HALIFAX NOTES.

There is no dance in Halifax at the following...

The largest and best dance of the year has adorned this week...

It is not too much to say that a large proportion of ladies invited were much cast down when they saw that little word on the card...

The whole of the house was of course thrown open for so large a dance...

In the way of guests Tuesday night was an exceedingly smart turnout...

Mrs. Daly, who was looking very well and handsome, wore peacock blue satin trimmed with steel embroidery...

Miss Kenney looked well in yellow, as did Miss Bullock, while Miss Wood looked very well in white and black...

A very effective toilette of white was worn by Mrs. Clarkson, who looked very well indeed...

Dancing went on till a late hour for Halifax, and a more thoroughly successful ball has seldom been given here...

The last cricket match of the season took place on the Garrison ground on Wednesday afternoon...

There was to have been a polo match on Friday afternoon, with the usual accessories of band and tea...

Old St. Paul's, or historic old St. Paul's as it is now generally termed...

The gallery not being open to the public as formerly at weddings, no doubt helped to swell the crush down stairs...

The new Citadel cricket ground has entirely replaced the old one...

WATERPROOF YET POROUS. Adm'the air and keeps out the water. This may seem an impossibility but it can be explained...

Mrs. Florrie Price of St. John spent Sunday here. Mrs. Willing and Miss Beatrice of Andover are the guests of her parents...

The death of Mrs. Edgett occurred on Monday morning. She was much esteemed by all who knew her for her sterling qualities...

BEER WITHOUT BOOZE.

STRANGE IDEA OF AN EPISCOPAL BISHOP IN CHICAGO.

He Has Established a Home Saloon to Take the Place of the Common Saloon—Drinks that Please but Do Not Cause Jags—How the Plan Works so Far.

The spectacle of a bishop running a saloon upon a street corner in one of the most saloon-iviting quarters of the town is one to which Chicagoans have become accustomed writes Maurice Davis in the Inter-Ocean.

The Fallows saloon, or the Home saloon as it is called, to distinguish it from the "saloon," looks to the observer like an ordinary resort for drinks.

The idea of the Home Saloon is to furnish men with drinks that shall taste just like beer and whisky, and, in fact, be beer and whisky, yet lack some very bad features of these drinks as commonly sold in saloons.

In beer, for instance, the best grade of malt and the best of hops are purchased and mingled by a skillful brewing-house into beer.

The trouble with the temperance movement," says the Bishop, "is that you take something without giving anything in return.

"Nor," says he, "is there any sense in telling men they do not need to drink. Man is a drinking animal. He will get along without his lunch nicely if he has a glass of something to drink.

At first the patrons came in slowly. One man to whom the beer looked very cold and sparkling and the glasses very clean looked askance several days before venturing in.

No effort is made to mix drinks and religion, and the men can say "swear words," indulge in mild brawls as much as in any other saloon and lounge around the door as long as they please.

The justification of the Home Saloon is two fold with the Bishop. He says first that he is a benefactor to men, since he gives them what they want without adding things that they do not want—gives them the privilege of drinking without the obstacle of getting drunk.

per cent on their investment! And so they added more saloons, hoping to make money on all of them, but determined to give the people good drinks, anyway."

In Chicago the "Chicago Yankers," according to the Bishop, can make it pay 15 per cent, and even 25 per cent.

Mr. Rainford, the pet protegee of the Bishop, wants the church to run the saloon, giving men a certain number of drinks at certain hours, and training their consciences to go "thus far and no further."

A very queer thing happened in the Home Saloon the other day. Two fine, strapping specimens of men came along Washington street. But it was easy to see from their flushed noses and uneasy step that they were toppers, toppers dry and looking for a good long series of drinks.

The bartender had been quietly listening. "Is your gentleman will do me the honor I'll give you. We're always ready here to treat our good customers."

The game is sold to be honest but the bank comes out ahead. The glories of Monte Carlo are waning. Hard times have prevented the gambler public from risking its cash at the gaming-tables, and Monte Carlo misses specially the Italians, who, since the Russian nobles have run through their money, have furnished the most paying contingent of the visitors of Monaco.

"Holy links and Jehu," exclaimed the toppers, as they supported themselves out to the curb to talk it over. "We've been drinkin' in that temperance joint, and we ain't either drunk or dead!"

"A very long table, with a circular hollow in its centre. In this hollow moves a disk, divided into 37 fields, red and black, rouge et noir. A little ball is thrown upon this disk, it jumps about, it rolls along, and stops at last in one of the 37 fields; and this field wins. If, for instance, you put your money simply upon a number, you win 35 times your stake if the ball stops in the field bearing your number. If you play color, you receive double your stake when your color wins.

"Every player attempts to reduce his gambling to a system. He does not regard the manner in which rouge follows upon noir, and noir has a run after rouge, as mere chance, but believes that there is certain subtle influence behind it all. But all systems fail in the end—the bank comes out ahead. The most popular system is the 'alembert.' The player increases his stake when there is a chance that his favorite color is about to have a run, and decreases it when he has had a run of luck.

The history of our public schools affords plenty of examples of boys who have tortured their fellows in a way which would have disgraced a savage. It is to be feared indeed, that it is accident more than anything else which saves boys of this kind—boys whose feelings have become petrified—from actual crime.

A remarkable instance of the depressed condition of agriculture in England was afforded at the recent sale of a Kentish estate, when 639 acres of land, with farm-house, stable, homestead, and seven modern cottages, realized only £5,700, or less than £9 per acre.

The rector of St. Matthew's Church, Hamilton, Ont., holds a warm place in the hearts of his people, not alone because he is a faithful pastor, but for the work he has done for the children of Hamilton as principal of St. Matthew's parish school.

The bearskin hats of some British regiment were at first devised with the idea of striking terror into the hearts of their enemies. The same principle is shown in the dreadful figures worn by the knights on their helmets and sometimes emblazoned on their shields.

That might have been avoided by the use of Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart. Promptness is the first essential in all cases of sickness, and especially in heart disease. Minutes may mean everything.

WOMAN and HER WORK.

Mohair! One meets the word everywhere in the columns of fashion journals, and there is every reason to prophesy a rage for mohair. It is a reliable sort of material, crisp, wiry, shedding dust, resisting all efforts to crush it, and coming out fresher than ever after a 'sponging'...

One pint of water, and half a pound of ginger root, sliced thin. Cut the lemon rinds into as long and thin strips as possible. Place all together in a preserving kettle and boil slowly for an hour.

Many handsome mohair dresses are lined with silk in a contrasting color, and the lining is allowed to show through the lace insertion which is placed so lavishly all over the costume now-a-days.

Pickled pears are made thus: Boil together three pounds of sugar, three pints of vinegar, and an ounce of stick cinnamon. Use seven pounds of sound pears, wash, and stick three or four cloves in each pear...

There are many uncertainties to vex the heart of the devotee of fashion just now, and there does not seem to be much prospect of a definite settlement for any of these very soon. In the first place, there is the matter of skirts, are they to continue perfectly plain, or shall they take on a few folds and drapings in the near future?

To make grape preserves, press with the fingers the pulp from the fruit and put it over the fire to boil. When boiling rub it through a sieve to remove the seeds. Put the juice, pulp, and skins into a preserving kettle, and to every pint add one pound of granulated sugar and boil until as thick as required.

Every well furnished wardrobe is now supposed to contain a petticoat of fibre chambray for wear with unlined skirts of serge, or other material. And a capital idea it is.

Will some correspondent kindly tell 'A Friend' of some simple and interesting books treating of palmistry and phrenology, as she is anxious to take up these studies? I published some information on the subject two or three years ago, but I cannot for the life of me remember the names of the books now, and I have not time to go over my pile, and hunt them up.

To every three pounds of fruit allow one and one-half pounds of sugar and a half pint of water. Peel the pears and lay them in cold water to keep them from turning dark before they are wanted. When the syrup is boiling, put the pears in and cook until they look clear or a fork can be stuck into them easily.

One was Talking Dollars, and the Other Had Pounds Sterling in Mind. 'It is the easiest thing on earth to sell a mine in London for almost any price, provided you have anything to show an expert.'

'Two hundred and fifty thousand,' said I. 'That is more than we expected to pay. We expected to pay about two hundred. There is not much difference between two hundred and two hundred and fifty. If you will drop the fifty we will take it.'

It is not generally known that the present Shah of Persia is not only a prose writer of considerable merit, but has also some pretensions to the character of a poet. Like the German King who according to Carlyle, declared himself to be above grammar, so does the Persian monarch consider himself above criticism; yet, like all poets, he is glad to lend an ear to it when it is favorable.

The Boulevard des Capucines was roused the other evening (writes our Paris correspondent) by seeing a mail coach drawn by six splendid Spanish mules stop before the Grand Hotel. The rumor at once flew that it conveyed the Queen Regent of Spain and her son, who had fled from a revolution.

The mules were under the management of a postillion in a white livery faced with black. Two footmen similarly dressed sat in the rumble. The mules were fresh as if they had just started, and showed no sign of having journeyed all the way from Lisbon. It is true they took it easy most of the way, for they started just four months ago. The last stage was from Versailles. They came thence to the Grand Hotel in forty-five minutes.

He (Tennyson) desired to be introduced to her, or, perhaps—for his ways were what regal—desired that she might be presented to him. In which ever way it was the ceremony was transacted, and Tennyson's second remark was this question: 'Oh, Lady—do I know Lord—?' The person about whom he thus inquired was a peer who, though young had won much distinction in public life, and was widely known in private. His wife, as it happened, was devoted to him, any jealous of any word which sounded Wealth is Power and the Famous Family is More Potent than Are the Armies of Nations—Golden Rules for Getting Rich as Laid Down at the Start.

When the Parisian anarchist sent an infernal machine to the head of the French Rothschilds recently, the financial universe trembled the next day, when the cable flashed the news to all parts of the globe.

In all the European wars of the past century the Rothschilds were a most potent factor. They practically held in their hands the power to give defeat or victory to either side, by withdrawing their support from the one and concentrating it upon the other.

What the wealth of this family is, can only be roughly estimated. It may be $1,000,000,000 and it may be $2,000,000,000; it is somewhere between those figures.

All this wealth sprang from the genius of the son of a poor dealer in furniture and cheap bric-a-brac at Frankfurt. This genius was named Mayer Amschel Rothschild and he was the founder of a fortune which has no contemporary history.

The Rothschilds employ a skilled professor of finance to instruct their growing sons. Finance with them is everything. A few Americans have studied under this genius.

At the time of the Napoleonic invasion the great Rothschild had built up a local reputation as a financier and already established his son Nathan Mayer Rothschild in London, for those were unsettled times, and the prudence of the man discovered the necessity of having a place to fly to, if occasion required.

When the news of Napoleon's coming reached Frankfurt, the elector of Hesse placed 16,000,000 francs in the custody of the elder Rothschild for safe keeping.

A commission went to his establishment and minutely examined the vault and the books. Menaces and intimidation were vain, however, in persuading Rothschild to divulge the whereabouts of the treasure.

In 1814 the elector returned to Frankfurt and the 16,000,000 francs were paid back to him. The terms of the deposit gave the Rothschilds the interest on the money while it was in their custody and this considerable sum was in reality the cornerstone of the family fortune.

Wealthy marriages have also been part of the creed of the family. In 1806 the son who had settled in London married the daughter of a rich banker, Levi Barnet Cohen.

This Nathan Rothschild was on the battlefield of Waterloo and by a wonderfully quick trip reached London before the real news had been received by the government. He was on the staff of Wellington and the minute he saw the defeat of Napoleon was certain to be at breakneck speed to Ostend, crossed the channel at the risk of his life, and was on the stock exchange next morning.

Bismarck has been forced to bow to the moneyed power of this family. In 1866 the Prussian government demanded an indemnity of $25,000,000 from the city of Frankfurt. The Rothschilds sent word to Bismarck that if any attempt was made to enforce the levy, they would break every bank in Berlin.

Baron Alphonse de Rothschild to whom the infernal machine was recently sent is the head of the Paris bank. He has strong ideas on the labor question and has made many enemies in consequence.

I do not believe in the so-called labor movement. I am confident that the workmen generally speaking are satisfied with their condition and have neither cause nor desire to complain.

In considering the so-called labor movement it is necessary, however, to distinguish a really good from bad workmen. Only the idle good-for-nothing desire the eight-hour day.

These views were not pleasant to the excitable masses of Paris. Perhaps the infernal machine was an echo of them.

Of the 11 barons, Nathaniel, Alfred and Leopold are located in London; Alphonse, Gustav, Edward and James in Paris; Nathaniel in Vienna and William in Frankfurt. The Belmonts are the agents in this country.

Some idea of the riches can be had from the fact that since 1865 they have raised for Great Britain alone more than $1,000,000,000; for Austria, $250,000,000; for Prussia, $200,000,000; for France, $400,000,000; for Italy, nearly $300,000,000; for Russia, $125,000,000; for Brazil, from $60,000,000 to $70,000,000, and they took through the Belmont-Morgan syndicate about $15,000,000 of the issue of United States bonds last February.

An amusing story is told of a gentleman living in London. As the anecdote goes, it seems that he had a passion for the purchase of second-hand furniture at auctions, and that in making 'good bargains' he had filled his house with antiquated and almost useless articles.

IN THE BALMY AZORES.

FAIR LANDS WHICH ARE OUT OF THE TOURIST TRACK.

They Could be Reached Half Way Station on the Great Ocean Highway—Beautiful Scenery and Much Enjoyment at a Cost of a Small Expenditure.

The nine islands and two groups of rock which the early Portuguese named Ilhas dos Acores (Islands of Hawks), and English-speaking tongues have corrupted to Azores, lie on the warmer side of the Gulf Stream, though about in the same latitude as Philadelphia, 2,000 miles east of Boston or New York, 1,000 miles southwest of London, about 800 miles due west from the southern corner of Portugal (to which kingdom they belong), and the same distance from the northwestern end of Morocco.

San Miguel is much the largest, being fifty miles long by five to twelve broad and the two heaps of uninhabited rocks are called, respectively, Formigas and Dol-labaret.

They are in three distinct groups, with long stretches of sea between; and, indeed, little Flores and Corvo are so far away from the other as to hardly belong to the archipelago at all.

Aug. 10, 1591, made memorable by the pen of Walter Raleigh, in which the English ship Revenge, with Sir Richard Grenville, as captain, endured for twelve hours before she struck the attack of eight great Spanish armadas. She sunk two of them, each three times her own size; and after all her masts were gone, and she had been three times boarded without success, defied to the last the whole fleet of fifty-one sail, which lay round waiting for her to strike or sink.

But all this will be changed in the near future, since three lines of vessels now make regular trips between our ports and those of the Azores, where they connect with the Portuguese and other lines, thus enabling tourist to enter Europe via the Spanish peninsula and the Mediterranean—a very welcome change from the old routes of travel.

Nowadays, too, the Azores have new interests for Americans, since Portugal has at last grudgingly recognized our principles of local government in granting autonomy to the islands, and the interesting little community are legislating for themselves at Angra, the almost unknown capital of the group.

As the outline of the Flores grows more distinct you see jagged volcanic peaks sloping on all sides to the sea, ending in black precipices against which the surf breaks ceaselessly. A nearer view reveals green fields and cultivated uplands, cottages, and waving grain, and cloud shadows chasing each other on the hill-tops and down the deep ravines.

It looks almost round, a picturesque mass of rock and forest, not five miles in diameter—in short, what it is, merely a volcanic crater, which the natives call O Calderao, "the big pot," whose outer sides are cultivated.—This smallest and most northerly of the Azorean Archipelago exists only as a satellite of Flores, and would not be mentioned at all were it not within sight of the latter. Vessels never call there, because it has no harbor, the means of communication with the outside world being by means of a whaleboat from Flores once a month—it winds and waves permit. But sometimes during bad weather or even this is forbidden, and for three or four consecutive months the tiny island is totally isolated.

who are said to be a peculiarly gentle and inoffensive people—called "old-fashioned" by the other islanders.

There are two natural curiosities on the little island. One is a small lake at the bottom of the extinct volcano, studded with tiny islets that present a perfect miniature representation of the Azorean Archipelago.

The story goes that Columbus on his great voyage of discovery became completely disheartened by the difficulties surrounding him, and was on the point of abandoning his project and turning back to Spain, when a severe storm drove him close to Corvo. Seeing this rock, and its colossal bosome sternly pointing to the westward, he regarded it as a heaven-sent omen.

These fields form narrow terraces, one above another, and look from the shore like steps into the hills. Higher up the mountain is carpeted with heath, where flocks of sheep and hogs find a living.

They are not bed besides for their slovenliness and red petticoats. The men wear suits of coarse brown homespun, with caps reaching almost to the ankles, and a skull cap of the same material for dress occasions.

In trade they evince the remarkable shrewdness proverbial among the Azoreans; but so friendly and unsuspecting are they that their doors and windows are never fastened at night, and they sleep in happy ignorance of the murders and robberies committed in more enlightened quarters of the globe.

The health officer's boat was speedily followed by three or four others to take us ashore at Flores. These island boats are queer enough to merit description. They are evidently constructed for rough weather and are so big and heavy that they look like the dismantled hulls of schooners.

Broken Hearts in France. In no instance does the profound difference of national character in England and France appear more striking (says our Paris correspondent) than in the views held on both sides of the channel regarding breach of promise. Of course engagements are broken off in France as well as in England, but it is only in England that heavier damages are awarded for a broken heart than for a broken leg. The offense is all but unknown in French law courts—whether it is that Frenchmen are less inclined to it, or that the French girl dislikes bringing her sentimental troubles into court. To show English readers how incredibly prejudiced French persons of both sexes are upon this subject, it is enough to say that a young lady who attempted to turn her wounded feeling into cash would be regarded as only a degree less mean than the faithless man.

A very small number of suits for breach of promise have always been supported by a plea that the lady was put to expense, and there must be besides evidence of an intent to deceive. Damages in any case are very small besides the royal amounts awarded by English juries. On Saturday, however, an action for breach of promise a l'Anglaise was brought into the Third Paris Police Court. The lady and her father, as nearest friend, produced a bill showing that they were £50 out of pocket for the broken engagement. They might have had this but, badly advised, they put on another item of £350 for the moral prejudice. The French judge did not understand this, and he dismissed the case.—London Daily News.

Good for the Mayor. The following incident took place a few years ago in a city of Tennessee. A poor little girl was peddling apples in a railway station. A train was about starting, and almost at the last moment a tall, rufianly passenger stepped off the cars and called for 15 cents' worth of the apples. The girl counted them out, the man took them, and then, as he moved toward the car, began feeling in his pocket as if for the money. The change was not forthcoming, he was on the steps, the train began to move, the girl ran eagerly after it, and there stood the man on the platform, laughing at her.

By good luck the mayor of the city happened to be among the bystanders—a war veteran, with a tender heart and a contempt for all meanness. He ran at once to the superintendent's office, and said: "I'll give you a hundred dollars to stop that train and have backed into the station."

The offer was promptly accepted, a telegram was despatched, and very soon the player of the joke found himself in the hands of the police. He paid the girl ten 15 cents, of course, and offered to pay her a good deal more; but the officers were inexorable, and to the gratification of the lookers-on he was marched off to jail.—Youth's Companion.
