RECOGNITION.

The care of the teeth is now recognized as a necessity. In fact the large hospitals all over the world examine the patients' teeth and where it is possible put them in good condition before attempting a surgical oper-ation. Experience has shown that the patient has a better chance for recovery with a clean healthy mouth than without it. This ought to convince the most skeptical that care of the teeth is requisite to health.

MINARD'S LINIMENT FOR GARGET

CHAPTER VII.

She thought of the Winterdick's pride, of the position they had held in the country, and she realised what a terrible blow this would be for them. "Oh. I think money is the most dreadful thing," she said passionately. "It never seems to make people happy when they have it, and yet when they lose it . . . " She turned her grey exes to him in sweet sympathy. "And is this what you wanted to tell me? she asked.

Philip Winterdick drew a long breath: he felt as if he were about to take a plunge into icy water.

"No," he said at last, desperately "it isn't; at least . . . Miss Dennison " He forced his eyes to her face, and for a moment there was absolute silence; then he rushed on: "Now, how can I . . . after what I've just told you . . I-I . . . Oh, I can't tell you-I can't.

He had meant to do the square thing and tell her why he wanted to marry her, but now it had come to the point his courage failed him. He liked her too well-he realised that she was a girl to be trusted and honoured -and that if he told her she would probably despise him for the rest of her life. And Philip Winterdick was a man who liked to be thought well eyes.

He looked away from her, and for what seemed an eternity neither of them spoke. Then Eva said almost in a whisper-

"But . . . but why need what you have just told me-make . . . anyany-difference?"

"Why-why need it make any-difference?" Philip Winterdick could not believe that he had heard aright. He turned his head slowly and looked at the girl beside him, then the hot colour flooded his face from chin to forehead. He stood still staring at her.

"You mean . . . you don't mean that . . . that you want to marry me?" he stammered at last.

Her head was downbent, and he could not see her eyes, but he saw the little quivering smile that curved her lips as she said softly:

"Why not, if . . . if you really want to marry me?'

He felt as if someone had struck him a knock-out blow over the heart. She must care for him then-that was his first thought, and it brought with it a tumult of emotion that for the moment robbed him of breath. He clutched at his scattering wits desnattered much to the Dennisons, he supposed, but all the same . . . He took a little step towards her.

"I don't think you quite understand," he said with a note of great gentleness in his voice. "My father is a ruined man, which means that I also am practically penniless. I've never done a stroke of work since I left Oxford. I daresay it's a thing to be ashamed of, but it's a fact all the same. I shall have to start at the bottom of the ladder . . . Oh, you don't understand," he said again almost

"She looked up then. "I think I do," she said. "But it loesn't frighten me at all. I've known what it is to be poor. I never expected to live in a house like this, and have a lot of money to spend.'

She laid a timid hand for a moment

"If you want to marry me, and I want to marry you, what does it matter what sort of house we live in?"

Philip Winterdick pulled himself together with an effort. "You're a brick," he said stumbling-

ly. "A real brick-I . . . I'm not half good enough for you. . . . He wondered if she considered herself engaged to him: there seemed nothing more to say: he wrung her hand

He wondered whether she expected him to kiss her. He longed to kick himself, because he felt so stilted and unnatural. He thanked his lucky stars when Peter came up the road and put an end to any further tete-a-tete. He took his departure hurriedly. "I'll come round after dinner-if I may," he said to Eva. He went off at a

"You shouldn't have bothered-it didn't matter. I've plenty more." In his confusion he hardly knew what he was saying. His face was purple with excitement. The greatest dream of his life had come true, and here was the only son of the most blue-blooded and influential man in the county asking permission to marry his daughter! "I'm delighted-of course. I'm 'de lighted. It's been the dream of my life." He was too pleased to be diplomatic.

"Marry her by all means, Mr. Winterdick. She's a lucky girl." He stopped, struck by something in

For him there is no peace of mind, no rest at set of sun, and moral people and refined he evermore must shun and if he hears a step behind, his impulse is to run. His nerves forsakes him when he's old, his days are days of dread, the step that once was firm and bold is like a rabbit's tread, and, shaking in the dark and cold, he wishes he were dead. Morning newspapers appealed to members of the Dail to heed the necessities of the country, one of them saying "The Dai must decide whether it is a democratic

RIVAL GROUPS IN DAIL.

Rival groups in the Dail which met to-day to take final action on the Treaty of Peace between Great Britain and Ireland, were semingly as wide apart this morning as when the Dail adjourned. Advices from Dublin were not of an encouraging nature. The extremists were said to be deter-mined to persuade the Irish people that acceptance of the treaty involved the abandonment of the claim for the establishment of a republic. work, however, was said to be futile and there was general prediction tha Dail Eireann would pass favorably upon the convention. Some correspondents asserted that acceptance of the treaty would be due to abstentions from voting. The final decision was not expected before Thursday.
The representative of the Westminster Gazette writes: "The great ma-jority of the people are overwhelmingly in favor of the ratification and are opposed by only a minority. This minority, however, is of a composite nature. Mr. De Valera and his followers are not prepared to fight to the death for the republic but hint at another condition which to a majority of their countrymen appears almost indistinguishable from the treaty. Yet for these conditions they are prepared to renew civil war. To out and out republicans they are as contemptible and foolish as those in Employee Of Canadian-National mark of esteem and respect to the Says She Was Miserable For memory of the late Mr. Michael Murphy, Master Cooper, a resolution of ance. The matter of unemployment amongst the members were then distainly seventy per cent of the Union idle, through different causes, viz. shortage in the catch of fish which arought about by so many of our nen being placed road making ummer instead of being supplied for the fishery; also the depression in the Brazil markets, and to cap the climax the unprecedented influx of fish packages which were purchased from the outports. All these conditions are responsible for our idleness; then couple up the failure of the Scotch herring business brought about mainly by packing the herring in anything that resembled a barrel by competent coopers and every package inspected before leaving the cooperages.

If this were done, and the Marine and Fisheries Department saw that all packages came up to the requirenot getting their place in the sun which is theirs by right. If our city section and the snow reaches a depth of outharbor packages were trusting to them to get their fish to market during the war they would be badly left, and it doesn't seem hardly good should continue; seventy or eighty per cent of the catch of codfish was marketed from outports and now it seems that they are to have the pack-

It is probably the strongest drama staged here, and is remarkable for special meeting Sunday afternoon where the "wharf-rats" under the leadership of Bermudas hold their lainous Byke as the engine with its smokestack belching and headlights glaring, thunders down the grade and across the stage. All that human ingenuity can devise is there to make the scenes as realistic as possible, and Gold and Silver Fringe and special lighting effects are being imported. Three generations of Newfoundland theatregoers have seen it produced and three generations bespeak its praises. That it will make a tremendous hit with the newest generations is a certainty. As usual the entire proceeds of the players' efforts will be devoted towards the worthy cause of education, and the production will be directed by Mr. P. Moore, M.H.A.
