts who endeavoured to ascertain the cause of the mishap by examining different parts of the engine, but the plane was so completely smashed up that it was impossible for them to arrive at any conclusion. The dead pilot was only son of the Hon. Gilbert Legh, of Thornham, Norfolk, Lord Newton's brother. Aged only 25, he was a well-known airman, and with Hawker and Raynham, who propose to fly the Atlantic, possessed one of the finest flying records amongst British pilots. He transferred from the Navy to the R. A. F., and was wounded in France some two years ago. Since his recovery, as a civilian pilot he had been testing machines for the British Aerial Transport Company and the Armstrong-Whitworth Company. He started from Hendon, and had been flying well until the time of the tragedy. Giving evidence at the inquest at Friern Barnet, a police-constable stated that he noticed a great deal of smoke before this happened, and saw that the smoke cloud there was a flash and vivid smokeless flame, and the machine crashed to the ground entirely enveloped in flames. Witness ran to the spot as speedily as he could, and assisted in the effort to put out the fire. Mr. Cyril Turner, representative of the company owning the aeroplane, said Mr. Legh was making a test at the request of the Air Ministry in the form of an attempt at a height record. The Coroner: Had there been any complaint of this machine, or any faults developed in it? There had been a few minor defects, and a new engine was put in on April 10 last. Witness said the machine had been up ten times since the new engine was fitted, and no complaint had been recorded. The coroner pointed out that when an aeroplane caught fire in the air complete destruction followed, and it was impossible to ascertain by subsequent examination of the wreckage where lay the defect which led to the mishap. A verdict of "Death by misadventure" was returned.—News of the World.

Saw the Machine Nose Dive, and then noticed the airman apparently walking along the right-hand wing. Almost immediately afterwards he fell to the ground. Witness

Fads and Fashions.

Cotton voile frocks made over silk foundations are strong rivais of summer silks.

Quaint frocks of English prints are trimmed simply by bands of plain white braid.

For summer is the veil of hexagonal mesh, bounded by a conventional border.

White linen waistcoats embroidered in color are one of the new features of a suit.

A navy serge cape has the space from shoulder to waist filled in with black silk braid.

Bright velvet or ribbon girdles rescue the dark-colored cotton dresses from monotony.

Some of the new long jackets have their fronts turned back and edged with buttons.

More German Propaganda.

The German brewers in the United States, conducting their breweries since the first of May, when the law plainly says they shall not manufacture alcoholic beer, are defying the United States Government the same as the Germans in Europe are defying the Allies on their peace terms. Certain newspapers and news associations under the control of the German brewers are constantly spreading reports that the soldiers coming back from France are greatly disappointed to find the country dry and claim their liberty was taken from them while they were fighting for liberty. This is more German propaganda stuff.

That the German brewers' statement is not true is proved by the fact that 65 per cent of the United States was dry before the war started and only 10 per cent more was required for the necessary three-fourths to adopt the Constitutional amendment. Never was there a greater liberty of our brave men who fought for the liberty of the world, and who would have fought just as hard, had they been home, against the slavery of this country to the distiller and the brewer. What does the German brewer care about liberty? All he cares about is the coin, and everybody knows it.

Most of the boys who come back from France speak of the disgusting, drunken exhibitions they saw in that country, where our soldiers were forced to drink the rottenest kind of booze and wine, having been told they must not drink water, as the water of France was bad. Men who were never drunk, who led moral lives and did not abuse themselves in any way in this country, went to France, were fed on alcoholic poison and while in that condition contracted diseases to which they would not have been exposed had they been in their right minds, and many of them died. When the armistice was signed our hospitals in France contained a great many more men, wrecked for the remainder of their lives, than were in the peaceful graveyards under the Stars and Stripes over there.

There seems to have been a letup in enforcing the prohibition laws throughout this country. Many of the organizations created for this purpose seem to have half-way laid down. In the first place, people say: "Well, the chances are there will not be any more booze, at least no hard liquor legally sold after the first of July, and we know the whole thing will go by next January." That seems to express the sentiment that is allowed to prevail at present. Everybody who has a drunken son or brother or husband says: "Maybe he may live until he can't get it, and if he does he may be saved."

This is exactly the condition the German brewers and the distilling interests have worked to produce, because then they will be able to claim a change in sentiment. They will try to make it appear that the amendment to the Constitution adopted did not represent the sentiment of the people.—Saturday Blade.

Mars and Mammon.

HOW WE REWARD THE GENERALS WHO WIN OUR WARS.

If the report be true that Parliament will make a grant of one hundred and fifty thousand pounds to Sir Douglas Haig in recognition of his magnificent services during the war, he will rank next to the Dukes of Marlborough and Wellington, each of whom reaped a harvest of more than a million pounds from war.

In actual money Wellington's brilliant generalship yielded considerably over this sum to himself and his descendants. His victory at Talavera was rewarded by a pension of two thousand pounds a year for two generations.

Salamanca, in addition to a marquessate, brought him a lump sum of a hundred thousand pounds, and a little later the Commons voted him a round half million pounds to maintain his dignity as a peer. And the crowning victory of Waterloo was rewarded by an additional grant of two hundred thousand pounds, to add to his sixty thousand pounds of prize-money.

He also won within the short space of five years a viscounty, an earldom, a marquessate, and a dukedom, in addition to seven foreign titles, including one of prince.

Marlborough's Value in Money.

Apart from his rich crop of dignities, ranging to a dukedom and two princely titles, Marlborough was awarded a pension of four thousand pounds a year for himself and his descendants; the manor of Woodstock was presented to him by a grateful country; and the Palace of Blenheim was built for him at a cost of a quarter of a million pounds. The duke's pension alone has yielded to him and his successors more than a million pounds sterling.

Between these fortunate dukes and their nearest rivals there is a great gulf.

Lord Gough, conqueror of the Sikhs, received a pension of two thousand pounds a year from the Government, and a similar annuity from the East India Company—four thousand pounds yearly for the duration of his own life. All the gold Lord Wolseley received was fifty-five thousand pounds—twenty-five thousand pounds for the Ashanti War, and thirty thousand pounds for his Egyptian campaign in 1882.

When Speed Means Loss.

Digging is not the only task where slow and steady wins the race. The dentist is a man who regards speed as an enemy of his art. The client who is in a hurry to get his new ivory teeth settled in is apt to regard the dentist as an incurably lazy person. The real fact of the matter is that hurried work is bound to be unsatisfactory, both to him that gives and him that takes.

The gums of the human adult refuse to be hastened in their recovery from the onslaught of the pinners. The watchmaker is another person renowned for taking things easy. You know quite well that the actual work required by your ailing "turnip" can be done in a quarter of an hour or less. And yet the wearer of the spy-glass shakes his head when you ask if you may have the watch next day. It is not that he has suddenly conceived a great affection for your property. He is merely acting upon knowledge gained by experience.

Watches are very sensitive, and the slightest exposure to the air tends to disturb the regulator. Time is the only cure for the timepiece, and, if you are wise, you will leave your watch under the eye of the expert as long as ever he considers it necessary.

Names You Smile At.

"If a party had a voice," to quote an unkind rhyme, "what mortal would be Bugg by choice?" And yet the pioneer Bugg was a man of substance, who dwelt in a manor-house, from which he derived his name. The first Coward was no poet, but a cow-herd, who tended his cattle; just as the first Rascal was no knave, but a man who probably bore some resemblance to a lean stag or rascal; and the original Snooks hailed from Sevenoaks, whose corrupted name he bore. Hobson, a name at which some affect to scoff, is as venerable as it is respectable, for we read of a Lowrie Hobbesune, a Suffolk landowner, in the days of Edward the Confessor; and the Buggins and Boggs, if they did not come over with the Conqueror, at least came over with some of his race.

Gotobed is no name to smile at, for it is a variant of Cuthbert, which means "war-bright," and the first Gotobed was probably a warrior of fame. Miggs is a synonym for "strength"; and Wildgoose signifies a "resolute hostage." Devil is merely De Ville of honourable French ancestry, and bears no relationship to Hell-man, whose ancestor was a Hellier, or roof-maker, and probably a good Christian.

White voile frocks are ruffled from waist to hem, and their little elbow sleeves as well. A charming fashion is the "flower-petal frock," which owns a skirt cut in pointed petals.

Beds Out of Doors.

(By W. Harold Thomson.)

"This will be my seventh summer as an out-of-doors sleeper," my friend Robertson said to me yesterday. "I'm starting again on Friday—and I'm looking forward to it."
"But," I objected, thinking of a recent Sunday, "what about our climate? There might be a foot of snow in the garden by the week-end."
"So far as I am concerned," he said, "that wouldn't matter very much. You've seen the balcony arrangement that I had fixed up last year. I'm protected by a thin wooden roof and, if I want them, by canvas screens. Of course that's doing the thing thoroughly, and I'm bound to admit that for the average man or woman sleeping out of doors as a nightly occurrence is not feasible. Still, they should do it whenever possible. You know yourself what a fine experience it is in good weather."
Now, I do know it, and it is because I do that I am writing this little article.

True, every night—even in a British summer—is not suitable for the open-air sleep, but from now onward the really bad nights should be few. The sleep out of doors, by the way, is worth two bedroom sleeps; and as for the waking—well, it brings back memories of one's vigorous schoolboy mornings when to lie abed was regarded not as a treat but as a nuisance.

I know, of course, that in advocating the bed out of doors I advocate something which to many would be impossible. To do the thing properly and with the maximum of enjoyment you want to sleep in a garden, and if possible in a garden of charm—though for the matter of that all gardens have charm.

Still there are a good many gardens in London and its suburbs, and even in a flat there is often a small balcony which, properly curtained off, can serve as a quite satisfactory slumber-place.

An acquaintance of mine who lives in Hampstead has so used his flat balcony for many years, and no doubt because of that, he looks the healthiest tenant in the block.

A mattress raised some few inches off the ground, a stretch of tarpaulin overhead—if there are showers about—plenty of warm bedclothes, and you are in for a sound, sweet sleep and eight hours of health-winning.

For myself, I like a hammock—one of the good old canvas sort on which a mattress is laid—slung between a couple of trees. But that is a matter of training.

If you have a garden, no matter how small, you should give this out-of-doors sleeping at least a trial.

At first no doubt you may be kept awake by the sheer joy of the night and because the sky fascinates you. Also the birds will be trilling at the bell of your consciousness soon after dawn. But after a night or two you will find that sleep comes quickly and graciously, and that even if the birds do wake you early in the morning you feel rather bird-like yourself.

And, of course, to sing before breakfast is all right so long as it is not done in the hearing of some well-enclosed slug-a-bed.—London Daily Mail.

Gen. Pershing's Mistake.

Many persons have been wondering for the last eight months why the wave of popularity which seemed to seize General Pershing, and looked as if it would carry him over the top into the Presidential chair, has subsided. After making inquiries of many of the boys who have returned from France and drawing a conclusion from much testimony, it would seem that, as some of them put it plainly, they "got cold feet on Pershing because he was willing to misstate conditions in France." If there is anything a soldier hates it is this: A man who is willing to take his life in his hands, and does, is not much of a four-flusher.

The people in the United States knew that any administration would do politics. They knew the administration must sell bonds, must get soldiers, would favor its friends. But our boys over there did not know the people over here were being fooled when the Secretary of War made statements that certain things were favorable when they were unfavorable and when General Pershing backed him up in it and cabled the same reports from France that were given out over here. When the boys got home and found their families and friends had been deceived, not by what the Secretary of War said, but because General Pershing said it was so, then they turned on the General and turned their families and friends with them.

Had General Pershing had the moral courage to have contradicted the Secretary of War he would be the biggest man in the United States today. Of course this statement will not appeal to the favored friends of General Pershing who received the commissions and promotions which he had to grant. The whole truth is that the Secretary of War did not think it good policy or politics to let actual conditions in France be known here, and General Pershing o. k.'d it.—Saturday Post.

Marrying the Enemy.

Love Will Have Its Way.

Will the establishment of the Army of Occupation in Germany result in German brides being brought to this country by some of our soldiers? The problem is one which is engaging the serious attention of the authorities, for it is recognized that human nature being what it is, love laughs at nationalities as well as locksmiths. Thomas Atkins, Esq., will fight for his country and obey Army regulations, but he reserves to himself the right to fall in love with whom he likes.

And although the great majority of German girls do not appeal to British (deals of beauty, their blandishments are not to be resisted. This is shown by the fact that some British and French prisoners in Germany have preferred to remain in that country because they have formed an attachment for an "enemy woman."

A Means to an End!

The sinister suggestion has been made that German girls be deliberately practising their wiles on our soldiers "to the order" of the German Government. Be that as it may, there is no doubt that, in spite of the general feeling of antipathy and repugnance which may be felt in this country towards such attachments, our soldiers do not always object to them.

This is illustrated by an incident which Bishop Frodsham relates in his description of "Germany Under the Conqueror's Heel" in the "Cornhill Magazine." A certain commander read, to his horror, in a German newspaper that Fraulein E. Schmidt was betrothed to Private John Brown, of his own regiment. Confronted with the announcement Brown admitted giving the girl a ring.

Angry Comrades.

The editor was then asked why he had published such a notice. It had been sent to him by the girl's mother, and he did not know such things were forbidden. When the mother was questioned, she said that she had only acted according to custom, and it was not proper for a young girl to walk out with a young man until the neighbors had thus been informed of her swain's honest intentions.

Meantime Brown had to be put in prison to escape the "attentions" of indignant comrades. Demobilization may solve the problem, but, as the Bishop points out, the situation raised is likely to be repeated when peace has been declared.

THE BUCKET.

The day is approaching when booze will be banished, the lights will go out in the gilded saloons; the bartenders all from their posts will have vanished, along with the jugs and the brazen spittoons.

Alas for the soak and the bum and the drifter! The tale of their anguish no poet can tell; they'll hit, when they long for a four-fingered snifter, the old oaken bucket that hangs in the well. The old oaken bucket has been a back number, it slept with the has-beens for long weary years; but now it comes back from its cobwebby slumber, consoling the boys in the absence of beers. Doom faces Old Booze, he can't dodge it or duck it, the sexton's preparing to ring out his knell; and so we get back to the trusty old bucket, the moss covered bucket that hangs in the well. I stand with the poet who boosted the bucket, who said that it struck him as finer than silk; we've long clung to whiskey but now we'll chuck it, and sample such liquids as water and milk. Oh, then we'll be chipper and lithe in the morning, as gay as a kitten, as sound as a bell; the wiles of the bootlegger manfully scorning, we'll hit the old bucket that hangs in the well.

Soul of Wit.

The agitation for shorter speeches in Parliament calls to mind that one of the most effective speeches ever made in the House of Commons was also one of the shortest. Lord Ashley, rising to support a Bill for granting counsel to prisoners accused of high treason, lost his nerve, and his speech. For a moment he stood dumb, and then, by a desperate effort, achieved one sentence.

"If, sir," he said, "I who now rise only to give my opinion of the Bill, am I so confounded that I am unable to express what I proposed to say, what must be the condition of that man who, without any assistance, is pleading for his life?"

He sat down amid the cheers of a House utterly convinced.

Bother-Making Books.

Volumes That Caused Riots.
The husband and wife who, as reported in a recent divorce case, quarrelled over a book by a famous lady novelist, are not the first people who have unwisely allowed themselves to lose their tempers in similar circumstances.

When that much-discussed book "The Jungle" was first published it was directly responsible for several cases of assault and battery; and at least two divorce actions also resulted.

The Sinn Fein movement was broken up in Westmeath as the result of a recent novel. A whole county was set by the ears, and a series of faction-fighting of unparalleled bitterness took place.

Undeserved Popularity.

Half-a-dozen duels, two deaths, and a score of serious assaults were the aftermath of the appearance in book form of Lieutenant Bilse's "Life in a Garrison Town," published in Germany a few years before the war. Then the Kaiser stepped in and ordered the volume to be suppressed, with the result that Bilse's exceedingly wish-washy novel promptly attained world wide popularity.

Mention might also be made of husband and wife quarrelling bitterly because the former elected to earn his living by his pen, as exemplified in the unhappy married life of W. M. Thackeray.

Thackeray's wife showed her resentment not only by refusing to read any of his inimitable novels, but she also used every means in her power to hinder him in his literary work. On one occasion she went so far as to tear up the greater portion of a completed manuscript work, representing several months of hard intellectual toil.

North-West Coast Reform Movement.

Bonne Bay Public Welfare Committee Protests S. S. Ethie being Placed on Humbermouth, Battle Harbor Route. Discontinuance of Semi-weekly Mail Service Deeply Resented.

During the past few weeks the Bonne Bay Public Welfare Committee has taken up several important matters of paramount interest affecting the whole district. At a largely attended meeting held on Monday evening last the subject of our Postal Service came up for considerable discussion. Strong resentment was shown from the fact that after enjoying a semi-weekly service all winter, this should now be discontinued. It is clearly evident that such a service is much more necessary during the summer than the winter, and in the recent memorial submitted to the Postmaster General and Governor-in-Council, the facts were clearly set forth. It appears the former has been recommending that the Bay of Islands mail boat be sent here with the mails, but the Committee were unanimous in their decision that this boat is not desired. If a boat is to supply the mails between the towns of the "Ethie," then that boat is to belong to this District, and the money for such a service is to come here. The Secretary was instructed to at once wire the Postmaster General this fact.

Of equal importance is the subject of our coastal freight and passenger service. The able memorial submitted to the Government some time ago has apparently been ignored, but the Committee is determined that remedies must be effected in this direction. As soon as it was learned that the Ethie was loading for here the Secretary dispatched a wire to the Governor-in-Council asking "whether in view of the memorials submitted, showing the detriment and danger this boat is to the coast, it is the Government's intention to again put her on the route, or do they intend to supply two of her type." No reply having been received the Committee passed a resolution that a wire be at once dispatched to His Excellency stating that "the Committee seriously regrets that His Excellency has not been pleased to acknowledge their wire of the 8th instant and now wishes to point out that the S. S. Ethie is hopelessly inadequate and utterly intolerable and demands her immediate replacement by the Meigle or Glencoe." The foregoing adjectives are not a bit overdrawn in referring to this boat. Only those who have the necessity of travelling by her can fully appreciate how "utterly intolerable" she is. With accommodations for 8 first-class passengers, it is not an uncommon thing for ten times that number to be holding first-class tickets. The "hopelessly inadequate" condition in this case is obvious. It has also been clearly shown in the memorials forwarded that this boat is quite unable to cope with the freight offered, as this business is expanding each year. The merchants and the public in general are seriously inconvenienced by this condition; the people of the present day do not want to be herded together like sheep when travelling on a "first-class" ticket—the accommodations provided being a third or fourth class—neither must peoples' lives be endangered as a result of this overcrowding, and the sooner the Government awakes to its responsibility the better for all concerned.

Another matter touched upon was the ferry service for the Bay. Members recently in the city were given to understand that a service of some kind was to be provided, but apart from rumours nothing definite has transpired. A ferry between Woody Point and Norris Point (at least) is a public requirement of first rate importance, and the Committee trusts that something definite will shortly ensue.

It is understood that the Government Engineer will shortly come here in connection with the proposed public wharf, and the Public Works Department has been asked that this official be instructed to take a survey of the roads from Curson Village to the bottom of the Bay. In several places bridges are down, making travelling both difficult and dangerous. The Committee has been cheered by the many words of encouragement received both verbally and in writing from all parts of the Island, and special reference was made at the last meeting to the article recently appearing in the "Western Star" from the pen of Mr. I. C. Morris. The Secretary was instructed to write him a suitable acknowledgment of the interest taken.

W. A. PREBLE, Secretary.
Bonne Bay, May 28th., 1919.

A Signal Triumph.

Yesterday the Colonial Secretary, Hon. J. R. Bennett, received a message from the High Commissioner at London, Hon. Sir Edgar Bowring, that the pupils of the Academy of Mercy, Military Road, had won Lord Foley's Challenge Shield, in the Sloan-Duployan Shorthand Competition. The Sisters of the Convent, as well as the competitors, deserve every congratulation on their signal success. The names of the winners, etc., are appended:

The Shorthand Team That Won.

Miss Irene Willis.
Miss Lillian Sullivan.
Miss Mollie Ellis.
Miss Marjorie English.
Miss Violet Davy.
Miss Mary O'Donnell.

The Foley Challenge Shield.

The Right Hon. Lord Foley, Vice-President of the Sloan-Duployan Shorthand Society, has kindly given a handsome Silver Challenge Shield for annual competition among schools connected with the Society, winning schools will hold the Shield for a period of one year, and it will become the permanent property of any school winning it for three years in succession.

Conditions for the Foley Challenge Shield Competition.

(1) A school desirous of competing for the Foley Challenge Shield will present for examination a team of six pupils. The team which scores the highest aggregate of marks will be adjudged winner, and the school which that team represents will hold the shield for a period of one year. The shield will become the property of any school winning it for three years in succession. In the event of two teams tying for first place, a second examination, at slightly higher speed, will be arranged between the two teams.

(2) The examination will be held in March of each year, the place of examination being the school in which the pupils have been taught. Any date in March may be selected for the examination, but Entrance Forms must reach the Secretary a clear week before the date fixed for the exam. In the case of foreign and colonial entries, forms should, of course, be sent in much earlier, to allow time for the examination paper to reach its destination before the date fixed for the examination.

(3) The examination must be accomplished in the presence of a witness, who will certify to the test being worked under the proper conditions. Such witness may be a clergyman, a school manager, a member of any Educational Committee, or other responsible person connected with education. In a case where the shorthand teacher, he may NOT act as witness. The examination papers will be sent direct to the witness in a sealed packet which will be opened in the examination room, and the papers handed direct to the individual who is to read out the dictation.

(4) The test will consist of writing in Sloan-Duployan shorthand two pieces to dictation, and afterwards transcribing the shorthand notes into longhand.

(a) A business letter of 400 words to be dictated in five consecutive minutes, 80 words per minute.

(b) General matter of average difficulty, 600 words to be dictated in five consecutive minutes, 100 words per minute. Two hours will be allowed for longhand transcript, but completed papers before the expiration of that time. Worked papers, together with the original test paper, to be handed to the witness, who will dispatch them direct to the Secretary.

Hr. Grace Notes.

There was a fairly good sign of codfish in the local market yesterday. Herring, too, are fairly plentiful, but there has been no salmon taken yet.

Messrs. Joyce and Cleary, of the Associated Press Bureau motored from St. John's yesterday, and after taking a spin about town, and expressing themselves as highly pleased, they left at 8 p.m. for the capital. Both are genial fellows and made a number of friends even though their stay was short. Both expressed the wish that time would permit them to take another run this way, probably about the time the big Handley Page machine will start on her flight across the "pond."

"Hawker and Grieve are safe," went from one to another yesterday, and one would almost imagine that both were Harbor Gracians, so interested were all our people in the rescue of the airman. We would not be surprised to hear of Mr. Hawker being on his way to Nfld. again in a few days with another machine to try again for the honor of being "first."

Nurse M. Mahoney, who has charge of the Military Hospital, St. John's, spent the week-end here to the great pleasure of all her friends. We have heard soldiers say that it was a pleasure to be sick at the Military Hospital, and we are not the least surprised at the remark when the genial and kindly matron, above named, is in charge. Nurse Mahoney left for home yesterday, and will no doubt have quite a large number of lads to care for after the arrival of the S. S. Corsican.

Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Coffin motored from St. John's on Saturday and returned yesterday.

Dr. Cron who has been gradually gaining strength since his late serious illness, is about town the past few days. He is leaving for Montreal to-morrow, accompanied by his wife and child, and will spend the next few months in getting strong, and "fit" to again undertake the work of his profession. All the doctor's friends are pleased to see him on the road to recovery.

LAND OF OLD MEN.

More Than Half of the Youth of France Lost in War.

PARIS, France, May 25.—Capt. Andre Tardieu, head of the general commission for Franco-American war matters, made an investigation into the number of French soldiers killed between the age of 20 and 31. He found that 58 per cent had lost their lives. That is, that more than half of France's young men disappeared.

What a Kohler & Campbell Player-Piano Means to You.

OWING to the fact that it is so easily played; that it is so very simple in its operation that a child can play it, a Kohler and Campbell player-piano will open up the entire world of music to your home. The advantage of any player-piano lies in the fact that it is an instrument that does not have to await the skill of a pianist, of someone who can play by hand. But with a Kohler and Campbell player-piano, the ease and simplicity with which it can be played, by anyone, you have a means of playing the music you like, playing it yourself and playing it as you wish it played. You are the master of a Kohler and Campbell player-piano: It is not the master of you.

The price is $700, upon any reasonable terms, satisfactory to you.
