TRADE

RUSSIA—EXTENSION OF AGREEMENT AND FURTHER WHEAT SALE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, today in Moscow the Minister of Trade and Commerce has signed on behalf of Canada a protocol extending the Canada-U.S.S.R. trade agreement for a further period of three years. The agreement, which will now expire on April 17, 1969, is subject to renewal by mutual consent.

At the same time the Canadian Wheat Board has entered into a contract with Exportkhleb, the Soviet grain trading agency, for the sale of 9 million long tons or about 336 million bushels of Canadian wheat and flour for shipment during the three crop years commencing August 1, 1966.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: No intergovernmental credit arrangements are involved.

As part of this over-all arrangement the wheat board has concluded a specific contract with Exportkhleb providing for shipment of 3 million long tons, about 112 million bushels, of wheat and flour during the crop year August 1, 1966 to July 31, 1967.

This is the largest three year commercial contract for a fixed quantity of Canadian wheat and flour ever concluded. Since 1963 the U.S.S.R. has purchased 478 million bushels, valued at approximately $1 billion. The new three year contract worth approximately $800 million will bring Soviet purchases to about 814 million bushels since 1963.

The trade agreement between Canada and the U.S.S.R. provides for continued exchange of most favoured nation treatment between the two countries. Under the protocol agreed to today the two governments undertake to continue to give sympathetic consideration to any representations which either government may make concerning implementation of the agreement or other matters affecting their commercial relations. The two governments have also renewed their undertaking to facilitate visits for business purposes between Canada and the U.S.S.R.

The Canadian Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Foreign Trade of the U.S.S.R. have also exchanged letters concerning their discussions of trade relations and noted the importance attached by the government of the U.S.S.R. to expanding its exports to Canada. During the negotiations the delegations of Canada and the U.S.S.R. carried out a detailed review of trade between the two countries. It has been agreed that the trading framework which has been established should provide increasing opportunities for further development of mutually advantageous trade.

I am sure all members of the house will share the pleasure expressed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in Moscow that these negotiations have been brought to a successful conclusion. It is most gratifying that the U.S.S.R. has again decided to purchase such substantial quantities of wheat. The impact of this record sale and the assurance it gives for the marketing of Canadian wheat and flour will extend throughout Canada, and will be felt not only by wheat farmers and millers but by grain handlers, longshoremen, elevator companies, railways, shipping companies and the economy generally.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this further evidence of trade in wheat with the U.S.S.R. is a continuation of a policy which during our period of office we brought about on a credit basis with communist China, and which was so widely criticized by hon. gentlemen sitting opposite.

We do not take that stand, however. We are appreciative of the fact that with an increasing world demand for wheat, wheat is indeed king among cereals. We will be interested to learn the price. We know the contract will continue over a period of years, but within the last year and a half Canada's wheat prices were reduced by approximately 17 cents a bushel. While not wishing to do anything that would bring about an acceleration of the inflation that is with us, I wish to point out that wheat farmers deserve higher prices than they are receiving at the present time when regard is given to increasing costs. I hope there will be provision within the agreement entered into for increase in prices, otherwise this agreement will not give to the wheat producing farmers the benefit that it should.

My second point deals with the question of the transportation of this wheat. In the last contract that was entered into with the U.S.S.R. no provision was made for the use of the Hudson bay route. That route should be used, because it would place several cents a bushel in the pockets of the western farmer.

There are two matters then on which we require information. One is the price to be paid, whether regard has been given to the increasing cost of production to which our farmers are subjected. The other matter is whether provision will be made for the maximum use of the Hudson Bay route, thereby enabling a larger share of the ultimate return to be available to the producer.

As far as the sale is concerned, it is a large one and one that will command universal support. It is not for me at this time to make any further suggestions. On a later occasion, and in connection with the wheat board, I will deal with what the Minister of Agriculture said in western Canada, that in his opinion the time had come for the transfer of the wheat board to the Department of Agriculture. However, that will be a subject by itself.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): On behalf of our party I wish to welcome the news, as does every other member in the house, and indeed I go further and congratulate those who negotiated this agreement on Canada's behalf.

I wish to add a few words to say, first, that it seems to us these energetic attempts at establishing trade with the Soviet union should be extended to all the countries in eastern Europe and in that general bloc. Second, I know of no better way to improve possibilities for achieving peace in the world than by increasing the trade of other countries in the west and particularly of our country with the Asian, African and European countries whose systems are different from our own. It has always been the position of our party that the path to peace in the world lies in economic co-operation much more than in military threat. I am therefore glad to welcome this deal not only for the sake of the farmers but also for the sake of the future of the world.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, we are also happy to note that Canada has achieved such a wheat sale. But there is one thing about which I feel I must blame the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp); it is that we have received copy of his statement in English only, whereas all the other ministers usually provide us with a French copy of the text they are reading in English. In the future I think we would be pleased if the Minister of Finance could provide us with a copy of his statement in French as he does in English.

Another point, Mr. Speaker. At a time when the Minister of Finance announces that hundreds of million dollars worth of wheat are being sold to Russia, indications are that the Canadian trade deficit is getting larger all the time. We had a trade deficit when we did not have these wheat sales and today, in spite of these large foreign sales, the trade deficit is getting larger. It seems to me that while we are rejoicing that Canada has secured such important amounts as one billion dollars, or more precisely $814 million, the minister should make sure that we avoid paying out so much in dividends, interests or outgoing profits in order that our balance of international payments may show a surplus instead of a deficit. With such exports it is difficult to understand why we should have a trade deficit. It seems to me that the Minister of Finance, whose function it is to improve the economic position of Canada and who states that the contract with Russia will benefit the economy of the country, should also see to it that our trade balance gets back on its feet and show a surplus in the future.

So, we welcome this big deal with Russia and we hope that the same thing will be achieved with other countries. We have quantities of products in Canada, we probably have more resources than any other country in the world and, on the other hand, a number of countries need our natural resources. Therefore, we hope that such contracts will be maintained and extended, in quantities as well as in quality.

[English]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): We welcome the announcement of the protocol, Mr. Speaker, extending the trade agreement for three years, and the announcement of a further wheat sale over three years, with the contract for the first year involving some 112 million bushels of wheat, for a number of reasons. The first is that a three year term is going to put a measure of stability into the wheat market for the future which I am sure the farmers, flour millers and people involved in the transport of this commodity will welcome. I think the flour milling industry particularly will welcome this announcement. Although the minister did not say how much flour was involved in the whole contract, I hope it is substantial. During the past few weeks some of the mills in Canada have been operating at something less than 50 per cent of their capacity. Any additional orders, therefore, to which they might look forward after August 1 will certainly be welcomed not only by the mill owners but by the workers as well.

We are not clear what the minister intended by the words "other mutually advantageous trade". I suppose this is not the time to go into the details of what these other trading relations or trading matters involve, but we would be very interested in knowing what other commodities are involved in this term.

I should like to say also, Mr. Speaker, that I believe the time has come when the Canadian Wheat Board and other participants in the international wheat agreement should have a good long look at the price. This afternoon the Leader of the Opposition mentioned, and I think the minister would agree, that there has not been a rise in the price of wheat to the farmers in line with the increased cost of production that has manifested itself recently. I believe the farmers are entitled to have some increase in their returns to match rising costs. Perhaps at the next meeting of the international wheat agreement countries a price increase will be considered to be justified.

We welcome the announcement, Mr. Speaker, and we hope there will be co-operation from the elevator companies, the railways and other people involved in transporting this wheat into export position so that we can make the deliveries on time.

Question No. 1,555—Mr. Knowles:

With reference to the answer to part 3 of question No. 1,320, recorded in Hansard of May 25, 1966, what is the assessment of the value of the advertising of April 30 as the deadline for filing personal income tax returns?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Canadians are reminded each year of the approaching April 30 deadline for the filing of income tax returns and payment of moneys due to the crown. Inasmuch as penalties are levied against those who file after the due date and who have not made the necessary payments, it is considered an obligation on the part of the Department of National Revenue to remind all taxpayers of the deadline. This notice usually forms part of the informational program conducted during the filing season, part of the program being paid advertising.

Figures for the last two filing years for late filing of returns as of December 31, are:

T1 Shorts

1964 (1963 tax year) 205,000 out of 5,300,000
1965 (1964 tax year) 154,000 out of 5,600,000

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): No.

CONSIDERATION OF BOUNDARY TREATY OF 1909

Question No. 1,658—Mr. Coates:

Has the government been involved in any discussions with the government of the United States regarding the boundary treaty of 1909 and the possibility of alterations to that treaty in order to provide more effective methods to control pollution?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No.

*COMPLAINTS ABOUT C.B.C. PROGRAM "HUMAN CAMERA"

Question No. 1,686—Mr. Rynard:

Were any complaints received by the Secretary of State about the C.B.C. program "Human Camera" on youth produced by Beryl Fox which appeared May 29, 1966, and if so, how many?

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): The answer to this question is yes. Three were received.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, before supporting that proposal, I wish to point out that on March 23 last I put Question No. 1,142 on the order paper. I wonder if the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) could make a special effort, after three months, to answer that question?

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I will do my best, sir.

[Translation]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State. Could the hon. lady tell me when she will be in a position to answer the questions which I placed on the order paper on April 22 and 26 respectively?

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—PRESENCE IN HANOI OF CHESTER RONNING

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs which has to do with the mystery trip of Mr. Ronning to North Viet Nam, on which the house has had no information. Is the minister now in a position to advise the house that the reaction of the North Vietnamese government to peace feelers is one of frigid contempt; and is he not in a position to advise whether the views of the President of the United States have been brought to his attention, as expressed at a press conference on Saturday when the President said words to this effect: "I have no information that I can make available that would give any encouragement or credence to believing any disposition on the part of the North Vietnamese to negotiate". As well, as part of the general picture, in the same press conference the President indicated that the United States might be expected to accelerate and intensify its attacks on North Viet Nam.

Has Canada expressed any views in this regard to Washington? What are Canada's views in this regard?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure my right hon. friend will realize that he has asked a whole series of questions. Mr. Ronning has only just reached Ottawa. I had a first discussion with him this morning. The Prime Minister and I will have further talks with him today concerning the results of his visit. For the present I am sure it is wise to say nothing further concerning this particular phase of our continuing efforts in relation to the Viet Nam problem.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What about the questions respecting the President's indication that the United States will now accelerate its air, naval and land attacks in North Viet Nam? Has the Canadian government been in communication with the United States and expressed its view in respect to this new turn of events?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Canadian government has been in touch with the United States government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is about as far as you will get.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REFUSAL OF B.C. LONGSHOREMEN TO WORK ON VICTORIA DAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I have a question for the Minister of Labour of which I have given him notice, I hope in time. On Friday my leader, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, asked the minister some questions with regard to ten longshoremen in Vancouver who had been brought to court on charges of violating an injunction order. At that time the minister said he would look into certain questions relating to this situation.

I should like to ask him now, in view of the fact that ten officers of the international Longshoremen's Association in Vancouver have been sentenced to fines of $500 and $400 or the alternative of three months in jail, whether the hon. gentleman is prepared to propose the necessary amendment either to the legislation or to the regulations so as to avoid the danger of court action against workers who fall within federal jurisdiction and who take advantage of the statutory holidays provided in the Canada labour code.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I thank the hon. member for having advised me of this question. I confess that it might be still better if I took it as notice, since as yet I do not have the reasons for the judgment of Mr. Justice Verchère who dealt with the matter. I find the forecast in this matter that I gave on Friday last was not too far out when I said the question involved was not so much one of interpretation but whether or not an order of the court had been disobeyed. I find, at least based on information I have received over the week end, that this was the case.

I might add that the union leaders appeared in court and made statements in which they said that injunctions are frustrating—this was part of a long statement—and that in order to protect themselves in this field they must reluctantly engage in civil disobedience. That, I say, seems to be a matter for the courts, because the law is still the law and must be respected. However, until I have seen the reasons for judgment of Mr. Justice Verchère and have had a chance to study them in conjunction with the debates which took place in this house and in the other place last year, when the labour code was being discussed, I do not want to give a definite answer to the hon. member's question.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the fact that the original restraining order could only have been obtained on the basis of an interpretation of the existing law—this is how the whole case arose; this is why the longshoremen were in court last Friday—would the minister consider amending the law in such a way that restraining orders of this kind would become impossible in similar cases?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Nicholson: I cannot give a definite answer to that question at this time. I do not wish to offer too much encouragement either, because I find that in the statement which was made on Friday last, at the opening of the motion, the longshoremen also said "It may be said we could have attended in court to give reasons. If we had, we would have been recognizing the right of employers to ask for mandatory orders..." With all due respect, surely the law is for the court to interpret, not the Minister of Labour. I would prefer not to give a further answer until I have the reasons of the learned judge stating his reaction toward this particular statement.

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Bearing in mind the troubled industrial relations situation in British Columbia, will the minister do his best to expedite his consideration of this matter?

Mr. Nicholson: I would be very glad to do so.

SHIPPING

OBSTRUCTIONS PLACED IN NAVIGABLE WATERS BY PULP AND PAPER COMPANIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Transport?

It is an important and urgent question, in view of the fact that the shipping period is now in full swing. Can the minister tell us whether his department is taking any special steps to prevent pulp and paper companies from dumping logs and pulpwood into navigable rivers, canals and waterways?

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I will take this important question under immediate consideration and give an answer as soon as possible.

HOUSING

FORT NELSON, B.C.—REPORTED FAILURE OF C.M.H.C. TO PARTICIPATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): My question is directed to the Minister of Labour in his capacity as minister responsible for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Has the minister's attention been drawn to a scathing editorial in the Fort Nelson News concerning the lack of participation by Central Mortgage and Housing in construction activities in Fort Nelson? This is an important matter, and I hope the minister will have something to say in connection with this article.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest this question be placed on the order paper, a course which might give the minister an opportunity to take notice of the matter mentioned by the hon. member.

Mr. Leboe: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, this question is urgent and I think it should be answered now. I do not ask questions in this house very often, as you know. I am asking this one because the subject is urgent.

Mr. Speaker: Since the hon. member for Cariboo has asked the question I would be pleased to draw the conclusion that the matter is urgent.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I am glad Your Honour has seen fit to permit this question. This was a disturbing editorial, and one which shows how far newspapers can go off the beam, to use a colloquialism, if they do not know the real facts. This was a critical editorial stating that no National Housing Act loans had been made in the town of Fort Nelson by the national housing corporation during recent years. I should like to place on record at the earliest possible date that, contrary to the indications in the editorial, we have not had a single application for a loan under the National Housing Act from Fort Nelson for several years. Furthermore, our branch manager visited Fort Nelson in November last, at which time municipal officials indicated there was a housing slump and told him there would be no N.H.A. housing requirements. I had a conversation on these lines not too long ago with the hon. member for Cariboo confirming this, so I am sure the editorial was as much news to him as it was to me.

Our manager in Prince George has advised the editor that if indeed there are people requiring N.H.A. loans and needing information about the act, he will be glad to visit and discuss the matter with them.

TRADE

WHEAT—TERMS OF NEW AGREEMENT WITH RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I would direct a question to the Minister of Finance in the necessary absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It deals with the wheat agreement with the Soviet union, announced by the minister earlier this afternoon on motions. I should like to ask whether the terms of the agreement provide any protection for wheat farmers against increases in the cost of transportation which may take place as a result of certain settlements which have been made with the seaway workers and dock workers, and which may have to be made with railroad employees.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I would prefer to answer this question after I have had an opportunity of talking to the chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board. I will say this, however. The only pricing which has taken place has been in respect to deliveries in the coming crop year. Prices for subsequent years are subject to negotiation.

Mr. Lambert: But the minister, as a senior member of the government, is aware of the trade agreement. Can he tell us whether there is any clause which will protect Canadian farmers against an escalation of transportation charges?

Mr. Sharp: My reluctance to answer this question stems from the fact that this is a highly technical matter. I would simply say that the price of Canadian wheat sold to the Soviet union is determined by the Canadian Wheat Board in the interests of the western farmer, and not by the government.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): In view of the possibility of continuing difficulties on the St. Lawrence seaway, will the minister give his personal assurance and that of the government that the dependable Atlantic ports of Saint John and Halifax will be given a good share of this wheat and flour business, in the summer as well as the winter?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say that in the contract between the Canadian Wheat Board and the U.S.S.R. provision is made for shipment of wheat through all ports of Canada, including Churchill.

[Later:]

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the announcement he made about the sale of wheat to Russia, since Russia is a country that uses a lot of edible fats and oils would the minister not bring to the attention of the trade commission that Canada could provide them with edible oil from the rapeseed area of Canada?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to say that in response to the representations not only of my hon. friend but of many others throughout this broad country, the great productive capabilities of Canada in rapeseed have been brought to the attention of the whole world including the Soviet union.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance arising out of the statement he made earlier today, and ask him whether the amount of flour is specified in the contract and, if so, how much in each of the three years.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position before the return of the Canadian Wheat Board to ascertain the exact answer to this question, but I can assure the house that provision is made for a very substantial quantity of flour in each of the three years.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance based on his statement in regard to the new sales of grain to Russia, and that the matter of trade between our two nations will be reviewed from time to time. Can the minister state whether any definite commitment was asked for or given in regard to an increase of Russian exports to Canada and, if so, to what extent?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, in the statement I made on motions today I quoted the exact terms of the communiqué agreed upon between the government of Canada and the U.S.S.R. through the Canadian minister and the Soviet minister. I suggest that this question be reserved until the return of the Minister of Trade and Commerce from Moscow.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

SUGGESTED STUDY BY PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister of which I gave him notice. In the light of recent electoral developments in Quebec, and the strong views on the need for constitutional change that have been expressed from time to time by the new prime minister of Quebec, will the government reconsider the urgency of the appointment of a committee of this house to study, from a federal viewpoint, the question of constitutional change for Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I thank the hon. member for giving me notice that he was going to ask this question, and upon reflection I have to tell him I do not consider it should be asked at this time.

Mr. Brewin: Ten o'clock.

PENITENTIARIES

DORCHESTER—DEMOLITION OF GUARD HOUSES

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I received several telegrams this morning, one of which was delivered to me in the house this afternoon, and because of the urgency of this matter I would like to direct a question to the Solicitor General. Is it the intention of the government to continue the demolition of the guard row houses at Dorchester penitentiary?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that this question be placed on the order paper.

COAL

INQUIRY AS TO RELEASE OF ASSISTANCE REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister and ask him whether the government has decided to release the Donald report.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is on my desk.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Is it to be released? As a further supplementary question, can the Prime Minister say whether a cabinet committee has been set up to study this report?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this matter is going to be discussed at a cabinet meeting tomorrow morning.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): As a further supplementary, under these circumstances what has been discussed between the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Liberal leader in Nova Scotia that cannot be released to the miners and the people of Nova Scotia vitally concerned with this industry?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is argumentative.

[Later:]

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the growing anxiety among the miners and other people of Nova Scotia, will the Prime Minister make available to those people that information which was made available by the Minister of National Health and Welfare to the Liberal leader of that province?

Mr. Pearson: Without referring to the latter part of the question, about which I am not informed, Mr. Speaker, I can assure my hon. friend that we will be considering this whole matter tomorrow morning.

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—INQUIRY AS TO TRANSFER OF ARDA FILES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Russell Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Forestry, who is responsible for the administration of ARDA.

In view of the fact that the term of the E.Q.D.B., that is the Eastern Quebec Development Board, will expire on June 30, can the minister advise the house whether he has been in touch with the new Minister of Agriculture of the province of Quebec to ascertain whether or not a small team of the board is expected to stay in office for some time, in order to ensure the systematic conveyance of the 11,000 files?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that this question should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Keays: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the question is rather urgent, in view of the fact that a decision is to be taken very soon and that the term of the board is to expire within the next ten days.

[English]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the minister's attention been drawn to an article in the Methodist Federation for Social Action, published in New York, which reads:

While the eyes of the world are focused on Viet Nam the Johnson administration has quietly achieved a nuclear armament—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows it is not in order to read this type of material as part of a question.

Mr. Herridge: Well, Mr. Speaker, has the minister's attention been drawn to the fact that it has been publicly stated that the Johnson administration has quietly achieved a nuclear armament of the West German republic by establishing a Bonn military axis outside NATO?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is of a very general nature and should not be asked at this time.

IMMIGRATION

VANCOUVER—DEPORTATION OF JAPANESE GIRL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration of which I have given him notice. Its urgency lies in the fact that we are at the beginning of the summer tourist season and also because of the consequences to the individual involved. Is the department investigating the circumstances in which Miss Masako Endo has been ordered deported by the Vancouver immigration office?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Johnston: Ten o'clock.

[Later:]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of what some of us regard as urgency with respect to the question asked by the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke, and in view of the fact that the list of questions for the ten o'clock show is becoming rather lengthy, would Your Honour permit the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to take the question as notice and give an answer perhaps tomorrow?

Inquiries of the Ministry

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SASKATCHEWAN—JOINT PROGRAM OF HOME CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and ask him whether the joint program announced last year by the Prime Minister to be undertaken by the federal government and the province of Saskatchewan for the construction of homes for Indians, and which was to be on a trial basis, is still in effect; or has it been abandoned because only 10 homes were built?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid I could not recognize this question. It is of a very general nature, and I suggest that the hon. member place it on the order paper.

Mr. Korchinski: But, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have this information because some people are inquiring whether the program is still in effect and whether there is any point in making further inquiries about it.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that the information should not be sought orally at this time.

[Later:]

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister be presenting a report on the joint program undertaken by the federal government and the province of Saskatchewan in connection with housing for Indians, which was undertaken about a year ago on a trial basis?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be glad to look into that matter, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR HOUSING LOAN FUNDS FROM CENTRAL BANK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has the minister received representations from the association which speaks for Canadian mortgage companies, seeking loans from the central bank to promote home building and, if so, what is the result?

Inquiries of the Ministry

FISHERIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—DAMAGE TO SALMON SPAWNING GROUNDS BY LOG RUN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and ask whether he has anything to report to the house about the court case, the writ of mandamus, with respect to the driving of logs on the Stellako river, which I understand was heard this morning before Mr. Justice Aikens in Vancouver.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I understand the matter was heard just an hour or so ago and no report has reached me as yet, so there is nothing I can add to what I said last week.

Mr. Howard: As a supplementary question, would the minister be prepared to make public any scientific reports on the log driving in that river last year, whether they came from his department or the salmon commission?

Mr. Robichaud: I will certainly give consideration to this request, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO GROUP B SALARY ADJUSTMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would direct a question to the Prime Minister because he, in common with others, has received a series of complaints in the last few days from class B employees regarding the decision on the revision of their salaries, also asking that an interim addition be allowed at this time. Would the Prime Minister personally look into this matter and do something for these employees who have been waiting for action for a long, long time?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have had some communications on this matter, and those communications are now being given consideration.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which I should like to direct either to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of National Revenue. When a statement is made on this matter can a firm assurance be given that these group B employees will not lose out on an adjustment because of the changeover which is taking place?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it is our intention to remove any possible injustices in these matters.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

CLASSIFICATION OF WEST COAST FISHERMEN AS SELF EMPLOYED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue, asking him whether he will reconsider his recent decision which reclassifies practically all fishermen on the west coast as self employed persons for the purposes of the Canada Pension Plan?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, we looked into this matter very carefully before making the decision which does classify some of the fishermen as self employed persons. As the hon. member is aware, there is a pension appeal board to which the decisions of the department in this regard can be appealed.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I should like to ask the minister whether he is going to follow the advice given by the postal workers over the week end.

Mr. Benson: No, Mr. Speaker.

GRAIN

PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.—INCREASE IN ELEVATOR CAPACITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question, which I am sure is predictable and which I am also sure has been anticipated by the Minister of Agriculture.

An hon. Member: You will get a predictable answer.

Mr. Howard: I hope I do not get the usual answer. In light of the announcement today by the Minister of Finance regarding grain sales to the Soviet union, will this transaction act as an impetus to the minister to give an early and favourable decision regarding the extension of grain elevator facilities at Prince Rupert?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): I can assure the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, that it will make my dynamic consideration even more dynamic.

BANKRUPTCY ACT

AMENDMENTS TO CORRECT ABUSES AND FOR ORDERLY PAYMENT OF DEBTS

Hon. L. T. Pennell (for the Minister of Justice) moved the third reading of Bill No. S-17, to amend the Bankruptcy Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (for the Minister of Justice) moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint that house that the House of Commons has passed the following bill, namely Bill No. S-17, to amend the Bankruptcy Act, with certain amendments to which concurrence is desired.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA STUDENT LOANS ACT

PROVISIONS FOR SUPPLEMENTARY PROVINCIAL ALLOCATIONS, ETC.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-197, to amend the Canada Student Loans Act.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I was not present at the time the resolution preceding this bill was accepted by the house, and this afternoon I should like to make a few remarks of the type that would normally be made at the time of consideration of the resolution. They will not infringe upon the general rules of debate.

Several general observations were made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North regarding the subject matter of attendance at universities and the desirability of university education for all Canadians. That hon. member, like the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, read a number of statistics and made reference to a specific report. These hon. members, as members of the New Democratic Party are prone to do, arrived at conclusions in respect of university education on the basis of certain statistical information. In doing so I think they painted a false picture in respect of the desire of Canadians generally to attend university.

We know very well that on the basis of academic ability a regrettable number of students are attending universities who should not be seeking a university education. It is true that many do not know whether they are able to obtain a university education until they have tried, but with proper guidance and investigation at the high school level many of them would never have gone to university because they would have realized they would be wasting their own time and the time of the teachers, and unnecessarily using already crowded university facilities.

Instead of looking for ways of providing free tuition at the university level we should be finding ways and means of increasing construction of adequate university facilities and providing increased salaries to induce more and more men and women to take up teaching in universities as a profession. What good does it do to bring thousands and thousands of young men and women into the universities when the present facilities are not adequate to provide them with the education they should receive when they get there?

I should like to correct what I think is a wrong impression. It seems to me it is wrong to conclude that because certain groups of Canadians earn so much money, a certain percentage of their children should attend university. It is wrong to conclude that the children of individuals who have greater economic means have an advantage over those without means so far as attending university is concerned. It is my opinion that of those students who have the academic and intellectual ability to obtain a university education, there are few who cannot find the means. They would appreciate it all the more.

There are any number of members of this house whose parents did not have any economic advantages and who worked their way through university in the 1930's when there was far more economic deprivation than there is today. Today, in this affluent society, we know that in some universities bursaries and foundation funds go begging because there are not proper applicants or candidates for them. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think it is time we got our heads out of the clouds in so far as university education is concerned. Let us say yes, we will provide the funds, we will provide the buildings, we will provide the teachers for these people, but first of all they must have a genuine desire to go to university and not merely look upon it as an extension of, shall we say, a period of easy existence.

If there are cases—and I think there would be relatively few today—of students who are prevented from attending university through lack of funds, I think means can be found for them to do so. I will admit that everybody going to university would like to have more money to spend. Even the young fellow whose father is well endowed with worldly goods and gives him an allowance of say $50 a week spending money would like more money to spend. There is hardly one who could not find grounds for saying, "$75 is what I need". We are all human, and even our high school children who get $3 will say, "Well, can't you make it $5?" I am amused to hear this talk of $3 and $5 a week; it used to be something to get 25 cents a week when you went to high school.

There is in my opinion the necessity of a reorientation of our thinking with regard to providing financial assistance for attendance at university. As I have indicated in previous debates, I think we are putting the cart before the horse in this particular program and any program of free scholarships. Let us first build the universities, give them the money for libraries, laboratories and teachers, and then we will consider assisting students to further their education. Do not cram them into universities like meat into a sausage machine. What do you get out in the end? You get a lot of people who have been forcibly cut back and all too often you have too many products of the same identity and the same little sausage intellectually. In my opinion this is not the answer. A person who has a genuine desire to attend university will find the money that is necessary.

There is another point, Mr. Speaker, with which I wish to deal. It may have been referred to by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Deachman) but has not been dealt with at any great length. I refer to the question of whether the provincial governments, which control a large number of universities in Canada, are actually in a way turning aside the funds provided by the federal government for education and using them for other purposes. It is simple, when generous loans are furnished to students so they may attend university and there is a certain certificate of eligibility, merely to let the fees rise and let the students absorb a higher proportion of the cost of operating the university rather than the provincial government maintaining or increasing its relative contribution to the university. That is one way in which a provincial administration can turn aside, shall we say, moneys provided by the federal government and use them for non-educational purposes.

If a study were carried out in this field I do not know what the result would be. We know that fees are increasing. I am wondering whether the minister in his agreements with the provinces has made any provision for an escalation in the amounts required under the loan plan to compensate for an increase in fees. I think that in order to protect students both from the universities and the provincial governments there must be a ceiling imposed on fees, if there is one on the money that is available by way of loan, during the term of these agreements.

The minister has spoken of excellent co-operation or co-ordination between the provincial governments and the federal government. I wonder whether there has been any discussion in this respect. Otherwise the whole thing could be made complete nonsense by allowing fees to mount up without limit and at the same time limiting the amount of the loan available to a student. Remember, these are loans. We know what it is going to be like to repay these loans. There have been many instances of difficulties such as have been experienced with regard to those university graduates who have gone off on programs like CUSO. We will see how many difficulties will arise when The Company of Young Canadians is operating. We will see how many students who have taken loans under this program will be able to meet their obligations if they become members of The Company of Young Canadians. I think we will see a very interesting reaction in this respect.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, in recapitulation the questions I would ask are: What arrangements are there, either between the provinces and the federal government or between the provinces themselves, to sort of keep the lid on fees if they can? Second, is greater emphasis being placed upon capital funds being available for buildings, laboratories, libraries, teachers and, finally, for the students themselves, because in my opinion that is where the priority in respect of university education exists. It does not exist in cramming into our present universities thousands upon thousands of young people who will be artificially cut back at the end of their first or second year because they cannot continue at university due to a lack of space and teaching facilities.

Hon. John N. Turner (Member of the Administration): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak generally and briefly on the amendments to the Canada Student Loans Act. When it was first introduced I of course spoke at greater length on the philosophy behind the bill and what it would mean to students throughout the country as a means of continuing their education with some sort of financial support from the federal government.

I wish to speak about three of its aspects. First of all, I want to reiterate to the house and suggest to the minister that despite the fact that this has been a very liberal piece of legislation—and has accomplished a good deal toward equalizing educational opportunity in this country—I would hope that its terms would be broadened in the future to include many students who are not presently covered. I wish to speak in particular about part-time and night-time students. In our larger cities the number of students attending university on their own time in the evenings and at their own expense reaches rather large proportions. In two of the universities that happen to be situated in the riding of St. Lawrence-St. George in Montreal 15,000 out of the 30,000 students attending those universities do so at night time, and judging from figures I have received the same situation applies to a certain degree in the other large metropolitan sections of this country, particularly in Toronto, Hamilton and Vancouver.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask the minister a question? He is in the rather unusual position of a minister in a cabinet advising another minister on what the latter should do. I am wondering whether these representations which he is now making to the house would not have been more effective had they been made where they should have been made by a minister, namely, in the cabinet. I have never seen this done before, but one learns new things every day in parliament.

Mr. Turner: I rather think the right hon. Leader of the Opposition would not wish me to reply to that question knowing that I am bound, as he was, by the Privy Council oath. However, I wish to point out that my intervention is in no way a criticism of this legislation. I am looking forward to the possibility of other aspects of this legislation being extended. I totally approve of the bill as it was introduced and, of course, of the reasons behind these amendments, but I am taking advantage of second reading to make a few comments on how I hope this legislation will be developed in the future and how I think we should react to the support of our students in this country.

I wish to make it perfectly clear that I am speaking not in criticism of government policy but hoping, as I would imagine many members of this house are, that its terms will be broadened in future years.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think the minister did not get my point. Is he saying that it is constitutionally proper for a minister, during the discussion of a measure brought before parliament by another minister, to explain that, while the measure is a worthy one, it would be a lot better if his suggestions were carried out? Surely that is not quite constitutional. I am not asking him in any way to contravene the oath he has taken as Privy Councillor but I have never before seen an instance of a minister explaining to another minister that while his legislation is good it could have been better.

Mr. Turner: I had the benefit of sitting in the opposition while the right hon. gentleman was prime minister of this country and I recall a number of such occasions then and also during the period I have been sitting on the government side of the house. There is nothing preventing a minister or member of the government from making certain comments on legislation. I can uphold the constitutional position I am taking on the basis of precedents.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There are no precedents.

Mr. Turner: I am sure there are precedents, Mr. Speaker, and I find myself in no unusual position. I am sure that hon. members on our side of the house will welcome in the future any criticism made at this stage of certain aspects of this legislation. I hope that some day the definition of a student will be enlarged beyond the one that is in the present act in which it is limited to a full-time student at a post-secondary institution. I hope that some day we will be able to in that definition include night-time and part-time students, especially as they are particularly deserving because after having worked eight or nine hours in a day they use their own free time to further their education.

I also wish to say that a subject which disturbs me is that reciprocity has not yet been achieved between the Canada Student Loans Act and the Quebec Student Loans Act: Despite the fact that in the province of Quebec there is a piece of legislation providing for student loans and bursaries, the fact is that a student under the Canada Student Loans Act may obtain a loan from any of the other nine provinces of Canada to study at a university in the province of Quebec but it is not yet possible for a student coming from the province of Quebec to apply for a loan in Quebec for study outside that province except at a certain restricted list of institutions, one of them being the University of Ottawa and another the University of Moncton.

I would hope that we could look forward some day to students from the province of Quebec being able to obtain loans which would allow them to further their studies in other parts of Canada. I think this is essential if we look forward to mobility in our student population and if we look forward to an exchange of ideas between one province and another, especially between the French speaking and English speaking areas of the country.

One thing is of particular interest to me and that is complete reciprocity between the students of Quebec and those of other provinces. I believe that, in the interest of Canadian unity and of our modern society, our Quebec students should be encouraged to pursue their studies in a province other than that in which they were born.

I am quite agreeable to have outside students carry out their studies in Quebec and, under federal legislation, such students should qualify for students' loans. On the other hand, I would wish that students in the province of Quebec could receive scholarships and loans from the province of Quebec to study elsewhere, without any restrictions.

[English]

My final comment, Mr. Speaker, is that I think many of us in this house realize that what we have achieved over the last two years under the Canada Student Loans Act must of necessity be considered to be an interim measure, and I hope that some day we will move toward a gradual reduction and an eventual abolition of student fees at all levels. That this act has been a useful one I do not think anyone who looks at it in a reasonable way would question. In the first year ended June 30, 1965, 42,500 students borrowed $26,400,000 under the plan, and the figures are running at the same rate in the current academic year. However, if we are to consider a university education in a world where machinery will gradually shorten the work week, where automation will demand more skills to enable our society to compete with the broadening opportunities on the one hand and the greater restrictions of work on the other, a new generation able and equipped to deal with the larger problems of leisure time will have to have open to it as a prime requisite the full scope of education.

I say therefore, in looking at the loans as they now operate, that one of the problems which has been substantiated by the survey taken by the Canadian Union of Students is that the great majority of students who are managing to take advantage of this legislation primarily come from middle-class family backgrounds.

I think the reasons are not hard to find. There are certain psychological barriers which hamper students from less fortunate backgrounds in their ability to approach the administrations for loans. I think the figures speak very clearly for themselves. Only 9 per cent of the university and college population comes from families earning an annual income of $3,000 a year or less. When one considers that 25 per cent of Canadian families have incomes in this range, the disparity becomes even more clear. Nineteen per cent of university students come from families with incomes between $3,000 and $5,000 per year; yet over 32 per cent of Canadian families have incomes within this range. About 52 per cent of Canadian families have incomes less than $5,000 while only about 28 per cent of the university population originates from this income bracket.

I think too that the survey shows, and those of us who have had the opportunity of retaining a close association with the universities and colleges across this country realize, that the majority of the students come from families whose parents' occupation could be classified as white collar, that is, professional or business. We want, I am sure, to broaden the range of the student population much wider than this.

It has been found as well that most of the students who finance their way through university and college depend upon a substantial parental contribution. Indeed, most of those who were interviewed considered this almost a prerequisite before they were able to go to college or remain there. It appears also that a majority of those who have taken advantage of this legislation come from more auspicious financial or social backgrounds. These people, because of family training, are more able psychologically to risk incurring the debt that obtaining a loan requires.

I think the other side of the coin is equally clear. Most students who come from working class families do not appear to be psychologically geared to incurring this debt even if it is advantageously open for them to do so. Many of them reluctantly approach university administrations knowing that, no matter how good the cause, they are going to saddle themselves with debt which may take many years after graduation to discharge. I think it is particularly significant that not many girls, certainly in proportion to their numbers amongst the student population, have undertaken this obligation. If I may use the words of the brief of the Canadian Union of Students, apparently these girls do not wish to undertake obligations which may prove to be a negative dowry. I hope, therefore, it would be the intention of members from all parts of the house some day to arrange the financing of university education, and indeed technical and vocational training, on a basis that would eliminate tuition fees.

I am not suggesting that we should subsidize the small part of the population that may have the talent or initiative to obtain a university education. I hope that in the whole realm of technical and vocational education as well as university education we would move gradually toward the elimination of student fees. I say "gradually" because I think it is particularly important that we do not immediately dislocate the resources already committed to other plans of extreme social importance. I am thinking of medicare, pensions legislation and our commitments to urban renewal. I admit that at this particular moment this is the reason the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) is restricted from moving faster in this field. He has to consider the important obligations we have incurred in the field of social legislation with regard to the aged, the sick, pensioners and so on, so we cannot immediately achieve the elimination of fees. Gradually we should move toward the elimination of fees for all types of education at all levels, and it should be done in such a way that the elimination of those fees does not constitute a subsidy by the rest of the population directly for students.

One suggestion made by the Canadian Union of Students interested me very much, and I am sure members of the house will want to consider it. It was that some day we might convert the loans into scholarship achievement funds. In other words, if a student borrowed $1,000 per year, the maximum amount he is entitled to borrow, and successfully completed his university year he would be entitled to an automatic discharge of the obligation. In effect, this would become a retroactive, non-repayable bursary to him if he proved by his attainments at university that he had used the loan to good advantage.

As I have said, we must approach this subject keeping in mind the limits of the resources this country has already committed in other spheres. I should like to congratulate the minister upon extending certain of the provisions of this legislation and we look forward some day to the enlargement of the scope of this measure. As I said in answer to a question earlier today, I say these things not in any sense of criticism or in any breach of solidarity with my colleagues but for the future improvement of this very liberal piece of legislation.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I must agree with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) that it is rather unusual for a member of the cabinet to enter the debate at this point. I suppose the minister has a responsibility, as the member for St. Lawrence-St. George, to the many students who go to Sir George Williams University. However, I got the impression it was a leadership speech.

I should like to make a few comments, some of which are prompted by the remarks made by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). He seems to be worried about the number of people in university. I think I am right in saying that these loans are available to students who attend the various technical institutes of the country today as well as the community colleges which are now coming into existence. They are not restricted to university students. I do not agree with the contention of the hon. member for Edmonton West that the universities are clogged with people who should not be there, who are not intellectually able to attain a university education. My impression is that in the last few years the universities have been raising their standards of admission. I know this is the case in my own province, so people cannot get in as easily today as they could in the past. I am glad I do not have to do it over again because I am not sure I would meet all the standards.

I challenge the statement of the hon. member for Edmonton West that our universities today have a great many students who are not intellectually able to attain a university education. The standards are going up and this has automatically weeded out a number of people. However, the universities can solve this problem any time they want by raising their own entrance requirements, if indeed such a problem exists.

The other day my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), quoted the figures compiled by the Canadian Union of Students to which the Member of the Administration (Mr. Turner) has just referred. The hon. member for Edmonton West has criticized these figures. He says he does not believe they tell the whole story. It is true, however, that the upper income groups obviously have a great many more of their children in universities than the lower income groups. The basic point is still true. It is more difficult for a student if he comes from a low income family. We are trying to get some equality of opportunity in this country, and I believe the figures presented by the Canadian Union of Students are valid. We should take a very careful look at them. Despite what the hon. member for Edmonton West says, a great many people do have difficulty going to university. It is difficult to get sufficient funds. Students cannot always get summer employment, at least at rates of pay which will give them the kind of money they need to enter university.

The hon. gentleman said that there are bursaries and scholarships going begging in this country. That may be true, but let us accept the fact that many of these are for people who have a high level of ability. I am more concerned about the average university student, the sort of person who may not win intellectual honours but who makes up the bulk of the people in professions such as law, the medical profession and the teaching profession. There are all kinds of people of this sort who have the ability to go to university but do not have the ability to win scholastic prizes. These are the people, coming from families with incomes of $7,000, $6,000, $5,000 and below, who have difficulty going to university in Canada at the present time.

We have been reminded many times that we cannot afford to waste whatever abilities are possessed by those who are capable of university and professional training. This is why we need not only a student loans fund but a system of bursaries of the type which give aid to any student who is able enough to enter university.

The hon. member for Edmonton West also suggested that the emphasis is being put on the wrong place, that we should give more money for capital construction of universities and for appointment of professors. One cannot argue with that, but it comes back to the same old question of priorities. Let us not have any hospital insurance until there are enough hospitals and nurses. Let us not have a medicare program until we have trained sufficient doctors. There is never enough in this sort of context, and if we wait for these things to come about we will never do anything. We must proceed on all fronts at the same time. If we wait until every university has sufficient accommodation and staff before we say that we can now provide free, if you want to use that term, tuition and education, then we will never achieve that situation. In the same way, if we wait until we have enough doctors in the country we will never provide medicare.

My general impression of the speech of the hon. member for Edmonton West was that it was a good Conservative speech of the type we do not always hear from the members of the Conservative party, but I will go on with my own remarks having said something about his speech.

An hon. Member: We express our views.

Mr. Prittie: My point was that the Conservative party has a great many people with different political views, but the speech of the hon. member was a good Conservative speech and I congratulate him for it.

The Member of the Administration (Mr. Turner) was concerned about mobility of students in Canada, and so am I. I reread the debate of 1964 when this measure was introduced for the first time, and I expressed regret at that time that there had to be provincial quotas. It seems to me that higher education in Canada is truly interprovincial. I imagine that at Carleton University and the University of Ottawa there are students from every province in the country. Certainly at the University of Alberta there are students from all parts of Canada. This has to be so, because our universities specialize. It would cost us a great deal more for higher education than it does today if every university in the country attempted to have every type of faculty. Instead, Mr. Speaker, our universities wisely specialize. For example, I believe that in the whole of the country there are only four provincial forestry schools. Therefore people from the other six provinces have to go to one of these four provinces if they want to become forestry engineers. There are also a limited number of dental schools and veterinary schools. Apart from this, I think it is a good idea that students in Canada go to a province other than their own in order to obtain part of their education. It is good for them from the point of view of national unity, something which we are talking about all the time. Therefore this sort of mobility should be encouraged.

That is why I am sorry that we have provincial quotas. I should like to see a national fund set up to which all people who are eligible for university entrance in this country could apply. It seems to me that if sufficient funds were made available this would be a perfectly fair way to operate. I suppose the provincial quotas were instituted because at the time the measure was introduced in 1964 charges were made by some members that it represented interference on the part of the federal government in the realm of education. I do not want to go into that subject in complete detail today. I think one could make a good case in support of federal involvement in education. I did so earlier this year when I introduced a resolution to establish a federal office of education which was debated on February 23. However, I will leave that there.

Long before the Canada student loans fund came into existence the federal government was assisting students, generally postgraduate students. Through the means of the Canada Council and the National Research Council the government has given aid to education for a very long time. It seems to me that the Canada student loans fund is of that same general nature. There is nothing at all wrong with the federal government wanting to assist students in this country by means of the Canada Council and N.R.C. through which it has done so for many years.

There is one other way, Mr. Speaker, in which the federal government could give direct assistance to more students than it is helping at the moment. We regret that the scholarship plan which was advocated by the Liberal party during a number of election campaigns, I believe starting in 1958, has not yet been brought about and that we are still confronted with this student loans fund. However, here is a way in which the government could assist.

For a number of years the federal government has been financing the education of people destined to become regular officers in the armed forces. If they passed the requirements which were demanded by the Department of National Defence these students entered university. Not only did they get their fees paid but they also received an allowance and had summer employment guaranteed them. This scheme has been in operation for personnel required by all branches of the armed forces but particularly for medical personnel. In return for this they have to undertake to serve with the armed forces for a period of years.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the federal government could go further in this field. I am thinking particularly now of the federal civil service. This is a very large organization having a great demand for professional and technical personnel of all kinds. They have to compete with private business, with provincial governments, with municipal governments and with the universities themselves for the people who are needed to staff the departments of the federal government.

I suggest that the Civil Service Commission ought to be given authority to enter into some kind of arrangement to finance the education of students. In return for that assistance from the Civil Service Commission these students could guarantee to serve in the federal civil service for a period of years, just as the people in the armed forces who are taking advantage of the R.O.T.P. plan guarantee to serve in the forces for a given period.

Not only does the civil service have trouble generally competing for the graduates of our universities but it has a problem in one particular field, a problem which will reappear when the report of the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism is presented. We hear the complaint that not enough French speaking university graduates are entering the federal civil service, whether to serve in Ottawa or somewhere else, but that they are working for the government of Quebec or for private industry in that province. It seems to me that this type of plan could be used to attract more French speaking graduates to the federal civil service. I suggest that a plan be instituted much along the same lines as the R.O.T.P. plan for the armed forces and that we not only pay the fees of the students but also give them a certain living allowance.

I should like to mention one other point, Mr. Speaker, in connection with aid to students other than by loans or scholarships. The hon. member for Edmonton West seemed to suggest that there is something all right about the element of struggle, that if you had to work hard in order to get through university—and perhaps the Minister of Finance had to work his way through university—so did a lot of other people too. I remember that when I went to university I had to spend three days a week working in a warehouse and I spent three days a week attending university, and I can testify that is is not the best system. I had to miss out on sports as well as on intellectual activities.

I think that the element of struggle is rather old-fashioned now. I think we should make it easier for people to go to university and be able to obtain the benefits of university life. I do not mind students working during the summertime but I think that while at university their attention should be centred on the activities in the classroom and outside the classroom.

Last week the Minister of Finance in his introductory remarks said that the student loans fund was one stage in the government plan for students, presumably he meant that the scholarships would have to come later. This afternoon the Minister without Portfolio made reference to the same thing. It is an interim step, and he said rather vaguely that he hoped we would be able to achieve tuition free universities in Canada. But how long will this take? The government has now been in office for three years. We have got no farther than the student loan plan. When is the next step going to take place? By next year the first group of students, those who entered university in 1963 when the government took office, will graduate. How many graduations will there be before we get beyond the student loan fund?

I know it is very easy to say that there should be tuition free universities in Canada. But if this country, which is second or third in the world in standard of living, cannot afford it, who can? We must make efforts to this end. It is being done in many places. Many parts of the United States do not charge students college fees. In France, for the most able students in any case, I believe university is completely free. I believe in Uruguay this is the case. Canada should also do this.

How long will it be before we see this I do not know. The Liberals are frequently reminded during election campaigns that a national health insurance plan has been in their program for a long time. It was born in the same year I was, 1919. My hair is getting thin and grey and we have not yet got it. I hope it will not be 40 years before we get a scholarship and tuition free system for students in Canada.

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, the bill now before us is another instance of the constitutional hodge-podge in which we have been plunged by the present government and it is another indication of the continued mix-up in federal-provincial relations. This bill concerns student loans.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. members who stated previously that Canadian students in all provinces need special and substantial help in the present development of our economy, of our industry and our education needs; I am in full agreement with them on this point. But where I differ, it is when the present federal government introduces a bill to amend legislation passed in 1964, to alter or increase the requirements of federal loans to students. On this point I think we are missing the boat. It is most unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, but this is not a federal government responsibility, even though I may be the sole voice to be raised in this house on that point, I am raising it now and I shall continue to do so until the end of my mandate, because we are going at it backwards and I repeat, this is creating across the country tensions and pressures that bode no good for national unity.

I was quite amused a moment ago when the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie) mentioned in his argument that the central government was justified in dealing with education but that he lacked the time to elaborate at this point. Strangely enough, I have never heard a single member during this session or in earlier sessions, when I followed discussions of this house, put forward a basic argument in order to prove that the central government is justified in assuming educational responsibilities, either through student loans or scholarships, which are to be distributed shortly as promised in the platform of the Liberal party, or still by any other indirect or implicit means, as pointed out by the member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) the other day, when he suggested the establishment of a cultural division within the Secretary of State.

Mr. Prittie: You will find my argument in the official report for February 23.

Mr. Allard: Very well, I shall read Hansard for that date, after looking up the page, and then I hope to have the opportunity to comment on the remarks made by the hon. member at that time.

My position will perhaps be termed as over-simple or as anything else, but the responsibilities of the central and the provincial governments are clearly defined and specified in the Canadian constitution, and since it has always been refused to amend the constitution and even to establish a joint parliamentary committee during this session, so as to bring about constitutional reforms—which I favour—the central government must therefore restrict its responsibilities to the specific fields devolved upon it under sections 91 and following.

With regard to education, it is clear; education and teaching belong exclusively to the provinces. It is written in the constitution. The central government can intervene in only one case, and that is when a group in a province suffers some prejudice following a provincial decision, as long as it deals with a denominational matter. That is the whole substance of section 93. The central government does not have the right to interfere in the field of education, except in extraordinary cases, when a complaint is made, and by introducing and passing a compensating legislation here in this house, something no one ever objected to, to correct grievances and prejudices which arose in the past throughout the country.

But it is always the same centralizing method, always that spirit of the government, which is called the federal government, which interferes in all the fields of Canadian activity and which proves itself to be a centralizing government, a government which becomes more and more unitarian, the provinces becoming, by its own decisions and its own implications and interference in fields of activity, mere branches which are a little like the municipalities, to distribute cheques, do unimportant things.

Well, that is not the spirit of the confederative pact of 1867 and it is not the role which Quebec wants to play in a Canadian federalism. That is why I say to all hon. members, who know it very well already, that the province of Quebec, not to show any separatist tendencies, not to quarrel with the rest of the country, does not participate in the unconstitutional, illegal, centralizing, anti-federalist legislative measures in the fields of federal loans to students, school allowances, scholarships which the government is getting ready to hand out. I wonder why hon. members from various parties do not take the floor—particularly those from the province of Quebec—to protest against such important legislative measures which go against the supposedly autonomist and federalist views of the people of Quebec. The cure would not be complicated: the central government which controls three quarters of the big fiscal cake need only give additional amounts to the provinces when equalization payments are made. Those are technical aspects and the provinces would assume their responsibilities in this respect, under the Canadian constitution.

Mr. Speaker, I think the federal government has no right to interfere in areas out of its jurisdiction as was done in many cases prior to 1949, when a final court of appeal existed to deal with constitutional matters. And the central government of that day was ill-advised to take such action, because certain decisions counteracted the centralizing steps it took. At that time, many Privy Council judgments indicated that, in a federal system, a government could not do indirectly what the constitution prohibited from doing directly. In 1964, some hon. members, and particularly the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière, presented a basic and important argument in answer to three Liberal members from the province of Quebec who had been given the task of selling this intrusion by the federal government and who maintained that Ottawa was not interfering in education but was merely making loans through the banks. How hypocritical, Mr. Speaker. And it was alleged at that time that loans were made to farmers and fishermen. However, they neglected to say that under section 95 of the Canadian constitution, the federal government and the provinces have joint jurisdiction in the field of agriculture. Today, also the federal government has jurisdiction in the field of fisheries. But, according to section 93 of the constitution, only the provinces have exclusive jurisdiction in the field of education and teaching.

Well, it has been established by the theory of the "colorated" legislation that the courts consider the purpose of the act, and not its appearance. This legislation is not a loan; it is an act to give assistance in the field of education. If its ultimate result is to legislate in a field coming under another's responsibility, it must be declared null and void.

Well, Mr. Speaker, this act is absolutely ultra vires. I may be told: "In that case, take the matter before the courts." Another anomaly in our system.

We have no constitutional court. We have no court where, in a federative system, the governments, the central and the provincial governments, appoint, in all fairness and equity, representatives to take an equitable decision on constitutional conflicts. We have a supreme court only. I do not quarrel with the competence or the various purposes of that court, but it is the absolute creation of the central government, where the provinces have no representatives; they cannot appoint representatives or judges to that court to take decisions on constitutional problems. The present federal government takes a great deal of interest to all sorts of problems, but it should restrict itself to problems which are not settled and which come under the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) and the various ministers. There are a lot of problems, a lot of hardships and complications in economic and industrial matters in the country which come under section 91 of the federal jurisdiction. The central government should devote all its energy and its ability to settle the problems incumbent upon Ottawa, and mind its own business and leave to the provinces their own jurisdiction. The provinces can manage their own business, Nova Scotia, British Columbia, Newfoundland as well as the province of Quebec. Let the hon. Minister of Finance restore to the provinces their taxing powers. Instead of keeping that pile of money, he can always set up standards of uniformity across the land. And, in the field of education, as in that of culture, the province of Quebec wants to be sole master of the orientation, the development and the survival of education of this generation and of the nation that lives in the stronghold of the province of Quebec. That is why it objects to the dictates of the central government, regardless of what party is in power. It is all very simple. That is why section 93 was inserted in the constitution, in 1867, and why confederation was achieved as a pact, an agreement between the two great founding nations of our country. But it seems all that historical significance has disappeared. Indirect attempts are made, through all sorts of means, through tacit attitudes, to gain access to all fields without the consent of the provinces, and once established in a field of endeavour, the federal government offers the provinces to raise money and co-operate, with the help of federal statistics and federal decisions, in setting up standards.

Well, I say this is going backwards. If the central government and the nine other English Canadian provinces really want the central government to deal with the field of education, I, for my part, have no objection, since I respect the way of thinking of all Canadians.

But then, this government should assume their responsibilities and initiate constitutional reforms. They do not want to reform, they do not create any parliamentary committees, as regards the constitution, they keep on resorting to steps which widen the gap and foster misunderstanding between Canadians, between the province of Quebec and the other nine provinces.

I can well understand the English speaking Canadians from the other nine provinces not objecting to grants in the educational field, either from the central or from the provincial capital. For those Canadians, who have my respect and admiration for their vitality, the success in their personal activities and in the financial and industrial field, this question is a technical one, a mere matter of form.

Dollars may come from the provincial or from the federal capital; it is just a technical matter. They share the same culture, the same educational curricula, the same language, most have the same religion and thus they constitute a group having the same interests in the educational and cultural fields.

But in Quebec it is different. French Canadians make up a nation with rich and diversified sociological elements; they have to retain their own traits to orient their own educational programs. In order to orient the various aspects of this planning the government of the province of Quebec, no matter which one, needs essential revenues.

Thus, we see two different approaches. But why not create a parliamentary committee on constitution that would be a prelude to a national conference, grouping Canadians of good-will, from Halifax to Vancouver? I do not feel that the problem is insoluble. The Canadian people of 1966 are as intelligent as their 1867 forebears, I am convinced of that.

If there are technical aspects, tax-sharing questions, if the province of Quebec, for special reasons, wants to be solely responsible in certain fields, educational or otherwise, while the other nine provinces would rather surrender such a field of activity to the central government, I have no objection to it. All that would be needed is the necessary machinery.

As long as responsibilities are not faced and Canadians of good will are not given the opportunity to come face to face and write down a statement of practical and bicultural federalism, with the provision of a special status for Quebec, and as long as we keep on in this field of federal loans to students which seems to forecast a nation-wide system of scholarships, possibly a department of education, a cultural section in the Secretary of State department, I say that we are going backwards and that tensions, disagreements and misunderstandings are being heightened across Canada.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to take my stand against the principle of this bill.

[English]

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to take part in this debate on the student loans fund. I listened with interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard). He canvassed an area in constitutional law which causes him and perhaps, the province of Quebec a good deal more concern than it causes the province of Nova Scotia.

I have the privilege of representing a constituency in which there is at least one institution of higher learning. Moreover, the province from which I come has always contributed in an outstanding way to the educational advancement of this country. I wish to say that the student loans fund finds favour in Nova Scotia, certainly in the constituency I represent. I have heard speakers say it favours the rich, not the poor. It was interesting to hear the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie) mention priorities. As a member of the N.D.P. he should not scoff at priorities. Priorities and planning form one of the basic tenets of his party. One has to have priorities in certain areas of government and if ever there was an area in which we need a plan it is the area of education. This also applies to medicare.

The one basic complaint I would make against the Canada student loans plan is that we may be putting the cart before the horse in that we are not providing the administrative equipment, the professors and buildings in advance. This also applies to medicare. The medical resources fund came before us after the government said it was going to implement medicare. I think the government should provide the facilities and buildings before starting to fill them with students or patients, but generally this measure is a step in the right direction.

As Confucius said many years ago, a journey of a thousand miles begins with a first step, but this is certainly not a first step because the government has already taken the first plank from the Conservative platform in 1965, thus making my task of supporting this measure easier. It can now add to that plank which advocated student loans, which is a little different from its own plank of student scholarships. The government has adopted a per capita grant of $5 instead of $2 as we in the Conservative party advocated and has followed and continued the program of vocational education which we started and stimulated. If the government can now develop a few planks of its own, so much the better. Having built upon the foundation which this party laid when in office and having adopted our educational platform in 1965, the governmentand the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), are to be commended for their work in regard to the Canada student loans fund.

To give the lie to some of the discussion that has taken place in this chamber on the resolution stage and also today about how this legislation favours the rich and hurts the poor, I would like to quote the figures which the Minister of Finance gave on June 13, as recorded at page 6307 of Hansard, and the figures given in the 1965 Canada Year Book which sets out the total enrolment of university students in the year ended 1964. There will be a certain overlapping because I think the figures used by the minister covered the period to the end of March, 1966. There is not a complete basis for comparison but I think the figures give a certain indication.

In effect the figures support the purpose of this legislation. The province of Prince Edward Island is not renowned for its large professional or elite class. It is a largely rural, agricultural province. It is also a fairly political province at the present time, and maybe the people there need a little more education to help them solve some of their political problems. The Canada Year Book shows that in the year 1964 83 per cent of the students in P.E.I. participated in the Canada Student loans fund. Those to my left may say that if tuition fees were free there would not be many more students in P.E.I. to cover, but I take Prince Edward Island as an example because it does not have a large white-collar class and if a student is deserving he can qualify for aid.

Newfoundland, which also is not renowned for its established professional elite or for affluence, had 59 per cent of its students participating in this plan in the calendar year 1964. In Nova Scotia 47 per cent of the student enrolment participated, over 3,700 out of a total enrolment of 7,700-odd. New Brunswick, which also is not renowned for its elite, professional, vested interest class, had 57 per cent of its students participating.

On the other hand, Ontario, which has much more wealth than many parts of the east, had 45 per cent of its students participating, some 20,000 out of an enrolment of 44,000. In Manitoba the figure was 38 per cent. Saskatchewan, regardless of the tremendous boom given to its economy by the Conservative government by the wheat sales to China, is also not renowned for its professional elite, and 61 per cent of its students participated. In Alberta the figure was 57 per cent and in B.C., one of the richer provinces, 41 per cent participated in the student loans fund.

These figures do more than any verbal dialogue or monologue to indicate that the plan, while it may not go far enough, certainly has been a boon and an aid to deserving students who wish to further their education. In our economy and society there is pressure today to increase and expand the base. There is pressure to eliminate tuition fees but there are other priorities which come first. There are qualifications which a student who aspires to higher education should meet. With student aid, scholarships and bursaries, all deserving students can get that higher education which is so necessary in our modern-day society.

Though in general and in principle there can be no complaint with the student loans fund, administratively there have been some problems but to a large degree they have been ironed out. Initially the processing of applications was very slow. This caused difficulty but over the two year trial period that difficulty has been eliminated to a large degree.

The six months interest free period after graduation is pretty short. I suggest a small amendment to the administrative provisions of the act whereby the interest free period would be extended, thus providing more time to a graduate to get established either matrimonially or in business before starting to repay the loan with interest.

As I say, though not related directly, there are certain features in the student loans bill which correspond to medicare and the medical resources resolution. The government has stated clearly that regardless of provincial objection it is going to introduce medicare. Toward that end it has introduced the health resources fund. I say the government is putting the cart before the horse in many ways. The student loans legislation is running into the same problem. It is providing money to aid students to go to university but because of the tight money policy enforced by the Minister of Finance, especially as it is applied to the maritime provinces, there are universities which have not been able to get loans from the banks in order to expand.

This problem is going to grow greater unless the minister and the government in the very near future start to apply fiscal policies on the basis of regions rather than giving a blanket, castor oil treatment to the whole country.

Mr. Stewart: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Nowlan: I will permit it but I do not know if I can answer it.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Stewart: I should like to ask the hon. member to explain to the house just what mechanism he would use to apply a monetary policy to one region of the country rather than to the country as a whole?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that if I, like the hon. member who asked the question, were sitting on the government benches with the responsibility of the Minister of Finance and the advice available to him, I could devise some policy which could be applied on a regional basis with fiscal preferences in order to stimulate the economy and would do more good than a general application of the castor oil treatment. Everyone knows that you cannot give the same dose of castor oil to ten different babies and that the province of Nova Scotia is pretty close to being the financial and economic baby of this country. You cannot stimulate by giving a general application of the castor oil treatment. In fact, you can cause many unfortunate illnesses or perhaps even constipation of the economy.

Mr. Stewart: May I ask the hon. gentleman another question?

Mr. Nowlan: You may cause fiscal constipation.

Mr. Stewart: Is the unwillingness of the hon. gentleman to answer my question an indication that he does not know of any monetary mechanism which could be applied on only a regional basis?

Mr. Nowlan: I am sure the hon. member is well aware of the protests which have come from the eastern part of this country regarding designated areas. That is one illustration of how the maritimes could be assisted.

Mr. Stewart: That is not a matter of monetary policy.

Mr. Nowlan: So far as the question is concerned I will wait until a member of this party has the responsibilities of the Minister of Finance, at which time I am sure that a monetary and fiscal policy will be devised to help areas in this country on a regional basis. I had intended to speak about the principle of this legislation. If I try to answer any more questions of the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough I may lose my benign and benevolent spirit.

Basically I think the principle behind this legislation is good and I do not think there is any reason for keeping the Minister of Finance here during a further discussion. However, I know of case histories where the education of individuals has been curtailed by an inability to obtain loans from banks because of tight money. I am sure if the hon. member, who was in Nova Scotia last week, had consulted with the bursar at St. Francis Xavier or at Dalhousie he would have discovered that potential students for the first time in the history of these universities are not able to get approval for loans from banks because of the tight money policy.

The principle behind the legislation is good and the 47 per cent figure, quoted as the national average participation excluding the the province of Quebec, speaks well for the fund. It also speaks well for those students who are prepared to accept a financial burden in order to obtain a higher education and are prepared to work hard and make sacrifices in order to do so. I think we must remember that there are at this stage of our development many other more pressing priorities.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak briefly on second reading in support of this bill. A study of the results of the working of this law over a period of two years shows that 41,000 students obtained loans in the first year and over 50,000 in the second year. These figures definitely prove that there has been a need for this type of legislation and indicate that it has already played a national role in this country.

Students who obtained loans under this legislation had to meet strict provincial criteria. In some cases the criteria were narrower and more strict than they perhaps needed to be, making it difficult for some deserving students to obtain necessary funds. This is, however, a matter perhaps not completely under the control of the federal authority.

It is clear therefore that without this legislation tens of thousands of students would not have been able to pursue their studies in the manner they have been able to. The use made of this legislation demonstrates that without it we had not yet reached the stage where any student who could qualify, as suggested by one member of the official opposition, would have been able to obtain the necessary funds to pursue a university education. Contrary to what apparently was suggested by the same representative of the official opposition, I do not think there are many students in universities today who should not be there. I am sure the facts will show that the reverse is true and that there are many people not attending universities today who are quite capable of following university studies. There are many people who have accepted jobs which do not demand the full measure of their ability.

Surely the dollar cannot be used as a useful measure of vocational guidance. If we must have some system of vocational guidance in this country for directing or choosing people for attending university, the worst system of all is one related to financial circumstances. It seems to me, contrary to the views expressed by several members who have participated in the debate, that there is no reason why a student from a family of modest means should have to work after school or on week ends in order to obtain a university education when other students of more favourable economic means are able instead to study, read and partake in extra-curricular activities. I do not think any real argument can be made today to support the suggestion that someone from a family of modest means should not have the same opportunity of using week ends and after school hours for studying as the student from a family of higher economic standard. We very seldom if ever hear those individuals who say there is something valuable and wonderful about struggling for an education suggesting that every student should earn every dollar required to obtain a higher education.

I have never heard anyone advance the argument that even a student from a family of means should prove that he has earned personally every dollar needed for his university education before being admitted. The fact that this argument is never advanced demonstrates that there is not necessarily any moral advantage in having to struggle for an education.

I support the concept that has been put forward in this house this afternoon of extending this type of legislation to those seeking higher education on a part-time basis or through evening courses. I also support the concept of making loans available to students living in Canada who are taking courses in countries other than Canada. In many cases the types of courses required are not available in Canada or in those Canadian communities in which the students normally live.

This legislation has already been of great benefit to tens of thousands of Canadian students and it is a step forward to the time when university fees, in the sense we think of them today, will be eliminated so that higher education will be available truly on the basis of ability rather than means.

There are all sorts of possible uses for every dollar the federal government has available. There are many requests forthcoming for federal assistance and in almost every case sound arguments can be advanced. The federal government must do everything it can, as must every level of government, to deal fairly with all requests for financial assistance. There is a special urgency to deal with the needs of those seeking higher education today. It is clear that only through the higher productivity which is developed by increasing the level of education and skill in our society can we generate the greater government revenues needed in order to extend our programs of social assistance for the aged and other needy groups in our society who are justly calling for more assistance today and will continue to do so in the future.

[Mr. Gray.]

I think it is also clear that no matter what the formal constitutional requirements may be at the present time with regard to taking into account the status of the provinces in matters of education, the federal government in general can be supported and should be supported in the use of its means and influence in making post-secondary education available to all Canadians on an equal basis no matter where they live in our country and no matter in what part of Canada they wish to study. Mr. Speaker, I support second reading of this bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to unduly drag on the debate on Bill C-197, an act to amend the Canada Student Loans Act, because, as everybody knows, the province of Quebec keeps out of federal plans in education. It insists that section 93 of the British North America Act which provides very clearly that education is a matter of provincial jurisdiction be complied with.

No matter whether it be in a western province, in a maritime province, in Ontario or in Quebec, education comes under the exclusive jurisdiction of provinces and not at all under federal jurisdiction.

A few moments ago, I heard members from the maritimes, for instance, or from western Canada, say how pleased they were that the federal government was intervening, meddling with the field of education, they were pleased. We have no objection if all the other Canadian provinces prefer centralization in the field of education, but we in Quebec do object to federal interference in provincial matters.

It is my sincere belief, Mr. Speaker, that the new Quebec provincial government, elected hardly two weeks ago, will jealously defend its provincial rights, making sure that education will be respected in the province of Quebec and that it will fall under provincial jurisdiction as provided under section 93 of the British North America Act.

Mr. Speaker, this does not mean that the federal government cannot provide assistance. The federal government can help the provinces to solve the education problem. And the only way to help solve this serious and thorny problem would be for the federal government to make available to the provinces the amounts required to provide for the education of young people in those Canadian provinces.

The federal government would then be respecting provincial jurisdiction or autonomy and acting according to its rights, for monetary policy is a federal and not a provincial responsibility.

The provinces are precisely complaining about the lack of money to help education in their respective territory. Let the federal government deal with the financial problem which is its responsibility, not by bills entailing running into debt which will force our students to meet financial obligations in four, five or six years, when they will face other and more important ones.

In order to allow these students to meet their other obligations, it is the duty of the federal government to help us financially to provide greater educational opportunities for our young people.

That is why—and most members of parliament, whatever party they belong to, know this—an economist named Robert Theobald, attaché or adviser of the government in Washington, advocates an advance salary for students, proving clearly that a student works for the future of his country as much as a factory or ordinary worker. Let the student therefore receive an advance salary, since he is valuable, representing for Canada a real source of future wealth and an almost incalculable potential.

If we consider the student as a real source of future wealth for Canada, why mortgage it, why make him run into debt by passing such bills? Why not provide education for all without exception, and give those who have the necessary qualities an advance salary to allow them to continue their studies?

Mr. Speaker, the federal government can play its part in this field, by giving to the provinces the financial means to administer their educational system; by enabling the provinces to make education available to all, not only to the rich or the average man but also to the poor among whom there are still a very large number of minds to cultivate and improve. We find some, Mr. Speaker, in all Canadian provinces.

We are now asking the federal government to play its part and not that of others. I shared the view of the former Quebec government as I share the opinion of the present Quebec government which would like to enforce the spirit and the letter of the law, with respect to education, without being discriminatory.

We are not asking for anything that would prove detrimental to the other provinces; we are asking that everybody and every province without any exception be treated equally. However, as I pointed out a moment ago, if the other provinces want to get together and centralize their education system here in Ottawa, they are free to do so, but we, in Quebec, are also free in this respect.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I wish to point out that there is but one solution to the problem, not fifty. Loans to students amount to debts they have to repay and they will not save the situation. Students should be given advance salaries, and to do so the federal government could use the Bank of Canada to finance education in the provinces. Then it would not be necessary for the maritime provinces to come to Ottawa and ask how the children of Halifax, Saint John, N.B., or elsewhere will be educated. The maritime provinces could then administer their own education system which they could finance themselves, as in the western provinces and as we want to do in the province of Quebec.

In closing, I suggest that the federal government should work in its own fields to the solution of its own problems and give the provinces the financial and monetary latitude to administer provincial affairs, this to be applicable to any province in Canada.

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, as to the merits of this bill I support in general what has been said by other members of this party. I think they have dealt with it adequately and successfully and little more need be said on that score. There is only one aspect I wish to bring up. The recent increases in wages and the recent welfare programs which have been introduced in this country have set the country off on a spree of inflation, and anything we can do to counter it by working toward increased productivity is all to the good. Therefore I suggest that to the extent that this program will in due course have that effect it is one which should be supported.

I listened with interest to the statement made in a very forceful and eloquent manner by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) on the constitutional aspects of this measure and its parent act, and to the statement made by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) who in general took the same stand. I think this is something which should concern us all. It is my view that the division of responsibility between the provincial and federal governments should be likened to a stream of clear water with the boundary running through its middle. But the government has so badly muddied the stream's waters through a series of federal provincial conferences and through indecisive wavering from one side of the stream to the other that it is very difficult at times to decide on what side of this constitutional barrier we are. For that reason I think it behooves us, after listening to what was said by the hon. member for Sherbrooke, to decide whether or not he has made a point which deserves consideration. I give full credit to his constitutional and scholastic learning.

This is my position, Mr. Speaker. As a centralist and one who believes in one nation with the requisite strength to carry out the responsibilities which a nation should undertake I want the central government to have all the powers it requires to make it a viable unit. I look at this bill in the light of what has been said by the hon. member for Sherbrooke and if this house undertakes, in breach of the constitution, to intrude itself into areas where it has no business then my position must be just as strong in defending the rights of the provinces as it is in defending the federal strength in areas where it lies. I am a centralist who believes in a strong central government for one nation.

On examining this measure and its parent act I wish to note that parliament has ample authority and full jurisdiction with regard to matters dealing with banks and banking. The Privy Council in a series of decisions, in particular one involving litigation carried to that body as a result of legislation passed in the province of Alberta, gave to the words "banks" and "banking" the fullest and widest meaning. I would suggest that an examination of the original act indicates that this legislation contains to a very substantial degree measures concerning banks and banking. It simply qualifies and defines the type of person who is entitled to receive the benefits of the legislation.

If my memory serves me correctly, the only case I was ever able to find in which the right of the federal government to enact what is called the family allowance legislation was challenged was one in Quebec. I believe it was a court in Quebec which held that family allowances fell squarely within the rights of the federal government whose responsibility it was to raise funds by means of taxation and to distribute those funds as it did in the scheme contained in the Family Allowances Act. I think there is some comparison between that case and the present legislation.

This is the second aspect of the legislation which we consider can be supported. Any doubts on this score can be dispelled by an examination of the interpretation section of the original act. In section 2, subsection (1) (e), it is provided that a "certificate of eligibility" means a certificate in prescribed form issued by a provincial government. In subsection 1(k) it is provided that a "specified educational institution" means an institution of learning prescribed by a provincial government. In other words, as I read the pertinent sections of the legislation it is only when the provincial government and the proper authorities of that government see fit to prescribe the type of institution which can be covered and to give a certificate of eligibility to the student that he can become eligible for a loan. While I listened with great respect to the hon. members for Sherbrooke and Villeneuve, under those conditions I must say that I can see no reason why this parliament should not deal with these amendments as it did with the original legislation in 1964.

I have felt it necessary to make these remarks because of my very strong feeling with regard to the need to ensure that this parliament retains the full right to deal with those matters which are completely essential to the proper government of this nation and that there should be no interference with and impairment of those rights by any provincial government. I think it is equally incumbent upon us to be the guardians of the rights of the provinces in all of those areas which are undoubtedly and unrestrictedly under provincial jurisdiction. However, I suggest with great deference that this is not one of those cases.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, whenever I have the opportunity to rise in the house to take part in the debate on a bill, whether Bill No. C-197 or any other, I always think of the French saying: "Criticism is easy, Art is difficult." This helps me to broach the question with moderation and matter-of-factness, and to criticize only in a constructive way, and not with overwhelming praise, in an effort possibly to improve the proposed legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to speak at any length: Only some unconnected observations. I should like to endorse some statements previously made. I should also like to express some opinions at a variant from those already uttered. For instance, I was astonished when I heard the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner), Member of the Administration, say that it was unfortunate to note that in the case of Quebec, there lacked what he called reciprocity. As if, for instance, Quebec students benefitting from certain loans, were to be deprived if they were to go and study in other Canadian institutions or in institutions outside Canada. That is not normal. On the whole, the purpose of this legislation is to help education, and it seems to me all opportunities should be given in any branch of learning which a Canadian student might wish to undertake. I myself have in my files many cases of students from my constituency who have complained of what might be called discrimination.

Now, with regard to the federal government, I think that this discrimination is much less prevalent and that there might not be any reason to intervene strongly even if there are still some cases which should be corrected.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) stated that our universities are full of students who do not seem qualified. I do not know if that is the case out west, but in the provinces which I had the opportunity to visit, namely Ontario, Quebec and the Maritimes, I do not think that it is. I think that our institutions of higher learning are full, that is true, but it cannot be said that they are full of unqualified young people, far from it, because I go as far as thinking that quite a large number who would be qualified, who would like to continue their studies are refused because facilities are lacking. It might be a good idea then to step up also the financing programs for the development of universities or the construction of new schools.

Mr. Speaker, a little earlier I listened to the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) who said this, more or less: Each government should mind its own business. He repeats it differently: Cobbler stick to your last. There seems to be something illogical in what he was saying. After stating that he had nothing to complain about as far as the province of Quebec was concerned, since it is not covered by this bill, he insisted strongly on the fact that the provincial jurisdiction should not be interfered with.

I agree with him, just the same, that if our friend from the Ralliement Créditiste succeeded in solving what can be called the financial problem, or in operating the financial reform, there might be fewer problems, but I am not competent enough in that field and I have no suggestion to offer him. I listen to him with great interest but I must admit just the same that I do not see yet any practical conclusion, even if I see some very theoretical ones, to his undertaking.

Mr. Speaker, I come to another remark made a while ago by a member of the opposition. He said, and I had noticed that myself in the legislation, that those loans must be granted simply for students who register in institutions approved by the provincial governments. I feel that such an intervention is not warranted. I think that the limits should be extended. I even believe that if it wanted to no longer lay itself open to criticism with regard to constitutional matters, the federal government should try not to interfere and the provinces should do the same thing.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word about the attitude of my colleague, the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard). Hon. members might find amusing that, apparently, I do not share his opinion; this simply proves that we are two independent members but, by and large, my opinion is not so different from his. Now, my colleague, the hon. member for Sherbrooke, a constitutional law professor, an expert in constitutional law and a perfectionist, at least in matters pertaining to the constitution, somewhat reminds me of what goes on in most Christian religions. Some Christians try, in good faith, to be as virtuous as they can, although not necessarily trying to be heroes; on the other hand, some religious orders tend toward perfection, often with an exemplary stubbornness which is not always realistic.

I think the hon. member for Sherbrooke is probably right in raising his voice every time constitutional matters come up in the house, but the laymen, and I among them, who are not too familiar with the fine points he discusses, believe he should be a little more realistic.

Students today should not be deprived of what they are entitled to, while endless constitutional disputes go on. As far as I know, these arguments have been going on for the past 30 years and there are just as many problems today as there were then or will probably be for the next 25 or 30 years. Therefore, I think that today's generation should not be deprived, on account of constitutional scruples, of that to which it is entitled.

Now, some maintain this is interference in the field of education on the part of the government. With my little knowledge—Mr. Chairman, I admit my incompetence—I do not think this is federal interference in the field of education. It seems to me that the ten provinces have their own education departments and look after their education problems. The only thing is that the federal government is putting what I call a temporary measure, which will certainly not last indefinitely, at the disposal of the provinces that do not have the financial resources to provide for the needs of their students.

Until these constitutional problems are settled—it is to be hoped they will be settled one day—I for one once thought that the time had come to do so, but I note, for instance, that we should start by being in agreement in the province of Quebec.

There are two or three trends, and I believe that as long as Quebeckers do not learn to agree among themselves, at least on what they require as standards in the Canadian constitution, it will be quite difficult for them to sit together with Canadians of other provinces to try to reach a formula. Otherwise, we could have the opinion of a group, and the other would not be satisfied. I think that the time has not yet come.

Mr. Speaker, I now come to my main conclusion, while hoping that these constitutional questions will be settled as soon as possible.

The federal government must fully carry out its responsibilities under the constitution. The federal government has understood since it entrusted the province of Quebec with administering this student loans fund. Thus, the matter is settled from the constitutional standpoint. If the other nine provinces want to carry on with the central government—I am under the impression that agreements have been reached with the federal government—then there is no violation of the constitution or if there is, it is by mutual consent of the parties concerned. As I am from the province of Quebec, I have nothing to say about what is going on in the other provinces.

But, Mr. Speaker, I maintain that the federal government should encourage banks to grant loans to sututdents, until education is free at least at the upper level. That would be desirable until we have what has been called the advanced salary. The federal government should encourage loans and should force banks and caisses populaires to lend money to students for education purposes.

[Mr. Mongrain.]

And all this bona fide, without any federal or provincial control or restriction. Any Canadian businessman can borrow from the bank to operate his business, to make improvements to his buildings, he can get a long-term loan, for four years. Now, why should the federal government not give the banks the right to make 10-, 12- or 15-year loans to students who want to prepare themselves to become leaders in the Canadian community, and why could the government not intervene, by paying the interests for instance? If the total amount of loans came as high as $58 million—it could reach $75 million with the additional amounts that would be authorized in each case—and even $100 million, or yet $200 million, that would mean that at 5 per cent interest, the federal government would pay out $10 million interest annually. It would be paying very little to train the experts we need. We are being told that we lack almost 1,500 to 1,800 technicians and engineers every year in Canada.

I feel the government should make such loans easier to obtain and do away with the red tape such as we find here: "such amount must not be exceeded; the institution must be approved by the province—". Why not let the student attend the school of his choice where he may get the specialized training he needs to become a leader. Let us help him by paying the interest involved and extending the period of repayment until he begins to earn his living. On the other hand, he should be assured that if death or illness should prevent him from repaying his loan, his estate or his family would not be charged the costs he incurred to attain a higher level of education enabling him to be a Canadian, a leader. In short, Mr. Speaker, those are my views on the subject.

In conclusion, I say that the government proposal contained in Bill No. C-197 is a worthy effort which should surely be encouraged, even though it is still not perfection itself, keeping in mind that it is easier to criticize than to accomplish, in the hope that the government will implement all the constructive suggestions made to help it attain perfection in that field, since it is one of the most vital fields requiring our attention without delay.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, if I may have the consent of the house to close the debate on second reading, as I am acting for the Minister of Finance—

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, if the minister is acting for the Minister of Finance and wishes to conclude the debate, then I want to say that there are other members who wish to speak on this subject. I do not want to utilize my opportunity at this moment, but with the departure of the minister I thought that on a matter as important as this the government might feel constrained to move the adjournment of the debate. I think that would be the proper course. It is not very conducive to parliamentary debate to continue in the absence of the minister. I know he has to be away but my understanding was that the debate would be adjourned until his return. However, I do not know whether I have any foundation for that belief.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, if we cannot get unanimous consent I believe there is no alternative but for me to move adjournment of the debate at this stage. Therefore I move that this debate be now adjourned.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

On the order:

Second reading of Bill C-200, an act to amend the Customs Tariff—the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, I think it was probably intended that the customs tariff and excise tax bills should be left over until the return of the minister also.

Order stands.

CANADIAN FILM DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PROVISION FOR DEVELOPMENT OF FEATURE FILM INDUSTRY

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to establish a corporation to be known as the Canadian Film Development Corporation for the purpose of fostering and promoting the development of a feature film industry in Canada; to empower the corporation to invest in individual Canadian feature film production, to make loans to producers thereof, to make awards for outstanding accomplishments in the productions of Canadian feature films, to make grants to film-makers and film technicians, to otherwise advise and assist the producers of Canadian feature films; to provide for the administration of the said corporation; also to appropriate for the purposes of the measure a sum of $10 million to be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund from time to time and to establish in the consolidated revenue fund a special account to be known as the Canadian film development advance account to which amounts may be charged or credited as the case may be.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, this resolution has been on the order paper for some weeks and arises by virtue of the announcement made in September last year by my predecessor. This is the first opportunity the house has had to deal with the matter. Perhaps I might deal with the thought behind the resolution and the bill which it will support.

I am informed that in Canada there are some 1,400 movie houses which offer film fare to local patrons. At the box offices of these cinemas something close to 100 million admissions will be sold this year. By the end of the year audiences will have seen several hundred different feature films. Of that total fewer than half a dozen, perhaps as few as two or three, will have been made in Canada by Canadians.

The fact is that there is at this moment no feature film industry in this country. It is true that there is an occasional full-length motion picture made, usually on a very modest budget; but there is no continuity of production and no industry as such. Hence there is no real opportunity in this universally popular medium for Canadians of talent and technical skill to make their careers.

Several factors account for our dependence on entertainment films from abroad. We in Canada have always been keen moviegoers, but our home market simply is not large enough to sustain domestic film production at an economic level. The importation of foreign films has never in this country been restricted and our screens have always been amply supplied—one might even say inundated—with films of all levels of quality from the vast output of the studios in the United States of America and Europe. Against this kind of overwhelming competition Canadian producers have never been offered by their government compensating advantages.

Elsewhere the governments of nearly every country except the United States have recognized that the growth, and indeed the very survival, of a national film industry will require state support. This takes a number of forms in different countries, including remission of entertainment taxes, grants tied to the level of box office activity, awards for quality, guarantees and various kinds of help in financing of productions. One or another form of assistance is available to producers not only in countries of relatively small population but even in the larger countries as well such as Britain, France and Italy.

In recent years film activity in Canada has grown steadily, but motion picture companies are engaged almost entirely in making industrial and documentary films and television commercials. Films of that kind as well as feature films call for a wide range of skills and technical facilities of the first quality. With the kind of knowledge and experience gained in that way an increasing number of film-makers and technicians are seeking to move into the field of major productions.

The creation of a major feature film industry will offer to Canada a new dimension of opportunity for those who are engaged in all branches of the performing arts. There are in Canada many fine actors and actresses, dancers and singers, who appear on stage and on television, and behind them are many theatrical crafts, such as set and costume designing, lighting and sound technicians, whose prospects should be very materially enhanced by this program.

May I, Mr. Chairman, emphasize the major contribution my colleague, the hon. member for Outremont-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lamontagne), and the former Canadian film commissioner, Mr. Guy Roberge, now delegate general of Quebec in London, have made in the launching of this project.

My predecessor as Secretary of State initiated this plan to help the film industry. The Canadian film industry will owe him the financial machinery required for its establishment and development.

The Canadian people as a whole have him to thank for making available such an essential cultural medium.

Without the enthusiasm and the devotion of Mr. Guy Roberge, the seventh art might still be marking time.

Indeed, it was under his capable chairmanship that an interdepartmental committee set to work and, in August 1965, submitted a report that served as a basis for this bill.

I am confident the house will join me in expressing our thanks to these two promoters of Canadian culture.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

[English]

After close study of the existing situation and assessment of the potential of Canadian creativity, the government is introducing this new measure to promote and help the growth of the film industry. It is proposed to establish a $10 million development fund and to set up a business corporation to administer it.

Because the production of a feature film is a high risk undertaking, Canadian film-makers encounter great difficulty in obtaining sufficient financing to enable them to undertake major projects. The new agency will be empowered to invest in film productions which, in the judgment of the corporation, show promise of being intrinsically worthy and likely to succeed in commercial distribution. By the terms of investment the corporation will share in the proceeds from the distribution of the films and will be entitled to reinvest this income in further productions. The corporation may also meet some part of film budgets by loans to producers. To encourage and maintain continuity of the industry, awards are to be available for outstanding achievement in feature film productions. Film-makers and technicians may receive grants as well to assist them in improving their skills through study, experiment and research.

We should, Mr. Chairman, be under no illusion about the difficulties which Canadian producers will face in building up a commercially viable industry in this country. They will have to make it commercially viable by exporting their work, which will have to be done by virtue of profitable distribution arrangements. Canadian films must prove good enough to win their own place on world screens.

Even in Canada home producers will continue to face stiff competition from imported films. Many countries, in order to encourage the distribution of their own films, have applied quotas. This has guaranteed to their own producers a certain share of the market. We have chosen, however, not to introduce this kind of restriction in the bill at this time. Canadian films must, therefore, make it on their own merits. But in rejecting quotas we are counting on film distributors and cinema chains to give more than ordinary support to the aims of this program. It is extremely rare for a feature film to begin its screen career in Canada. Every important film reaches our theatres on a wave of publicity which is started well before we see it in Canada. Canadian films will lack that advantage and must therefore have bigger and more aggressive promotion by distributors and exhibitors here and abroad.

Canadian producers will have to give the closest attention to the problems of distribution abroad. In the questions I am asked today it seems to me that ones relating to distribution arise most frequently. In Canada there are already companies in this field which have valuable links with other markets in other countries. It is intended that the film development corporation should help facilitate trading arrangements. Canadian producers will need the good will and good offices of these established interests to ensure that film distribution becomes a two-way process in Canada.

The production and distribution of feature films is increasingly international in character, the product of agreements between collaborators in separate countries. This device of co-production can have marked advantages for the Canadian producer. The joint resources of the producing organizations provide a wider choice of talented performers, directors and technical participants and effectively strengthen distribution of the completed film. These should prove especially important considerations in the early stage of the industry, which we hope will soon begin to grow.

The goal of this resolution goes well beyond the immediate practical aim of giving financial support to the development of film production. Motion pictures are an important element in our cultural life. They should serve a national purpose and reinforce our Canadian identity. Over the years Canada has achieved an enviable reputation for the quality of documentary and short films but not for feature films. It is time the gap was closed and that audiences everywhere, within and outside the country, should come to know the range and the depth of our Canadian expression.

I suppose there is not a child in the country who cannot mention at least one screen luminary of the past 50 years who has come from Canada. Unhappily our artists have all had to go in the past to France, the United Kingdom or to the United States in order to find opportunity and gain recognition. A flourishing feature film industry will give Canadian film-makers, performing artists and technicians of all crafts associated with film-making a role to play in the cultural development of the country. It will be a stimulus for authors and composers to direct their creative energies to a new field. The process of making motion pictures and the wide exhibition should serve to bring Canadians into a closer and more fruitful association and help us to gain fuller awareness of our immense spiritual resources.

It is not intended, Mr. Chairman, that the $10 million fund to be set up should be used to make two or three men rich. It is not intended that we assist in the commercial development of an industry already well able to stand on its own feet. On the contrary, it has been demonstrated that in Canada the film industry has not been able to stand on its own feet by virtue of our small population and huge geographical expanse. Nor is it intended to hand this money out to individuals as a sort of charitable assistance. It is intended and hoped by the government to assist in this country, along the lines followed in other countries, in the bringing about of a viable industry. That industry will have to export. We think that Canadian artists, directors and technicians have something to say which the world wants to hear. We as the government are prepared, should the house agree, to assist them in saying what they have to say to the whole world.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, may I set the hon. lady's mind at rest by indicating to her that we of the Conservative opposition support the resolution she has just presented. When I examine the resolution I think of the phrase, "excite the bold and encourage the daring", which was used some time ago. This resolution is the first manifestation of those words. What the minister had to say about legislating artistic and fiscal success in such a high cost industry as the motion picture industry is refreshing. It is also refreshing to hear that a fairly toughminded approach is going to be taken toward this problem, and for that the minister is to be commended. However, I must ask whether it is possible to legislate artistic and fiscal success. I shall have several other questions to ask in my brief contribution to this debate.

I should like to see this corporation placed on as firm a foundation as possible consistent with good business practice. This is good Conservative philosophy. We should like to break the four minute mile record but as Conservatives we want to see that the track is well laid before starting down it because we might break our necks.

Most of the problems to be solved were detailed by the hon. lady in her contribution. She said that we have small audiences in Canada in relation to the cost of the product we wish to develop and that we would have to show these films abroad if they were to be successful financially. We shall expect that some films will never pay their way but this should not be a criterion against producing them. I think financial loss should simply produce a go slow sign against accepting any idea from any production source.

There is the problem of getting the films into the mainstream of the 1,400 Canadian theatres that the minister mentioned. She indicated that while the quota system would be initially rejected and the distributors, which are largely United States companies, would not initially be required to show a certain number of Canadian films in Canadian theatres, this aspect would be reviewed. I commend this approach. If hinting to the distributors does not work we may have to take a second look at this matter.

The point that occurs to me is that the Canadian Film Development Corporation must be set up very carefully. Personnel should not be appointed to this corporation as a reward for some misadventure on the political scene. They will have to be knowledgeable people. They will have to be people not only from the world of the arts but also from the world of business.

We have themes in Canada which suggest themselves for production. I think of Laura Secord, that fine, homespun heroine whose memory marches on in the pages of history books and on the covers of candy boxes. I would not wish on the minister the chore of walking through the woods leading a cow and shouting "Excelsior, the Americans are coming." There might be a danger that wide-eyed amateur enthusiasts would take to the corporation themes which, while of great Canadian interest, would not prove to be artistic successes. We look at the films which are successful today and I am sure the heroines are far removed both bodily and spiritually from heroines like Laura Secord.

Mr. Grafftey: Explain.

Mr. McCleave: I will not fall into the trap set by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi by explaining further. I had thought of a heroine for a film dealing with very current Canadian history. But I forbear. She did live in Canada for a while.

An hon. Member: It might be a smash hit.

Mr. McCleave: There is the question of investment in Canadian films. When I first saw the resolution I considered alternative approaches which might be used to ensure that finance was made available for Canadian productions without tying up part of the federal revenue. I thought of insured loans from the banks. Then I decided this would be impracticable because some films would obviously take a long time to break even and bankers do not want to wait a long time for their money. A second approach could be through an institution such as the Industrial Development Bank on a longer term basis. Perhaps what the minister proposes, a corporation with a certain amount of money of its own, will achieve the same result if certain of the principles applied by the Industrial Development Bank are followed.

I do think we need certain principles here. The minister has indicated it will not be possible for everybody to come off the street with an idea and have that idea translated into an expensive film production. I think she is definitely on the right track there.

I wonder whether the hon. lady has recognized that the cost of film-making is high. We read every week about United States productions which began with budgets of a few million dollars and ultimately went over the $10 million mark. In short, I doubt that the $10 million suggested by the minister will be adequate to accomplish all she hopes may be done. Perhaps at a later stage in this debate there will be some indication of the budgeting proposals in connection with the operation of the Canadian Film Development Corporation.

Another suggestion I wish to make is that we should have the benefit of the views of those now engaged in the film industry in Canada. I realize they have made representations to most, if not all, of the parties in this house and that in general they are in favour of the setting up of the Canadian Film Development Corporation. After all, they have made films in this country for some years. They could tell us about the costs likely to be involved, distribution problems and so on. It is for this reason that I suggest the bill should be referred to the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts where we could hear the views of some of these film companies on the legislation.

I think it has always been recognized that the maintenance and fostering of Canadian arts must often receive generous support from the state. We are breaking no new ground here. I support the resolution. I say that we in Canada have the talent and that it is now up to us to encourage it in connection with the important film production industry.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, we join in welcoming this legislation to help establish a Canadian feature film industry. It will not guarantee its establishment but it may make it possible. The minister dealt briefly with the reasons we have not had a feature film industry in Canada. She correctly mentioned our proximity to the United States. The Americans have produced so much in English on film that we have not made the effort. I think this is true of many fields including scientific and educational research. So much has been going on in the United States that we in Canada have felt there was little use trying to compete.

This branch-plant thinking is part of the answer but I do not think it is the whole answer. Lack of ownership and control of Canadian movie theatres is one factor. The minister said there were 1,400 motion picture theatres in this country. Very few of these are Canadian owned and the whole question of profitable film production is closely tied to the facilities available for distribution.

The minister also mentioned the number of Canadians who will attend motion picture theatres this year. I do not recall whether she told us how much money they would spend, but over the years a very large sum has been accumulated by motion picture theatres in Canada and as far as I know none of it has been plowed back into the Canadian motion picture industry as has been done in a number of other countries.

It has been said that if the majority of people in Canada spoke some tongue other than English we would by now have a film industry in this country. The fact that we speak the same language as our giant neighbour has been an inhibiting factor.

Look at what has been happening in some other countries. Consider Sweden which has a thriving motion picture industry. If the Swedes are to have films in Swedish, that is the only place where they can be made. If the people of Holland are to have motion pictures in which the actors speak Dutch, then obviously they will be produced in Holland as, indeed, is the case. Surprisingly enough, Hong Kong, a British Crown colony, is one of the leading film production centres of the world. I say nothing as to the quality of these pictures but certainly the quantity is great. The other great United States neighbour, Mexico, has a much larger film industry than we have in Canada although it can get films in the Spanish language from many places in the world. Again, this suggests a close relationship between film production and the language spoken. Necessity is the mother of invention. This adage often occurs to me when I think of the French language productions of the C.B.C. in the television field.

At the time the French television network of the C.B.C. was started there was practically no French language television in the world. France had just begun its television program but there was no French television in Switzerland or in Belgium. Our people had to produce television programs from their own resources. They did so and produced some very good programs. Now there is a large corps of technical people, producers and artists in Montreal and it is the leading French language television production centre in the world. Again it is a question that if one has to do it one can do it. The talent is here in Canada.

The reason these people were successful was that the market was assured. Their own network took up the programs they produced. The distribution of their production was excellent. This is an all-important question to which I will refer later.

We in Canada have a film industry, both public and private, but not a feature film industry. The National Film Board has been in production for a great many years. Its work is well known. Its quality is good. It has won many awards in different parts of the world.

We also have a private motion picture industry in Canada producing films of different types including television films, commercials, industrial films, training films and films for government departments. The people in that industry have built a number of studios throughout the country which are quite adequate for feature film production and they have the necessary technical and directing staff.

Both the National Film Board and the private companies have provided a good training ground for Canadian personnel who can be used to produce feature films. A number of the private companies are well known for their technical excellence. Crawley Films of Ottawa are known throughout the world for the type of work they do. Incidentally, they have produced at least one feature film. "The Luck Of Ginger Coffey", which is now getting commercial distribution. I know the actors were imported for that film and also the director, I believe, but the company put up much of the financing and the resulting film has been shown in different countries.

A number of French language feature films have been produced in Montreal. One which is receiving commercial distribution at present, "A Tout Prendre", was produced by Claude Jutra. It has been shown by the C.B.C. and is at present playing in New York. All this shows that we have the ability to do these things in Canada, but the production of non-feature films by the film board and the private companies has not been sufficient to keep some of our best people in this country. They are working in London and Hollywood. Some of the ablest Canadian producers were trained by the National Film Board or the C.B.C. I refer to Norman Jewison, Sydney Newman, Graeme Ferguson and Sidney Furie who, as I say, are working in both London and Hollywood.

One remarkable man among those I have mentioned is Sidney Furie who is now a leading producer in the United Kingdom. This man was so interested in making feature films here in Canada that he produced two with whatever type of financing he could obtain.

In this connection I wish to quote briefly from a broadcast I heard a couple of years ago on this subject. It was made by Gerald Pratley in July, 1964, and referred to the efforts of Mr. Furie:

> Most of you know what happened to Sidney Furie. He was determined to make films. With the assistance of family and friends he raised the meagre sum of $50,000 and made, "A Dangerous Age," in 1958, the story of a young couple who tried to get married too early in life. When it was finished, and it wasn't a bad little film by any means, he found he couldn't get it shown in Canada. By this time I should add we now had a circuit of British controlled cinemas, the Odeon, formed by Lord Rank, because British films found it difficult getting a showing in this country in the face of American competition. An official of the Rank organization in Canada told Furie that he would never get his film shown anywhere in the world; it was not good enough. Turned down by other exhibitors in Canada, he went to England where he sold his film and where it was shown by none other than the Rank organization in its Odeon theatres.
> Furie came back to Toronto and made another film, "A Cool Sound From Hell". His ambition was to break the jinx which hangs over film production here, to make his name in Canada and to give Canada a reputation as a film producing country, and above all, to make it easier for those who came after him. But he couldn't get his second film shown either. This time, when Furie went to England with it, he remained there.

I would like to think that when this new feature film corporation is established Canadians like Sidney Furie, who have shown this type of initiative and raised capital on their own, will have the assistance which they deserve.

The minister stated that there would be no quota system established but she did say in quite strong terms that the established distribution companies would be expected to give some co-operation in the distribution of Canadian films, always provided of course that the films have some merit. This is important and I would agree with the minister on this point. I have done some reading on the matter of quotas as they are applied by other countries and if we can get some other system to distribute our films so much the better.

I certainly hope co-operation will be forthcoming because without distribution we need not think about establishing a feature film industry. It occurs to me that the C.T.V. network can also be of some assistance. Every year it buys hundreds and hundreds of films. Some of them do not have much merit but they are bought in a package.

When we are given the bill I shall be interested to see if there is anything in it with regard to Canadian content. There is such a provision in the United Kingdom. If a producer there wants to benefit from any government assistance, quite specific percentages as to British content are required respecting actors, production staff and so on. This prevents a foreign company from simply setting up a dummy corporation to take advantage of whatever government aid may exist. The question of Canadian content should not be overlooked.

As the hon. member for Halifax has said, different people from the film industry have been here to interview members interested in this subject. They have made certain suggestions about what would be a reasonable Canadian content in order to qualify for the aid which will be available through the film corporation.

This legislation and aid it provides have been a long time coming. It is regrettable that for so many years so much money has been taken out of Canada by the film industry without any coming back. But we are pleased that finally this step is being taken to give assistance to those Canadians who want to make a name for Canada in the feature film industry.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock?

The Chairman: It being six o'clock, in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business it is my duty to leave the chair.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows: The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan), National Defence—making of speeches on politics by armed forces personnel; the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather), Old Age Security—request for statement in increased pensions; the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. Johnston), Immigration—Vancouver—deportation of Japanese girl.

TRADE

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—NEW ENGLAND STATES AND WEST INDIES—SUGGESTED PROMOTION

On the order: Notices of Motions:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of taking an initiative in promoting increased trade between the Atlantic provinces and such traditional market areas as the New England states of the United States and those islands formerly comprising the British West Indies.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, with reference to motion No. 23, which is first on the list today, may I say that the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) is unavoidably absent. I wonder whether by unanimous consent I could request leave on his behalf to have this motion retain its present position on the order paper.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to allowing motion No. 23 to retain its present position on the order paper?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN FORCES SUPERANNUATION ACT

SUGGESTED EMPLOYMENT OF PENSION RECIPIENTS IN PUBLIC SERVICE WITHOUT BENEFIT LOSS

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria (B.C.)) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act so as to permit all persons who are in receipt of pensions under the provisions of the said act to enter into employment in any branch of the public service of Canada without suffering loss of pension benefits.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the subject matter of my notice of motion is partly under consideration as a result of government Bill No. C-193. In accordance with the rules of this house I should withdraw my motion and I shall do so, but before I do I hope you will permit me to make a few remarks about the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act and pensions generally.

It is being proposed that two sections of the act be deleted which have been working against retired servicemen who wish to work for the government in not permitting them to draw full pension as well as full pay. As I understand the situation, a section will be substituted which will permit the Governor in Council acting by regulation to consider various cases. At the present time the act states that warrant officers second class and above or their equivalent ranks and chief petty officers second class and above may work for the government but their pay and pension combined must not exceed the present level of pay for the rank they held on retirement.

Mr. Chatterton: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Did I understand the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., to say that he is asking for leave of the house to withdraw his motion? If that is so I should like to raise the question of the hon. member being allowed to speak now.

Mr. Speaker: My understanding is that the hon. member has made a motion and that motion is now before the house. He has indicated that eventually he will ask leave of the house to withdraw it and at that point he will require the unanimous consent of the house. At the moment he is speaking on the motion itself, as I understand it.

Mr. Groos: I will be very brief in my remarks because I am interested in the motion to come before the house immediately following this one. All I wish to say at this point is that I will be watching very closely to see how the government acts in respect of the changes proposed. I believe that half a loaf is better than none but I am afraid we are buying a pig in a poke. When the government comes to acting on this change in the regulations, having deleted two offensive sections, I hope it will leave it so that an individual who has earned a pension and has decided to work again for the government will be entitled to receive a full pension and not have it diminished in any way by regulation. I should now like to ask leave of the house to withdraw my notice of motion.

Mr. Chatterton: Mr. Speaker, I want to indicate that I give my consent to the request of the hon. member, but that I will have something to say about the motion to which he has referred when it comes before us.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member have unanimous consent to withdraw motion No. 27 standing in his name?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

PENSIONS

SUGGESTED ADJUSTMENTS TO COMPENSATE FOR INCREASED LIVING COSTS

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give the earliest possible consideration to the advisability of adjusting upwards the pensions of superannuated public servants and of superannuated members of the armed forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to take appropriate account of increases in the cost of living, increases in salary levels and other relevant factors occurring since the rates of pension of such persons were determined.

He said: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of members of this house who would have liked to speak on the last motion, including the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Chatterton), the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave), the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and myself. However, we are very glad indeed to have an opportunity of debating this particular motion.

Three times already during this session I have initiated debate on this issue and since I have no desire whatever to be repetitive my remarks will not be extended now so that other members will have ample opportunity to express their views. But this warning I proclaim; I intend to persist in pressing for rectification of the hardships and injustices visited upon the retired civil servants of this nation until this or a succeeding government acts and acts decisively.

So far this session the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) have adopted an adamant, yes, an inflexible and stubborn attitude. The first glimmer of hope came last Friday when the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson), in reply to a question from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, suggested that the terms of reference of the special joint committee on the public service be extended to include this subject, and I wish to quote from page 6543 of Hansard where the minister is reported as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I certainly would have no objection to doing that providing the committee completes the huge amount of work it now has before it in considering four very complicated bills.

With that incentive I am sure the committee will be most willing to complete its work as rapidly as possible, and I suggest to the minister that this resolution might be referred to that committee. Indeed, I would welcome an amendment from the other side to that effect.

The hardships and the injustices of retired civil servants have been clearly demonstrated in many briefs presented to the government and in arguments in this chamber. Pensions paid for in hard dollars have been eroded by creeping inflation and, indeed, by not so creeping inflation. The dollars drawn in superannuation in many cases are worth less than 50 per cent of the dollars used to buy the benefits. Elderly people watch helplessly while their lifetime savings dwindle into insignificance. There is really only one issue before us in this chamber. Have the government and the people of Canada any obligation or responsibility to these retired civil servants of the crown or is it just a simple matter of contract between crown and servant and must the servant endure the dirty end of the contract?

I say, Mr. Speaker, that there is an obligation, a vital, blinding, moral obligation which this government cannot escape. The issue was really resolved in 1958 by the previous government when it enacted the pension adjustment act. This set a clear, unequivocal precedent. Basically what is needed is conformity to that precedent today, the updating and modernization of the legislation of the former government headed by the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert whom I have already described in earlier debate as the best friend in politics the retired civil servant ever had.

Canada is not the only country to face this issue. The other day I put on record some statements of principle uttered by the chief secretary of the treasury in Britain when introducing the latest pension increase in that country. They are words which I wish the Minister of Finance would take to heart. Britain had legislation increasing pensions in 1920, 1924, 1944, 1947, 1952, 1954, 1956 and 1962 as well as the latest in November of 1965. No one in that country argues any longer about contract and strict adherence to the letter of the contract. They act to bring justice to their retired public servants. The latest bill in November of 1965 was designed primarily to increase existing pensions, for example, a pensioner's original pension plus increases authorized by previous legislation of a similar nature, commencing on January 1 of this year.

The percentages by which existing pensions in Britain are to be increased are as follows: For pensions beginning on or before April 1, 1957, 16 per cent; between April 2, 1957, and April 1, 1958, 14 per cent; between April 2, 1958, and April 1, 1959, 12 per cent; between April 2, 1959, and April 1, 1960, 10 per cent; between April 2, 1960, and April 1, 1961, 8 per cent; between April 2, 1961, and April 1, 1962, 6 per cent; between April 2, 1962, and April 1, 1963, 4 per cent; between April 2, 1963, and April 1, 1964, 2 per cent. That, sir, is the situation in Britain.

In the United States legislation was passed during 1965 to provide for certain increases effective December 1, 1965. This legislation was designed in part to remove certain anomalies arising out of previous legislation of this nature and establishes a totally new basis for automatic adjustment in the future. This I want to emphasize, that in the United States adjustment in this field is automatic in the future without further legislation by Congress.

Apart from some special provisions related to survivor benefits of employees who died prior to April 1, 1948, the main adjustment is to increase annuities which commenced on or before October 1, 1956, by 11⅑ per cent and those which commenced after October 1, 1965, but no later than December 1, 1965, by 6⅑ per cent. These are in addition to increases authorized by previous legislation. Apart from a transitional provision for those retiring between December 1, 1965, and December 31, 1966, the general rule for increases in the future is that whenever the cost of living nationwide goes up by at least 3 per cent over the monthly price index used as a basis for the last previous cost of living annuity increase and stays up for at least three months in a row, an increase equal to the percentage rise in living costs will be granted automatically. This permits such a change to be made at any time during the year whereas the previous law in the United States permitted such a change only on April 1 after a 3 per cent increase since the previous adjustment had taken place.

In Australia retirement payments have been increased from time to time. The latest act in that country which I have seen is the superannuation (pension increases) act assented to October, 27, 1961, a copy of which I have in my hand. The increases are expressed in terms of the old Australian currency, namely, pounds, shillings and pence, and I confess that I am unable to work out the percentage increases. But what is clear, and this is the only issue before us, is that while there is no automatic adjustment to the cost of living there has been a periodic review and a positive acceptance in Australia of the principle of upward revision and adjustment.

In France provision has been made for automatic adjustment in line with general increases given to active civil servants. So the situation exists generally in most western countries. At least four Canadian provinces have taken action to increase the pensions of their retired public servants and several municipalities have done so also. That is why I say this principle has been clearly and positively established.

I am not unaware of the argument which the Department of Finance makes from time to time and which had its most logical spokesman in other days in this house in the persons of Mr. Ilsley, Mr. Abbott and Mr. Harris. They argued that any increase would be favouritism to retired civil servants over other groups of older Canadians faced with the same difficulties due to the decreasing value of their pensions or retirement savings under inflationary conditions. I remember Mr. Abbott putting it very bluntly in argument that the government had in fact fulfilled its contractual obligations to its former employees and that having done so it had no greater obligation to retired civil servants than to other needy pensioners. As I recollect, he raised the whole issue of the extent of the obligation of a democratic government to indemnify its citizens against the decreasing value of currency.

Whatever theoretical validity this argument may have, I believe it to be wholly fallacious in practice. The pragmatic, practical approach requires, I submit, a much more humanitarian attitude, more of what I may style as being the approach of the model employer, which the government and the people of Canada ought to be. So, sir, I say that the principle of such increases is well established The precedents are manifold. The time for the government to act, I suggest, is now. If it is not ready for immediate action, I urge the government and hon. gentlemen opposite to refer this resolution to the special joint committee on the public service for further study. I say to hon. gentlemen opposite that they simply cannot just stand pat on this issue. The status quo is not good enough.

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria (B.C.)): Mr. Speaker, I am going to speak briefly in support of the principle of this motion. It is a matter which I have brought to the attention of this house on previous occasions, as of course has the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I am glad to know that we are by no means alone in supporting the principle of relief for the faithful, retired servants of the crown. I am not going to take up the time of the house in trying to show the need for this type of action. The need has certainly been established in this house more than once, so I shall not deal with that point again.

I believe that the minister who would be responsible for any increase has been staggered by the size of the problem he faces in attempting to raise pensions for retired civil servants. My purpose in speaking today is to try to reduce the problem to manageable proportions. I have two suggestions to make. The first one is with regard to pensions in general. The pensions that we are giving are based on very generous payments made by civil servants and armed forces personnel while they are still in the service of the crown which I believe amount to 6½ per cent, with a matching sum paid by the federal government. This makes a very sizeable amount of money.

I do not believe that the present arrangement whereby civil servants' contributions together with matching federal government contributions are placed in the consolidated revenue fund and carried at a fixed annual rate of interest is suitable in these days of inflation. I think it is an outmoded system and a very unimaginative way of dealing with pensions today. I suggest that the government give some thought to introducing a more flexible scheme. I believe that in these days of computers we can afford to make use of these machines to achieve much more flexible arrangements for pensions which will be designed to meet the individual needs of people. For example, a man should have the right to see his pension payments together with the matching payments made by the government put into a fund which would grow at the same rate as the cost of living and would not be invested at a fixed rate as the money is today but would grow at the rate of dividends acquired by investing this money in some sort of mutual fund, if you wish to call it that. I am thinking of a fund which could be run by officials of the government or by a private organization. However, I will not try to lay down the details of this scheme.

I only wish to point out that it would be very much in the interest of civil servants and members of the armed forces not to invest their money at a fixed rate of interest but to put it into a fund which would produce capital gain and eventually increased dividends. Of course, this may not suit everyone but I believe a lot of people might opt for such a scheme and I think they should be given this choice. It may well be that other people would prefer the present plan under which their money goes into the consolidated revenue fund with a fixed rate of interest which assures them absolute security. Another possibility might be a combination of the two. I suggest that such variations are possible in this computer age. I am not underestimating the accounting difficulties which such a plan might create but surely they are not insurmountable.

The fault I find with the present federal superannuation scheme is that it is so absolutely inflexible that it cannot possibly compete with inflation which, as every hon. member in this house knows, occurs from time to time and through a cycle of which we are going today. My suggestion is that the government should look into the possibility of starting a new type of pension fund and that the future pensioner should have the right to decide whether he wishes to enter into this scheme in whole or in part and thereby have available to him a pension scheme tailored to his needs.

I should like to draw the attention of the house to a number of letters I have received from retired civil servants, as I am sure other hon. members also have. I wish to read one to the house. It is a letter from Victoria which arrived in my office only this afternoon. It says:

Dear Sir,

Please support increased pensions for retired civil servants. They contributed about half of the billions now in the fund.

This is very brief and to the point. I have received many other letters all in the same vein. What worries me is that this letter may be based on a misconception. I think every member has received a copy of an undated letter from the retired civil servants association of Windsor, Ontario, in which they attempted to bring before the public, through the leading newspapers in Canada, their case for higher pensions. They talk there of the vast sums of money in the fund amounting to billions of dollars and refer to the fact that more money is going into the fund than is being taken out of it. I am quite sure this is so because obviously money is being paid into the fund today by people who are still in the employment of the government and it is that money, together with interest, which will be used to pay their pensions when they retire eventually. Since the rate of growth of the number of civil servants is increasing similarly to an inverted pyramid, more money will be going into the fund than will be withdrawn.

In their letter these retired civil servants complain that they are getting a poor deal. They suggest that the money in the fund should be earmarked for the relief of those who have retired and need the money. I want to see them get the money, Mr. Speaker, but I do not necessarily believe this should be the source. What I believe we should do is to investigate the superannuation fund with the help of computers which can do such work rapidly and establish whether the people who have retired and have died have left more money in this fund than they drew out of it.

We should investigate whether the government is not getting from retired civil servants a large windfall hidden in the consolidated revenue fund, and the only way we can find out is to make a proper analysis of the fund. I would also suggest that if the government will undertake to do this they should include in this investigatory body a representative of the Federal Superannuates Association so as to satisfy them completely.

Federal civil servants are not an unreasonable group and I am very happy, as I know other hon. members of the house are, to be able to bring their case before this house. I think that if we were to show them that the money in the superannuation fund has not been a windfall to the government made up of their past contributions they would be satisfied and would no longer use this as an argument. I also think that this should be established from the point of view of the government because surely if we do find that more money is being put into the fund than is being withdrawn and that this amount has been contributed by civil servants who have retired and have died, then it is most certainly an obligation of the government to use that money for the relief of those who are still living.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we should first try to inaugurate a more flexible, more suitable pension scheme to meet the needs of the times rather than an inflexible fixed rate of interest type of pension plan such as we have now. Second, we should set up an organization, which would have representation on it of the Federal Superannuates Association, to investigate the actual status of the superannuation fund and ascertain exactly where it does stand. When we talk about a billion dollars it may blind people to the facts of the case. I am sure when we do this we will be doing no more than the federal superannuates deserve. I think we will be in a lot better position to make the next move which I hope will be along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell).

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, speaking for my party and for myself I wish to indicate full support for the motion that is now before the house, calling as it does for an increase in the pensions of retired civil servants and other government employees. I shall indicate that support by being brief, and I hope any other hon. members who wish to speak will also be brief in order that this motion may be decided on by the house. This may sound like a futile plea, knowing what usually happens in private members' hour, but perhaps this could be the day when we might do something different. After all, it would not bring down this building if the house were to agree to pass this motion saying that, in its opinion, consideration should be given to this matter. I urge that today this motion be allowed to pass.

Whether or not this motion passes, Mr. Speaker, I certainly intend to hold the government to what I regard as a commitment by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson) made last Friday. It has already been referred to by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell). The minister stated that he had no objection to the matter of adjusting the pensions of retired civil servants being referred to the joint committee on the public service for consideration once that committee has considered the matters that are now before it. So far as I am concerned, we could keep the committee here all summer for this laudable purpose. However, I do not believe that will be necessary. I believe that we will have our other jobs done fairly soon and I intend to see to it that the government is reminded of its commitment until it keeps it.

Mr. Speaker, the house has had the facts regarding the need for these pension increases, and the facts regarding what is being done in other jurisdictions, placed before it so often that these things do not need to be repeated today. May I just say, so that the record will be complete, that on page 566 of Hansard for February 2, 1966, there are figures given by way of answer to a question of mine which give the amounts of pension received by retired civil servants and by widows of civil servants. These figures are there for anyone to look at so he may realize the extent of the problem. Shortly after those figures were placed on Hansard this year—I may say that this question is asked by this member every year and the answers are thus kept up to date—the Ottawa Journal saw fit to editorialize on their significance. I quote only the headline of the editorial because it tells the story: "Pensioners' Thin Times". This was on Wednesday, February 9, 1966. On Saturday of last week the Ottawa Citizen also came to our support with an editorial headed, "Pleas Of Pensioners", in which a case is made for the need for this whole problem to be considered without further delay.

I want to make the point that not only is there the need of these people, which is very acute and very real and which we as their former employers must meet, but also that there is a principle involved in all of this which this parliament of Canada, this society of ours, has got to face. We cannot go on putting it off and off. This principle is that when people have retired, when they are out of the labour market, they still have rights. One of the rights that they have is the right to live in the kind of society that we have at that time. In my view, this means we have to get over the notion that once a person has been put on pension he must live on the number of dollars granted to him at that time for the rest of his life. Just as workers in all walks of life feel that they have a right to claim increases and to get those increases, just as people in any section of society feel that they have the right to meet rising costs and rising standards, so in my consideration do people when they have retired have that right. It is this for which we are fighting and for which the retired civil servants are fighting, the principle that people who have retired still have rights as members of the community, as members of a society that includes us all.

The government keeps on talking to us about contractual arrangements, about these pensions being the pensions for which these people paid. When people are paying for their pensions they are not given the right to say what society will be like, what economic conditions will be when they retire. Many people who today may not be interested in this plea, who may think that the pensions they are building up will be adequate, will find that is not the case when they go on pension. This problem is going to affect all of us as our society becomes more dynamic, as prices go up and as standards of living continue to rise. This problem is going to become even more acute. I submit that those people who are pleading their case out of desperation are, in fact, pleading a matter of principle. They are fighting a battle which is one of the battles with which our society has to cope. I urge that this is the place to start.

It is all very nice, Mr. Speaker, to hear the two members who have already spoken recognize the member for Winnipeg North Centre as being involved in this issue. It is very nice to get scores of letters, as I do, from people across the country thanking me for the effort I have put into this matter during the last 20 or 25 years. but Mr. Speaker, that is not good enough. I do not want simply to be mentioned as a fighter for retired civil servants. I want this battle to be won.

It is not good enough for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), the Minister of National Revenue and the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) to keep on putting off the matter. The time for action on this issue is now, in this very session of parliament. Action has been taken on a good many other things. This kind of action on behalf of the retired civil servants cannot be held off any longer. I hope the house will be ready to pass this motion today. If so, I am sure that we will express our opinion that something ought to be done. Whether or not that decision is made, I insist that the minister's commitment of last Friday must be kept, and that this matter of increasing the pensions of retired civil servants must be referred to the joint committee on the public service. I hope and believe that out of that consideration there will come a recommendation and that the government will act at this session so that these people can start to have their right to live in their well-earned retirement, and so that we can establish the principle that people who retire have rights which do not end when they retire. I urge that this motion be allowed to pass.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I too will be very brief in order to allow this question to come to a vote. I am quite sure if that is done there will be a unanimous opinion that retired civil servants and retired members of the armed forces and the R.C.M.P. should have the support of the members of this house.

The hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Groos) suggested that the question was whether the fund established for public service superannuation could stand an increase in the amount paid to retired civil servants. To me, Mr. Speaker, this is not the question. In 1959 a bill was introduced to provide an increase in pension for those civil servants who were retired. The question is simply this: Does the government of the day hold itself responsible for the plight of its retired employees? I maintain that good employers today do accept this responsibility. If the government accepts this responsibility toward its retired civil servants, then a way will be found to fulfil it by making amendments to the Public Service Superannuation Act or by introducing a special act. But it can be done.

There is no question of the need, Mr. Speaker. I do not want to go into figures to demonstrate the need of the retired ex-employees of the government. The question simply is: Is there the will to accept the responsibility as an employer toward ex-employees? If the will is there the way can be found. I stop now to allow the house to vote, and I am sure the vote will be unanimous.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I too will be brief. I agree with the mover and with the hon. members who have spoken in favour of this motion. I also agree with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) and his statement that many problems which we are facing today are problems of prosperity. But this particular problem is right at the crux of the problems of prosperity.

The worker who is organized and has a powerful union is able to change his financial position. This has become dramatically apparent in the last few days with the very large wage increases which have been granted workers to solve various labour disputes in this country. A corporation has power, in effect, to tax consumers for its expansion and additional cost of operation. We have evidence of that power every time the cost of living index figures are published. Always the people who suffer from such action are those on fixed incomes such as those about whom we are talking this evening.

One could, of course, mention the plight of our old age security pensioners, and perhaps there is a priority need there. But anyone on a fixed income is caught in this position in a period of inflation such as the present.

There is no use at all telling Canadians at the present time to save. There is very little use in suggesting this is advisable when they see what happens to people who have saved and contributed to pension funds and then come out on the short end because of inflation.

We know that inflation is inevitable until the nations of the world, including ourselves, have solved the problem of distributing their productive capacities. In a way we have to keep inflating the value of our money, reducing its purchasing power annually. We also indirectly become involved in races to the moon. In this country we must be prepared to build a war tower which is going to be higher than the Peace Tower. A great many devices are used to siphon off the productive capacity of which we are now capable.

Repeatedly we find that the government has had a hand in the inflationary spiral through its own taxation policies. I cite here by way of example the tax on production machinery and construction materials. Our policies should be such as to increase production; instead we have added to the inflationary spiral. Even housing built for the aged does not qualify for remission of the tax on construction materials unless it qualifies for a continuing grant from a provincial or the federal government. There are no grants for this purpose from the federal government and the grants from povincial governments are few. The usual type of grants for this sort of construction is a municipal grant, so I would suggest there is a need for legislative change here.

As I say, the policies which are set continue to produce inflation and prevent steps being taken to mitigate the position of the pensioners on small incomes. It therefore becomes imperative for the government to move to alleviate their problem directly by adjusting the pension itself. I join the other speakers in urging the government to meet this problem of inadequate pensions of retired public servants, and I also ask the house to pass the motion at this time.

Mr. R. J. Orange (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I am certain many members in this house tonight may be asking themselves why the hon. member for Northwest Territories is now rising to speak on this motion which seeks to increase the pensions of retired civil servants. To allay any possible fears on the part of some members, I should like to explain to those in the house that I was born and brought up in the city of Ottawa and have been associated with the civil service for a certain period of time. I know many people in the civil service and I am aware of the problems and difficulties relating to the lives of retired civil servants.

I think particularly of the members of the civil service who performed public service during the so-called dirty thirties and also during the war years and who immediately following their service in the second world war retired from the public service. It is no secret that particularly during the years of world war II the Canadian civil service performed in a manner comparable to the performance of our armed forces. We know that at that time our civil servants were called upon to work much longer hours than is the case at present.

We also know, Mr. Speaker, that their salaries were pegged and that they were not in the position, as is the case today, of receiving increments from time to time to keep pace with the cost of living. Come retirement they left the service on what we know was a small pension, and this has created one of the great problems which is facing retired civil servants living in Ottawa and in other centres in which the civil service has served throughout Canada.

Although we are concerned with the civil service and the superannuates, I believe we are also faced with a very difficult problem, the same problem that will face Canada until such time as our over-all pension plan is designed to meet the total needs of the nation. I am thinking of those people who were in business for themselves and who invested their earnings in annuities and Canada savings bonds, not in growth stocks and cumulative funds. I am also thinking of individuals who have worked for private corporations and who are also on fixed superannuation. Those people have the same problems as our federal civil servants. I know that the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) both have said that this is fine. But I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the answer is not much broader? I wonder whether the problem, instead of applying just to our retired civil servants, is not a national one? This is a problem that we as legislators and as Canadians must face in time.

Many people living in Canada today are in the same position as our retired civil servants. I think of the commitment given by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Benson), that the special joint committee on the public service would examine the problem of pensions for civil servants. In the same way I think we should examine the total problem in this field as it relates to all Canadians.

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear.

Mr. Orange: I have sat in this house and heard people speaking eloquently about the retired federal civil servants. I am only sorry that the hon. member for Carleton is not here to illuminate for us the way of applying the solution of their problems to all Canadians. I hope that this government will be able to come up with an idea or plan so that persons who have retired and are on fixed incomes can continue living in this nation as we would want to see them continue living.

I am prepared to accept the statement of the Minister of National Revenue to the effect that the problem of retired federal civil servants can be referred to the special joint committee on the public service of Canada. That committee in examing this problem will want to ask officials of the Department of Finance and other government officials what is involved in solving the problem to which I refer. I know that if firm and sound recommendations can be made the committee will be in a position to recommend to the government a partial solution to what I consider an over-all problem.

Tonight we have listened to several members speak in favour of the proposal before us. The problem is one that I followed with great interest before entering this house in the newspapers and publications of Canada. It is one that is constantly in the minds of our retired civil servants and also in the minds of those civil servants who are in the gap and will not be eligible, for all benefits under the Canada Pension Plan. Members of the house are deeply involved. I hope that somewhere along the line ideas can be developed to allay the fears of our civil servants still in the working force. As it is almost seven o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I shall sit down.

Some hon. Members: Questions.

Mr. J. Chester MacRae (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I had some extensive remarks to make on this subject but as other members have covered the points I wished to raise I shall not speak at length as there are only a few minutes left before seven o'clock. Keeping in mind the request of hon. members on the government side to permit this motion to pass and in order to give the government some leeway to act on this matter, I shall curtail my remarks and simply ask that this matter now be brought to a vote.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I do not think any member in the house listening to the remarks of the previous speaker is without sympathy for what he said.

An hon. Member: You are talking out the motion.

Mr. Walker: I regret that there are some misconceptions. Having listened to members talk on this matter, with great respect I point out that there are some misconceptions which have to be cleared up. May I specifically refer to the point brought up by the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Groos) who queried the amount of money in the superannuation fund. I do not think it is good for civil servants to hear that there are huge sums of surplus money in this fund which will never be needed to take care of those who have contributed. As of April 21, 1965, the Department of Insurance has confirmed once again that there is no surplus in the superannuation account from which higher benefits could be paid, if parliament were to decide that they were to be paid from some source.

The superannuation account is operated in accordance with the principles of funding. This is the point that hon. members who have spoken have not merely glossed over but have not come to grips with. Under the principles of funding generally accepted for employer-employee pension plans, pension benefits are regarded as deferred compensation, and contribution rates are such that contributions are collected at the levels established to accumulate enough funds during the active lifetime of contributors to provide them with specified retirement pensions and subsidiary benefits in respect of those contributors and their dependants.

The balance in the fund, together with future interest and future contributions, will be just sufficient to pay for future benefits to all active contributors and pensioners, assuming that actual experience accords with actuarial assumptions. If, however, the present value of future benefits exceeds the present value of future contributions the fund will be in deficit by an amount equal to such excess. Thus the payment of higher benefits from this fund would simply add to the deficiency and would simply mean—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hour appointed for consideration of private members business has now expired.

CANADIAN FILM DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PROVISION FOR DEVELOPMENT OF FEATURE FILM INDUSTRY

The House resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Miss LaMarsh—Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to establish a corporation to be known as the Canadian Film Development Corporation for the purpose of fostering and promoting the development of a feature film industry in Canada; to empower the corporation to invest in individual Canadian feature film production, to make loans to producers thereof, to make awards for outstanding accomplishments in the productions of Canadian feature films, to make grants to film-makers and film technicians, to otherwise advise and assist the producers of Canadian feature films; to provide for the administration of the said Corporation; also to appropriate for the purposes of the measure a sum of $10 million to be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund from time to time and to establish in the Consolidated Revenue Fund a special account to be known as the Canadian Film Development Advance Account to which amounts may be charged or credited as the case may be.

• (7:00 p.m.)

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, if I rise at this stage of the resolution, it is with the intention to let the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) know that I support this resolution with certain qualifications. I do not intend at this time to deal at any length with this resolution, since the Secretary of State herself has not deemed necessary to supply a great deal of information on the subject; therefore we shall wait for the bill to discuss it in greater detail.

If this resolution is considered on the basis of needs in Canada, it is obvious that it does meet a need, even an urgent one because the film industry, especially with regard to feature films, is lacking in our country. There is no dearth of artists, in fact, we have a great number of artists of repute, I would even say of international repute, and I believe that this is due mainly to the fact that television has provided these people, male and female, with an outlet for their talent.

Mr. Chairman, having said this, I believe this resolution should be adopted from that point of view; but there is another consideration which gives rise to questions; that of economics. We can now afford to pay $10 million to the film industry. On the other hand, in various forms in many sectors of our national economy numerous requests are made to the government for assistance to less endowed areas of our population; quite often people are told that our revenue is not sufficient to help adequately fields that need assistance as urgently as the film industry.

If we consider the urgency of the need, it is obvious we may be lagging. But I wonder if, in view of the economic policy of the present government, we can really afford to do this now. Obviously, the public will once more defray through its taxes and levies the cost of these developments; but I doubt that they will bring our country very much economically, other than give our Canadian artists more scope on the national scene and also in international circles.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know exactly what the bill will contain, but I think the Secretary of State should tell us how the $10 million will be raised. We know, of course, it will be included in our taxes; yet, when we ask the minister for grants in other fields as important as that of the film industry, such as radio broadcasting, to allow the C.B.C. to extend its services right across the country and to serve all those areas where the population demands it, the hon. lady cannot find a way to ask the government for the money required to do so. I suggest that providing television service for the Canadian people would be as important as granting subsidies to the film industry and I think the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation should have priority over the film industry.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to deal any longer with this subject tonight. Before bringing my remarks to a conclusion, I must say there is another point which disturbs me a little. I do not know how the commission is going to be controlled, because a commission will probably be appointed to look after the fund. I think proper control should be established so that pictures of a questionable nature are not put out by our Canadian producers, as has been the case on some occasions for pictures shown on television. I will not go into details. I think that upon recalling recent developments members will know what I mean by that, but such a thing should be prevented in the production of feature films.

So, in general, we are pleased with this resolution but personally—I am not speaking on behalf of my colleagues from the Ralliement Créditiste—I think other projects should have priority over this resolution, from the economical point of view.

[English]

Mr. Johnston: I support this resolution which should lead the way to a national feature film industry in Canada. We have been aware for a long time of the quality of Canadian films, usually of a documentary kind, or the film short on various subjects. These have often risen to heights of considerable artistry. I can recall sitting in a theatre in London where a sophisticated audience had gathered to see a film by the Spanish director Bunuel. Quite by accident, I think, the theatre management had included two short Canadian films—"Cattle Country", filmed in the Nicola valley, and "Morning on the Lievre". The two films were of such startling beauty that on their conclusion the audience broke into spontaneous applause—applause which could not be heard by anyone responsible for making the films but which was, nevertheless, an indication of how well they had been done.

More recently we have been familiar with the tentative and hesitant approach of the National Film Board to feature films through its production "The Drylanders" which was shown across the country and which met with tremendous approval. This was the first time the board actually referred to people as starring in their productions, so we know that Miss Frances Hyland portrayed one of the leading characters of that motion picture. However, there has always been a fear among those concerned with these government sponsored productions that they might accidentally create a star or discover a director who would achieve international fame. So people who have ambitions along these lines have had to leave the country and, in effect, we have been subsidizing the British, the American, and even the French film industries by exporting our talent at the same time as we have been importing films from almost every nation in the world that makes them, sending out much needed exchange in payment.

Canadians generally have, I think, been naive about the way in which films are produced in other countries, assuming that they are always the product of private enterprise alone. Well, most countries abroad subsidize their film industries. I think this can be done while leaving room for private enterprise. I trust the bill which will be presented to us will emphasize the value of a co-operative arrangement between the government and people who are prepared to enter the Canadian film industry.

As one who comes from British Columbia, I feel our province will have a particular interest in the making of feature films. The climate and the natural beauty of the Vancouver area would tend to concentrate much of the production there. At least I hope this would be the case.

Of course the beauty of the interior of the province would lend itself admirably to film locations and in this respect I am thinking particularly of the Okanagan Valley. There is no reason why we cannot come up with a Canadian equivalent to "The Sound of Music" that would catch on film some of the qualities that endeared that motion picture to millions of people around the world.

I would also hope Canadian stories would be used. There are a great many, and some have already been filmed elsewhere. We should try to film some of them here in Canada where the stories originated. I support this proposal. I know there are a number of things upon which we could insist that the government spend money first, but I would join with those hon. members who have reminded the committee that, by adopting this legislation, in effect we will be putting a very small finger in a very large hole in the dike through which we have been losing talent and money for a long period of time.

Mr. Ormiston: Mr. Chairman, I welcome for a number of reasons, the opportunity to participate in this debate, the first of which is to suggest to the minister that most of us view with satisfaction the introduction of this resolution which will eventually pave the way for a bill to give us the Canadian Film Development Corporation. In this day and age in which we subsidize so many fields of endeavour, here is a field which has been sadly neglected, and when this legislation comes into effect it will prove to the country at large the vast potential talent which exists in Canada today.

The sum of $10 million hardly seems adequate for the effort which will have to be exerted to provide a film industry for Canada, and I think the minister will agree with me that when this project gets off the ground further resources will have to be found.

Great Britain, which has had considerable experience in this field over many years, has its National Film Finance Corporation, which has given a great deal of assistance to film producers and worked very well to provide funds in that field. I am sure if that corporation were investigated we ourselves may find some means to overcome some of the difficulties which no doubt will ensue in the early stages of the Canadian film development project.

I realize full well that the resolution only speaks generally of what is anticipated and what assistance will be given. This will all be spelled out in greater detail in the bill, but I would suggest to the minister that it might be a good idea to consider the formation of a Canadian federal film council, set up to review the progress of the film industry throughout Canada and to report its findings to the minister. This is not too much to ask. It could also produce an early report for publication on the prospects of the film industry in Canada.

Up to the present we have had film producers working for the C.B.C. and producing films for that corporation. But because of the bureaucratic attitude of the C.B.C. and some of its officials difficulties have arisen. With the advent of this development corporation it is possible that many of those producers will go into private business and provide for the Canadian public, through private enterprise, the type of films they have been producing in the past for the C.B.C.

I shall mention only one such film, the one which was produced on the Columbia river. It was one of the best films produced by a Canadian producer in many years, possibly in all the years since films have been made in Canada. But the producer of that film is no longer with the C.B.C.; they did not see fit to continue his contract. Here is an individual who was a great asset to the Canadian film industry, and we can anticipate that under the provisions of this bill he may provide future great art benefits for Canada.

I am sure that when she introduces the bill the minister will consider among other things greater detail regarding payment to producers, the establishment of a standard film production budget, guarantees for distribution and continuity of production and many other aspects which are not mentioned in the resolution. With those few remarks I shall look forward to the introduction of the bill to see what it contains.

Mr. Brand: Mr. Chairman, perhaps because I am a romantic at heart I like the idea of this particular resolution. I would like to think of Canada vying with the United States, the United Kingdom and other countries for some of the international stars—I can think of some very lovely ones—to come and star in our feature films, produced, financed and distributed from Canada. This is the romantic view; but in the light of sober second thought I wonder whether a government film corporation is the answer. We have heard the hon. member for Melville discuss the method used in Great Britain, one which has proven to be eminently satisfactory there. Perhaps that would be the answer here, too; I do not know.

Just because the government steps in, will this guarantee greatness for Canada on the silver screen? This is the question I would like to have answered, although I assume it is practically impossible to answer it at this stage. We have the talent, yes. We have many famous producers and directors, already mentioned by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond. We have many who are still here.

[Mr. Ormiston.]

Douglas Leiterman has already won international recognition as a producer on television and has expressed a desire to get into the film making field. Then there are the names of Patrick Watson and Beryl Fox. She has recently won two outstanding awards for her production, "The Mills of the Gods," a documentary which is in effect a film of major proportions. Neither are we short of acting talent. Names too numerous to mention come to mind of those who have made their mark in the United States and the United Kingdom. Many of our best screen writers have left Canada to use their talent elsewhere.

I have not mentioned the technical people, the cameramen and the sound specialists, but we know from the films produced by the National Film Board, Crawley Films and other companies, that they are excellent. We have the ingredients. So far we have stirred them in small quantities and produced some of the best short films ever made in the world. It is a truism to say that our documentaries are legendary and have taken the highest awards at the best film festivals around the world. Now we want to take these ingredients in larger governmental quantities, stir them in a larger governmental pot and come up with that be all and end all, the feature film.

Can this be done in a country the size of Canada? Is it enough to have the talent? Is it enough to give governmental encouragement and support?

Let me propose these hypothetical questions to the minister. Would it have helped to have given this support to the J. Arthur Rank organization when in 1948 it quietly contemplated setting up film studios in Canada for the production of feature films, and then just as quietly dropped the whole idea? I wonder why that happened and whether the minister has investigated this matter.

Would it have helped the National Film Board in putting over their feature length film, "The Drylanders"? We have heard that film mentioned by the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke, but I must say that I cannot entirely agree that the film was a great spectacular success, as he seems to think it was. It was undoubtedly an artistic success, whatever that is. Surely in actual fact it never did get off the ground. Come to think of it, the National Film Board did have government money, if not for this film, for other purposes; but despite this, even with the aid of sympathetic distributors who ran

"The Drylanders" in theatres across the country in an effort to support the Canadian feature film industry, it never did prove to be successful. "The Luck of Ginger Coffey" has already been mentioned, a feature film produced by Crawley Films. How will it do? The reviews seem to be mixed and I think only time will tell.

The idea of a feature film industry is not new to Canada, but like "The Drylanders" it has just never got off the ground. I wonder how feature films are financed in other centres in other countries. Are they financed by government? We have heard about aid being given in Great Britain, but how much aid is given to the actual feature film industry itself? I understand that in the United States, and certainly in Britain as well, the major portion of the financing is done by the banks. I think it is only recently we learned that the financing of horrendous films such as James Bond in "Thunderball" was arranged by two relatively impoverished individuals who had a good idea, received financing from a bank and came up with one of the greatest money makers of all time. They had no help from the government.

I wonder, out loud, if the government is perhaps contemplating any change in the Bank Act to allow banks to take flyers on risky ventures such as feature films. Perhaps if the government guaranteed losses up to a certain percentage figure financing could then be done through the banks. There are many ways by which these things could be financed, and I am wondering if these ways have been considered. I do not know whether they would work, but surely they should be looked into. I do agree with the hon. member for Halifax when he points out that representatives of the film industry should appear before the committee on broadcasting in order to give their views. This could be a public forum for the expression of their ideas as to what they think would be a good way of setting up a feature film industry in this country.

Despite all the ifs and buts that I have thrown out this evening, I am anxious to see the bill itself to ascertain just how independent the Canadian Film Development Corporation will be. The hon. member for Melville has suggested that there may be the same type of indefinite ground rules as apply to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. These rules certainly hamper that corporation and I hope similar ones will not apply to this new organization.

As I have said, I like the idea behind this resolution, but I think it would be very wise before we go overboard with enthusiasm to have a look at the bill, to see what happens. The idea is good, but is it practical for a country like Canada? I have yet to be absolutely convinced that the method proposed here by the minister is the very best for carrying out this development. I will be happy to be proved wrong in this matter because I should like to see this type of industry in Canada, but as yet I will have to adopt the old policy of wait and see.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, in rising this evening to make some comments on this resolution proposing the establishment of a Canadian Film Development Corporation I would not be surprised if people were to ask what I, as a mere private member sitting to the right of Mr. Speaker, might know about the plans of the cabinet—and they would be well justified in their queries, because I can assure you we are told little.

I have been waiting for an opportunity to speak on this matter since August of 1964 at which time the previous secretary of state for the Dominion of Canada, Hon. Maurice Lamontagne, passed some remarks in Montreal on the occasion of the 25th anniversary of the founding of the National Film Board.

As an ex-newspaperman I am very glad that newspapers are published in this dominion because, if they are not, private members on the right side of Mr. Speaker would not know what they are supposed to vote for, or what great forward step they should support next. We are never told in advance what the earth shaking event is that will be submitted. As for being given time to consider the matter in its pros and cons, that is not to be thought of.

This speech was made in Montreal on August 5, 1964 by the former secretary of state, in which he announced that a $10 million loan fund was going to be established to aid in the development of a feature film industry in the Dominion of Canada. I thought to myself: This is terrific, absolutely terrific. We have so much money in the national treasury that we can throw $10 million into the development of a feature film loan fund. We can tell the aged and the infirm that we have not enough money to increase old age security pensions to $100 per month, and we can prove that we have not got enough money. We are still running on an annual deficit. Did we not have terrific deficits under the previous government? The Liberal party government has cut these deficits down drastically, but we are still operating on a small deficit. We can always tell the aged and the infirm that we have not enough money to increase pensions from $75 to $100 a month, which we should be planning for every hour of every day. We have not enough money for that, but we have $10 million to aid in the development of a feature film industry in this Dominion of Canada.

I notice that the resolution is prefaced by the usual remark in its introduction in the house. It starts off by saying in the habitual way—> —that it is expedient to introduce a measure to establish a corporation to be known as the Canadian Film Development Corporation.

It goes on to point out that the first sum cast into the pot will be in the amount of $10 million. I do not like that word "expedient". That word means the useful or the politic thing to do, as opposed to the just or right thing. Frankly I am too fond of the right to pursue the expedient, and I would sooner see the pensions of the aged increased from $75 a month to $100 a month than to see $10 million put out for the development of a Canadian feature film industry in 1966. I want everyone who is over 65 years of age living in Canada to know there is at least one person in this house who is not going to vote for putting $10 million into a national feature film loan fund before the aged have their compensation increased from $75 a month to $100 a month.

I made some inquiries among elderly people over 65 years of age during the past few weeks, asking them whether they would sooner have $75 a month and a feature film industry in Canada or $100 a month and no feature film industry. Do I have to tell you what their answers were? I do not think I need to inform the members of this house what those people who receive $75 a month to live on told me when I asked them if they would not be happy with a feature film industry and $75 a month rather, than an upgrading of their compensation to $100 a month.

Mr. Herridge: There is no relationship.

Mr. Cowan: I thought this money all came out of the taxpayers' pockets. The British Columbia boys are hopeful of having a second Hollywood on the B.C. coast, but we cannot pay too much attention to their support for this idea. I am speaking for the aged from coast to coast, not particularly those from my riding, as are some of those members from the west coast who are hopeful of having this development located in their own ridings.

Might I tell them that I am of an age where I can remember that Canadians were going to develop a feature film industry in the town of Trenton, Ontario. They went to great lengths, and considerable sums of money were spent down there to develop a feature film industry around a central point. Where is the feature film industry in Trenton? Some would be Canadian film developers took over the old Ravina rink in Toronto some years ago. They were going to develop a feature film industry there. It has gone with the wind. Ravina rink no longer stands today; the site has been turned into a park. The fallacy in saying that Canada will become a centre for the feature film industry is well epitomized in those two cases. I could give further examples, because over the course of the years many people have advocated the development of a feature film industry in this country as opposed to the importation of films from other areas.

The former secretary of state when speaking in Montreal pointed out that Canada has become one of the richest countries in the world, with which I have to agree. I believe that because of our wealth we should be paying the aged $100 a month rather than the $75 a month they are now getting. But of course we are told that we cannot afford to do this—let us start a feature film industry and we will share the profits of that with the aged.

The former secretary of state passed the further remark that one must say that in cultural matters a country cannot continually live by borrowing its material from others. Well, we talk about having two cultures in Canada. Personally I think there is only one culture; it is a blend of all the refinements of different civilizations, tongues and races. Some people like to say bicultural, but I say cultural. I thought we drew on matters of a cultural nature from such sources as Israel, Greece, Rome, Canterbury. We still like the works of Liszt, Brahms, Wagner, Beethoven, Cervantes, one of the world's great writers out of Spain, Hugo out of France, Coppée, that great French writer with whom is connected the expression that all of you know.

He rose to the peak of his profession, of course, at a time when there were many personal jealousies against him.

Many remember the phrase that is associated with Coppée, that he did not lack the French Academy but the French Academy lacked Coppée. I am quite prepared to draw culturally from people of this reputation no matter what part of the world they come from. I think of Rembrandt, Constable, Van Gogh. Yet we are told that one must say that in cultural matters a country cannot continually live by borrowing its material from others. I for one am quite content to borrow my material from the sources I have just mentioned, and I do not think there is a man in the house who would quarrel with that statement. But no, we must go and throw $10 million into the pot to develop a feature film industry, when we know that the feature film industry is in the poorest financial shape today in the world that it has ever been. Hollywood is only a quarter of what is used to be. The attendance for films is not one quarter of what it used to be before the advent of television. But this is the time that Canada should leap into the breach, and let us Canadians show the rest of the world that when the tide is against us we will swim against the tide.

We are told by the hon. member for Outrement-Saint-Jean that Canadians seem to have been unable to bring forth a film industry in Canada which could find its inspiration in a Canadian setting and produce and distribute a Canadian-made product. The Secretary of State stated this afternoon that, because of the geographical position of this country, the divisions into which it falls and the linguistic separations, it was difficult to establish a feature film industry in this dominion, and that the government should endeavour to help it become established. If I noted one of the statements correctly, it was that we should be under no illusion about the difficulties Canadian film producers are going to have to face in establishing the industry.

I also say, let there be no illusion in this respect. Let us realize that this is an industry into which the Canadian government should not be pouring $10 million at this time. If there is a possibility of the industry's being established in this country, I have enough confidence in free enterprise and the private investors to believe that they would have established such an industry if there was an opening for it.

The former secretary of state, as I mentioned, spoke in Montreal on August 5, 1964. I shall be making further references to those remarks. Under date of August 10, 1964, we have the Montreal Star writing an editorial the heading of which is, "Government In Show Biz?" The article says:

> Mr. Lamontagne's announcement of a loan fund to assist the production of feature films in Canada puts the government in show biz, notoriously the most risky form of artistic enterprise . . .
> We hope this will include a study of the fact that nobody knows what a big film will be like until it is written, directed, produced, and the money spent. Then outlets for distribution are needed before the cash registers begin ringing in the box office. Very many people have gone broke in show biz. A few people and a few film companies have made a packet.

Then continues the Montreal Star:

> But let's ask who is going to pay to see them and where? The Canadian market is small and divided culturally and linguistically.
> The movie houses are mainly tied tight to the big Hollywood companies. Will they be prepared to show the Canadian-made films? This should be included in the proposed study of the loan fund which otherwise will find all its money going out and nothing coming back.

Then following the remarks made by the member for Outremont-Saint-Jean the Toronto Globe and Mail on August 8, 1964, had an article headed, "Money to Burn?" This article said:

> Canada's taxpaying public may well be disturbed by the Pearson government's announcement, made through State Secretary Maurice Lamontagne, that it intends later in the session "to ask parliament for the necessary authority to establish a loan fund to assist in the production of feature films of high quality in Canada".
> The production of feature films, and especially those of high quality, is a most expensive, and most uncertain, business. Millions of dollars have been lost in it, sometimes on a single picture. Has the Pearson government, have the Canadian people, so much money that they can start pouring it into the making of full-length movies?

The article continues:

> Mr. Lamontagne's announcement was accompanied by two interesting developments elsewhere. The Commons public accounts committee expressed concern—and properly so—at the rapidly mounting cost of new facilities sought by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in Montreal and Toronto.

It goes on to talk about the mounting cost of the C.B.C. Consider this. This is supposed to be the first step in establishing a feature film industry and it will cost $10 million. We have a hole in the ground at the corner of Sparks and Elgin that was originally to cost $9 million when completed. We have the hole in the ground, and we are now told we will be able to complete it for $31 million. This is the estimate for the National Arts Centre.

If the artistic world's estimate for this theatrical centre was $9 million and it has now gone up to $31 million, figure what $10 million will be by the time we get our necks caught in the wringer of the feature film industry. It will be somewhere around $35 million, and I would prophesy that the end is not yet come. The Globe and Mail continues in its article of August 8, 1964:

> If the C.B.C. (which does a lot of moviemaking) is so expensive to maintain, and if members of all parties are disturbed at the amount it requires, why is the Canadian government going into another money-devouring venture?

Then it says:

> Government assistance, whether in loans or subsidies—or loans that turn into subsidies— is the wrong way to go at it. The government should let Canada's feature film industry develop itself, in its own way, with its own money. If there is room for it, it needs no help. If there is not room for it, all the tax dollars in Ottawa will be of no help to it.

• (7:40 p.m.)

The subject seems to have lain quiescent for a time from August 1964; and then, on April 5, 1965, the following words appeared in the Speech from the Throne: "and a measure to help the development of a feature film industry in Canada". Those few words brought on another flood of editorial comment, some of which I believe should be read at this time when we are being given the first opportunity to discuss this matter in a serious vein.

On April 7, 1965, two days after the Speech from the Throne, the Ottawa Citizen, which is reputed to have an "in" with the cabinet, published an item headed "A subsidized Film Industry", and reading as follows:

> Judging by the Speech from the Throne, the government evidently will go ahead with its intention to help the Canadian film industry, presumably through some form of subsidy. When the legislation is introduced, it deserves the closest and most critical possible examination in parliament. For on the face of it the plan is ill-conceived, and the merits of the government's proposal will have to be demonstrated to the hilt before a penny of public funds is appropriated for this scheme . . .
> During her visit here recently, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, a member of the Indian government, expressed doubts that India's experiment in subsidizing a domestic film industry had been successful in terms of quality—

I am referring to this because Mrs. Gandhi referred to the quality of feature films which is the subject matter of this resolution. There is nothing cheap about the films we intend to develop; they have to be feature films. Mrs.

Gandhi says that in subsidizing the domestic film industry India has not been successful in producing quality films. The article goes on to say:

> Certainly, the scheme had succeeded in terms of quantity. But the government has found itself subsidizing mediocrity and sensationalism.

The Citizen goes on to say:

> On the other hand, is the Canadian government to begin supervising the quality of the commercially produced films it subsidizes? That would make the federal government virtually a censor and a producer in the commercial field. Surely public funds could be put to better use than that.

Parliament was dissolved in September of 1965 and we had a new election on our hands. In October a meeting of the Canadian Conference of the Arts took place in Toronto. The Globe and Mail of October 14, 1965 made reference to it in an article headed: "Lamontagne Announces Crown Corporation; Film Industry to get $10,000,000 Ottawa Aid" and stating:

> The Canadian government will establish a Crown corporation with an initial capital of $10 million, to assist the Canadian private film industry in the production of feature films.
> Maurice Lamontagne, Secretary of State, told a luncheon meeting of the Canadian Conference of the Arts in the Royal York hotel yesterday that the films should be "of commercial value and good quality".
> He added that he hopes that within a short period of time the Canadian film industry will prove to be a $50 million a year industry—

If there is any hope of this developing into a $50 million film industry I am sure that private investment and private funds would jump into the breach to cut into that $50 million for themselves; but as the present Secretary of State has said, let us be under no illusions as to the difficulties we face in trying to develop a feature film industry in this country.

The report in the Globe and Mail continues:

> The corporation, Mr. Lamontagne said in his speech, "will be empowered to make agreements with private producers under which it will make loans or investments without, however, becoming a legal partner".

It would be interesting to know how you make investments without becoming a legal partner, but that was the statement of the former secretary of state and I read it to you for the record.

Again, on October 14, 1965, the same Ottawa Citizen which on April 7, 1965 commented on the Speech from the Throne, returns to the subject following the statement made in Toronto. The editorial reads as follows:

Federal Aid for Film Firms

There is no justification for such action—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Herridge: I rise to express my support for the spirit and purpose of this resolution. I have listened with great interest to the speech which has just been made by the hon. member for York-Humber, in which he informed the house that hon. members on the government side are told very little by the cabinet. Later on he said hon. members on the government side of the house were never told in advance what was to happen in the house, that it takes occasions such as these for these secrets to leak out.

However, I do not think that is a valid argument against the resolution. His argument was based on the fact that he had apparently written to persons who are naturally anxious to get an increase in their old age pensions to ask them whether they would rather have an increase from $75 to $100 a month, or see the establishment of a feature film board. All of us could write such letters. Naturally in the majority of cases the reply would be that these people would rather have an increase in their pay cheques, because that is what people want at this time. There is no relationship between the amount of expenditure required by this government to increase pensions and the amount required to form this board. It is just the same as when we in this house get up day after day and complain that the government is spending $5 million or $10 million on a public building that is required. I do not think that is a valid argument.

While I have always realized that the member for York-Humber is an honourable gentleman who on some occasions expresses his point of view without fear or favour—and on some occasions I have agreed with him —I must say that on this occasion I simply cannot accept his line of reasoning, his argument or his approach to this question. I think he failed to appreciate the fact that this, similarly to other legislation which we have passed in recent days, is somewhat in the nature of an experiment. He fails to appreciate what can be done along these lines if it is pursued in a sound manner. I might say at this point that I do not claim to be a cultured person, but I am always inclined to look at the practical side of things. I do not think for a moment that a minister of the government would rush into such a decision overnight. I presume that in administering this legislation the government will feel its way and gain from experience in association with those persons who wish to take advantage of this resolution providing for investments in feature films, in loans for the development of feature films and in awards to be given to those who make productions which are of great interest to the Canadian people.

I think the hon. member has completely failed to realize that all civilizations are based on the culture of the period, and I think this resolution provides an opportunity for the Canadian people, for the government, for private industry and others, to co-operate in building a Canadian culture in support of our civilization. Those are the things we are trying to develop. I think he completely failed to appreciate what can be done in this direction.

Let me emphasize once again the fact that when he relates this bill for the expenditure of $10 million over a period of years for the development of a national film corporation with the necessities of those persons who are naturally looking forward to an increase in their old age pension, which all of us support on this side of the house and have done so repeatedly, I think he is using a very unsound argument indeed, and one that I was urprised to hear him use. I think he went to great trouble to write those letters and get those replies in order to support the position he has taken this evening.

I feel, Mr. Chairman, that this measure does provide an opportunity for the development of Canadian talent. We may get some of our talent to return home from other countries. I believe somebody mentioned Lorne Greene. I do not know whether we want to carry on with the Ponderosa, or something like that, in Canada. However, this measure will provide the opportunity for the development of Canadian talent, Canadian technicians and script writers. It will develop a sort of national opportunity if we can only coordinate all these efforts, the C.B.C., the National Film Board and what can take place under this resolution, for giving the Canadian approach to our history and to take advantage of the Canadian scene.

Before concluding I do want to suggest to the minister that British Columbia presents the greatest opportunities in Canada for the development of a Canadian film industry. There is a great deal of talent in British Columbia and it is fortunate in having the scenery and background required to develop the industry. I am not suggesting for a moment that our industry should be entirely confined to British Columbia. I am sure that Canadians in all provinces will want to see all provinces receive similar recognition in the efforts of this industry. The development of a Canadian feature film industry portraying Canadian life will provide an opportunity for the development of unity in this country and will promote the cause of understanding.

Mr. Southam: As one of those who have been directly interested in the motion picture industry in this country for some years, I thought I should like to make a few comments this evening concerning the introduction of this measure to establish a corporation known as the Canadian Film Development Corporation. Like all hon. members of this house, I am in favour of the further development of the arts and culture in our country. I am looking forward to the time when Canada can establish its own identity in Canadian literature, music, art and other things cultural.

However, I have some grave doubts about this resolution so far as the development of a feature film industry in this country at this time is concerned. In the first place, $10 million is a paltry amount in relation to a job of this kind. It is like sending a boy to do a man's errand. Hollywood is the centre of the United States film industry, and with the vast millions that have been put into it, that industry has run into grave difficulties in the last few years. The reason for this has been the impact of television. Television has cut very deeply into this private industry to the extent that in Canada—I have not got the exact figures—hundreds of theatres have had to close their doors. I know that in Winnipeg, the gateway to the west, as a result of the impact of television, no less than 11 theatres closed down in one year.

This does not mean that I am injecting a gloomy note into our discussion. There is still room for motion picture production. However, I feel we have to look at the matter carefully in a young country like Canada that has many more important responsibilities at this time to which reference has been made. It is a curious fact that the minister recently suggested paying $6 million for one painting, but now she suggests an amount of only $10 million for the establishment of a motion picture industry.

The motion picture industry, for instance, is divided into four main branches. First, there are the stars. A few years ago the cost of these stars did not run into too big an item because the motion picture producer could hire a top star on an annual contract. As a result, he might be able to produce anywhere from five to ten pictures with the one star. Now these motion picture stars of top calibre insist on getting into the production end before they will even lend their talents to a production. They usually insist on a contract under which they will make only one or two pictures a year and will take a large share of the profits, sometimes 50 per cent. I do not believe Canada would be in a different position if we were to establish a motion picture industry.

We would find ourselves in the same difficulties as private industry has in this regard. Then, too, these production companies with unlimited millions of dollars behind them have, in the last several years, found it necessary to amalgamate in order to remain in business. Then, you have distribution which is a very important part of the whole motion picture industry. It is all right to produce a picture, but you have to have a whole chain of distribution centres in order to get this film to the next stage, which is the exhibitor himself. All in all, Mr. Chairman, I think we should take a very serious look at this resolution before we support it 100 per cent.

For instance, I think the hon. member for Saskatoon mentioned that back in 1948—I recall reading about this—Mr. J. Arthur Rank, one of the great producers of England, came to Canada to look at the potential of this country for the motion picture industry. I must remind you this was before the advent of television and its impact on the motion picture industry. This top executive from that great country came to the conclusion that we were too young, and we did not have a large enough population to support a motion picture industry. He withdrew from Canada, and I believe we should learn a lesson from that action. I just wanted to voice this note of warning to the minister, Mr. Chairman. This government project, even though it may sound laudable, could prove to be a boomerang if we do not give it serious consideration.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: I regret to interrupt the hon. member for York-Humber but the time allotted for his speech had expired. I must recall to hon. members provisional standing order 61-A(2), which reads:

> Notwithstanding the provisions of any other standing order, no member shall speak for more than 20 minutes during the time when a resolution preceding a bill involving the expenditure of public money is under consideration in the committee of the whole house.

Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. More: I should like to say a few words on this resolution. Frankly I must tell the minster that I feel this resolution, at this time, is ill considered. The sum of $10 million which is involved in starting a new venture could be used in many other ways by existing cultural establishments. I am speaking of our live theatre, our ballets and our symphony orchestras. We hear from the Canada Council that there is a shortage of funds to meet their requirements. We know that television is the strongest medium of communication we have today, yet we do not have very much Canadian developed programs in that industry. One can think of "Seaway" which was Canadian developed, and then one is at a loss to think of any others except perhaps "Milk and Honey". We do have some Canadian television, but there is not very much.

I suggest that rather than start a venture with such an uncertain future at this time, if the government has $10 million to be used it could be used to develop Canadian talent. It could be channelled into cultural establishments which exist now and which are suffering because of a shortage of funds.

It seems to me that if we have this sort of money to invest at the present time we should give more encouragement to our television industry and enable them to increase the scope of their enterprise, which would be more rewarding than trying to make feature films which, at best, are products with a very uncertain future and for which we do not appear to have any definite market.

I also suggest to the minister that there are already under way centennial projects which were instigated by this government but which have now run short of funds owing to the inflationary pressures and increased costs which have been brought about by the policies of this government. Yet the government now refuses to increase the supply of funds and enable completion of these projects.

I think it would be strange indeed if this house were to vote an expenditure of $10 million for a feature film industry when there are steel skeletons of centennial projects in various parts of the country which are supposed to serve the cultural interests of the country. We have live theatre and other establishments already in existence, but we have insufficient funds to complete these projects. The government now washes its hands of any further responsibility and tells the municipalities, if you please, that these projects are now their baby and they should go ahead and do what they can with them.

We have in Ottawa what is referred to as the "hole" in "confusion square", the cost of which started out at $9 million. I referred to this in a question to the minister the other day. Now the cost is, not $31 million, but I understand that $34 million is the probable cost of completion of this project; and for this the government must take full responsibility.

However, let me get away from Ottawa. As I say the steel for these projects is lying on site because no funds are available to complete the projects in time for centennial year. The minister says that the government has given $2.5 million; that these projects are now the municipalities' baby.

It seems to me that it would look very peculiar if we started to develop a feature film industry with an initial expenditure of $10 million—and God knows what the cost will escalate to—while we leave these skeletons on view. This steel is lying on the ground, of no possible use, at a time when perhaps $10 million at the outside would enable the people who accepted these projects, and who started to develop them in all good faith, to complete them. In view of the time clause placed by the government in the contracts for completion in 1967, these people went ahead with their plans but now find them stalled.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that rather than this highfalutin interest in a feature film industry, the minister should look at the present centennial programs which are under way but which remain unfinished owing to lack of funds. I suggest she should devote this $10 million to the completion of a program which has already been started.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Miss LaMarsh thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-204, for the establishment of a Canadian Film Development Corporation.

Stabilization of Milk and Cream Prices

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

DAIRY COMMISSION

PROVISION FOR STABILIZATION OF MILK AND CREAM PRICES

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to establish a Dairy Commission for Canada to administer funds made available to it for the purpose of stabilizing the price of milk and cream so as to provide efficient producers of milk and cream with the opportunity of obtaining a fair return for their labour and investment and to provide consumers of dairy products with a continuous and adequate supply of dairy products of high quality; to provide that all expenditures for the purpose of the said measure, excluding those that in the opinion of the minister are directly attributable to action taken by the commission to stabilize the price of any dairy product, shall be paid out of moneys appropriated by parliament therefor; to provide also for the establishment in the Consolidated Revenue Fund of a special account to be known as the Canadian Dairy Commission account, for credits and charges thereto; and to provide further for the making of loans to the commission and for the terms and conditions thereof.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, the resolution and bill presently before the committee breaks new ground in agricultural legislation for Canada. It is the first bill that will provide a legislative base for the establishment of a commission with Canada-wide responsibility for an agricultural commodity.

One of the major problems of the Canadian dairy industry, a problem common to dairy industries in all countries and in fact to agricultural production of almost all types, is the cyclical nature of production patterns and, with it, price instability. While the length of the cycle may vary from product to product, the cycles have common characteristics: a period of high production coupled with falling prices; then a period of readjustment which often results in excessive curtailment of production and subsequent high prices. This period seems to be inevitably followed by surging production induced by the high prices, which in turn generate consumer resistance and decreased consumption. And so the cycle starts anew.

Many devices have been and are being used to meet this problem. Paramount among these are support measures and rational marketing. Earlier this year a major change in the government's approach to dairy support was announced. This announcement represented the first stage in the government's dairy program. Under it, shippers of manufacturing milk will receive direct payments from the government of 75 cents per hundredweight, which will result in a national average return of $4 per hundredweight for 3.5 per cent milk, f.o.b. the factory. An equivalent payment will be made to shippers of farm-separated cream.

This program was implemented because producer income from dairying was such that there had been a sharp cutback in production. In other words, the production cycle was approaching the stage where curtailed production and high consumer prices would result. The program has been in effect only since April of this year and production patterns in the dairy industry change slowly. But it is of interest to note that figures for the month of May indicate that the downward trend in butter production has been curtailed, restoring a measure of stability to this product.

The second phase of the government's dairy program is the establishment of a Canadian Dairy Commission, and perhaps it would be useful at this point to review briefly some of the events leading to the development of this legislation.

In 1963 the Canadian dairy industry was plagued with low prices and surpluses. At that time a meeting was called at which the various segments of the industry, both producer and processor, as well as federal and provincial governments, were represented. The conference agreed that the forming of a body or organization to perform a co-ordinated and advisory function for the dairy industry was a requirement. The conference recommended that a co-ordinating and advisory committee called the Canadian dairy advisory committee be established with representation from the various groups. Subsequently this committee met on many occasions. Subject matters covered by the committee included research, dairy quality and marketing. A basic recommendation in the latter category was that a national dairy authority be developed.

On March 26, 1965, when the dairy support program for the forthcoming year was announced, the announcement included a statement that it was the intention of the government to introduce legislation to provide for a Canadian Dairy Commission. Many groups, including the Dairy Farmers of Canada and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, have supported, by means of briefs and submissions, this intention.

Under our constitution, the responsibility for agricultural production and for marketing controls lies largely with the provinces. However, when agricultural commodities cross interprovincial or international boundaries, federal authority is involved.

With the growing complexity and sophistication of marketing techniques in this country, very often it is not known when a product is produced or processed whether its ultimate destination shall be within the province of production or elsewhere in the country. With this development in marketing procedures, there has been increasing need for legislation to complement that of the provinces in order to ensure orderly marketing procedures.

The bill that I shall introduce this evening will establish a commission, one of the primary functions of which will be, in co-operation with provincial agencies, the co-ordination of such marketing matters.

This commission will also have authority to administer the dairy support program, to engage in the promotion of dairy products and in general to take such action as will result in the development of a dairy industry best suited to the needs of the country. The commission will consist of three members appointed by the governor in council and will have available the services of a consultative committee of nine members. It is the intention that members will be representative of the various segments of the dairy industry in Canada.

In order that it may meet its objectives, funds will be provided to the commission from three sources. First, the amounts required for the implementation of the federal dairy support program will be provided to it under the provisions of the Agricultural Stabilization Act; second, the amounts required for the commission's own administrative operations will be provided to it by a vote of parliament and, third, the commission will be empowered to raise funds through levies and licences.

While the commission will be able to perform any provincial function that might be delegated to it under provincial legislation, it should be stressed that one of its major roles will be to work in co-ordination and co-operation with provincial boards in meeting its objectives.

It is not possible at this time to indicate, other than in a broad way, the manner in which the commission will operate. The dairy industry is a complex and ever changing entity, and with these changes, different approaches will doubtless be needed on the part of the commission.

The legislation has been drafted to provide for sufficient flexibility to permit the commission to meet the objectives set for it, despite changing structures in the Canadian dairy industry. A healthy agriculture in Canada must be predicated on assurance to producers of returns commensurate with their labours and with their contribution to society, and equivalent returns to other segments of the population. In recent years this has not been the case.

Broad government agricultural policy toward this end is on a three fold basis. First, producers must be able to establish efficient and viable production units. Here government action has been taken through upward revisions in the funds available under the Farm Credit Act and through the introduction of the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act. Complementary to this is the ARDA program that in essence will provide for those unable, for whatever reason it may be, to develop a viable production entity.

The second cornerstone for an efficient agriculture must be that of marketing. Production, no matter how efficient it may be by itself, cannot stand alone and is useless, unless the fruits of production are marketed at a price commensurate with their costs. The present legislation represents a very significant step in this latter direction. No matter how efficient production may be, or how well marketing may be conducted, the agricultural producer still requires protection against losses beyond his control.

Despite the advances we have made in technology, little or no protection is possible against the vagaries of the weather. Herein lies the role of crop insurance. Already the government has made a significant change in the legislation through an amendment providing for re-insurance of a portion of the province's risk. The results of this change have been a very significant increase in the utilization of this federal act, and thus in the protection provided to producers.

I suggest that in these three areas lies the importance to the general well being of the economics of the agricultural community, towards which the objectives of this government in an agricultural sense will be directed. I suggest that the measure presently before the house at the resolution stage will help in the area of marketing which, to be effective, must have a federal complement to any provincial jurisdiction. We hope and believe that this measure will provide that, with respect to the dairy industry.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, aware of the urgent needs of the farmers, we on this side of the house will not do anything to delay the earliest possible implementation of the legislation now before us.

I shall consequently keep my remarks down to a minimum so that consideration of this legislation is not delayed.

The minister told us that this was something new. At last, after waiting two and a half or three years, the present government promises something new. But, in introducing the legislation he calls new, it seems that the minister is relying upon numerous legislation and measures that have been adopted and put to the test by the former government. We are very happy to note that the present government in order to achieve something, must rely upon the work done by the preceding administration.

We have also heard the minister tell us that this legislation was becoming urgent due to the fact that cost of production by the farmer is constantly on the increase, thus putting him in a very difficult situation. Unless I am mistaken, we have been telling that for at least three years, to the present minister as well as to his predecessor who claimed that sufficient income could be derived from six cows and two hogs, in the province of Quebec and in eastern Canada to ensure the livelihood of a family.

However, we on this side of the house know quite well the problems, the needs of the farming community and, while we were in office, we tried to give the farmers their just share of the national income. The present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) does have to go very far if he wants to find out exactly what the eastern farmers thought of the Conservative team. He has only to visit one or two concessions, and there is no doubt that he will find out through his conversations with the farmers that we took the necessary steps to get the farmer to a degree of prosperity which was not only for his own good but also for the general good.

And since the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) seems a little worried or seems to disagree with what I am saying, I suggest to the Minister of Agriculture to take him along because it will certainly do him a lot of good to find out the truth.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member who has the floor seems to insinuate that I made some allusion to his remarks. All I said to the Minister of Agriculture is that in spite of the seriousness of the matter, the hon. member could not refrain from indulging in petty politics.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I am always surprised to hear those sacrosanct people like the Minister of Fisheries make such statements because he, for one, cannot open his mouth without going in for petty politics. Therefore, if he only had the decency to listen to what is said, he might be able to refrain for indulging in petty politics when he gets the opportunity to speak.

Mr. Chairman, while discussing the steps taken by the present government to try to help the farming community I cannot but see things as they are, and I think that La Terre de Chez Nous, a publication which is essentially concerned with farming, does not indulge in petty politics. However, I have here the issue of June 15, 1966, and on page 5, I see the following title:

Ottawa's dairy policy is unsatisfactory and unfair.

Mr. Chairman, may I point out to the Minister of Fisheries that all I am trying to say is that the farm policy of the present government is not realistic and, moreover, according to a publication which has expert knowledge of farming, the policy of the present government is unfair and unsatisfactory.

And since I have this opportunity, I should like to read into the record part of a telegram recently sent to the Minister of Agriculture by the executive committee of the C.F.U., and I quote:

C.F.U. executive committee considers present Ottawa policy clearly inadequate since it will not guarantee selling price of $4 per cwt. for all industrial milk and particularly unfair for large groups of producers, such as cream shippers, producers whose milk is processed into powder by cylinder process or into casein, etc—

I am not quoting my own words, but a newspaper representing opinion of the farmers in the province of Quebec.

And further this communication says:

Under circumstances, C.F.U. executive committee decided to inform and alert all Quebec farmers and their district and local organizations, who will advise necessary means to obtain satisfaction, i.e. the guarantee of $4 per cwt., from Ottawa government for all industrial milk—

Now, referring to page 2 of the same publication, I find an announcement published by the federal Department of Agriculture, which refers to an average price of $4 per cwt. of milk. Well, it is not $4 per cwt. of milk that farmers and associations want, but a guaranteed price of $4 per cwt. of milk. The people now sitting on the government benches are not entitled to tell the dairy industry what to do.

When we came into power and became the laughing stock of those who now form the government and base their policy on the proposals we put forward at the time, we took the required measures to give the farmers what they expected. We succeeded to a large extent and we would like this prosperity, which begun to be felt by the farmers under the Conservative government although it is marking time momentarily, to be restored. Farmers, in particular, are fed up with election promises.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Farmers especially have had enough of election promises. They now want the present government to act. This is not asking too much. They want the great promises made by the Minister of Agriculture during the election campaigns to be fulfilled. It can be recalled, for instance, that the 1962, I think, election program of the Liberal party mentioned distribution of milk in the schools to promote consumption of dairy products. They who made this suggestion surely knew that this was not incumbent on them, that it came under provincial jurisdiction. Milk distribution in school is a local matter. For a reason I do not understand, they were trying then, probably to win votes, to promote this idea of milk distribution in schools.

Since this government came into office the dairy industry has been so neglected that a great number of farmers got rid—as they say—of their dairy herd, because they were afraid that the income would go on decreasing. The farmers thought: there is no use to carry on with the dairy industry, since the Liberal government does not want to help us. This is so true that today, in one parish in my riding. Ste. Madeleine for instance, many farmers got rid of their dairy herd.

The dairy production has decreased so much recently that the time is not far when we will probably have to import dairy products, especially butter.

It seems abnormal to me that in a country so well endowed as Canada, Quebec and Ontario especially, such a situation should have developed.

Before concluding, I would simply like to ask the minister, even if this forces him to humble himself, to revise his former statements and admit that perhaps he does not have all the answers to problems, as he claimed. I urge him to get information from a former minister of agriculture who has the reputation of having been the best minister of agriculture Canada has known, I mean the member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton). I ask him to turn to his knowledge, because he is really a specialist in this field of agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, for a few minutes this evening the minister dealt with crop insurance which was put on our statute books thanks to the former minister of agriculture, the member for Qu'Appelle; he referred to the ARDA act, the Agricultural Stabilization Act, all measures we owe to the member for Qu'Appelle.

I am not surprised to hear the laughter of people who have always kept away from the farming class. The member for Beauce (Mr. Racine) must know what I mean, since at one time the people from Beauce stayed away from him. I am not surprised to learn that—

Mr. Racine: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I certainly did not have the privilege of being appointed to the cabinet during an election campaign, like the member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot.

Mr. Ricard: And you probably never will either, my friend. It is a title that the member can certainly not take away from me.

Then, Mr. Chairman, as the minister admitted himself, this resolution will be implemented in co-operation with the provincial authorities. We know that a change took place, even though I must open old sores for the member for Beauce and a few others from the province of Quebec, we know that a change took place in the Quebec government not so long ago and that those in office at present are aware of the problems of the farming people and will certainly resort to all their knowledge and make every effort in order to improve the farmers' situation.

As the minister and others in this house are aware, one of our former colleagues who represented the electoral district of Nicolet-Yamaska is now minister of agriculture and colonization in Mr. Johnson's cabinet, in Quebec. He is a practising farmer, who is familiar with farm problems; he will undoubtedly make the federal Minister of Agriculture profit by his knowledge.

I therefore urge the minister to get in touch officially and without delay with his counterpart in the province of Quebec. I know that the present provincial minister of agriculture and colonization and former member for Nicolet-Yamaska is desirous to serve the agricultural class in particular and the population of the province of Quebec in general. I also know that he wishes to cooperate with the Minister of Agriculture to make sure that his fellow citizens in the agricultural class may again enjoy the prosperity that we had begun giving them when we were in office.

Mr. Chairman, there will surely be other remarks it will be disirable for me to make when the measure comes before us as a bill; I therefore reserve the right to come back and discuss again this legislation which will surely have a great impact on the agricultural class, if it is well prepared.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, as one who wakes up every morning at five o'clock to milk cows that are not there, I would like to say a few words on this resolution. I must say I was in B.C. at the time when I first heard that the Minister of Agriculture, who I understand is a lawyer, was appointed to that portfolio and I had grave doubts about how this would work out. Now, I find I was mistaken. I can truthfully say that never have I known a Canadian lawyer in history who could communicate so well with farmers. I find out now that he would much prefer to pray with farmers than prey on them.

First I want to congratulate the minister for the prompt action he took with respect to the measure to stabilize the price of fluid milk. That has been appreciated by the farmers in the dairy industry. I say that, as a member of this party that is always willing to give the government credit for anything it does to the advantage of the Canadian people, whatever their occupation, and also as a member of this party that criticizes the government when we see it fall short of doing just that. I am sure the minister realized at that time that this was an answer to an immediate problem, and that something more would be required.

The minister knows that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, farm unions and other farm organizations have for some time been urging the government to adopt legislation of this type which will bring about some order, so far as the marketing of dairy products is concerned. We in this group are very pleased to support the principle and purpose of this resolution.

I was very happy to hear the minister indicate that it is the intention of the federal commission to work in co-operation with provincial boards. That is very necessary indeed, if this type of legislation is to be successful so far as dairy farmers in Canada are concerned. It was also very satisfying to hear the minister state there would be arrangements for democratic representation. This will in effect mean there will be democratic control of the legislation and its application in respect of the dairy industry. I was also pleased to hear the minister say that the legislation would be flexible, and I understand from that he means it will be the intention of the commission to learn from experience, and amend or improve the legislation as experience indicates.

This legislation is, I am sure, a good step toward overcoming the hazards of weather suffered by dairy farmers, and the hazards of marketing suffered by the dairy industry in general, both of which are beyond the control of the individual farmer or small organization attempting to market dairy products.

I shall look forward to the introduction of the bill, at which time we will have an opportunity of making further inquiries as to the administration of this act. I wish the minister every success in the appointment of this commission and in all it undertakes for dairy farmers and the dairy industry in Canada, once this resolution becomes law.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I want to take the opportunity given me by the introduction of this resolution to say a few things to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) as well as to the house.

In October 1964, the newspaper La Terre de Chez Nous, a farm paper well known in the province of Quebec and which brings useful information to the farmers, published an article with a heading that I found amusing:

Farming, from bad to worse.

Now, in 1966, I think that the same article could be entitled: "From worse to worse", because it can be said that since then, though the government tried to improve the lot of the farmers and the dairy farmers, it has not really succeeded.

The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) read a few minutes ago a telegram sent to the Minister of Agriculture and which clearly indicates the dissatisfaction of the dairy farmers, especially in the province of Quebec.

In May 1966, the Department of Agriculture published a leaflet entitled:

A letter to the farmer—it pays to know everything.

It explained the federal support program for dairy products and it said:

In 1961, the butter consumption left a surplus of 63.8 million pounds; last year, Canada consumed 19.3 million pounds more than it produced. The surplus from previous years made it possible to avoid a shortage of butter but that surplus is almost exhausted. Even if Canadians do not increase their consumption of dairy products this year, a production equal to last year's would result in a shortage during 1966.

Thus, the Department of Agriculture was using that leaflet's title to justify its new farm and dairy production policy, that is a price of $4 cwt., to invite the dairy farmers to produce more milk than in the past.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, if we consider how the government found it possible to pay that price of $4 per hundredweight, we see that it did not try very hard, especially in the light of an advertisement such as the one published in dailies and weeklies, and especially in the Echo of Val d'Or on Wednesday, May 11, 1966, where the following lines appeared:

However, the government does not have the power to set up the price paid by the processors to the producers. It is your responsibility to negotiate the best possible price for your milk through your farm organizations.

To my mind this means that the farmers must negotiate with the processors—with the processing industry, if you prefer—prices that will make it possible for them to obtain $4 per hundredweight for milk. In this event, then, the industry or the processor will have to increase the price of butter or of casein, if you wish, or of powdered milk so that the consumer once again will have to foot directly this increase in the price of butter and of other milk products to make it possible for the milk producers to obtain a satisfactory return for his production.

Mr. Chairman, recently I received copy of a letter that was being sent by the Agricultural Cooperative Society of Sainte-Rose de Poularies, in my constituency, to the Minister of Agriculture in which it was complaining of the difficulty the processing plants had in paying $3.25 per hundredweight they will have to pay if the farmers are to get $4 per hundredweight, because the subsidy, as the minister stated a while ago and as it was announced in the press, is only $0.75 per hundredweight. Here, now, is the wording of this letter and I quote:

• (8:50 p.m.)

Honourable Minister,

According to your new milk policy, manufacturers should pay a minimum price of three dollars and twenty-five cents ($3.25) per hundredweight of milk; to that price will be added a subsidy of seventy-five cents ($0.75) per hundredweight to reach an average of four dollars ($4.00) per hundredweight of milk, and you ask the producers who supply industrial milk to negotiate this price. Now, we get an average of three dollars and eighteen cents ($3.18) per hundredweight of milk testing 3.5 per cent butterfat. With butter, selling for fifty-nine cents ($0.59) per pound and casein selling for thirty and a half cents ($0.30½) per pound, this requires four pounds and twenty-three hundredths (4.23) of butter and two pounds and one quarter (2¼) of casein per hundredweight of whole milk. So we are asking you, in our name and on behalf of all our producers and suppliers of industrial milk an increased subsidy on casein or a higher price for butter.

Obviously, as this letter says, producers, or rather processors will not be able to pay $3.25 per hundred pounds as the hon. minister asks in published announcements and letters to the processors.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether this resolution to establish a Canadian Dairy Commission is not again intended to put some officials in high places, so that if something goes wrong, if the farmers, the producers or processors complain too much, the minister will be able to say: go to the Commission. Thus the minister would be relieved of his responsibilities.

Mr. Chairman, I think the minister and his officials should be able to find a way to stabilize prices of milk products so that farmers are paid decent prices.

Mr. Chairman, the resolution reads as follows:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to establish a Dairy Commission for Canada to administer funds made available to it for the purpose of stabilizing the price of milk and cream so as to provide efficient producers of milk and cream with the opportunity of obtaining a fair return for their labour and investment and to provide consumers of dairy products with a continuous and adequate supply of dairy products of high quality;

If I have understood this first part of the resolution, this means that the Canadian Dairy Commission will be able to decide what producers of milk are competent. This Commission will be the one to determine whether a certain producer is competent for the production of milk. This is a form of control which smacks of socialism and I was not at all surprised a while ago to hear the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), I believe, approve this measure right away.

I think that instead the department should take the responsibility of stabilizing the price of milk in the best interests of farmers, in accordance with their request, in short that the Board itself should not determine the price which farmers should get for their production, but that this decision be reached as a result of the farmers' demands. And when we consider the pressures exercised for a few years by farm organizations such as the C.F.U. in the province of Quebec, we easily realize that farmers have not failed to state to the federal and provincial Departments of Agriculture their needs and the price they must get to meet their obligations. Farmers have growing obligations to meet; the cost of farm machinery is constantly rising and to such an extent, that they can no longer make ends meet with the prices they get for farm products.

So, Mr. Chairman, the price the processing industries can now get for butter, powdered milk and casein is obviously inadequate to allow them to pay $3.25 per hundredweight, and to pay the $4.00 the farmers could get with the government subsidy.

I feel that, instead of establishing a dairy commission for Canada, it might have been wiser for the minister to suggest an increase in the present subsidies, high enough to enable the processors to pay producers $4 per hundredweight.

Perusal of the available literature and what is published in La Terre de Chez Nous reveals that the government, through certain prices, has agreed to purchase for a basic price unsold surpluses of casein, powdered milk and other milk produce, to sell them, if need be, to another country or on foreign markets for a lower price. If that be the case, once again the Canadian taxpayer is paying dividends to foreign countries to purchase Canadian production.

Mr. Chairman, I am personally totally dissatisfied with this resolution; to my mind, it does not answer the needs of the agricultural class, particularly in the province of Quebec; in fact, the farmers of Quebec are not asking for a commission to stabilize prices, but rather for a decent price for their agriculture and dairy produce, so that their income might be comparable to that in any other sphere of activity or industry in our province or our country.

I feel that when we have the bill, we will then know better what policy the hon. minister intends to apply or recommend.

Once more, the hon. minister was not too explicit in the explanations he gave us at the start, when he introduced the resolution; we hope, with the bill, to better understand the objectives of the hon. Minister of Agriculture; we can then make more representations and recommendations to him.

[English]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, at the outset I would say to the Minister of Agriculture that we wish him well in his attempts to carry out what appear to be two major achievements in so far as the dairy industry is concerned. It seems to me that he is trying to raise the whole price structure to the fluid milk producers, the manufactured milk producers and the cream shippers, and second he is trying to provide an additional measure of stability to the dairy industry in Canada. Both objectives are desirable and in our opinion the action by the federal government to achieve these ends is long overdue.

I should also like to refer to the minister's statement that production in the month of May shows that the downward trend in dairy production in Canada may have been arrested, and we are now perhaps moving into an era when Canada will again be producing her own requirements of dairy products. The minister did not explain whether this takes into account the yearly average for the month of May, because I think we all know that dairy production always goes up in May due, of course, to the arrival of spring, green grass and higher nutrition levels for animals almost all across the country.

I believe we should have policies in Canada that will induce dairy producers to produce all of Canada's requirements. I think it would be an added strain on our international balance of payments and other economic fields if we were to become a net importer of dairy products, because certainly it is physically possible for us to produce not only all our own requirements but dairy products for export, if the price structure made this attractive.

When the minister was talking about the new Canadian Dairy Commission I believe he said he was at this time only outlining it functions and general structure. I can understand that, at the resolution stage. The minister went on to say that he wanted to have sufficient flexibility within the program so the government could meet the changing conditions that arise from time to time in the production and marketing of dairy products in Canada. A large number of questions have been left unanswered, even though one takes into account the statement made by the minister today and the one he made some time in March when he announced the subsidy that would be paid on milk. For example, this evening he said that the new dairy commission, working in co-operation with the provinces, will also have the power to engage in the promotion of dairy products. At least, I interpreted what he said to mean that, althought they are perhaps not the exact words he used.

We would like to know where the dairy commission will obtain the funds for the promotion of dairy products in Canada. The minister mentioned three different sources of funds in this respect; first he referred to amounts that will be paid under the Agricultural Stabilization Act, second he said the administration costs would be paid by the federal government, and the third source of funds suggested was through levies and licence fees that would be imposed upon some in the dairy industry. The minister did not say whether they were to be imposed on the producers or processors. We are curious to find out whether any of these levies and licences will be the source of funds that will be used for the promotion of dairy products in Canada or whether levies or licences will be imposed for other reasons.

I think the minister also suggested that marketing control of agricultural products lies largely within the jurisdiction of the provinces. According to section 95 of the B.N.A. Act it does not seem that the provinces have any greater jurisdiction in the matter of dealing with agricultural problems than has the federal government, because it is said in that section that—> —in each province the legislature may make laws in relation to agriculture in the province and to immigration into the province; and it is hereby declared that the parliament of Canada may from time to time make laws in relation to agriculture—

Section 95 then goes on to say that these laws that are made by the legislature of a province relative to agriculture or to immigration—

> —shall have effect in and for the province as long and as far only it is not repugnant to any act of the parliament of Canada.

I suggest that in fact this section gives the federal government at least a little priority or a little superior jurisdiction over the provincial governments in the field of agriculture. I know that the provinces have an almost equal right with the federal government to legislate in the field of agriculture. The reason I bring this up Mr. Chairman, is that there still seems to be some reluctance on the part of the minister and of the government to say anything about how they are going to keep the price of manufactured milk at $3.25 per hundred.

There is also the problem that if the price that the processors pay to the producers falls below this $3.25, then there seems to be some doubt as to whether or not the subsidy of 75 cents will be paid. I suggest to the minister that he is perhaps being a little timid when he attempts to transfer all of the responsibility in that matter on to the provinces and expects them to keep the price paid by the processors up to the $3.25 level for 3.5 per cent milk. I am not advocating at this time that the federal government should move out of this field and enforce a price of $3.25 to be paid by the processors to the milk producers, but I think it is perhaps a little unfair to suggest that the provinces are the only ones to have this responsibility.

I suggest to the minister, and I am sure he knows this, that a lot of problems would arise if the Canadian Department of Agriculture were to pay the subsidy regardless of the price paid by the processors to the producers. I am fully cognizant of that problem, but I believe that in some parts of Canada the idea still exists that it is somehow up to the provinces to move into the field of floor prices and to tell the processors that they should pay the $3.25, otherwise the government will not pay the 75 cents subsidy.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, there are a lot of questions that are still unanswered and perhaps we will get some answers to those questions when we come to a clause by clause consideration of the bill.

The minister went on to say that the Canadian agricultural policy would only be satisfactory as long as the prices paid to the farmers are commensurate with the cost of production. I should like to suggest to him that he has a great task before him if he wishes to extend this policy into all the fields of agriculture. We all recognize the magnitude of the problem, and I should like the minister to know that if in fact he intends to try to raise the whole price price structure in other areas of production and then provide a meassure of stability, then we in this party are not only ready but willing and anxious to give him our support.

This is not the time to go into a long discourse respecting the way in which the costs of production in agriculture have risen far beyond the comparable increases in the profits made by the farmers, because I am sure the minister is well aware of this. I also hope he is well aware that this has happened in many other fields.

The minister suggested we need to have efficient and viable farm units and that action has been taken in this regard through the Farm Credit Corporation and ARDA. I fail to see how making additional credit available and getting the farmers deeper into debt will assist them, unless we take a more active part in marketing and particularly in giving greater protection to our home producers.

The minister suggested that the setting up of this new Canadian Dairy Commission is a significant step in the marketing of some agricultural products. Perhaps that is so, but in his explanation of the functions, powers, and duties of the Canadian Dairy Commission he did not give us any detail other then that of providing a subsidy of 75 cents per hundred to the processors, who are paying $3.25.

As I said a few moments ago, the minister said something about the promotion of dairy products in Canada, but so far we have not heard any details on whether this promotion will take the form of advertising programs or other types of promotion campaigns.

The other point about which I am particularly concerned is whether the minister and his officials have clearly determined what action they will take to keep the processors paying the producers at least $3.25. I think it will be very unfair if some processors were found to be paying less than the $3.25, because this would deprive the producers not only of the difference in the price they were getting but also of the 75 cents subsidy.

As I said, I realize that many problems are involved here, because if there were no cut in the price then perhaps the processors would allow the federal government to take over a large very large part of the total price of milk paid to the producers in those areas.

I wish to say in closing, Mr. Chairman, that we support this new dairy program. We know that there will be some difficulties in administering it, but we hope that since this plan has been in effect since April 1, this trial period will have bought to light some of the administrative problems that will be encountered and that the department will have found ways and means of dealing with them. I want to say also that if there are any other areas of agricultural production in which the minister feels the government can provide the necessary action for raising the whole price structure, we in this party are willing and ready to give the kind of support that we think agriculture deserves.

[Translation]

Mr. Racine: In an election campaign, a candidate is somewhat like a traveling salesman, trying to sell his fellow-citizens, his electors, the merchandise prefabricated by the party he represents.

Now, during the last campaign, two important aspects of the government program were of special interest to eastern farmers, the amending of the Crop Insurance Act and the creation of that Dairy Commission for Canada. Our dairy industry, as everybody knows as was pointed out by the opposition parties, was not very prosperous. We must nevertheless admit that the hon. minister, and I wish to agree with the opinion expressed by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), even though he is a lawyer, understands very well the agricultural problems. We have become aware of that even after a few months and since he has assumed that responsibility, he has already done much for the dairy industry, by increasing the price of milk and particularly the subsidies already granted to casein, thereby helping many factors in the eastern areas.

I think that a dairy commission for Canada will provide dairy farmers with the same services that are provided to the western farmers through the Canadian Wheat Board. The eastern area had been neglected for a long time, and now at last, a Minister of Agriculture deigns to consider the main problem, the one concerning the dairy industry.

I cannot help congratulating tonight the minister and his government. I am sure most of the farmers, if not all of them, will be very pleased to learn that such a piece of legislation, advocated by us, will soon be added to Canada's statutes. As was said previously, that dairy commission for Canada will group representatives from the dairy industry throughout Canada, and I am sure results will be forthcoming and that, as was also pointed out, the dairy farmer will have access to the income to which he is entitled.

I heard a while ago the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) speaking of election promises. Well, let us say for once that with respect to farming, we had promised two legislative measures which will be passed and implemented.

The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot dealt not only with a dairy commission for Canada, but he gave a general picture of farming and stated that conditions were bad in Canada. Nevertheless, while he was speaking, he mentioned that when it was in office, his party had done everything. I wonder how everything had been done, since he now says that nothing is being done. I wish to point out, Mr. Chairman, that he spoke about crop insurance, but we, in eastern Canada, could not even take advantage of that measure.

I remember that that legislation was passed by the former government in office from 1958 to 1962, while I was sitting in the house. And I remember that hon. members from Ontario, Quebec and the maritimes rose to request the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), who was then the minister of agriculture, to amend this Crop Insurance Act so as to make it applicable in the provinces where mixed farming existed.

Now, Mr. Chairman, even after such a request from members of various provinces, the Crop Insurance Act had remained the same; so I am happy to see today on the order paper of the house that this act will be amended in order that the eastern provinces, which are engaged in mixed farming, might benefit also.

It was said that we had promised milk distribution in the schools. I am not at all surprised at this promise, Mr. Chairman, since we had a surplus in the country at the time it was made. We had butter and milk surpluses. The situation is not the same today, since some hon. members of the opposition, including the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot, have even recognized that production might not be adequate in a few years.

As concerns the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise), who appeared to criticize this dairy commission for Canada and said that the sole purpose of its establishment was to create higher administrative posts, well, I believe that an hon. member from the east who says such a thing concerning the dairy commission for Canada, which will render the same services as the Canadian Wheat Board, practically commits a sacrilege.

The farmers have been asking for this Canadian dairy commission for several years, and when the member for Chapleau says that this measure smacks of socialism I wonder whether he believes that the establishment of a Canadian Wheat Board was also a somewhat socialistic measure.

He suggests grants to raise the price of milk. I would advise him to talk about it with the farmers of his region when he goes home for the week-end; he will see that the farmer, today, does not want to live off grants any longer, he wants to run an economic farm and he wants commissions such as the Canadian dairy commission to be established so that he, an honourable man who wants to earn his living, may have an economic enterprise without government subsidy, like any other citizen.

Mr. Chairman, before concluding, for I shall not speak much longer, I should like to congratulate the minister on this proposal to establish a Canadian dairy commission. I do not doubt that his work will result for dairy farmers in benefits which will help them to operate profitably and live decently, like their fellow-citizens who work in other Canadian industries.

[English]

Mr. McCutcheon: I should like to take part very briefly in this debate tonight. At the outset I want to congratulate the minister upon introducing this resolution. I thought he did an admirable job in presenting his material. I believe part of the resolution is so good it should be repeated, and I propose to read into the record the first paragraph in which we find these words:

> —so as to provide efficient producers of milk and cream with the opportunity of obtaining a fair return for their labour and investment and to provide consumers of dairy products with a continuous and adequate supply of dairy products of high quality.

This is a most commendable objective. As a matter of fact, I think it is just wonderful. I will bet the minister is against sin and in favour of motherhood. In his explanatory remarks the minister went even further and referred to the Farm Credit Corporation, the farm machinery act, ARDA and several other beneficial pieces of legislation. My only comment, for the benefit of the city people, is that the minister used an extremely wide brush in painting the scene, and for the benefit of the farmers like myself, I would describe it as using a five tine fork. As far as I can see from the material in front of me, everybody gets something. The government gets three more commissioners on the payroll; the consumer is mentioned in dispatches; and the farmer gets some more promises.

The minister referred to the function of the commission as advisory. This is fine in itself, but I am wondering how it is going to work out. Who is there to advise, and how? The minister also mentioned liaison with the provinces, which I think is all to the good.

Another matter mentioned was that the commission has to administer funds. It seems to me that these funds are already being administered by the stabilization board. However, if this resolution does what it says it intends to do, it will be a milestone in the advancement of the agricultural section of the Canadian economy. I think it is only fair, however, that we reserve judgment on this matter at this time, until it is shown that by the mere appointing of the commission the dairy farmers of Canada have received $4 per hundredweight for milk.

The hon. member for Kootenay West said he was in favour of this advisory commission and that he felt it would be very helpful to the dairy farmers with their weather problems. I do not quite follow his reasoning in that regard.

Mr. Herridge: Has the hon. member never weathered a financial storm?

Mr. McCutcheon: I have been in a financial storm all my life; and the advisers take more out of the kitty than I do.

I trust that my remarks will not be construed as being negative. I should like to suggest to the minister that, although I am not from Missouri, I do hope that he will be able to show that this measure will do some good. I will promise him this, that I will support him in the appointment of this commission all the way, if it will accomplish that which is outlined in the resolution.

[Mr. McCutcheon.]

Mr. Moore: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to hear the announcement of the minister that a Dairy Commission is to be established. It will be easier to comment on this matter of course when the details are known. However, it is an admission that the dairy industry is in trouble.

Great hopes were raised at the end of March when the new dairy policy was announced. The dairy farmers believed that they were going to get at least $4 per hundredweight across the board for their milk; that was to be the guaranteed price for all milk. This price of course, has not been realized by many producers. There is really no guaranteed price of $4 per hundredweight; there is only the hope that with the subsidy $4 will be realized. For example, the cream producers are not getting $4 per hundredweight for their cream in relation to the equivalent price for milk, even when the value of skim milk to the farmer is added.

In this regard, it should be realized in the first place that on many farms skim milk is of little value commercially, and perhaps of no value for feed purposes. Certainly it is not worth the price quoted for the production of skim milk powder. Only in certain cases can this price be realized. Naturally the fluid milk shippers get $5 per hundredweight for milk sold on quota, but they are in trouble with their surplus milk. In the first place, a subsidy is paid only on the surplus over 120 per cent of the quota, though why that figure was arrived at I do not know. It is certainly confusing to a lot of farmers. There must be a money-saving device involved here.

I remember a year or so ago that this was the reason which was given by the former minister for removing the subsidy of 25 cents per hundredweight on surplus milk over quota. The dairy farmer certainly did not get the money, though he needed it at that time. Perhaps the government did save the odd million dollars, which the dairymen certainly could have used. That may be one of the reasons so many dairymen decided to go out of business in the last year or two—that and the high production costs and tremendous boom in land values which make it almost impossible for a dairyman to pasture cattle or even to cut feed on high-priced land.

If the statistics are examined one would be amazed to find the number of dairymen who have decided to shut down businses in the last few years because they could not make a living at dairying, whereas they could in some other branch of farming. No wonder we are facing shortages of dairy products. It is my hope that this dairy commission will have the power to act in the very best interests of the dairy farmers.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Greene thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-205, to provide for the establishment of a Dairy Commission for Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. McIlraith: I suggest we move on to the crop insurance resolution.

Mr. Monteith: I wonder whether the house leader will consider disposing of item No. 5, which is rather inconsequential, the amendment proposed by the other place.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the business indicated for today included the crop insurance resolution.

Mr. Monteith: I do not think that was on the list.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, it was. A question has been raised by some hon. members owing to the fact that the notice on Votes and Proceedings referred to the "house in committee at its next sitting thereof". At the moment I do not recall how the motion was put. I had asked on Friday that it be put in the form of the house in committee of the whole later this day. Which way it was put I do not know. In any event, I had indicated it on Friday for consideration today.

• (9:30 p.m.)

An hon. Member: Where was that?

Mr. McIlraith: In Friday's indication of the business of the house for today.

Mr. Knowles: The answer is in standing order 21(2).

Mr. Lambert: Following the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, if we look at standing order 21(2) we see that it reads:

When any other government notice of motion is called from the Chair, it shall be deemed to have been forthwith transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders in the same or at the next sitting of the House.

The wording is quite important. It is "in the same", notwithstanding whatever way it may have been put at 2.30 this afternoon.

Mr. McIlraith: I would ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to proceed with the crop insurance resolution on the basis that it was the item of business we had indicated we would ask to bring before the house today. If that is not agreeable to the house, then we shall proceed to other business.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The minister has asked for unanimous consent to bring this resolution forward. Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CROP INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION, EXTENDING OPERATION, ETC.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Crop Insurance Act to increase the maximum contribution payable by Canada on crop insurance premiums; to increase the maximum amount of the insurance that may be effected on any crop; to authorize the making of contributions to a province providing insurance coverage against losses arising from the destruction of fruit trees or perennial plants or losses arising when the seeding of summer-fallowed land intended to be used to grow an insured crop is prevented by excessive ground moisture, weather or other agricultural hazards; to provide further for consequential amendments in connection with the administration of the Act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the Chair.

Mr. Greene: In speaking in support of this resolution, Mr. Chairman, I intend to confine my remarks to explaining the reasons and the necessity for the type of amendments which will be proposed in the bill and to give a general outline of the matters to be dealt with. I shall be prepared to go into the matter in considerably more detail when the bill comes before the house for second reading.

Hon. members will recall that the Crop Insurance Act was passed in 1959 to permit the Minister of Agriculture, with the approval of the governor in council, to enter into agreements with any province to make contributions to the administrative costs incurred by the province in the operation of an insurance scheme and to provide 20 per cent of the amount of the premiums which would be necessary to make the insurance program self-sustaining. Under the original legislation three provinces, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Prince Edward Island, entered into agreements and commenced the operation of programs which they considered suitable for their own particular needs.

Hon. members will recall also that in 1964 my immediate predecessor introduced a bill to amend the Crop Insurance Act to make it possible under agreements with the provinces to provide for Canada to reinsure 75 per cent of the amount by which indemnities paid in any year exceeded the amount of premium income for that year and reserves and a deductible amount equal to 2½ per cent of the total face value of policies of insurance in effect in that year. Under this provision of the act, the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta have entered into reinsurance agreements.

With reinsurance provided, the provinces were able to proceed with the expansion of their programs more quickly than would have been the case without this additional backing provided by the federal government.

Hon. members will possibly be interested to know that in 1965, 8,610 Manitoba farmers purchased insurance coverage totalling $18,680,730 and the latest statistics provided by the province indicate that the total premiums collected, including the 20 per cent share paid by Canada, was $1,608,612. The amount of the indemnities paid is reported by the province to be $380,000.

In Prince Edward Island, 267 farmers purchased $440,859 worth of coverage with the total premiums being $16,762 and the indemnities paid $45,593.

In Saskatchewan, 3,172 farmers purchased $4,565,700 worth of coverage for their crops, premiums paid being $369,091 and indemnities $120,853.

Alberta commenced the operation of a crop insurance scheme in 1965 and sold insurance in three test areas in which approximately 50 per cent of the insurable farmers participated in the scheme. Provincial officials advise that 1,312 farmers purchased coverage totalling $3,231,858, with the total premiums, including the federal share, being $290,723 and the total indemnities $480,080.

The maximum level of coverage provided under the original act was limited to 60 per cent of the long-term average yield of a crop in any area. One of the reasons that crop insurance was not considered more generally acceptable was that in some of the provinces, the yields do not vary to the degree that they do, for instance in the prairie provinces, and it was contended by farmers, farm organizations, and provincial governments, that yields very seldom, if ever, fell below 60 per cent of the long-term average.

In addition to contending that yields seldom fall below 60 per cent of the long-term averages, it was also contended that 60 per cent of the long-term averge yield did not always cover the farmer's investment in a crop.

During the past year the federal government was approached by several provinces requesting that Canada contribute toward the cost of emergency programs designed to assist farmers who had suffered extensive crop losses during the year. In agreeing to participate in a number of such programs, the government indicated that such participation would be provided for on the understanding that the provinces concerned would give serious consideration to the introduction of crop insurance which would provide protection against similar losses in future years.

Shortly after being appointed as the Minister of Agriculture, I arranged a conference at which my officials met with officials from all the provinces and at which the provincial people were invited to indicate what changes in the act were essentially necessary if the provinces were to provide useful insurance programs.

As a result of our continued study of the problems involved and the experience gained since 1959, I now propose a number of amendments which are designed to make the Crop Insurance Act more useful to our farmers and to the provinces.

While I will discuss the amendments in detail on second reading of the bill, I would indicate now in a general way the proposed amendments contained in the bill which will be made available to hon. members shortly. Probably the most important amendment is one which will permit the maximum coverage provided for any crop in any area, under an agreement with a province, to be raised from 60 to 80 per cent of the average yield. This amendment will also permit the establishment of the average yield on the basis of a single farm experience. In this latter connection, I would point out that statistics are not immediately available in many areas with respect to the yield history of individual farms but where it is possible, it is considered that a desirable objective is to provide coverage on the basis of what might be termed the normally expected yield of a crop on any farm.

The bill also provides, as I have mentioned—and this should encourage participation by the provinces, and it should encourage participation by individual farmers—for an increase in the federal contribution to premiums from 20 to 25 per cent.

As I have indicated, I shall be prepared to discuss these amendments in detail when the bill is before the house. I trust hon. members will give their favourable consideration to the resolution at this stage.

I would also point out that the amendments proposed provide for insurance coverage which will reimburse a farmer for costs incurred in preparing summerfallow which the farmer could not seed in the normal seeding season because of excessive moisture. The bill provides for extended coverage of this type to be provided in agreement with a province.

There are two other minor amendments which I shall not mention at this time; they can be dealt with on second reading. Before closing I should like to express my concern about some remarks which have been made in connection with crop insurance in recent weeks. There have been suggestions that the present act does not provide for spot coverage on individual crops. This is interpreted to mean that under the present federal legislation a province cannot produce a program which will provide for the settlement of claims other than on an entire farm or an entire crop basis. While it is true that present programs in effect in the prairie provinces make it compulsory to insure all of a specific crop and provide only for indemnities on the basis of the entire acreage seeded to that crop, the federal act does not in fact prohibit the issuance of insurance which would provide indemnities on the basis of losses pertaining to a portion of that crop or with respect to selected fields. It would, however, seem evident that premium rates based on spot settlement would possibly be much higher than those based on the loss related to the entire acreage seeded to any crop on any farm.

There has been some criticism, too, that the federal act does not provide coverage for forage crops such as corn, hay and pasture. In actual fact, the act places no limitation on the crops which may be covered and defines the term crop as meaning an agricultural crop declared by the regulations to be a crop for the purposes of the scheme. The crops listed under the regulations at present are: (a) wheat, (b) oats, (c) barley, (d) rye, (e) flaxseed, (f) grain corn, (g) buckwheat, (h) soybeans, (i) potatoes, (j) sugar beets, (k) tobacco, (l) sunflower seed, (m) rapeseed, (n) apples, (o) pears, (p) peaches, (q) plums, (r) cherries, and (s) apricots.

Mr. Danforth: Members on this side of the house have certainly listened with interest to the Minister of Agriculture introducing this resolution on the subject of crop insurance. We can well appreciate the reason the government has been placed in the position once again of having to amend this particular piece of farm legislation. For many years all major farm groups have been advocating that crop insurance be provided to each farmer on a basis which would afford him recompense for losses due to nature.

The fact that so few farmers have so far taken advantage of the Crop Insurance Act, even though four provinces have now agreed to accept the principles and work it out with the federal government, indicates that amendments were needed. The fact remains that farmers still did not feel that this measure provided the necessary protection. As a result they have not been taking full advantage of the crop insurance provisions even though, as was pointed out by the minister, by the 1964 amendment the federal government did agree to pay 20 per cent of the farm premiums.

Farmers today are keen businessmen. If something were offered to them as a bargain, the government paying 20 per cent of the premiums, they would certainly investigate it thoroughly. Nevertheless farm groups in Ontario, after investigating the farm credit insurance provisions put forward by this government, did not feel they could recommend to the provincial government that full advantage be taken of this particular measure.

I was interested tonight to hear the Minister of Agriculture say he had held consultations with various provincial ministers of agriculture and that this subject had been discussed in depth. I have no doubt it is because of these meetings and because of the views expressed by the provincial ministers that the amendments of which the minister spoke tonight are to be incorporated in the new legislation.

I hope that these meetings have been responsible for amendments to the act which will make the legislation adequate to provide for the losses which can be expected every year in some part of every province of Canada.

I am sure that because of the nature of the special crops grown in many parts of this country, the 60 per cent coverage of the long-term average was one of the stumbling blocks against a greater adoption of this particular insurance plan. I am pleased to note that the minister speaks of increasing this coverage to 80 per cent of the average yield.

I think farmers on the whole agree with this principle of spot settlement because in many instances when hail, drought or rust strike they do not affect a whole farm. The loss is confined to one particular part or section but the insurance is placed on a complete district, thus providing little recompense for an individual farmer.

The house is going to be seized of and intrigued by the minister's proposition that forage crops will be contemplated as ones to be covered by the policy, and I can see many problems evolve from this move on the part of the government. Certainly it is desirable, but a tremendous amount of work will have to be done to provide a practical method of estimating the actual loss, estimating the average crop, and determining whether or not 80 per cent or more of the crop has been damaged.

The minister also spoke of insurance to cover what he called production units. This will deal with fruit trees and other more intensified types of farming. Grape arbours, berry patches and staked tomatoes, and presumably various other high cost crops will come under this. I hope enough preliminary work has been done in this field so that an equitable premium can be established to make it possible for the producers of these high cost crops to take full advantage of crop insurance, and for the first time place them in a position where they can receive some recompense for the vagaries of nature that often cause them maximum monetary loss.

The fact that crop insurance has been implemented in only four provinces leads me to the next question as to whether, at his conference with the provincial ministers, the Minister of Agriculture was able to obtain an assurance that the provincial governments which have not yet applied this particular offer from the federal government will undertake to review the situation. I am speaking in particular of provinces like Quebec and Ontario. I hope they are interested enough in this crop insurance legislation to feel it can be utilized for their farmers.

[Mr. Danforth.]

I am rather concerned over the fact that there was an increase from 20 per cent to 25 per cent in the premium offer by the federal government. When this legislation was introduced I was interested to know why the figure of 20 per cent was chosen in the first place, and I found that this figure did not seem to entice many farmers to enter into this particular insurance policy. Now I wonder what is the basic reason behind the government's raising it from 20 per cent to 25 per cent.

Surely if farmers were not enamoured of the program at 20 per cent, an additional 5 per cent is not going to make much difference. On the other hand, certainly farmers are not going to turn it down, but it is food for thought why the government raised it just 5 per cent rather than 10 per cent or 15 per cent. Was this done on the advice of provincial ministers who felt it would make it a more successful insurance policy, or did the government have another reason?

I am not going to deal at length with the resolution tonight. The government has taken what farm orgnizations across the country felt was a necessary step. Something has been drastically wrong with the crop insurance program introduced by the federal government. I think all hon. members realize that basically it was not acceptable to the majority of the farmers. It is most necessary, especially in view of the growing costs which farmers are faced with today. But the fact that they did not adopt it universally leads one to consider that the plan in itself left much to be desired.

We shall look forward to reading the bill with real and sincere interest, and we hope the minister will then take all the time he desires to answer in detail many of the questions that will arise with regard to the manner in which the different provisions are going to be set up, the way they are to be administered, and the manner in which the various regulations and qualifications will be established as standards. A lot will have to be explained with regard to this bill, which is extending into a brand new field. It is a field of utmost importance to agriculture, and we on this side sincerely hope that for once the government has brought forth something that will be practical and workable and to the advantage of the Canadian farmer.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, may I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. member would agree to make his presentation now, something which we are all awaiting with interest, with a view to having the resolution passed tonight so that hon. members can see the bill.

Mr. Herridge: I would very much like to oblige the house leader personally, but there are two or three other members anxious to speak at much greater length than I would normally, and I think we ought to be fair to them.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, if hon. members would give unanimous consent we could continue for a little while so that they could be provided with the bill once resolution stage has finished.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, there are three members who wish to ask questions on the adjournment motion, and that takes half an hour. I think we have done pretty well today.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Flemming: Mr. Speaker, may we have the business for tomorrow?

Mr. McIlraith: Tomorrow we propose submitting as the first item for consideration by the house item No. 45 on the order paper, the Canada Assistance Plan resolution; then second reading of the health resources fund bill, which is item No. 66 on the order paper; then second reading of the Canada Student Loans Act amending bill, then the Customs Tariff bill, the Excise Tax Act amending bill, the Canadian Dairy Commission resolution; the crop insurance resolution with the hope that we could get the resolution stage completed and the bill before the house, and finally committee stage of The Company of Young Canadians Bill.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—MAKING OF SPEECHES ON POLICY BY ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, there are times in this house when one might rise somewhat reluctantly and agree with a position taken by the government; however, I cannot do so in respect of this question, which was ruled out of order by Your Honour. It relates to a statement made by Air Vice Marshal Reyno to a local service club, and I refer to it at this time without hesitation.

Air Vice Marshal Reyno is perhaps as concerned with this question as anyone, but unfortunately he cannot participate in this debate. I make my remarks with no reflection upon him as an officer or a gentleman. I understand that in his capacity and in those areas in which he exerts influence he is recognized as a very able man.

This high ranking officer exerts influence and direction in his capacity as a member of the forces, whether combined or one of three as they existed before the minister took over his portfolio, with years of experience and training, and does so with credit to the service. I do take exception to certain remarks as reported in the Ottawa Citizen of June 11 in relation to a speech he made to a service club on Friday, June 10.

Air Vice Marshal Reyno is reported in this article as having made some very provocative, argumentative and debatable statements regarding the integration of the three forces in Canada. He is reported as having referred to morale and controversial pay increases, and toward the end of his speech he is reported as having referred to statements to the effect that every country in the world knows that it makes good, economic common sense to integrate defence forces, but that Canada was the first one with the intestinal fortitude to try to do it. There can be no debate as to the intestinal fortitude of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer). He obviously has a surplus, in view of what he has done toward the integration of our three services.

I take exception to the principle in respect of which Air Vice Marshal Reyno was directing his remarks. I hope the minister comments on the reported statements of this officer to the effect that he, the minister was misinformed, ill informed or uninformed in reference to every country in the world attempting this experiment of integration.

There is no doubt that up to a point services can be integrated, but I question the statement that Canada is the showcase of the world in this respect. We have all in our junior school years looked through a microscope and been attracted by the crawling form of life seen on the slide. I submit that the minister cannot stand in his place tonight and name one country that has examined what we are trying to do and followed our example. I cannot agree with any suggestion that we are guinea-pigs in regard to integration of forces. We may be guinea-pigs, but in a very narrow circle, and there is no foundation for the statement referred to by Air Vice Marshal Reyno in a speech made to a service club here in Ottawa, that every country after examining our experiment realizes that integration is the best thing to do, and that Canada is the only country that has had the intestinal fortitude to attempt it.

The Canadian Press carried a story that New Zealand looked at us, examined us by fluoroscope, by telescope, by microscope, by slide, and perhaps examined some of the speeches of the minister, which I would love to examine in more detail tonight; and having examined this question in some detail published a White Paper and decided as follows:

> Examination has led the government to conclude that such a combined force would not make sense in terms of our principal aim, to gain maximum effect from the level of contribution which New Zealand can make.

The White Paper continues:

> The force of this type which New Zealand could afford to maintain in peacetime would never be large enough to give a truly independent role in limited war.

I just wonder what type of force Canada intends. It is not an independent force. The United States and Great Britain forces have already been integrated with other forces, and it is superficial reasoning to think we can completely integrate our force in this mobile striking unit about which the minister talks.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is the factual content of Air Vice Marshal Reyno's speech to the Kiwanis club to which I take exception first, because the same day New Zealand said they were not having anything to do with it and would not touch us with a barge-pole. I understand that Britain has also produced a White Paper, which is not yet published, saying that you can integrate dental, medical and some of the supply services but you cannot take away the identity of the three services. If you take that identity away, you lose the whole morale, spirit and esprit de corps of the services. Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I take exception to the principle involved in a high-ranking officer of the services speaking on a controversial subject such as government policy, and making a statement of this kind.

I believe there are other officers of high and low rank who would love to speak on these matters, and perhaps the minister will tonight give them the "go" signal. The theme for today seems to be "go" whether it be in connection with the space program or anything else. The policy seems to be that you can go-go. If this is the case, the minister cannot take exception to statements of this type, but because the statement was made—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Nowlan: All I say in closing, Mr. Speaker, is that if we are making basic changes in policy in this country, we would like to know what this policy is and how it applies to speeches of high-ranking officers in the services.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there is no change in policy. The policy that has been in effect throughout the years, and is currently contained in Queen's Orders and Regulations, is as follows:

> Any officer or man may speak publicly in respect to service matters with the permission of the Chief of Defence Staff or such other authority as he may designate. Opinions expressed by officers or men under these circumstances are their own and do not carry the endorsement of the department.

I agree with my hon. friend when he says that Air Vice Marshall Reyno is one of the outstanding and knowledgeable young officers in the Royal Canadian Air Force and I am, frankly, very much impressed with what the Air Vice Marshall says because I think it to be the fact. In so far as my hon. friend is concerned, I can assure him that in the next 20 years every country in the western world will pattern their military organization after Canada and we will in fact be proud that we were the first in this very important field.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member kindly resume his seat. The rules do not provide for questions at this time.

OLD AGE SECURITY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON INCREASED PENSIONS

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, twice within recent weeks I have attempted to ask the government whether consideration was being given at cabinet level to the proposition of increasing the old age security pension by the payment of a bonus. On those occasions, Mr. Speaker, you ruled my questions out of order. In consequence I am raising it again at this late evening sitting.

• (10:10 p.m.)

The reason behind my question can best be found in a quotation from a news story which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail on June 11 and which reads as follows:

> Strong pressure is developing among Liberal M.P.'s, including some cabinet ministers, for special action to assist old persons who will not benefit from the Canada Pension Plan.
> The government is being urged to set up a special fund to supplement the basic $75 a month old age pension. The fund would decline as the benefits paid under the Canada Pension Plan rose over the next 10 years. This plan may be introduced late this year or next year when inflationary pressures ease off.
> The government had resisted efforts by the opposition parties in the Commons to raise old age pensions to $100 a month. But an increasing number of Liberal members, led by cabinet ministers, are arguing that something must be done to aid old folk.

The reported consideration being given by the cabinet to a bonus for old age pensioners is a very welcome one, if it is indeed a fact. We can only hope that, failing a general increase in the pension rate to $100 a month—which many hon. members would like to see—a practical step would be the immediate provision of a supplementary amount in the form of a bonus. This would at least make up part of that increase in the cost of living which the old age pensioners have felt very sharply in the last three years.

In asking whether the government is actually considering such a provision I wish to add a cautionary note. In the event that a bonus will be paid we hope it will not be done at the expense of the Canada Pension Plan. We think that the Canada Pension Plan should not be siphoned off by reducing it to augment the old age pensions. We believe it is possible to increase the current old age pension security by making money available without taking it from the Canada Pension Plan or from increased taxation.

It seems to us that the government has leeway in the economies it could practise to provide the proposed bonus to old age pensioners. For example I understand that approximately $2 million a day is being spent on national defence and that something like $1 million is being spent in simply paying the interest portion of the federal debt.

We think that if the government will take measures, as we hope it will, to improve the old age pension by providing a bonus, then it should not do so at the expense of another plan which provides for old age pensioners or people who will benefit from the new pension plan. We think that the government should face up to the fact that there is a gap between the present old age pension and the new contributory one, and it should move ahead to fill that gap on a national basis.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that at least in my view today's old age pensioners are probably the last people to remain in the valley of scarcity. Thanks to their work in bygone days the rest of us are emerging into a world of abundance, and I think it is fitting for us at this time to recognize the need of our older people by the provision of this bonus. I therefore wish to ask the government to consider such a move.

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Answers to similar questions can be found on pages 6122 and 6434 of Hansard. I am sure the hon. member will realize after reading these detailed replies by the minister that there is very little I can add to what has already been said.

I should like to reiterate, however, some of the major points the minister made in dealing with those questions. I want to point out that in the current fiscal year, 1966-67 federal expenditures in respect of old age security will amount to $1,035 billion. It should be pointed out also that in 1963-64 the federal government was spending $755 million on old age security payments. This means that in a period of three years outlays have been increased by $280 million or 37 per cent. During this period of three years the level or rate of benefit has been raised and the number of persons covered has been increased by 100,000 through the lowering of the age threshold to 69 on January 1, 1966.

I think the hon. member for New Westminster will agree that it is impressive to note, as the minister did when discussing his estimates before the health and welfare committee, that 28 per cent of the federal government's expenditures are directed toward the health and welfare of the Canadian people. The largest single component of that is for our older citizens. Moreover, as my hon. friend knows the Canada Pension Plan is intended to be a long term solution to retirement support for the wage earners of Canada.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

I need not say that I, too, share a strong concern, as does the government, for the older people of Canada. The Liberal party has always been on record in support of increased assistance to old age pensioners. I believe that we have gone a long way during the past three years toward the achievement of our aim. We have in effect today a substantially more generous and much broader program for old age security recipients than was in effect when this government took office in 1963.

The Canada Assistance Plan resolution was introduced in this chamber one week ago. The bill would now be before us if it had not been for the reluctance of the members of the New Democratic Party to stop talking last Tuesday. This plan will provide such services as drugs, nursing services, prosthetic appliances and income supplementation for those who need it. The medicare legislation will soon be before the house. This is another indication of the government's concern—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mrs. Rideout: —to provide the best possible medical care for all Canadians.

Mr. Knowles: Do not stop her; she has not answered the question yet.

Mrs. Rideout: It will be of special importance to our senior citizens. I would have finished within my time, Mr. Speaker, if it had not been for the interruptions.

Mr. Knowles: She has not answered the question.

IMMIGRATION—VANCOUVER—DEPORTATION OF JAPANESE GIRL

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): I should like, at the outset, to express my appreciation of the action of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in his seconding the question I raised this afternoon concerning the case of one Masako Endo, who had travelled from Japan to Canada with the intention of visiting here but who ran afoul of the immigration authorities in Vancouver. Apparently a deportation order has been issued to return her to Japan with her visit uncompleted.

Now, as one who has twice visited Japan, I am familiar first hand with the unfailing courtesy of immigration officials there. I know that on my second visit I made an error upon entering the country and failed to declare a trunk which arrived the next day. I suppose a deportation order could have been issued against me and I would have been sent immediately from the country. However, it was possible to talk to the officials and explain my oversight. I then completed a six month visit there. I know as well the concern of the people of that country for visitors from any land.

A Canadian girl who was visiting there at the same time I was happened to have her handbag stolen on the streets of Tokyo. The incident was reported in the Tokyo newspapers. Within a matter of two weeks she had received letters from all over the country, several handbags and more money than she had lost. People were concerned that a visitor should have been treated in a manner which they felt was unworthy of their country.

It was with some of the same feeling that I read the report in the newspaper this morning that this particular person expecting to visit Canada had been treated in such a heavy-handed manner by the immigration officials in Vancouver. Certainly if the government of Japan chose to reply in kind, I am sure that each year some hundreds of young Canadian visitors to Japan would be deported summarily. I know a great many Canadian visitors who go to Japan on visitors' visas engage in employment by teaching English to Japanese students. I happened to be one of them when I was there on my last visit. I am sure that if the Japanese applied the full measure of the law to all of these visitors, deportations would occur and be enforced. Fortunately they have taken a little more enlightened view, it would seem, than that which is taken by the immigration authorities in Vancouver.

It seems to me that this is a particularly unhappy moment for this type of publicity. This is the time when the summer tourist season is about to begin, a time when our visitors from Japan are increasing in number. They are an important source of revenue to the province of British Columbia and this country and they form an important cultural link with this Pacific nation. Should this sort of publicity reach Japan I am sure there would be consternation in the minds of a great many Japanese who had planned to visit this country.

Again, it is most unfortunate that this has occurred at a time when an immigration office has been opened in the city of Tokyo. I can think of nothing which would work more against our professed desire to encourage immigration from this land than the sort of incident that has been reported in the paper. Even allowing for some exaggeration on the part of the press regarding the detention into which Miss Endo was placed by immigration officials, it should be remembered that she was barely able to speak English and would not be able to offer a full explanation to the immigration authorities.

I do not know just what the problem is here, whether the situation will require a change in personnel at Vancouver or simply a request from the department that a little more reasonable attitude be taken. We try to tighten down, I suppose, in the hope that the Hal Banks and the Munsingers will be kept out of the country; but all we succeed in doing is catching the most harmless people and subjecting them to what seems to me to be a totally unnecessary harassment.

I hope that this deportation order will be rescinded when the appeal is heard. I am amazed it has to be heard at all. It seems to me that if there is provision for a three-month visitation and a visitor wished to stay an extra month at the end of those three months, there should be some machinery whereby she could apply for an extension of one month and the matter could be dealt with in that way, instead of immediately issuing a deportation order, which once issued must apparently be heard, with the whole visit being placed under a cloud of uncertainty as to what is going to happen. I also hope that there will be some expression from the department to the officials in Vancouver to the effect that they be just a bit more considerate and reasonable in the demands which are made on visitors to Canada.

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, by way of reply to the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke, I would inform him that we have endeavoured to obtain a report from the officials in Vancouver. All we know at the present time seems to indicate that this young lady arrived on Friday, June 17 and was referred to an immigration special inquiry on the next day, Saturday, June 18. It would seem she did not have a visa when she arrived here.

I am certain that immigration officials really had no choice in the matter. I do not think they had any ambit for discretion. The young lady did not have a visa, and the only course open to the immigration officials, under our act, is to refer the matter to a special inquiry. I understand that has been held.

The young lady entered an appeal which will be considered within the next few days. There is no indication that there was any heavy-handed display toward her by our immigration officials in Vancouver. We certainly hope there was not. We again reiterate that there is no ambit for discretion when somebody comes to the country without a visa, which is the case at the moment. We shall try to obtain more facts and have them available as soon as possible.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ALASKA HIGHWAY—TABLING OF REPORT ON IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I wish to obtain consent of the house to table two copies of a report prepared for the department by the Stanford Research Institute entitled "An Improvement Program for the Alaska Highway".

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

DIVORCE—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. A. J. P. Cameron (High Park) moved that the first report of the special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on divorce, presented to the house on Thursday, June 9, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING ORDERS—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Patrick-T. Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe) moved that the first report of the standing committee on standing orders presented to the house on Thursday, June 16, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

NAVIGABLE WATERS PROTECTION ACT

PROVISION FOR REMOVAL OF RAILWAY TRESTLE BRIDGE

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-206, to amend the Navigable Waters Protection Act (removal of Kitsilano trestle).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Basford: In 1895 the C.P.R. built a railway bridge called the Kitsilano trestle across False creek in my riding. While the west block fire of 1897 destroyed most of the records, this bridge is quite obviously illegal, is constituting a hazard to navigation and preventing the industrial development of the region behind its structure.

The purpose of this bill is to empower the Minister of Public Works to remove the bridge at the expense of the C.P.R., at an estimated cost of $2,160,000.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REPORTED SPEECH BY INDUSTRY MINISTER RESPECTING NEWS COVERAGE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister in connection with a report in the press and over the radio to the effect that the Minister of Industry wants to establish a "designated area" for public information, for press and radio. I ask the Prime Minister whether in the enunciation by the Minister of Industry as reported, and I quote "—the answer would be for the government to print its own newspaper—"

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the right hon. gentleman, but he knows we cannot quote from newspaper articles in framing or submitting questions.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think what I can do is simply give the substance. I wanted to be so fair and put everything in quotations so that nothing would be lost. Has the government in mind the printing of its own newspaper and utilizing its control over the C.B.C. to the end that the Canadian people will see what the government believes they should see and hear what the government feels they should hear? In other words, does the government believe the Canadian people will benefit greatly from government controlled information?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Neither the government as a whole nor the Minister of Industry in particular has any such intention. My hon. friend may not have had the opportunity of ascertaining that the Minister of Industry has already categorically denied the accuracy of this report.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have seen these categorical denials in the past. I would ask the Prime Minister whether, in order to give the government that image it apparently has not got today, according to the report of the minister, the government has in mind the printing of a newspaper or directing or controlling the C.B.C.? That is the question I asked.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think that question is rhetorical.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: At least that is the way it sounded to the Chair.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, it was not allegorical either. I ask the Prime Minister whether the government has in mind the printing of a newspaper for the control of the C.B.C. in the references which are made to the august government that now presides over the destinies of Canada?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to my right hon. friend for describing the government as august. The right hon. gentleman's question is not only rhetorical; it is hypothetical.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry. I wonder whether the Minister of Industry can assure the house that he did not mean what he said to the Saint-Antoine-Westmount association last night.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the minister would agree with the idea that if the taxpayers are going to pay for a government publication, they should also consider paying for an opposition one.

Mr. Speaker: The question is argumentative.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—STEPS PROPOSED BY UN SECRETARY GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, of which I have given notice. I should like to ask, in view of the statement by the Secretary General of the United Nations yesterday that he has proposed the cessation of bombing of North Viet Nam, the scaling down of military activities in South Viet Nam, and a willingness to deal with the Viet Cong as three initial steps toward peace in that unhappy country, if the minister would inform the house whether the Canadian government is prepared to make these steps the basis of its policies, and to urge the government of the United States to accept them as well.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend was kind enough to give me notice of his intention to ask this question. The government shares the concern of the Secretary General with respect to the continuing hostilities in Viet Nam, not only because of the human suffering involved but because of the effects for world peace inherent in this conflict. We have been in touch with the Secretary General on these problems and have discussed these matters with him.

The diplomatic initiatives in which Canada is engaged are designed to determine whether a mutually acceptable basis for a negotiated settlement exists. I believe my hon. friend would agree that Mr. Ronning having just returned to Canada, and our having just begun our discussions with him, and being now engaged here and elsewhere in discussions with other governments concerned, it would not help what we are seeking to do to take particular positions in this way when they would be bound to prejudice what we have in mind.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister, in view of the remarks he has just made, would tell the house whether he has been in communication with the Secretary General of the United Nations with regard to the results of Mr. Ronning's recent visit and his previous visit to North Viet Nam.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I was in touch with the Secretary General prior to the visit to Hanoi last week. The Secretary General was aware of what the Canadian government and others had in mind. I am sure he would agree that this has been a very desirable course for us to pursue in respect of a situation which, I might tell hon. members, does not warrant the levity which my young and hon. friend has just, I know unintentionally, manifested with regard to a very serious situation.

Mr. Starr: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell us whether Mr. Ronning is a mind reader?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was not referring to the hon. member who has just risen when I said "young member".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): The minister is running true to form. Could we not get clarification with respect to questions asked, similar to that given by the Minister of Industry in another matter? Is the government of Canada taking an initiative that has been countenanced and agreed to by other countries, and as well by the Secretary General?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I have already told the house that the initiative we have taken was discussed with the Secretary General and with other governments which are deeply involved in this situation. I am sure those governments share with us, as does the right hon. gentleman, the hope that this continuing process will yield the kind of result for which the world over is looking.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the government will not make it clear to the United States administration that it does not share the view attributed to it by Mr. James Reston, that the escalation of military activities in Viet Nam during the summer is likely to lead to improved prospects of a negotiated peace. I suggest that this could be made clear without in any way interfering with any other initiatives we are taking.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question posed by the hon. member is argumentative and may not be asked.

Mr. Lewis: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the minister's answer may I ask whether the Secretary General of the United Nations sent to the government of Canada a copy of the proposals he has made? I understand he is supposed to have sent his proposals to interested parties. I should like to know whether he sent these proposals to the government of Canada and, if so, what reply is being contemplated.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have already dealt with the last part of the question to the extent that I feel, under the circumstances, would be prudent. With regard to the proposal itself which was outlined in today's press, I do not know whether the text of that statement has been sent to the government. I can say that two weeks ago I did discuss these very ideas with the Secretary General.

[Later:]

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister tell us whether it is still the position of the government of North Viet Nam that it will not enter into any negotiations until all United States troops are removed from South Viet Nam?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend will appreciate that that question asked on orders of the day would require a detailed explanation, and I would want to consider whether an explanation at this particular moment is desirable in view of what the Canadian government is seeking to do now or at some other time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is it seeking to do now or some other time?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is doing its best to try to bring about a negotiated settlement in Viet Nam.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: All right. And what has it in mind to do at some other time? The minister mentioned now or some other time. What has it in mind to do then? That is a nonsensical answer to get from the minister.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS WITH NEW QUEBEC GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): I wish to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that federal-provincial relations are of vital importance and now present very thorny problems, has the Prime Minister got in touch with the new premier of Quebec since the latter was sworn in last week? If so, could he make a statement to the house in this regard?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am looking forward to an opportunity at an early date to discuss these matters with the prime minister of Quebec.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare?

Did the hon. minister get in touch with the new Quebec government, or has he received from that government representations in writing concerning health and public assistance programs?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that question is very general, and I do not believe it should be asked under the circumstances.

[English]

TRADE

WHEAT—POSSIBLE SALES TO UNDER-DEVELOPED COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to submit my question to the Minister of Finance. Since he is absent I wonder if I might direct it to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the world food crisis described at the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization conference in Rome, are Canadian trade officers or wheat board representatives attempting to negotiate wheat sales to any of the underdeveloped countries of Africa or Asia?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I shall take notice of that question, Mr. Speaker, and discuss it with the minister directly concerned.

HISTORIC SITES AND MONUMENTS

GUELPH, ONT.—HOME OF LATE COLONEL JOHN McCRAE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, Mr. Speaker. The urgency of my question arises from the fact that important financial decisions are pending on the answers the minister may give. Is the minister in a position to advise whether the home of the late Colonel John McCrae, the immortal poet and soldier, will be made a national historic site?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): In reply to the hon. member's question I wish to say that the historic sites and monuments board has declared that the home of Colonel McCrae is of national historical significance. This means that our department will undertake to work with the historical society or the city of Guelph for its restoration on a fifty-fifty basis.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MONTREAL—STRIKE OF FREIGHT HANDLERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): My question is addressed to the Minister of Labour and I ask it because of the desire of everyone that the port of Montreal should return to normal working conditions as quickly as possible. Can the minister tell the house what effect the strike of Canadian National and Canadian Pacific freight handlers is likely to have on the situation at the port, and will he also say what action the government is taking to bring this strike to an early conclusion?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I do not like to dodge questions, but I suggest that this one should be addressed to my colleague the Minister of Transport.

Mr. More: With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would direct my question to the Minister of Transport, then.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I understand that negotiations are going on between the railway companies and those employees who have stopped working. I hope these negotiations are successful and can be completed without delay.

TELEGRAM TO QUEEN ON BEHALF OF B.C. UNION LEADERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I have a question for the Prime Minister. I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman whether he has any knowledge of a telegram addressed to Her Majesty by the British Columbia Federation of Labour requesting the Queen's grace for some ten officers of the longshoremen's union who have gone to jail defending what they believe to be their rights under the Canada Labour (Standards) Code. If so, can the Prime Minister inform the house what advice he has given or intends to give to Her Majesty in this connection?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I have no knowledge of the telegram, but I will make inquiries immediately.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—STEPS TO PROVIDE TRAINED PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): My question is addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the debates which took place at the end of last week can the hon. gentleman now assure the house that the government will announce a short term emergency drive for medical manpower before the medicare legislation is introduced later this session?

[Later:]

Mr. Grafftey: I do not know whether there was a breakdown in communications, but I did address a question to the minister and I thought he was about to answer before the next question was addressed to the Chair.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am glad to advise the hon. member that this whole subject matter is now under consideration by the house. We have, as the hon. member realizes, both a short term and a long term program, and the health resources fund will have an effect in producing an increase in the number of personnel in the health field. But we shall have an opportunity to discuss this subject both later today and when the medicare bill comes before the house.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a related question to ask the minister. Can the hon. gentleman say whether it is likely that the medicare resolution will be introduced in this house prior to the discussions he may have with his opposite number in the province of Quebec?

Mr. MacEachen: The timetable with respect to the introduction of the medicare legislation has not been altered.

BANKRUPTCY

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF FRAUDULENT BANKRUPCIES BY ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Justice.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Would it be the minister's intention to set up a royal inquiry on fraudulent bankruptcies in Canada?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have the impression that this question has been asked previously during the course of the present session.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): You are quite right on that point, Mr. Speaker; it was addressed to the Prime Minister. At that time he said the matter was before the Senate because of Bill S-17. That is now out of the Senate, and perhaps the Prime Minister has something new to communicate to the house.

OLD AGE SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER LEGISLATION THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the minister's statement in Vancouver yesterday to the effect that the government is giving intensive study to the problems of our old age pensioners, can he say whether this means that some other legislation in this field will be placed before parliament at this session apart from what we already have?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would not rule out that possibility, although I am not confirming it.

Mr. Knowles: As a supplementary question—

Mr. Pickersgill: That is an answer worthy of Paul.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I am trying to ask a supplementary question. In the meantime, while the government is deciding on this and while the minister is trying to make up his mind, would he make a statement as to what old age pensioners are to do to meet the rising cost of living?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question was ruled out of order previously.

Mr. Knowles: It is still a good question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ALASKA HIGHWAY—INQUIRY AS TO PAVING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister of northern affairs and indian affairs. I have not given him notice, and he may wish to take it as notice. My question arises out of his tabling today of the Stanford-Flemming report on the Alaska highway. On the basis of this report I would like to know what progress is being made in the paving of the Alaska highway.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest this question might be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Basford: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, the paving of the Alaska highway is a matter of very great importance to the development of the north, and I am sure the house would be interested in the minister's answer.

Mr. Speaker: It is because it is very important that I suggest to the hon. member that he place it on the order paper.

Mr. Basford: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SASKATCHEWAN—JOINT PROGRAM OF HOME CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, yesterday during the question period the hon. member for Mackenzie directed a question to the right hon. Prime Minister, in effect asking for a progress report on the federal-provincial experimental housing program for Indians in Saskatchewan.

In April, 1965 the federal government and the government of the province of Saskatchewan entered into a joint program to provide housing for low income families in sparsely settled regions of that province. The program was experimental in nature, designed primarily to meet the needs of the métis and enfranchised Indians in northern Saskatchewan.

Under the program to date the province has applied for financial assistance for the construction of 36 houses. The units have an average estimated cost of $4,500 and are to be sold to qualified applicants through co-operatives or directly by the province. Applicants are encouraged to provide a down payment of $500. The province provides at least $500 by way of grant. The balance of the capital cost is shared 75 per cent by the federal government and 25 per cent by the province.

This program, as I have stated, is experimental in nature but I am pleased to inform the hon. member who asked the question that officials of C.M.H.C. are considering possible extension of the program to other provinces, and their recommendation to the government is expected shortly.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his answer, but I wonder is he in a position to indicate the number of houses that have actually been built for Indians to date?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking for statistical information.

Mr. Korchinski: The minister may want to take that question as notice.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, that information is contained in the answer already given.

RAILWAY ACT

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport and ask when the hon. gentleman expects to bring in the new Railway Act?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am hoping that some time before the end of 1966 I will be able to propose some amendments to the Railway Act.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REPORTED STRIKE THREAT OVER SALARY INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Postmaster General. In view of the reported statement today by the president of the postal workers' union that a strike would take place unless substantial wage increases were granted by the government, what action is the minister taking now to investigate the claims of the postal workers so they can be settled in an orderly way rather than waiting until a critical strike situation develops?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): It is still the same problem of Group B civil servants; their salaries are to be revised before the fall.

[English]

IMMIGRATION

VANCOUVER—DEPORTATION OF JAPANESE GIRL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct an inquiry to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Since his parliamentary secretary said last evening in the adjournment hour debate that they would endeavour to ascertain more facts concerning the deportation order against Miss Endo and have them available as soon as possible, has the minister any additional information as yet?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take that question as notice on behalf of the minister.

POSSIBLE CHANGES IN BUSINESS ANNOUNCED FOR TODAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Public Works in his capacity as house leader whether the order of business today will be precisely as it was announced last night, or have there been any changes?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I indicated that in the business to be put before the house today the first item would be the resolution stage of the Canada Assistance Plan; and second, second reading of the health resources fund bill. Depending on the progress made in the debate it may be that after the resolution stage of the Canada Assistance Plan we would wish to call one of the measures standing in the name of the Minister of Agriculture and continue with it until private members' hour at six o'clock, and then at seven o'clock revert to the health resources fund bill. Subject to that I expect to follow the order of business indicated last night.

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM TO ASSIST PERSONS IN NEED

The house resumed, from Tuesday, June 14, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. MacEachen—Mr. Batten in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure, to be known as the Canada Assistance Plan, to establish a program for sharing with the provinces in the cost of assistance, including health care and welfare services, provided to or in respect of persons in need, including mothers and children, older persons, disabled persons and unemployed persons who are in need, and in the cost of developing and improving assistance and welfare services programs including child and youth welfare programs throughout Canada; to provide for the making of arrangements for extending provincial welfare programs, with the approval of Indian bands, to Indians with reserve status, and for the making of payments to the provinces with respect to the cost of so extending those programs; to provide for the making of payments to the provinces with respect to the cost of specialized projects for assisting and rehabilitating persons in need or likely to become persons in need who have unusual difficulty in obtaining or holding employment; to provide for amendments to the Old Age Assistance Act, the Blind Persons Act, the Disabled Persons Act and the Unemployment Assistance Act that are incidental to or consequential on the introduction of the Canada Assistance Plan; and to provide further for the extension of the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act to the Canada Assistance Plan.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, this resolution was discussed one week ago, and I am pleased that it did not carry at that time. I have a few words to say on this matter. I might start out by saying we do support the resolution. I think it should be completely understood, however, that this is not any end-all to welfare legislation; it is purely a tidying up operation and there really is nothing new in it. It appears to me that in this 1966-67 fiscal year we simply are taking over $85 million of expenditure which previously was undertaken by the provinces. This is going to be paid by the federal government and, as I see it, we are going to co-ordinate and tidy up these pieces of legislation.

I am for that; let this not be mistaken. During my term of office I contemplated some operation of this kind. I recall so well when, during my term of office, we proposed any of our many advanced and improved pieces of welfare legislation the then hon. member for Essex East, at present the Secretary of State for External Affairs, made many blatant claims to having instituted all the good legislation ever put on the statute books of Canada. I remember one evening he was putting on such a good show that I became very impressed and offered him a position as an actor with the Stratford Shakespearean festival; his acting was really that good. If I might digress for a moment, while I know his birthday is not until Thursday I should like to wish the Secretary of State for External Affairs the best of everything for that day.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I repeat that this is only a showpiece of legislation. I should like to examine some of the minister's remarks when he opened the discussion on this resolution. I know this government would like to have the people of Canada forget just what has been done in the past by way of welfare legislation, and I should like to outline some of the accomplishments in this field under the government of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

The last original set of estimates for the Department of National Health and Welfare prepared by our government in 1963 for the fiscal year 1963-64 provided $1,205 million. The last set of estimates by the previous St. Laurent government, for the fiscal year 1957-58, totalled $525,500,000. This is an increase of $679,500,000 in a period of six years. The increase in that period is approximately 130 per cent. I would point out that both these figures exclude any reference to old age security. We know what happened there. Immediately the house sat after our government took over in 1957 the old age security payment was raised from $46 to $55 a month, effective November 1, 1957. Effective February 1, 1962 the old age security payment was raised from $55 to $65 a month. These increases also immediately went to the recipients of old age assistance, recipients of the blind persons allowance and recipients of the disabled persons allowance; they were effective on the same date.

Then we remember that great period early in 1963. Big things were supposed to come about. We had the presumed 60 days of decision coming before us. Those days of decision were supposed to include presentation of a Canada pension plan. We remember what happened to that; it fell apart. Some three or four efforts later we did have a pension plan. The original plan suggested an immediate increase to $75 a month in the old age security payment, but this had to be withdrawn, as we well know. It was only through pressure by the official opposition when the house reconvened, I believe on September 30 of that year, that an increase in the old age security payment to $75 a month then became effective. The government neglected the recipients of the old age security, the blind persons allowances and the disabled persons allowances; their increase did not come about until 1964.

This government has allowed an increase in the cost of living which is incomprehensible to the people in these categories, the people who receive these allowances and who cannot get along without them. We know that old age security should be $100 a month today. Earlier this session we brought in an amendment to the effect that the recipients of old age security and these other allowances should receive $100 a month. Our motion was defeated by the people in the far left corner of the house; we would have had it except for that party.

A week ago today the hon. member for Simcoe East dealt with the need for this increase. We claim it is needed now, not sometime in the future. Only this morning I was speaking to a social worker who indicated the gross need for some help, some alleviation of the conditions under which these people are living. She mentioned one person who is existing almost entirely on shredded wheat. Another family had had no meat for quite a long period. These things are before us, Mr. Chairman—these needs, these requirements. This is the reason I claim we should act now to increase the old age security to $100 a month.

In his remarks a week ago the minister mentioned unemployment assistance. I should like to point out just what did transpire in respect of unemployment assistance. When we came into office in 1957 there was a 4.5 per cent minimum below which the federal government would not participate with the provinces in unemployment assistance. What happened? In the estimate for this item in the Department of National Health and Welfare for the year 1963-64, to which I referred earlier, the last prepared by our government, the amount was $110 million. For the year 1957-58, the last year in which the St. Laurent government prepared estimates, the figure for unemployment assistance was $5,125,000. This is an increase of approximately $105 million, from $5 million to $110 million. This indicates the welfare assistance steps that were taken by our government in an effort to assist the needy.

The minister spoke of supplementary payments to recipients of welfare assistance, and a huge part of the increase I mentioned from $5 million to $110 million is represented by these payments to various categories of welfare recipients. The government during the last election campaign seemed to indicate that this increase represented something new and that something over the $75 per month to the aged would be paid. The government tried to hoodwink the people by suggesting that old age assistance would amount to something in the neighbourhood of $125 per month. I can show you legislation on the statute books which indicates that any amount of money which is paid by way of a supplemental allowance is shared between the federal and provincial governments on a 50-50 basis.

This house and the country are aware of the advance in social legislation initiated by the government of which I had the honour to be a member. I claim without any risk of contradiction that the greatest strides in social welfare to be taken in the history of Canada were taken when the Progressive Conservative party was in power.

I should like to refer to a few things about which the minister spoke in presenting this resolution. He referred to mothers' allowances and I am pleased that this type of assistance is to be given. When I was the minister a suggestion was made to the various provinces that if they changed their legislation our legislation could be interpreted in such a way that assistance in the form of mothers' allowances could be brought under the category of unemployment assistance. This suggestion was followed and involved a large portion of the increase in assistance from $5 million to $110 million over a six-year period. In any event, I am pleased that as a result of this resolution mothers' allowances will be supported by the federal government.

The minister also referred to health care costs which are to be brought within the proposed legislation. While it is true that people are receiving health care assistance from the provinces at this time, under this proposal the federal government will share in the cost.

Let me repeat that what is really happening is a transfer of payments. Instead of the provinces paying these costs alone the federal government is now going to assist. I am not against such a proposal but let us not forget that this legislation will not provide something new.

The minister said that the government intends to continue to contribute to existing categorical programs for the aged, blind and disabled. I assume this will involve a phasing out operation and that eventually these programs will disappear. He also suggested an extension of provincial welfare programs to Indians who are now living on reserves, crown land or unorganized territory. It is my belief that this type of assistance was provided formerly by the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources through the Indian affairs branch. I realize that certain medical services were provided for Indians on reservations by the Department of National Health and Welfare and I am pleased to note that this whole program will be brought under the one department.

I was impressed by the minister's remarks which indicated that he was pressing for assistance to the severely retarded who have a limited employment potential. This potential can be developed if they are given an opportunity to partake in meaningful activity. This is a very worth-while step. We all know of the existence of private organizations which participate in this type of endeavour, and the one which occurs to me immediately is Marina Creations. I happen to be fairly well acquainted with this organization and I recall a visit made to my office by Mrs. George A. Marshall of Toronto at which time she set forth the work they were doing on behalf of the handicapped. This is worthwhile work and government funds should be made available in this regard.

Under this kind of a program the handicapped are taught to use the abilities they have. Some of them are not able to do much but through programs of this kind they are taught self-respect. Some of them even reach self-sufficiency to the point that they pay income tax.

During the last election campaign the Progressive Conservative party proposed that the means test be discarded in respect of retarded and disabled people. Certainly these people deserve assistance and encouragement in living their own lives and I am pleased that the minister has made some mention of assistance in this direction.

The minister spoke in glowing terms of the proposed legislation and suggested that it will cost an additional $85 million during the 1966-67 fiscal year. In this regard I should like to emphasize the words quoted by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre when he referred to a speech made by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in Fredericton on June 2 of this year. She said on that occasion that she wanted to make two general points. The first was that this plan does not involve any grand new programs. She said the second point was that although the plan would operate under the umbrella of a federal statute and receive substantial financial support from the federal government the details of the various programs and administrative responsibility would rest with the provinces.

I conclude by saying that what this plan amounts to is really a tidying up operation which is completely inadequate for the needs of people in these welfare categories. Let us not be fooled by the government when it refers to supplementary benefits because any thought that there are additional benefits to be received is wrong and only a delusion. We should provide $100 a month now for our older citizens.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, in considering the legislation under discussion one must congratulate the federal government for recognizing its responsibility to assume a greater share of the cost of providing supplementary assistance to the needy. I hope the government continues to recognize this necessity and thereby relieves provincial governments of a portion of the growing burden of welfare costs. It is doing so to the extent that a tax rearrangement is taking place and there is greater recognition of the federal role to be played in Canada. These changes are gratifying.

What disturbs me about this legislation is the implication that this is in effect what the government is offering the senior citizens of Canada in response to their urgent needs. If this is so, if the government is using this legislation as a red herring to relieve itself of its responsibilities to our senior citizens, then this government must stand condemned in the strongest possible terms. This is part of the phony war on poverty, and I use these words advisedly because of a deep feeling of anger at having to stand by on this side of the house and watch the government lightly ignore the pressing needs of our senior citizens. At times the purpose of this legislation appears to be little more than to convince those who are prosperous in this country that the needs of those who are poor are being met. Yet this is not so. The needs of our senior citizens and of our disadvantaged are simply not being met by the legislation that the government is introducing at the present time.

It is difficult to understand how the government can ignore the almost universal pleas on behalf of the older people in this country after listening to hon. members in all sections of the house, including the government side, who have spoken and called for an increase in the old age pension. The only reason I can find for such lack of action is that the government thinks it is fairly safe in office. Although it is a minority government, it is fairly obvious that very few people in Canada want an election and because the government has assessed the mood of the country it thinks it can maintain itself in office.

Let me speak for myself in this respect. I do not wish to see another election any more than anyone else, especially when we consider the number of elections that have taken place recently. However, if we are going to have to defeat the government in order to get increased old age pensions for our senior citizens, than I think this government should be defeated and the sooner the better because positive action must be taken. This government is playing at politics although they know they have to do something for the older people in Canada. What are they waiting for? Will they hold off action on this matter until just before an election so they can look like geniuses and heroes at that time? Will they ignore the present needs and stand by and watch the kind of suffering that is taking place among our senior citizens before they do anything? I would certainly hope that will not be the case but we have had no indication that the government's intention is to do anything other than that.

The government has been saying that it cannot afford to increase old age pensions and in the very same breath it speaks of the fantastic progress that has been made in this country. They brag about our great $51 billion economy and they talk about the most affluent of times under the jurisdiction of the Liberal party. Affluent for whom and affluent for what? What sense of values have they when they say "this great affluent society, this great $51 billion economy", and in the same breath say "there is no money for our older people?" In my opinion Canada can very well afford to treat its senior citizens with decency.

It is interesting to note that Canada in comparison with other western nations has far fewer people over the age of 60. In the booklet called "The Aging Worker In The Canadian Economy" dated July, 1964 it is stated that only 10.8 per cent of our population are 60 years and over. Of course the percentage of those who are 65 and over is even smaller. We can draw the conclusion from this information that an affluent society can easily afford to give increased support and sustenance to the small proportion of its people who require assistance. In Canada 10.8 per cent of our population are over 60; in Australia, 12.2 per cent; New Zealand, 12.2 per cent; the Netherlands, 13.3 per cent; the United States, 13.2 per cent and Sweden 17.3 per cent. In view of the resources of our country and our working population there is no reason to assume that we cannot provide this increased assistance to our older citizens.

We hear about priorities. The government says that education and other matters have a greater priority than old age assistance. No one denies the importance of these other matters and no one denies the need for education, medicare, etc., but what can have greater priority than the giving of assistance to those who require it? If necessary, some of these other matters can wait but this matter cannot wait because the hand of time will not wait for our senior citizens. Every month and every year that go by mean that a portion of their lives which could have been a little more worth while and a little more livable has been lost to them.

This situation requires some elementary justice. We have heard eloquent speeches from both sides of the house on why this country should carry out its obligation toward its senior citizens. These are the people who built this country. These are the people who lived in less than affluent times and who did not have the opportunity to put aside sufficient money for their old age despite the fact that they probably worked much harder than does the present generation.

Let me refer again to the information contained in "The Aging Worker In The Canadian Economy" regarding the educational level of our senior citizens aged 65 and over. It is said there that 65.6 per cent of them reached no higher than the elementary school level. The reason for this was certainly not their lack of interest in furthering their education but simply that it was not possible for them to do so. It is these people who have made it possible for those of us who are younger, for those now in school or who have been in school recently, to acquire a higher and fuller education.

Does this generation not owe at least something to them? Does it not have a duty to see that they get some minimum standard of living? When we talk about an old age pension of $100 a month we are not talking about the moon. We are not talking about a sum of money to enable our older citizens to live in affluence. At this time $100 per month will do little more than retrieve the erosion that has taken place in the $75. The old age pensioners are not only not advancing, not only not keeping up with the increased rewards of productivity and increased benefits obtainable in our society, but keep slipping inexorably behind. I do not know what the $75 would be worth in actual value today but it certainly would not buy as much as it would have three years ago. An increase in the pension at this time would do little more than put pensioners in the same position they were a few years ago.

Is this such a great thing to demand in an affluent society? Is this such a great thing to ask of the country? Is this too great a burden to place upon the working population, to ask our young people to provide some assistance for the generation that not only fought our wars in many cases but through their sacrifices built up public services and an educational system for the benefit of those who followed? I do not believe it is too great a sacrifice. I think it is a sacrifice our people would willingly make if the government would provide them with that opportunity. How can we stand by in Canada and see our resources used inadequately, and yet talk about not being able to afford things?

It seems to me that if this government had some better philosophy, some better attitude toward the management of this country, they would find that an efficient use of our natural resources would be adequate to the task of assisting our senior citizens. We heard a big hint earlier today when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre questioned the minister about the plans he had and whether he had any other ideas for helping the senior citizens of Canada. The member for Winnipeg North Centre did not receive much information.

There is a report from the Senate that calls for a different kind of program than a flat rate, old age pension. It is a good report and contains some worth-while ideas. In the years ahead the old age pension may not be the only answer to the problems of our senior citizens. What is the alternative? Has the government any other answer? Is the government considering any other program? Has it any hope to offer the people of Canada who need assistance now or is the government merely obscuring the issue in such a way as to deny responsibility? Is this a way of procrastinating, a way for the government to drag its feet? Certainly it is not helping.

Occasionally we hear, and we have heard this from the government, that any increase in the pension would be inflationary. When the economy is bad the government says, we cannot afford these things. When the economy is good, increases in old age pensions become inflationary. No matter what happens in this country, whether we have high unemployment or low unemployment, whether we have prosperity or a depression, when it comes to increases in old age pensions the government says either that we cannot afford it or it is going to be inflationary. So far no one on the government side has said that the older people of this country do not deserve it. They would not dare to say this.

However, the government does assert entirely contradictory points of view. They say we cannot afford it and that it is inflationary. The government often asks, where are you going to get the money? When the government says that increases in old age pensions will be inflationary, I do not think they know what they are talking about. We look around and see the kind of spending that is going on in those sectors of the economy that are truly under some pressure and it does not make sense to see expenditures that really are inflationary. What is happening is that the government is not prepared to stop inflation in those sectors in which it should be stopped.

What is the older person going to do with an increase in the old age pension? Is he going to buy shopping centres, put up apartment buildings or erect a grand mansion? What is this $25 a month going to do for the pensioner? What is it going to enable the older people to do that is so inflationary? Will they buy a little more food or perhaps meet their rent commitments? They may spend it on drugs. Is this inflationary? They might buy a gift for their grandchildren. Would this be inflationary? They might take a trip.

If you study the expenditures of the older people in our society you will find that with few exceptions they are spending their money on fundamental things, and by no stretch of the imagination are those the things that are promoting inflationary pressure in this country. I was disturbed when the Minister of Finance brought in his great budget which was heralded for its originality. It was original because he adopted a magnificent double standard of taxation to gain the revenues he required. He was quite willing to impose taxes on the individual but when it came to corporations taxes were not the answer. Loans were the answer. I believe these loans amounted to over $300 million, and I believe that amount would meet at least half the cost of increasing the old age pension. Why do we have this double standard? Why was the government not prepared to raise the money and provide an increase in old age pensions?

We talk about national unity in Canada and we regret the fact that our people are increasingly turning to their provincial governments for assistance. We regret the fact that the people have a greater affection for their provincial governments than they have for their national government in Ottawa. Is this surprising when the federal government displays such callousness? If the federal government wants to make a contribution to national unity, if it wants the people of Canada to feel that those who sit here in Ottawa are not insulated from the rest of the people in this country, it should do something about old age pensions. However, the government does not hear the voice of the old age pensioners. So, Mr. Chairman, the provincial governments tell their people that they can do it on their own, that they recognize their need and will raise the pension.

Because those governments are closer to the people is no excuse for inaction on the part of the government in Ottawa. If the federal government in talking of national unity wants to make Canadians from one end of Canada to the other feel as though the government at Ottawa does care about them and wants to do something for them, then let the government act in fields such as this. Let the government at least do something in fields over which they have jurisdiction.

There is no question that the federal government can raise the old age pension. There is no question that this would benefit every Canadian in every part of the country. But the government does not do this. Frequently the government says it would love to do things to promote national unity and to show the nation that the national government is at least as deserving of the affection of the Canadian people as are the provincial governments. Yet they tell the people that these things are beyond their jurisdiction and that they have no say in the matter. The government does have a say in the matter of old age pensions. But what is its answer? The government merely ignores the wishes and the needs of the people of the country.

Again we hear talk about redressing the balance between the rich provinces and the poor provinces. I think there is a real need for correction of the imbalance and to see that the poor provinces in Canada do receive more consideration than has been the case in the past. So the government brings in a measure which has its own built-in means test. The government brings in a measure, the Canada Assistance Plan, which provides that if a province is big, fat and wealthy it will get more money. The more money it can raise the more money it will receive. But if a poor little province cannot raise much money the federal government just matches the amount which is raised.

The Chairman: Order. I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, if I might continue for a few minutes I will bring my remarks to a close.

The Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent to the hon. member continuing?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I should like to express my appreciation to the committee for allowing me to continue my remarks. I shall be brief and will sum up what I have said.

For every reason I have advanced, whether it be for the reason of social justice, whether for financial reasons, whether for the reason of national unity, whether for the reason of better income distribution in Canada to help the poor provinces, whether for the reason that this is part of the war on poverty, whether for the reason of making the people of this country feel that their government in Ottawa cares and is concerned about them—for all these reasons I urge upon the government to see to it that the old age pension is increased.

I would also indicate to the government that as much as many of us are desirous of maintaining stability and as much as we would regret precipitating an election, unless the government acts to do something to help the desperate need of the senior citizens of this country it may very well be courting its own defeat.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I have some observations to make in regard to the subject of social security and in particular in regard to the Canada Assistance Plan, the item we are now discussing. I begin by referring to the summary of the minister, reported at page 6407 of Hansard, in which he said:

> —the Canada Assistance Plan will provide: a basis for co-ordinating public assistance programs in Canada;—

That has been referred to by the hon. member for Perth.

> —federal sharing for the first time in mothers' allowance programs; federal support for the strengthening of administration and welfare services related to social assistance programs; emphasis on developing, improving and extending services designated to lessen the amount of dependency; federal aid for buttressing child and youth welfare services, federal sharing of health care costs for social assistance recipients—

In large measure it is a bringing together, in co-ordination, programs of social security which time and experience have indicated are necessary. As has been stated by the hon. member for Simcoe East and the hon. member for Perth, there is no question whatever that this party will take any stand other than that of support for this legislation. Indeed, the hon. member for Perth set out in detail the course of action taken by the government of which I had the honour to be the prime minister.

I would remind the committee that in addition to the matters to which the hon. member made reference, during our period of office we reduced the residence requirement for payment of old age pensions in Canada from 20 years to 10 years. We brought in for the first time legislation to allow recipients of pensions to take their pensions with them when leaving Canada for health or other reasons. We brought about the increase in pensions, to which the hon. member made reference, from $46 to $65 per month, covering not only old age pensions but also blind persons' allowances and disability allowances. In one other field of social security, that of unemployment assistance, we removed the threshold clause and for the first time Canadians from all provinces in Canada and from the territories were made eligible to receive unemployment assistance benefits.

These and other matters, Mr. Chairman, indicate that social security is not a matter of monopoly by any one party. In the field of hospital construction the grants were increased during the six years that we were in office by 175 per cent. Grants for hospital beds used for active treatment were doubled from $1,000 to $2,000. I might deal with many of the changes made to assist those who were in need and to alleviate the economic conditions of those who required assistance.

In other words, we endeavoured to bring about within this nation a wide expansion of social justice, which I might define as the concern of government matched by government action to bring about higher standards of welfare for our fellow men and in particular for those who, because of age, disability, unemployment or other causes, would otherwise not enjoy a reasonable share of the good life.

I am not going to review the matters with which the hon. member for Perth dealt in such a comprehensive and effective manner. However, there is one field in which this government has failed, and failed demonstrably, to take action. I refer to its failure to provide an increase in old age pensions to $100 a month. The problem has been played with by the members of this government. Across this nation there has been an almost unanimous demand for action in this regard.

The view of Canadians as a whole, I think, was set out in an editorial in the Chronicle-Herald of January 15 last which stated:

> There is . . . a strong argument in favor of an immediate pension increase for all persons who now qualify for old age security, which increase should also apply to future pensioners who derive little or no support from the contributory plan.

We have tried. We have failed. The hon. member who preceded me stated that the need for action might very well bring about the defeat of the government. That may happen unless action is taken.

Let me review what has taken place. On Thursday, January 20, I had the honour to move an amendment to the effect that the old age pension be increased to $100 a month. A subamendment was moved thereto to have the increase commence at 65 years of age. Members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition voted in favour of the subamendment and again voted for the amendment. Nevertheless the hopes of the old age pensioner were defeated because every Liberal member in this house voted against that amendment.

Explain as they will that it was a vote of non-confidence, they cannot get away from the fact that at that time, had the government been defeated, the Governor General would have had to call on Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition as the alternative government rather than go to the country.

There is no doubt about that. That took place in the United Kingdom in the 1920's, and it is the only established precedent there is.

Why did the government succeed in defeating the $100 a month? Because it had the support of the Social Credit members who stood together with the government regardless of the attitude of people as a whole. Indeed, if they had not done so the old age pensioner today would be getting $100 a month.

An hon. Member: May I ask a question?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Thompson: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member can make his remarks after—

Mr. Thompson: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have the floor, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Thompson: May I ask the right hon. gentleman a question?

The Chairman: The hon. member for Red Deer on a point of order.

Mr. Thompson: My point of order is simply this, Mr. Chairman. The right hon. Leader of the Official Opposition has just suggested that if this amendment had been passed the old age pensioner would have received an increase bringing his pension to $100 a month. Would the passing of the amendment that the right hon. gentleman referred to have brought about that result?

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: The Chair is unable to discern any point of order in the hon. member's remarks.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Even though there is no point of order, I should be very happy to answer. Had the government been defeated, as I said a moment ago, on that first want of confidence amendment in this parliament, there would have been no alternative for the government. It would have been the Prime Minister's bounden duty and responsibility to ask the Governor General to call on Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition to form a government. If that had been done a pension increase would have been the first matter of legislation to be brought before parliament and the old age pensioner would be getting $100 a month today.

I have never been able to understand the attitude taken by the Social Credit party in this connection. I was not able to understand it at that time. Since then it has become almost a chronic condition. No matter what comes up, the hon. gentleman and his group stand with the government, right or wrong.

I am glad that question was asked. I wanted the opportunity to clarify the position of affairs in this connection. It is interesting to find that those who voted against the increase to $100 a month, and every Liberal member did so, are today engaged in a variety of alibis. I am not going to designate the members supporting the government who have been explaining to their constituents how their very hearts bleed for the old age pensioner and how, if only they had the opportunity to vote for $100 a month, they would do so.

That is one of the reasons why all across this nation there has been a feeling of deep concern that representatives of the people, voting in parliament, voted against that in which they themselves believed. It has hurt the image of parliament.

Last evening the Minister of Industry spoke in the city of Montreal. I am going to quote what he said. It is supported by the Gazette as being entirely correct. Then I am going to refer to his revised edition which received circulation this morning. The Gazette states that the statement arose under circumstances in which questions were asked. And questions are being asked. Everywhere the old age pensioner says: "Why don't you do something about it? Why don't you secure us what is fair? Why, in the face of the greatest increase in the cost of living in Canada's history, are we made to live on a sub-nutritional basis?" This is understandable. I am sure the minister has had representations in this connection. I have seen one or two of his letters in reply. I congratulate him for his capacity to convey, by suggestion, support for that whose defeat he contributed to by his vote.

Hope is held out. "Wait and see", it is said. Lo, what was said in Vancouver in the last couple of days has rather dampened hopes. Mr. Chairman, the government has been leading the people to believe that $125 a month is just round the corner. Where the corner is, when it will be seen at close range, when we shall round it, will not be made known for the immediate present or apparently for a long time to come.

So I commend the remarks the hon. gentleman made yesterday. I am willing to congratulate him on never making statements unless they are well founded. He promised $25 million for the benefit of the Cape Breton coal miners and they are still waiting. But I am one of his supporters and I know that some time, somewhere, he will get around to carrying out that promise which was to have been put into effect immediately, a word which in the Liberal lexicon means "Whenever we think appropriate, however long the delay".

I now read from the Gazette:

> Industry Minister Drury said Monday night the Federal government should establish its own mass communication outlets to publicize its achievements.

Well, if they can publicize what they have done for the old age pensioners by establishing a government agency they will have achieved the impossible. I read further:

> "If Prime Minister Pearson isn't obtaining enthusiastic public support these days, it's because our government has been doing poorly in publicizing its achievements," Mr. Drury said in a speech to the federal Liberal association of his Montreal St. Antoine-Westmount riding.

One of the things they will not publicize, even though they come to control the media of communication, will be the fact that they have done nothing for the old age pensioner. Many of those who are sitting opposite me belong to that school represented by the Secretary of State for External Affairs who in 1956 said the country could not afford an increase of more than $6. in old age pensions. A number of those who stood with him on that side of the house are still in parliament. The hon. member for Kootenay East is one who supported that stand in 1956. Apparently today, in his independence, he supports the government in its refusal to increase old age pensions to $100 per month.

Then the Minister of Industry went on to say:

The public media—newspapers, radio and television—concentrate on the issues which cause parliamentary argument and bypass important legislation enacted with little fuss.

Well, they have certainly bypassed the fact that this government has refused to increase the pension to $100 a month. The minister is then quoted as saying:

Perhaps an answer would be for the government to print its own newspapers—

I do not know what hon. gentlemen opposite intend to do with the members of the press gallery when the government finally takes them over and begins printing its own newspapers. The quotation continues:

—and to utilize its control over the C.B.C. by inserting a few programs of its own as well.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then the report says:

The minister admitted his idea "might give rise to some discussion".

Mr. Chairman, no minister was ever more prophetic. It even led to some discussion in his own mind as a result of which he issued a revised version today. And the interesting part is that all he deals with is the C.B.C. I will read his statement so that the record may be clear. I did not have it at question time today.

Commenting on a story in the Montreal Gazette of Tuesday, June 21, 1966, which quoted him as suggesting the use of the C.B.C. to broadcast programs prepared by the government, the Hon. C. M. Drury, Minister of Industry, stated that the quotation was inaccurate, out of context, and did not represent his own views or those of the government.

The minister stated that he was replying to a question concerning a public opinion poll during an informal question and answer period at the annual meeting of the St. Antoine-Westmount Liberal Association. He had attributed the result of the poll to overemphasis in the public news media on conflict in parliament and relatively inadequate coverage of important legislation. He had stated that the government should improve its methods of bringing its achievements to the attention of the public, including better utilization of such media as newspapers and television.

Then he said:

At no time did I advocate that the government misuse public ownership of the C.B.C. by inserting government programs.

You will note, Mr. Chairman, that he did not deny that, in his opinion, the answer might be for the government to print its own newspapers. The only part he denied was the statement that he intended to try to control the C.B.C. So in the revised version it now becomes clear what the hon. gentleman had in mind. Speaking in this institution for freedom, I want to say this: leaving aside the reference to the C.B.C., the statement made by the Minister of Industry last night reveals an unexpected frankness. It leads us to understand that thought control by the government and for the government, without regard for freedom, is not outside their thinking.

There is no denial of that part of the statement which expresses the opinion that the government should print its own newspapers. This is an amazing revelation. Last night the minister spoke. Today he revises. But never does he deny that what he has in mind—and when ministers speak they speak for the government—is the taking over of newspapers.

I can understand the somewhat cavalier manner in which questions in this connection were brushed aside today. The Prime Minister did not know the facts because in answer to me he said there had been a categorical denial of the things alleged to have been said last night by the minister.

There was no such denial so far as the publication of newspapers is concerned. That statement shows the arrogant state of mind of this government. It reveals that in their minds they feel the people of Canada are not as appreciative of them as they should be. If we had a recording of what the old age pensioners say about this government it would be unparliamentary. Members opposite are not getting the right interpretation from the press so they must have their own newspapers. We now have the information, revealed from the lips of one of the government's leading ministers, that hon. gentlemen opposite know best what the people of Canada should hear and see. Mr. Chairman, the revision is worse than the original report.

The revision removes only that part of the statement which deals with the control of the C.B.C. I have nothing to say about the C.B.C. but this: I have found, and this is regularly so, that whenever the government is in difficulty there will always be available independent observers of political thought who, free from any consideration except the edification of the people and the purveying of truth, will say "After all, the government did what was appropriate".

But, when we, on this side of the house take a stand that is critical, we can always be assured that not many hours later, through the facilities of the C.B.C., we will hear one of those independent commentators proceed to dislodge us from our position by alleging that we are far removed from the facts. I see no reason why the minister should have found it necessary to suggest, if he did, control of the C.B.C., which he says he did not.

That speech last night by the Minister of Industry was the most revealing one we have had during this parliament. They cannot understand it. Something has happened. Halos are being removed from the heads of ministers of a government that for long was free from criticism. There are no halos for this government from the old age pensioners of Canada, from the superannuated civil servants, from the civil servants who are being denied their rightful increases at this time or from the veterans. I could go down the whole list but, as the Minister of Industry says, "If we had our own newspaper we could improve our image." If they did it would be a caricature of the truth.

Sir, this legislation represents necessary changes. It receives our approval, but with all the force at my command I again call on the government to act in increasing old age pensions. I do not know whether the parliamentary post office delivers only letters of praise and approbation to members of the government or whether correspondence from old age pensioners ever finds its way into their offices and into the offices of those members supporting the government. But if it does, the old age pensioners call, they ask, and they are denied.

Some of the letters I have received outlining the attitude of Canadians regarding the failure of the government to take appropriate action should have been written on asbestos paper. Under this legislation the old age pensioners have nothing to hope for whatsoever. Yet members of the government are talking about $100 million defence buildings, $6 million paintings, $10 million for this and that and millions of other dollars for other purposes. I hope that members sitting opposite, who heretofore have voted as strongly as they have been able against $100 a month for old age pensioners, will feel the twinges of conscience or else the scorpions of the old age pensioners as they call upon parliament to act.

This legislation is beneficial but what is needed now for the benefit of Canadians as a whole is an increase in the old age pension so that the old age pensioner will not find himself in a position of penury, faced by rising costs of rental, food, clothing and all those things he has to buy while, at the same time he is caught under a ceiling that makes it impossible for the ordinary things of life to be available to those who deserve better.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, the resolution before us advises us that, in due course, a measure will be introduced giving effect to the resolution which reads as follows:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure, to be known as the Canada Assistance Plan, to establish a program for sharing with the provinces in the cost of assistance, including health care and welfare services, provided to or in respect of persons in need, including mothers and children, older persons, disabled persons and unemployed persons who are in need, and in the cost of developing and improving assistance and welfare services programs including child and youth welfare programs throughout Canada; to provide for the making of arrangements for extending provincial welfare programs, with the approval of Indian bands, to Indians with reserve status, and for the making of payments to the provinces with respect to the cost of so extending those programs; to provide for the making of payments to the provinces with respect to the cost of specialized projects for assisting and rehabilitating persons in need or likely to become persons in need who have unusual difficulty in obtaining or holding employment; to provide for amendments to the Old Age Assistance Act, the Blind Persons Act, the Disabled Persons Act and the Unemployment Assistance Act that are incidental to or consequential on the introduction of the Canada Assistance Plan; and to provide further for the extension of the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act to the Canada Assistance Plan.

Mr. Chairman, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) has just spoken at quite some length of a matter related to this resolution and naturally, to the bill which we hope will soon follow. He blames the government for not having granted our senior citizens $100 per month. He forgets, it seems, that three years ago, when his government was in power, the old age pension was $65 per month. He has been a member of the opposition now for three years and he tells the Liberals: you are mean, you are wicked, you do not give $100 a month to our senior citizens aged 70 or more.

Mr. Chairman, when an amendment was moved by the Conservative party, namely by the Leader of the Opposition himself, to the effect that the old age pension should be increased to $100 per month, we from the Ralliement Créditiste had voted for the amendment, not because we were Conservatives or Liberals, but because we were in favour of a $100 monthly pension for our senior citizens. But the paradox is not that we voted with the opposition. By the way, I would like to mention that on the evening after we voted for the amendment, we heard on the C.B.C. the report of a commentator who is here in the lobby, behind the scenes, but who seldom attends our proceedings. Undoubtedly because he had not seen us, he said that thanks to the Social Credit, the Liberal party saved face and remained in power.

Throughout the country our stand was then taken to mean—I have kept in my office, letters which bear me out—that we had voted with the Liberals against the Conservatives' amendment.

Well, Mr. Chairman, the facts are quite different. It is true that the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) and his comrades in arms voted with the government and it is true that we voted against the government. Those who say that an amendment is not a bill or a resolution are right. However, should a free vote been allowed on the amendment or the increase in old age pensions, as was one for capital punishment—I feel that the old people in Canada are just as important as the question of capital punishment in Canada, and that a free vote should have been allowed then—the old people who would have received $100 a month at 70 or 65, as we suggested when the amendment was introduced. Mr. Chairman, people were confused.

We took a stand for our senior citizens and we are still asking for $100 a month at 65, without any means test, and at 60 for those who are in need. But that is not the question. I come back to the paradox which I wanted to point out a little earlier. The Prime Minister stated in the maritimes before the election of November 8: $100 a month is not enough, it should be $125 a month.

The government does not even want to grant $100 a month and it is talking about $125. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) talked of $125 a month in Vancouver a few days ago, but the government is careful not to grant $100 or $125 a month. Now suppose an election took place and the government were defeated; the Leader of the Opposition would be the new prime minister with his friends as ministers.

Then if he introduced legislation to give $100 a month, the Liberals would cry out right away and say: $100 is not enough, it takes $125 a month. That is the sincerity of the two old line political parties in Canada, the sincerity of those who are ready to make promises at election time and willing to forget them when the elections are over.

The hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron)—I call on him to witness what I am saying, even if we do not share the same political ideas —has been promised for 15 years that public buildings would be built on the other side of the river. And what has the Liberal government done for the people of Hull in the field of federal public buildings?

Mr. Allard: It is a shame.

Mr. Caouette: A monstrous shame. The ministers should blush in shame, all of them without exception, for treating so unfairly the region of Hull.

Mr. Chairman, the Postmaster General (Mr. Côté) is losing his temper. He does not like to hear us criticizing the government—

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): You are the one who is losing his temper—

Mr. Caouette: No, I often lose my temper, precisely because the government takes no action. The Leader of the Opposition said a while ago that the government was busy setting up a propaganda system for itself.

I will state an immediate fact to the Postmaster General.

I wrote him about two months ago to request a post office for the western part of Hull. I was told that it was granted. It is not yet there. But the paradox, once again, is that the member for Gatineau (Mr. Isabelle) who was not even aware of that, sent a letter to the man who was to be appointed as postmaster, telling him: I recommended you strongly as postmaster.

And the Postmaster General will tell me that this is justice. Political patronage, patronage dispensers on the government side, that is what we witness.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Chairman, does the member for Villeneuve allow me to put a question?

Mr. Caouette: Certainly, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Chairman, when the member for Villeneuve recommends somebody as postmaster, is that patronage?

Mr. Caouette: The member for Gatineau never made any recommendation to the Postmaster General, but I did, concerning the building of a post office in that area. I challenge the minister to send me the correspondence exchanged with the member for Gatineau. But, the minister has correspondence with the member for Villeneuve in that regard.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I never had personally any correspondence with the member for Gatineau concerning that post office.

Mr. Caouette: But the Postmaster General has had correspondence with the member for Villeneuve. That is certain.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I granted it on the recommendation of the department.

Mr. Caouette: How is it that the member for Gatineau wrote the man in question to tell him: "I firmly recommended you to the department". What has the member for Gatineau to do with that?

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): What had the Postmaster General to do with that also?

Mr. Caouette: Certainly, the Postmaster General has something to do with that; however, he has nothing to do with patronage.

Mr. Chairman, this is not patronage. I admit that when a man is elected to the federal parliament, he is elected by the people and this must be taken into consideration, whatever his political complexion. But let us stop this wire-pulling, as some members are doing or trying to do within the federal government, and the hon. member is aware of that; he knows that I am right.

Mr. Chairman, the Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): You are stuck—

Mr. Caouette: No, I am not stuck. The Postmaster General will be stuck long before I get stuck.

Mr. Chairman, coming back to this resolution concerning introduction of a bill to be known as the Canada Assistance Plan, I suggest that assistance programs do exist in Canada. We have had them in the past and we still have them today. This resolution does not say what the bill will contain. How will needy mothers be assisted? How will the aged, the blind or the disabled be further assisted? How will the unemployed be helped, under the new act or through unemployment assistance?

Only by reading the bill will we know exactly what the government proposes to do. One thing we do know, however, like everybody else, is that the bill itself will be centrally administered in Ottawa. Yet, every province has its own provincial administration in this field; therefore, there will be a duplication of administrative expenses, because we are already paying both Quebec and Ottawa; as far as we are concerned, we will again be paying Ottawa and Quebec, and the other provinces will do the same thing.

Mr. Chairman, this duplication could be avoided by returning to the provinces the whole administrative jurisdiction of these programs or this Canada Assistance Plan.

In the first place, poverty-stricken families, families in dire straits, blind persons, disabled persons, etc., are all better known to provincial civil servants. Federal authorities in Ottawa are far from those people while provincial authorities are near them; they already have the administrative machinery to look after persons in need.

If a mother receives $125 or $130 a month at the present time, there is no doubt that she is a person in need. She gets $90 and $10 per child; if she has five children, this means $50 plus $90, or a total of $140 a month. Mr. Chairman, I put this question to the government or to any minister: Who can support six persons here in Canada on $140 a month? Can anyone say that $140 a month is all you need to live on nowadays, considering the high cost of living?

Mr. Chairman, it is all very well for the government to fight or get ready to fight poverty, but the government should wage this fight effectively and, in my opinion, the best way to fight poverty is to give the provinces the necessary financial means to fight and stamp out poverty within their own borders. And each and every province is in the same state of financial stagnation.

Mr. Chairman, as I said, this legislation should be more generous toward our senior citizens. One hundred dollars a month is a strict minimum. I should like to point out that when a man receives the old age pension at 65 years of age, he is a person in need. He may receive $75 a month, others $85, because the provincial government can, from time to time, add $10 in this case, $10 in another, probably according to the political affiliation of the pensioner, but in any case the amount is $75.

And suppose the wife of this pensioner, of this 65-year-old man, is 57 or 58 years old, she is refused her pension, since she is not 60 or 62 years old.

Mr. Chairman, the new legislation concerning old age pensions should provide that whenever an old man has the right to become a pensioner and is eligible to an old age pension, his wife should also become a pensioner at the same time, regardless of her age; 55 and 58-year-old women would not be compelled to do office work, washing floors at night, so as to bring home additional income and have a little more decent standard of living than can be obtained nowadays for two human beings with a $75 monthly pension.

Mr. Chairman, I am anxious to see the bill introduced, so as to know about the magnanimity, the generosity on the part of the government for the disabled, the needy, the old people of this country. I am anxious to see that. Then, I can assure you that if the bill is a generous one—generous is not the right word as we are showing no generosity for the disabled and the needy, since in all fairness they have a right to this—I will support it. But, if the bill to be introduced does not give them justice we shall fight it with all our might. On the other hand, should the piece of legislation be a fair one, should it really give assistance to the needy and the old people, I commit myself, on behalf of my group and personally, to support the government to the extent that there will be justice for the Canadian people who need it tremendously nowadays.

• (4:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Gray: Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to support this resolution with the hope that it will be soon approved in order that we can obtain the bill and proceed to move toward its adoption as quickly as possible. This will permit us to put into effect a very important and positive measure to help disadvantaged groups in this country.

I expect there will not be unanimity of opinion in respect of what I wish to say next because it is in direct contrast to some of the remarks of the Leader of the Official Opposition. But surely even he will permit me to say to the committee that in spite of his suggestions, it should be put on record that by passing the amendment to which he referred no change would have been made in the law and, in spite of his ingenious argument to the contrary, no immediate increase in the amount available to the aged and other groups in need in this country would have been brought about. As he himself said, it would have brought about the defeat of the government and its resignation.

The Leader of the Opposition went on to suggest that it perhaps might have caused the Governor General to call upon his party to form the government. What he neglected to say to this house was that he would then have had to present himself to the house after a Speech from the Throne to face a vote of confidence. I think it would stretch the imagination of even the most fair-minded members of this house to believe that the members of the New Democratic Party, for example, and members of other minor parties, to say nothing of the members of the Liberal party, would have supported him in all the aims he wanted to put forward. It can be stated that they would all have agreed, in spite of what he had in his program, that it would not have been in the the interests of this country to have another period of Conservative government. The only result of moving into another election at that time, which would either be under way now or just completed, would be that we would not now have this resolution before us bringing in the Canada Assistance Plan. I am confident this plan will provide aid in future not only to the aged but to other people who belong to disadvantaged groups in this country. This measure would not be before us now had the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition been followed seriously when this parliament opened last January.

The fact is that we do have this resolution before us at this time. Once the bill to follow is passed it will bring about, with appropriate co-operation on the part of provincial governments, increased assistance to the aged and others including needy mothers and children, the disabled and blind.

For the first time we will have an integrated and uniform program to help needy groups which up until now have been assisted in a piecemeal manner through programs which left many gaps. But this program is one which is supported by many groups in this country, including the Canadian Welfare Council, which have studied this whole problem. I think every member of the house who has attempted to be in contact with his constituents and help them in a useful and constructive way with their problems is aware of the gaps that are present in existing programs of social assistance.

The minister said when introducing this legislation that at the present time assistance programs such as mothers' allowances do not have the financial support of the federal government. He also suggested that the maximum amounts available under other programs do not really cover the needs of those who require assistance to obtain a decent standard of living. These people are faced with problems relating to obtaining adequate clothing, living accommodation, food and medical supplies. In some urban areas at this time they cannot enjoy a decent standard of living.

Very little argument, if any, will come from this side of the house against any suggestion that all Canadians as human beings are entitled to a decent standard of living. This is true particularly of the aged who have served this country well in its development. The Canada Assistance Plan resolution and the bill which will follow will go a long way toward filling the gaps that exist in present assistance programs and will help the aged and other disadvantaged groups to live in a more equitable manner than they can at the present time.

One of the big difficulties in respect of assistance programs now in operation is the application of the means test. This is an unfair and unrealistic way in which to provide assistance. Under the provisions of the present means test the income of recipients of assistance includes not only actual disposable earnings but also national amounts, for example, for rent in cases of individuals who own their own homes. Even though a person does not receive a nickel in the way of rent from a property he owns and lives in he must include a certain amount as rent in his income.

The present definition of means is unfair to those individuals who have been able to accumulate some savings during a lifetime of hard work. The present level of permissible savings is far too low, and very often because of the length of time required for provincial authorities administering these programs to come to a decision on applications for help these individuals who have accumulated savings below the permissable level must dip into them in order to exist. In this way they deplete these savings while waiting for approval of their applications for social assistance.

One of the most valuable features of the new Canada Assistance Plan will be the substitution of a needs test for the present means test so that amounts paid can be based on the actual need of the senior citizen the widow, the disabled and the blind who apply. Perhaps some of them may need $100 while others may only need $90 and still others may need $125 a month or more. According to my understanding of the bill which will evolve from this resolution, no limit will be put on the amount which the federal government will be able to contribute to match the provincial contributions available under the new programs based on the Canada Assistance Plan to meet the needs of those covered by it.

There comes a time, Mr. Chairman, when measures put forward in an attempt to treat all people in certain categories fairly turn out to have just the opposite effect. There comes a time when measures put forward on this basis actually create inequality. I think it is obvious that needs differ in different parts of the country. An amount that may be adequate in some outport in Newfoundland is unlikely to be adequate in Toronto or Windsor, and in fact needs may differ among people with similar problems living in the same community.

Someone once said that in medieval France the law treated everyone alike; it made it illegal for both rich and poor to sleep under bridges. I think it would be agreed by anyone studying this approach, which still exists under many laws today, that it provides a most unequal form of equality. So, to do nothing more in the field of social security than give people irrespective of need exactly the same amount can and does create and perpetuate inequalities.

I think there is no question that there is need in Canada today for a basic level of social assistance all across the country. However, it is my argument that to continue to give the same across-the-board increases, where the need for such increases exists, to everyone in Canada in exactly the same manner no matter what their individual needs in their areas may be will have the effect of creating and perpetuating inequalities. For example, I suggest that giving $100 a month, as the Conservative party has suggested, to everyone irrespective of their needs and of the amounts they have available will mean giving $100 a month not only to the needy, the aged and others in need of assistance but also to people such as E. P. Taylor and Senator McCutcheon. I suggest that even the good Senator McCutcheon will agree that he does not require this type of help now nor will he need it in the foreseeable future. I do not intend to speak disrespectfully of him, Mr. Chairman.

An hon. Member: What about Walter Gordon?

Mr. Gray: Others could be mentioned who are quite well off financially and who would receive this assistance although they are quite well able to take care of themselves.

I think the effect of the Canada Assistance Plan will not be to foster inequality but rather create a plan which will meet the needs of the individuals concerned. I might also say, that the use of the flexible needs test approach upon which the Canada Assistance Plan is based will help to bring about a more effective and efficient use of the moneys contributed to the federal government by the taxpayers of this country. It permits greater help to be given to those who are really in need and at the same time it creates a lesser burden on the taxpayer and a more effective use of his tax contributions than might otherwise be the case.

It is important to note that the programs covered by the Canada Assistance Plan are to be administered by the provincial governments because the existing constitutional arrangements of this country give them the basic authority required in this area. I think this is something we have to accept since we have to base federal assistance and support on the constitutional structure of this country.

And I think it is important to note that under this resolution the Canada Assistance Plan enables the provinces to increase their services through the recruitment of social service workers. For the flexible needs test approach to work most effectively it should be administered and applied in a humane fashion by a sufficient number of trained and interested people who are not only concerned with putting in a day's work but with dealing with the human needs of the people who come to them for help.

An important feature of the proposed Canada Assistance Plan is its emphasis on rehabilitation. Many of the aged who will be covered by the plan have contributed to the active life of this country and should therefore be entitled to call upon their fellow citizens to provide them, through federal and provincial assistance, with a decent standard of living with which to complete their days. However, there are others in need of social assistance who, with proper help, rehabilitation and training, will be able to play a more active and more useful role in the life of this country, and I am sure that is what many of them would like to do. I believe that the Canada Assistance Plan will make it possible for them to do so.

[Mr. Gray.]

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I understand there will be no limit on the amount of federal contributions to the programs supported by the Canada Assistance Plan provided these will be matched by the provinces. I hope that the provincial governments will not refrain from accepting their share of the responsibilities which at the present time seems to be constitutionally theirs so as to make the Canada Assistance Plan work in the way it is intended to work.

I also think it is an obligation of the provincial governments who will be administering the plan to inform the people who will benefit from it, and their families and neighbours, of the role of the federal government in providing not only the financing but also the framework of the social assistance programs covered by the Canada Assistance Plan. The public has the right to know what is being done with its tax dollars. It has the right to know the reason for these programs and who is paying for them. I urge the minister to make certain, in applying the legislation which we are discussing, that the methods of its implementation will be put into effect in such a way as to make the people of Canada aware of the contributions of the federal government. The provinces also have an obligation to inform the citizens living within their boundaries of the efforts of the federal government in providing a large part of this additional assistance.

I urge this house to support the Canada Assistance Plan and pass this resolution as quickly as possible so that the aged, needy mothers and children, the blind, the disabled and other groups concerned may receive the aid provided under its terms.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I think we can support many aspects of this plan in general because it is an effort to tidy up an area in which a great deal of tidying up is needed and where extra assistance is needed. I have before me the text of a speech made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare on June 20 in Vancouver. I should like to refer to one or two parts of that speech. I notice that on page 6, particularly there are words indicating that the additional $85 million designated for the Canada Assistance Plan will bring federal outlays on public assistance and welfare services to more than one quarter of a billion dollars.

I urge the minister, and any other minister, not to use that phraseology. When he means the sum of $250 million he should not try by the use of such a phrase to suggest that he means a billion dollars. There is something a bit sad, a bit wistful, about reaching toward a billion dollars when one is barely a quarter of the way there. One wonders why the expression would be used in connection with this plan. However, I believe we see the reason when we turn to page 8 and look at that part of the minister's speech. He talks about the concept of a guaranteed annual income and he talks about it wistfully. A few weeks ago he spoke about that concept with hope but now he seems to speak of it with a certain amount of despair. I regret very much this change in attitude within a short space of time.

Speaking about the idea of a guaranteed annual income, the minister said:

> While the latter has a good deal to commend it, it has a number of far reaching implications which must be fully weighed before any decision is taken.

I would agree with him that it has far reaching implications. However, the real implication in a guaranteed annual income is that it would take the question of old age pensions out of the realm of politics once and for all. I suspect this is the reason the minister backed off from the idea of a guaranteed annual income. It would mean that we would not have the sort of exercise in politics that we have had this afternoon when speaker after speaker, particularly the Leader of the Opposition, indulged in the sort of political display that does not win elections in Canada any longer but only serves to complicate the election picture.

I should like to recall to the members of this committee the Senate report on aging, which is a remarkable report. A week or two ago Dr. Bortz from the United States appeared before a committee and spoke to us on the problems of the aged. He had the highest of praise for this report and said he wished he could claim it for his own country. He gave the Senate committee tremendous credit for its report which brought forth the concept of a guaranteed annual income. I should like to quote a paragraph or two from the report:

> If this approach were adopted the following steps would be involved:
> 1. The establishment of a technically competent body to study the income needs of older people and to develop a socially acceptable minimum budget for single persons and couples, which would be adjusted automatically each year on the basis of a suitable index of consumer spending or of earnings, with a review every five years to reflect changes in the relative circumstances of the working population and the retired population.

What a wonderful thing that would be. This country is capable of accomplishing it, we have the machinery. We could get old age security pensions out of the purely political area. The Senate committee made a further elaboration of the program as follows:

> (a) that the only conditions for eligibility under the income guaranteed program be age, as indicated above, ten years' residence in Canada, and net cash income from all sources, including old age security and the Canada Pension Plan, below the above amount.
> (b) that the program be administered and financed by the federal government.
> (c) that the procedure call for the completion of a simplified income form annually and that the amount by which the declared income falls short of the established minima in any year constitute the benefit for the year following.
> (d) that there be "sample checks" periodically, as under unemployment insurance, to catch abuses, but no means or needs test inquiries on traditional lines.

The one thing it would do would be to remove the idea of a means test and the guaranteed annual income would be accepted as a right. I believe this idea would be acceptable to the elderly people of Canada. I know they have been frightened away from it since the Senate report was made public. I believe they have been so frightened for political reasons because the present system is too valuable to too many people. We know that as long as old age pensions are a political football in Canada no government will be prepared to raise the pension to the point where it should be because if they did they would not be able to use it again, at least not immediately, in the Canadian political picture.

I urge the government to move on the matter of a guaranteed annual income. It must be put into practice somewhere on this continent. It is coming, I know, in many developed countries of the world. Let us lead for a change instead of following. Over and over again in this session it has been said the federal government should show strength. We hear that the provincial governments have been showing the strength. Here is the place for the federal government to try out a new concept, a concept where they have nothing to lose. The elderly people could not be any worse off than they are under the present system.

Once this system was tried I believe the government would find it would solve many problems. I believe the aged would find it acceptable. Then we could go on with this unusual concept and develop it until it became a factor in the lives of the Canadian people generally and not just the aged. The Globe and Mail of today, June 21, contains an editorial headed "Guaranteed Income For Age". I should like to quote from it:

> The federal government has tried to depart from the flat-rate pension with the Canada Pension Plan, but this will not be fully effective until ten years after its initiation; and it will never do anything for the large group of old people who are already out of the labour market . . .
> The Senate committee on aging, chaired by Senator David Croll, earlier this year produced a plan which could take the emphasis off the flat rate, and provide greater aid to those who really need it without the humiliation of the means test. This proposal—

Then the editorial goes on and gives details of the figures suggested in the report for the guaranteed annual income. I quote from the editorial:

> The guaranteed annual income plan for persons over 65 would be simple to operate, it would adjust aid to need without an army of means testers, it would have built-in escalator machinery, and it would break up that solid block of pensioners which present far too great a temptation to irresponsible politicians.

I think that the government in its wisdom could very well move to introduce a guaranteed annual income for the aged at this time. We know that the Canada Assistance Plan was made use of in recent provincial elections. We know that it will be used again. We know now, from the resolution and the statements of the minister, that the people who have been using this plan in election campaigns have been using a will-o'-the-wisp because the plan will not give the elderly people of this country what they need in view of the rapid inflation at the present time. If the government is not prepared to introduce a monetary policy that might solve some of the problems of inflation, an inflation we seem to accept, then it is imperative that the government move to do something for the people who suffer most from the effects of inflation.

I urge that the government stop looking at their plan as one mighty package. The fact that the government does this is shown in the minister's speech in Vancouver. There is no need at all, so far as I can see, to attach the Canada Assistance Plan to the question of medicare. If the government can go ahead with medicare with the sort of unnecessary compulsion that is written into the plan, with the money going to provinces that do not want it, then certainly they could very easily introduce a guaranteed annual income plan for the aged. I suggest that the government drop the medicare part of its social assistance plan until the country is ready for it and instead concentrate its attention on the elderly people, an area in which so far it has failed to move at all.

[Mr. Johnston.]

I should like to say one last word to the members of the official opposition, particularly to their leader who unfortunately is not in the committee at the present time. I voted to support the government on the first motion of non-confidence when the house first assembled, and I was not ashamed to do so at that time. I went back to my constituency almost immediately afterwards and I was not afraid to go back there and meet elderly people and talk to them. I know that a great many of them did not believe the absolute falsehood which we heard repeated this afternoon, namely, that the five members of this political party were the only ones who had stood between the old age pensioners and an increase of $25 in the old age pension. We all know that the alternative which the Leader of the Opposition suggested this afternoon, that had this government been defeated the Governor General would have called upon him to form a government, is not what would in fact have happened.

I know that the Governor General is a man of great age but he is also a man of wisdom. Like so many other Canadians we all recall that the Leader of the Opposition had the opportunity to take this step when he was leader of a government with the largest majority the country had ever seen. I was out of the country for 18 months between 1961 and 1963 and in a way I was glad I was. Every time I read a paper from home I winced with embarrassment and shame when I realized the position in which Canada was floundering at that time and which led to the defeat of the government in 1963. That government was not even able to present a budget, let alone solve the problems of the nation.

I do not believe that at any time since, either the Leader of the Opposition or the people who support him have found a method which would have allowed 97 members, now 96, to have formed a government which could have worked and functioned in this country. I think one hon. member on the government side made the point that such a government would itself have had to face a vote of confidence and that that vote of confidence would not have been on the question of the old age security pension. I do not believe for one moment that such a government would have withstood even the first vote of non-confidence.

What the members of this party did was to give the present government the opportunity to do something for the people of Canada, and the government has been doing something in many areas. Particularly over the last few weeks the record of legislation going through this house has been considerable. Although we support this bill I call on the government to take one more step, one of the most significant steps they could ever take, and bring in a guaranteed annual income for the elderly citizens of this country.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Chairman, in the few minutes remaining to me I do not think I need repeat the points which have been made in connection with the need of our old age pensioners. However, I do want to point out several weaknesses in the social justice measures we have in this country.

The first is in connection with widows. Take the case of mothers with children who have been receiving a pension or allowance of one sort or another. As soon as the children grow up and reach the age when they no longer attend school the pension is discontinued and no longer comes into the household. The mother then finds herself in the position where, having reached the age of 50 or over without having had any formal training and having tended her children in the home and made sacrifices, she is suddenly without income. This is a weakness in our social legislation today and I point out to the minister that it should be corrected.

The second weakness which I find in social justice measures that we have in this country is that there are strict regulations which bind social workers and deprive a disabled person of a pension. A doctor, having given a man a thorough check-up, may in all sincerity find that is not capable of physical work; yet because of the way these regulations are drawn up this person is not permitted to receive a disabled person's allowance. Many people with arms and legs are unable to perform manual work.

Some of the cases I have witnessed during my years of contact with the public are pitiful. They are not granted a disabled person's allowance and it is unfair to ask them to go to the municipality where they reside and ask for a hand-out from a group of people because they are no longer able to work. Consequently they often turn to labours for which they are unfitted. I have seen cases, as no doubt have other hon. members, where people drive themselves with the result that their health fails. These people have a certain amount of pride. They would like to be able to do the type of work they are forcing themselves to do but their health does not permit it. The regulations in this regard must be relaxed in cases where a doctor indicates a man is unfit to work, in which case he should be given a disabled person's allowance. I do not know how much time I have but—

The Chairman: Order. Under provisional standing order 61-A the time allotted to this debate, a period of five hours, has now expired. It is therefore my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put the question on the resolution before the committee. Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. MacEachen thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-207, to authorize the making of contributions by Canada toward the cost of programs for the provision of assistance and welfare services to and in respect of persons in need.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CROP INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION, EXTENDING OPERATION, ETC.

The house resumed, from Monday, June 20, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Greene—Mr. Batten in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amended the Crop Insurance Act to increase the maximum contribution payable by Canada on crop insurance premiums; to increase the maximum amount of the insurance that may be effected on any crop; to authorize the making of contributions to a province providing insurance coverage against losses arising from the destruction of fruit trees or perennial plants or losses arising when the seeding of summer-fallowed land intended to be used to grow an insured crop is prevented by excessive ground moisture, weather or other agricultural hazards; to provide further for consequential amendments in connection with the administation of the act.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I listened very carefully and with great interest to the minister when he was introducing this resolution last night and I noticed a little less confidence in his remarks than I had noticed in his introduction of previous legislation. When he was speaking he reminded me of a cat walking across the piano keys with the sun in its eyes. I think he indicated quite clearly by his presentation and his manner of delivery that he considers this more or less experimental legislation and that he is not quite certain about its development in the future.

However, Mr. Chairman, we support the principle of crop insurance because we believe it is sound. From our point of view crop insurance for agricultural producers is the counterpart of unemployment insurance for industrial and other workers in Canada. To date, however, it is obvious from the reports we have had with respect to the administration of the crop insurance legislation that farmers have not, shall I say, been very enthusiastic over this legislation to date and have not been attracted by the terms of the legislation or the contracts or agreements required with respect to certain crops in various regions. I think it is quite fair to say that this is experimental legislation which will be developed from experience.

I might say, Mr. Chairman, speaking personally and I think with considerable support in the party of which I am a member, that crop insurance will not be successful until we allow the law of averages to operate by including all farmers in Canada under the legislation so that they may take advantage of it. I hope it will be extended to all farmers. Personally, provided there are proper safeguards I would be in favour of the consideration of a tax to provide crop insurance for all agricultural producers in this country. That is just my personal opinion. I think it would go a long way toward solving the difficulties which have been experienced to date with respect to various groups and various regions and with respect to the different circumstances under which various types of producers operate, because conditions are very varied in Canada.

I do not underestimate the difficulties in developing this type of legislation. I am sure that anyone with any experience in agriculture realizes that it will be some time before we have dominion-wide crop insurance which will be satisfactory to the great bulk of the agricultural producers in Canada.

I was very pleased to hear the minister speak of the conference held with the provincial ministers and of the decisions arrived at as the result of the experience to date. I think it is necessary that we have close co-operation with the provincial administrators if we want this type of legislation to be successful in the long run. I was interested to note that the minister said that the original 60 per cent coverage would now, as has been suggested, be raised to 80 per cent. I think that is a step in the right direction. I am glad that fruit tree destruction will be covered in future. This has been brought about largely as a result of the experience in the Okanagan where, through quite unprecedented frost, a large number of fruit trees were frozen and the capital investment of the fruit farmers in this respect had to be replaced. I was glad to hear that perennial and other plants will be covered in this new legislation.

The minister mentioned that he had, I think, a few minor amendments to introduce on second reading of the bill. We are looking forward to hearing what those minor amendments are. At any rate, the whole purpose of crop insurance is to reduce the hazards of weather, disease, pests and insects that are faced by all agricultural producers in Canada but by some in greater measure than others. There are certain areas which are, shall I say, high risk areas. There are others where there is very little risk so far as obtaining an adequate crop is concerned.

It might interest you to know, Mr. Chairman, that I have a property where a drop of rain need never fall and yet we have the most bountiful crops. I see the right hon. Leader of the Opposition looking at me speculatively. Let me explain, because it shows how different conditions can be. The ranch is in a valley some eight miles long and about three-quarters of a mile wide. It is covered with a ten foot depth of very fertile black soil which is very productive. The soil is on top of a solid rock basin and the mountains on both sides are between 7,000 and 9,000 feet high. The water in the valley comes from the mountains. Plenty of water comes from the mountains because they have snow on them which melts in the summer months, flows into the valley and down to the basin of rock ten feet below the surface. Then, of course, the moisture rises by capillary action. These are unusual circumstances, and that is why in that valley we only require one acre of land per season to pasture an animal whereas in the prairies 50 or 60 acres of range land are required to do the same thing.

In certain areas, even in the Kootenays, I know that owing to certain local climatic conditions apples produce scab at a much greater rate than in other places. There are so many changes of circumstance and condition with respect to climate and other things that I do not think we should be finally satisfied until we have a crop insurance scheme in which all farmers in Canada are covered. The law of averages ought to be brought into play and crop insurance ought to be envisaged on the basis of a tax.

I shall not say more at this time. We are looking forward to the introduction of the bill. At that time we shall have the opportunity of asking the minister for a further explanation about the administration of the act and about the proposed amendments which have been mentioned and will be before us on second reading.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, the resolution before us is an important one to those engaged in agriculture in every province of Canada. Legislation such as this goes back to the days when the present Leader of the Opposition was prime minister of this country. Under his ministry there was brought into being the first Crop Insurance Act on the statute books of Canada for the benefit of farmers. That act, of necessity, was limited in scope. That was the beginning of legislation which will provide comprehensive coverage to farmers growing a variety of crops in the many provinces of Canada.

The resolution before us providing for amendments to the legislation, coming as it does after the initial experience that we have had with the act over the past few years, is an indication that all legislation should be brought back within a few years after being passed to be amended as experience dictates.

In the grain growing areas of the province of Saskatchewan we have had the Prairie Farm Assistance Act which was a relief measure provided by the government of Canada in co-operation with the farmers and to be used for their benefit. That measure has existed over a long period of years and provides for a system of deductions on a per bushel basis from deliveries of grain to the Canadian Wheat Board. That act has served a very useful purpose in western Canada.

The Crop Insurance Act was brought forward to extend the coverage provided under P.F.A.A. to make available to all who contributed the protection that they sought by making contributions. It is interesting for me, coming from Saskatchewan, to recall the hesitation with which the former administration in our province tried to bring forward crop insurance legislation. The present premier of Saskatchewan now says they have a brand new crop insurance act on a provincial basis. One of the provisions of the federal legislation is designed to increase the maximum contribution payable. I am wondering whether this means an increase in the benefits payable per acre or whether it means an increase in benefits taken as a whole across the nation. I suppose the bill will make this clear.

It is good to see in the resolution before us a reference to compensation for losses incurred when the seeding of land intended for fallow becomes impossible because of excess moisture. In the northeast portion of Saskatchewan many farmers have suffered losses in the past because of this hazard.

I should like to say that though my province has been slow to implement crop insurance plans it is perhaps just as well since it is now possible to build soundly without either the province or the farmers suffering unduly.

There is nothing further I should like to say at this time except to commend the government for the changes it is proposing in this legislation and to express the hope they will be effective in improving the legislation which was introduced some years ago.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Chairman, I should like to draw attention very briefly to what I believe to be a weakness in this legislation to date. I find no particular fault with the way in which the act was drafted; rather, I am finding fault with the administration of the act in the area with which I am familiar.

I am a firm believer in crop insurance. My own area is one which has probably suffered more than many others in the province of Saskatchewan because of frost and wet weather. The cost of farming being what it is today, I am afraid that unless advantage is taken of crop insurance one or two bad years will force many farmers out of business altogether.

In order that there may be greater coverage I would request the Minister of Agriculture in his discussions with the provincial ministers of agriculture to do everything he can to make sure there are sufficient men in the field who will do the advertising and go out and try to get the business, so to speak. In my own area it is impossible for one man assigned to three municipalities to contact all the people concerned. I believe there should be one man in each municipality of township size, and I doubt that even this would be enough to provide proper coverage.

It is only after these men have talked to individual farmers and explained the different rates that farmers realize, for example, that P.F.A.A. payments will not be deducted. These men could also explain that if no claim is made for a few years in succession the premiums would be reduced. Farmers do not know these things and it is therefore necessary, especially in the initial stages, to have more men in the field capable of explaining them.

It is not enough for the minister to say: Here are the amendments; from now on everything will take care of itself. I realize that there is a provincial responsibility here but I should like the minister to bring this point to the attention of his provincial counterparts. If they want to hire a few more men, that is all right with me. If those men happen to be their supporters, that is all right with me. But I do want the minister to try to put across the idea of providing more men to push crop insurance.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, looking back across the years it is a long time, it seems, since we first discussed the possibility of adequate crop insurance. Though some attempts have been made since to provide coverage for those in the agricultural industry, insurance programs are still not adequate to meet the needs of farmers in many areas.

We recognize, of course, that provision of an adequate crop insurance scheme is a difficult proposition. So many different facts enter into it and there are so many different types of commodities to be covered. It is certainly far from easy to evolve a plan capable of meeting every situation.

However, I do not believe this should deter the government from bringing forward its proposals. There are still areas of this country which do not have the benefit of a crop insurance scheme. I know there are producers who cannot avail themselves of the benefits of crop insurance on account of the type of crop they produce, and I believe provision should be made to take care of this situation.

In my own area, the Fraser Valley, we have our own particular problems. Twice within the last few years our berry growers have been faced with tragic losses of stock. In 1955 the strawberry plants were practically wiped out. No provision was made for assistance. Very recently the area suffered a heavy frost which did tremendous harm to stocks. There was no measure under which the growers could receive assistance though they did get help through provincial disaster funds and so on. But there was no over-all plan to take care of such a situation. Definite provision should be made to bring the benefits of crop insurance to all producers, no matter what type of crop they grow.

I say these brief words in support of the principle of the resolution and hoping that the measure will be made applicable to farmers in every area and to the various types of crops they produce.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I am sure it has been very pleasing to the minister to note the extent of the support which this resolution has received from all parts of the chamber and I assure him I do not intend to be an exception. However, there are a couple of questions I would like him to take into consideration and to respond to before the resolution carries. I am thinking particularly of that provision in the resolution which allows for the making of contributions to a province providing insurance coverage against losses arising from the destruction of fruit trees.

I am quite certain no segment of the agricultural economy will welcome this extension of the crop insurance program more than the fruit growing industry, which is particularly vulnerable to the kind of disaster referred to, especially when one considers the fact that in so far as the apple growing industry is concerned it takes some seven years to bring an apple tree into production. The destruction of an orchard of trees therefore represents an enormous loss.

The fruit growing industry is of the greatest importance to areas in my district such as Salmon Arm and the Shuswap valley and, of course, there is the whole Okanagan and the Kootenay area as well. Though welcoming this provision, I wish therefore to ask for specific information whether the province of B.C. has committed itself to participation in such a scheme because I observe that the wording of the resolution reads:

> —to authorize the making of contributions to a province providing insurance coverage against losses arising from the destruction of fruit trees—

Second, I would like to know whether this program of crop insurance will now be applicable to the loss of an individual crop because, of course, there are occasions when the frosts do not destroy the trees but merely destroy one year's crop. Could the minister say if the scheme envisaged will make crop insurance available to the fruit growers of B.C. with respect not only to the destruction of trees but also with respect to the destruction of one year's fruit crop?

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: I have only a few words to say on the introduction of this resolution dealing with the Crop Insurance Act.

First, I must congratulate the minister for taking the initiative of proposing a measure to amend that act. Surly he started out right by consulting, as he did, all the provinces. The job we did on the committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development was useful for the minister in this sense that it helped him draft an act which will finally win the approval of all provinces.

The province of Quebec—it is nobody's secret—did not yet dare undertake such insurance plans. We are always wondering for what reasons. We mentioned in the committee that the main reason was probably the diversity of cultures in Quebec and particularly the removal or the lack of insurance in the case of truck gardening.

Under the old act, truck gardening was not considered insurable. I believe that by adding this clause, the intention is to make insurance available for truck gardening and the main cultures in the province of Quebec. In my opinion, there is no reference to the volume or density of the crop, but simply to each individual farmer's crop.

There were objections because of the rather small volume of certain production classes in the province of Quebec. I do not understand why, when I find, in other provinces, certain classes whose volume is lesser still than in the province of Quebec, the latter would not seek an agreement with the federal government.

I also wish to call the attention of the minister to the fact that the province of Quebec would certainly be interested in a crop insurance which would cover not only damage caused by natural elements, but also damage caused by some artificial elements. Besides natural causes such as hail, frost, drought and parasites, etc., there are also artificial plagues such as we have been visited by for the last two or three years in our areas, specifically, the famous man-made rain.

These damages must absolutely be covered by insurance and, as I pointed out to the committee, in a way that will not be more expensive for the farmers but will have such disasters paid for by those responsible for them; in my area, they are the large lumber operators. These people cut their lumber during the summer and must have constant rain on their forests.

I believe this is a very important point to bring up when the minister undertakes discussions with the Quebec agriculture minister. It is a very important point for the province of Quebec, precisely due to the repeated artificial rains every summer. And I feel I should inform the minister that the pressure is being maintained also on the provincial minister.

Farmers' organizations have already started and I have already received a letter from the Catholic Farmers Union on this matter, asking me to call the minister's particular attention not only to the losses incurred from natural causes, but specifically from such notorious artificial devices which have been wreaking havoc with our agriculture.

I hope that Quebec and all other provinces will reach an agreement on the benefits now being offered under the act, that is 25 per cent of the premium payments and 80 per cent of the losses. I trust the provinces will seriously consider this act and will help increase the working capital of this insurance, so that it will be in a position to render the expected services.

[English]

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I rise to give strong support to this measure because it is going to increase the coverage from 60 per cent to 80 per cent of crop losses and also increase the government's share of payments of premiums from 20 per cent to 25 per cent. Both of these changes are very desirable and necessary.

Such a measure is particularly necessary at a time like this when the farmer's costs are rising and his returns are shrinking every day. The farmer must be assured of a fair return for his crop just as the industrial worker is assured of a fair return for his labour through the efforts of his labour union and through unemployment insurance when by no fault of his own his employment is cut off. As we know, when the industrial worker loses his job through no fault of his own unemployment insurance takes over and he is looked after until it is possible for him to obtain work at a future time. In exactly the same way, when a farmer loses his crop I believe he must be compensated for it adequately through crop insurance.

Crop Insurance Act

I believe the measure before us is going to be a worth-while improvement in the program which at present is in operation. In my own province of Ontario I know that the Ontario Farm Union and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture have been pressing for this kind of legislation. I very much hope that the measure now before us will prove to be sufficiently attractive to the government of Ontario so that it will be induced to participate in what I consider to be indeed a worth-while measure.

Mr. Fulton: Could the minister give a brief answer to the questions I asked?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member knows, the province of British Columbia now has its own crop insurance legislation. When he sees the bill I think he will be satisfied that it makes provision for agreements with regard to both the annual crop and the replacement of the trees, but as I said there is no agreement with the province on these specific points. I believe that when the bill is implemented we will be able to enter into an agreement in this regard.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I have only five or six minutes to discuss some aspects of crop insurance. At the outset I should like to say to the minister that we are in agreement with some of the amendments which we expect to find in the bill following this resolution. First of all, we think a change in the maximum coverage from 60 per cent to 80 per cent is desirable. The minister said there would be some arrangement made with the provinces so that the crop insurance could be calculated on a single farm experience. We will be watching with a great deal of interest how the administration of this works out because I think there has been a lot of pressure on the Department of Agriculture in respect of what they have done under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act in the past.

I should like to say that I appreciate some of the reasons which have been advanced for resisting payment of prairie farm assistance on the basis of a single farm experience. My main reason for participating very briefly in the debate this afternoon is to raise again a question which I have raised a number of times before. Why has the federal Department of Agriculture not used extensively the experience gained under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act over the past 27 years in dealing with payments to farmers who have lost their crops for one reason or another? I would think there must be a wealth of experience among the large number of personnel who have been involved which could be used beneficially in the administration of a crop insurance program. This may be an academic question now because the federal government has entered into agreements with some of the provinces. It seems they are attempting to encourage the provinces to take part in a national crop insurance program.

I am a little apprehensive about what may happen to the prairie farm assistance legislation in the years ahead. If there should be any disposition on the part of the federal Department of Agriculture to withdraw from the prairie farm assistance program before crop insurance is tried successfully to the point where it is working satisfactorily, particularly in the Prairie provinces, I would point out that we must remember that the Prairie Farm Assistance Act has been a very satisfactory means of taking some of the tragedy out of the major crop losses over the past 27 years. If we consider the operation of that act over the period of 27 years I believe we will find that it probably has been one of the cheapest programs in relation to the number of people who have been guaranteed some return. As I say, taking into account the number of years, the number of farmers and the very large area that has been covered, this is no time to be thinking of setting that act aside until we are satisfied that the crop insurance program has developed to the point where it does in fact meet all the objectives which have been laid out.

The reason I mention this matter at this time is that I have heard rumours that there is some idea that in the near future, depending on what is the definition of "near future", the federal government will be encouraging more areas to get into crop insurance so that it can withdraw from the prairie farm assistance program. I think it would be wrong to move too quickly in this regard until we are satisfied that these other provisions are a satisfactory alternative to the provisions of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Greene thereupon moved to introduce Bill No. C-208, to amend the Crop Insurance Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

PROVISION FOR ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT OF SPECIAL AREAS

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry) moved the second reading of and concurrence in the amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. C-151, to provide for the establishment of a fund for the economic and social development of special rural development areas.

Mr. Starr: Would the house leader explain the amendment?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Bill C-151, to provide for the establishment of a fund for the economic and social development of special rural development areas, was considered by the Senate. The Senate amended it by inserting, in the provision which had to do with the requirement that the minister table an annual report in the house, that this should be done not later than six months after termination of the year and, if parliament is not then sitting, within 15 days after it meets.

Motion agreed to, amendment read the second time and concurred in.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

PRIVATE BILLS

CANADA HEALTH AND ACCIDENT ASSURANCE CORPORATION

Mr. A. J. P. Cameron (High Park) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-13, respecting Canada Health and Accident Assurance Corporation.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill S-13 is a bill respecting Canada Health and Accident Assurance Corporation which was incorporated by special act of parliament in 1945 and has its head office in the city of Waterloo in the province of Ontario. At the time of commencement of business the corporation had a small office and employed a staff of four. Since that time the history of the corporation has been one of steady and progressive growth. It is now a healthy and successful organization, having an administrative staff of 95 and selling its policies through 40 active agencies in all provinces of Canada, using the services of over 300 salesmen. The present number of policyholders of the corporation is in excess of 70,000.

At the present time the corporation offers policies of insurance covering all aspects of medical, surgical and time-loss insurance. The acceptance by the public of the services offered by the corporation is indicated by the annual increase in net premium income. In the first year of its operation the corporation had a net premium income of $73,000. This had grown to $1,608,000 by 1950, increased to $2,830,000 by 1955 and to $3,819,000 by 1960. The year end figure for 1965 approaches $6,000,000.

The last report of the Superintendent of Insurance for Canada discloses that Canada Health and Accident Assurance Corporation is the largest Canadian company engaged solely in the field of accident and sickness insurance. The report further discloses that the net premiums written with respect to individual cancellable policies by all-Canadian companies totalled approximately $7,100,000. Of this amount over $4,500,000 was written by Canada Health and Accident Assurance Corporation.

Based on its past experience, the corporation feels that it can now profitably enter into the field of life insurance. At the time the corporation enters into this field it will be more than able to meet the financial requirements as set out by the Department of Insurance. The corporation has been transacting business in the province of Quebec since 1950 and has increased its net premium income from $160,000 to more than $760,000. As Canada is a bilingual country the corporation feels that it should carry on business not only under the English form of its name but also under the French form, namely, La Corporation Canadienne D'Assurances Santé et Accidents.

The corporation also desires to increase its authorized capital stock to $2,000,000, divided into shares of $10 each to satisfy the requirements of the Department of Insurance.

The business of the corporation is presently administered by a board of directors, all of whom are Canadian citizens ordinarily resident in Canada. All shares in the corporation are presently owned by Canadian residents. It is the intention of the corporation to maintain Canadian management and ownership.

The corporation feels that by reason of its past history, progress and development it has indicated its ability to enter successfully into the field of life insurance. The corporation believes that its entry into the life insurance field would afford it greater opportunities to use the Canadian skills and initiative which have given it leadership in its existing fields of endeavour.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cameron) will be pleased that this bill has finally reached the stage of discussion because he expected it would proceed during two or three past private members' hours but on each occasion some unforeseen development prevented that.

It seems to me that this and other similar bills unfortunately have a political flavour attached to them by reason of the manner in which they are handled. I do not say that with any unkindness to the hon. member, but the system operates in such a way that it is always a member on the government side who is selected to channel bills of this sort through the house. Inasmuch as the original directors of this company were from the city of Waterloo, it seems passing strange that one of the members of parliament representing that area was not chosen to sponsor the bill, thereby giving it a more non-political complexion.

I note that almost all private bills of this kind are sponsored by members on the government side. For some reason or other the promoters gravitate toward government members, perhaps with the idea that greater favours will result. That is an incidental and inconsequential point at this time.

Mr. Walker: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Howard: Certainly.

Mr. Walker: If the hon. member will refer to page 28 of today's order paper he will see at first glance that there are at least five bills sponsored by members of parliament not on this side of the house.

Mr. Howard: I was not referring to page 28 but to the general policy. In the past people in various sections of the house have been chosen to sponsor similar bills but the general trend is for promoters to seek sponsors on the government side.

I am sure that the members of this house, particularly those who have advanced the cause of bilingualism, will look favourably upon at least the first part of the bill by which the company seeks authority to do business under both English and French versions of its name. This company has been doing business in the province of Quebec since 1950 but it did not decide until now that it would be worth while to recognize bilingualism. It is only doing so in this instance for profitable purposes rather than as a real recognition of the bilingual nature of this country.

One of the other aspects of this bill which I think is unique is, as the hon. member for High Park has stated, that all the shares of the company at the present time are owned by Canadian residents. That does not mean that they are owned by Canadian citizens but by people who are ordinarily resident in Canada. This is a step which has been taken as a token attempt to give corporations operating in Canada a nationalistic purpose, namely, to have the directors and shareholders comprised as much as possible of people who are ordinarily resident in Canada.

It augurs at least partially well for the company that all its shareholders are resident in Canada, and I take the use of the word "resident" to mean that they are not necessarily all Canadian citizens.

This company reflects to a large degree a success story because only some 20 years ago when it first went into business, as the hon. member for High Park pointed out, it employed only four people. I understand that at the present time it employs an administrative staff of some 95 people as well as 200 or 300 salesmen. To increase the sales and administrative staff from a total of four people to half a thousand in a matter of 20 years reflects a large degree of success. The same applies to the income of the company over the same period of time. I believe that this company started operating in 1945 or 1946 and had a net premium income of some $73,000 but in 1965 its income was close to $6 million. This again reflects the success that can be achieved by companies in the insurance field. It also indicates the incentive of this company is solely to make profit, which undoubtedly applies to other companies in the life insurance field.

I am sure this company does not ask to be incorporated simply because its corporate officers happen to think it is a good thing for Canada. In fact, nowhere in the statement of the hon. member for High Park nor in the introductory remarks of the Senator who introduced this bill in the Senate was there even an intimation of any concern for the public good. I am sure the motivation here is the creation of an extremely profitable venture as has been proved by the success of the company over the last 20 years. The company now seeks to expand this success because it realizes how lucrative is the field of life insurance.

The reasoning advanced by my colleague, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett), on another bill a few weeks ago should serve the house well in considering these matters in the future and should also serve the sponsors of such bills as this because even though they are private bills the companies established under such bills may have a great impact on the economy of Canada. As I have previously said, nowhere in this bill is there any intimation that the good of the country is being taken into consideration in the incorporation of this company.

The only thing this company is saying is that its purpose is to be able to enter into the field of life insurance successfully. It believes that its entry into the life insurance field will afford it greater opportunities to use the Canadian skills and initiative which have given it leadership in its existing fields of endeavour. In other words, the company simply hopes to use the abilities and techniques it has developed over the years to its advantage in the lucrative field of life insurance and the public good can come next, if it is considered at all.

I think that the sponsor of the bill should have considered this aspect and I also think that when this bill is considered in committee of the whole great attention should be given to finding out how the Canada Health and Accident Assurance Corporation will be able to serve the public welfare because this is the basis upon which we should decide to act in this matter.

Here is a company asking parliament to bestow upon it the right to make increasingly greater profits out of the activity of selling life insurance policies. I believe it is simply not good enough to say that the company has been so successful over the past few years, both in terms of increasing staff and increasing profits, that parliament on the basis of that success should give it an opportunity to make even greater profits. I believe we should look a little bit further into the matter.

As I said, this company is asking parliament to set aside consideration of public legislation to deal with its own private affairs. I submit that such matters should be dealt with in another way. We simply cannot continue to deal with these companies by rubberstamping a bill which is presented to us by a sponsor who reads a statement prepared by somebody else. I am not casting any reflections on the hon. member who sponsored this; I am speaking in general of such bills. The statement read by the hon. member for High Park in moving second reading of this bill is almost word for word a repetition of the statement made in the Senate. Maybe the sponsor of the bill will say that he read the statement made in the other place because he thought it was such an overpowering and overwhelming argument that he could not possibly improve it.

This may be true in this case but I have noticed that almost the identical procedure is followed with other private bills. Whatever is said in the Senate is repeated here by the sponsor of the bill. Who knows where the Senator got his information? Presumably he got it from some lawyer in an office in Toronto or Ottawa who is trying to engineer the incorporation of a company. This lawyer is only presenting the favourable aspects of the company. He gives this information to the Senator who reads it into the record of the Senate in substantiation of a bill which he has not really examined at all. In most cases the Senator is only repeating information prepared by a person who is seeking to have a company incorporated. I think this is a one-sided approach. This is what may have happened in this instance especially in view of the fact that the introductory remarks made by the hon member for High Park are almost identical, word for word and comma for comma, with those which were made in the Senate when this bill was considered there on January 23, if my memory serves me correctly.

This is not nearly good enough because it is just a continuation of the old insurance sales pitch. We all know that when an insurance agent comes to sell insurance, whether he works for Canada Health and Accident Assurance Corporation or any other company, he is only going to tell you what is good about the insurance. He is going to tell you how beneficial the insurance policy will be. He does not tell you about the bad parts. He does not tell you about the loopholes, nor does he explain the fine print. He explains how wonderful everything will be if you just buy his insurance policy. This is the sales pitch that is being used here. Someone comes forward and says how wonderful it will be if we just pass this bill. This is one side of the story.

I believe there devolves upon anyone who comes into parliament and advances a particular idea, especially an idea such as this which can have an influence upon millions of Canadians to the extent of millions of dollars, a duty to give us more than a simple recitation of an explanation developed in a lawyer's office. We have to go a little bit further in our examination of this matter. If this bill had not been brought before parliament we would have a different situation. If we could, as I submit we should, send petitions dealing with this particular class of business activity to a public employee who had been given some criteria and authority to issue letters patent for the incorporation of such companies, then I would say that would be a horse of a different colour. If parliament would set up general guideposts and rules and say to applicants, you must meet these standards before you can become incorporated and conduct this type of business in Canada, then we would be dealing with this matter in a different way.

However, that is not the situation. The situation is that the promoters of the Canada Health and Accident Assurance Corporation have selected the hon. member for High Park to advance their cause in this house. So far the only cause he has advanced in connection with the passage of this bill is an indication that its passage would be most helpful to the Canada Health and Accident Assurance Corporation. Nowhere has there been any indication that the passage of this measure would be helpful to the average Canadian citizen. Nowhere is there any indication that the passage of the bill will result in the introduction of any degree of competition, any element of desire on the part of the Canada Health and Accident Assurance Corporation to sell a better class of life insurance, to come up with new ideas or new types of coverage. Nowhere is there any indication that life insurance premiums will be decreased if this company happens to get into the business.

These questions are far too important to be passed over lightly simply because the hon. member who sponsors the bill happens to be a nice fellow. I think he is. I do not have any harsh words for him or his activities in the house. However, we are not legislating here for nice fellows, we are legislating for the Canadian people. Nice fellow as the hon. member for High Park is, I do not believe he is a shareholder in this company and I do not believe he is going to have anything to do with the operation of the company. We cannot, therefore, accept the "nice fellow" approach as being the one which should influence us. We have to look at the company itself. We have to ask ourselves, does it make sense that we should authorize this company to increase its capital from half a million dollars to $2 million? Is it for the good of the Canadian people that the capitalization of this company should be increased fourfold to permit it to engage in a type of insurance business in which it is not engaged at the moment?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must interrupt the hon. member to inform him that his time has expired unless he has unanimous consent of the house to continue beyond his allotted time. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I regret very much to say that I hear negative voices.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite certain whether the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) really desired to extend his remarks beyond the time limit. In any event, I am sure he wants to give me an opportunity to say a few words on the question now before the house. I share the hon. member's personal regard for the genial member for High Park (Mr. Cameron) who is sponsoring this bill. In this connection I am reminded of one occasion when a member of the cabinet felt I had been a bit rough with him during a discussion in the house. He chided me about it after the sitting was over and I said, "Well, of course we all have to perform our parliamentary duties in this chamber as we see them." I am sure that so far as the hon. member for Skeena and I are concerned we are taking this approach to the bill being sponsored by the hon. member for High Park.

Like the member for Skeena, I feel that the question of the advisability of approving the proposals contained in this bill has to be considered as a matter of public policy rather than one concerning only a particular private company. While I am quite aware of the fact that under the rules this period is set aside for bills sponsored by individual members, when I consider the public bills standing in the names of private members, many of which will probably not come up for consideration during this allotted period, I must say that I feel we could be occupying ourselves much more fruitfully than we are. So far as I am concerned, I would much prefer at this time to be considering a proposal which is not on the order paper but which the government in previous sessions has had on the order paper and which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) has stated the government intends to put on the order paper, namely, the bill to set up the Canada Development Corporation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope the hon. member will address his remarks to the bill before the house and not to the proposed legislation to which he has just referred.

Mr. Barnett: That is my intention, Mr. Speaker. I made that remark because I believe this bill and the proposal I have just mentioned deal basically with the same area of public policy. I suggest this bill has to be considered in the light of public policy and in the light of the proposal that Canada Health and Accident Assurance Corporation be allowed to extend its activities into the field of life insurance. In view of these facts I believe we move at once into the whole question of considering by what channels the surplus capital of this company is going to be accumulated and through what channels and under what policies these public accumulations of capital are going to be expended. In brief, Mr. Speaker, that is why I said I would much prefer to be discussing another proposal. I think it has become apparent and should become increasingly apparent to all members of the house that the time is passing when we can any longer allow the main channels and direction of flow of investment funds in this country to rest in the hands of private insurance companies.

It is for this reason that I seriously raise the question of the advisability of allowing in the public interest Canada Health and Accident Assurance Company to expand at this point into the life insurance field. In my view far too much of the accumulations of capital at the present time are in the hands of a multiplicity, all too large in number, of private insurance companies. As I have suggested when considering other bills having to do with the expansion or incorporation of insurance companies, I believe that in allowing this process to continue and expand we are in fact moving in a direction which is against the public interest of the Canadian people.

With reference to this particular proposal I think the sponsor of the bill in his opening remarks advanced some sound reasons why it is not advisable that this company be allowed to add life insurance to its present services. He has indicated to the house that this company has been operating successfully, that at the present time it is carrying a very large section of the total insurance market in the particular fields in which it has been engaging in the past, and that it is a successful company which is operating a profitable business at the present time. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, if for no other, it seems to me that in the light of the existing multiplicity of life insurance companies it is perhaps a bit greedy on the part of this already profitable concern to seek to move into what in my view is a much overcrowded field.

In view of the fact that the bill as proposed indicates that the company intends to operate under its present name, except for the addition of the French language version which was so delicately enunciated by the sponsor in his inimical use of the other language, I think that the situation will be a little puzzling for some people. I have been wondering why the company, if it wishes to expand into this field, did not seek to change its name. Perhaps there may be some obstacles in this connection. If I am not mistaken I believe there is already in existence a Canada Life Assurance Company, and there may have been some question about the desirability of adding the word "Life" to the name. However, in a sense one could claim that because of the retention of the title "Canada Health and Accident Assurance Corporation", so far as the public are concerned, except those who may become aware of this bill through reading the debates of this house in detail, the company is in effect moving into the life insurance field by the back door. I do not know whether that is the intention of the company but none the less, Mr. Speaker, I mention this to add further to my argument as to the desirability of parliament allowing the company to expand into this particular field.

I could go on to expand on the relationship between this company's proposal to enter into the life insurance field and the question of public policy in relation to the accumulation and direction of investment funds. However, in view of some of the proposals which I see are still on the order paper there may be further opportunities for me to make some observations along that line.

As I have said on other occasions, I feel that it is no longer good enough for the sponsors of such bills, as was the case recently and also today through the hon. member for High Park, simply to get up and give us a few facts—I accept that they are facts—about the past operation of a particular company, who its directors are to be and so on and so forth, without in any way attempting to justify to the house that it is in fact in the public interest that a proposal of this kind should be introduced.

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): One word only, Mr. Speaker, first of all to congratulate the "Canada Health and Accident Assurance Corporation" for having, at long last, adopted a French name and fallen in tune with the others in acknowledgement of Canada's bilingualism from sea to sea.

Another reason brings me to my feet. The member who spoke before me said that the multiplicity of insurance companies was becoming a threat in the field of life insurance. We can, I believe, forgive him those words: he reasons like a socialist who would only have state insurance. But we, who stand for democratic principles, cannot admit that argument, because a multiplicity of insurance companies which have, like the one mentioned in this bill especially, the necessary capital to do well in business, plainly brings added assets to our Canadian economy. In a democratic economy, it is normal competition that adds to the standard of living and, especially, to the general credit of the country.

We have always been afraid of state insurance. I am afraid of any state control and I dread also state insurance formed especially to create a single capital in order to have more control on the people. I think this is the sole purpose of the one-way insurance, as can be seen in totalitarian countries. We begin with one-way insurance, and we end up with one-way representation, as can be seen in Russia. Only one candidate is presented: you can vote for or against him, but there is only one.

We are for the principle of free enterprise; we advocate free enterprise and we are happy tonight to support this bill. I will not talk out this bill, because I want it to be passed, so that this company can continue to operate for the best interest of the Canadian economy, competing loyally with other insurance companies regulated by the same legislation. Once again, I congratulate the directors of that company to have recognized the principle of bilingualism in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Ian Grant Wahn (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to prolong the debate on this bill but in fairness to the sponsor I should say a few words to answer the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) who said in effect that the explanatory statement was not sufficiently extensive. Surely it is important for explanatory statements to be accurate rather than unduly long. In this house and particularly during this hour we are often subjected to statements which are unnecessarily long. There is no merit in making extended statements, particularly when they are inaccurate.

The hon. member who introduced this bill made a brief statement. Sometimes it is more difficult to be brief and accurate than to be lengthy and inaccurate. The criticisms by the hon. member for Skeena in my view were uncalled for. The implication he sought to leave with the house was that the hon. member sponsoring the bill had not satisfied himself about certain particulars. I would ask the hon. member for Skeena whether he has independently investigated the matters he raised in order to justify such implications. They are not justified just because the introductory statement in the house was similar to the introductory statement in the other place. Most hon. members know the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cameron) sufficiently well to have confidence that he has satisfied himself about the legitimacy of this company.

Another criticism was that the sponsor of the bill, in the opinion of some hon. members, was reading what had been prepared by someone in a lawyer's office. There is nothing wrong with being a lawyer. The question is not who prepared the statement but is the statement correct and has the sponsor of the bill satisfied himself of the accuracy of that statement? If so, there can be no possible objection to it.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the private members' hour should not be debased but should be reserved for private members' use.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would invite the hon. member for St. Paul's to address himself to the bill before us. I do not know whether he is speaking on a point of order or a question of privilege. I think we might hasten the debate by not straying rather far afield from the subject. I would invite the hon. member to come to the substance of Bill S-13 which we should be considering.

Mr. Wahn: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would be delighted to do that.

Mr. Peters: He has not read the bill.

Mr. Wahn: The point I emphasize is that instead of criticizing this company for its success, as the hon. members for Skeena and Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) have done, it would be much better, as the last speaker pointed out, to congratulate the company for its success. We should also congratulate the company for coming to parliament in order to adopt a French name. The company has been most successful in Quebec. In these circumstances it is natural that it wishes to have a French name. A large number of companies come to parliament to have their names changed. In this case the company ought to be congratulated and complimented for taking this step.

Comments have been made about the substantial increase in the company's authorized capital. Because of the long time it takes to get a private member's bill through the house it is important that a company initially should have substantial authorized capital rather than having to come back later to ask that the capital be increased. If arrangements can be made for bills that are of value to the economy and to Canada to pass through the house reasonably quickly, without unduly extended debate, then I am sure that companies such as this will be glad to come to the house more often to obtain smaller increases in their authorized capital.

Another purpose of the bill is to extend the business to be transacted by the company. Here again the company ought to be applauded for its initiative rather than criticized. It is true that in the past the company, as I assume from its name, has been in the health and accident insurance business. The life insurance business is different from the health and accident insurance business. Life insurance companies take deposits from the public. This is the important difference between life insurance and other insurance companies. It is therefore most important that the same principles should apply to life insurance companies that apply to other financial institutions such as banks.

I was delighted to learn from the introductory statement made by the sponsor of the bill that the shareholders and the directors of the company are Canadian and that the company will continue to be Canadian. It is easy for a company to have Canadian shareholders in its early stages. There is no guarantee that when such a company becomes larger and expands its business it will not be taken over by some foreign owned corporation. I was delighted to hear not only that the company is Canadian but that it intends to remain so. I hope this company shows the same initiative in expanding its life insurance business that it showed previously in expanding its health and accident insurance business. I particularly hope that the company gets into the field of the so-called variable annuity, that is to say, into the issuance of life insurance annuities with built-in protection against increases in the cost of living. With continuing inflation this has become most important and I think this company should take steps to include such insurance in its coverage.

I am sure we are all anxious that this bill should pass this evening so I shall not continue my remarks further but simply repeat that this company should be complimented and congratulated rather than criticized for its initiative in seeking these changes in its incorporating act.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member for High Park speaks now he will close the debate. The hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I did not have any intention of speaking on this bill today but in this game of chess it appears to be inevitable that I should and I shall not disappoint anybody.

I was interested in the comments made this evening. They are not unlike comments which have been made in the past. In the case of the last speaker sour grapes are, of course, hard to take anyway. It would seem that this bill, like others of its kind, has been introduced in the normal way. The application has been prepared by a lawyer or agent and an hon. member is sponsoring the measure in this house in keeping with what the rules demand. There can be no resentment on this score about these things being done in the way they are, but it would appear to me that some other manner of presentation would be advantageous, one which would eliminate the responsibility an hon. member now has to take when proposing such measures to the house. We have set up a Department of Insurance and it seems inevitable that in the very near future this department should have power to make the changes which are being sought in a much more satisfactory way than we can hope to do as members of parliament.

The measure before us indicates that the company was set up under a bill passed by parliament in 1945 with a capitalization of $500,000. I agree with the sponsor that the company has done very well. It has been able to expand its business from the town of Waterloo across the province and into the province of Quebec as well. Thus the need for the change in name has arisen. According to the remarks of the sponsor the company appears capable of doing business without changing its name as a result of parliamentary action. It is not too difficult to pronounce the name in English. It is also true that a literal translation could be made which would serve all purposes except those involving legal documents which would have to correspond with the terms of the original act.

There seems little point in bringing a special bill before parliament. Consider the abuses which are possible as a result of this process. I am not suggesting that this is true of the particular company we are considering. But if this company were to come before parliament wishing to provide gangster accident insurance for members of the Mafia only, it would be easy for it to do so under the present system unless some hon. member took a special interest in the proceedings.

We are really not competent to go into the details of this bill. I am not familiar with the process by which sponsors are chosen. It could be by lot or by some other means. But it would seem to me that if a sponsor undertakes to sponsor a bill he must take responsibility for it. This raises in my mind the question of how far he should go.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to interrupt the hon. member to remind him that we have before us a specific bill dealing with a specific act. The tangent upon which he has embarked is procedural in nature. It certainly has nothing to do with the principle of the bill before us and I would invite the hon. member to return to the subject matter of the measure.

Mr. Peters: I agree entirely that what we are really talking about is the French version of the name of the company and, second, the increase in the capital stock.

Mr. Speaker: I did not suggest that to the hon. member. On second reading we are dealing with the principle of the bill, not with the details. It is the principle which is to be considered now.

Mr. Peters: Then it is a principle which covers the whole gamut of insurance because it relates to the three main branches of insurance, sickness, personal accident, and life insurance. In addition to the type of insurance it is providing the company we are considering now seeks to provide life insurance. I believe this raises the general question of insurance. I had not intended to go so far. I was trying to remain within the limits set by the sponsor himself when he drew attention to certain of the operations of this company and implied that this was a Canadian-owned company and that the members of the board of directors were Canadians. I need hardly say that being Canadian and being resident in Canada are not the same thing. There is also the fact that money does not appear to have any boundaries. I notice, Mr. Speaker, that it is seven o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: It being seven o'clock, the hour for private members' business has expired. The house will now revert to the consideration of the business which was interrupted at six o'clock.

HEALTH RESOURCES FUND

ASSISTANCE TO PROVINCES FOR HEALTH TRAINING AND RESEARCH FACILITIES

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-199, to provide for the establishment of a health resources fund to assist provinces in the acquisition, construction and renovation of health training facilities and research institutions.

He said: Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of hon. members I should like to deal with some of the details of the bill which incorporates the matters referred to in my statement of June 14 when I described the original proposals made last July by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), and which were the subject of subsequent meetings with provincial ministers of health.

It will be recalled that I referred to certain conclusions which had been reached by the conference of ministers in regard to these matters, and I should like to assure the house that the government has been guided by these agreed conclusions in drafting the bill which is before us this evening. Under the bill a special account, to be known as the health resources fund, will be established in the consolidated revenue fund and a sum of $500 million will be credited to that account. It is provided that the payments may be made retroactively to January 1 of this year, and not later than the end of 1980, a 15 year period in all.

The $500 million figure was not an amount taken out of the hat. As I pointed out in my opening statement on June 14, departmental officers visited the provinces prior to the Prime Minister's announcement of the size of the fund, in an effort to ascertain approximate needs as foreseen by provincial governments. We all recognized that such estimates were approximate and subject to considerable refinement, but they gave us at least some clue as to foreseeable requirements.

It was never envisaged that the health resources fund would provide payment in full for the projects coming within the ambit of the bill. In fact when the conference of ministers discussed this aspect of the fund, it was recommended that the contribution of the federal government from the fund should not exceed 50 per cent of reasonable costs of any project. Thus, when we speak of projects to be established with the assistance of the fund, we are not speaking of projects totalling $500 million in cost but of projects of approximately $1,000 million.

While the federal moneys payable in accordance with the health resources fund bill will not exceed one half of the total cost, there is no requirement that the other half must be matched by a provincial government. In fact, health resources funds may be available for up to half the cost of a project, even if the provincial government itself makes no direct contribution. For example, if a private foundation were prepared to finance half the cost of an eligible project, health resources funds would still be available if the project otherwise qualified.

It will be noted that in order to have consideration given to a contribution from the fund, an application must be made to the Minister of National Health and Welfare by the government of a province. As members are aware, under our constitution health training facilities come within the jurisdiction of the provinces. Thus, despite the very substantial contributions which will be made by the federal government, it is considered essential to preserve provincial sovereignty in this area by giving consideration only to those projects put forward by and through provincial authorities. The federal government will not accept projects directly from any individual university, hospital, or establishment for the conducting of research in the health field.

The bill stipulates that no payment may be authorized to be made unless the province making the application has developed a provincial plan covering a five year period. This provision is to ensure that individual projects will not be haphazard but rather will fit into a planned, orderly provincial scheme. Not unnaturally, the bill also requires that the provincial government shall provide the minister with necessary information and make available records and other data concerning the cost of the facilities for which assistance is to be provided.

It will be noted that provision is also made in the bill for joint applications on a regional basis in connection with the Atlantic provinces. The concept of regionalization is particularly applicable where small provinces are concerned. It is reasonable to expect that in some instances, though certainly not in all instances, the provinces concerned may themselves decide to set up a single health training facility to meet the general needs of the region.

The four provinces specifically mentioned in this regard in the bill decided to proceed with such projects on this basis. It will be for these provinces to decide jointly the types of projects for which this regional approach will be used.

Health Resources Fund

The Atlantic provinces received particular attention from the conference of ministers because of the extraordinary needs of that region for health training facilities and the relative lack of fiscal capability to provide these facilities. It was unanimously agreed by the minister of health of all the provinces to recommend to the federal government that a sum of $25 million be set aside for the Atlantic provinces in connection with such projects. This is over and above what the Atlantic provinces are entitled to under the per capita formula.

With regard to the rest of the health resources fund it will be noted that more than half, that is, $300 million, will be allocated on a per capita basis to the provinces, while the remaining $175 million will be available in amounts which may be allocated from time to time by the Governor in Council.

The suggestion that this subdivision in the total remaining funds be made came from the conference of ministers of health. It was based on the belief that, while provincial governments clearly were in need of support for health training facilities within the borders of their own provinces, health training facilities, generally of a highly specialized nature, were also needed to serve purposes beyond the borders of a single province. But of greater importance was the consideration that unallocated funds would still be available when needs were more clearly defined for projects which might be developed later in the life of the fund.

Having regard to these considerations, the conference of ministers recommended that the bulk of the funds should be divided into two parts: first, on a per capita basis to meet purely provincial needs, and the second, to assist in meeting the costs of health training and research facilities designed to meet national needs.

I do not propose to go into extensive detail at this time concerning the method of actually calculating the costs of acquiring, constructing or renovating any building, except to point out the type of costs which will not be included. The health resources fund will not include the cost of land, any amount paid or payable as interest, or any amount paid or payable by the federal government under other arrangements.

It will also be noted that residential accommodation may not be supported out of the health resources fund. This also was a conclusion arrived at by the conference of health ministers, but I might mention that such accommodation may be supportable under other federal programs.

Because the health resources fund is, as described in the preamble, intended to assist provinces in the acquisition, construction and renovation of facilities, the question will inevitably arise as to the problem of operating costs. These costs are, of course, not included in this statute, which is designed solely for the purpose of providing capital funds. Nevertheless the government recognizes that the provision of buildings designed for certain purposes will not serve the ends for which the assistance was given unless it is possible to operate these facilities. The problem of such operational costs, however, is one which will of necessity require to be dealt with apart from the question of capital costs.

One of the problems inherent in the provision of operating funds in relation to teaching and educational establishments is the extent to which such funds are interrelated with those designed specifically for education in its broadest sense, including health. This area will still have to be examined by all governments, in collaboration with universities, with a view to reaching some workable solutions.

I believe it is particularly important to note one specific inclusion; the costs of basic equipment necessary for the operation of the health training facility. Obviously such equipment is an essential part of such a facility, without which it would not serve the purpose for which it was designed. Reliance will have to be placed, to a considerable extent, on professional opinion with regard to what, in fact, constitutes this basic equipment.

Reliance on professional opinion will, of course, also be necessary in determining whether the health training facility is of a type which meets the general definition set out in the act, having regard to the purposes of the fund.

Members will be interested to learn of the outstanding co-operation we have had already from the Association of Canadian Medical Colleges, which has given us the benefit of their wise counsel in our efforts to define such elusive facilities as "teaching hospitals", for example. It is my hope and anticipation that we shall be able to continue to have the co-operation which we were so generously given in our early deliberations by such professional bodies as the Canadian Medical Association, the Canadian Nurses Association and the Canadian Hospital Association.

During the last number of weeks I have had a considerable number of requests from other professional associations, as well, all of which have expressed keen interest in participating in the work to be associated with the health resources fund, and requesting representation on the advisory committee, for which provision is also made in the act.

It will be noted that the act makes provision for a health resources advisory committee consisting of 11 members, one to be appointed by each of the provinces under the chairmanship of the deputy minister of national health. The composition of this advisory committee was discussed by the conference of ministers, which gave consideration to the possibility of including professional associations. However, the conference was of the opinion that the committee should be established as set out in the act. At the same time, it was recommended that it should be empowered, as it is so empowered, to establish special committees. These committees would undoubtedly include representatives of professional associations and specialists in relevant fields. The government accepted the recommendation of the conference of ministers in this regard.

Mr. Speaker, I have attempted to give a brief outline of the main points in the bill. It is not a long bill and is relatively simple. Of course, in the clause by clause discussion of the bill I will be pleased to deal with any specific matters that are raised by hon. members.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, we have listened with some interest to the minister's dissertation in respect of what this $500 million will cover and what it will do. Very briefly I should like to deal with three points. First of all, I should like to ask the minister whether it is proposed that the government, through the National Research Council, will take over all the research? I think this is very important. I feel the government should take over the whole fiscal control of national research. I do not see how the provinces adequately could undertake national research projects. They simply have not the funds.

I should like to go into this a little further and say that last year we spent about $9 million on research and covered only 65 per cent of our projects. Of the number of applicants who applied, 115 were turned down. This simply is not good enough. It seems pretty ridiculous that when the United States is spending $1 billion on research we are spending just under $10 million. How can we expect to halt the brain drain that is going on.

In the last report made by the late Dr. Farquharson in 1964 he said that research was woefully weak and falling behind all the time both in buildings and equipment. One of the last appeals he made was that this should be stepped up in an effort to stop the brain drain to the United States. I also should like to state that if we operated on the same basis as the United States, we would have to spend ten times as much, or $100 million. I realize, as does everybody now, that you cannot do this overnight; this is a continuous building-up process which must be programmed. However, until today we have dragged our feet. We are very short on medical personnel; we are short on teachers; we are short on medical schools and we are away down on our research.

Each year during the last five years we have been losing well over 500 doctors a year. When we can spend $10 million for the National Film Board, it seems a bit ridiculous that we cannot spend more than $10 million on research. This simply has to be stepped up. There is no point in building up a health resources fund unless you do this, because you will not get anywhere without research. You will not get competent teachers or staff all the way down.

I should like for a minute to dwell on what the minister had to say about this $500 million over 15 years. I do not know the situation in all the provinces, but I imagine they have similar problems. As I understand it, in the province of Ontario the committee is going to spend $300 million in the next six years and over a 10 year period $500 million. Here, Mr. Minister, you are bringing in a health resources fund in an amount of only $500 million. The provincial government is putting that amount into buildings alone, over ten years. I am not talking about personnel. This is the reason I think the government is away down in its approach to this problem. I do not think you will cover 40 per cent of what is required. This does not include teaching personnel in Ontario but only to plans for the construction of buildings. The minister said nothing whatever about replacement and the putting in of equipment which today is mighty important.

This is a very serious drawback in view of the development of heart-lung machines, kidney machines, pacemakers and artificial hearts over the last 10 years—and this is only the start. This type of equipment is being developed and improved every day and it is very expensive. If we are not going to make provisions for the purchase and use of these developments, if we are not going to provide money for research and for training doctors then we are not going to be successful in this program. It is doomed to failure and will destroy the esprit de corps of the medical profession.

In relation to the lack of personnel in the medical field, let me point out that four of our major Canadian medical schools are looking seriously at the shortages in their teachers and in funds for equipment for student training. This is facing them now. The situation is becoming serious. Every province must have similar plans in so far as construction of hospital facilities is concerned. The province of Ontario estimates that it will spend $500 million in the next ten year period by way of capital construction costs—as much as the federal government pumps in 15 years.

The minister said that if private individuals decided to invest in the construction of medical facilities the government would go along on a 50-50 basis. I hope the minister is not suggesting that programs of this type will be taken out of provincial control. If the provinces have not as yet gone along with that idea, how is the federal government going to do so? I hope that he will give us some indication as to how he plans to accomplish his ideas when he speaks again.

The minister made a serious error of judgment in referring to medicare plans. He suggested that a medicare plan would be brought into existence next year, but how can he when he has made little or no plans to alleviate the critical shortage of doctors. Does the minister not think he is cheating the people by promising a medical program which cannot be effective because of the lack of services available, particularly when he considers that premiums will be deducted, and taxes will be collected? I remember other occasions when the public was filched because someone else rushed ahead with plans that could not be put into effect. I am not suggesting the government is going ahead too fast with a medical services program, but it should have before this time instituted a crash program in our medical schools in order to train the necessary personnel.

I can never understand why in the world our medical schools are closed during the summer when we are so short of doctors. That was not the case during the war, when we were much better off as far as medical personnel were concerned. We have not graduated many doctors per year more than we did following the war years, in spite of the fact that our population has increased by 25 per cent in the same 10 years. Does the minister not think that a crash training program is vital to the success of any national medical services plan? I hope he will discuss this serious situation with the provincial ministers of health in order to find some solution. We have the facilities and the teachers and I think we should go along with the suggestion that medical schools be kept open all year. We certainly will not have enough doctors to carry out this program unless we bring them from England or Europe. I understand that will be difficult because in at least some hospitals in England the staffs have come from outside England.

In conclusion let me say I will discuss some situations at a later stage because I think it is vital that we find solutions to these problems which are inherent in such a national medical plan.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the health resources fund legislation is, in the opinion of the members of this party, of tremendous importance. I do not think its importance has been fully appreciated by the house, if one can judge by the interest that was taken in the debate on the resolution which preceded this bill. Nor do I think its importance has been fully realized by the government, if one can judge by the length of time it has taken to bring down the legislation or by the amount of money which is being provided by it. I do not like to use an old hackneyed phrase, but the fact is the legislation has been brought down too late and the amount of money provided is too little.

The importance of this legislation lies in the fact that this is the basis upon which a successful medicare program can be built. I am not one who thinks that we must wait until every facility is available and all the technicians and professional people have been trained before adopting a medicare plan. The fact does remain, however, that medicare in this country will place a tremendous strain upon our facilities and available personnel.

I had some experience in setting up the first hospital insurance plan in Canada—as a matter of fact, the first on this continent —which came into effect in the province of Saskatchewan on January 1, 1947. For two and a half years we had a crash program for the construction of hospitals. When we could not construct new hospitals we converted old airport and army buildings into temporary hospitals. We also had a crash program for training nurses, x-ray and laboratory technicians, because it was quite apparent that the moment hospital insurance came into effect the number who would apply for hospital care would increase. It was also apparent that once hospital insurance became effective the number of people sent to hospitals by physicians would increase, and that unless we were prepared to handle this increase, which we estimated at 25 per cent, congestion in hospitals would develop.

All these statistics in respect of hospital admissions which had been projected turned out to be reasonably accurate. We estimated that the increase would amount to approximately 26 per cent and my recollection is that in two years it was actually 26½ per cent. We estimated that this increase would level off and gradually decline as we caught up with the backlog, and as better pre-operational care was provided, cutting down the length of hospital stay. These projections also proved to be accurate.

We had to make sure that when health insurance in any form came into effect facilities and personnel were available. I remember discussing this matter with Mr. Aneurin Bevan, who established the British health services plan. He told me that they had the same experience, that one could expect in the initial stages a marked increase in demand for services, and that unless we were ready to provide these services we would experience great congestion. There is bound to be some congestion with the very best of medical plans in the initial stages, but that congestion can be ameliorated somewhat by a crash program to provide facilities and trained personnel.

To my mind the tremendous importance of the legislation which is now before the house lies in the fact that the effectiveness of medicare will largely depend upon the legislation which I hope the house will pass very shortly. It will also depend upon the aggressiveness with which the federal Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) and the provincial ministers of health make use of the funds provided, so that when medicare is implemented in Canada the people who expect to get those services will be able to avail themselves of them. Nothing would give medicare a greater black eye than for us after July 1, 1967, to say that medical services of all types were available to the people of any given province, and then for those individuals who required medical care to find there were no adequate facilities or sufficient personnel to give them the care to which by law they were entitled, and to which they had contributed financially. Therefore it is of tremendous importance that this program to increase facilities and training and to make available personnel be pushed forward with all possible speed. That is why I said that I think the legislation has been much too late in coming.

It is now two years since the publication of the Hall Commission report. That commission recommended that within six months of receiving the report the government should convene a federal provincial conference and immediately begin to plan the expansion of health facilities and the training of health personnel so that when medicare became a fact it would be an effective program which would make available to the people of this country the services which they were led to expect. I can see no reason why this legislation which is before us now could not have been here a year ago. It is inconceivable to me that one year has not been sufficient for the government to digest this report, to consult with the provinces and to place before the house legislation of the nature which is before us at this time. Instead of that, two years have gone by. If the government keeps its commitment of setting up medicare in Canada by July 1, 1967, the provinces will be left with not more than 12 months to get ready for one of the greatest health experiments ever attempted on the North American continent. As a matter of fact, in some cases the provinces may still have to wait for their provincial legislatures to meet this fall and give them the necessary authorization and financial resources to co-operate in this program.

I am concerned about how the provinces will be able in 12 months to do the job that has to be done. It may be that some of the provinces have anticipated this situation and have already outlined plans and begun programs. I certainly hope they have, because under no circumstances do I want to see any delay in implementing medicare. I want to see it start on July 1, 1967. I can think of no finer centennial project for Canada than that on the anniversary of our 100th birthday we will make medical services available to every citizen of Canada, irrespective of who he is and irrespective of his financial ability to pay. But it will not be easy to do it when the provinces and the various educational institutions have such a short time to meet the heavy demands which will be laid upon them.

I will not belabour the point; it is not much use crying over spilled milk. But I do want to say to the government that I fear the 12 months delay may be very costly, and the congestion which may take place in some provinces when medicare is first set up will be due in no small measure to the fact that this legislation was so late in coming before parliament.

Not only do I think it is late in getting here, but I must say to the minister that I think the amount of money provided is pitifully inadequate.

I know that $500 million sounds like a very large sum of money, but spread over 15 years it comes to an average of some $33 million a year and in my opinion this sum will not begin to carry out the program which was suggested by the Hall Commission. As a matter of fact, on the basis of the information the minister has just given us, that $175 million will be set aside to be spent as the governor in council decides, and $25 million will be set aside for the Atlantic provinces —with which I thoroughly agree—this leaves some $300 million to be spent on the regular run-of-the-mill program which, if you spread it over 15 years, comes to about $20 million a year.

Now let us look at what has to be done. I just want to mention a few of the things which the Hall Commission pointed out will be absolutely imperative if we are to provide the Canadian people with the services they are entitled to expect, once medicare becomes a fact in Canada. First of all they point out that we will need a program to build six new university medical schools as well as expanding the existing medical schools. They point out that by 1971 we will require an additional 7,100 trained doctors. This will necessitate a tremendous program of training, and the construction of six new university medical schools and the expansion of existing ones will require very large sums of money.

Nothing in the educational field today is as costly as the building of medical schools, because of the equipment and the highly technical apparatus now required in medical schools. The expense is fantastic, and there is no use training doctors unless we are going to give them the very best kind of medical training available, not only because they need it but also because the Canadian people deserve it.

The report of the Hall Commission says that we will also have to build four dental schools and that by 1971 we will have to add 2,130 newly trained dentists to those who are now practising that profession in Canada. Probably one of the biggest tasks will be the job of building 10 new university nursing schools to train the 42,000 additional nurses who will be needed by 1971 if this program is going to provide the services which the Canadian people will expect from it.

Now, in addition to the medical schools, dental schools and university nursing schools, there are suggestions for local services which will be required, particularly in the rural areas. Suggestions have been made for medicine depots, nursing stations and, very important in a large country like Canada with a sparse population, an air ambulance service. I am sure the minister will agree with the position taken by the Hall Commission, that people in the isolated areas and in rural districts of Canada have a right to expect the same high standard of medical care as will be enjoyed by people in the metropolitan areas. They cannot get that unless there are facilities, first of all, to provide them with emergency care by local medical depots and nursing stations, and then an air ambulance to take them to the large medical centres where they may get the very best of medical and surgical care available.

After all, it is not possible to have a highly trained doctor or group of doctors and surgeons in every community. However, the very least we can do is see that people in isolated communities can be flown quickly and inexpensively to a place where there is a team of medical experts to provide them with the very best surgical and medical care. This is going to cost money, and it is going to cost a great deal of money. I do not believe this $20 million a year will cover the cost.

Then, there is the whole question of allied health services which will have to be provided under medicare and for which we have nothing like a sufficient number of trained personnel. I am referring to x-ray technicians, lab technicians, physiotherapists and all the allied technicians that have now become an integral part of the practice of good medicine. Finally, as has been mentioned by the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Rynard), the fundamental stimulant for any good medical program is medical research. This country must be prepared to spend very large sums of money, first in building medical research facilities and then in the actual research itself.

When the members of this party speak of medicare, Mr. Speaker, we are not just concerned with transferring the payments from the patient to a government agency. That is only a part of the value of medicare. The other great value of medicare is that it can make possible a much better quality of medical care; it can provide opportunities for group practice. It can provide opportunities for doctors to take refresher courses. It can provide opportunities for research and the transmission of the results of that research to the practising professions. If medicare is going to be what we hope it will be, and give to the people of Canada the health services they need, without any financial obstacle standing between them and the members of the health profession, then it will also have to be a program which will give the people the very best kind of health services.

My conviction is that when medicare becomes fully operative in this country it will finally reach the stage where the major emphasis will be on the practice of preventive medicine. The real aim of a medical care program is not just to get people well after they are sick, but to keep them from getting sick by developing clinics, group practice and by establishing a close relationship between patients and doctors. When this condition prevails, the average family can go regularly to the family physician and, if they require it, be referred to specialists to help them keep in good health. This procedure makes possible the diagnosis and early identification of diseases that could later prove serious or even fatal.

I just cannot believe, Mr. Speaker, that the sums of money the minister has been talking about this evening will be anywhere nearly adequate to carry out the vast program that needs to be undertaken. I hope the minister will tell us, either when he concludes this debate or in the committee of the whole, whether these sums of money are to be paid out to the provinces on an annual basis, provided they qualify for them, or whether the federal government will match the projects completed in the provinces on a 50-50 basis, without any regard to the annual allocations. If the $300 million is to be held down to $20 million a year, and if the $175 million which is set aside for special projects is to be allocated on an annual basis, then I suggest to the minister that in my opinion the goals that have been set by the Hall Commission as to the number of doctors, dentists, nurses and allied health services personnel which will be required by 1971 will not be reached.

I hope the minister will say to the universities, medical schools, dental schools and nursing schools, "This is the goal we have for 1971 and you can proceed as fast as you want. If you complete it in two or three years, if you complete it before 1971, we will meet half the costs on the basis of the terms laid down in this legislation." The worst thing that could happen would be for the government each year to dole out this money in annual allocations, and then tell a province or university that has started out with great enthusiasm, "We are very sorry, but we have used up the allocation for this year; you will have to be paid out of next year's allocation."

That would slow down the whole program. As a matter of fact, this $500 million can, in my opinion, be spent over the next five or seven years—never mind 15 years. As a matter of fact, it will have to be spent over a much shorter period than 15 years if it is going to do the job which has to be done. Otherwise we will have a medicare program which will be hampered and hamstrung from the very beginning, owing to a lack of facilities and personnel.

I want to express my complete support for the position taken by the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Rynard), who said that what the situation calls for is a crash program. I think that not only the federal government but the provincial governments will have to show the kind of imagination and drive that characterizes a real emergency. If we must have, as the Hall Commission suggests, 7,100 more doctors trained in the next five years, then we may have to change the techniques and make it possible for medical schools to operate 11 months in the year. We may have to pay bursaries to medical students, and make provision for students allowances. Instead of having to go out and work in the summer months this might enable the students to study throughout the entire year.

We did this sort of thing during the war. We trained doctors because they were needed for the armed services. Many of those doctors are still practising today. I think it would be a brave and somewhat imprudent individual who would suggest that they were not well trained, merely because the courses they undertook were crash courses. We trained many fine doctors, dentists and psychiatrists as a result of those programs which were instituted during the war.

Mr. Speaker, we are just not going to get the doctors, dentists, trained nurses, x-ray and laboratory technicians and the physiotherapists we need if we simply follow the same routine course. We must make it possible for bright and promising young people to leave behind them the normal channels of university entrance, attending university for six or seven months and then working for four months or so, and we must enable them to go into crash courses, with the federal and provincial governments paying their funds and providing their training, as well as giving them a decent living while they take their courses, so that they will be trained as quickly as possible.

I am sure that if we put that kind of challenge to the young people of this country we will get a response. There are thousands of young people in Canada who would like to go into the health profession. In many cases they lack the opportunity and they lack the necessary funds. Everyone knows that one of the most expensive university courses is a medical course. This makes it difficult for all kinds of young people who come from families of modest means to become doctors, dentists or psychiatrists. But if the federal and provincial governments are prepared to embark upon a crash program, the necessary personnel would be available when medicare comes into operation. They will certainly be available when the flood tide has reached its crest. If we start medicare on July 1, 1967 it will reach its crest in 1968 and 1969, the period when there will be the greatest demand. By 1971 it should be starting to level off a bit.

I hope that the minister will not consider that I am harping on some of the defects which I think exist in the government's program. I think that the minister deserves a good deal of commendation for the persistence and aggressiveness he has shown in pursuing this matter since he assumed the portfolio of National Health and Welfare. I can assure him that we in this party are thoroughly behind him as he presses on with this matter.

Let me also tell him that in our opinion he ought not to be dissuaded from proceeding with medicare on July 1, 1967 because of the problems that will undoubtedly face both him and the provincial governments with reference to provision of facilities and personnel. I am sorry that we did not start making plans sooner; but the fact that we did not start sooner ought not to be made an excuse for delaying the implementation of medicare.

I am sure that all of us have had the experience that, once we have started a program, the pressure of events compels us to move at an accelerated rate to do what has to be done. If we wait until we are absolutely sure that everything is ready before we launch medicare, then we will never start it. Therefore I urge the minister not to delay the setting up of a medicare scheme because of the difficulty of supplying the required facilities and personnel.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, I would point out to him that the best way to make medicare work and the best way to save both himself and the provincial ministers of health a lot of headaches is to make sure that crash programs are devised within the next few weeks, that they are put into operation this fall, and that the money which is being made available by this legislation will be given to the provinces, not on an annual allocation basis at all, but made available to the provinces just as fast as they are able to complete the projects they want to undertake.

I feel sure, Mr. Speaker, that if that course is followed, and if the government is prepared to set up crash training programs, then the minister will get the support of the people of the country, the support of the young people who want to train for the health professions, and I think he will get the support of most of the ministers of health. If he gets that support and if he implements a medicare plan, I am convinced he will be taking one of the great forward steps in the social history of Canada. The minister will have won for himself a place of distinction in the country by having helped to launch a program that will be of inestimable value, not only to the people of our day and generation but to Canadians for all time to come.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I want to say only a few words at this stage of the debate. It seems this is the only time when it will be possible for me to refer to one of the clauses in the bill which takes into account certain provisions in two other clauses of the bill. I am sure Your Honour will realize that after we move into committee stage we will be more or less confined to each clause as it comes up.

I should like to say, however, Mr. Speaker, that we in this party do not believe that the only reason for setting up a health resources fund is to make sure that a national medicare plan is successfully implemented. I say that, Mr. Speaker, because I believe there is an acute, almost critical shortage of trained personnel in most of the health services, and these additions to staff and to the professional groups particularly are required, whether or not we have a national medicare plan on July 1, 1967, or some time later.

While I agree with many of the arguments advanced by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), I cannot accept the suggestion that this bill is predicated upon our being prepared for medicare by July 1, 1967. Unless the government has changed some of the requirements advanced several months ago about certain plans that the provinces already had begun, with respect to medical services, I do not think there is any reasonable possibility that a national medical care plan will be operative in all provinces of Canada.

First, some provinces do not now have any type of medical care plan. Second, those provinces administering such plans which they think are reasonably good are not disposed to making adjustments to their medicare plans to meet the conditions laid down by the federal government. I think, when we realize that medical services are almost exclusively within provincial jurisdiction under our constitution, the opinions and decisions of at least three provinces should be given careful consideration. That would apply in connection with this measure. The federal government should be ready to negotiate with those provinces, in order to bring their thinking into line with that of the majority of provinces.

It would be unfair for the federal government in an effort to have the plan universal and compulsory to insist on some conditions, thereby forcing the provinces to make adjustments they did not believe were in their best interests.

My main purpose in participating in the debate at this stage is because clause 7 of the bill before us says:

> No payment shall be authorized by the Minister pursuant to section 4 or 5 unless the government of the province making the application has
> (a) submitted to the minister, and the advisory committee has approved, a program for the development of health training facilities in that province—

And so on.

I should like the minister to explain in greater detail, if he will, at the conclusion of this part of the debate exactly what is meant by those words. Otherwise we shall have difficulty when we get to the committee stage, as we shall be going through one clause at a time; and as clause 7 of the bill refers directly to sections 4 and 5, it seems appropriate for the minister to give this part of the bill—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member, but I wonder if there is much wisdom in the suggestion he is now making. I take the liberty of reminding him that at this stage we should be considering only the principle of the bill, and I am afraid it would be out of order to discuss the individual clauses of the bill.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, when I rose to take part in this debate I tried to express to Mr. Deputy Speaker, who was in the chair at that time, that it would be difficult for me to raise this matter respecting clause 7 when we were considering clauses 4 and 5, because clause 7 would not be before us. Yet, clause 7 directly refers to the provisions of "section 4 or 5". That is why I wanted to bring up this matter now. I was apprehensive as to whether Your Honour would allow me to talk about clause 7 when we had reached, say, clause 4 in the committee stage.

Perhaps without referring directly to the clause I could explain to the minister that I am concerned about that part of the principle of the bill which would categorically forbid the minister and the advisory committee to advance funds for any program, unless beforehand the plans for such program had been presented to the minister and to the advisory committee. The reason I raise my point is that a number of provinces have programs for the extension of medical schools and other facilities already under way.

It seems to me that if that part of the bill to which I have referred stands as it is, it would prevent the federal government's participation in the expansion of building programs and other facilities included in existing programs. That would be so because the province had not submitted its plan to the minister and to the advisory committee before that plan was begun.

If you go on reading, the bill says:

—in respect of which a contribution is requested is included in that program;

The hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Rynard) and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) have advanced persuasive arguments that there is need for an immediate expansion in facilities to train the personnel we need. I think one of the easiest and most economical ways of meeting this immediate need would be for some of the provinces to expand programs already under way, in order to accommodate additional students. This would give the needed results perhaps most economically.

Yet I am apprehensive about the wording of the bill, when it says that the minister or the advisory committee would be prevented from entertaining the consideration of making contributions to programs that were already under way, because the bill says that approval must be obtained prior to the program's getting under way.

Many provinces may have recognized the need to build new facilities that were beyond their financial resources. Now, with the federal government coming along with a program that will provide in aggregate some 500 million over the next 15 years, the provinces would be willing to extend the sizes of buildings, whether or not the facilities were included in the program already under way.

Perhaps the minister will give us an assurance that the buildings and other facilities which will need to be constructed need not be confined to completely new proposals in order to qualify.

I am a little concerned about what is meant by a "crash program". It seems to me pressure on the construction industry in Canada is such that any crash program for the building of medical training schools and so on would not give us the best return for the money invested. In Alberta recently we have seen bids for the construction of schools not altogether dissimilar from those which would need to be built under this program—bids which are as much as 30 per cent above the estimate of the architects. So as far as building is concerned, a crash program would probably aggravate the situation still further; we must have regard for the value we are likely to receive in return for our investment.

I agree with previous speakers that if the government intends to pay out the $300 millions on an annual basis of $20 millions each year, it is proceeding along the wrong lines. No doubt some provinces will wish to undertake the building of a medical school or training college the cost of which would account for their entire share of the fund. Some arrangement should be made under which provinces which have programs under way could complete them without having to wait for one-fifteenth of their share each year over the entire period. I have in mind particularly the proposal for a new medical training school at the university in Calgary. It would be wrong, I think, to hold back completion of this project until 1980. This may be done through arrangements which differ from those set out in the bill now before us. But I want to suggest that one province could perhaps receive a larger proportion of the fund each year by agreement between the federal minister of health and the other provinces as to which of the new facilities would receive priority. Each province could wait its turn and all the projects could be completed during the 15-year period. I do not think the provinces should proceed only to the extent of a certain percentage of the total each year.

I trust my remarks have not been out of order in this attempt to get an explanation of how these three related clauses will operate. I trust the minister can give us some explanation of what is meant by the provisions of clause 7 in order that we may have this information before we pass clauses 4 and 5 in committee.

Mr. Joseph Macaluso (Hamilton West): At the outset I should like to congratulate the Minister of National Health and Welfare upon the introduction of this measure. It may be said that it is easy for a supporter of the government to do this; but, as the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) stated, the minister is to be commended for his persistence in adhering to the date set for the medicare program and for the establishment of a health resources fund to assist the universities and the hospitals to train staff for medicare and for general purposes throughout the country. I compliment him and I hope the members will agree to pass the bill after scrutinizing it. I have some questions to ask about it myself and I intend to raise them when we come to the clause by clause study of the measure.

May I refer to the brief called Medical Research in Canada—An Analysis of Immediate and Future Needs, which was presented to the government back in January. This is a comprehensive presentation drawing attention to the problems we face today in this field. Incidentally, I am happy to see among the endorsers of this report three eminent doctors, all of McMaster University in Hamilton—J. R. Evans, Principal, College of Health Sciences; W. B. Spaulding, Associate Dean, Faculty of Medicine; and W. J. Walsh, Assistant Dean, Faculty of Medicine.

It is not possible to separate medical research from the university training of scientists, doctors and medical teachers. The message of this brief is clear and simple: Unless support for medical research is increased beyond the level we now envisage, Canadian medical schools will deteriorate and so will the quality of health care provided to the Canadian people.

Not only has the quality of medical care and research work failed to keep pace with that of other highly developed countries but we are also falling behind on a quantitative basis. Today in Canada we have one doctor for every 870 citizens. Twenty countries in the world have a better ratio than this. In order to maintain our present ratio we have to register 1,300 new doctors every year. Our Canadian medical university schools turn out only 850 annually and we are holding our own by bringing in doctors from other countries at the rate of 450 a year, as the report states.

I realize the minister is not dealing with operational costs at the present time. However, the report says that federal government grants for operating expenses of medical research must reach a minimum of $80 millions annually by 1970. The present annual figure is $15 millions. The comparable figure in the United States is $1.3 billions a year. This illustrates how far behind we have fallen in medical research in this country. It will readily be understood why we are losing some of our best medical scientists to the United States. Indeed, this is one of our principal problems.

I agree with many hon. members that federal assistance in this field is of national importance. This question of medical standards has to be considered nationally; unless this is done we shall fall still further behind. I believe the establishment of a health resources fund is one step toward improving a situation which has been allowed to deteriorate.

Unless we are able to provide sufficient funds we shall not be able to catch up at the pace we would like, and will continue to fall behind. I must agree with other hon. members that the $500 million is not going to be sufficient, especially since only $300 million will be distributed for construction grants and capital grants to universities over a 15 year period.

We lag in scientific research in all fields. I believe, as these doctors say in their brief, that we must give priority to medical research on the grounds that the nation's health is at stake and the demands of the medical profession simply cannot be met at the present scale of our medical research. In their brief the doctors estimate that as many as one third of our Canadian medical schools do not meet U.S. standards. The summary of their brief states this:

> Medical research is essential to the provision of high standards of medical education, health services and health care. This fact must be recognized in any programs aimed at broadening health services and raising health care standards in Canada.

We learn from this brief that it takes eight to ten years to plan, build and recruit staff for a new medical school, and a further eight to ten years for its graduates to become trained teacher-scientists to staff other new schools. It also states that this has serious implications for possible future emigration of physicians from Canada to the United States.

At present in the city of Hamilton, McMaster University, after some local problems of land acquisition have been settled, is planning to proceed with a modern complex costing $100 million, to be built by 1980, with the $40 million core of the project to be commenced almost immediately, containing a 400 bed hospital, research units and facilities for allied sciences, all forming part of the modern concept of a research centre and training hospital.

McMaster University is today leading in medical isotope research, with the aid of the nuclear reactor it has on campus, and the provincial government has approved this new $100 million complex. It is a vital necessity, and the Hall commission report has referred to it. In fact the description "crash" could be applied to the project itself. What can we do with $300 million when it is realized that here is one new medical research complex that is going to cost $100 million, and this without the acquisition of land required for future expansion?

When a medical school is being constructed and land has to be acquired for that purpose, why should not the cost of that land be included in the over-all cost of construction? Where a university has sufficient land on campus to satisfy its needs, then that is a different matter, but in this instance McMaster University has to acquire land, and that should be taken into consideration. I would ask the minister to consider this matter.

I realize that the provinces have to be consulted, but again I repeat that land acquisition costs should be included in the over-all cost. Under this bill we are simply talking about capital construction costs. There still remain to be provided laboratories and their equipment and facilities. The sum of $300 million is not going to be sufficient, especially when one considers the present crash program being undertaken with respect to medical schools by the province of Ontario. We have a need for money to provide scientists, medical teachers, doctors and physicians to meet the requirements of our expanding population.

But the over-all situation augurs well, and I compliment the government and the minister upon introducing this legislation. It is a first step, and once the plan is approved the government should consult with provincial health ministers with a view to increasing the amount of money in the fund to take care of crash programs, such as the one I have mentioned in connection with McMaster University.

I use McMaster as an example, not because it is situated in Hamilton or because it is expanding its present medical facilities, as is the case with the University of Western Ontario and McGill. This is a case where a completely new complex is being constructed, and when it is completed Ontario will have one of the finest medical complexes on the North American continent.

Unless the federal government is prepared to contribute immediately sufficient funds for this complex the full burden is going to be placed on the provincial government. Providing 50 per cent of the capital cost is quite a contribution, but $300 million is not going to be sufficient to provide the medical research facilities which are required, particularly if one takes into consideration the brief which has been presented to the government.

I do not intend to speak at length about this new complex at McMaster University, but I should point out that it will include not only the 400 bed hospital but also provision for allied sciences, such as a department of life sciences, a department of psychology, a department of rehabilitation, a diagnostic and treatment centre for out-patients, a school of dentistry, and a family practice centre to be added in the future, something of an innovation in Canada whereby doctors will be allowed to have their offices on campus and have the various laboratories and research facilities available to them.

In the modern concept of medical education there should be an integrated campus covering all the allied sciences such as biochemistry and full laboratory facilities to cover everything else, as well as a nursing school and all other facilities. Mr. Speaker, I keep emphasizing the need for sufficient money to build modern medical complexes. Today we have a serious shortage of medical scientists and teachers in Canada. The government is to be commended on the fact that over a year and a half ago it made a substantial grant to the University of British Columbia for medical research facilities. But that was only a start; we have to move ahead. I agree with other hon. members on the need for a crash program.

Although provinces have jurisdiction over education in medical schools, I personally would have liked to see provision in this bill whereby moneys could be payable directly to a university, once the province has approved the complex that is to be constructed. However, since that is not the case I think it should be made clear that capital cost grants alone are not the answer. Operating costs are very important. Over a long term they become more substantial than the capital costs.

So although, as the minister stated, he is not dealing with that at this time, I do sincerely wish to bring to his attention again that the cost of the land is a factor when a university or a hospital has to acquire land to build, which is the case I understand in connection with this medical complex at McMaster University. Our universities and hospitals have a major part to play in the planning and development of medical research in Canada. As we move along in this field I think we must look even more closely at what financial aid the federal government is going to undertake in respect of medical schools and medical research facilities, because the important thing is the federal government still is the prime mover with regard to a national medical standard. Unless the federal government takes on this burden then we are going to fall back further and further. We cannot allow that to happen, and I do not think it will happen. I believe the government has taken the right step.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) stated it is a year too late. However, I am sure that as a former provincial premier he realizes the number of discussions which have taken place on the matter of federal-provincial co-operation. That, however, is a minor matter. The provinces do have responsibility, but I submit that the federal government has a great responsibility in the matter of national medical standards. I sincerely hope that once approved by this house the plan will move forward to fruition and the government will see its way clear to supplement this $300 million in order to allow a university such as McMaster, which is building a new medical complex, to move ahead as fast as possible, so that it will not be delayed through lack of funds from either the federal or provincial government.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this measure which will provide $500 million for the establishment of a health resources fund to assist the provinces in the acquisition, construction and renovation of health training facilities and research institutions. I think this is a good measure. I feel sure it will receive the support of the house, because we in Canada badly need the greatly increased facilities which will be provided by the use of this money, in the training of more doctors, dentists, nurses, and technicians. This will make possible the operation of the greatly expanded health insurance programs which will be coming into existence here in Canada in the months and years ahead.

The only fault which I can find with this measure is that I believe the $500 million which will be provided over the next 15 years is going to turn out to be completely inadequate. Over a 15 year period this averages out to a yearly expenditure of only $33 million a year. As the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Rynard) pointed out when he spoke on this measure when it was first introduced, last year nearly 800 doctors left Canada for the United States. These are doctors which this country urgently needs.

If we are going to provide by 1971 the more than 7,000 additional doctors, over and above those we have been regularly training year by year in the past, to make it possible for these health insurance programs to operate successfully, we cannot allow anything like 800 doctors a year to leave this country; they must remain here to take part in our giant program which, as the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) said, is going to be one of the greatest health insurance experiments ever undertaken.

As the hon. member for Simcoe East has pointed out, it cost about $25,000 to train a doctor. When you lose 800 of them you have lost some $20 million in one year. The lifetime earnings of these doctors would be about $400 million. That is a catastrophic loss for a country, in terms of dollars, in addition to the loss of these doctors who are vitally needed for the essential operation of our health insurance program of the future. I am advised by senior men in the medical and dental professions, persons who are high up in their associations in Canada, that the main reason for our loss of doctors and dentists to other countries, particularly the United States, is not only the higher salaries paid there in the various institutions, but rather—and I would say this is almost the complete reason—that in the United States they have vastly improved research facilities in which these scientists can work and develop their theories and practices. This, I am advised, is the principal reason these brilliant young doctors and dentists go to the United States to practise.

If we do not make available here in Canada the additional research facilities which are needed, not only for our own use, but in order to retain these young scientists we train each year, then we are going to continue to lose large numbers of doctors and dentists year after year. This is a catastrophic loss to our medical services, services which our people are going to need, and also an almost unbelievable dollar loss, because we have spent a great deal of money training these men who take their skills to another country.

I have been advised by senior men in the medical and dental professions who are in a position to know, that in order to catch up with our lack of the necessary research facilities we should be spending now and for a number of years to come at least $100 million a year to provide the type of research facilities this country needs. I do not believe the provinces can afford to spend the money necessary to provide these research facilities in co-operation with the federal government, because they have to spend a great deal of the money they have available on additional hospitals and the other facilities which are needed, such as additional training facilities for their doctors, dentists, nurses and technicians. They simply are not going to have available the money to provide the additional research facilities which are needed.

I urge the minister to consider seriously having the federal government shoulder the whole research load and make available to the provinces the necessary funds so that their research effort can proceed in the manner which is necessary. I believe we are going to have to spend not $500 million in the next 15 years, but at least $500 million in the next five years, or three times the amount of money that is called for in this measure.

I agree with the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam when he mentions the need for a crash program to create the additional doctors, dentists, nurses and technicians who will be needed to make our vastly increased medical plans for the future operate successfully. As has been pointed out in the Hall report, in the next five years we will need 7,100 additional doctors, over and above those we have been training year by year, and an additional 2,100, I believe, additional dentists over and above those we have been training in the past. In addition we are going to have to train a great number of nurses and technicians to keep up with the needs which exist in their particular fields. During wartime we paid our young men and women on a year-round basis and trained them in a minimum time to do the jobs for which they were needed. We must consider our future medical needs on the same basis, in view of the plans we are going to put into operation. We must train our medical personnel in the same way as we trained our military personnel in wartime.

During the past war I and many other Canadians took the war command and staff course, which normally required two years, in 16 weeks, or one sixth of the normal time. I am informed that the course we took was a more full, up to date, and demanding course than the one spread over two years during peacetime. This is the kind of thing we must do today in respect of medical personnel. Those in training to become doctors, dentists, nurses and technicians must be paid and trained on a 12-month-per-year basis, by using the facilities we have available continuously, instead of on an eight or seven month basis, as we do at the present time.

We must not allow our training facilities to remain idle during the summer months while students go to work to earn enough money to continue their studies. We must pay these students on a full time basis and utilize the facilities in the same way. By doing so we would automatically add an additional third to the number of trained personnel we have without adding one brick or girder to our facilities. I strongly urge the minister to give very serious consideration to this proposal.

Finally I should like to speak about another problem with which we are faced today, even before embarking on this imaginative and greatly extended medical aid program. We must attract doctors and dentists to rural areas and then persuade them to stay and follow their professions in those areas. As in any other profession, the medical profession is built around our doctors, dentists and technicians, and some incentive must be provided to induce medical personnel to practice in rural areas, particularly in view of the greatly increased demand which will follow the establishment of any medicare program. I ask the minister to consider seriously the possibility of providing incentives to doctors and dentists to remain in these rural areas, compensating them in some way for the difficulties they experience because of the lack of hospitals and research facilities normally available in urban areas. Something must be done to make sure that in the future we have an adequate number of first class doctors and dentists in our rural areas, so that the medical and dental services we can make available under the medical services plan will be equitable no matter where people live.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the principle and purpose of this bill, and I concur in the criticisms that have been levelled in so far as the suggestion it does not go far enough to meet our immediate situation in respect of health services. I support the proposal that has been made to increase expenditures for the training of doctors, for research and for the construction of buildings and the purchase of equipment. All these things are required in order successfully to provide adequate national medical service.

There is no need for me to repeat the arguments that have been so well advanced by previous speakers but I rise to emphasize one particular angle and to bring it to the attention of the minister. I do so because I am particularly interested in local participation in government sponsored plans wherever possible.

I come from a community that has done a great deal as a result of local effort and sacrifice. I might say that I have had some experience with the recruitment of doctors. I was one of a committee of three who recruited our first doctor, who was a gentleman who had lost his licence in Ontario. Fifty five years ago we persuaded him to come to our community and we promised him the job as bartender of the local saloon as a foundation for his security. He practised medicine for very small fees, sometimes just for a chicken, vegetables or whatever he might have needed. We made one other stipulation: He had to play the organ in the village church on Sunday night.

I may say that we were very glad he got his licence back when he joined the army in company with the hon. member for Kootenay West. In times of war the authorities overlooked past records. I have also had experience with hospital administration, and I helped to establish the first hospital in our district. I was the director of that hospital for 22 years and the president for several years, and I know what it is to establish and run a hospital in the backwoods as the result of local community effort.

We did establish a hospital in that area and we have a hospital today. This is a community with less than 1,000 people and the hospital is valued at something over $22,000. It has excellent bed services, x-ray equipment and modern operating facilities. Only the very serious cases in that area have to be taken a distance of approximately 100 miles to a larger centre. I pay tribute to the doctors and nurses who have worked in this hospital throughout the years. All of this was done as a result of local participation, local effort and, in many cases, local sacrifice.

When we have government sponsored programs, particularly in respect of health insurance or medicare plans, there is a tendency for local participation and interest to decline. I have seen this happen in recent years. I simply rise at this time to bring this fact to the attention of the minister, because it is unfortunate when we do not have continued interest and participation in communities in support of local hospitals.

In connection with this program I urge the minister that everything be done to promote local interest and participation through a good public relations approach, and possibly as a result of the provision of information to local hospital boards in communities throughout the country. I am speaking from my lengthy experience in a small community, but I think the same applies to the towns and larger centres.

I will say this, Mr. Speaker, that people are not as happy today in the affluent society in Canada as they were in the pioneer days. You will ask why. Because many of them have no purpose in living and no direct interest in the society around them. The more local participation we can get in all these projects, the more successful they will be. I simply rise to bring this to the minister's attention. In view of the fact that possibly he has a somewhat similar background to mine, although probably on a more affluent level—anyway he has had similar experiences to mine—I do hope he will duly consider this aspect of the problem and get local people to co-operate with the provincial authorities and the federal government in securing for this development of health services in Canada the success it should have with our human and natural resources.

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): I should like to say a few words regarding the proposed Bill C-199. I must say I feel a bit like Oliver Twist in asking for more, in concert with so many others who have risen in the house tonight. The old cliché that politics makes strange bedfellows became, or is about to become a truism, when I find myself in the position of agreeing with the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) on matters dealing with medicare. However, I hasten to qualify this by saying that I agree with his observations but not with his optimism. I agree that first of all there is a great need for medical facilities in this stepped-up program. I use the word "stepped-up" because the word "crash" has been overdone and it has overtones which perhaps in my profession are not always considered laudable. A stepped-up program is very necessary before medicare as proposed by the government can be brought in.

The hon. member mentioned 21 days. It seems to me that this is unreasoned optimism, in view of the fact that the guide line of 60 days on which the government operated previously has fallen by the wayside quite recently. I believe, as other speakers have said, that this program should have started a long time ago. In 1964 the medical profession approached the minister of health of that time with proposals for the type of fund which is before the house today. I support the principle of a health resources fund but, as I have said before, I do not believe this legislation is sufficient and I believe that some very important aspects have been left out. The fact that nowhere in the bill can we find any reference to assistance in the operating costs of these institutions that will be provided is, I believe, a very serious defect. In the letter which was presented to the conference of health ministers in September of last year, the Canadian Medical Association pointed this out. This is also pointed out in a brief prepared this year by the Association of Canadian Medical Colleges. On page 9 of this brief which was prepared by J. F. McCreary, M.D., president of the Association of Canadian Medical Colleges, this is said:

> The Royal Commission on Health Services recommended strengthening and expansion of Canadian medical schools through funds provided by federal sources—the health professions university grant. Although the health resources fund has been announced to assist with the construction and expansion of training schools for the health professions, no similar arrangement has been made for increased operational support of medical schools.

There is no provision in this bill to take care of this serious problem of operating costs.

Much has been said about the need for various types of personnel. Reference has already been made by other hon. members to the need for dental and paramedical personnel. As is stated in volume 2 of the report of the Royal Commission on Health Services, tremendous strides must be made in the training of personnel in the paramedical field. This would include physiotherapists and personnel in other related endeavours.

This bill points out the necessity of constructing buildings and providing them with equipment. Is this enough? I do not believe it is. You can build a barn but if you do not have cows to put in it you cannot set up a dairy business. I do not believe that by simply constructing buildings and placing wonderful equipment in them you will automatically provide better medical care and will automatically get people to staff these buildings.

As has been pointed out by the Canadian Medical Association in the brief at a conference to which I have referred previously:

> It is currently observable that certain institutions already built are unable to be used to their full potential because of the lack of trained personnel to operate them. Bricks and mortar are important but the supply of personnel is equally important.

There is laboratory space now available in Canada and not being used. I have already mentioned in this house that in my home city of Saskatoon the University Hospital, which is a very modern hospital, last summer had to close some of its wards which were waiting for patients because there was no personnel available to staff those wards. Am I to understand that if another building is put up alongside the University Hospital there will automatically be enough personnel as soon as the crash program is started? I do not think so. I believe that if this bill does not provide for an increase in personnel, another bill should be drafted which will provide the incentives mentioned by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees), incentives not only for those living in rural areas but to bring back to this country and keep here the type of medical personnel that we will need.

I do not think it is good enough to say that as it is the responsibility of the provinces to look after health and welfare it is they who should come up with a plan. I think it is up to the government to give leadership in this field. If the government is to commit itself to a plan of medical care for all of Canada, then they should be committed to making sure that sufficient personnel is available.

Now we come to the matter of priorities. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam said that we need this program immediately and that it should have the highest priority, and I agree with him. However, I wonder whether the minister agrees with this. I have here a speech made by the minister to the annual meeting of the Canadian Dental Association held in the Nova Scotian Hotel in Halifax on June 15, 1966. I actually read it.

Mr. MacEachen: What a surprise.

Mr. Brand: It will be a surprise to the minister when I have finished, I am sure. It is said in the brief:

> The first phase of the program will concentrate on bringing adequate medical services within the reach of all the population, regardless of their financial status.

This is not quite sufficient.

I wish to quote from page 3 of the speech where he says:

> The Hall Commission did not contemplate that all its recommendations should, or indeed could, be put into effect at once. As a government we have the responsibility of determining the priorities —which gaps should be closed first and which programs would provide the greatest good for the greatest number of people without imposing an undue burden on the economy. We decided that two major first steps were needed: to ensure that Canadians had access to the best possible medical care, when they need it and without regard to their ability to pay, and secondly to help ensure that the country has the facilities and personnel to provide these services on a universal basis.

• (9:00 p.m.)

The minister went on to say this:

> These are the minimum first steps which must be taken in bringing health care of the highest calibre within the reach of all Canadians.

The minister still has not said which comes first. Then, he says this:

> But, we have, I hope made it clear that comprehensive physicians' services are the initial minimum.

There is no suggestion here about the provision of the personnel to operate the scheme. He wants to introduce the scheme first and then worry about the other later. Perhaps this bill, good as it is but still inadequate, is the minister's answer, I do not know. Does he honestly believe that the introduction of a scheme at this late date will allow him to provide the services to operate it? Interestingly enough, since the minister was speaking to a group of dentists, he goes on to discuss dental care and its relationship to the Hall Commission report. On page 4 of the speech, we find this:

> Preliminary studies within my department indicate that the provision of dental services to only 5 per cent more of the Canadian population by 1975 will require additional treatment facilities equivalent to a thousand more dentists. If even this modest goal is to be achieved, the time available for further consideration must be severely limited and the training of whatever type of additional personnel may be required must be initiated on a significant scale as soon as possible.

Then the minister goes on to suggest—and this will interest you—that it will be 20 years before they can introduce dental care. An immediate start must be made on training personnel. But what is he saying now? It is suggested that a medical care program be introduced immediately. Never in my life have I read such absolute nonsense. I will not mention how many doctors we are going to need in the next few years, because those statistics have already been given. I leave it up to you to calculate the percentages we are going to be mentioning in the next few years.

There is another aspect mentioned in the Royal Commission report on health services which is not touched in this bill. The subject of research has been referred to by many speakers. Is it only a shortage of facilities again? I ask, is there any provision going to be made for more money for research? Provide the funds to conduct research in depth, and you will attract people. Let me read from page 111 of the Hall Commission report, volume II:

> The deficiency in the field of health research is not so much the shortage of funds to provide qualified research workers with the support they require, although there is a shortage of such funds, but a shortage of qualified research personnel. This may be due to a loss of staff to the United States—

We have already shown that part of the problem results from this fact.

> —but is more clearly associated with the failure to develop a national manpower policy for the expansion of the supply of Canadian-trained physicians and dentists.

This national manpower policy with regard to physicians, dentists, nurses and so on, is of very high importance in connection with this matter before the house tonight. The commission goes on to say once again that the problem is essentially one of expanding the supply of research personnel, more than the provision of funds, and they use dentistry research as an example.

These are just a few of the matters to which I wanted to refer this evening. I think they are the important ones. I should like to see the government give earnest consideration to the provision of incentives to bring back many of the scientists who have left our country, many of the trained teachers. I suggest part of this incentive might be monetary, because if you ask some of these people why they are in the United States they will tell you that the salary difference is one attraction. The type of research they are doing is also a consideration. The facilities are good, I will go along with that, but we need more. They are not enough, by themselves. I should like to see this done as soon as possible.

The Gundy report, as it is called, points out the need for a tremendous amount of money to be put into medical research in Canada. They make the point that, not by providing people, not by providing medical care, are you going to have sufficient trained personnel for medical research. I believe the minister is in this group of optimists because he said the other day, as reported in Hansard at page 6377:

> Such a program will undoubtedly help to create a professional climate which will attract increasing numbers of able people to the study and practice of medicine and related professions, and will thereby improve still further the quality of care available to our people.

Well said, sir, but what does it mean? It means nothing unless you are willing to do what has to be done to provide the type of incentive for people to engage in medical research. You will attract them by giving them funds and this, I am sure, will benefit the people of Canada not only today but in the future.

I think probably I have said enough at this moment, and I see the minister is agreeing. I should like to refer to just a few newspaper headlines to bolster my opinions. "Medical inequalities would need millions", and that is from the Montreal Star. The Star Phoenix carries this headline, "Medical research crisis". I do not like to read from newpapers because I think they sometimes have a tendency to try to tell us how to run the house, but I should like to read this reference to the Gundy report:

> Specifically, the report calls for $150 million for new buildings and equipment in the next five years—

The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) referred to this figure.

> —and $100 million a year by 1970 to staff and operate medical research projects.

I will be generous; I will use four years, and say we need $400 million for research funds. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, we have before us a bill providing for the establishment of a health resources fund to assist provinces in the acquisition, construction and renovation of health training facilities and research institutions. The purpose of this bill is to attract an increasing number of competent persons to the study and practice of medicine and medical support occupations.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is, in my opinion, another indirect interference in the field of education connected, in the spirit of this bill, to medical training. The new Quebec government is opposed to such an interference on the part of the central government. That is why I suggest, in order to prevent conflicts and tensions prejudicial to the country and to national unity, to postpone the passing of this bill, so as to allow the new Quebec government to look into it and meet the central authorities in order to agree on terms and conditions.

Anyhow, this attitude of the province of Quebec is not new. During the last federal-provincial conference, the minister of health, Mr. Kierans, speaking on behalf of the province of Quebec of three essential conditions for co-operation in a field as ticklish as this said:

> The creation of this fund is acceptable on three conditions.
> First of all, money must be granted per capita; secondly, the Quebec government will be the only one having authority to ask and receive money from the fund; thirdly, the Quebec government itself will decide upon its use.

Mr. Speaker, according to the bill the central government reserves the right to distribute at its discretion, and by order in council, a great part that is $125 million of the fund of $500 million. Well, Mr. Speaker, the Quebec government, prior to June 5, 1966, and the new government, are absolutely opposed to this arbitrary way in which the central government will distribute, at its own discretion, a substantial part of this fund intended for health training facilities.

That is another example and even if I am one of the few who speak in that spirit in the house, I will do it until my term expires. Even if sometimes that attitude might bring a smile to the lips of the government members from the province of Quebec, we will see in the years to come who will have the opportunity to smile in this house and who will be wearing slippers at home after the next federal election.

Those problems, Mr. Speaker, must not be solved unilaterally, with that attitude, which I would call indifference and even arrogance towards the opinion of certain provinces and that of the province of Quebec, of always carrying the initiatives of the central government into exclusively provincial fields of jurisdiction.

Personally, when I observe the present government interfering in all the fields of Canadian activity, I cannot see any further reasons for having a Canadian constitution in this country and talking about a federative system in Canada. We have gone beyond that, following all those activities in the manifold details of Canadian life. The needs are great and several hon. members explained airily, with a great display of knowledge, that in the field of medical training and research the needs are urgent and necessary. I agree that those needs exist and that the central government takes an interest in those problems and needs, but according to the Canadian constitution and under a federative system, it is not all justified to interfere in those problems, to engage in the game of "one-upmanship" with the provinces, to keep the larger share of the fiscal cake in Canada and to prevent the provinces from assuming their own responsibilities.

Are the provinces considered mentally retarded in that particular field since we are talking about health? What competence does the present government give the provinces, what intelligence does it grant to the administrators of the ten provincial governments? In the last few weeks or even months, we have had the impression that the present Liberal government is not giving credit for any intelligence to the administrators of the ten provincial governments, does not have enough confidence in them to allow those people to assume their responsibilities. It will be said that such and such a province did not assume a particular field of responsibility, did not take any initiative; it is very easy to understand because the central government, pretexting wars and economic crises, collected all the revenue from taxes in Canada and refuses to give back to the provinces their share of the taxation field.

How could the provinces, British Columbia, Nova Scotia or any other, including Quebec, have enough money to establish these very Health Resources Funds intended for training facilities, when the central government, like Scrooge, like a jealous and all-powerful Croesus, is keeping in its treasury three quarters of Canadian tax revenue? There lies the problem. It is regrettable, Mr. Speaker, that members from the province of Quebec, fully aware of the views and aspirations of their fellow-citizens and of their province rise only to flatter their government. I predict that, some day, they will be appointed ministers, parliamentary secretaries, or sent on marvelous journeys around the world. But they are not fulfilling the mandate entrusted by the Fathers of our Canadian Confederation to us all legislators, until we amend the Constitution, and calling upon us to respect the principles of federalism and the responsibilities of the central government as well as of the provincial governments.

I am not surprised to see some members opposite smiling, or laughing their heads off. I know that people in some quarters are not giving a rap about the aspirations of certain Canadians and of a certain province; but they may realize later on that by keeping the lid on Canadian federalism, and striving towards a unitary system, they will bring about severe conflicts in Canada and the responsible ones will be the very people who kept their eyes shut or who, ostrich-like, stuck their heads in the sand.

I have here the text of the 1867 Constitution, and I dare any member in the house, as well as the hon. minister, to tell me under what provision of the Canadian Constitution, which will remain in force until we amend it, the central government has the right to interfere in the field constituting the substance of this bill.

On the contrary, the object of this bill comes under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces as, in 1867, all local, regional, civil, professional, social and educational questions were assigned exclusively to the provinces, under a stipulated compact, within a confederative pact. And neither a province nor the central government has the right to change the agreements accepted at that time, in order to meddle in various fields.

Here is an opportunity for centralization rampant in Ottawa. And it is nothing new. For instance in 1919, Ottawa began to meddle in the health field, in social questions, by the passing of an act to contribute to the fight against venereal diseases and to create a public health department, although health and the social field belong to the provinces.

In 1942, Ottawa went even farther into the social and educational field of vocational training. In 1944, it set up the Department of National Health and Welfare. In 1948, it adopted a national program of health and hygiene by providing 13 subsidies. And today, it forges ahead in medical training, adding to the increasing centralization of powers and taxation in Canada which has been the only cause of dissension and misunderstanding between Canadians from Halifax to Vancouver.

Here again this evening we have another example of what is referred to, in fashionable circles, as co-operative federalism, that milk-and-water creation; instead of following the dictates and fundamental principles of true federalism, the main principles of which were included in our Canadian constitution, people talk of co-operative federalism to excuse the trespassing, the meddling in exclusively provincial spheres of jurisdiction. We are told that the central government will reach agreements and co-operate with the provinces, and so, we will solve the country's problems. But see how this is done, Mr. Speaker. The central government, moved by a spirit of arrogance and domination, penetrates unilaterally, in a given field, without the ultimate and complete consent of the provinces, or at least that of Quebec, invades a given field, and having moved in, tells the provinces: See, that is what we can do. And out of the funds it distributes, it can allot $175 million, if it so wishes, by order in council, and as it sees fit, to a field of provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker, newspapermen and public figures were right in saying that this co-operative federalism is just another excuse to justify more unrestrained centralization of powers and authority for the benefit of the federal government and that this amounts to centralization by agreement. It is nothing else, Mr. Speaker. Ottawa trespasses in an area outside its jurisdiction and when it is installed, it plays the liberal, the generous, the debonaire; the central government even plays Santa Claus by making offers right and left to the provinces and saying: Here, we have the money, because we have decided to give you this and that.

Mr. Speaker, here is another bill that will increase the mistrust and misunderstanding between Canadians and in spite of the rumblings I can hear, I challenge their authors to rise, even with the sarcastic smile showing on their faces, to show me in the constitution of Canada, the legality of this bill which is precisely contrary not only to the letter, but to the very spirit of the Canadian constitution.

I know that my own solitary intervention may be unilateral, but this will not prevent both sides of the house from maintaining this centralizing regime because it is based not only on rights but on needs. But, if within six months to a year, fundamental pressures or conflicts unfortunately occur—that would be cruel for the country—the responsibility for such tensions and conflicts will not rest with the province of Quebec but with those who, indifferent and all-powerful, take upon themselves powers that are not theirs and invade tax fields which belong to the other level of government.

[Mr. Allard.]

That is why we, various members from both sides of the house, have been asking, ever since the session began three months ago—I see some of them at their desks, others in the lobbies—in all good faith and fully aware of the implications, because of the problems which have developed in our country and of the new problems which have cropped up and did not exist in 1867, for the establishment of a joint parliamentary committee to enable us, legislators of the Canadian parliament, since we are just as intelligent as the Fathers of Confederation who, in 1867, settled the problems of their time, to solve them now together, within the framework established to that effect, rather than in the unilateral manner being followed by the present central government.

We are asking for a parliamentary committee on the constitution in order that senators and members of this house may sit here and define fairly, according to changing times and problems, a constitution within a true federalism, taking into account the disagreements and differences which exist in 1966 but which did not in 1867. That is what we are asking and what is the government doing? Nothing, it is asleep. I am looking at several members and telling them: At the next federal election, go back before the people and explain why you are preventing those who came here, in all sincerity and honesty, to settle the problems of 1966, why you prevent the members of either side from settling those problems. You are allowing such tensions and pressures to continue. Well, you will have to bear that responsibility, not only in your very heart, but also in the face of the whole country.

We are precisely requesting some reforms. Fiscal reforms are a must. Constitutional reforms are a must. It is necessary to examine problems of education, health, industrial problems within a new concept, a concept of 1966 or 1967. I cannot understand, although some members on this side of the house may call this a poor performance, how those who have come here, not to go to sleep, not to deceive the people, but to settle the problems of the country, are being refused this opportunity to establish a committee once and for all, because we Canadians, from Halifax to Vancouver, from Calgary, Fredericton, Toronto, North Bay, from everywhere, from coast to coast, need to live as brothers and with trust. But we are denied this opportunity, because initiatives which cause tensions, misunderstandings and defiance between Canadians are allowed to become established. Mr. Speaker, that is the reason why I wanted to raise again this particular matter tonight.

I have high hopes that the present government will give serious thought to the situation before bringing forward other similar legislation. It is not only tonight's bill; recently it was the field of culture, and yesterday, that of federal loans to students, an exclusively provincial jurisdiction. I challenge hon. members of this house who are in favour of unrestrained centralization, to show me what, in the Canadian constitution, empowers the central government to handle everything and to handle it very badly at that.

The province of Quebec is not a separatist province; the province does not want separation from the rest of Canada. On the contrary, it is an hospitable province, it is a good-natured province. It is a province of good faith and its patriots want to live with the rest of the country, but on the same footing. They do not want always to be pushed around as is done through this legislation which conflicts with the aspirations and the sacred agreements which were passed in 1867.

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I would be vexed with myself if I did not give my impressions on this bill and on the infringement of the federal government in provincial jurisdictions. I wish to support sincerely and wholeheartedly, the statements and the remarks made by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard).

It is true that the federal government interferes in the field of provincial institutions; it is true that it does not behoove the federal government to encroach on provincial affairs; it is true that the provinces are able to administer themselves; it is true that we are short of doctors in Canada, as well as technicians in various fields, but this is not the fault of the provinces. Indeed, it is that of the federal government.

I would say also that it is the fault of the citizens, who failed to assume their responsibilities; that of the ministers, organizers and controllers of the federal government, who have refused to perform their duties. They only took the whole piece, they took over everything coming under provincial jurisdiction.

I absolutely agree with the hon. member for Sherbrooke that this constitution needs to be reformed. The provinces know their needs and it is up to them to ask for the necessary reforms. The federal government has only to give credit to these provinces so that they may develop normally without periodically going into debt.

Technology in all fields must be helped. There is no lack of young people ready to become technicians and doctors. Many would like to become doctors. Medicine is a vocation. Many young people cannot become doctors because they do not have the means.

A student must get $25,000 to $30,000 in debt to become a doctor and then incur further debts to the tune of $50,000 to buy a property, a car, everything he needs to set up practice. On top of this the people are burdened with income tax and other federal and provincial taxes. People are then unable to develop their potential. That is why many are unable to reach their goal. There is no lack of human material, but what is lacking is financial means.

And that is because the financial institution is not fulfilling its role, achieving its object. It falls directly to the Minister of Finance to reform that institution. It is the sole responsibility of that Minister and all the other ministers of the present government.

All we have to do here in Parliament is give the provinces the necessary financial institutions and means and they will take care of fiscality and education. In all fields of endeavour, provinces know what they want, know where to go. They know where to get their technicians, how to build hospitals. There is no need for the federal government to butt in everywhere. It does not have to control everything, to socialize everything. We do not want socialism; we want free enterprise; we want our citizens to be free to organize their way of life as they wish, as they see fit, according to their own aspirations.

That is what we need in Canada, Mr. Speaker. If we cannot achieve this, and give the provinces what they need, their fiscal powers, their rights in every field of provincial jurisdiction, if we cannot do this, then we are heading toward anarchy. The provinces will not tolerate indefinitely that the federal government monopolize all powers of taxation and all powers over institutions. The provinces want to manage their own affairs, the citizens in every province want to use their own initiative, for they are capable of developing their provinces themselves.

That is why I fully support the hon. member for Sherbrooke. He is well qualified to speak of the constitution. He brought to light the constitutional principles of provincial governments with respect to the federal government.

I ask each minister to take his responsibilities; I also ask the Minister of Finance to take his responsibilities in the financial field and to organize a financial regime which would make financially possible what is physically possible and feasible in our country.

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): I can hardly allow the last two speeches to go without saying a word. I was not supposed to speak on this matter but when on hearing statements as those made by the member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) to the effect that the federal government takes everything and gives nothing to the provinces, I feel I must rise and say that there is some intellectual dishonesty there.

The preamble of the bill reads in part as follows:

—to assist provinces in the acquisition, construction and renovation—

The federal government has prepared a bill in such a way that all provinces will have the same system so as to organize health properly in Canada.

Organization was essential and the federal government has chosen that method. The member who has just resumed his seat said a while ago: We are short of doctors and that is the fault of the federal government. But how could it be the fault of the federal government if we are short of doctors?

Doctors were always trained by our universities, and if we are short of doctors, it is because in our institutions, they were not given the opportunity to become doctors.

Today, the province of Quebec is reorganizing such courses so as to permit young people to carry on medical studies without having to follow a special course leading to literature rather than sciences; this will permit people to become doctors more easily, and the member also said that the federal government is to provide funds to those provinces. That is precisely what is being done; funds are provided to provinces so that they may organize, nothing else, and that is exactly what you are asking for.

The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) says: We are destroying confederation, and the province of Quebec is not responsible for that. I say that statement is completely false.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

The federal government always took the precaution of concluding an agreement with the provinces before doing anything; it always asked the provinces what they intended to do. It never imposed itself upon them nor does it intend to do so, and that is the reason why I say that this bill is absolutely necessary at the present time.

It is my contention that the hon. member—he just left the house—was wrong in condemning the federal government. I agree that his government has come to power in Quebec a few days ago, but this does not warrant a complete reversal of his position.

We are here to organize provincial welfare in the fields of health and labour, and within every existing organization. The federal government had to step in so that the provinces think in the same way. I maintain that our intervention is justified, that the government is to be commended for its action, with which I wholeheartedly concur.

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I was not going to speak since one of our members already did, but following the intervention of the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) who tried to refute the assertions of the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard), I must do so in order to point out that the argument of the member for Hull, as a French Canadian representative to the parliament in Ottawa, is very weak.

When hon. members say that there is a lack of doctors, teachers and technicians in the province of Quebec, they are right. And when they ask: who is to blame? The answer is: the federal government. And that is also true. Why? Precisely because, during the last war, the federal government took over the three main fields of taxation in the province of Quebec, leading it to think that they would be given back to her at the end of the war. The war has been over for 20 years and the federal government still keeps the land tax which the province of Quebec needs to provide training for its doctors, technicians and teachers.

When it is suggested that we lack such a thing on account of the federal government, this is what it means. We are not trying to evade the issue, we are going straight to the point. Give us back our taxation fields, give us back what we lent to you in the last war, and I assure you that the province of Quebec will have enough doctors; Laval University in Quebec city will not turn down, as it does every year, from 75 to 80 students who are unable to further their studies for lack of space.

Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the statement of the member for Hull (Mr. Caron), but I am even more at the unquestioning and submissive silence of all our French Canadians within the Liberal party who dare not raise their voice. They had orders to let this bill pass. Whether it is anticonstitutional or not, it does not matter; the caucus decided so and it must be done. I say that this bill is the most anticonstitutional I have seen since the beginning of this session. It seems that the government is in a hurry to shower on us, at a rate of one or two a week, such bills which intrude in the affairs of Quebec. They seem to be trying to get away with it before the next Quebec government catches up with them. I am very anxious to witness the meetings with a man from Quebec who will finally stand on his feet.

When I saw the Quebec premier demanding the taxation fields after having surrendered them himself when he was minister of northern affairs, I failed to understand this amazing buffoonery. But the Quebeckers did, and I sincerely hope the present Quebec team will act as true Quebeckers and will sit around a table with the federal members in order to finally recover the rights which belong to the province of Quebec and make the whole population understand that the French Canadian jokers on the government side of the house will not always retain their seats.

In Quebec, there is a dearth of doctors, of professional men because our universities are overcrowded. And apparently, the whole problem is dependant on federal authorities.

I wonder if my hon. friends opposite who are rejoicing over the return to power of the present provincial government will recall that in 1942, a former colleague of the present premier who is now a judge of the superior court, stated before the Kiwanis Club in Montreal that our forefathers had been brought up in ignorance and that it would be treason to give instruction to our people because we would find happiness in ignorance.

Mr. Speaker, little wonder that between 1942 to 1960, there was a dearth of accommodation in our universities.

Fortunately, since 1960, the question of education in Quebec has been on the program of the former government. And only one thing is desirable, and it is that the present government continues in the footsteps of the Lesage government and that there will soon be room in the universities.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must advise the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, a number of points have been raised by hon. members in the debate that I would like to deal with very briefly, but before doing so I wish to thank hon. members for their participation in the debate and for the contributions they have made to a better understanding of the health resources fund.

An apparent concern of a number of hon. members has been with respect to the size of the fund—is it large enough to meet the estimated needs in the field of health training in the immediate future? I hope that my comments will be of such a nature as to remove a good deal of the concern that has been expressed on this particular matter.

Hon. members may have had a chance to look at the report to the conference of ministers by the ad hoc technical committee on the health resources fund. As the report indicates, each of the representatives of the provinces was asked to supply preliminary estimates of provincial needs so far as these needs related to the areas coming within the scope of the health resources fund. The total amounts by provinces, as made available to the ad hoc committee, indicated that the approximate needs were in the range of $1 billion. Through this legislation the federal government is putting up an amount equal to one half of the needs in this field as estimated by the provinces.

Also to assist in removing the concern expressed by hon. members, I should like to refer to one paragraph found at page 11 of the report of the ad hoc committee, which reads as follows:

> The committee worked on the premise that the $500 million in the fund was an estimate of need and that the federal government might be prepared to reconsider this amount when needs were more clearly defined.

The fact is that this sum was arrived at as a result of consultation with the provinces as to their needs. It has been confirmed by the ad hoc technical committee, and reported as such to the conference of ministers, and no province has suggested that this amount is inadequate to meet the estimated needs in the field of providing capital facilities for training in the health sciences. My guess, Mr. Speaker, is that the amounts that will be readily available from this fund will not be taken up in the early years by projects submitted by the provinces. My guess is that this fund is more than adequate to meet the estimated needs in the immediate period ahead.

Hon. gentlemen raised another important point with regard to the allocation of funds. They asked whether funds are to be allocated on an annual basis. Funds will not necessarily be allocated on an annual basis. They will be made available as projects are brought forward. No project in any province will be held up because a strict annual allotment is being applied to the allocation of these funds. That also removes the major concern expressed by hon. members.

The hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) raised a question with regard to the requirement that an over-all plan be made available to the minister, supported by the advisory committee, from which individual projects would be drawn for approval. We will ask for an over-all plan from any province so that there will be an orderly development in this field, and so that projects will not come forward on a haphazard basis. We not only expect but provide that the fund will be applicable from the first of this year, and that current programs will be eligible for support from the health resources fund.

Yesterday when I was in Vancouver I had an opportunity to discuss with the dean of the medical faculty at the University of British Columbia the plans of that institution for its new health sciences centre. Next Thursday the sod turning for this tremendous, major and in a sense pioneer development will take place. This will be supported from the health resources fund. I understand that this has been in the development and planning stage for a period of seven years. This project now will go ahead and the amount which will be available from the health resources fund for that particular project I understand will be in the amount of $18 million. That is a very significant sum to be made available for one particular health complex on one particular campus in Canada. The same application of the principle should be made to other institutions of Canada which have on-going plans and on-going preparations which are eligible for support under the health resources fund.

I appreciate that certain aspects which have been raised in this debate are of great significance, but they are more directly related to another issue which will be before the house later this session, and I hope very shortly, namely the medicare insurance bill. I forego the opportunity to deal with the question of the shortage of personnel in anticipation that a full opportunity will be afforded for debate on this issue in a more relevant context when dealing with the medicare legislation itself.

The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) brought to our attention a very important point, namely his wish that the development of governmental plans shall not interfere with or inhibit local participation or local initiative. Had the hon. member listened to or read my speech which I made in Vancouver he would have realized that I agree fully with him in this instance, and agree also with this very interesting but incisive comment that possibly some of the major problems involving Canada today are problems of affluence rather than problems of deprivation. It is unfortunate I do not have more time to deal with this rather interesting by-path that was brought to our attention by the hon. member for Kootenay West.

I appreciate the comments made by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) with regard to preserving the constitutional responsibility of the provinces in the health field. I should like to remind him that this proposal which is now before the house is the product of the most careful and intensive consultation with all provincial governments. An ad hoc committee composed of the deputy ministers of all the provinces met and reported to the conference of health ministers. The legislation before the house is a product, an agreed conclusion, of the conference of health ministers representing all the provinces.

I hope I am not misstating the situation when I say that the bill before the house substantially represents the views put forward by the province of Quebec at that particular conference of health ministers. In each case we will respect the right of a province to put forward its own project for approval by the governor in council and by the minister. No project will be accepted unless it is put forward by a provincial government. The framework of the legislation, the allocation of funds, the advisory committee structure, the purpose for which the moneys will be spent, all have been dealt with at federal-provincial discussions, and this certainly is not arrogant centralizing legislation.

On the other hand it is the result of consultation and collaboration with the provinces of Canada. Because it is a result of this collaboration and consultation, it will make a substantial contribution to the provision of health resources in Canada. I commend this bill to the house for second reading.

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the minister.

Is it a fact that during the last federal-provincial conference, the government of the province of Quebec represented by the honourable Eric Kierans, objected to the amount of $175 million that the central government, under the bill, now proposes to distribute according to its own whims and fancies by order in council?

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I should like to withhold an answer to this question until we are dealing with the clauses in the bill with regard to the allocation of funds. I would be very glad to discuss it at that time.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I should like to indicate the business for tomorrow. We will start with the estimates of the Department of Labour; then the estimates of the Department of Fisheries; then No. 77 on the order paper, the Atlantic Development Board Act resolution; then No. 55, the bill to provide for the establishment of The Company of Young Canadians; and then No. 61, the bill relating to the National Arts Centre.

• (10:00 p.m.)

I should like to mention that there are two Canadian National Railways branch line resolutions which will be on the order paper. I am not sure whether or not the notice has been given tonight. I mention this so that members will have notice of it. One bill relates to a branch line in Saskatchewan to service a potash plant and the other relates to a branch line in Manitoba to service a copper-zinc mine. Since they are C.N.R. bills they will require a resolution stage. Once they appear on the order paper I hope that the resolution stage can be dealt with in order that the bills can be brought forward and passed promptly. I felt that I should give notice in this regard tonight.

On Thursday we propose to deal with legislation throughout the day, so hon. members should be prepared to debate any legislative item that appears on the order paper. On Monday we will continue with consideration of the Bank Act revision resolution.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—ALBERTA—PETITION OF TEACHERS RESPECTING SCHOOL CONDITIONS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, on June 8 I directed the following question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources who is now, I believe, responsible for Indian affairs. The question appears at page 6139 of Hansard for that date:

> Did the minister receive a petition from the Alberta Indian Teachers Association setting out certain grievances with regard to Indian schools, mentioning particularly the lack of proper medical attention and sanitation facilities? Is he aware that eight teachers have resigned because of the situation, and has he any comment to make?

Since that time there has been some discussion of Indian affairs during our consideration of the estimates. As a result of this question I asked the minister to investigate the educational, medical and other services that exist on Indian reservations, particularly in Alberta and more particularly at Morley and Gleichen in respect of the two tribes, the Stony and Blackfoot Indians. As a result of my letter to the minister I received a four page reply which in fact appeared to deny many of the facts contained in the article carried in the Calgary Herald and later in the Calgary Albertan.

I may say at the outset that any remarks I make should not be taken as criticism of the present minister, in view of the fact that he has only recently taken over this portfolio. I hope my remarks will be of some assistance to him in his thinking with reference to this matter.

My question was asked as a direct result of an article which appeared in the June 8 edition of the Calgary Herald. I do not lay any blame on the present minister for the grievances that now exist because he has just, as I said, taken over this portfolio following reorganization. Unfortunately the ministers have changed so often as far as Indian affairs are concerned that they have failed to become knowledgeable of Indian affairs.

The letter written by the minister I am sure was of the same type that would have been written by former ministers—Mr. Nicholson, Mr. Favreau and, indeed, probably the ministers of the former government —because the department has been laying down a certain policy for so long that the Indians themselves are never asked what they consider to be the remedy for their problems in respect of education, medical services and, indeed, making a living. I once referred to this as the cod liver oil treatment. It is much like grandmother saying to a grandchild: Open your mouth, this is what you need; it is good for you.

I am sure the present minister will achieve nothing to improve the lot of Indians by continuing the policies of his predecessors, and I am sure he will not benefit by listening to the officials of his department. He could achieve more by visiting these reservations and talking to the Indians themselves.

I should like to quote from a letter written by Dr. B. A. Waldron. I know my time is limited but I should like to confirm that what he has stated in his letter of June 1, 1966 is factual on the basis of my experience during more than 25 visits to the reservations at Gleichen and Morley during the last 10 years. I might add that before I became elected as a member of parliament I was made an honorary chief of both the Stony and Blackfoot tribes. This man has been providing medical attention to these Indians for a number of years and he states in his letter, in part:

> My experience with treating these Indians has made me aware that their present medical and social welfare is at a standard far below that availble to the residents of Canmore and Exshaw. I believe that the life expectancy for a Canadian Indian is half that for a Canadian European and I have knowledge of at least six deaths among Indians at Morley during the past 18 months which almost certainly would not have occurred had the medical facilities been the same as in Canmore.

I will send a copy of this letter to the minister because I do not have time to quote it all, but it points out the seriousness of the situation. For example he says that a building was constructed in Morley in 1930 when the population in the reserve was far less numerous than it is now. Although it is called a hospital it has not functioned as one for some years. The minister will say that those Indians are of course allowed to go into Calgary, but anybody who knows anything about the standard of living at Morley or Gleichen would know that the Indians cannot afford the gasoline for a car to take their sick people to the city of Calgary. These facts have existed for a long time, long before the present minister took over.

I am convinced the minister should be getting advice, not from his officials but from men who understand physcology, skilled anthropologists and sociologists such as Dr. Vernon Serl and Dr. Arthur Davis of the sociological department of the University of Calgary. As long as he takes advice from the same crowd of people from whom he has been getting it in the past, these Indians will continue to live in the state of poverty in which they have been for years. I do not mean this in any disrespectful way by any means but I hope the minister will ameliorate the situation and in that way make a name for himself.

I have spoken on this subject many a time. Too often we have been prone to criticize our neighbours to the south in reference to their treatment and understanding of the American negro. However, our treatment of the Canadian Indian is far more lacking in understanding. We have almost confined him to a form of concentration camp where, in some cases, he gets treaty money of $5 a year and $15 twice a year as interest on band funds. At the same time we keep eroding away the area known as the reserve. What other income has he but family allowance on which to live?

Eight teachers have resigned from the schools on the two reservations which I mentioned. I appreciate the time which the minister took to write me a letter setting out these details but the fact is that these teachers have resigned to go to other positions to which they would not be going if they were getting a fair deal on the reservation. I may say I had a conversation with one of them in reference to a letter he has written to the department, in which he said that their grievences were correctly set out in the newpapers but they could not afford to have their names bandied about when working as provincial employees.

Mr. Speaker: I regret I have to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Woolliams: There is one more matter with which I should like to deal. I will not take much longer.

Mr. Speaker: By leave.

Mr. Woolliams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I recommend that we set up a form of educational system equal in standard to schools which serve the rest of the communities in Alberta, and above all we must set up a royal commission on Indian affairs. I suggest that Indian representatives should sit on that royal commission because they are the ones who know their own culture and their own province best.

In this connection I wish to quote the following poem:

> We are a part of all that we have met;
> Each is needed by each one,
> And nothing is good alone.

If this matter is brought before a parliamentary committee, all that will be achieved is that these Indians will listen to the officials of the department but will continue to live in conditions of squalor.

Their educational standard is far below that of the other people in the province of Alberta and they really can be categorized as second class citizens because of the conditions to which we have subjected them. I hope the minister will take what I say very seriously, because I have never been more serious on any problem.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): In replying to the hon. member I will not take issue with his statements because I have not been on either of these reservations. I have some knowledge of the conditions existing in the average Indian reservation. I am not proud of that and I do not think this house should be proud of it. However, I am of the opinion that on the average the reservations in the province of Alberta are probably equal, or even superior, to most of the reservations in Canada. There are therefore in some of these reservations some lands that are extremely valuable. There are returns to the Indian people, by way of oil leases and agriculture, that are above average.

I do not know all the facts connected with these particular incidents. The hon. member has suggested we should get to know more about the Indian problem. This is precisely why the committee on Indian affairs has undertaken to send out committee members to see a number of reservations. We are going to break up the committee into three or four parts so we can get some members out physically to see conditions on the reserves. I feel this is a splendid move. I want them to be representative reservations. I do not want members to see all bad reservations or all good reservations, but to see a fair cross section of reservations in the country.

We have been endeavouring to work with the provinces in the field of education. We want to move all the Indian children into the provincial school system as rapidly as possible. In British Columbia today we have 47 per cent of all the Indian children in the school system of that province. So far we have not done so well in Alberta. There are 4,048 children in federal schools and 3,045 in provincial schools. We hope to extend the facilities ordinarily given to every other citizen except the Indian. In Alberta, we have approached the government with a project under which we will carry 90 per cent of the cost for two types of program. Alberta has indicated they will accept the community program, but they do not want the welfare program. We wish they would accept both of these programs because we are very heavy contributors, to the extent of 90 per cent. This would enable the services to which my hon. friend referred to be extended to the Indians.

I do not want to be critical of my hon. friend referred to be extended to the Indians. tions on these reservations. I do want to tell him there is some indication that in those particular schools in which some trouble has occurred, there is difficulty between members of the staff. He may have noted himself that some of the teachers in this group made it known to the press immediately afterwards that they wanted to dissociate themselves from the remarks that had been made. This matter is under study now. Mr. Davey, our superintendent of schools, has been in the territory and is discussing the entire matter which the director of education of the Oblate Mission there.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION—REQUEST ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, on June 9 last, I put the following question to the right hon. Prime Minister:

> As the new or next Quebec government advocates in its program, a new alliance with the rest of the country and the drawing up of a new Canadian constitution, does the government propose to set up shortly a joint parliamentary committee on the Canadian constitution?

The government knows that in 1963, a member of the Union Nationale, then in the opposition, moved a resolution for the establishment of a parliamentary committee on the Canadian constitution, a resolution, Mr. Speaker, which was unanimously approved at that time.

In 1964 and in 1965, that parliamentary committee in Quebec sat, heard evidence from several individuals, representatives of national associations or others, and studied five political options, namely: first, the status quo; the system which has been in operation since 1867, which I will call quasi federalism. With regard to the discrepancies in the text, there are also centralizing experiences in the confederation life over the last hundred years.

As a second option, various people commented on co-operative federalism which is, in a way, the continuation of the same system where the central government interferes in all kinds of fields coming under provincial jurisdiction and then asks the approval of the provinces—what Hon. René Lévesque, with ministerial responsibilities, used to call the painless abortion of the French Canadian nation.

Consideration was also given, as a political option, to the associated state status, an independent status which in fact does not seem possible in the present circumstances.

And finally, as a last political option, which was strongly commented upon, the drafting of a new Canadian constitution setting up in the country a positive and bicultural federalism with a special status for the province of Quebec in some fields.

Mr. Speaker, that last option was in the political platform of the new Quebec government which is getting ready very soon, at ministerial meetings and at federal-provincial conferences, to request the drafting of a new Canadian constitution for such purposes.

It would be necessary, therefore, that parliament in Ottawa, the legislators in the Upper House and the other place, be in a position to state clearly, in good faith, their thoughts in a modern spirit, that of 1966, in order to engage in a dialogue on those fundamental problems.

We should not be afraid in 1966 to have the courage, the initiative and the good faith to approach all those Canadian problems, fiscal, constitutional, political and industrial, in order to set up the reforms necessary to a final get-together between Quebec and the other English provinces and the other ethnic groups in the country.

This is why, since the beginning of the session, many members have asked—and I am earnestly bringing up the subject again this evening—the present government to set up a joint parliamentary committee, in order that we may define more accurately together our opinions on those important matters and the proceedings of that parliamentary committee would be followed by a national constitutional conference.

I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister will be in a position this evening to give us a favourable answer.

Mr. P.-E. Trudeau (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand the fascination exerted on the minds of the members of the opposition and of an independent member by this notion of a joint parliamentary committee to discuss constitutional problems.

The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard) mainly spoke of the problems in connection with the interests of the Quebec government. I can hardly see why the Quebec government would come here to seek within a committee we would establish the enlightenment it needs over there to form its own opinion on the constitution. True, there was created three years ago, a committee of the legislature on constitutional problems and this is explained by the fact that there were not two Quebec politicians who agreed on constitutional matters. And each referred to a particular formula, such as independence, associate states, special status and all sorts of confederations of ten independent states. They needed a parliamentary committee probably to help themselves see their way through.

As for us, we think that the role of a party government, which claims to have power at the national level, is to have a constitutional philosophy and to govern accordingly.

A committee such as proposed by the hon. member for Sherbrooke seems absolutely useless to me in this direction. Either the opposition and the independents have no constitutional philosophy, and thus that committee can only serve to give them one, and therefore that committee is of no use whatsoever; or they have a constitutional philosophy and it is in agreement with that of the government, and then that committee serves no purpose either: or finally they have a constitutional philosophy which is at variance with that of the government, and that committee can only serve as a forum to place constitutional problems at the level of political quibbling and partisan discords.

This can in no way, in my opinion, further the constitutional debate, and I think that those ideas originate from persons who put into their minds that Canada needed to amend its constitution throughout. I suggest that this idea essentially belongs to a rising bourgeoisie which wants to change the rules of the game without taking basic needs into account.

We have a constitution, it undoubtedly needs to be applied in certain sectors—and particularly in section 133—with more vigour, and also there surely is an area where there is room for improvement, but it is the responsibility of a party, a government to have that idea. And this sort of committee as proposed to us can only be, in my opinion, a place of discord or mutual sterilization.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—HAMILTON, ONT.,—NIGHT SHUNTING OF CARS IN RESIDENTIAL AREA

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, last week I raised the matter of the inconvenience and nuisance caused by Canadian National shunting operations in Hamilton, and I would like to elaborate on this serious problem.

About a year ago, the Canadian National moved its shunting operations eastward from the Stuart Street yards to the Parkdale yards. Unfortunately the latter is immediately adjacent to some 200 homes, and the shift has caused great distress to the inhabitants of that neighbourhood. The diesel engines in the yard create television interference over a large area. After an evening of distorted viewing, the residents are then subjected to the noises of shunting from midnight on.

I have had letters written at three or four in the morning from constituents unable to sleep because of the noise. Some have described the situation as living in a constant thunderstorm. Added to this is the soot and ash produced as freight car sweepings are burned in the Parkdale yard. This ruins house exteriors and laundry, and makes outdoor recreation impossible. It makes it necessary to keep windows closed in hot summer weather. Property values in the neighborhood have fallen drastically in the past year, and the residents are fed up.

Shortly after shunting began in the Parkdale yards, a citizens committee requested that the shunting be moved a few blocks east, to a relatively unpopulated area. This was done, but after a short time operations were resumed in the Parkdale shunting yards, as before.

During last fall, this committee met with municipal, provincial and federal authorities, in the presence of some Canadian National representatives. I was present at this meeting and I was delegated to approach the Minister of Transport on behalf of these groups. I asked that the shunting be moved again to the east, a very simple matter to relieve the current nuisance.

The minister never did answer my letter which I wrote on October 26, but with customary alacrity, the department officials replied in January of 1966 with a report which indicated that consideration was being given to a number of plans to improve the situation. But there still has been no change.

Again in February of 1966 I received a letter from the Canadian National, or from representatives of the Canadian National which states in part:

> The transfer of operations to some other point than Parkdale would involve extensive study in line with industrial planning in order to forecast a more favourable location for further expansion of railway facilities.

Thus, the whole situation looked rather hopeless. As I say, I have received many letters appealing that something be done. The residents of this area have lived with this grave inconvenience for over a year now. A solution to the problem is readily available a few blocks east of the shunting yards. I trust that the Department of Transport will be able to do something for the residents of this area in the very near future.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the minister regrets being unable tonight to hear the representations by the hon. member for Hamilton South. Were the minister here I believe he would be inclined to say that responsibility in this matter rests with the management of the Canadian National. His office has brought to the attention of the officials of the C.N.R. the sincere grievance which was raised by the hon. member.

The hon. member did not inform the house or myself this evening whether he had made arrangements to meet with officials of the C.N.R. in Toronto as he was advised he might do in a letter from Mr. R. T. Vaughan, secretary of the C.N.R. on January 7. At that time Mr. Vaughan said:

> There are a number of plans under study at the present time with a view to materially improving our switching operations within the city but it has not been possible as yet to reach any final conclusion.

He went on to invite the hon. member to meet with Mr. J. H. Spicer, area manager, Toronto, or his assistant, Mr. J. R. Burns. This is undoubtedly a serious matter and it has resulted in a great deal of inconvenience to residents of Hamilton South.

I am sure the minister will be pleased to bring this matter strongly once again to the attention of the officials of the C.N.R. In the meantime I might advise the hon. member that officials of the C.N.R. will probably be appearing before the standing committee on transportation and communications of this house and the hon. member is invited by the minister and, of course, by the chairman of the committee, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso) to appear and ask the president of the C.N.R. to give a good and sufficient reason for not having acted upon the hon. member's request.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING DESECRATION OF NATIONAL FLAG

Mr. Ovide Laflamme (Quebec-Montmorency) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-209, an act to amend the Criminal Code (desecration of the national flag of Canada).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Laflamme: Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to bring to the attention of all Canadians the unalterable value of representation in our national flag and to provide that its public alteration, deterioration or destruction, carried out deliberately or for purposes of revolt, protest, hate or disorder, are subversive and cast a reflection on the honour and dignity of the Canadian nation as a whole.

1. 2. If so, on what date was the request made?

4. If so, on what date was approval granted?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes, for certain stated correspondence.

VEHICLES SEIZED BY MOUNTED POLICE

Question No. 1,181—Mr. Godin:

1. For the years 1962 and 1963, how many (a) automobiles (b) trucks (c) ships and boats (d) aircraft were seized by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police with regard to (i) customs (ii) narcotics (iii) adulterated alcohol (iv) counterfeit money?

2. What was the total market value of the goods seized?

3. What was the total amount collected from the sale of these goods?

Questions

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1.

1962	Customs	Narcotics	Adulterated Alcohol (Excise Act)	Counterfeit Money
Automobiles	551	16	88	0
Trucks	42	2	34	0
1963
Automobiles	660	3	82	0

2. The R.C.M.P. do not make a market value assessment of the goods seized, as in a majority of cases the seized goods are not sold but released on penalty. For example, a shipping vessel seized was released to the Quebec government as a lien holder and no revenue was derived from its disposal.

3. Answered by 2.

BILINGUALISM IN R.C.M.P.

Question No. 1,325—Mr. Allard:

1. Are any of the senior and junior officers of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in the province of Quebec bilingual and, if so, what percentage of the total?

2. Outside Quebec and within the same groups are any bilingual and, if so, what percentage?

3. In Ottawa and within the same groups are any bilingual and, if so, what percentage?

4. In the different provinces, in Ottawa, in the Yukon and in the Northwest Territories, are the French speaking members or the R.C.M.P. allowed to write their reports in French if they so wish?

5. Throughout Canada and in the province of Quebec, are French report forms available to the French speaking members of the R.C.M.P. and, if not, is it the intention to issue orders in the near future to make such French forms available?

6. Does the training that the R.C.M.P. give its members include, either on a voluntary or a compulsory basis, the teaching of French or English and, if not, is it the intention of the R.C.M.P. to include in the near future such language courses in the training it gives its members, either on a voluntary or a compulsory basis, and in what parts of Canada?

7. When French speaking Canadians are being interrogated by R.C.M.P. officers, are they interrogated in French (a) in Canada (b) in the province of Quebec and, if not, is it the intention to recognize in the near future the rights of French speaking Canadians in this regard?

[Mr. Godin.]

8. Are the signs on office doors at R.C.M.P. headquarters and the inscriptions on R.C.M.P. envelopes bilingual (a) in Canada (b) in the province of Quebec and, if not, is it the intention to use bilingual signs and inscriptions in the near future?

9. Is it the intention to grant bonuses to bilingual officers in the R.C.M.P. in the near future and, if not, for what reasons?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1. Yes. Senior officers, 100 per cent; Junior officers, 100 per cent.

2. Yes. Senior officers, 12.3 per cent; Junior officers, 9.6 per cent.

3. Yes. Senior officers, 21.4 per cent; Junior officers, 14.3 per cent.

4. The R.C.M.P. will, in the near future, implement a system whereby French speaking members at headquarters, Ottawa, "A" division (part of the province of Ontario), and in the provinces of Quebec and New Brunswick submit reports in their own language. Because the force operates under a provincial contract in the province of New Brunswick, this system will only apply to reports on administrative matters and federal statute cases. It must be remembered that in all the provinces, with the exception of Ontario and Quebec, the R.C.M.P. is under contract as a provincial police force.

The number of French Canadian members serving in the other seven provinces, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories is minimal and, because they are so few in number, it would not be practicable at this time to extend the system to enable those members to report in French. The R.C.M.P. will extend this system of report writing to the other provinces on administrative matters and federal statute cases as soon as it is feasible to do so.

5. The majority of R.C.M.P. forms are already available throughout the force in French. Translation of the remainder is being proceeded with and it is expected all forms will be stocked in both languages in the near future.

6. The training given to its members by the R.C.M.P. does not include the teaching of either the French or English language in the formal sense. The courses are given in the English language and there is at least one French Canadian member at each training center who is specifically responsible for assisting French Canadian recruits to increase their knowledge of the English language.

The R.C.M.P. is, in addition, participating in the language courses that are available at Ottawa, Ontario, through the public service. The R.C.M.P. is well aware of the need and importance of providing instruction for its members in both the English and the French languages and it is currently exploring the possibility of making this type of instruction available to its members across Canada on a voluntary basis.

7. (a) The R.C.M.P. recognizes the right of French Canadians, no matter where they reside in Canada, to be interrogated in their own language, and the force does its utmost to deploy the French speaking members in the areas where their linguistic qualifications will best serve the needs of French-Canadians. In cases where we do not have a qualified member, interpreters are used. (b) In the province of Quebec all R.C.M.P. investigators are bilingual (French-English) and use whichever language is required by the person being interviewed.

8. Yes. The signs on some office doors at the R.C.M.P. Headquarters in Ottawa are bilingual and the remainder are being converted. The signs on office doors at R.C.M.P. headquarters in Quebec are bilingual. The inscriptions on the envelopes used throughout Canada by the R.C.M.P. are bilingual.

9. This matter is under study in accordance with the government policy on bilingualism in the public service as outlined by the Prime Minister in the House of Commons on April 6, 1966.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. Is the parliamentary secretary in a position to give us an approximate date on which the government might reply to Question No. 910 that has been on the order paper since March 1? It has been quite some time and we have nothing yet to indicate when a reply will be given.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to call to the attention of the Secretary of State the fact that my starred Question No. 1,283 of April 6 and that another starred Question No. 1,346, on the order paper since April 22, and that another question, No. 1,354 also dated April 26, and finally another question No. 1,385 dated April 28 are still unanswered.

I should like to have answers to these questions. It seems to me they are quite simple and could be easily answered.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with

Hon. Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there is no correspondence between the Department of Justice or the Minister of Justice and the United States Department of Justice in connection with the subject matter of the motion. CORRESPONDENCE WITH UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION, ST. EPHREM DE BEAUCE WINTER WORKS

Motion No. 138—Mr. Langlois (Mégantic):

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams or documents exchanged between the Unemployment Insurance

Inquiries of the Ministry

Commission in St. Georges de Beauce and the Minister of Labour or his department, the Minister of National Revenue or his department, and the Minister of Finance or his department, with regard to winter works in St. Ephrem de Beauce between January 1, 1960, and January 1, 1966, inclusively.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): This was called on an earlier occasion but was stood down because of the absence from the chamber at that particular moment of the hon. member for Mégantic. I should like to say that the correspondence, telegrams and other documents referred to in the motion are communications between the Unemployment Insurance Commission and my department or myself, the Minister of Labour, and another minister. They are all privileged documents, and in the circumstances I would respectfully ask the hon. member to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is the motion dropped?

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I have not had any recent communication from the chairman of the Carter commission, so I am not in a position to answer that question at the moment. We are trying to get the report as quickly as possible. However, we have a problem about the translation which I mentioned in the house some days ago, and we have not yet made up our minds whether we can release the report in the English language only.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO SUMMER RECESS AND FURTHER LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): This is about the time of the average session when the Leader of the Opposition asks the Prime Minister whether the government has in mind a summer adjournment. At the same time the Prime Minister sets out in some detail the further legislation, in addition to that on the order paper, which it is the intention of the government to bring before the house.

Can the Prime Minister give the house some general ideas in this connection? I know he is just as anxious as can be to answer the question. I await his reply with interest.

[Mr. Langlois (Mégantic).]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): We have been making such fine progress lately, due of course almost entirely to the co-operation of hon. gentlemen opposite, that I think we can look forward to a summer adjournment at a reasonably early date. I would hope that by the beginning of next week, perhaps, we would be able to place before the house what we hope to achieve before that summer adjournment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask the Prime Minister then whether, in view of the fact that so large a percentage of the cabinet was in favour of the abolition of capital punishment in the vote that took place, and in view of the considerable number of cases which were pending at the time of that vote, the government intends to bring in any amendments to the Criminal Code regarding this subject, at the present session?

Mr. Pearson: Certainly not at this particular time, Mr. Speaker, and I am not now in a position to say whether such an amendment or a government resolution on this subject should be brought forward at a later date.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is consideration being given to this matter?

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we in the government have to give consideration to this important matter in the light of the discussions and the decisions reached or not reached by the house in the previous debate, but I am not in a position to add to that now.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary with respect to the first part of the question just asked by the Leader of the Opposition, may I ask the Prime Minister whether medicare is still on the list of items to be dealt with before a summer adjournment.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I hope the medicare resolution will be before the house next week.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REFUSAL OF B.C. LONGSHOREMEN TO WORK ON VICTORIA DAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, last Friday I directed a question to the Minister of Labour with reference to the ten longshoremen in Vancouver who have now been sentenced to serve terms in prison for insisting upon their right to a statutory holiday guaranteed to them under the Canada labour code, and the minister promised to look into this matter. I would like to ask him what action the Department of Labour and the government intend to take with respect to the right of these men to enjoy the privilege set out under the Canada labour code.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I cannot accept any of the premises contained in the earlier part of the question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nicholson: I do not want to quibble, but in the first place the men in question were not sentenced to terms in prison. Fines were imposed by the court, with the alternative of a jail term. With regard to the second part of the premise to the question, I cannot accept it either. There was a serious question of law involved at one stage and I stated that on that particular phase I felt my department and the Department of Justice should have the benefit of the reasons for judgment of Mr. Justice Verchere who dealt with the matter.

Just before coming into the house I was advised that the reasons for judgment in this case were given orally. They have now been transcribed and sent to the judge for revision, and I am hoping to receive a copy of them tomorrow.

Mr. Douglas: As a supplementary question may I ask the minister if his department is looking into the question to see whether the courts have the legal right to issue an injunction ordering men to work on a day which is a holiday under the Canada labour code?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now asking for a legal opinion, or legal interpretation of a statute, and his question is out of order.

Mr. Douglas: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I did not ask the minister for a legal opinion. I asked him if his department is looking into or would it look into the legal aspects of the authority of the courts to issue an injunction denying men a holiday and compelling them to work on a day which is a statutory holiday.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not have the legal mind which would permit me to distinguish between the two aspects of the question.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister and ask him whether he has any further information about the telegram concerning the matter raised in the question directed to the Minister of Labour, which was sent to Her Majesty the Queen asking her to give grace in this case.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker; no such telegram has been received by the government. I have made inquiries and no such telegram addressed to Her Majesty the Queen has been received at Rideau Hall. The press statement which I read on the matter indicated that such a telegram would be sent, but did not indicate it had been sent.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR ALL DIRECT TAXES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister?

During the election campaign the new premier of the province of Quebec said many times—not only promising, but pledging his word—that he would come to Ottawa to get back 100 per cent of direct taxes.

Are the right hon. Prime Minister and his government presently preparing to receive the premier of the province of Quebec who will come to get back 100 per cent of direct taxes?

Mr. Speaker: This question is hypothetical.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE VISIT TO CANADA BY KING HUSSEIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that King Hussein's visit to the United States is the second major visit of a Mediterranean area head of state, would the minister tell us whether he is likely to visit Canada as well?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HIGHWAY SAFETY

ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL ACCIDENT RESEARCH CENTRE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry. I base the question on a recommendation unanimously adopted and made public yesterday here in Ottawa after a national conference on highway and automobile safety. Will the government now take immediate action to establish a national accident prevention research centre, in view of that recommendation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me this is a question of a very general nature concerning governmental policy. I wonder whether it is the type of question which should be asked at this time.

Mr. Grafftey: I just thought this would be a good question to ask before the July 1 week end.

TRADE

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO PRICE ON SALE TO RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance under whose jurisdiction the Canadian Wheat Board comes. Could the minister inform the house regarding the price per bushel for wheat under the three year sales agreement with Russia? Is it on a three year basis, or will the price be renegotiated at the end of each year?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I clearly answered a similar question the other day after announcing the conclusion of the negotiations between the Canadian Wheat Board and Exportkhleb. As the hon. member will see if he looks at Hansard, at that time I made it quite clear that the price was fixed only for the first year of the contract. Subsequent years are subject to negotiation.

Mr. Rapp: Good.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Was the minister quoted correctly in yesterday's Globe and Mail by Mr. Geoffrey Stevens when he stated that the average per bushel price at seaboard for Canadian wheat works out at 2.38 per bushel for the first year of the three year Russian wheat deal?

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows he cannot ask whether a press statement is correct or incorrect.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): The hon. member for Moose Mountain has asked a question in respect of which the house is entitled to information. The house did not receive this information the other day. Following up the question asked by the hon. member for Moose Mountain, I should like to ask what is the price per bushel for the coming year, and at what point of delivery does the price apply.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as the house is well aware it is not customary for the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board to give the prices at which the Canadian Wheat Board sells wheat to its various customers. That was the practice while the government of the right hon. gentleman was in power. These prices were never given, and I do not intend to break this rule.

The Canadian Wheat Board sells at the same price on the same day to every customer. It is sold at the daily price on the day the negotiations are completed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did the minister give a statement to any member of the press, that the price was $2.38, or was that another leak from the department by somebody under his direction?

Mr. Sharp: I am sure the right hon. gentleman would not suggest that I would say anything outside this house that I am not prepared to say inside the house. I gave no such information to the press, nor did I authorize anyone to give the information. The answer can be obtained, however, by a person who is as good at mathematics as my right hon. friend, by looking at the prices which prevailed at that time and by adding the freight rate, to arrive at an approximate price.

Mr. Woolliams: In view of the minister's last statement, is the price, worked out by his mathematics, $2.38?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is a simple question. Work it out yourself.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking for statistical information.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We want the truth and do not get it.

[Later:]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. In reply to a question put to the minister the other day respecting the flour content in the newest Russian wheat deal, I think he said he might be in a position to give information on this point in a few days. I wonder whether he is now in a position to indicate to the house the amount of the flour content in the first one year firm contract of that wheat deal.

Mr. Sharp: I am not in a position to reply to this question today, but I expect to be able to do so very soon.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Can the minister tell me whether some of this flour will be going to Cuba, and whether it will pass through Saint John or Halifax?

Mr. Sharp: I will attempt to answer this question at the same time as I answer the previous one.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VISITS TO OTTAWA BY U.S. AND U.K. OFFICIALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the minister now in a position to satisfy the curiosity of members of the house concerning the large number of visits back and forth by senior officials such as Mr. Harriman and now Mr. Bundy from Washington, and indeed a member of the United Kingdom cabinet? Could the minister throw any light on these comings and goings?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend, who has had experience in the Department of External Affairs, will realize that comings and goings are very natural to any diplomatic effort.

I should like to say that we did have a discussion yesterday with Mr. Ronning, as my friend mentioned. The discussion which took place between the Prime Minister and Mr. Ronning was mentioned by me on Monday. Mr. Ronning visited Hanoi from June 14 to 18. This was the second visit Mr. Ronning has undertaken to Hanoi on the initiative and instructions of the Canadian government. His first visit, as the house will recall, took place last March.

Mr. Ronning was well received in the North Vietnamese capital, and he had the opportunity for wide ranging discussions with senior personalities of the North Vietnamese government.

The house will appreciate that it is neither customary nor prudent to disclose publicly the content of discussions which were held on a basis of confidence by mutual agreement. I can say, however, that Mr. Ronning's assignment was conceived with two related objectives in mind; first, to see whether a basis could be established on which the parties primarily concerned in the Viet Nam conflict might be enabled to enter into direct informal discussions; and second, to continue to explore the attitudes of interested governments on the various elements which might in due course constitute the basis for a peaceful solution of the Viet Nam situation.

I think it would be wrong to try at this stage to assess the results of this visit in one way or another.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We know that the question period is only half an hour on Wednesdays. The Minister of External Affairs is making a statement which he could have made on motions, and giving the opposition the opportunity to ask questions during the half hour available to us. Moreover, the minister does not answer at all the question put to him; he takes advantage of the circumstance, while he is on his feet, to make a statement he might have made earlier.

Mr. Speaker, as the minister's statement is important, I would ask the unanimous agreement of the house to revert to motions, so that we can comment on the minister's statement and still have the time to put our questions.

Mr. Speaker: The point of order made by the hon. member for Lapointe is nearly as long as the minister's statement. The members know that they put questions to the minister at their own risk.

[English]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to complete the statement.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the fact we only have a 30 minute question period today, surely the minister should ask leave to revert to motions as a result of the request of the hon. member for Lapointe. If he does not I am sure that hon. member will not vote for him any more.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure that hon. members and ministers of the government realize that on a day such as this replies to questions should be as short and succinct as possible. I am sure the minister will want to keep that in mind in making his reply.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that this matter is perhaps as important as any we have dealt with this session.

An hon. Member: Revert to motions.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was asked a question about the nature of these discussions and I have given an answer. I have no wish to impose a further reply on the house in respect of a matter which I think is recognized in all parties and throughout the country as being perhaps the most important facing us at this time in the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, while I admit that the reply of the minister was, as usual, very interesting, it was not a reply in response to my question. I asked the minister whether he could throw some light on the comings and goings of Messrs. Bundy and Harriman. I was not inquiring about the visit of Mr. Ronning. While his reply about Mr. Ronning was very interesting, and I am sure we were all glad to hear it, I asked the minister about the visits of Mr. Bundy and Mr. Harriman. Will the minister reply to that question.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the importance of this question—and I think the minister is correct in this regard—will the house give him permission to conclude his statement.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to that asked by the hon. member for Oxford. In view of a story that appeared in the morning press, will the minister assure the house that Mr. Ronning's visit to Hanoi was solely at the request of the Canadian government; that he carried proposals or suggestions to the Hanoi administration which emanated from Canada, and that the United States—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: Can he assure the house that Mr. Ronning was not carrying suggestions emanating from somewhere else. I am giving the minister an opportunity to clear this up by stating that he was not carrying instructions from anyone else. I hope the minister can answer my question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question as posed is certainly argumentative. I recognize the hon. member for Lapointe.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase my question?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Lewis: I did not intend—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member will be given an opportunity to ask his question again later on. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Lapointe.

[Later:]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I did not intend my question to be argumentative. I suggested with respect that the minister might be given an opportunity to make a statement which would be favourable to Canada and to peace. I repeat my question. In view of a story appearing in the press, will the minister assure the house that Mr. Ronning went to Hanoi and met the administration there at the behest only of Canada, with suggestions emanating from Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The second question is the same as the first and is out of order, as the first one was.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I wonder whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs will tell the house, to use his language, if the related objectives of Mr. Ronning's visit were realized.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I was dealing with this subject when the suggestion was made that the statement was too extended.

It would be wrong to try at this stage to assess the results of the Ronning visit in one way or another. I have made it clear to the house that this visit represents only one phase in what is a continuing effort on our part to see whether some mutually acceptable basis for a peaceful settlement of the conflict can be established. We are under no illusion about the magnitude of the obstacles. On the other hand, we are in no way deterred from persisting in the process of patient exploration of positions, of opening channels and establishing contacts. That is what I think the Canadian people want this government to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, there was one pertinent portion of the statement read by the minister, the reference to the pilgrimage to Hanoi as one of the steps the Canadian government is taking in order to bring about the desirable objectives to which the minister refers. What are the other steps?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like simply to say that I have been in this house as long as any member here.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Even longer.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, even longer, as my right hon. friend suggests. I can recall no occasion, involving Canadian relations with other countries and the peace of the world, when there has not been on the part of every member of this house the fullest understanding of the position in which the government must find itself in dealing with this kind of matter. I say that on my responsibility, and I am sure I would be borne out in this by the Prime Minister who has shared with me the discussions we have had during the past two days. I am sure the replies I have given today and yesterday are the replies which my right hon. friend would make, given the same responsibilities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I can immediately assure the hon. gentleman that I would not, because we would at least give a reply instead of an exhibition of verbosity.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let me ask the hon. gentleman this question. Have we gone back to the days of Mackenzie King, when we could not get any information in parliament regarding foreign affairs?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FINANCE

QUEBEC—INQUIRY AS TO FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Finance, which arises out of a press release issued by the Department of Finance on June 16, 1966, concerning loans made under the Farm Loan Act, in which it is seen that out of a total of 46,285 loans, only 873 were made in the province of Quebec.

My question is this, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether Liberal members in that corner could not keep a little quiet. Can the Minister of Finance advise whether his department will investigate the reason why the province of Quebec gets about 1 per cent of federal loans for farm improvement purposes?

Mr. Speaker: That question should be placed on the order paper.

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

MANDATORY BREATHALIZER TESTS—MOTOR VEHICLE EXHAUST CONTROLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Does the government plan on taking early action on the recommendations made yesterday by the special 50 member committee of government officials and safety experts, especially in respect of making breathalizer tests mandatory and the requiring of pollution control devices for motor vehicle exhaust systems?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question should be placed on the order paper.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEW CANCER TREATMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a very brief question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, asking him whether he is now prepared to disclose the contents of the report on the Mirkovich purported cancer cure, since he has now the report before him and has had some considerable time to review and consider its contents.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the minister of health for the province of Ontario will be making a statement tomorrow on this subject, and by arrangement with that minister I intend to make a statement dealing with this matter at the same time.

SHIPPING

STATEMENT BY S.I.U. RESPECTING SAFETY AT SEA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, asking him whether he has any comment to make about the declaration made today in Montreal by the Seafarers' International Union to the effect that the Canadian government has been lax and has abandoned its responsibilities in the field of safety in relation to the lives of sailors at sea because of a question of manning.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think this question is acceptable.

Mr. Howard: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, partly to seek some information. Did I understand you to say that my question is unacceptable.

Mr. Speaker: I should have said it is out of order.

Mr. Howard: Why, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Howard: It is out of order because Jack does not want to answer it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MARITIMES—REQUEST FOR INCLUSION OF CERTAIN AREAS IN DESIGNATED PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. In view of the continuing submissions coming from the Atlantic provinces for the inclusion of the growth areas of Halifax, Dartmouth, Saint John and Fredericton in the designated area program, is the minister giving consideration to altering the present stand of the government in this regard?

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, no new information has come to my attention during the course of the past month.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Has the minister's attention been drawn to the unanimous resolution of the legislative assembly of the province of New Brunswick urging the government to alter its stand and include the whole Atlantic area in the designated area program?

Mr. Drury: I think this question was asked and replied to a few days ago.

Mr. Coates: But can the minister indicate to me whether his attention has been drawn—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby Coquitlam): Mine is also a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wish to ask the Minister of Industry whether he has received any report from the Atlantic Development Board recommending the inclusion of these cities in the Atlantic provinces in the designated areas.

Mr. Drury: To my knowledge no recommendation from the Atlantic Development Board has been received in this respect.

Mr. Coates: I wish to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister indicate whether he has received the unanimous resolution of the legislative assembly of the province of New Brunswick urging that the government—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe that asking whether the Prime Minister or a member of his government has received a representation does not constitute an urgent question.

POINT EDWARD NAVAL BASE—PAYMENT OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I wish to address this question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). Will the government pay unemployment compensation to the workers who were laid off at the Point Edward naval base, in view of the fact that the jobs promised to them were not provided? It was indicated that the dock workers in Quebec would receive this compensation.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This appears to be a question of general policy, and I suggest to the hon. member that it should not be asked at this time.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. In its statement of policy the government has already announced its intention to pay unemployment compensation to dock workers in Quebec. I only ask that the same rights and privileges be granted to the workers laid off at the Point Edward naval base. It should be a simple matter for the Prime Minister to answer with a yes or no.

Mr. Woolliams: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will call orders of the day, after which hon. members may rise on points of order.

Mr. Woolliams: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I raised this point of order previously but did not insist on it, as I was unwilling to cut into the question period. My point is in reference to answers given by the Minister of Finance regarding the price of wheat. First of all he said the information was confidential and privileged and that it was against government policy to divulge it. In his second answer he said that anyone with any knowledge of elementary mathematics could figure it out. These two answers are contradictory. Either the price of wheat is a confidential matter or he is giving us wrong information or withholding it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has not given me a reference to the standing order, and I cannot accept his question.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The question period has expired for the simple reason that the Minister of External Affairs has taken advantage of us by using up the time allowed. Give me some time, Mr. Speaker, and I will point out to you when he has done so.

In answer to a question put by the member for Oxford the minister gave information which was not asked for, and the house permitted a long and detailed answer to a question which was supplementary. In this way the Secretary of State for External Affairs used up the valuable time of this house during which hon. members wished to deal with questions pertaining to the welfare of the workers in their own ridings. It was an abuse on the part of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to take this time away from the hon. members on this side of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I ask for co-operation from hon. members. I do not think the hon. member for Cape Breton South has a valid point of order, any more than the hon. member for Bow River.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The orders of the day have been called.

Mr. Aiken: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

1. General administration, including grants as detailed in the estimates; the expenses of the International Labour Conferences and the promotion of labour-management co-operation, $4,569,100.

The Chairman: When we rose at our last sitting we were discussing Vote No. 1, to be found on page 200 of the blue book.

Mr. Aiken: I do not know why Mr. Speaker left the chair—

The Chairman: Order, please. This is not the business of the committee.

Mr. Aiken: I will make it the business of the committee, Mr. Chairman.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Aiken: I am prepared to make a motion, Mr. Chairman. I move that the committee now rise and report progress.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

• (3:30 p.m.)

Motion (Mr. Aiken) negatived: Yeas, 63; nays, 90.

The Chairman: I declare the motion lost. The hon. member for York South.

Mr. Lewis: I rise, Mr. Chairman, to speak on the labour estimates—

Mr. Starr: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The spokesman for our party, the official opposition in the House of Commons, has risen and has not been recognized. He is on his feet.

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Lewis: I will be glad to yield the floor to the hon. member.

Mr. Starr: I do not believe that is necessary. I believe it is up to you, Mr. Chairman, to recognize him and I ask you to do so.

The Chairman: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. Lewis: I will yield the floor.

Mr. Ricard: You are an arrogant bunch anyway.

The Chairman: Order, please. Surely the committee realizes that this is not the first round of debate on this particular vote. There is no time limit on this debate as there has been on some of the resolutions we have considered. I saw the hon. member for York South rise and the Chair has recognized him. Again I recognize the hon. member for York South.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): You are sure it is not because Jack Pickersgill saw that Mr. Aiken was the first one to rise?

Mr. Lewis: I do not believe the business of the house is going to be advanced by the kind of resentment that apparently has been aroused. I am not saying this critically. I would, subject of course to the instructions of the Chair, still be willing to yield the floor to the hon. member if that will restore peace in the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Ricard: Don't play it so saintly.

Mr. Régimbal: Mr. Chairman, I will respect the judgment of the Chair and the recognition of the hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: Alphonse will now speak with Gaston's permission.

I rise to speak on the first vote of the labour estimates because I respectfully suggest that there are matters in the labour field in Canada which need emphasis. In addition, there are matters respecting labour legislation in Canada which need to be stated here and certain actions and courses taken by employers need emphasis also at this time. I want to refer first of all to something members of this party have said on a number of occasions, that the basic reasons for labour unrest in Canada today appear in the main to be two. The first is the rise in the cost of living in the last couple of years and the second is the feeling of fear that workers in Canada have about the security of their jobs resulting from the technological changes known as automation.

[The Chairman.]

I think it is unfair to blame unions and workers for insisting on improvements in their standard of living and for insisting on improvements in their wages and fringe benefits in view of this situation. It is usual for many people in Canada to blame labour in major part, if not in total, for the increases in prices. It is my submission that every study which has been made of the role of wages in the cost of living has shown that increased wages are not responsible for the increased prices in this country. In addition, every study which has been made has emphasized that it is inaccurate to suggest that the rise in wages in Canada has been responsible for making Canada uncompetitive in foreign markets, and that the contrary is true.

First of all, Mr. Chairman, without taking a great deal of time, let me point out that every study made by the Economic Council and by the research men in the minister's department indicates that there has been a very huge increase in productivity per man hours of labour in Canada since the end of the second world war. These studies show, for example, that from the 1935-39 period immediately before the second world war to 1963 there was an increase in the labour cost per unit output in manufacturing of 135.4 per cent. When that is adjusted to take into account the reduction in exchange rates it comes down to about 118.3 per cent.

From 1946 to 1953 the increase in cost per unit went up only by 50 per cent. On the other hand, from 1960 to 1963 the percentage trend was downward and there was an actual reduction in labour costs per unit of 1.4 per cent. This reduction was around 11.3 per cent if one makes the adjustment because of the change in the exchange rate. The fact is that labour costs per unit of output in Canada dropped very considerably between 1960 and 1963. The Economic Council, which made these calculations and found that the labour cost per unit of output in manufacturing decreased, as I have said, by 11.3 per cent from 1960 to 1963, drew this conclusion:

> Canadian unit labour costs in manufacturing over recent years have also risen substantially less than in most other leading industrially advanced nations.

• (3:40 p.m.)

After the Economic Council had pointed out the reduction in the Canadian exchange rate and the effect which it had it went on to say in its report:

> Another important factor has been the relatively much smaller average increases in wages in Canada than have recently been occurring in most European countries.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, the United States is the only country in which the increase in wages from 1957 to 1964 was about equal to that in Canada. If I remember correctly, I think that on the average the increase was 4.4 per cent annually in Canada and about 4.3 per cent in the United States. In the other countries included in the various studies to which I have referred we find that the increase in wages in the United Kingdom was an average of 5.9 per cent over the same period, in Sweden 8.8 per cent, in The Netherlands 10 per cent, in France 11.1 per cent, in Italy 11.9 per cent, in Germany 12 per cent and in Japan 17.2 per cent. Among these nations are, of course, most of our competitors in the international commodity market. In all cases the rate of increase in wages has been substantially more than that in Canada, in some instances three or four times the Canadian increase over the same period.

Similarly, Mr. Chairman, if you look at the increase in the per unit cost as calculated by the United States department of commerce, according to the statistics which they have published, there is an equally revealing state of affairs as far as the Canadian situation is concerned. The percentage increase in labour cost per unit of output in manufacturing from 1957 to 1964 in Canada was 3 per cent while it was 5 per cent in the United States, 42 per cent in France, 23 per cent in Germany, 11 per cent in Japan, 26 per cent in The Netherlands, 16 per cent in Sweden, 16 per cent in the United Kingdom and 17 per cent in Italy. There again the increase in the labour cost per unit of output in manufacturing in Canada was the lowest among these countries which I have cited. In many cases their increase was five and even ten times as high as the increase in unit labour cost in this country.

I would remind the members of the committee, and through the members of the committee I remind my fellow citizens of Canada, that the per unit cost of labour is what matters, not the size of the increase in wages. If it is possible to increase wages and at the same time to introduce efficiency which lowers the per unit cost or avoids an excessive increase, then, Mr. Chairman, you have the happiest of situations. The working people benefit from the advances which are made. Their standard of living is improved and at the same time the economic position of Canada remains in the preferred position in which it was before the increase in the wage rate.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I suggest we should realize when we discuss labour matters in this country that the arguments against labour and against the unions to the effect that they are pricing Canada out of the markets of the world are sheer propaganda. It may be true in one or two industries; I cannot say I imagine there are exceptions to the general rule; there always are. But by and large, in Canada's manufacturing industries as a whole wages have not, if I remember correctly the way the Economic Council puts it, been the causative factor in the increase in prices in this country.

I suggest, as was suggested previously, that the real causes of price increases in Canada have been on the one hand the administered price policies of many corporations and on the other the very large, almost phenomenal increase in the rate of profits, both before and after taxes, particularly of the large industries.

I set that, Mr. Chairman, as the starting point for a discussion of labour matters in Canada, and I plead with the members of this committee and with the people of Canada not to divide the country by suggesting that labour is being unreasonable and is pushing prices up. This is no more fair or just than to say that when the farmers of Canada do get a little bit more occasionally they are responsible for the increase in the cost of food, one of the major causes of the increase in the cost of living. In fact the increase in the cost of food is mainly due to the food processors and food packing industry, not to the primary producers.

The workers in the plants and in the mines are the primary industrial producers in the country. Like the farmers, and together with the farmers, they are in our view the victims of the same squeeze between prices and costs, of the same administered price policies and of the same concentration of wealth and power.

Another point frequently pressed in this country, as well as in this house on occasion, is that the workers continue to have their right to strike and to interfere with the economy of the country, etc., ect. Let me say first without any apology that I consider the right of people to say that they will not work for certain wages or under certain working conditions to be a basic right in a democratic country. There may be some exceptions to this in, for example, defence industries or where security matters are involved. But when the time comes when we prevent by law the ordinary worker, whether he be white collar, blue collar, professional, mine worker or industrial worker, from exercising his right to refuse to work under certain conditions and at a certain wage, then we abandon the basic precepts of democracy.

I urge hon. members to recognize that when workers and members of unions exercise their right to strike they are exercising a right which the Supreme Court of Canada, in the case of Zambri v. Canadian Pacific Railway which was heard a few years ago and in which I was involved, has held is a right which is theirs at common law, a right which has been restated in the statute law of this country and in the various labour relations acts.

I would also remind the committee that it is unfair and a great mistake to forget that the right to strike has in fact been very substantially curbed under every jurisdiction in Canada except the province of Saskatchewan, though I understand that some amendments may have been or are about to be introduced in the legislature of that province. In every other jurisdiction in this country, once a collective agreement is signed, then for the duration of that collective agreement, whether it be one year, two years, three years or five years, the right to strike is taken away by law. In such cases employees are prohibited from striking during the life of the agreement. Union officers are prohibited from counselling strikes. Both employees who strike and unions and union officers who counsel or initiate strikes are subject to prosecution, whether under the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act passed by this parliament or under the labour relations acts passed by the provincial legislatures.

The fact is that before order in council 1003, which was introduced in Canada during the war, all workers in Canada had the right to strike whenever they decided in their judgment to do so whereas under the present law they can strike only after certain procedures have been followed. They can strike lawfully only after a collective agreement has terminated, after certain conciliation and mediation procedures are completed and a certain period beyond has passed. We have in fact taken from the workers of this country their right to strike during the major part of their working lives, namely, during the periods when collective agreements are in force. I am not saying that this is a bad thing I believe, and I am sure all members of my party believe, that this was a step which brought some order out of chaos in labour relations. It introduced into the labour relations field the concept that once a worker made a bargain with an employer through his union and the employer made a bargain with him, then for the duration of that bargain both of them should live together in peace. If there are differences between them they should settle them by the grievance procedure or by arbitration if they cannot settle them themselves. Thus there is a useful introduction, if I may call it that, of a civilized relationship and civilized behaviour into the matter. The right to strike during the effective period is taken away.

The relevance of this to my next point is that because the right to strike is taken away during the life of a collective agreement, because the workers cannot do what they would have done under the common law, namely, down tools and walk out, or pull the plug as it is called, grievances build up during the life of the agreement. If those grievances are not settled to the satisfaction of the workers, bitterness and resentment are built up. Therefore, when the workers get to the bargaining table to negotiate for a new agreement or to revise an old agreement, nine times out of ten the union committee makes representations not only about negotiations but also about a backlog of unsatisfied grievances and unresolved complaints. The union committee brings to the table a mountain of complaints having nothing to do with the major part of the negotiations. I say that anybody having anything to do with labour must keep in mind that at the negotiating table you are dealing not only with particular questions of wages, reduction of hours or job security but also, whether you like it or not, with a build-up of resentment and bitterness resulting either from failure to solve complaints during the life of the agreement or from other factors which have produced a great deal of discontent and dissatisfaction.

This was one of the major problems in the longshoremen's strike. I have never acted for the longshoremen in Montreal, Quebec or Trois-Rivières but I have acted for them in Toronto and Hamilton. I know from personal experience at the negotiating table that it takes a couple of days to get rid of the complaints and the bitterness before you get down to discussing the issues to be negotiated.

Related to that—and this brings me directly to the department and to the legislation which the department administers—is the terrible prolongation of negotiations. The longshoremen's strike which was settled about a week ago had to do with revising a collective agreement that expired, if my memory serves me right, on November 30, 1965, some six or seven months ago. Negotiations were started before that. This sort of thing is true for almost every major set of negotiations. Our machinery permits either the employer or the union to drag his or its feet for months. It has been my experience—I am not impartial and I am therefore making this statement out of my particular set of premises and prejudices—that it is the employer who drags his feet. As a matter of fact, my information is that in the longshoremen's strike, until the Minister of Labour got into the picture some week or two before the final settlement, the union had not had any monetary offer from the Shipping Federation despite having gone through six months of negotiations. The union had not had an offer it could look at and consider.

I would not be exaggerating if I said that I have known hundreds of such cases where the employer, on the theory that if he starts too early he will have to give too much, withholds his offer until the last minute. And what does that result in?

People often blame unions, if I may interject this, as if they were impersonal corporations. I know that there are shareholders in a corporation and that there are members of the board, but the fact is that a corporation is a much more monolithic organization than a union. In the corporation a few persons are able to make a decision and the negotiators are told to carry it through.

Mr. Munro: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Lewis: Certainly.

Mr. Munro: I felt that the remarks of the hon. member for York South concerning collective bargaining were laudable and are remarks that many of us agree with. But how can he reconcile his statement with the bill his party advanced last week with respect to the longshoremen's strike, about which the hon. member was talking? That bill sought to legislate the men back to work for pay and other terms less favourable and more rigid than obtained in the settlement.

Mr. Lewis: Answering the question, first, the terms were not less favourable and, second, I make no apology for that bill. Since the hon. member for Hamilton East has asked the question I shall take a minute or two to answer it if he will listen with his ears and not with his prejudices.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: We considered the step very carefully, Mr. Chairman. We felt three things. We felt, first, that the economic situation had reached a point in Canada where some legislative step was likely to become necessary. Second, we felt if a step was likely to become necessary it was better if it were by legislation which did not involve compulsory arbitration but which in effect gave the workers the monetary increase which had already, we thought, been agreed to. The final agreement showed that we were right, because 80 cents over two years is exactly what was agreed to and what our bill proposed.

In our bill the remainder of the differences would be left to negotiations and to a commissioner of inquiry. Thus the collective bargaining system would not be interfered with, as my friend suggests.

Also—and I know every time one says something like this some hon. members shout with guilt feelings that they cannot control, "You are being pure" and all such nonsense, which does not phase me—we felt that precisely because of our close association with the labour movement in Canada a step suggesting legislation of this sort might serve a useful purpose in promoting negotiations, in stimulating them and, if you like, in bringing those negotiations further forward. We knew that hon. members in this house would ask exactly those questions the hon. member asked and would say that we were trying to interfere with collective bargaining. None the less we believed, right or wrong, that our bill on the floor of this house, or the suggestion of such a bill, would serve a useful and constructive purpose in stimulating the negotiations and in suggesting the kind of legislation that should be undertaken, if legislation should be necessary at all.

I can only say to the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, that we were delighted to see the result produced by collective bargaining. Let me point out that the good result was achieved only after practically the entire cabinet was involved and after the Prime Minister became involved in the negotiations. If you set such a precedent, too often the Prime Minister and the entire cabinet will be involved in settling labour disputes which ought to be settled without the involvement of the entire cabinet.

The question asked by the hon. member made me digress. I shall come back to what I said. I bring to the attention of the minister what I think is one of the matters that careful consideration should be given to, namely, that the time limits for negotiation and conciliation should be tightened. Since we already have law on the statute books dealing with this aspect of things, let us make the law workable. You can make the law workable only if the law sets very tight limits on the length of time during which the parties can negotiate directly before going to conciliation and, if conciliation is undertaken, before a final settlement one way or the other. We must in the future avoid the kind of lengthy, drawn-out process of negotiation and conciliation which can result and does result only in further bitterness, further resentment and a build-up of impatience among the rank and file of the union membership which makes it almost impossible for the bargaining committee to arrive at any conclusion which would be acceptable to union members.

We ought to look on the conciliator as being more important than we have hitherto done. Every conciliator ought to be of the rank of a mediator. It is not enough to sit down with the parties and listen to them, but carry no weight with them and have no influence with them. We should get the kind of conciliator who has a standing of great importance in the field of industrial relations, a man who has a knowledge way beyond that of the average conciliator today. He must carry weight with the parties.

I am confident as a result of intimate knowledge that the Air Canada strike could not have been avoided had not an experienced member of the Labour Department carried on the final phase of the discussions. I cannot pay too high a compliment to the excellent job Bernard Wilson did. I am confident that had it not been for a man like Bernard Wilson there would have been no settlement.

I would suggest too that a conciliator nowadays ought not to come to the bargaining table with empty hands and, if some of them will forgive my saying so, with empty heads as far as the facts of the situation are concerned. I cannot blame them. At the present time they are given no information. I think conciliators ought to have the benefit of a research organization behind them. When a conciliator goes to the bargaining table to help the parties adjust their differences he ought to have more information at his disposal than they have, not just as much, about working conditions in the industry, about the wages paid, about the wages paid in comparative fields, the place of the industry in relation to exports, and so on. All these matters relate to the settlement of wage and related disputes and ought to be within the knowledge of the conciliator. Otherwise, he listens to one story, which is usually exaggerated and distorted, then he listens to another, which is usually equally exaggerated and distorted, and is often completely at sea about what is really in dispute between the parties. I therefore make these few concrete suggestions.

I wish to turn now to the question of the longshoremen and the Labour Code and to say briefly that the minister failed to understand the questions asked by my leader, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, and the question I myself asked yesterday. We are not concerned with the latest court action. If the court found that the men violated an injunction order and felt they should be punished for doing so, that is a separate matter. What I am concerned with is that the Labour Code does not define an employee in adequate terms and does not make it sufficiently clear that people such as longshoremen come under the Labour Code, that they can as a matter of right refuse to work on the eight regular holidays mentioned in this code, again, that they have a right not to work longer hours than those provided by the code and that they have a right to refuse to work if they do not get the vacation pay which the code provides.

If we enact a law setting out benefits which workers in certain industries should enjoy, we ought to write that law in such a way as to make it impossible for employers to interfere with the rights of the workers. It is the first injunction I am concerned about, the fact that an employer was able to go to court and obtain an injunction forcing these men to go back to work.

The act and the regulations should be amended so that the workers may be able to exercise their rights without such interference on the part of the employer and without an opportunity for the courts to step in. I say, as a responsible member of parliament, I hope, and as a responsible member of the Canadian Bar, that the courts have allowed themselves to be led astray by employers demanding anti labour injunctions in labour disputes. From my study of the common law and the statute law of this country, about which I know a little in this field, I say it was never intended that the law of injunctions should be applied to labour disputes. It was intended to be applied only in civil matters involving the usual property differences between citizens. It is, in fact, being used—

The Chairman: Order. I must advise the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Nicholson: If the hon. member is nearly through I think that he should be allowed to continue.

Mr. Lewis: I did not hear the minister.

Mr. Nicholson: I understood from the hon. member that he had nearly finished and in view of that I think he should be allowed to complete his speech.

Mr. Lewis: That is right. I have only two or three sentences more.

The Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: I shall not abuse it, Mr. Chairman. With respect to the courts and the judiciary I say that they have allowed themselves to permit employers to abuse the process of the law in issuing these injunction orders in labour disputes. I hope the minister and his colleagues will give every consideration to the amendment of the Criminal Code or to some such amendment as I produced in the form of a bill in this house, so to define "watching and besetting" as to make it impossible for the courts to interfere as they have interfered. I am sure the courts have done so with the best of motives, believing they were carrying out the law. Well, let us change the law so that they will not be able to use an injunction order in effect to break strikes, in effect to force people to work, in effect to interfere with the bargaining process and the rights of Canadian workers.

I conclude by saying that though Canada has made great progress in the labour-management field we have still a considerable distance to go, and I urge the minister to give serious consideration to the suggestions which I have made, and which other hon. members have undoubtedly made in this field, as well as to various suggestions which his department could make to him and which none of us may have thought of.

Mr. Régimbal: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

About ten days ago the house, and especially the government members applauded with good reason the end of the longshoremen strike in Montreal. Throughout the house as well as throughout the country, everyone breathed more easily upon hearing about the settlement of that strike which had gone on for 37 days and had penalized, not only the parties involved, but practically all classes of our society in all the spheres of activity in the country. That sigh of relief marked, we hoped, the end of a very unhappy experience which unfortunately had resulted in nothing but misery, as is the case with most of the much publicized strikes.

At that time, we noticed in the ranks of the official opposition as well as in those of the other opposition parties, an almost complete lack of criticism because of the relief felt by everyone. However, that silence should not have been interpreted for a single moment as the expression of our satisfaction about the way the negotiations had been carried out or as a sign that we approved the government's intervention, because on that score, at least in all the corners of the opposition, I have the impression that everyone had felt a terrible disappointment. Now that the crisis is over, we would like to take advantage of this debate on the estimates to make known some of the serious thoughts we kept to ourselves then.

• (4:10 p.m.)

[English]

Since we were not able to make much comment at the time of the settlement of the longshoremen's strike I believe the time has now arrived when we can express our legitimate disappointment at the way the strike was allowed to continue and at the government's participation in efforts to settle it. How could we be other than disappointed when one stops to think that practically everybody in the country was adversely affected by the strike action?

During the days preceding the settlement, and even during the days preceding the strike itself, we posed several questions to the minister asking what action he intended to take to bring about a happy settlement before adverse effects would have to be endured. Unfortunately his answers always contained an expression of hope but did not outline the kind of action that was needed.

One of the main arguments that was used was that the government should not butt into private negotiations. A lot can be said for that proposition, but now we know that no settlement was reached until the government did butt in. That should not have been a last resort; it should have been the first resort.

Aside from the private features of the negotiations, where strike action is involved we must consider that it is a form of economic warfare in which A argues it out with B and, if agreement cannot be reached, he then takes a form of economic action in order to have himself judged right. This is the general atmosphere of any strike, but when the welfare of the people of Canada is involved the government has a very definite responsibility. We submit that the longshoremen's strike was a sad experience from beginning to end simply because the government took no action to avoid having the strike take place. Mr. Chairman, you can imagine how scandalized and disappointed we were at the enthusiasm which rocked the aisles on the government side of the chamber when settlement of the strike was announced. This was the second time in two years that we saw such a reaction from government supporters.

Anybody who knows anything about labour matters knows that the time to applaud is when a strike has been avoided. A strike is a state of war, and nobody can win anything out of a war whether it be in the economic field or in some other field. There is no reason to boast of a settlement. The time for boasting is when a strike has been avoided.

The same situation applied in the postal strike roughly a year ago. In that case we had nothing to gloat about but the fact that after everybody had suffered the government finally decided to do its little bit. I return to the point that government assistance should be offered before strike action is taken. Speeches were made to that effect before the longshoremen's strike took place, but to no avail. I repeat that the government has a responsibility to step in when the interests of the economy are involved.

Mr. Nicholson: Would the hon. member permit a question? Does he know just what the government did during the six weeks or so that preceded the settlement?

Mr. Régimbal: We tried persistently to find out but we could not get a definite word in reply.

Mr. Nicholson: I thought the hon. gentleman agreed that contentious matters should not be dealt with in this house during negotiations since it might disturb things. Does he not think that applies equally to the minister and to the government, even though he might have liked them to make a statement on the subject?

Mr. Régimbal: I do not get the sense of the question, Mr. Chairman, since the minister had so many statements to make after the strike was settled. Why were we denied information until everything had been settled? All the government said in all its answers was that it hoped for settlement.

I remember mentioning in one speech during discussion of the estimates, also, I think, that without interfering in the actual process of negotiations the prestige of the minister and of the Department of Labour should be introduced as a factor with the negotiating parties who should be talked to in this general sense: Look, you can squabble all you like and fight all you like, but speaking for the people I must advise you I cannot allow any economic action to go beyond that.

There are several things that could be done in such a situation. In fact I experienced one recently. I was not the victim but just a couple of weeks ago I was returning through Paris from Geneva when Air France employees declared a two-day strike against the company one week in advance of the actual strike action. It was announced in such a way that the public could take steps to protect themselves against the inconvenience of such economic warfare.

It seems to me that the minister should have acted much sooner in the longshoremen's dispute because once a strike is allowed to start we all know that the eventual settlement is going to be twice as hard and as bitter to achieve. The parties at that stage are commited, have taken their stands and usually do not budge quickly from their positions. The government should act before the fact rather than after the fact. It should act rather than just express the hope that the problem will go away. That is what it did on this occasion, but the problem did not go away and every class of society was affected.

Further, once the strike did take place the government's action left a lot to be desired. The strike was permitted to last much too long, some 37 days during which farmers, labour, management, industry and all classes of society were made to suffer. I come from a small town of approximately 10,000 population which contains four industries and all four were adversely affected by the strike. If that situation is multiplied all across Canada we can readily see what kind of economic tragedy a strike like this could have been and actually was.

In any event, when the government finally decided to act it is our feeling that all the wrong people became involved and that the action during the strike could have been directed better. I am referring particularly to the crash committees which were organized. Everybody questions the participation by or the fact that certain persons were involved. Everybody agrees the Minister of Industry should have been there—this is a normal thing—even though several question his actual knowledge in the field of industrial relations. However, this is a question of principle to which no one had any objection. Many persons have raised objection to the fact that the President of the Privy Council was involved, because everybody believes he knows little or nothing about the whole field of industrial relations. Everybody knows he has been on both sides of the table, the management side and the labour side. Anybody in industrial relations knows that a person who tries to play both sides usually ends up using both sides against the middle, and the middle in this case happens to be the Canadian people who deserve better.

Another was the ex-minister of labour. We have doubts about him because if he was such a good minister of labour we suspect he would still be minister of labour. Everybody is miffed and mesmerized by the fact that the one person who knows more about labour than anybody in the government was not called upon. I am referring to the Minster of Citizenship and Immigration who has a record of a whole life of experience in this field. I can understand that there could be personal implications, that there could be political implications and that there could be strategic implications, but it seems to me when any matter takes on the importance that this had we should drop these considerations and make sure that we send the best man in the circumstances to do the job.

The settlement itself certainly was not something we can crow about, mainly because we have just come out of the wonderful budget speech in which the Minister of Finance suggested very modestly to labour to please take their little old time and not insist on too many increases so that we can have a chance to settle our economy. Three weeks after that we come up with the biggest settlement that ever has been accomplished in Canada—30 per cent in two years. It is an amazing thing that we should find a contradiction like this within a few weeks and among the same people. Despite the recommendation of the Minister of Finance, without a doubt this is going to set a pattern for weeks to come. We dread the inevitable effect this will have on what everybody wants to be affected favourably, the cost of living. It seems to me a pattern has been set which necessarily will be followed in the negotiations that have broken down right now so far as the railways are concerned. Unfortunately you cannot get out of it too easily.

We are very disappointed with the way the strike was handled. We were very disappointed that the strike was allowed to happen and that it was allowed to last so long. Without being too pessimistic we fear that without a doubt we have just made the first step on a long path of suffering. It is on this particular basis that we very sincerely and modestly object.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I wish to occupy a few moments of the time of the house in the consideration of the estimates of the Department of Labour with regard to an item concerning shift differential rates of pay which never came to my attention until June 13. This information was given me while serving on the health and welfare committee.

I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Labour to a situation which I think cries aloud for immediate remedy. I know him to be a fair man and I sincerely believe he will take immediate action and not put it off until some time in the dim and distant future when collective bargaining may be instituted for employees of the government.

When the postmen went on strike in Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver and elsewhere in Canada I said in this House of Commons that I supported the postmen in going on strike for the simple reason that the government was telling them it could not pay them more money while at the same time it is the government which establishes the rates on mail and by keeping the postage rates down low the government is able to turn around and tell its employees that it cannot pay them more money because the revenue is not large enough. At the time of the strike I said, and I repeat it now, that when the cabinet was in a position to raise the rates to a fair and reasonable level they certainly were not justified in telling the post office employees that they could not raise their rates of pay.

We now have a situation in the Department of Veterans Affairs and in the Department of National Health and Welfare which I maintain cries aloud for correction. I believe it is the duty of the Department of Labour to step in. On two occasions I publicly have congratulated the Minister of Veterans Affairs for his administration of that department. I based my congratulations and commendation in large measure on the fact that they were providing a shift differential rate of pay to the nursing staff of the Department of Veterans Affairs hospitals across the dominion. Although I have been in business for 40 years and have been accustomed to shift differentials for workers who are working evening shifts or night shifts as opposed to the day shift, I never thought for a moment that the shift differentials being paid in the Department of Veterans Affairs were such that they cry aloud for immediate correction.

It is some years since I first began to agitate in public for a shift differential and day premium rate of pay for nurses on the staffs of our hospitals in the Dominion of Canada. In my investigation some years ago I was very pleased to learn that in the province of Quebec and in the province of Saskatchewan the hospital services commissions were paying shift differentials to nurses on evening and night shifts compared with the rate of pay for day shifts. This is not the case in the other eight provinces of Canada. In the province of Quebec the director of nursing at Notre Dame Hospital in Montreal told me about six years ago that the differential in the rate of pay was 12 cents an hour on the night shift and 15 cents an hour on the evening shift compared with the day rate. This was a rather interesting statement because of the fact that there was a higher differential for the evening shift than for the night shift. Normally the night shift draws the highest differential. I cannot remember the name of the order to which this director of nursing belongs, but she told me that the nurses maintained that the shift from four o'clock to midnight interfered with their social life much more than did the midnight to eight a.m. shift, and for that reason the evening shift received a 15 cent differential and the night shift a 12 cent differential.

The province of Saskatchewan has had an equally good shift differential on these two shifts. So when it was announced in 1963 that the Department of Veterans Affairs would be paying a shift differential effective April 1, 1964, I, as a person interested in the matter, took it for granted that the rates would be in conformity with standard practice this country over or this continent over. I congratulated the minister and investigated the matter no further.

However, when I was attending the committee on health and welfare considering the estimates on June 13 I asked the officials of the department who were then appearing before the committee whether they were paying shift differentials to nurses in hospitals for Eskimos and Indians which come under their direct control, in the same manner as the Department of Veterans Affairs. I was advised that they were paying the rates established by Treasury Board.

I am very glad that one of the officials who appeared before us on June 13 later sent me a letter in which he said:

> At today's meeting of the national health and welfare estimates committee you asked me about the shift differential regulations. I thought you might like to have a copy of this.

He enclosed photostatic copies of the Treasury Board shift differential minutes. I was astounded to learn that the shift differentials paid by the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of National Health and Welfare for nurses are 8 cents an hour on the evening shift and 12 cents an hour on the night shift. While I may have been astounded to learn of these absolutely ridiculously low rates of shift differentials I was dumbfounded by the discovery that the Dominion of Canada does not pay the shift differentials for the full shift. In the case of the evening shift from 4 p.m. to midnight they only pay the shift differential for six hours, and on the night shift from midnight to 8 a.m. they only pay the shift differential for six hours from midnight to 6 a.m. The Treasury Board maintains that they are day work hours from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. and that anybody who is working what the Treasury Board calls day work hours is only going to be paid day rates of pay and the rate differential will only be applied to six hours on the evening shift and six hours on the night shift.

I will read into the record Treasury Board action in this regard as indicated by extracts from the minutes of a meeting of the honourable Treasury Board held at Ottawa on December 12, 1963. It is headed "T.B. 609965 Treasury Board". It states:

> The Treasury Board, pursuant to section 7 of the Financial Administration Act, is pleased to make the attached regulations respecting shift differential allowances effective April 1, 1964.

It is signed, I believe, by Mr. D. M. Watters. Attached is a Xerox copy of the shift differential allowances. Number one states that these regulations may be cited as shift differential allowance regulations. I will not read them in their entirety, but I should like to read 2(b) and 2(c) which are as follows:

> (b) "evening work" means regularly scheduled work performed by a public servant between 6 p.m. and midnight;
> (c) "night work" means regularly scheduled work by a public servant between midnight and 6 a.m.;

Section 3 reads:

> Subject to sections 4 and 7, every public servant shall, in addition to his salary, be paid an allowance of 8 cents per hour for evening work and 12 cents per hour for night work.

These regulations are taken from the official Treasury Board regulations. This is a Xerox copy from which I have read.

Having been astounded, as I already said, by the minuscule shift differentials of 8 cents an hour and 12 cents an hour, I telephoned a reliable source of information in Montreal only last week with regard to nurses' rates of pay in the province of Quebec. This informant of mine is a man who holds a very responsible position in the hospital field in that province and he advised me that they pay a shift differential of $1.85 from 4 p.m. to 12 p.m. and that this shift differential applies to the whole eight hour shift. This differential is at the rate of 23.1 cents per hour compared with the 12 cents per hour shift differential paid by the government from 12 p.m. to 8 a.m. The Quebec hospitals pay a shift differential of $1 on evening shift for the full eight hours. This is 12.5 cents an hour. They are paying 12.5 cents an hour compared with the federal government paying 8 cents an hour and they pay 23.1 cents an hour compared with the federal government paying 12 cents an hour. I ask you, how in the name of heaven these ridiculous rates paid by the federal government can be justified?

We pay the province of Quebec $200 million a year in equalization payments in order to help this have-not province. If they accept $200 million per year and can pay a differential of $1.85 per shift, surely to heaven the federal government, which thinks it is in a position to give $200 million a year to Quebec in equalization payments, should be able to match at least the shift differentials paid by the province of Quebec to its nurses. The province of Quebec pays its nurses a shift differential per week of $9.25 on the night shift but the federal government is only able to pay its shift workers a shift differential of $3.60 per week on the night shift. The province of Quebec is able to pay a shift differential of $5 a week and the federal government under comparative circumstances can only pay $2.40 a week for the evening shift. I cannot see how the Canadian government can ask nurses to work six hours in the evening for an extra eight cents an hour, which is 48 cents, because generosity such as that may ruin the country.

The first item in the estimates of the department refers to the Canada Fair Employment Practices Act, to the administration of the Canada Labour (Standards) Code, to the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act, to the fair wages policy order and to the Female Employees Equal Pay Act. When we are discussing legislation such as those acts to which these estimates apply, it is only right and proper that I should refer to these ridiculous rates of pay which have been authorized by the Treasury Board, and demand that the Department of Labour take a hand in this matter. Does 8 cents an hour for six hours and 12 cents an hour for six hours measure up to the Canada Labour (Standards) Code? Do these rates measure up to the Canada Fair Employment Practices Act? Do they measure up to decent labour-employer relations?

In reading the opening statement of the Minister of Labour made to the house on May 27 when these estimates were first introduced, I note that he referred to the fact that his work falls largely into three sectors, two of which are labour management relations and labour standards and benefits. Later in his remarks he referred to the Canada Labour (Standards) Code and stated as reported at page 5634 of Hansard for May 27:

> I can say this, that the code has already had a very important effect in eliminating pockets of substandard wages—

I should like to see this code take effect in respect of these substandard wage areas relating to the 8 cent and 12 cent shift differentials paid in the D.V.A. hospitals and hospitals under the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Then the minister makes this interesting comment, as reported on the same page:

> I should like to refer also to an increased activity in the woman's bureau of the Department of Labour. This provides a continuing focus in our department on policies and programs relating to the standards and conditions of work of women. The bureau aims...to promote working conditions in every industry throughout Canada that are conducive to the well-being of the women, and efficient production. The role of this woman's bureau is becoming increasingly important as more women, both married and single, enter the labour force.

I trust that I will not be criticized by anyone on this side of the house if I ask the women's division of the Department of Labour to consider this 8 cent an hour shift differential for six hours out of eight and the 12 cent shift differential for six hours out of eight compared with the $1.85 or 23.1 cent per hour shift differential that is paid in the province of Quebec on the evening shift and the $1 for eight hours or 12.5 cent per hour shift differential also paid.

Surely we can bring the federal shift differentials up to the same level as those paid in a province which is willing to be branded as a have-not province and gladly accepts $200 million from the federal treasury. This would bring these rates up to those which that province has set for itself as pie in the sky.

I do not believe that the comments I have made today are a reflection on the Department of Labour or on the Minister of Labour. I doubt very much if he is aware of the fact that wages of this kind are being paid. I draw your attention to the interesting comment made by the official of the Department of National Health and Welfare who sent me these xerox copies from which I have quoted. He makes this statement, that the responsibility for recommending amendments would rest on the staff of the Treasury Board. This is mighty interesting. I wonder if I, as an elected member of parliament, might not have some responsibility in recommending that the rates of pay under the heading of "shift differentials" should be altered and should be altered right away? I will never rest satisfied until the nurses of the Dominion of Canada are not only getting a decent shift differential but are being paid day premium rates of pay for work performed on national holidays.

We talk about the tremendous shortage of nurses in our hospitals. It is the most critical shortage in any single vocation in Canada, Mr. Chairman. It is a continuing problem for all doctors and all hospitals. It will never be settled until the rates of pay are commensurate with the services that these women give, particularly on the night shifts and when they work on holidays while other people are away enjoying themselves. I sincerely draw the attention of the Minister of Labour to these figures which, so far as I am concerned, were only disclosed on June 13. The minister made his opening statement on May 27. I am relying on his fairness and good nature to take the matter in hand right away.

When we tell the civil servants that when they get collective bargaining everything will be wonderful, we should warn them that there are many employees who have collective bargaining for whom conditions are not exatly perfect. You cannot accomplish much under collective bargaining unless both sides sit at the bargaining table and bargain in good faith. You can give the post office employees collective bargaining, but if you are not willing to raise the rates on mail matter you will tell the postal employees that you cannot raise their rates because you have not got the money.

If you are going to sit down with the hospital workers and tell them that you will only pay 8 cents an hour for part of a shift, then you are not approaching the labour problem in a fair manner when other employers who pay a shift differential are paying it for a full shift. These people have to be paid on a reasonable basis and not on the basis of this miniscule figure of 8 cents an hour for six hours on one shift and 12 cents an hour for six hours on another shift. I leave the matter in the hands of the Minister of Labour, since I believe he is a fair man. I do not belive he will delay in rectifying this ridiculous situation which has been placed on the record of the government by Treasury Board order of December 12, 1963, which became effective April 1, 1964.

Mr. Macaluso: May I have permission to put a short question to the Minister of Labour? It is a question and not a statement of any kind. As a result of information that has come to me, I ask the minister if he can inform the committee whether the R.C.M.P. searches which are now going on about the premises of the Seafarers' International Union are in fact related to alleged irregularities on the part of the present officers of the Seafarers' International Union? I think the minister will appreciate the importance of this matter which I am bringing to his attention. I put the question as a result of information which I left the house in order to receive and I certainly hope the minister can make a report on this situation.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, it had been my intention to try to deal with points raised by individual members at the conclusion of all their remarks. I must confess, however, that in view of certain publicity that has resulted from the events to which the hon. member has just referred, namely, the searches that were made earlier today by the R.C.M.P. and may still be going on, I thought such a question might have been put to the Solicitor General or the Minister of Justice earlier this afternoon. However, I do believe that the members of this committee and the public generally are perhaps entitled to some information at this time, in view of the wording of the question which has been put to me.

I wish the Solicitor General or the Minister of Justice were here to give the answer, but they are not so I will try to answer. I can only say that it is not the practice of the Department of Justice or the Solicitor General to supply information about active investigations. However, I can say, and I think I should say in view of the way the question was worded, that the searches that are being made today are not related to the present officers of the S.I.U. but are related to the activities of the past president, Mr. Hal Banks.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, is rising to speak on the estimates of the Department of Labour I want to make it clear at the outset that any remarks I make about labour do not arise out of frustration as a result of past employer-employee relationships between this member and the minister, but perhaps rather reflect the general frustration one feels about employer-employee relationships in Canada today and the inactivity of the government in trying to resolve them. In the few minutes we have left before private members' hour, I must say I am somewhat surprised that the minister has brought forth the estimates of his department at this stage. In many ways he reminds one of the saying about certain individuals who tread where angels fear to walk, especially in view of certain strike settlements that have dominated the headlines and the Canadian economy for the last four weeks as well as the pending strikes and unsettled labour situation which will dominate the Canadian economy and the Department of Labour during the summer months and early autumn.

Perhaps the minister might deserve credit for his courage in bringing forward his estimates now if there were no other labour disputes on the scene. However, if the purpose in bringing forward the labour estimates now is to cloak the disputes of the future and choke debate on the pending labour problems, then I suggest the minister is to be criticized for attempting to get the labour estimates passed at this time. In view of the participation directly or indirectly, and in both cases about which I am talking it became direct in the last stages, of the federal government in negotiations which resulted in the approval of a 30 per cent increase over two years for the workers in two recent labour strikes, the federal government has been a party to a precedent for the settlement of labour problems in Canada for the next while. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this precedent is going to be in effect an economic albatross that will be hung around the neck of not only the Minister of Labour but the government as well.

This 30 per cent increase in dollars and cents alone will bring wages close to the minimum wage ceiling in certain provinces. On what basis was the 30 per cent arrived at? I had some experience on the west coast with school boards and when settling wage disputes one looked at all the relevant factors. You looked at the increase in the cost of living, the increases in wages, the increase in productivity and you arrived at a contract that took all these factors into consideration. When you approve a settlement which involves a 30 per cent increase in wages over two years, over a contract that was settled two years ago and was satisfactory at that time, then you have the height of irresponsibility.

Unemployment may have been the bane of the former Conservative government and certain members of the present government stood up day after day and criticized the Conservative government about it. I believe it is the duty now of the opposition to stand up and, on a more specific aspect of the labour problem, bring before the house and the people of Canada valid criticism of an area in which the government has become involved and with which it is going to have to live. I am afraid that, like the ancient mariner, the albatross is going to choke the government when it attempts the settlement of other labour disputes.

We had an exhibition here by the Minister of National Health and Welfare the day before the longshoremen's strike was settled. The strike was then in its 38th day and there were 143 ships tied up in Montreal harbour. The minister stood up in the house and gave a learned exposition of the philosophy of collective bargaining. No one could take exception to that just as no one could take exception to the hon. member for York South saying this afternoon that people had the right to strike. However, Mr. Chairman, an exposition on the philosophy of collective bargaining by a minister who was the former minister of labour in the 38th day of a strike which tied up the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec, is something like the minister standing up and expressing his approval of motherhood. We are all in favour of collective bargaining and we are all in favour of motherhood. However, even dear mother, if she stalled her car on a highway and backed up 143 cars behind her, would be liable to a reprimand or to some help from the authorities. Even mother, if she stalls her car at an intersection when the green light is on, would be either reprimanded or given a little push by the authorities.

The mere fact that these authorities would reprimand mother would be no sign that the institution of motherhood was being attacked. In so far as mother with the car is concerned, you might take one police officer and help move her down the road. Here, however, we had the fantastic situation of the government, with all the cabinet reorganization that is going on, allowing five ministers to participate in the negotiations, including the Prime Minister. Referring again to the analogy with mother, I say that one officer might move the car if he knew what he was doing rather than have the whole police force help to move that little car down the road. I wish the Minister of National Health and Welfare were here because I felt some provocation to stand up and question him on his statement but the rules of the house did not allow it. How can the Minister of National Health and Welfare say that the process of collective bargaining, which is fine in principle, is working after a strike of 39 days, after 143 ships have been tied up and when the government finally intervenes to help?

We had midnight seances. We on this side of the house thought that seances were a thing of the past in government. Here we have four or five ministers, including the Prime Minister, having meetings and looking for guidance. Finally, as a result of one fact or another, they resolved the longshoremen's strike. After the dissertation by the Minister of National Health and Welfare there was tremendous applause. The hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes remarked on this applause. I must say it rather got me. It would have made my grade 6 teacher feel great. I wish she could come here some time. I think she would have a lesson to teach all of us. She taught school for 52 years in one school. This is a fact. She happened to teach the man who was the principal, she taught my father and she taught many people before she retired two years ago. She believed in the principles of reading, writing and arithmetic. She had many pithy sayings and many fables. I know hon. members would be interested in one of the fables. I refer to that fable about the empty vessel making the most noise. I believe this could be applied to the applause which greeted the minister's dissertation on the philosophy of collective bargaining.

The minister's dissertation on the philosophy of collective bargaining was certainly punctured by having all those vessels tied up and this strike prolonged. I suggest that somewhere along the line the good of this country must transcend the competing and conflicting interests of combinations or groups of economic units. I am very sorry the Minister of National Health and Welfare is not here, because he was a very good professor. I am afraid he forgets, as other members of the government forget, that they are not professors now. They do not have to preach economic philosophy. They do not have to talk around the rights or wrongs of collective bargaining. They do not have to read textbooks on the subject. They are in the position of power and in the position of government. They are not in the classrooms but in the seats of authority where they should act. And they should act, and not agonize, in order to settle strikes before they happen rather than surrender responsibility after they have occurred.

That is just what has happened with hon. gentlemen across the way, and I am afraid with the Minister of Labour, certainly in the case of the longshoremen's and the St.

Lawrence seaway strikes. In regard to the longshoremen's strike, the minister asked the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes if he knew what the government did for the longshoremen. I would ask the minister what the government did for the seaway workers. I think that their acquiescence in the settlement of the seaway strike was more than an indictment of the inactivity of the government.

The position of the longshoremen did involve some cross-currents at first. But in the seaway strike the government appointed a Senator renowned for his prescience and knowledge of international law, but who I suggest, with all respect to him, has not mediated a labour dispute for years. Perhaps the minister would tell the house when this Senator last mediated a labour dispute, let alone a dispute affecting anything so involved and important as the St. Lawrence seaway. I suggest that the St. Lawrence seaway strike involves and indicts the government even more.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. member would want me to comment on the fact that he has referred to the St. Lawrence seaway strike three times. That matter was a dispute; it was never a strike.

Mr. Nowlan: The minister is quite correct, Mr. Chairman; it was not a strike and I thank him for that correction. But my point about the pending strike on the St. Lawrence seaway and/or settlement negotiations is this. The minister asked the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes to list all the things he had done. We on this side had been asking day after day what the government was doing. It is now clear what happened. So far as the St. Lawrence seaway is concerned there was never any intention to negotiate. It was merely a case of filling in a blank cheque; and that is what happened.

Mr. Mackasey: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? Does the hon. member, as a representative of a party which is supposed to be of pro-labour as well as pro-management sentiment, disapprove of the package deal that the employees of the seaway obtained with regard to parity of wages with those working on the United States side? Is he saying in effect that he disagreed with that settlement?

Mr. Nowlan: I am saying this, Mr. Chairman. The Minister of Finance suggested certain principles should be followed to restrain inflation; his words were rather to "put a brake on prosperity". By the government's acquiescence and involvement, its capitulation and surrender to the seaway workers, it has broken the philosophy of any budget which the Minister of Finance is trying to sell to the Canadian people.

Mr. Mackasey: Would the hon. member permit another question? I was interested in his answer. Is he suggesting that one step to prevent inflation is to deny labour an increase in wages?

Mr. Nowlan: No, Mr. Chairman, I am not suggesting any such thing. I see it is almost five o'clock or past five o'clock, and this question is so frivolous it has upset me. I would suggest to the hon. member that so far as I am personally concerned the government stated that because of inflation the 11 per cent sales tax could not be removed and that they could not give $25 extra to the old age pensioners because of inflation. Yet a month and a half later, instead of putting the brake on prosperity, they stepped on the gas pedal of inflation and agreed to a settlement amounting to 80 cents an hour over a two-year period. In contrast, the increase for the old age pensioners would have involved only 80 cents a day.

So far as I can see this government is not showing leadership or responsibility to the Canadian people at large. I am not speaking for labour or against it; neither am I speaking for or against business. I am speaking on my concept of a body of people. I think labour is aware of this situation too. After the strike was settled I was passing through Montreal the next day and I happened to read in the Montreal Star that one of the labour leaders had described it as a "fabulous settlement".

I would ask the hon. member for Verdun—let us play tit for tat so far as questions are concerned—whether he believes in and agrees with a 30 per cent settlement in any negotiations in which he has been involved, and would he have made this settlement?

Mr. Mackasey: It would depend. Thirty per cent of what?

The Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Nowlan: That is the difficulty of asking questions—

Suggested Promotion of Trade

The Chairman: Order, please. It being five o'clock shall I rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. member for Ontario may be reluctant to make this request because a member of his own party was speaking at five o'clock, but in view of the extreme importance of the subject matter may I suggest that we postpone private members' hour for today and spend the time between now and six o'clock dealing with the Department of Labour estimates?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, we have quite a number of speakers who want to speak on the estimates of the Department of Labour and I do not think there would be sufficient time to complete them before six o'clock. I know there are two or three speakers also from the New Democratic Party who want to speak on these estimates.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions, public bills.

TRADE

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—NEW ENGLAND STATES AND WEST INDIES—SUGGESTED PROMOTION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of taking an initiative in promoting increased trade between the Atlantic provinces and such traditional market areas as the New England states of the United States and those islands formerly comprising the British West Indies.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by expressing a word of thanks to the house, especially to my colleague, friend and cousin, the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), who on Monday saved my spot or position on the order paper. Perhaps my position otherwise is not of the kind that can be rescued but I appreciate the action of the house and especially that of my colleague.

The motion which I have presumed to bring to the attention of the house this year is similar to a motion which I have brought forward on previous occasions in preceding parliaments. My earlier version was couched in the terminology once used by the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) when he sat on this side of the house, which called for considering the advisability of establishing free trade between Canada and a portion of what used to be known as the British West Indies.

Since I have not succeeded in having that motion adopted even with the minister on that side, I have changed the terminology and therefore the direction of the motion somewhat and I am now suggesting that consideration be given to freer trade between my area, the Atlantic region, and some of its traditional areas of trade and of close relations other than trade, and I mention the New England states and the West Indies islands.

There has been, as hon. members may have noticed, in recent months some interest, especially in the province of the minister of health and welfare, Nova Scotia, in the question of considering out-and-out free trade between the Atlantic provinces of Canada and the New England states. A resolution was passed in the Nova Scotia House of Assembly to have this matter considered. There has also been some discussion involving the governors of some of the states of New England. It is not surprising that this interest has been stimulated to a degree by what has taken place in other parts of the country, namely, the establishment of what one might describe as free trade on a commodity basis. It is argued that if free trade between southern Ontario and northern Michigan in the form of the automotive free trade agreement can be operative, then so might free trade on a broader regional basis, namely, between the Atlantic provinces and New England, be considered.

There are, of course, difficulties in this situation. There might be some difficulties so far as control of the commodities are concerned once they have been exchanged vis-à-vis domestic trade.

With regard to New England, we must surely all be convinced that the economy of the Atlantic region of Canada is lagging, that it is continuing to lag, and that the lag between our area and the rest of Canada is broadening rather than narrowing. So if any way can be devised whereby we can facilitate the shipment of our goods and stimulate the output of our industries, this way should certainly be considered.

When I last spoke on this subject I suggested that we had perhaps reached the stage where another full-fledged commission of inquiry into our economy was in order, something of the scope and comprehension of the White or Duncan commissions. If such an inquiry were launched this general question of the stimulation of our trade should certainly be one of the subjects to receive attention.

I am not going to deal any further with the question of trade with New England, Mr. Speaker. I should like to confine the rest of my remarks more particularly to the other area which is mentioned in the resolution, namely, the West Indies.

It is not surprising that this initiative should come from one from the maritimes. Perhaps it is appropriate that it should come from one who is a resident of an island. The ties of sentiment, and of more than sentiment, between the maritimes and the West Indies are old. They used to be very strong and there are many of us who wish that they were stronger now.

This resolution is based on two considerations. The first, and I say this quite unabashedly, is the desire for an improvement in the economy of the Atlantic provinces. The stimulation of our seaborne trade is a very obvious factor in any such improvement. I do not have to belabour the house with statistics relating to this aspect.

Second, it stems from my own conviction that we must quickly upgrade our interest in the West Indies for reasons other than selfish or economic motives. There is a growing and, to me, disturbing disillusionment among some of the leaders in the West Indies. There was a very interesting and I think useful gathering at Dalhousie University last month in which leaders of the West Indies and of the maritimes participated. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) delivered an address. This meeting was a hopeful sign.

But if one reads the reports of this gathering one finds that the leaders of the West Indies, although in Canada, were not reluctant to make statements such as: "Canada is dragging its feet in the field of external aid." Those leaders suggested that they were hoping for some greater initiative in the development of broadening trade between the two areas.

We all want to be hopeful about the larger gathering which is to take place in Ottawa on July 6. Being very hopeful I trust that this session will have adjourned for the summer recess before then so that nothing will interfere with the success of the meeting. We want to see that gathering successful.

Mr. Knowles: I hope we will get medicare through before then.

Mr. Macquarrie: That gathering will be between the heads of the Caribbean commonwealth countries and our own head of government. They will sit down to look in broad perspective at the problems of the Caribbean area and at the possibilities and prospects for improving relations, trade and other things between Canada and this area.

I do not want to raise any bogies and point out the great dangers existing in West Indian communities, now approaching political independence, owing to many of them having economies that fall far short of being viable. Some communities have achieved political independence. Indeed, some of the leaders of these areas point out the dangers which might develop in such a volatile part of the world because of such great economic poverty, political uncertainty and, shall we say, a proximity to a very dangerous part of the world, namely, Mr. Castro's Cuba.

We are concerned with these things as we look out to the world because we are a state which justifiably prides itself on its diplomacy. We seek to make our contribution in the field of foreign policy. Sometimes we almost suggest that we know the French better than the British know them although the British have dealt with the French for centuries. We sometimes suggest that we understand all sorts of people better than does the United States, which comes in close and daily contact with them.

I suggest that if there is any part of the world in which for us there is a combination of unique opportunity and superior ability to do something, it is in the Caribbean area. I know of no part of the world in which a limited degree of Canadian economic aid could be so helpful as in this area. I know of no part of the world where the failure of the have nations, to use that expression, to participate to the full could be more dangerous and explosive.

All that this resolution attempts to do is to stimulate what I think is a latent Canadian friendship and Canadian interest in the West Indies and the current problems thereof. There is a reservoir of good will between our peoples. There is a maximum of opportunity.

Suggested Promotion of Trade

However, our external aid is not nearly what it should be. I do not think we have explored the possibilities of stimulating trade between the Caribbean and our country. We have let the "Lady" boats go out of existence and we have not replaced them. It looks as though private industry is not able or not willing to replace them. We should consider perhaps if it is not sufficiently important for Canada to return to some form of subsidy whereby we can use the Atlantic to carry goods north and south between these two areas.

We have made one forward step in developing air contacts. There are other forward steps. But I do not think we shall ever fulfil our destiny with respect to the West Indies if we look at the West Indies only as somewhere to have some fun in the sun if you can afford it, where you can drink good rum if you like it or put molasses on your bread if you are sufficiently old-fashioned.

Mr. Knowles: Explain.

Mr. Macquarrie: I am old-fashioned.

An hon. Member: We will drink to that.

Mr. Macquarrie: I have said enough. I want to give others an opportunity to speak. I want to leave time for a vote so that the government may go to the conference on July 6 with a unanimous House of Commons behind it in order that the people of the Caribbean may realize that we all here are interested in their welfare. and that we all want to take the first forward step in improving trade conditions between their important region and ours.

Mr. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, in his notice of motion the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) suggests that trade be increased between the Atlantic provinces and our traditional markets in New England and the West Indies. I feel that I must agree in principle with the proposition and I wish to take this occasion to put forward an extremely interesting proposal now promoted by a Montreal businessman, Mr. Kenneth Patrick, who is a former maritimer. I believe that Mr. Patrick's proposal is dynamic, colourful and makes a lot of sense. I am not saying that the government should adopt it in toto or immediately but I am saying that the proposition deserves the most sympathetic and active consideration.

Mr. Patrick's proposal is that Canada assume the role of a senior partner of the newly independent states, that we invite them to join us in a monetary and customs union and that we assume responsibility for their defence and external affairs. This may appear to be a dramatic proposal, and no doubt it is, but I suggest this is one more reason for looking at it closely. It could very well be the kind of stuff which would place Canada in the world spotlight as a nation with initiative and imagination. I believe the challenge was made exactly to our size.

The West Indies have now arrived at a period of decision and this is exactly the time when Canadian assistance could make the difference between prosperity and disintegration. The proposal to which I am now referring deals only with the eight islands commonly known as "the little eight", which include Barbados, the three Leeward Islands —Antigua, St. Kitts and Montserrat—and the Windward Islands comprising Dominica, St. Lucia, St. Vincent and Grenada. The population of these eight islands is slightly above 700,000. The total land area is about half of Prince Edward Island. These islands are but three hours away from Canada by air. As a matter of fact, they are closer in terms of air distance to the capital of our country than Ottawa is to many Canadians both east and west.

The main principle behind the proposition is that these islands need our assistance and that Canada needs the West Indies. The timing of this proposition is of some importance because the Prime Ministers of these islands will be meeting with our own Prime Minister here in Ottawa next month. Moreover, Barbados will become an independent commonwealth country very shortly and Antigua will also become a self-governing state in free association with Britain. The other islands will soon achieve the same status. The year 1966 or 1967 should see the end of a century of colonial rule. These islands will be looking for a direction, a destiny, a new alliance, co-operation with other states. It is therefore the right time for Canada to become interested in dealing more intimately with these newly independent governments.

These islands need Canada because they need a new influx of capital, they are short of know-how and they will want new markets. Canada needs their climate. Canadians already provide 40 per cent of the tourist business of these islands. Under a monetary union it will be as if Canadians were spending their own money at home. This Canadian money can be used for purchases from Canada and as much needed capital for the industrial development of the islands.

The West Indies also produce now or can be placed in a position to produce goods which we are at present purchasing elsewhere. Because of the prevailing climate, which is probably the most favourable in the world for the 12 months of the year, they can produce agricultural products to be sold in Canada for an amount close to half a billion dollars a year. These figures are bound to grow with an increase in Canadian demand and an increased capability to produce on the islands. This is about the sum of money which Canadians spend every year seeking the sun in all parts of the world. The fantastic sums which Canadians now spend purchasing food outside the country and as tourists represent a drain on our balance of payments position which could partly be solved by customs and monetary union with the West Indies.

As I have said, the proposal includes our being responsible for external affairs and defence. Canada already staffs embassies throughout the world. It would seem that not much greater expense would be involved should these islands wish to be represented by our diplomats.

As to our assuming our responsibility for defence, here again arises a proposal which is worthy of consideration. We are at the present time organizing a mobile force to stand in readiness for brush-fire wars anywhere in the world. It would appear at the present time that these small wars are most likely to occur in countries with tropical or semi-tropical climates. Such being the case, why should our mobile force not train in tropical or semi-tropical climates, exactly the conditions provided by these eight little islands? Our Canadian military personnel in the West Indies would not only be in a position to get some experience in such a climate but would also provide some measure of defence to the islands. That, of course, would result in substantial economic benefit to the islands. Our armed forces personnel have already built roads, airports and other public works in many other areas of the world. Why could they not concentrate on these islands?

Our crown corporation, Air Canada, is already carrying heavy traffic during the winter to these islands. Other arrangements could be arrived at to carry not only passengers but air freight which would be of benefit both to Canada and to the West Indies.

Such a proposal for a monetary and customs union with the West Indies should be based on direct assistance and investment by Canada for a definite period. An investment of some $20 million by way of a soft loan concentrated in one small area such as the West Indies would have a tremendous impact. It would be an investment which would bring dividends to Canadians in the near future. Canada has experts and trained personnel in various departments such as agriculture, fisheries, transport, public works, central mortgage and so on. Some of our trained people could bring fabulous assistance to the people of the West Indies. They could advise them on building homes and industries, on producing and packing the goods we cannot produce here and which we are now purchasing elsewhere.

As I stated before, the matter is of some urgency because these islands have already reached or are approaching their independence and the time for us to bring assistance and to assert our leadership is now.

Two winters ago I was in Barbados and I realized then for the first time how friendly these people were to Canadians. They probably enjoy dealing with us because we share some of their traditions and because Canadians are known as not being racially prejudiced. Many of the West Indies leaders are graduates from Canadian universities and there are more West Indies students in Canada now than in any other country.

These islands have a long tradition of English and French culture. Barbados and Antigua have had the English culture and tradition for three centuries. St. Lucia is a bilingual country with both our official languages, French and English, and the civil code of St. Lucia is the Quebec civil code.

The Patrick proposal which I have just described has merited considerable constructive consideration in many newspaper editorials across the country, and I would like to quote from two of them. The Financial Post of June 4, 1966, had this to say:

> Yet what form should this take? More aid would help. So would more soft loans. But is this enough? An imaginative program that would go much further is now being actively promoted by its author, Montreal businessman and one of the founders of Canadian Aviation Electronics, Kenneth Patrick. With the enthusiastic support of the little eight, Patrick suggests a form of Canada-West Indies integration, which would include the Canadian dollar as the standard currency throughout the islands, the removal of all customs barriers, the basing of Canadian troops in the islands for training, and the establishment of Canada as the official representative of the islands in other countries.

It is a fresh and iconoclastic program and deserves the serious study it is now receiving in official Ottawa circles. But plainly there are troubles for everyone lurking beneath its attractive surface.

Is Patrick proposing that Canada become the new colonial power to replace Britain? If there is to be a single currency and no customs barriers, Ottawa would have to insist on maintaining considerable control of business and financial activities in the islands. This could be resented. So could the presence of Canadian troops over any long period. Would External Affairs recruit West Indians for Canada's foreign service to speak for the islands and for Canada?

These points should be discussed in official Ottawa. Canada must make clear what it requires from the islands in return for any such commitments on our part. That is the sort of talk that is needed next month. If we send the West Indians home again without having shown a real desire to talk business, we stand to pay a stiff price in later bitterness and lost opportunities.

My point, Mr. Speaker, is not that we should necessarily adopt the Patrick proposal but that it should be studied very closely by the government. It is a striking proposal, it has the merit of being new and it deserves the attention of parliament and the government.

I should like to conclude my remarks by quoting extracts from a recent editorial in the Barbados Sunday Times of June 5, 1966, entitled "Conference With A Difference":

For the second time in 40 years delegates from nearly every West Indian territory will gather to discuss relations with Canada. On the last occasion the conference was held in Ottawa without any preliminary discussion in one of these colonies. This is in modern parlance, a conference with a difference. On the last occasion the West Indies joined in establishing the Canada-West Indies trade agreement which lasted for many years and which was disrupted by the second world war. At that time all the territories were under the administrative heel of the Colonial Office. Today three of these are independent nations and the others are on the verge of independence judging by the recent offer of the British government.

As we have pointed out, many of the then dependent territories are now masters in their own house.

It is in this spirit that we enter consideration of an agenda which must bind us for good or ill to the Canadian people.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am going to speak in this debate in a manner that no doubt will justify a headline, this being a case of rare unanimity within the house, because I would like to bring the support of our party to this resolution and also to commend not only the hon. member who moved it but the very constructive speech that has just been made by the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Dubé).

[Mr. Dubé.]

I think this resolution is extremely valuable. It has dual purposes, both of which we should approve and which certainly are very close to our hearts. Part of the resolution deals with the problem of regional development and I believe that we who come from all parts of Canada should take the question of regional development much more seriously than we do. The whole principle of regional development is one that is given a fair amount of lip service. We talk about regional development, regional balance and regional fiscal equality. These are slogans to which lip service is traditionally given in Canada, but we have failed to carry out any policy of regional equality or regional development.

I remind the house of what was stated in the 1965 annual report of the Economic Council of Canada:

Our analysis has shown that over a period of almost four decades embracing buoyant expansion, a severe depression, a prolonged war and a period of revived national growth, the regional problem in Canada has remained essentially unchanged. Large inter-regional disparities in per capita income have stubbornly persisted despite various forces working towards better balance. These have included significant redistribution of population, far reaching adjustments in the structure of economic activity at the national level, and certain public policies aimed at greater equalization of regional incomes. Against such a background, the narrowing of income disparities and the achievement of this result consistently with other basic economic and social objectives, remains one of the most difficult issues confronting the country as a whole.

It is my view that what is required is an integrated strategy of development in which the points brought forward by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) have to play their part in bringing about an adjustment of trade policies to open markets for the products of the Atlantic provinces. This, of course, is only one aspect, but it is futile for us to adopt inconsistent policies, to adopt policies of regional expenditures and incentives for regional development on the one hand and on the other hand adopt trade policies which militate against effective regional development. I think we must adopt the principle of what I call population retention.

I am happy to say that there are many people who have come to my constituency and to the Toronto urban area from the Atlantic region. I personally welcome them but I do not believe it is a healthy movement.

In the period 1941 to 1950 the Atlantic region suffered what has been described as a negative migration of 76 persons per thousand while Ontario enjoyed a positive rate of 65 per thousand. In the period 1951 to 1960 the negative rate for the Atlantic region was 56 persons per thousand while the positive rate for Ontario was 131 per thousand. Naturally I am not objecting to the growth and development of my own province of Ontario. I am happy to see this. But if it is caused by a forced migration, a migration forced by economic circumstances from a part of this country which has the resources and the ability to retain its population, then I say it is an unhealthy situation and all parties should accept as part of their platforms a definite policy of what I call population retention.

I do not mean by that that within the regions there is not room for manpower policies which will enable people to move from a depressed sub-region, if I may call it that, into another. I do mean that these large-scale migrations from one province to another are a totally different thing, and I think we should consider the social implications. Only too often this type of migration results in not too happy circumstances within the urban areas to which the migration comes. Sometimes, however, this is due to such things as slum conditions of which we have no reason to be proud.

This resolution deals with one aspect of the matter, that is, the trade policies which are appropriate to a policy of regional development. I believe this is extremely important to confederation as a whole. As I said, this resolution has a dual purpose. The other purpose encompassed within the resolution is the development of trade and other relations with the former British West Indies. I say nothing about New England. I should like to say, however, a word in support of what already has been said concerning our responsibilities and opportunities in Canada in respect of the West Indies.

It seems to me, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska when he referred to a press clipping from the Globe and Mail, that there are many problems to be looked into. Some form of free trade and some form of governmental assistance on a long-term basis I think are part of our international obligation. This would be beneficial not only to the islands concerned, the West Indies, but to Canada itself.

Yesterday, along with some other members of this house I visited the St. Hubert base in Quebec. As I think most hon. members who are familiar with matters of defence know, we are changing our defence plans and they now call less for static defences in say the European theatre of war and much more for what is referred to as a mobile force which can be moved quickly to any part of the world. Many of the areas to which such a force may have to be moved under our United Nations obligation or under some other obligation so that we can play a peacekeeping role and perhaps contribute tremendously to peace in the world are regions which are tropical or subtropical.

In Canada, with snow for a great part of the year, we cannot produce conditions of a tropical nature which our troops should have if their training is to be adequate. I am quite sure that those who are responsible for our defence policies, and particularly our mobile command, would welcome the opportunity to discuss with our friends in the West Indies the possibility of leasing training grounds. This is a prospect which should be mutually beneficial and indeed might be an addition to the security of that part of the world.

Although I know it is the usual custom of the house to talk out private members' resolutions, I do not believe there is one hon. member in this house who cannot approve of the resolution before us. It is a resolution which merely speaks of the government considering the advisability of taking the initiative in promoting increased trade. If this house were to approve of the resolution instead of throwing it out, it seems to me it would be a most encouraging instruction concerning the will of parliament on the two subject matters mainly involved, namely, regional development as it is applicable particularly to the Atlantic provinces on the one hand and international development as it affects our relations with the West Indies on the other. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I commend this resolution and I hope we will be given the opportunity to show our approval by an actual vote.

Mr. Richard Cashin (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I should like to say it generally seems that during private members' hour matters such as this are talked out. If this is our procedure, then certainly it is a procedure which should be altered—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cashin: —particularly when we are considering a resolution like this one. I would very much like to see the house come to a decision on this resolution. I know that privately all of us agree with its substance. At this moment I do not know whether this will come to pass but I hope it does. In the event that it does not, I think that today's proceedings on a matter about which there is so much agreement should suggest to us that we are impairing the reputation of this institution by continuing the process of talking out all private members' bills and all private motions as a matter of procedure. There definitely are cases such as this one when we all agree that the motion really should be passed by the house.

For the next few minutes there are a number of things I should like to say because, along with other members, I had an opportunity this year to visit Trinidad to attend the regional conference of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association. This was a great opportunity to meet with parliamentarians from this area. The impression I came away with was a very distinct one. In this area of the world the people recognize the difference between Canadians and other nationalities and they like the difference. At the same time, however, they are looking to Canada not only for increased aid and more soft loans but also for a deeper involvement on the part of Canada in their area.

I believe it is in the enlightened self-interest of our country to become more involved in this area. I read an editorial recently in the St. John's Evening Telegram which made reference to the proposal discussed by the hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Dubé). It pointed out that six or seven years ago the government of Newfoundland subsidized a boat to travel from Newfoundland to Jamaica. This does not seem to be the kind of thing a provincial government should be doing but the sort of effort which should be expanded and promoted by the federal government in general and more particularly the other Atlantic provinces.

We do have opportunities for trade in this area. I think we must recognize that as these islands, particularly the major ones such as Trinidad and Jamaica, attempt to develop their own internal economies their traditional approach to trade may vary. We may find, as I believe we have, that we will lose some of our markets there because they are trying to develop their own secondary industries. I believe this presents us with the opportunity of becoming more involved with them in their internal development so that we can assist them and at the same time help expand our own markets. So this is not something we should do because of a moral obligation we may feel for underdeveloped nations. In this particular case, as in perhaps no other, it would be very much in our self-interest and I believe this should be the basis of our approach to this area.

In the past—this was indirectly referred to by the hon. member for Greenwood, (Mr. Brewin)—Canada has tended to look inward. Our national policy has seemed to favour the central region of Canada. I agree with him that expanding trade between the Maritimes and New England can help in regional development in Canada. I am encouraged to think that there are at least two factors at work which should help us move toward this goal. One is our sense of obligation and the other is the move generally throughout the world toward freer trade. I believe it would be very much in the interests of the four Atlantic provinces and also of Canada if we explored new avenues and took a greater interest in our approach to the problems of the West Indies, not as another country which we have to assist but as a country which has a special and unique relationship to ours and one which we can help in a special and unique way.

Before sitting down I should like to say that perhaps we might investigate the possibility of setting up a sort of Caribbean development board with representation from Canada and the countries in that area, which might in an indirect way be modelled on the Atlantic Development Board. In this way we could help these islands co-ordinate their own internal efforts for development, provide them with funds and also provide them with people who could institute these various programs. I believe this might be a step in the right direction. The suggestion of Mr. Patrick is one worthy of further study.

I am sure that all of us in this house agree that there is a great opportunity here for Canada. I hope that the coming conference to be held on July 6 will find our government taking an imaginative and understanding approach to this great challenge.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to round out the roster of speakers for the four Atlantic provinces, that area of Canada which would benefit most by increased trade with the West Indies and a new pattern of trade in that area. It gives me pleasure to second the motion so ably proposed by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) and to speak briefly on it.

First I should like to echo the point made by some of the other speakers, that there is no reason in the world why we cannot pass this resolution before six o'clock because it is in fact a fait accompli. As the last speaker mentioned there will be a conference in Ottawa in July between the Canadian government and officials of the area known as the British West Indies which will deal with the subject matter of the resolution presented by the hon. member for Queens. We need have no qualms that governments are going to fall or be put in impossible positions if we accept the intent of this resolution. As hon. members will recall, the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) had a similar resolution on the order paper some years ago.

Recently in Halifax a three-day conference was held at Dalhousie Univeristy which was supported by the Canadian national commission for the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Institute of Public Affairs of Dalhousie University. It had the blessing and, indeed, the association of the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council. It considered Canada-West Indies relations and the possibility of establishing an institute somewhere in Atlantic Canada. I understand that this possibility is still being studied. We all hope that Atlantic Canada will put its actions where its talk has been in the past. That may sound like a cynical observation, but we have received criticism in Atlantic Canada for talking too much and doing too little in the matter of better relations, trade-wise and otherwise, with the West Indies. I hope we will take the initiative in this regard and show the rest of the country that the words uttered here this afternoon have substance.

I suggest that the British West Indies delegation to the meeting to be held in Ottawa in July will make several concrete proposals, some of which have been developed by Mr. William Demas who is associated with the office of the Prime Minister of Trinidad. His suggestions deal first with tariff measures to improve trade with the West Indies. He suggested at the conference in Halifax that Canada make available more agricultural representatives to assist agricultural development in the West Indies. This, of course, would be a boon to trade between the two countries. If they grow more they can sell more to us.

The other point I want to make relates to the warning that has been given by the education minister of Barbados, Mr. J. Cameron Tudor. He spoke at the same conference to which I referred and said that a free society will not long be retained in the West Indies if rescue operations are not set in motion immediately.

I should like to quote from an article which appeared in the Halifax Mail-Star of Saturday, May 21, which reports Mr. Tudor as follows:

> He warned that the west could not expect the maintenance of the democratic tradition in the West Indies if democracy was unable to get the area out of its economic coils, and added that Canada could play a leading role in assisting the area.

I think there is a challenge here and that if we do not meet it we will be doing a grave disservice to our own country and to an aspiring democratic area which could go the other way unless we ourselves take action. It is with great pleasure, Mr. Speaker, that I second the motion presented by the hon. member for Queens.

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the intent of this resolution but I should like to state that the government has this matter in hand and our trade prospects under review. The government is concerned about improving trade between various parts of Canada and the rest of the world. I am concerned, however, by frequent expressions of opinion along these lines which are regional in character. These opinions have been expressed not only in the Atlantic region but also in western Canada. They relate to regional free trade arrangements involving one or two provinces and other parts of the world.

These opinions are not to be taken seriously. It would certainly undermine Canada as a nation if we were to take seriously the possibility of the establishment of special trade arrangements between other countries and particular regions or provinces in Canada. In western Canada we have heard members of provincial governments speak in this manner.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence I should like to say something about the subject matter of the debate that has taken place in the last hour. The government will take cognizance of the apparent unanimity in respect of this important subject matter. It is of importance and concern to the government and is receiving active consideration. I might say that I have a personal interest in this subject, having had a somewhat similar motion on the order paper some years ago.

I should like to indicate the business of the house for tomorrow. We propose to call legislation in the following order: First, item No. 65, second reading of the Canada Student Loans Act; item 71, second reading of the Customs Tariff bill; item 70, the Excise Tax bill; item 49, the public utilities transfer tax resolution; item 73, the Canadian dairy commission bill; item 76, the crop insurance bill and item 48, the Canadian Livestock Feed Board resolution. If time permits we will proceed with item 62, second reading of the Canadian Film Development Corporation bill.

If the resolution concerning the small Canadian National branch lines is on the order paper tomorrow we may ask that it be considered later in the day so that the resolution can, if it is agreeable to the house, be passed and the bill circulated. Then we would have the bill available for next week.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, June 23, 1966

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1966-67

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates A for the financial year ending March 31, 1967 was presented by Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

EXCHANGE OF GOOD WISHES ON BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARIES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted the leave of the house, I should like to make reference to a dual event which is taking place today, namely the celebration of the birthdays of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill). Their relationship through the years has been one of such closeness as has not been personalized since the days of Damon and Pythias. I am sure all of us will extend to them the warmest of congratulations. As far as the Secretary of State for External Affairs is concerned, the dean of the house, my hope is that he will take instruction at the hands of the Minister of Transport from this time on as to the manner of answering questions.

May I also, while on my feet, extend congratulations to two other hon. gentlemen, both excellent parliamentarians, namely the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) and my hon. friend the member for Perth (Mr. Monteith) who will be celebrating their birthdays tomorrow. Speaking for all four, this is one occasion on which we can pay our tribute to good parliamentarians and gentlemen.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to associate the rest of us on this side of the house with the warm greetings which have been extended to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and to the Minister of Transport on their birthdays today, and to the other hon. gentlemen who will be celebrating their birthdays tomorrow. It would have been appropriate for the deputy leader of this party to offer these congratulations, but I happen to know that this is his birthday, too. I thought I should like to add his name. Let us make it a trinity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, could we inquire whether there are any other birthdays?

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that my group and myself join with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) as well as with the representative of the New Democratic Party to extend our best wishes for a long and happy life to those who are celebrating their birthdays.

It has been given to us over the last four years to appreciate at their true worth the two ministers, namely the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) who always says yes; appreciation for a man is not based on the number of times he can say yes. In any case, we are happy about his open-mindedness. With regard to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), I think that in this house he has only friends, people who know how to appreciate him. Even if his answers to our questions are sometimes doubtful, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is certainly a credit to Canada throughout the world and I am happy to offer him my best wishes on his birthday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I too would associate myself and the members of our party with the good wishes that have been extended by the Leader of the Official Opposition and the representatives of the other parties in birthday greetings to the two senior ministers in the house who celebrate their birthdays today, and also with respect to the other three gentlemen who have been mentioned as having birthdays today and tomorrow.

May I just add, in this spirit of birthday good will, that it is our hope that this same spirit of good will may extend through the balance of the first half of this session, as we look forward to a recess.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have the permission of my colleague the Minister of Transport to speak on his behalf. I am sure the hon. member for Perth, the Minister of Agriculture and the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) would also permit me to speak in their behalf in anticipation of their event tomorrow.

I have noted with gratitude and appreciation what the right hon. Leader of the Opposition has said, particularly about the Damon and Pythias relationship between the Minister of Transport and myself. Of course, as the older in experience but the younger of the two I greatly appreciate what has been said.

[Translation]

I greatly appreciate what the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste said about me and about my colleague. I also want to thank him for his warm wishes and his friendship, a friendship which, of course, owes nothing to politics but comes from the heart.

[English]

This is one of these occasions when we can sink our political differences. May I express the belief that the friendship prevailing among all of us, regardless of political affiliations, gives an added opportunity to serve our country more effectively in this chamber. I may say with pride, Mr. Speaker, that while I am by no means the oldest member of this house, I am very proud to have been here longer than anybody else.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Second report of standing committee on industry, research and energy development—Mr. Cashin.

Third report of standing committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development—Mr. Whelan.

Fourth and fifth reports of special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the public service—Mr. Richard. (Text of foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings].

HEALTH AND WELFARE

STATEMENT ON REPORTED NEW CANCER TREATMENT

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I promised to make a statement in connection with the anti-cancer hormone treatment developed by Doctors V. A. and V. V. Mirkovich.

The Department of National Health and Welfare has received an interim report from the Ontario Cancer Treatment and Research Foundation on their investigation of the clinical use in Mexico of a product designated as an anti-cancer hormone developed by these two doctors. During the last week in May two senior consultants of the Ontario Cancer Treatment and Research Foundation visited Dr. A. G. Andrade, of Vera Cruz, Mexico, who was reported to have administered this material to a number of patients. The physicians from the foundation examined available records and diagnostic materials. They have extracted and reported on the available data, but since this was inadequate to establish the purported claims for the anti-cancer hormone they have requested additional data from Dr. Andrade. This will include photographs, pathological slides and x-ray plates for evaluation to confirm the reported diagnosis and reported clinical responses.

During 1963 and 1964 Dr. Andrade treated a total of five patients with a product designated as anti-cancer hormone supplied personally by the Doctors Mirkovich. Of the five patients two have died, two were examined by the Canadian consultants, and the fifth person was reported to be alive but was not seen by the Canadian physicians. Of the two patients who died, one child was reported to have been suffering from lymphocythic leukemia and the other patient was reported to have been suffering from osteogenic sarcoma.

Of the two patients examined by the Canadian consultants, one child who was reported to have a neuro-fibrosarcoma of the mouth had been treated with radiation and a chemotherapeutic agent in addition to the anti-cancer hormone. The reported response could have been due to the radiotherapy and the known chemotherapeutic agent. Additional data have been requested in this case.

The second patient seen was a woman who was reported to have a malignant lesion of the tibia. Specimens from this patient had also been examined by two pathologists in Mexico, one from the National Cancer Institute of Mexico, both of whom diagnosed the lesion as a benign giant cell tumor of the tibia.

The data supplied in the interim report have been reviewed by the medical staff of the food and drug directorate. In their opinion the scientific information available to date has failed to demonstrate any curative or palliative action of A.C.H. in the treatment of cancer. I should add that Dr. Matthew Dymond proposes to include the following paragraph in the statement he is making in Toronto today:

My advisers agree that the evidence so far obtained is insufficient at the present time to justify the claims of the Drs. Mirkovich that A.C.H. is of value in cancer treatment. They submitted the interim report and are collecting the additional information in order to complete this document.

The Doctors Mirkovich have been advised by the food and drug directorate, Department of National Health and Welfare, of the information required under the regulations relating to the distribution of drugs for clinical testing. They have not supplied any of the required data, including the composition of the drug or the degree of hazard involved in its clinical use in humans. When such information is supplied the directorate is prepared to undertake the scientific evaluation of the data immediately.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we are all disappointed at this report. We all have high hopes that some day a curative treatment will be discovered. This report is discouraging because, as I say, we did have high hopes that people in Canada and all over the world who are suffering from cancer would have the benefit of this treatment. I sincerely trust that, if the science research department and the cancer foundation get the co-operation of the Doctors Mirkovich and Dr. Andrade, the matter could be pursued further, and this is our hope.

LABOUR RELATIONS

QUEBEC—APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSION FOLLOWING LONGSHOREMEN'S DISPUTE

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table copies in English and French of the appointment of Dr. Laurent Picard, under the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, as a commission to investigate and report on certain outstanding matters arising out of the industrial dispute that involved longshoring operations and related trades in the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF BRANCH LINES IN WEST

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, today there appears on the notice paper a government notice of motion that the house go into committee of the whole to consider a resolution providing for the construction of two branch lines by the Canadian National Railway Company, one to the Osborne Lake district of Manitoba and the other at Watrous in Saskatchewan. If I might have the unanimous consent of the house I would ask to have the motion brought forward for consideration later this day.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee later this day to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize and to provide for the construction by Canadian National Railway Company of a line of railway in the province of Manitoba from the vicinity of Stall Lake on the Chisel Lake subdivision of Canadian National Railways in a northeasterly direction for a distance of approximately 12 miles to a point in the vicinity of Osborne Lake in The Pas mining district of that province, and of a line of railway in the province of Saskatchewan from the vicinity of Watrous on the Watrous subdivision of the said railways in a northeasterly direction for a distance of approximately 18 miles to a point in the vicinity of Guernsey in the Regina mining district of that province, at a total expenditure of $3,400,000, not to be exceeded by more than 15 per cent, and to authorize and to provide for temporary loans to the company out of the consolidated revenue fund toward the cost of construction.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO SALARY ADJUSTMENTS FOR ADMINISTRATIVE CLASSES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Earlier this month I asked him a question regarding salary adjustments for members of the civil service in group B, and the minister made no mention of those falling in the administrative category.

According to the information I have received, those civil servants who are in that category will find themselves, when the normal processes are followed, in a position of no decision being made respecting salary increases until the end of this year and even the beginning of 1967. That is the view of Mr. Barnes, executive director of the professional institute of the public service of Canada. In view of the fact that the delays in so far as class B, the administrative category, are simply administrative delays, will the government hasten the determination of the matter so these people may be assured of justice at a very early date?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): With regard to group B generally the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission is expected to be received by about July 15. I can assure hon. members that Treasury Board will act upon it as soon as possible after that date. There are some 15,000 people in group B, as I recall the figure, who are being reclassified in the administrative group. With regard to these people the anticipation is that there may be a few weeks' delay beyond that time in dealing with them. The staff of Treasury Board has been considering this matter urgently and has been in consultation with the Civil Service Commission in the hope that we may deal with it as expeditiously as possible.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. I should like to ask him whether he is aware that the customs and excise officers in Ontario zone 1, which comprises Peterborough, Oshawa, Bowmanville, Lindsay, Port Hope and Cobourg, have voted in favour of strike action in an attempt to force the federal government to abolish new job classifications and pay the balance of interim salary increases promised last year. In view of this action on the part of these people I wonder if the minister can tell us how he can bring about a solution to the problem.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, first of all in dealing with job classifications, this is the responsibility of the Civil Service Commission and has been carried out at all stages in consultation with the employee associations. There is a large number of people in the customs and excise officer classification who have been red circled as a result of the reclassification by the Civil Service Commission. In no case do these people lose salaries, but if they are red circled they simply must wait until the new classification they are in is above the level they are at before they receive increases. The problem is serious, and is one to which we have been giving a great deal of consideration.

I should like to point out to hon. members that after the final salary recommendations come from the Civil Service Commission with regard to group B, I believe the problem will be reduced greatly in that many of the red circlings will completely disappear at that time. I might point out also that the reclassification which is being carried on by the Civil Service Commission was necessary and essential, as recommended in the Heeney report, if the public service was to move in an orderly manner into collective bargaining. The situation was such, with the number of classifications in the civil service so great that it was felt it would be impossible to carry out collective bargaining on a reasonable basis without a reclassification taking place.

I am quite aware of the disruption and inconvenience which has been caused. The matter is receiving the daily consideration of Treasury Board.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the minister has mentioned that Treasury Board will convene at once when the report is received; but is it not a fact that, immediately after this, three months will have to elapse before the allocation of employees to the new categories can take place, and then a further month for review?

If that is so, and this information received by civil service organizations is correct, it means that class B administrative categories will not receive their just due until the end of this year. What is the government going to do to accelerate the determination of this matter so these employees will not be left in this invidious position?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to point out that this government for the first time in history gave interim increases to civil service employees before the final determination had been made by the Civil Service Commission of their recommendations with regard to pay increases. I want to assure the right hon. Leader of the Opposition that we will act with all due dispatch, and that no one is more anxious than I am to see that these salary increases come into effect as quickly as possible. Any slowdown is not the responsibility of the government but the responsibility of the Civil Service Commission which, under the present legislation, has responsibility for reclassification of civil servants.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a supplementary question. Is the government yet in a position to make a clear statement about the point I raised in a question asked on Monday of this week; namely, can an assurance be given that despite the delays in readjustments that are taking place, none of these employees will lose out altogether on a salary adjustment?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, this is a very difficult question to answer because Treasury Board as such has not as yet received any recommendations from the Civil Service Commission with respect to salary changes for group B employees. I think it is entirely unfair to ask the government to consider something it has not as yet received.

Mr. Knowles: I have a further supplementary question. Will the government do everything it can to implement the Prime Minister's commitment made on Monday of this week that any possible injustices will be removed?

Mr. Benson: I think—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that we are perhaps engaging in a debate at this point. There have been quite a few questions asked and answers given on this subject, and I would invite hon. members to go to another subject at this moment.

[Later:]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue and ask whether he can give the house any assurance that when the government does get around to dealing with the salary increases of group B they will be made retroactive to October, 1965, when the cyclical review should have been considered.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, they certainly will be.

BROADCASTING

INQUIRY AS TO PRODUCTION OF WHITE PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I intended to direct a question to the Secretary of State, but in her absence may I direct it to the right hon. Prime Minister. Is it still the intention of the government to table the white paper on broadcasting before the end of this month or is there likely to be a delay and, if so, for how long?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the white paper is in the hands of the printer and we hope the printing and translation will be completed in time to make it possible to table it toward the end of next week.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

VAL D'OR, QUE.—RAINMAKING EQUIPMENT ON JET PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of National Defence. Can he deny or confirm statements to the effect that the jet airplanes stationed at Val d'Or are equipped with devices to seed clouds with silver iodide so as to make artificial rain?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I understood the question clearly enough to enable me to give an answer.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I shall repeat my question for the minister. Can he deny or confirm statements that the jets stationed at Val d'Or are equipped with devices to seed clouds with silver iodide so as to make artificial rain?

[English]

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I should think that would be false. We are not in the rainmaking business at the moment.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RHODESIA—REPORTED THREAT OF BREAKDOWN OF DISCUSSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the grave situation which is apparently developing as a result of the threatened breakdown in talks between representatives of the government of Britain and Rhodesia, will the Prime Minister report on his discussion with High Commissioner Chevrier and tell us whether Canada, through its high commissioner in London, has recommended that negotiations might be carried out on some broader basis than that outlined by Commonwealth Secretary Bottomley?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the second round of talks in Salisbury has apparently been completed. We have not yet had a full report on those talks. The sanctions committee yesterday reviewed the effects of the sanctions program to date, and I believe I can say that while the sanctions are not up to schedule, it would be wrong to say they are not having an effective result.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I am not sure whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs covered this in his reply, but I should like to ask whether there have been any indications that the sanctions committee will recommend a strengthening or reinforcing of the economic sanctions program now in effect and, if so, whether the minister is in a position to state the policy of the government in this regard?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As far as the government of Canada is concerned, it has taken every action open to it. The sanctions committee has reviewed, as I said a moment ago, the effects of programs such as our own, as well as those of the British and other governments. Our government also took a stand with regard to mandatory action under article VII of the United Nations charter. I believe the wise course is to allow the sanctions program an opportunity to run a longer course before making a final judgment as to its effectiveness.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, the minister did not quite answer the question I asked. I asked whether as a result of this review there had been recommendations for tightening up or reinforcing the sanctions program, and whether the government of Canada had reached a policy decision in that regard.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, it is not for the sanctions committee to recommend courses. It is for governments to take decisions and for the sanctions committee to review the effects of those decisions.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

INQUIRY AS TO REFUNDS TO EMPLOYERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the right hon. Prime Minister, the urgency of which is emphasized by representations which were made by the major Canadian trade associations, some 10 or 12 in number. Will the Prime Minister advise the house whether he plans to recommend the correction of inequities that presently exist under the Canada Pension Plan, whereby large over-contributions have been made by employers without refunds?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I think this matter was dealt with the other day, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question I should like to direct to the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the fact he and the Minister of Finance met yesterday with this organization of employers, can he indicate whether a decision has been reached, or tell us when a decision will be made to refund these overpayments?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, we had a meeting with representatives of the employers' organizations yesterday during which they put forward several suggestions, some of which had been received before and some of which were entirely new. We indicated to them that we would consider these representations, but that any changes in the present system would require changes in the law.

INDUSTRY

PROBLEMS CAUSED BY SLUMP IN U.S. AUTO SALES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. Has the minister been in conference with Canadian car manufacturers in respect of the problem—which they expect to worsen—they are experiencing in meeting the objectives or achievements set for them in relation to the U.S.-Canada treaty, brought about by an auto sales slump in the United States?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not been in conference with them on this point.

POWER

REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON TIDAL POWER DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy and Resources. Can he indicate when action will be taken by the joint committee of representatives of the federal government and the governments of the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in respect of harnessing the bay of Fundy tides, from a power point of view?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, the board which has been created to study this project will get into action very soon, but I am not able to say exactly when.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—CONSERVATION OF WILDLIFE RESOURCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I intend to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, but I have been advised that in his absence I should direct it to the Prime Minister.

I want to say this is a question of national significance because it is of general interest to all persons who are interested in the conservation of our wildlife resources, and is of great interest to the people of British Columbia.

Is the federal government prepared to co-operate with the government of British Columbia in the development of Duck lake, which is a portion of Kootenay lake, for the conservation of our wildlife resources, and to provide a financial contribution to that end?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are only too anxious to co-operate with the government of British Columbia in all good causes, and I think this is one. How we should co-operate I will discuss with the minister concerned.

FISHERIES

REPORT OF INQUIRY INTO FRESH WATER FISH MARKETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric Stefanson (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the government received the report of the McIvor commission dealing with fresh water fish marketing; and if so, will this report be made available to members?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to look into that matter. I think the Minister of Fisheries may have some information.

[Later:]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, a moment ago I was asked when the report of the royal commission on the marketing of fresh water fish, presided over by Mr. McIvor, is likely to be received. I am informed that the work on the report of the commission is going along at a reasonable rate and it is hoped that it will be ready by the beginning of September.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—TRAP AND LICENCE RESTRICTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. In light of the trap restrictions soon to be imposed in district 8, and information received recently about the difficulties encountered in the neighbouring area of district 7b, I wonder whether the minister is giving consideration to also putting a freeze on fishing licences as of, say, the middle of September of last year.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must say I cannot judge how urgent this question is. If the hon. member feels it is urgent and the minister is prepared to reply, I will certainly allow the question.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, while we will be imposing this year a certain trap limit, that is the maximum number of traps that can be used for each fishing boat, it is not our intention to impose control of licensing, although this matter is under very serious consideration.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTION RESPECTING NATIONAL ANTHEM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister?

Is the Prime Minister in a position to tell us whether the proposed resolution appearing as No. 14 of the order paper, on the National Anthem of Canada, will be voted on or discussed before the summer adjournment, in view of the fact that this proposed resolution has been on the order paper for three years now?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I hope we will be able to get to it before long, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONGRATULATIONS ON APPOINTMENT OF NEW CHIEF OF STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): On a question of privilege and begging your indulgence, Mr. Speaker.

The morning papers announced the appointment of General Allard as chief of staff for Canada. I should like to point out that he is a citizen of Trois-Rivières and to thank the government for the recognition of his merits. I should also like to congratulate the general on his promotion and to wish him every possible success in his new responsibilities.

I am sure that the whole house will join in these wishes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

WATER RESOURCES

GREAT LAKES—DISCUSSIONS WITH U.S. RESPECTING ANTI-POLLUTION MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister of energy, mines and resources. Were any decisions on a program of anti-pollution measures on the great lakes reached with Secretary Udall at the meeting today; and if so, when may we expect some announcements?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): It would be nice to be able to make decisions at that kind of meeting, Mr. Speaker, but it was not so. The meeting was essentially an exploratory one. We exchanged views on what both countries were doing on the great lakes. We intend to expand the research being conducted there, we intend to synchronize these studies, to co-ordinate them better, and we hope to develop standards on the great lakes that we will be in a position to offer to the rest of Canada and the United States as examples of what should be done against pollution.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister. It arises out of a statement made by the Minister of Fisheries in Sault Ste. Marie that his department would be taking the lead in pollution measures on the great lakes. Does this indicate any transfer of responsibility for dealing with the great lakes pollution?

[Mr. Pearson.]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I understand that at this particular meeting the Minister of Fisheries was particularly concerned with one form of pollution, namely that by lampreys, and he called attention to the great success that has been achieved through the lamprey control operations of the two countries, a success about which I am sure my hon. friend will be as gratified as I am.

AIRPORTS

REQUEST FOR FEASIBILITY STUDY OF PEMBROKE AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Has the minister received any correspondence from the municipal councils in the Deep River, Petawawa and Pembroke areas requesting that his department make a survey of the area to determine the feasibility of establishing an airport?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Yes, sir.

Mr. Hopkins: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When can we expect such a survey to get under way?

Mr. Ricard: Soon.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Almost immediately.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

DELAY IN EXECUTION OF SEARCH WARRANT AGAINST S.I.U.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could direct a question to the Solicitor General. My question relates to the search warrant which the R.C.M. Police were in possession of yesterday and which they used to gain entry to the various offices of the Seafarers International Union. I would ask the minister why, the search warrant having been obtained on the 8th day of June, there was such a long delay in putting the search into effect.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, this action was along the lines being urged upon me by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge).

Mr. Herridge: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pennell: There were certain other matters that came to the attention of the authorities, and it was deemed appropriate to delay taking action at that moment.

Mr. Howard: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the minister did not understand the question. The search warrant was obtained on the 8th day of June and at that time came into force and permitted the R.C.M. Police to carry out the raid on June 22. What I want to know is, why the long delay?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking for an explanation why something was not done. The question cannot be asked at this time.

SPORTS

POSSIBLE CONTRAVENTION OF COMBINES LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Prime Minister. Now that Senator Keith Davey has been chosen as commissioner of the Canadian Football League—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —would the Prime Minister say whether a determination has been made by the government to bring professional sport under the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No decision has been taken on that matter, Mr. Speaker, but as the right hon. gentleman has raised the question I will be glad to get in touch with Senator Davey so he can get in touch with my right hon. friend to see whether anything can be done for the Saskatchewan Roughriders.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Saskatchewan Roughriders need no help.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: However, I ask the Prime Minister this. In view of the answer given by the President of the Privy Council in February while he was still minister of justice, as I recall it, that this matter was being considered in order to preserve a degree of fairness and to deny anything of an improper nature, has the government not given any consideration to this question or has it waited until the senator has been elevated to the position he now occupies?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate that this is a serious matter, and the government wishes to treat it as such. No doubt in the consideration being given to this matter by the officials concerned they will wish to get in touch with the new commissioner.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON LAW OF THE SEA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that negotiations over the establishment of geographical co-ordinates as called for in the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones of Canada Act passed in July, 1964 have not brought about the implementation of that act, would the minister indicate whether he is contemplating calling for another international conference on the law of the sea in the hope of securing agreement on this thorny problem? I raise this matter in view of the fact that Secretary Udall is in Canada and the minister might wish to discuss the possibility of another international conference with him at this time.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No conference is contemplated, but I have had recent general discussions with Mr. Rusk on this particular problem, and proposals were made to the United States government some weeks ago. I have asked for a response to a proposal that we have made more recently, and if it is accepted I trust this will enable us to make progress with regard to the establishment of a straight base line system.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INCLUSION OF MEMBER FOR LOTBINIÈRE IN COMMITTEE GOING TO EUROPE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. J. W. Fane (Vegreville): I have a question for the Prime Minister. I ask this question because today I received a communication from the secretary of the standing committee on veterans affairs indicating that the name of the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) has been included in the group of committee members making a trip to Europe. I should like to ask the Prime Minister, in view of the fact that the hon. member for Lotbinière has denounced everything for which Canadians fought and died in the past, if he approves of the appointment of the hon. member for Lotbinière to this committee.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not believe this question is in order.

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that the constituency of Lotbinière has been represented for 17 years by the present lieutenant governor of the province of Quebec who was a war hero and I consider this honour bestowed upon me by the Prime Minister as homage to the constituency of Lotbinière.

Second, I should like to deny categorically the dishevelled remarks made by the hon. member.

[English]

Mr. Fane: Mr. Speaker, I just want to point out that while the hon. member for Lotbinière is being put on this committee making this trip, he has not been officially appointed to the veterans affairs committee.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member for Lotbinière that there is no question of privilege. However, he has made his point, and I suggest that perhaps the matter should be considered closed for the time being.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): On the same point, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member should raise a new point because I have ruled there is no question of privilege.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I raise a point of order, Mr. Speaker, relating to the activities of committees. I should like to inform the Prime Minister that while serving on the special defence committee I found it impossible to go on a certain trip which was made by that committee. The chairman refused to permit a wounded veteran member of this house to replace me on that committee because it was suggested that in the view of the government a practice was developing under which anybody on any committee could be replaced. The view was that if the member was unable to go he could not be replaced, and this view was sponsored by the Minister of National Defence last year.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Prime Minister, but in his absence I will address it to the Minister of National Defence. Does the minister as a member of the government feel that the substitution made on a committee which is to travel overseas this week end is fair, considering the discrimination which his department practised against veterans last year?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar at all with any alleged discrimination. I can assure hon. members that this would not be the case if it were known to us. The question of who goes on trips with committees, once the transportation has been arranged, is a matter for the committee to decide, not for me.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A supplementary question. The minister says he is not aware of any discrimination. Is he denying the fact that a former chairman of the defence committee, who is no longer a member of this house, discriminated against the veterans on this side of the house by refusing to replace me on a trip?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As it is necessary for members of this house to accept the word of hon. members on that side of the house, is it not also necessary for them to accept the word of a member on this side of the house? I say that the minister's department discriminated.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge whatever of the facts of the case but I can assure my hon. friend that the substitution of any member for himself on the committee would have been quite a remarkable improvement.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister is aware that I did not spend my time riding motorcycles during the war. But I will tell him this—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): When he says he is unaware—

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please.

NATIONAL SECURITY

REQUEST FOR BROADENING OF SCOPE OF COMMISSION OF INQUIRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): My question is for the Prime Minister and deals with a report which has been tabled by the Attorney General of Ontario outlining the extent of syndicated crime in Ontario. In view of the fact that a commissioner has not yet been named for the inquiry into security, can the Prime Minister tell us whether he is considering widening the terms of reference of that commission to include a study of the national and international aspects of crime syndicates?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I think this is a separate subject and should not be confused with the commission to which my hon. friend has referred. I realize its importance, and perhaps it will require separate consideration. This matter is being considered also by the federal-provincial meetings of attorneys general.

Mr. Thompson: May I ask a supplementary question. Does the Prime Minister expect to announce the terms of reference of this inquiry before the end of the month?

Mr. Pearson: I certainly hope to do so as soon as I can get the commissioners appointed and the terms of reference officially agreed upon.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

FELICITATIONS ON CELEBRATION OF ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST DAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, holidays were mentioned a while ago. I should like to take this opportunity, as the house will not sit tomorrow, on St. John the Baptist day and the national feast-day of French Canadians, to mention the celebrations that will be held tomorrow and to extend, on behalf of our party, my very best wishes to our French Canadian compatriots and to wish them the realization of their ambitions.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REPORTED STATEMENT RESPECTING JOINT PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Will the Prime Minister say whether the statement made by his parliamentary secretary in the adjournment debate on Tuesday night, which appears in Hansard at page 6742, on the subject of a parliamentary committee to consider constitutional problems, represents the views of the government on this matter?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I agree with what was said by the parliamentary secretary the other evening that it was not, in the view of the government, considered desirable to set up that particular parliamentary committee at this time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—U.S. INTEREST IN VISIT BY MR. RONNING

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I would not want the Secretary of State for External Affairs to feel he had been neglected on this natal celebration date. I ask him whether, in connection with the dispatch of Mr. Ronning to Hanoi, the reports in the press that Mr. Ronning was sent without consultation with Washington are correct and whether, after Mr. Ronning arrived there, the United States Secretary of State got in touch with the minister and gave instructions regarding a United States proposal. I ask this because, if that is correct, parliament should know it. I wish the minister would clear this up.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have already replied to this question. The story in that form is incorrect.

AGRICULTURE

MILK—DEMONSTRATIONS BY ONTARIO FARMERS RESPECTING PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Now that it is a fact that the farmers of Ontario are demonstrating openly to support their contention that the government's objective with regard to the guaranteed minimum of $4 per hundredweight for milk will not be reached in many areas of Ontario, will the minister state when the present policy will be reviewed in order to bring about this much publicized objective?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): I think the federal government's policy has been well conceived and has been discussed in all detail in the house. I believe the distress of the farmers is being displayed against the provincial government, not the federal government.

Mr. Danforth: May I ask a supplementary question. Is it not true that the provincial Minister of Agriculture suggested to the federal minister during deliberations on this subject that unless $3.25 f.o.b. was the objective, this $4 minimum could not be reached?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That question is argumentative.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

GOVERNMENT ACTION IN U.K. RESPECTING CIGARETTE ADVERTISING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I want to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare having to do with an article which appeared in the Globe and Mail. The article stated that the United Kingdom government is now using persuasion to stop cigarette advertising on radio and television and in films. Will the minister consider similar steps in Canada?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to look at what the British experience is and consider whether it could be applied in Canada.

FISHERIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—DAMAGE TO SALMON SPAWNING GROUNDS BY LOG RUN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. On Monday I posed a question to him relating to the litigation between the Canadian government and the province of British Columbia over log driving on the Stellako river. At that time the minister indicated that he had had no reports on the court case in connection therewith. Then I asked the minister as a supplementary question whether any scientific reports on the log driving which took place last year could be made public and the minister said he would take the matter under consideration. Is the minister now in a position to report to the house on these matters?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the first part of the question I wish to advise the hon. member that the writ of mandamus proceedings which were supposed to be heard on Monday were postponed until tomorrow at the request of the Attorney General of British Columbia. With regard to the second question, I expect to be in a position to give the hon. member a reply on Monday at the latest.

AIRPORTS

VAL D'OR AND ROUYN, QUE.—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. Minister of Transport. Can he tell us if air terminals will be built at Val d'Or and Rouyn this year, and if so, when the work will start?

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I cannot say categorically, but every possible effort will be made to get both these projects under way just as fast as possible.

CANADA STUDENT LOANS ACT

PROVISIONS FOR SUPPLEMENTARY PROVINCIAL ALLOCATIONS, ETC.

The house resumed, from Monday, June 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp for the second reading of Bill No. C-197, to amend the Canada Student Loans Act.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, there are a number of observations I intend to make in regard to this measure. When it was originally before the house Her Majesty's loyal opposition gave it their support, at the same time pointing out that the measure did not in any way conform with, live up to or equal the promise made so widely during two election campaigns that if the Liberal party were elected to office 10,000 scholarships per year would be made available to students in our universities. As yet there has been no action in respect of a promise that was so widely made and so generously supported by many thousands of university students, who believed that political platforms were designed to convey the truth rather than hope and expectations not carried out.

Canada's Economic Council has stated—

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder whether you would bring to the attention of the government benches the fact that a debate is proceeding and that the Leader of the Opposition is trying to make himself heard.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The point is well taken. There are so many conversations going on at the moment that it is extremely difficult for the Chair or anyone who wants to follow the debate to do so. I would ask the co-operation of all hon. members, and I ask those who must carry on conversations to do so in the lobbies or behind the curtains.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, it was not I who raised the complaint. Usually hon. members opposite start to listen after I have spoken for a while, and I have that expectation today. What I intend to present will be uncontroversial but I believe it is necessary for a full understanding of the measure before us.

I was about to quote from the report of Canada's Economic Council which has stated that the aim of Canada as a whole should be to provide a ready opportunity for higher education to every qualified Canadian student so that financial obstacles will be eliminated as a barrier to higher education.

When we were in office, Mr. Speaker, we proceeded to do many things on behalf of the attainment of this objective. I think it well, so as to keep the record straight, to place before the house and the country a general summary in this regard. During the days of the administration when I was Prime Minister there were made available for the first time long-term, low-interest loans to universities for construction of student residences. There were made available loans to Canadian universities to construct living accommodation for resident students. These loans amounted to a very large sum, a total of $41 million.

We also made possible the building of student residences and, doubling the number, additional residential accommodation for 10,000. We encouraged university students by providing for the deduction of tuition fees for income tax purposes. We provided special assistance to parents who were supporting their children at university by allowing exemptions even after the students had reached the age of 21 years. In addition, Mr. Speaker, we implemented legislation increasing the monthly education allowance for the children of war dead from $25 to $60 a month. These are a number of measures that we took in order to make possible the expansion of opportunities for education within our country.

The figures we have before us as to the cost of higher education in the years ahead are staggering in amount. Indeed, according to the figures issued by the bureau of statistics in December last, the cost of formal education and vocational training during 1964-65 amounted to $3,250 million. Within a very few years the amount will have to be increased to an almost astronomical extent. The full time enrolment in Canadian universities and colleges is going up at a rate that demands that there shall be, in ever increasing measure, national assistance in this field if Canada is to meet and discharge its national and international responsibilities. Whereas the enrolment in 1964-65 in Canadian universities was 180,000, by 1975 it will rise to 461,000. This means that great and challenging action must be taken to meet the potential needs of education within this nation.

The policy of the Conservative party in this connection was to increase research grants to the National Research Council, to increase greatly grants to the Medical Research Council, to increase university grants by the Canada Council, to carry out the recommendations of the Hall royal commission in the education and health field and to set up a capital fund for research and teaching hospitals. In order to encourage wealthy men and women across this nation to make grants to universities and institutions of higher learning the amount of income tax deduction now applicable with respect to such gifts should be materially increased. I believe that we must take effective action.

For many years the attitude has been that, because of the constitutional allocation of education to the provinces the federal parliament ought not to take any action in this field. During our period of office we were able to bring about an agreement with the government of the province of Quebec regarding university grants. That, I believe, marked the first time that, while maintaining constitutional responsibilities and assuring that there would be no deviation from the explicit words of the constitution, effective action was taken.

I welcome the increase in the amount to be made available for loans. I was most interested in the remarks of the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Turner). I always listen to him with attention because of his scholastic ability and also because of the manner in which he presents his arguments in the house. He is one of those younger members in this chamber—and I could name at least a dozen others—who have caught the feel of the House of Commons and thereby are assured that what they say will receive the attention of hon. members. He produced a most novel alternative to the failure of the government to bring about the 10,000 scholarships. We saw those scholarships marching. All across this nation students were looking forward to a change of government which would bring about these scholarships. And what did they get? Well, after some delay, they were given not scholarships but debts. They were put in a position where, at the end of their four or five years in university, they would start with a nest egg of $5,000 of debt.

With the minister's experience it was obvious to him that this policy was not as excellent a one as he would have devised had he been devising a policy. So, Mr. Speaker, he evolved an alternative. Why the scholarships that were promised have never been produced, why they have never gone beyond the embryonic state of election promises, we do not know. But he has developed the philosophy that what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) should do is to provide that these loans will be discharged at the end of each year, provided the individuals taking the loans have reached a satisfactory standard. Even the scholars in the middle ages could not have arrived at a more delicate alternative. I am waiting with anticipation for the Minister of Finance to explain to his fellow members of the cabinet that the plan evolved by the Minister without Portfolio does not meet with the approval of the minister who is responsible. Or does it?

In this most unusual exhibition of rising in the house and, while giving his support to the legislation, suggesting what might have been better, was the Minister without Portfolio flying a kite that the Minister of Finance is ready to accept? The suggestion certainly is good. It gets away from all the difficulties of scholarships. Does the government intend now to carry out the philanthropic suggestion evolved by the Minister without Portfolio as an efficacious way of bringing about the 10,000 scholarships and more without in any way contravening the constitution?

I look forward with keen anticipation to the Minister of Finance advising the Minister without Portfolio as to his reaction to this most unusual proposition. Constitutionally, it has never taken place before. The Minister without Portfolio suggested he could produce examples. At the time he spoke I could not recall any. I have not had the lengthy period in the house that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has had. He has had five years more. But in the time I have been in the house I have never known a minister to do that which has been suggested. Of course, if the constitution can be developed from precedent to precedent we indeed have a new precedent when a minister no longer finds it necessary to conform to cabinet solidarity when he speaks in the house.

I say again that it was a novel suggestion. It is one which will mean a cost to the country of some $50 million a year and it might even be more than that. But the very fact that the idea was advanced by the Minister without Portfolio, a distinguished student, means, I am sure, that it is something the Minister of Finance will grab on to and hold fast, as the Scripture says. Or will he discard it? If he discards it, it is passing strange how the Minister without Portfolio can remain in the cabinet when he holds such strong views on a matter of such importance to the nation.

I agree with him and with the representation he made in this house, albeit in a most unusual constitutional display, that this loan system should include evening and part-time students. I think it was an excellent suggestion and I repeat it again for the benefit of the minister lest he missed hearing it from one of the influential members of the cabinet with a knowledge of the subject. Does he intend to implement this suggestion, which is an excellent one?

With regard to the question of fees, may I say I tried to follow the Minister without Portfolio as he dealt with this matter. Personally I do not agree with an hon. gentleman to my left—I forget who it was—who advanced the idea that the days when students should struggle are entirely over.

Mr. Lewis: It was I.

Mr. Diefenbaker: All of us have had the experience in our university days of working our way. I did all kinds of jobs, as did the Minister of Finance. I tried teaching once under a temporary licence. I worked hard at that school. But when the inspector came along during school hours I was out shooting gophers. That was not on the curriculum that year.

Mr. Sharp: Did you have a licence for that as well?

Mr. Diefenbaker: In those days licences were not required. That was before the days of the C.C.F. in Saskatchewan.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Sir, I think the solution to this problem lies in making available larger amounts in unconditional grants to the various universities than have hitherto been passed on to them so that they in turn may reduce the amount of the annual fees.

Today fees have risen to such a point that they are almost prohibitive. In my day $35 or $40 a year represented the amount of fees required. All that is changed and many students today find it difficult to carry on at the rates which now exist and which are increasing year by year. I believe that as the parliament of Canada makes available increased grants to universities, as it must—there is no escaping that—there is no reason why those sums should not be in the form of conditional grants with a provision that the amount of the fees paid by university students should be reduced. There is no interference there with the authority of the provinces over education. Nobody has to accept a grant. But if a grant is accepted it should be passed on in part for the benefit of the students.

These are just a few suggestions I wanted to make in a desire to bring about further changes and in conformity with the lead given by the Minister without Portfolio. In other words, they are intended to improve this legislation by bringing about changes during the months that lie ahead.

We will never realize our national destiny unless we make education available to those who are able to profit from it. In the province of Ontario tremendous advances have been made under the Robarts government. I think of what the minister of education, Hon. Mr. Davis, has done in setting up community colleges. This was an excellent step and one which I think should be followed across the nation for the benefit of all. I believe that only 7 per cent of those of university age are able to attend universities. Some 30 per cent have the necessary capacity. The failure to make available a university education for that 23 per cent is a national waste. No one today has to prove that an education is of benefit economically to the individual as well as to the nation. I do not intend to go into that aspect of the matter on this occasion but there are many statistics on it.

It will be said that anything done in this connection will cost money. Well, this is the kind of expenditure which will bring dividends to the nation as a whole. It is because of this that I place before the minister these few suggestions, assuring him that any steps taken which have full regard to the constitutional division of powers and will expand and develop educational benefits will receive support.

I conclude with one further suggestion. Today we hear young men and women complaining about parliament and criticizing its operation and effectiveness. If any of them could hear in this house the young members elected to it within the last couple of years, that would be an answer to those who contend that parliament is not a living and vital place. Nothing more pleases one who has been here for years than to watch young men and women rising in the house, developing their talents and making their contributions, and I think it would give a tremendous lift to the youth of the nation if one more portfolio were added to the cabinet, a ministry of youth to bring together and correlate the various matters that particularly come within the ambit and influence of young men and women.

Such a ministry would give youth new hope. Young people come here regularly on visitations from various schools and other educational institutions. I have noticed the change in them after they have visited parliament. They come to scoff but when they return home, their viewpoint has changed. One of the finest examples of that was given in a recent radio broadcast over the C.B.C. by a young student, Michael Wood, of Milton consolidated high school, Milton, Ontario. I do not know how many hon. members listened to him, but his was a tremendously moving statement. He indicated that when he came here on one of the Rotary adventures in citizenship trips his views of parliament were not laudatory, but then he saw parliament as it is.

That is why I suggest that we could give this institution a greater appeal to young men and women were we to set up a department of youth with one of the young members —there are many of them who are qualified—in charge of it to be a central bureau or kind of clearing house for the young men and women of the nation so that all of them would feel not only a personal interest but also would feel that by such an appointment they had become partners in making parliament a better place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make three short observations at this point. Needless to say, the first is that I am happy to lend my support to this very popular piece of legislation. The proof of its popularity lies in the use that has been made of it. I know it is administered by the provinces but I am sure the federal government has a great deal to say about its administration.

Second, at present a new approach is being taken to increase the facilities of universities by adopting the summer semester idea whereby a student can do a year and a half's work in one year by making full use of a university during the summer. This idea has been put into practice at the University of Guelph in my riding, but it makes it necessary for a student to have more money over a one year period since he has to attend three semesters rather than two as in the past. I would like to be assured that this is taken into account by the various provinces.

The third observation I wish to make concerns the application form which a student and his parents must fill out when applying for a loan. I have before me one such application form from the province of Ontario which seeks some very personal and confidential information, including a statement of resources to be completed by the parents. It asks for information concerning salaries and wages, total income, other income, life insurance, whether their home is owned by themselves, its present market value, the amount of unpaid mortgage, details of other real estate and details of their bank accounts, both personal and savings.

I realize that such information is necessary in order to determine whether a student is in need of funds and I would quite agree with such an application form being retained in the hands of the banker who administers the loan, but when the information becomes generally known to university officials, including the registrar and everybody in his office, this is a mistake. Such confidential information should be retained in the hands of a banker who is in the habit of treating all such matters personally and confidentially. Again, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I lend my support to this very fine piece of legislation.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, the principle of this legislation has been dealt with by party colleagues of mine but there is one point I should like to make to the minister, namely, that special treatment should be given to students who join The Company of Young Canadians or CUSO after graduation. In those cases there should be a moratorium on repayment of the loans. Such students will be directing their talents and energies to very worth-while purposes and should not be penalized by having to make payments during their period of service in these organizations. I would ask the minister to make a statement on this point when he is closing the debate.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with other hon. members in congratulating the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) for introducing these amendments to the Canada Student Loans Act, and to lend my support to the remarks made by the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Turner) in appealing to the minister to take into account the many part-time and night-time students attending our institutions of higher learning in order to improve themselves and obtain better jobs in this era of advancing technology.

I also associate myself with those hon. members who have appealed to the minister to take into account those students who are improving themselves by attending summer seminar courses, thereby proving to their fellow citizens that they are willing to give up their leisure and other pleasures during their summer vacation in order to get a higher education.

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the last time I spoke on this subject was on June 13 and one point I raised at that time has since become rather widely publicized. I asked what was being done with the loan fund in the province of Ontario and said that the fund was being perverted by the provincial government in order to integrate it with the provincial bursary system.

• (4:10 p.m.)

In an article in the Ottawa Citizen of June 21, 1966 I note that this matter was raised by the Canadian Union of Students and by some students from the University of Ottawa. They had protested to the Ontario minister of education about what was being done. I should like to quote a brief segment of the article:

> Charges of "forced loans" were made on the basis of provisions requiring that the first $150 aid is a loan and anything more is 60 per cent loan, 40 per cent bursary.
> Miss Larkin—

Who presented the brief.

> —said in an interview Mr. Davis was wrong to force loans.

I agree. It always was my understanding that these loans were to be part of a co-ordinated program, that there would be loan, bursary and scholarship funds and that students in varying circumstances would be able to obtain assistance from whichever fund best suited them.

It seems that the province of Ontario has taken the students loan fund and has perverted it by changing it completely from its original basis. It may well be that under the arrangements made with the provinces the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) does not have the authority we would like to see him have in respect of the distribution of these moneys. I suggest to the minister and to the cabinet that when this matter comes up again in the fall, as I understand it will, perhaps more reasonable provisions might be worked out with regard to what is to be done with this money.

I do not like to see the loan fund tied into the bursary fund because the two are quite different. As one who had a bursary as well as small loans from individuals when I went to university and also has had some experience in teaching at university, it is my opinion that this is not a good thing. It places an unnecessary burden on the student. The students have a hard enough time in university now without having to face the problem of applying for a bursary and ending up instead with a loan.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): May I remind hon. members that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, many hon. members have taken advantage of the debate on the Canada student loans bill to express their views on education and educational policy generally. I have listened with very great interest to this debate. I think it has been a very useful one and has shown a remarkable unanimity of view among the parties in this house in respect of the importance of education and the large part government aid to education is necessarily going to play in the future. As one of those who had difficulty in obtaining a university education and, like the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), had to resort to various means of financing, I can heartily sympathize with the desire of all members who have participated in this debate to be sure not that university education becomes more easily attainable but that all those who have the ability to benefit from a university education obtain it.

As I said on a previous occasion, this problem is not going to be solved simply by making university education freely available either without charge or with such aid as would make it possible for students to obtain it. The problem is much deeper than that; it extends below the university level. One of the most difficult and serious problems we face is ensuring that those students who should be able to benefit from a university education do in fact graduate from high school. So the problem is one of far reaching difficulty and complexity.

I also agree with those who have spoken who have mentioned the magnitude of the financial requirements to ensure that our young people are adequately educated. As Minister of Finance I am very conscious of that; I am very conscious of it in relation to federal-provincial discussions. This is a question which must be discussed with the provinces. It is, if not entirely, certainly their primary responsibility. It is primarily the responsibility of the provinces, but that does not discharge the federal government from the responsibility to see that adequate educational opportunities are available to all Canadians. It does mean that we must work together with the provinces to achieve these desirable goals.

The Leader of the Opposition referred to the comments made by my colleague the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Turner). I am not a parliamentarian of great experience like the Leader of the Opposition and therefore perhaps it did not shock me quite as much as it did the right hon. gentleman when my colleague got up and expressed some views about education and put forward some of his own personal suggestions as to how this legislation might be improved in the future. I do know that my colleague, as he said, supports this legislation, but like many of us in the cabinet he hopes that in the future it can be improved still further. He put forward some suggestions, which he has made privately in other places and which I was glad to hear him put forward in this house, about how in the future we might move to make this legislation even more useful than it has been to date.

In general, during this discussion there has been agreement in respect of the aims of the Canada student loans plan and the amendments which now are before the house for consideration. In order, I hope, to shorten discussion in committee I should like to provide some answers to questions which were asked during the debate on the resolution stage and on second reading. The Leader of the Opposition asked about the eligibility of students from other countries. The Canada Student Loans Act defines a qualifying student as, among other things, one who (a) is a Canadian citizen or (b) has been resident in Canada for a period of not less than one year and has declared that he intends to reside in Canada after he ceases to be a full-time student.

In practice this means that a non-Canadian may be eligible if he has landed immigrant status. It does not include students from other countries entering Canada on a student's visa. Students from other countries applying for a student's visa for study in Canada must sign a declaration that they have sufficient funds to support themselves while in Canada. This financial support, of course, may come from Canadian sources in the form of scholarships or assistance under such programs as the Colombo Plan, but it follows that such students are not in need of and do not qualify for student loans.

Hon. members may recall that when the Canada Student Loans Act was introduced in the house nearly two years ago the minister of finance stated at page 5443 of Hansard of July 14, 1964:

> Students who are residents of other countries will not be eligible for loans under the Canada student loans plan. Students from the richer countries abroad who choose to study here will have their own sources of finance; with our universities already crowded we do not consider we should offer them special inducements to come here. Students from the less developed countries may, of course, obtain educational assistance under several Canadian programs.

[Mr. Sharp.]

I might mention further on this point that in order to avoid hardship for immigrants who have been in Canada for not much more than a year the provinces have agreed upon a residence formula which includes the case of landed immigrants. I refer here to the report on residence, which is included in appendix A of Hansard for June 11, 1965. This report forms part of the federal-provincial agreed criteria which are being applied in the administration of the plan and to which I referred in my opening statement when the resolution was being debated.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) asked how the $58 million in the new basic loan provision is to be allocated among the provinces. The basic loan provision in the loan year 1965-66 will be allocated to all provinces and territories on the basis of population in the 18 to 24 year age group. The act provides that in subsequent years the basic allocation will be increased each year at the same rate as the estimated growth of the population in Canada in that same age group. This rate of increase has been about 5 per cent.

In addition to the basic loan provision, which is $58 million for this year, the bill provides for a discretionary amount equal to 20 per cent of the basic loan provision, that is, $11,600,000 in the current year, all or any part of which the Minister of Finance may allocate to any participating province where the demand for loans under the agreed criteria exceeds that province's basic allocation. As I explained in my statement on the resolution, this supplementary allocation provides the flexibility required to adjust allocations to the varying degrees of demand for student loans from province to province.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Basford) suggested that the regulations be amended to extend the interest and repayment free period for borrowers while serving with CUSO or The Company of Young Canadians. This question was also raised by other hon. members. Representations to this effect have been made on several occasions recently and have been given very careful consideration. Legal advice has been obtained to the effect that such a change could be made only through an amendment to the act, not by regulations.

The reason we did not bring forward a change in the act in order to provide for this kind of flexibility is this. The Canada student loans plan is a very general measure applying to all provinces but one, and the effectiveness of such a general measure depends to a large extent on the basic simplicity of the plan. It was never intended to cover all requirements of all students but to serve as a broad base in the student assistance field, to be supplemented by other governmental and private schemes which should cover more specific situations. Any provision to afford a particular group special treatment under the plan would inevitably lead to representations for similar treatment by other groups who, at least in their own views, consider themselves equally deserving of special treatment.

The act and the regulations in their present form provide a bank, of course, with a good deal of flexibility in setting repayment terms with due regard to a borrower's probable ability to repay his loan, and it would be quite within the spirit of the legislation if a bank scheduled the repayments of a candidate for The Company of Young Canadians or CUSO over the maximum period provided for in the legislation, namely, ten years from the month of graduation.

This could at least partially meet the problem raised in individual cases where the amount of the loan owed is relatively small. To the extent that there remains a problem it seem to me and to the government that it could be dealt with more appropriately and directly through the provision of funds to The Company of Young Canadians and to CUSO for the purpose of helping to meet financial problems of highly desirable volunteers who, because of certain financial obligations, would not be able to serve without such special assistance. That is the brief answer to the point. It does seem to us to be more suitable for the special needs of candidates for The Company of Young Canadians and CUSO to be met by those agencies rather than by any forgiveness or special treatment under the Canada student loans plan.

The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) referred to opposition to the Canada Student Loans Act two years ago on the ground that education is under exclusive provincial jurisdiction. He asked whether the views of the new premier of Quebec had been ascertained and, if not, whether I intend to get in touch with the new premier in order to know whether his views are the same as his predecessor's.

The act provides that if the government of a province advises the minister before the beginning of a loan year, that is before July 1, that a provincial student loan plan will be in operation in that province in that loan year and that no appropriate authority for that province will be designated for the purposes of this act, the minister shall pay to that province an alternative amount calculated in accordance with section 12(2). I am bringing this provision of the act to the attention of the new Quebec premier.

Those were some of the main points that were raised. Toward the conclusion of the debate today and on several other occasions comments were made about changes that have been made by the government of Ontario in the administration of its bursary plan. I would not wish to give the impression that all the changes that have been made by the province of Ontario are exactly what we would have approved, but I do believe it is in the interests of the federal plan, and ultimately of the students themselves, to have student aid resources used in such a way that the limited amount of aid that is available, particularly bursary aid, will go as far as possible to meet students' needs. So where a province integrates the federal loan scheme with a provincial bursary scheme it is entirely within both the letter and the spirit of the federal plan to have the provinces decide how and in what ratio it wishes to meet the needs from loan and grant sources. We may wish to critize some provisions of the Ontario plan, but I did feel it desirable to say that in principle we do not find its plans to be unacceptable.

Comments were made by some hon. members about the extension of these loans to night students and summer course students. My colleague the Minister without Portfolio made this suggestion. I am sure that all of those who have had experience in attending night school will know that one of the main reasons for having student aid available in the form of loans or bursaries is to avoid night study by students, which is not a particularly satisfactory way of carrying on one's education. It seemed to me when I was a student, and I am sure this is so today, that the problem is not one of being able to finance the limited cost of night study. The purpose of the Canada Student Loans Act is to see that students can attend universities in the day time for full-time study.

We are prepared, of course, to have another look at this problem. As my colleague, the Minister without Portfolio, knows, a great deal of part-time study is done in one of the great institutions in his city, Sir George Williams University, and that is a provincial rather than a federal matter. I do know that in the city of Toronto there is a good deal of night study going on and we have not by any means dropped our consideration of this question for the future.

• (4:30 p.m.)

That hon. member also expressed concern over the lack of reciprocity between the Canada Student Loans Act and the Quebec student assistance plan. I am sure that hon. members will understand that this is a matter for negotiation between the province and the federal government. We have done some work and the agreement on residence that was worked out at a recent federal-provincial conference is evidence of the fact that we are concerned about the problem. Had it not been for the changes of government in various provinces in this country we would probably be engaged even now in discussing with the provinces this and other matters affecting educational policy.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

Clause 1 agreed to.

On clause 2—Limitation on aggregate amount.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I was not quite clear about the minister's explanation with regard to the 20 per cent supplementary allocation which amounts to roughly $11.6 million, I believe. Is it the fact that this amount is available only if all the other provinces do not take their full allocations?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, the answer to that question is no. The 20 per cent is over and above the $58 million. We will make an allocation of the $58 million and then we will have 20 per cent of the whole to use in supplementing the allocations in those provinces where needs exceed the original allocation. I should point this out because I am sure it is a question that will arise in my hon. friend's mind. We do not make these supplementary allocations except in agreement with all the provinces.

Mr. Monteith: Then actually the amount available is $69,600,000?

Mr. Sharp: That is right.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Haidasz: I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether any consideration has been given by him or his officials to extending the age limit for students wishing to borrow under this plan from 25 to 30 years of age.

Mr. Sharp: This is the first time I have heard this question raised and I will have to give consideration to it. It was not a matter that was urged upon us. But I shall certainly try to find out whether there is a problem here and if so I will bring forward amendments in the future.

Mr. Monteith: I have one further question in connection with the $11.6 million. The $58 million is statutory. Will there be a supplementary estimate for any other amount that is necessary?

Mr. Sharp: This bill appropriates not only the $58 million but the supplement as well.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, I should like to add to the point raised by the hon. member for Parkdale. More and more people over the age of 25 are attending institutions of higher learning. In many of our large metropolitan cities today high schools are given over completely to adults who are going on from high school to college, university or technical institutions. I think this is a subject that bears looking into.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I think there is some misunderstanding here, and probably the reason this question has never been raised is that the problem does not exist. All that is provided for in this clause is the allocation of the funds amongst the provinces. So far as I know there is no age limit in this respect. This clause deals only with the allocation of moneys among the provinces on the basis of the 18 to 25 age group.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry I did not hear the minister's statement earlier this afternoon. The other day on second reading I raised the question of whether negotiations had been entered into with the provinces in order to provide an extension of the period of forgiveness during which a student would not have to start repaying the loan, in view of the increasing activities of CUSO and now The Company of Young Canadians. The minister may have given the answer. If he did, I regret that I was absent attending the defence committee and did not hear it.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, as the committee knows, I did attempt to answer that question when I wound up the debate on second reading. In brief the answer is that we believe the needs of students who are candidates for The Company of Young Canadians or CUSO should be met by those agencies rather than the Canada Student Loans Act. In principle we accept this responsibility.

Mr. Lambert: What I mean is this. If a student had borrowed from the fund during his university training and upon graduation became a member of The Company of Young Canadians where the earnings are actually very restricted, do I understand from the minister's answer that while serving with The Company of Young Canadians the period of repayment would be deferred?

Mr. Sharp: I did suggest in a very general way, because I knew this would be the subject of individual negotiation, that those agencies would themselves help the student to meet the payments and extend the period in that way.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-200, to amend the Customs Tariff.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, in view of the comments made at the resolution stage I wonder whether the minister intends to make a statement at the beginning of the debate on second reading or on the particular clauses of the bill? The bill is very short.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, when the budget resolutions relating to the Customs Tariff were under discussion I made some comments on these items, although not very extensive ones because they are not of far-reaching importance. I have nothing further to say on second reading. My officials will be before me in committee and at that time I would be prepared to answer questions.

Mr. Lambert: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

On clause 1—Schedule A amended.

Mr. Lambert: The other night, Mr. Chairman, I raised a question about item 41105-1 in schedule A which refers to captive balloons having a volume of 150,000 cubic feet or more. I was interested in particular in the incidence of the entry into Canada of this item and of the use to which it is put. I understand they are used in the logging industry in rather inaccessible places to anchor certain equipment. I should like to know just what the volume of entry is or was the item inserted at the request of one or two operators?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, my understanding is the same as that of the hon. member for Edmonton West. These balloons are used for the transportation of logs in the mountains. The item aroused in me the same curiosity as it has in the hon. member. I understand that the item was requested by an industry which pointed out to us this new technique. Experimental work is being carried out on the west coast whereby these balloons are used to transport logs over rough terrain. The balloons are expensive. The request has been supported by the British Columbia Loggers Association. The balloons are controlled by cables, winches and so on. There has been no opposition to the request. There is no one who feels this is going to do damage to local production in Canada.

Mr. Lambert: One of my colleagues has suggested that these might be oversized trial balloons which the government might want in order to float some of their more difficult policies.

Mr. Barnett: Would the hon. member for Edmonton West allow me to interject at this point? I am interested in his remarks about trial balloons. However, I was going to suggest that perhaps the hon. member for Edmonton West and the Minister of Finance would care to visit my constituency during the recess when they might have an opportunity of seeing one of these mysterious balloons in operation.

Mr. Sharp: I am always much more interested in trial balloons that have a useful purpose than those which sometimes are tried out on political issues and which usually are punctured and collapse quickly.

Mr. Lambert: I should like to refer to item 70505-1 which covers goods imported by a settler for his household or personal use. Could we have pointed out the difference between the item incorporated in the schedule and what the item was before? I am sorry, but I do not have the whole of the Customs Tariff before me.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, this item replaces two items that have been in the tariff for a number of years and which provided free entry for a specified list of settlers' effects. The new item represents a consolidation and simplification of the former item. Previously the goods had to be owned abroad by the settler for at least six months in order to qualify for free entry. The first change of substance is that under the proposed item the goods must still be in his possession to be entitled to free entry but the six months' ownership requirement has been dropped. The six month's ownership requirement has been a continuing source of irritation to settlers who were not aware of it.

The second change of substance is that formerly a motor vehicle brought in by a settler was dutiable on its value in excess of $2,500. This provision will no longer apply. In addition, formerly the item listed the goods which were entitled to free entry and under the new item the goods will be defined by the Minister of National Revenue.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Schedule B amended.

Mr. Lambert: There is only one item under clause 2. I want to make it clear, because some confusion seems to have arisen in the minds of people concerned with some industrial shops, that both the 99 per cent drawback and the removal of the sales tax under Bill No. C-198, I believe it is, will be generally applicable on those items and on dies, jigs, fixtures or moulds or any equipment going into the manufacture thereof. The provision is definitely limited to the production of dies, jigs, fixtures and moulds used in the production of automobiles and motor vehicle parts. I take it this measure is in consequence of the announcement made by the minister or one of his colleagues some months ago, that this step was being taken in order to place Canadian parts manufacturers in a more competitive position with their United States counterparts who would not be faced with the same customs duties or sales taxes.

[Mr. Barnett.]

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Chairman, that is correct. This item provides for a 99 per cent drawback to be given on machines and certain equipment of a class or kind not made in Canada used in the manufacture of motor vehicles or parts, and the manufacture of dies, jigs, fixtures and moulds used in making motor vehicle parts. Previously a drawback could only be claimed by the manufacturers of motor vehicles or motor vehicle parts. This now applies much more generally. The addition of the words, "or when used for the manufacture of dies, jigs, fixtures or moulds which are used in the production of automobile or motor vehicle parts" will allow this drawback to be claimed also by Canadian manufacturers of these articles as well as by automobile manufacturers themselves.

Mr. Lambert: There is nothing that appears in the schedule, nor so far as I can see in Bill No. C-198, to the effect that there will be a discretion where these machines are of short life and are highly expendable as a result of model changes and rapid technological advances. There is nothing to indicate that it is for this reason they are getting this customs and excise tax relief. Somehow or other the impression has gotten abroad that there is an element of discretion as to those which are short-lived and those which are not. If there is any such discretion or discrimination perhaps that can be cleared up.

Mr. Sharp: In this item there is no discretion. The item is as described. It may be that when we get to the Excise Tax Act I will have to look at it. There is something also in my mind about that, but I am not sure.

EXCISE TAX ACT

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-198, to amend the Excise Tax Act.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the other night when we were discussing this measure I raised a number of questions. At that time I was hopeful that we would receive some general answers to the points which were raised, but for some reason or other the minister deferred the answers until the clause by clause study. I think it would have been a little more helpful had we been given answers at that time.

One point that I particularly raised was why sales tax was now being imposed on tire retreads. I think the minister will remember that I asked him what was the reason for this. If we go back in history, the last changes made to the Excise Tax Act were in 1963. I cannot put my finger on how this particular change was made since the 1963 statute makes no mention of tire retreaders. However, I suspect that it was done by the removal of an exemption and the restoration of a general item and therefore the exemption disappeared from the 1963 version in that way.

It appears that at that time the minister of the day felt that tire retreading for stock should be subject to sales tax. In other words, a tire retreader who was purchasing or accepting used tires for incorporation into his stock and was then selling them after retreading should collect sales tax on the retreaded tires which were being drawn from his stock.

I do not know what representations were received by the government at the time but I suspect there was some pressure by the tire manufacturers. The net result, of course, is that some 600-odd tire retreaders in the country have suffered an extensive diminution in sales of retreaded tires taken from stock. It has also resulted in the manufacturers of tires, of whom there are only six or seven in the country, being able to flood the market with third and fourth line tires which are actually cheaper than good retreads.

The reason I am raising this point at this time and not on the item is that I think a matter of principle is involved at this juncture with regard to retreaded tires. The minister's colleague, the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury), is now busily engaged with his officials and perhaps with provincial governments in improving automobile safety. Yet action has now been proposed to the government which will serve to negate a goodly part of any campaign for automobile safety. It is not only the body and the parts of an automobile that are important but also the tires. There is also no doubt in anyone's mind that a retreaded quality tire is a superior tire to any third or fourth line tire which undersells it. So the left hand is now being used to negate something that the right hand is attempting to do.

I should like the minister to look at this particular situation. I know it is much more evident now than it used to be. I submit to the minister that it is quite possible to purchase a third or fourth line tire for $13 or thereabouts, sometimes even as low as $10, but certainly no retreaded quality tire can be purchased for that amount.

There is the added question of the individual motorist making up his mind whether he will purchase retreaded tires or buy new tires. If it is now going to cost him an additional 11 per cent on the price of the retreads, as provided for under the amendment to the act, then the price differential between a retreaded tire and a cheap, new tire is made much narrower.

I am also wondering, Mr. Speaker, why there is an extension of sales tax into the services field. The custom retreading which is provided for and made taxable under clause 2 of the bill is in the same category as, for example, shoe repairing. Suppose the minister or I went to a shoemaker to get our shoes repaired or rebuilt. If a retreader of tires is deemed to be a manufacturer or a rebuilder, certainly there are many shoe services performed which in essence constitute a rebuilding of shoes. But there is no thought or suggestion that sales tax should apply to such services. Nor is there, as in this particular case, a sales tax imposed not on materials but on labour. This does not apply in other instances. For example, we do not pay excise sales tax on a rebuilt motor. We do not pay excise sales tax on a rebuilt television set.

Why should there be sales tax on a rebuilt tire? It is really a matter of being logical, unless particular pressure has been brought to bear.

I do want to discuss this matter further under the particular clause, Mr. Speaker, because I can point to a great number of differences. For instance, the minister is imposing sales tax on a stock tire in part twice. First of all, when the tire was new the full 11 per cent sales tax was paid. When it becomes used and is brought back into the shop, exchanged for another tire and is then retreaded, tax is again collected on the retail sales price to the customer. Incidentally, this is the only area in which excise sales tax is collected at the retail customer level. Why the discrimination?

If it is felt that there must be some revenue forthcoming, sales tax could be collected on the value of the materials which went into the making of the tire. But why treat the tire retreader as a manufacturer? As a manufacturer he would have to pay sales tax on the value of the rubber materials and any other materials he might have to use to make tires. I do not think there could be any great objection to that, but there is a vast difference between that and asking for the levy of sales tax also on the labour which goes into the retreading of tires.

I know that the minister has received representations in regard to the matter and I have too. As a matter of fact, the point I raised the other evening has brought forth a flood of telegrams from one end of the country to the other. I was interested in what the minister was trying to do even before there was contact with any people in the industry, because the amendment intrigued me. Why are we now moving into the services field with respect to sales tax? This is an extension of this tax and I am interested in the philosophy behind why it is being done. I should like to raise other points as the clauses come before us. However, I should like to hear from the minister at this time since my remarks are directed to the principle of this bill.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, by speaking now I would close the debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): May I remind hon. members that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

[Mr. Lambert.]

Mr. Sharp: The hon. member for Edmonton West has raised a very pertinent question and one that has caused me a great deal of concern. Perhaps I might be permitted to give a general explanation and then talk about this particular activity.

When an activity is considered to be an act of manufacture or production for sales tax purposes, the person performing such activity must pay tax on the selling price of the products resulting from this activity. The general definition of manufacturer or producer in the Excise Tax Act is broad enough to encompass all activities resulting in the creation of new products, and also all rebuilding or remanufacturing of goods if the commodities involved are the property of the rebuilder or the remanufacturer and are sold in the same manner as new commodities. That is the present act before amendment.

Everyone who is engaged in production or manufacturing, whether he is remanufacturing something he owns or whether he is manufacturing a new article, is subject to sales tax. That is a well established principle of the Excise Tax Act and has been in effect for a long time. However, up until this amendment to the act the federal sales tax did not apply to services. This has sometimes caused problems in areas where services rendered to repair old commodities account for the major proportion of the value of the repaired articles. In such instances the persons repairing those commodities compete with vendors of the new commodities or of the rebuilt commodities that they already own.

In all fairness, and this is the underlying principle of this change, the tax should apply to the charges made for services. Certainly this is the case with tire retreading.

The hon. member will recall that in 1963 the act was amended to make it apply to the sale of stock tires owned by the retreader. It could not be applied, however, to the repair of old tires. The result was a rather untidy administrative position. Indeed, you can imagine the kind of tax avoidance that went on. Instead of buying a stock retread, a person would go to an establishment with an old casing and say: "If you build this up for me I will not have to pay tax." We decided this year to try to apply the tax fairly by applying it not only to the retreaded tires owned by the remanufacturer but also to the value added to tires brought in by a customer to have retreaded.

This is the basic philosophy underlying this change. I am free to admit to the hon. gentleman that it has caused a good deal of complaint. We have looked very carefully at these complaints because in a sense we have a choice of evils. Either we continue with the present inequitable and unsatisfactory situation or we change the law as we are now proposing, knowing full well that the administrative result is not going to be too satisfactory. We have come to a conclusion and that is why we are pressing this amendment on the ground that it is better to attempt to apply the law equitably by this amendment rather than continuing to suffer under the inequalities of the present law.

Mr. Lambert: My, my.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

On clause 1—

Mr. Hales: I wish to address a question to the minister simply to clarify something in my own mind. The 15 per cent excise tax, as I understand it, is levied on the final selling price of Canadian products. That price includes the cost of selling, advertising, credit, distribution, etc. On the same products imported into Canada I understand that the excise tax is calculated only on the value at port of entry. Is this the case or is this clause designed to correct that situation?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, this clause does not apply to the general sales tax but only to the special excise tax. It is intended to apply to those cases where the goods are in certain kinds of containers as set out in the proposed amendment.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Retreader of tires deemed manufacturer or producer.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I must confess absolute astonishment at the reply given by the minister as to the rationale of the imposition of this tax in 1963 and its extension now. The reason given for the extension is that there were evils in the administration, in the application or incidence of the tax of 1963. I submit that the minister is jumping from the frying pan into the fire. He is now creating even greater evils both as to the administration and the incidence of the tax. The minister says that a customer having his tire custom retreaded has an unfair advantage over one buying a stock tire.

What about the used tire as against the stock retreaded tire? Should there not be a sales tax on the used tire? Also, does not that same principle apply to custom rebuilt shoes which compete with new shoes? Does this principle not apply to custom rebuilt engines as against stock engines? I point out that no tax is collected on the rebuilt engines.

Mr. Sharp: In order that there may be no misunderstanding, may I say it is my understanding that rebuilt engines are taxable as are rebuilt television sets and rebuilt refrigerators.

Mr. Lambert: I shall accept the minister's correction in that regard. But I find it extraordinary that this principle of the extension of sales tax to a service is now countenanced. I submit that we shall have a sales tax on services generally next. Using the salami method, there will be a gradual extension slice by slice. I cannot for the life of me see why this is being done.

Let us consider the difference between a tire retreader and a manufacturer. What is the difference between the new tire manufacturer and the retreader? The new tire manufacturer uses 100 per cent new raw materials and builds a new tire of which he maintains ownership until the time of sale. The retreader uses material mainly supplied by the tire manufacturer and the proportion of the content of new material to the old material is about 15 per cent. If the retreader is retreading a custom tire he has no ownership whatsoever in the tire. In the case of the stock tire he does.

Let us consider the difference in the incidence, say, of tax on a new tire as opposed to a retread. The new tire manufacturer pays a tax of 11 per cent on approximately 60 per cent of the selling price of a new tire. Let us take as an example a popular, good quality tire which retails at about $30. The cost to the manufacturer is between $10 and $12. He puts it out to the wholesaler or distribution agency where it is sold to a dealer, garage or service station at between $16 and $18. The customer pays $30. But sales tax is paid at the manufacturer's level.

In the case of a stock retread there may be an allowance of $5 or $6 on a good quality used casing. The value of the retreading, labour and materials is between $9.75 and $10.50. The retreaded tire is then sold for about $16, and that is where the 11 per cent sales tax is levied. The sales tax on a retread is on a higher level than it is in the case of a new tire.

The minister talks about improper incidence of taxation. Of course it is. But it is on the retreaded tire, not on the new tire. The retreaded tire bears a far greater sales tax load.

Are there any ways of avoiding or reducing the tax? Yes, there are certain ways. Some tire manufacturers own retreading plants. A manufacturer will sell to his own company at a wholesale price, and this is where the sales tax is levied. The service store is not then obliged to collect sales tax from the consumer at the retail level. The new tire manufacturer with his own retreading subsidiary has a definite advantage over an independent, and there are some 600 Canadian-owned independents in this country today. There are approximately seven tire manufacturers in this country, all foreign-owned. The application of this tax therefore places an unfair burden on Canadian-owned industry.

I will admit that the tire manufacturers employ a large number of people. But so do the tire retreaders. If hon. members wish to know the incidence of this taxation in connection with truck tires, I have some figures before me.

We must remember also the difference between the big trucking operator who is entitled to discounts and the small operator who is not. The sales tax on retreaded tires falls much more heavily on the smaller operator than it does on the big operator who is in a position to get substantial fleet discounts. Thus again we see the unfair incidence of this tax.

I am sure the officials in charge of sales tax administration in the department are aware of many ways in which this tax becomes an administrative monstrosity. There is no way of checking the number of retreaded tires which may be diverted to used tire stocks unless the department has inspectors out every morning to check on tire production and sales.

Other methods could be raised. I must say frankly that this will likely lead to the ruination of an industry. Let us face it: The tire retreading industry exists because of the sheer economics of the difference between the price of a new and a retreaded tire. The minister knows the cost of a huge tire such as is used for a carrier or heavy-load earth mover. Such tires cost thousands of dollars. They go back to the shops for custom rebuilding. Why impose this tax on the custom work particularly. I assure the minister it will cause many administrative headaches.

[Mr. Lambert.]

Two of the principles of taxation are ease of administration and equitable incidence, and I have pointed out how the proposed tax is both inequitable and difficult to administer. The minister is taking a regrettable step in extending this tax and I would urge him to withdraw it because it is going to cause a great deal of hardship across the country.

The minister may feel that he will collect more tax this way but I think he will collect less because a number of the tire retreaders who have spoken and written to me have indicated that since 1963 the sale of stock tires has decreased anywhere from 20 to 40 per cent. If that is the case, we are now going to reduce the sale of custom retread tires and encourage the purchase of new, cheap tires in the $9 to $12 range, on which the minister receives an 11 per cent tax on anywhere from 40 to 60 per cent of the value of those tires.

I think that the net revenue is going to decrease. Not only that, the minister will lose income tax revenue payable by these firms if employees are sacked or let go as a result of the step which he is taking. The whole thing is completely wrong and I urge the minister to withdraw this tax. I am sure the amount of revenue that will accrue to the crown from it will not be great. Yet its effect on a segment of industry will be especially harsh.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with great interest to the representations made on this proposal by the hon. member for Edmonton West. I myself have received representations very similar to those he has received and from which I presume he was in part quoting. Admittedly there are problems raised by this proposed amendment but after examining the situation as carefully as I could and, I might add, sympathetically, I have come to the conclusion that there will be fewer problems as a result of this amendment than there are now because of the present inequity between the treatment of custom retreads and stock retreads.

As I said earlier, the present law provides that stock retreads are taxed but custom retreads are not. This has produced a situation where as many tires as possible are brought in by motorists to be retreaded and are not subject to tax, to the detriment of those companies which buy their own casings, retread them and sell them. That is the reason why we are proposing this amendment.

I admit the problem is a difficult one but I believe it should be possible through administrative means to deal fairly as between new tires and retread tires. I believe it should be possible through administrative practices to help in ensuring that these tires are taxed at approximately the same level of trade. I agree with the hon. member that it would not be equitable to have retread tires taxed at a level closer to the consumer than new tires would be taxed, and it may be possible through administrative means, as we do in many other industries, to maintain as much equity as possible.

Mr. Lambert: The minister's suggestion is intriguing. Does he mean that the tax on the new tire is going to be levied and collected at a level much closer to the consumer? The worst feature is that part of the retread tire is paying sales tax twice and it is paying a great deal more tax than a similar tire of the same quality if it were a new tire. To me this does not make sense and is quite unjust.

Mr. Sharp: I was not suggesting that we are going to tax new tires any more heavily. I was suggesting that through administrative practice we might try to tax retread tires at a comparable level, in other words, by administrative practice try to establish discounts that would carry the effective level of tax back to what it would be if custom and stock retreads were sold at a different level of trade, at a lower level of trade, as are new tires when they are sold by the manufacturer.

Mr. Lambert: Then I take it the minister would be looking toward administratively bringing the stock retread into the same position as the custom retread; in other words, the sale price would be deemed to be equal to the retreading charge or cost. In the case of the stock retread there would be a figure placed on the value of the retreading, as is done now in the case of custom tires.

Mr. Sharp: Broadly speaking I can confirm that this is the intention but I will not be pinned down to fixing administrative rulings in this chamber. Generally this is the intention we have in mind.

Mr. Barnett: I have listened with interest to the discussion between the hon. member for Edmonton West and the minister and the minister has admitted that he is somewhat on the horns of a dilemma. I am concerned that this is one of these nuisance situations. Could the minister give the committee an estimate of the number of concerns which are not manufacturers at present so far as the excise tax is concerned but who will in effect become manufacturers as a result of this amending proposal?

I ask this question because it is my impression that there is a large number of quite small concerns, in some cases garages, which operate subsidiary tire retreading businesses and, I presume, are not now treated as manufacturers. Can the minister give an estimate of the number of people who will now qualify as manufacturers, many of them in small communities distant from the administrative centres of the Department of National Revenue?

Mr. Sharp: My understanding of the situation is that to a large extent those retreaders who have the necessary equipment will either do custom work or sell their own retread tires. The result of the 1963 amendment was that they shifted over from doing stock retreads to doing custom work because it was not subject to tax. One of the effects of this amendment will be to restore the stock retread business to some extent at least, it having fallen off very drastically as a result of the temptation to ask the customer to bring in his own casing and have it retreaded.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, there is another question in my mind. As I listened to much of the exchange between the minister and the member for Edmonton West, it seemed that it centred around the question of automobile tires. One of the questions in my mind is, what is the impact of this proposal going to be on what one might call the industrial application of free trade? Take, for example, the situation which easily could arise in my own constituency. If I am correctly informed, in some instances logging concerns operate quite large fleets of vehicles such as logging trucks and other equipment in the woods. They may have an arrangement with a private concern under some sort of contract of sales arrangement to do this work on their behalf. In this case what would be the impact of this proposal? Are the large logging companies going to have to go into the field of doing their own retreading within their operations and if they do so will they be considered as manufacturers of tires? If they do not do so , will the retreader who has been doing their work have to charge them a sales tax and thus, with the resultant increase in the cost push the company out of business?

I can think of one or two concerns in my own area which do quite a large volume of business in retreading tires for this type of industrial vehicle, and probably as an ancillary service they do a certain amount of retail retreading work for individual customers. Could the minister clarify the picture for us? I suppose the same question might arise in other fields of industrial activity or in the case of agricultural producers who operate a good deal of rubber-tired equipment.

Mr. Sharp: I am sure the hon. member will be pleased to recall that the sales tax is in the process of being removed from logging tires and therefore he will not have any problem to worry about. It will be a much reduced problem in April next year and no problem a year hence. The sales tax does not apply to agricultural implements and so on, so these are not problems of any great importance in the future. The hon. member asked a specific question in respect of whether it might not pay the logging companies to begin retreading their own tires. This would not save them from the tax.

Mr. Barnett: I did not quite catch the last part of the minister's remarks.

Mr. Sharp: I was saying that would not save them from the tax. The tax would continue to be applied even to those who retread their own tires if they are engaged in manufacturing.

Mr. Lambert: I know of some tire retreaders who do extensive work for many mining and oil companies in the Northwest Territories, the Yukon Territory, northern British Columbia and northern Alberta. The type of work is hard on tires and the equipment is big. The minister indicates that beginning next year they will have to pay sales tax only on a reduced basis. They will not have to pay it on the new equipment but when they get it retreaded they will have to pay it on the retreaded equipment.

Unless there is a particular exemption from this section, this section indicates clearly that old tires which are to be retreaded shall bear the tax. There is no saving exemption unless there is an amendment. I am not incorporating all the references from subsequent sections, but I would like to be assured on this point because otherwise we will have to go through this same exercise next year. From the minister's remarks it seems that the necessary drafting provision has been made. I am also looking at the differential between crown owned companies which do not pay the federal sales tax, such as air lines, and those which do have to pay the sales tax on the retreading of aircraft tires. Where there is discrimination between one corporate industrial or other activity as between a crown corporation and a private business concern, then again I say that to me it seems odd we should now have this extension into the service field, particularly in view of the fact that the minister now suggests they may reduce the incidence in the case of stock retreading and lower it to the level of the sales tax imposed for a service. This is the first time I have known that this is not a manufacturers' sales tax but is now a manufacturers' and service sales tax.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, may I assure the hon. member that even federal departments pay sales tax. The sales tax is paid by crown companies whether they are federal or provincial. It applies generally and there is no discrimination in that regard. I can also assure the hon. member that the reduction in sales tax is coming into effect in April and I hope will be eliminated the following April. It applies to this type of tire, a rebuilt tire, if used by one of the industries described in schedule V of the present bill. If the hon. member will look at that schedule he will see a reference, for example, under paragraph (e) to gasoline powered and diesel powered self-propelled trucks mounted on rubber-tired wheels for off-highway use exclusively at mines and quarries and, under paragraph (1) to parts for goods described in paragraphs (a) to (k). That would include the tires.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I was glad to have the minister clarify the one point but I am still a little puzzled just how someone doing retreading internally will be liable for tax under this clause as it is worded. It says that the tax will be payable on a sale price equal to the retreading charge. If somebody is doing the work for themselves, just how does one establish what the retreading charge is? In other words, they are not making a charge. So far as I know the department has not the facilities or the legislative authority to go that far with regard to the internal operations of a company. I may be wrong but I should like this matter clarified.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I would refer the hon. gentleman to the Excise Tax Act, section 31(1)(d), which states:

1. Whenever goods are manufactured or produced in Canada under such circumstances or conditions as render it difficult to determine the value thereof for the consumption or sales tax because . . .

(d) such goods are for use by the manufacturer or producer and not for sale; the minister may determine the value for the tax under this act—

Mr. Barnett: There are a number of sections and some of us do not have the technical assistance the minister has in following all the cross-references within the act.

Mr. Sharp: I would not have known this if I had not had some very competent officials in front of me.

Clause 3 agreed to.

On clause 4—Articles progressively exempted.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, in clause 4 there is a reference to the removal of sales tax on goods described in the proposed schedule V. I must compliment the minister regarding the words to be added to section 20 to the effect that oleomargarine for consumption in the province of Newfoundland is to be exempted. The public accounts committee has made a recommendation to the house in this regard in its last three or four reports. In the fourth report in 1964 the public accounts committee made this observation:

The committee was concerned to learn that the undertaking given in 1949 that the government would submit to parliament legislation designed to exempt oleomargarine sold in Newfoundland from the federal sales tax in the same manner as basic foodstuffs in other parts of Canada had not been carried out. Instead, the authority provided to the executive by section 22 of the Financial Administration Act had been used to render a tax, applicable elsewhere in Canada, completely inoperative in one province.

The committee stated that it does not consider that section 22 of the Financial Administration Act should be used in this way.

I have read from page 158 of the Auditor General's report for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1964. I am glad to see that this has been taken care of under the Excise Tax Act. I think parliament has been remiss in allowing this situation to exist since 1949 without having amended this act. However, I object to this procedure. I am one of those who feel that exempting one province in respect of a particular foodstuff that is taxable in another province is not the way to build unity. This is not fair to other provinces.

Not long ago parliament voted $8 million to the province of Newfoundland, and we are doing our part in this way to help that province. Why we should exempt this particular product in one province and not in the others I cannot understand. This seems to be discriminatory.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 5 to 7 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 8—Schedule III.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I have run into some difficulties with regard to certain aspects of schedule III. I am particularly concerned about technical papers which are printed and produced for technical associations. If they are not stapled in a certain way they are subject to sales tax; yet if they are bound in a certain way they are not subject to that tax. In my opinion there is an artificial distinction in this regard and I should like to have some clarification.

Why should there be a distinction between technical papers which are produced by a printing firm for a conference because they are stapled in the corner or stapled and bound down one side? When they are bound down the side they are deemed to be books and therefore not subject to sales tax; yet if they are stapled in the corner they are deemed not to be books and subject to sales tax. To me that is ludicrous. What is being exempted is a technical paper. This is much like saying that if a paper was bound with blue thread it would be subject to tax but if it was bound with red thread it would not be subject to tax. There seems to be a little hometown favouritism here. Perhaps the minister could give us some explanation about this particular matter.

I should like to draw attention to part V and the point that was raised by the hon. member for Wellington South regarding oleomargarine. Let me repeat the remarks I made the other night in respect of natural gas. Natural gas in all its uses should be exempted from sales tax. I think there has been an inequitable and narrow distinction in respect of natural gas not used in internal combustion engines. Turbines have been deemed not to be internal combustion engines. There was inequity in this regard.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with great interest to the comments of the hon. member for Edmonton West. We have not made any changes in this schedule other than to rearrange it in alphabetical order. In so far as the matter about which he has spoken is concerned, I really am unable to give a very satisfactory answer to his question because I am not sure why there is a distinction. Now that it has been drawn to my attention I shall make an inquiry. This has been part of the law for some time and it may require amendment, but I regret that I am unable to satisfy the hon. gentleman's curiosity at this time.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I have a question which arises out of the schedule in clause 8. There is a reference under part XIII which explains the item to be deleted from part XIII, that is to say, diesel fuel oil when used in internal combustion engines at mines to generate electricity for use in mining operations and other purposes connected therewith. It goes on to say:

> This exemption is now dealt with by the new sales tax exemption.

I take it that is the one in part VI where it says in paragraph 4:

> Fuel oil for use in the generation of electricity except where the electricity so generated is used primarily in the operation of a vehicle.

As I read the new item in part VI, there is no restriction to a mining operation as there was in that part, of part XIII which is being deleted. I am interested in knowing why this is so. But what I feel requires some clarification so far as I am concerned is the question of fuel oil for use in the generation of electricity except where the electricity so generated is used primarily in the operation of a vehicle. What is puzzling me is, does this mean, for example, that in the case of the bus service in a city where the power for the buses is generated by the use of diesel oil and then transmitted to an electrically operated motor that portion so used is not exempt from sales tax whereas the rest of it is? Does it also mean in connection with mining that on the portion of the electricity generated by a diesel power plant which is used to operate the underground railway equipment in the mine the operator will now have to pay sales tax?

Could the minister give us some clarification of just what is involved in this particular change? It seems to me a rather strange distinction that fuel oil is exempt so far as the generation of electricity is concerned.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Sharp: The essential point is that what we are exempting is diesel fuel used in the generation of electricity for commercial and industrial uses and so on. It was not our intention to eliminate it in connection with diesel fuel used for transportation. Take, for example, a diesel train. It operates on the principle of generating electricity which drives the engine. It is not our intention to exempt diesel fuel for that purpose. The same comment applies to diesel fuel used for buses that might operate on the same principle. The purpose of this exemption is to apply only to the generation of electricity for industrial, commercial and domestic use.

Mr. Barnett: In other words, what is covered here is the directly linked diesel-electric operation in a vehicle. Just to satisfy my curiosity further I might inquire whether for this purpose the term "vehicle" includes a ship or a boat.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, it includes a ship and an aircraft.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 9—Schedule V.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I have one question on clause 9, paragraph (i). It is a question that I raised the other night when we were discussing the resolution, namely, whether pipes, tubing, couplings, casings, fittings, thread protectors and nipples therefor used in the production of oil are covered with regard to the development of the tar sands in the province of Alberta. Will the use of these items in the production of oil under these circumstances be subject to sales tax as against their use in the conventional method of drilling oil wells?

Mr. Sharp: I am advised that pipes, valves and fittings used in the production of oil, whether from the tar sands or by the conventional method, would be covered by the lower rate next year and exempted from tax the following year.

Mr. Lambert: I want to get that clear, Mr. Chairman. There is a definite exemption at this time with regard to oil wells and natural gas wells. These tar sands are not wells. If there is no other provision whereby sales tax is not leviable on a similar type of equipment used in the production of oil from the bituminous sands, then no development such as the great Canadian oil sands near McMurray could claim to be producing oil from an oil well.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 9 carry?

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, on clause 9 I have a question arising out of paragraphs (b) and (d) of schedule V. If I understand correctly, the effect of this schedule is to set out the items on which there is to be a graduated reduction in the imposition of the sales tax. As I understand paragraphs (b) and (d) the equipment referred to has to do with exhausting dust and noxious fumes in the one case, and equipment having to do with the carrying of refuse or waste from machinery and apparatus in the other. This would apply to the kind of equipment that is used, for example, in the pulp and paper industry.

This equipment has the effect of reducing the incidence and level of pollution of the air in the one case and of water in the other. I must say that as far as this provision goes, if my understanding is correct, it is in effect an encouragement up to a point to provide this kind of equipment in plants that create pollution in the air and water. If this sort of provision is being made for equipment in both these fields of anti-pollution, am I correct that so far as any rebate of the corporation tax is concerned the concession only applies to equipment in the field of water pollution? I know this was the case last year and it is related, of course, to the income tax bill. I should like to ask why this double provision is provided here when in the other act the encouragement or exemption is applicable to only one field, that of water pollution, rather than both.

Mr. Sharp: I think that this question could be answered a little more satisfactorily when the income tax bill is before us. I take it that the hon. gentleman is not objecting to the reduction of the tax on the equipment mentioned under (b) and (d).

Mr. Barnett: No, the reverse.

Mr. Sharp: Paragraph (d) does not specifically refer to water pollution. Paragraph (b) does refer to exhausting dust and noxious fumes produced in manufacturing operations. Paragraph (d) refers to carrying refuse or waste from machinery and apparatus, which is rather different. It would be necessary, in dealing with the question of pollution, for the department to look at the kind of equipment that was being used for this purpose. I do not believe it is necessarily machinery used in the production of goods. However, if it does carry away refuse or waste as well as doing something else, then presumably it is under paragraph (d). However, one would have to look at the equipment itself.

Mr. Barnett: Perhaps I could cite a particular example which happens to be the one with which I am concerned at the moment. I am thinking about the construction of some new pulp and paper mills in British Columbia. Fairly extensive installations are being made for carrying waste liquids from the plants to guard against pollution of streams or, in some cases, of the sea water. This is being done to avoid affecting our salmon fishery adversely.

I know that one firm in my constituency has a plant under construction at the present time and is making an investment which I am told will probably run into millions of dollars for this particular purpose. It consists of an extension of equipment under the water with disposal pipes and that sort of thing designed to carry away the waste. Perhaps the minister could be explicit whether this type of equipment would be covered.

Mr. Sharp: I am advised that in making a ruling it would be the system connected with the carrying of refuse or waste that would be considered. If the system involved the carrying away of refuse or waste, and this seems to fit the description given by my hon. friend, then paragraph (d) would apply.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 10—Application and coming into force.

Mr. Sharp: I should like to propose an amendment to clause 10 relating to line 47 near the bottom of pages 15. I should like the Associate Minister of National Defence to move the following amendment:

That Bill C-198, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act be amended as follows:

(a) by striking out line 47 on page 15 thereof and substituting therefor the following: "on September 1, 1966".

By way of explanation to the house I would say that the proposed change in the effective date relates to the imposition of sales tax on processed furs at the dressing or dyeing stage. This change is a consequential modification in the present system of taxing furs and has necessitated the preparation of extensive regulations which, because of alterations in the original budget proposals, could not until now be released to the industry. To allow the industry sufficient time to get acquainted with these regulations and permit the Minister of National Revenue to determine the holdings of the industry and the market value of raw furs for tax purposes, it is desirable that the proposed change be postponed from July 1, 1966 to September 1, 1966.

Mr. Lambert: I think the minister will agree that these furs do become dear in more ways than one.

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): I so move.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 10 as amended carry?

Clause as amended agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Mr. Lambert: By leave, now.

Mr. Sharp moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacDonald), External Affairs—request for federal union of north Atlantic countries; the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Saltsman), Combines—gasoline—request for investigation into pricing, marketing, etc.; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), Old Age Security—inquiry as to further legislation this session.

It being six o'clock, the house will now proceed to private members' business listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions (papers), private bills and public bills.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. McIlraith: I believe, Mr. Speaker, it would better meet the wishes of hon. members if instead of proceeding with notices of motions (papers), we were to proceed with private bills for the purpose of dealing with items 2 and 3 on the order paper, being two bank bills, and items 13 and 14 which are two C.P.R. branch line bills. At the conclusion of dealing with those four bills we will revert to government business. Possibly this arrangement would meet the wishes of hon. members.

Mr. Starr: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the first business for private members' hour, namely, notices of motions for papers be deferred at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will now proceed with the private bills listed by the house leader.

PRIVATE BILLS

BANK OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-16, to incorporate Bank of British Columbia.

• (6:10 p.m.)

He said: Mr. Speaker, I will take only a few minutes. I want to thank the house and also the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) who has relinquished his place in private members' hour to let this bill come forward.

This bill is almost identical to the Bank of Western Canada bill which has already been to the standing committee and has been returned to committee of the whole. There are only one or two variations in this bill and they have to do with the capital stock of the bank, the fact that the head office of the bank will be in the city of Vancouver in British Columbia, that the majority of the shareholders will be residents of British Columbia, and also that the executive officers will be residents of, or have their ordinary residences in, the province of British Columbia.

As this bill is ostensibly the same as the Bank of Western Canada bill I feel we should proceed at once with the passage of second reading. I am sure hon. members are well aware that representations were made to the banking and commerce committee of the other place before the bill came to this house, and the minutes of those proceedings are available to hon. members.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I should like to suggest to the house that I would very much appreciate it if the bill, by unanimous consent, could pass all stages today because if it were referred to the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs there would only be a repetition of the proceedings in connection with the Bank of Western Canada bill. I might add that I am a member of that committee.

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word or two on the bill to incorporate the Bank of British Columbia. A number of members from western Canada have expressed the opinion that we need more banking facilities in western Canada and banking executives who are more aware of the opportunities for investment in British Columbia and indeed in the other western provinces. I think that the Bank of British Columbia can help to perform this function. I think that the new Bank of British Columbia, like the Bank of Western Canada, will provide a more intimate knowledge of the resources of western Canada, of the market opportunities there as well as the export opportunities, as viewed from the vantage point of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and, indeed, the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

There have been modifications over the last two years in the terms of the incorporation of the Bank of British Columbia which I think have been all to the good. The original plan was for the province of British Columbia to participate in the equity financing of the Bank of British Columbia. Initially, I believe the proposal was that the Crown, in right of the province of British Columbia, would put up 25 per cent of the equity capital and have voting privileges in porportion to that equity. This figure was later modified by the premier of British Columbia to 10 per cent.

Later the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) gave indications as to the nature of the amendments to the Bank Act as the act applies to the incorporation of chartered banks and their operations in this country, and one of the stipulations which the former minister of finance made over a year ago was that no government, be it foreign or provincial, should own equity shares in a chartered bank in Canada.

I understand that the amendments more recently made in the request for a charter for the Bank of British Columbia have taken this intention of the government of Canada, as expressed by the former minister of finance, into account and that the province of British Columbia does not now intend to own any equity shares in the Bank of British Columbia. In other words, there will be no ownership provisions and there will be no voting stock held by the province of British Columbia in the Bank of British Columbia.

I think this is all to the good. In this country we have a written constitution. We have powers reserved unto the provinces and the remaining powers, many of them very important and vital to the survival of this country as a nation, are reserved unto Canada as a whole.

One of the vital powers of this nation is control over money and banking, currency, the incorporation of banks and so on. I think it would be a pity if the parliament of Canada were ever in any way to delegate unto the provinces, and particularly unto one province, authority over banking or activities relating to banking in the sense of the activities of chartered banks. So that the retirement of the province of British Columbia from voting stock participation in this new chartered bank, the Bank of British Columbia, I think is a laudable move, one which all Canadians interested in the retaining of federal powers by the parliament of Canada and by Canada as a whole will appreciate.

There is another and important aspect to control of any corporation, of course, Mr. Speaker. One aspect is control over voting stock; another and equally important aspect, in the initial stages at least, is the appointment of directors. A list of directors appears in this bill to incorporate the Bank of British Columbia. Several of those directors are employees of the province of British Columbia. They are senior officers in Crown corporations established by the province of British Columbia.

In view of the expressed intention of the Minister of Finance of Canada that no other government, foreign or provincial, should have a substantial say in the policy-making of the chartered banks of this country, I personally wonder whether it is consistent with that intention to have paid officers of a provincial government on the board of directors of any chartered bank in Canada. I realize that this is an interim board, one which will be subject to the intentions of the shareholders of the Bank of British Columbia. I presume that this particular subject will be thoroughly discussed when the Bank of British Columbia bill is referred to the committee of this house which deals with finance. Indeed, I am sure that the matter will be raised. It will be raised because one of the proposed directors is the chief fund raiser for the government party in the province of British Columbia.

To reiterate, Mr. Speaker, I welcome this incorporation. I believe we must incorporate this bank and more banks in western Canada. Certainly I welcome the incorporation of the Bank of British Columbia with headquarters in Vancouver, the directors of which are British Columbians, and with capital raised through private channels in the western part of the country. I am sure the bank will perform a vital function. Subject to the qualification which I raised in respect of the directors, I trust that this bill will pass first to the committee and then, when it comes back from committee, that the Bank of British Columbia bill will receive third reading so it can become one of the most prosperous and useful chartered banks in this country.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Davis) that the bill before us to incorporate the Bank of British Columbia will serve a useful purpose in the regional development not only of the area from which we come but also as an addition to our banking system. I must, however, express myself briefly in the strongest possible terms as differing with him on the changes which have been effected in this measure since it was first considered in its original form by parliament. Far from these changes being all to the good, in my view they are all to the bad.

I do not want to argue at any length, but I must make it clear so far as I am concerned that the hon. member's argument with respect to control of the banking system and with respect to the province's equity in ownership of the bank is completely specious. I am sorry that the hon. member for Coast-Capilano should continue falling into the error displayed by the former minister of finance in this house. I want to register this view when the bill is before us for second reading. Apart from that I would be happy to see the bill receive second reading so that it could go to committee for study.

[Mr. Davis.]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned I feel that the details of this bill should not be examined at this time. The question is simple. I think all these incorporations should be given approval in principle unless there is something patently wrong and should be sent to the appropriate committees. In this case the bill should be sent to the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs. Such bills can be examined in the committee. All members of the house who are so minded and prepared to attend, as they ought to be, the meetings of the committee, then have the opportunity to question witnesses at their leisure and to their greater benefit rather than posing hypothetical questions in the house which many times are meaningless. I am therefore in favour of giving this bill second reading at this time to get it off to the committee as soon as possible.

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, as a member from British Columbia I feel compelled to make a few remarks on this bill which has come forward more quickly than anticipated.

I have long been an advocate that we in western Canada and on the Pacific coast need financial and lending institutions which are particularly and peculiarly oriented to the problems that arise in western Canada and on the Pacific coast. In the last parliament, as in this, I have been a supporter of the bill to incorporate the Bank of Western Canada. I believe we need more banks in our country. We need more competition within our banking system. I welcome the opportunity of speaking in support of the principle of a bill which will establish a bank in British Columbia.

I hope that this bill will be sent to the committee today. None the less I want to put on record a reservation and instruction to the members of the committee, of whom I am also one. I wish to point out some questions that I want to have asked in that committee.

I expressed during the last election campaign, when this matter was raised in my riding, the deepest possible reservations about some of the proposed directors of this bank. I particularly refer to Mr. Einar Gunderson who I suspect will be the president and chairman of the board of the new bank. Mr. Gunderson has had a checkered and colourful political career in British Columbia. At the present time he is the chief fund raiser for the Social Credit party in British Columbia.

He is general manager of the provincially owned Pacific Great Eastern Railway.

We saw not too long ago his peculiar relationship with the premier, and in connection with fund raising we are aware of the "Dear Hal" letter which came before the courts of British Columbia. We saw Mr. Gunderson's peculiar relationship with Mr. Harry Stonehill, the United States citizen who was kicked out of the Philippines and subsequently deported from Canada.

During the Easter recess I wrote to the parliamentary agent for this bill in Ottawa pointing out that I had a number of questions I would want to ask when the bill went to committee. I did so in order that material to answer my questions could be prepared in advance and thus the bill would not be delayed in committee because of time being required to prepare the information I wanted.

Because this bill has come before the house sooner than expected I shall not have an opportunity of putting my letter to Mr. Burke-Robertson on record. I simply asked the parliamentary agent to communicate with his principals and to prepare statements, because I want information on all business dealings during the last ten years that each of the provisional directors has had with the provincial government concerned or with any of its agencies. I want to know what appointments, jobs or remuneration, if any, these directors have received or are receiving from the province of British Columbia. I want to know because I suspect that Mr. Einar Gunderson and Mr. William Clark Mearns, who is an executive of B.C. Hydro, are simply puppets for the premier of British Columbia. In the course of the committee hearings I want to determine whether these men in fact are the premier's puppets. I look forward to putting on the record in greater detail, when this bill reaches the committee, the questions I have raised now.

While I support the concept of a bank for British Columbia to serve industry and the country, we all have an obligation to the people of British Columbia who will be investing in this bank and putting their savings into it. We have an obligation to ensure that their investments and savings will be safe. The idea and the concept of a bank for British Columbia is overwhelmingly popular and has support in my province. The many small people putting their money into this bank must be protected and we have an obligation to ensure that this money is properly managed. I am cautioning the committee at this time to examine this measure and the people behind it to make sure that the savings and property of the people of British Columbia will be adequately protected by the bank's directors.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, before this bill is sent to the committee I should like to say a few words with regard to our banking system in relation to the bill.

Coming from a province in western Canada closely associated with British Columbia, I can say at the outset that I am in favour of a chartered bank with headquarters in British Columbia. However, like the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard I must speak about the directors of this bank. I would rather see the provincial government have a 10 per cent share in the bank, if this is necessary, than have it acquire control of the bank in a roundabout way. In other words, if the province is going to have an interest in the bank it should be so stated.

I spoke on a similar bill that came before the house in which it was provided that the province of British Columbia would have only a 10 per cent share interest in the proposed Bank of British Columbia.

I said then that a bank charter is a very great privilege to be granted to any group of individuals and that a group granted such a charter should be prepared to work for the general advantage of Canada. A provincial premier certainly has responsibility for developing his province and providing for its people, and if he feels that an interest in a bank would help him to achieve those ends I cannot see why we should oppose an application along these lines.

However, as suggested by the previous speaker there is a close connection between the government and the directors set out in this bill. This makes one suspicious and I certainly hope that when the bill is sent to committee the members of that committee will carry out a thorough examination in this connection. Most hon. members do not like to see deals made under the table which might lead one to suspect there is or could be too close a connection. Before this parliament awards a charter to any group of individuals, careful consideration must be paid to their character, general worthiness and capacity to operate a bank.

It is interesting to note that last year there were three applications for charters on the order paper. One applicant is apparently waiting until the revisions have been made to the Bank Act. This may be the proper attitude to take. Why apply for a charter before the act has been amended? Would it not be better to wait until we see the proposals for the revision of the Bank Act so that we will know exactly what we are granting?

A bank charter in this country is a privilege, and to appreciate this one must look at the banking situation over the years. Very few charters have been granted, none, in fact, since the thirties or a little earlier. But during the same period the house has dealt with many applications by finance companies, trust companies and people who in the minds of many might be classed as loan sharks. I do not think this is good for Canada. These loan companies do not need a charter from this house. Their accounts need not be subjected to federal scrutiny. Some hon. members might feel we should grant every application for a charter that is made. If we did we might find ourselves in the same position as many of the provinces with too many finance companies on shaky ground.

It is therefore our duty to give close scrutiny to every application for a charter. There should also be a careful examination of the worthiness and capacity of the directors, particularly as to their intent to work for the general advantage of Canada. A charter is a licence to operate in Canada as a private industry but with special privileges. We need only remember that banks today have a right to create money. That is what our banks do. For every dollar they have on deposit they can lend $20 or $30. This is a great privilege for a private business and we should make certain that the general intent is to work and serve for the advantage not necessarily of the board of directors or of the shareholders but of Canada as a whole. I hope all hon. members, particularly those who sit on the finance committee, will bear this in mind when they come to examine Bill No. S-16.

The Bank of British Columbia should certainly operate for the advantage of British Columbia. But it ought also to operate for the general advantage of Canada. I am somewhat concerned about this aspect. If the province were openly to own 10 per cent of the bank, I would know it might have 10 per cent of the influence. As it is, one does not know whether the province would have 50 per cent or 51 per cent of the influence, whether it would operate solely for the advantage of the province, with its tremendous real and potential wealth in oil, timber and mineral resources, or whether it would work for the general good of the people of Canada.

[Mr. Horner (Acadia).]

I will say nothing further. I conclude by expressing the hope that the committee will examine this bill thoroughly and assess the directors carefully on the basis of the points I have stressed—worthiness, general intent and capability.

• (6:40 p.m.)

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say that our group accepts this bill in principle; we are happy about its introduction and the fact that it is submitted by a province such as British Columbia.

Once this bill has been referred to the committee and passed by the house, it will be the first time in the history of parliament that a province has the right to operate a bank. That bank will belong to the province of British Columbia, if I understood the bill well.

Mr. Speaker, the provisions of the bill are not what we would like to see; we would like a much more flexible bill, granting much more common and stable rights, in short, rights which would give the province more powers than those which the bank exercises at the present time. But I know that British Columbia must comply with the government's requirements and accept the same conditions as the other banks.

The Bank Act will be the same for British Columbia as for any bank in Canada. But it is a step forward in the economy of the monetary and banking systems. If there is in that province capital to put at the disposal of the citizens, we must not be against the fact that such capital operates through a bank and that Canadians can benefit more therefrom.

The chartered banks are the creatures of the Canadian parliament. They literally owe their existence to it. They have to come to that same parliament every ten years to renew their charters without which they would stop existing. They get all their rights and privileges from parliament, even the exclusive right to create and issue money. That is so true that if the government, as the sovereign body representing the whole nation, needs money in addition to what it gets from taxes or loans on the savings of the people, it must bow before those creatures.

Mr. Speaker, when that happens, it becomes obvious that the chartered banks are not constituted as they should be, because if the government is able to give them all that authority, it should at least hold the supreme authority and not be forced to go down on its knees before those institutions when it needs credit to finance the country. That is what we are against. We object to the fact that the government is forced to go down on its knees before the chartered banks and ask them to lend it money or credit to administer the business of the country when it has given them the exclusive right to create money and credit.

If the government can give these institutions exclusive rights, it can surely hold on to sovereign rights it has on institutions of its own creation and on the creation of money and credit in Canada. It is always a question of money, of shortage of money, when governments need credit. Not a single government in Canada, I would even say in the world, can create its own credit. Development of our various natural resources, construction of bridges, roads, institutions, universities, colleges, everything that is publicly-owned, should be financed and controlled by the sovereign government or a sovereign and independent commission of the government which would have control over money according to the ability of our citizens to develop our country.

There are many physical assets in this country which we could develop. The men are waiting; the institutions are waiting. Canada has a considerable number of engineers, qualified men capable of undertaking all those things Canadians absolutely need. We cannot do it because we operate within the money available, and we are too deep in debt. The federal and provincial governments are too deep in debt; the municipal governments and school boards are too deep in debt. So, the country goes undeveloped; we eschew giving work to our people and initiating what could be done in such a vast country as Canada.

There are a million things we could do: We could build more bridges and roads, as long as the need is being felt and as long as there are men and materials available. We have to deprive ourselves because we lack the necessary credit.

We support the granting of this charter to the Bank of British Columbia under government control. We want every province to progress. And we wish the same thing to the other provinces and we hope that, in the future, there will be improvements, and amendments to the Bank Act and to the constitution if necessary, so that the sovereign government may take such control and exert such sovereignty.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether it would be agreeable to hon. members to call the two C.P.R. railway branch line bills together?

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY

Mr. R. J. Orange (Northwest Territories) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-32, respecting Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, before the motion is adopted or the sponsor speaks to the bill, could we have an understanding as to what was in the mind of the government house leader when he proposed that we take Bills S-32 and S-4 together? Upon their completion would it be his thought that we would revert to government orders?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, we would revert to public business at the conclusion of these two railway bills.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. R. J. Orange (Northwest Territories) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-34, respecting Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, instead of referring these two bills to the standing committee on transport and communications, I wonder if it would be agreeable to the house to deal with them in committee now?

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I would agree with that.

Mr. Howard: It is highly unusual.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Private Bills

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By unanimous agreement the house will now go into committee of the whole on Bill S-32.

The house in committee on Bill No. S-32, respecting Canadian Pacific Railway Company—Mr. Orange—Mr. Batten in the Chair.

On clause 1—Line of railway authorized.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, for the sake of posterity and in order that those who read the record may come to some conclusion as to what we are doing, I think it would be advisable if the sponsor of the bill would place on the record what is contemplated by this bill.

• (6:50 p.m.)

Mr. Orange: Mr. Chairman, as hon. members are aware, a railway company must come to parliament in order to obtain authority to construct a branch line in excess of six miles in length. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company is proposing to build a branch line a distance of approximately 11 miles in Saskatchewan in the vicinity of Fox Valley. Fox Valley is located on the C.P.R.'s Burstall subdivision about 70 miles west of Swift Current. The branch line will be built to a property owned by the Saskatchewan Minerals Corporation. The Saskatchewan Minerals Corporation owns a deposit of sodium sulphite estimated at nine million tons at Ingebright Lake. It is estimated that the plant which presently is under construction will commence operation some time this fall. It is for this reason it is urgent that the house give approval to this particular bill. In this area the government of Saskatchewan, in addition to the Saskatchewan Minerals Corporation, has extended rights to two other private companies to develop sodium sulphite deposits and subsequently to build plants in the area.

This is an important economic project both to Saskatchewan and to Canada as a whole. The construction of this line is in the best interests of the province and the country.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, before this clause carries I should like to say that in matters such as this it is usual for the government to select from among its own members someone from the particular province to move such a bill. Could we have an explanation from the government why it did not select one of its members from Saskatchewan to sponsor this bill?

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. Basford: Mr. Chairman, the house has been very co-operative with the Canadian Pacific Railway in dealing with these two bills and I trust the members interested in this legislation will be equally co-operative when it comes to dealing with Bill C-206 to remove the Kitsilano trestle.

Mr. Orange moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

The house in committee on Bill No. S-34, respecting Canadian Pacific Railway Company—Mr. Orange—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1—Line of railway authorized.

Mr. Orange: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill is similar to that of the previous bill. It is intended to construct a small branch line in the province of Alberta in the vicinity of Didsbury. The length of the line will be 16.5 miles and it will extend to the Canadian Superior Oil Limited plant. As in the last case it is important that this bill be considered urgent.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, because the spur line which is proposed in this bill is within the confines of my constituency I think I should say a few words about it. This branch line of 16.5 miles in length is to run from the town of Didsbury west to the Canadian Superior Oil plant at Harmatton. This line is vital for the transportation basically of sulphur which is one of the by-products of that plant. Therefore, the proposal that the C.P.R. build this line is important in respect of the ability of that plant to transport its products.

There has been some controversy with regard to the location of this line. The suggestion was made that it run from the branch line from Carstairs out from Cremona and north to the plant rather than run west from the town of Didsbury. For the record I should say that while the plan has been opposed by the county council of Mountain View, the town of Didsbury and the local chamber of commerce have given support to the location which has been selected for the right of way.

While this branch line is only proposed to be 16.5 miles in length, one day before too long it will be extended to the boundary of Banff national park where at Panther Mountain there is one of the largest deposits of sulphur in the world. Therefore this line is but a forerunner of an extension which will take place in the not too distant future.

In respect of Bill S-34 there is just one area where I express some concern and that is that the Canadian Pacific Railway in its public relations program could have done a much better job in dealing with the public and settling the fears with regard to the best route for the railroad. I will not go into that in detail at this time. I should like to say to the members of the committee that this is a very important branch line and we will appreciate it if the bill can be cleared through the house at this time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, there is a C.N.R. resolution preceding a bill to which I referred earlier in the day. Because it is a C.N.R. bill and the provisions of funds is involved it requires a resolution stage. I wonder whether it would be agreeable to call the resolution so that the bill could be printed, distributed and dealt with later in the session.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for the Northwest Territories has had remarkable success with railway bills today. Perhaps we should ask him to sponsor this measure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is it agreed unanimously that the resolution in respect of C.N.R. branch lines referred to by the Minister of Public Works be considered now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF BRANCH LINES IN WEST

Hon. John N. Turner (for the Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize and to provide for the construction by Canadian National Railway Company of a line of railway in the province of Manitoba from the vicinity of Stall Lake on the Chisel Lake subdivision of Canadian National Railways in a northeasterly direction for a distance of approximately 12 miles to a point in the vicinity of Osborne lake in The Pas mining district of that province, and of a line of railway in the province of Saskatchewan from the vicinity of Watrous on the Watrous subdivision of the said railways in a northeasterly direction for a distance of approximately 18 miles to a point in the vicinity of Guernsey in the Regina mining district of that province, at a total expenditure of $3,400,000, not to be exceeded by more than 15 per cent, and to authorize and to provide for temporary loans to the company out of the consolidated revenue fund toward the cost of construction.

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, this resolution combines in the standard form a request for authorization for the Canadian National Railways to build two branch lines, the first in the province of Manitoba from the vicinity of Stall lake on the Chisel lake subdivision of the Canadian National Railways in a northeasterly direction for a distance of approximately 12 miles to a point in the vicinity of Osborne lake and the premises of Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company. The purpose is, of course, to allow the development of the established reserves of copper and zinc in the area and transport it out.

The bill will provide for the usual traffic guarantee to the railway, and the parliament of Canada is requested to authorize a temporary loan to the company out of the consolidated revenue fund—this is the usual practice—and to guarantee the funds of the railway for the line.

Canadian National Railways

The second part of the resolution deals with another branch line, this time in the province of Saskatchewan, from the vicinity of Watrous on the Watrous subdivision in a northeasterly direction for a distance of approximately 18 miles to the site of a shaft and processing plant of Alwinsal Potash of Canada Limited. This will allow the development of one of the new strikes of potash in the province of Saskatchewan. Again when the bill is circulated it will contain the usual provisions. We have already passed one of this kind this session.

When this bill comes before the house the Minister of Transport or myself will be prepared to give more detail as to the locations, the estimated capital cost and the resources being developed, as well as the time required for construction of each of these branch lines. One of us will state generally the traffic involved and the nature of the resources to be developed. I would therefore ask the committee to adopt the resolution so we can introduce the bill.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Mr. Chairman, on behalf of this group let me say that we are prepared at this time to reserve comment until we reach the first reading of the bill.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Peters: Just before it does carry, Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask whether the government has given consideration to these two lines, particularly the second one from Watrous to the new potash development, in relation to recent pipe line developments. In view of the fact that potash can be transported by pipe line rather than just by rail, I am wondering whether any consideration has been given to the development of a transportation policy. This new mode of transportation, that is by pipe line, is obviously geared to the province of Saskatchewan because of the development of potash and the fact that it is one commodity that can be transported by pipe line.

I am particularly interested in this subject because of the fact that in Ontario there have been developed branch line pipe line carriers, and there is contemplated a change in transportation systems in respect of certain commodities. Perhaps we should have a transportation policy which takes into consideration the new means of transportation.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, I may say that the suggestion of the hon. member is a pertinent one and that the Department of Transport is looking into the system of transportation of solids through pipe lines. In this particular case the company felt that since it was able to obtain a 15 year guarantee of traffic from the company, during which time the cost of the line would be completely amortized, there was no uneconomic factor involved.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Turner (for the Minister of Transport) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-210 respecting the construction by Canadian National Railway Company of a line of railway in the province of Manitoba from the vicinity of Stall lake on the Chisel lake subdivision of Canadian National Railways in a northeasterly direction for a distance of approximately 12 miles to a point in the vicinity of Osborne lake in The Pas mining district of that province, and of a line of railway in the province of Saskatchewan from the vicinity of Watrous on the Watrous subdivision of the said railways in a northeasterly direction for a distance of approximately 18 miles to a point in the vicinity of Guernsey in the Regina mining district of that province.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FINANCE

PROVISION FOR PAYMENT TO PROVINCES OF CERTAIN CORPORATION INCOME TAX

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize payments to the provinces equal to 95 per cent of that part of the income tax paid under part I of the Income Tax Act by certain corporations in respect of income earned after 1965 that is attributable to the gross revenue of such corporations from the distribution and sale to the public in the province or the generation and sale in the province for distribution to the public of electrical energy or steam, or from the distribution and sale of gas to the public in the province; and to provide that an amount paid under the said measure that is paid or otherwise credited by the province to such a corporation for the use of that corporation shall be exempt from income tax.

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, this resolution seeks the permission of this house for the introduction of a measure to provide for the payment to the provinces of 95 per cent of the income tax paid to the federal government by certain public utility corporations on that part of their income arising from their public utility operations. An arrangement was made in 1947—and has been renewed periodically by succeeding governments—under which 50 per cent of this federal tax has been transferred to the provinces.

In July last year the government undertook to increase the transfer from 50 per cent to 95 per cent and hon. members are being asked by this resolution to carry out this undertaking of the government of Canada.

The transfer to the provinces of a portion of the federal income tax paid by electrical, gas and steam utilities was instituted in 1947 as an integral part of the Dominion-Provincial Tax Rental Agreements Act of that year. Under that legislation Canada agreed to pay to the provinces for the five-year duration of the agreements one-half of the federal income tax paid by these utilities subject to certain minor adjustments. This sharing arrangement was continued for a further five years by the Tax Rental Agreements Act, 1952, and on the conclusion of that agreement Canada undertook at each subsequent quinquennial revision of the fiscal arrangements to continue the 50 per cent sharing by an item in the annual estimates.

In the estimates tabled in this house on February 14, 1966, there will be found under vote 5 of the Department of Finance a request for authority to share with the provinces the income tax paid by these utilities in 1964. It has, of course, been necessary over the years to adjust the regulations governing the 50 per cent sharing to take into account such changes in fiscal arrangements as the 1962 changeover from tax rental to tax collection agreements.

In addition to providing in 1947 for the payment to the provinces of one half of the income tax paid by certain privately owned public utilities, the government of Canada provided in the following year for a tax concession to these corporations. In 1948, at a time when the general tax rate was 50 per cent of taxable income, the rate on the taxable income of these public utilities was reduced to 43 per cent. While the 7 per cent rate advantage has been reduced, these corporations remain subject to a corporate income tax rate that remains 2 per cent less than the general 47 per cent corporate tax. This provision is contained in section 85 of the Income Tax Act. I draw this section to the attention of hon. members because many of the provisions of the bill which it is my intention to introduce following the acceptance of this resolution are modelled on section 85 of the Income Tax Act.

The decision to increase this transfer to the provinces from 50 per cent to almost 100 per cent of the federal tax was in response to pressing representations from several provinces. Prior to and at the federal-provincial conference of prime ministers and premiers held in July last year many provinces argued that privately owned gas and electrical utilities were still at a competitive disadvantage vis-à-vis publicly owned utilities, and that this disadavantage inhibited the private companies from developing new power sites necessary for Canada's requirements. They also expressed concern that because of this differential treatment the customers of the privately owned utility companies were similarly placed at a disadvantage. Furthermore, it was argued that this disadvantage was felt most in those provinces which depended on private companies for the generation or distribution of electrical energy and gas and that the continuation of this disadvantage would oblige the provinces to consider the nationalization of these utilities. The government of Canada was obliged to acknowledge, after careful consideration, the force of the provincial argument as to the effect upon the consumers of electrical energy and gas of the differential treatment of utilities.

In announcing the policy decision to increase the tax transfer to the provinces my predecessor, the hon. member for Davenport, indicated that while the federal transfers to the provinces would continue to be unconditional he expected that the provinces would ensure that the benefit of the increased transfer would be passed on to consumers in the form of reduced rates.

Before speaking further to the intent of this resolution I should like to explain the 95 per cent figure. Hon. members may wonder why the government did not undertake to transfer 100 per cent of the federal tax to the provinces. The reason is that the federal government needs to retain some 5 per cent of the federal tax revenue to compensate it for the dividend tax credit it continues to give to shareholders of these Canadian corporations.

The public utility corporations to which this resolution applies are those whose main business is the distribution and sale to the public of electrical energy, gas and steam or the generation and sale for distribution to the public of electrical energy and steam. It is the federal income tax paid by these corporations that this resolution proposes to transfer to the provinces. Hon. members may find it helpful if I were to refer to the relevant provisions of the Income Tax Act.

Part I, section 85, of the Income Tax Act, to ensure that the 45 per cent rate applies only to corporations that are genuinely in the public utility field and does not extend to corporations that may, incidental to their main activity, generate or sell electrical energy, gas or steam, requires that a corporation to be eligible for the lower rate must receive more than one half of its total gross revenue from such distribution and sale or generation and sale. Similarly, part I of the Income Tax Act, to ensure that the lower rate of taxation does not apply to corporations that are merely providing electrical energy, gas or steam mainly for subsidiaries or parent companies, and are not serving the public, requires that a corporation to be eligible for the preferred tax rate must receive more than one half of its gross revenues from sales to persons with whom it deals at arm's length.

The resolution now before this house seeks to secure the consent of hon. members to the introduction of a bill which will incorporate conditions analogous to the above provisions in part I of the Income Tax Act. I should further explain that where a corporation qualifies under the Income Tax Act for the preferred rate, that rate applies only to that portion of the corporation's income that arises from its distribution and sale or generation and sale to the public. It is 95 per cent of this portion of the qualifying corporation's federal tax that this resolution seeks the permission of the committee to pay to the provinces. When the 95 per cent share of the federal tax is determined, that amount will be paid to the province or provinces in which the distribution and sale or generation and sale to the public is made.

The resolution also proposes that the 95 per cent sharing arrangements shall apply to the income tax paid by the eligible corporations on income earned after December 31, 1965. It is the government's intention to continue to apply the present 50 per cent sharing arrangements to the tax paid on income earned up to and including December 31, 1965. As I previously stated, the estimates for 1966-67 tabled in this house on February 14 contain a provision to cover taxation years ending in the 1964 calendar year, and authority will be requested in the 1967-68 estimates to continue the existing arrangements in respect of the 1965 calendar year. Hon. members will note that there is a delay of approximately two years between the taxation year in which the profits are earned and the year in which the 50 per cent share is paid to the provinces. Aside from the time lag allowed all corporations in the filing of their tax returns, further delay is occasioned by the need to identify those corporations in respect of which the 50 per cent sharing arrangement applies and then to re-process their tax returns to determine the amount of tax revenues to be shared and the province or provinces to whom payment is to be made.

Mr. Chairman, in concluding my remarks, I should point out that when the government of Canada undertook to pay to the provinces 95 per cent of the federal income tax paid by these public utilities, it attached no conditions to the payments. My predecessor, the hon. member for Davenport, did express the expectation, as did Hon. Donald Fleming when in his 1961 budget speech he announced the continuation of the half-sharing arrangements, that the provinces might wish to use the additional revenue for the benefit of the industry and its customers. I also hope that the provinces will use the federal tax transfer for the benefit of the industry and its customers.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Mr. Chairman, does the minister have in mind including a clause in the bill which will ensure that the savings made by the companies are passed on to the consumer in the form of lower rates?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Chairman; these are unconditional payments.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to see this resolution on the order paper. I can say that I thoroughly approve of it. I recall that in 1963, 1964, and I believe in 1965 I and other Alberta members in particular made representations in this regard, because of all provinces in Canada the province of Alberta will be affected, generally, more than any other. This is particularly the case with regard to electric power because apart from the municipal generation plant in the city of Edmonton, most of the electric power produced and consumed in the province of Alberta is by private companies.

• (7:20 p.m.)

We also have the distribution of natural gas in Alberta, so that province is very conscious of the sources of its power, just as any other province would be. It has always been felt that the incidence of this income tax on Alberta Power Corporation placed the province at some disadvantage in competition with other provinces for the location of industry based on favourable power rates, because these other provinces had nationalized their hydro, in particular. As a matter of fact, I think it is common knowledge that Premier Bennett in 1961 nationalized B.C. Electric because he had not been able to get this particular increment from 50 per cent to either 95 per cent or 100 per cent, which he felt was his due. Well, the people of British Columbia now have a nationalized hydro system whether they like it or not, and they can thank Premier Bennett for that. This was one of those great whirlabouts. He was for free enterprise and private ownership, except where it suited his particular purpose.

I am glad to say that in so far as the province of Alberta is concerned, the wishes of the Minister of Finance and his predecessor in regard to this have been passed on by the provincial government. After all, the province need pass on these benefits to no particular company, and any particular company need not pass them on to its customers. The end result, however, so far as Alberta is concerned, has been that the province, after some hesitation but not long, did agree that all benefits derived by the province as a result of this agreement with the federal government, and which we are now asked to approve, would be passed on to the power companies concerned. This same, shall we say, message has been passed on to the companies. I am sure that this will result in either an actual reduction of rates or will prevent—and this is what is vitally important as well—predictable applications to the various utility commissions for increases in rates. I know one private company is on its third wage increase this year as a result of the incidence of the Canada Pension Plan and a number of other things. These costs cannot be paid out of thin air. They have to be paid ultimately out of earnings based on their utility rates, and in order to get an increase in those rates these companies have to go before their respective utility commissions. This provision will help defer some of the increasing expenses of power corporations.

We will be interested in seeing just what the provisions will be in the bill. I know that there are a number of provinces, particularly those which do have natural gas distribution companies, which will be affected by this provision. Others, I believe Nova Scotia is likely the only other one, will have privately owned power systems and they, too, should benefit. I agree with the minister that the house should accept this resolution and that we should see the bill as soon as possible.

Mr. Lewis: I rise, Mr. Chairman, to oppose this resolution and its principle as being, in my opinion, contrary to the best interests of the people of Canada in all parts of this country. I think it is a wrong principle, although it is already on the statute books, because constantly, in my experience, private corporations that function in the same field as public enterprise are always complaining about the fact that they have to pay taxes and public corporations do not. I have heard that complaint by private corporations in the field of transportation and in the field of communications where there are publicly owned enterprises.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, I think the time has come for us to recognize that even though it is up to the people in each province to do as they pleased, all public utilities ought to be publicly owned. Whatever the reason may have been for Premier Bennett of British Columbia to bring the corporation there under public ownership, he did a service to the people of his province, just as the Lesage government did for the people of Quebec by bringing Hydro Quebec under public control. I do not believe this parliament ought to do anything to encourage a continuation of the private exploitation of basic public utilities that are the foundation of all economic and industrial activity in every part of the country.

My third point—I am putting them briefly because I do not want to make a long speech—is that I do not accept that the hope the minister expressed will be realized. In fact, if I understood his explanation correctly, he will make these rebates to the provinces concerned unconditionally. The provinces concerned may or may not hand them on to private corporations. I have no doubt that they will, but of course they are not obliged to do so. If he makes these rebates on the basis of tax arrangements with the provinces, I am sure he will agree with me that is the worst possible way in which to deal with so important a matter as the division of tax revenues. If he is making this rebate to the provinces to help the people concerned obtain cheaper electricity or cheaper gas, there is simply no guarantee whatever that will occur. The province may hand that money over to the corporation but there is no guarantee that the corporation will in turn hand the benefit over to the consumers of the utility. If they don't, Mr. Chairman, parliament will have been responsible for adding to the very large profits now made by corporations who are crying tears about the extra federal income taxes they have to pay.

I see no reason why this parliament and the people of Canada as a whole should give up some of the revenue collected from corporation income tax in order to favour the private corporations' profit margin. There might be some sense to it if there were some way of guaranteeing that these benefits would be handed over to the consumers by the private utility corporations. I have no guarantee whatever that that will be done, nor has the minister. He expresses the hope that will happen. He expresses the hope that provincial authorities concerned will express the hope that will happen. This is about where he is and about where hon. members of this house are with regard to the likelihood of these benefits being handed on to the consumers.

As I suggested, Mr. Chairman, over most of the world and over most of Canada, the overwhelming majority of the units concerned with the manufacture and distribution of electricity and gas are now under public ownership. I know gas is not to the same extent, but it will be in the not too distant future, and that is where it ought to be. Public utilities ought to be under the control of the people, through their legislatures and parliament.

I oppose with all the vigour I can this added piece of pie to corporations which are already exploiting the natural resources of this country to their benefit, and who can afford to reduce their rates to compete with public corporations simply by reducing the cut of profit which they now get. My memory from looking at the figures is that private utility corporations are doing very well after taxes despite the fact that they pay this income tax. I see no reason why this parliament and the people of Canada should give them an additional handout.

Mr. Lambert: May I ask the hon. member a question. Is he aware that in allowing public utilities in, say the province of Alberta, of the hydro or gas type, to set their rates the public utilities commission must take into account such type of income as they would be getting and therefore the result is that there is no increase in rates?

Mr. Lewis: I am well aware of the workings of public utilities commissions—not as well aware as I should like to be, and I am sure my hon. friend is not as knowledgeable in the field as he would like to be. However, I also know that in all these regulatory situations the accounting, the auditing of balance sheets and the method of calculating the cost become a matter of great and long debate and argument. This has been the case before the board of transport commissioners with regard to the permissible rate of earnings over the years for the C.P.R. It has also been the case with public utilities commissions, about which I have read and know a little about the facts. I am not at all certain that the expressed desire of the Minister of Finance will be realized by the people with whom we should be concerned here.

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, only a brief word in connection with this resolution. First of all, I want to say that I am not in agreement with the last speaker. I am not going to cry wolf before the wolf is actually with us. I believe that this resolution comes a number of years late. At the same time I agree that it is better now than never.

In the province of British Columbia, B.C. Electric, as has already been stated, was taken over by the province. The reason was that a situation had arisen in the province of British Colubia which would eventually cause the power commission at that particular time to put itself in such an advantageous position vis-a-vis B.C. Electric that in the final analysis B.C. Electric would have to go out of business owing to the differential in the tax structure between the publicly-owned B.C. Power Commission and B.C. Electric.

It was obvious, Mr. Chairman, that in time B.C. Electric would be in the position where it would have to bid for blocks of power, and the B.C. Hydro and Power Authority, as it is now, then the B.C. Power Commission, would be in a position to underbid B.C. Electric. As far as what has happened in British Columbia as a result of this situation is concerned, this could have happened either to the privately owned or the publicly owned utility.

The previous speaker was asked a question about public utilities commissions. These commissions are set up to regulate rates. I have no doubt in my mind whatever that when the tax rebate is received, the public utilities commissions, taking that rebate into account, will see that it is passed on to the consumer. If it is not passed on to the consumer, the utility will be running the risk of the province taking it over anyway. The provincial governments which are responsible—and we have them all across Canada—look very carefully at this particular aspect of the tax structure.

I am in favour of this resolution, Mr. Chairman, and I speak now on behalf of the other members of this party. We hope that when the time comes for this rebate to go into effect the province of Alberta will expand in this field in the same way as has the province of British Columbia, whose expansion is second to none on the North American continent.

In the event of the rebate being passed on to the consumer there is no doubt in my mind that the industrial expansion of the province of Alberta will be affected in particular, this being one province wherein there is a private source of power. The terrific expansion experienced in British Columbia will no doubt be experienced even more so now than has been the case in the past in the province of Alberta.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I report the resolution?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: On division.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Sharp thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-211, to authorize the Minister of Finance to transfer to the provinces the proportions of the income tax payable by certain public utility companies.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

DAIRY COMMISSION

PROVISION FOR STABILIZATION OF MILK AND CREAM PRICES

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-205, to provide for the establishment of a dairy commission for Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think I said pretty well all I have to say, in a general sense, in respect to this bill on the resolution stage. I will be happy at this time to answer any queries that hon. members may have with respect to the particular clauses of the bill.

• (7:40 p.m.)

I may say, again in the same vein as I spoke on the resolution stage, that this is but part of the broader prospect of farm legislation which we hope and believe will bring the farmer into a more equitable position in the economy respective to his counterpart in industry who, during the past few years, with the industrial progress which has been made in this country, has moved ahead economically at a very rapid pace. On the other hand, I think the farmer has been equally productive. Statistics indicate that farm production has increased on a per capita basis at an even more rapid rate than industrial production in this age of automation. Despite that fact, I do not think that the farmer's economic position has kept pace with his productivity as a producer under our economic system. We have all heard many times in the past few months that the farmer finds himself caught in this price-cost squeeze where, even though he has become much more productive, the costs of the things he must buy have gone ahead far more rapidly than the price he can receive for his produce. This may be inevitable in a society that is progressing rapidly industrially. We have come up very rapidly industrially. Costs of industrial production go up. It is all to the good that there be higher wages in industry and higher returns for industry. However, on the one hand the farmer is caught by the fact that he must pay the prices that are concomitant with this fast development in the industrial world, while at the same time the price of the food he produces—some of which is sold domestically, and other of which, particularly in respect of that from western Canada which finds its way to world markets—has not kept up with the costs of the things that he must buy.

I think we would all agree that the farmer's income has not kept pace with that of his industrial counterpart. At the same time, two or three decades ago Canadians generally had not achieved the standard of living that they have today. Today we accept as necessities things that 30 or 40 years ago might have been looked upon as luxuries.

But the farmer, caught in this cost-price squeeze also, as are other citizens, expects greater social and economic returns from the fruits of his endeavour. He wants to have the things that his city counterpart has, and there is no reason why he should not have those things that are looked upon as the just rights and deserts of citizens today. I think the farmer, caught in the cost-price squeeze, is not enabled to have the income which is comparable to his city counterpart's, as was the case pre-war. On the other hand the farmer is expected to be able to provide for his family in just as satisfactory a fashion, just as adequately, as his city counterpart. Therefore he finds himself caught on both sides of the horn of this dilemma.

Accordingly, I think that all agricultural legislation must be aimed to the end of enabling the producer to have a more adequate, more suitable and more reliable income. We are all concerned that in certain segments of the agricultural community there is a diminishing number of producers, and that not as many young people are going into farming as we should like to see. It is therefore the function of government to see to it that we have policies that will give adequate and suitable returns to the farmer, and that the profession of agriculture, and the family farm as we know it, or as it will develop in future, will provide an adequate return and an enticing way of life to our young people in the future.

I stated earlier, at the resolution stage, that in this regard I think it is necessary for us to go ahead on a threefold front. First, I think it is inevitable that if the family farm is to be maintained, to provide the kind of income of which I spoke earlier, that it must be a viable economic entity. It must be more a business than merely a social way of life, which was the way of the past. This requires larger capitalization for land, machinery, chemicals, fertilizer, etc. The family farm unit must be more heavily capitalized than was the case in the past.

Inasmuch as the private sector of the economy has not seen fit or been able to provide the capital for the farmer to expand as he needs to, then surely it is the function of government to provide this capital. We have tried to do something along these lines in an earlier measure. I am speaking of the farm credit corporation.

Second, it is of no value to have a viable economic unit if you do not have adequate and suitable markets. This piece of legislation is geared to this marketing aspect, which has always been such a bugbear in Canada by virtue of the complexities of our constitution, and which has resulted in marketing being a field requiring co-operative action with respect to legislation. Intraprovincial marketing is, of course, by virtue of judicial decisions respecting our constitution, a provincial matter.

On the other hand, many facets of marketing have an extraprovincial or extraterritorial effect. Therefore the federal government must play its proper and adequate part. In the area of marketing, to provide suitable markets and reasonable and adequate returns to the farmer we are proposing the bill that is before the house at this time, in the interests of the dairy industry. In particular it is important to point out that the stability of income that we desire for dairy farmers is not only to redound to the benefit of producers. There has been too great a tendency, because of our becoming a more urban country, with a larger percentage of our population every day, every week, every month moving into the cities, for us not to appreciate the farmer's viewpoint. His viewpoint has not been sufficiently understood or appreciated by much of our urban population.

I point out that a measure such as this, which is a step toward responsible marketing legislation with respect to a particular segment of the agricultural community, also does a very considerable service to the consumers in the urban centres, because it is intended to bring closer the day when there will not be these inevitable rises and falls in production and in price which, when they reach one end of the scale, swing around, inevitably to the detriment of the consumer. At the end of the swing, when production becomes reduced and prices go up, because there is no control over production, by reason of the lack of adequate marketing legislation, it is the consumer who pays. When prices go up, that certainly is not in the interests of the consumer. When that happens we get into the old cycle, and up goes production with higher prices. This sort of thing has been the bane of the agricultural community in the past.

The marketing aspect of the measure is meant to encourage stability, and a reasonable return for the farmer. This is an extremely important measure. I believe this is the first measure, should it be passed by parliament, enabling the national marketing of a commodity such as dairy products. I think we will all watch with interest, if this house sees fit to pass the measure, to see how it works out, and to see whether it does the job required with respect both to the consumer's needs and the producer's income. Because if this measure does what we believe it will do, it may be that the house will see fit in the years to come to bring other agricultural products within legislation of this type, which will enable national marketing of other agricultural products on an adequate scale, in co-operation with the provinces.

I suggest that the way toward a more stable farm income and a better development of our agricultural community might well be through this type of national marketing legislation. I would say a word, also, with respect to the third aspect of sound agricultural legislation, that is, legislation to protect the farmer against drought or other calamity. In this connection we are, of course, presenting a crop insurance amendment so that the three aspects of fundamental agricultural need might be covered.

I do not wish in any way to belittle these measures to aid the problems which affect the agricultural community in our country. I do not say these measures are all that are needed—not by a long shot. I had the honour of attending as a witness before the agricultural committee of this house. This is an exercise which would be difficult for one much more expert than I am in agricultural matters. But my attendance did impress upon me very strongly a feeling I had held previously: the knowledgeable and experienced members of that committee all seemed concerned about the need for over-all direction in Canadian agricultural policy.

Measures that provide for crop insurance, orderly marketing and so on are important moves in the right direction. But I do not wish to leave the thought that this is all that is required by the agricultural community. Agricultural development in this country has been one of evolution. It has come about largely as a result of the individual initiative and individual requirements of farmers across the land with respect to their profit motivation. I do not believe there has been any comprehensive over-all planning of our agricultural growth during the years of our history. We have moved as the times seemed to require and as individuals saw best with respect to the profitable operation of their own entities. In these dynamic times in which we are living today, all of us, certainly those of us who are on this side of the house, are convinced that a great degree of planning and direction is needed if we are to achieve the most productive and profitable results from the various segments of our economic endeavour, including agriculture.

It is not easy to get at the fundamentals of agricultural need. We are all aware that the sphere of agriculture is vested in both provincial and federal governments and legislatures, and apart from measures such as this, which are patently in the right direction, I am very much of a mind that in the not-too-distant future the provinces, the federal government, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the farm unions and all the bodies which represent agriculture across the country will find it necessary to get together to work out a broad, new, long-term prospect for Canadian agriculture. I believe this is badly needed.

In the short period during which I have had the honour to hold this portfolio I have not yet reached conclusions as to whether we are doing the right things in the right places —whether we are growing the right crops in the right quantities. I think a broad inquiry of this kind is needed. We need to protect the domestic requirements of our agricultural community in the future, bearing in mind the growth of the domestic population, bearing in mind the new affluence of our society, and the necessity for our agricultural products being acceptable to the changing tastes of the community.

All these things must be considered to determine, in the domestic interest, what would be best for Canadian agriculture in the next two or three decades. We need long-range planning in this direction. There is an equally important requirement with respect to our national responsibilities—the part we should play in the next decade or so and the responsibilities we should assume with respect to the world food supply and our share of the commitment to world production. Statistics indicate that if we are to hold our own in our ability to supply the world with cereals we shall have to double cereal production by 1980. When we consider that the world population will double by the end of this century, and since we all believe that society as a whole must do a much better job of feeding the world than it has in the past, surely Canada, which has such abilities and resources in this sphere, will have to play a bigger part and make a larger commitment to the world community generally.

Here again, I believe there must be a pervasive national planning to determine how in the coming decades we shall be able to play our full and just part in this area as well as with respect to our domestic responsibilities.

I hope hon. gentlemen opposite will support this measure which, as I say, I believe to be a move in the right direction. I do not minimize its importance, though there are great challenges, beyond this, in the field of agriculture. Part of that challenge is presented by the marginal unit which is gradually disappearing. The bringing of assistance to marginal and sub-marginal producers constitutes a problem which does not fall specifically to my department, but it is bound to be an important part of our agricultural planning in future decades.

This is all I have to say at the present time. I shall be pleased to answer any questions which may be addressed to me, if I can be of any help to the committee, when we come to discuss the specific clauses of the bill.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): My observations on this bill will be limited.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad to have that measure of support which has already become evident from an hon. member opposite. I must tell him that I deeply appreciate that applause.

• (8:00 p.m.)

I wish to say at once that anything which will bring about an improvement in the dairy industry of Canada will be welcomed. Since this government came into office the dairy industry has been the forgotten industry. The result is that in every part of the nation farmers, who for years have been engaged in dairying, are leaving that industry because there are other areas of agricultural production in which there are greater opportunities to bring about that affluent society to which the minister has referred. We on this side of the house have regularly asked for action on behalf of the dairy farmers, but action was not taken.

We hope this legislation will benefit them to some degree, but it has been delayed for so long—for over three years—that the dairy farmers are feeling a sense of frustration and discouragement. What brings me into this debate is the rather unusual philosophical viewpoint expressed by the minister toward the concluding paragraphs of his speech, and when I say that I am not in any way implying that he was reading from a manuscript. He was not. He was actually pouring forth his soul giving the house a philosophy that, in my opinion, would be detrimental to Canada.

[Mr. Greene.]

All of us will agree when he says that planning is necessary, but when he goes so far as to say that following his visits and journeys to all parts of Canada he has begun to wonder whether certain areas should, as it were, be designated to produce certain farm commodities and others other commodities, we have there the socialist concept that governments know what is best for the people. I am amazed, unless he has been in touch with the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon), that he would have expressed himself so strongly in favour of bureaucratic control of the farmers of Canada, directing them as to what they shall produce and where. Such a philosophy is alien to this country and, regardless of any views he holds in that connection, would not be acceptable to the farm population.

Sir, all of us believe that governments have responsibilities. The action taken here is far more optimistically viewed by the minister than the circumstances would ordinarily warrant. As he hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Moore) said at the resolution stage, as recorded at page 6666 of Hansard for June 20:

> Great hopes were raised a tthe end of March when the new dairy policy was announced. The dairy farmers believed that they were going to get at least $4 per hundredweight across the board for their milk; that was to be the guaranteed price for all milk. This price, of course, has not been realized by many producers. There is really no guaranteed price of $4 per hundredweight; there is only the hope that with the subsidy $4 will be realized.

Farmers are greatly aroused over the failure of the policy. When it was announced, they thought it was the implementation of what we in Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition had advocated over and over again; but in the manner in which it has been administered it has proven to be a mirage. In every part of Canada dairy farmers are asking, "Who brought about this hoodwinking scheme that we expected was going to benefit us in the manner that we asked and demanded"?

Across the province of Ontario ask the farmers what their attitude is. What about the province of Quebec? One of the major reasons for the outcome of the provincial election in the province of Quebec was the disregard of the federal government to take action on behalf of the dairy farmers in that province. They demanded action: they got nothing but promises. And without in any way absolving the Lesage administration for its responsibility and contributions to its own defeat, the Quebec dairy farmers in general had lost hope.

The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Beer) smiles. He would not smile if he went into the areas of Quebec that I visited last August when, over and over again, the question they asked me was, "Why doesn't the federal government act?" Now what we are getting is the setting up of a board—

Mr. Choquette: You were defeated in Quebec.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. member is better on trips abroad than he is on agriculture, and if he will just continue to travel in the direction that he hopes to on Saturday, he will have enough to keep him busy. I always like his interruptions because they bear no relationship to the discussions that are under way.

Mr. Favreau: Nor do the answers.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister set forth this three-headed plan of marketing legislation, farm credit and crop insurance as though he and the present government had discovered these policies. I point out that these are but a continuation of the policies which we brought into effect. They have been changed, so far as crop insurance is concerned, and I think beneficially so.

Mr. McIlraith: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh yes, experience teaches. Even the government opposite is learning that fact.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad to see the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) here because he approves of that statement. These things are not new. When I listened to the minister I was amazed as, in impassioned words, he told how they are going ahead with this great three-headed plan, every portion of which is represented by what has been done in this country for the last 25 years.

Speaking about product marketing I remember very well when the late R. B. Bennett brought the Natural Products Marketing Act before parliament, in the days when such legislation was a novelty. I remember the ridicule that was heaped on that policy and the manner in which, following an election, the King government placed that legislation before the courts and at the same time informed the courts that in their opinion it was not within the legislative competence of parliament. That was the view held at that time, when new roads and new pathways for agricultural production and for the preservation of reasonable prices for farmers' products were being followed.

As I listened to the minister speak of crop insurance I almost thought there had been a visitation from above to him, producing crop insurance, farm credit, and marketing legislation.

So far as the legislation is concerned, it represents an endeavour to secure a degree of stabilized prices and a continuity of market. That is desirable; we hope it will be successful. There are, however, one or two clauses to which I intend to make reference. Over the years I have heard from those sitting opposite about the dangers of protection. When in opposition the Liberal party always stood against protection, and when in office it carried out the policies it had condemned. Here is a very interesting portion of this particular bill:

> The governor in council may include on the import control list . . . any dairy product the import of which he deems it necessary to control for the purpose of implementing any action taken under this act to support the price of that dairy product or that has the effect of supporting the price of that dairy product.

That is a tremendous power for the governor in council to exercise—the power to assure that by order in council the government may at any time prevent the importation of any dairy product into Canada. Certainly powers like this will have to be exercised with discretion and care. These powers should not be exercised except when our neighbour to the south endeavours to dispose of any surplus in Canada to the detriment of our price level within this country. In other words, while that clause has in it the essence of protection, it can be used effectively only if in its use there is a realization of the fact that that use should be sparingly utilized, and only for the purpose of protecting and preserving the prices in Canada against the invasion of surpluses form other countries.

There are some other powers here under the regulations to which I want to make reference, because people should realize what this legislation will do:

> The governor in council may make regulations regulating the marketing of any dairy product, including regulations
> (a) providing for the marketing of any dairy product on a quota basis;

That power does not have to be exercised in consequence of the recommendation of any board.

(b) designating the agencies through which any regulated product shall be marketed;

That is the power which will place in the hands of the governor in council the right to designate not only the marketing on a quota basis but also the agency through which the disposal shall take place.

Here is another power. I ask the reason for this power which prohibits a person from engaging in the marketing of any dairy product, or any class, variety or grade thereof, in whole or in part except under the authority of a licence. That is a very wide and comprehensive power which could be used unjustly and unfairly. It goes on:

(f) authorizing the commission to fix, impose and collect levies or charges from persons engaged in the marketing of any dairy product or the production or processing of a regulated product for market and for such purposes to classify such persons into groups, fix the levies or charges payable by the members of the different groups and to use such levies or charges for the purpose of carrying out its functions under this Act.

That power is one which if utilized would arouse a great deal of antagonism. It might be justified on the ground that a levy is made to cover expenses of marketing and the like, provided that whatever is left over at the conclusion of each year should be repaid to the processor or to the farmer.

The purposes and objects of the legislation in the setting up of the commission are to provide efficient producers of milk and cream with the opportunity of obtaining a fair return for their labour and investment, and to provide consumers of dairy products with a continuous and adequate supply of dairy products of high quality. If my information is correct, our dairy production will not meet the needs of Canadians within the next couple of years. Farmers in the dairy business no longer see any purpose in remaining in an agricultural production which denies them a fair and proper return.

That brings me to a matter with which the minister dealt, namely the squeeze in which the farmer finds himself. There is the rising cost of production; labour costs are very high and there is the difficulty in obtaining the necessary labour on the farm; and the price of machinery has gone up to an extent which cannot be justified. The only action taken by the government to date is the setting up of a commission of one man to look into this matter. After two and a half years of uncertain promises there is another delay.

Today the farmer finds himself, to an extent greater than in any other class, caught between the rising prices of things he has to buy, and almost a ceiling on his prices. This is one of the reasons there has been a universal demand not only among dairy farmers but also among farmers as a whole for an assurance that a reasonable degree of security will be assured them. I say to the minister that all the legislation which has been placed on the statute books will be a nullity unless there is effective action taken to meet the tremendous increase in the cost of machinery. This is where the farmer is in a dilemma today. He has no protection; he sells on the open market and he buys on a market that denies to him reasonable and fair prices. Finally who suffers? It is the consumer.

If action is taken which raises the prices of farm products to a height that would be unjust, those who suffer are the consumers of this nation. Today they are paying through the nose. There has been the largest increase in the cost of the needs of the average Canadian—an increase larger than ever before—and no action. The dollar goes down and down. All these makeshift ideas are brought into effect in order to meet the problems that are a result of the high cost of living.

One can only say that the government of Canada today pats itself on the back for having been able to achieve the settlement of two potential strikes. Why did they not do it in the first place; why did they wait all those weeks while the strike went on in Montreal, and then finally capitulate. If that be diplomacy, we indeed have had an example of it. This is an absolute determination for Canada that a 30 per cent increase in wages is the level at which settlements are to be made.

I believe in the rights of labour. Too often the man who works is forgotten. Did this government make any endeavour to find out how effective the settlement was that was finally achieved? What it amounted to, in effect, was simply the acceptance of that which, had it been accepted five weeks before, would have meant the end of the strike by the stevedores in Montreal, and that the potential strike on the great lakes would never have been threatened.

The trouble with this government is that they always wait for a crisis to develop before getting into a sweat. At that time they finally decided to find out what these people want, and then do what they had refrained from doing during the intervening weeks, to the detriment of the Canadian economy. What we have seen by way of an increase in the cost of living in the last two months will be as nothing compared to what we are going to see within the weeks and months ahead.

Down, down, down goes the value of the dollar; yet the farmers have found themselves in the position in the last several years of having to pay prices for things they must purchase which are catapulting upward and upward. The minister says planning will have to take place. Any plan that has been offered to date or enunciated by the minister tonight, including the extension of farm credit, the adoption of crop insurance or the setting up of a commission, will be but palliatives unless the problem is faced head on. Many of us have hoped that the minister would take that course.

This minister has received more consideration than many others since assuming this portfolio. The time has now come for action rather than grand and eloquent observations, very often meaningless. All I can say to this government is that if it will bring in the necessary measures, Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition will give them every support. We want to see what can be done and we welcome this legislation as far as it goes, but I have pointed out some of the difficulties and I suggest to the dairy farmers of Canada that they will not find in this legislation that high degree of expectant hope that was placed before the house by the minister.

I like to hear the minister speak. I can just imagine what he might have said during the days of the drought, and how he might have described the picture, making the farmers really like it. This reminds me of one occasion when a certain politician in Saskatchewan was making a speech in a particular farm area. This was during the drought years when bullfrogs nine years old had never learned to swim. When his speech was completed he went outside to find out what the farmers thought about his farm program. In the darkness he heard one say to another, "Well, what did you think?" In reply he heard the other state, "He is a pretty good speaker, but an inch of rain would do a heck of a lot more good for us farmers."

Having listened to the minister this evening I can only say, about the wonderful prospects he described, that it is my fondest wish that his rosy expectations will at least bring about some improvement in the dairy industry, which has suffered irretrievable loss under this government in the last two and a half years.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I must say that the members of this group have appreciated the dissertation on agricultural philosophy that the minister gave when introducing this bill. I think some of his remarks were pretty far removed from the principle of this proposed legislation. When the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) rose to speak he started by saying that his remarks were going to be limited, but what happened? He went over the whole spectrum of agricultural administration, then dealt with labour and consumers, and concluded with a more or less political tirade.

I cannot help telling a story on the Leader of the Official Opposition—one which is his own. The right hon. gentleman was addressing a meeting on one occasion in a small area in Saskatchewan. He made a rousing speech, touching upon all points connected with agriculture. When the meeting was over the right hon. gentleman went outside. Of course it was dark by that time. He sat there and listened to the farmers talking as they got into their cars. One old gentleman said, I am told: "Wonderful speech, wasn't it Joe"? His farmer companion replied: "It was a great speech, but let me tell you Joe, two inches of rain would have done a hell of a lot more good in this community at this time".

I do not think the right hon. Leader of the Opposition was quite fair to the minister when he spoke of him as being a person who would build a bureaucracy. I do not have that opinion of him at all. It is my belief that he would go in the other direction. The minister stated that he wondered if we were growing the right things in the right places. I am sure we are not growing all the right things in the right places, but rather that in many circumstances we are growing the wrong things in the wrong places. I think the minister intends to do what he can to correct that situation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How will he do that?

Mr. Herridge: They might do that through the operations of an institution which the right hon. Leader of the Opposition admires so much—parliament.

My attention was focused on the value of the dairy industry some 60 years ago. I will never forget when my mother purchased our first cow, and it was a very expensive cow. After she brought it home a number of people in the district became entirely dependent upon that cow for milk. After about a month a bank manager came out to see her. It was a Mr. Blackstock who later became the assistant general manager for Canada of the Canadian Bank of Commerce. He told my mother that this cow had been pledged to the bank, along with several other cattle, by another farmer for a loan he had obtained about three months before, and he said that he had come to take possession of the cow. He said that he must have it, and asked her to take him to the barn so that he could take it back to the village. My mother then reached over the back door for a loaded 30-30 rifle which was hung there for protection against wild animals. She took it down and said: "I think too much of the dairy industry to allow this cow to leave my premises. I am going down to the barn to shoot it", whereupon the bank manager told her not to do that and assured her he would try to make other arrangements. Arrangements were made to release this cow from the other farmer's pledge. That incident focused my attention on the importance of the dairy industry.

I support the principle and purpose of this bill, just as our members did with regard to the resolution. We look upon it as another step toward the logical development of marketing dairy products in Canada. I am informed that the principle of this measure is supported by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the farmers unions, the Dairy Council of Canada, the dairymens associations and so on. They have been urging the federal government do to do something along this line for some time. We think it is a development in the right direction.

I understand that this bill was introduced after a study was made of the dairy industry by a committee composed of representatives of the provincial governments, the dairy farmers, the dairy council and some of the officials of the federal and provincial departments of agriculture. Therefore I do not think we can go far wrong in accepting the advice of this committee whose study was very widespread and reached into several aspects of Canadian farm life. They recommmended the setting up of this commission.

I know that hon. members of the house will watch the operation of this act with interest because it does establish a new principle in the marketing of dairy products in Canada. I think all of us would agree that as a result of the experience gained in the administration of the act amendments will be made to the legislation and improvements will be brought forward. Mr. Speaker, let me say in conclusion that we think the principle of the bill is sound. It is a development along the lines that members of this group have urged for years. We have urged this type of marketing organization, as a matter of fact, ever since our party was formed in 1932. This is the logical development in orderly marketing within the country, just as we have urged the logical development in orderly marketing without the country. That is all I have to say at this time. We will have a few questions to ask the minister when the various clauses of the bill to establish a Dairy Commission for Canada are before us in committee.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to see that some action is at least contemplated for the dairy industry but I should like to put out one or two warnings in this regard. I am one who believes in planning, provided the planning does not defeat the end for which all good planning is designed. The only reason for governments interfering at all in the agricultural industry is to improve the lot of the producer and the consumer. This may sound very elementary but it is not really very elementary when you try to put it into practice. There is a danger in subsidy and there is a danger in lack of subsidy. I would never like to see Canadian agriculture get into the quagmire which they have south of the line. There is not a country in the western world today which does not have subsidies of one kind or another.

I hope that the minister and the experts in the Department of Agriculture will look beyond the borders of Canada to other countries which have had dairy policies for a great many years, and very effective dairy policies at that. I might mention just two in passing, Great Britain and Denmark. They have not destroyed the small family farm, either, in their national policies. There seems to be a great tendency in Canada today to concentrate entirely on efficiency and the cost per unit of production. I think this is a very dangerous thing. I am one of those who believe that the family farm can be preserved in Canada and that we can have a certain kind of efficiency along with that policy. But when we plan, whether it be in dairy marketing or any other form of planning, I see sometimes a great danger in not relating one form of planning in agriculture to another.

I am very glad to hear that the minister is aware of this problem, because you cannot plan the dairy industry of Canada without affecting the beef industry, the pork industry, the poultry industry, the grain industry and all the other ramifications of agriculture. It is a very dangerous thing to take some strong step in any one direction unless you see that the planning which is designed to help the dairy industry is spread over into the other branches of agriculture in this country.

So I go right back, as I always have, to saying that the underlying principle that we should keep in mind is the preservation of the family farm, the small farm. Whenever you pick up an article on agriculture in Canada today you are inclined to read how well off a certain segment of the agricultural industry happens to be. In the last few years, due to our grain sales, everybody thinks that every farmer in western Canada is now marketing 50,000 bushels of wheat a year and spends every winter in Florida. This is just not so. We have thousands and thousands of marginal farms, and when I say marginal farms I do not mean necessarily that the land is not productive but that the size and location of the farm, its credit rating and the labour situation on it puts it into the category of being an uneconomic unit.

I do not go along with ministers of agriculture or experts in the Department of Agriculture who say that larger and more efficient farm units is the only answer for Canadian agriculture. I say quite the reverse, that the only answer for Canadian agriculture is a very, very widely spread agricultural industry on as many small, family farm units as this country can possibly support. Therefore I agree that there must be a certain amount of planning, but any planning in Canada which tends to reduce the number of farmers on the land and concentrates only on the so-called cost per cent per unit, to the farmer's detriment and the detriment of the welfare of Canada, is in my opinion the wrong type of planning.

We need today, and always will, a larger agricultural community. The small towns and the larger towns, our transportation system, our roads system and every other segment of the Canadian community will suffer if we keep on reducing the number of family farms in this country at the rate of something like 14,000 per year. This just cannot go on if we are to keep Canada in the position in which it has always been, namely a place for a man who becomes tired of city life and wants to return to the soil from which he sprang, where he will have an opportunity with courage and determination to provide for himself a home on the land.

I am glad to see that the minister is aware of Canada's role in the world, because I have always thought that we, as a primary producing country, have a wonderful opportunity not only to raise our own standard of living but that of people everywhere, if we have a well integrated world marketing system, of which Canada's national marketing system is only one part. I believe there would be in this event a future in agriculture in Canada which would be so attractive that we would not have to worry about such little things as quotas. We would be more worried about the type of efficiency required to improve acreage production, and production per man-hour.

This does not necessarily mean that we have to cut down the number of farm units. We would get a demand from the large and well paid markets and therefore would perhaps go out, as we are in the labour field today where there is a shortage of labour, and improve the labour situation on our farms. We should do this, rather than introducing policies that tend to take 14,000 family farm units off the land every year in this country.

I know that in so far as crop insurance is concerned, the minister does not want to give the impression that crop insurance is something which has been introduced by his government. He knows quite well that in 1959 a national system of crop insurance was introduced and any province that wanted to participate could do so. Crop insurance is absolutely essential to the agriculture industry. When a man makes a very sizeable investment in both money and time, he knows that with crop insurance he is not going to be wiped out in any one year. I am all in favour of the improvement of crop insurance, and hurrying it up. I do not blame the federal government in this regard. I believe the provinces have been dragging their feet.

The provinces know quite well the value of crop insurance. Manitoba has allowed itself to be the guinea pig. Crop insurance has been of great advantage to the farmers of Manitoba, and it is my fond hope that within the next two years both Saskatchewan and Alberta will have fully integrated crop insurance plans. I believe this is one place where the federal government could be even more generous than they have been. Crop insurance is something that affects every farmer in Canada. It does not tend to make large farms larger or small farms smaller.

When you are doing this planning, and certainly we need some planning, do not rely entirely on the Ph.D's in the agriculture department. Sometimes they cannot see the woods for the trees. I say we should lean heavily upon the farm unions in Canada because they are composed of the people who are actually living on the farms. These are the people who have to put up with the weather. These are the people who have to look for markets. These are the people who have had many years experience on the job. Sometimes you will find in discussing matters that these people are at loggerheads with the Ph.D's. If the Ph.D's make all the rules, I warn you that you will come to a dead end, and in so far as agriculture is concerned sometimes there is no return from a dead end.

In so far as farm credit is concerned, I do not believe it is necessary to make available any larger sum of money. I believe you should concentrate on enlarging the markets at reasonable prices. Then, you will find out there is no greater security in Canada than a good farm with a happy farmer. When a man is on land which will give him a good living, he will always be able to get credit with which to expand his business, especially when there is an opportunity for him to grow and sell a reasonable amount of products.

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex South): I do not intend to take up very much of the time of the house, Mr. Speaker. I only want to say that as a member of parliament and as a farmer I feel that legislation such as this is long overdue. This bill is a step in the right direction. Many of the products that are produced in Canada know no provincial boundaries. More federal legislation is necessary in order to help the agriculture industry. So far as I am concerned the whole of the administration of agriculture should be under the jurisdiction of the senior government. As I said earlier, many of our products know no provincial boundaries so far as sales are concerned.

There are different benefits given to the farmers in the different provinces. Those hon. members who are from the various provinces know this is true. Some producers are at a disadvantage because the province in which they reside may not be extending beneficial legislation to the producers, and yet in the neighbouring province beneficial legislation may be extended to producers who are selling their commodities in that same market.

The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) referred to the fact that his mother used a gun. I am not saying that the farmers of Canada, especially the dairy farmers, are that militant. However, I can tell you that if more benefits are not given to Canadian farmers they will become more militant as time goes by. This has been proven recently in Ontario. I know that so far as my area is concerned, some of these farmers are the men who, in 1957 and 1958, believed all the promises that were made to them. These are the people who are today driving tractors up and down the roads to indicate their discontent. The farmers of this nation are upset. They are not satisfied, because they are not getting a fair share of the wealth of this nation. I know they are not getting fair treatment so far as the division of the gross national product of this nation is concerned.

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): I should like to speak briefly on this subject, Mr. Speaker. I thought perhaps I could start out by telling that story again and completing the trilogy, but on second thought I believe we have heard it often enough. It may seem unusual for a city member to rise and speak on a measure concerning a dairy commission. However, as a result of distribution my urban riding will no longer exist as such. But this is not my main reason for rising here.

In looking over the comments made by the minister at the resolution stage I note he said, as reported at page 6657 of Hansard, when referring to the consultative committee:

> It is the intention that members will be representative of the various segments of the dairy industry in Canada.

Recently I had occasion to look at the Unemployment Insurance Act, which is chapter 50 of the statutes of 1955. I should like to just put on the record section 19, subsection (2):

> At least one of the members of the advisory committee, other than the chairman, shall be appointed after consultation with organizations representative of workers and an equal number after consultation with organizations representative of employers.

I wondered, in looking through the bill, why there was no statutory provision here for any members of the consultative committee to be representatives of the dairy farmers of Canada or the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. I ask the minister whether this was an oversight, and whether it might not be a good idea to amend the bill to include this provision. I am sure, after listening to what I thought was a sociological discussion rather than a discussion of agriculture philosophy, that the minister had the best interests of the dairy farmers of Canada at heart when he introduced this measure. Perhaps this was an oversight. Nowhere in the bill is there any mention of representatives of this industry, either processors or producers, as members of the consultative committee. This is the only point I wish to make, Mr. Speaker, and I trust it is one which the minister will look at earnestly, in the interests of keeping the diary producers of the country in the forefront.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I should like to say a few words on this bill. I am pleased a measure has been introduced to develop a Dairy Commission. However, I am concerned, as I am sure the minister is, about the relationship this Dairy Commission is going to have with the stabilization boards in the provinces. The reason we have not developed any real dairy policy in Canada is due to the reluctance on the part of many officials to be brave and bold in designing programs which come into conflict with the jurisdictions of other departments of agriculture in the provinces. This will probably be one of the main stumbling blocks to this legislation.

The dairy industry of Canada is very worth while, but one which in my opinion has never received the type of support it should receive. There are very good reasons for this. It seems to me that one of the major problems of the dairy segment of the agricultural industry falls pretty well within, in Ontario at least, the fluid milk industry, which produces fresh milk in containers for distribution and consumption, and the secondary milk industry, which comprises the manufacture of butter, cheese and allied products.

I have always been impressed with the problems of the farmers in the fluid milk industry who have to negotiate with dairies under quota for the supply of a given number of cans of milk at a predetermined price. In my opinion the price obtained in Ontario for fluid milk is reasonable, generally being over $5.20 and in some cases running as high as $6.10. This is a reasonable price which, in my opinion, enables the dairy farmers in Ontario to make a fairly good living.

In discussing this problem with my brother a year ago I was surprised to find that in his operation he sent less than half his milk to the fluid milk outlets, the remainder, which was produced in the same way at exactly the same cost, being disposed of on the secondary milk market at about $2.35 to him. When I mentioned that I was in support of a $4 price, he said: "Me too. I can show you that I am not getting $4 a hundredweight for the milk which I produce; and $4 is about my cost".

Over the years a farmer who had a quota set by the dairy was always willing to exceed the quota. I negotiated a milk contract for a group of farmers for a period of time but I was unable to conclude the negotiations because, in my opinion, the farmers at the time did not have the guts to dump their surplus milk, over and above that which they supplied on a quota basis. If they had, they would have found that the dairy would have had to increase their quota.

This is because fluid milk is not the only requirement of the dairy. If a dairy produces products like chololate milk, buttermilk and cottage cheese, it must purchase fluid milk. It is also interesting to note that once the dairy skims the milk to make chocolate milk out of it, the cost to the consumer of skim milk with chocolate flavouring in most cases is as high as or higher than the cost of fluid milk with the cream content remaining in the milk.

An hon. Member: That is the case with two per cent.

Mr. Peters: It may be. It depends how tight the operator tightened the screw on the separator, which in turn controls the quality of the milk. At the time I was more interested in the consumer, and in the farmer, who gets no profit out of the secondary milk; and the dairies think they do not either.

I completely agree with the farmer getting a reasonable price for his milk. But the price should be stabilized, and I would be pleased to see the establishment of a base price of $4 a hundred for milk. However, this price should also carry with it certain requirements, one of which would be this. When the federal government does decide to establish a price of $4 by paying a 75 cent subsidy on the provincial price for milk, they should be prepared to enforce the price.

The situation in Ontario, where tractors clog some of the highways, is an indication that the plan which we have implemented has failed. We have no control over provincial legislation. Neither do we have control over the setting of base prices in the provinces. If one province decides to allow the distributor to increase the price which he charges the producer so as to allow for a lower delivery price to the factory, then the $3.25 which we anticipate will be the base price will mean that the farmer is not getting $4, but considerably less. He also has to deal with two governments, both of which are willing to pass the buck. The federal government says it has no responsibility in the field because this falls under provincial jurisdiction. The minister of agriculture in the province appears on T.V. and tells everybody that it is not his fault, the he did his share but that he has no responsibility. This does not help the farmer; when he gets his cheque he finds it is unsatisfactory.

The same situation is true in the case of the by-products of the farmer. I have had many complaints from cream producers, one of which is that they are very dissatisfied with the arrangement whereby, if they are skimming their milk on the farm, they are only paid quarterly. They see no reason for this, and neither do I.

Given the difficulty of providing machinery to make these payments, I believe that all we have to do is to feed the information into a computer, and then we will be able to make satisfactory payments. While I do not disagree that we have been slow in getting this program under way—for which the minister himself apologized—I would suggest to the minister that he assure the house and the farmers of Canada who produce cream on the farm that after July 1 payments will be made monthly as soon as the program becomes established and operational.

The fact that the $4 price takes into account skim milk at $1.05 appears to me to be unreaslistic. If you have some young pigs at the right age, you might think it all right to feed them on skim milk, in which case you find your return is $1.05 a hundred or more. But most farmers do not have sufficient quantity of pork bred on their farm to assure them a ready market for skim milk at the base price of $1.05; therefore this commodity in many cases is of little value to the economic farm unit, and in some cases of no value at all.

I know that the minister is not going to be brave about this question of provincial jurisdiction. However, many provinces would be quite willing to waive some aspects of their jurisdiction in this regard and be willing to co-operate if this assured some stability to the dairy industry.

The price which is paid today for milk is, in my opinion, the cost of production price.

No farmers get rich on $4 milk, and this includes the fluid milk producers, even though a percentage of their production is produced at a considerably higher price. They are just breaking even, and that is not good enough.

It seems to me that while the farmer in the province of Ontario, with his 38 quarts per hundred pounds gained something like 64 cents, the price of milk to the consumer went up from two to four cents, and this it seems to me is an unreasonable increase for the benefit the farmer received through the program that we are instigating.

It may be that the government will have to recommend a number of changes in distribution. There is no question but that distribution of milk has increased. In my area we could solve the dairy problem, for Timiskaming, if the minister would provide the funds to allow both the entrepreneurs and the farmers in the area to establish one large dairy unit that would buy all the milk in the area and process it. They could haul the bottled milk 60 miles to the most distant point of that area and distribute it from one central point. That operation would be big enough to include a cheese and butter factory, and to manufacture some type of skim milk powder either rolled or dry. A casein plant could be included, as well as all the other things that go along with this.

This has not happened and not because the farmers have not asked for it, Farmers have had many meetings, but they found that the cheese factory which would go into operation in the area could not obtain assistance, because arrangements for the amalgamation of processing facilities in the area could not be made.

Such a project would take into consideration the distribution problems of farmers, because farmers cannot operate distribution systems. They have an exceptionally difficult time in staying above water in operating their own facilities. I think that many farmers' facilities could be brought together, into one big industry, which would take all the milk that could be supplied, so that farmers would not have to go to the cheese factory, or whether it should go to the province of Quebec, because of the provincial subsidy, to have the milk manufactured into casein.

The minister will have to do much more than establishing a board before the dairy industry will be satisfied. I am of the opinion that he has taken a worth-while step. I also agree that there will be interesting developments in the interprovincial trade and in the export trade of our dairy commodities.

We should all pay tribute to Mr. Arnold for the work which he has been doing in the cheese industry in Ontario. The cheese industry has been able to develop an export market, which is still rising. Mr. Arnold got himself into disrepute by free enterprising government in Toronto who wanted to take over what he is interested in, because he has been successful, and because his organization has put certain controls on its own members. He should be thanked for having developed an agency to help farmers export cheese, particularly to England, where sales of cheddar cheese are increasing.

The government will have to follow up with the next step. If smart action is taken the industry will be able to extend its export of Canadian cheddar cheese in the British market.

Also, Mr. Speaker, this Dairy Commission should have money for research. That money will not be to develop a green colour with which to dye butter, in order to satisfy the housewife that the colour matches the tablecloth—although that has been suggested. I think we could develop in Canada a great number of cheeses which are of a regional nature, which can be sold for export and sold at home as well. Restaurants in Canada are developing a market for specialized cheeses now being manufactured by the Kraft Company in Canada. Encouraging this is a wrong approach. We ought not to take cheddar cheese, grind it up and manufacture out of that a processed type or specialized type of cheese. The Department of Agriculture should be encouraging the cheese industry, to develop natural Canadian cheeses that would meet the demand which has been built up in export markets.

An hon. Member: Such as Black Diamond.

Mr. Peters: Yes. An hon. member mentioned Black Diamond. We should be very pleased with the work done by this company in the field it is engaged in. I recommend to hon. members who have not had the opportunity to sample Black Diamond specialty cheeses, to put in a good word with the hon. member representing the area concerned, and perhaps something can be done about the oversight.

This company has developed cheeses that in my opinion meet the needs of the Canadian public. They are premium cheeses, Mr. Speaker. They do not sell for the base price of 42½ cents, but run in the 75 cent and $1 class. This means that those engaged in this type of cheese industry had a reasonable return for their efforts. We as Canadians, as a result of that dairy industry, will enjoy a large export market for our cheeses.

We ought not to consider the measure before us an end all. We ought not to be content with the limitation of the federal jurisdiction in fields where the provincial governments have shown some inclination to do something, because we ought to enter those fields as far as the provincial governments will allow us to do so. In order to have a healthy dairy industry, and in order to develop that industry, we shall have to give to it all assistance possible, and to allow for its expansion.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I say a word for those young people who occasionally come to me, asking how they can go into the dairy business. This is a specialized field where assistance to a young person is just not possible. I believe that consideration must be given to amortizing over a long time purchases of good cattle, good blood stock, good breeding stock, at a low rate of interest, for those people who want to enter this industry.

We must do that so that those young people, by upgrading herds will be able to produce for all Canadians the type of milk that we think should be produced here, and that should be available to all Canadians. Such milk ought to be produced in the best manner, from the best possible types of cattle, because this will provide to Canadians the most nutritious products that can be supplied from farms today. If those products are supplied, then the farmer would be assured of a reasonable standard of living through the total production of dairy products.

• (9:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, it will only take two minutes to make my point. On page 5 of the order paper, item No. 48 reads, in part, as follows:

House in committee of the whole on the following proposed resolution:—

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to establish a corporation, to be known as the Canadian Livestock Feed Board, etc.—

In other words, the famous feed board concerning eastern Canada. A little further, on page 6, we read:

Second reading of Bill No. C-205, an act to provide for the establishment of a Dairy Commission for Canada.

The bill before us.

On page 7, we read:

Second reading of Bill No. C-208, an act to amend the Crop Insurance Act.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what was promised during the last election campaign and, therefore, I just want to take a minute or two of the time of the house to congratulate the government and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene). Farmers can finally say: Here is a government which respects its commitments; and this is precisely the opposite of what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) said when he stated that the Quebec provincial government, the Lesage government, had been defeated because Quebec had no farm policy.

Mr. Speaker, the present Union Nationale government of Quebec, recently voted into office, was elected because it promised to do what we are now doing. Here is what the Union Nationale platform says: a crop insurance act is the order of the day, as well as a feed grain board and a dairy commission. The members of the Union Nationale, and particularly Mr. Clément Vincent, who sat on the other side of the house, have taken up all the ideas of the federal Liberal government in an attempt to popularize them in the province of Quebec. This accounts for the relative success of the Union Nationale government.

In order to succeed, one only needs to take up the ideas of the Liberal party, and this is what I wanted to tell the Leader of the Opposition this evening. If Mr. Johnson succeeded in getting elected, it is because his farm policy is exactly the same as that of the federal Liberal party, with the difference that we, instead of making promises, implement that policy, as we are doing now, and I commend the Minister of Agriculture in that respect.

Mr. Lambert: The country's obstructionists and borrowers.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has received such cursory applause that I realize he is wrong.

Mr. Speaker, since the Liberals have been in power, and this is not political partisanship, but quite factual observation, the dairy industry in Canada has improved substantially. In 1963, when we were elected, the average price of milk paid to the farmers of Quebec was about $2.80 or $2.90 per hundredweight. This year, the same farmers are confident that they will be getting over $4 per hundredweight. Already, there is a $1 improvement in just two years of Liberal government. I cannot imagine the Leader of the Opposition claiming that we are without a farm policy for eastern farmers.

If some people showed any deficiency in that field, it is our friends opposite. The Leader of the Opposition alluded a little earlier to his trip in the province of Quebec, and particularly to Sainte-Perpétue, and here is what his candidate, Mr. Clément Vincent, said: "Come and applaud Mr. Diefenbaker". He was so afraid that his leader would be badly received that he indulged in excessive propaganda to welcome the Leader of the Opposition. Here is what he said to the farmers in his riding: "Diefenbaker solved the problems of the west, now he will solve those of the east". He obviously admitted that his party had not done anything for the eastern farmers, and that appeared in all the newspapers of the province of Quebec. Mr. Clément Vincent confirmed the inefficiency of the Conservative party in agricultural matters.

Mr. Speaker, I rose tonight to make those few remarks and to say to the Leader of the Opposition that if he wants to succeed, he has only to keep on advocating the Liberal ideas; then he might have a chance to stay at the helm of his party.

[English]

Mr. Reg Cantelon (Kindersley): After listening to the wild tirade from the hon. member who has just spoken, I wonder whether I can restore the house to an atmosphere where self-help is possible. I realize the hon. member is much disturbed because the member to whom he has referred, Mr. Clément Vincent, is now minister of agriculture in Quebec. So I suppose we can forgive him for his—

An hon. Member: Jealousy.

Mr. Cantelon: "Jealousy" is the word suggested. It seems to be a good word.

I notice there is nothing in clause 5 of this bill to regulate appointments to the consultative committee, and it seems to me some thought should be given to this question. In this connection I should like to refer the minister to section 19(3) of the Unemployment Insurance Act which also deals with the appointment of an advisory committee. I am sure he will not wish this committee to be partisan, or to be accused of being partisan.

Section 19(3) of the act to which I have referred says:

> No senator or member of the House of Commons and no member of the legislative council or the legislative assembly of any province of Canada is eligible to be a member of or to act on the advisory committee.

It seems to me that if the minister wants to have a consultative committee which will really carry out the duties assigned to it, the adoption of some such provision as this should be favourably considered.

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Durham): I wish to take a few moments to speak briefly in this debate, and I intend to raise only two points. First, I wish to say that in my opinion the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) is doing a good job for the farmers of Canada and I wish to commend him for it.

The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) has just referred to legislation which is currently on the order paper. I should like to refer, also, to the provision of a 75 cent subsidy for manufacturing milk which is part of the dairy policy initiated by the present minister.

The other subject I wish to mention was referred to at some length by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), namely the constitutional problem with which the dairy industry in Canada is involved, because of the division of jurisdiction between federal and provincial authorities. It is my hope that the establishment of a Dairy Commission will assist in bringing more orderly marketing to the Canadian dairy industry. We have of course all seen the press resports in the last few days drawing attention to the concern felt by farmers of Ontario about the price they are receiving for manufacturing milk, particularly, and the operation of the new dairy policy as related to the province of Ontario.

I do not want to assess any blame but, as hon. members know, there is a sort of buck passing between the province on the one hand and the federal authority on the other. But I hasten to add that in the case of the federal department the new dairy policy for manufacturing milk is working well. It has led to a substantial increase in the price to the dairy producer, and no doubt the problem in Ontario is one that has to be resolved on the basis of the provincial authority. In this connection I throw out the suggestion to the provincial authority that perhaps an additional subsidy should be paid to manufacturing milk producers in Ontario.

The province of Quebec already has such a subsidy, in addition to the federal subsidy. I mention this to illustrate the point that we have a responsibility, one which I know the minister is well aware of, to bring more order and cohesion into the marketing of our dairy products. This Dairy Commission is a good step in that direction, and I hope through the medium of it, and through co-operation with provincial authorities, we will be able to establish a more uniform method of marketing and more uniform prices across Canada.

I close by emphasizing to the minister that one of the first responsibilities of this new commission should be to co-operate and have consultation with provincial authorities to try to find a uniform method for marketing our dairy products.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to speak but briefly, and to emphasize one or two points that are of major importance in regard to the establishment of the Dairy Commission. In principle I think this is a wise move forward, and I have no better authority to substantiate that statement than the opinion of the dairy farmers themselves. I shall just quote one statement which I believe effectively expresses my own opinion of this bill in principle.

The dairy farmers of Canada have said over and over again that:

> The need for such an authority, or "commission" as the government prefers to call it, arises out of technological advances. These have resulted in a rapidly changing and developing industry—one in which previously established marketing institutions and policies are proving to be inadequate to deal with the new problems which have been created. Price and marketing policy, including price support; the policy problems created by new products; changing structures in both the farming and processing sectors of the industry; planning of dairy export policy—all of these matters have led to the urgent need for the development of new, co-ordinated dairy policy through the establishment of appropriate boards or commissions.
> The co-ordination must not only be between policies at provincial level, but between provincial and federal policies.

So, Mr. Speaker, I believe it is evident that the establishment of a Dairy Commission is not only essential but inevitable in view of these changes that have been taking place.

There are one or two thoughts I wish to project at this point. In many instances marketing boards, as in the case of the Dairy Commission, can serve both the producers' and consumers' interests. The task of the consumers' representative is to try to identify new board activities that are in the public interest, and then to identify and oppose those which will unduly exploit consumers. For this reason I would strongly urge the minister when setting up the commission not to appoint just members belonging to the producers' sector of the industry. I believe he should also appoint a representative of the processors as well.

I have talked this over with the minister and I believe he knows my own opinion on the matter. It seems to me that this Dairy Commission must serve all sectors of the industry. It is imperative that on it there be at least one voice representing the processors, and in the establishment of the consultative committee likewise there must be representatives of all aspects of the industry, even on a wider basis than the representation on the commission itself.

Supporting this argument is the simple fact that the effects of the board's operations will depend to a great extent on what the board tries to achieve. If the board is going to go along with the consultative committee which will advise it, then I think it is imperative that representatives of both the producer and the processor be on both the commission and the committee.

I have taken some encouragement from what the minister has been saying in recent weeks. In fact I believe he has told the National Dairy Council that a representative of the processing industry will be appointed to the commission. I hope this is true, and again I urge him that he consider such appointments most carefully.

There is no doubt but that the board will be required to exercise its power, and also to work in co-operation with provincial authorities. If co-ordination and co-operation between the commission and the provincial and federal departments of agriculture can be realized, then I am sure equitable minimum levels of returns will be secured for all milk at the producer level, and also harmony and co-operation will be achieved between the various elements of the industry itself.

I shall close with just one more point. The Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations recently meeting in Rome has again emphasized that the world stands on the brink of calamity with respect to food supplies. Unless we in Canada, possessing such a tremendous potential for raising food supplies, can take the lead in establishing financial and marketing policies which will distribute our surpluses both in the dairy industry, the wheat raising industry and other facets of agriculture, then I believe it is true that we do face a dangerous period so far as the food supply of the world is concerned. We are well aware that even during this present year millions of people are starving to death because they do not have enough to eat.

In recent years there has been a trend toward continual over-production in agricultural products in the Canadian economy. This applies to the dairy industry as well as to other aspects of agriculture. I am sure that within a period of five years, and perhaps even sooner, we will have before us the greatest opportunity of any nation in the world to head off calamity. Not only will we be able to do it in relation to our own surplus production but also with our know-how which is perhaps greater than any other country in the world, even the United States, in respect of agricultural production. I think this relates directly to the setting up of an international dairy policy with part of that responsibility on the Dairy Commission. Therefore I regard this as an important and vital piece of legislation. I would hope that as the minister brings the commission into being and when the appointments to the two basic bodies are made he will be mindful of these basic suggestions I have brought to his attention at this time.

Mr. Lee Grills (Hastings South): Mr. Speaker, as we have been discussing at some length the matter of a Dairy Commission for Canada, which I am all for, it seems to me that at times the debate has drifted away from the source, and when I refer to the source, I mean the dairy cow. That may sound like farmers' language, but I am still a farmer. I say the cow is the source of supply. In Ontario and Quebec it has been said that the dairy cow has paid off more mortgages than any other phase of the farm operation. The cow has been known as several things, but first of all as the source of the dairy industry of course. Actually she is the mother of prosperity on the farm.

Many arguments have been made about beef versus dairy cattle and so on. I do not intend to go into that. I think however we will all admit that milk is nature's most perfect food. I do not think anyone will argue that point. I have been quite encouraged by some of the arguments here. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) enlarged on the dairy business to some extent. I think he inherited some of his knowledge from his father, whom I knew very well. His dad was very active in the Ontario Milk Producers Association in years past, and made a real contribution.

I was very encouraged by the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker). Since he is a distinguished politician I did not expect that he was quite as much a farmer as he is, and that he had such a good concept of the dairy problem. That was quite encouraging. Coming to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene), I should like to say that I have watched him very closely since he was appointed. We were somewhat encouraged because he is an eastern member and a person who is close to eastern Canada. We were told he had a brilliant brain and was going to develop a concept of the whole agricultural policy. I think he is trying very hard. I would say that he has a good personality and is a nice fellow to talk to. Someone told me he resembled Abraham Lincoln; and I thought that was a compliment. I do not know whether or not the minister thinks so. I do know he is working hard in his present portfolio, and propagandawise, on television and radio, he almost appeared to be the saviour of agriculture. I notice he also has a charming wife, which is a real asset to any politician.

However, I should like to assure the minister that it will take more than his remarks which I have heard on radio and his pictures which I have seen on television—although he is good-looking as is his charming wife—to satisfy the farmers of Canada. The farmers are beginning to ask questions. He certainly has built himself up to the position of an outstanding lawyer-farmer. I wish him only well and I assure him of my co-operation. Nevertheless I should like to remind him of a few things. There is a real cause for dissension and unrest among the dairy farmers across Canada. I am sure he is well aware of the unrest at the moment in Ontario. While he may not think it is his problem, eventually it will be.

Our farmers across Canada are becoming older men. Many factors are involved in the dairy industry. The hours of the day, the week and the month are longer in the dairy industry than in any other phase of farming. So our farmers are getting older and cannot take it any longer. For this reason they are slowing up; they are leaving the farms; their sons are not taking over the farms. We must make the dairy picture much brighter than it ever has been. I do not think there is any question about the hours put in on the farm; all of us are well aware of that.

I should like to mention the creamery producers and I place emphasis on this because the creameries continually are on our backs and writing us letters wanting to know whether they are going to receive any consideration. Also there are the cream shippers. They too are asking questions. I know this is difficult for the minister. I hope he realizes that I know it is difficult. It must be solved, however, in one way or another.

Then there is the matter of the cheese factories. I have had more than a casual interest in the cheese factory business for many years. Recently I was quite disappointed because the minister did not succeed in obtaining some assistance in respect of the amalgamation of the cheese factories in Hastings county. I am not blaming him personally because I took him at his word, and I hope he did try to get this through. For some reason or other it failed.

Some years ago when I was here in parliament I was quite interested in establishing an export subsidy for our cheese. I come from the home of that famous cheese, Black Diamond. I know this is not the place to suggest any commercials but, as I say, Black Diamond cheese and its equivalent is widely known. That should be a standard. There is something else I should like to ask the minister, and it is this; what is our Department of Immigration doing about bringing farmers to Canada? Whoever heard of a legitimate dairy farmer or a farmer interested in dairy farming coming from southern Europe? Let us bring potential farmers from northern Europe.

I suggest that he should impress upon the department of immigration that we bring to Canada potential farmers from countries which are involved in farming generally and the dairy industry in particular. These people would not only provide necessary assistance to farmers, they would eventually be potential purchasers of our farms. Our farmers as they get older will want to sell their farms. These people could purchase them and help to maintain our farm industry.

A great deal has been said about the guarantee of $4 per hundred pounds of milk.

The minister's statement in this regard sounds very good on the surface, but the $4 per hundred pounds must be considered in relation to the increasing cost of everything the farmer must purchase. No one knows how the situation will eventually end up or how high the farmers' costs will climb. Let us all be realistic and face the facts.

As the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) pointed out, the consumer is rightfully concerned about increasing costs. When the milk producer demands more for his product the consumer must pay more. All I can say is that I hope our minister will take advantage of his legion of advisers and the encouragement he has received, and do something for the dairy farmers, who are very hard pressed.

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on this bill which provides for the establishment of a Dairy Commission for Canada. I know that the fad nowadays is to appoint commissions on all kinds of economic problems. Every time such a problem has to be dealt with, a commission is appointed. Why so many of them? Why can the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) not think of anything else but instituting new commissions?

I think the Department of Agriculture, with all its branches is big enough to handle this, considering that 75 per cent of its appropriations are for administrative expenditures. Still, another commission is being appointed; more jobs. Friends and favorites of the government will form another commission and their salaries will be much higher than the income many farmers receive in one year.

What are the purposes and functions of that commission? Will it take over from the farmer when he ceases to produce because it does not pay him? The farmer has been selling at a loss for 25 years now. Will the commission solve that problem? Farmers leave the land. Will the commission prevent them from leaving their farms?

The Catholic Farmers Union sent you some briefs. They have asked $4 per hundredweight, and that request has yet to be met. They are told they will get it, and then they do not. Will the commission give it to them? How expensive—a commission to tell the farmers; We are giving you $4 per hundredweight. It is going to cost a lot to the taxpayers.

[Mr. Grills.]

Why can the farmer not get a better price for his milk? Because the taxpayers cannot pay him, because the citizens do not have enough purchasing power to buy what produce families need. Is the commission going to solve that problem, Mr. Speaker?

There are several problems, all of which are easy to solve. They are far from being as complicated as you think, but you spend your time complicating them, wishing to favour friends of the system. I believe that is it, there is no other reason. If you want to please the friends of the system, do not take it out on the farmers, for they are bankrupt already.

The present system has led them to bankruptcy because you favoured farm loans and all the farms are mortgaged. Is that commission going to pull them out of the clutches of financiers? Never. So, why then create commissions, pay large salaries to those gentlemen who become members of the various commissions?

The farmers know their own needs; just read their brief. The Department of Agriculture and all its agronomists must know what to do. You must know the needs of the farmers; there is no need to create a new commission.

Why is the price of milk not realistic and consistent with the economic situation? It is because the necessary measures were not taken.

It has long been considered to establish commissions in order to settle the problem, to spend the taxpayers' money, to tax the people even more, the workers, the builders of the country, so as to pay some gentlemen $25,000 a year. This must be stopped. There is too much red tape in Canada. Red tape is harmful to the people, because it exploits them. The government cannot help but indulge in red tape. Farmers no longer believe in the present government, nor in any government, because they can no longer make a living.

The only thing to do is to set up a system designed to provide the necessary purchasing power and enabling the people to buy farm products. The farmers will then be in a position to sell their products and make some profits. The same holds in all areas. That is the problem to be solved. Why are the plasters always applied next to the sore, and not on it? The plasters are always applied next to the sore, so no wonder it festers and does not heal. The economic situation is in bad shape and that is why there is so much discontent in Canada. That is why strikes are breaking out all over and soon strikes will occur in the agricultural industry. If it has not happened yet, it will.

There are problems to be solved but commissions must not be set up to pass the buck and avoid responsibilities. Most commissions are created to enable the responsible parties to pass them on to someone else's shoulders.

No one wants to assume his responsibilities. I have not yet seen a minister of agriculture or any other minister in Canada really assume his responsibilities, without passing them on to someone else, through commissions which cost a lot of money to the people. Well, the people will soon have enough of all those things.

Let us assume our responsibilities and solve those problems. They are easier to solve than we think; they are not so complicated. The government is complicating them with its agencies and economic policy of commissions. They set up one commission after the other; they spend all their time paying people who do not accomplish anything in offices, who work only two or three hours a day, and even less. We must therefor put a stop to that. If the people on those commissions worked like the farmers, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the bureaucracy would be reduced, because some work would get done. No work at all is done in the departments; people do not work any more. At three o'clock in the afternoon, if you telephone civil servants, they are not there; they have left the office. Even at eleven o'clock in the morning or at two in the afternoon, several are not in their office; they are not there at ten o'clock. This is how the commissions do their work, Mr. Speaker, and the citizens are aware of it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am rather reluctant to interrupt the member for Compton-Frontenac, but I must remind him that the legislation now under consideration does not deal with the establishment of commissions generally, but more especially with the establishment of a Dairy Commission for Canada and I would suggest that he should restrict his comments to this subject.

Mr. Latulippe: In that case, Mr. Speaker, I will answer the member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) who has made some suggestions to settle the problem. He said the price of milk climbed from $2.80 to $4 today and that this is thanks to the Liberal party. But he did not say for example, that the cost of living has tripled or risen by 300 per cent since then. He did not say that an 11 per cent tax has been put on building material and on all sorts of materials and enterprises in Canada. He did not say the cost of living has risen. Milk would have to bring $10 a hundredweight to offset the cost of living in Canada. He did not speak of that.

Who put all these taxes and caused all these economic difficulties in Canada, if not the Liberal or the Conservative party, the two old line parties which have been in power? So he talked about the Canadian Dairy Commission, and about politics, and I take the liberty to answer him.

I could talk on the subject at length, Mr. Speaker, but I will merely say that there certainly are problems to be solved. There is the financial problem; if the government took control of the financial aspect, it could pay subsidies to milk producers and farmers through the Bank of Canada, though credit given by the bank. Then the government would solve these problems; it will never do so otherwise.

Subsidies are necessary for chemical fertilizers which the farmers need so badly. Others should also be paid for various things, and at the same time the 11 per cent tax on all building materials which the farmers use and need should be removed. There would be subsidies to pay on transportation, on feed grain, on improving farmers' roads to their homes. Some of them do not even have passable roads to reach their homes. I live in an agricultural riding. There are farmers it is impossible to reach, where it is impossible to go, because the road is not passable. They are not interested in remaining on their farm. They do not even have a road to get out.

And this, Mr. Speaker, concludes my observations.

[English]

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

Clauses 2 to 23 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Barnett: On clause 1, Mr. Chairman, if it were not for the hour at which I see the clock has arrived I might be inclined to make a few remarks. All I should like to say is that, while I enjoyed very much the lyrical and broad-ranging speech of the minister on second reading, I hope the next time we discuss the establishment of a Dairy Commission he will give us the benefit of dealing a little more directly and in more detail with the subject than he did tonight. I am sure it would be helpful if in future speeches were directed more to the subject matter of the bill.

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): When shall the said bill be read a third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Greene moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Bernard Pilon (Chambly-Rouville): Mr. Speaker, with unanimous consent may I revert to motions, please?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Does the house give unanimous consent to the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Pilon) reverting to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): There does not seem to be unanimous consent for the hon. member to revert to motions.

Mr. Pilon: Would hon. members opposite care to state their objections, please?

Mr. Monteith: There is no need to state any objection.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I strongly object to any unanimous consent being given at this time, and I am not called upon to give any explanation.

Mr. Monteith: Hear, hear.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could ask the house if it is the wish that we take another item, or would hon. members prefer to call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Do hon. members agree with the suggestion made by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith)?

Mr. McIlraith: I refer to the item dealing with crop insurance, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, we would be happy to deal with that item, No. 76.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, members of this group object to proceeding with the crop insurance item at this time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could indicate the business for Monday. We will start with item No. 77, the Atlantic Development Board resolution; then the second reading of the public utilities transfer tax bill; the health resources fund resolution at the committee stage; the Canada Assistance Plan bill, second reading; the Canadian Film Board bill, second reading; the crop insurance bill; the public service and other superannuation acts, and the C.N.R. branch line bills. In view of the large number of measures I have indicated, we may not necessarily follow that sequence in calling them, if any other sequence would suit hon. members better. Oh, I should have indicated The Company of Young Canadians bill as well.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Douglas: Will we not be proceeding with the Bank Act as it was originally intended on Monday?

Mr. McIlraith: Not on Monday.

Mr. Douglas: Can the minister say when?

Mr. McIlraith: I am not able to give a firm answer; right away, I hope and expect.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL UNION OF NORTH ATLANTIC COUNTRIES

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): I rise, Mr. Speaker, to put a question again which I put in the house on June 13—perhaps that is the reason no answer was given. The question had to do with a very important speech delivered by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) on the previous Saturday, I believe, when he received the Pioneer Award at Springfield, in the United States. The substance of the question was whether, in the light of the Prime Minister's remarks on that Saturday afternoon he was recommending, or his government was going to recommend at some future date, a federal union of north Atlantic countries which would provide for some kind of collective political and economic policies.

Now, on rereading the speech I discovered that it had a great deal to say not only about some far reaching plans with regard to the economic union of the north Atlantic countries, but there was a strong suggestion made of the possibility of an even wider union including, at some far distant point in time, the union of all countries. Whether or not the Prime Minister was suggesting here some kind of world union or federation, he did not make it abundantly clear. He did say a number of other things, however, that seem to be relevant to our situation vis-à-vis NATO. One of the things he said which has not been reacted to very much in our country to date was that perhaps of all countries presently faced with the problem of NATO, France is most realistic in accepting the fact that the kind of agreements that were made in the late forties with regard to north Atlantic defence may not have the same viability and reality today that they had at that time.

By contrast, he also indicated that some of the more powerful nations making up NATO, I think by inference indicating our neighbour to the south, were not being altogether too realistic in their own reactions to the new position of France with regard to the NATO alliance. Indeed the Prime Minister went so far as to say that NATO itself is certainly not sacrosanct, and we must think of NATO in new terms and new leadership and in the sense of a greater amount of autonomy amongst the European nations. Perhaps we may even have to have a period of suspended animation, so to speak, when the European nations can consolidate their own strength, and then we can enter into some kind of far-reaching union. When we talk about the ways in which technology and the mass media draw closer together, it is interesting to think that perhaps there are new and different alternatives to the inward looking nationalism that has been part and parcel of the western world, particularly at certain difficult times in the last 50 years.

I, myself, am most anxious to see a wider public debate take place, not only in this house but in the nation, as to the possibility of new kinds of relationships, economically and politically, with nations on both sides of the Atlantic. I quote from the Prime Minister's speech:

> It is essential that we move ahead in the field of political and social organization in a way which is at least remotely comparable to our technological and scientific progress . . .
> I repeat, we must develop common, unifying political institutions which would provide for collective foreign and economic policies, as well as genuinely collective defence.

I am more than anxious to hear the response of either the Prime Minister or his representative here this evening.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the hon. member who has just spoken and all hon. members know that this government warmly shares the objective of those who favour the development of a closer relationship which would lead eventually to union among the members of the Atlantic community. The Prime Minister is a well known advocate of Atlantic union as our ultimate objective. This objective, it is true, is under strain now as a result of the proposals of the French government to withdraw from joint planning and command arrangements of the alliance. The main task for the immediate future is to concentrate on devising arrangements among the members of the alliance, including France, to minimize as far as possible the effects of the current crisis on the prospects for Atlantic union.

It seems to me that before union can be pursued effectively it will be necessary for the European members of the Atlantic community to develop their future relationships with one another. Meanwhile of course we should continue to encourage the kinds of relationships among Atlantic countries which will prepare the ground for promoting union at an appropriate time.

COMBINES—GASOLINE—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO PRICING, MARKETING, ETC.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, on June 14 I directed a question to the President of the Privy Council regarding the pricing and sales policies of gasoline companies in many parts of the country. The question was prompted in view of the recent report of the royal commission on the gasoline price structure in the province of British Columbia, which indicated the existence of unfair trade practices.

I asked the minister whether he would give serious consideration to conducting an immediate investigation under the Combines Investigation Act into the pricing, marketing and production practices of the oil, gasoline and products industry. I based the urgency of the question on the situation which prevailed in my riding at the time, where the gasoline dealers, in despair and anger at the situation current in the industry, had decided to close down their pumps for one day in protest. This was a mood that was sweeping many parts of Ontario. Other gasoline dealers had closed down the day before and there was an indication that others were prepared to continue this kind of shut-down to register their protest at the pricing practices of the oil companies in Canada.

I am pleased to see the President of the Privy Council here tonight to reply to my question. With all due consideration for him I might say that the answer he gave in reply to my question did not give me encouragement in regard to his willingness to accept the urgency of an investigation into this situation. I am, of course, looking forward to hearing a further statement from him tonight.

In this particular case the gasoline dealers in the riding of Waterloo South have, I feel, performed a signal public service in bringing this matter to attention. I should like to quote a statement made by the president of the Association of Gasoline Dealers in Waterloo South which appeared in the Evening Reporter of Saturday, June 11. The president, Mr. Lester, said:

• (10:10 p.m.)

The majority of the driving public is taking a terrible beating from the companies on the price of gas—"We hate to sell it at 44-45 cents a gallon. There is no need for that price. They are becoming too greedy . . . and are fleecing the public."

At present, he said, the companies are charging Galt area dealers 38 cents a gallon for retail gas. "To get our 7.9 cents a gallon profit, which is not that large, we have to sell at 44.45 cents," he said. "At the same time, they sell it to unbranded dealers at 30-31 cents—who can re-sell it at about what we are paying."

He went on to say:

"If it is being sold at 31 cents to unbranded dealers, we intend to apply pressure to get the same price," said Mr. Lester, "At present, the situation is completely unfair." Even at that price, 31 cents, he stated, the companies are making a solid profit on auto gasoline, which is a comparatively cheap product to manufacture.

He claimed about 90 per cent of the retail station gas outlets were owned and operated by the companies, "who believe they can charge them any price they like."

"Their attitude is that, if we don't like it, we can get out of the business," he protested. This was a bad situation when many dealers had invested money and their livelihood in equipment and facilities.

The problem of gasoline prices in Canada is serious not only for the dealers involved, who I genuinely believe are working very hard for small remuneration, and who are frequently little more than serfs of the oil companies, but also for the public. There are indications that the price of gasoline in Canada is far higher than it should be. There are indications that our national oil policy, apart from its effects on the consumer, is working to the detriment of Canada; that it is not helping to reduce our balance of payments problem; and that because the oil companies in Canada are completely protected from foreign competition, the prices they charge are what the traffic will carry.

One needs only look at what has been going on in Canada to see how inefficient this industry is in looking after the public welfare. We must ask, do we need gasoline stations on nearly every corner of a metropolitan area? Also, who pays for these gasoline stations? In answering, I suggest that the public is paying for them, and that the station operators at the same time are being put into a most difficult situation in terms of earning their own living. The implications from the overbuilding that has been going on are that the cost of stations is being passed on to the public, which must pay for the high overheads in the industry.

Many other aspects of the problem could be raised, but time does not permit me to do so. I raise this question because I think it is incumbent upon the President of the Privy Council, who is head of the new department that is supposed to assume responsibility for consumer affairs, to institute a complete and wide ranging investigation in this whole problem.

One province in particular has already done this, and has come up with interesting findings. That province has made certain charges that I think the new department should investigate. But any province is restricted in the investigation it can conduct.

The President of the Privy Council can, at this moment, indicate to all provinces which are presently conducting investigations, or would like to, what the federal government is prepared to place at their disposal, so that they can work in co-operation with the government of Canada.

We can find the answers to the problems I have raised only in this way. I urge upon the President of the Privy Council—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the hon. member's time has already expired.

Mr. Favreau: Perhaps the hon. gentleman has just a few more sentences to add. If so, I suggest he be allowed to continue.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's time has expired.

Hon. Guy Favreau (President of the Privy Council): The hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Saltsman) has, in fact, urged me to cause an inquiry to be undertaken by the combines branch into the oil industry with respect to pricing, marketing and production of oil and gasoline products.

It is, of course, apparent that this is a matter of some public concern, as witness an inquiry by a royal commission in the province of British Columbia and the pressure for other inquiries at the provincial level which are in progress or are forecast.

The undertaking of such an industry-wide study is a large-scale project. Hon. members will be aware that within the past few years the Director of Investigation and Research has undertaken an inquiry into certain aspects of this industry which resulted in the publication, in 1962 of the T.B.A. report by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission.

Clearly there are a number of important industries in Canada concerning which research studies might well be undertaken, and different views are no doubt held as to which sectors of the economy ought to be examined by way of research, and the priority to be assigned to various studies. Unfortunately, the research section of the combines branch cannot physically undertake all the projects that hon. members would suggest and, indeed, it must develop its program in an orderly manner and in accordance with the best judgment of the officials concerned in the light of the staff available.

I have already drawn to the attention of the director the suggestion of the hon. member for Waterloo South. The director has informed me that he and his staff are already well aware of the matters raised by the hon. member. I again emphasize that it would be unwise to hamper the general work of the branch, which is already overburdened, as hon. members well know, by forcing them to undertake immediately tasks which do not fit properly, for the moment, into the orderly program of research that the director is attempting to develop.

OLD AGE SECURITY—INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER LEGISLATION THIS SESSION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, June 21, as recorded in Hansard at page 6681, I directed a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) as follows:

> In view of the minister's statement in Vancouver yesterday to the effect that the government is giving intensive study to the problems of our old age pensioners, can he say whether this means that some legislation in this field will be placed before parliament this session, apart from what we already have?

Hansard goes on, if I may quote a few lines, as follows:

> Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would not rule out that possibility, though I am not confirming it.
> Mr. Knowles: As a supplementary question—
> Mr. Pickersgill: That is an answer worthy of Paul.

That reference, of course, was to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin).

The record continues:

> Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.
> Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I am trying to ask a supplementary question. In the meantime, while the government is deciding on this and while the minister is trying to make up his mind, would he make a statement as to what old age pensioners are to do to meet the rising cost of living?

At that point Your Honour told me that my question had been ruled out of order previously, to which I replied: "It is still a good question".

• (10:20 p.m.)

I put the question tonight to the minister's parliamentary secretary, and I hope she will be able to tell us what old age pensioners are to do while the government is making up its mind as to whether or not there is going to be any legislation at this session increasing the old age security pension. It has been possible for many months for the government to answer this kind of question, whether it came from this side or from dissident Liberals, by saying, "Wait for the Canada Assistance Plan. It is going to have something in it for old age pensioners, perhaps even more than the opposition is asking for."

I hope the parliamentary secretary is not going to give that answer tonight because we have now got the bill that sets out the Canada Assistance Plan and we know there is not in it any direct benefit to any old age security recipient. It provides for payments to the provinces on a certain basis, and if the provinces decide to supplement pensioners' income on a needs test basis, the federal government will share in the cost. But there is no increase in the pension itself.

This is a retrograde step about which we will have something to say on Monday when the Canada Assistance Plan is before us, but I say to the parliamentary secretary and the government, do not give us that line any longer. What both she and other Liberals on that side know is that there needs to be in this session an increase in the old age security pension at least to $100 a month across the board. Prices are going up. People are facing real problems in this area, and this parliament stands on trial on the question of whether or not it is going to meet the needs of our older people.

I make just one more comment. I suppose I should be chivalrous and say the parliamentary secretary is not old enough to remember what I am going to refer to, but I would like to remind Liberal members that the last time a Liberal government was defeated at the polls, which was in 1958, it was defeated largely because of its callous attitude to the old age pensioners. I am beginning to wonder whether the same Liberal party is not trying to court another defeat on the same issue. Despite all its talk nothing is being done to meet the needs of our older people. This is a crying shame.

I hope we are going to get legislation in this field. I hope the rumours that there are ructions in the Liberal party are true. I hope we are going to get legislation at this session. If the parliamentary secretary cannot tell us that this is the case, then I warn her that the party she supports has a very rough road ahead, and so it should, if it does not do better for the old age pensioners of this country.

Mr. Monteith: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would like to correct the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The last time the Liberal government was defeated was in 1957.

Mr. Knowles: Thank you, it was in 1957.

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is well aware that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) has already replied to similar questions by hon. members. I refer to his answers at pages 6122 and 6434 of Hansard, and also to page 6673 when I replied for him to a question put by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather).

There is nothing further I can add on this occasion without being repetitive, except to say I would like to remind the hon. member of the minister's remarks in which he said that the hon. member's interest, and the interest of all of us are shared by the government, which will be demonstrated as we develop further programs in support of Canada's older citizens.

Mr. Knowles: When?

REPORT BY MINISTER ON VISIT TO UNITED KINGDOM AND RUSSIA

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members know I have just returned from a visit to London and the Soviet union. While in London I attended a meeting of Commonwealth trade ministers, and with the permission of the house I should like to table the text of the communiqué issued at the end of the conference.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table the document to which he has just referred?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Winters: These discussions, which were very useful, gave me the opportunity to meet and exchange views with my colleagues from Britain and other Commonwealth countries concerned with trade, the Deputy Prime Minister of Australia, the Deputy Prime Minister of New Zealand, trade ministers from the Commonwealth countries of the Caribbean, many of whom we shall be receiving here in Ottawa next month for the Commonwealth Caribbean-Canada conference and, of course, trade ministers from the various Commonwealth countries in Asia and Africa.

Our discussions reviewed developments in world trade, including progress in the Kennedy round of trade negotiations in Geneva, efforts being made to strengthen international commodity arrangements for such products of special interest to Commonwealth countries as wheat, cocoa and sugar, and ways and means of further strengthening trade within the Commonwealth.

Report on Trade Discussions

Right Hon. Douglas Jay, President of the Board of Trade, indicated the readiness of the British government to seek membership in the European economic community, provided the essential interests of Britain and Commonwealth countries were safeguarded. It was agreed that other Commonwealth countries would be kept fully informed by the British of the progress of their exploratory discussions. Mr. Jay indicated that the British government would consult closely with other Commonwealth governments at all stages of any negotiations that might take place.

Taking into account the variety and diversity of interests within the Commonwealth group, there was a good spirit of co-operation from all sides. There was a clear recognition of the value of relating the development plans of the different Commonwealth countries to one another through the exchange of information.

There is clearly scope for substantially increased trade among Commonwealth countries on a multilateral basis. A meeting of senior planning officials from Commonwealth countries is to be convened, with a view to exchanging ideas on planning techniques, regional co-operation in planning, and co-operation in trade promotion.

So as to help the developing Commonwealth countries in their export promotion efforts we have offered to bring to Canada, later this year, up to five officials from developing Commonwealth countries for special courses on trade promotion. In addition we have offered to make senior Canadian government trade commissioners available to conduct seminars on trade promotion in the developing countries themselves.

We have also undertaken to provide to the developing Commonwealth countries information on market surveys and trade opportunities around the world, as contained in the department's publication "Foreign Trade". This offer of assistance was well received, as well as our willingness to lend assistance in the techniques of tourist promotion, to which developing countries attach great importance.

I also took the opportunity while in London to call on various British ministers, including Right Hon. Douglas Jay, President of the British Board of Trade, and Mr. George Brown, First Secretary of State and Minister of Economic Affairs, who has special responsibilities for Britain's relations with Europe.

[Mr. Winters.]

Among other things we explored how we might further strengthen the process of consultation and co-operation between our two countries. We agreed that it would be to the benefit of both countries if ministers concerned with commercial and economic relations were to meet at intervals for discussion of matters of common concern. To this end an Anglo-Canadian ministerial committee on trade and economic matters is to be established. It is hoped that we shall be able to hold the first meeting of the committee later this year.

In Moscow, as the Minister of Finance has already informed the house, I signed, on behalf of the government of Canada, a protocol extending for a further three years to April 17, 1969 the Canada-U.S.S.R. trade agreement. Hon. members are aware that this agreement was first concluded in 1956 and subsequently extended by the protocols of 1960 and 1963.

Under the agreement each country undertakes to extend most favoured nation treatment to the other. This means that imports into Canada of Soviet goods will continue to enter at most favoured nation rates of duty, and Canadian exports to the U.S.S.R. will continue to enjoy similar treatment in that market. The agreement allows for exceptions on both sides, where matters relating to national security are involved.

The exchange of most favoured nation treatment, with respect to shipping, relates to the treatment to be accorded to the vessels of either country while in the ports of the other. The terms of the protocol signed in Moscow are in general the same as those of the protocol of 1963, and provide, on a fully reciprocal basis, for facilitation of visits for business purposes. Both sides have also undertaken to continue to consider sympathetically any representations either government may make to the other concerning implementation of the agreement, or other matters affecting their commercial relations.

While in Moscow I talked on a number of occasions with Mr. Patolichev, Soviet Minister of Foreign Trade, about the development of Canada-U.S.S.R. trade. We both recognized the importance of widening the range of goods moving between our two countries, and we discussed the possibility of an increase in the number of trade missions that might be organized between the Canadian business community and Soviet foreign trade organizations.

In my discussions with Mr. Patolichev I emphasized the interest of our businessmen in marketing a broader range of Canadian manufactured goods in the U.S.S.R., as well as the basic materials, wheat and other goods now being exported. For his part, Mr. Patolichev explained the great importance which the U.S.S.R. attaches to developing Soviet exports to Canada. I explained to him that Soviet goods had the same opportunity to compete for sales in the Canadian market as the goods of other countries to which we extend most favoured nation treatment. So there would be no misunderstanding, I gave him a letter indicating that I saw no reason why, within the framework of our laws and regulations, it should not be possible for the U.S.S.R. to develop its exports to the Canadian market.

Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to table copies of the letters exchanged in this regard, and of the protocol extending the trade agreement.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, would it be possible to have both these documents, the one just mentioned and the one mentioned earlier, included as an appendix to today's Votes and Proceedings?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Winters: My colleague the Minister of Finance has already given to the house details of the very important wheat sales that have been concluded with the U.S.S.R. It is gratifying that Canada now has assured sales to the U.S.S.R. of nine million long tons over the next three years, including substantial quantities of flour. I need hardly point out the implications of these sales for the production and marketing of Canadian wheat and flour. This transaction will provide strong underlying support for our whole economy, and for our efforts to expand Canadian exports. As indicated by the Canadian Wheat Board, the wheat will be shipped from both Pacific coast and eastern Canadian port areas. The sales to the U.S.S.R. will be a factor of strength in the world wheat market, and will constitute an important element of stability in our trade relations with the U.S.S.R.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian delegation and I personally were most warmly received by the Soviet authorities in both Moscow and Leningrad, and by the many Russian people we met. On every hand there was evidence of the Soviet desire to strengthen relations with Canada. I was able to note the efforts being made to increase productivity and to improve social conditions in the U.S.S.R. I believe there is room for the development of technical exchanges between Canada and the U.S.S.R. to the mutual benefit of both countries, and that both would benefit from the knowledge and understanding that would come from more widespread contact between the two peoples.

I am delighted that Mr. Polyansky, first deputy chairman of the U.S.S.R. Council of Ministers, with whom I had useful discussions in Moscow, is presently visiting Canada as head of the Soviet parliamentary delegation, and I am sure he will find his stay here both enjoyable and rewarding. I have invited Soviet trade minister Patolichev to visit Canada next year, and he is hopeful that it will be possible for him to come during the period of Expo '67. He will be most welcome.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say that the government regards the Soviet union as a valued and continuing trading partner of Canada. The extent to which our sales to the Soviet union may further expand and diversify will reflect, in part, the success of Soviet sales efforts in this market. Canadian businessmen, in deciding on the source of their import needs may wish to consider availabilities from the Soviet union in the same way as from other sources, and be guided in their decisions in this regard by normal business criteria. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I feel sure that hon. members of this house welcome back the Minister of Trade and Commerce from his useful trip to London and Moscow, and that we have all found interesting the report he has given us on his talks with other commonwealth trade ministers at the conference which has just been concluded. This was a conference which I am sure will be helpful in promoting increased trade within the commonwealth and a better understanding among its members. Having taken part in conferences of this kind I realize their potential in achieving these things, and I am sure the latest will be equally useful.

We have all been interested to read in the papers and have had confirmed here today, that the talks the minister has had with the British trade minister have led to an arrangement for a Canada-Britain ministerial meeting dealing with trade matters. I am sure everyone will agree that this will help lead to a greater Britain-Canada trade in the future.

Report on Trade Discussions

We are all very pleased to hear of the protocol renewal which will make it possible for us to extend our trade agreement with the U.S.S.R. for another three years, and which should make it possible to expand our trade with that country in the years ahead. I am sure all members of the house are hopeful that this expanded trade will make possible steadily improving relationships and understandings between this country and the U.S.S.R.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the members of this party welcome back the minister of trade. We are glad to hear his statement this afternoon having to do with two matters, the first relating to commonwealth trade. Unfortunately, commonwealth trade, as Mark Twain said of the weather, is something about which a great many things have been said but about which not too much has been done.

One problem that has faced Canada for years under successive governments relates to our very large trade deficit with the United States. Often our trade balance with other countries has not been sufficient to balance our total trade, and has never been sufficient to balance our international payments. This problem is increasing in that the nations with which we have a favourable balance of trade are becoming concerned. Quite recently in the city of Ottawa, Right Hon. Douglas Jay, President of the Board of Trade of the United Kingdom, commented on the fact that over a period of years the United Kingdom has been purchasing roughly 50 per cent more from Canada than we have been purchasing from Great Britain.

This has not always been just a matter of tariffs or most favoured nation agreements. It has often been felt by Britain, and I think with some justification, that the valuation for duty purposes has not been realistic and in many cases has been discriminatory. If we are really going to do something about commonwealth trade there must be a much more realistic approach than anything that has been taken to date.

I was very glad to hear the minister announce that there is to be an Anglo-Canadian ministerial committee on trade and economic matters set up to meet this fall. I know that what concerns many Canadians is the fact, as the minister has commented in his statement, that Great Britain is likely to make application for membership in the European economic community. While Great Britain, with the best intentions in the world, will try to safeguard commonwealth trade, it will have to bargain to get into the European common market. In the process of bargaining we could very easily lose some of the market which we now enjoy with Great Britain for many of our primary products. Therefore I think it is extremely important that this committee go to work and go to work quickly.

The second thing the minister referred to was the signing of the agreement with the U.S.S.R., something which has been applauded from all parts of the house. The minister referred to the question of extending trade between our two countries. If I remember correctly the figures over the last three years, we have bought from the Soviet union something like $27 million worth of goods and have sold to them something in the neighbourhood of $800 million worth, which is about 30 to 1. If we look upon the wheat deals as merely temporary, emergency situations, then the present approach is adequate; but if we are hoping to make the Soviet union a continuing market for Canadian products and Canadian wheat, then certainly every effort must be exerted to make possible increased sales of Russian goods to Canada.

Again, I do not think this is just a matter of tariffs. I think it is a matter of looking realistically at the valuation for duty purposes and canvassing the entire market situation so we can establish a genuine two way trade policy, because only on that basis can we hope to have continuing trade with the other nations of the world.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, we are happy to note that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) has had an excellent trip to Britain and Russia. We are also happy to note his return since his presence is always appreciated by the house of which he is a distinguished member.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce has informed us of the talks which were held in Russia and Britain. Needless to say that we rejoice at the sale of wheat to Russia which has recently been made and at the protocol that he signed to facilitate trade between the two countries.

We also want to congratulate the Minister of Trade and Commerce for his share in the talks held in Britain with a view to facilitating trade between Commonwealth countries

We believe Canada is an immensely rich country, capable of producing vast amounts of high quality products; we are also convinced that Canada is capable of helping other countries of the world by selling or supplying their needs and, in return, by obtaining from them what we cannot have here. To my mind, trade between countries should be promoted, since each country benefits and we congratulate the minister for his successful trip in this regard.

[English]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, in commenting briefly on the two matters raised by the Minister of Trade and Commerce I should just like to say that we have already expressed our approval of the protocol that was signed extending the trade agreement with the U.S.S.R. until 1969. I think the minister has pointed to one of the most important aspects of trade between the U.S.S.R. and Canada, in that we need to explore every possible, practical way of expanding the market for U.S.S.R. products in Canada.

I welcome the suggestion by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that the Canadian government would assist in sending to that country more trade missions made up of businessmen, who I think could in a practical way inspect the goods that are available within the U.S.S.R. and see whether they could find an immediate and growing market within the Canadian economy.

We would also like to know—and I have asked the Minister of Finance a number of times about this—how much flour is included in the contract. We would particularly like to know the amount for the first year. We have been told there is a firm contract for some 112 million bushels of wheat starting August 1, 1966, and perhaps the minister knows now how much of that 112 million bushels will be shipped in the form of flour.

The other matter the Minister of Trade and Commerce raised was the meeting he had in London with representatives of the other Commonwealth countries. He mentioned the Kennedy round of negotiations. I certainly hope that some greater progress will be made in these discussions than has been apparent in the immediate past. As far as the British entry into the European economic community is concerned, I am sure the minister understands that all these conditions must be fairly clearly spelled out before a Commonwealth country such as Canada can agree to them, because a very, very large portion not only of our own trade but that of many of the other Commonwealth countries is tied up in trade directly with Britain, and we will have to be extremely careful to see that these Commonwealth preferences are not interfered with by Britain's entry into the European economic community.

Right Hon. Douglas Jay said, I believe, or at least is reported to have said, when he was in Canada that "either Canada increases purchases in the United Kingdom or faces a significant decline in British purchases in Canada." While Britain may feel there is an economic necessity for her to say and do these things, I think the minister ought to tell us, if he knows, what commodities Britain has in mind in cutting back significantly on purchases from Canada unless we are able to increase our purchases from the United Kingdom.

CANADA GRAIN ACT

PROVISION FOR LICENSING OF OFF-TRACK ELEVATOR STORAGE

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-212, to amend the Canada Grain Act (off-track elevator licensing).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, this bill has been before the house previously. Actually it is an amendment to the Canada Grain Act which would allow the Board of Grain Commissioners to license off-track elevator storage. With the two transportation companies, the C.P.R. and the C.N.R., moving into the trucking industry at a great rate and with the proposed rail line abandonments, it is only logical to assume that elevator storage off-track should now be allowed to be licensed. I hope the government will take this amendment into consideration and perhaps see that it is adopted.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION FOR CAPITAL EXPENDITURES, ISSUE OF SECURITIES, ETC.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved that the house do go into committee of the whole at its next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize the Canadian National Railway Company to make capital expenditures and to supply the financial requirements of affiliated companies in amounts not exceeding, in the calendar year 1965, the amount of $161,600,000, and not exceeding, in the calendar year 1966, the amount of $192,000,000; and to make, in the calendar year 1967 prior to the 1st of July, 1967, certain capital expenditures, by way of investing in the securities of Air Canada, not exceeding $126,000,000 and certain other capital expenditures toward the acquisition of equipment, additions and conversions not exceeding $90,000,000; to provide for the financial requirements of Air Canada in an amount not exceeding $50,000,000, either by means of loans from Her Majesty to the National Company or by means of issues of securities of the National Company, authorized and guaranteed as to interest and principal by Her Majesty, the cash proceeds by either method to be used only for the financial requirements of Air Canada, the capital needs of the National Company itself being met entirely through the sale of preferred stock to Her Majesty and from reserves from depreciation and debt discount; to authorize Her Majesty to continue to purchase until December 31st, 1967, Canadian National Company 4 per cent preferred stock in an annual amount not exceeding 3 per cent of the gross revenues of the Company; to extend until December 31, 1967, the moratorium on interest on the loan of $100,000,000 to the Company authorized by the National Railways Capital Revision Act of 1952; to authorize Her Majesty to make loans to the Canadian National Railway Company and Air Canada to meet deficiencies in operating reserves to June 30, 1967, any such loans to be repaid from revenues of the Railway Company and Air Canada or, if revenues prove insufficient, by subsequent deficit appropriation by Parliament.

Motion agreed to.

INCOME TAX PAYMENTS TO FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Question No. 591—Mr. Davis:

1. What were the personal income tax payments to the federal government in total and on an average per capita basis, by province, for the fiscal year 1963-64?

2. What were the corporate income tax payments to the federal government in total and on an average per capita basis, by province, for the fiscal year 1963-64?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): 1. Personal income tax payments to the federal government in total for the fiscal year 1963-64 were $2,454.6 million. The total includes old age security tax and provincial income tax collected by the taxation division. (The province of Quebec collects its own provincial income tax. Therefore, the figures for that province are net federal tax). Collection figures by provinces are not available because payments and refunds processed by the taxation data centre in Ottawa in 1963-64 relate to all provinces and district office collection figures, therefore, do not indicate correctly the amount collected in each province. The following table, based on an analysis of tax returns, shows the total tax payable by individuals in respect of the 1963 taxation year distributed by province of residence:

Province	Total tax payable $ million	Average per capita $
Newfoundland	22.0	45.74
P.E.I.	3.8	35.51
Nova Scotia	47.0	62.17
New Brunswick	33.0	53.75
Quebec	474.3	86.74
Ontario	1,049.7	162.79
Manitoba	105.3	110.84
Saskatchewan	86.0	92.18
Alberta	156.4	111.32
British Columbia	254.9	150.38

2. Corporate income tax payments to the federal government in total for the fiscal year 1963-64 were $1,472.2 million. The total includes old age security tax and provincial income tax collected by the taxation division. (The provinces of Ontario and Quebec collect their own corporation tax. Therefore, the figures for those provinces represent net federal tax). Collection figures by province, based on the district office of filing, are shown in the following table:

Province	Total collections $ million	Average per capita $
Newfoundland	14.2	29.49
P.E.I.	2.3	21.62
Nova Scotia	16.8	22.23
New Brunswick	13.1	21.36
Quebec	432.1	79.02
Ontario	700.6	108.65
Manitoba	47.1	49.63
Saskatchewan	15.0	16.05
Alberta	81.1	57.69
British Columbia	149.6	88.28

Question No. 1,229—Mr. Orlikow:

1. In the past ten years, in how many cases did the government charge and prosecute companies for violations of the Combines Act, except for cases under section 33-(c)?

2. In each case, what were the names of the companies involved?

3. In each case, what were the names of the companies found guilty when prosecuted, and what were the penalties imposed by the court?

4. What were the costs to the government of investigating and prosecuting the above cases, exclusive of the salaries of permanent government employees, but including fees paid to lawyers, court reporters and other officials, travelling expenses for officers of the Department of Justice, cost of transcripts, etc.?

Hon. Guy Favreau (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this is a starred question the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) put on the order paper.

2. If so, how many such requests have been received, and what has been the nature of the government's response to such requests?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Department of Justice and the Prime Minister's office as follows:

1. Yes.

2. Requests were received from 23 societies and branches, and from 305 individuals. They were informed that the Minister of Justice appreciated having received their views and that they will be carefully considered.

Question No. 1,530—Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski):

1. How many veterans in the Canadian public service are affected by the terms of article 17 (2) of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act (7-8 Elizabeth II, ch. 21)?

2. Are veterans working for crown corporations affected by the terms of the aforementioned article 17 (2)?

Hon. Léo-Alphonse Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): 1. 1,141.

2. Employment in a large number of crown corporations has been deemed to be employment in the public service of Canada and schedule "A" of the Public Service Superannuation Act contains a list of these corporations. Therefore, only those employed by these crown corporations are affected by article 17(2) of the CFSA and 3(11) DSPCA.

LESLIE FROST—AIR CANADA DIRECTOR

Question No. 1,571—Mr. Caouette:

1. Was Mr. Leslie Frost on the board of directors of Air Canada on October 1, 1965?

2. Is Mr. Leslie Frost still on this board of directors?

3. Did Mr. Frost make any political speeches or conduct any political activities while he was director of a crown agency?

4. Has Air Canada a policy concerning political activity conducted by its officials and, if so, what is that policy?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows:

1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. It is not within the knowledge of the company.

4. Members of the board of directors of Air Canada with the exception of the president, are not officers of the company. Air Canada's policy with respect to participation in political activity by all persons on its payroll is set forth in a Management Guide recognizing the merit of wide participation by all citizens in political affairs but requiring that they obtain leave of absence from the company to do so.

VALCARTIER—INQUIRY CONCERNING FACTORY OF CANADIAN ARSENALS LTD.

Question No. 1,601—Mr. Caouette:

1. Has the St. Lawrence Manufacturing Company made a bid to buy the Valcartier factory of Canadian Arsenals Limited and, if so, what is that bid?

2. What was the cost of the said factory at the time of construction?

3. Does Canadian Arsenals Limited intend selling all its factories and, if so, for what reasons?

4. Must decision by Canadian Arsenals Limited in this regard be approved by the responsible minister or by the governor in council and, if so, for what reason?

5. Has the government recommended the sale of any Canadian Arsenals Limited factories?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1. St. Lawrence Manufacturing Inc. and General Investment Corporation of Quebec have jointly made a proposal to purchase the Val Rose Plant of Canadian Arsenals Limited located near Valcartier, Que. The amount of the bid was $3,150,000.

2. The cumulative original cost of land, buildings and equipment since construction of the plant began in 1936 is $21,906,000.

3. No. However, some plants were offered for sale and sold because there existed no further requirement for their facilities. Where a requirement for limited defence use of the facilities exists, plants have been offered for sale to private interests to allow higher utilization of the overall manufacturing capabilities through the introduction of commercial production lines while retaining the essential military function for which they were designed.

Questions

4. Decisions regarding disposal of capital assets, including lands and buildings, follow recommendation from the responsible Minister and approval by Governor in Council. Canadian Arsenals Limited are custodian only of such assets which are the responsibility of the Department of Defence Production.

5. Yes. In the last two years, the government has recommended the sale of the Explosives Division of Valleyfield, Que., the Palace Hill Plant in Quebec city, and the Val Rose Plant near Valcartier, Que.

INCENTIVES ACT PROJECTS, MANITOBA

Question No. 1,608—Mr. Stefanson:

1. Have any projects been approved in the province of Manitoba under the Area Development Incentives Act and, if so, how many and in what areas are they located?

2. Have any manufacturing or processing projects been approved and, if so, what type and what is the estimated capital cost and the estimated development grants for these projects?

3. Are any of these projects now in production and, if so, how many?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): 1 and 2. Only projects involving the establishment or expansion of manufacturing or processing industries in designated areas can be considered for benefits under the Area Development Incentives Act or section 71A of the Income Tax Act. Firms have notified the area development agency of their intentions to proceed with 12 projects in Manitoba, involving a total investment of $24,807,000, in such a manner as to qualify for the benefits of the area development program. As of May 31, 1966, eight firms have received letters of assurance advising that if they proceed in accordance with their plans, the projects should qualify for a capital grant or for income tax benefits. Details of the projects are as follows:

Designated area	No. of Projects	Capital investment	Type of Industry
Brandon	5	$24,235,000	Food	2
			Printing, publishing and allied	1
			Machinery	1
			Chemicals and chemical products	1
Dauphin	3	287,000	Food	3
Total	8	$24,522,000

Information on the distribution between capital grants and tax benefits is not available pending further advice from industry.

3. Of the eight firms which have received letters of assurance, 4 report that they expect to be in production by the end of June 1966.

SATELLITE TRANSMISSION OF TELEVISION PROGRAMS

Question No. 1,627—Mr. Korchinski:

1. Have any feasibility studies been conducted by the C.B.C. into the use of a satellite of the Early Bird variety for transmission of television programs into areas presently not served by any television and, if so, what is their nature?

2. Are there any plans by any agency of the government of Canada for putting a satellite of the Early Bird variety into space for use in communication?

3. Are there any international plans for sending into space any satellite for use in television transmission?

4. Has an estimate been made of the cost of such a satellite and, if so, what is it?

[Mr. Drury.]

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the Department of Transport as follows:

1. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation reports that it is following closely the work being done in the United States by space agency people, the Communications Satellite Corporation, and network broadcasters, concerning potential network distribution satellites with a view to eventually taking advantage of any resulting developments.

2 and 3. The international telecommunications satellite consortium (known as INTELSAT), in which Canada is a partner, owns the Early Bird satellite and has plans for placing in orbit several additional communication satellites employing increasingly sophisticated designs. All of these satellites are or will be, capable of being used for relaying television signals, as well as other forms of telecommunications, on overseas routes, but to do so they must operate in conjunction with complex ground stations. These satellites are not intended for distributing television signals within countries. With respect to the possibility of using satellites for this latter purpose, studies are under way in the United States and Canada to determine the feasibility of using more complex satellites for relaying television signals from a limited number of program origination points to a large number of broadcasting stations and using for this purpose ground stations of lower cost and complexity.

4. The cost of placing a satellite in orbit might be $10,000,000, however this cost alone is not too meaningful. It is necessary in making cost comparisons with other forms of telecommunication, to also include the cost of the ground stations as well as to take into account the rather short satellite life. It is too early to estimate what these overall system costs would be, however, there are indications that they may ultimately be lower than the cost of an equivalent land based microwave service.

POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION, MALAGASH, N.S.

Question No. 1,636—Mr. Coates:

1. Is it the intention of the government to construct a post office at Malagash, Nova Scotia and, if so, when?

2. Have any investigations been carried out by officials of the government toward securing a site for a post office at Malagash, Nova Scotia?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. A post office building was completed on June 15, 1966.

2. The site was acquired in 1965.

CONTRACT FOR LOBSTER RESEARCH

Question No. 1,646—Mr. McCleave:

1. Did the Department of Fisheries, or any other department or agency of the federal government, recently enter into a one-year contract with a vessel and its Captain, Louis Lourmais of France, to carry out research into lobsters and, if so, what are the terms of remuneration to Captain Lourmais?

2. Were tenders called for the above-mentioned contract, and (a) if so, how many responses were there, and by whom (b) if not, what was the reason?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): 1. Yes. To conduct diving operations for purpose of (a) underwater explorations involving observations of the operation of fishing equipment and gear and of marine life; (b) collecting living samples of marine life; (c) carrying out underwater photography; (d) undertaking underwater repair and maintenance of gear and equipment; and (e) such other activities as the minister considers worth while.

For above services, including use of the diving tender St. Brandon and supporting crew of not less than three professional divers for a term of 11 months, an amount of $88,000.

2. (a) No. (b) Captain Lourmais was selected for this work because of his broad experience and international reputation in underwater exploration, photography, etc.

DAMAGE CLAIMS, TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY, N.B.

Question No. 1,649—Mr. Flemming:

1. Regarding claims for damages to property acquired, including moving same when considered necessary, on the trans-Canada highway between Andover, New Brunswick, and the Quebec boundary, what are the details of (a) ownership of property (b) remuneration claimed for damages or moving (c) remuneration allowed for damages and moving (d) cost of moving, if any?

2. Was appraisal of value, and moving expense examined by a duly authorized official of the government of Canada before being approved and paid?

3. Are any claims still unsettled and, if so, what are the details and value of same?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. (a) No information of this kind appears in our files because the acquisition of property is the responsibility of the province and the cost is not shared by Canada. (b), (c) and (d) Canada shares in the cost of moving buildings from the highway right of way in accordance with the provisions of the trans-Canada highway agreement, including the reinstatement of facilities which existed at the original site. Canada also shares in expenditures necessarily incurred by the owner or person in possession of a building for the moving of effects and equipment and for board and lodging during the moving of his building.

2. The value of property being purchased by the province is not assessed by an official of the government of Canada. The moving expense is examined by a duly authorized official of the government of Canada before the extent of federal participation is approved.

3. It is a responsibility of the province to deal with claims by property owners; consequently, this department is not aware of the status of any such claims.

C.B.C. PROGRAM "THE PUBLIC EYE"

Question No. 1,650—Mr. McCleave:

1. Did the C.B.C. program "The Public Eye", presented on Tuesday, June 7, mention any of the positive accomplishments of the immediate past or present federal governments?

2. If so, which ones?

3. What was the theme of the program?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. No. The program was not intended as an over-all examination of what governments or parliaments have done.

2. N/A.

3. The theme of the program was an examination of the underlying causes and events which some observers believe have embittered party and person relationships in parliament over the past ten years.

STUDY OF UNDERGROUND WATER RESOURCES

Question No. 1,655—Mr. Coates:

Have any steps been taken by the government to determine the extent of Canada's underground water resources and, if so (a) what are they (b) in what provinces have studies been initiated (c) how long will it be before the reports will be available on these studies?

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Yes. (a) Active evaluation of Canada's groundwater resources has been carried out by the Geological Survey of Canada since the 1930's. In the past few years some provinces have established agencies to evaluate and control their groundwater resources. Many of these provincial investigations are supported by grants from ARDA. The work of the water research branch in these provinces is becoming more concerned with the development of new techniques of groundwater exploration, rather than the actual evaluation of groundwater resources, which is being undertaken by the provincial agencies. (b) Groundwater investigations of various types have been made in parts of all provinces and territories, with the exception of Newfoundland. At present investigations are being conducted by the water research branch in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island. A national observation well network is being established to determine the amount of groundwater in storage across Canada. (c) Reports published by the geological survey are available for many of these investigations; others are in the form of non-published internal reports.

UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFITS TO CANADIAN WORKERS IN U.S.

Question No. 1,732—Mr. Dionne:

Have representatives of the Canadian government taken any further steps in order to arrive at an agreement with American authorities so that Canadian workers in the United States, especially in the states of Maine and New Hampshire, may be eligible for unemployment benefits?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Representatives of the government of Canada have made repeated efforts to arrive at such an agreement, especially with respect to Canadian workers employed in the states of Maine and New Hampshire. At the time of the most recent discussions those states made it clear that they were not willing to make such an agreement and this was reported to this house at the time. In view of the clearly expressed views of the two states mentioned, no further steps have been taken in this matter.

Inquiries of the Ministry

THE MINISTRY

REPORTED DIFFERENCES RESPECTING INTEREST RATES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Over the week end a number of articles have been published by members of the press who are usually close to the government to the effect that a great battle has been fought between members of the cabinet and members of the shadow cabinet—the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon) and the former secretary of state (Mr. Lamontagne)—on the question of interest rates under the Bank Act. Is the Prime Minister now in a position to say which of the groups has triumphed, the cabinet or the shadow cabinet?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): It is not my practice nor would it be constitutionally proper for me to comment on sham battles in this house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the Prime Minister designate the activities of the former minister of justice and the former secretary of state as sham battles?

[Later:]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not often rise to correct myself, Mr. Speaker, but when I mentioned the shadow cabinet a while ago and was wondering which was going to dominate, the shadow cabinet or the cabinet, I referred to the former minister of justice and the former secretary of state. It was the former minister of finance to whom I had reference, and I apologize for making that mistake.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

LEGISLATION TO BE DEALT WITH BEFORE SUMMER RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): On Wednesday last the right hon. Prime Minister indicated that early this week he would tell the house what legislation the government intended to have dealt with prior to the adjournment of the house for a summer recess. I wonder whether he is now in a position to give the house that information.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): It is our intention, Mr. Speaker, as was indicated last Thursday night, to proceed with the matters outlined by the house leader at that time and to complete these items so we can submit them to the Senate for consideration before going on to consideration of other items on the order paper. Indeed, they are on the order paper now and we hope to be in a position to proceed with them at that time.

Mr. Douglas: On June 6 the house leader indicated that among the items the government intended to have dealt with prior to recess was the medicare bill. I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether he can assure the house that the medicare bill will be considered and dealt with prior to the recess.

Mr. Pearson: I think it will be possible to introduce the medicare bill immediately or shortly after consideration of the items mentioned by the house leader last Thursday night.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister indicate when revisions to the Bank Act will be brought before the house?

Mr. Pearson: It depends to a great extent on the progress made in the list of items I have just mentioned.

Mr. Hees: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Prime Minister assure the house that the Bank Act will be brought before the house and considered before the recess?

Mr. Pearson: We do not intend to remove any items from the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): This is a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I will ask the Minister of Finance whether he can give a report to the house on who is winning the battle of the Bank Act, himself or the "gold dust twins".

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN ATTITUDE TOWARD ADMISSION OF MAINLAND CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can he tell us if Canada intends to take steps to have Communist China recognized by the United Nations at the next session of that organization?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This is a very far reaching question indeed which, as I have already indicated more than once, is actively engaging our attention.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

HEARING OF APPEALS RESPECTING PASSENGER SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I wish to address my question to the Minister of Transport and ask him when the governor in council will be dealing with the appeals respecting the C.P.R. passenger train service known as The Dominion.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): As soon as possible, sir.

Mr. Olson: Can the minister define for us "as soon as possible"?

TRADE

WHEAT—FURTHER INQUIRIES RESPECTING SALE TO RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I wish to address my question to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, in an earlier statement concerning the protocol signed with Russia, indicated that shipments of grain will go through both the east and west coast ports. However, in reply to a question put to him on June 20 the Minister of Finance stated that shipments will also be made through Churchill. Will these be token or substantial shipments, or would the minister like to correct this statement.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I have no reason to correct my statement. In the contract signed by the wheat board and the Soviet union, provision is made for shipments through Churchill if that is the wish of the U.S.S.R.

While I am on my feet let me answer a question which was put to me last week by the hon. member for Medicine Hat with respect to the flour content in the contract between the U.S.S.R. and the wheat board. It provides for the shipment of 900,000 long tons of flour during the three year period, which is the equivalent of 45 million bushels of wheat. In the first year the contract calls for 300,000 long tons of flour, which is equivalent to about 15 million bushels of wheat.

Mr. Korchinski: I have a supplementary question. Mr. Speaker, may I put the following question to the minister in view of the imminent recess of the house and since my question No. 587 has been on the order paper for almost five months. Can the minister indicate how much grain it is intended will be shipped through Churchill this year?

Mr. Sharp: Provision is made in the contract for shipment through Churchill, but that will depend upon the circumstances at the time and the wishes of the buyers. When we sell wheat we try to sell it to the best advantage, and we find it a very good rule to consult the buyers on their choice of ports. Generally speaking we try to sell them what they want at the places where they would like to receive it.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, and I wish to direct it to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Was a request made by his government through him during the discussions in Moscow to extend the former contracts for shipments of wheat to Russia, in view of the statement made by the Minister of Finance and by Mr. McNamara, head of the wheat board that irreparable damage has been done to the contracts? Was there a request to extend the contracts?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am not sure I understood the full meaning of the hon. member's question. I think I had better take it as notice.

Mr. Woolliams: Maybe I could be a little briefer. Was there a discussion concerning the extension of former contracts for the delivery of grain—not the contracts which have been recently signed but former ones—because of the delay in delivery due to recent strikes?

Mr. Winters: The matter never came up for discussion, because I do not think any such question arises.

Mr. Woolliams: Then may I put a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the statement by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and in view of the minister's statement that irreparable damage had been done by the strike, can the minister tell us what is the situation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's questions sound like a cross examination. I suggest that his question is not acceptable.

Mr. Sharp: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member's uncorrected statement could do damage to our commercial interests. I have never made any such statement as attributed to me by the hon. member, and I deny it.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): This is a supplementary question which I wish to address to the Minister of Finance. I also wish to thank him for the information he has just given us respecting the flour content in the wheat contract. Can he tell the house whether some of this flour will be shipped out of west coast ports?

Mr. Sharp: I do not know the answer to that question.

MAINLAND CHINA—DUMPING DUTIES ON IMPORTS UNDER QUOTA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Are imports coming into Canada under an agreed quota subject to dumping duties?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not believe that question is acceptable. The hon. member seems to be asking a question of a very general nature and is perhaps asking for a legal interpretation. Certainly, the way he has phrased the question now, I do not see how it can be asked.

Mr. Mandziuk: May I be more specific. Are dumping duties charged against imports coming in under quota from mainland China, our good wheat customer? I think the Minister of National Revenue or the Minister of Finance is capable of answering that question.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the question may be a little more clear now but I still feel that it cannot be asked at this time.

[Later:]

Mr. Mandziuk: Mr. Speaker, my question deals with a subject previously raised. I was in the right church but in the wrong pew. Rephrasing a question I asked previously, may I ask the Minister of National Revenue whether he would not give consideration to removing dumping duties on goods coming into Canada from mainland China under a certain quota? I have in mind such items as cloth, suiting, or what have you.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think this is a question of general policy, and I doubt whether it should be asked.

Mr. Mandziuk: With all due deference, Mr. Speaker, this is a question of policy. I should like to know about the matter, because I think it is very important. Would the minister not be prepared to answer in view of the fact that we shall be closing shop very soon?

Mr. Speaker: The minister does not appear very anxious.

Mr. Mandziuk: All he has to do is answer yes or no.

OLD AGE SECURITY

INCREASED PENSION ANNOUNCED BY P.E.I. PREMIER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has he given any consideration, following the example of the premier of Prince Edward Island, to relenting somewhat in regard to his position on old age security pensions?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the position taken by the premier of Prince Edward Island is made possible or will be made possible through the provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan.

PUBLIC SERVICE

NATIONAL EMPLOYMENT SERVICE—PROTESTS RESPECTING RECLASSIFICATION OF POSITIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister of manpower having to do with appointments and classifications in the civil service which are causing disruption. With regard to the reclassification of officers of the National Employment Service, would the minister be prepared to make a statement with particular reference to the fact that a situation has been produced whereby employees who have been in the service for years have been informed they do not qualify for new classifications and are required to carry on in the same status as newcomers, who are qualified, but at lower salaries and without the prospect of increases? In other words, they have been placed in a frozen salary bracket. Would the minister explain this?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, a job evaluation within the National Employment Service which began before last January 1 was undertaken under the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission. It was a complete evaluation which covered over 2,500 employees.

According to the reports which I have received so far, I am willing to admit that some mistakes were made and that it will undoubtedly be necessary to correct several evaluations. It is impossible to undertake such a re-evaluation without allowing at the same time a margin of error. When it is completed, a mechanism is then set up which will make it possible to correct the few errors which might have been made during the operation.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: In view of the fact that 700 employees of the N.E.S., one in four, have failed to qualify under the new standards established for the service, would the minister not agree that such a situation is unjust and unfair?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is argumentative.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. My hon. friends opposite apparently do not like any questions asked about the civil service. I am trying to find out what this government is going to do to remove the feeling of uncertainty that exists today. I submit that this is a matter of grave importance. If Your Honour rules that it is not and that the question should go on the order paper, then I suggest to you, sir, that you look at the order paper to see how the government delays answering some of these questions.

Mr. Speaker: I was not suggesting there was no urgency in the matter, because obviously there is. The first question was in order but I was under the impression I ruled that the second question was argumentative in nature.

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF PENSIONS OF RETIRED EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. It is supplementary to one I put to him on Friday, June 17, when he said he would have no objection to giving to the joint committee on the public service a term of reference under which that committee could discuss the pensions of civil servants already retired. May I ask him if he would be willing now to discuss with representatives of each of the parties the possible wording of such a term of reference, so this matter might be settled at an early date.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as soon as the joint committee has dealt with the rather tremendous task it has in front of it, namely the consideration of the bills to implement collective bargaining in the civil service, I would be pleased to discuss such a resolution with representative members of the parties opposite as well as with my cabinet colleagues, whose approval I must obtain before putting such a resolution on the order paper.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask a supplementary question. Even though we accept the fact that this matter cannot be dealt with in the committee until consideration of the bills has been concluded, would the minister not consider discussing the term of reference before that time comes?

Mr. Benson: I am willing to discuss anything at any time, but I am not willing to make any promises.

INQUIRY AS TO SALARY ADJUSTMENTS FOR ADMINISTRATIVE CLASSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Paul Tardif (Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Can the minister tell the house when the announcement of the adjustment of the salaries for class B employees can be expected?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the house last week, the Civil Service Commission has been pressing forward with this particular matter, and consultations are taking place this week with the civil service associations with respect to administrative support categories in group B. I suggest that by the end of this week or the beginning of next week I will have an announcement with respect to the administrative support categories included in this group, and the commission will push forward with all possible haste in dealing with the administrative groups of the category.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? When the minister makes that announcement, will it include a statement with respect to persons who have been red circled, bearing in mind the Prime Minister's assurance that any injustice would be removed?

Mr. Benson: I would not like to forecast what I am going to say in the announcement before I make it.

INDUSTRY

POSSIBLE AGREEMENT WITH U.S. RESPECTING AUTOMOBILE TIRES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Industry if the government is contemplating a free trade agreement with the United States in respect of the manufacture and sale of automobile tires?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, we are exploring, of course, every possible avenue in respect of all possible industries for increasing and promoting trade in both directions.

Mr. Hales: May I ask a supplementary question. Will the minister give the house an opportunity to debate such an agreement?

Mr. Drury: I think that is a hypothetical question, Mr. Speaker.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SPENCE ROYAL COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if he can tell the house whether he has had any communication with Mr. Justice Spence, as to whether we can expect his report at an early date?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. It is not customary to get in touch with royal commissioners in respect of reports which they are preparing.

[Later:]

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister inquired of Mr. Justice Spence when his report will be available or is the story correct that the right hon. gentleman does not want the report until after the house recesses?

Mr. Pearson: No, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Well, the question has been answered.

DIVORCE

REQUEST THAT RECENT BRIEFS BE PROVIDED TO COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister, and concerns the assistance the right hon. gentleman can give to members of this house. Would the Prime Minister have his staff turn over to the special committee on divorce any public briefs or portions thereof presented to the government in recent years on the subject of divorce reform?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to look into that.

FISHERIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—DAMAGE TO SALMON SPAWNING GROUNDS BY LOG RUN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Can the minister give the house any report about the proposal to drive logs on certain salmon spawning streams such as the Owikeno river? I spoke to the minister earlier today about this matter.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, this morning I received a telegram, signed by representatives of a number of organizations, protesting against the driving or towing of logs on the Whannock river. I replied that since facilities for loading and unloading logs had not yet been completed in relation to an access road, I would allow the towing to take place, provided the water gauge read 11 feet, but that it had to be completed by June 30. Since sending that telegram and before coming to the house I received another telegram advising me that the water level on the Whannock river was down to 8½ feet. Under such conditions no towing would be allowed.

Mr. Howard: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister anticipate any objection or reprisal from the provincial government concerned as was the case with respect to the Stellako river?

Mr. Robichaud: That was not the same.

Mr. Howard: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could I ask the minister what were the results of the court hearing in Vancouver with respect to the Stellako river?

Mr. Robichaud: I heard this morning that the hearing which was supposed to take place on Friday had been postponed a second time at the request of the Attorney General of British Columbia.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REPORTED INTENTION TO CLOSE OFFICES IN WESTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): My question is directed to the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker. Would he verify reports that some 40 Unemployment Insurance Commission offices are to be closed this summer in the four western provinces?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I cannot give the exact number, Mr. Speaker, but several offices are being closed later this year. I am glad the question has been asked because it will be recalled that until a very few months ago the work of the National Employment Service was carried on by the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Since a division of responsibility and a reallocation of work has taken place, it is not unreasonable to assume that a number of U.I.C. offices might be closed.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister verify whether in a large number of offices in the Atlantic area claims will be required to be filed by mail rather than people being allowed to file them in the offices where assistance, if necessary, would be available to them?

Mr. Nicholson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, This part of the work has been going on now for the past several months very successfully. It will continue.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Labour is supplementary to the one asked a few moments ago by the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke. Has the minister or his department given any consideration to hearing the opinions, briefs or comments of the communities involved as to the need for the services of unemployment insurance offices during the summer months in those cities and towns where it is intended to withdraw such offices?

Mr. Nicholson: Actually, Mr. Speaker, the Unemployment Insurance Commission is an independent body which is given certain responsibilities by statute. The minister is its spolesman in parliament. The commission, which is an autonomous body, has been considering the matter raised by the hon. member for the past several months and has taken soundings across the country. It has made some decisions. I am sure if there are special circumstances in any particular community, the commission would be willing to reconsider its decision on the fact, in the light of those circumstances.

Mr. Olson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Inasmuch as the Minister of Labour is the minister responsible to parliament for the Unemployment Insurance Commission would he not ask the commission to take into consideration the feelings and opinions of the people involved in those communities where the offices are to be closed?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago letters went out over my signature to members of parliament for ridings affected by this decision of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. I have received few if any suggestions with respect to changes, but I am quite sure that the representations of any hon. member who may have received such a letter will be considered by the commission.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REFUSAL OF B.C. LONGSHOREMEN TO WORK ON VICTORIA DAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Labour. I understood the minister to say last week that he would look into the situation with respect to ten officials of the longshoremen's union in Vancouver and New Westminster who were sentenced to jail terms following their refusal to order their members back to work. Has the minister had time to look into that situation and, if so, can he say something about it?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to correct a statement by a fellow member, but the premise of the hon. member's question is wrong. The learned judge who heard the application directed payment of fines with the alternative of a jail term in each case. My information is that the record shows that the judge not only gave the persons involved the option of paying fines but he also offered to allow time for the ten persons involved to do so if they so wished. That is the position.

With regard to the other part of the question, the officials of my department have looked at the reasons for judgment and the judge's recommendation over the week end and are in touch with the Department of Justice regarding the matter. The Prime Minister or I will have something more to say on the subject within the next day or two.

NATIONAL GALLERY

REPORTED STATEMENT BY SECRETARY OF STATE RESPECTING PICTURE PURCHASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and is prompted by a remark the Secretary of State made yesterday afternoon on a national television program. In view of the minister's statement that she hated to have the purchase of a $6 million picture equated with old age pension payments and in view of the minister's indication that the cost per person in Canada to purchase the picture would be only 36 cents, is it the intention of the government to include in the estimate for the cost of this $6 million purchase the old age pensioners of this country?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I heard that statement on television and I did not draw that conclusion from it at all.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister indicate in what way the conclusion I have drawn is wrong?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I would say it was very wrong.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Am I to take from the Prime Minister's remarks that the old age pensioners are not included and that my interpretation of the minister's statement is wrong? Will not the government give consideration to the old age pensioners rather than purchasing a $6 million painting?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I will get the text of the statement from the C.B.C., and I shall be delighted to send it to my hon. friend.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON SAFETY CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. May I ask the minister whether he will be making an announcement to the house shortly regarding the results of the recent conference in Montreal respecting safety on the St. Lawrence river and manning requirements for ships?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): No, sir.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the drastic effect the lengthy shipping strike in Great Britain is having on commonwealth trade, would the Prime Minister consider offering his good offices to the leader of the Labour party in Great Britain, who is also prime minister of that country, to help settle this shipping strike?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: This question should be placed on the order paper.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will send my hon. friend there.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD ACT

INCREASE IN FUNDS AVAILABLE, EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY, ETC.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Atlantic Development Board Act to increase the aggregate of the amounts that the Minister of Finance may credit to the Atlantic development fund from one hundred million dollars to one hundred and fifty million dollars, to extend the authority of the Atlantic Development Board to undertake projects alone or jointly with provinces or agencies thereof or other persons and to provide that any revenues received by the board from projects undertaken or financed by it may be credited to the said fund and expended for the purposes for which the Fund is established.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure whether the committee feels it would be more convenient to accept the resolution almost without discussion and have the debate in a more formal way on the bill or whether hon. members would desire me to indicate at this stage what the bill is about and have some discussion at this stage in the hope that the second reading stage would be largely a formality.

There are no new principles at all involved in this bill, with one possible exception. I do not know whether one would call it a principle. In the view of the lawyers it was, because it turned out when we got a legal opinion about the present act that it was not possible for the board to do something which we thought the board had the power to do under the legislation as amended in 1963. It was the opinion of the board and it was my opinion as minister, an uninstructed opinion as it turned out, that the board had the power to make expenditures for projects and then either to keep the ownership of those projects or turn them over to some other agency of the federal government. We found out that owing to the peculiar way in which not so much this act but the Public Works Act was phrased, this was not possible in the opinion of the legal advisers of the government.

The act as it now stands envisages grants being made and the crown cannot make a grant to itself. This has not caused any great embarrassment so far, though it has given rise to some minor embarrassments. However, there are some projects in contemplation where it may be desirable to have a project carried out while reserving the title to the government of Canada. It would not be my intention nor my desire to see a project remain with the Atlantic Development Board as long as we could find some appropriate agency to take it over once completed. I think all hon. members would agree that it should not be necessary to turn these works over to a provincial government or a municipality if they come within a field which is more appropriately federal, and we ought to correct this defect. This is the only thing which might, by any stretch of the imagination, be called a new principle.

One effect would be that where certain works undertaken to promote industrial expansion could result in an annual revenue, this revenue could be collected in an appropriate way. This might be the only way of proceeding without giving an unfair competitive advantage to some new industry as compared with an industry already in existence. It will be provided in the bill that in such cases, and they may be rare, any revenues would go back to the fund and be available for further use. This seems a sensible, businesslike arrangement.

The main objective of the proposed bill is to accomplish what the Prime Minister had in mind in October of last year when the question of the probability of the $100 million fund being exhausted fairly soon was raised, that is, to replenish the fund. I should perhaps say a word about the exhaustion of the fund. I do not want hon. members from any other part of Canada to feel that the board has been lavish or extravagant or imprudent or wasteful in the use of this money. I know that members from the Atlantic provinces will not feel so. The $100 million is far from being spent. But most of it has been committed, in some cases to projects which will take a number of years. The board cannot continue the kind of activity in which it has been engaged unless it has more funds to commit, and what we are doing is to replenish the commitment power by $50 million.

Hon. members may ask: Why $50 million? Why not $100 million? Well, there is a feeling that we ought periodically to have an opportunity in this house to review the activities of the board and the state of the fund which does not come under annual review in the same way as the other estimates. We do not want to make commitments which go too far ahead without members of parliament from all parts of Canada having a chance to consider what is being accomplished.

I have made a very serious endeavour as, I think, did the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton, who had the responsibility for the Atlantic Development Board in the beginning, to keep as far away as I can from being a politician. Let me add that I have no apologies for being a politician or acting like one or trying to act like one, and I do not think the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton has, either, but the success of the board depends on dealing with two governments which are of the same political persuasion as ourselves and two which are not, and as far as we can we have tried to keep this activity above party politics and to treat all four provinces alike. I believe we have had a great measure of success in doing so and I am hopeful things will continue that way.

In this context I should like to say that the hon. member for Kings—I see him in his place today—was a member of the Atlantic Development Board before he was elected to parliament. He was appointed by the government of which the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton was a member. His place on the board was continued by legislation at the request of the present government, and I may say he was a most valued member of that board during the time he served on it. I am sure he would echo the view which I am expressing now, that we have tried to think only of one thing, the development of the economy of the Atlantic provinces.

I am very proud of what has already been accomplished. I feel sure, if we continue along the lines we have followed up until now, that all of us in parliament, regardless of what part of Canada we may come from or what political parties we may belong to, will feel that this is a work for which parliament is responsible, that it is helping to build up Canada and helping to create a better balance for a region which for many reasons did not advance as rapidly economically as other parts of Canada. I believe this legislation will give a real stimulus to the region.

Mr. Flemming: Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be brief at this stage. We appreciate the information which the minister has given us in connection with the general aims and objectives of the legislation to follow passage of this resolution. I believe my hon. friend from Kings wishes to make some comments about the resolution. I have no reason to think that they will be extended and I feel certain we can make good progress with the measure because we are almost completely unanimous as to the benefits which will be derived from it.

I feel that the minister's remarks concerning the advisability on occasion of having the federal government undertake certain projects are well-founded. There is no doubt that there are times when for one reason or another, and I do not think it necessary to elaborate, it becomes necessary for the federal government to undertake certain projects through an agency in which it has confidence, and if this amending legislation fills some of the omissions in the original statute no one in the chamber could have any objection to it.

In connection with the Atlantic Development Board I wish to emphasize the question of the initiation of projects. I do not believe that the initiation of projects should always rest with a provincial government or a municipality, but naturally the board, in keeping with the general terms of reference given to it, will work through the medium of the provincial governments to the greatest possible extent, with the general interest in mind of fulfilling a long-felt need in that part of Canada from which the minister and I come.

As I have indicated, my hon. friend from Kings will have some remarks to make. He will bring much knowledge to the committee of the problems that have beset the board, he himself having served on it. No doubt what he has to say will be of great benefit to the Atlantic provinces region and to the activities of the board.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, we in this party are also not disposed to prolong discussion of the resolution. As the minister has told us it contains nothing very new or revolutionary in principle. It simply embodies the extension of legislation of which all parties in the house approved. But since the minister appealed to members who are not resident in the Atlantic provinces to try to become aware of some of the questions and problems besetting that region, I with to say that we in the New Democratic Party are heartily in favour of the Atlantic Development Board because it is an instrument of regional planning.

We believe in regional planning as a vital policy to reduce the inequities and inequalities in income and other standards as between different regions of Canada. We are aware of the chronic absence of equality of opportunity in certain areas. In this connection I would like to refer once again to the 1965 annual report of the Economic Council of Canada. I quoted from it the other day when the hon. member for Queens introduced a resolution dealing with the trade problems of the Atlantic provinces, and I wish to place this on the record again:

> Our analysis has shown that over a period of almost four decades embracing buoyant expansion, a severe depression, a prolonged war and a period of revived national growth, the regional problem in Canada has remained essentially unchanged. Large inter-regional disparities in per capita income have stubbornly persisted despite various forces working towards better balance. These have included significant redistribution of population, far reaching adjustments in the structure of economic activity at the national level, and certain public policies aimed at greater equalization of regional incomes. Against such a background, the narrowing of income disparities and the achievement of this result consistently with other basic economic and social objectives, remains one of the most difficult issues confronting the country as a whole.

All of us should be aware of these matters. I think we must adopt a strategy of what I call redistributive investment. Without some control over the direction of investment and without some planning these disparities will continue to exist.

In this connection, and not because we think the additional $50 million proposed in the resolution is too much but because we feel it may turn out to be inadequate, I want to call the attention of the committee to a few figures covering private and public investment taken from joint publication of the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. These figures show total private and public investment in the Atlantic region as a percentage of the average per capita investment in the rest of Canada.

In 1961 investment in the Atlantic region at the per capita rate was 72.5 per cent of the national average, in 1962 78 per cent, in 1963 72 per cent, in 1964 70.8 per cent, in 1965, 73.1 per cent, with the estimated figure for 1966 being 75 per cent. The actual figures per capita for those years were as follows: In 1961 the average for all of Canada was $448 per capita and in the Atlantic provinces $325. In 1962 the national average was $469 compared with $366 in the Atlantic region; in 1963 the national average was $497 and in the Atlantic region $358. The figures for 1964 were $569 and $403, in 1965 $654 and $478, and in 1966 the estimated figures are $730 for Canada as a whole and $547 in the Atlantic provinces.

There is another figure which I think is very significant and to which I should like to direct the attention of hon. members. I refer to the amount of investment which would be needed in the Atlantic provinces to bring their average up to the average of the rest of Canada. In 1961 the figure would have been $233 million; in 1962, $199 million; in 1963, $271 million; in 1964, $327 million; in 1965, $350 million and in 1966, $365 million. Even taking average figures we have continuing throughout the years a level of investment in which there is a considerable gap between the Atlantic provinces and what would be the average for the rest of Canada. The national average of course includes the Atlantic provinces and therefore the comparative figures I have given do not give a fair comparison between these provinces and others. Nevertheless, the gap rises from approximately $200 million a year to $365 million.

One will say that the $50 million which is asked to be added to the capital of the Atlantic Development Board is but a trifle compared with the regular short-fall, if I may put it that way, of investment. I am informed that just the other day the Voluntary Economic Planning Board—hon. members will know that this is a voluntary board set up by the province of Nova Scotia—met at Truro and in an attempt to estimate the degree of productivity of industry and labour in that province said that it was roughly 75 per cent of the rest of Canada. I am not suggesting one can draw a direct statistical analogy between that figure which after all is only an estimate and the figure of the percentage of actual investment in the region, but I think it is very striking that the figure is roughly 75 per cent of the rest of Canada. I think it is obvious that if we mean business about ironing out these disparities we will have to raise investment in the order at least of the existing disparities in investment in this region.

I am well aware that this will not all be done by public investment. I am aware that the Atlantic Development Board and the federal government are only one instrument in this respect. Many other policies have to be co-ordinated to deal with this problem, but it seems to me that sooner or later in this house we must face the fact that the Atlantic Development Board is charged not only with making investments most of which, as I understand it, hitherto have come in the field of such fairly obvious things as power and transportation, which are fairly obvious needs in what is called the infrastructure.

I think the Atlantic Development Board has done wisely in putting into this field most of the $100 million which has been made available to the board. There is, however, another aspect, namely, a study of what is necessary to promote economic growth. This will require a partnership between public and private investment. If we in this house from all parts of Canada really believe in a redistributive policy or a national policy for the growth of Canada as a whole, we will have to recognize that we will have to assist in investment to a degree which makes the amount set out in the present resolution relatively small and certainly an amount which no one in Canada should begrudge at all.

I think the minister explained that the bill will include the right of direct investment. I certainly am happy to agree with this because it gives a greater freedom in certain circumstances. We in this party take seriously a national policy in respect of the redistributive development of Canada and the ironing out of the inequalities which have persisted in the past. Naturally we will support the resolution.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, just a few words. First of all I wish to congratulate the minister for introducing that resolution.

The minister was hoping a little earlier that the debate on the resolution would not go on forever. That is exactly what I always hoped, for every resolution, because with only what is said in the resolution, we do not have enough information to discuss it and decide if we are for or against it.

The minister said earlier that $50 million for the Atlantic Development Board probably was not much. I was a little surprised to hear him say: it is not that the board has run out of money but to increase the funds at its disposal to fulfill a promise made to the board. I was wondering if it was only to fulfil an election promise or to strengthen that fund in order to do something for the economy of the Atlantic provinces.

If it is for the second reason, I am all in favour of strengthening the economy of the Atlantic provinces and trying to increase their standard of living.

Therefore, I feel that the introduction of the bill is our best opportunity to study the work done by those boards. As far as my province is concerned, I found out to my great surprise, when studying the operations of those boards, that most of the funds were spent on unnecessary studies when it would have been so easy to concretize wonderful projects if the money had been saved for that purpose.

I think that it is what you are doing in the Atlantic provinces; namely concretizing projects which are already under way; that is why I am in favour of that resolution. When the bill is submitted to the house, we will have the opportunity to see what was done with the money already spent—over 50 per cent of it has undoubtedly been spent—since we are asked for another $50 million.

We are anxious to see what was done, what the government or the board has accomplished; then we will be able to appreciate what is being accomplished in the Atlantic provinces.

We are also in favour of helping the provinces because we want to help our people. It is very commendable to help foreign countries but I still prefer to see a few millions spent in the provinces to help them also. It is good to hear when travelling outside Canada that our country is wealthy, and that from countries which receive gifts from Canada. I can assure you that the Atlantic provinces, when they get that money, that help from the federal government to strengthen their economy will love their country more and will feel even closer ties with the other provinces. It is the same in all the provinces. That is how the work of the federal government in the province of Quebec is considered. When it is time, in the province of Quebec, to have assistance from the federal government—we need it also—we want it proportionately to the population.

The previous speaker said: $50 million may not be much. But we must keep in mind that the population of the Atlantic provinces is less than that of the other provinces, than that of the province of Quebec.

For instance, when taxes are levied, they are first levied in the provinces with a greater manpower; these are the ones which provide funds to the federal government. If we want to redistribute those funds fairly, we must think, first of all of those which paid and then of those which need assistance, without being unfair toward the provinces which supplied the money to these funds.

I think that the minister will be highly considered if such resolutions are introduced in favour of the province of Quebec, because I am sure he is aware of the economic situation of Quebec and knows that it needs federal assistance also. We hope this assistance to other provinces will be given proportionately to the needy population in every province of Canada.

• (4:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. McQuaid: Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to support this resolution because I am convinced that the establishment of the Atlantic Development Board in January of 1963 was without doubt one of the most progressive steps that has ever been taken by any government for the benefit of the Atlantic provinces.

The objectives of the board are clearly defined in the act which established it and I should like to quote from subsection 1 of section 9 of the Atlantic Development Board Act:

> The objects of the board are to inquire into and report to the minister upon programs and projects for fostering the economic growth and development of the Atlantic region of Canada.

I think the words, "fostering the economic growth and development of the Atlantic region of Canada", should be stressed because our economic growth in the Atlantic area has lagged behind the rest of Canada. In my opinion the reasons for this lag are three and may be classified as follows. First of all, in the Atlantic region there are none of the great factors which ordinarily make for economic growth or if these factors are present they are not present in a sufficient degree to provide a stimulus to our economy. Second, we have no rich natural resources or if we have them they have not yet been sufficiently explored and exploited. I think one of the chief aims of the Atlantic Development Board is to explore and exploit whatever natural resources we do have. The third reason we have lagged behind is our geographic position. We are more or less located on the periphery so far as our markets in Canada are concerned. The high cost of transporting raw materials in and finished products out puts the Atlantic area at a considerable disadvantage. Unfortunately we are shut out of some foreign markets located closer to us because of high tariffs.

I think the chairman of the Economic Council of Canada has set out very clearly the economic position of the Atlantic area and I should like to quote what he said in this regard:

> For at least four decades the residents of this region have had the lowest average incomes in Canada and although they have shared in the general improvement in living standards they have not been able to improve their lagging position relative to other Canadians.

That very clearly sets forth our position in the Atlantic area today and statistics bear out that statement. In the Atlantic area unemployment has been consistently twice as high as in any other part of the country. Even today the unemployment rate, according to the latest figures of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics for the month of May, is still 5.8 per cent whereas in the prairie provinces it is 2.1 per cent. Nowhere else in Canada did the figure for the month of May reach 5.8 per cent.

The average per capita income in the Atlantic area is consistently at least one-third lower than in other provinces. I do not know whether the committee realizes this fact, but in the Atlantic area there are 40,000 male employees earning less than $2,000 per year and over 19,000 female employees earning less than $2,000 per year. In other words, we have a total of almost 60,000 employees who are today earning less than $2,000 per year, and I do not think anybody will deny that in order to maintain an adequate standard of living an individual must earn more than $2,000 a year. The average annual wage of the people working in the Atlantic area is only $2,752 compared with the average annual wage for Canada of $3,679.

The hon. member who preceded me suggested that the money to be provided to the Atlantic Development Board should be divided on a basis related to contribution and that if the Atlantic provinces are not contributing their fair share to the national revenue by way of taxes they should not expect to get as much by way of assistance. In my mind that is a very fallacious argument because we in the Atlantic area are a part of Canada, and if this country is going to have an economy that will flourish it cannot expect to maintain such great inequities between sections of the country. Our growth and economic problems in the Atlantic area must be the concern of every province and must be the concern of the federal government.

As Professor Cairncross said in 1961, "the federal government must be the principal agent of policies to eliminate the lag in the economic development of the Atlantic provinces". If we do not contribute our share, and I am not suggesting we do not, the only reason is that we do not earn enough.

The figures I have quoted I am sure would indicate to hon. members that we in the Atlantic provinces on an average earn only enough to provide essential public services. I am one of the first to admit that we are very dependent upon the central government in Ottawa. In my own province of Prince Edward Island 43 per cent of the general revenue comes from Ottawa. In the province of Nova Scotia 35 per cent of its general revenue comes from the central government in Ottawa and in the province of New Brunswick 35 per cent also comes from Ottawa.

We are not ashamed of this fact because we feel that the reason the central government must contribute to us is that we do not have the opportunity of earning enough so that we can, as we would be glad to do, pay our share in income tax and other taxes to the federal treasury. In New Brunswick the average per capita tax paid to the federal treasury is $55, in Newfoundland it is $45, in Nova Scotia it is $62 and in Prince Edward Island it is only 36. That will give the committee an idea of how badly we need something down there to boost our economy so our people can earn enough money to make their contribution to the government of Canada. But until that period is reached there has to be a gap filler. There is a gap between what we in the Atlantic area earn and what is earned by people in the other provinces of Canada, and that gap must be closed. I suggest that one of the vehicles designed to close it and, if it is given the chance, one of the vehicles that will close it, is the Atlantic Development Board.

The minister mentioned the fact that the board is set up without relation to political affilation. I can substantiate this, Mr. Chairman. The board is comprised at the present time of good, solid-thinking, hard-headed businessmen who know the problems of the Atlantic area and are doing their best to solve them without receiving any remuneration at all. This is probably one of the few boards operated by the federal government whose members do not receive some daily remuneration for the time they sit.

The members of this board get nothing. They get their travelling expenses, but my experience with the board is that the red pencil is used very generously when it comes to allowing even these travelling expenses. However, this is not the important consideration. The important consideration is that the board is composed of men who know the problems of the Atlantic area and have the interests of the area at heart. Mr. MacKeigan has proved himself to be a very efficient chairman. The staff of the board, headed by Dr. Weeks, is very competent and is doing an extremely good job.

But I would point out, and I am not doing this in a critical way, that in spite of their efforts there has unfortunately been little improvement. Perhaps we have not yet had time to see the improvement. But if we examine the record I think we will see that, despite the good intentions of the government in setting up the board and giving it 100 million to work with, despite the good intentions of the members of the board and the staff, there has as yet been little improvement in so far as the economy of the Atlantic area is concerned. Although the spirit is willing, the results so far have been weak. I hope our development will speed up, because if the speed of Atlantic development continues at its present rate I am afraid that success will be deferred until the days of our grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

I am not satisfied that $50 million is enough at the present time to put into the fund. In April, 1963, $100 million was put into the fund. It is now almost three years later and the minister tells us that the fund is just about exhausted. I suggest that that statement could be verified, because I believe that in April, 1965, 14 months ago, $90 million of the $100 million had been committed. If that is correct, and I believe it is, the board has been working with only $10 million for the last 14 months.

When the fund was set up by the present government is was mentioned consistently on that side of the house that $1 billion over a ten-year period was no more than sufficient to be poured into the Atlantic area to assist its economy. If $1 billion over a ten-year period was necessary, which is $100 million a year, I suggest that the minister should give consideration now to increasing to $100 million the $50 million for which he is asking in this resolution, because I am sure the board will make the very best use of the $100 million.

Of course, and rightly so, expenditures are controlled by Treasury Board. The Atlantic Development Board may recommend the expenditure of $1 million of $2 million for a certain project but—and I repeat, rightly so—that expenditure has to be approved by Treasury Board. If we put another $100 million in the fund now I think it would give the members of the board more incentive to go ahead and plan immediately, as they obviously must do if we are to fill the gap that exists between the economic standards of the Atlantic area and those of the rest of Canada. I make these suggestions in all earnestness, Mr. Chairman, and again would assure the committee that in my opinion at least this board is doing a very excellent job for the Atlantic area. We in the Atlantic region are extremely grateful to the government which set up this board in the first instance and to the government which is now encouraging and promoting it.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, when a measure like this was before a previous parliament I spoke on all phases of the measure including third reading. This time I will be much less loquacious. I merely want to say—I am glad my colleague from Kings said it in his excellent speech—that while I join with the sentiments expressed by members from the various parties, I cannot in candour suggest that I feel the $50 million is in any way an adequate amount. We surely have no difficulty in being convinced that the painful economic lag which has characterized the relationship of the Atlantic region to the rest of Canada is becoming more painful, that the gap is not in fact being narrowed. There are many economic indices which make this all too clear. The outstanding documentation of recent months, of course, is the second annual review of the Economic Council of Canada.

In the face of widening disparity and against the background of the expenditure or allocation of the $100 million which was earmarked before, I am unhappy about the designation of an amount of $50 million. I noted carefully what the minister said about the frequent return of this measure to parliament but I cannot believe that now the Atlantic Development Board has been launched on its way, changes have been made in its personnel and experience has been gained by its officers—and I join with my colleague from Kings in saluting its officers because Dr. Weeks and others are most excellent men—and with the background of the board's proven efficiency in the face of the growing need for assistance in the Atlantic area, $50 million is sufficient. I would be much happier had there been allocated the first amount earmarked when the present government took office. We did not fix ceilings on the amount at all in our day.

I think the minister is anxious to have the measure proceed through this stage and we all sympathize with that desire. I should be interested in hearing him illustrate for us a typical project which might, in the words of the resolution, be "undertaken or financed" by the board. I have been trying to think of some projects which might conceivably come under the terminology of the last two and a half lines of the resolution. I must reiterate my belief that $50 million is not sufficient. You cannot redress the economic grievances of generations by $50 million and heaven knows there have been grievances in so far as the Atlantic provinces are concerned. I hope that the minister will not say to me again that my affluence is such that I sneer at $1 million, because I would never join those who say "what's a million?". A million dollars is a good deal of money but it is not so much if used to alleviate great problems and the longstanding inequities of our region. I do wish the amount had been $100 million and I hope that this comparatively small figure will not act as a depressant in our region.

The establishment of the board and various other projects which were undertaken, especiallly in 1957 and 1958, have done a good deal of stimulate that which is essential to our prosperity, namely, vigorous self-activity in the economic field. Fine things have been done by the provincial administrations and the boards they have set up. However, I know they would all agree that the action of the federal government, the body which must be concerned about equalizing the economic opportunities of all regions, has given them a great start. I hope that this diminution of the figure will not depress those who in the region itself are moving forward vigourously in concert toward our continuing progress. As my hon. friend from Kings has said, this requires the sustained effort of all of us at all levels of the government as well as of the private sector of our economy. I wish that the main contributor could have been a little more—I will not use the word beneficent—generous in the amount apportioned to the fund.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think I should say a word or two mainly in response to the hon. member for Queens. In the first place, I am sure that he did not deliberately say there was a diminution because when you add $50 million to $100 million this is not my idea of a diminution. This sum will amount to a 50 per cent increase after three years. I will refrain from any comment about the amount of the increase over the fund at the time when this bill was originally introduced.

Mr. Flemming: There was no limit.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is no limit to zero, as the hon. gentleman so wisely said. However, I do not wish to get into any kind of controversy on this matter. We took the view that there should be a fund and that if it was wisely used we would come back to parliament and ask for a replenishment.

I think hon. members will agree I have taken a very keen interest in the work of the board and I am sure the hon. member for Kings will agree with me when I say that while he was a member of the board no project that was at any time put before the board was turned down because of lack of funds, although a lot of projects did not seem to the board to be wise or expedient for other reasons at the moment they were put before it. I hope that the $50 million will be committed very quickly. If it is, then, as we have twice shown to the house, we will see that a recommendation is made for a further replenishment.

I was very glad to hear the hon. member for Kings use the phrase "a gap filler" because I think I was the one who first used it. It has been my principle, as the minister responsible, to ensure that the Atlantic Development Board should never be allowed to spend a cent which could be made available from another agency. Mention has been made of $1 billion to be spent over a ten-year period. That was surely never envisaged as the amount to be granted from the Atlantic Development Board but was to include all expenditures such as, for example, the causeway to Prince Edward Island. I might say that another $30 million has already been committed by the Federal government for the development of trunk roads in the Atlantic provinces under the direct supervision of the board but not with the board's funds. That was done since the commitment of the $100 million and before this addition of $50 million.

Even in these days when we are faced with such staggering sums, this amount represents very large expenditures. I cannot entirely agree with the hon. member for Kings that we are not beginning to see some benefit. It is true that some of the projects which have been assisted by grants from the fund are only beginning to come into the stage at which they will appreciably add to the economy of the Atlantic provinces but I am absolutely convinced that as we improve transportation and make power cheaper and more accessible, together with the benefits brought about by the industrial sites that the board have so wisely established in all of the Atlantic provinces, we are going to have great dividends in the next three or four years.

I will resist the temptation to say that we should all take a new look at the whole question of transportation which, although it is a liability in some respects, is rapidly becoming an asset because the whole orientation of the international traffic is beginning to change and, oddly enough, it is the St. Lawrence Seaway which is changing it most through the increasing of trans-shipments which it presents. I predict, with quite a lot of confidence, that the ports of the Atlantic provinces, not just the ports of Halifax and Saint John, will in general see a tremendous development as industrial sites precisely because they will enjoy in this air age and this age of monster ships advantages which they have not had for a long time.

However, all this is a very large subject which is not very directly related to this resolution. Let me conclude by expressing my appreciation to all the hon. members who have spoken for the constructive way in which they have approached this resolution.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, it was not my intention to say anything but having noted that the Minister of Transport did not wish to be controversial I find that if he really wanted his wishes to be realized he could do so by ceasing to delude himself that in some connections he is speaking logically. I am now speaking of his reference to the amount of the fund. It is true that this is a means of financing but it is not realistic for him to say that because in the original act this method was not used the board had zero funds. It that were his logic he would find himself without any department to administer because his own department certainly has no funds. The money has to be voted annually. There is no great impediment to any emanation of the government being operated in the same fashion as the original concept of the Atlantic Development Board.

It could be argued that the present method might be an improvement. I am not going to argue about that, but it is not a case of something wholly good replacing something that was wholly bad or at least completely impotent as the minister, perhaps unintentionally, left the impression. It may be that he used phraseology of the kind he did because it was used so frequently for political purposes on different occasions.

Having said that, I do want to correct one impression that might have been inadvertently left by numerous spokemen for the various parties regarding the unsatisfactory economic situation of the Atlantic provinces compared with the rest of Canada. I am not saying that the Atlantic provinces are not a good area in which to live or that they are not an area in which there are great opportunities for the future. I believe there are.

More important, it is natural to assume that the economic disadvantages of the Atlantic provinces as they now exist are all caused by an act of God and are therefore something over which man has no control. Many of our disadvantages are man-made. We have suffered under them because we have on many occasions forfeited our own immediate selfish desires for the good of the nation as a whole. Many of the economic difficulties of the maritime provinces compared with the rest of Canada are similar to the economic problems we have as a small nation next to a giant ten times as big as we are. The bigger the economic unit the greater is its attraction for investment capital and for everthing else.

Every year great quantities of money are drawn off from the Atlantic provinces by quite legitimate means by large insurance companies, for example, which have their headquarters in another part of Canada. When it comes to the reinvestment of this money the larger unit in some other part of Canada, which perhaps has even greater natural resources or greater markets, quite often attracts this money.

This is the type of difficulty against which we are struggling. We are on the periphery of the geographically huge nation of which we are proud to be a part. We have continued to be loyal to the concept of a nation from sea to sea because we believe that in the long run it will be of the greatest benefit to all Canadians. However, we would like to share in it as nearly equally as possible. This is a worthy method of bringing about something approaching equality and I support it wholeheartedly. Like my colleague, the hon. member for Queens who has just spoken, I should like to see the ceiling raised another $50 million—a rolling ceiling if that is what you want to call it— so that the fund will not be depressed and so that not only the cumulative total will grow but that the ceiling under which the board will operate will remain at at least $100 million.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Pickersgill thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-213, to amend the Atlantic Development Board Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): When shall the said bill be read the second time?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if there might be agreement, if it were convenient and after members have had an opportunity of looking at the bill, to consider second reading later this day or at the next sitting?

Mr. Starr: Provided the bill is distributed some time before that.

Mr. Pickersgill: If there was any objection we would not proceed but we would be in a position to do so if there were agreement.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Minister of Finance was asked to leave for a few minutes to meet the parliamentary delegation from the Soviet Union. I have the Canadian National Railway bill relating to two branch lines and if it is agreeable to the house I could proceed with it while we are waiting for the Minister of Finance to return.

Mr. Starr: Agreed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF BRANCH LINES IN WEST

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-210, respecting the construction by Canadian National Railway Company of a line of railway in the province of Manitoba from the vicinity of Stall Lake on the Chisel Lake subdivision of Canadian National Railways in a north-easterly direction for a distance of approximately 12 miles to a point in the vicinity of Osborne Lake in the The Pas mining district of that province, and of a line of railway in the province of Saskatchewan from the vicinity of Watrous on the Watrous subdivision of the said railways in a northeasterly direction for a distance of approximately 18 miles to a point in the vicinity of Guernsey in the Regina mining district of that province.

He said: Do hon. members want any explanation? I would be happy to give it.

Mr. Knowles: You can give the explanation in committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps the minister would now give us the explanation about these two branch lines.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: Are you calling clause 2, Mr. Chairman?

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Knowles: Why not call clause 1? It is not the short title.

Canadian National Railways

On clause 1—Definitions.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, the general explanation was given by my hon. friend, the Minister without Portfolio, the other day. At that time he said that either he or I, as circumstances warranted, would fill in the details of these two branch lines that this bill is asking parliament to authorize. I have a fairly succinct summary of the matter in my hand dealing with each of the lines. Perhaps the best way of dealing with this matter is for me simply to read the summary because, being produced by professionals, it is probably in better language than my own would be. With this modest beginning I shall now read.

Mr. Knowles: Are you not a professional?

Mr. Pickersgill: Not a professional railway builder. Perhaps a professional builder—

Mr. Starr: Get on with the reading.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is not building fences.

Mr. Pickersgill: There was a politician once who described himself as a cabinet builder.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will start with Saskatchewan, with deference to the Leader of the Opposition. The President of the Canadian National Railway Company has requested authorization for the construction of a branch line in the province of Saskatchewan from the vicinity of Watrous on the Watrous subdivision of the Canadian National Railways in a northeasterly direction for a distance of approximately 18 miles to the site of the shaft and processing plant of Alwinsal Potash of Canada Limited, situated in the mining district of Regina. The proposed branch line would, as I say, begin at or near Watrous at mile 129 and proceed for 18 miles as I have indicated. The estimated cost of construction of the proposed branch line is $100,000 per mile or a total of $1,800,000.

Exploratory drilling on Alwinsal's property since 1958 has established the presence of deposits of potash that will support production for many decades at the designed capacity of the company's plant. Alwinsal is currently in the process of sinking a shaft 18 feet in diameter to a depth of 3,290 feet and constructing a processing plant which will have a productive capacity of about 1 million tons of muriate of potash per year. The company plans to begin production early in 1968 and has asked the Canadian National Railways to be in a position to furnish rail service by that time. Although the plant site is connected to the Canadian Pacific Railway by a short spur, Alwinsal has requested Canadian National Railways to construct a branch line to its property in order that it will have the safeguard of service by two railways and will not be at a transportation disadvantage vis-à-vis its competitors.

If parliamentary authority is granted by about the end of July, 1966, construction could begin this year. That is the reason I have asked my colleagues to agree and why the house leader asked hon. gentlemen opposite to agree to having this measure brought in at this time. Apart from unforeseen events the branch line would be available for traffic early in 1968.

Alwinsal is planning to ship annually about 1 million tons of muriate of potash, which the company expects will be marketed in roughly equal proportions in the Great Lakes and northeastern regions of the United States and in certain Pacific areas of Asia. Movement over Canadian National lines of half of Alwinsal's planned production would generate annual gross revenue for Canadian National Railways of at least $4,500,000.

Subject to authorization by parliament of the proposed branch line, a traffic guarantee agreement has been entered into between Alwinsal Potash Company of Canada Limited and the Canadian National Railway Company. I do not propose to go into details but the agreement does provide for revenues which will make this a very profitable venture for the Canadian National. It is for that reason that this request is being made at this time so far as that branch line is concerned.

The other line is in Manitoba and is to run from the vicinity of Stall Lake on the Chisel Lake subdivision of Canadian National Railways in a northeasterly direction for a distance of approximately 12 miles to Osborne Lake and to the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company mine. The estimated cost of construction of the proposed branch line is $133,333 per mile or a total of $1,600,000. During the past few years diamond drilling and development by Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company showed that there were substantial reserves of copper and zinc in the area which at the end of 1965 were shown to exist to a depth of 2,200 feet.

There are many other details of these resources which I could go into if the committee wishes. The indications are similar to those in the other case, namely, that there would be a guarantee of traffic for a long enough period of years to make this also a profitable venture which would contribute to the revenues of the Canadian National in a significant fashion and which would therefore be a profitable venture.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, when the minister referred to the line in Saskatchewan he gave exact figures of revenues anticipated per year. Does he not propose doing that in this case?

Mr. Pickersgill: I was just coming to that point. Perhaps I could give first the time required for the construction of the line. It could be ready by December 31 if there is authorization by the end of July. The annual movement from the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting plant at a minimum would be 270,000 tons of crude ore. Movement of this crude ore would generate revenues for the Canadian National of $737,000 per year. As I have said, because of the traffic guarantee which will become operative if parliament approves this legislation there would be a very substantial advantage to the company.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, this is one occasion in which the opposition can join in giving complete support to the propositions advanced by the Minister of Transport. The particular area where the projected 18 miles of rail line is to be constructed in the province of Saskatchewan is well known to me. It is an area which a few years ago was not regarded as hopefully from the point of view of development as some other parts of the province.

It has been found during the last two or three years that in various parts of Saskatchewan the actual hidden wealth in potash is even beyond the greatest scope of imagination. I well recall as a boy on the prairies that in the area in which we lived there were what were called alkali lakes. This alkali produced nothing. The areas that have alkali characteristics were believed to be devoid of any development potential. Certainly agricultural production could never take place where alkali was shown to exist.

There was an area in Muskakee next to Watrous where for a number of years an eastern manufacturer from Kitchener produced certain minerals. Other than that, there was nothing expected or anticipated in this area and others where alkali was to be found in the sloughs. Today the province of Saskatchewan is rapidly approaching a development which will bring to that province a production equal to wheat production in the years ahead, a production beyond anything that could have been expected. Railroad lines of this kind will receive the fullest support from Her Majesty's opposition.

In saying this I want to point out too that the projected line in the province of Manitoba goes into an area which will pay dividends not only in economic development but also by assuring a fair return on the money invested. We gave leadership in this connection. We were criticized very strongly when we made available to the C.N.R. the necessary guarantee of parliament prior to the building of the Pine Point Railway. I do not intend to deal with this at the moment except to say that it was criticized and ridiculed as part of what was known as my vision for development.

That vision has been proven to be well-founded. Indeed, I hope that not only will assistance be given to the C.N.R. to build railway spurs or lines of the kind in question but that the government will also give favourable consideration to an expansion of the northern roads plan which has gone into cold storage under this administration. The northern roads plan opened up areas of the provinces which would otherwise have remained undeveloped. In the Yukon and the Northwest Territories the northern roads plan made possible mineral developments which would otherwise have been postponed.

The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources was not here during the days when some of those who sit opposite ridiculed the whole idea. But he has become a convert and, having become a convert, he has gone forth and actually secured support among those ministers who a few short years ago in opposition regarded the whole proposition as an ephemeral dream. We welcome the conversion. We support the fruit of that conversion.

Mr. Laing: Our conversion is from walking to running.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I did not hear that remark.

Mr. Starr: He says he has been converted from running to walking.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: A misinterpretation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It must have been a difficult task for him, bearing in mind the indifferent material with which he had to operate, to bring about the conversion of many ministers who had earlier ridiculed the whole idea.

Today the hon. member for Davenport and the hon. member for Outremont-Saint-Jean are also engaged in a program of conversion. I noticed today that the Minister of Finance has begun to show signs that his malleability has been dented. When crusaders like those two hon. gentlemen, the former minister of finance and the former secretary of state, go to work on behalf of great principles and the abiding things in which they believe, there is always hope. I look forward to finding, when the banking legislation comes before the house, that the immovability of the Minister of Finance will prove to have been merely the stand of one who, to adopt the Prime Minister's exression, has been fighting a sham battle against the certainty and thoughtfulness of two hon. gentlemen who, come what may, like Roderick Dhu, stand firm upon this rock.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the right hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, surely.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the right hon. gentleman saying that our two colleagues are visionaries in the same sense as he is?

Mr. Diefenbaker: If they have achieved the objective of their vision as successfully as we did, we know now what will be in the Bank Act. In other words, this has been an amazing transition. I can just see St. Paul looking down from above on the Minister of Finance and saying: Up to the present my conversion has been regarded as the greatest change of opinion of all time but now I must give first place to the Minister of Finance.

I say this, Mr. Chairman, as an example of what can be achieved. I was very surprised to hear the Prime Minister today refer to the stand of those who have stood so firmly and who have been supported so generally by the Minister of Finance as a sham fight. One wonders who is conducting the sham. But the Prime Minister did not complete his answer today. I use this simply as an example of what is happening.

Having stood so firmly when in opposition against the type of expenditure which would open these areas for mineral development, the Minister of Transport now becomes a proponent of action about which he expressed grave doubts when we were in office. I only hope this will be a prelude to his introducing a national transportation policy. I believe he is giving a great deal of thought to this subject. I am told his hours are now spent in contemplation of legislation designed to bring about a national transportation policy and I wish him all good fortune in that direction. I hope that the fight he is now waging on that behalf will not be described by the Prime Minister a year or two from now as having been a sham fight.

Mr. Knowles: In the first part of his speech, before the Leader of the Opposition got shunted off onto a branch line—

An hon. Member: Off the rails.

Mr. Starr: He threw the switch himself.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles: —he spoke as a member from Saskatchewan. He did so, noting that one of the branch lines we are being asked to approve takes into account the developments occurring in Saskatchewan, particularly with respect to potash. Perhaps I might be given a moment or two, as a member from Manitoba, to welcome the branch line being approved for my province and in doing so to follow suit to the Leader of the Opposition, but not too far. I am not going to get into the theological discussion he indulged in but I do wish to say that the branch line in Manitoba draws attention to the tremendous mineral developments taking place in the northern half of my province.

For many decades Manitoba's north was looked upon as a huge area supposedly desolate and waste, but now tremendous discoveries are being made of copper, zinc, nickel, gold and other metals. This is good for Manitoba and good for Canada. If, like the Leader of the Opposition, I felt like wandering off onto a branch line or two, I could argue about the methods being used to develop this mineral wealth, whether it should primarily be for the benefit of certain private corporations or for the benefit of the people of Manitoba, but that question is being fought in Manitoba at the present time.

When I first saw that the minister was going to move second reading of this bill today I wondered if it had any political purpose. Then I realized it could not possibly have any such purpose because the Manitoba line does not go into the Churchill constituency, where one more seat has yet to be decided in the provincial election, and even if it did go in there the Liberals do not have a candidate in that constituency.

Mr. Pickersgill: You needn't rub that in.

Mr. Knowles: The minister does not like me to remind him that his party's candidate did not file his papers, or forgot to be there. At any rate, for once the Minister of Transport is as pure as driven snow.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why do you say for once?

Mr. Knowles: Seriously, I am glad to have this opportunity to draw attention to the tremendous resources of wealth in northern Manitoba and to express our support for the bill.

Mr. Cantelon: Mr. Chairman, as a Saskatchewan member I would like to contribute to this debate. In the first part of his speech the Leader of the Opposition clearly delineated the advantages that this branch line will bring to Saskatchewan, and of course I agree with him. But the construction of this branch line will give the railway system itself a great advantage that should be brought to the attention of the minister and everyone else. The $4½ million yearly revenue that the railway will get will certainly help to change the profit picture of the C.N.R., but I did not hear the minister say whether the contract was for a specified time. Perhaps I missed that part of his speech.

I would like to point out that at present there is much talk about the construction of pipe lines to transport solids such as potash and sulphur. This scares me. It frightens me because such a development could practically ruin the advantage which the railways presently enjoy in Saskatchewan.

If such pipe lines are constructed the advantages which the railways are obtaining will be lost and they will be left in a most invidious position because of the extra expense they are being put to in undertaking the construction of these branch lines. Therefore I suggest that the government give the closest possible scrutiny to all suggestions concerning the construction of pipe lines in that area.

I may say I find this rather foreign to my own attitude toward scientific research. I am very much in favour of scientific research in every respect, but if pipe lines are put into operation the potash will be moved to the Chicago area, and once it starts going there in quantity the tremendous chemical products development which can clearly be foreseen in Saskatchewan will be lost to the province. I would just like to give that word of warning.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to assure the hon. gentleman that the contract is for 15 years, long enough to obviate the contingency he has suggested because it is a firm contract with a company that has a proven mine.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Mr. Chairman, it would appear that there is unanimity about this bill. One thing it pinpoints is the importance of the railroads in transporting bulk material. This is something we must think about when considering railway line abandonment.

Further, in view of the remarks made by the hon. member for Kindersley I should like to point out that we seem to be adopting a new principle so far as railway bills are concerned. If I remember correctly, most bills of this type are sent to a standing committee where all those who wish can interrogate the minister and his officials and those promoting the railway line have an opportunity to give all the necessary information in connection with it. At committee hearings provincial governments can also make representations and so can competing railroads. I hope this practice will not be adopted with respect to all other bills of this type.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am very glad that the hon. gentleman made his intervention because what he said is very wise. Twice this session this procedure has been adopted because of the pressure of other business and because of the urgency of getting certain projects under way about which there seemed to be almost complete unanimity. But I can assure the hon. member I would not think of doing this in the case of a project about which there was controversy. Any such case should go to the standing committee and be thoroughly examined there. I speak for the government in saying that this is our view. It is only in exceptional circumstances, when a case seems so clearcut, that we would think of not referring such a bill to a committee.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Did the minister intimate that the C.P.R. already has a branch line running into this particular area?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, that was indicated, and the mining company has agreed to divide its business 50-50 between them.

Mr. Knowles: That is just in the Saskatchewan case.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, the C.P.R. is not in northern Manitoba at all.

FINANCE

PROVISION FOR PAYMENT TO PROVINCES OF CERTAIN CORPORATION INCOME TAX

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-211, to authorize the Minister of Finance to transfer to the provinces the proportions of the income tax payable by certain public utility companies.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have read the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) at the resolution stage of this bill and I must confess I do not find any very compelling argument in it to support the policy the government is pursuing beyond the argument perhaps that they have succumbed again to having their arms twisted by powerful provincial governments. So far as I know, in my own province of British Columbia there is only one sizeable privately owned electric power installation, the West Kootenay Light and Power Company. It is a subsidiary of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company which in turn is a subsidiary of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, not an organization which one would have thought would require any particular financial help at this stage in the game.

Gas is another question and I think it is the reason this whole thing is so serious. I do not think there is much doubt that those provinces which have not yet advanced so far in the field of public ownership and operation of electrical power generation and utilization, having regard to other provinces in Canada, will eventually follow suit with the other provinces and that therefore the question of the application of this act to electric power companies probably will become an academic one. But it is not academic in the case of gas producing industries, virtually all of which I believe are still under private ownership.

After almost 20 years in which the rebate has stood at 50 per cent—it was brought about, as the minister pointed out the other day, as part of the dominion-provincial tax rental agreements and was opposed, I may say, by many in the provincial legislatures at that time—I am at a loss to understand why it now is being increased to 95 per cent. According to the minister, the argument that was put up to the federal government by the provincial governments was that private enterprise was being left at a disadvantage vis-à-vis public enterprise. I should like to point out to you, sir, as I said, that I think in all the provinces all the way from my province to the province of Quebec the generation and distribution of electric power is in public hands and therefore the question of private enterprise being placed at a disadvantage is largely academic. On the other hand, gas companies almost all are privately owned, with unfortunately very little public ownership in that field.

The suggestion which apparently was made by some of the provincial governments that this worked a hardship not only on the privately owned utilities themselves but also on their customers would have more force if there was some provision in this legislation to make sure that the customers would benefit. It would appear that the federal government is going to remit this money to the provincial governments and that is all, and we do not know what will happen to it after that. The provincial governments may remit it in whole or in part to those particular companies whose taxes have been remitted. It may perhaps take some measure to see that the customers benefit from this but there is no provision for that in this particular measure.

Without being unduly cynical I would suggest it is rather a broken reed to lean on if we imagine the provincial governments will have very much concern about the welfare of the customers. I have in mind again my own province where the provincial government now has control of a vast majority of the generation and distribution of electric power. We have had innumerable promises from the provincial government that the rates would be lowered. They were lowered by a very small amount a year or two ago but nothing commensurate with the savings the provincial government had made by the elimination of the corporation income tax in the operation of these concerns. I would suspect this will happen again.

While the present situation in the electric power industry means that this bill will have very little significance with regard to transfer of funds from federal to provincial hands, nevertheless with regard to gas it probably will be quite significant. Even more important than that, however, is that it seems to me it is setting a rather dangerous precedent. If we are to make this rebate on behalf of gas and electric power, why do we stop there? What is to prevent us continuing the process into other fields which also rely on the use of natural resources? I have in mind my own province of British Columbia where our largest industry is totally dependent on a natural resource. I am speaking of the forest products industry with its related industries of pulp and paper, lumber and plywood. If the provinces are to receive a rebate on behalf of the electric and gas companies, what is to prevent them being granted a rebate on what the lumber companies have paid? Perhaps they should have a portion of that.

It seems to me that in this way we will continue the process of erosion of federal control over the economy which has been a feature in Ottawa in the last several years, a dangerous trend which will lead to still more trouble in the future than in the past, particularly when we take into consideration that these companies have had and are still enjoying tax concessions. As the minister pointed out, some 2 per cent less than the general rate of corporation income tax now is imposed on these companies. They have had that advantage and now the provincial governments are to get a further advantage.

I would feel happier about this if I had some confidence that the people who are customers of these companies were going to receive some benefit from it, but I really cannot see any hope, even in this legislation, that that will be the case. It seems to me purely and simply to be another concession to the powerful provincial governments and another erosion of federal power for which we will pay a heavy price in the future and for which the Minister of Finance will pay a heavy price because his problems will be made more difficult. He has selected this one particular type of business and said that we will give it special treatment. Why do we not deal with the pulp and paper, aluminum and other industries in the same way?

Another point I should like to stress is that I do not think anybody today would argue with the fact that it has been considered by a growing number of people to be in the public interest that public utilities engaged in the distribution of electric power and gas should be in public hands. I doubt that any government in Canada would suggest putting the clock back.

I cannot conceive, for instance, of a government of Ontario deciding to abolish Ontario Hydro and I cannot conceive of a government of British Columbia putting the clock back and returning electric power generation and distribution to private hands.

Public ownership of utilities is obviously a trend that is being followed in this country. Why introduce legislation that will put the brakes on progress in that direction and a brake also on any attempt to follow a safe course with regard to another utility which is going to become of greater importance to the country and which involves the distribution of gas throughout Canada? Obviously this is a field in which public ownership is the inevitable end in view if we are going to have some concern for the consumer and some concern for the health of our economy which depends to such a large extent upon the distribution of power in its various forms.

I should like to register my very strong opposition to this bill. I hope that the Minister of Finance will perhaps experience another conversion such as suggested by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and that I may convert him to the point of view that it is in the public interest that public ownership of utilities be encouraged and not discouraged as this legislation proposes to do.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I only wish to say a few words on second reading of Bill No. C-211 to tell the minister that we are in favour of it because, under this legislation, part of the income tax payable by certain public utility companies and which normally belongs to the provinces will be turned over to them. I heard the previous speaker refer to provincial governments which have nationalized electricity; he said that, as a result, electricity was cheaper. Well we have positive proof to the contrary.

In the province of Quebec—and I believe the saying that to administer a state enterprise always costs twice as much as to administer a private enterprise is true—since electricity was nationalized, apart from the loss of revenue from all taxes yielded by power companies, in some areas, electricity is much more expensive than when it belonged to private companies.

After experiencing nationalization—Quebec will probably not retrace its steps—we are convinced that it will always be more expensive, and cost twice as much, to administer a state-controlled enterprise.

As for the transfer of taxes mentioned in this bill, the field involved is not very extensive; mention is made of electrical energy, gas and steam. The province of Quebec is only concerned with gas. We would have been much more interested in the transfer of the paper companies' income tax, for instance, or of the taxes collected from the numerous mining companies operating in the province of Quebec. The ideal—and the minister would have been much commended for it—would have been a bill designed to turn over to the province of Quebec 100 per cent of the taxes collected during all those taxation months.

We were generous enough 20 years ago to surrender those rights to the federal government and we are looking forward to the day when the federal government will consider the advisability and the need to hand over what it borrowed 20 years ago—those taxation rights in fields belonging to the provinces. The effect would be, first of all, to remove the double taxation now existing in Quebec; to eliminate also duplicate administration, because the federal government is taxing in a provincial area, collecting money to pay over to the provinces later on, as if the provinces did not know enough to tax themselves.

Under this bill, the minister undertakes to hand over to the provinces a part, a small part of the tax to which they are rightfully entitled under the constitution. We ask that a bill be introduced to return all their rights to the provinces. Let the federal government act with logic and loyalty. The provinces only loaned those tax fields with the definite intention of recovering them immediately after the war.

The provinces have kept their word but the federal government took the opportunity to defraud the provinces, to keep what had been a temporary loan and which has never been returned since.

Once and for all, let the decision be taken and I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that many disputes and clashes would be eliminated in the province of Quebec if it were possible to return the three fields of taxation which the province of Quebec is asking for, which it has loaned 20 years ago and has been asking back for 20 years in order to manage its own business and stop begging from the federal government. Furthermore, it is no longer justified since the federal government is collecting the provinces own taxes only to pay back a third or 40 per cent. Naturally, we are for the bill, even though it is only a fraction of what the province of Quebec is laying claim to. I hope that shortly the Minister of Finance will introduce the bill we are all looking forward to, all of us citizens of Quebec, and every French Canadian in that province will not only feel grateful, but will deem the minister to be a great man.

[English]

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of continuing the discussion at any length but I should like to indicate my full agreement with the remarks just made by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron). Like him, I think this is a thoroughly bad piece of legislation in principle and, as he pointed out, in my view it has consequences which could serioulsy affect the proper functioning of the national economy and the proper exercise of its management, which in our view should be in the hands of the Minister of Finance for Canada. Under those circumstances this house should reject this legislation out of hand in order to indicate to the minister, the government, and some interests in the country who I believe have been promoting this legislation, that we in parliament want nothing to do with it.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, without further ado, I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather):

That Bill No. C-211 be not now read the second time but that it be read this day six months hence.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) and other members of the house will reject this amendment, and the sooner the better, because the provisions of Bill C-211 are in my opinion long overdue. They should have been brought before the house and dealt with by it some time ago in order to establish a fair taxation base between those provinces that have publicly owned power utilities and those that have privately owned power companies.

In the province of Alberta, for example, some of the power and gas companies are publicly owned by municipalities and, of course, many others are not. They are privately owned corporations which are providing excellent service, at the same energy rate in many cases as publicly owned corporations elsewhere in Canada. But there is a discrepancy in the amount of tax paid by these utility corporations. If they are privately owned they are subjected to the same corporation tax as any other private corporation in Canada but publicly owned power and other utility companies are not taxed on the same basis.

I suggest that the purpose of this bill, for which I commend the Minister of Finance—is simply to provide a measure of justice to those citizens of Canada in areas that are served by privately owned utility companies, because certainly the only way in which privately owned companies can get the money with which to pay the federal corporation tax is through the rates charged to their customers.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Olson: I will later. It seems to me it is a complete injustice to have a tax base that requires citizens in some parts of Canada to pay a higher rate for energy when all other cost factors may be the same. If the hon. member for Comox-Alberni would like to ask his question now, I will endeavour to answer it.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. member this question. In common logic, does he suggest that this bill will reduce the rates of the private utilities?

Mr. Olson: I was just coming to that, Mr. Speaker. So far as the government of Alberta is concerned, it has made a pubiic announcement, I believe, that it intends to return this tax money to the corporations which in turn have agreed to reduce accordingly the rates for energy. This would bring the situation more in line with the tax exemptions that are the privilege of publicly owned utility corporations. It seems to me that if this bill is not passed the effect will be an attempt to force the provinces to nationalize all utility corporations within their boundaries. That may suit the hon. member for Comox-Alberni and his philosophy but so far as we are concerned we can offer substantial evidence, in fact overwhelming evidence, that privately owned power corporations can and do deliver power to their customers just as cheaply and efficiently over a long period as any publicly owned utility in Canada, given the same set of other cost factors.

If it becomes necessary to come forth with all the facts and figures to compare, for example, a thermal power unit such as the one at Wampum, Alberta, with the one at Estevan, Saskatchewan, both of which use the same kind of fuel from the same kind of mining operation and are essentially the same kind of unit, it can be satisfactorily proven that the privately owned corporation producing power in Alberta does it in fact a little more efficiently than is the case in Saskatchewan. However, Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of taking up this much time this afternoon because I think this is a good bill which is long overdue. I ask the house to deal with it fairly and pass it as soon as possible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the amendment to the main motion. All those in favour of the amendment to the main motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

SUGGESTED AMENDMENTS IN PRINCIPLE

On the order: Notices of motions:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give immediate consideration to amending the Canada Pension Plan in such a way as to insure that it and complementary pensions and retirement allowance legislation in Canada are based upon the following principles:

(a) the immediate increase of the old age pension to $100.00 per month to all present recipients, and the integration and payment of such pensions out of the pension fund as amended;

(b) the establishment of a plan to provide a national minimum retirement income, participation in such a plan to be available but not compulsory to all;

(c) that a national retirement pensions plan should not be compulsorily superimposed on existing pension and retirement plans, but should be supplementary to them, on the basis of filling in gaps in coverage of existing retirement and superannuation plans so that all are covered up to the level established under sub-paragraph (b), participation being, however, elective to those who are already covered to or beyond that level;

(d) that true portability of pensions as between industries and areas, which is not affected by the present plan, be the continuing aim of pensions legislation and negotiation;

(e) that certain specific and foolish anomalies, such as those whereby more than one employer may be compelled to make a full annual contribution in respect of the same employee, with no right of recovery from the fund, and whereby some housewives will be compelled to make deduction from the wages of domestic help while others will not, although the basic wage rate is the same, be eliminated.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, I have been asked by the hon. member for Perth to request that this item be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Stand, at the request of the government.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTED PROGRAMS OF INTERNSHIP IN LEGISLATIVE PROCESSES

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to the advisability of establishing a form of internship program in the House of Commons; the purpose of the said program being to better equip outstanding young political scientists, journalists and law school faculty members, with a better understanding of the national legislative process; the participants to be brought to Ottawa for six to nine months of full-time work as assistants to members of the House of Commons and to be paid a minimum stipend financed by the government and an established foundation grant, competition for the fellowship to be made each year, announced to coincide with the opening of a session.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity afforded hon. members in private members' hour of being able to bring forth ideas and suggestions that they feel might be of benefit to this worthy chamber, to hon. members or to the government at large.

The motion I have presumed to bring to the attention of the house is one that was conceived out of the accumulation of work which I have found on my desk and on my shoulders since I have been a member of parliament for approximately the last ten years. I am sure that many other hon. members of this house have found that the amount of work which falls to their lot has become greater and greater as the years go on. I do not suppose there is one member in this chamber who would not admit that the ever-increasing amount of work, the great amount of reading, the numerous briefs and the great amount of research that falls to his lot as a member has become even greater and greater as the years have gone by.

I am sure that many of us come into this house not as well prepared as we would like to be to deal with the great mass of legislation that we are confronted with from time to time. Such unpreparedness makes the load of the member heavier and heavier. To illustrate what I mean, one has only to think of the Canada Assistance Plan bill that is before the house at the present time. With all the great complexity of this piece of legislation, how is any hon. member supposed to understand it as well as he should without first having had some assistance or some time to study it? Looking back, the same thing could be said about that enormous piece of legislation that was brought before the house and passed, namely, the Canada Pension Plan.

I ask, what can be done to help to rectify the existing problem of which I have spoken? Possibly the answer in part lies in the resolution I have put before the house. It says:

That . . . the government should give consideration to the advisability of establishing a form of internship program in the House of Commons; the purpose of the said program being to better equip outstanding young political scientists, journalists and law school faculty members, with a better understanding of the national legislative process; the participants to be brought to Ottawa for six to nine months of full-time work as assistants to members of the House of Commons and to be paid a minimum stipend financed by the government and an established foundation grant, competition for the fellowship to be made each year, announced to coincide with the opening of a session.

This resolution is twofold in purpose. It will provide outstanding help to students who participate as interns and will also be of great help to the member of parliament. I have suggested here only three classes of interns, namely, political science students, law students and journalists. My reasoning behind this is that I feel it would be better to creep before walking in this type of program. Perhaps as it develops and proves itself we could extend the classifications for interns to many other fields.

What is the purpose of the House of Commons internship program which I have recommended in this resolution? First of all, it is to equip outstanding political scientists with an M.A. degree, graduates of law schools and journalists with a B.A. degree with a better understanding of our national legislative process, politics, and public affairs. Just as a medical student serves an internship to better equip himself, this program would make it possible for a political science student, lawyer or journalist to do likewise.

The participants would be brought to Ottawa for six to nine months of full-time work with a member of parliament and would be paid a fair living wage. It is suggested that they choose the member with whom they wish to work. I can see no objection to an intern who has worked for say four months with one member of parliament changing to another should he wish to do so.

The program would be of great benefit to the students as well as to the members. It is intended to bring young political scientists, lawyers and journalists into close contact with the day-to-day work of the House of Commons so that they can learn at first hand how the legislative process actually works. The fellowships will help bring light to the teaching processes in the field of political science once the students return to their outside studies. A student of journalism would be much better qualified after a period spent here working with a member of parliament and a term in the press gallery. The same would be true in the case of a law student.

I suggest that when an intern arrives he should be allowed a brief orientation period spent in interviews with key people in the legislative process, visiting various departments of government, spending a short period in the press gallery and so on. Afterwards he would settle down to working directly with a member of parliament, briefing him on major bills, reading and digesting the many briefs which are directed to his office, and similar tasks.

There is no end to the amount of help he could be. On the other side of the picture, the intern himself would be much better qualified for his own profession when he returned to his field of work outside parliament. Again, I am sure many of these people entertain the idea in the back of their minds that some day they may themselves run for office as members of this house. If they did and if they were elected, I am sure they would be better equipped for their duties after having spent a period working here as I have suggested.

Such a program would cost money, of course. How would these funds be raised? My first suggestion is that we might set up a centennial fund. Suppose interns were paid on the basis of $4,500 a year. If we set up a fund of $1 million at an interest rate of six per cent we could make provision for roughly 13 interns to begin with. Another way of raising funds would be to get one of the philanthropic foundations, possibly the Ford Foundation, to match a government grant made for this purpose. A program of the kind I have described has operated in the United States Congress since 1953 and I am glad to say it has gained greatly in stature since it was first begun. This is how the United Stated Congress got the money to carry on their program.

For the first several years of its operation the Congressional Fellowship Program was financed by the Edgar Stern Family Fund of New Orleans. In 1957-58, the program was financed by both the Stern Family Fund and the Ford Foundation. Beginning in 1958 the program was financed by the Ford Foundation as well as other foundations such as the Courier-Journal and Louisville Times Foundation, the New York Times Foundation, the Shinner Foundation, the Poynter Fund, the Revlon Foundation, and the Helen Dwight Reid Foundation. So there is no problem about financing this program in the United States, and I am sure we could do the same here without any trouble.

How would interns be selected? I suggest they should be selected as a result of a nationwide competition. The recommended age group would be from 21 to 35 and the criteria for selection should be superior training, practical experience and professional competence. The selection committee might be made up of two Conservatives, two Liberals, one N.D.P. representative, one Social Credit representative, two political scientists, two lawyers and two journalists. This group would select suitable candidates. Applications would be received in December and the selection made not later than March 31. Those chosen would begin their internship on September 1.

There are other details which would have to be worked out. Pay would start on, say, September 1 and continue on a monthly basis. The fares of successful candidates to Ottawa would be paid, as well as their return fares if they completed the course. A married student might receive between $4,500 and $5,500, plus $1,000 in respect of the first child and $500 for each additional child. Such a scale could be worked out. The program would be under the direction of the House of Commons internship committee and I believe the staff in the Speaker's office could handle the operational duties. It would be best, I think, if the scheme were confined to backbenchers.

I mentioned this idea at a meeting in my part of the country not long ago and one of the editors of the local paper wrote an editorial about it. With all due humility and modesty I should like to put a large part of this editorial on record. It is from the Guelph Daily Mercury and the heading is: "Political Internship A Sound Proposal". It reads in part as follows:

Alfred Hales' proposal to allow university graduates to serve political "interships" excited our interest. The idea has much to recommend it.

Mr. Hales said the plan would be invaluable to members of parliament who are required these day to do an ever-increasing amount of research to keep up with new developments on a wide front. He suggested the proposed "internship" should be open to graduates in journalism, law and political science. These should naturally be the people most interested in politics although we do not see why it should not be open to graduates in any field.

In any case, politics has become a difficult and complicated profession, making stiffer demands all the time on those who practice the art. There is a great need for a training ground in practical politics and Mr. Hales' proposal would go a long way toward filling that need.

Too often in the past has the popular and charming fellow down the street or on the farm been sent to Ottawa simply because he happened to be popular and charming. We send people to parliament to do the most important job in the country, but seldom ask to see their qualifications.

To send a man who has only a background of experience in township, county or municipal affairs, to recommend him is like sending a junior hockey player to the National Hockey League. He is not ready for it. And while he may make it in the end, a lot of time goes by before he does—time that is spent on the bench listening to the coach and watching the professionals.

A program such as Mr. Hales suggests would provide a nucleus of young political hopefuls with valuable first-hand experience and training which would stand them in good stead should they decide to make politics a career. And the country as a whole would benefit.

I put this on record to show the view expressed in an editorial in my constituency.

• (6.30 p.m.)

I should like to conclude by putting two quotations on the record concerning a similar program which has been in operation in the United States Congress. They are from letters written by Congressmen. Here is one from a letter written by Mr. Carl Elliott of Alabama:

Allow me to congratulate you on the exceptionally capable manner in which you have organized and directed the Congressional Fellowship Program this year. I have had an opportunity to observe several of the Fellows and could not be more impressed. It was, as you know, my great pleasure to have Mr. Edmund B. Lambeth in my office during the period from the first of the year until the Easter recess. Ed's work was, by all standards, truly outstanding. In view of the added burden placed on my office staff this year, I hardly can see what I would have done without him. He was, at all times, both alert and thoughtful, with a great gift for writing. His mastery of the important tasks assigned to him was a pleasure to behold.

I can think of no comments or suggestions which I might make regarding the operation of your program, with the possible exception that I would be glad to see you revise your policy so as to enable me to take on another fellow next year.

My second quotation is a short paragraph from a letter written by Mr. Ullman, Congressman from Oregon:

From every point of view, Dave's work was outstanding. He came at a time when my activities were somewhat restricted, moving into a schedule of full responsibilities with a minimum of prompting. His services to me as my Ways and Means Committee advisor, as well as his general duties in handling correspondence and agency work, were done with efficiency and good judgment. I have no criticism except that his term with me should have been longer so that we could benefit even more from the assignment.

Here is a sentence from another letter:

From my experience with Tom, I have learned how useful it would be to me to have a full time "legislative assistant" as an addition to our regular staff, to help me with the load of reading and analysis and more thorough study of legislation.

We in Canada, Mr. Speaker, are launching into a big operation in our parliament and must look forward to thinking in broader and wider terms. I can visualize someone speaking against this motion saying it may not be necessary because recently, as a result of a recommendation of the special committee on organization and procedure, we established a new branch for research in the library to aid hon. members. I believe it has a staff of eight and the budget for the branch runs between $75,000 to $80,000 a year.

However, this is a rather impersonal service. I do not think we get the same results from it as we would on a day-to-day basis with assistance from an intern, but the branch could be continued as a complement to the internship program. That is something that can be decided another time.

I believe this resolution has great merit. I think Canada has reached a point where an internship program should be established on Parliament Hill. As I said at the beginning, it would be a tremendous assistance not only to the interns but also to the members of parliament. I hope hon. members will see fit to endorse the resolution or, if they do not feel like doing so right now, I suggest that the matter be referred to the special committee on organization and procedure the members of which, in their wisdom, could consider and recommend it to this honourable chamber.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, this is a very interesting motion and I commend the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales) for introducing it. It has two principal aspects, both of which have much value. The first aspect is the internship program as a means of training Canadian students in politics, government and law. The second aspect relates to the use of these interns as assistants to members of parliament.

I shall deal first with the first aspect, that is, an internship program in the House of Commons. There is no doubt that university courses have a tendency to become too academic, with the result that the student does not always get a correct picture of the Canadian government and its parliament. For three years I served as a lecturer in political science, teaching Canadian government, and I often realized the difficulties met by students who never saw parliament in action. As a matter of fact, as a lecturer and a person fairly extensively read in Canadian government I found the picture I had obtained from books was not always the true picture of how our government and parliament act.

In many other countries it is much easier for students to visit the seat of government and study it at first hand. In England a large percentage of students live within a few hours of the parliament at Westminster. The same applies in Paris, Rome and most other European countries. In addition, many of these countries have education and training systems somewhat similar to that which is suggested in this motion. In France the Institut des Sciences Politiques and Economiques, established in Paris, gives the student who intends to work in governmentan excellent academic and practical training. While he may not work as an assistant to a deputy, he does keep in close touch with the practical processes of government.

Since Canada is a large, sparsely populated country it is especially important that some type of parliamentary internship be established. Many of our universities are such a long distance from Ottawa, and travelling to the national capital is so expensive, that such an internship program would help bring many students to Ottawa where they could get a first-hand viewpoint. Such a system would also do much to promote the national interest as opposed to the regional interest.

Students who might otherwise spend all their university years in the same province, subject only to provincial influences, would have the opportunity of spending a year in Ottawa learning to appreciate at first hand the national parliament. Such an internship program would not only do much to help students in their work and assist in the understanding of their respective sciences but it would also do much to upgrade the whole process of government in Canada. It would provide us with a group of men much better informed, more understanding and more knowledgeable of government and parliament.

The motion refers to political scientists, journalists and law professors but I would think it should include, as the hon. member mentioned, all students whose work requires an understanding of our government. These might be economists, law students, social scientists and social workers.

I find the inclusion of journalists most interesting. There is no doubt that the press gallery plays a most important role in our democratic process. They have the difficult task of reporting, interpreting and commenting on the affairs of parliament for the information of the Canadian people. Whereas today most members of parliament are obliged to concentrate on one or two areas of legislation, and cabinet ministers must necessarily concentrate, most of our journalists are expected to report intelligently on all types of bills, all types of statements and all types of political discussion.

In this age of specialization it is obvious that this may be too much to expect. One day the journalist is obliged to report on the technical intricacies of economic and fiscal policy, interest rates and taxation, the next day on the complexities of international law, treaty making and United Nations procedure, and on the following day deal with labour law, collective bargaining, conciliation and arbitration.

Just as ministers, members of parliament and civil servants are obliged to concentrate their interests, it follows that members of the press gallery may have to do likewise. It is only in this way that the Canadian people will be able to get the specialized reporting they need to judge properly the work of parliament and government. It is recognized that the press gallery already has specialists and men from specialized journals, but the vast majority are individuals who are required to do the general reporting of all parliamentary business. It would seem that a parliamentary internship for students of journalism or apprentice journalists might help give this profession a more highly qualified group of reporters and critics.

• (6:40 p.m.)

The second aspect of this motion recommends that the parliamentary interns be assigned to members of parliament as assistants. This suggestion has been made for many years and each year it becomes more and more urgent. As I have already mentioned, government business is becoming more and more extensive and more and more complex. While an intelligent member of parliament may have been able to keep himself fully informed on all legislation 30 or 40 years ago, this is almost impossible today. In the ordinary course of his duties a member of parliament is required to sit in the house each afternoon, to sit in committees at least two mornings a week, to attend caucus at least one morning a week, to meet constituents and various lobby groups, to answer correspondence, to keep informed about the bills and resolutions which are presented to the house and, from time to time, to prepare speeches.

If a member attends all sittings of the house, all the meetings of committees of which he is a member and caucus meetings, it is easy to observe that he will not have much time to do all the other things mentioned. One of the most important and time consuming tasks is the reading and research required to prepare his speeches and his house and committee work. Even if the member of parliament has taken the course in rapid reading which is being given here he still could spend five hours a day reading and not even scratch the surface of many subjects.

I might say that the member would be able to do much more reading and research if he was provided with such standard business equipment as a dictating machine. If ever there was a job where dictating equipment was required, it is that of the member of parliament. While his secretary is in his office from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m., he usually is required to be in the house or in committee during these hours and therefore is often not able to dictate. If he had dictating equipment he could dictate at all available hours of the day and night without concern for the presence of his secretary. It would also allow him to make better use of his time and to plan his day in a more orderly fashion.

However, in order to perform his work properly the member of parliament must be given research assistance. The manner suggested by this bill is a good one. In this way we help not only those studying government but also the entire functioning of parliament.

In the United States Congress each congressman is provided with two secretaries and a research assistant. I understand that the United States senator has even more assistance than the ordinary member of the House of Representatives.

I should say also that the work presently being done by the legislative reference service of the parliamentary library is a good start. Although it was begun only recently it does provide us with a good deal of help in research. I think, however, that the type of research suggested in this resolution is necessary and should supplement the reference service. Mr. Speaker, I think this is an excellent resolution and I give it my full support.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, as has been the case in respect of all the speeches that the mover of this resolution has made since he came to this house in 1957, this one is a product of careful thought, proper research and extremely good intentions. I am completely in support of the general purpose which he seeks to achieve by this resolution. I congratulate him on the purpose he has in mind and I think there is great need for it to be achieved. Both preceding speakers established that need.

One is never concerned when people denigrate the politician. They have been doing so ever since there has been the product of politics. But when the institution itself is publicly denigrated and seriously misrepresented we are concerned. I believe there is a great need for this sort of assistance, this sort of recognition of the complexity of the task which a serious member of parliament must undertake. Indeed, in line with the remarks of the hon. member who just sat down, how long would it take if one were to read all of Hansard after it is compiled, to say nothing of the statutes?

I went to great length to study the Canada Pension Plan, all three versions, but when one of my constituents asks a question I am never sure what the proper answer should be because I studied the preceding ones as well as the final one. The massive volumes of royal commission reports compound the complexity of what is before us. It is difficult to talk about all these matters because one is apt to give the impression, to use the expression of Hon. Howard Green, that one is whining about things. I think, however, that there is a legitimate case for the extension of our facilities. The research division in the library in my opinion is doing a fine job, but it is just a beginning.

It is so easy for us in Canada, with our curious superiority complex, to look upon the system south of us as being inferior, but I believe that if we look carefully at the average functioning Congressman and Senator we will see that in many ways he is able to function more effectively than we. I think the development of this sort of thing is part of the reason. I quite agree that we should give careful study to the internship program. I am delighted that my hon. friend has mentioned political scientists first because naturally these are the brainiest people of all. They have the proper training and are people who should be here.

Journalists certainly need this plan. Whether or not the house needs more lawyers is a question which there is not time to debate now, although I would like to take one side in that argument rather strongly. I suggest that perhaps the categories should be broadened to include many students, perhaps those in the humanities and social sciences and, indeed, perhaps those in the pure and applied science fields. Before we go as far as we must go, however, I think we will have to think of other changes here. We are going to need an increased physical plant on Parliament Hill. We are going to have to wake up to the fact that some time we had better look at the calendar a little more realistically and decide in deliberative assembly that we can pre-arrange the date of our convening and in a general way the date of our proroguing.

I believe that soon we must come to realize that a closer approximation to the academic year would be a reasonable way for us to conduct our yearly schedule here. With that in mind the program suggested by the hon. member would fit in extremely well. I should like to see the interns doing the things the mover suggests, but I think the most suitable arrangement would be an approximation of the academic year. There are so many things that bright young people could do to benefit us individually, to benefit the institution as a whole and, I would hope, to benefit them.

• (6:50 p.m.)

As a former professor of political science I agree with the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) that exposure to the practical aspects of politics may have some enriching effect, certainly on the man behind the podium and I would think it would extend to those on the other side of it. Perhaps he and I, if we return to the halls of academy, will look back on our internship here as something useful at least to us and hopefully for those who may be in our intellectual charge, if I may put it that way. I would say that this is a most imaginative, useful and thoughtful suggestion and the kind of thing which our parliament and our country should consider carefully and favourably. The bread and water era of our country proving itself in an economic way has long since passed and I think we must now think of improving our basic institutions. This is a fine, practical and useful suggestion. I support it wholeheartedly and I will now make time available for others to speak and for all of us to vote.

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take up very much time of the house but I should like to make a few remarks in support of the notice of motion presented by my colleague, the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales). In doing so may I say that its implementation will be beneficial indeed not only from the viewpoint of those who are going to participate in the program but also from the viewpoint of members of parliament, particularly those of us who are in our legislative infancy.

It is interesting, and allusion has been made to this by other speakers, to make comparisons of the research facilities available to members of parliament and those to which members of the Congress of the United States have access. Certainly the notice of motion before us would seem to parallel almost the congressional fellowship program about which the hon. member for Wellington South has spoken. That program has been sponsored by the American Political Science Association and financed by the Ford Foundation and other groups and it provides Senators and members of the House of Representatives with an additional source of assistance.

The program to which I have referred is one which might well be studied by those who are interested in how the mechanics of such a suggestion as the one we are now discussing might be worked out. As hon. members know, in addition to the facilities of the library of Congress research branch, which functions in a manner similar to the one recently set up in our parliamentary library, congressman and senators are provided with funds with which to engage administrative assistants who help in such things as correspondence, problems of constituents both personal and otherwise, the gathering of material for speeches and in dealing with government departments on behalf of constituents as well as analysing legislation. As has already been mentioned, senators and congressmen also have very large secretarial and office staffs to help them. They seem to be very much better off in this way than we are.

Speaking from that viewpoint alone, and as I have said I support the suggestion by the hon. member wholeheartedly, I wonder whether this motion goes far enough to provide the facilities which are required at this time and certainly will be required in future by members of parliament. The 12th report of the special committee on procedure and organization, submitted on October 7, 1964, suggested that the ideal situation would involve one assistant for every ten members of parliament and that the functions of the researcher would include the preparation of statistical data, the investigation of the pros and cons of any argument referred to him, the summarizing of press comments and the provision of notes for speeches. While I should not like to underrate the value of such a service, it seems to me that we would be doing every member of parliament, and particularly the backbenchers, a great service by allowing them to engage a qualified person who would have closer contact with the member for whom he worked and would be more partisan in the best sense of that word and thus better equipped to help his member or group of members. Under the system of research assistance in the library of parliament members have no choice in the selection of those who are to participate. Would it not be better to allow us some choice in the selection of those who are to serve us?

I could go on but I should like to see this motion come to a vote this evening. For that reason I will resume my seat and allow other members to comment.

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I, too, hoped that this motion would come to a vote and I am confident that it would have come to a vote had it not been for the fact that the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Brand) gave the house a rather distorted impression of its purpose. It would be unfortunate to vote on it while that impression remains.

The hon. member dealt with the motion as though its purpose were to provide assistance to the members of the House of Commons. I do not think that is primarily the intention of the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales). His intention is surely more important, and one which I think inevitably would commend itself to every member of this house.

There is no doubt that we ought to try to provide people engaged in political science, journalists, members of universities' law faculties, and others with an opportunity to come to Ottawa and participate, vicariously if you will, in the operation of parliament. This would not be an easy thing to work out; and I do not think the congressional fellowship program in the United States provides us with all the instructive parallel desirable because their system of government is very different from ours.

It would be very worthwhile for these interns to hear one of our better informed members, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), talk about the constitutional role of the House of Commons and more generally the parliament in our system of government. Some of us heard him speak the other evening very accurately on this matter. I am sure that many members of the House of Commons and of the press gallery were edified by what he said. He showed quite clearly that we have a very much more complicated system of government than the American and one in which it would be more difficult to introduce a program for interns. I wonder, for example, how suitable many members of parliament, given the particular emphasis that they give to their work, would be for many of the interns. Perhaps the answer would be to have the interns assigned to the offices of the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition where they would be most directly involved with the on-going work of the House of Commons in the legislative process, and in the other processes of this house which are perhaps even more important in our system. However, there are obvious difficulties in that proposal as well.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour for considering private members' business has expired and the house will now revert to the business interrupted at six o'clock.

FINANCE

PROVISION FOR PAYMENT TO PROVINCES OF CERTAIN CORPORATION INCOME TAX

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-211, to authorize the Minister of Finance to transfer to the provinces the proportions of the income tax payable by certain public utility companies—Mr. Sharp—Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose at six we were about to consider clause 3.

• (7:00 p.m.)

On clause 3—Payments to provinces.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to detain the committee at any great length on this clause, but it does seem to me that in view of the fact that the house did not see fit to accept the amendment which I moved at the second reading stage, which if it had carried would have resulted in a rejection of this proposal, perhaps some consideration should be given to the terms of the bill as set out in clause 3.

If I understand this clause correctly, it provides that the Minister of Finance may from time to time pay to the various provinces of Canada out of the consolidated revenue fund certain sums which have come into the federal coffers as a result of corporation tax levied on private utilities. Under the terms of this clause the minister will be empowered to refund into the hands of the provincial governments 95 per cent of such corporation tax that they pay as a result of revenues obtained from their public utility operations.

[Mr. Stewart.]

It seems to me that if the house is going to approve this bill we should be concerned about what is going to be the end result of placing these funds back in the hands of the provinces. Indeed, in my view, if this action is to be taken at all, parliament in this bill should set out the terms and conditions under which these funds should be administered, once they are refunded to the provinces. Basically, as I understand it, this is federal revenue, revenue which has come into the hands of the government of Canada and in my view it should not simply be handed back to the provinces as another form of unconditional grant. We had a discussion earlier about the pros and cons of the advisability of the operation of public and private utilities. The question whether the operation of publicly owned utilities may be more in the interests of the consumers than privately owned utilities can be a subject matter of debate.

In regard to my own province of British Columbia, where of course within the last few years our major private utility was taken into public ownership and has been managed since that action was taken by the present government of British Columbia, there is some question in my mind whether it is being operated in what one considers to be the best interests of the consumers, the customers of the B.C. Hydro and Power Authority. One has in mind for example that perhaps an undue proportion of the revenues of that corporation are being siphoned off into financing expansions in certain parts of the province, rather than being used to bring lower rates and better service to the people of the province who are the customers of the corporation at the present time.

If I understand this proposal correctly, it will apply to the private utility corporations which are operating in the southeasterly part of the province. One of the questions that arises in my mind, at least as this clause is worded, is whether when the government of British Columbia gets its hands on the money which it is proposed should be rebated by the Minister of Finance, in effect the customers of the Kootenays in British Columbia will be doing what the customers of B.C. Hydro and Power on the lower mainland and Vancouver Island are now doing, namely assisting out of their power bills in the financing of the development of a project in the Peace river, which is commonly referred to as the Peace river dam and power development. These are the sort of considerations which I think should give us some cause for concern as we consider clause 3 of this bill. In my view that kind of action should not be allowed. The hon. member for Medicine Hat earlier told the house that he had an understanding that, if it got this money in its hands, the present government of the province of Alberta, from which he comes, was going to do something, toward refunding it to the customers of the private utilities in the province. That may or may not be the case.

I am prepared to take the hon. member's word that this is the intention of the present government of Alberta. Nevertheless governments come and go, as those of us who sit in this house know only too well. Therefore it seems to me that some consideration should be given to what disposition will be made of these funds in the hands of the provinces. I am hoping that the amendment which I propose to move to clause 3 may in this instance receive the support of the hon. member for Medicine Hat, because in some respects it is along the lines he was arguing a little earlier at second reading stage. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I should like to move:

That subclause (1) of clause 3 be amended by substituting a comma for the period at the end thereof and adding the following words:

"provided the province agrees that such amount will be applied to reduce rates paid by the customers of the respective designated corporations."

The Deputy Chairman: May I ask hon. members if they would enlighten the Chair as to the relevancy to clause 3 of the amendment in its present form.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I was about to say something on this particular amendment with regard to its propriety, and whether it is in order. While it is an amendment to subclause (1) of clause 3 of the bill, it seems to me that if you read clause 4 fairly carefully you will find that it has essentially the same effect, because it says:

Where a province certifies that an amount that is all or part of an amount paid to it under this act has been paid or otherwise transferred or credited to a designated corporation for its own use and benefit, and certifies the amount that has been so paid or otherwise transferred or credited to the corporation, the amount so certified is exempt from income tax.

Therefore it seems to me that the amendment is perhaps slightly superfluous except for one point, and that is that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni spells out in his amendment that it will be applied to reduce rates paid by the customers of the respective designated corporations. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that perhaps the argument I am about to advance is not valid on a point of order. There are reasons to hold out that no province is going to apply for a refund of this tax unless the designated corporations do in fact agree to reduce the rates by a certain amount, perhaps to the extent of 100 per cent of the amount of the rebate. I think therefore that the sense of this amendment could far more properly be applied to clause 4 rather than clause 3, because as I read it, at first glance it seems there would be perhaps some conflicting and unnecessary wording in clauses 3 and 4 if this amendment were accepted to clause 3.

Mr. Sharp: This proposed amendment would substantially alter the nature of this legislation. May I say to the hon. member who has proposed it that he is really calling in question the value of public opinion in the provinces of this country. After all, the purpose of this legislation is to avoid giving an artificial inducement to any province to nationalize its public utilities; that is the purpose of the bill. It is being brought forward in response to representations made by provinces that unless to a large extent these taxes are refunded—and this bill proposes 95 per cent—the privately owned utilities are at a great disadvantage compared to the publicly owned utilities. Moreover, the province or its consumers could gain a great advantage from nationalizing these enterprises.

As far as I am concerned the decision as to whether a particular utility should be nationalized or not should not be affected by taxation. I am not opposed to public ownership; indeed I have often advocated it and I defend it quite vigorously. However, I do not think the federal government should provide a reason for nationalization which has nothing to do with the inherent advantages of public ownership. The purpose of this bill is to remove this artificial stimulus to public ownership.

I believe it should be left up to the province concerned to decide whether it wishes to pass on the benefits of this refund of taxes to the consumers or whether the people of that province prefer to use the money for other purposes. That is a decision that should be made by the provinces. I do not think it is good public policy for us to require under this bill that the provinces pass this refund on to the consumers of the utility.

As I listened to the hon. member's argument, it was obvious to me that he was protesting against the activities of a certain publicly owned utility in his own province. Surely if a public utility charges rates which are not agreeable to my hon. friend, that is something being done by the public utility which is under the control of the province itself.

I therefore believe, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment should be rejected. I believe that it would compel the provinces to take action which, in their own wisdom, they might prefer not to take, as against action which might be as much in the interest of all the consumers of the gas or electricity being provided in that province as would be a reduction in rates.

Mr. Barnett: I find the argument advanced by the Minister of Finance to be most intriguing indeed because the only interpretation I can place upon his argument, if it is to have general validity, is that in effect he is advocating the complete abolition of taxes. Far from recognizing his argument, that in the absence of this legislation there is a weight in favour of the provinces bringing about the public ownership of public utilities, I consider that this legislation is weighted the other way, toward the preservation of the private ownership of public utilities.

Mr. Sharp: May I ask the hon. member a question? If the provinces were concerned about the effect of our general taxation upon other industries, why did they not make representations with respect to industries other than public utilities?

Mr. Barnett: I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that probably by and large the reason for this is that the members of most of the provincial governments subscribe to the same philosophy as that advocated by the Minister of Finance. They believe in protecting the right of private industry to make profit, and they are not concerned with the most economical provision of services to the people of this country.

The whole principle of the corporation tax is based upon profits, and the only case where any discrimination arises is in the minds of certain people such as the premiers of British Columbia or Alberta or the present Minister of Finance. They consider that there is some imaginary discrimination in allowing a company to operate at cost and not pay corporation tax. This is the question of principle that is involved. The Minister of Finance can stand up here and talk all he wants about his belief in and support of public ownership, but in effect what he is doing by introducing this bill is expressing, in very specific terms, his own belief in the preservation of private ownership even in the field of public utilities. This is what this issue is all about.

[Mr. Sharp.]

I am not disposed to argue the question of principle at any length. We had a discussion of this at the second reading stage of this bill. All I am seeking to do by my amendment, in view of the acceptance by the house of the principle of the bill, is trying to ensure that this refund of corporations tax will be passed on to the customers. This will, in a minor way, rectify the balance and put the customers of private utilities on the same footing as the customers of public utilities. If properly managed, public utilities will provide their services to the consumers at a minimum cost.

Let me turn for a moment to the argument advanced by the hon. member for Medicine Hat. I have been momentarily diverted from it. He referred to clause 4 which, if I understand it correctly, bears no relation to the principle of my amendment because it simply says that if the province turns this money back to the private utility, that will not be regarded as taxable income. There might be a need for a consequential amendment flowing from my amendment in clause 3, if it is carried. Clause 4 states that the province can turn this money over to the private utilities—the phrase used is "for its own use and benefit"—and the corporation will then not be liable for taxation on this sum. Clause 4 does not say whether the corporation is to pass this on to the consumers. All I am suggesting is that we should ensure that the corporation profits, which have come out of the consumers' pockets in the first place, be handed back to the provincial government; that, in giving this money, we should say "We want to make sure it goes back to the customers from whom it came in the first place". Quite frankly I cannot see that this legislation will protect the interests of the people of Canada unless we agree to ensure that what I have proposed does happen.

• (7:20 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: The amendment submitted by the hon. friend for Comox-Alberni seems to ge beyond the proposed resolution and also beyond the bill entitled: An act to authorize the Minister of Finance to transfer to the provinces a proportion of the income tax payable by certain public utility cmpanies. The amendment goes beyond the principle of the bill and introduces a new provision which, in the opinion of the Chair, is irrelevant and beyond the scope of the clause that we are now considering. I would refer the members of this committee to Erskine May's seventeenth edition, page 549 where it is mentioned, in reference to the inadmissibility of amendments:

An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the subject matter or beyond the scope of the bill—

I must declare with regret that the amendment submitted by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni is out of order.

Shall clause 3 carry?

Mr. Barnett: I must say, with regret, that I cannot accept your ruling in this connection, Mr. Chairman, that my amendment is beyond the scope of the bill. I believe it is within the ambit of the purpose of the bill to suggest the manner in which the province shall spend the money given. With great respect, Mr. Chairman, I must ask that this ruling be appealed to the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair and the Chairman of the committee made the following report:

The question is an appeal to Mr. Speaker pursuant to section 4 of standing order 59. In committee of the whole when clause 3 of the Bill No. C-211 was being considered, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni proposed an amendment as follows:

That subclause (1) of clause 3 be amended by substituting a comma for the period at the end thereof and adding the following words:

"provided the province agrees that such amount will be applied to reduce rates paid by the customers of the respective designated corporations."

The Chairman ruled to the effect that the proposed amendment went beyond the principle of the bill and introduced a provision which, in the opinion of the Chair, was irrelevant to and beyond the scope of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will realize that the rules we have wrought for ourselves are not always too easy of application, and this applies particularly in the case of appeals that we have provided from the Chairman of Committees to the Speaker. Hon. members realize, I am sure, that the Chairman of Committees follows the work of the committees very closely. When an amendment is submitted to him he has before him at that very moment the different clauses of the bill. I feel—and this might be only obiter—that the Speaker should not be asked to substitute his personal judgment for that of the Chairman of Committees.

In this particular instance an amendment in the following words was moved:

That sub-clause (1) of clause 3 be amended by substituting a comma for the period at the end thereof and adding the following words:

"provided the province agrees that such amount will be applied to reduce rates paid by the customers of the respective designated corporations."

In the opinion of the Chairman of the Committee this amendment seemed, or appeared, to go beyond the terms of the principle of the bill before the house. I refer to Bill C-211, an act to authorize the Minister of Finance to transfer to the provinces the proportions of the income tax payable by certain public utility companies.

The principle is further expressed in the resolution which says, in part:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize payments to the provinces equal to 95 per cent of that part of the income tax paid under part I of the Income Tax Act by certain corporations—

And so on. Later, at the end of the resolution it states:

—and sale in the province for distribution to the public of electrical energy or steam, or from the distribution and sale of gas to the public in the province; and to provide that an amount paid under the said measure that is paid or otherwise credited by the province to such a corporation for the use of that corporation shall be exempt from income tax.

• (7:30 p.m.)

This resolution sets out the principle on which the bill is based. I have the impression therefore that the ruling of the chairman is justified by the authorities which have been brought to my attention. As hon. members know, an amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the subject matter. I refer of course to May's seventeenth edition, page 549:

If it is irrelevant to the subject matter—or beyond the scope of the clause under consideration—amendments which are irrelevant to the clause under consideration should, as a general rule, if they are within the scope of the bill be moved as new clauses.

Hon. members know that reference as well as or better than I know it. A judgment has been expressed by the Chairman of Committees that the amendment moved by the hon. member is beyond the terms of the principle of the bill, that it goes beyond the scope of the principle of the bill. I do not think it is sufficiently evident that an injustice has been done in the ruling of the chairman for me to rule otherwise. I think I have to sustain the judgment rendered by the Chairman of Committees.

In these circumstances I regret that I do not think I should accept—

Mr. Barnett: Will you allow me a word, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Yes. I suddenly realized as I was rendering this judgment that I should have asked the hon. member to give his opinion. I invite him to do so, and I assure him that I shall not be prejudiced by the opinion I have already expressed in hearing the argument which he may want to make at this time in support of his view that the proposed amendment is in order.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I assure you that it was with some regret that I felt I was not satisfied with the ruling made by the chairman in the committee of the whole.

Having checked the resolution to which the chairman referred while we were in committee, it is still my view that my amendment lies entirely within the principle of the bill. Had Your Honour not already done so, I had intended quoting precisely those parts of the resolution which Your Honour has already quoted.

The amendment I sought to move did not seek to alter in any way the principle that this money was to be paid to the provinces. In my view, the effect of the amendment is to alter the terms of the clause in question in such a way as to give more direction to the provinces as to the manner in which the money we are voting shall be spent.

This, in my submission, does not in any way alter the scope or the terms of the resolution, or the principle of the bill. The amendment seems to me to be relevant to the clause under discussion, which has to do with the paying of money to the provinces. All the amendment seeks to do is to allow the Minister of Finance to say to the provinces that this money shall be spent in a certain way. I therefore feel that the amendment is strictly relevant to the clause under consideration. While it could possibly be introduced as a separate clause, nevertheless the amendment ties in directly with the subject matter of subclause (1) of clause 3, and therefore in my understanding constitutes a proper and relevant amendment.

I do not consider myself to be an authority on all citations that are quoted in the house on this matter, but I feel sure in my own mind that on a number of occasions in committee I have heard amendments proposed to bills that certainly were no more and no less within the principles of the original resolutions or bills than the amendment I now propose.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, with all due deference to the views of my much more experienced parliamentary friend, who has just spoken, I suggest to you that the proviso that has been moved with respect to clause 3 (1) of the bill does introduce an altogether new principle. The resolution clearly forecast a bill, in which payments would be made to the provinces equal to 95 per cent of the income tax that had been collected by the federal government.

If, in fact, it had been intended that that money should in all cases be for the benefit of the customers of these public utilities, then I suggest that that would have had to be included in the resolution which preceded the introduction of the bill. While I do not know at what stage an amendment such as the one Your Honour is considering might have been appropriate, being one that affects the principle of the bill it certainly is not appropriate at this stage.

• (7:40 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: The opinion expressed by the Minister of Finance is very much along the lines of what I suggested a moment ago, namely that in the amendment a new principle is being sought to be introduced. That amendment is not relevant to the clause now before us. I may be wrong, but looking at the bill itself and at the clause under consideration, in the light of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) it seems to me the amendment is a very far reaching one. The hon. member appears to wish, through his amendment, to regulate the charges being charged by the public utilities and by the provinces. In my view this is an entirely new principle and one which goes beyond the terms of the clause under consideration. I am sure this is the basis on which the ruling of the Chairman of the Committee was made. Again, in spite of the very intelligent and plausible argument put forward by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni I have to maintain the decision rendered by the Chairman of the Committee and refuse the appeal.

And the house having resumed in committee:

On clause 3—Payments to Provinces.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I do not wish to hold up the passage of the legislation, since I support it, especially as it applies to the province from which I come where utilities of this sort are privately owned and where we have been suffering the burden of additional taxation, as compared with provinces where public utilities are publicly owned.

However, there are one or two questions I should like to ask the minister for the sake of clarification. It was impossible for me to be here during the resolution stage and I have not read all the discussion which took place at that time. But I wonder why this was not introduced as an amendment to the Income Tax Act, following the budget, in the regular way. Why is the tax not being refunded to the companies? Why is it collected from them in the first place? I suppose the government has certain reasons for following this roundabout method of making refunds to the provinces. No doubt this has already been explained.

My other question is this: Have any of the provinces in their briefs to the minister on the subject of this type of public utility advanced the same arguments with regard to other types of public utility? I am thinking chiefly of telephone companies?

Mr. Sharp: We did consider whether we could not relieve these corporations of federal income tax. This is one alternative. However, as I said on the resolution stage, this course would have several disadvantages. First, the federal government would have to continue to assess these corporations for their liability under the old age security tax. Second, the federal government was obligated under the tax collection agreements with eight provinces to assess and collect the provincial corporation income tax on these corporations. Third, many of the larger public utilities earn income from sources other than their public utility operations, and it would be impossible to exempt them from income tax without jeopardizing the corporation income tax structure. Fourth, while certain provinces might wish to pass the tax saving on to the consumers by a reduction in utility rates, other provinces might not wish to forgo the share of the federal revenue they were presently receiving, or the additional revenue that they would receive under the new sharing arrangements. Fifth, if the federal income tax were abolished, the shareholders in these public utilities would cease to be eligible for the dividend tax credit.

The question was then asked: Have the provinces requested that similar treatment be extended to other utilities such as telephone companies? As far as I am aware, no such suggestion has been made. I have heard some public discussion about this, of course, but I have had no conversations with any of the provinces about other utilities, nor I understand had my predecessor.

HEALTH RESOURCES FUND

ASSISTANCE TO PROVINCES FOR HEALTH TRAINING AND RESEARCH FACILITIES

The house in Committee on Bill No. C-199, to provide for the establishment of a health resources fund to assist provinces in the acquisition, the construction and renovation of health training facilities and research institutions—Mr. MacEachen—Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

Clauses 2 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 7—Conditions.

Mr. Basford: I should like to move a technical amendment to clause 7 as follows:

That clause 7 of Bill C-199, "An act to provide for the establishment of a health resources fund to assist provinces in the acquisition, construction and renovation of health training facilities and research institutions", be amended by adding thereto paragraph (d) and Sub-Clause (2) as follows:

"(d) Provided to the minister an agreement, the terms of which shall be approved by the minister, by which the province to which such payment is to be made, shall show or indicate in a manner acceptable to the minister, the proportion and amount of the contribution of the fund towards the acquisition, construction and renovation of health training facilities and research institutions within the provinces to which such payment or contribution is to be made pursuant to section 4 or 5.

"(2) The Governor-in-Council shall make regulations prescribing the manner of carrying out and giving effect to paragraph (d) of sub-section (1) of this section in order that the contribution of Canada towards the acquisition, construction and renovation of health training facilities and research institutions within the provinces shall be acknowledged in a manner approved by the minister."

• (7:50 p.m.)

I do not want to hold up the work of the committee. I shall only take a minute to explain that over the last 30 years we in the federal parliament have got ourselves into the position of raising vast sums of money. We as federal politicians take the responsibility of raising those moneys through income tax, excise tax and otherwise, and we are paying out this money to politicians who do not have the responsibility of raising it.

I suggest that this now constitutes a serious situation in Canada. We have heard a great deal about co-operative federalism in this parliament, and in this house. It seems to me co-operative federalism is a two-way street, in which we in this parliament must recognize our responsibilities to provide the provinces with the resources and the facilities they require to carry out the programs they must provide, and in which they in turn must be prepared to recognize the role of the federal parliament and federal government in the carrying out of our programs.

I could enumerate the shared cost programs to which the general remarks I have made apply, but I shall make reference to only three with which hon. gentlemen opposite are familiar. They are familiar with the very excellent program they initiated, the vocational training program, under which the government of Canada contributed substantial capital cost grants towards the construction of vocational schools. I compliment hon. gentlemen opposite upon initiating that program when they were in government, but I suspect there is not one out of a hundred Canadians who recognizes that federal money has gone into the construction of vocational schools.

I refer also to another program that hon. gentleman opposite initiated, the shipbuilding subsidy program, which was a particular application in my province. Under it the federal government paid a 35 per cent subsidy on ships built in Canada; yet I suggest only about one out of every one hundred British Columbians realized that federal taxpayers contributed that 35 per cent.

As I say, I do not want to hold up the work of the committee, but I have moved this amendment to clause 7 of the bill, which is a government bill. I am a government backbencher but I have never regarded myself as a rebel or maverick. However, I regard it as important to preserve the prestige and stature of the federal parliament and the government of Canada, and this amendment is designed to do that.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, the amendment asks that the minister seek an agreement from each of the provinces covering projects to be approved under the legislation indicating, in a manner acceptable to the minister, the extent of the federal participation. The federal parliament is now, I hope, about to pass legislation providing for participation by federal funds, up to a maximum of 50 per cent of the cost of projects covered by the legislation. I think it is desirable that the funds that are voted by the federal parliament be regarded as having been provided through taxation exacted by the federal parliament, and to that extent I appreciate the objective of the amendment.

But I must point out to members of the committee that we have had several conferences with the provinces and at no time did we discuss this particular matter. The government has no commitment with respect to the provinces that this would or would not be done. In my view this is a matter upon which each member of the committee can decide for himself. It is not the kind of matter that I want to make the subject of confidence at this particular time.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon Members: Question.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I think we should take a second look at this. We are interfering with education, a provincial matter, but under this amendment we would be giving the minister complete control. A later clause in the bill provides for the establishment of a health resources advisory committee, consisting of eleven members, ten to be appointed by the lieutenant governors in council and the eleventh being the deputy minister of national health.

This committee should be a sufficient safeguard. When we reach that clause we shall discuss the personnel at some length, but with respect to this amendment I do not see how the minister can go back and say to the provinces, "I am going to be the sole arbitrator as to the money you spend. If your plan does not agree with me, then out it goes." In this way he would be interfering with the B.N.A. Act and provincial jurisdiction over education.

This fund will provide $500 million, which is about the same amount as the province of Ontario plans to spend in a ten year period. Every member of parliament knows, or should know that this is the contribution of the federal government.

This grant is made over a period of 15 years. My feeling is that this should be tripled. I believe it is the feeling of those who have spoken in the house from all parties that we must buck up our research. I would certainly suggest to the minister and the federal government that they should be underwriting research entirely; this should be in the hands of the federal government and it should supply the research tools, because it is of national concern and should be a national health policy. I do not see how you can say to a province: I am going to be the sole arbitrator of this situation. I think this is wrong, because then you would be entering as I have said before the field of provincial education, and perhaps municipalities as well who may contribute.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I have listened carefully to the argument advanced by the hon. member for Simcoe East. I believe he misunderstood the purport of the proposed amendment. If I understood it correctly, the idea is not in any way to alter or change the terms under which money will be made available to the provinces for the purposes which are set out in the bill, but rather to clarify the situation in respect of the source of these funds.

Perhaps the hon. member for Simcoe East, representing an Ontario constitutency, has not encountered the kind of situation some of us have encountered, where we find that large sums of money from the federal treasury are put into projects and then heralded as being entirely provincial projects. Certainly as a member from British Columbia I am very much aware of this situation, so far as the contributions made from the federal treasury for the construction of the trans-Canada highway are concerned. Certainly in British Columbia, except for the occasional time when a private member of the House of Commons raises his voice to point out a few of the facts of the situation, the people are led to believe that the trans-Canada highway was built by the provincial M.L.A. for the constituency of Kamloops.

In this connection I should like to point out that in some other jurisdictions this kind of situation does not apply. While on a trip down into some of the states of the United States last year I recall that where certain inter-states projects were under way there was a large notice board which set out exactly in figures the allocation of funds between the federal treasury, the state treasury, and so on. There was none of this business of making it appear that it was all being done as a personal favour by some particular member or official of government.

If I understand correctly the purpose of the amendment, it would seem its intention is to provide that under the health resources fund the payments which were in fact made from the treasury of Canada would be so designated that the people in a particular province would not have the impression that these facilities were being provided entirely as a gift of some particular minister of a province. With my experience as a member of the House of Commons, who has not been a supporter of any of the federal governments which have been in power while I have been in the house, and not having been in the position of being a political supporter of the government of my own province, I should like to say that I think such an amendment as this might have a rather salutary effect in serving to keep the records straight in the minds of the people of Canada with regard to where their tax dollars are being spent, and from what source they are being spent. From that point of view and in the light of the experience some of us have had, I think this is an amendment which certainly is worthy of serious consideration in this house.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman, I should like to support wholeheartedly the amendment put forward by my colleague from British Columbia. Several months ago I had occasion to speak on a bill. It was a private member's bill providing for certain grants to the provinces. At that time I pointed out that the province of British Columbia—that is, the premier and his administration—were not duly recognizing the amounts of moneys that were being handed over to the provincial administration for its disposal. With regard to the trans-Canada highway I pointed out, as was mentioned by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni—and I have to go entirely by memory now—that in respect of the portion from the arch entrance at the Banff National Park to Revelstoke $103 million had been spent, of which the federal government provided something like $98 million. Yet, when the former Conservative administration asked that a joint opening of this vast project be held, the provincial administration decided that they would not co-operate in such a project. They rushed in, and two weeks prior to the grand opening held one of their own. As I said earlier they had spent only, I believe $2,500,000 or $3 million. However, they had a grand opening, with a barbecue at which the minister of highways was the master of ceremonies.

Personally I think this was very unfair even to the former administration. This is only one example, but I have another. In the province of British Columbia a receipt goes to any person who has profited from our national hospitalization program. The government of the province of British Columbia sends out one of its receipts after payment on behalf of a person who is a resident of British Columbia has been hospitalized. I have with me a photostat copy of one of these receipts. It states:

> The Government of the province of British Columbia through the British Columbia Hospital Insurance service has paid the hospital account shown below.

Of course there is no reference whatsoever to the joint hospitalization program of which the federal government pays approximately 50 per cent through regular taxation. Now, to compound the impropriety of such a receipt, in smaller type they say:

> Due to federal government regulations this is not valid for income tax purposes.

The inference here, of course, is that when a person privately pays his medical or hospitalization account and it amounts to something over 3 per cent of his taxable income, he may make reductions in his income for tax purposes. However, the two administrations, that is the provincial and federal, make this payment directly to the person who has been hospitalized.

Inasmuch as the federal government had made a 50 per cent contribution, it would be irregular to expect that a taxpayer should receive double benefit. This would involve a doubling or at least a compounding of the federal grant. In all fairness I think the committee should consider the advisability of insisting that the provinces give some recognition to the fact that it is the federal government, which is responsible for collecting the tax, and therefore must receive some recognition. Otherwise democracy could not exist.

Having recognized the astuteness of the hon. member for Simcoe East I find it difficult to understand how he could so completely misread this amendment. I hope he will reconsider it and give his support to the proposal.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, for the past twenty minutes fantastic things have been going on in this house. An amendment proposed by the New Democratic Party to Bill No. C-211 has just been rejected under the pretext that it would be an intrusion of the federal government in fields coming under the provinces, in short, because it would simply be instructing the provinces how to administer the money turned over to them. At this stage, I want to mention that the money given to the provinces by the federal government is not a donation; it is simply handing over the taxes collected illegally in the provinces.

Mr. Chairman, you rejected the socialistic amendment proposed by the New Democratic Party, and rightly so; but you are now accepting the very proposal made earlier.

According to the amendment now before us, the minister is appointed referee; the power of veto will be vested in the minister as to whether or not the moneys are granted to the provinces. It seems that having rejected the first amendment, the government reverses itself and suddenly reverts to socialism.

On Clause 6 of Bill No. C-199, the amendment which the New Democratic Party had moved on Bill No. C-211 is now being moved again, this time with government support; it is no longer deemed an infringement yet, to top it all, it refers to education. As far as education is concerned, the provinces will be bringing up a project; whatever its scope, the federal government will agree to reimburse—not to contribute, but to reimburse—50 per cent of the taxes that were collected, provided the province consents to appear before the minister and be blessed. And then it is claimed that this is not an infringement on provincial education.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I say this amendment is worse than the first one, as far as provincial autonomy is concerned; it is argued that provinces are using moneys granted by the federal government in some provincial projects without stating the fact. Can you imagine that the federal government will give justice to the provinces in reimbursing the moneys due under the constitution and that they will then be called to go before the entire population to say: The federal government has been a Santa Claus to us, they have given us 50 per cent.

No, Mr. Chairman, we do not see things that way. We are not asking the federal government to be simply equitable and to return to the provinces the moneys to which they, the provinces, are entitled; we go further, we demand that the federal government get out of provincial taxation fields. We shall have to demand it for a few more years, but inevitably, they will be forced out by circumstances. How right it is to say: Who pays the fiddler calls the tune. The government claims to be paying the provinces and will try to assert itself and say: You will now do this and that, or otherwise, you will get nothing. They claim the provinces are free, but it is a case of take it or leave it. Believe or die. You are free to accept but if you refuse, you get nothing. That is the way things are done in Russia.

Mr. Chairman, I say that this amendment must not be voted by parliament. It is worse, it is more socialistic than the first, because it concerns education and our group is violently opposed thereto.

[English]

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, we have heard some fantastic proposals during the past three years from the other side of this house, but never before have hon. members over there come out with such a barefaced proposition as is contained in the amendment proposed this evening. This parliament is set up to try to bring forward legislation which will benefit the people, rather than to attempt to bring forward legislation that will reflect the beneficence of any particular group here. It is certainly fantastic on the part of the hon. member for Kootenay East and the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard to try to suggest that our objectives at this particular time should involve informing the people of Canada that we are a great bunch of fellows because we are contributing 50 per cent of money in respect of a certain piece of legislation, particularly at this time when parliament is in the straits it is in today and when people are wondering why so much time is wasted.

Why should we be bogged down at this time by this kind of proposition, emanating from the government side of this house? I believe the hon. member for Simcoe East presented a valid argument this afternoon. I do not intend to take up any more of the time of this institution discussing a fantastic proposition—one which may be considered almost silly.

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Chairman, let me remind the hon. gentleman who has just spoken that the amendment under consideration was moved by a private member and does not necessarily contain ideas that are shared by everyone on this side of the chamber. Although I am a colleague of the hon. member and a next door neighbour of his in the city of Vancouver, I do not happen to hold the same views in respect of his amendment.

Let me deal for a moment with what we are expected to do in this chamber. This is the federal parliament of Canada and we are charged here with the responsibility of doing certain things in the national interest. We are charged with raising the standard of living of Canadian people through various welfare programs thrashed out in this chamber. We are charged with building links from coast to coast, such as the trans-Canada highway, in order that Canadian commerce and Canadian people can travel back and forth throughout the country. We are charged with maintaining our harbours, with the operation of ferries and many other things. If we do not fulfil our responsibilities in this regard we will fail Canada. Even though legislatures everywhere in Canada decided not to give us recognition for doing these things, we as Canadians and as members of parliament sitting in this house would in any event have to do them.

Indeed, you and I as Canadians would be proud to do those very things because we would know that in the long run we would be forging the links that made Canada. So I do not believe we can legislate ourselves into any position where there is federal recognition for a shared program and provincial recognition for a shared program. Let me give you an example. A bill brought in by hon. gentlemen opposite during the period they were in power provided some subsidies for the building of ships. Those subsidies assisted in building about one third to 40 per cent of the ferries which now ply between the mainland of British Columbia and Vancouver island. Let us suppose that we had introduced into that subsidies program an amendment which said there must be some kind of recognition for this 40 per cent contribution. I wonder whether we in this house believe we would not have taken part in the program of linking the mainland of British Columbia with Vancouver island if the federal government has insisted that it would not take part unless some kind of recognition went with it.

What sort of federal recognition would we require? Would it satisfy our needs if a bronze plaque were put on the ferry which said "Forty per cent of the cost of this ferry was put up by the federal government". In the case of the tourists going back and forth it would be a good idea, someone here suggests. Certainly it would, and it would be a nice thing if any provincial government would recognize a federal government contribution and do it willingly, working hand in hand with the federal government in such a shared program.

But I am sure hon. members do not believe that unless this were done we would not participate in such programs, and that we should force it to be done by legislation. Would we be satisfied if the bronze plaque were there, and the tourists dashed back and forth to it from their cars? Would this satisfy the need? Or would we like to hear the captain get on the bull-horn halfway across and say, "Forty per cent of the cost of this ferry was put up by the federal government"? Of course this does not have to be done.

As a matter of fact, what has to happen is that members of parliament in this house, if they want the nation to know what this government is doing in shared programs, must themselves get on the bull-horn and say, "Forty per cent of the work done on this project was put up by the federal government". If we do not do this when we go to our own constituencies, if we do not do it when we get on the platform, if we do not do it when we speak to our own people, it will never become known to them. I can tell members that provincial premiers and M.L.A.'s are not going to tell the people when they are on the vessel, crossing back and forth, and when they come to the bronze plaque, if we enforce its erection, they will put their backs to it and say, "See this fine vessel. It was made and paid for by the government of British Columbia. This is what you get when you come to British Columbia." So I say to hon. members here: Toot your own horns; you do not need a piece of legislation to do it.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I hesitated earlier to raise any point of order about this amendment, lest it might appear that I was merely unhappy about the ruling given on the amendment moved earlier by my colleague from Comox-Alberni. However, the hon. member for Roberval has in his speech, although it was a speech with respect to the substance of the amendment, raised the very point that I would like to ask Your Honour to look at. When the last piece of legislation was before this committee the hon. member for Comox-Alberni moved an amendment which attached a condition to certain payments that would be made by the federal government to the provinces. You, sir, ruled that amendment out of order on the ground that it was irrelevant to the bill, that it was beyond the scope of what was provided in the resolution that preceded the bill.

I ask you, sir, for a better description of this amendment. It proposes the attachment of a condition to payments to be made by the federal government to the provinces. I have re-read the resolution that preceded the bill, and do not see in it any reference to this kind of condition. I do not speak with a great deal of feeling or fervour; I am not blowing the bull-horn, but it does seem to me that at least within the same sitting of the house we should have consistency; and because this amendment looks so much like the amendment that was moved earlier by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni I invite Your Honour's comments on it.

Mr. Cashin: Mr. Chairman, may I speak on the point of order. I can see where superficially the suggestion may be made that this amendment is out of order on the grounds that the previous amendment was out of order; but I should like to point out to you, sir, that clause 7 deals with conditions, and this amendment is substantially in line with those conditions in paragraphs (a) to (c) and is not a departure from principle, as was the amendment introduced earlier today which was ruled out of order by the Chairman.

I think, therefore, that this is merely an addition to clause 7 and does not substantially or in principle go against the intent of that clause. This was not the case earlier; we were talking about something different in the previous bill which was ruled out of order by the Chairman. Accordingly I would suggest that this amendment is in order, that it is similar to the other parts of the clause. I would urge hon. members to support it on the grounds, not so much from the short-sighted view, I might say, that may have been taken by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, or the previous speaker from the other side of the house, interpreting this to be a matter only as it applies to this particular piece of legislation and in that sense interpreted politically, but I would suggest that we ought to take a broader look at the impact, if there is any, of this amendment. Really, in my view, it has to do with the concept of the federal government, and has not really do do with any one particular party in the federal government, because this particular matter is not a political question. What credit a province gives the federal government for a specific project depends upon the political whims of the province. This is something that may change from time to time because governments are not always very permanent.

I would invite people not to look at this matter in the light of what may happen in this particular bill, because I do not think this amendment will do a great deal to bring about any changes or any greater public awareness in this regard. I do not think it will have any substantial effect. In my opinion it is a matter of principle and on that basis I would urge all hon. members to support the bill and would suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that while the point of order may on its face appear to have some merit, when you examine clause 7 of the bill and the principle of that clause in relation to the amendment before the house, you will see it is different from the precedent cited by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, when you are considering whether this amendment is in order and should be put before the committee I should like you to consider these comments. I express some sympathy to hon. members from British Columbia, from Comox-Alberni, Vancouver-Burrard and Kootenay East, in their cries of anguish that they are unable to keep their people accurately informed as to the participation of the two levels of government.

I am sure all hon. members will have some sympathy for this, because it is a rather frustrating situation not to be able to keep up with the advertising campaigns which are carried on in the provinces so as to keep the public accurately and adequately informed. But to write this into the law and make this a condition before any federal funds are granted to a province is different from interpreting public opinion concerning participation in the health resources fund. For example, we know that the present government spent between $2 million or $2.5 million on advertising the Canada Pension Plan in September and October of last year. It seems to me this is the wrong way of using funds out of the public treasury.

I was really amazed at the statement made by the hon. member for Rosthern, because while you can have some sympathy for the hon. members from British Columbia I do not believe the Conservatives have a case. When they were in office they had no difficulty in getting their message across to the people on the prairies, because I know there were times when it was mandatory that signs be put up on certain projects in Alberta before they qualified for federal grants.

In fact the hon. member for Ontario who is in the house tonight will recall I am sure that when he was minister of labour in the Conservative government it was made a condition that a sign be put up on each of the winter work projects to which the federal government had made contributions, or else a grant was not forthcoming. The name of the minister of public works in the Conservative government has been around the post office building and other public buildings in Medicine Hat while they were being constructed.

I cannot say, Mr. Chairman, that I have many objections to this clause, except that I think it rings a false note to hear a member of the Conservative party complain sanctimoniously about something which they did in exactly the same way throughout the years they were in office. I think that both parties have taken some pretty desperate measures at different times to see that they got adequate credit for what they were trying to do. I think that all this complaining that members of the legislative assemblies and provincial ministers are taking away the credit for the granting of federal funds to certain projects is a lot of nonsense.

I appreciated the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra when he suggested that we should feel obliged to undertake these projects whether or not the provinces give full credit to assistance given by the federal government. I think I would go a little further. I am not sure whether we should refer to these funds as federal, provincial or municipal funds. I wonder whether we would not be better off to refer to them as Canadian funds. Each member of this house would then take upon himself the responsibility of seeing to it that his own people are adequately and accurately informed on each one of the projects.

In closing I wish to say that I appeciate what was said by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, that he does not consider this to be a matter of confidence. He went even further than that and said that there were provisions in this bill, regardless of this amendment, which would make it incumbent upon the governer in council to make regulations in this regard. I believe he was not quite sure how the conditions contained in this amendment, even if it were passed, would be met. I am a little concerned about that. What will the conditions be?

Will there be a requirement that a big sign be put up informing the public of the share of the assistance provided by the federal government, or that advertisements be made through the media of newspapers, radio and television such as was the case with the Canada Pension Plan? If we accept this amendment, the minister will oblige the provinces to provide him with an agreement, the terms of which shall be approved by the minister, regarding the way in which the provinces will make this information public. I think it may be desirable for the federal and provincial governments to put up a sign for the duration of the construction period regarding the share of the contribution in the project, as is the case with most of the provisions in Bill C-199. I think this amendment is going a little bit far and no clear explanation has been given regarding how these provisions will be met. On these grounds I find myself unable to support it.

Mr. Baldwin: I have very few comments to make. First of all I will say that I do not feel I can support this amendment. The main reason for my reluctance in supporting it is that I consider it to constitute a downgrading of the capabilities of hon. members opposite. From time to time we have to take issue with them and set them on the path of righteousness, which is quite frequently required. I think it is unfair to suggest that hon. members opposite are not capable of fully exploiting the situation by telling the world about the few meagre accomplishments for which they have been responsible. There is so little they can talk about that I am quite sure they will have a great opportunity for doing so in the next election; and having been through several elections with candidates representing the party opposite I know very well how capable they are. I am not only speaking of the things they have done but also of things they have not done and things they might do. Finally, let me say, Mr. Chairman, that the abilities of the Minister of National Health and Welfare who is piloting this measure are well known to me, particularly from the statements which have been made from time to time by the hon. member for Cape Breton South.

He has told us of the accomplishments of the minister in describing the efforts of the government in regard to measures which they contemplate taking. For this reason I think it would be quite improper for me to approve this amendment, because in voting for it I would in effect be downgrading the really artistic accomplishments of hon. members opposite when they come to deal with matters of this kind.

Mr. Gray: First of all I should like to deal briefly with the point of order that has been raised. One of the hon. members opposite questioned the validity of the amendment. On the grounds that the amendment was not covered by the resolution I would suggest to the committee that if this approach is taken we will discover that none of the existing parts of clause 7 of the bill are specifically dealt with by the resolution. For example there is no reference in the resolution to the submitting of information to the minister.

Mr. Ballard: I am confused, Mr. Chairman, as to whether we are still discussing the point of order brought up by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre or whether we are continuing the debate on the clause. I think the discussions which have taken place seem to be alternating between one and the other. May I ask the Chairman to establish whether our discussions are in order.

The Deputy Chairman: I thank the hon. member for his remarks and I will ask hon. members from now on to confine their remarks to the point regarding the validity of the amendment that is now before the committee.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. Gray: That, Mr. Chairman, is exactly what I was doing. I regret, in one way, that the hon. member who has just spoken did not raise this point of order during the remarks of one or two previous speakers, even though I thought their remarks were most interesting and most useful. While I might possibly have had the intention of straying from the point of order during these remarks, I did not have the opportunity of doing so. Perhaps the hon. member for Calgary South has some of the faculties of a mind reader. If that is the case, he will be in a position to make an even more useful contribution to the work of this house on other occasions.

I wanted to say, Mr. Chairman, that there are a number of things in the bill which are not covered directly or indirectly by the resolution. By reference to clause 7 of the bill, aside from the amendment, you will find there are certain things referred to which are not referred to specifically in the resolution on which the bill is based. For example clause 7 paragraph (a) refers to the submission to the minister of a program for the development of health training facilities in a province, and in paragraph (b), to such information respecting health training facilities in respect of which a contribution is requested. If you look, Mr. Chairman, at clauses 10 and 11, you find a reference specifically to the method of operation, and again you will see no specific reference in the resolution to this useful activity.

Certainly if these clauses are in order, and no one has suggested they are not, then I suggest to you that the amendment put forward by my colleague from British Columbia is no less in order. I think the reason the clauses in the existing bill to which I have referred can be said to be in order, in so far as the resolution is concerned, is that they refer to the administration of the fund or the method of administration of the fund in respect of both the federal and provincial aspects. I suggest that the amendment introduced by my colleague from British Columbia is along the same lines. It calls for writing into the law specifically something which I consider very important with regard to the method of administration of this very useful health resources fund.

I suggest, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment is in order. If it is in order, and if it carries, it will have the effect of helping to make known to the people of Canada the source and application of a large part of their federal taxes.

Mr. Basford: I should like to speak to the point of order. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in raising his point of order drew an analogy between the N.D.P. amendment which was ruled out of order earlier this evening, and this amendment. I suggest there is no analogy. The grounds upon which the N.D.P. amendment to the income tax rebate bill was ruled out of order do not apply to the amendment I have moved.

The N.D.P. amendment to which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre made reference was an amendment to a bill which provided a rebate to the provinces, of certain corporation taxes on privately-owned utility companies, and that is all it provided. The N.D.P. amendment went further than that, and provided how these corporation taxes that were being rebated were to be spent. You, Mr. Chairman, confirmed by Mr. Speaker, very properly said that the amendment was beyond the provisions of the bill.

This is not the case here, Mr. Chairman. There is no analogy between the N.D.P. amendment and this amendment. This amendment was carefully drawn within the provisions of the resolution that was adopted the other day prior to the introduction of the bill. The resolution provides for contributions from the fund to the provinces. This amendment was drawn, as was the bill, with the resolution in mind. The bill has provided for a fund and has provided for contributions from that fund to the provinces. Clause 7 refers to three conditions for the payment of contributions from that fund. I suggest this amendment simply provides a fourth condition. Clause 7 is clearly within the terms of the resolution, and the amendment is not, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre argued, outside the provisions of the bill. I say, therefore, it is in order.

Mr. Douglas: In answer to the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard I merely want to point out that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni added a condition relating to the disposition of the corporation taxes which were to be collected from certain private power utilities. His amendment was ruled out of order.

The amendment now moved by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard also attaches conditions, conditions which were not in the original bill. We are not, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said, terribly exercised about it. We simply feel it is unwise in a single evening to allow any one part of the house the right to move an amendment attaching conditions when already a member on the other side of the house has had an amendment ruled out of order because it sought to impose conditions. Whatever your ruling may be, Mr. Chairman, we thought the inconsistency which in our opinion existed ought to be drawn to your attention. If Your Honour is not ready to make a ruling, I should like to say a word about the proposed amendment.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, the Chair is ready to make a ruling on the validity of the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard. I thank hon. members for the enlightenment which was offered the Chair. Hon. members sought to establish a parallel between the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni and that put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard. The Chair ruled, in the earlier case, that the amendment went beyond the principle of the resolution and the scope of the bill, because there was an attempt in that amendment to regulate expenditures of money by the provinces. In the case of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, as the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam mentioned, there are certain conditions attached but they are attached to the federal government in the making of grants of certain sums of money to provinces. This amendment would restrict the federal government, but places no control whatever over expenditures to be made by provinces out of federal payments to the provinces. I therefore declare this amendment is not out of order.

Mr. Douglas: In that case, Mr. Chairman, may I make a few remarks on the amendment. In my opinion, it would be unfortunate if this amendment were to be passed by the committee. For the past 20 years there have been a great many joint federal-provincial projects and, as a matter of fact, many projects which involved federal, provincial and municipal governments. This type of program has been extended to include highways, the development roads, natural resources, water conservation, drainage programs, the construction of old people's homes, housing and a great number of items which are of importance to the people of Canada. I think these joint efforts at all three levels of government justify the expenditures.

If the committee accepts this amendment, we are laying down what I think could be a very dangerous precedent. Is this now to be applied to ARDA, to highway programs, to resource development, to housing for aged citizens, and to half a dozen other items that I could easily mention? I understand the thinking of the hon. member who moved this amendment. It is true that there have been provincial governments which appeared to take deliberate pride in concealing the fact that the federal government had made substantial contributions to a given project. I understand that some members of the federal parliament might be irritated and annoyed when this happens. But also I can think of times when the shoe has been on the other foot, when provincial and municipal governments have been equally exercised when it appeared that one government making a contribution to a joint program sought to take all the credit.

I hesitate to mention a procedure the federal government used to follow, for fear that the minister of health might adopt it again. I can remember when the present Secretary of State for External Affairs was minister of health. When a provincial government received an application from a local hospital board to build a hospital of, let us say, 50 beds, which hospital was going to cost $750,000, the federal government would be entitled to pay at one time $1,000 a head, which would have been $50,000, and later on $2,000 a head, which would have worked out to $100,000—

Mr. Starr: But he was not minister when the $2,000 figure was in effect.

Mr. Douglas: At that time it was only $1,000. It was raised to $2,000 later. When the hospital board made an application to the provincial department of health, if the provincial department of health approved of the application it would agree to pay its share of the cost, after which the application came to Ottawa. Long before any of us were ever informed of what was afoot there would be a press release saying that: "Mr. Martin the minister of health had approved a $750,000 hospital at point X." The contribution of the federal government would have been $50,000, with $350,000 coming from the provincial government. This would still leave some $350,000 to be put up by the municipality.

I never objected to this procedure because I did not need to be annoyed. The hospital boards and local municipalities which were putting up $350,000 as against the federal government's $50,000 were sufficiently annoyed to quickly advertise the total amount of the federal government's contribution.

I am glad that this sort of practice has been discontinued. I think we should grow up. If federal, provincial and municipal governments each make their contributions, we ought to rely on the integrity and generosity of spirit at all levels of government to give credit where credit is due.

Were this amendment to be accepted, and were there to be no mention of the contributions of local governments—and I will point out that in clause 7, as defined in the definition part, hospitals are included, and these hospitals may be built with the majority of contributions coming from the local people—local governments will not take kindly to legislation which insists that the federal and provincial contribution shall be advertised while the local government's contribution will be completely ignored.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, if we were to adopt this amendment we should be demonstrating a degree of childness that is not worthy of this house. I hope that we are prepared to make the most generous contributions we can to any particular joint project, and that those who take part in the program will see to it that those who receive the benefit of the project are fully informed of the contribution that each respective government has made.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, the amendment proposed by the hon. member for ancouver-Burrard had a forerunner seven or eight days ago when the Minister of Finance, cried, lamented, and wailed in Montreal that the press was not giving sufficient publicity and credit to what this government did. Probably the press has had no solid foundation for giving this government credit for anything it has done up until now. We had the spectacle of the Minister of Finance finding out that buying a newspaper for the use of the government would cost a great deal of money. The government probably felt that by moving the sort of amendment now before us to an act such as this, much trouble and expense in publicizing the government's efforts would be saved.

It is very strange that two weeks ago this same hon. member rose in this house on another bill, which provided for the payment of money with respect to a training program. He tried to leave the impression in the house that what was being introduced was an entirely new bill that this government, through its benevolence, was introducing for the good of the people of this country. It was only when I rose, following his announcement, to point out that what was being introduced was not a new bill, that it had been with us for a long time, and that only amounts were being increased, that the hon. member, and the hon. member for Kootenay East stood in their places and gave the former government the credit for building the technical schools in this country. That was the first time I had heard such an admission from the members of the government.

I am not against any government's getting the credit for what it is doing, but surely this should not be done by way of legislation. If we read this amendment it states:

> The Governor-in-Council shall make regulations prescribing the manner of carrying out and giving effect to paragraph (d) of sub-section (1) of this section in order that the contribution of Canada towards the acquisition, construction and renovation of health training facilities and research institutions within the provinces shall be acknowledged in a manner approved by the minister.

As soon as the order in council envisaged is signed, I can just visualize the tremendous numbers of public relations people who will get to work across this country, publicizing what this benevolent government is doing, in the same manner as they publicized the Canada Pension Plan in every newspaper—the taxpayers had to pay for that—and in the same manner that that program was sponsored by the hon. lady who is now Secretary of State.

This sort of thing has to stop. I think it is up to the members of the government to make sure that their stories get across to their constituents and to the people of Canada. But they should not do that by smuggling such publicity into legislation which is meant to bring some good to the people of this country.

I have been studying the government during this session very closely, and I have come to the conclusion that today's performance is a very good example of how members of this government can mess up the progress of business in this house far more effectively than anyone else could. This, I might point out, has nothing to do with the opposition.

I think we have come to the stage now where we on this side of the house have adopted an attitude of responsibility in seeing that this government gets some work through the house. We find ourselves in a position where, for one hour, because a backbencher rose in his seat and not one minister stood up trying to point out the error of his ways, the time of the house has been wasted. We almost had this piece of legislation through.

All I say is, let us have some good, sound reasoning from the government side of the house, let us try to run this country. You are the government, and if you are not capable of running the country, then tell the people of Canada that you are not capable of so doing. Let us stop all this nonsense. Let us quit playing around. Let us quit playing politics with legislation in this house.

Mr. Deachman: Could I ask the hon. member a question? Will he say to the house that if his party were the government of this country it would not permit backbenchers to pass amendments, and to question government policy?

Mr. Starr: Not at all, provided what was raised had the merit of common sense. But we have not seen that today.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, I have some brief remarks to make about this resolution. I make them because I think this is a serious matter, and that this resolution, if carried, would do great damage.

• (9:00 p.m.)

I think it introduces a needless irritant into what is already a difficult situation in the field of federal-provincial relationships. The hon. member seems to ignore the fact that many of these programs are supported only under duress by the provinces, and that the passage of such legislation as this could, in the case of some provinces, confirm their worst fears and lead to increased demands to collect their own revenues and go their own way.

To my mind this is a most dangerous piece of legislation. It arises perhaps from local pique in some areas of Canada. I fail to see the merit of foisting it upon the whole country. I have seen evidence of this petty kind of thinking at municipal level. Councils say: We are not going to be responsible for raising funds needed by boards of education; let them raise their own. Surely we are bigger than that in this house, and surely we need not descend to such petty levels, pitting the provinces against the federal government. I believe the hon. member who put this forward is preoccupied with public relations rather than the substance of the legislation, and for this reason I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, if I understand correctly, the purpose of this bill is to ensure that the people will credit the government with the blessing bestowed upon them.

Of course, I understand—and I thank the member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) for his intervention—that since political parties are soulless and will never go to heaven, they must be rewarded in this world. Such concern probably does credit to the member for Vancouver-Burrard, since he shows himself loyal to the party by assuring it that Canada will find the best legislation in the best interests of all.

But the fact remains, it seems, that the mover and seconder of this amendment overlooked two or three main things. First of all, what does this amendment mean? Does the issue actually concern the federal government or rather the provincial government? What is involved, for instance, education or health? Those matters should nevertheless be cleared up.

So then, when education or health are involved, and under the constitution these are provincial fields, is the federal government well inspired to tell the provinces: I am giving you a pittance, and setting a proviso upon its use? I think that those of our colleagues who referred to federal-provincial relations were perfectly right. If this comes under the jurisdiction of the federal government, let it fulfil its responsibilities without requiring the provinces to discharge them. If, on the other hand, this is a matter of provincial concern and if the provinces feel they are incapable of coping with it, let us then come to an agreement, by mutual consent and unconditionally, and let not the provinces be required to publicize the federal government.

On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, as an independent member—I am at liberty to say so—when I hear the good and great Liberal party or the good and great Conservative party mentioned by party supporters, I say to myself: There is quite a bit of truth in this, because the two parties have done much for the country. But if the legislation is going to contain a clause to ensure that the provinces which are being reimbursed money that is normally theirs and that they could have collected by themselves, and if the further obligation is imposed upon them to advertise the party or the government in power, I say that this goes somewhat beyond the limits of decency and that the party at the helm of federal affairs, whether the Liberals of today or the Conservatives of tomorrow should be sufficiently conscious of the loftiness of their own intentions and purpose, and of the disinterestedness of their devotion to the public weal, to refrain from demanding that the provinces be further required to conduct their publicity.

Furthermore, this publicity would always be unconvincing and, in certain circumstances, it could boomerang against those who have asked for it. I have great trust in the sense of values and analytical minds of all the members who make up the government in power today or that which will be in power tomorrow, since it must be presumed that under the rules of the game, it will not always be the same. I have much greater trust in the influence that each member on the government side can exert in his own respective constituency by telling his electors that the government has accomplished for the common good, than in what could be required by a piece of legislation.

It was said a short time ago that national unity cannot be achieved by legislation. As far as I am concerned, I think that gratitude to a political party can only be achieved by facts, by legislation beneficial to the common weal, which will accumulate during the months in power and which will exert a much greater influence on behalf of such party than anything we are liable to add to the legislation.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, I see something in the amendment which tends to confirm what I say and what others have said before me, and that is that the governor in council shall make regulations prescribing the manner in which the paragraph is to be implemented and enforced. I shall not impose the rest of the paragraph upon the house. "Shall make regulations". In substance, if my understanding of the legislation is correct, we are reimbursing until such time as the provinces are in a position to administer their own affairs, or we are reimbursing because some provinces recognize that they are not in a position to provide for the common good in this area, but that they need the co-operation of the federal government. We are, to a certain extent, returning the sources of revenue which essentially belong to the provinces, but this we do with the proviso that they will cense the government and sing its praise.

I say this is not on a par with the reputation of the government and I do not exclude the party not now in power, for I have studied the history of this country and have noted that both parties have done great things for the country without having to require, through legislation, that their praises be sung. And it is to the honour of the members of the party in power who have spoken in this debate and who have objected, to have shown precisely such high-mindness, disinterestedness and concern to do well, in short, to do the best for the common good, without forcing the provinces to sing praise.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Amendment (Mr. Basford) negatived: yeas, 10; nays, 67.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 8—Advisory committee established.

Mr. Brand: Mr. Chairman, this clause provides that an advisory committee be established consisting of 11 members, ten appointed by the lieutenant governors in council, and the eleventh being the deputy minister of national health, to serve as chairman of the committee. Would the minister consider providing for the statutory representation of those vitally involved in the problem of health education, such as the Canadian Association of Medical Colleges, the Canadian Hospital Association, the Canadian Nurses Association and the Canadian Medical Association?

In view of the stated purpose of the bill to co-ordinate these groups and use their ideas, would it not be wise to include statutory provision for their representation? I agree with the provision presently being made to give provincial representation, but I am wondering about national representation from the groups I have mentioned. I would like to hear the minister's views on this. Incidentally I am prepared to move an amendment but would like first to hear from the minister.

Mr. MacEachen: The matter of representation from professional associations was fully discussed at the conference of ministers of health in Ottawa early this year, and the unanimous recommendation of the conference was that the advisory committee be confined to representatives of both the provincial and federal governments. The ministers were fully aware of the representations made on this point, but that was their unanimous conclusion.

In the operation of the health resources advisory committee we propose to rely fully upon the advice that will be forthcoming from the professional associations, which will be available to that committee through a system of subcommittees.

Mr. Rynard: Can the minister say what the personnel of these subcommittees will be?

Mr. MacEachen: As my hon. friend is aware there are a number of professional associations interested in the question of health education, and the ad hoc committee that produced the report which was the basis of action by the conference of ministers included, in addition to the provincial representatives, representatives from the Medical Research Council, the Association of Canadian Medical Colleges, the Canadian Dental Association, the Canadian Hospital Association, the Canadian Nurses Association and the Canadian Medical Association. It would be from this group of professional associations that membership of the subcommittees would be drawn, with possibly additional representation from other professional groups in the broad field of health.

Mr. Rynard: Then, in effect, all these professional bodies would be covered, including university heads, the heads of medical faculties, and people from the nurses association?

Mr. MacEachen: I think I can assure my hon. friend that that will be the objective and that it will be carried out.

Mr. Brand: In view of what the minister has said and his assurance that the groups I have mentioned, in addition to others, will have representation on the subcommittees, I shall not propose an amendment as I had intended to do.

Mr. Douglas: I agree with the minister that the health resources advisory committee should be small, and that there must be technical advisory committees composed of persons with special knowledge and special training, representing the various health professions and health activities, but may I ask him whether there is any authority in this bill for the payment of the expenses of these committees?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I believe that we have authority in the bill to set up subcommittees. The report of the ad hoc technical committee recommended that expert subcommittees be appointed as deemed advisable by the advisory committee, to provide that committee with qualified technical advice. If I am not mistaken clause 10 gives the advisory committee general powers to make rules for the conduct of its activities, and this would be broad enough to empower it to establish subcommittees to assist it in its work.

Mr. Douglas: And adequate authority to pay them?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM TO ASSIST PERSONS IN NEED

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-207, to authorize the making of contributions by Canada toward the cost of programs for the provision of assistance and welfare services to and in respect of persons in need.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in moving the second reading of this particular bill I am going to begin by saying that if this legislation is adopted by parliament I am confident it will provide a sound basis for the development by the provinces of comprehensive assistance measures supported by preventive and rehabilitative welfare services.

Before dealing with specific features of the bill, it may be helpful to put the total program into perspective and to relate it to the people who will benefit from it. Almost one million persons receive direct aid through the various programs which come within the scope of the Canada Assistance Plan. These include some 85,000 persons still covered under the old age assistance program, 8,000 receiving blindness allowances and 55,000 receiving disabled persons allowances. Also included are 200,000 needy mothers with dependent children, 600,000 other recipients of assistance, the cost of whose assistance now is shared under the Unemployment Assistance Act, and 50,000 children in the care of child welfare authorities.

In introducing the resolution to the bill, I stated that the new cost anticipated under the plan would be some $85 million in the current fiscal year. These funds would be both for improving programs supported through existing federal-provincial legislation and for extending federal support in areas where it is not now provided. These new expenditures will bring the total federal outlays on public assistance and welfare services to more than $250 million.

Expenditures, of course, could exceed estimates, depending on the rate at which the provinces are able to implement improvements and extensions in their programs. If we add the provincial expenditures to the federal figures, the total commitment for public assistance and welfare services in Canada in 1966-67 will amount to well over $500 million. I give these figures to point up the scope of the program under condideration and to indicate that, in terms of the dollar amounts involved and the number of people directly affected, this is a program of substantial size and importance.

In moving second reading, I should like again to refer to the extent of federal and provincial agreement attained on the content of the plan as set out in the bill. The Canada Assistance Plan was discussed at two federal-provincial conferences of welfare ministers convened by my predecessor in April 1964 and May 1965 and at a third meeting which I chaired in January 1966. Through there meetings we were able to discuss proposals concerning assistance and welfare services in the light of provincial experience and to work out a mutually acceptable approach for this new program. At this time I should like to acknowledge the contributions made by the various provincial ministers in the development of the plan.

The legislation that you have before you is divided into five parts. I think it would be of interest to members if I were to deal with the major parts of the bill in a general way. Part I deals generally with assistance and welfare services, part II is concerned with Indian welfare, part III with work activity projects, and parts IV and V make amendments to certain associated pieces of legislation.

In considering part I, I should like to centre my remarks around two of its distinct features; its coverage of assistance for persons in need and its provisions for encouraging the improvement and extension of welfare services. In referring to assistance, I should like to draw attention to the definitions of "assistance" and "persons in need" as contained in clause 2 and to the proposed terms of agreement as set out in clause 6.

The definition of assistance in the legislation sets out the scope of benefits for persons in need that may be supported through the plan. The core of this definition is contained in the reference to basic requirements; that is, the times that are essential to maintain even a minimum standard of living. These are food, shelter, clothing, fuel, utilities, household supplies and personal requirements. Assistance programs whose benefits fail to cover these items cannot be thought of as adequate and it is proposed, in signing agreements under the plan, that provinces will agree to provide assistance in amounts which take into account individual and family requirements for each of these items.

Some concern has been expressed by hon. members about the position that the plan will take on standards in assistance programs. No doubt they have in mind the contribution of the old age assistance, blind and disabled persons allowances programs in securing a universal benefit standard in all parts of Canada. However, I think we must recognize, when benefits are being related to requirements, that variations in costs of living and in regional and individual circumstances rule out a definition in terms of a fixed number of dollars.

We are hopeful that the emphasis on adequacy in the plan, both in terms of assistance and welfare services, and the additional financial support available to the provinces through the plan, will result in the development and maintenance of high standards. On the basis of our discussions with the provinces, I am confident that they subscribe fully to these objectives.

Hon. members may raise the question of standards as they relate to the role of municipalities in the plan. I would point out also that the assistance programs shareable under the plan are increasingly carried directly by provincial departments of welfare and in some provinces, including Ontario, steps are being taken to group smaller municipalities into larger units for the administration of welfare programs. The plan will make funds available to improve the staffs in municipal as well as provincial welfare departments.

Hon. members may have noticed the reference recently to the measures being introduced in the Ontario legislature by Hon. Louis Cecile, the minister of public welfare, in anticipation of the enactment of the Canada Assistance Plan. A number of these provide for more generous sharing with the municipalities in the costs of welfare programs. With federal funds assisting for the first time in staff improvements and also being used to relieve municipalities of some of the onerous costs of welfare, we have every reason to expect that those needing assistance will have their needs met with the dignity and impartiality that are the marks of a good social assistance program.

In addition to the basic requirements referred to earlier, the legislation will support the provision of other benefits as they are required. I might mention particularly items of special need, and items incidental to carrying on a trade or other employment. The latter provision illustrates the rehabilitative approach of the plan. This rehabilitative emphasis is also evident in its coverage of welfare services, such as family counselling or homemakers services. The inclusion of provisions of this kind adds flexibility to the plan and raises it above traditional assistance programs which tend to have been limited to minimal aid. The plan will be available to meet need as it occurs and will support the provision of assistance in a manner and in amounts calculated to help overcome the problems that led in the first instance to the need for assistance.

I would also like to make particular reference to the coverage of health care services. This may include a comprehensive range of services such as medical and surgical care, dental, optical and nursing services, and drugs. This is important, not only as part of the rehabilitative emphasis of the plan, but also for persons who may need long-term income support because of age or disability.

The definition of "persons in need" in the legislation indicates its coverage in so far as the provision of assistance is concerned. The definition identifies the major causes that require persons to turn to some means of public support by referring to inability to obtain employment, loss of the principal family provider, illness, disability and age. The reference to unemployment carries forward a major portion of the unemployment assistance program, while the loss of the family provider incorporates coverage of mothers' allowances paid, among others, to widows and deserted mothers.

Hon. members will be aware of the concern that has been expressed in this house over the years concerning the test of permanent and total disability under the disabled persons program; this was referred to in the debate just the other day. The references to illness and disability in this definition will extend coverage to any person who, because of disablement of any kind or extent, is unable to support himself and his dependants. This will remove the necessity of meeting the medical test of total and permanent disability that now is required under the Disabled Persons Act.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister who the authority will be to make that determination?

Mr. MacEachen: The authority will, of course, be a provincial administration which determines that a person is in need, and this will be applied not as now, in the form of what many hon. members have regarded as a rigid medical test.

The definition also provides for the determination of eligibility on the basis of a needs test, which is a test that takes into account budgetary requirements as well as resources. There have been suggestions by some hon. members that the reference to a needs test as opposed to a means test in determining eligibility for assistance is simply a question of semantics. I would like to emphasize that the distinction is, in fact, a real and important one.

I think I can best explain the distinction by reference to the categorical programs of old age assistance and blind and disabled persons allowances which employ the means test. Under these programs, the factors considered are the income of the recipient and his assets computed as income, the income ceilings that are built into the programs, and the maximum benefits which now are $75 per month. If the needs of the recipient exceed the amounts that can be provided within these ceilings, there is no way of meeting them except through some other measure. Where the recipient has dependants, the problem is compounded since these programs were not designed to take adequate account of such additional needs.

Under a needs test, on the other hand, assistance payments can be related to the requirements of individuals and families. Several advantages are gained by this. The benefit provided can take into account the family size and composition and provide for any special needs that it may have, as well as the regularly recurring ones. At the same time, rates can continually be adjusted to reflect changes in the cost of living. The needs test approach implies the development and use of community budget studies as a means of relating assistance rates more closely to adequate living standards. Anyone who is aware of the great variations in rent charges as well as other budgetary items from one individual or family to another, as well as from one community to another across Canada, will appreciate the significance of this approach.

I would like to comment briefly on the provisions of the plan concerned with institutional care. The plan carries forward the coverage of welfare institutions or "homes for special care" that is now provided under the unemployment assistance program. The majority of these institutions are homes for the aged and nursing homes. While the number of persons who require care in such homes is comparatively small, the costs involved can be quite high, sometimes more than $300 per month. The plan, in addition to basic care, will support special rehabilitative measures such as physiotherapy and occupational therapy undertaken as part of the institutional program.

Mr. Winkler: I do not wish to interrupt the minister's statement, but again I should like to have a point clarified. When the minister refers to nursing homes, will this mean nursing homes accredited by provinces?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, in so far as I understand the situation, and I will be glad to clarify that point later.

In this connection, I should also refer to the fact that through the plan federal contributions may be made toward the cost of home care and similar services to persons in their own homes. This feature of the plan will help to reduce the pressure on welfare institutions and will enable many persons to remain in their own homes who would otherwise need institutional care.

Before leaving the definition of persons in need, I would like to refer to the provisions of the legislation as they relate to child welfare. Under the plan contributions will be made towards the costs of maintaining children who are the responsibility of child welfare authorities, and of foster children who are being assisted. Members will be aware that in some areas this support is provided through provincial departments of welfare, while in others it is the responsibility of children's aid societies. The costs covered will include all of those indicated in the definition of assistance, among them maintenance costs, any special needs that the children may have and costs of health care.

There has been a good deal of interest lately in the question of institutional care for children, particularly for the retarded and the emotionally disturbed. The bill covers institutions for children which are under welfare auspices and where the program emphasizes social rather than medical treatment services.

I come now to the provisions of the legislation that are concerned with welfare services. It is the intention that these provisions should be used to support a broadly based attack on the causes and effects of poverty, child neglect and dependence upon public assistance. In this way the plan can be given a preventive and rehabilitative emphasis that has been lacking in federal-provincial public assistance measures up to the present.

In discussing welfare services, I would like to comment particularly on some of the kinds of service that will be covered. An essential component will be rehabilitation services such as counselling, casework, assessment and referral designed to help those with family and social problems find solutions to them before they lead to family breakdown and dependence on public assistance. They will also encompass efforts to break the cycle of dependency that exists in some families, and enable those receiving assistance to regain their capacities for self-support. We are hopeful that these services will be effective in enabling such persons to make use of the other community resources, such as those being developed through the department of manpower and immigration.

Also included are child welfare services, including child protection, adoption services and supervision of foster home care. In addition to supporting higher levels of service in these areas it is our hope that the plan will be used to develop an integrated approach to the solution of family problems, be they economic or otherwise.

A somewhat different group of services are those such as homemakers and day-care services which can play an important supportive role. I have already referred to the contribution that will be available for home care programs as an alternative to institutional care. Through the use of improved day-care services it is our hope that many mothers will be able to contribute to their own support when it is their wish to do so.

During the debate on the resolution, reference was made to the critical shortage of trained staff to man the welfare services. Federal support for staff training, both on an in-service basis and in schools of social work, has been available through the welfare grants program since 1962. Contributions will also be available for staff training and development under the plan. Also included will be costs of consultation, research and evaluation in recognition of the part these functions play in developing programs to meet changing needs.

Support under the plan will extend to welfare services that are offered by what are referred to as provincially approved agencies. In addition to provincial departments of welfare, they may include municipalities and voluntary organizations that have been given responsibility for providing any of the kinds of service to which I have referred. In this way the provinces can recognize that, along with welfare departments, voluntary agencies can play a significant part in a total community effort. As I mentioned earlier, an important emphasis in the plan is upon extension and improvement of welfare services.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

In line with this, the formula in the legislation provides for contributions for costs in excess of those incurred during 1964-65.

I would now like to turn briefly to the provisions of the bill relating to Indian welfare. Members of the house will be aware of the federal-provincial discussions that have taken place with a view to extending provincial services to Indians on the same basis as to other residents. The objective in part II of the legislation is to secure access to the welfare services being offered to the balance of the population for those Indians to whom they are not now available, or who receive them under a number of ad hoc agreements. The programs that part II contemplates include financial assistance, institutional care, child care and other welfare services. The Indians to whom services may be extended include those who are living on reserves, on crown land or in territory that does not have municipal organization.

As I indicated during my earlier remarks, the plan will provide authority to enter agreements under which the provinces can assume administrative responsibility in this area without incurring burdensome costs. An agreement format tabled on January 19 indicated the approach that we have proposed to the provinces. Under it, the federal government would bear the full costs of providing assistance and welfare services for Indians to the extent that these exceed the per capita costs for the balance of the population in a province. Costs up to this level will be shared on a matching basis. An agreement covering assistance and welfare services has already been entered into with the province of Ontario and we anticipate that other provinces will take the same step.

I would like to emphasize, as has been done on previous occasions, that welfare assistance and services will not be extended to Indians under such an agreement unless the council of a band involved has indicated its consent. On the other hand, provinces will not be expected to extend welfare services to Indians on reserves or in unorganized territory unless they have entered into an agreement under this part. The provinces will, of course, continue as in the past to provide assistance and welfare services to Indians who have established residence in municipalities.

I would like now, Mr. Speaker, to refer to the provisions of the legislation that are concerned with work activity projects. Welfare authorities in several provinces have expressed the view that there is a need for new ways of helping persons who may appear to be able to work but who, because of personal and family circumstances or problems of motivation, are not able to obtain or hold employment or take advantage of the training and rehabilitation resources that are already available in the community.

The types of project that this part foresees will be experimental. We are hopeful, however, that under it measures can be developed through which sound work habits can be attained within a setting which provides counselling and similar welfare services. Similar efforts are being made in other countries; examples are the re-establishment centres which are operated by the National Assistance Board in the United Kingdom and the work experience programs in the United States.

It is also proposed that this part of the plan should be used to provide work for persons with physical or mental handicaps who can be employed if given an opportunity to develop their potential. These will include the retarded and the severely handicapped who can be helped to engage in some form of productive activity. Contributions will be made toward the salaries of personnel operating such projects and allowances paid to participants in them.

Agreements made under this part will contain safeguards to provide assurance that projects are not used to limit the right of any person in need to assistance and provisions under which welfare services will be made available as required. Because of the relationship of these measures to manpower programs, arrangements are included for close co-ordination of the administration of this part of the bill with those services.

Parts IV and V of the legislation have the effect of amending several associated statutes. Significant among these are the amendments to the Old Age Assistance Act, the Blind Persons Act, and the Disabled Persons Act that are referred to in part V. As I have indicated previously, the provinces may if they wish discontinue their old age assistance and blind and disabled persons allowance programs and assist the groups now covered by them under a comprehensive needs test measure coming within the scope of the plan.

Part V covers the steps that this transition may involve. A province may indicate its intention to cease accepting new applications while continuing to provide categorical benefits to those now receiving allowances. Alternatively, a province may cease taking applications and also undertake to transfer those in the existing caseload that can qualify under its integrated program. If the latter step is taken, part V provides that transfers may be made only when the recipient will receive at least as much under the new program as he was receiving previously.

Part IV has the effect of removing from the Unemployment Assistance Act the exclusion of mothers' allowances that it now contains. This change will enable the provinces to receive the funds that the plan provides for assistance to needy mothers with effect from April 1, 1966, and will authorize this reimbursement without waiting for agreements to be signed under the plan.

Part IV also extends the contracting-out provisions of the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act to the Canada Assistance Plan. As I mentioned during the debate on the resolution, this is consistent with existing arrangements since the plan will cover the area now referred to in the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act as the "special welfare program." That program is made up of unemployment assistance, old age assistance, blind persons allowances and disabled persons allowances.

Several hon. members have spoken at length on the question of income support for the aged as it relates to the plan. What has not been recognized in some instances is that the Canada Assistance Plan is a program for persons in need in all age groups.

No modern industrial nation, no matter what other range of social security measures it may have, has been able to dispense with a general social assistance program. Universal flat-rate payments and social insurance programs are in every case complemented by social assistance provisions. Many hon. members of this house, and others before them, have spoken of the need in Canada to improve our social assistance programs as a part of the social security structure. You have before you now a measure that will do just that. We are in general agreement, I believe, that we should do our best to minimize the reliance on social assistance, but that objective must not deter us from proceeding with the development of a sound and effective public assistance program.

This government and others of this party have clearly demonstrated their commitment to the continuing development of universal flat-rate benefit programs and social insurance measures. I need only refer to the record of previous Liberal governments in introducing programs such as family allowances, old age security, unemployment insurance and hospital insurance.

Since coming to office, this government has shown its determination to improve Canada's social security programs. Within the past three years, youth allowances have been implemented and the Canada Pension Plan has been introduced. Expenditures on old age security have been increased from $755 million in 1963-64 to $1,035 million in this fiscal year—an increase of $280 million or 37 per cent in expenditures. This has been the result of improvements in the rate of benefits and the extension of protection to another 100,000 persons heretofore not covered. Before you now is a health resources fund bill, and within a few days you will have the bill for a medicare program.

Thus, while narrowing the scope of need to be met by public assistance, we are taking positive action to improve assistance and welfare service programs through the legislation before you.

I have already referred to the support and endorsement of the plan that has been given by the provinces and to one example—that of Ontario—of steps being taken by provinces in anticipation of this legislation. I could cite many other examples of such action. Newfoundland increased its social assistance rates some months ago in the knowledge that the plan was being developed, and new social assistance acts that will provide for more generous assistance on the basis of need have been enacted by the legislatures of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Quebec has introduced a program to provide physicians' services for assistance recipients and has increased its mothers' allowance rates.

The measures being introduced in Ontario include family benefits legislation to provide assistance on an integrated basis as proposed under the plan. Saskatchewan adopted a comprehensive assistance plan on April 1, 1966 and has increased assistance rates. The province of Alberta has adopted legislation for the purpose of encouraging the development of preventive welfare services in the community.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

These are specific indications that the federal commitment to introduce the Canada Assistance Plan has already resulted in action to improve assistance and welfare service programs. They are also indicative of the value of close federal-provincial consultation in planning in the field of social programs.

I think it would be appropriate for me, in closing, to refer to the public support that has been given to the plan. It has been warmly received by the Canadian Welfare Council and its associated body, the Canadian Public Welfare Association, which have stated that they "are pleased to see that Canada is on the threshold of a necessary step in the development of its social security system". A similar view has been expressed by the Canadian Labour Congress, and perhaps I could quote briefly from its memorandum to the federal government, presented in February of this year.

It said:

> We welcome the advent of the Canada Assistance Plan. We consider it to be an improvement over the categorical assistance programs now in effect. We agree that the change from a means to a needs-tested benefit, however subtle the difference may seem, will provide greater opportunities to provide an adequate benefit to those who will require assistance. We commend you for your decision to share with the provinces in the costs of allowances for needy mothers and medical care for the indigent, as well as the cost of improving administrative standards and of strengthening those rehabilitative services which will help to restore social assistance beneficiaries to a position where they are self-supporting.

In asking for the support of the house for second reading of the bill, may I express my confidence that it will bring about the development of welfare programs across Canada that are humane, effective and have a positive emphasis.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister to clarify a point with reference to provinces which provide health services for categories such as the recipients of old age assistance and mothers' allowances who, because they are in those groups, are automatically in need. Will this legislation now make it possible for the federal government to share the cost of those programs in its entirety or will it deal only with each individual case?

Mr. MacEachen: I am not sure whether I understand the question put by the hon. member, but it is proposed that the federal government will share in the whole range of medical services for any person in receipt of assistance on the basis of need.

Mr. Douglas: I recognize that the federal government will share any medical services given to an individual in need, but will it share in the program undertaken by the provinces to provide health services to an entire category, for instance health services provided to recipients of old age assistance or mothers' allowances?

Mr. MacEachen: Obviously there is a relationship between this program and the advent of the medical care program for the total population. It is expected that when medicare is available in general and when the federal government will share in providing health services to the total population, the contributions under the Canada Assistance Plan will be suspended, but the coverage for persons in need will be continued and will be shared by the federal government in every province until a medicare program comes into effect.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder whether the hon. member will be agreeable to continuing his remarks at this time?

Mr. Rynard: I move the adjournment of the debate.

• (10:00 p.m.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow I should like to submit to the house a number of bills with the idea that they could be sent to the other place for consideration by them as early as possible. I would, therefore, list the following items for consideration tomorrow: item 45 on the order paper, the Canada Assistance Plan bill; item 77, the second reading and other stages of the Atlantic Development bill; then item 62, the Canadian Film Development Corporation bill; item 76, the crop insurance bill; item 49, the public utilities transfer tax bill; item 55, The Company of Young Canadians bill; item 62, the national arts centre bill; item 51, the public service and other superannuation acts bill; item 72, the Exchequer Court bill; then the Canadian livestock feed resolution and legislation.

I should like to ask that tomorrow hon. members be prepared to take these measures not necessarily in the order I have indicated, so that if there is an opportunity of having some bills go through fairly quickly early in the day to be dealt with in the other place we can do so. This would then leave two items, the medicare resolution and the Bank Act resolution to be dealt with. If we could follow that program, I think it would be helpful.

Mr. Starr: May I just say a word about this? If the government house leader would not take the Canada assistance bill first, but rather others that might go through quickly and get them over to the other place, then that would leave the Canada assistance bill for later in the day.

Mr. McIlraith: Later in the afternoon; I would be quite agreeable to that, if we could get some of the smaller bills over to the other place.

Mr. Knowles: If we are going to do that, could we not be told tonight which would be the first three or four pieces of legislation with which we would be dealing tomorrow?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes; other than the Canada assistance plan, we would take perhaps the Atlantic Development Board legislation; The Company of Young Canadians bill; the national arts centre bill; third reading of the public utilities transfer tax legislation; and the small bill concerning the Exchequer Court. I hope some of the legal members here would take a look at it because it is a very simple measure and could go through quickly.

Mr. Knowles: Is that the understanding, that we will take those five and then revert to the Canada assistance plan?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, it would be my idea we would revert to the Canada assistance plan some time in the latter part of the afternoon.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Why not get the superannuation bills through?

Mr. McIlraith: If we take those five first and then we could bring forward the Canada assistance plan bill. Hon. members appreciate what the problem is. We want to try to get as many bills as will not take a long time to debate here completed, and over to the other place tomorrow afternoon.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS—WEST INDIES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON CUSTOMS UNION

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I rise to put again a question which is of considerable importance I think to this country. I wish to ask what action the government contemplates taking in the immediate weeks ahead with respect to a great opportunity that our country faces in terms of its international trade.

On June 13 I asked in the house whether the Prime Minister, in light of the meeting to be held shortly in Ottawa with representatives and heads of government of the British West Indies, could not tell us whether the government was contemplating some form of customs union with the islands involved.

At a later date we had one hour's debate during private members hour about this, and we discussed in part the importance of such a proposal to the future economic trade of our nation, and to the future development of the islands known as the Little Eight, namely the Leeward and Windward islands of the British West Indies.

Perhaps I should put on the record the names of the islands concerned. They are the islands of Antigua, St. Kitts, Montserrat, Dominica, St. Lucia, St. Vincent and Granada. The land area of these islands is about half that of Prince Edward Island. Their population is close to 700,000.

As I say, there is to be a conference in Ottawa between July 6 and July 8. It is believed by many of the representatives of these islands that there will be considered in Ottawa the possibility of far reaching economic and customs ties. I know for a fact that the Minister of Transport has made at least three trips to the islands and has shown considerable interest in the proposal I have referred to. I believe he has given encouragement to the whole idea.

Indeed, at the conclusion of the private members hour dealing with this question the other day the Minister of Public Works said this:

> With your indulgence I should like to say something about the subject matter of the debate that has taken place in the last hour. The government will take cognizance of the apparent unanimity in respect of this important subject matter. It is of importance and concern to the government and is receiving active consideration. I might say that I have a personal interest in this subject, having had a somewhat similar motion on the order paper some years ago.

I heartily support the minister's interest.

Because we have this interest that has been expressed in this way, and because it will not be long before these islands have virtual independence, it is of great importance that we be assured publicly that the government of Canada is moving in the direction that I have suggested. I can see that if the government takes far reaching action in the early days of July, without first having informed public opinion, the public might not be prepared for this kind of activity and might resent it. We all know what happens when public opinion is not informed and directed in the right way.

Time is running out. Representatives of the West Indies governments have come to Canada, almost cap in hand, in order to determine what our government's position on this matter is. We must have a statement either from the Prime Minister or from his representative. We must be put much more into the picture as to what action our government plans to take in this regard.

Mr. P.-E. Trudeau (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Prince has expressed amazement in his suggestion that the government has been somewhat laconic about its relations with the commonwealth countries of the West Indies. I will try to put an end to that amazement by stating the following:

The high importance attached by the present government to Canada's economic relations with the commonwealth countries in the Caribbean is well demonstrated by the initiative which it has taken in co-operation with those countries to hold a meeting of prime ministers and chief ministers from the commonwealth Caribbean countries and Canada in Ottawa in less than a fortnight's time. At the forthcoming conference much attention will be given to the question of the best basis for trade relations between that area and Canada.

The 1926 agreement between those countries or territories and Canada has served well the interests of all participants in the circumstances which have existed since it was negotiated. The problem of working out the best form of trade relations is not a simple one. A customs union would have important implications of various kinds which would clearly require the most careful examination by all prospective participants. Other arrangements would have different implications. We should be prepared to examine any reasonable proposal. The fact that the economies of the Caribbean countries and Canada are complementary means that the trading potentialities are very considerable. It is important that these possibilities be developed for the benefit of all the countries concerned.

The political and economic situation has changed considerably since the 1926 agreement was concluded. Any arrangement which might be negotiated now, even more than in 1926, should show full respect for the integrity of all the participants and should reflect the interests of all the countries involved.

At the forthcoming meetings the house can be sure that the Canadian government's approach will be practical and yet farsighted. It will aim to deal effectively with any current difficulties which might be impeding trade. At the same time the Canadian delegation will not overlook any fruitful possibilities for expanding trade to the benefit of all the participants.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—MEDICAL ASSOCIATION REQUEST FOR COMPULSORY BREATHALIZER TESTS

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): On June 15 I asked a question on the orders of the day which was ruled out of order by Mr. Speaker. The question was as follows:

> Is the Minister of Justice aware of the action taken yesterday by the Canadian Medical Association in calling for compulsory breathalizer tests for impaired drivers in view of the urgent national problem involved in the slaughter on Canadian highways.

Since that time, in fact almost one week later, on June 21, what appears to me to have been the greatest Canadian assembly of federal, provincial and industrial highway safety experts ever to meet in Ottawa has placed itself on record unanimously in support of legislation for compulsory breathalizer tests.

In emphasizing the urgency of the question I tried to ask I wish to point out that in the six or seven days between the day I asked my question and the day the safety conference approved the breathalizer tests on a mandatory basis, some 90 Canadians have been killed in traffic accidents and some 2,900 injured in traffic accidents. Property damage amounted in those seven days to about $12 million.

It is estimated that between one third and one half of all traffic accidents involve people who had been using alcohol. Breathalizer tests are provided for in the Criminal Code on a permissive basis. They are recognized as being foolproof and accurate when conducted by experts under regulations which are scrupulously fair to those subjecting themselves to the tests. The trouble is that the permissive character of the law at the present time enables the hardened drinking driver to escape their effect. He declines to take the test. In other words, while it recognizes the efficiency of the tests the present law does nothing to put drivers on an equal basis when it comes to taking the test. It does nothing to safeguard the rights of the ordinary citizen but it does something to safeguard the privileges of the drinking driver.

Further to the urgency of my question, I point out that Canada has the world's worst traffic accident rate of all countries reporting to the United Nations World Health Organization. We stand either 25th or 26th on the list. It is notable that the Scandinavian countries, which have much more realistic drinking while driving laws than we have, have a record of traffic safety that puts our country to shame.

In asking the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) if he is aware of the need and the growing pressure for legislation to make breathalizer tests mandatory in cases of impaired driving, I do not do so without having regard for the fact that in some circles there is criticism against this proposal on the ground that it interferes with the civil liberties of the person involved.

My contention, and it is supported by many people in many walks of life, in safety organizations, in the legal sphere, and throughout other states, is that the impartial breathalizer test no more interferes with the individual's civil liberties than do such things as the taking of fingerprints or the mandatory production at the scene of an accident of drivers' licences, or the mandatory inspection of the vehicles involved in an accident. I conclude by urging the minister to be prepared to back up the findings and the wishes of these neutral traffic safety people who met recently in Ottawa.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the hon. member that we on this side of the house appreciate the importance of the traffic death toll on our highways and of the means that should be taken to try to reduce its incidence. As the hon. member knows, many witnesses were called to the hearings of the standing committee on justice and legal affairs which inquired into this matter. They heard such witnesses as Dr.

Ward Smith from the Attorney General's office in Toronto give testimony on the different aspects of the breathalizer test.

We have also read newspaper reports about blood tests and how much more easily they can be performed now. May I assure the hon. member that the remarks he has made this evening on the subject will receive the attention of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) and his officials, to whom I shall direct them tomorrow.

IMMIGRATION—APPLICATIONS FOR ADMISSION BY THOSE WITH VISITORS' VISAS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, on June 16 I asked the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Marchand) a question as to when he would be able to announce government policy in respect to the many thousands of non-immigrants who have applied for permanent immigration to Canada and whose status is in suspense, and I welcome the opportunity to expand on that question tonight.

It affects the whole system of immigration and its administration, and it is of great importance to thousands of people now resident in Canada, and their families. A serious administrative mess has developed in regard to this matter.

On March 7, as recorded at page 2323 of Hansard, when speaking on the estimates of the department, I raised this same question and said:

> As the minister will have found out, for many months now and perhaps a year or two the government have been saying they were going to make up their mind on what to do in the case of visitors who come into this country as visitors with non-immigrant visas, and apply to stay in this country. As the minister knows, there is a great backlog of cases awaiting decision while the department makes up its mind in respect of what to do with these visitors.

I went on to say:

> This is a serious question because if an immigrant enters in an easygoing way he bypasses those who remain in their country and comply with the regulations in the normal manner.
>
> • (10:20 p.m.)
> I appreciate that this is not fair—

I went on to say that there were many many cases in which the department was saying "we cannot decide on your status; we will not let you in or turn you out; we have not made up our mind".

> I hope the minister will be able to come up with a policy in respect of these visitors. I tell the minister it is common knowledge among some ethnic groups that would-be immigrants should not try to obtain an immigrant's visa through the normal channels but rather should gain admittance to this country as visitors because they perhaps may be able to stay here.

Then the minister in reply to this debate on March 7 at page 2327 of Hansard said:

> I think that very soon, and I hope that it will be within a few weeks . . . we will be able to deal with this situation under which visiting Canada has now become a normal means of coming as an immigrant . . .
>
> It is a hypocritical situation which explains why in Canada there are probably several thousands, possibly tens of thousands of visitors who came to Canada with the intention of staying.
>
> We shall probably advise you, since it can be done according to the rules, on a policy to deal with this situation.
> It is utterly unbearable. Mr. Chairman, as long as I am Minister of Immigration, which will probably not be for long but still while I am, we shall attempt to set up a policy. But once it is drawn up, we shall have to accept it.

It is now more than 3½ months later and the minister has announced no policy. The situation grows worse. We are told there are 20,000 people in this state of suspension, some of them no doubt bona fide visitors, who have come to this country and who after they arrived were offered jobs or became engaged to be married to Canadians, and then changed their minds and decided to stay. However, there are many others who came to this country as visitors because they did not want to come in formally and apply in the necessary manner. When they are here they get a job and are left in a state of suspension. They cannot bring in their families and even though they are planning to strike roots in Canada, they do not know whether or not later on they will be thrown out. I wonder whether it will be possible to throw them out.

This situation is being exploited. Among the immigrants I have heard it said that travel agencies sometimes will say to people, "All right, we will get you a work permit for $50" or "Apply as soon as you come to Canada, and when you are working you pay us $500". I do not know how frequently these things happen, but I have heard of this type of thing quite a few times.

The minister may not be at fault, and of course his charm is such that we hesitate to think he is at fault. However, it is high time that the cabinet of which he is a member made up its mind in respect of this matter. Maybe the minister has made proposals and the government will not undertake them. The present situation is unfair to those who administer the act. Let the parliamentary secretary ask anybody in this field; it is unfair to those who accept the rules of the game, apply as immigrants and go through all the careful investigation this implies. It is unfair to those whose status is kept in doubt month after month and who are subject to exploitation and often are separated from their families.

I hope the parliamentary secretary will convey to the minister the urgent importance of this matter. It is part of the duty of the cabinet and the government, which has been given responsibility by parliament to deal with this sort of problem and deal with it soon.

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I believe the minister and the government, as well as myself with the constituency I have, are aware of the difficulty which flows from the number of non-immigrants who are being left in an indefinite status. It is very unfortunate.

I do not wish just to repeat what has already been said, but I do believe with a good deal of conviction that the decision on this matter which the hon. member is looking for is in fact going to be made very shortly.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.27 p.m.

FINANCE

PROPOSED PURCHASE FROM U.S. RESIDENTS OF INTERNATIONAL BANK SECURITIES

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief announcement related to the supplementary estimates which are being tabled shortly. It will be recalled that last December we entered into certain understandings with the United States concerning the application of their balance of payments guide lines program to Canada. I described these at length in the house on January 27. As part of these understandings we agreed that it would be appropriate for Canada's foreign exchange reserve position to fluctuate around a specified level.

As I explained in the house, I agreed with the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States that the government of Canada would be prepared, if necessary, to buy outstanding Canadian securities held in the United States to offset any excess flow of United States capital to Canada and thus maintain the net flow of capital at the level required to finance our balance of payments deficit. This was done in order to permit Canadian borrowers to continue to have full access to the long term issue market in the United States.

I informed the house on January 27 that we had purchased $40 million worth of government of Canada external bonds from holders in the United States. I have now to inform the house that within the last few days we have purchased a further $100 million United States worth of the issue of government of Canada bonds that mature in 1987. Of this amount $69 million will be delivered in June and $31 million in July. When this transaction is completed we will have acquired most of the bonds of this issue that were outstanding in December. It is possible that we may find it desirable to acquire further securities held in the United States to carry out our understanding with the United States government to which I have referred.

Since the understanding was reached with the United States in December, and announced in January, the United States bond market has declined. The lower bond prices make the repurchase of Canadian securities more attractive from our point of view, but we find it has made the institutions holding them reluctant to sell at prices that involve a book loss. In these circumstances we feel we should have authority to purchase a greater range of securities, more widely held, that will still enable us to accomplish the purpose we had in mind.

We have found that we can accomplish the purpose that both governments were seeking by purchasing outstanding securities of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development that are held by United States residents. Such purchases constitute a movement of capital to the United States offsetting the flow of capital to Canada involved in the sale of new Canadian issues in the United States market.

We are therefore asking authority in the estimates to enable us to purchase such securities for this purpose. This will give us some flexibility in carrying out the arrangement we made with the United States government should the over-all Canadian balance of payments be such as to require further action to attain the objective on which we agreed. I am confident that members of the house and others will agree that the bonds issued by the International Bank are an eminently good investment.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the long range effect of the government's policy as enunciated today, and as earlier enunciated in January, is rather too serious a matter for any off the cuff comment. It does indicate to me, however, that there is perhaps an over-cautious concern with the balance of payments problem which is something we have inherited since 1963 as a result of the agreement the then minister of finance entered into with the United States, and as a result of the interest equalization problem and our own cost of living or inflationary problem in this country.

I think the two are very closely related, but unfortunately far more attention is being paid to our obligation under the balance of payments problem than to the cost of living. It is all very well to benefit the United States authorities and the United States government, but in the interval the Canadian public is having to take it in the neck as the cost of living goes up day by day.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the announcement of the Minister of Finance of course merely tends to again underline the fact that now we have literally no control over our monetary policy in Canada; it is now completely out of our hands. One weapon of governmental operation has been removed. I suggest to the minister that sooner or later he will have to face this problem of control of our monetary policy and seriously consider removing ourselves from the fixed exchange rate and going back to a floating exchange rate. I understand, of course, quite well that we would have some difficulty with the International Monetary Fund, but I am convinced this fund would not expel Canada from its ranks if we took the action which is becoming increasingly important and necessary.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I will not hide the fact that we are somewhat surprised to hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) tell us that the government now wants to redeem, before maturity, the Canadian bonds held by Americans.

The Minister of Finance does not tell us where he will get the money to redeem those bonds. He announces supplementary estimates. Will this be taken out of the people's taxes? Will we have to borrow elsewhere to redeem the bonds held by American citizens? If we are in a position today to redeem those bonds before maturity, why then did we borrow from the Americans when we did?

Mr. Speaker, our balance of payments problem stems, not from our trade, for in that respect we have a favourable balance of payments, but from the fact that too much money leaves Canada for the United States in interest, dividends and profits. From 75 to 80 per cent of our natural resources and industry is held by Americans, and we send them profits, interest and dividends: that is the source of our difficulties.

Mr. Speaker, we, Créditistes, have been saying this for a long time: we have the Bank of Canada; let us use it, instead of the United States, to develop both our natural resources and our industries. Then our profits, our interest, our dividends will stay in Canada, and we will not have the problems which confront us today.

So, Mr. Speaker, I say to the Minister of Finance that the financial affairs of the Canadian government are going in the wrong direction at the present time.

It is time to take another direction, to find a new source of capital. Let us stop all that borrowing from the United States to develop our industry and our natural resources. We have our own natural wealth in Canada.

Let us instead resort to the Bank of Canada to develop our natural resources and then we would not always be in the mess we are in today, a mess of trade deficit due to the fact that all the profits are going to the United States.

Mr. Speaker, now that he is faced with these problems the Minister of Finance should consider the solutions we in the Social Credit have been suggesting for a long time and, by so doing I am sure that he would no longer be faced with such problems.

We are buying back our bonds, so much the better, we are bringing our capital back home. But at the same time, the Minister of Finance should also let us know where he is getting the money from in order to purchase such Canadian government bonds held by United States citizens.

That is what the minister fails to say. He informs us about all the rest, but he skips the essential part. Once again, this is a watered down statement, hiding God knows what, a half-baked statement. We are not being enlightened, we are being blindfolded even more.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESTRICTING USE OF FIREARMS

Mr. Fernand Leblanc (Laurier) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-214, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (Firearms).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to restrict the use of firearms. The federal government is duty bound to co-operate with all police forces of Canada and financial institutions, in order to check the crime wave which makes as many human victims as financial victims.

It is obvious that the provincial and federal Departments of Justice must unite their efforts and co-operate as closely as possible. The fight against crime should be among the priorities of governments at every level.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN ATTITUDE TOWARD ADMISSION OF MAINLAND CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, over the week end the Prime Minister made a speech in Toronto on the subject of nuclear weapons. Among other things, an interpretation has been given to his words that communist China must be admitted to the United Nations. Would the Prime Minister say whether this is a decision of the government; and in view of the session of the United Nations that will take place in September, before parliament will have any further opportunity to discuss this matter, would the Prime Minister say whether Canada intends this year to vote at the United Nations for the admission of communist China?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I do not have with me the text of what I said, because I could read those sentences which would indicate that I was talking about the desirability, indeed the indispensability, of having the Chinese communist government represented at any disarmament conference if that conference was to be effective in its results.

There was no reference to communist China's admission to the United Nations. That is a matter, of course, for consideration at the forthcoming assembly in the light of developments there and the way in which it is put before the assembly. Our position on this matter has been, I think, made quite clear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The clarity is of such a nature that the only interpretation of the Prime Minister's remarks that I have seen in the press has been that the government intends to vote for the admission of communist China. Now I ask the Prime Minister, does the government intend so to do? Otherwise his speeches have a capacity for misinterpretation that beggars description.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman's conclusions, as is often the case, are quite unwarranted from the context of what I said. I will be very glad to send him the text. The policy of the government in this matter will be announced, and it will be announced in the house if the house is sitting.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is there, within the cabinet, a shadow cabinet on this matter, too, that gives advice from outside?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question supplementary to the one put by the Leader of the Opposition. The Prime Minister indicated that the government's position on the admission of communist China to the UN was made clear. Then in the last part of his answer he indicated that the government's intention on this matter will be announced. Would the Prime Minister indicate why, if the government's position on the matter has already been made clear, it should be necessary to announce a change in the attitude of the government?

LABOUR RELATIONS

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION TO PROTECT PICKETING RIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that some workers have been imprisoned as the result of a dispute between Tilco Plastics Ltd., Peterborough, and its employees, I want to ask the Prime Minister whether he is prepared to introduce legislation which will guarantee to the workers of this country the basic rights of peaceful picketing and lawful assembly.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): That is a very important question, Mr. Speaker, of far reaching significance and I am sure my hon. friend would not expect me to answer it on the orders of the day. The issue which has arisen and the form in which it has arisen has been discussed by the Minister of Labour and myself, and we will be continuing to discuss it in the light of developments.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE ORGANIZED CRIME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. I would like to know whether he has received a request from the new Quebec minister of justice for a fight against organized crime?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. Minister of Justice.

Following the publication of the last annual report of the Ontario Police Commission which recognizes the existence of an organized crime union in Ontario, Quebec and elsewhere in Canada, is the hon. minister giving more definite consideration to the establishment of a royal commission on organized crrime in co-operation with the provinces?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, this question concerns the Solicitor General.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SALARY INCREASES FOR CLASS B EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the government house leader but in his absence perhaps I could direct it to the Prime Minister. In view of the announcement that pay raises will soon be given to 48,000 class B civil service employees, I wonder if the government could indicate whether measures are being taken to ensure that House of Commons employees who fall in this classification will receive their raises prior to the recess of this house.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I cannot answer that question, Mr. Speaker, because I do not know when the house will recess.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF VISIT BY MR. RONNING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that during the last few days numerous reports have been coming from United States sources, one of them being Mr. George Ball, under secretary of state, concerning the details of Mr. Ronning's recent visit to Viet Nam, can the Secretary of State for External Affairs enlighten the members of the house in some detail concerning exactly what did take place during Mr. Ronning's recent visit to Hanoi?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have nothing to add to what I have already said; but since my hon. friend refers to a reported statement of Mr. George Ball I will have to examine that statement. I did not know he made it.

Mr. Churchill: It was in the London Times.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ALBERTA—REQUEST FOR A CHANGE OF SIGNS ON POST OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Postmaster General.

Can the minister tell us whether he has received any representations from two Conservative members of Alberta to have the signs changed on an Alberta post office so as to indicate that English has priority over French?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is not urgent and cannot be put at this time.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, it is urgent because the signs have just been changed and as long as they are allowed to stay as they are now, it shows—

Mr. Speaker: Order. They can always be changed later.

GRAIN

WHEAT—SHIPMENTS TO RUSSIA THROUGH CHURCHILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday in answer to a question the minister mentioned that in the contract signed between the wheat board and the Soviet union, provision is made for shipments to go through Churchill if that is the wish of the U.S.S.R. Can the minister say whether the officials of the U.S.S.R. were made fully aware of the beneficial savings which could be made by them in accepting some of this wheat through Churchill?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Yes, I can assure my hon. friend that we are all great proponents of the port of Churchill.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Speaker, my question was whether the Russians were made aware of the savings that can be made by them.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can give the hon. member that assurance also.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): My question is supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Would the Minister of Finance not arrange for the Russian delegation to tour the port of Churchill so they can see for themselves the benefits they will gain by accepting shipments of wheat out of that port?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am sure Your Honour has heard the question.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INCREASES IN PROVINCIAL WELFARE PAYMENTS TO BE CONSIDERED AS INCOME

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): I wish to address a question to the Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs. Can he tell me whether any veterans, especially in Prince Edward Island, who are in receipt of war veterans allowance have been informed by D.V.A. that if they accept any increase in the old age assistance or other welfare benefits paid by the provincial government these benefits will be considered as income, and therefore their war veterans allowances will be reduced by the same amount?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Acting Minister of Veterans Affairs): May I take this question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

OIL

INQUIRY AS TO REVISION OF NATIONAL POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Ballard (Calgary South): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Will the minister please advise us when we may expect a statement from him respecting the updating of the national oil policy? Will he advise us what goals will be set, and the dates on which these goals are to be achieved?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): That would require a speech, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

PURCHASE OF EQUITIES IN U.S. COMPANIES IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South): I wish to address my question to the Minister of Finance with regard to the statement he made earlier today. In view of the fact that the minister will be seeking permission to purchase other securities in the United States in addition to the ones we have been buying, will he also seek permission to purchase equity in United States owned companies in Canada as a better way of repatriating United States funds and helping them with their balance of payments?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Whatever merit there may be in that suggestion, it would not have the effect desired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that tomorrow is the day when written questions are answered and since there is one question that has been on the order paper since January, four since February, ten since March, 15 since April and 48 since May, and particularly in view of the fact that starred question No. 1500 has been on the order paper since May 16, will he not prevail upon his ministers to answer these questions?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be glad to do so. May I point out that I was looking up the questions today and I noticed that of the first 1,000 questions, 992 have been answered.

Mr. Starr: They should all have been answered, not just some.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Sometimes the last eight are the important ones.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON LABOUR DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to ask the Minister of Labour whether he is in a position to advise us with regard to the position of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers concerning the C.N.R. offer of a wage increase of 9.2 per cent on behalf of the 22,000 non-operating railway employees.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this matter is presently before a conciliation board, and it would hardly be proper for me to make a statement at this time.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the minister not know that the union told the board that it rejected the offer?

I will then ask the minister this question. In view of the settlements that were made in connection with the stevedore strike in Montreal and the threatened lake strike, has the government come to the conclusion that a 30 per cent wage increase over a period of two years is one that would maintain the line against inflation?

Mr. Nicholson: Certainly not, Mr. Speaker. Each one of these cases is dealt with by the conciliation board concerned on its own merits.

Mr. Diefenbaker: These cases I have mentioned were not dealt with by the conciliation board until the intervention of the Prime Minister.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STEPS TO ENSURE HOLIDAY ON JULY 1

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): My question is addressed to the Minister of Labour. In view of the difficulties which arose with respect to the longshoremen in Vancouver seeking a holiday on Victoria day as provided for under the Canada labour code, I wonder what steps the minister has taken to make sure the same difficulties do not arise with respect to the observance of July 1.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that the matter is receiving top priority attention by the minister.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—ACCEPTANCE BY PROVINCES OF CONDITIONS RESPECTING FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare arising out of the notice in yesterdays Votes and Proceedings that the minister intends to propose a measure authorizing the federal government to make contributions to the provinces for medical care insurance plans. I wish to ask the minister whether any or all of the provinces have agreed to the conditions under which these payments will be made by the federal government.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): All have not agreed.

Mr. Olson: Will the minister tell the house how many have and how many have not agreed to the conditions?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It does seem to me this is the type of information which should be requested when this matter comes before the house.

PENSIONS

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION REGULATING PRIVATE PLANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Now that all but one of the legislative items, notice of which has been promised for the session prior to the recess, are before us, can the minister say when this other one will be placed on the order paper? I refer to the pension benefits legislation.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure just when this measure will be on the order paper; we are working on the legislation. I thought the hon. gentleman was perhaps going to ask when the income tax bill will be on the order paper. That will be on even sooner.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of commitments over the last several months that this legislation would be on the order paper soon, can it not be put on the order paper before we recess?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question as asked now is argumentative.

WATER RESOURCES

REQUEST FOR FURTHER COMMITTEE APPEARANCE BY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. In view of the fact that the proceedings before the industry, research and energy development committee have prematurely been closed off, is the minister prepared to appear before some other committee to allow questions to be asked on water resources and pollution?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, the committee proceedings may have been closed off, but that is not the fault of the minister. I am not the master of decisions taken by committees of this house. As far as I am concerned, I tried this morning to answer all the questions. I was willing to go on for two or three hours, but we were told that the hon. member who has just asked the question was too busy and had to be somewhere else at eleven.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The minister has not made a complete statement as to what happened in the committee this morning. There was a request—

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Aiken: I have the right to state the facts. There was a request that the minister return to the committee on Thursday so the hon. member for Kamloops, who is away today, could ask questions in connection with water resources and pollution. Likewise I had some further questions to ask. The committee completed its proceedings, but I rise merely to point out that it was not just myself involved but another member as well who also wanted to complete his questioning of the minister this morning.

Mr. Pepin: I will try to answer any question at any time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

DISCUSSION OF FLOOD CONTROL WITH U.S. INTERIOR SECRETARY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys whether, in future consultations with the United States Secretary of the Interior, he and Mr. Udall intend to go beyond the subject of water pollution and look also at the problems of flooding and flood control.

Mr. Speaker: Order, I suggest to the hon. member that he might want to place that question on the order paper.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST THAT P.F.A.A. EMPLOYEES BE BROUGHT UNDER ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I will direct to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that the permanent employees responsible for the administration of the Prairie Farm Assistance Act do not have the benefits provided under the Civil Service Act, would the minister consider bringing this important group of federal employees under this act?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that this is a matter of general policy and that his question might very well be placed on the order paper.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

MEASUREMENTS OF PREMISES OF SEAFARERS INTERNATIONAL UNION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General. In the recent execution by the R.C.M.P. of the warrant to search the offices and headquarters of the Seafarers International Union for records and documents, why was it that the R.C.M.P. found it necessary to take internal measurements of the buildings and offices by means of a tape measure?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think this question is in order.

FINANCE

PROVISION FOR PAYMENT TO PROVINCES OF CERTAIN CORPORATION INCOME TAX

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-211, to authorize the Minister of Finance to transfer to the provinces the proportions of the income tax payable by certain public utility companies.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Motion agreed to, on division, and bill read the third time and passed.

EXCHEQUER COURT ACT

AMENDMENT TO ELIMINATE TAXATION STAMPS

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-201, to amend the Exchequer Court Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1—Fees payable.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, perhaps an explanation might be given of the bill; the explanatory notes are not very complete.

[Mr. Southam.]

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill is purely administrative although it does require an amendment to the Exchequer Court Act.

Perhaps by way of explanation I might remind hon. members that while the judges of the Exchequer Court sit from time to time to hear cases in each of the provinces, the office of the registrar of the court has always been located in Ottawa and, until recently, all actions in the court were required to be commenced in his office and all documents relating to such actions were required to be filed in Ottawa.

For the convenience of litigants, a few months ago I approved the establishing of offices of deputy registrars of the court in the cities of Montreal, Toronto, and Vancouver. In the city of Montreal a full time deputy registrar was appointed, but in the cities of Toronto and Vancouver it was considered desirable to appoint officials of the provincial courts as deputy registrars.

In the course of arranging for these appointments we received strong representations objecting to the requirement that Exchequer Court fees be accounted for by the sale and purchase of Exchequer Court law stamps. In addition there was an obvious requirement that some compensation be made to the provinces on account of the additional office costs that will have to be borne by them as a result of integrating this special Exchequer Court service with their own provincial court service.

Furthermore, the registrar of the court and his officials believe that a somewhat more modern and more convenient method than the sale and purchase of law stamps should be found as a means of accounting for Exchequer Court fees. I understand that the acquisition of stamping machines is under consideration, since this system has proved satisfactory in British Columbia, Quebec and in many areas of Ontario. So the whole bill relates to section 80.

Consequently, if the arrangements I have outlined are to be carried out on a satisfactory basis, and if some new method of accounting for Exchequer Court fees is to be found, section 80 will have to be amended. By the amendment to this section contained in this bill, the use of law stamps as a method of paying fees will be discontinued. All fees payable to the registrar of the court will continue to be paid into the consolidated revenue fund, but fees payable to any officer of a provincial court, acting as a deputy registrar of the court, will be retained and dealt with in the same manner as amounts paid to him as provincial court fees. It is contemplated that the fees so retained will either underwrite or assist in underwriting the additional office expenses that will be incurred by the provinces supplying this service.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I wish to raise two questions. The explanation covers the situation in general but certainly it is not shown in the explanatory notes what provinces have made complaints regarding the procedure that has been followed throughout the years. Second, what has been the amount of fees year by year in the last three years of fees collected by deputy registrars in the provinces, which apparently also will be appropriated now by those provinces?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could answer the last question first. I am sorry that I do not have the figures as to the amounts of money that were paid. Now as to the complaints that have been received. British Columbia and Ontario had made some representations concerning the methods which we used for the remuneration of deputy registrars. As the right hon. gentleman realizes, what we are trying to do here is utilize deputy registrars or registrars or officials of the provincial courts in such a manner that they will act for us in the field of Exchequer Court matters. The question of remuneration had to be reconsidered. This amendment means that the law stamps which were customary in the past no longer exist and that the deputy registrars in the different provinces will receive tax and keep revenue in order to be able to pay for the expenses which would be incurred by the imposition of these additional duties.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I can see where provincial authorities, whose clerical staffs might be used in carrying out duties that are attendant upon the fees of the deputy registrar, might be entitled to say that they should get the revenues from these fees. This is what has happened. In other words, any fees paid into a deputy registrar's office at a provincial capital form part of the consolidated revenue fund of the province. I am wondering about the appointments of these deputy registrars who very likely are clerks of the courts. Any such deputy registrar will become an agent of Her Majesty's government in right of Canada. He is personally undertaking responsibilities that are not within the terms of reference of his office as clerk. He is not paid by the province for this additional responsibility. Therefore, the only entities to gain from this arrangement, as explained by the minister—and I am sorry if I have misinterpreted the remarks he has made—are the consolidated revenue funds of the provinces. The clerks or the deputy registrars assume responsibilities with respect to those. I would think that the province could only claim to impose additional responsibilities if it were paying a supplementary allowance or salary to the clerk so that he might also act as deputy registrar.

Mr. Cardin: My understanding of the matter is that the fees that would be taxed by the deputy registrar would go to the registrar and would be in part, compensation to him for his extra duties.

Mr. Lambert: I am sorry, but that does not appear from my interpretation of the legislation. The bill indicates that fees collected:

> —shall be retained and dealt with in the same manner as amounts paid as provincial court fees.

Fees do not go to the clerk. They go to the consolidated revenue fund as revenues of the department of the attorney general. It should be clearly spelled out, therefore, that any clerk or other official of a provincial court who takes on the responsibilities of deputy registrar shall receive some salary increment to compensate him for his additional responsibilities. There is nothing in the legislation before us which spells this out.

Mr. Cardin: As the hon. gentleman can understand, there was an arrangement between the Department of Justice and the Attorneys General of the provinces in which this arrangement is being made. According to this arrangement the law stamp fees which would normally go to the federal government would be discontinued. The amount of fees involved would then go to the provincial government for the payment, in part, of the deputy registrar's fees for his additional work. The balance, of course, would go toward stenographic staffs, space, and this type of thing. That, fundamentally, is the understanding between the Department of Justice and the offices of the Attorneys General of the provinces where this arrangement is to be made.

Mr. Lambert: Another question comes to mind. I have never been enamoured with what I consider to be a spoils system under which an official of the court, whether he be judge, magistrate or otherwise, shall be recompensed on the basis of moneys collected in that court. We know the abuses that this system gives rise to, especially in certain local courts and also under justices of the peace. Further, if it is anticipated that the volume of fees collected in these provincial jurisdictions will rise because of the nature and increasing incidence of litigation, the government of Canada, having bound itself by legislation, may find itself caught. I would have preferred in actual fact to see the government of Canada entering into an agreement on a fixed fee basis for services rendered. Fees could be adjusted as the situation warranted. That would be far removed from what I deem to be a spoils system. I am afraid that this legislation encompasses a very second-best type of arrangement.

Mr. Cardin: Perhaps I was not quite clear, and for that I apologize. My understanding of this matter is that the fees to be taxed are fixed by the registrar in Ottawa. The difference is that in the provinces those fees would be returned to the consolidated revenue fund of the province and therefore the province would give additional salary or remuneration to the deputy registrar. Also, part of those fees would go toward the expenses of offices. The actual fixing of the fees would be controlled by the registrar in Ottawa.

Mr. Lambert: I agree that the fees are on a fixed scale. What I am concerned about is this. Let us say that for the sum of $1,000 per annum the clerk of the court in the city of Vancouver will act as the deputy registrar. That $1,000 should be paid by the government of Canada to the province of British Columbia regardless of the volume of business.

Under this proposed system the remuneration of the deputy registrar may fluctuate according to the level of fees. This is conceivable, and that is why I call it the spoils system. I should have preferred to see the other system I mentioned. The minister might be prepared to tell us what is the attitude of the provinces in this regard.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, that is the point I wish to raise. The provincial officials with whom we have spoken about this matter agreed to this present system. It is by arrangement that we have entered into it.

Mr. Lambert: I think it is a second-best system.

Mr. Brewin: Could the minister relieve my mind about one aspect of this legislation? It appears to be designed to eliminate the use of law stamps. Has this anything to do with the alarming increase in the practice of glue sniffing we have been reading about?

Mr. Cardin: Very indirectly, Mr. Chairman.

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time? Now?

Mr. Starr: By leave.

Mr. Cardin moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD ACT

INCREASE IN FUNDS AVAILABLE, EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY, ETC.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-213, to amend the Atlantic Development Board Act.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, there is little I intend to say on second reading. I believe most of the views of this party on this measure were expressed at the resolution stage.

There is, however, some concern expressed by those living in the maritime provinces that insufficient attention has been given by the Atlantic Development Board to the opportunities which exist in the maritimes for new developments with outward-looking possibilities for trade with foreign countries where our natural lanes of communication lie. The Atlantic provinces have historically been a seafaring region and their greatest prosperity was in the days of wooden ships. About 100 years ago they were leaders in world trade and I belive there is still a great opportunity for new industries, new developments and new trade in the maritimes based on their fortunate situation in respect of trade, especially within the Atlantic community. I should like to believe that the minister agrees with me in this respect and will at least look into the possibilities of this type of development in the Atlantic region in the future.

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, on the resolution stage of this bill, we listened to what I thought were several illuminating speeches by various speakers in different parts of the chamber. So far as the principle of this measure is concerned, I am sure that not only is there no objection to it but that it has universal support throughout the house.

I would be the first to say that when the Atlantic Development Board was established it was impossible to foresee all the eventualities which might arise, and it is the most natural thing in the world that the minister should now be submitting for the approval of the house a bill which I am sure is designed to achieve more directly and more quickly the aims and objects of the original legislation.

I listened to the brief remarks of the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean). I believe everything he said had a tremendous amount of merit. I have some personal knowledge of the subject of his proposal since the business with which I am associated is conducted largely with the United Kingdom and the New England states of the United States of America. It has always been my feeling that we in the Atlantic provinces have laid rather too much emphasis on our disabilities instead of emphasizing and exploiting our natural advantages as perhaps we should have done.

It is with this in mind that I make these few remarks this afternoon. It seems to me, in the light of the importance of the balance of payments situation, that any industry which is based primarily on the exportation of goods should occupy a special place in the hearts and minds of those who have some public responsibility. I am sure the minister is very conscious of this. Then again, special encouragement should also be given to industries, whether developed in the Atlantic provinces or elsewhere in this nation, whose products might be substituted for material which would otherwise have to be imported.

So far as exports to the United Kingdom are concerned I believe there are many types of activity in the Atlantic provinces which are capable of further development. For example, in one of the counties which I have the honour to represent we have, I believe, the largest food processing plant in Canada. Those who are conducting that business tell me that generally speaking their market is confined to a large extent to exportation to Britain in spite of the fact that they are dealing with a commodity which one might think would be difficult to process and then to export due to its perishable nature. Yet this is being done.

These men, who incidentally deserve tremendous credit for the development of this industry, are instruments by which many hundreds of thousands of dollars are being distributed by way of wages in our part of the world. The fact that they have built up by their own efforts a market for the products of the farms in the counties I represent has had a tremendous effect on the economy of those counties.

• (3:40 p.m.)

The activities of the board should not be restricted to acting upon the recommendations of provincial governments. Yesterday we heard one hon. member, a former member of the board, speak of the approach taken by it to regional problems. I make no apology for being guided to some extent by political considerations. There would be something wrong with all of us if we were not so guided, but I do not see any reason why political considerations should conflict with public interest. I think the board should be willing to receive suggestions from members of parliament at the federal level and even from Conservative members of parliament.

Mr. Pickersgill: It has been.

Mr. Flemming: I agree with the minister that it has been, and I also agree with those hon. members who spoke yesterday about the general excellence of the members of the board and its staff under its director, Dr. Weeks. They are capable people dedicated to making a success of the work entrusted to them.

I think these amendments will improve the general situation and, as I said at the outset, I feel we in the Atlantic provinces should emphasize our advantages rather than our disadvantages and handicaps. Our export drive should not be confined to the United Kingdom. Goods from the Atlantic region can be sold in all the markets of the world, as several firms have already demonstrated. Their products have been satisfactory in quality and competitive in price.

The general level of productivity in the Atlantic provinces on a per capita basis compares favourably with the rest of Canada, and I am hopeful that greater initiative will follow the passage of this legislation. We are not proud that unemployment in our region is higher than in the rest of the nation, and I believe that greater emphasis on exports could be a factor in helping to reduce it.

I have some knowledge of the board right from its establishment. I am grateful to my leader, who is in the chamber this afternoon, for the responsibility he gave me to guide the original bill through the house. There are some things in life we look back on with more satisfaction than others, and this was one in my life. When the bill was first introduced there was some discussion on the question of funds for the Atlantic Development Board. It was felt by the government of that day that funds should not in any way be restricted. Now the minister says that the amount voted at that time has been a limiting factor, but I can assure the house that it was not considered such by our government.

The provision of this additional $50 million seems reasonable to me. Perhaps I am too modest in my idea of expenditures. Some people want to talk in billions of dollars but, in the school in which I was brought up, when we went into debt for $1,000 we worried about where the money would come from to settle the debt.

I am quite prepared to take the minister's word that when these funds have been exhausted consideration will be given to the provision of additional moneys. I think the original legislation has provided much benefit to the Atlantic provinces and again I express my admiration for the work of Dr. Weeks and his staff. The house should also give appreciation to the former government which introduced the original legislation and also to the present government for introducing this bill which will further the work of the Atlantic Development Board.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the members of this party are wholeheartedly in support of this legislation in so far as it will contribute to the economic development of the Atlantic provinces. I am not going to take very much of the time of the house because I think there is general support for this measure. If I have any criticism at all to offer, it would be that neither the legislation nor the amount of money envisaged goes far enough.

When the resolution was being presented by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) he assured the house that the Atlantic Development Board had not been imprudent in respect of either the money it had spent or the commitments it had made. If I had any criticism at all of the board it would be that they had been so careful that after three years only half the $100 million was spent and the rest committed. It seems to me this is not a very large expenditure over a three year period to take care of the industrial needs of the four Atlantic provinces and to provide the kind of stimulus needed for the economic growth of that area.

I think the amount of money provided now is too small. I agree with the minister that from time to time the house should have an opportunity to have a report and debate on this matter, but there are other ways by which this could be provided. I do not like the idea of handing out this money in little driblets so that the board constantly is hampered in its long-term planning of what it wants to do. I should like to say that I think this is a good board. I believe they have gathered around them an excellent staff and that their long-term planning and projects offer great promise. But I think they ought to be given a great deal more money and ought to be given by the minister and the government the green light in getting down to the business which needs to be done.

I need not remind the house that the Atlantic provinces have much reason to complain that the disparity of income which has existed in days gone by is not being rectified. The gap in per capita income and in productivity between the Atlantic provinces and the other parts of Canada, particularly central Canada, is being narrowed; but the much greater unemployment figures in the Atlantic provinces compared with those for the rest of Canada are not being reduced substantially. Even if the Atlantic provinces make gains, which they are making, I suggest that they are not making gains as fast as the other parts of Canada. The Atlantic provinces are in much the same position as was the case when the queen said to Alice in Wonderland: You have to run as fast as you can to stay where you are.

Even if we could step up economic and industrial activity in the Atlantic provinces they would then only be holding their own with the rest of Canada and still not be reducing the very considerable disparity which exists between them and the rest of Canada. Therefore I feel that this government and this parliament can afford to be generous and far-seeing in making very much larger sums of money available to the Atlantic Development Board. After all, this involves four provinces. Three at least, leaving out Newfoundland, do not have great hinterlands yet to be developed which is the case in Quebec, Ontario, the prairie provinces and British Columbia. They do not have the hinterland of natural resources from which they can draw in the future. They will have to depend on intensive industrial development in the small areas they have at their disposal. Therefore I think we could do much better than we are doing under this legislation.

It appears to me that there is not the co-ordination there ought to be between the Atlantic Development Board and the rest of the federal government. I have reference particularly to the Department of Industry. Frankly, I do not know why this legislation does not come under the Department of Industry. Surely there ought to be the very closest integration between a body set up to promote economic and industrial development in the Atlantic provinces and the Department of Industry. It seems to me that this board might well be reporting to the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) and be responsible to him so that he can fit its programs in with the programs of his department.

A very good example of the cross-purposes which we find is in the matter of designated areas. From all I can gather the Atlantic Development Board has been waiting for a long time to have the Atlantic provinces in their entirety treated as a designated area. This makes sense. We cannot develop industries on a postage stamp basis. They have to be developed on a regional basis taking into consideration the various natural resources available, fuel, transportation, and markets both export and local.

It is only possible to plan economic development on a regional basis. Yet the Department of Industry proceeds in an outdated manner to select little postage stamp areas and designate them. In the Atlantic provinces it has excluded such cities as Halifax, Saint John, Dartmouth and Fredericton. There is such a thing as mutual attraction in industrial development. You cannot just take a local area, set it aside and say that is a designated area to which we want to attract industry. You have to start where there is some industry and where there is a reservoir of trained manpower and markets. Industry attracts industry; primary industries attract secondary industries and secondary industries attract tertiary industries. Therefore, to take cities out of an industrial development plan is to cut the heart out of any sensible industrial development program.

If the Atlantic Development Board were consulted by the Minister of Industry I feel certain they would be the first to recommend a complete overhaul of his system of designating areas for the purpose of industrial development. I really cannot understand why there has not been a better co-ordination. I certainly think it is regrettable that there should be this complete contradiction with one board trying to treat four provinces as a region for industrial development and a department of government on the other hand cutting up the region into small areas and saying that some are designated and others are not. It does not make sense. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) is carrying on one of his periodic reorganizations of government structure I hope he will give some thought to working out a better co-ordination between the Department of Industry and the Atlantic Development Board.

In so far as this legislation will help the Atlantic provinces, which we feel sure it will, we give it our hearty support.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, we have under consideration a bill designed to provide assistance to the Atlantic provinces. First, I do wish to say that we are not opposed to that. However, I would like to take a few minutes today to say that the Atlantic provinces are not the only ones with areas of unemployment, with underdeveloped areas. The province of Quebec also has underdeveloped areas in need of assistance.

Therefore, I would simply say this to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) and to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). Although we do not object to the principle of Bill No. C-213, we believe that the government should also give consideration to the other underdeveloped areas in this country, that is to those of Saguenay-Lake St. John, the Gaspé peninsula, Abitibi, the north shore, etc. Those are areas with tremendous needs, for which the government should make special efforts. Part of the people's taxes is used to assist the Atlantic provinces; yet, those taxes are collected in the country as a whole. We do not oppose this, because needs are becoming apparent in those four provinces, but I insist on the fact that there are areas in the province of Quebec also which are in need of assistance.

For a number of years, the western provinces obtained many things from the federal government, while the Atlantic provinces and Quebec were neglected. At other times, it is the province of Ontario which received a great deal of assistance. At that time, in the thirties, the western provinces, Quebec and the maritimes were forgotten. We believe that the province of Quebec should have its turn, since it has never come.

Some resolutions appear on the order paper, especially that concerning feed grain for eastern Canada. It has been on the order paper for quite a long time, but it has not yet been passed; we would like it to be passed as soon as possible. There are also some reports to the effect that the price of milk in farming areas is not high enough and we would like the federal government to do for certain designated areas in Quebec what it is doing for the Atlantic provinces. We believe that this is an urgent matter. Words are not enough and the government should act.

[English]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, there are a few observations one could make at this time in the debate, and in view of the interest shown by the government of which I had the honour to be the head in the Atlantic provinces in general I feel I should say something regarding the measure now before the house.

Let me say at once that this measure will receive the full support of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. However, what is being done and has been done has not met the needs and requirements of this nation to bring about a reasonable degree of equality of opportunity. The people of the maritimes have moved to all parts of Canada and the United States. This area has been the nursery of a very large proportion of the leaders of this nation and of all the provinces of Canada. Many people from the Atlantic provinces have migrated to other parts of Canada and United States because of the inequality of opportunity, and what each of us must try to do is bring about an economic regional advance in those areas of the country where the economy is not on a par with the rest of the nation.

Various explanations have been made for the exodus from the Atlantic area. What has been the motivation for this exodus? I think the recent study made by the organization for economic co-operation and development has given the answer, namely, that the broad range of opportunities in other areas, particularly in the United States, has brought about a continuing process of migration from this area. This has not been a recent development but rather a continuing one which has taken place since the 1880's.

What can we do about this situation? I think the government should have acted to meet the demands of APEC respecting the designation of the Atlantic provinces as a designated area. Various reasons were advanced why this area could not be designated, but those reasons have no effective basis in so far as Halifax, Dartmouth, Saint John and Fredericton are concerned. I again urge upon the government the need for action in this regard. The government must face up to the necessity of restoring a new sense of hope in these areas which find themselves today with great unemployment and without that degree of opportunity that is available in other parts of our nation. If action is taken in this regard I am sure Canadians everywhere will welcome it and the equalization of opportunity that will follow.

I cannot understand the reasoning that impels the Department of Industry to stand so firmly against a course of action which would be beneficial not only to the Atlantic provinces but to the nation as a whole. The problem is a large one. One must always attempt to look into the future. What will the next 25 years bring about?

One of the major problems in the maritimes has been the lack of a close relative connection with the central provinces. There are many who argue that railway transportation is a thing of the past. I do not believe or accept that argument. Today we must consider what the future may bring about, and one of the greatest obstacles to industrial development in the maritimes, with its vast coal resources, is the cost of transportation.

Various committees have studied this situation and have recommended that assistance be given. The Duncan commission and others have made recommendations. Large subsidies have been granted. Indeed, during our period of office we multiplied the subsidies on behalf of the coal areas, particularly in Cape Breton. The hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis) and the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. Muir), both of whom have devoted themselves to this problem, have asked for action to be taken. The coal mining industry is today in a serious position. The $25 million that was promised during the election period but which received no political support has not yet been determined upon and made available.

What is needed as I see it, and at the moment it is just a dream, is the development of an efficient, high speed, ground transportation system. I take the position that the economic life of the provinces by the sea has unquestionably been impeded by the lack of ground transportation facilities. The long route followed by the rail line from Montreal to Halifax was satisfactory during the days when it was first built. It was necessary to assure confederation. It was natural that the original construction of the railway line should follow the shores thus linking the centres of population. Today, as I see it, we need fast, direct connections between the maritimes and the industrial heartland of central Canada. It will be a costly thing. It will be a grand design. It cannot be done immediately.

I have pressed for a national transportation policy and in that policy I envisage thought being given to bringing new transportation facilities to the maritime provinces. The present line running from Montreal through Richmond, Levis and Mont Joli covers 840 miles. The fastest time in which this route can be travelled today is some 21 hours. Is the time not here when we should give consideration to bringing about a direct line from Richmond, Quebec, through the top corner of Maine to Woodstock, New Brunswick, and utilizing the present main lines that are available? To follow this suggestion would cut by one-third the distance of the present route. The time that would be taken for travel from Montreal to Halifax would be less than 12 hours rather than the 21 hours now required.

There would be tremendous savings in freight costs both ways. There would be made available to the maritimes the probability not only of the expansion of existing industries but the establishment of additional ones, which would be beneficial not only to those provinces but to Canada as a whole. Such a direct line would not take the place of the present line in any way but would be used chiefly for high speed freight transportation.

The maritimes have tremendous potentialities for the production of electrical power. What they need now, as I see it, is thinking devoted not only to those matters that the Atlantic Development Board is dealing with. We in other parts of Canada, and in particular the Department of Transport—I know the minister has given thought to a national transportation policy—should be thinking about assuring direct, efficient and high speed rail communication for the maritimes. It will be costly but over a period of 60 years the amortized cost would assure the dividend of a discharge of the indebtedness.

This would enable those provinces by the sea to become a vital part of Canada's industrial and business might. Over a period of years there would be tremendous savings in the subsidies that would otherwise have to be paid. It cannot be done in a day, but I think the Department of Transport might very well devote itself to a full and complete study of this subject.

On a later occasion I shall give my views on a transportation system for the western provinces and in particular the Rocky Mountain area leading to the Pacific ports. This country, with all its vast potentialities, must catch something of the greatness of the possibilities of the future. We have to think in a big way. When one reads the story of confederation and the Year Book—I am speaking now from memory—after confederation the prediction was that by 1940 the population of Canada would be some 40 million. How far out that was. New dreams can be implemented and carried out by planning. We have to populate this nation. We have to develop. We have to remove the restrictions of those who fear increased immigration. Canada cannot continue for the next 50 years in the lackadaisical way in national development which has too often characterized this nation in the past.

The task is a difficult one. The arguments that will be advanced will be complex. But I feel that we as representatives of this nation as a whole would give young Canada new hope in 1967 were we to raise the horizons of our ideas for national development so that in every part of this nation Candians, regardless of their geographical address, would be able to have each for himself that degree of equality of opportunity which was the basis of confederation and in my opinion will be the strongest bond of confederation in the next 100 years.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): May I remind the hon. members that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): It is not my intention to hold up the proceedings, Mr. Speaker, but I would ask the Minister of Transport, in replying to the remarks which have been made by hon. members, to take into consideration the fact that the Donald report on coal is, I understand, under study by the cabinet committee. We have been given to understand that the portions of the Donald report which have been published, and this has not yet been denied, indicate a very detrimental situation. Whether or not this is so I cannot say but I ask the minister to reveal that portion of the Donald report which may hold out some hope for the industrial area of Cape Breton, whether it be the coal industry or other industries in that area.

I also wish to ask him to take a firm stand and resist the suggestion of the leader of the New Democratic Party that the Minister of Industry take over the administration of the Atlantic Development Board. We do not wish the Minister of Industry to do so. Despite the fact that the Minister of Transport is not a maritimer, we realize that he represents Bonavista-Twillingate which may present certain advantages to the maritimes.

I should very much like to hear the minister report on the Donald commission since the government seems to have taken some comfort from the stand taken by Premier Stanfield and supported by the union leaders in Nova Scotia to the effect that coal can no longer be considered a growth industry in that area, will the minister not also take into consideration the suggestions made by Premier Stanfield in his speech?

May I point out that the former minister of labour made promises prior to the election concerning the coal situation in Nova Scotia and despite what our leader says in respect of those particular promises they were originally designed to get votes. In fact, in the minister's own words as recorded in Hansard those promises did produce 5,000 more votes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It did not turn out that way.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I therefore ask the minister to give serious consideration to the suggestions made by Premier Stanfield and at least to alleviate the concern of Nova Scotians in respect of that part of the report which has been made known recommending that vast amounts of capital be imported into the industrial area of Cape Breton.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I suppose one should be grateful even for backhanded compliments and I thank the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis) for his slightly grudging suggestion that the Atlantic Development Board should remain under my jurisdiction rather than under some other minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is high generosity.

Mr. Pickersgill: I recognize it and acknowledge it for what it is.

I did not make a speech at the opening of the debate on second reading because it seemed to me that in the observations I had made yesterday during the discussion on the resolution I had covered the content of the bill. However, a few things have been said that I think deserve some notice from this side of the house. I wish to say right away that I appreciate the tone of every speech that has been made this afternoon, while I do not agree with everything that was said in all of them.

I think this is one occasion when all of us have addressed ourselves to the problem which is the purpose and the raison d'être of the Atlantic Development Board, that is, an effort to bring the economy of the Atlantic provinces up to the level of the economy of other parts of Canada where, for geographical, historic or other reasons, the advance has in many cases been more rapid.

The senior member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) who spoke first on this subject suggested that we should make a special effort to stimulate industries that would be engaged in export. I think the hon. member, who is a former minister of fisheries, is well aware of the excellent work that has been done, is being done and will continue to be done by the Atlantic Development Board in helping to modernize one of the most important and oldest of all export industries of the Atlantic provinces, the fishing industry and the processing of fish. Notwithstanding the tremendous amount of fresh water in all the provinces, we have discovered that a lot of our fresh water is not nearly as pure as it should be, nor nearly as accessible as it should be.

The board has made special efforts to make water available to processing plants and it has kept some of them in existence when otherwise they would not have been able to carry on. It has also stimulated the growth of other plants and I therefore think that much more should be done in this sphere. Indeed, a survey of the water resources of the whole region has been undertaken by the board. The accessibility of water is absolutely essential in the location of industries because all of us know that everywhere on this continent water is becoming perhaps the most important of all the resources that large industries, and especially resource industries, look for when they are locating new plants.

I think it is particularly opportune that the hon. members for Queens and Victoria-Carleton should have emphasized export industries and the geographical advantages of the Atlantic provinces in this field on the eve of the conference to be held here next week between the Prime Minister of Canada and the prime ministers, the premiers and the chief ministers of the Commonwealth countries in the Caribbean. We hope this will mark the beginning of a new era in our relations with the Caribbean countries. Of course, those of us who represent the Atlantic provinces cannot help but feel that this is of special interest to us, although I think it is also of great interest to all Canadians, including British Columbia which has a considerable market for exports in the Caribbean, as I discovered on a recent visit.

The hon. member for Victoria-Carleton knows, of course, because he was one of the initiators of the board, that the board has the power to initiate industrial development and so has the government, but it has been found that the co-operation with all the provincial governments has been so close and constant that the question has almost not arisen. I am sure the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton also came to that conclusion when he was first responsible for setting up the board. One thing we certainly do not want to do is to let the board work at cross-purposes with any of the provincial governments and the very effective agencies that they now have in all the four provinces for the promotion of industrial development. There is the very closest and almost constant connection between the two. In the case of Nova Scotia let me say a word about Mr. Frank Sobey who was appointed to the board by the previous government and is still a very valuable member of the board and also the head of Industrial Estates. That dual situation has certainly made co-ordination easier. The mayor of Saint John is one of the members of the board. In selecting members we have sought, as did the previous government, to select people from all parts of the region who would represent all of the varied economic interests. I should like to pay a great tribute to all those who have served on the board, no matter by which government appointed, for the single-minded devotion with which they have served, and served voluntarily, as the hon. member for Kings (Mr. McQuaid) pointed out yesterday, to the great benefit of all regions in Canada.

I agree with the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Flemming) that we ought to look ahead. I also think we ought to try to emphasize, as I did yesterday in a rather clumsy way, some of the advantages, which perhaps were not advantages even five, six or ten years ago, of the changing patterns of world trade. These changing techniques in transportation will, I believe, give the Atlantic provinces, when combined with their resources of industrial power, advantages that they have not had before for a long time in respect of the development of certain kinds of industry.

In that context I would recall to hon. members the fact that nearly all the freight has tended to move from central Canada to the Atlantic provinces and that there has been very little in the way of return shipments either by sea, by land or even by air. The result of this, of course, is that in order to make the return voyage profitable very advantageous rates can now be had for westbound traffic.

This has made for certain kinds of industry and has created a very great advantage to industry in locating in those provinces, particularly if they can combine an export function with production which is available to the big, rich central Canada market. The Clairtone Company has recently opened a plant in Pictou County, and I hope and expect that it is going to be one of the pioneers in a movement which I think will gather a good deal of strength in the next few years.

I should now like to make one or two observations about what was said by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas). I do not think that the hon. member really meant to describe $50 million as a little driblet. I am still modest and old-fashioned enough to think that $50 million is a great deal of money, even in 1966. Sometimes I think we are a little apt to take these amounts in the multi-millions too much for granted.

I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that because I was brought up in the bush of northern Manitoba where there was not much money this feeling made a permanent imprint on my mind, but I have always thought there is a lot to be said for prudence when you are handling other people's money or even your own. That does not mean, sir, that I am not willing to take risks. When I left my previous occupation to become a politician I gave a demonstration that in certain circumstances risk did not frighten me too much. There are a lot of big risks that I am quite prepared to take in discharging the responsibilities I have and in encouraging the Atlantic Development Board to discharge its responsibilites.

An hon. Member: Here we go again.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the repeated failure of the power supply in this chamber I think is evidence that we should get on with developing these huge power resources both in Labrador and in the rest of the Atlantic provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam was, I am sure, speaking from an academic and theoretical, or perhaps I should say from an uninformed, viewpoint when he said that there ought to be more co-ordination between the Atlantic Development Board and the Department of Industry. I cannot think of any department with which there has been closer co-ordination from the day the Department of Industry was established.

I would remind hon. members that these two agencies have entirely different, though in some respects closely related, functions. The purpose of the Department of Industry is to stimulate industrial development from one end of Canada to the other. This includes Toronto, if it still needs stimulation, as well as anywhere else. On the other hand, the purpose of the Atlantic Development Board, as I said when I introduced the amendments in 1963, is primarily to act as a steady pressure group on every department of the federal government and on all other agencies so as to get things done for the Atlantic provinces.

I do not think it would be appropriate for me to go into the question raised both by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam as to the reasons that Halifax, Saint John, Fredericton and Dartmouth are not designated areas. However, I think I should remind all hon. members that the criterion for a designated area is the amount of unemployment existing in that area. It does not matter where in Canada any particular area is. What is the criterion is the quantity of unemployment existing in the area.

It just so happens that the employment situation in Halifax, Dartmouth, Saint John and Fredericton is happily good enough that these areas do not qualify as designated areas, and this is a fact for which I think we should be grateful. If we are to have in all parts of Canada designated areas which do qualify under the criteria, then the same criteria obviously have to apply in the Atlantic provinces as apply elsewhere.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Could I ask the minister a question? Does he not think that the representations of those connected with APEC, with full knowledge of the needs of the Atlantic provinces and having recommended that the Atlantic provinces be so designated, deserve serious attention by the government?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, Mr. Speaker, of course. I am sure that the right hon. gentleman, who had the responsibility of being prime minister of Canada, never allowed any regional consideration, no matter how strongly put forward, to make him deviate from taking a national point of view. That was his responsibility, as it is the responsibility of every prime minister and of every government.

However strong may be the representations made by APEC and however desirable their recommendations may be in given circumstances—this is a debatable question which I do not propose to discuss on this particular occasion—their representations are naturally made from a regional standpoint. If we are to have a designated area policy such as that we now have applied to the whole of Canada, I think the criteria must be the same for all parts of Canada. That is part of the reason why it is very undesirable to have the Atlantic Development Board and the Department of Industry under the same minister, because they are working to achieve different aims.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would prefer to deal with this point first.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): My question is exactly on this point. The minister will have the opportunity to clarify it.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member may put his question when I have concluded what I have to say on the point.

The Department of Industry is working to stimulate industry throughout Canada and to try to even out the unevenness between regions which are designated and regions which are not designated because their unemployment situation is not so difficult. The Atlantic Development Board is devoted primarily to the promotion of industrial and economic development in the whole of the Atlantic region.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Under the designated areas policy direct aid is given to businesses themselves. Direct aid up to now has not been given to individual firms by the Atlantic Development Board. They are working in slightly different fields but, of course, to the same broad end.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The minister has indicated that one of the criteria for establishing designated areas is unemployment. He referred to the fact that the criteria for designated areas are the same across Canada. Would he not agree that they are so rigid as not to produce the desired results in the Atlantic region? How can the minister equate the idea of unemployment as a criterion for designated areas right across the country and at the same time go into the maritime areas and tell the people there that everything is going better in Canada and in the maritimes than ever before? I indicated to the minister that the criterion of unemployment on an across Canada basis is not producing the desired results in the maritime area simply because it is the same throughout the country.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not accept the hon. gentleman's premise at all. I do not propose to debate this subject as it has nothing to do with the bill before us. I merely want to point out that the broad objectives of economic and industrial development are the same but the method of arriving at each particular area of operation is different in the two cases. I do not think that co-ordination could possibly be closer than it is. I think that those people in the Atlantic provinces who have followed the work of the board and the Department of Industry closely will admit that very readily indeed. I could, if we did not want to get on with our legislation, give many examples.

I should now like to say a word or two about what was said by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire). He, it seems to me, gave the best possible reply to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. He pointed out the need for industrial development and economic advancement in certain parts of the province of Quebec, including the area he represents. We acknowledge this. It is a designated area. Some hon. members are not ready to accept our designated areas as such. But if we simply abolished the criteria for different designated areas, then the whole country would have to be designated. That is the problem and it is not easy of solution. I am not saying that our solution is perfect; I am not saying it will not be improved. But I say that if you are going to designate areas across the country you must have some way of designating one area as distinct from another; otherwise the whole idea is meaningless. I appreciate what has been said and I realize the difficulties.

The Leader of the Opposition said a few things about transport that encouraged me very much. The right hon. gentleman referred to my conversion with respect to views he had expressed about a railway in Alberta and the Northwest Territories, the first railway that ever went into the Northwest Territories.

I admit that the right hon. gentleman gambled and his gamble now looks pretty good. I admit it. But I am also very pleased at his conversion because in 1958 the party I belong to went to the country advocating a trunk road program for the four Atlantic provinces and we said we would undertake to pay 90 per cent of the cost of completing the trans-Canada highway. Unfortunately for the Atlantic region itself we had no chance to carry out that program until 1963. We lost no time when we got into office in 1963. The promised 90-10 formula was put into effect and the trans-Canada highway is completed across Newfoundland. Progress of that highway is not moving fast enough to suit the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. MacEwan), but the highway is moving across Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Since this government came into office $30 million, in addition to what is directly in the Atlantic Development Board fund, has been devoted to assistance in a trunk road program throughout the entire four provinces. I do not think it is going to be enough but it has not yet all been spent. Everything is moving ahead quite rapidly. Moreover, taking the suggestion of the MacPherson Commission, which did a very solid job in my view but which did not deal, as the right hon. gentleman will recall, with the special problems of the Atlantic provinces, we have now under way a comprehensive study which we have discussed in detail with the four provincial governments, by a joint venture of the "Economist" unit and the Acres Company in regard to the transport needs of the whole Atlantic region. I do not think anything is more important to the economic advancement of the area than providing good transport. That is more important even than power development.

I come finally to the question of the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis). I cannot, of course, disclose what Dr. Donald has advised the government. But I can say, and say with the most complete confidence, that a great deal more than $25 million will be spent for the industrial development of the coal mining regions of Nova Scotia. There is no question whatever but that we must grapple with this very serious problem. I certainly will not be satisfied, and I know my hon. friend the Minister of National Health and Welfare will not be satisfied and I do not believe any member of this government will be satisfied, until we have an industrial capacity in Cape Breton Island that will make the situation there better than it is now or than it has been for a long time. There are some very encouraging signs now of developments already underway.

Mr. Douglas: Before the minister leaves that point could I ask him a question? When he says that a great deal more than $25 million will be spent in that area, could he be more specific? Will the $25 million be spent in the development and extension of the coal industry as was suggested by the Minister of National Health and Welfare in Cape Breton?

Mr. Pickersgill: There is no question that more than $25 million will be spent in an effort to provide employment. How that will be spent and the precise manner in which it will be spent I do not say. The hon. gentleman was the head of a government for quite a long time, and I am quite sure that he remained head of that government by working out his policies before he announced them. I think it is a sound rule and it is the rule I intend to follow.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does that rule apply to the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is just another bit of prudence.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would ask the minister whether that rule is in any way in conflict with the announcement made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare some time ago?

Mr. Pickersgill: The Minister of National Health and Welfare made an announcement that will be carried out. I can assure hon. members that there was nothing said by the Minister of National Health and Welfare which is not in complete and total accord with the policies of the government at the present time.

An hon. Member: We have your word for it.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I assume that the recommendations of the Donald Commission have already been circulated and, whether those recommendations are authentic or not, I take it that the government is determined to ignore them.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member may draw any conclusions he likes from anything he has read, but he cannot draw any conclusions from what I have said—

Mr. Douglas: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: —other than what I have said. As every politician knows, it is very easy to distort other people's words and to say that other people have said something different from what was said.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): On a question of privilege, I had no intention of distorting the minister's words. If the minister will look at his own words he will find he said that the government has every intention of carrying out the conditions laid down by the hon. gentleman who was then minister of labour with respect to the $25 million grant for the coal industry. The minister now states it is the government's intention to back up the statement of the former minister of labour. What other interpretation can I place on his remarks other than that the circulated reports of the Donald coal commission are to be ignored?

Mr. Pickersgill: This is a perfect example of what I was saying. I was saying that if anyone wanted to scrutinize the words actually used by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, not the words attributed to him but the words he actually used, it would be found that they represent the position of the government. I am not responsible, nor is he, for interpretations which others place on his words. Perhaps when we get into committee—

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): One more question. Would the minister care to come to my office and listen to the tape?

Mr. Pickersgill: I can answer that shortly. The answer is, no.

If these diversions are over, I should like to make one final observation. It is about the sum of money which is to be paid into the fund under the terms of this bill. Yesterday and again today there was some suggestion it was not large enough. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam expressed this view. I was pleased that the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton took the view that it was a reasonable sum at the present time having regard to all the circumstances. He has had a lot of experience and it comforts me to feel that on this particular measure we are in agreement.

I wish in closing to repeat that when this fund, which is not yet all committed though about $90 million is and which is to be replenished by a further $50 million if parliament sees fit to allow it, needs further strengthening, then if the present government is here and if I am the minister responsible for the board, as I hope to be, I shall not hesitate to come back to parliament and ask for more provided I believe the board is doing a good job and getting results. If results are not being achieved it would, of course, be irresponsible to do so. But I am confident they will be, and I have no doubt that the government of the day, whatever government it may be—I am fairly sure it will be a Liberal government—will be back with a similar measure before long because we shall find things to do with this money which will contribute to the growth and development of the whole Atlantic region and, in doing so, to the growth and development of the whole of Canada including the Lake St. John area.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

On clause 1—

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Transport took some exception to my statement that I did not think there was adequate co-ordination between the Atlantic Development Board and the Department of Industry. Then he proceeded to make a speech which completely proved my statement. He said the two organizations had different purposes. Surely this proves a lack of co-ordination.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? How can you co-ordinate two things which have the same purpose?

Mr. Douglas: They are parallel but not different purposes. The minister laughs.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not laugh.

Mr. Douglas: The chaotic situation which now exists is the result of the complete refusal of the government to face facts. The minister's statement that the Department of Industry and the Atlantic Development Board have different purposes explains fully the situation in the maritime provinces today. These organizations have parallel purposes. One is concerned with industrial development for Canada as a whole and the other is concerned with the same thing on a more intensive basis in a specific region.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is not exactly the same thing at all.

Mr. Douglas: Well, they ought to be doing the same thing.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. gentleman not recognize a clear distinction between what the Atlantic Development Board is doing in providing general support for the Atlantic economy and the specific purpose of the area development agency for designated areas, which is to provide grants to specific industries? It is true these activities have to be co-ordinated closely but they are quite distinct.

Mr. Douglas: Surely it must be apparent to the minister that the objective of both the department and the board is the economic growth of the area, the promotion of industry and the providing of employment. The board does it by means of grants and loans to specified industries. The Department of Industry has charge of the whole area of industrial promotion. Here is a department setting up criteria for designated areas which run absolutely counter to the policies established by the board.

The minister says the standards established for designated areas must be uniform across Canada. The board, on the other hand, was set up because the government was convinced this was a particular region which needed special help. Surely a department interested in promoting industry all across Canada has to take account of the fact that this is a region which the government has recognized as being one in need of special consideration. If it were not, the board would never have been set up to promote industrial development there.

The fact is the minister is trying to defend a formula in the Department of Industry which is completely unrealistic and runs at cross-purposes to the function of the board. The board was set up by parliament to look upon the Atlantic provinces as being a region with special problems. You cannot deal with these problems by cutting up the Atlantic provinces into areas, excluding some of their principal cities and proceeding on a piecemeal basis.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. gentleman not think that even within the Atlantic region it would be desirable to raise the economic level of those parts where there is heavy unemployment?

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Douglas: But it can only be done by treating the region as a whole. The minister must be aware that you cannot cut up the country into townships and say we will deal with the number of unemployed in each township. Industries attract other industries. You have to start from where the industries are and have them spread out all over the area. A whole region's economic development must be planned as a unit, not by townships or counties. Of course it is true that in wealthy provinces there are also areas with specific problems because of certain circumstances, such as the Lake St. John area, but the government and this parliament have recognized that the Atlantic provinces have a special problem, a general disparity of income and productivity in relation to the rest of Canada. Having recognized this and appointed the board to make plans, and the provinces themselves having set up APEC, surely it is ridiculous on the other hand for the Department of Industry to be operating on an entirely different premise and on a formula which does not make sense in the light of the regional planning already established by the Atlantic Development Board and APEC?

The minister has taken exception to my referring to this $50 million as a driblet but $50 million in terms of the industrial development of four provinces over the next four years is a driblet. The minister has talked about how careful he is in money matters and of his background in northern Manitoba. I come of a race that is pretty careful about money too, but when the government is buying bomber planes $50 million is small change. When the government brings down the defence budget not $50 million but $500 million goes very quickly. In many areas of expenditure $50 million is treated as chicken feed.

All I am saying is that $50 million to meet the industrial development needs of the Atlantic provinces over the next few years is not adequate. If the board has not got plans that demand more money, and the minister is the only one who can be aware of that, then of course $50 million is what they need. I know it takes time to complete development studies. You just cannot put your hand on a shelf and pull off a lot of industrial development projects. It takes time to conduct feasibility studies and market research.

I want to compliment the board and the minister on the work that has been done, but the basic work having been done the board ought now to be encouraged to move forward with the utmost possible speed and ought to be told that $50 million is not in our opinion anything like the limit we are prepared to set and that further considerable sums of money will be available. If that is not done, then not only will the disparity between the Atlantic provinces and the rest of Canada remain but the gap will widen, and as the gap widens national unity is thereby weakened.

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE

ESTABLISHMENT OF CORPORATION FOR ADMINISTRATION AND OPERATION

The house resumed, from Friday, June 10, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-194, to establish a corporation for the administration of the National Arts Centre—Miss LaMarsh—Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose on Friday, June 10, the title, clause 1 and clause 4, with an amendment to the latter, had been allowed to stand. On clause 4 the hon. member for Levis had moved an amendment as follows:

That clause 4 of Bill C-194 be amended by adding thereto the following paragraph:

In the appointment of members and officers of the corporation, due account will be taken of the linguistic duality of Canada and its cultural plurality.

On clause 4—Appointment of chairman and vice-chairman.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, there has already been some discussion of this clause and the amendment in question which you have just read, which is to the effect that in the appointment of members and officers of the corporation due account will be taken of the linguistic duality of Canada and its cultural plurality.

In this clause and this amendment we are dealing with a corporation which will have management responsibility for a cultural activity in our national capital that will, I am sure, be of significance and value to all of Canada. I am sure all members of the committee recognize that in the membership of boards and agencies of the government, and in particular in the membership of the board of this particular corporation, there should be as broad representation as possible of our cultural variety, something that adds strength, colour and greatness to our Confederation.

I am sure we also recognize that the membership of a board of this kind should reflect the two official languages which signalize the dualism of our political origins and recognize that French is the language in this country of a cohesive cultural group, customarily used by a large majority in one province and by a very large minority in another province.

In the membership of boards and federal agencies this duality of language and also our plurality of culture are now recognized in fact, as I could show by referring to the composition of such agencies. I have studied all of the existing federal agencies and there is no doubt that these considerations are recognized in the appointments to these boards. However, Mr. Chairman, I think it is unwise and also unnecessary to include commitments relating to recognition of this kind in legislation itself, as my right hon. friend pointed out the other day, because in my view this could freeze a situation in a way which might hinder rather than help the achievement of the objective we have in mind—which is broad representation with appropriate recognition of the two official languages.

This principle of representation, as I said, is now accepted in practice and in custom. Sometimes practice and custom become very deeply embodied in a constitution, sometimes even more deeply embodied in a constitution than are some of the actual provisions of that constitution. As this now has become embodied by practice I suggest it might have a disunifying rather than a unifying effect to write it specifically into an act of parliament as a legislative obligation. It could lead later to misunderstanding rather than greater understanding between English speaking and French speaking Canadians.

I can only give a specific assurance, and I am very glad to do so, for the present government, but I am quite certain any Canadian government will always take due accord of the linguistic and cultural factors mentioned in the amendment in respect of the appointment of the members and officers of government boards and agencies. I think that anyone who studies the appointments which have been made over the years will be assured that this is being done. I do not think there can be any possible doubt on this score for the future.

In the circumstances, Mr. Chairman, while recognizing the essential desirability of the principle and while certainly accepting the good intentions and worthy purpose of the hon. member who has moved the amendment, our colleague from Lévis, nevertheless many members of the house are worried about the implication which might be read into its incorporation in legislation and perhaps the harmful effect of a recorded division on such a vote in this house. It is because of considerations of that kind and not because I am in any way, shape or form opposed to the principle involved in the amendment—I am sure no member of the committee is opposed to the principle involved in the amendment —that I would not be able to support the amendment. Yet, it would be very difficult indeed to vote against it because of the considerations I have mentioned and because of the principle involved.

So I venture to ask the hon. member for Lévis whether in the circumstances he would ask leave of the house to withdraw his amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Guay: Mr. Chairman, over a week ago I moved an amendment to clause 4 of Bill No. C-194 so that the appointments made under the said clause would take into account Canada's linguistic duality and cultural plurality.

Never at any time did I believe that such an amendment could result in appeals and assure us that the principles put forth would be judicially respected. I was merely trying to elaborate the embryo of a general policy which would apply in federal institutions.

Since the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Pearson) has just announced formally and officially to the house the government policy on the important matters which were the subject of my amendment, there is no doubt that my objectives have now been achieved. I could even say that they have been more than achieved, since my amendment applied only to a single piece of legislation.

In the circumstances, I cannot see any reason for maintaining my amendment and I therefore ask the unanimous consent of the house to withdraw it.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I must ask hon. members of this house if they agree to the hon. member for Lévis withdrawing his amendment.

[English]

Is it agreed that the hon. member has leave to withdraw his amendment? The right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Grégoire: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, the house has seen a most unusual—

[Translation]

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Lapointe on a point of order.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, you ask whether the hon. member has the unanimous consent of the house to withdraw his motion. Well, he does not have it from our group and I would like to explain why we are not ready to allow the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) to withdraw his motion.

I listened with great interest to the Prime Minister's statement, especially when he said that any government would take into serious consideration the factor—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member for Lapointe but I had recognized the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker). And I understand very well the point he just made to the effect that—

Mr. Grégoire: The amendment is not withdrawn?

The Deputy Chairman: The amendment has not yet been withdrawn because unanimous consent has not been given. It may or may not be given later on.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman of course has made his position very clear and no doubt he will amplify it. It is not for me to argue the case. When this matter came before the house I took strong opposition to it. On June 10, at page 6252 of Hansard, I pointed out the dangers in this type of amendment. The Prime Minister has now seen fit to agree with the contention I advanced and which I believe was in the interest of our country as a whole.

It is of interest that the minister of manpower is not in the house, for he followed me on that occasion and spoke eloquently and succinctly. He said:

> In its present form, the amendment contains nothing of a racial nature.
>
> Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I just want to say that, personally, I would have preferred this amendment not to be presented to the house, but since it is before the house, I do not see how I can be against it and I shall vote for it because, as there are real grievances in this field, it would mean that the house does not heed these grievances but rejects them altogether.
> Therefore, I shall vote for the amendment, although personally I wish it had never been presented.

We find a most anomalous situation. When ministers speak on matters connected with legislation they speak for the government. That is the constitutional position. Now we have a position of affairs where a minister purported to speak for the government and said he was going to vote for this amendment. In his absence today the Prime Minister has asked for the withdrawal of the amendment, to which the hon. gentleman who moved it agreed.

• (5:20 p.m.)

This is a most unusual step in constitutional development. I would very much like to see the minister of manpower here to ascertain whether in the intervening two weeks or so since he expressed himself on this matter he has seen the light.

Mr. Pearson: He said he preferred to have it withdrawn.

Mr. Pickersgill: He said it at the time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I missed the interruption.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, the right hon. gentleman read his words and he said he wished it had never been moved, so he is getting exactly what he asked for in having it withdrawn.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The aroused nature of the hon. gentleman indicates that I have touched a tender spot. He never rises and becomes so obviously excited unless there are reasons. Indeed, I hear, and only by that rumour that flows about the House of Commons at all times, that there have again been strong divisions on this subject among members of the cabinet.

Mr. Pearson: You are an expert on that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —and it is very obvious now that there have been. The Prime Minister laughs. The press references of the last few days have given strong support to the tremendous division that is apparent to anyone who watches this government from day to day. When the minister of manpower spoke, does the Prime Minister say that he did not speak for the government? Does the Prime Minister say that when ministers speak they do not speak for the government? Yet, if the minister of manpower were here on this occasion, conveniently absent as he is, and there were not unanimous agreement for withdrawal he would find himself in a most unusual predicament constitutionally. This is not unusual so far as this government is concerned. Only a few days ago, on the question of loans to university students, the Minister of Finance brought in the legislation and the Minister without Portfolio proceeded to advance his ideas of changes that should have been in the bill and were not. This is a most unusual idea and concept of cabinet solidarity.

The Prime Minister has expressed himself clearly and definitely. I do not know what will be the position of the minister of manpower. No doubt he will learn his first constitutional lesson, that ministers ought not to rush in where angels fear to tread. The Prime Minister today in a very diplomatic speech reviewed the dangers inherent in this amendment. I am glad that he has taken this stand. If withdrawal of the amendment is not accepted by the house and it is passed, it will lead to an ethnic formula as a qualification for the filling of positions on boards.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is nothing ethnic in it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It would mean that racial origin and not ability would be the criterion for appointment. It would place race against race in competition for the filling of positions. It would accentuate cultural differences. It would Balkanize this nation in so far as appointments are concerned. In the national interest the varied racial resources of the nation should be pooled rather than isolated one from the other. The richness and diversity of the cultural heritage of the various ethnic groups should be preserved. In that way Canada will be enriched.

The English and French have their constitutional rights. Those are unchanged and unchangeable. To accept this amendment would be the prelude to debasing Canadianism. I am glad that the Prime Minister saw fit to take a strong stand on this matter and I hope that the request of the mover of this amendment for consent to its wihdrawal be accepted.

This kind of thing started off when there was before the house a bill in connection with the Ottawa Terminal Railway Company. We have not heard anything about that bill since the month of March. There for the first time this type of concept had its beginning. I do not know whether the bill regarding the Ottawa Terminal Railway Company is going to remain on the order paper and then die a natural death when this session comes to an end, but having regard to its having been in a state of suspended animation for April, May and June, over three months, I would take it, in view of the attitude of the Prime Minister today, that the Ottawa Terminal Railway Company bill will be one of those things that had its day and then passed away.

I support the Prime Minister in the general expression of his viewpoint on this amendment and would hope that the hon. member for Lapointe would be willing to join in agreeing to the withdrawal of an amendment which if voted on can only lead ultimately to serious consequences to national unity and in that relationship that should prevail among all Canadians regardless of their racial origin.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, in a very brief moment may I too applaud the statement that was made by the Prime Minister. I think it was the proper kind of statement to make on a matter of this sort. I should also like to support the hon. member for Lévis in his request to the house that withdrawal be consented to. I hope that request will be met.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I listened with great interest to the statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and to the one made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker).

National Arts Centre

The Prime Minister said that any government, including the present government, will from now on have to take into consideration the bilingual and bicultural factor which exists in Canada, and that the present government did so in the past when appointing directors to crown corporations. Those are wonderful statements but the facts should be examined first and then we can judge.

The Leader of the Opposition spoke a little earlier about the bill to incorporate the Ottawa Terminal Railway Company. Well, if you study what happened in that case, you will see that the facts contradict the ideas set forth today.

When the Ottawa Terminal Railway Company was to be set up, the standing committee on railways passed an amendment asking that at least two French speaking members be appointed to the board of directors. And that was agreed to by the majority of the committee members.

That bill was discarded last year; it was not reintroduced in the house and, this year, a new bill comes back without the amendment. Why? Because the directors to be appointed had been contacted beforehand and there was not a single French speaking Canadian among them.

Therefore, in that case, the facts were at variance with the fine statements. If that was asked for, if that was voted in the committee, it was precisely because the directors of the Ottawa Terminal Railway Company had been approached and appointed even before the company or the corporation was instituted and when the members of the committee asked that there be French Canadians, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), who is here, could not but object, since they had approached and appointed the directors of that corporation and there was no French speaking Canadian among the members of the corporation, and that was said in the committee.

In that case, I think everything is clear. Let us examine other crown corporations. When, after the statement of right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), I look at the executive directors of Air Canada, the president, vice president in charge of sales, operation, finance, vice president in charge of business, stores, vice president in charge of administrative services, director of public relations, secretary, chief solicitor and general counsel, they are the directors but none of them is a French Canadian. Not a single French speaking Canadian.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

If the Prime Minister wants names, I have before me the list published in the latest 1966 report of Air Canada. This should be enough to convince the Prime Minister.

But, let us look at some others. Polymer Corporation Limited, another crown corporation. President and managing directors, five vice presidents, treasurer, secretary and solicitor, not one French speaking Canadian. Not a single one. Another crown corporation.

Let us take another crown corporation. Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited, not one French speaking Canadian among the directors of this crown corporation. Are not these facts inconsistent with the statement of the Prime Minister?

• (5:30 p.m.)

The facts are at variance with the statements. In the Canadian National Railway Company, two French Canadians out of 17. In the Bank of Canada, only one French Canadian among the directors; none in the management.

Despite these facts, fine statements are made to the effect that our government and any government shall take into consideration the bilingual factor in Canada.

Well, this has not been done in the past. It is precisely because it has not been done that it is time to spell it out in legislation, because it has not been put into practice.

That is why we object to the withdrawal of the motion, because in spite of all the statements, it has not been done and it is not being done now, any more that it was done in the past.

The facts prove it. I do not say that we accept all of the motion or of the amendment of the member for Lévis (Mr. Guay). No, there is something ridiculous in his amendment.

For instance, when he mentions the linguistic duality of Canada, we agree. But when he refers to cultural plurality, what in the world is it? Either we have culture or we do not. Some people have culture. Some do not. But cultural plurality, what does that involve?

You may be a man of culture, be a French Canadian and listen to Italian opera, and you have culture even if you are listening to Italian opera.

You may be a French speaking Canadian and listen to the works of Shakespeare, in English, and then you have culture. But it does not mean that you have cultural plurality. You either have culture or you do not. That is all.

A French speaking Canadian may also have the mentality to listen to go-go music and then, he will have go-go culture. But that is not necessarily culture. And then, we are told about linguistic duality and cultural plurality. But what in the world has cultural plurality to do with this?

One cannot have several cultures. One has culture or one has not. Our culture includes Italian opera and English theatre and German opera and French opera.

The works of the Italian painters and Beethoven's symphonies. There is no language involved. It is not spoken. Are you going to tell me what is included in an exclusively German culture? Not at all. Music has no frontier. What does cultural plurality consist of? Does that mean that you can be cultured or not be cultured? To be half cultured? Or be cultured in several ways? Not at all. One either has culture or not at all. Period.

Now, in view of the facts and after the statement of the Prime Minister, after the facts I brought forward contradicting the statement of the Prime Minister—and I challenge the Prime Minister to question what I have mentioned, I have the names here and I can name them in the house and he will see that I am right.

After what happened concerning the Ottawa Railway Terminal, I feel we must retain an amendment before the house, but an improved amendment which will not foster racial discrimination in the country and will not be prejudicial, not to unity, in which I have never believed, but to the understanding which may exist.

That is why I wish to move a subamendment to the amendment of the member for Lévis. I move, seconded by the member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard), that:

All the words, after the word Canada, be deleted.

So that the amendment will be worded as follows:

In the appointment of members and officers of the board, the linguistic duality of Canada will be taken into account.

Period. And the following words "and of its cultural plurality" will be struck off.

Even though the linguistic duality of Canada is taken into account, we do not discriminate against anyone. English and French are recognized as the two official languages of Canada and when a piece of legislation provides that, in the appointment of the directors of the National Arts Centre, the linguistic duality must be taken into account, no racial discrimination is involved. There is no ill-will in this.

Other racial groups in Canada will not seek revenge, because when they first come to Canada, they know this is a bilingual country with two official languages, French and English.

I feel that with this amendment, the amendment of the member for Lévis should be maintained and passed by all members of the house. In the future, we shall probably see more directors and executives able to speak both languages within crown corporations.

We, the members of the standing committee on trade and finance, recently visited Expo '67. We met there several directors and most of the people we met were bilingual, could speak French and English. They will be better able to welcome the visitors, to fulfil their duties, and we believe that, in the case of all crown corporations, such as Expo '67, by beginning with a legislation dealing with a corporation which is being created, which does not exist yet, and including that, we will reach that objective for that corporation and it will probably be desirable and preferable to include the same provision for all future crown corporations.

[English]

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with great interest to the predictable remarks of the hon. member for Lapointe. I say "predictable" because they are so constant. He continues a never-ending struggle for the recognition of what might be called "the French fact", and I have applauded the hon. member's efforts in the past. However, I wonder whether at times the hon. member for Lapointe, in his enthusiasm to bring about better understanding between the English and the French not only in the province of Quebec but in the whole of Canada, hurts this cause instead of helping it. I wonder whether he should not consider, as I do, that when he insists on the appointment of French speaking Canadians on the boards of directors of crown corporations he is, without realizing the fact, actually insulting the very people he has been elected to protect.

• (5:40 p.m.)

I consider that any legislation making it imperative for a French speaking Canadian to be on a board of directors, not necessarily because of his intelligence or because of the contribution which he could make to that board—

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member allow me a question to prevent him from misunderstanding the meaning of our remarks. He will notice that the amendment speaks not of French Canadians or English Canadians but says that the linguistic duality must be taken into consideration. An English Canadian can speak both languages and then the linguistic duality is taken into account. A French Canadian can speak both languages and, there again, the linguistic duality is taken into account. I would like the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) to take that into consideration.

[English]

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Lapointe has made his speech once and he is just summarizing precisely what he said 20 minutes ago.

The point I am trying to make, whether the hon. member for Lapointe likes it or not, is this. Having lived perhaps longer in the province of Quebec than he has, since I may be a little older at 44 years of age, I do not consider myself any less a Quebecker by reason of the fact that I was born of Irish parents than the hon. member who by accident was born of French-speaking Canadian parents. Furthermore, there are times when I listen to the hon. member for Lapointe and consider that I have more respect for and understanding and appreciation of the contribution French speaking Canadians have made to Canada than he has.

I think that any crown corporation in this country, whether it be a new crown corporation or an existing one, that numbers French speaking Canadians on its board of directors does so not because of ill-founded legislation which makes this imperative but because that crown corporation realizes that French speaking Canadians as well as English speaking Canadians have something worth while to contribute to the corporation. If we are ever to have a united country, Mr. Chairman, it is time that we stopped trying to legislate this type of thing into our statute books. You do not overcome prejudice by the statute books; you overcome it by practice and understanding.

The point which the hon. member for Lapointe seems to forget is that French speaking Canadians, under the present terms of the British North America Act, have risen to positions of great prominence in this country not because there has been an amendment to a bill or because of a particular term in the constitution or the constitution of a corporation making it imperative that they be appointed. The hon. member mentions corporations which do not include French speaking representation. What about the President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation? What about Mr. Roberge, President of the National Film Board? What about the Governor General of this country whom the Leader of the Opposition saw fit to appoint as the first French speaking Governor General of Canada? What about former Prime Minister St. Laurent? What about the contribution of General Allard who has just become the top soldier in the country? Were these appointments made through legislation? What about French Canadian representation in the Supreme Court of Canada, not forgetting the Chief Justice himself?

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that these people did not go home, having been appointed to these positions, and hide behind some legislation. These people were appointed because of their ability and the fact that they were Canadians foremost and Quebeckers second. I suggest it is time that the hon. member for Lapointe became a Quebecker second and a Canadian first.

I stood up in this house not yesterday but three years ago and asked the house when we would eliminate the English separatists in Canada. I predicted that French speaking separatists would disappear and I am glad to repeat this prediction today. But there are times when I wonder whether the hon. member in the corner, in fighting his battle for an associate state, realizes that he is abusing the very mandate which the people of the constituency of Lapointe gave him to come here and represent them in a united Canada. That is his mandate. It is not to use every little piece of legislation which comes forward to drive home what all French Canadians are entitled to and are not entitled to.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that French Canadians are entitled to the same things as I am. They are entitled to make their mark in life in the same way as I am, namely, by hard work and recognition of ability. If we are to have the unity that all of us want, regardless of where we sit in the House of Commons, it is time we stopped putting a prefix to the word Canadian. We are all Canadians. All that this bill seeks to do is to provide that every director on the board of the national arts centre shall be a Canadian.

I do not like losing my temper on a matter as important as this but I should like to say in conclusion that this type of discussion is pursued quite frequently. I have discussed this question in groups of 2, 3, 10 and 20. Usually a discussion of this nature starts in a friendly fashion but then gets down to the real thing, dividing this country.

What is separating this country are the callous politicians who use lack of education in certain parts of the country, politicians who use bigotry. As I go across this country I condemn English speaking politicians who use prejudice against the province of Quebec and French Canadians for political reasons. However, I suspect many French speaking Canadians are equally as guilty as many English speaking politicians in resorting to prejudice for short gain and temporary political advantage.

The history of Canada is punctuated with the exploits of French speaking Canadians. I do not have to reiterate for the benefit of the members of this house the contributions of such great people as Champlain, Cartier and Montcalm. However, I think it is time that French Canada shook off its inferiority complex and realized that there is a place in Canada for people of talent and ability, whether they be French, German, Jewish, Ukrainian or Irish.

• (5:50 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I rise to disprove in a few words some of the entirely inaccurate assertions made a while ago by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire). According to him, the Prime Minister asserted that French speaking Canadians had been appointed to all commissions or crown corporations.

What the Prime Minister pointed out very clearly and explicitly is that, in the last three years, the policy advocated in the submitted amendment has been followed by the government. That is what he said and he indicated thereby the definite intention of the government to pursue the same course.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. If the President of the Privy Council was here, then he has put into my mouth words which I never uttered. I have never said that according to the Prime Minister French Canadians had been appointed to all the crown corporations. I said this: the Prime Minister stated that his government must give due consideration to the bilingual element in Canada; after which I mentioned some crown corporations, to prove that it has not always been the case.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Chairman, on the same point of order. The member for Lapointe used the same text to name crown corporations founded 20 years ago which the Prime Minister used when he said that for three years now, the government had followed that policy of bilingualism in its appointments to crown corporations.

Mr. Favreau: In any event, figures and statistics clearly indicate not only that the government intends to implement this policy, but that it started doing so three years ago. The member for Lapointe said something interesting in this connection. He said that in the case of the corporation for Expo '67 all its members are bilingual, and this, mark you, expresses the aforementioned policy.

Mr. Grégoire: I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council to again quote me correctly I mentioned the majority of the members we met, we did not meet them all. That does not mean all the members of the corporation are bilingual. I should ask the President of the Privy Council to quote me correctly. I said the majority of the members of Expo that we met.

Mr. Favreau: The hon. member for Lapointe will not go as far as to deny having met certain of the members appointed by the federal government and yet those—he admitted so himself a while ago—meet the requirements that his amendment or sub-amendment seeks to legislate into the statute books. Besides, since 1963, five French speaking deputy ministers, five bilingual deputy ministers have been appointed by this government. I think one must at least recognize what statistics, what the actions of the government, clearly evidence: the policy which the right hon. Prime Minister wants to see implemented is already implemented, and will continue to be implemented under this government.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Chairman, several months ago, when the Prime Minister set up a Commission on bilingualism and biculturalism, millions of Canadians welcomed that initiative. Last April 6, when he introduced his policy on bilingualism within the public service, millions of Canadians also welcomed that step. This is not the right time to discuss the implications of that policy. But I am wondering why the Prime Minister, through the request he is now making to the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay), objects today to translating explicitly by an amendment or in a bill the application of bilingualism which is asked for.

I understand the Prime Minister's argument who speaks of tradition, custom and also the argument made by the President of the Privy Council who says that the government intends to do it.

But that is precisely the question, namely the intention. If we must wait another 100 years, as we have already done, to realize the unfairness and the unequal treatment given us under confederation, that is precisely what we are complaining about.

I feel that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Lévis is certainly not a factor of dissension; on the contrary, no one should be afraid here in Canada once and for all to show his good faith and to include in the statutes standards, provisions to stress Canada's bilingual and bicultural character. The Fathers of Confederation had more courage in 1867 than we have now; they were not afraid to include section 133 in the constitution to stress in the federal stronghold of the central government, here in Ottawa, the bilingual character of Canada.

I cannot understand that argument of the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) when he says that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Lévis is an insult to French Canadians; in my opinion, it is the most ridiculous argument which can be used with regard to the dissatisfaction which we have been feeling about confederation for a hundred years. On the contrary, it is that state of affairs which is an insult to us, Mr. Chairman, because we have always been kept away from top posts not only in the civil service but also in crown corporations.

Following the hon. member for Lapointe, I would like to quote other examples to show, figures in hand, the reality and positive side of our dissatisfaction. For instance, in 1960, the "Conseil de la vie française en Amérique"—the President of the Privy Council and the hon. member for Verdun will admit that it is a responsible and first class organization—submitted a brief to the then prime minister in which it was established that there were practically no French Canadians to be found on boards or in departments.

You can see the figures on page 18 of a booklet I wrote which is entitled "La dernier Chance" which you can find here in the library, in both French and English.

Here it is

	Total	French Canadians
Department of Insurance	5	0
Export Credits Insurance Corp.	10	2
Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd.	15	0
Industrial Development Bank	6	0
Canadian Commercial Corporation	8	0

Mr. Chairman, that is what we object to and we ask all members, in good faith, to agree to insert our claims in the wording of the legislation, in short not to leave to the whims and to the political ups and downs that occur in all governments that followed on each other in Ottawa, the recognition of equal treatment to French Canadians, to the other culture and the other official language of the country.

If French Canadians are to play a dynamic role within the Canadian confederation, they must be treated as equals and not in this underhand manner with the implication that they are always being kept apart.

That was a welcome and praiseworthy undertaking on the part of the hon. member for Lévis, a member of the present government, and today I am sorry that he will have to withdraw his amendment under pressure. I cannot in any way accept the reasoning of the right hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Guay: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Order. I would ask the hon. member for Sherbrooke to resume his seat. The hon. member for Lévis has a question of privilege.

Mr. Guay: Mr. Chairman, contrary to what the hon. member for Sherbrooke has just stated to the effect that I am withdrawing my amendment under the influence of certain pressures, I state that the contrary might be true. It may be through certain representations that for the first time, the government has laid down before the house the policy and the guide lines which will henceforth inspire all appointments to all crown corporations.

That was accomplished in the house and in no way as a result of pressures or representations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Chairman, I wish to point out, first of all, that this is not a question of privilege. If the hon. member wishes to speak once more to these amendments, he has the privilege to do so. But it is clear to me, as I was in the house, that the right hon. Prime Minister asked him or invited him to withdraw his amendment. If that is not pressure, if it is not an invitation or a request, it is actually as a result of the invitation of the Prime Minister that the hon. member for Lévis, having taken such action the other day, withdrew his amendment today.

[English]

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. We are getting close to private members' hour. I know that hon. members are emotionally upset about this subject, which should be debated in a cooler atmosphere at some time in the future when an opportunity can be given to everyone to express his views, but I wonder whether hon. members would not co-operate. We are on the last clause of this bill. Could we not pass it, give third reading to the bill and go on with other business of the house?

• (6:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Allard: Mr. Chairman, I think the best way to co-operate in order that this bill and the amendment may go through quickly, is to let the hon. members who have been recognized conclude, so that they may complete their argumentation. We do not intend to do any obstructing, but if our voice and reaction seem somewhat impassioned, it is with figures to support assertions that we say once more, while standing in this house and looking at all the hon. members: For 100 years, discrimination and injustice have been shown against French Canadians and they have been left out of the main crown corporations and the federal public service. We are here to ask for justice, in full light and in good faith, and that is the reason why the hon. members should at last support an amendment such as this one, which will not create disunity. How can sanctioning a fact that we are merely being asked to accept as usage cause disunity? It is a feeble argument which we cannot accept. That is why, in closing to allow other members to rise, I ask the house to support this amendment and add that I was pleased to support the subamendment of the member for Lapointe.

The Chairman: Is the house ready for the question on the subamendment?

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Chairman, this is the first time I have risen in this house to speak on such a topic.

The Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock, in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, it is my duty to leave the chair.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Basford), Water Resources—sale of Canadian water; the hon. member for Hamilton South (Mr. Howe), Health and Welfare—request for grant for retarded and disturbed children; the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), Canadian Constitution—suggested study by parliamentary committee.

It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

INTERPROVINCIAL PIPE LINE COMPANY

The house resumed, from Thursday, March 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wahn for the second reading of Bill No. S-10, respecting Interprovincial Pipe Line Company.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, this bill has been discussed on several occasions and I for one would like the opportunity to consider the procedure that is involved here and the basic reason for the proposition we are asked to support.

I object to this bill as it stands and I believe further consideration should be given to it. The argument put forward by this company is that it ought to be given authority to split its shares so as to give a greater opportunity for participation by the public. I note, however, that there are at the present time shares available in the treasury of the company which could be issued at any price desired. They could be offered on the public market if it were felt there should be greater public participation. I am at present gathering together all the documents available on the subject intending to make a full and detailed examination of them so as to find out exactly what is involved in the bill before us. Many hon. members who have already looked into this question appear to be most reluctant to pass the measure as it stands. The argument that the company desires to divide its shares in order that there may be wider participation in its affairs is not good enough, bearing in mind that it still has unissued shares in its treasury.

Let me read clause 1 in which the main content of the bill is to be found. It states:

> Notwithstanding anything contained in section 3 of chapter 34 of the statutes of 1949 (1st session), as amended by chapter 66 of the statutes of 1952-53, each of the issued and unissued shares of the capital stock of the Company of the par value of five dollars is hereby subdivided into five shares of the par value of one dollar each, so that the capital stock of the Company shall be two hundred million dollars divided into two hundred million shares of the par value of one dollar each.

The company has, of course, the right to ask this treatment and we have the right to permit it. But we should also have the right to scrutinize these things closely in order to find out precisely what is involved. I am anxious to do this but I cannot do so at the moment because I have not had time to complete my study of this measure. I intend to do so and to speak on it at some length on a future occasion. I therefore wish to move:

> That this bill be not now read the second time but that it be read the second time this day six months hence.

• (6:10 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. McNulty: Mr. Speaker, I object to a vote being taken at this time.

And more than ten members having risen:

Mr. Peters: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the vote has been called and I wish to speak to the amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The amendment is, of course, a debatable one. Any objections to the taking of a vote will be noted at the time when the vote is to be taken. The hon. member for Timiskaming.

[Mr. Langlois (Mégantic).]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I think the amendment is a good one. For some time Interprovincial Pipe Line Company has been making representations to parliament to have a bill passed permitting a split in the company's stock. On a previous occasion the company received parliamentary approval for a ten to one stock split and it is now seeking an additional five to one stock split. In my opinion some of the information it has provided to us does not bear close scrutiny and the company should be given an opportunity to reconsider the matter.

When this bill was first introduced we were told that the stock split was to allow closer participation by the employees of the company and better benefits for them in a profit-sharing program. I have here a copy of the questions asked by the company of its employees and the answers to those questions. In the main they were something like the stock question, Have you quit beating your wife yet? If the employee replied yes he admitted he had been beating her and if he said no it meant he had not stopped beating her. Later other reasons were advanced in favour of the stock split.

At present the company has 40 million shares with about 5 million distributed and the balance retained in the company treasury. Under the terms of this bill the number of its shares would be increased to 200 million, which seems an unreasonably large amount of stock to have floating around. I believe the company is at fault in seeking passage of this bill without saying what it proposes to do with the stock now held in its treasury.

I have been told by lawyers knowledgeable in this field that normally when a company asks for a stock split and already has a large number of shares in its treasury or in escrow, it seeks to reduce the number held in that manner. This company has a limited number of shares on the market available for public subscription, with the aim of establishing a good paper value for its stock. It has given no indication that it will release more shares, and I suggest the very same people will own the available stock after it is split five for one as own it today. They will buy four or five shares at $20 instead of one share at $70 or $80 or whatever the present price may be.

If I were buying stock this is the kind of company I would dream about and recommend to almost anyone. It is a company set up to circumvent certain regulations and it only allows a limited amount of its stock on the market. When the company was originally incorporated pressure was applied to have it made not only a transmission line for Imperial Oil but also a common carrier subject to the regulations of the board of transport. As it stands, the company could easily secure new capitalization from Imperial Oil reserves. Its bonds carry an interest rate of about 3½ per cent at a time when money cannot be procured even at 7 per cent or 8 per cent. Its bonds are mostly owed to Imperial Oil and leaving aside its unissued stock it is largely a captive company of Imperial Oil. It would be very imprudent to write off 3½ per cent bonds when only one-third of the operation is covered by stock.

I believe that in 1956 or 1957 when the company was incorporated, its treasury stock was selling at $50 a share. The dividends now are well over $3.50. In fact, the balance sheet for 1963 indicates that at that time the stock was paying $3.50 per share. This $3.50 per share was applied to the original stock which has been split ten times. So an original $50 investment now brings in annually in excess of $35. I do not care how stupid the Board of Transport Commissioners is. It could not allow stock that brings in a revenue of $35 a share on a $50 investment. It could not allow this even to the Canadian government. It would think this was rather an exorbitant profit.

What does the company want to do? It wants to split its stock again. Certainly this will reduce the stock to a reasonable price. A person who holds a considerable amount of stock told me it is quite true that you get $35 on your $50 original investment but if you reinvest the dividends you do not get $35 on them. While this is perfectly true, I believe he will find that in a matter of two or three years, if the stock is split, it will reach the level it has already climbed to twice and will produce a fairly reasonable dividend in addition to the dividends on his original shares, which will produce a cumulative dividend on the original $50 investment far in excess of $35. I forecast it may even double, so he may get his $50 back and still have the original $50 investment.

This is an excellent company but I cannot see that it is justified in coming before us with what it considers to be a good proposal when it is asking the Canadian public to allow it to split its stock on the pretext that this will broaden the base at a time when it has 35 million shares in its treasury. It could immediately broaden the base by releasing 5 million shares on the market. That would broaden the base and reduce the price of the stock until it came down to the level they want or they had put the amount of stock on the market that they wish.

I believe the sponsor of this bill has a responsibility to point out many things which have not been pointed out. He has had a close connection with the oil industry for a long period of time. He is well aware of the operation of these companies and well aware of how stock splits operate. You can have as much stock as you want at individual prices but if there are no offerings obviously there can be no purchases unless the price jumps up so high that somebody will make an offer.

Just by cutting down the price you do not necessarily broaden the base. I would imagine that if I had the original shares I would find—I am sure the board of directors so recommended to the shareholders—that the shareholders will be allowed to buy a certain number of shares at a predetermined price if the stock split takes place. I am sure there is an arrangement to take some stock out of escrow or else we would only have an exercise in financing.

I think this company is a good bona fide operation and has very sound stock, but I believe the Canadian people are being cheated when it is said that the purpose of this stock split is to bring the price of the stock down to allow an expanded base. This is not true. It cannot be expanded beyond the amount of stock that is available. While I have not looked at the Financial Post in the last few days I would imagine that a normal day on the stock market does not produce a very large turnover in the stock. I would presume this will not change much when the stock is split, if it is split.

I believe the sponsor of the bill should come before parliament and really give us a factual statement why there is not a clause that would eliminate what I would call unnecessary surplus stock. There is no question that this company wants more money for expanded capitalization but they have not asked for that and I do not think it is necessary. I believe they are quite capable of retiring their debt and are quite capable of making a profit in their operation. The way to increase the base, if they wish to do so, is to allow more stock to go on the market. I suggest that if they doubled the amount of stock now available it would not only reduce the price of the stock by 50 per cent but would reduce it by 200 or 300 per cent and might create a few more obligations with the income tax people and others because there would be an undistributed capitalization in this company which would be rather remarkable.

I am of the opinion, as I believe are many other people, that it is unfair to pick on Interprovincial Pipe Line Company when it comes before parliament, except for one very simple reason. It has come before parliament a number of times and parliament has had to exercise great restraint in rejecting out of hand Interprovincial Pipe Line Company's application each time it has been here. There was considerable difficulty in getting Interprovincial Pipe Line Company to be a common carrier for other oil companies' products so that a rate could be established at the initial stage. You may have read, Mr. Speaker, some of the representations which were made by provincial governments at the time of the formation of the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company and you will be aware of the resistance in this regard.

When the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company came before parliament the last time and asked for a ten to one split they probably assured us and the shareholders that this was necessary to increase the base of the company and increase the number of shareholders. No doubt they also were of the opinion, as they are now, that their stock should be in a range which does not put them in the blue chip level but rather at a normal level. They want it to be an upper class stock but not necessarily on the high level that a price of $80 puts it. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the company would be well advised to consider withdrawal of this bill because I intend to move to insert another clause that will demand the redistribution of the stock it now has and this is not what the company had in mind.

Many persons holding stock in the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company have written to me and said, without exception, that the reason the stock is going to be split is to make more money. They are very honest people and I have no objection to this purpose, but I think Interprovincial Pipe Line Company should at least be as honest and say it is going to split the stock because it wants to make more money and redistribute the dividends in a different manner.

I believe the amendment is a good one and should be supported by all members of the house. We are having difficulty dealing with legislation in private member's hour. I believe there have to be some changes concerning the introduction in this house of this type of bill. You may be aware, Mr. Speaker, of the difficulty one of the bank bills now before the house had in the other place. Our committee will have the opportunity of not repeating the mistakes made by the Senate and will be able to make its own decisions. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I hope there is support for this amendment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please, the time allotted to the hon. member has expired.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to participate for a few moments in this debate. I have been in the chamber during many private members' hours and from time to time have felt an urge to speak but have not done so. I do not rise today in order to irritate anyone in the house, of course, particularly the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). However, I feel that the questions posed and the arguments put forward could be answered and dealt with in committee if the hon. member and his colleagues were willing to let the measure get that far. He posed questions in his speech this afternoon which I do not think can properly be answered in this chamber in all the detail necessary. On other occasions when this measure has been before the house the hon. member has posed similar questions. I think these matters should be dealt with in committee with the officials of the company there to give their point of view and answer questions as they are put.

It is not necessary for me to go over everything that has been said in the debate on this bill since it was introduced into the house last February. This bill was also before the house in the previous session. As the hon. member who just resumed his seat indicated, similar stock splits have taken place in this company on a number of occasions. It seems to me that the company is not operating illegally in any way. I do not pretend for one moment to be a specialist in this kind of legislation or this type of business. I cannot be called an expert in this field by any stretch of the imagination. On the other hand, I believe this company is acting not only fairly but responsibly.

Perhaps it is fair for me to say that it is a sad state of affairs that the company was incorporated in the way it was, because companies which are not incorporated by act of parliament do not have to go through the laborious procedure of coming before the house when they wish to do something in the interests of the people who own their shares. They do not have to come to parliament on behalf of their shareholders. I have before me, Mr. Speaker, a list of the shareholders of this company, a number of whom are Canadian. They hold one share, four shares, right up the scale to 10,000 shares. This indicates to me that the shares are owned in the proper manner so far as Canadians are concerned and Canadians, being by far the largest percentage of shareholders in the company, gain the benefit in a proper way from any change in the stockholding of the company. Many of the benefits that flow from the activities of this company come from outside the country, and I emphasize "benefits".

Therefore I feel this is a proper request and can see no valid reason for the amendment nor the argument that has taken place for so long. I believe that if the arguments put forward by hon. members are totally and legally valid they can be dealt with in committee. These questions could be raised with regard to any number of companies, but this is not done. This company is being treated in this way simply because it was incorporated in this manner in the first place. Had it been incorporated in some other fashion it would not, as I said before, have to go through this laborious method in order to change its stockholding program.

So far as the hon. member for Timiskaming is concerned and the many suggestions he has made in this regard—and I assume from what has happened today that there will be more—I should like to tell him that there are in my constituency quite a few shareholders in this company. I have a letter here from a senior citizen, one not blessed with many worldly goods. This man owns some shares in this company. As a matter of fact, he has his life savings in the company. I do not know whether the hon. member for Timiskaming is aware of this, but such is the case right across the country.

I would point out to the hon. member that this man is not the only person in my constituency who has written to me in this vein. I have had many similar letters. This constituent puts the question in this way so far as he is concerned:

> Please note it is 90 per cent Canadian owned and after reading same—

He is there referring to the 1965 report of the company.

> —noting how it carries the oil from Alberta, Saskatchewan to its market in the U.S.A. and Ontario helping all of Canada.

He goes on to say:

> When this N.D.P. Arnold Peters says it's as phony as a three dollar bill I can only say to him he knows nothing whatever about the company and has no regard whatever for speaking the truth.

These comments come from a man who obviously is vitally interested in this company. He is interested to the point where it represents an income for himself and his wife. They live very modestly. I know their circumstances well. I think we might well reconsider whether we are doing the right thing in this regard.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, could I ask a question? Is the hon. gentleman suggesting that his constituent is making the point that in not allowing this split the profits will be less than if the split is made? Is the reason for his concern in this matter that he has been deprived of what he would consider exaggerated profits if this split takes place?

Mr. Winkler: I would not suggest that is the case at all. However, I think this question, as is the case with many of the questions raised by the hon. member, could be answered in committee where officials of the company and other interested people would be present. If these matters were discussed by the committee I believe all these questions would be well answered. I have here a tremendous amount of statistical material, Mr. Speaker, which I do not intend putting on the record because I think enough figures and statistics have been put on the record already.

I have read the comments of other hon. members with respect to this bill, as well as the introductory remarks of the sponsor, the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn). I will be frank and say that I think this bill represents a request from the company for a perfectly responsible amendment to its act of incorporation. Some members have raised what are to them serious questions concerning the proposal embodied in the bill. It is clear as the debate continues that we are having a tremendous amount of repetition of substance. I would not in any way suggest that this debate should not take place, but surely in view of the questions that have been asked and the observations that have been made we should leave this matter to the standing committee where hon. members could ask questions and receive answers from the officials of the company.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am suggesting that the entire matter be referred to the appropriate committee where the bill could be the subject of a specific, detailed examination. In all of these matters there comes a time when all that can be said has been said. I think that replies should be solicited from people who are more familiar with the subject matter under consideration. I humbly ask, Mr. Speaker, that we dispose of the amendment and send the bill to a committee where the matter can be discussed.

• (6:40 p.m.)

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, the amiable member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler) has made some reference to repetition. I noticed he was quoting rather copiously from a speech made earlier in the debate by another member of the house and perhaps he may consider that also to be repetitious.

Mr. Winkler: This speech happens to be my own.

Mr. Barnett: I understood him to say he was quoting from remarks made by the sponsor of the bill.

Mr. Winkler: No, Mr. Speaker, I did not.

Mr. Barnett: In that case I apologize to the hon. member. I should like to say immediately that I am more than happy to support the amendment before the house that Bill S-10 should not at present be read a second time but that it should be read six months hence. This motion is in effect saying to the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company in polite parliamentary language that they should go peddle their papers. So far as I am concerned, that is what this house should tell them to do in connection with this bill.

The hon. member for Grey-Bruce suggested that perhaps this bill could more properly be dealt with in the standing committee. I am absolutely convinced that this is not a bill which should be passed by this house. I also wish to point out, having been present in an earlier session of parliament, that a very similar bill was put before us concerning Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Line Company which operates in my own province of British Columbia. A similar proposal was made in connection with that company and, if I am not mistaken, the explanatory notes introducing that bill and setting out the purposes of that company were almost identical with the explanatory notes contained in the bill before us.

This company may be carrying out a perfectly legal operation but I consider it an affront to parliament for such a company to come here and provide us with explanatory notes that are in essence a falsehood. The explanatory notes read in part as follows:

> The reason for the proposed subdivision is that the company considers it desirable that the average Canadian investor be encouraged and be given the maximum opportunity and incentive to invest in the equity of a successful and growing Canadian company.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we do not need to go into all the details of the bill in committee to know that that statement is not a true statement of fact. We know perfectly well that the bulk of the shares of this company are in the hands of one or two large oil companies. We know perfectly well that the company has no intention of issuing the rest of the shares in the treasury. We know that they do not intend to provide, through the sale of additional shares, capital for the expansion of their operation. We know perfectly well that that has been provided, as has been said by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), by an arrangement under which this company operates through the issue of bonds. This is the way in which the major part of the financing was undertaken in the first instance and it is the way in which they intend to continue their operations.

Mr. Wahn: Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of privilege. I think the hon. member should restrain himself somewhat. He first alleged that a false statement was made in the explanatory notes and later he called it an untrue statement. He has given his reasons for saying so; but he must surely realize that if the issued shares are subdivided five for one there will be five times as many issued shares and more opportunity will be given to Canadians to participate in this company.

I suggest he should not allege falsehood in the explanatory notes because they happen to be absolutely true and accurate. If he does not understand them, it is because he does not understand the nature of corporate practice. It is a routine procedure which is being asked for in this bill and I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member has no right to suggest that the sponsor of the bill, myself, or those responsible for putting this bill before parliament have made a false or untrue statement. I therefore think he should restrain himself.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni said it is untrue to say there will be more shareholders after the stock is split and now the sponsor of the bill denies it. I wish to debate that point because I consider that what we are now doing is splitting the existing stock and, without changing the amount of treasury stock allowed on the market, that stock will be exactly the same stock as it is now. Five shares will be issued for every share. This does not make more stock available. Therefore I think the hon. member's question of privilege is not well taken.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could make a comment on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for St. Paul's and point out where I think the explanatory notes are false and misleading. I do not think restraint is required in this instance, as I am sure the sponsor of the bill realizes. The explanatory notes read in part:

> This relatively high market value discourages investment by the individual investor.

Mr. Johnston, who is the president of the company and who appeared before the committee which also considered a similar bill a couple of years ago, said that 700 to 1,000 shares per day were traded on the market and that that was quite an acceptable number. Today, according to the stock market quotations in the Ottawa Citizen, there were 1,460 shares sold on the market at this so-called "relatively high value". Either Mr. Johnston's declaration or the stock market quotation is false.

Mr. Barnett: It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that my colleagues have established that the hon. member for St. Paul's did not have a question of privilege. I certainly did not suggest that anything the hon. member for St. Paul's said in this house was false. In fact, it seems to me that in his remarks on what he considered to be a question of privilege the hon. member proved that what I was saying was completely true. He said quite correctly that if the shares were split five to one more shares would be made available for Canadians. However, that is not what the explanatory notes say is the desired intention of the company. The company says that Canadians should be given the maximum opportunity to invest in the equity of a successful and growing Canadian company. What I am saying is that this statement is intended to deceive the house because we know that in actual fact only a very small percentage of the shares of this company have been put on the market for trading.

I do not profess to know all the details of what is considered to be good corporate practice; I do not consider myself to be an authority on that subject. However, so far as I am concerned, if it is considered to be good corporate practice to come before parliament with misleading statements of this kind, then I do not want to know any more about what is good corporate practice.

One of the reasons I am concerned enough to speak on this bill is that inherent in it is the whole question of our basic philosophy and outlook toward the conduct of business and what is honest and what is dishonest. I make no bones about the fact that so far as I am concerned private enterprise is entitled to put capital to work, to employ men to produce goods and services and to make a fair and reasonable profit as long as it is on an above-the-board basis. But when practices such as those demonstrated by this bill develop I suggest that this is not something that parliament should condone, whether we like to brag about our support for the free enterprise system or whether we may have serious doubts about a good many of its aspects.

It seems to me that the misleading practices all too commonly accepted by many elements in our society are perhaps typified by the developments which have taken place in recent years in oil and pipe line companies. So far as I am concerned I make no bones about my disapproval of this kind of business practice. It is for that reason that I should like to see the motion before us carried and this bill withdrawn from the consideration of the house.

The hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler) in speaking a little earlier referred to the fact that he had received a letter—I assume it was from one of his own constituents judging from the way he spoke—from someone who holds shares in this company. I may say that I received a few letters from various people who are shareholders in this company. I can think of one example of somebody who said he was a farmer and had bought some shares in the company for a very laudable purpose. His idea was that a shareholding in this company and the profits he would derive from share ownership would enable him to assist his grandchildren to achieve a higher education.

The hon. member raised some question why I and some other hon. members were not prepared to give ready approval to this proposal to split the shares of Interprovincial Pipe Line Company. I also had some other letters along the same lines and I answered all the letters I received. But the thing which came home to me as I read them was that these letters and the way in which they were written very neatly proved the argument I am trying to advance, namely, that this company has been successful in hoodwinking the Canadian people into believing the sort of statements found in these explanatory notes. Somehow the many Canadians across the country who hold shares in these pipe line companies were led to believe that there was being developed a free enterprise system within which every Canadian citizen would be a stockholder in the Canadian economy.

Perhaps it is partly because I received this type of letter that as far as I am concerned I am so ready to support this amendment today. I do not like seeing good, honest Canadian citizens, be they farmers or otherwise, led down the garden path by this kind of propaganda, and as long as I am a member of this house I intend to object to the practice.

If the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn) says that this sort of thing is good corporate practice, then he and I will have to disagree on this question. I am not saying that in opposing this bill under any and all circumstances I would necessarily be opposed to a company dividing its shares. There are certain companies which do rely on the selling of shares for the raising of the necessary funds to expand their operations for capital construction purposes. There may be an area where this is a perfectly legitimate operation and where they could straightforwardly say that this was what they were going to do. But in my view this is not the situation here and inasmuch as we have the responsibility of considering this proposal I think we should take a good look at it.

This sort of proposition has been before committees previously. As the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) mentioned, the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company has been before a parliamentary committee for examination, as also was the Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Line Company. As far as I have ever been able to follow these matters, and I frankly admit that I have not read every word of evidence which has been given, the evidence given in committee by the representative spokesmen of the company has all served to emphasize and to prove the very point I am arguing. So I feel it is really quite unnecessary at this stage that this bill should require the time and effort of the members of this house in a parliamentary committee.

I think it would be much better for us to tell the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company, in spite of the views which have been expressed by the hon. member for St. Paul's about good corporate practice, that we think they would do much better to go back and busy themselves about moving oil through their pipe line and seeing what they can do about reducing the charges for that service which in the end are paid for by the consumers of petroleum products in Canada. That to me, Mr. Speaker, could be much more closely and correctly described as good corporate practice.

I suggest that if this company would do something to assist legislators and federal and provincial governments in this country to cope with the rising cost of commodity prices at this time, rather than seeking to occupy itself with this sort of phony front so far as its corporate financing is concerned, the members of this house would be in a much better position to say that it was a company that was operating in the interests of the Canadian people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please. The hour for considering private members' business has expired and the house will now revert to the business interrupted at six o'clock.

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE

ESTABLISHMENT OF CORPORATION FOR ADMINISTRATION AND OPERATION

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-194, to establish a corporation for the administration of the National Arts Centre—Miss LaMarsh—Mr. Batten in the chair.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, I move we adjourn the debate and report progress.

• (7:00 p.m.)

The Chairman: When the hour for private members business was called, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières had the floor. I think the committee should allow him to proceed.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, being responsible of this discussion to some extent, since I moved the first amendment to that act, it would be proper that I draw certain conclusions. I will briefly try to stress certain statements made in this house since we started discussing this bill and to clear up certain points because I noticed that some of those who spoke during the debate did not understand very well what it was all about; finally, I shall express my views concerning this bill.

Mr. Chairman, no doubt you remember my suggestion that at least three of the nine directors at the National Arts Centre, be French speaking.

Since then sub-amendments have been moved which I find satisfactory because what I really am after is not a figure but a principle.

As can be seen on page 6223 of the official report, the Secretary of State made this statement which I read in English so as not to misquote:

[English]

Over a period of years it would operate as a strait-jacket, and it would mean that there never would be more than three members of French persuasion.

[Translation]

We wanted, at least in the amendment I moved and in the sub-amendment being moved now, that the principle of bilingualism be respected. The hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) rose twice during the debate, and spoke very strongly against the fact that we should insist that recognition be given in our statutes to this principle we hold sacred, the fact of two founding nations, of two partners in confederation. His speech could be approved to the end since he spoke of mutual understanding and tolerance; he mentioned the fact that the French Canadians of the riding of Verdun have said it time and time again, which proves that we, French Canadians, do have a sense of co-operation and good feeling. I feel that, to be logical, the hon. member for Verdun could have concluded by saying that, if it is true that French Canadians are tolerant, that they understand mutual good feeling, he recognizes himself that until now they may not have been as well represented in the public service as they are entitled to be. So, let us draw our own conclusions. Let us then lay down principles in bills. Several speeches were then made. The speech of the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) struck me this afternoon; he pointed out that some members felt very strongly about this bill. I think he showed a lot of conviction himself and at one point he said:

[English]

As I understand it, if this amendment passes the members of the board will be composed of people who represent the two cultures of Canada. After all, there are six million Canadians who have ethnic backgrounds other than French and English, who are proud to be Canadians and who want to participate in the cultural life of their country.

[Translation]

After all, we have no objection to that, Mr. Chairman, on the contrary, we accept new Canadians. But when they came to Canada, they had to make a choice. They knew that there were two partners in confederation: the French speaking and English speaking partners. They have chosen one side or the other and in that choice we respect their aspirations, we accept them as fellow-citizens on the same footing and we do not want to get rid of them at all, but it should not be deduced from that argument that French Canadians must be treated as new Canadians.

Mr. Chairman, I think that some members precisely think that the French Canadians should be treated as a new Canadian. And I draw this conclusion from the speech of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) who, on page 6252 of Hansard of June 10, stated referring to Canadians from German or Dutch extraction:

[English]

They were the earliest of Canadians, which is often forgotten.

[Translation]

Well, Mr. Chairman, my ancestors did not arrive here in 1753, but in 1629, that is 125 years before 1753. Therefore, we have, and I say so, and this is true for most of my Quebec fellow-citizens, the right of first occupancy. We also have a right of co-signatory to a pact accepted and ratified several times since 1763, and that is what we want respected, while we note that, for the last 100 years, this was not done as we had a right to expect.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to digress here and say that I would not want to put passion in my documentation. I want it to be known in this house that I am a Canadian, and that I believe in Canada's unity, unity in diversity, while respecting of course the rights of all. I do not believe in separatism, Mr. Chairman, but I know, for instance, that in my province, we have angry young men who are not satisfied with the lot we have had for the last 100 years and who today are demanding not only statements of goodwill, but legislation to guarantee precisely those rights of the other partner of confederation, and also guarantee that confederation is going to stay alive. Unless this mane, thecel, phares, is seen written on the wall, Mr. Chairman, what will happen is that our angry young men in the province of Quebec will have their way. They took 10 per cent of the vote in the last provincial election and it is neither impossible, nor visionary, to think that in a future election, they might take even more, unless we give them what they are entitled to and what they are demanding with the eloquence we know. Since that time, I have seen that the hon. Leader of the Opposition has made statements which I found disturbing, and I want you to note that I do not blame him nor accuse him of ill-will. But nevertheless, according to what I read in Le Devoir for Tuesday, June 21, he is reported as saying in Toronto:

> The Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons stated Sunday before an audience made up of Canadians of Ukrainian origin his opposition to the creation of any political "third force" to represent Canadians who are not of Anglo-Saxon or French origin.

I recognize that the hon. Leader of the Opposition showed courage by saying that in Toronto, and I give him credit for making a courageous statement. But a little further on, the report says:

> The Conservative leader also rejected the suggestion of two nations within Canada.

This is not so good.

• (7:10 p.m.)

I do not blame the hon. Leader of the Opposition for not understanding the point fully, since he comes from a place which is quite a distance from Quebec, and perhaps nobody has bothered to give him adequate explanations, but the fact remains that there are two nations here, which are partners in a covenant, and the one I represent intends to demand respect of this covenant, or else, and the hon. premier of the province of Quebec has very frankly said so recently, it would be equality or separatism. Therefore, this is the point that should be considered at this time, and that is the aspiration that should be met if anyone thinks it is the right of French Canadians. Otherwise, they should be told, so that they will know what attitude to take. I am still quoting Le Devoir:

[Mr. Mongrain.]

Mr. Diefenbaker attacked particularly an amendment to the National Arts Centre Act now before the House of Commons. It would provide for a recognition of the linguistic duality etc.

Mr. Chairman, I agree with those who spoke before me and who said that understanding is not established through legal texts. I hold the same opinion, Mr. Chairman, but it is obvious, after a century, that the expected results have not materialized, and thus we are forced to demand guarantees, written texts in black and white.

Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, I missed the statement made by the Prime Minister this afternoon. It has been summarized for me three or four times and I believe the hon. Prime Minister is full of good intentions. I would go further, Mr. Chairman. I believe the Prime Minister is the one who did the most for bilingualism and an understanding between the two nations which are members of this confederation. I could list a whole series of fine achievements and I am one of those who has the chance to say, in the statements I make all over the province, that, of all Canadian prime ministers, without meaning to belittle them, the present Prime Minister is probably the one who has shown the most clear-sighted understanding of the problem between the two races.

But that is not what we are discussing at the moment. I think that those who insist that this answers our wishes do not understand what we want very well. We do not doubt the good will of the present government; we are sure it will do everything in its power to be fair, but we say, for example, that when the present Prime Minister is no longer there, when the present government is no longer there, even if it is unpleasant for the party in power to hear these things—they know that one day they, too, may assume the shadowy role of the opposition—who is to say that the other government will understand the province of Quebec? Whether they like it or not, I appeal to the conscience of my colleagues. I am not appealing to their narrow-mindedness nor to their prejudices, but to their conscience as Canadians, and I know that all my colleagues here are Canadians who wish Canada well and want it to be united. I tell them once again: In Quebec, there is a large number of what we call angry young men who realize that good will and sound arguments were not enough to do them justice and who demand to be considered as full partners within confederation. To say such things is not to show oneself as a racialist, as someone suggested. Racialism means a race that wants to dominate another. We do not want to dominate another race; we are aware that we are minority here, and when the vote is taken, we know that we shall not secure a majority. We know that pacts entered into in the past granted us certain sacred rights, for instance, participation in the government of the country, since we pay taxes as everybody else and take part in the life of the country. We demand therefore that those rights be spelled out in our legislation.

Mr. Chairman, since a vote may be taken on the subamendment, I want nevertheless the discussion held in the house to resound once again in the conscience of all my colleagues anxious to preserve Canada's unity. Whether we like it or not, the claims now being made in Quebec seem legitimate to us since they respond to aspirations which are quite natural and fundamental and will have to be met. Otherwise, separatism that we fear so much will take over.

Therefore, let us see where we stand. There is no question of racialism, but it is a matter of sanctioning something once and for all, if we believe in the two nations which make up confederation. The thing is to decide whether our belief and our conviction should actually be reflected in our legislation. And it must be determined that mutual understanding is no longer simply a pious wish but something positive.

And to emphasize what I said earlier and prove that there is no narrow-mindedness or separatism in our province, although some of us argue their case passionately—it will be understood that this is the outcome of a century of frustrations and, to a certain extent it is understandable that they should raise their voices at a given time—nevertheless I want to prove that we are not fanatics, since we, in the province of Quebec, elect English speaking people. In my county, Mr. Chairman, we once elected a Jew, a Mr. Hartt, who was returned several times, even after being expelled from the legislature. A Mr. Ryan was elected, and if I went back over all the names of English people and Jews for whom French Canadians voted, there would be a long series of them.

But, Mr. Chairman, it seems that some people here want to do like the ostrich. The hon. member for Lapointe mentioned that French Canadians considered they did not have fair representation in the various government departments and agencies, and that is true. I do not say this is necessarily due to an uncompromising attitude; I know that French Canadians did not always apply, but this is a fact which strikes the generation in 1966. I went to the trouble of listing, from the telephone directory, for certain departments and crown corporations, the names of the main officials, connected with the departments or management, and I found fantastic things.

In the Department of National Defence, out of 25 names, I find five which are French; I agree that some may have French names but I include them. In the Department of Industry, I find that, out of 45 names, three are French; I note that, in most cases, those people are in junior positions. In fisheries, out of 71 names, I note eight with a French name; I even count in those who have French names but speak English. In the Post Office Department, there are 71 of them, of which 16 are French. Mr. Chairman, I could go on like that ad infinitum. In the Department of Defence Production, I see 44 names, three of which are French. In the Department of National Health and Welfare, 52 names, 12 of which are French. In the Department of Transport 22 names, of which 19 sound French. In the Department of Public Works, the situation is not so bad; there is one third, 45 English speaking and 15 French speaking. Then with one third, we are satisfied.

[English]

Mr. McIlraith: That is not right. That figure is not the correct one for the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Mongrain: I am willing to listen to the minister when he corrects me.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, I rise on a question of privilege. I do not want the hon. member to make a misstatement of fact about the ministry for which I am responsible.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: I am pleased the hon. minister corrected my figures, because I am not anxious to find fault with the minister or with the government; on the contrary, I have just said that, like many others, I admire what they have done until now. But I get my information where I can. I have the telephone directory, nothing else; so, if the hon. minister wants to correct my figures, he will find someone who is very pleased to stand corrected; let him correct my figures, by all means.

National Arts Centre

Mr. Chairman, I shall leave my enumeration at that. Had we discussed the crown corporations, it would have been the same thing. When we discuss these things, these facts, let us do so without undue passion, and establish whether we believe or not in the two nations which are part of our confederation. Do we believe or not that they have equal rights? Have we decided or not to do justice to both nations?

• (7:20 p.m.)

Back home, in Quebec, we have set an example. In my city, the second largest French city in North America, we have an English speaking minority. We speak English to them, we write to them in English. They have their schools, they are members of our clubs, members of our societies, they are treated as full-fledged fellow-Canadians. If they have not had the opportunity of learning French, we go to the trouble of speaking English to them, because we gave ourselves the trouble of learning English, Mr. Chairman, precisely because we believe in the "entente cordiale" in Canada.

Mr. Chairman, I am sorry if I have somewhat raised my voice, for after all I had intended to speak with equanimity, very calmly, and to bring forward only facts and figures supporting my case. But I shall have to support the subamendment, for even though I believe the good intentions of the house should be sufficient to secure good understanding between the two ethnic groups, I have to admit that a whole century has not brought about the expected results; I cannot but see that a great number of our young people advocate separatism because they are dissatisfied, and realize that justice is being denied; I am therefore bound to conclude that now is the time to set down these things in black and white in the statutes.

I am asking once more my hon. colleagues in power not to have a chip on their shoulders. We are certainly not requiring these things solely to embarrass them. We simply want them to realize facts that are staring them in the face and that if nothing is done, we shall rush headlong into a catastrophic situation, namely separatism and the breaking of Confederation, and that I do not want, Mr. Chairman, and I am ready to struggle against it to the bitter end.

[English]

Mr. Turner: I move:

That the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again either later this day or at the next sitting of the house.

[Mr. Mongrain.]

An hon. Member: Later this day.

Motion agreed to and progress reported.

COMPANY OF YOUNG CANADIANS

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT

The house resumed, from Thursday, June 16, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-174, to provide for the establishment of The Company of Young Canadians—Mr. Pearson—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose on Thursday, June 16, clause 15 was under consideration.

Clauses 15 to 25 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I may have missed what happened the last occasion this piece of legislation came before the chamber, but previously a question had been raised as to whether the executive director should be separate from the council. Since the hon. member who originally raised the matter is not present tonight, I think I should ask whether a compromise was reached. If the minister has already answered this question, then I apologize for taking up the time of the committee.

This problem of deciding upon who an executive director should be has caused considerable difficulty in another organization with which the committee is familiar, namely the C.B.C. The top three appointments to that agency were made by the governor in council and were not subject to any control by the executive.

When this question was raised previously the minister showed sympathetic interest in it, though not indicating that he would do anything about it.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, something happened subsequent to the debate to which the hon. member is referring. Clause 10(1) was amended to provide that the governor in council would appoint the executive director, but on the recommendation of the council, which is two thirds elected by the members themselves, and would hold office during pleasure and with the consent of the council.

Mr. Peters: I thank the minister for the explanation he has given. This is a compromise that will be watched with interest, because it has application in other fields.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, when speaking on his estimates the President of the Privy Council was asked a question concerning the salary of the executive director, and he replied:

The present estimates provide in the case of the director for a salary scale between $18,000 and $22,000, but for this year $20,000. In the case of the associate director, the salary provided is $15,000 to $18,000, but for this year $15,000.

Subsequently the Canadian Press ran a story to the effect that the interim executive director, Mr. McWhinney, receives a salary of $20,000 a year. This was very much to his embarrassment because his salary as interim director is $13,500, while the interim associate director receives a salary of $9,500. The estimates to which the President of the Privy Council referred were prepared last fall and were therefore tentative. I want to make this clear because of the embarrassment caused.

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a third time?

Some hon. Members: By leave, now.

Mr. Turner (for Mr. Pearson) moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

• (7:30 p.m.)

CROP INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION, EXTENDING OPERATION, ETC.

On the order:

Second reading of Bill C-208, an act to amend the Crop Insurance Act—the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I was under the impression that this bill would not be called. The committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development is now meeting. Not only is it unfair, but it is ridiculous to bring forth this legislation while the committee is meeting. Therefore I would ask that this not be proceeded with now. I understand the committee is meeting until 9.30 p.m. and that appearing before it are representatives from western Canada. I think it would be unfair to take up in the house the matter of crop insurance while the committee meeting is going on. I understood the committee had this assurance.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there was not any understanding in this regard, but if the hon. member feels that some of the members who are on the committee wish to speak on this, we would be agreeable to putting it over. I have not, however, had any representations from any members of the committee that they wished to speak on this subject. It was on the order paper and the announcement was made last night that it would be heard today.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe we really can operate parliament, with a committees system, if we are going to have a committee meeting and at the same time take up in the house legislation in respect of which members in committee are engaged. Certainly the minimum requirement should be that the legislation should not be proceeded with in the house while the committee is discussing another aspect of the same field. If we wish to proceed with it, it is all right with me, but I do not think it is very reasonable.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the committee is not sitting at the moment. In any event, surely the committee must not take precedence over the house. However, so that the hon. member will not have any sense of grievance, we will ask to withdraw the right to proceed now with this item, and proceed with the Canada assistance legislation. I am concerned with getting legislation over to the other place quickly. If it should be the wish of the whole house that we proceed with the superannuation legislation first, in the expectation that it would be very brief, we might wish to call it. I am in the hands of the house on that. Of course, it would be on the understanding that the debate on it would be very brief, because last night I did give an intimation that we would proceed with the Canada Assistance Plan late this afternoon.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I think we could be through the superannuation legislation in three quarters of an hour, or possibly less.

Mr. McIlraith: Is that agreeable?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): So far as we are concerned, Mr. Speaker, we can proceed with the superannuation legislation. I believe we will be speaking rather briefly on it. The bill might go through in an hour and a half.

Pensions

PENSIONS

CORRELATION OF VARIOUS PLANS WITH CANADA PENSION PLAN

The house in committee on Bill C-193, to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act, the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, the Defence Services Pension Continuation Act, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act, the Diplomatic Service (Special) Superannuation Act, the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways Employees' Provident Fund Act and the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition Act—Mr. Benson—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: May I point out to the committee that there are some amendments to the French version. These amendments are printed in Votes and Proceedings of June 22 at page 685.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that the amendments be adopted now.

On clause 2.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I might point out to the committee that I have several amendments with which I could deal either at the beginning of the proceedings or on the clauses as we go along. These amendments are a result of a recommendation of the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons with regard to appeals to Treasury Board in the case where the Minister of Finance is empowered by the legislation to make particular decisions. I would be prepared to move these amendments at this time or wait until we reach the various clauses.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I suggest it might be done when we are considering the various clauses.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I think that is the sensible way to do it. The minister might like to indicate to us in a general way what they are, but I think we should follow the usual practice of making the amendments when we are on the particular clauses. Perhaps you, Mr. Chairman, might tell us the numbers of the clauses which have been amended by the action of the joint committee.

The Chairman: I think it might be better practice to amend the clauses as we come to them. As we come to a clause which is to be amended I will so indicate.

Mr. Knowles: Could you tell us the numbers of those clauses now?

[Mr. Churchill.]

The Chairman: I might read from the Votes and Proceedings of June 22. The report of the committee said this?

> Your Committee has agreed to report the said bill with the following amendment:
>
> Amend the French version of the said bill by striking out the words "service public" and substituting therefor the words "fonction publique" in the title and wherever those two words appear in the said French version of the said bill.

• (7:40 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I was aware of that; I was a member of the committee. But I thought by this time someone would have a list for us of the numbers of the clauses where we do this.

The Chairman: Perhaps we could have a list made at the table while the hon. member for Carleton is taking part in the debate.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, this bill has been very carefully considered by a joint special committee of the Senate and House of Commons under the distinguished Commons chairmanship of the hon. member for Ottawa East. Therefore the comments which I want to make of a general nature will be very brief indeed. I only want to say that the bill is less than adequate in a number of features: First, in that it has no escalation clause. The principle of escalation was accepted in the Canada Pension Plan and it is the submission of those of us on this side that it ought to be accepted in the superannuation acts.

Second, there is no provision for increases to retired civil servants. I do not propose to discuss this at all tonight, but would mention to the Minister of Finance that his estimates will not have an easy course through this committee until that issue is settled. Third, I think it is clear that many public servants will suffer as a result of the integration of the superannuation acts and the Canada Pension Plan, particularly in two respects. The present civil servant who has a vested right to his full pension, whether or not he accepts employment after age 65, will now suffer a diminution in his pension by .7 per cent per annum, the amount of his Canada Pension Plan contributions, if he takes any employment after retirement.

I think this is a breach of faith. At this late date I do appeal to the minister to have a change of heart in this respect. I do suggest that here is a complete breach of contract, and certainly a breach of faith, in relation to those who are now in the public service. Second in this respect, there is under this bill a substantial increase in contributions. At the present time a male civil servant contributes 6¼ per cent for 35 years and then his contributions cease completely. Let us suppose that a male civil servant enters public service employment at age 18; he then contributes for 35 years and has concluded his payments by age 53. What of the future? At the present time he makes no further contributions. Under this bill and under the Canada Pension Plan he must still contribute after age 53, 1.8 per cent of his salary to the Canada Pension Plan without any improvement whatever in benefits at age 65. So the present civil servant making on the average a salary of, say $6,000 a year between the ages of 53 and 65 will contribute about $108 a year for 12 years, or a total of $1,296, without any improvement in benefits.

I think this very brief illustration demonstrates what a travesty this provision makes of the oft repeated statement that no civil servant will suffer from the integration of the superannuation acts and the Canada Pension Plan. That assertion simply is not the fact. I would have no complaint whatever if this provision applied to all who join the public service hereafter, but I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that it is a clear breach of faith for those who are now in the public service. Then, sir, I should like the minister to make clear to this committee of the whole, as I believe he did to the special joint committee, that the lock-in provisions will not be proclaimed until legislation providing for genuine portability is enacted.

The provisions relating to pensioned officers, warrant officers and petty officers who enter the public service in future are less than satisfactory. The minister outlined to the special joint committee what are the minimum proposals of the government. I make an appeal to him tonight to go far beyond that minimum. In what he outlined before the special joint committee, I think he does less than justice to those who have served Canada well in the armed forces.

I venture to suggest that the minister should take a look at what I understand to be the position of personnel of the R.C.M.P. He told us that approximately $4,200 of the pension of a retired officer in the armed forces would be exempt, and I am now told that if the R.C.M.P. situation were treated as equivalent about $5,900 would be exempt. When we come to this clause I hope the minister will have something to say specifically about it. I appeal to him tonight to put a percentage value into the bill, to bring, as one of the witnesses said before the committee, merit as well as length of service into the matter.

This bill has been considered at considerable length in the special joint committee. It is a bill of very great importance and if it were not for the fact that the committee wishes to deal with it expeditiously I would have a great deal more to say. On certain special clauses I will have brief comments to make and perhaps some amendments.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, when we were at the second reading stage of this bill the initial suggestion of the Minister of National Revenue was that we might go straight from second reading into committee of the whole house on the bill. I think it is appropriate to express a word of appreciation to the minister for having responded to the requests that were made from the opposition side of the house, that this bill be referred instead to a special joint committee.

I am sure he will now agree, and those of us who were members of that committee will certainly agree, that it was an excellent idea to have this bill considered by the special joint committee to which it was referred. Those of us who were on the committee were able to present our various points of view; we were able to argue over our differences and reach various understandings. I am satisfied that because of the time we spent in the special joint committee, time will be saved here in committee of the whole house.

The bill has 94 clauses, apart from any that might be added here in committee of the whole. Hon. members realize that if we were to have a discussion on each of those 94 clauses a good deal of time would be taken. As the matter stands, it will be possible to call and pass most of the clauses without any discussion in committee of the whole, but I think it should be put on the record that the reason there will not be discussion here is that we had full discussion in the special joint committee.

By way of general comment I should like to say that the bill carries out the intentions of the government with respect to the integration of the various government employee pension plans with the Canada Pension Plan. The bill has reduced to legislative form what the government wanted to do in this connection. But, as the minister knows, I am still not sold on the extent to which the government has carried through its policy of what is almost complete integration. It is still my view that the Canada Pension Plan was brought into being for two main purposes. On the one hand its purpose was to provide pensions for employees who had no other pension; on the other hand its purpose was to enable people who already had pension rights and benefits to augment those rights and benefits.

To a considerable extent this right to add anything to their pension position as a result of the passing of the Canada Pension Plan is being denied to our government employees. It is true that for a period of time it will be possible for many retiring employees to have a little more pension than they might otherwise have had. As we worked it out in the committee, the marginal benefit will rise during the first ten years but then will decline until the 35th year, following which there will be practically no marginal benefit whatsoever. It is perfectly true that as a result of the integration, civil servants will not be paying any more than they were paying previously; in fact they will be paying precisely the same amount. However, my complaint is that civil servants are being denied the right to pay anything additional into the Canada Pension Plan—as other people in many jobs can—and they are therefore being denied the concomitant right to have additional pension benefits when they retire.

Surely we have had enough experience with pensions and with their inadequacy in the years after they have been put into effect to realize that there is still room for improvement in pensions, even when they are as good as are the pensions provided for government employees.

I was interested in the comment made by one of the staff associations which appeared before us. The spokesman for that group wanted to make it clear that what they had agreed to was not to integration per se and for all time, but to this particular formula of integration. This particular staff association said that in future if certain adjustments were made it might wish to look at them again. The wishes of the civil servants may have been ascertained by the government, but I believe that many of them now want to take another look at this matter. I think the day will come when civil servants will prefer to have additional benefits from the Canada Pension Plan, rather than the almost complete integration which is contained in this piece of legislation.

During the course of our discussions in committee we came upon one or two instances where it seemed to us that rights which civil servants now enjoy are being interfered with. I make this statement in the light of the general assurances that were given when the Canada Pension Plan was under debate, that integration would not have this effect. One particular case that we discussed at some length was that of the civil servant who retires, let us say, at the age of 62 after his full 35 years of work, and is entitled to draw his full pension under the Public Service Superannuation Act. When he reaches the age of 65 that pension is reduced by a formula that is spelled out in the act, on the assumption that at that point he will start drawing his Canada Pension Plan benefit.

It is clear that if he is retired and is not working at anything else, and if the Canada Pension Plan benefit is not sufficient to make up for the reduction in his public service superannuation annuity, the shortfall will be made up. However, the employee who retires at the age of 62, and at the age of 65 is still working somewhere else and therefore does not qualify for his Canada Pension Plan benefit, will still have his public service superannuation annuity reduced and the difference will not be made up. We went over this matter very thoroughly and very good arguments were given to us by the experts who appeared before our committee. It has to be admitted that those arguments carried a great deal of weight. Nevertheless it is still a fact that here is a right which civil servants previously had but which they are now losing as a result of this integration bill. I am referring to the right to retire on full pension after 35 years of service, say at the age of 62, to go to work somewhere else and not be subject to a reduction in the public service pension.

I am not raising this matter on behalf of people whose pensions are so large or whose position is so affluent that they do not need to find other employment. I am thinking, rather, of the post office workers and others who, although they retire early, receive a level of pension that makes it necessary for them to find other employment. I say that this is at least one case in which the general commitment, that integration would not take away the rights that civil servants already have, has in fact been interfered with.

There are one or two other anomalies of this kind which we will have to deal with as we go along; but as I have already said, Mr. Chairman, because of the very thorough examination we made of this bill in the special joint committee it will not be necessary for us to speak on each of the 94 clauses in the bill now before us.

I should like to express once again my appreciation of some of the improvements that have been made in the Public Service Superannuation Act while we have been considering this bill. For the most part they are technical improvements, an ironing out of a few anomalies.

It is also to be noted that the civil servants in general seem to like the term insurance arrangements that were brought in a number of years ago, and it is to be noted that these arrangements have been improved in that the amount of insurance that civil servants can carry has been increased, and the amount of the minimum benefit that obtains from the point of discontinuance in employment to death has also been raised. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, it is interesting to observe that a piece of legislation which caused quite an outcry when it was brought into this house a number of years ago has now been accepted as a desirable feature.

The only other comment I wish to make is to express once again my very deep regret that at a time when the government was reconsidering the Public Service Superannuation Act it did not seize the opportunity to make two other changes. I believe that on the one hand the government should have changed the formula regarding pensions for widows. At present a widow's pension is 50 per cent of what her husband's would have been. Some of the organizations suggested that these pensions should be raised to a much higher level; I think 75 per cent was the figure suggested in most cases, although some went even higher than that.

It seemed to me that at least 60 per cent, which applies to the pensions of widows of members of parliament, might have been written into this legislation. I regret that this was not done. I hope that, since the minister has said he has a number of amendments to present while we are going through this bill, he might even yet propose an amendment to make this improvement with regard to the pensions of widows of civil servants.

My other regret is that the government did not seize this opportunity to make the necessary amendments in the Public Service Superannuation Act to improve the pensions of civil servants already retired. We now recognize the need to escalate pensions. The government has recognized this in the case of the Canada Pension Plan, and it has recognized it in the case of the Old Age Security Act. I do not think there is any question but that sooner or later we will have to recognize it in the case of retired civil servants. I am not going to speak at length on this aspect of the matter, lest someone raises a point of order as to whether or not the matter is before us. That is the trouble, Mr. Chairman; it is not before us and it ought to be.

I welcomed the response of the Minister of National Revenue to a question which I put to him on June 17. The minister said that he would have no objection to giving the joint committee on the public service a term of reference from the House of Commons to enable it to discuss this whole problem of the adequacy of the pensions of civil servants already retired. He knows me and I know him. He knows that having given me what I regard as a commitment, I shall hold him to it.

I have had to accept the condition that we cannot get at this matter until we have disposed of the other pieces of legislation that have been referred to that committee. But the committee is dealing with them. As a matter of fact, the joint committee on the public service is meeting right now; it was called to meet at eight o'clock tonight to discuss the three other bills. When the committee has disposed of those bills on collective bargaining, I will call upon the Minister of National Revenue to keep the commitment which he made on June 17 by bringing before this house a motion to give the joint committee on the public service a term of reference to enable it to discuss this very important problem.

Even if I disagree with some of the elements of the integration program that is before us, Mr. Chairman, I must confirm the general view that our pension legislation for government employees is by and large good legislation. Precisely because we have made the kind of improvements to our pension legislation which make it something of which we can be proud, and precisely because it does provide a good basis for retirement pensions for our public servants from now on, I think we should do the same thing for those who have already retired. There is far too much in parliament of this doing something for those who are with us now, for those who can lay some kind of an appeal before us, but of trying to forget those who were our employees in the past. This is an unfinished piece of business in our public service pension arrangements which must not continue to remain unfinished.

As I say, Mr. Chairman, I welcome the commitment which the minister made on June 17. I hope it will not be long before that matter is before the joint committee on the public service, so that that committee will be in a position to make an appropriate recommendation back to the House of Commons. As the hon. member for Carleton said, we may wish to say something on a few of the clauses as we go through the bill; but precisely because we have had such a thorough discussion of this legislation in the joint committee, it need not take as long as it might otherwise have taken to deal with this important bill here in committee of the whole house.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 9—Deduction from annuity.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, this is the clause about which there has been much discussion in the joint special committee. I have already referred to the situation, particularly as it relates to those civil servants at present in the service who have been given the commitment that there would be no diminution of benefits. When these people remain off the labour market after age 65, this is true. But if a person with a small pension takes a job which qualifies him for the Canada Pension Plan, then he does not enjoy the benefits which prior to the passing of the Canada Pension Plan he would have received.

This matter was discussed in detail in the committee. I have no desire to reargue it at all, but I do want to record at this time the feeling of the house in this connection, and I therefore propose to move an amendment to this clause. I recognize that the amendment would not be fully adequate, but it would at least express the opinion of hon. members.

There is one other matter in connection with clause 9 to which I should like to refer. Subclause (4) brings within the purview of the act those who served with certain international organizations or in civilian war service. Many members of the house, but more particularly my hon. friend from Halifax, Mr. McCleave, were responsible in 1961, and perhaps earlier than that, for bringing to the attention of this house the position of the civilian firefighers. This is a case of casting bread upon the waters; it has now fully returned, and I want to pay tribute to what the hon. gentleman from Halifax did at that time, which has been productive now.

Without arguing the particular situation further, Mr. Chairman, I move:

That subsection (1d) of subclause (1) of clause 9 be deleted.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment which has just been moved by the hon. member for Carleton is to meet the point that I raised a few moments ago. This amendment was moved in the joint committee and was lost there, and I do not know whether it will do any better here. In the meantime, I wonder whether the government has come up with any other way to cope with this problem?

Let me say again that I recognize that years from now, when everyone is on the same footing, the way the clause is framed might be quite adequate. It may even be adequate now for new employees who are coming into the public service. However, despite all the excellent arguments which were made by the very competent experts the committee had before it, it seems to me that present employees who knew before integration came into effect that they could retire at the end of their 35 years, even if they were only 60 or 62 years of age, and draw their superannuation for life without any reduction, are being short changed in being presented with a formula which reduces their pensions at age 65.

Surely those who were in the service before this integration bill was introduced should be given the kind of protection that this amendment proposes. I see difficulties in the amendment, but as I said in committee, unless the government has come up with some other way of meeting this problem and establishing complete fairness, I shall have to vote for the amendment.

• (8:10 p.m.)

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, there is no point in repeating arguments that were put forward to the committee with respect to this amendment. I should like to say that this matter was agreed to by the advisor committee. The joint council of the Civil Service Association was fully informed of this matter and was, I presume, in agreement with this measure because no objection was raised.

Really, what the amendment is trying to do is amend the Canada Pension Plan. Anyone who retires under the Canada Pension Plan and continues in employment, and has a certain level of income, may find his Canada Pension Plan benefits reduced or completely wiped out during the period in which he works. That is so if the person working is between 65 and 70. On the other side of the coin there is the fact that Canada Pension Plan benefits may increase during that period due to continued contributions.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Bell, Carleton) negatived: yeas, 27; nays, 33.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, before the clause carries there is one other question I should like to put to the Minister of National Revenue. This clause of course is the heart of the bill. I refer to the fact that it provides the formula under which pensions of retiring civil servants are determined once integration is in effect. It is quite clear from this clause that when a civil servant ends up with his two pensions—with his superannuation annuity and the Canada Pension Plan benefit—those two pensions are guaranteed together to be not less than his superannuation annuity would have been. A benefit that flows from this, of course, is that the total amount of that pension at retirement will be X dollars, but the Canada Pension Plan portion of that retirement allowance is subject to the escalation provided in the Canada Pension Plan itself.

We shall reach a point where civil servants will be retiring with a twofold pension, one part of which is subject to escalation. There is no doubt about this. May I ask the minister whether the government has given consideration to providing that the superannuation pension benefit itself will also escalate, so that we will not in future have the sort of problem we now have with respect to retired civil servants.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, when this matter was being considered the government gave a good deal of thought to it. It was decided that in this particular type of plan—and this is a funded pension plan in which funds build up and from which benefits must be paid out—any consideration of escalation would have to be done separately from this legislation. If it were considered, then indeed one would have to consider the level of contributions of government and civil servants in order to support such a pension based on escalated benefits. The government considered this matter and decided that in this particular piece of legislation this would not be done.

Mr. Knowles: This is another piece of unfinished business.

Mr. Barnett: As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has stated, the escalation feature of the Canada Pension Plan, certainly in my view, is the most important single feature of that plan. That feature is a breakthrough in thinking.

I can remember during the first years when I was a member of the house being told that such a feature was an actuarial impossibility and that no pension plan could be devised which could incorporate such a feature. I for one look forward to the time when this feature will be common to all retirement plans, unless some other plan can be devised in which the purchasing power of the dollar remains fixed for all time. Certainly the government has not suggested it could fix the purchasing power of the dollar nor is it prepared to take steps to bring that about.

I should like the Minister of National Revenue to be more specific as to whether future consideration will be given to the question I have raised, and whether this is something that will be considered this year, next year, some time, or never? The minister said that the idea of escalated pensions had been rejected in respect of this particular legislation. Yet his reply was such that it held out some hope of furtheration. Can the minister be more specific as to what he and the government are thinking about in this respect.

Mr. Benson: I was not in the house when my hon. friend was here at the beginning of his career. I know that people were saying that no pension plan could be attached to a wage or cost of living index. As the hon. member well knows, I cannot commit any future government or this government as to what is to be done with regard to civil service pension plans in the future. I can say that in my personal opinion the thought of escalating pension plans in the civil service based on the cost of living index or on some other index, is not ruled out. One must of course realize, when he goes into this kind of pension plan, that it becomes more costly per dollar received back than the normal pension plan where no escalation is built in. I cannot say more than that.

• (8:20 p.m.)

On clause 19.

Mr. Benson: In conformity with the request of the committee that provision be made for appeal from decisions of the Minister of Finance in certain circumstances where no appeal is at present provided, I should like to offer this amendment:

That Bill C-193, an act to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act, the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, the Defence Services Pension Continuation Act, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act, the Diplomatic Service (Special) Superannuation Act, the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways Employees' Provident Fund Act and the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition Act, be amended as follows:

(1) by inserting, immediately after line 11 on page 26 thereof, the following paragraph:

"(1d) prescribing the period within which and the procedure by which any person dissatisfied with any decision or direction made by the minister under paragraph (c) of subsection (1) of section 11, section 12 or subsection (3) of section 13 may appeal that decision or direction to the Treasury Board and authorizing the Treasury Board to make any decision or direction in relation thereto that might have been made by the minister under those provisions;"

Mr. Bell (Carleton): It would have to be moved by the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Benson: Then it will be moved by my colleague the Minister of National Defence.

An hon. Member: Does he agree?

Mr. Hellyer: I so move.

Mr. McCleave: On behalf of the official opposition I wish to thank the Minister of National Revenue for adopting a suggestion which originally came from the hon. member for Carleton and which was presented to the committee by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich and myself. We think this is a reasonable way of dealing with appeals, that is, by referring them to Treasury Board. However, we would suggest to the minister that the experience relating to this amendment and a subsequent amendment be examined in a few years time with a view to setting up a different type of tribunal, should this seem desirable.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clauses 20 to 39 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 40—Computation of length of service.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps the Minister of National Revenue would like me to call a halt at this point, so that he can indicate to the committee what it is that clause 40 does. Is this not the clause dealing with the anomaly which now exists affecting service personnel who are not allowed to count their wartime service for pension purposes when they retire?

Mr. Benson: That is true. This is particularly important this year when a great many servicemen who enlisted during the second world war complete 25 years service. Although they enlisted during that war and continued in the service, they could not count their wartime service toward their pension benefits. This clause has been included so that these people may, deservedly I believe receive their full pension benefits for wartime as well as peacetime service.

Mr. Knowles: It is true, is it not, that if this legislation is passed in the other place and receives assent within the next week or two it will be in effect this very year?

Mr. Benson: That is true. As I say, it is important because this year a large number of servicemen will have completed 25 years service.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Many hon. members have made representations on this subject and I think all are gratified that this injustice has been rectified.

Mr. Barnett: Some of us have been receiving a large number of representations about this question of wartime service and pension benefits. I have also received representations—and I confess I have not been able to understand them very well—about differences in arrangements as between members of the three former elements of the armed forces. Could the minister give us an assurance, or, better still, could the Minister of National Defence give us an assurance that these amendments will take care of the situation we have been hearing about recently?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, this amendment applies equally to the three branches of the armed forces. It is in my opinion long overdue. This has been the subject of one of the major complaints I have received from men who have served in the armed forces and whose careers began in wartime service. I should like to say that this amendment was recommended to the Minister of National Revenue by the defence department and in particular by the associate minister who has been piloting it through its various stages before its inclusion in the bill.

Mr. Hopkins: As a member of this house who has a large military establishment in his constituency, I should like on behalf of the armed forces to express appreciation to the Associate Minister of National Defence for accepting this suggestion. During the past few months I have received a number of letters on this subject from people in the armed forces, particularly from those based at Camp Petawawa. This correspondence has been passed on to the associate minister. On their behalf I wish to thank him for putting forth a change in the legislation, so that members of the armed forces who will be retiring shortly will be given credit in their pension plan for active service during World War II.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 41 to 50 inclusive, agreed to.

On clause 51.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of National Defence will be moving the following amendment:

That clause 51 be amended by inserting, immediately after line 33, the following paragraph:

"(db) prescribing the period within which and the procedure by which any person dissatisfied with any decision or direction made by the minister under section 12 or subsection (3) of section 13 may appeal that decision or direction to the Treasury Board and authorizing the Treasury Board to make any decision or direction in relation thereto that might have been made by the minister under those provisions;"

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, I so move.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I would like to draw to the minister's attention an anomaly that pertains to the amount of money that can be earned by either a former serviceman or former mounted police officer who subsequently enters civil service employment. The minister indicated to the committee that these people would be allowed to earn at least up to $4,218 per year without there being any deduction from the salary in their new position.

I would like to draw to the minister's attention that a sergeant major in the R.C.M.P. who has served 35 years and retired, would be entitled to a pension of $5,912.90, and we understood from the evidence of Dr. George Davidson, given to the committee, that he would not suffer any reduction in that $5,912.90 when going into the public service. In short, there is a discrepancy of approximately $694 between those two amounts.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I have received the same letter as my hon. friend with respect to the position of the R.C.M.P. What Dr. Davidson said in committee, and Mr. Clark as well—and this is something I have looked at pretty carefully—was that the R.C.M.P. under regulations were treated the same as people in the armed services under section 17(2). This does not guarantee that people have the same amount of pensions in the R.C.M.P. as they have in the armed services, so that if an O.R. in the R.C.M.P. got a higher pension he would still be exempted under 17(2) because he is treated the same as an O.R. in the armed services.

I undertook at the committee, and I am willing to undertake again, that the regulations which the government will promulgate as a result of the passing of this legislation will be such that no officer entering the civil service will be treated any worse than a staff sergeant, which is the present highest level of pension for an O.R. coming into the government service. I would not like at this point to undertake anything beyond that in saying that officers will be treated better. The position of the R.C.M.P. in comparison with people in the armed services will continue to be reviewed.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I have just two sentences to utter. The minister knows that I wish what he proposes were in the legislation. I ask him to take very seriously what he said to the committee, that what he proposes is the minimum, and I ask him to give with the greatest degree of generosity. One third sentence: I think generosity should indicate that these armed force pensioners should not be penalized in any way whatever.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member knows how generous this government and I are.

On clause 89—Contributions by employees.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, clause 89 is one of two or three clauses which deal with the pensions of members of the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways Employees Provident Fund. This of course is in line with other cases of integration which are being effected. I rise merely to say what I said in the joint committee, that this reference to railway workers prompts me to remind the government that along with the need to do something for retired civil servants whose pensions are inadequate, something also will have to be done for retired employees of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, if I may, I should like to re-emphasize the remarks made by the last speaker. Many of the retired pensioners live in the Halifax riding and their plight indeed does deserve action.

Clauses 90 to 94 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, although there are a number of subjects concerning which I think action still is needed and concerning which we might continue to speak on this clause, I wish to raise at this point only one. I refer to the representations which have been made to the government for a change in the formula under which the pensions of widows of civil servants are calculated. We had some discussion on this matter in the special joint committee, due to the fact that this was drawn to our attention by some of the delegations which appeared before us.

During the proceedings of the committee I made reference to a copy of a letter which I now have before me, written by the Minister of Finance to Mr. Fred W. Whitehouse, National Secretary-Treasurer of the Federal Superannuates National Association. This letter from the Minister of Finance was written on May 25, 1966. I think, since it contains only three paragraphs, I might be permitted to read it:

Dear Mr. Whitehouse:

I have received your letter of May 13, 1966 concerning the question of the upward adjustment in the pensions of retired civil servants and their widows.

I am familiar with the earlier correspondence on this subject which you have had with my predecessor in office and also with the Prime Minister. This matter has been considered by the government on a number of occasions and I must advise you that I have nothing to add at this time to what the Prime Minister said on April 28 in the House of Commons as printed in Hansard, page 4424, of that date.

If I may interrupt myself before I quote the third paragraph, I should like to emphasize the obvious. This correspondence relates to two subjects; one, raising the pensions of civil servants already retired and, two, changing the formula under which the pensions of widows are calculated.

In the paragraph which I have just quoted it is clear that the Minister of Finance said to Mr. Whitehouse that he has nothing more to say on the question of raising the pensions of civil servants already retired. I regret that that is the position of the government. I do not intend to let it stand as it is, but at the moment that is it. But, Mr. Chairman, when we come to the final paragraph of this letter we have something in a different vein, regarding the question of changing the formula under which the pensions of widows are calculated. Let me read this final paragraph. I ask the minister to listen to it, and to note the contrast between this paragraph and the one which I just read, which said in effect: nothing doing, on increases of pensions of persons already retired. I now read the third paragraph:

The other question of an increase in the basic formula for the benefits payable to widows of former civil servants under the Public Service Superannuation Act is one which has been considered in the over-all picture of contributions and benefits under the act. The government's decision in this regard will be indicated when the amending legislation is given first reading by the House of Commons.

Yours sincerely,
Mitchell Sharp.

I draw this to the attention of the Minister of National Revenue. I would draw it to the attention of the Minister of Finance if he were here. Here the Minister of Finance said to this official of this association representing retired civil servants that the government will not do anything at all now about the pensions of civil servants already retired, but then went on to say, regarding the benefits payable to widows of former civil servants that the government's decision in this regard will be indicated when the amending legislation is given first reading by the House of Commons. This letter was written on May 25, 1966, and the resolution preceding Bill C-193 was then on the order paper and due to be debated soon; as a matter of fact it was given first reading only a couple of weeks later, on June 6.

The contacts I have had with these people in the Federal Superannuates National Association were such as to indicate that they felt that whereas nothing was going to be done for the civil servants already retired, there was an announcement coming with regard to the basic formula under which pensions payable to widows are calculated. I will read again that governing sentence:

The Government's decision in this regard will be indicated when the amending legislation is given first reading by the House of Commons.

It was given first reading on June 6 this year, and then we learned that nothing was being done.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Surely, Mr. Chairman, if when this letter was written the case of the widows who seek an improvement in their basic formula was in the same category in the government's mind as the other one, the same answer would have been given to both points. But no—to the one point, a clear, categorical no; to the other point, "You will learn our decision when the bill is given first reading in the House of Commons." I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue what happened between May 25 and June 6 to the government's decision with respect to the formula under which the pensions of widows of civil servants are calculated.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I think it is pretty obvious from the legislation that the government decided not to change it at this particular time.

Mr. Knowles: That is obvious. As a matter of fact I had received this letter before we debated this matter on June 6. I thought from the letter that it was certain to be in the bill and it was a rude jolt to me when I asked the Minister of National Revenue, on the day when we had the resolution but did not yet have the bill, whether it was in there, and he told me that it was not. He is always such a generous, big-hearted man that I could hardly believe it. I suggest that it is not good enough for the minister simply to stand and say that obviously the government's decision was negative. Surely if at that point the government drew a distinction between these two issues and said with respect to raising the pensions of those already restored, "No change", but with respect to this basic formula, "Wait and see", the government is under some obligation to come through with a decision in favour of these people. Since we have not got it, may I ask the minister if the matter is under further consideration.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, the matter and the position of retired civil servants, and of course the matter of widows of retired civil servants, is under constant consideration; and, as I indicated in the committee, this matter is being actively considered by me, the Minister of Finance and other members of the government. But I think that all that is indicated in the kind of argument my hon. friend is trying to make is that at the time the letter was written the first matter had been decided and the second matter had not been decided, with respect to this particular legislation. With respect to this particular legislation the matter was later decided and as the hon. member can see, an amendment in this regard was not included in this legislation. I do not think I can add anything more.

Mr. Knowles: I must say, Mr. Chairman, that this is an unusual kind of letter to write if that is the case. If the government had not yet made up its mind, for the minister to write a letter to encourage these people to believe that something would not come in one case, and to tell them that something might come in the other, is not really fair.

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM TO ASSIST PERSONS IN NEED

The house resumed from Monday, June 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen for the second reading of Bill No. C-207, to authorize the making of contributions by Canada toward the cost of programs for the provision of assistance and welfare services to and in respect of persons in need.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, we listened with interest last evening when the minister spoke on Bill C-207, enlarged on it and made some explanations in regard to it. This bill will to a large extent bring together a lot of loose ends in this department. Pretty well everything that is in the act was previously covered and the bill will now bring everything together under one head.

The bill is concerned with the war on poverty that was started by Mr. Kent; it was his brainchild. It is now carried on by Mr. Phillips with six or seven assistants. It is the same, largely, as the war on poverty in the United States. It has not reached the grand plan for the great society yet, but maybe it will someday. About a million people are now receiving assistance in Canada. The minister proposes to pump an extra $85 million into this program in the current year. Public service and welfare expenditures at all levels across Canada have now reached $500 million. This amount does not seem to be disproportionate. As a matter of fact, if we are getting value for the dollar I would question, when we have a gross national product of approximately $52 billion, whether it is enough to accomplish what we are setting out to do—if we really are setting out to do it, and I hope we are.

Fundamentally this program will cover food, shelter, clothing, fuel, utilities, household supplies, etc. The great majority of this amount, in fact 95 to 100 per cent, will be put right back into circulation. Therefore this money is in no way being put aside; it is put right back in circulation; it is in the life stream of currency and there is no loss in this respect.

The minister noted that the plan would make funds available to improve the staffs in municipal as well as provincial welfare departments and mentioned that in the province of Ontario they are now establishing regional offices. I think this is all to the good, but I am wondering whether this grand plan may be to build elaborate offices and staff them with people, well trained people perhaps, and spend a great many dollars in this connection which should be spent at the grass roots and on the people we propose to help. I think this aspect of the matter is worth watching, and I am well aware of the fact that we are very short of social workers now.

The minister stated that about one million people are on assistance now. This is a striking fact in comparison when you consider the brief submitted by the Ontario Federation of Labour. If this brief is correct, and I have reason to believe it is fairly accurate, if this is so, and we have only one million people on assistance, then surely there must be many people not receiving assistance in this country that need it.

The Ontario Federation of Labour stated in their brief that a million and a half people are living in destitution, and two million and a half lack the necessities and comforts of life. I am sure the minister is as well acquainted with this brief as I am. The yardstick that was used was a family of four living on an income of $2,000 or less, and individuals living on $1,000 or less. These people were considered destitute. Then there were families of four living on $3,000 and individuals living on $1,500, all of whom were deprived of many ordinary necessities. Of course the individuals living on $1,500 are poverty stricken, as are the families of four living on $3,000. There are those who will say that many live on less, but there is a vast difference between the million that are on assistance and those who need help, and points up many problems.

I suggest to the minister that the amounts that he has set out may not be sufficient. Let us consider who are the people included in the categories I have mentioned. They are the older workers, the pensioners, the unemployed and the underemployed. They are the school dropouts, the undereducated, the widows and the fatherless children. It is to be noted that about 5 per cent of the children born in Canada are born out of wedlock. Included in the category of people needing assistance are the disabled, the sick, the retarded, the mentally ill, as well as the rural farmers and the migrant workers. The federation of labour concluded that 6.5 million Canadians live below the hard line which separates poverty and affluence. It was stressed that the most important cause of poverty was the lack of education.

I think that in considering this legislation we should bear in mind that the more education we give to our younger people, the greater number of people over the age of 45 will become unemployed—due to automation and the better trained young people. We should go into the home of the unemployed, or the underemployed worker so as to discover the real cause of their problem. Is the cause of their poverty lack of education or functional illiteracy? When we have discovered the reason for these people being on welfare, then re-education or retraining should be considered. If it is found that this state of poverty is chronic and is not due to some physical disability or sickness, then I think we should take a good look at the environment in which these people live. This is graphically illustrated in the figures put out by the welfare department, which show five or six generations of people who have been living on relief and welfare. The welfare of the children should also be considered because according to the surveys that have been made in the United States they are often undernourished and 80 per cent of them have problems of one kind or another, some physical and some emotional. They need a medical examination and they all need to see a dentist and an oculist. Apart from their physical problems some of those children have a lower than normal I.Q. and if they are given an opportunity to get some pre-elementary schooling most surveys indicate that their I.Q. will go up by about 10 per cent and that they will be able to catch up in from a few months to a year. Physically they will develop, and they will develop mentally a whole year in a few months.

This is the type of work that we should be doing under the Canada Assistance Act, if there is to be a war on poverty. It is not enough to spend money in helping those people; efforts should be made to change their environment and mode of life.

I now wish to speak on the problem regarding older people. We find that the problem of unemployment becomes a serious factor in people over the age of 45. The statistics show that the unemployment rates are higher in people between the ages of 45 and 65 than they are between the ages of 22 and 45. I am sure nobody knows that better than the minister, as he was minister of labour. The reason for this is the increasing change in education and technology. People at the age of 45 did not have the chance to acquire education which our younger people now have, and this problem must be met. They must be retrained to give them a chance to earn a living.

I now wish to speak of the older citizens. I do not think that they should retire at the age of 65 if physically fit. I would suggest to the minister that under the Canada Assistance Act provision should be made for retraining of people at and over the age of 65, and they should be given a creative type of work so as to enable them to take part in the growing economy of this country. This is a very important problem and related directly to their employment and happiness.

I now wish to read a few lines from the final report of the special committee of the Senate on aging, where it is said—in relation to the above:

> That employment has important psychological values as well was stressed continually in the evidence received by the committee. Said the Jewish Vocational Service of Toronto in its submission: "Work gives form, dimension and meaning to the life of the average citizen". And there was Mr. W., a retired widower, on an income of $150 a month, who, when the chairman asked him what he missed in retirement, replied, "Mostly getting up and going to work in the morning, catching the bus at a certain time—and just general routine".

This is one of the most important problems in the study of geriatrics. I have stated this before and the minister is well aware of the fact that half the people in Canada today are 25 years and under.

I wish to say to the minister that if this government have vision they will be looking to the years ahead when half the population of Canada will be 30 years of age and over. I was looking at the figures given by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics which show that there are more deaths than births in Canada today in the last report. I cite this as an indication that not only from the economic point of view but for their own peace of mind we must keep our older worker working. He is happy working. Then he is part of the team and part of Canada. He has his home, and I feel that this we owe to these people, namely to arrange programmed employment.

Further, Mr. Speaker, the record shows that if we keep this man working and keep him happy, we keep him out of hospital and out of homes and institutions for many years, and in many cases for most of their lives. This we owe the people.

I now want to speak for a moment about our older people. The minister said last night that social service workers would call at their homes; this is one of the things he envisages. This is a very worth-while measure. Social workers visiting homes will keep many people in their homes year after year. If a meal is prepared for them once a day, or their beds are made or their houses cleaned, these people can stay on for years in their own homes.

Conversely, Mr. Speaker, I have seen cases where this has not been possible, cases where people were taken to rest homes where I have seen them deteriorate, and deteriorate very miserably. This objective of the minister is very worth while. I hope the Canada assistance plan will provide not just handouts; I hope it will do something constructive for the social life of the country; otherwise it will be a miserable failure.

Finally, there is one point in connection with this act which I just cannot understand the minister, though he seems to take a reasonable attitude to other points. I refer to the question of raising the old age pension. I know he will say that this matter is being raised once again, but I would recall to him the fact that people who are directly concerned are people who cannot help themselves very well.

Somebody said the other day that there are bout 750,000 of these pensioners; I believe that statement was made either in this house or in a committee. It is said that it would cost $800 million, or something like that, to give them an increase. I do not agree with those figures. Some of these people are already receiving assistance, and if they receive another $25 a month, this will amount to $300 a year. With 750,000 old age pensioners, the total amount involved in my book is $225 million. So I cannot follow the figure of 800 million.

I should just like to refer to an article in the Globe and Mail for June 23 which deals with this point. I am sure the minister must have read this article, and I would be surprised if he did not feel that he should grant an increase to these people. What changed his mind, I do not know. I am not going into the case of those whose working lives were half over by 1940. They were then earning less than 50 cents an hour, and the dollar of that day is worth about 33⅓ cents today in purchasing value. For all these years the government have stolen from them by inflation, and before I leave this house for the adjournment I must make a plea to the minister for heaven's sake to do something for these old people.

The Globe and Mail article reads, in part, as follows:

> While there are, of course, some well-to-do old people—

You know how many there are; 1½ per cent of them in 1961 had incomes of $10,000 and over.

> —every form of analysis we made or had made for us supported the very poor . . . Two-thirds of the population aged 65 and over had annual incomes under $1,500. It found that about half of the people in this age group needed help.
> Today the people in this group number about 1.5 million. That means that three-quarters of a million old persons are in need of help. The Canada Pension Plan will do nothing for them at all. The Canada Assistance Plan, when it comes into being, is supposed to help them if they can prove, each of them, that they need help; but, as Mr. Davis pointed out, to compel that many people "to undergo an individually administered needs test would be at once a costly and demeaning procedure."

The minister himself recognized this point, and I should like to put on record what he said. I am not sure who twisted his arm, but speaking at the Nova Scotian Hotel in Halifax on May 25 when he addressed the Canada Hospital Association annual meeting he had this to say:

> But, by the same token, I also know, as I'm sure you do, of people who have put off seeking needed medical attention because they just didn't have the money to pay for it. This is a matter of individual dignity and personal pride—

I suggest to the minister that he is making two classifications of citizens in the country today; those who are 70 and over and those who are young in their forties or thirties. On the one hand he is saying that this procedure is not demeaning to the older people; then he is saying: Come and let us know about your needs. I should like to know the psychology behind what is going on in the minister's mind on this point. I know he is a personable chap and does not want to hurt these older citizens; but I honestly feel that there is a technicality in making motions at this time to correct this situation. If this were not so, I would propose a motion. However, we will watch it very carefully and see if the minister will not change his mind, and grant the $100 per month to those on old age pension.

Personally, I feel we must do something for the old age pensioners. I realize the minister said he has taken a look at the guaranteed incomes program, but that there are roadblocks in the way. If there are blocks in the way, in difficult legislation, all he has to do is bring in a parallel clause in the act to give these elderly people $100 a month. I would tell the minister that with the way the dollar is eroding in value at the moment, within ten years the government will have to supplement the benefits of the Canada Pension Plan. Therefore there is nothing so awful about giving the old people enough to keep them going until 1970. All I ask for is some generosity toward a deserving people, who helped maintain and build this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for St. John's West.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Richard Cashin (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to take part in this debate.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The practice of this house is to follow the procedure of going from a speaker from the official opposition to a speaker from the New Democratic Party, and then on to the other parties, before returning to the government side. This is the second occasion this week that this practice has been departed from in the house. I think the procedure which has been adopted in the past should be followed. The hon. member from Winnipeg is prepared to speak at this time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I apologize. This is the first round on second reading. Perhaps I can call on the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) now, and I will see the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Cashin) when the other speakers have had their turn.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I am sure it was just a case of inadvertence which put the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Cashin) on the record for a sentence or two.

The measure that is now before us is a very important piece of legislation. Like many bills that the Liberals manage to bring before parliament, it has in it both good and bad. The Liberals, indeed, seem to be past masters at this sort of thing. I think they enjoy putting the members of the House of Commons into a dilemma. The minister may think that is what he has done on this occasion. I suggest, before this debate is over, it will be necessary for him to rethink some of the fundamentals of this legislation.

• (9:20 p.m.)

The things in this bill that are good are in fact so welcome that a case can be made for speedy passage of this legislation, so that it might be put on our statute books without further delay. But, by the same token, the shortcomings of this legislation are so severe that we shall have to give them very serious consideration at this second reading stage of debate and also in committee of the whole on the clauses of the bill.

I have already said that the things in the bill that are good are extremely welcome. I must also say that in my view this bill introduces into our social legislation in Canada a step which, for the 1960's, is very retrograde, and is one that I hope will not be with us when this legislation is finally passed.

I suppose the fact that this bill does present us with a dilemma is well demonstrated by the open conflict last week between two experts in the social welfare field. I refer to the present general secretary of the Canadian Welfare Council, Mr. Reuben Baetz, and this predecessor in that same office, Mr. Richard Davis.

As hon. members are aware, during the sessions of the conference on social welfare that was held last week in Vancouver, these two gentlemen made pronouncements on this legislation. Mr. Davis expressed extreme regret that the bill did not cope adequately with the needs of senior citizens. He went so far as to say that because of the bill's shortcomings, the legislation would never get off the ground. Mr. Baetz on the other hand, conscious as he is of the things in the bill that are good, felt annoyed by what Mr. Davis had said and felt it necessary to call a press conference in which he sang the praises of the legislation, urging that it not be delayed.

I know that last evening the Minister of National Health and Welfare quoted the Canadian Welfare Council as being in support of the legislation. He was perfectly justified in using the words he did in praise of his bill, because that is the official position of the Canadian Welfare Council. I think, also, that some attention has to be paid to the concern expressed by Mr. Davis. A little later in my remarks I shall also refer to the quotation that the Minister of National Health and Welfare gave us last night from the most recent brief of the Canadian Labour Congress. He knows what he did. He indulged in an old trick. He read three of four sentences out of that brief, but carefully refrained from reading the two or three sentences immediately preceding the ones that he read to this house. However, I shall come to that a little later.

I have already said that there is much in this legislation which is good. Despite the fact that I may wax a little warmer when I get to the things that are disappointing, I do want to take a few minutes to express my appreciation of the importance of certain aspects in social welfare legislation that are placed before us in Bill C-207.

In the first place I am delighted to see an increase in federal financial participation in welfare programs. As a matter of fact, when one studies this bill carefully, when one has in mind the difficulties that obtain in the federal-provincial field, he can be very pleased that federal money is being made available for most of what are known as the areas of welfare work in this country.

I think the general formula that is provided, under which the federal government will pay 50 per cent of all welfare costs as defined in the legislation, plus 50 per cent of the amount that a province spends in excess of a figure in a base year, is reasonable and realistic. This is good. I am glad that more federal money is being made available to the provinces for social welfare work. I am glad that as Canadians represented by the federal authority, we are participating in social welfare work across the board.

It is also good that a step is being taken toward the superseding of the means test by the needs test in those areas where we now have means tests. I hope that if the Minister of National Health and Welfare quotes me again on this point, as he did on one other occasion, that he will note what I am saying. I am glad to see means tests that we now have in certain areas being superseded by what are called needs tests. That does not mean that I think the needs test is the last word; neither do I approve of the introduction of a needs test in an area where we now have no test whatsoever.

In the area where means testing now takes place, however, the government is suggesting that we move out of that into an arrangement under which a person in need is to have his budgetary requirements assessed, to have his resources assessed, and then to be given such financial or other assistance as he needs to meet his situation.

It will be argued as to whether this is only a semantic difference. I think I would cast my lot in with the social welfare people generally and say that it is good to move from the means test that we now have in certain areas to needs tests in those areas. Another thing that is good about this legislation is that it recognizes at the Canada-wide level new areas of welfare work which are extremely important. I need not take time to name all such areas, but things like day care, and homemaker services stand out.

I welcome also the provision in this legislation for health care for persons in need for any of the reasons spelled out in the bill. I welcome the idea that money should be available to people in special homes, where needed. I am glad to see the federal government getting into the area of mothers' allowances and child welfare programs, at least on a financial basis. I think the work activity projects ought to be commended, as is the move to participate in Indian welfare programs. The whole idea that we should get away from the categorical concept of need to the general concept of need is certainly all to the good.

I can well imagine that social workers who are concerned with social welfare problems up to the point of retirement look upon this legislation as a most welcome document. It is highlighted by the provisions for staff training and development. The minister may say I am making a better speech than he did in support of the legislation. But he knows that my time is not yet half gone, and the other side of the story is yet to come.

Even with respect to the things in this bill which are good, I do not want the minister to think they are perfect, or the last word. After all, as his parliamentary secretary said in one of her outstanding speeches, it is not a grand new design; it is just juggling things around, tidying things up, and so on. It still leaves to the provinces the taking of the initiative in these various fields. Not one cent will go directly from the Canada Assistance Plan to any person in Canada who is in need. The money will go to the provinces to assist them in their welfare work, and where the provinces decide to pay extra money to people they can get a share of what they spend from the federal government, in accordance with the formula. But there is no dollar benefit from this legislation flowing to any individual in Canada.

The other comment I should like to make about this whole piece of legislation in the welfare field up to the point of retirement is that, though it is good, though it is better than what we have had, it is really not in line with the latest thinking in the welfare field. I believe Professor Titmus was perfectly right in the statement he made in Vancouver last week—that if you go on making people think they are poor in order to get welfare benefits, you are not really doing a job.

I think the phrase "guaranteed income" is no longer the fantastic, futuristic notion that some people think it is. I believe it is the next step, and it is a step which should be taken soon, not just with respect to old age but with respect to everyone. I see the day coming not far off when we shall see proposed and acted upon, not just a guaranteed income of the kind the other place suggested for older people, namely that incomes be assessed and shortfalls made up, but that cash allowances will be paid to everybody, people being categorized as to age and so on. Then the income tax will be adjusted to take it back from people who do not need it.

There is all the difference in the world between making up what people have got, giving them welfare or relief because of their shortfall, and just giving money or allowances to everybody and then, by the income tax, taking it back from those who do not need it. I shall have something to say in a few minutes about the trials and tribulations of some of our older people who are attempting to live on their old age pension. But despite the fact that it is a crime we should ask these people to get along today on $75 a month, it is still to be noted that our older people today on a pension, which is theirs as of right, show a different attitude than the older people showed 30 years ago when pensions were given on the basis of a means test.

I have had contact with these people long enough to notice the difference. I remember what they were like 20 and 30 years ago. To get the old age pension carried a stigma; it was almost a disgrace. Today, people 69 and over can talk about their old age pensions with pride and with pleasure. Many of them have to pay a good chunk of it back in income tax, but we removed, to an extent at any rate, the stigma which went with relief or make-up payments when we took the means test off the old age pension. This was one of the greatest steps the parliament of Canada ever took, and I was thrilled to have a part in doing it. I still think the principle of making cash allowances first and then making recoveries by income tax from those who do not need the allowance is far better than the welfare method even when the means test is superseded by the needs test. It is this type of thing I wish the government was doing at this time.

I know how much the Liberals dislike our saying on this side of the house that it takes them far too long to do these things. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) was somewhat annoyed with me when I reminded him, when at last he brought in a labour code, that he was fulfilling a promise which had been made by the Liberals before he was born. That is the trouble with hon. gentlemen opposite. Eventually they do bring in needed reforms, but they do so decades too late.

Today the government should be giving parliament and the country direction with respect to the whole idea of a guaranteed income. I can sing the praises of this bill as far as it produces a new look in the welfare field; but do not let the minister go to sleep with pleasant dreams because I said that. I would prefer him to have another sleepless night realizing that after all his labour he has brought forth a program which does not meet the needs of the 'sixties and 'seventies.

Up to this point I have been talking about this bill in relation to the welfare field up to the point of retirement. I have said that in general it is good, though I have pointed out it could have been a great deal better had hon. gentlemen opposite accepted some modern thinking. But when one looks at what this government is doing with respect to people who are in their years of retirement, I say that this Liberal administration, with all its talk about progress is asking this house to approve of a retrograde step. By this, I mean it is asking us to introduce for our retired people something we got rid of in 1950—a test on the basis of what they are getting from the state. The minister says this test is different—a needs test instead of a means test. He says that may be these people could get even more money under this arrangement than they might get under a flat rate increase.

I emphasize that it is only a "maybe". It depends on the province taking the initiative. It depends on the province looking at the money that is available and deciding in which of the areas it is going to spend it. But even if there are funds available for supplementing the pensions of retired persons, I say this business of re-introducing a test—call it a means test or a needs test—is a retrograde step for Canadians to take.

One of the most important steps that this parliament ever took was when it removed the means test from the old age pension at age 70, and it is good that we are gradually bringing the eligible age down to 65. But by this Canada assistance legislation the government is saying no to all of the pleas that have been made from this side of the house, and by my good friend from Brantford, and I am sure by others in the Liberal caucus, for an increase in the flat rate of benefit under old age security. It is saying: No, we are going to make a welfare supplement available on the basis of a needs test.

No matter how much or how little individuals in need may get relief because of the money proposed to be provided under this measure, I think we will rue the day that we reinstituted a testing program, so far as our retired people are concerned. In his statement last night the minister made the assertion that no industrialized country in the world has been able to solve this problem without social assistance, and he indicated that there are three ways in which something could be done for older people. One was a flat rate pension, a second was social insurance, and the third was social assistance.

The minister said that no matter what you did under the first two, the flat rate program and the insurance program, you could not avoid falling back on social assistance. I give the minister credit for saying, and in fact I quote him, that we should minimize our reliance on social assistance.

But I suggest that even if there is validity in the argument he used, and I do not agree with him, he is not living up to his own dictum, that we should minimize our reliance on social assistance, because he is leaving the old age security payment at $75 per month, and in effect asking that most of our senior citizens rely on social assistance. Apart from that, I wonder if the minister realizes how critical a comment he made last night with respect to the Canada Pension Plan. I do not speak as one who opposed the Canada Pension Plan. I fought for it harder than some people on the Liberal side of the house, and insisted that the house stay in session until it was passed.

[Mr. Knowles.]

But one of the things the Liberals kept telling us during the election before they assumed power, and in their propaganda about the Canada Pension Plan, was that the combination of the Canada Pension Plan and old age security would provide adequate retirement benefits for the Canadian people. Last night the minister stood up and said, "No, it cannot be done. The flat rate program and the insurance program are not enough. We are going to have to rely on social assistance for a supplement."

I say by that comment the minister criticized the Canada Pension Plan as not providing all that its proponents said it would, and at the same time he criticized the Old Age Security Act for not providing more than the present $75 a month. Despite his statement that we should minimize our reliance on social assistance, I say to him that by this measure he is asking the old people of Canada to maximize their reliance on social assistance, because these old people we are talking about do not have the Canada Pension Plan to fall back on. All they have is the flat rate benefit.

The minister is saying to them, "We cannot do anything for you under the Canada Pension Plan because that legislation was not designed for you, and we cannot do anything for you under the Old Age Security Act because the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) will not give us the money to raise the pension. Your only recourse is to fall back on social assistance, and so we are providing that, with the old means test re-introduced."

Granted, the name of the test is being changed. It is being dressed up a bit, but it is still a case of asking our older people to rely on social assistance for a chance to live. I submit that this element in the legislation is the one that enables me to stand here tonight and praise the good things that are in the bill, and also to say that it contains a retrograde step that the parliament of Canada should not be asked to take.

I hope that before this legislation has had the consideration I trust it will get in the next day or so, we will persuade the government that it cannot stall any longer on the question of raising old age security payments to $100 a month.

At the resolution stage I twitted the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) about the fact that he had not made any reference to changes in the Old Age Security Act. He said he had, but of course a reading of his speech shows he had not. I suggested he was actually ashamed of the failure of this proposed legislation so far as old age security recipients are concerned.

I want to say for the minister now, even though he himself made some reference to the matter last night, that there are some things in this bill for old age security recipients. There is health care without the necessity of a needs test, and there is the possibility of care and maintenance in homes. But all of these things are of the character of welfare. They are not the dignified, uplifting kind of thing which we did for the senior citizens of Canada in 1950, when we took the means test off the old age security pension and said to our old people: When you reach the point of retirement you get your state pension as a matter of right.

I do not want us to go back on the excellent position we took then. Neither does my hon. friend from Brantford, if he does not mind my mentioning him again, because he made the same plea on a late show not many nights ago. Let us not go back on the dignified stand we took when we got rid of the means test. I suggest that is what this legislation is asking us to do.

I referred earlier to the difference of opinion at Vancouver between Mr. Baetz and Mr. Davis. Although I know both of these gentlemen I have not spoken to them since that exchange took place, and if I seek to interpret their difference of opinion it is my own interpretation, and they might not agree with it. I think their dispute is one that highlights the very nature of this bill. Mr. Baetz wants it. He wants it with the least possible delay because he sees the good in it, the good things I have tried to point out tonight.

Mr. Davis is not unmindful of those good things, but he has worked with the Senate committee on aging. He has spent many years in the welfare field. He has been concerned with old people for a long time, and he says the bill will not only do nothing for our older people, but in effect is taking a very retrograde step, the very step I have been discussing tonight.

Instead of the minister standing up and giving us the official position of the Canadian Welfare Council, as though nothing else should have been said—and what he said was perfectly true—along with that he should have paid some attention to what Mr. Davis had said and admitted that although this bill has much in it that is good it is not coping with the old age pension—

Mr. MacEachen: May I ask my hon. friend a question?

Mr. Knowles: Certainly.

Mr. MacEachen: Has his attention been drawn to a Canadian Press story from Vancouver in which Dr. Davis, upon whom he relies, is reported in quotes as follows:

> The Canadian Assistance Plan is an excellent piece of legislation as it stands now.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I know of that statement by Dr. Davis and I was just pointing out that the difference between these two social workers is an understandable one. They both agree that the welfare aspects are good. I suspect Mr. Baetz is not happy about the old age part of it either, but Dr. Davis is deeply concerned about what it does not do for the older people. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is awfully good at this business of pulling quotations out of the hat and giving them to us. Last night he quoted the Canadian Labour Congress.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, just as a point of explanation, I should like to say that I do not wish to misrepresent Dr. Davis. He said what I think I quoted him as saying about the Canada Assistance Plan being excellent as it is, but that he would call for a parallel piece of legislation dealing with what my hon. friend is mentioning. I think the difficulty in the argument being made by my hon. friend is that he fails to separate the issues.

Mr. Knowles: I thank the minister for what he said, because I have an amendment on my desk which I will be bringing in which asks for the very thing he said Dr. Davis wants. Before I do that I wish to remind the minister that last night he quoted from the most recent brief presented by the Canadian Labour Congress to the government of Canada. He quoted the several sentences on page 24 which welcomed the advent of the Canada Assistance Plan. The parts he quoted are on the record and there is no need for me to quote them again. For the most part they were unqualified approval of the general nature of the Canada Assistance Plan, with a particular reference to the change from a means test to a needs test. I should like to point out two things; first, this was before the Canada Labour Congress had seen the bill and, second, even with regard to the parts which appear to have its approval, it suggested there should be a different formula for the sharing of costs and that it should be on a sliding scale along the lines of the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act. The minister did not read that. However, the important thing to which I want to draw the attention of the house is that the minister started reading at the middle of page 24 and did not note the paragraph just before that, particularly the last few sentences just before the point at which he started to read.

The previous paragraph speaks of the tremendous difficulty our senior citizens have in trying to get by on the $75 pension under the Old Age Security Act. The Canadian Labour Congress said this:

> There can be no disputing the fact that the aged in Canada have not been enabled to share in the growing prosperity of the country. They have been sidetracked from it to live as best they can on the limited income maintenance programs which now apply to them.

Then listen to this; this is the last sentence before the minister started to quote from the brief of the Canadian Labour Congress:

> We urge you to amend the Old Age Security Act further, not only to make the benefit available immediately as of age 65 but to raise the benefit itself to $100 a month.

Mr. Speaker, that is what the Canadian Labour Congress wants the government to do.

Mr. MacEachen: That is the Old Age Security Act.

Mr. Knowles: Yes, and that is what the Canadian Labour Congress wants to be used as a vehicle to meet the needs of our older people. The Canadian Labour Congress did not regard the Canada Assistance Plan as a vehicle to deal with old age at all, and yet the minister last night tried to quote the Canadian Labour Congress as though it was asking for this.

Mr. Speaker, as an opposition member I think I have made it pretty clear that there are things in this bill that are good, but also I am terribly conscious, as I think are most of the people of Canada, of what this bill does not do—its shortcomings. Therefore I think the very suggestion by Dr. Davis which the Minister of National Health and Welfare quoted is what parliament should demand. I am just as anxious as anyone else to have a summer holiday, but I think we should stay here and demand, until we get it, a parallel piece of legislation which will deal with old age security at the same time as we deal with the Canada Assistance Plan.

Therefore, to bring this about, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis):

> That Bill C-207 be not now read a second time, but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house the government should give consideration to the immediate introduction of concurrent legislation providing for an old age pension of $100 a month, without a means or needs test, for all persons 65 years of age and over.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair would like to have an opportunity to consider the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). May the house grant permission to the Chair to reserve judgment for the time being, and continue with the debate on second reading.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It has been suggested to me that I read the amendment and then reserve judgment on it. It is moved by Mr. Knowles, seconded by Mrs. MacInnis:

> That Bill C-207 be not now read a second time, but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this House the government should give consideration to the immediate introduction of concurrent legislation providing for an old age pension of $100 a month, without a means or needs test, for all persons 65 years of age and over.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, you said judgment would be reserved.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The minister has risen on a point of order.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what your intention is with regard to making a ruling, but I should like to reserve my right to argue that this particular amendment clearly and definitely is out of order. It is surprising that it should have been brought forward, because it is so blatantly out of order.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to argue the other way.

An hon. Member: So do I.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think before judgment is rendered the opinion of members of the house will be requested.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, in the light of the fact that we might not have a decision on the amendment until tomorrow, I should like to call it ten o'clock.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to standing order 6(2) I move that this house continue to sit until eleven o'clock this night.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will read standing order 6, subsection (2):

> A motion that the house continue to sit after the hour specified in section (1) may be made at any time without notice. If any member objects to the motion, Mr. Speaker shall request those members who object to rise in their places and if ten or more members then rise, the question shall not be put on the motion.

Are there any members of the house who object to the motion as put by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith)?

And more than ten members having risen.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion will not be put before the house.

Mr. Starr: They want something—but they don't want it.

Mr. Winkler: Great Canadians, all those people down on the left.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the house leader could tell us what we might expect tomorrow as the business of the house.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to get a pattern for finishing the business before the house. We have had very good co-operation from the official opposition in getting business through. I do not know how to indicate the business for tomorrow, other than to say that hon. members should be prepared for us to call any of the items on the order paper or the notice paper, in any order.

I should like to suggest that tomorrow we consider sitting longer hours in order to get the business done, because the government is trying to put forward the legislation in an orderly way and in accordance with information that we have transmitted to all members of the house. I think that is the best way I can put it at the moment.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, we in this party agree heartily that we should sit longer hours tomorrow in order to endeavour to put through the business of this house.

Mr. Peters: On the point of order that is being raised, Mr. Speaker, there is certainly no one more interested in our obtaining a formal recess than I, and I think there is considerable agreement in this respect. But I think it would be unrealistic for us to consider this matter unless there can be agreement—and it has to be, I would think, by way of agreement—that this be done, and everyone in the house knowing exactly what we intend to do before the recess. If that can be done, I think members of this party would agree to the extension of hours; otherwise I think we had better not count on extending the hours, except by motion, before the end of the month.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

WATER RESOURCES—SALE OF CANADIAN WATER

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, my question for the late show originally arose out of the proposed visit by Mr. Stewart Udall, Interior Secretary of the United States, to Canada to confer with the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Pepin), or the minister of energy and resources. When the minister was queried on the purpose of this visit he informed the house that the purpose of his meeting with Mr. Udall was primarily to discuss pollution problems.

I wanted an assurance from the Canadian minister that he would assure the American secretary that Canadian water was not for sale. My remarks would almost appear to be redundant now because Mr. Udall, as reported in the Globe and Mail of June 24, 1966, seems to agree with my position that Canadian water should not be for sale to the United States. Mr. Udall is reported as saying:

> We've suddenly begun to realize in the United States that if we do the right job in pollution control, we are going to increase our water resources enormously . . .
> We are not looking hungrily at Canada's water resources. We are looking at our own.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

I am delighted to know that the Secretary of the Interior of the United States made that statement because it seems to me that the United States, in order to solve their water problems, rather than looking at Canadian water resources to solve their problems, must look at their own water resources in terms of pollution and the prevention of the disposal of waste into water systems. In dealing with our own resources in Canada I think it is important to lay down some basic principles which should guide us in the years ahead.

In the few minutes allowed to me I would like to outline them quickly and briefly. My remarks do not apply to international waters such as the Great Lakes, the St. Lawrence river or the two rivers which cross the international boundary between our two great countries. Quite obviously it is in the interests of Canada as well as of the United States that our two countries should collaborate and co-operate to the fullest extent in the development of those water resources and in the control of pollution in them. I would point out that the Columbia river treaty is an excellent example of how our two nations working together can develop a water resource. However, I am deeply concerned about water that is solely and exclusively Canadian. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that in the years ahead this water should be used solely and exclusively for the benefit of Canada and Canadians. I wish to quote a statement made by Warren G. Magnuson, Washington State's senior senator at a conference in Wenatchee, Washington as quoted in the Vancouver Province of April 4, 1966. It reads:

> Warren G. Magnuson, Washington State's senior senator and chairman of the senate committee on commerce, drew cheers from the many Washington and Oregon delegates when he gave his answer to the demands of the arid U.S. southwest for Columbia water:
> "If we need it, you ain't going to get it."

He went on to say further:

> "Until we know how much we need, it is foolish to plan about how much we are going to give away", said Magnuson. And he warned against believing the promises of Arizona and California that they would give back Columbia water if it were needed in the northwest.

I suggest that the water policy laid out by Senator Magnuson for the state of Washington with regard to the arid states in the United States such as California, Idaho and New Mexico is a policy equally applicable to Canadian waters when we consider its sale, diversion or exchange with the U.S. arid regions. I suggest that at this time Canadians should not consider the sale, exchange or diversion of our own resource.

May I make another point, Mr. Speaker. I wish to say that water once given away, sold or exchanged cannot be regained. There are those who say that we have huge water resources in Canada which are flowing wastefully into the Arctic and into the Pacific and we should be making profit of them by selling them. I suggest that once the tap is turned on it cannot be turned off, and that therefore we should not consider turning it on.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we have no idea at this moment what is the exact nature of our water resources; and therefore to speak of the sale or exchange of resources, the extent of which we are not sure, is premature in the extreme. I submit that rather than talk of the sale or exchange of our water resources we must undertake, as I believe the minister is doing in co-operation with the provinces, an inventory of our water resources so that their development and management can best be used for the agricultural and industrial growth of our country.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, in the seven minutes allowed me may I make the final point that there is a lot of talk about water being a continental resource. This idea that water is a continental resource is particularly noticeable in the proposals of the North American Water and Power Alliance which is a great public works scheme to take water from northern Canada and to flow it down through the United States as far as Mexico. This proposal is based on the premise that water is a continental resource.

That premise, Mr. Speaker, I reject in quite unequivocal terms. It seems to me that water is not a continental resource. Canada is a sovereign nation, and surely one of the primary characteristics of sovereignty is ownership and control over the resources of a sovereign nation. Water is a resource just as is oil, petroleum, minerals, timber, etc. Water that is solely and exclusively within the boundaries of Canada is surely a Canadian resource and is Canadian owned. It cannot in any way be regarded as a continental resource. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, may I say in closing that this water is not a continental resource but a Canadian resource, and as such should be used exclusively for the benefit of Canada.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have heard about the "Basford" plan. Perhaps I could also use my three minutes to make a few remarks in reply to the hon. member, even if the question has disappeared.

In order to have a sale you need, besides an object, a seller and a buyer. A seller is somebody who is legally able and willing to deprive himself of the object; and a buyer is a person who is eager to acquire the object and willing to pay the price. In the case in point, the export of water to the United States, these conditions do not exist, at least at the moment, and will not for quite a few years to come. Canada is obviously not a seller, as has often been said both by this government and by previous governments.

The United States is obviously not a buyer. The Nawapa plan to which the hon. member referred is not U.S. policy, and Secretary of the Interior Udall on his last visit to Ottawa made this very clear. I do not want to repeat the quotations which the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard has put on the record.

United States policy at this time is to inventorize, to recycle, to depollute and to ascertain their supply and needs. Whether the United States will ever ask Canada to sell them water, I do not know, and neither does anybody else. If we are wise however, as soon as possible we must find out what would be the position of Canada in such an eventuality.

At the moment, Mr. Speaker, we do not know whether we have something to sell. We do not know how much water we have and we do not know how much water we need. We know only that we are not willing to sell before we have a good idea what our needs are, and this is something toward which we are working. I cannot describe here the action taken by the federal government and by my department in particular in order to inventorize the quantity of water, in the oceans, lakes and rivers. I cannot analyze the past record and the projects we have in mind.

Another point I might make is this. No decision with respect to the export of water could conceivably be taken without the consent of the provinces of Canada. As a resource, water is essentially a provincial responsibility. For those people who might not trust the federal government, there is an extra security.

I am quite sure also, Mr. Speaker, that no decision will be or could be taken in Canada with respect to the export of water to the United States without taking into account public opinion. If it were ever decided to sell water, we will surely hear a lot from public opinion in this matter.

Mr. Barnett: What about the Columbia?

Mr. Pépin: Obviously the hon. member is preoccupied with that subject.

We are already hearing a lot from public opinion. At any rate, those are my views, Mr. Speaker. We have relatively ample supplies of water and we must use those as well as possible.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—REQUEST FOR GRANT FOR RETARDED AND DISTURBED CHILDREN

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, several days ago I raised the question of treatment for mentally retarded and disturbed children. More than two years ago, the Hall Commission recommended that, within six months, mental care be included under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act, and that a crash program of services for mentally retarded children be established. In two years there has been no mention of any such action from the government.

Care of retarded and disturbed children is now the joint responsibility of municipalities and the provinces, but the job has grown far too large for them. The situation in Hamilton is typical. The mental health clinic there handles referrals from medical sources, from schools, welfare agencies, juvenile court and probation officers, at roughly double the rate they can handle. They can provide diagnostic assessment only, not treatment. As of June 1 this year, 72 referrals were awaiting assessment and diagnosis. Of these, 36 cases were considered urgent, and 10 were emergencies.

This is only part of the picture. Referring agencies in Hamilton are aware of the acute problem, and refer only the worst cases. Studies of urban mental disturbance, from a huge variety of sources, indicate that there are approximately 7,000 mentally disturbed children of shool age in Hamilton—a staggering figure. These children need not only diagnosis but treatment. At this time, the mental health clinic can give no treatment at all.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

I should like to put on record an article from the Hamilton Spectator of June 23, 1966. I quote:

Hamilton doctors will continue sending young children to the Ontario Hospital unless the city supplies adequate child mental health services.

That warning came yesterday from Dr. Grant Beacock, mental health research chairman for the Hamilton Social Planning Council.

The planning council advised board of control yesterday to take prompt action—recommending a major increase in the city's child mental health clinic staff.

When the clinic was set up in 1948, Dr. Beacock said, it had an authorized staff of 5.5., including professionals and clerical workers.

The authorized staff is still the same size, although the city population has grown by 50 per cent, he pointed out.

The actual staff, Dr. Beacock said, is two full-time and one half-time.

That is why serious cases sometimes wait two months for treatment and chronic cases go to the Ontario Hospital, health authorities have reported.

The staff should be brought up to an establishment of 15, the social planning council recommended, almost triple its present strength.

Added personnel would cost the city an extra $100,000 yearly.

The present staff shortage is having a crippling effect on the clinic's operations, the council told board of control.

"The situation is so bad," said Dr. Beacock, "that Dr. William Hogg, one of the best child psychiatrists in the country, is doing most of his own social work and psychological work.

"He's even writing his own letters in longhand because he hasn't got secretarial staff."

Board of control has been made aware of the situation, a social planning spokesman said.

A request for more staff was rejected in 1962. Another request, contained in the health department's 1966 estimate, was chopped from the budget by the board.

The board promised to "study" the latest request.

A controversy over the treatment of youngsters at the Ontario Hospital arose from astory in The Spectator last month that a 10-year old boy was in an adult ward with alcoholics, homosexuals and mental patients.

The Welland boy, known as Grant, is still confined to the adult ward and a meeting of experts from various agencies is planned for tomorrow to discuss the case.

The boy, considered unmanageable, was turned over to the Welland Children's Aid Society, but they did not have the facilities to handle him. He was certified by doctors at Welland Medical Health Clinic for admission to the Ontario Hospital.

Treatment centres for retarded and disturbed children in Ontario are desperately overcrowded, and children in urgent need of care and treatment can only be put on waiting lists. The obvious answer is more facilities and more people; more hospitals, schools and clinics; more psychiatrists, psychologists, nurses, social workers and therapists.

[Mr. Howe (Hamilton South).]

• (10:20 p.m.)

All of this means more money, but this kind of expansion is beyond the resources of most municipalities. It is long past time for the federal government to recognize its responsibility in this field, and to follow at once the recommendations of the Hall Commission in this field.

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): The federal government recognizes the responsibility it has in the field of assistance to mentally retarded children. I may say that when the government was approached by the Canadian Association for Mentally Retarded Children a meeting was arranged between representatives of the Department of National Health and Welfare and Dr. Alan Roehr, the national director of the association.

I might mention that Dr. Roehr is a personal friend of mine and it was my privilege to speak to meetings of the association in Winnipeg, Toronto, and Fredericton. I had at that time an opportunity to discuss with Dr. Roehr, and others concerned with the mentally retarded, the problems they face and the projects they have in mind. I am thinking in particular of the crusade for Canada's mentally retarded.

The hon. member will be interested to know that the Department of National Health and Welfare, together with the other departments which offer assistance in this field, are meeting with Dr. Roehr and other association representatives in an endeavour to find out just how the federal government can assist further in this most important program. I might also say that existing programs include the mental health grant, the child and maternal health grant, categorical assistance programs and programs under the civilian rehabilitation branch of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION—SUGGESTED STUDY BY PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I put the following question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson):

In the light of recent electoral developments in Quebec and the strong views on the need for constitutional change that have been expressed from time to time by the new prime minister of Quebec, will the government reconsider the urgency of the appointment of a committee of the house to study from a federal viewpoint the question of constitutional change for Canada?

I am grateful for the opportunity to explain my reasons for suggesting that it is an urgent matter and one of vital importance to the future of Canada and of parliament. For a long time the various members of this house have indicated their view as to the need for such a committee. Only recently the Prime Minister indicated that the matter was under consideration.

The other night, on June 21, the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister gave what seemed to be a dusty answer to a similar question put by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Allard)—an answer which, if it were taken seriously, would not only imply that no constitutional committee would ever be appointed, but indeed that there was no point in appointing any committee of this house. Fortunately the Prime Minister indicated on June 23 that the government view went no further than to consider it was not desirable to set up a committee on the constitution at this time—I quote the words of the Prime Minister.

I concede the government may well be entitled to consider the appropriate timing of the appointment of such an important committee. Undoubtedly there are reasons why the government does not desire to appoint such a committee at this particular moment, for example the fact that various royal commissions whose reports may touch on constitutional issues are due to report soon.

I wish to present the reasons of urgency for dealing with this matter soon. The Prime Minister speaking in the Throne Speech debate in January, spoke of the need for new frameworks within which each region of Canada can develop according to its own particular requirement as part of a strong, united country. The interim report of the B and B Commission has referred to the present situation in Canada as the gravest crisis in our history. Quite recently the province of Quebec had an election, and its new prime minister is an expert constitutional lawyer. Perhaps I should not say that in the presence of the parliamentary secretary, because constitutional lawyers seldom recognize the expertise of others in the field.

However, Mr. Daniel Johnson in his recent book "Egalite ou Independance" put forcefully the need for constitutional change if confederation is to be maintained. In it he made a number of suggestions, some of which were rather drastic, but at least he made it clear that the question of constitutional change cannot be bypassed, put off and ignored indefinitely.

I am alarmed at the prospect that at coming interprovincial conferences the government of Canada will be confronted with constitutional demands and that piecemeal concessions may be made and confederation undermined. It is vital that the government be supported by the informed opinion of members of this house from all parties and all regions of Canada. Consideration of the constitutional future of Canada is not a partisan matter or the property of any party, not even of the government party of the moment.

One last reason for urgency is that any such committee will require ample time for hearing experts and studying the problems involved in detail. If we are to take advantage of the spirit of our centenary, we must use the hundredth year of Canada's existence to reaffirm our national unity by making the constitution of Canada a Canadian document appropriate to the second half of the twentieth century. This will require a creative and constructive effort by the parliament of Canada. An all-party committee can be an important instrument in that process.

Mr. P.-E. Trudeau (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): For some time now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) has been a firm and earnest proponent of this kind of parliamentary committee to examine the constitution, and I was hoping tonight he would show some good constructive reason why this committee should be established. I am afraid he has not done so.

Surely if such a committee were to be of some service it would have to establish a consensus among Canadian parliamentarians as to what kind of constitution we want, and I do not think the hon. member has shown that this kind of committee would be of any use in bringing ideologically closer together members of this house, some of whom believe in federalism, some of whom believe in special statuses for provinces, and some of whom believe that all forms of direct taxation should be given over to the provinces. I do not think that this kind of committee would create this kind of consensus. It would merely be a forum in which the constitution would be turned into some kind of political football and become the subject of partisan debate.

Members of the opposition who are asking for this committee remind me of men walking in the dark who do not know where they are going and who want to hold hands with other people because they are afraid of getting lost alone.

On the other hand, even assuming some kind of consensus could be reached in this parliament, I do not see of what service it could be in the kind of federal-provincial debate which is taking place presently.

• (10:30 p.m.)

Surely the premier of Quebec, to whom the hon. member for Greenwood referred, will not come to the parliament of Canada to ask by what kind of constitutional wisdom he should be enlightened; on the contrary, the kind of debate which might occur in our parliament will be only of strategic interest to him, through knowing what our divisions and weaknesses are.

Mr. Brewin: Oh, oh.

Mr. Trudeau: If the hon. member for Greenwood can give us good reasons for this kind of committee, I would be prepared to listen to him, but he has stated the question in a way which shows there is division in Canada. With this I agree; but I think this is the precise time when we should not throw the constitution open to this kind of debate. I think this is the time when the government should be, and I believe is, taking the leadership in indicating the constitutional processes it wants to see followed. It is changing the constitutional applications slowly, and I think this is the right way to so it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The time allotted to the hon. gentleman has expired.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.35 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WOOLLIAMS—STATEMENT BY FINANCE MINISTER RESPECTING WHEAT DELIVERIES

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I gave notice on June 28, and could have raised this question of privilege yesterday but I did not do so. After the house hears the question of privilege it will understand why. This question of privilege arises out of a lengthy answer on a point of privilege raised by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) when he said as follows, as reported at page 6871 of Hansard of June 27:

> On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member's uncorrected statement could do damage to our commercial interests. I have never made any such statement as attributed to me by the hon. member and I deny it.

He was referring to a question I had asked on June 27, as follows:

> Then may I put a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the statement by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and in view of the minister's statement that irreparable damage had been done by the strike, can the minister tell us what is the situation?

I say that the answer by the minister given by way of privilege may reflect on my integrity in setting out the facts, and does reflect on what are the facts. On page 6053 of Hansard of June 7, 1966 in reference to the strike and its effect on deliveries of grain from western Canada to Russia, my question was as follows:

> A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement of the Minister of Labour I would like to now put a question to the Minister of Finance. What effect has this long strike had on the fulfilment of the wheat contracts that were made by the wheat board with other nations?

The Minister of Finance answered:

> Mr. Speaker, this strike is having a very serious effect.

Then I asked as follows:

> A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister says "a very serious effect" does he mean that sales will be lost in respect of wheat agreements made between the wheat board and those countries purchasing our grain?

The Minister of Finance replied:

> I do not know whether this in fact will happen. I do not think it need happen. All I can say is that this strike is having a very serious effect upon the delivery of grain—

May I pause there; "a very serious effect upon the delivery of grain". He meant in my opinion the delivery of grain to fill the contracts with Russia, when there were 23 boats waiting to be loaded. He went on to say:

> —that the wheat board has already sold, and it is beginning to back up the movement into the country, making it more difficult for the wheat board to equalize its quotas.

In reference to this may I say that the Minister of Finance is responsible for the wheat board, and I would think that statements made by Mr. McNamara, the head of the wheat board, would be statements of which he would approve; or if he did not I would think by this time he would have made his position clear to Mr. McNamara. I should like to quote from the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the standing committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development of June 7, 1966, at page 381. Mr. McNamara was appearing before this committee and said:

> In fact, we were not only on schedule but considerably ahead of schedule, up until a few weeks ago. But of course, now they are very dissatisfied because they have 23 boats waiting for wheat and it is expensive when you charter freight and cannot get delivery. The Russians therefore are now very dissatisfied and I can understand this dissatisfaction because, as I tried to explain earlier, this is the period of time when they need imported wheat. Their new crops will be coming in and they will not be so dependent upon the imported wheat. There is no doubt in my mind that the delay at this time, in Canada meeting her commitments is going to have far reaching effects against Canada. We know from our experience last year in Vancouver, when our shipments were delayed and we had strike conditions there, that we have not yet recovered from the effect of those strikes. Because many buyers who normally were coming to Vancouver with confidence are now reluctant and are asking a lot of questions before they will enter into commitments from Vancouver. We also know that shipowners are now charging a higher freight rate from Vancouver than previously prevailed, which is making the Vancouver wheat more expensive and not as attractive—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am wondering whether it is necessary for the hon. member to go to such lengths to put his question of privilege. I suggest that he come to the point soon.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I was just coming to the point. I quoted the minister, who said:

All I can say is that this strike is having a very serious effect upon the delivery of grain—

In view of the statements of Mr. McNamara to the agriculture committee, which I quoted, I think my question was intellectually accurate and proper. The minister must realize that the strike had a serious effect on contracts, and I submit that my question to him as to whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce had considered previous contracts when negotiating new contracts so there might be a clause included by agreement in respect of delays, was a proper one. I now ask the minister to withdraw his remarks.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think the hon. member has a right, on the basis of what he has said, to ask the minister to withdraw his remarks. The hon. member rose on a question of privilege and explained his position, as he has a right to do, but I do not think he has made out a prima facie case of privilege.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Ninth report of standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts—Mr. Basford.

Third and fourth reports of standing committee on industry, research and energy development—Mr. Cashin.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROVISION FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF FINDINGS OF INDUSTRIAL COMMISSIONER

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-215, respecting certain conditions of employment of dock workers at the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the members of this house share the general satisfaction over the settlement of the strike of longshoremen at the three St. Lawrence river ports referred to in the motion. At the time I announced the settlement of this dispute in the house, on June 14, I stated that the settlement would not have been possible without an assurance from the Minister of Labour or the government that an industrial inquiry commission would be set up to inquire into working conditions at the three ports. On Thursday last I announced that such a commission had been established, and I tabled a copy of the formal appointment.

• (2:50 p.m.)

The mediator, Judge Lippé, in his report recommended that such a commission should be established. He also recommended in that report that the conclusions of this commission should be implemented by legislative enactment at the earliest possible date. The terms of appointment of the commissioner cover working conditions or what might be referred to as suggested formulae for possible increases in productivity in return for the increases agreed upon between the employers and employees. The purpose of this bill is to ensure that the conclusions of this commission should be implemented, as recommended by the mediator.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the resolution adopted on June 9, I move for leave to introduce Bill No. C-216, to amend the Income Tax Act and to repeal the Canadian Vessel Construction Assistance Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

EMERGENCY MEASURES ORGANIZATION

REFERENCE OF ESTIMATES TO NATIONAL DEFENCE COMMITTEE

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I was not paying attention and allowed motions to pass. I would ask the unanimous consent of the house to revert to motions.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Drury moved:

That, saving always the powers of the committee of supply in relation to the voting of public moneys, the items listed in the supplementary estimates (A) for 1966-67, relating to the Emergency Measures Organization be withdrawn from the committee of supply and referred to the standing committee on national defence.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would explain the reason. No doubt there is a reason for this action, and the house should certainly have the information.

Mr. Drury: I will be glad to explain, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the committee now has some time available to consider the supplementary estimates, which previously it did not look as if it would have. I think it is the view of most members of the house that the committee system is useful, and that where the committees have the time and ability to study the estimates, they should do so.

Motion agreed to.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

AUTHORIZATION OF CONTRIBUTIONS TOWARD COST OF INSURED MEDICAL CARE

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize the payment of contributions by Canada toward the cost of insured medical care services incurred by provinces pursuant to provincial medical care insurance plans.

Motion agreed to.

Questions

*DISCIPLINARY MEASURES FOR RETURNING OFFICERS

Question No. 1,346—Mr. Ricard:

2. If not, are disciplinary measures provided and what are they?

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, this question, in my view, appears to ask basically for an interpretation of the provisions of the Canada Elections Act. It is my understanding that ministers of the crown cannot properly offer such legal interpretations; thus I do not feel that I can rightfully attempt to answer this question by the hon. member in its present form.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I feel the hon. member could have given me an answer much sooner, as my question has been on the order paper since April 22, 1966. It seems to me the reason he has just given me is really no reason at all.

DISPOSAL OF HEATING EQUIPMENT, OTTAWA

Question No. 1,645—Mr. Keays:

1. Has any heating plant equipment been sold or otherwise disposed of, as a result of the conversion of the central heating plant on Cliff street in Ottawa, except to Crown Assets Disposal Corporation?

2. If so (a) what equipment, new or used, was sold or otherwise disposed of and to whom and for what price in each instance (b) who authorized the sale or other disposition of such equipment in each instance and were public tenders invited before such sale or disposition (c) who was the chief engineer at the central heating plant at the time of the sale or other disposition of such equipment?

3. What equipment, if any, was sold or disposed of by C.A.D.C., to whom and for what price in each instance and were public tenders called in respect of such sales or dispositions?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of Defence Production and Public Works as follows:

1. Yes.

2. (a) No new equipment was sold or otherwise disposed of. Certain coal firing equipment and accessories which had to be removed to make way for new firing systems became the property of The Consumers' Gas Company, contractor for the conversion work, under the terms of the contract and was removed from the site by the company.

Certain materials held in stock by the department for use as sapre parts for the coal handling equipment was declared surplus to the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation.

After the conversion was completed, as a part of plant maintenance and clean up, it appears that a quantity of spare parts may have been irregularly disposed of. This is under investigation by the R.C.M.P.

(b) The contract for the conversion with The Consumers' Gas Company was authorized by the Treasury Board.

The disposal of the surplus material to the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation was authorized by the superintendent of government buildings, Ottawa.

The plant clean up was authorized by the assistant chief plant engineer.

(c) The chief engineer at the Central Heating Plant at the time was Mr. John L. Hanlon.

SASKATCHEWAN—COMPENSATION TO FARMERS FOR RABIES LOSSES

Question No. 1,651—Mr. Southam:

Has the government of the province of Saskatchewan made application to the federal government to set up joint legislation similar to that now in existence in Ontario and Quebec under the Federal Provincial Contagious Diseases Compensation Act to provide compensation for those farmers in Saskatchewan who have experienced losses in their herds due to rabies?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): No.

POLITICAL ACTIVITIES OF CENSUS COMMISSIONERS

Question No. 1,654—Mr. Enns:

1. Is there a limit or restriction on the political activity of census commissioners?

2. If so, does this restrict such persons from nominating a candidate for a political party or acting as an official agent to a candidate in the provincial election campaign?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1 and 2. Census commissioners are not appointed by the Civil Service Commission but are appointed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce under section 5 of the Statistics Act. Neither the Statistics Act nor the oath of office administered to census commissioners limits or restricts the political activity of census commissioners. The only restriction would be the practical one that the political activity did not interfere with the work or effectiveness of the census commissioner in performing his duties in connection with the taking of the census.

*ANTI-CIGARETTE CAMPAIGN

Question No. 1,687—Mr. Rynard:

1. How much money has been spent by the government on the anti-cigarette campaign (a) in the schols (b) in the press (c) in other media?
2. What are the results to date in the prevention of cigarette smoking or in stopping the habit?
3. What further procedures are planned in prevention?

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Because of the length of the reply to starred question 1,687, Mr. Speaker, the answer is being printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The text of the reply referred to above is as follows:]

1. (a) A total of $220,074.79 was expended by the Department of National Health and Welfare on the Canadian smoking and health program up to March 31, 1966. It is impossible to determine what proportion of this was used for materials for schools because some items are for the use of the general public as well as schools and we do not know the distribution within individual provinces. (b) $3,267.60 was spent for an experimental series of display advertisements in a national monthly publication, Canadian High News, directed to high school students across the country. (c) Expenditures in other media totalled $151,953.60. Research expenditures totalled $64,843.59.

2. We have recognized from the outset that we are involved in a long term program of health education regarding the health hazards of cigarette smoking. The first objective of the program is to inform Canadians about the health hazards of cigarette smoking. Following that, ultimate success will depend upon changes in public attitudes regarding the habit. A survey conducted for my department between November, 1964 and January, 1965, showed that 90 per cent of Canadians were aware of the harmful effects of cigarette smoking and 60 per cent of them believed that cigarette smoking is a health hazard. The second survey of smoking habits of Canadians 15 years of age and over which was carried out for my department by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics showed that, in general, the proportion of cigarette smokers was about the same in September, 1965 (42.8 per cent regular smokers) as in August, 1964, (42.0 per cent regular cigarette smokers). A report of the second survey is being prepared in the department.

3. In co-operation with provincial departments of health and education and various voluntary and professional organizations my department will continue the Canadian smoking and health program to inform the public about the risks to health of cigarette smoking; to encourage smokers to discontinue the habit; to dissuade non-smokers from acquiring the habit; and to promote research. By this fall we expect to have a comprehensive collection of new Canadian materials for use in schools as well as new materials for the general public. The desirability and feasibility of further procedures are under consideration.

REQUIREMENT FOR AGRICULTURAL WORKERS

Question No. 1,688—Mr. Danforth:

1. What is the number of additional agricultural workers that it is estimated will have to be brought in for planting and harvesting, particularly in the counties of Essex, Kent, Elgin, Norfolk, Lambton and Middlesex, in Ontario?

2. How many applications were made for labourers from Jamaica (giving numbers by county of persons requested)?

3. How many labourers are estimated as available from Indian reservations, from local areas in other provinces stating locations, from the U.S.A., and from immigration?

4. What emergency measures are contemplated by the government, other than encouraging students and housewives, should present measures prove inadequate to harvest 1966 crops without loss of quality or quantity or both?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): 1. Information is not available by county; however, estimates of additional agricultural workers required for planting and harvesting by general area are as follows: Southern Ontario, 3,600; Niagara peninsula, 2,500; Other Ontario areas, 9,000; Total: 15,100.

In addition, it is expected that the demand areas of Ontario will supply approximately 7,300 workers and other areas in Ontario 3,000, for a total estimated supply from all areas of 15,340.

4. A planned recruitment program is functioning which includes an increased number of employment officers presently engaged in recruitment in supply areas of Atlantic provinces, Quebec and Ontario rural areas.

A number of employment officers from Atlantic, Quebec and Ontario were in demand areas of Ontario last week, meeting growers and surveying manpower requirements. Arrangements have also been made for day haul service from urban centres within commuting distances. The payment of transportation both ways has been arranged under the Ontario Federal agricultural manpower agreement.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CENSUS ENUMERATORS, CUMBERLAND COUNTY, N.S.

Question No. 1,635—Mr. Coates:

What are the names of the census enumerators appointed by the three census commissioners in Cumberland county, Nova Scotia, and what are their addresses and their occupations?

IMMIGRATION, 1955-65

Question No. 1,663—Mr. Irvine:

1. What was the total number of people immigrating to Canada in each of the years 1955 to 1965 inclusive?
2. From what countries did they emigrate and what were the total numbers from each country in each year?

Return tabled.

Mr. Forrestall: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am just wondering if, in view of the hope that the house might adjourn shortly, I might receive answers to one or two of the questions I have had on the order paper for some time. I wonder if they might be dealt with or if it is the intention of the government to allow them to stand. They are questions Nos. 1,162 and 1,534.

Mr. Brand: On a similar point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I have had question No. 1,500 on the order paper since May 16 and question No. 1,588 since May 31, as well as question No. 1,613 since June 3. I was wondering, in view of what has been said, if these questions may be answered.

Mr. Noble: I have a question which has been on the order paper for three months, and I think it should be answered.

Mr. McIlraith: What number?

Mr. Noble: It is No. 1,156.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, in turn, I rise on a point of order.

This concerns question No. 910, which has been on the order paper since March 1, that is exactly four months. Now, there is no doubt that, in the last four months, all the civil servants concerned have received their pay cheques, and it does not take four months to distribute pay cheques. Then, how can it be that, in four months, the government is not able to provide an answer to this question concerning the extension of bilingualism in the civil service?

[English]

Mr. McIlraith: I think the attention of hon. members should be drawn to question No. 910. An examination, without taking the time to develop the subject, will indicate to the house that in its present form the question will probably require a great many more months to answer. It is one of those questions about which I have grave doubts as to it being in order. Some parts are in order, but in its present form it is obviously going to take many months, perhaps some years to get the information.

Mr. Starr: On the point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Lapointe.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

I think the Minister of Public Works is not quite honest in his answer, because when a senior official joins the civil service—

[English]

Mr. Starr: I quite agree with the house leader that when you have questions of that nature they may be difficult to answer, but most of the questions that have not been answered could be answered very quickly. For example, my own question of June 14, two weeks ago, No. 1,692, surely could be answered in a matter of minutes. I hope the government will try to answer these questions and not use the difficulty of one question as an excuse for not answering any of them.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I might say that this is not a question of the kind to which the Minister of Public Works has been referring, but I ask the government if they are aware that question No. 1,284 has been on the order paper since April 6 and has not been answered. The failure to answer this question is just a matter of ignoring information sought by the constituents of the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the minister's attention to the fact that starred question No. 1,283 has been on the order paper since April 6, while questions Nos. 1,354 and 1,385 have appeared there since April 26 and 28 respectively.

[English]

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, I should like to—

Mr. McIlraith: Dealing with question No. 1,283—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the minister replying to the specific point of order raised by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker. With specific reference to question No. 1,283, it will be seen that by the form of the question the hon. member has made it necessary for each department and agency of government to check each employee in the whole of the government service, involving some hundreds of thousands of persons. If he had taken the time to work out the form of the question with a little more care I am sure the information which he desires, and to which he is entitled, could have been obtained in a way that would have met his request for a more speedy answer. My remarks are limited to the point raised by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot in connection with question No. 1,283.

Mr. Starr: I am speaking to the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. In view of this technicality which the house leader has brought to our attention, instead of allowing the question to remain on the order paper since April 6 surely the government could have brought it to the attention of the hon. member and had the question reworded. By allowing it to stand for so long the government gives the impression they are not prepared to answer questions.

Mr. Ricard: On the same point of order, I want to inform the house that I have reworded my question, but it does not seem to have brought me any more success.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I should like to call the minister's attention to the following fact: whether they are American or Canadian officials, every civil servant is required to complete an application form under which—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has raised a point of order, but I do not believe we should embark on a debate on each one of these questions.

Mr. McCleave: As a change of pace, Mr. Speaker, may I raise a point of order and ask that question No. 1,548, which is a starred question, be withdrawn?

Mr. Starr: You cannot get an answer, so you might as well withdraw it.

Mr. Flemming: I wish to remind the appropriate minister that I have had question No. 1,424 on the order paper since May 5, and I would certainly appreciate an answer.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Coming back to my question which has been standing since April 6, No. 1,284, I should like to ask The Minister of Public Works if he will do for me what he has done for several members; that is, since an answer cannot be provided will he give me an alibi?

MOTION FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Would your Honour call notice of motion No. 145?

I ask that the others be allowed to stand.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion No. 118 was accepted on April 27 and I have not yet received an official answer.

I ask the hon. minister to kindly speed things up, so that I may get a reply as soon as possible.

OLD AGE SECURITY

CONSIDERATION OF INCREASE IN AMOUNT OF PENSION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as we believe we are approaching adjournment a few days hence, I would ask the Prime Minister to advise the house whether, in addition to the Canada Assistance Plan, the government will present to the house legislation to increase pensions from $75 to $100, and will do this before the summer recess, in view of the continued rising cost of living and the grave difficulties in which the old age pensioners find themselves.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, not before the summer recess.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORTED BOMBING BY U.S. OF NORTH VIET NAM CITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in view of the news which has just reached Ottawa of the bombing by United States forces of Hanoi and Haiphong, I want to ask the Prime Minister whether any action will be taken by his government. This bombing of the capital city of North Viet Nam will undoubtedly have the effect of escalating the war to the point where the peace of the world will be endangered. I would ask the Prime Minister whether he will consider making a protest to Washington, as any escalation of the war will nullify all of the efforts of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member should put his question now.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I was simply asking the Prime Minister, in view of the efforts put forth by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and Mr. Chester Ronning being nullified by an escalation of the war, whether the Prime Minister is planning to make an appeal to Washington.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, our efforts to bring about peace in Viet Nam through negotiation—in so far as we are able to pursue those efforts—will not be nullified by any action which has been taken.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question. In view of the fact that an escalation of the war does endanger the peace of the world, is the Prime Minister planning to make any representations to the government of the United States?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, if I may deal with this point which has been raised, my understanding, which is based on the preliminary reports I have received, is that the United States government does not regard the bombing of oil storage installations in the vicinity of Hanoi and Haiphong as any indication of a change in their policy of confining the bombing to military targets directly associated with North Viet Nam's involvement in the south; and that there is no intention to direct bombing to the populated areas.

Nevertheless, this does not alter the government's position concerning this matter of bombing, which is well known to the house. We have always held—and I think this was made quite clear by me in a statement I made in April last year—that a let-up in the pattern of air strikes against the north seemed likely to be one of the major elements in arranging or approaching a peaceful settlement. More recently, when the pause in bombing of North Viet Nam came to an end in late January, we made it clear that it was a matter of regret to us that it was found necessary to decide upon a resumption of the bombing.

I am sure that we would all be glad to see the bombing stopped, and we would all be glad to see the intervention of northern troops into South Viet Nam stopped. We would also be glad to see unconditional negotiations for peace begin.

Mr. Douglas: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister whether his attention has been drawn to the fact that a spokesman for the defence department of the United States has stated that this bombing of Haiphong and Hanoi does constitute a further escalation of the war.

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, my attention has not been drawn to any such statement. I will be glad to look into it.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if the statement of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam is accurate that the cities of Hanoi and Haiphong have been bombed. Have the civilians in those cities been bombed?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister has just indicated, his understanding—and my understanding—is that the targets did not involve any direct intention to attack the population.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the confusion in Canada and outside, is the Prime Minister in a position to tell us whether the government of Canada is aware that Chinese troops or Russian troops are taking part in this war in North Viet Nam against South Viet Nam thus becoming aggressors against other aggressors called Americans. Are the troops actually there, physically?

[English]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, we have no information that Russian or Chinese troops are taking part in this war.

NATO—VISIT TO WASHINGTON BY EXTERNAL AFFAIRS OFFICIAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the minister any comment to make on the visit to Washington of his assistant under secretary, and the discussions held there on the future of NATO?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Basil Robinson, one of the assistant under secretaries of state, did go to Washington after the Brussels meeting of NATO ministers, for the purpose of continuing our discussion with the United States on NATO questions.

Mr. Johnston: A supplementary question. Is Canada being urged to strengthen its NATO forces in Europe in order to free United States forces for activity in Viet Nam?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, Mr. Speaker.

PRIVILEGE

MR. HOWARD—ALLEDGED MISLEADING STATEMENT BY LABOUR MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege with regard to which I have been trying to get the floor. My question of privilege relates to the bill introduced earlier today by the Minister of Labour. I submit that with the introduction of this bill, once we have discovered what its contents are, the minister is guilty of having misled the house on the 14th day of June—and I say deliberately misled the house—by the omission of certain pertinent information in his statement on that day.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Skeena knows that he cannot accuse another member of deliberately misleading the house; that is against the rules.

Mr. Howard: Then, Mr. Speaker, if the word "deliberately" is offensive and contrary to the rules, I will confine my question of privilege to the minister having misled the house on June 14.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows the rules in this regard. There is a distinction, of course, between misleading the house and deliberately misleading the house. A minister or a member can unintentionally mislead the house, and I assume this is what the hon. member has in mind.

Mr. Howard: Yes. On June 14 the Minister of Labour, in making his announcement with respect to the settlement of the longshoremen's strike, said that a commission would be established under and pursuant to the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. He said that clearly and without any equivocation.

Mr. Speaker: I understand the hon. member's point, but I suggest to him that there is no question of privilege involved here. There may be a question for debate when the matter comes up for debate in the house, but I respectfully suggest to him that there is no question of privilege at this time.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, Your Honour has not heard the key point as to whether or not there is a question of privilege here. On June 14 the minister told us one thing, and today he has run completely contrary to his former statement and has introduced a bill which provides within it, fully, the principle of compulsory arbitration. This is contrary to what he told the house on June 14, and I contend—if I have to revert to the expression—that he deliberately misled the house on June 14.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member cannot do that. He cannot revert to what he said previously. He knows that there is no question of privilege at all involved. There may be a subject for debate, as I said. Whenever the matter comes up for debate in the house he can at that time, if he wishes, argue this point; but I would seek his co-operation in agreeing with the Chair that at this time he cannot raise the matter as a question of privilege.

[Later:]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour arising out of the bill he introduced earlier, and ask him to tell the house whether he informed the union or the shipping federation at the time the settlement was reached of his intention to introduce compulsory arbitration of the issue of productivity, following the appointment of a commission of inquiry.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I most certainly did, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: I wish to make sure of this. Did the minister inform both the union and the federation, or just one of those organizations?

Mr. Nicholson: Yes, both the unions and the federation were informed of the government's intention.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AGRICULTURE

MILK—REPORTED FAILURE TO PAY AVERAGE PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): My question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. I want to ask the minister whether he intends to fulfil his promise of $4 per hundredweight for milk to the producers of manufactured milk and, if so, when?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): If the hon. member will read the statement which was made in the house and the release which was published at the time the policy was declared, whereby we directed an amount in the neighbourhood of $90 millions toward manufacturing milk and raised the price for the first time to a national weighted average of $4—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Greene: —I think he will see that we have fulfilled every word of that statement. And in the Ottawa Journal today he will see that even this good Liberal paper commends our policy.

Mr. Winkler: I recognize the verbal ability of the Minister of Agriculture, which is almost equal to that of the Secretary of State for External Affairs—though not quite. I should like to put a further question to him. Does he realize that the producers of manufacturing milk are not in fact receiving the return he mentioned, and that it is his responsibility?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is now an argumentative one.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): My question is supplementary to those asked earlier about milk prices. Does the Minister of Agriculture accept responsibility for ensuring that farmers will receive the $4 price announced for milk?

Mr. Speaker: The question is out of order. The hon. member knows that on the orders of the day he cannot ask a question—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I just want the minister to say—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the hon. member would allow me to finish. I am suggesting it is not in order to ask the minister at this time whether or not he accepts responsibility. It is not a proper question.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Mr. Horner (Acadia): On a point of order. The minister makes a statement that farmers will receive $4 per hundredweight for milk. Surely he can say whether or not he feels it is his responsibility to ensure that farmers receive it. Let him say yes, or no. That is all I want to know.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the question is argumentative.

Mr. Winkler: On a question of privilege. I, too, would like clarification of this matter. I hold in my hand a copy of the Canadian Farm Economics Report dated April 1966 wherein, on page 11, is set out the jurisdictional division in the dairy industry, and the areas of responsibility. It shows clearly that responsibility with regard to subsidies and to manufacturing milk is that of the federal government. The Minister of Agriculture cannot therefore rid himself of this responsibility in any way.

An hon. Member: Let him answer.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is now making an argument; he is not asking a question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

In view of the fact that most farmers are not getting $4 per hundredweight of milk, could the minister tell us whether the farmers should get in touch with him in order to receive their $4 per hundredweight of milk?

[English]

Mr. Greene: I can appreciate the concern of hon. members opposite to get their political friends off the hook.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Greene: As stated earlier, our policy is clear and unequivocal. As a result of that policy, in three years we have raised the national weighted average of manufacturing milk from $2.80 to $4.00.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Lapointe wish to ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Grégoire: As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, it is the same question. Since the Minister of Agriculture has answered anything but my question, could he answer it this time? Can the farmers get in touch with him if they do not get their $4 per hundredweight of milk?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce on a question of privilege.

Mr. Winkler: I rise for the second time on a question of privilege because I did not receive a reasonable answer to my first question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Winkler: That is fine. Go ahead and holler. The farmers will know this, too.

An hon. Member: They know it.

Mr. Ricard: They don't care about the farmers.

Mr. Winkler: I wish to ask the minister once again: Does he wish to accept the responsibility? He does not have to worry about my political friends; he should accept his own responsibility.

Mr. Speaker: That is not a question of privilege. It is still an argument.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the consideration he is giving to the price of milk, and in view of the announcement that the price of milk is to go up in the Ottawa and Toronto areas by 2 cents a quart, will he investigate this increase to see whether it is necessary?

Mr. Greene: The hon. member knows that this is pertinent to fluid milk, which is exclusively a provincial matter. If consumer prices are going up in those areas, the province of Ontario has to assume its responsiblity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): When the minister announced a price of $4 per hundredweight for manufactured milk, was it his intention that the farmers should receive those four dollars? Was that his intention, when he made this announcement as a matter of government policy?

Mr. Greene: As I said earlier, the policy speaks very clearly for itself. It has been lived up to, to the letter. The province of Ontario has the right to fix the price by reason of the measures taken. We have made it possible for them to fix the price at $3.25, and they can take account of any other factors they wish with respect to the cost of trucking—this does not fall within the constitutional area of the federal government, in connection with price. I hope hon. members opposite are not urging this government to step into a provincial area of jurisdiction.

Mr. Starr: I shall repeat my question and ask the minister to answer it this time, not beat around the bush.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has asked a question. He may not be satisfied with the answer the minister has given him—and I am not clear myself whether the minister did answer the question—but as the hon. member knows, that is as far as he can go, even if he is dissatisfied with the reply given to him.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): I should like to direct a further question to the Minister of Agriculture. I was delighted to hear him say that we in the opposition were trying to get our political friends the farmers off the hook.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Danforth: May I ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he has received representations from Ontario, Quebec and other provinces to the effect that the dairy producers of Canada are not receiving the minimum of $4 per hundredweight for milk?

Mr. Greene: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see the farmers are such friends of the hon. member's political friends that they are taking their tractors out on the highways to show their friendship.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Greene: I have received representations that some of the farmers, because of the failure either of provincial governments or of producers associations to fix the price at the factory, or because some of the plants have increased the cost of trucking to the farmers themselves, are not receiving $4 per hundredweight.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege.

The minister is trying to be smart by asking us to believe that there are federal and provincial cows, but we feel that we are entitled to clearer answers from him. We say that the farmers are not getting at present $4 per hundredweight of milk. Is the minister in a position to guarantee the farmers $4 per hundredweight of milk. That is all we want to hear, not tall tales.

Mr. Speaker: The question of privilege raised by the hon. member is out of order.

[English]

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Mr. Starr: I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway also has a supplementary question.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): No, it is not supplementary.

Mr. Starr: As a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I remind hon. members that we have a very short question period today. I realize this is an extremely important matter, but still I would invite hon. members to consider that other hon. members may have other questions that might be important also. The hon. member for Ontario.

Mr. Starr: I again ask the Minister of Agriculture if he would shed his cloak of arrogance and try to explain the federal policy with respect to manufactured milk, and why the farmers are not receiving the $4, as he promised them?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me this is a repetition of the question that was asked previously. As I indicated to the hon. member for Ontario a moment ago, while possibly he is not satisfied with the reply given to him, I do not think he is entitled to repeat the question at this time.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPORTED DEFIANCE OF BOARD BY PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we shall leave the subject of milk for a moment and go to another field. I would like to ask the Secretary of State whether the views expressed on national television by one of Canada's fiction writers are correct, that the C.B.C. board of directors at their last meeting instructed Mr. Ouimet to get rid of Mr. Walker, who is vice president and general manager of the English network, and that Mr. Ouimet has defied the order of the board of directors.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think I know to what my right hon. friend refers, and I must agree with the adjective he used with respect to the particular writer, but I do not happen to know in this particular case whether or not it is another essay in fiction.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, Mr. Speaker, will the minister find out whether in fact Mr. Ouimet has defied the board of directors, and report to the house before the recess?

Miss LaMarsh: I would think, Mr. Speaker, that if the president of the C.B.C. had defied an order of the board, the board would at once communicate that to me; but I shall be pleased to put this question to them as requested.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): On a supplementary question, while the minister is making inquiries in this regard would she also make inquiries as to whether a similar announcement, giving the same information as carried in a number of Toronto newspapers yesterday, was on the seven o'clock news broadcast, and what influence was used to see that it was not mentioned in any other newscast last night.

Miss LaMarsh: I can only imagine that they probably followed the truth.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the demand made yesterday in Toronto by 32 national organizations, representing nearly half a million Canadian women, will the government appoint a royal commission to study the status of women?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing I would sooner look into.

Mr. Fairweather: Federal or provincial?

SHIPPING

REPRESENTATIONS BY S.I.U. RESPECTING SAFETY AT SEA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (St. Ann): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister say what his department is doing to meet the requirements of safety in the manning of ships in the great lakes and St. Lawrence river systems?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have received what are represented to be urgent representations on this subject from the president of the S.I.U. I am writing a detailed reply to his letter today, and I shall be pleased to table it tomorrow.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): As a supplementary question, may I ask the minister whether it would not be more worth while to take some definitive action and promulgate some regulations?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, a great deal of action has been taken, is being taken, and is going to continue to be taken—

Mr. Howard: Nuts.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, if we deal with facts we will get a lot further than if we deal with allegations.

Mr. Howard: You are not telling the truth, Jack.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is a suggestion by hon. members that a remark I did not hear should be withdrawn.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, the remarks I used in response to the minister's statement were, one, that it was nuts and, two, that he was not telling the truth.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is the second time today that the hon. member for Skeena has come very close to infringing the rules of the house. I believe the rules are made for all members of the house, and no one is exempt from them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: I really do not think the hon. member can say that in replying to a question the minister is not telling the truth.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I am the first one to agree that the rules apply to everyone, and I wish they applied to the Minister of Transport as well—

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Howard: Keep your shirts on. If the rules are such that they require that I withdraw the allegation that the minister is not telling the truth, then I will comply with those rules, but it has no bearing on the facts as I know them.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to suggest that you enforce the rules in the case of the hon. gentleman. His record and my record are both well known to the house, and I am quite happy to leave it there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: As my final word I would ask the co-operation of the hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Howard: I would agree, and I don't want to mix the two records up.

Mr. Fairweather: There is no danger of that.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): As a supplementary question, will the promised action by the minister also take into consideration dismissing Mr. McLaughlin from the S.I.U., who was improperly allowed to run for office by the seaway trustees when he should not have been allowed to?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, that is not within my responsibilities, and I always stay within my own responsibilities.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REPORTED STATEMENT RESPECTING TELEVISING OF DEBATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio in relation to a statement he made in Montreal yesterday. I would like to ask the minister whether he was indicating government intentions when he stated that all house debates should be televised on a special high frequency channel?

Hon. John N. Turner (Member of the Administration): Mr. Speaker, I do not know any one in the house who could bring parliament home to the people better and in more dramatic fashion than the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Would the minister inform the house whether, on a statement as important as that, he was speaking for the government and indicating government intention in that regard?

Mr. Turner: I was speaking personally, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Grafftey: May I ask another supplementary question. Can ministers speak personally on—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are only a few moments left, and the Chair recognizes the right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ACTION TO BE TAKEN FOLLOWING COMMITTEE REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the question I should like to ask is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the substantial criticisms of C.B.C. management contained in the report of the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts, is the government going to give consideration to an immediate change in the top management of the C.B.C.? Will the government assure us that the C.B.C. management will be required to review the handling of the case of "This Hour Has Seven Days"?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the report was tabled only an hour ago and I have not yet had an opportunity to study it.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State. In the light of the report of the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts, will the minister convey to the corporation the information that a large number of Canadians would welcome the return of the program "This Hour Has Seven Days", unrevised and unrepentant?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have a woman's intuition, if you want to call it that, that they may already know this.

Mr. Speaker: Order, the question period now has expired.

[Mr. Grafftey.]

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM TO ASSIST PERSONS IN NEED

The house resumed from Tuesday, June 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen for the second reading of Bill No. C-207, to authorize the making of contributions by Canada toward the cost of programs for the provision of assistance and welfare services to and in respect of persons in need, and the amendment proposed thereto by Mr. Knowles.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Mégantic had the floor when the house adjourned last night.

[English]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I had the floor last night, but just a few minutes before I took the floor the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) presented an amendment to this bill. At that time Mr. Speaker said he would take it under consideration to see whether or not the amendment was in order. I did not speak last night. I merely rose and called it six o'clock. Then we proceeded to private members' hour. Before I speak today I am wondering whether the Chair is in a position to decide whether or not the amendment is in order.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair would like to hear argument from hon. members in respect of the regularity or legality of the amendment which was proposed last night. I understand that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) had indicated his intention either to support or to oppose procedurally the amendment. If any hon. members have a contribution to make in this regard, this is the time to do it.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the amendment—

Mr. Peters: On a point of order; before the hon. minister speaks, I should like to ask whether or not the hon. member who had the floor will lose his position.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Mégantic (Mr. Langlois) has relinquished his priority to speak in the debate at this time to allow the Chair to hear argument on the point of order and to make a decision, after which the hon. member for Mégantic will be allowed to make his contribution to the debate.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in a sense is a multiple choice amendment, because the way the amendment itself is drafted it presents a variety of courses to show that it does not fall within the standard rules of the house on motions which are admissible, or amendments which are admissible on the second reading of a bill.

Mr. Speaker, may I first refer to the necessity that any amendment moved on second reading must be strictly relevant to the principle of the bill. It is not sufficient that the amendment be connected with the bill or in the same general field; it must be strictly relevant to the principle of the bill. The principle of this bill is to provide public assistance to persons in need in Canada. The amendment moved by the hon. gentleman proposes a separate and a new scheme that is not strictly relevant to the principle of the bill. It is true, Mr. Speaker, that there is a provision in this bill by which assistance may be given to older citizens who are in need; but if that permits the hon. gentleman to have this amendment accepted, then it could be permissible for another hon. gentleman to get up and suggest that the house consider immediately an alternative scheme for the provision of increases in family allowances, because there is a provision in the bill by which assistance can be given to children in need.

There is also a provision in the bill by which assistance can be given to unemployed persons if they are in need. If the amendment moved by my hon. friend is in order, then it would be proper, through the method employed by him, for another hon. gentleman to move an amendment that an alternative scheme be brought in amending the Unemployment Insurance Act to increase the extent and duration of benefits. What I am attempting to illustrate is that the amendment is not strictly relevant to the bill itself, because if this amendment were accepted it would open the door for a series of further amendments affecting every social welfare scheme on the statute books of Canada.

I should also like to refer to the fact that already this session the house has dealt substantially with the question proposed by my hon. friend. May I refer to citation 163 at page 137 of Beauchesne's fourth edition which states:

> A mere alteration of the words of a question, without any substantial change in its object will not be sufficient to evade the rule that no question shall be offered which is substantially the same as one which has already been expressed in the current session.

The first amendment moved when the house resumed was an amendment moved by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) regretting that Your Excellency's advisors have omitted to provide for an immediate increase from $75 per month to $100 per month for all recipients under the Old Age Security Act.

Mr. Starr: On what date was that?

Mr. MacEachen: January 20, 1966. While there are minor changes in the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, its object is substantially the same as the object of the amendment moved by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. The house already has taken a decision on this question early in the session. The rule exists in order to avoid the house, in a single session making contradictory decisions.

• (3:50 p.m.)

We have already dealt with this question and the house has made a decision. Therefore I submit it cannot be posed again on this occasion. I say that for that reason, and for the reason which I earlier stated, this amendment itself is not strictly relevant to the provisions of the bill.

Let me summarize the two grounds for arguing that the amendment is inadmissible. First, it is not strictly relevant to the principle of the bill and, second, the house has already taken a decision on the question posed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and it is not proper to ask the house again to render a decision on this same question, because the decision could be contradictory to the one already taken.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether it was January 12 when the Liberal party voted against an increase in old age pensions?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, in respect of the first argument advanced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) I suggest that it is a matter of judgment, and this is where the responsibility of the Chair comes into the picture, as to whether or not the subject matter of my amendment is relevant to the principle and the purpose of the bill. I submit for Your Honour's consideration the fact that the bill has in it words which state that its purpose is to assist people who are in difficulty because of a number of reasons, one of them being age. There are various provisions in the bill with respect to the needs of older people and I submit, therefore, that an amendment which proposes to deal with those needs of older people in some other way than is proposed in the bill is relevant to the principle and the purpose.

The minister argued under this general heading that there are a number of other categories of people alluded to in the bill, and that if this amendment were in order it would open the door to a series of amendments. I submit that is not a basis upon which an amendment should be ruled out of order. If an amendment that is in order makes it possible for one, two or a dozen other amendments to be moved, that is not an argument against the validity of the first one.

In my submission we are dealing with the problem of needs, and we are dealing with those needs on a broad basis. The bill specifically refers to the needs of older people and age is specifically mentioned. It is my submission, therefore, that an amendment dealing with the amount of pension that we make available to our older people is relevant to the purpose and principle of this bill and, therefore, it should be allowed as being in order.

The minister raised as his second argument the fact that early in this session there were votes in this House of Commons on the question of raising the amount of the old age pension and lowering the age. He therefore suggested that this amendment runs counter to the rule that one cannot again in a session ask for a decision on a matter concerning which a decision has already been taken. Let me remind the house that we did our best during that earlier debate to make the point that the issue was in respect of the amount of old age pension, and we appealed to members to vote on the amendment proposed by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the subamendment proposed by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), on the basis that the issue of the pension amount was before the house. We were told then by hon. members on the other side of the house, and in another corner, that that was not the question before us and that we were not voting on old age pensions, but voting on a matter of confidence or non-confidence in the government. We have been reminded of that fact at least a dozen times during the course of this session.

The government and others who took that position cannot have things both ways. They cannot argue in January that what was before the house was not a question of old age pensions—

Mr. MacEachen: Why do you not read the amendment? That is what was before the house.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare does not accept my proposition that he cannot have it both ways. He is in power, so he is going to have it both ways. He and his colleagues, including the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), argued in January that what was before the house at that time was not the old age pension question, but a question of confidence or non-confidence in the government. That argument has been repeated time and time again. I submit that, morally, they cannot have it both ways; they cannot argue in January that the motion then was one of non-confidence and not on the question of pensions, and now say that this matter has already been decided.

It is my submission that if on the earlier occasion we voted on a motion of confidence or non-confidence in the government, this is in fact a different motion we are now raising in respect of an increase in the amount of pensions and the lowering of the age at which the pension is to be paid, not in the context of confidence or non-confidence in the government, but in the context of the issue which has been brought before us by a piece of government legislation dealing with the whole question of the social needs of our people.

Incidentally, the citation from which the minister read, and this often happens with things that he reads, had another sentence. He read citation 163 which consists of two sentences, although he read only one. The other sentence of that citation reads as follows:

> It is possible, however, so far to vary the character of a motion as to withdraw it from the operation of the rule.

The wording of my amendment does differ from the wording of the amendment proposed in January, but I am not arguing that the difference in wording is sufficient to withdraw the motion from the application of the rule. I submit, however, that the character of the motion is so different from the character of the motion moved in January that it withdraws it from the operation of the rule which is set out in citation 163 and citation 200, as well as the rule set out in several other authorities. I am quite familiar with that rule.

I contend that this house cannot regard a motion one way in January and another way in June. What we had before us in January, so this house decided, was a motion of confidence or non-confidence in the government. If that was the case, let it stand that way. We now have a motion before us having to do with the amount of the old age pension.

There is a third argument I thought the Minister of National Health and Welfare would use. I did my homework and I was ready for it.

Mr. MacEachen: There are several more.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps I will be told that since the minister did not raise this argument I should not set forth an answer to it, but I raise it because it is an argument which I think is on our side of the case. I refer to our rights in moving an amendment on second reading of a bill. This is set out in several places, but succinctly in citation 382 at page 277 of Beauchesne's fourth edition. This citation has been put in Hansard on a good many occasions, but perhaps I should put it on the record again. It reads as follows:

> It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a bill, to move as an amendment to the question, a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy, or provisions of the bill, or expressing opinions as to any circumstances connected with its introduction, or prosecution; or otherwise opposed to its progress; or seeking further information in relation to the bill by committees, commissioners, the production of papers or other evidence or the opinion of judges.

The latter part of that has no relevance at this time, but I do not like to read a citation without putting all of it on the record.

• (4:00 p.m.)

You will have noticed, Mr. Speaker, that in reading that citation I tried by my tone of voice to emphasize the number of places where the word "or" appears. This citation does not say that an amendment on second reading has to do all these things, or even any two of them. It says it can do any one of several things. My amendment reads as follows:

> That Bill C-207 be not now read a second time, but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house the government should give consideration to the immediate introduction of concurrent legislation providing for an old age pension of $100 a month, without a means or needs test, for all persons 65 years of age and over.

I submit that this comes within one or more of the rights set out in citation 382. The amendment suggests that I am opposed to proceeding with this bill in its present form until the house has had the opportunity to declare that in principle it believes there should be concurrent legislation dealing with another matter, namely old age, by raising the pension to $100 a month.

There are several things that can be done in such an amendment. It can differ from the principle, policy or provisions of the bill. My amendment differs on one point, on the point of how to deal with old age. It can express opinions as to any circumstances connected with the introduction of the bill. That in the main is what my amendment does; it objects to the Canada Assistance Plan being presented to us without our being given at the same time—and I welcome the support of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) in the question asked on the orders of the day today—legislation dealing with the need to raise the old age pension to $100 a month.

I am not opposed to Bill C-207 per se; I am not opposed to the bill itself; but I am opposed to its being proceeded with, without there being at the same time legislation—my amendment asks for concurrent legislation—to increase the old age pension to $100 a month. Therefore, because it seems to me that I have been able to give effective answers to the two points raised by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, because I have been able to establish our right to move such an amendment by relying on citation 382, I trust that Your Honour will find the amendment in order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to go over the various points raised by the hon. member who preceded me. Suffice it to say that in January, when the amendment was moved by me to the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, the stand taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) was that his opposition to it was based on the fact that it was a vote of non-confidence. At page 59 of Hansard the following appears:

> I will explain to the house why we on this side cannot accept this vote of non-confidence. The right hon. gentleman—

That was referring to me.

—made a very strong appeal indeed to other opposition parties to support him. Whether he will get that support I do not know. Of course it is a vote of non-confidence and the consequences of the defeat of the government on a vote of non-confidence are obvious under our parliamentary system.

Throughout his argument he took the stand that no matter how desirable it might be, there was a question of priorities that had to be considered, but always returning to one argument, namely, that the motion moved, to which reference has been made, "We respectfully regret that Your Excellency's advisers have omitted to provide for an immediate increase from $75 per month to $100 per month for all recipients under the Old Age Security Act," was a vote of non-confidence.

I must say that I find it very difficult to understand why the minister on behalf of the government takes so strong a stand against this amendment. The rules are made, not to bind parliament; they are made for the purpose of assuring that parliament operates efficiently and effectively, and indeed that parliament carries out the will of the nation. That will and desire has been expressed over and over again.

I had hoped, when I asked the question today of the Prime Minister, whether action would be taken before the adjournment, that the answer would have been in the affirmative. However, it was not. If the argument of the Minister of National Health and Welfare is accepted, parliament is to be emasculated, parliament is to be denied the opportunity to vote on something which was not the matter for consideration in January when the amendment was moved. At that time the government took the stand that it was a vote of non-confidence. Today it endeavours to rely on the argument that this is the same matter that was previously decided.

Sir, there have been tremendous changes in the intervening months. According to the record the receipts of the fund exceeded by some $240 million the payments during the first year that ended on March 31, 1966.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition knows that it is always with great hesitation that I interrupt him, and this is the situation at this time. But I do think we should try to limit the discussion at this time to the point of order. The arguments that are being made now may be most interesting, but I think they are directed more to the substance of the bill than to the point of order.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have been trying very hard to keep within the rules. I thought that any ancillary remarks that might be placed before you in order to dissociate the amendment of January last, moved by me on behalf of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, from the amendment that is now before the house would be matters that deserved consideration. I will put it in a very simple way. I support the argument that has been advanced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and hope that even now the government in its wisdom will withdraw its strong objection to this amendment and give parliament the opportunity to vote on a matter which ought not to be prevented on a technical objection.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal directly with the points raised by the Leader of the Opposition and I will endeavour to keep strictly to the point of order. The Leader of the Opposition said that the rules were made, and I agree with him, for the proper discharge of the business of the house. It is of course well known that an amendment of this nature, or indeed of any other nature, to the second reading of a bill kills the bill. In other words, what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is doing is preventing parliament, if he is successful in getting this amendment before the house and getting the house to vote for it, from dealing with this measure; he will kill the Canada Assistance Plan and interfere with the orderly progress of the business of the house.

Mr. Knowles: That is not true.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is absolutely true, and the hon. member knows it perfectly well. But it is for Your Honour to decide, not the hon. gentleman. The second point is that the orderly business of the house cannot be conducted if we are to have endless and repetitive debates on the same subject in the same session, when the subject has once been disposed of by the house. An amendment to the second reading of a government measure on which the government has staked its life is just as much a vote of confidence as an amendment to the address—and the right hon. gentleman knows that full well.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the minister allow a question? Is is not possible to move a series of votes of non confidence and stay within the rules?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, so long as they deal with different subject matters. That is the essence of the rules. I do think, to repeat what my hon. friend the Minister of National Health and Welfare has already said, that a vote of want of confidence on this subject has already been rejected by the house in the present session of parliament and therefore, if we are to deal with all the business that has come before the house under our rules, this subject should not be brought up again, especially by an experienced member who poses as one of the greatest authorities on the rules of the house and as one of the greatest humanitarians. May I say to him that perhaps inadvertently he is trying to kill the Canada Assistance Act by this amendment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Whatever his intentions may be, that will be the effect if he is successful.

Mr. Douglas: Those are cheap remarks from a cheap politician.

Mr. Knowles: May I say to the minister that at least I do not distort the facts.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman knows that if this amendment is carried the bill will no longer be before the house. A different proposal would have been accepted.

Mr. Knowles: Will the minister permit a question? Does he not recognize that if this amendment is carried it will be an expression of opinion by this house that the government should bring in concurrent legislation on old age security? In other words, it will be an expression of the opinion of this house that we want both the Canada Assistance Act and a $100 old age security pension.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentlemam and I could conduct a seminar on this subject.

I am quite sure that when Your Honour has read the authorities on the rules it will be found that all of them indicate perfectly clearly that when an amendment such as the one moved by the hon. member is accepted by the house on second reading of a bill, it kills the bill. That is one of the procedures of the house which is known perfectly well to the hon. member.

I am not seeking to distort the facts. I am seeking to remind the hon. gentleman of some of the lessons he used to give to hon. members when I sat up in the gallery and he was a member here long before I became one. The essential point is that here we are faced with a vote of want of confidence on precisely the same subject as the one on which the house has already made a decision in January. As my hon. friend the Minister of National Health and Welfare has already pointed out, this motion is not strictly relevant to the matter before us and therefore is not a true amendment. It seems to me that on both these counts it is out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I have just listened carefully to the arguments put forward by both sides.

I am somewhat surprised at what the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) just said. According to him, if the amendment is accepted, the bill will be put off indefinitely and consigned to oblivion.

Well, this is another matter. What we should like to know now is whether or not the amendment is in order. If it is in order, it must be accepted by the Chair.

If the Chair accepts the amendment and the question is put, then the government will have to convince us that by voting for the amendment, we shall kill the bill. We might then take the opposite view.

This is not the matter to be settled today, but whether or not the amendment is in order. If it is in order, it must be accepted. Afterwards, we shall decide how to vote on the amendment.

I make no secret of the fact that if such an amendment were accepted, with the result that the bill under consideration would be killed, I would probably hesitate to vote for the amendment, so as to prevent the bill from being killed.

But would the amendment have this effect? This is another matter which will come up later. At present, the matter to be settled is as follows: Is the amendment moved by the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in order or out of order?

The question is not whether the amendment will kill the bill, if passed, but whether the amendment is in order. On this point, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) has brought up two arguments.

The first, or rather the second, is that the same problem has already been discussed, or at least that we have already been called upon to make an identical decision since the beginning of the present session.

On this point, Mr. Speaker, I am completely in agreement with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) that is it not, in any way, the same decision we have to make.

In January it was a non-confidence motion introduced by the Leader of the Opposition. It was a non-confidence motion because such a measure had not been taken.

For a week, we were repeatedly told by the members on the government side that the issue involved was a question of non-confidence and not a question of increasing old age pensions.

When we told the members of the government: You will be voting against old age pensions, they replied: No, we will be voting confidence in our government.

That is what the members of the government were suggesting in January. We did not quite believe them and we voted for the motion, thinking it was a vote to increase old age pensions.

Today, we are told that it is not so. We are told just the opposite of what we were being told at that time. At the time, the motion was, in fact, written in such a way as to express non-confidence in the government because the old age pensions had not been increased.

Today, the amendment is asking rather that the bill be not read now for a second time but be referred to the committee in order to include in the bill an increase in the old age pension, which is quite another thing.

We are not asked to vote on the same thing at all, the wording is not the same. First, the text is not written in identical words or sentences. Second, there was in the first motion an idea of lack of confidence which is not found in the present motion. You will admit it.

There was not, in the first motion, that idea of increasing the old age pension, whereas there is in the second amendment that idea of introducing a bill to increase family allowances. Therefore, we are not asked to vote on the same thing at all.

Second, the Minister of National Health and Welfare tells us that the amendment does not agree with the principle of the bill now under consideration. But, in that regard, I am in full agreement with what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said to the effect that the amendment is directly related to the bill which we are now studying.

The old age pension, Mr. Speaker, is a social security measure and what we are studying now is a series of social security measures.

Some are related to social welfare itself, social welfare services, general assistance, the blind, the needy mothers, the disabled. There are, in the same bill, other clauses which deal with social welfare for Indians. Others in Part III are related to work activity projects.

It is therefore a bill which includes a group of social security measures. Well, increasing the old age pension is also a social security measure. It is directly related to the bill now under consideration.

For those reasons, I think that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is quite in order. There is no doubt at all in my mind, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment is acceptable and I have not heard from the Minister of Transport or the Minister of National Health and Welfare a single valid argument to the effect that it is not.

However, as I said at the beginning, I heard a valid argument from the Minister of Transport to the effect that if the amendment is passed, the bill might be postponed indefinitely, but that argument has nothing to do with the amendment being in order or out of order.

When the time comes to decide whether the bill should be given the six months' hoist because the amendment has been passed, we may then change our minds, because we do not want that bill postponed indefinitely, we do not want it to be shelved. On the contrary, we want it passed, preferably with an increase in the old age pension, for that increase has been discussed for a long time. We want the bill passed with the increase, but if the Minister of Transport manages to convince us that by accepting the amendment the bill is killed, then we shall vote otherwise.

Mr. Speaker, without a doubt the amendment is in order; the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Transport have not argued that the bill would be out of order.

• (4:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Turner: I should like to speak to the point of order, beginning with the argument so ably adduced by the Minister of Transport. May I say that if Your Honour should admit the amendment, which I want to submit is not in order in any event, then the effect of such an amendment would be to kill the bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe that when—

Mr. Speaker: We are now on a point of order. We cannot consider two points of order at the same time.

[English]

Mr. Turner: As I say, the effect of the amendment, if it were admitted, would be to kill the bill. I should like to cite, for the benefit of Your Honour, from a parliamentary dictionary written by Abraham and Hawtrey, and I refer Your Honour to page 34 of that dictionary where it is stated that on second reading, if a member moves that the bill be read a second time upon this day six months hence, or if he moves a reasoned amendment giving reasons why the bill should not receive second reading, such as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has done in a particular instance, and if such an amendment is agreed to, the bill is rejected. This is quite clearly a parliamentary principle, and the citation in this little dictionary goes on to the same effect.

I want to submit to Your Honour that the amendment is not in order and should not be received. I know that you probably have had an opportunity to reflect upon these citations, but I should like to bring a certain citation to your attention. It is a ruling by Mr. Speaker Michener which is found in the Journals of the House of Commons, No. 70, for January 23, 1958 and relates to an amendment which read:

> That Bill No. 237 be not now read a second time but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house consideration should be given to the advisability of introducing at this session legislation making definite and statutory provisions for parity prices for agricultural products at levels that will assure to producers their fair share of the national income.

Mr. Churchill: Was that amendment moved by the Minister of Transport?

Mr. Turner: No, this amendment was moved by Mr. Zaplitny and seconded by Mr. Schulz. This type of amendment is on all fours with the amendment now before the house in this sense, that it rejected the bill at second reading by stating that it should not now be read a second time, and giving an alternative avenue for the expenditure of public money, in this case parity prices for agricultural products, whereas in the case of the amendment now before the house it relates to old age pensions of $100 a month.

Now, Mr. Speaker Michener, in referring to the first part of the amendment said that this part, by itself, was out of order because it was a denial of the motion before the house that the bill be read a second time, and the way to dispose of that would be by voting against second reading. So far as that part of the amendment is concerned, by itself, it would not be in order.

Then, he deals with the reasoned amendment, the tail that has been added to it, and here is what Mr. Speaker Michener said:

> In so far as the remainder of the amendment is concerned, it does not propose that something be done with this bill and that is what gives me some difficulty. On the contrary the previous amendment proposed that the bill be referred to a committee—

That was a previous amendment that had already been dealt with by the house.

> —and that is quite in order. If the principle of the bill is opposed, and some other proper disposition of the bill is moved by way of amendment, then that is in order. But this amendment does not seek to dispose of the bill at all. It simply calls upon the house to start, de novo, with some other proceedings—

In this case, to start proceedings to raise the old age pension.

> —presumably to consider bringing in another bill. This would have to be done at the instance of the government and, being a money bill, would require a fresh resolution and the institution of fresh proceedings. Therefore, from that point of view, I am not considering the latter part of the amendment as an amendment to the principle of the bill at all, but as proposing something that is quite extraneous to the matter before the house and something which would be introduced by a motion on the order paper at any time but in my view could not be stated by way of amendment at this time.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker Michener went on to rule the amendment was not in order. I refer Your Honour to that citation because it clearly relates to presenting amendments with the idea of introducing alternatives, or what the Speaker called a reasoned amendment.

Mr. Knowles: It is not an alternative, it is concurrent.

Mr. Johnston: I would hesitate to attempt to instruct Your Honour on the rules of this house, having been here such a short time. I would suspect that there are a variety of grounds upon which an amendment could be ruled out of order. If the minister had other reasons to give, I wish he had given them, instead of saying that we had dealt with this matter on the first vote of confidence at the beginning of this session. I refer him to the words used by the hon. member for Essex West (Mr. Gray) in his speech at the resolution stage of this measure. At that time the hon. member set forth clearly the results consequent on a defeat of the government. He set them forth more clearly than I would have been able to do. The position of Social Credit then was very clear. We said we would vote against the motion of non-confidence; that we did not have a piece of legislation before us, and what this country needed was a parliament in session to begin working on legislation. I regret that the minister chooses now to assume that we had, in effect, joined the government in removing any possibility of an increase in the old age pension during the life of this session. To argue against the amendment on that ground is perhaps not the unkindest cut of all, but rather a sharp one.

The Canada Assistance Plan will have the result of increasing the security pension for some pensioners across this country. I should like to discuss this aspect more fully on second reading, but our regret is that it does not go farther.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I want to restrict my remarks exclusively to one aspect of this point of order, namely that because the subject matter of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is in the form it is it constitutes a request by this house to deal with a matter which has already been disposed of by the house on January 20. I should like, first of all, to invite Your Honour to make a distinction with regard to the suggestion made by the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Turner). As I read the words of the amendment upon which Mr. Speaker Michener ruled, and the wording of the present amendment, I would point out that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre calls for the immediate introduction of concurrent legislation. It is quite obvious, then, that he is not asking the house to do away with the bill which is now before the house; he is simply suggesting that we take a certain course of action with respect to another matter which shall be concurrent to proceeding with this measure as well.

[Mr. Johnston.]

I think there is a clear indication there that this bill will not disappear. The intention of the hon. member is not that this bill shall disappear, but that its future terms shall be regarded as being correlated to and concurrent with another measure. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that you can distinguish this particular matter from the precedent cited by the Minister without Portfolio.

• (4:30 p.m.)

I want to go a step further. The wording of the present amendment which is before the house includes the phrase "the government should give consideration". This is a device well utilized and hallowed by generations of practice in this house. It is not a demand that the government shall express its opinion as being in favour of a specific proposal, in this case an increase in old age pensions. The wording of the want of confidence motion on January 20, as reported at page 58 of Hansard, is as follows:

> We respectfully regret that Your Excellency's advisers have omitted to provide for an immediate increase from $75 per month to $100 per month—

That, Mr. Speaker, is a concrete and specific expression of regret that the government has not done something.

What the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is suggesting is that the government should give consideration to a certain matter. I think this is a type of wording which Your Honour must take into account in arriving at a decision. The amendment says that the government should give consideration to the immediate introduction of concurrent legislation. I think this is important.

Having in mind the practice in this house, if the point of order raised by the minister is to be given effect to, then it will mean, if we cannot make such a distinction as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre sought to make, that during the course of this session, which may last a very long time, this house will be precluded under any circumstances from dealing at any time or in any way with an increase of pensions under the Old Age Security Act from $75 to $100 a month.

We can take it, then, that the government has sought to use this procedural device of putting the matter out of the path of parliament at any time during the course of this session. I think that from that point of view the ruling of Your Honour on this aspect of the matter is of some considerable importance.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, you have already received a good deal of advice on this matter, but it is one of such tremendous importance, it seems to me, that I will try briefly to put to you one or two extra points which I do not think have yet been made.

There are three objections which have been noted. The first is that it is said that this house has already dealt with the matter and disposed of it on January 20. Such an argument does not depend, I submit, on the precise words of the motion that the house dealt with at that time as compared with the motion that the house is asked to deal with now. If the context has substantially changed and the circumstances have changed then you are not, I submit, dealing substantially with the same matter.

Citation 194 of Beauchesne's fourth edition which deals with this question, is as follows:

> A motion or amendment cannot be brought forward which is the same in substance as a question which has already been decided—

It is said, Mr. Speaker, that on January 20 this house decided that it would not increase old age pensions to $100 a month. I want to put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that in all common sense the situation has substantially changed since then. Things do not remain at a standstill in the country for six months. There has been an increase in the cost of living, a fact well known to all members of the house. The Minister of Finance also brought this fact out in his budget; and there is the threat of inflation. There is no one more clearly the victim of this than those to whose interests this motion is directed.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that as the cost of living and the cost of housing and shelter rise a new situation entirely presents itself today, in June, which is different from the situation to which the previous motion in January was directed, and of which the house disposed. It seems to me that this is only common sense and it fits in with what was said by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin).

Is it to be said that because we dealt with this matter verbally in January—and this is quite apart from the argument that in January a vote of confidence motion was moved, whereas this is a different sort of vote; I am not talking about the change in any verbal sense in context, or about the precise way in which the house dealt with the matter then—that today, when circumstances have altered, the elderly people to whom reference is made in this amendment are in substantially the same position, and that an amendment at this stage would be out of order? If necessary, I will be prepared to call as a witness the Minister of Finance, who would testify to the fact that the danger of inflation has grown and that the cost of living has increased, particularly in relation to the cost of food and rent, thus affecting the people to whom this motion is directed.

The second argument that has been advanced is that this motion is not relevant. Surely that argument is impossible on two counts.

Mr. MacEachen: Strictly relevant.

Mr. Brewin: Strictly relevant? Surely that argument is incorrect on at least two grounds. The first ground is that it is contrary to ordinary common sense. The Canada Assistance Plan has been put forward by the government as its answer to the problems of the elderly people. Some members of this house do not believe that it is an adequate answer. Surely when the government brings forward for second reading a measure which it says, in part at any rate, is designed to meet the needs of the elderly people of this country, it is relevant for the members of this house who happen to differ from that opinion to express their views on the matter.

Apart altogether from that, how can it be argued that a matter which falls, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed out, precisely within what a member is entitled to do on second reading of a bill, is irrelevant? I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, once again of citation 382 of Beauchesne which is as follows:

> It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a bill, to move as an amendment to the question, a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy, or provisions of the bill, or expressing opinions as to any circumstances connected with its introduction—

This amendment, Mr. Speaker, is certainly directed to, and connected with, the circumstances of the introduction of this bill. When the citation to which I have referred specifically states that this type of amendment can be introduced at this time, how can it possibly be argued that it is irrelevant? I have often been amazed in this house at the width of the rules of relevancy extended from time to time; but on this particular occasion, for the reason that it is embarrassed by this amendment, the government is trying to put before us a ruling as to relevancy which runs strictly contrary to the established principles in this house.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I want to repudiate the suggestion that the effect of this amendment is to kill the bill. It is clearly worded to have the contrary result. If this house accepts the motion, the motion clearly states that the government should give consideration to the introduction of concurrent legislation. In no sense does this motion kill the bill.

If by some technicality it means, Mr. Speaker, that we have to stay here a little longer while the original bill is reintroduced and, in accordance with the amendment, a concurrent piece of legislation is brought in to provide for an old age pension of $100 a month without a means test or a needs test for all persons 65 years and over, we in this corner of the house—and I think I speak for all members of the house—would be glad to wait here as long as necessary until these measures are brought in; and they should be brought in quickly.

I realize we are now dealing purely with the interpretation of the rules, but in the name of common sense and the ability of parliament to do so, I ask before we recess that we be allowed to deal with the principle which is embodied in the amendment, which deals with a matter of tremendous importance to a very large section of the people of Canada.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: Could I ask the hon. member for Greenwood a question?

Mr. Brewin: Certainly. I do not know whether I can answer it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. gentleman think that if this amendment were ruled in order, and the house accepted it, it would be mandatory upon the government to bring in the concurrent legislation referred to?

Mr. Brewin: Oh no. I do not suggest it would be mandatory that they do so. But I think that if the house passed such a resolution and the government refused to carry out the will of parliament, then it should either resign and make way for another government or reconsider its policy on this matter.

Mr. Gray: May I ask the hon. member a further question? The first line of the amendment contains the words "That Bill No. C-207 be not now read a second time". Can he tell the house what will happen if the amendment is passed? Aside from the balance of the amendment, what would happen to the bill before us?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Brewin.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, If the hon. member for Greenwood wishes to answer the question—

Mr. Brewin: The hon. member is proving himself an apt pupil of those who read only part of a resolution and not the whole thing. Even if this were passed, and the bill was defeated for some technical reason, it would be perfectly simple for the government, if it had the will to do so, to introduce this legislation again and to introduce the legislation contemplated in the resolution. As far as we are concerned we would facilitate this being done expeditiously. So that problem would be dealt with.

Mr. Churchill: We would do the same.

Mr. Speaker: If there are no other contributions to the debate on the point of order, hon. members may wish me at this time to express an opinion on the many interesting arguments which have been advanced.

Since this amendment was moved last evening by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre I have had an opportunity to look at it and, in the same way as other hon. members have done, I have proceeded to study the authorities and the precedents. I thought I had covered every possible argument either for or against the proposition in my study, but I can see, having listened to the opinions expressed today, that there are a number of aspects of this problem which I had not even thought might exist.

I do appreciate the suggestions made by all hon. members, both for or against the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and seconded by Mrs. MacInnis. Perhaps I might put the amendment on record at this time, since we have been considering the point of order for over an hour. It was in the following terms:

> That bill No. C-207 be not now read a second time, but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house the government should give consideration to the immediate introduction of concurrent legislation providing for an old age pension of $100 a month, without a means or needs test, for all persons 65 years of age and over.

I should mention immediately that one of the arguments considered by several speakers was the suggestion that if this amendment were carried a certain consideration would ensue and the bill would be killed. I had the impression that this was not a relevant argument. I do not think it is part of the procedural argument that if an amendment is accepted something else will follow, and I would be inclined not to consider either the arguments in favour of that proposition or those made against it.

Of course, if this motion can be considered at all, it is—as suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—as being a reasoned amendment by virtue of citation 382 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which reads as follows:

> It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a bill, to move as an amendment to the question a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy, or provisions of the bill.

I am not going to comment on the argument made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in this respect. I gather his objection had to do with the possibility that someone might argue that the amendment was not in opposition to the principle of the bill. But, as he himself recognized, that argument was not advanced and his view of this matter should therefore not be considered.

Reasoned amendments, as hon. members have argued, are still subject to the general rule of relevancy. Page 527 of May's seventeenth edition states as follows:

> The following rules govern the contents of reasoned amendments:
> (1) The principle of relevancy in an amendment governs every such motion. The amendment must "strictly relate to the bill which the house, by its order, has resolved upon considering".

The point has been made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare that there is a requirement that the amendment should be strictly relevant. I have some doubts myself on this point; it should be noted that the words of the citation are exactly as I have quoted them. There must be strict relevance to the bill. A strong argument has been advanced by the minister to the effect that this reasoned amendment is not strictly relevant to the bill itself, in that it goes beyond its scope. I believe the amendment might well be ruled out of order on this ground alone.

However, there are a number of other difficulties which I am sure have not escaped the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and others who have taken part in the debate on the procedural aspects. For one thing, the rule of relevancy implies that a proposed amendment should not impose a condition on the proposal which it seeks to amend. This is, perhaps, an aspect which has escaped most hon. members; at any rate, if the argument was put forward it escaped me. The hon. member proposed in his amendment that Bill No. C-207 shall not be passed unless, to use the wording of the amendment, concurrent legislation is introduced.

According to citation 94(1) of Beauchesne's fourth edition, this would appear to be out of order. The citation reads as follows:

> The principle of relevancy in an amendment governs every proposed resolution, which, on the second reading of a bill, must not... attach conditions to the second reading of the bill.

As I understand it, the purport of this motion is that the bill will receive second reading, provided other parallel or concurrent legislation is introduced. This clearly, to my mind, and in my humble judgment, is attaching a condition to the second reading of the bill which is now before the house.

The third argument which was considered by all hon. members who took part in this very interesting discussion related the admissibility of the amendment, bearing in mind certain citations, in particular 148(1), 148(2) and 200(1) of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which I should like to read. The first reads as follows:

> It is a wholesome restraint upon members that they cannot revive a debate already concluded; and it would be little use in preventing the same question from being offered twice in the same session if, without being offered, its merits might be discussed again and again.

Citation 148(2) says:

> It is irregular to reflect upon, argue against, or in any manner call in question, in debate, the past acts or proceedings of the house, on the obvious ground that, besides tending to revive discussion upon questions which have already been once decided—

Substantially, it repeats the principle enunciated in 148(1). The other citation, again from Beauchesne's fourth edition, is 200(1):

> An old rule of parliament reads: "That a question being once made and carried in the affirmative or negative, cannot be questioned again but must stand as the judgment of the house."

• (4:50 p.m.)

Hon. members have suggested that there is a substantial difference between this amendment and the one which was moved by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) during the Throne Speech debate. I do not agree. The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) suggested that things have changed in the interim, between that time and now, a period of six months. That is quite possible; but what the Chair has to consider is the amendment itself and the amendment moved then. The amendment moved then was substantially the same as that now moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

The Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Turner) referred to a judgment given by Mr. Speaker Michener, and which makes sense, but perhaps not in the same way as it was referred to by the minister. I would like to quote a different part of that judgment which was reported in the Journals of January 23, 1958, at page 366:

> If the principle of the bill is opposed, and some other proper disposition of the bill is moved by way of amendment, then that is in order. But this amendment—

The Speaker was referring to an amendment moved at that time which, in my view, was very similar to the one we now have under consideration.

> —does not seek to dispose of the bill at all. It simply calls upon the house to start, de novo, with some other proceedings, presumably to consider bringing in another bill... Hence in my view the amendment is not in order as it stands.

In view of these arguments I have no alternative except, with great regret, to refuse the amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and to say that on procedural grounds it is out of order.

Mr. Knowles: I share your regret, sir.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, now that all these points of order have been disposed of, we have probably lost more time than if we had discussed the amendment. Even though our procedures did not permit the amendment to be moved, nevertheless that does not remove the urgent need for such a piece of legislation to be introduced.

This bill, No. C-207, concerns one of the main principles of any society, the basic human rights of the individual. I agree with what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said yesterday, that the Liberal government has the ability to introduce legislation which flatters you on one side, and on the other hand more or less slaps you on the back of the head. This is a typical example, concerning our aged people and their needs for a higher pension to cope with the rising cost of living.

There are good points in the bill, and some points that should have been developed more. It should include greater protection for individual needs. I also agree with what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said yesterday, that all people in this country have the same equal rights to live. This applies to children as well as to the aged, to needy mothers as well as veterans. Each individual has a basic right to live, but to live he must have the necessary means and income.

There are three basic categories in this country, those who earn the means to live by their labour, those who live on the interest derived from capital investment, and a third group who have neither the capacity for labour nor enjoy he privilege of living on capital. What is this third group to do? These are the people covered by this bill, and the aged are included in them. Under the terms of this bill the government is now placing them under public assistance. This is a public assistance act.

[Translation]

Mr. Raynald Guay (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Certainly.

Mr. Guay: Does the hon. member believe that people aged 70 with a $10,000 annual income should have their old age pensions increased at this time?

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, that is not the problem which I referred to. Perhaps the hon. member gave another interpretation to my remarks, but, in any event, I said that there are different categories of people: those with income derived from a job; then those with income derived from capital investments.

Then, the example just given by the hon. member is included in those categories.

I refer to the aged citizen who cannot earn a living for himself either through work, or through capital investments. He has nothing left but old age assistance.

And Mr. Speaker, I do not like the inclusion of the old age pension, which is a right. I do not like it when those people who gave the best of their lives for their country are now to be included in an assistance plan. Out of respect for them, they should be granted a special status in Canadian legislation.

[English]

I see it is five o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Not yet.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I thank hon. members for not seeing the clock. Yesterday the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed out that the first duty of a government is to see that each individual has the necessary means to live honestly and adequately. That is stipulated in the Bill of Rights which was introduced in 1960, and was included in the universal bill of rights discussed by UNESCO. But when this principle is ignored the government's objectives are wide of the mark and completely useless.

• (5:00 p.m.)

I do not agree with the suggestion made today by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill), that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was trying to be a politician when he moved his amendment. This was the interpretation I took from the words of the minister. If he has any corrections to make on that, he may get up and say so and I will gladly accept his version of it. That however is the understanding I had of his words. The Minister of Transport constantly suggests that such amendments are political, and that we act as politicians in bringing them in. Where does the category of statesmanship come in? For my part I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, when making this amendment yesterday and when speaking on his amendment, spoke like a statesman; he spoke honestly. If hon. members in this house will take the time to read his speech, I think they will recognize this, all the way from A to Z. He mentioned the Bill of Rights that was presented in this house in 1960. If there are any members who wish to say that that Bill of Rights has anything wrong with it, it is up to them to say so now. He was talking about principles; he was not talking of election platforms. I can remember what some of the members who are mumbling over there said during some of the recent election campaigns. I do not know whether or not they said the same things before, because I was not around then; but they made promises that they would implement an increase in the old age pension to $125.

I heard these things in the 1963 campaign. They forgot about it between 1963 and 1965 and then remembered it in the 1965 campaign. The only difference in the two platforms was that a new hole was cut in the one in 1965, and that probably was because they lost some cabinet ministers in the shuffle. Then they forgot about it after 1965. It is funny how they can remember, and then forget again. I am not making a political speech; I am a layman. God knows that sometimes the truth hurts; and if it hurts, fine, because I am going to speak the truth. I am sure the government does not want to pass a piece of legislation while members sit quietly and do not say a word about it, and then expect to finish the following night all the legislation they have on the order paper.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Perhaps this is a good time for the Chair to call it five o'clock.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I started at five minutes to five, Mr. Speaker, and I will gladly sit down if I have assurance that I will be allowed to continue my speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. When the debate is resumed the Chair will permit the hon. member for Mégantic to finish his remarks.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, there has been some discussion on the point that tonight we might forgo the private members hour, and that rather than sit tomorrow night until ten o'clock, we sit tonight. It has been suggested that we adjourn tomorrow night at six o'clock instead of ten o'clock. Since this discussion, a suggestion has been made that tonight we might wish to rise for the dinner hour from six to seven, and then sit from seven until eleven so that there would be no loss of time. If this suggestion were followed, hon. members would be able to make their travel arrangements for tomorrow night after six o'clock.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask for a little clarification of this proposal. If we are to adjourn tomorrow night at six o'clock, then the presumption behind it is that there shall be no private members hour tomorrow. Am I correct?

Mr. McIlraith: I had not dealt with the point of private members hour tomorrow. If the hon. member has any views on this, I would be glad to hear them.

Mr. Howard: If we do adjourn at six o'clock tomorrow, there will be no private members hour; we cannot do anything about it and there is no disagreement on my part. It is agreeable, so long as the understanding is clear and it is made an order of the house.

Mr. Knowles: My colleague spoke about one aspect of the proposal with respect to the hours of sitting for today and tomorrow. As I understand it, the proposal is that we sit until six o'clock this evening, then sit again from seven until eleven, and that we adjourn tomorrow at six o'clock. If it is proposed that this be made an order of the house, we agree.

Mr. Cameron (High Park): The suggestion, Mr. Speaker, apparently meets with almost unanimous approval and I would not like to say I am not in agreement. I should like to call attention to the fact that this does do away with private members hour today and tomorrow. In giving my consent I wish to make clear to the house that I think more consideration should be given to the rights of private members who have things which they wish to discuss in the hour reserved for private members.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is it agreed that the house dispense with private members hour at this time, and proceed until six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There will be a recess for one hour and then the house will proceed from seven o'clock to eleven o'clock, and tomorrow the house will adjourn at six o'clock. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered.

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN

ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM TO ASSIST PERSONS IN NEED

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen for the second reading of Bill No. C-207 to authorize the making of contributions by Canada toward the cost of programs for the provision of assistance and welfare services to and in respect of persons in need.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I was referring to some of the past election promises which have been made. Well, at least I thank them for the promise. The only thing I am not happy about is that they did not hold to their promises. Perhaps they would argue the point that we do not have the money to give out; but what about the other possibility, the means of the people who need it? Do they have the means to wait for it? That is the first thing we should consider. This brings me back to the point made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre when he pointed out that regardless of who it might be, it is our duty as a government to see that each individual in this country receives enough for his basic needs. The minister in his bill stated this very well. He has considered pretty nearly all the aspects of this, but he has not considered it necessary to give them enough to fulfil these needs.

[Mr. Knowles.]

• (5:10 p.m.)

The government might be worried about where it is going to find the money, but let me tell them where they should begin looking for it. The country lost $130 million as a result of questionable bankruptcies and income tax evasions. The government should take a look at the amount of interest that is being paid in this country—millions and millions each year—with a view to saving some money in that regard.

In this country we have a gross national product of $56 billion and a population of only 20 million. If you divide that equally it would amount to approximately $2,800 per person. What share do the people get of that production? A great many of our laws must be changed. We do many things in the way of aid at the wrong time and in the wrong areas. We must do things right, at the right time and in the right places.

There are many needy widows in this country who have two, three, four or more children to support, yet they receive $10 per child, and a basic allowance for the mother, in order to exist. No mother can see to the needs of her children on $10 a month. When a mother finds herself unable to provide properly for her children, they are taken by the government and placed in foster homes and the foster parents receive from $35 to $65 per month for their welfare. I know of some orphanages that receive up to $120 for the support of children who are over 16 years of age. If foster parents require $65 per month to support a child, and orphanages require $120 per month per child how can anyone expect needy mothers to look after their children on $10 a month per child? The government must have some consideration for the needs of these people. If provincial governments do not respect that need in an appropriate way, this government should force them to do so. Children are much better off living with their own mothers, rather than in foster homes or in orphanages.

I know of cases where husbands have died leaving older houses to their widows. These houses are worth in the neighbourhood of $3,000 to $5,000. Under the provisions of welfare the value of a house is considered as income, under means tests, and a needy mother cannot obtain assistance until such time as she has sold the house and used up the money she has received for it. These people must rid themselves of all their possessions and place themselves and families out on the street before help is given. Some of these widows have as many as eight children to look after and they have difficulty enough in finding a place to rent. It is downright inhuman to ask a widow to sell her house and possessions, and put herself in a destitute position before giving her assistance.

Let me refer to one example which occurred in my constituency. This woman was left a house by her husband when he died. She was sick and required assistance. She had a 22 year-old daughter who was earning $35 per week. She was told that her daughter could help support the family and that before assistance would be provided she would have to sell her house and use up the money. I advised that woman to sell the house to her daughter and then rent it from her for $45 per month. She did so, and now receives assistance because she does not own any property.

That is the kind of thing that was revolting to the people in the 16th and 17th centuries; yet these things are still taking place here in Canada. In view of the basic rights of people, as outlined by our Bill of Rights, these things should be prevented by this government. I may be reprimanded for the advice I gave the woman to which I have referred, but in view of present circumstances I would do exactly the same thing again.

Some of the legislation we pass in this house is based on common sense, but a good deal of it is not. I deplore that fact and suggest that it is up to us to correct it. We must provide our elderly people, the people who built this country, with some social security in the last years of their lives. We are too prone to forget the efforts many of the people of this country have made, when we come to passing out assistance. The veterans of his country are very often forgotten. In the 1940 to 1945 period they were considered as heroes, but today they are considered as zeroes. The war is now over and we are relatively safe so we can forget easily the fact that these people risked their lives and spent five, six or seven of their best years fighting for this country.

The government must pass legislation in order to control monetary policies if it cannot control them under present legislative provisions. I cannot understand why a country like Canada should still have great areas of poverty and misery. There is a difference between those who conditions. One can be poor in spirit and in a great many other ways, but economic misery is something that cannot be tolerated; and it should not exist in Canada. This is a country that is capable of supporting 200 million people, yet we have only 20 million, many of whom are in desperate economic need I refer to needy mothers, the blind and disabled. I can show you areas in cities like Montreal, Toronto and Quebec where the people live in such poverty that the children of 10, 14, 15 and 16 years of age leave home. I am sure after doing so they never again would like to live in conditions such as they left.

• (5:20 p.m.)

You do not have to go very far; you will find them in the slums that exist in every city in this country. I am glad the minister has included in the bill a provision to try to get social workers in greater number and with greater competence who will find out exactly what are the needs of these people. Perhaps in this way they will be able to obtain some relief. These social workers will be able to help those people feeling the effects of the high cost of living when they are receiving low incomes or perhaps have no income at all. Perhaps one day we will be able to enact a piece of legislation that will at least satisfy the basic needs of the people of this country. I certainly hope so, because if we forget these needs, and the human rights included in the Bill of Rights passed in 1960, our being in this house is completely useless and without reason.

We are here to maintain these privileges, to fight for these rights. I think it is high time we stopped talking politics and promising various things during election campaigns. We put ourselves forward to the people as shining, bright stars and give a glowing over-all picture which, in the back of our minds, very often we have no intention of implementing if we form the government.

The government started a war on poverty. I do not say the whole program is not good, because it does contain some good points. This is a start. But in this connection there are two points that should have been considered right from the beginning. I refer to a pension being provided to the aged that is sufficient to meet the cost of living today. Also, family allowances should be higher so that parents will have the means with which to send their children to school, dress them decently and feed them properly. These are two factors in our society that must be provided for, namely the children and the aged. They are not on the labour market. perhaps some of the aged have the capital necessary to live on, but they are not on the labour market.

A great many of these people fall within the category of having to depend on public assistance. These people have helped us enough in the past. In many cases they have sacrificed their lives for Canada. I would ask hon. members to think of the pioneers who moved west in this country. They sacrificed themselves and their families in order to build for us a better country in which to live. Therefore it is about time we gave them a little thought. We should see that they have the means with which to live properly, and to make things a little easier for them in their old age.

I do not mean we should do what Mr. Lesage did in the province of Quebec. I should like to remind the Liberals what happened in that province. When the federal government gave the last $10 raise the old age pensioners were receiving $75 in the province of Quebec. Those who lived at home and those who lived in the old folks homes received this amount. Immediately after the federal government gave this increase, those living in their own homes received the additional $10, but those living in the old folks homes were deprived of this $10 because the provincial government took it back. Therefore those living in their own homes received $85 a month while the other group received $75. They are all old people and I do not think there should be this type of discrimination.

I am glad that in this measure the minister is providing a home service for our aged people. In many cases all they have left is a wife or husband, and they are living together. About the most inhuman act you could possibly commit would be to take one away from the other, put one spouse in one corner of the province and the other in another. We should remember that they have lived all their lives together and we should not separate them in this way. Marriage is till death do us part, not till the federal or provincial government decides otherwise. There is a great difference.

[Mr. Langlois (Mégantic).]

With the provision to provide these people with certain help in their homes we will be able to make them a little happier in their last days. I believe that one of the greatest things the government could do to make them much more happy would be to raise the pension to $100 a month for all the old people in this country.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, on the resolution stage of this bill I spoke at some length and discussed the guaranteed annual income. I noted that there was a certain reaction to my remarks, particularly in the Vancouver papers. In that city a conference on welfare was being held. In one newspaper there appeared an article with the dramatic title, "'Don't scuttle aid plan', welfare boss pleads". Then the article says that this man lashed opposition threats to scuttle the plan, unless it included guaranteed minimum incomes for the aged. I do not know whether he was basing his words on my remarks entirely, but if he woud re-read the speech that I made I think he woud find that there was no intention, expressed or otherwise, to scuttle the Canada Assistance Plan. There was only a regret that the government had failed to act promptly and energetically on the Senate report on aging. The speaker quoted in this article was Reuben Baetz, who has already been referred to in this debate. He said, when speaking of the aged people, that their needs can be adequately met under the Canada Assistance Plan if it is implemented in an enlightened way. Then he said:

> Already we have old age security giving the aged $75 a month and soon the age of eligibility will be reduced to 65. We also have the Canada Pension Plan which will help our future aged.
> Under the assistance plan, the unmet needs of the aged will be made up to them on an individual basis—so why do we need a fourth measure like guaranteed incomes?

I do not know how much Mr. Baetz was acting as an official apologist for the Liberal government and how much he was expressing his own opinions on this issue, but it seems to me that in spite of what he says there are still reasons why we could do with a guaranteed annual income, and I will come to them a little later. I lack the confidence of Mr. Baetz when he says that the unmet needs of the aged will be made up to them by the Canada Assistance plan.

I have been interested in the last few days in reading articles such as the one which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail of Saturday, June 25, which reads in part as follows:

> Elderly Prince Edward Islanders will find an extra $75 in this month's old age pension cheques—

The article goes on to say:

> A $25-monthly increase "has already been implemented, retroactive to April 1", the premier said in an interview.

I think this is a most forward-looking step. The minister was questioned in this regard in the house by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler), who suggested that he relent somewhat in regard to his position on old age security pensions. At that time the minister replied:

> Mr. Speaker, the position taken by the premier of Prince Edward Island is made possible or will be made possible through the provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan.

I would congratulate the minister on his forthrightness.

• (5:30 p.m.)

I think he might give the house a little additional information on this matter. Is the article correct when it implies that all the old age pensioners in Prince Edward Island obtained a $25 increase; was it made retroactive for all of them and is this the pattern that will be set through the Canada Assistance Plan throughout all the provinces? I hope it is so and I hope, although it is not spelled out in the plan, the needs of the old age security pensioners will be met through the plan, as was suggested earlier and as was also suggested during the election campaign in Prince Edward Island.

Many people have been concerned about the gap in time that will occur between the passing of the legislation, and the time needed for consultations with the provinces prior to its actual implementation. However, we wonder whether every province will be able to put all of its old age security pensioners in the category of those in need. I think it would be very much to the advantage of each province to move rapidly in this regard, to receive assistance from the federal government and to have it made retroactive to April 1 across the country. It does strike me as a most humane and enlightened way of implementing the Canada Assistance Plan, as Mr. Baetz suggested in his speech.

I wish to make one or two other points about the need for some sort of guarantee of old age security payments. Several articles have appeared recently in Ontario newspapers concerning people such as David Freeman, 21 years of age, an enterprising cerebral palsy victim whose disabled pension was docked because he sold a $400 magazine article; and Robert Hannah, 24, an ex-soldier crippled for life in a car accident, whose pension was stopped because his sweetheart married him and brought home her $38 a week calendar factory pay. These stories dealt with young people who ran into a less than enlightened treatment of their disability pension.

A case has recently been brought to my attention in my own constituency, and I wrote to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Teillet) regarding it. This concerns an old age security pensioner who is not getting his $75 a month war veterans allowance, but only $65 a month because he married very late in life and the district office discovered that owing to the way in which the plan had been administered for some time he had been receiving an overpayment. Although he received a letter from the district office admitting that it must accept responsibility for having made such an overpayment on his war veterans allowance account, he has been assessed the task of repaying that money.

The old age security pension which he is receiving is his only source of income, which makes the repayment very difficult for him. This case illustrates the fact that even the $75 that pensioners are receiving is not a guaranteed sum. I really do not see how a department of the government dealing with old age security pensions can be held responsible for the errors made by another department. I suggest there is a great need for some guarantee against the subjection of old age pensioners to this type of harassment where a mistake has been made by one of the government offices, which then has to be corrected by the old age security branch of the government.

I am also concerned about Mr. Baetz' comment that the plan will work if it is implemented in an enlightened way, because there have been too many examples—and the hon. member for Mégantic (Mr. Langlois) has spoken of some—showing that the present plans have not been administered in a particularly enlightened fashion. In administering his new plan the minister will have to use the same personnel even though he will be augmenting their number. I believe that in some cases the need will arise for some action similar to an open-heart surgery on a scale greater even than that suggested by the proponents of medicare.

There may be need for a radical revision of the attitude taken toward the problems of people who are receiving social assistance. I think this will be one of the very real challenges to the minister, and one for which only he can be responsible as head of the department, to set a tone that will be followed throughout the department in the administration of the Canada Assistance Plan.

I wish to say that I am not opposed to the plan, as I think I pointed out at the resolution stage of this bill. We in the Social Credit party are not opposed to this plan. As has been pointed out it proposes a great many things that are absolutely essential and which will give to the welfare services of the entire nation a tremendous impetus. However, this plan will need a most careful administration. The provisions I like in particular are those which deal with assistance to people who are close to the level where welfare is necessary, but who, with some help from the welfare departments, can make their own way. I am glad to say that these people are covered by the plan.

As has been suggested in the article which appeared this morning in the Globe and Mail, consideration should perhaps be given to extending this plan to cover programs in schools where potential problems may exist. I know, and I am sure every school teacher in the country knows, how frequently problems develop about which nothing can be done until they reach such severity as to demand drastic attention. Once that point is reached, then attention is given when, in fact, earlier action could have prevented the problems from developing in the first place.

I congratulate the minister on his plan and I urge that it be administered in the enlightened fashion which I am sure Mr. Baetz anticipated. I trust we can find in the example from Prince Edward Island a basis on which the older people of this country can hope to receive assistance from this plan.

Mr. Richard Cashin (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, as I was saying last evening, before we got diverted to other matters, I am pleased at having an opportunity to speak on this particular piece of legislation. I may say, when the events of this day are viewed in the perspective of this entire parliament, that we shall probably come to the conclusion that today we saw a singularly gross example of partisanship and a greater disregard for the needs of the people of this country than has been shown by any political party for a long time, namely the very surprising and shocking action taken by the New Democratic Party. As we all know, the effect of that amendment would have been to kill this legislation.

Perhaps some impartial observer sitting above parliament and viewing our deliberations might have anticipated or at least might have found it more understandable if such action were taken by the Conservative party, because it may be said that one does not expect Conservative parties to have that same avant garde understanding of the complicated nature of the war on poverty. One would have expected that those who hold forth on idealism, who fill the pages of Hansard continually with pleas for the little man in Canada, that those people who have held themselves up as knights in shining armour, as the statesmen who have tried to save parliament, would have rapped the knuckles of the Conservatives if they had done this. It would have been suggested that the Conservatives acted irresponsibly. The two old line parties would have been ridiculed.

What did we see in the day's events? It would have been reprehensible but more understandable if the Conservatives had done this, but they chose not to do so. I do not believe one has to congratulate them for acting in that way; they merely acted in a responsible fashion. Certainly the action taken by this group, and particularly by the individual member who introduced the amendment, I think was shocking. I believe the people of Canada should know an attempt was made to play politics with the widows, the orphans and the other needy people of this country, many of whom form the real hard core of the poor, by the New Democratic Party. I think, Mr. Speaker, if there is any suggestion about partisan politics in parliament during the course of past sessions, it ought to have been made clear to all observers that, although we are all sometimes guilty of this offence, the group in this house most guilty has been the same New Democratic Party.

It is unfortunate that the hon. member who introduced the amendment had to do this, because over the past quarter of a century I suppose he has assumed unto himself the title of defender of the little man. Certainly his word had a hollow ring and, certainly, at the very best he was no better than the worst insinuations he has made about members on this side on many occasions. I suppose we have to be a little charitable in dealing with this group because they have never had the responsibility of governing this country. The action that they took today indicated they would never really deserve the trust of the people, because heaven knows what they would do with that responsibility. However, all this is conjecture, because it is most unlikely to happen.

I must say that I have followed the debate closely today because I have found it interesting. I have followed many of the observations made about the Canada Assistance Plan outside parliament. I have found that there is perhaps a misunderstanding of the import of this legislation and what it is trying to do, of its vital necessity as a fundamental ingredient of our whole approach to social security. I might say that, surprisingly enough, in reading the speeches in Hansard, it seems that the hon. member for Portage-Neepawa (Mr. Enns) and the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Rynard), showed more understanding of this plan than those members of the New Democratic Party who hold themselves out as our saviours.

I was quite shocked and alarmed myself, because it seemed to me that this group which has advocated that we do novel, imaginative things, that we break new ground, who are always planning and always criticizing by saying that we are not moving fast enough, would have welcomed this measure with much more enthusiasm than they have. They have certainly shown their colours by their action today. This misunderstanding has existed, I think, because of a misconception of our whole approach to welfare. Over the last 30 years we have been building in this country a body of laws under the general heading of social security. Those people who were charged with administering these laws, groups such as the Canadian Labour Congress or the Welfare Council, and others who have taken an interest in a more direct way in welfare in this country, have been agitating for a long time that what this country needs is a sound, comprehensive philosophy of social security. In the past, our approach has been a patchwork and this has created many anomalies.

I might say that our approach falls into three separate categories. First, and I am not taking them in order of development, there is our social insurance program such as the Canada Pension Plan and unemployment insurance. This is one aspect of social security. There is another aspect that perhaps may be under the general heading of welfare and that is now disposed of on the basis of a means test. The third approach would be those payments that are made in respect of a category. Within those three prongs of our approach to welfare over the past 30 years, there has been one very basic neglect, and that is particularly in the case of the categorical payments of such as old age pensions and the payment of social assistance on the basis of a means test. What we have been doing really has been to attempt to give to those people a supplementary form of income. We have had a restricted approach because of the nature of the means test. This has happened because in dealing with the categories we have been restricted, because up until now it has been impossible to make a payment in a category that will meet the needs of all those in that category.

I think those who have studied this matter have suggested rightly that what has been needed, if you will, is a philosophy of social security that would embody the principle of prevention and rehabilitation. Up until now, little or no effort has been made in this direction. It is in this area that the Canada Assistance Plan breaks new ground, because not only does it give an opportunity to the provinces to bring all of their related programs into one, but it gives them more flexibility and more scope in dealing with those areas that require attention. There has been a suggestion, even from the enlightened ones in the New Democratic Party, that the means test and the needs test are the same. I have even listened to leading individual newspaper personalities make great pronouncements on this. It would seem from what they have had to say that many of the people who have been talking about this measure are, to say the least, misinformed. There is certainly a distinction, subtle, but a distinction, between the means test and the needs test.

The latter gives those agencies charged with this problem more scope and more flexibility. I think many members of parliament have come across deserving people who could not be helped by any of the existing approaches in our general welfare schemes in Canada. The reason for this has been that the problems with which we were confronted could not be solved by any social insurance program or could not be solved by any payment to a category such as old age pensioners, and could not be solved by a means test because of the particular nature of the problem. For example, there are many receiving social assistance in various areas of Canada who may have an opportunity from time to time to earn some additional income. I have come across this problem quite often. I find that if one member of the family, say the son of a widow, is able to find employment, his social assistance allowance accordingly is diminished or perhaps cut out, even though the young man needed the income, independent of his mother's income and was hoping to use it in order to get himself a start in life.

There are many such examples of where our approach to social security has failed because we have really lacked a sound and reasoned philosophy of social security that sees the problem in the light of rehabilitation and prevention. I think that these are the main areas which are attractive about the Canada Assistance Plan.

The minister gave us quite a lengthy discourse on the features of the plan. I noticed that one of the earlier speakers today was making reference to children. Again this matter can be covered in the Canada Assistance Plan, and the problem met.

Another feature of this plan which I believe is a major step in our war on poverty is that this plan will support welfare services which are provided as part of community development programs, in so far as these programs can be employed as a means of helping public assistance recipients, or those likely to need assistance, if such provision is not made, to achieve the greatest possible measure of self-support. This is the kind of flexibility we have lacked in our approach, up until this day, to social security.

There are a number of other features of the plan which lend themselves I think to our wholehearted support. Related to the matter I have just discussed are the provisions for work activity programs. I think there are particular areas in Canada, as Mr. Speaker is well aware, where the opportunities for employment, for one reason or another, are not as great as they are generally across Canada. Because of this, many people have been forced to seek social assistance. Some of the people have been able to move from these areas, but one of the things I have found from talking to people in such areas is a genuine desire to work.

[Mr. Cashin.]
