ROWING AGAINST THE TIDE.

It is easy to glide with its ripples,
Adown the stream of Time,
To flow with the course of the river,
Like music to some old rhyme;
But ah! it takes courage and patience,
Against its current to ride;
And we must have strength from heaven
When rowing against the tide.

We may float on the river's surface
While our oars scarce touch the stream,
And visions of earthly glory
On our dazzling sight may gleam;
We forget that on before us
The dashing torrents roar;
And, while we are idly dreaming,
Its waters will carry us o'er.

But few—ah, would there were many!—
Row up the "Stream of Life";
They struggle against its surges,
And mind neither toil nor strife;
Though weary and faint with labour,
Singing triumphant they ride;
For Christ is the hero's captain
When rowing against the tide.

Far on through the hazy distance,
Like a mist on the distant shore,
They see the walls of a city
With its banner floating o'er;
Even through a glass so darkly,
They almost mistake their way;
But faith throws light on their labor
When darkness shuts out their day.

And shall we be one of that number,
Who mind not toil nor pain?
Still we mean the loss of earthly joys
When we have a crown to gain?
Or shall we glide on with the river,
With death at the end of our tide,
While our brother with heaven before him,
Is rowing against the tide?

A certain degree of labor and exertion seems to have been allotted us by Providence, as the condition of humanity. "In the sweat of thy brow shalt thou eat thy bread" this is a curse which has proved a blessing in disguise. And those favored few, who, by their rank, or their riches, are exempted from all exertion, have no reason to be thankful for the privilege. It was the observation of this necessity, that led the ancients to say, that the industrious sold them everything, but gave them nothing. Water, however, which is one of the great necessities of life, may in general, be gratuitously procured; but it has been well observed, that if bread, the other great necessity of human life, could be procured on terms equally cheap and easy, there would be much more reason to fear that men would become brutes, for the want of something to do, rather than philosophers, from the profession of leisure. And the fact seems to bear out the theory. In all countries, where nature does the most, man does the least; and where she does but little, there we find the utmost exertion of human energy. It is the energy of man that comprises the soul of the intellect; wherever it is, there is life; where it is not, all is dullness and dependency and degradation. People who have no experience of it, imagine that it is destructive to the nerves, exhaustive to the animal spirits; that it aggravates the wear and tear of life excessively. But this is an idle notion, as idle as the habits and humors of those who entertain it. I will leave it to any man who knows its real effect to strike the balance— to compare the exhaustion of an indolent day with that of an active one; to say in which of the two cases the subject is in better heart for work, and fitter to undergo it. Whatever we may be about, one thing I believe, is certain, that if the spirits are spent by energy they are utterly wasted by idleness at worst, energy can only end in relaxation—it is superior to it for a while, and possibly at last may fall into it; whereas, idleness is actual relaxation from first to last, and can be nothing else; but even this view, favourable as it is, is yet not favourable enough to be just.

The fact is, that violence is not necessary to energy any more than tyranny is to justice; on the contrary, it is the gentlest energy that does the most work. Energy, if I remember right, is inward-workingness, the blossoming of the flower in energy, the increase of fruit is energy, the growth of the body is energy; yet in all these there is no violence; the efficacy is not destructive, but vital; without it the whole frame must fall at once into corruption, with it, instead of corruption we have life. But this it may be said, is a refinement, it may be so, but it is true in fact nevertheless. The gainsayer will find it difficult to produce anything from the subject of surer or more essential truth.

Interesting Tale.

AVENGED.

The old clock in the tower rang out five melodious chimes, as Cora Smith softly closed the kitchen door, and ran to the little bedroom for her blue scarf.

"Five o'clock," she said, as the last stroke died away; he is wondering why I don't come, and I must make haste. Blanche, little Blanche, are you going with me to night? I am all ready.

Auntie says you have forgotten to get the potatoes for breakfast, and we must prepare them before you go. Never mind if he does have to wait a little for you; you've waited for him many a time. Come quickly, and I will help you.

So sweet-tempered Cora Smith untied the blue scarf, and tripped away to the forgotten task as merrily as her little sister, albeit her heart beat like an imprisoned bird at the delay.

The west was all aflame with the autumn sunset ere the sisters closed the cottage door behind them, and ran down the garden path toward the stile, where he was waiting—in other words, where hazel-eyed, sweet-faced Cora Smith's lover was waiting for his lady-love, as she had many a night waited for him.

Almost every evening they met there at the stile—their "trysting-place," he said, just half way between her home and his boarding house. He had proposed it, and she was nothing loth to accept—it was so pretty and romantic.

Then Auntie Smith was not at all pleased with this dark-eyed young stranger, and, though she had not forbidden him the house, both lovers knew she preferred "this room to his company." And so, always with dear little Blanche at her side, she daily tripped down the path through the lewy woods to the half-way trysting place where she met her handsome, dark-eyed lover, Neil Rowan. How her heart fluttered to night as she thought of him! and the warm love-light deepened and darkened the soft brown eyes!

Neil, Neil, she said, almost unconsciously, aloud, and little Blanche clasped her sister's hand closer, and looked up in her face.

Do you love him so very much, sister Cora?

A swift, hot color came into the girl's face, and then she paused, suddenly, holding the hands of little Blanche in a fervent grasp.

"Love him, Blanche! better than all the world—better than my youth, my life—ay, sometimes I fear better than my hope of heaven! And I am to be his wife, little Blanche, the good man's wife, when the beautiful spring comes. I shall leave you, and auntie, and uncle, to be all his. But this is our secret, little sister, and only you can share it."

And then her hands relaxed their hold, and drawing the light scarf over her shoulders, she tripped silently on. They were almost there—nearing the edge of the wood, and the stile was but a step away. Another step forward, and little Blanche held her sister back.

Wait! she whispered; I can see two men sitting on the seat, Cora. We do not want to meet strangers there.

No, she said, drawing back in the shadow of the wood; it is Neil's friend, Willis Dean. We will wait until he goes, for I do not like to meet him.

Even as she spoke the figure arose, and the sound of his voice came on the twilight air, distinct and clear:

And what of this love affair, friend Neil? When is it to end, and how? Are you really in earnest, and do you mean to marry the girl?

"Marry her!" he repeated. She is just the subject for a grand flirtation, and I assure you I have done the thing well. But for anything further—bah! I am going back to town to-morrow, and this is our last meeting; so be off, old fellow, for I expect her every moment."

Just for one moment Blanche Smith's heart stood still in a awful fear, for she thought Cora was dying. That white, ghastly face there in the twilight, that motionless figure, those tightly-locked lips, it surely was not the fair, sweet maiden of a moment before. But the vision passed, and without a word, she arose, and glided noiselessly away, and Blanche followed her in silence.

Neil Rowan waited until the light had all died out of the west, and the dew lay like summer rain on the grass at his feet. His cigar was smoked down to ashes, and his lazy reverie was broken by the cry of the whip-poor-will.

She isn't coming to-night, he said, mortally; that is certain. The scheming auntie up yonder managed to prevent it this time. Oh, well, it saved a scene. I will drop her a loving farewell note, and so it ends—a summer's amusement. Ha, ha! and Neil Rowan strolled homeward, singing half-unconsciously, "I won't have her, I know—I won't have her, I know—I don't care a straw who has her, I know."

The farewell note came to Cora Smith the following night; but the fever bright eyes never rested on the creamy page, for, ere the issue light gave place to reason again, death sealed the white eyelids. To such a nature as this girl's, love is life; and the rude blow that woke her from the one bright dream of her youth, snapped the slender chord that bound her frail spirit to earth, and out of the depths of her awful grief, the kindly hand of death led her to the mountain-top, where is builded the city of the New Jerusalem.

Day by day, week by week, month by month, so sped the time until eight years were counted. Eight times the grass had grown over the little grave in the lonely graveyard, and again the October winds rustled the scarlet leaves over the narrow mound.

Wonderful changes had the eight years brought. Side by side with this grave were two others, and the headstones bore the names of good aunt and uncle Smith. They had rested there six years; and every summer beautiful Blanche Smith came down from her city mansion, and lingered in the old home a week, trimming the grasses and planting bright flowers on the mound. Bright, beautiful Blanche Smith, the heiress of all uncle Smith's hidden wealth, the wealth he guarded so well during that toil-worn, weary life!

Three years before, Blanche Smith left school, to reign queen of society. Beautiful, strangely beautiful, with that cold, white, high-bred face, those wide, lath-like, glittering amber eyes, a figure matchless in symmetry and grace, accomplished, polished, and the heiress of great wealth, no wonder that lovers, old and young, knelt at Blanche Smith's shrine. Strangers would tell the world said, that all were scorned—not gently and with words of pity and apology, but spurned from her very feet with scornful lips and blazing eyes.

Ay, Blanche Smith was an enigma and mystery to all who knew her. No warmer friend, no brighter companion did those of her own sex seek for. But never were those lips seen to smile, or those wonderful eyes to soften, in response to any lover's "no glacier was more frigid than she to all men." All did say? Nay, Dame Rumor had plenty of gossip just now. Only a few weeks since a new rival appeared on the scene of action. Neil Rowan, merchant and millionaire, entered the list of Blanche Smith's adorers—not for her wealth, surely, Madame Grundy acknowledged, graciously. He had enough of his own. It was genuine love that this "blase" man of society felt for beautiful Blanche. And a wonderful change had come over the fair lady since his appearance. Bright before, she was brilliant now—sparkling, witty, bewildering; and the world looked on in amazement to see the flash stain her white cheek, and the bright smile that lighted her eyes at his approach.

And did he not recognize her, you are wondering? Nay, how should he? Sweet Cora Smith and the name in the country, were forgotten things with this man. He had broken half a dozen silly hearts since then, and left them all with time, the great healer. He had flirted with society's queens, and village maidens innumerable, and had left the past all behind him. And now he came and laid the first pure, real love of his lifetime at this woman's feet. So he told her, one autumn night in the grand parlor of her stately home.

How her hands trembled and her eyes shone as she listened!

"Wait," she said; "I will give you my answer to-morrow night; it is my birth night, and I shall give an entertainment. You will come? I will answer you then. Be in the library at ten; and you shall hear my answer."

And the night came, and he was there waiting. He paced the room impatiently. What she ever came, this girl that was dearer than life? Ay, she was life to him. The world had seemed old, stale, flavorless, until he met her; the woman who, alone of all her sex, had ever stirred the slumbering passions of his heart. How bright the future seemed! He was so sure of her answer; had she not given it all but in words?

"My beautiful, my queen!" he said, softly. And just then he heard the light ripple of a woman's laugh in the adjoining room. Her laugh; he knew it among a thousand; and her voice; she was speaking loud and clear.

There, Guardie; you must let me go now. Mr. Rowan is waiting for me in the library. You know I am to give him his answer to-night."

And the guardian's voice, speaking tenderly, said:

"And that answer, I can guess it, little Blanche. You are going to marry this man, and leave us all."

"She laughed softly.

"Marry him? No, indeed, sir! He is just the subject for a grand flirtation, and I assure you I have acted my part well; but for anything further—bah! But he is expecting me, so by all I come again," and she tripped lightly through the half open door, ere the amazed guardian could utter a syllable.

A white, ghastly, shivering figure stood by the library window.

"For God's sake, Blanche Smith, tell me you were jesting!" he cried, as brilliantly, glowingly beautiful, she glided into the room. Not so, my friend, she answered, lightly; I spoke the truth. If you overheard my words, I need not repeat them. It is my answer.

But you gave me hope; you led me on; you have given me every reason to think you loved me, he cried passionately. It is the one love of my life! I have centered every hope and thought in you, Blanche Smith, and, for my sake, for God's sake, do not wreck my life!

She was very pale now, and her eyes were black and glistening.

"Neil Rowan," she said, slowly, "I have prayed for this hour for eight years; but never in my wildest dreams did I think my prayer would be so fully answered. When I saw the hue of death, the white agony on my only sister's cheek—when I saw her writhe in speechless agony at the words she heard eight years ago to night, I vowed to avenge her, God being my helper. Again, when I heard the thud of the earth upon her coffin, I vowed that vow. God has brought it about even sooner, more complete, than I had thought. If I have given you one hour of such agony as she suffered, I am content. If you could live and suffer it for countless ages, I should be better content. My work is ended. Good night!"

Two hours afterwards, the sharp ring of a pistol rang with startling distinctness through the crowded drawing-room. All sprang to their feet, save Blanche Smith. Perhaps her cheek paled a little—I cannot tell; but the light of her eye never changed, her smiling lips never relaxed, as she gazed upon the blood-stained corpse in the library. Neil Rowan had taken it in his own life, and Cora Smith was avenged.

THE MYSTERY OF JANE VERE.

A dazzle of golden hair, the gleam of eyes heavenly blue, sweeping links of pale lustrous silk, and a smile that was the very radiance of all beauty; this is what illumined, for an instant, the dark hall of the hotel at Westwood. I hurriedly touched Slowick's arm, and the vision passed.

It is Miss Vere, he said.

And is she stopping here?

Yes, she came by the train this morning—Miss Vere and her father.

I took a turn upon the terrace, and came back again.

Why does a woman like that come here, Slowick?

It is quite healthy, and out of the way of all excitement. The old gentleman has been ill, and Miss Vere, though the belle of her native place, is devoted to her father.

You know them, then?

Not much now-a-days. We used to go to the same dance school when we were children.

Slowick, I exclaimed, you don't say you are a dancing man!

Not eminently, he replied, with a smile and a frown.

He didn't look like it, certainly, with his gloomy black eyes, his neglected black hair, and his rusty dress. I had been told, at the commencement of my acquaintance with Slowick, that he had used to be a great beau, but that his association with him had been so unprofitable, unwholesome, and negligent of his toilet that I had quite forgotten the rumor.

Do you think, he exclaimed, with only a frown this time, as I came back to him in my restless promenade of the hotel terrace, that any sensible man dances?

Why—I began.

No man who views aright the responsibility of his existence wastes time and money in such frivolity! he interrupted, with quite uncalculated violence. Dance or not, as you like, George Lester, but I will never yield to such folly!

But you used to dance, Slowick, I said.

I used to be a fool, he answered. Yes, he muttered, bitterly, I have spent pounds and pounds for the cursed nonsense!

You've had your day, I suppose, like other young dogs, I said. Charley Thorn told me that you used to be a gay fellow in town, and spent heaps of money.

He seemed actually to write at these reminiscences.

Well, I have to pay for it now, he said, in a stifled tone. But I am willing, he added.

I looked at him thoughtfully. Always supposing Slowick to be in the receipt of a good income, I had looked upon his shabby habitments as mere carelessness, and his choice of a summer resort the result of a whim. Westwood was thoroughly unfashionable, and his hotel not in the least luxurious. But the place was clean, and the situation peculiarly salubrious. After studying law in town for nine months, it freshness was paradisaical to me.

But, after all, it was not a place that a man of Slowick's supposed income would be likely to unembarrassed, to choose; and I looked at him thoughtfully, with the new idea upon me that he might of late have been visited by some pecuniary misfortune. Why did he so constantly regret the expenditure of money?

And, now that I thought of it, why was he so close with his purse-strings?

And, half blushing in tone, yet with a desire to test him, I said, "Why, Slowick, you talk like a miser that fears poverty in his old age, and lives to hoard up money."

He grew absolutely white.

Who told you that? he asked, looking at me with a ferocity that I stared at.

What? Told me what?

That I hoarded up money.

No one, man alive! I didn't say any one did. Only you spend so little, and you have got so much, one may be allowed to be suspicious, eh?

He looked at me with such anger and hatred, that I recoiled.

For heaven's sake, what is the matter, Slowick? You look as if you were going mad.

He gazed at me less excitedly for an instant, then dropped his head.

Lester, do you not know, he asked, in the stifled tone I had before noticed, that that is a very serious accusation to make—a very dangerous report to circulate regarding a man?

That he hoards money?

Yes.

Why I beg to enquire, not being aware? He is liable to be assassinated, robbed, I shrugged my shoulders.

This doesn't seem a highly brigandish sort of place, Mr. Vere. It wouldn't matter to me if it were. "Little wealth, little care," as the Spaniards say. By the way, Slowick, will you introduce me to Miss Vere?

If I have an opportunity, he answered, briefly, and so ended with a sudden turn a conversation more serious than I knew.

At sunset that evening, Miss Vere sat on the terrace with her father. Slowick gave me an introduction, and went away. I wondered at his declining the seat she kindly offered him; yet he looked very shabby and uninviting in aspect, going away through the trees.

Poor fellow, I thought, something has happened to mar his fortunes. Miss Vere looks after him with a glance of perplexity. I presume she used to find him agreeable. Well, let him keep his secret. He has trouble enough, I dare say. It must be mortification that gives him such savage moods.

And so I dismissed the subject, and turned to Miss Vere's supper-table.

She liked Westwood, she said. It was different from anything she had ever known. (This I thought very likely.) The green sheltered her from the biting winds, the cottages under the hills, the river running like a band of silver ribbon through the landscape, the bending of the tall trees—the very primitiveness of the old "Three Elms" hotel pleased her.

We shall stay all the summer, if papa's health improves, she said.

Ah, all the summer? Was she ready, bright, beautiful thing, for that journey into a far-off land whither she went that summer?

Her father was very fond of her. She seemed the light of his life. She read to him, walked with him, drove with him. She arranged his diet, superintended his toilet, tyrannized over him with a fairy willfulness that was yet beautiful and tender.

Like all other men, I loved her. Like all womanly women, she was kind to me. She did not play the despotic with me. She neither scorned nor encouraged me. She thought that by-and-by I should understand that it was impossible. And by-and-by I knew, alas! that it was.

We were walking in the fields one evening, Mr. Vere, his daughter, and I. The sun was going down, and cast red shadows on the river, the little boats rocking on its bosom, the children playing on its banks and among the trees.

We will walk to the bridge, and return said papa. We won't go further. I do not want Jane to be out in the night air.

So we paced slowly along the green sward—the birds soared over our heads, twittering westward, the rills slipped with a gurgle through the blue bluffs of the rushes, the sun tipped the hilllocks with a brief radiance, and the shrill cries of the children added to the pastoral character of the scene.

Upon the bridge we stopped a few moments to observe a mother duck with a brood of young dipping in the water below.

Now, papa, said Jane, isn't this a thousand times nicer than Brighton?

Her father smiled and nodded a satisfied with anything that pleased her.

It is so pleasant, papa, she continued, that I think Helen had better come here for her vacation.

Very well, my dear.

Helen, said beautiful Jane, turning to me, is my little adopted sister. She is sixteen now, but a little thing—a mere child—and is still at school. She will like Westwood, I know.

I hope she will come, then, I said; but I wondered, a little uneasily, how her appearance would affect my relations with Jane.

Would she devote herself to the usual, leaving Jane more open to my attentions? or would she appropriate her, to my exclusion?

Provincial School Systems.

Under this heading the Toronto Globe refers to the soon to be operated school system in this Province. We quote, as matter of interest, all that our contemporary says on the subject.—News:—

"An educational system in New Brunswick has been for a considerable time in operation, but it has been incomplete and faulty, and it was in order to provide a remedy that the Bill lately passed, but not yet confirmed by the Governor General, was introduced. Among other provisions of this measure is one which forbids grants to sectarian schools. The Separate School system has never been recognized and rendered permanent by any legislative enactments making it an integral part of the educational organization of the country, and giving it a fixed amount of pecuniary support; but has depended upon a yearly vote of the House of Assembly for a certain sum of money to carry on its operations. If any body has the power to say for all time that money shall not be given for such a purpose, not only for such a purpose, not only for the current year but for all time to come. On this principle the Local House of New Brunswick has acted and has abolished altogether by statute this grant to separate schools, so as to have only one Common School system for the whole Province. This is raising a good deal of hard feeling in the country, and efforts are being made to have the measure disallowed by the Dominion Government on the plea that it trenches upon the provision in the Act of Confederation which reserves to the ministers of all the provinces whatever rights and privileges they enjoyed in educational and religious matters previous to 1867.

It would be a pity if the Dominion Government should interfere in such a matter at all, and especially by disallowing a measure which has the general support of the country. It is at best a very doubtful question whether or not the proceeding of the New Brunswickers is in violation of the statute of federation either in its letter or spirit, and it is better where there is such a doubt to allow the separate provinces to have full scope on matters which come so entirely within the local jurisdiction of the several provinces as this of education. The yearly grant that could always be returned, and when that was the case it does not appear that vested rights are in any degree trenching upon when it is entirely and for all future time cut off. Supposing such a veto take place, the next step of the New Brunswick Legislature would probably be to drop the sum from the estimates, and no one could say that that was not perfectly lawful. The result would only be an increased amount of bad feeling, injury to education, the unbending of men's minds and the embittering of that sectional feeling which it is so desirable to remove."

San Francisco hopes for a great trade in ivory, a late vessel from Ala-ha having brought a cargo of fossil ivory from that icy domain. So far as explored, the banks of the streams of Alaska abound in fossil ivory. The marshes adjacent are full of bones and tusks of ancient elephants, many sticking out of the mud like stumps. A member of the Alaska Fur Company affirms it is known there is ivory enough on the Yukon River to supply the commerce of the world for 100 years. Whether this ivory region extends across the N. American continent or is confined to the country between the Pacific and the mountain range is not yet determined.

Louis Joseph Papineau, leader of the Canadian insurrection of 1837, died at Monticello, on the 24th Sep. at the age of 83. Papineau was born in Montreal, and educated at the seminary in Quebec. He entered political life in 1800, and took a leading part in opposition from that date to the crisis of 1837, and was for twenty years Speaker of the Assembly. After the rebellion he spent eight years in Paris. On his return by permission to Canada, he again entered Parliament and again led the opposition, being a strong advocate for the repeal of the union of the Provinces; but being defeated he retired from political life in 1854, since which time he has lived in comparative obscurity. Of late he has been well known as an annexationist, although seldom appearing in public.

It is an interesting fact, and one suggestive of change in the course of commerce between Europe and the East, that an invoice of 500 bales of silk, lately shipped on through bill of lading from Yokohama, Japan, to Liverpool via the Pacific Mail line to San Francisco, and thence by rail and steamer reached its destination in forty seven days—six days less than the stipulations of the contract called for, and thirteen days less than is required to ship freights between the same ports via the Suez route. If this can be done with freight passengers can arrive in the same time.

A Silver Hunting Watch presented by the President of the Association, Lieut. Col. Inches, B. M., to the corps sending the greatest number of competitors to the matches, to be afterwards fired for by the competitors of the winning corps. Owing to some misunderstanding with reference to the number of points made, it has not yet been decided who takes the Watch.

No. 4, BATTERY OF GARRISON ARTILLERY completed the annual drill and were inspected on the 26th ult. in Company and Field Gun Drill, by Lt. Col. Mansell, D. A. Gen'l Militia, assisted by Lt. Col. J. A. Inches, Brigade Major, who were highly pleased with their proficiency. The following is a list of the successful competitors for Government prizes, 45 non-commissioned officers and men competing:—

Ties were fired off, Gunner Andrews making the best shot takes the Govt. prize.

Gunners G. F. Stickney, A. Chase and P. Bihan also made hits; the shooting on the whole was very good.

While at Artillery practice the Battery were instructed in the preparation of shell, illustrated by a few shots from the 12 pr. Howitzer.

BETTER TERMS.—The Surveyor General left here on Monday last for Ottawa, to join the other members of the New Brunswick delegation, in urging "Better Terms" from the General Government. Mr. Beck, Auditor General joined with Hon. Mr. Stevenson, at Eastport, and Wm. Wedderburn, Esq., M. P. E., is to leave to-morrow, Thursday.

NEW STORE.—We beg to direct attention to Mr. Morris' advertisement, who has opened a Flour and Provision Store at Indian Point.

IMPROVEMENTS.—T. T. Odell, Esq., is making a decided improvement on the front of his residence, by the introduction of large bay windows, and the erection of a piazza with a glass front.

Our thanks are due to the officers of the International Steamers for courtesies extended to us on the passage to and from Boston last week. Mr. Coyle, the gentlemanly Steward of the Str. "New York," is deservedly a favorite with passengers, and is ably assisted by Mr. Thompson, his junior. The "New York" had a full complement of passengers on her last trip to St. John; among them Dr. Chipman, junr., a gentleman of acknowledged skill, and literary attainments, who we learn is about taking up his residence at Bridgetown, N. S. The good people of that locality will be highly favored by having a Physician of the Doctor's ability and experience resident among them.

THE QUEEN'S health is the subject of much anxiety to the British nation and its Colonies, in the hearts of whose people she reigns. Her Majesty's general health it is said is not good, and there is but little hope of her ever again taking a prominent part in public affairs. May her life long be spared the heartfelt wish of her subjects. As a Queen, a wife, and a mother, she is a model. No Sovereign ever won the hearts of a people as our beloved Queen has.

We learn from the "Globe" that Alex. McNaughton, Esq., the Accountant of E. & N. Railway, at St. John, has resigned his office, and has accepted a more lucrative position on the P. E. I. R. R., the management of which he assumes for Mr. Burpee. Mr. McNaughton was an able, obliging and efficient officer, and deservedly popular.

AGRICULTURAL FAIRS.—The next and following week, the Agricultural Societies in this County will hold their Annual Fairs. The St. Patrick Central on the 10th, the St. Croix on the 17th, and the Charlotte County on the 18th.

Who the Trustees of Schools are to be we have not heard. "Enquirer" had better apply to the Government for the information. Neither can we inform him who is to be County Inspector. We know that there is plenty for Trustees to do before the 1st January.

The Lieut. Governor and Hon. Prov. Secretary have been making favorable impressions on the Outarians. We heard it hinted not long since, that Governor Wilnot will be appointed to Ontario. The future Governor of this Province will be—Well, let others have the credit of publishing his name.

THAT TIDAL WAVE which is to sweep the Atlantic coast to the height of 60 feet, on the 5th or 6th of this month, is a sham. Professor Agassiz it is said, never made such a ridiculous prediction, and yet many people like adventurists are expecting it now daily.

LIBERAL.—By reference to advertisement in another column, it will be noticed that the Bank of British North America has raised its rate of interest on deposits of Provincial currency, to FIVE per cent. This a liberal move on the part of the Bank, and will increase its popularity.

The celebration at the opening of the E. & N. A. Railway in Maine, is, we learn, to be held at Bangor on the 18th instant, and next day at St. Croix, from whence the excursionists will proceed to St. John. Bangor has increased its appropriation for celebrating the opening, from fifteen hundred to three thousand dollars. It is expected that the citizens will increase the amount several hundreds. The opening of Western Extension at Saint John a couple of years ago, was conducted on a princely scale, and cost more than four times that amount.

GOODS.—Our merchants have received their Stocks of Goods suitable for the season, as may be seen by reference to the advertising columns.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICE.—Accounts from this Office have been made out for advertising, subscriptions, &c. Many of them are due upwards of twelve months, and it is hoped they will be paid when presented.

SUMMARY.

—We learn from the "Courier" that the Rev. P. M. Morrison is at present on a visit to his friends at St. Stephen.

—The Rev. J. S. Thomson, Rector of St. David's, is to leave shortly to spend the winter in California.

—Lt. Col. Inches has been chosen President of the Charlotte County Rifle Association for the ensuing year.

—Hon. S. L. Tilley and family, the Hon. Dr. Tupper and family, and Rev. C. P. Bliss, Secretary to the Minister of Customs, left here on Friday last for Ottawa.

Dr. Tupper has purchased "Highland Hill" estate from Mr. Henry Rudge for $1,500. The estate was formerly owned by Capt. Moody.

—Campo Bello oarsmen have purchased the St. Andrews Race Boat, price $50.

—Mr. Staples, the great penman, died suddenly on the 25th Sept. at Halifax.

THE NEW HOTEL.—From written notices we learn that Tenders were sought for the excavation of the cellar of the new hotel.

—Halifax and other harbors on this coast were alive with mackerel last week, but "narry one" came near our Bay.

—The prices of Produce at St. John are much lower than here at present. Butter is abundant and sells at 20 to 22cts per lb; cheese 10 to 12; codfish $3.50 to $3.75; potatoes from 30 to 40 cents.

—The harvests in the United States promise to be abundant.

A GOOD TIME.—The waiters of the "Victoria" Hotel, St. John, had a dance at the Hall, Carleton, on Monday night last; several guests were present.

A Honolulu letter states that the hurricane of August 9th was the most severe ever experienced in the Sandwich Islands. Over three hundred houses were destroyed. A young woman in New Orleans, had some and bewitching, lately applied to a lawyer to procure a divorce from her husband, on the ground that she could do better!

The amount of duty collected at the port of St. John during the month of September, was a trifle less than $162,000—and is probably the largest ever taken there in the same period of time.

—The woman who dared, b-long in Minneapolis. She travelled in male clothing from her home to Chicago in search of a transient husband, and actually caught him before he had secured a divorce.

It is reported that the codfishing on the Labrador coast has been extraordinarily good. In one place, Bonne Espérance, one thousand quintals of codfish have been taken by three boats, and several Nova Scotia schooners took away on an average 800 quintals each.

A London c-bman has lately recovered damages from a woman who delayed his business by being too fat to get into his cab.

The medical attendant of a Burlington (Vt.) merchant prescribed two kinds of medicine for rheumatism, one for external and the other for internal use. The patient swallowed the liniment and applied potion externally. Two doctors had a lively time in setting things to rights and getting him on his feet again.

It appears that Slavin has made good his escape from his captors at Vancoboro, where he was arrested. Some blame is attached to the New Brunswick officials for dilatoriness after being informed of the arrest.

INGENUITY OF CRIME.—Among the most interesting of the "relics of crime" gathered in New York city is a wire window ladder, the like of which has never before been seen. It is about ten feet long when stretched out, made of steel wire about a quarter of an inch thick, with cross steps of polished wood about six inches long. The burglar gets into the room over the one he wishes to enter, fastens the hooks to the window sills, drops the ladder outside, and runs down to the window below. Having gone through the apartment, he runs up the ladder, pulls it in, and folds it up into such a compass that he can pack it in a small hand bag.

—The "Nathan murderer" is being allowed to roam in peace, wherever he is. The detectives have about given it up.

DUBUQUE boasts of a curious animal which is a combination of the fi-h, snake, eel, crocodile and lizard. It is about a foot long and has two crimson ears.

the most reliable Preparation ever introduced for the RELIEF AND CURE of all

This well known remedy is offered to the public, recommended by the experience of over forty years, and unquescure of Coughs, Colds, Croup, Bronchitis, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Hoarseness, Palms or Soreness in the Chest and Throat,

Bleeding at the Lungs,
Liver Complaints, &c.
The Preparedness of this medicine in all cases of PULMONARY COMPLAINTS has induced many physicians of high standing to employ it in their practice, and it is now one of the best remedies for all lung diseases. We have space only for the Right testimony

CANNOT BE DISCREPITATED.
From the mass of evidence in our possession we select the following:
From J. J. RACINE, Esq., of La Motte, Montreal. "Having experienced the most gratifying results from the use of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, I am inclined to express my great confidence in its efficacy. For the months I was most severely afflicted with a severe and obstinate cough, accompanied with acute pain in the chest, which did not leave me, summer or winter. The remedy, however, administered with some pain to the throat, I at last took a few doses without feeling any discomfort. From this time I was able to resume my usual mode of life, and I found some relief. I am now entirely recovered, and I attribute this to the efficacy of Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry. I have used the Balsam in my family, and administered it to my children with the same results. I have also used Wistar's Balsam in my practice, and can say that it is a most valuable remedy in all cases of lung disease. It is a preparation which has been tried up to the knowledge of the remedy for several years."
