Secretary McMordie Mum as to Situation, But Impression Prevails That There Will Be No Further Trouble in Eastern Canada—Winnip eg Still Out and Sympathetic Strike May Develop-Do herty Definitely Refuses to Appoint Conciliation Boar d.

[Special to The Advertiser.]
Toronto, July 27.—Alex. McMordie, general secretary of the Federation of Canadian Letter-Carriers, asked this morning if the decision of the Government to dismiss from service all western postmen who falled to return to work today, might result in eastern postmen again going on strike as a protest against such action by the Government, refused to make any statement. Opinion, however, prevails in well-informed circles that eastern postmen will not make that a pretext for another strike.

Mr. McMordie announces that a men's committee is being formed, comprising representatives from all leading centres, both in Eastern and Western Canada, to wait upon the sub-committee of the cabinet at Ottawa on Tuesday, August 6th, with regard to the question of maximum wages and all matters of difference.

A meeting of Toronto postmen will be held tonight to hear a report of the recent delegation to Ottawa.

Correspondent With American Army Warns Against Too Much Optimism.

London, July 27 .- Discussing the latest operations and the German position resumption of work, providing the within the Marne salient, Reuter's cor- mayors and chiefs of the western cities France under date of Friday, says it is well to remember that the Germans still hold the north bank of the Marne for some eight miles from Vincelles to Reul. This has not yet been disputed with them.

Reuit. This has not yet been disputed with them.

This alone, he adds, is proof that the enemy is not in a very desperate hurry to withdraw from the sallent, if it is not also a hint that he has a large accumulation of stores near the river which it is difficult to remove. "The French guns in this sector," the correspondent continues, "continually are exploding great dumps of ammunition, which reveals how thick they are.

Masses Yet Opposing.

"The early success of the French counter-attack has bred a disposition to expect further rapid advances, but the fighting in the salient offers to the aggressor only the advantage obtainable from the enemy's congested condition, and even that cuts both ways, as it leaves masses of men to oppose us.

"Our progress the past week gave the enemy ample time to begin reorganization outside the salient. We are not likely to go much further without discovering a disposition to withstand us. We may regard with some suspicion the enemy's intentions along the river front. His position may not be an enviable one, but there are points in it not unfavorable to an attack."

TO STRENGTHEN WESTERD

FRENCH DRIVE AHEAD AGAIN TAKING HUN POSITIONS ON TWO MILE FRONT; GERMANS BEING DRIVEN FROM MARNE

THE WAR SITUATION

[By Associated Press.]
Shifting their blows to the southern arc of the sector between Solssons and Rheims, the French have struck the German line at PortaBinson, on the south side of the Marne, and about a mile south of the village of Chatillon. It is officially reported from Paris that the French lines were advanced at that point.

Further east, on the Champagne

Further east, on the Champagne sector, the troops of General Gouraud have by a local operation south of Montagne Sans Nom (mountain without a name), pressed forward over half a mile along a front of almost two miles.

The advance east of Rheims was seemingly for the purpose of restoring the Allied line in that section of the line. The attack at Porta-Binson, however, had another object, German troops were reported early in the week at Marfaux and Pourcy, northeast of Chatillon, and south of the western spurs of Rheims mountain. A considerable success near Chatillon would put them into a pocket within the larger pocket, and tend to force their withdrawal to new lines further back toward the middle of the German sallent.

that the Germans are fighting on the southern side of the salient to cover the retreat of their armies and the salvaging of the vast supplies piled up along the Marne in preparation for the great offensive which began on July 15, there appears to be a disposition on the part of some military experts to consider the possibility of a new German attack somewhere on the battle line between Solssons and Rheims. The stubborn manner in which the enemy has been fighting and his failure to attack on some other sector points, it is contended to the fact that the Germans are committed to a renewed offensive along the Marne in the hope of still winning a victory there.

30,000 Foe Prisoners.

Along the British front near Arras and Lens, and along the Somme sector the German artillery has been active. British raiding parties have been active at various points along their lines.

British airmen in the past week have accounted for 91 enemy machines while losing 51. Long distance raiding was the greatest during the war. Twenty-five incursions into Germany were made and 154 tons of bombs dropped. Zeebrugge and Ostend also were bombed.

The latest estimate of the num-brugge and Ostend also were bombed.

The latest estimate of the number of German prisoners taken by the Allies aince July 18 is 30,000.

Further complications have arisen in the Siberian situation. A provisional government at Omsk, in Central Siberia, claims supreme authority and has declared the independence of Siberia. Another report received in London says that the Siberian Government at Valdivostok, presumably that headed by General Horvath, has resigned.

west of Part-a-Binson the Germans hold the north bank of the Marne for a considerable distance, and the French have apparently struck at the angle between the German line along the river, and that from the Marne toward Rhelms.

Along the western side of the German sallent there is no official mention of events of especial importance during the past night. It is reported that French and Americans were attacking the enemy this morning, centring their efforts on the work of clearing the Germans out of the wooded areas to the south and southwest of Fere-en-Tardehols. This was said to be nearly accomplished.

It is being carried out through the remainder of the dense woods in this region and over the rain-soaked fields and hills on their outskirts. Persistent as was the German rearguard defence, however, the enemy's most intense efforts to hold his lines are still being put forth on his flanks in the Rheims and Soissons regions.

special committee declines to make any statement.

Then came the threats of strike. President George Bolton of the Firemen's Union, one of the men who claims to have been passed up by the chief in promoting Tozer and his son, declared that he had staved off the strike on the request of the special committee. The strike, he said, was to have been called for 4 o'clock Thursday afternoon if Tozer was still a captain. Tozer returned that day from his holidays and was greeted with the written motice of dismissal which caused his filing of contra charges.

Strike Talk Ends.

So far as can be learned the strike the leaders at the central fire hall declared on Friday that the captain would never return to duty at the station. Why they declined to state, nor did they give their authority. However, it has been declared by those who are in closs douch with the situation that there were only a few members of the union who were demanding the dismissal of Capt. Tozer and that the talk of a strike was considerably worse than the actual result would have been. This, of course, is merely a statement which is given for what it is worth. Fire Chief Aitken, in his letter of dismissal to Capt. Tozer, specifically stated that he was acting on instructions of the special committee. Members of the committee have declined to confirm this, nor will they deny it. There are those who say that the chief, who has always supported Capt. Tozer, followed the dictates of the committee to bring the whole situation to a focus. If this were the object then it has apparently succeeded, for the Tozer charges will add fuel to the flames of charges will add fuel to the flames of demand for a complete judicial inquiry.

Two handcuffs are lying in the local police station awaiting the man who was last connected with them. They were found on the corner of Wharn-cliffe road and Stanley street Friday night by one of the patrolmen. As they are locked, it is uncertain how they became separated from the recent holder. Many theories have been advanced, btu as yet no tangible conclusion has been formed.

No signs of any violent struggle were visible at the spot where they were found, and thus the theory that the wearer was rescued by friends is not to be entertained. No report of the escape of any prisoner has been received.

Possibly the constable from whom he escaped does not wish the fact to be made public and has censored all news made public and has censored all news were the position temporarily vacated by Mr. Gray.

Possibly the constable from whom he escaped does not wish the fact to be made public and has censored all news relating to the case. At any rate, the two wristlets are in the station, mute evidence that a near tragedy was enacted in the city. No search has yet been commenced, and it is unlikely that one will be made. The capture of Ville Montoire and

The fail of Oulchy-le-Chateau takes from the Germans the pivot upon which their retirement further south has been swinging. Its loss to the enemy, who defended it sternly, is a serious blow.

The French official statement says that the allies have advanced eastward of this town, which should bring them to the vicinity of Hill 150, which is the dominating height in that region, and which would give the Allies an observation point over long reaches of the Ourcq, as well as both banks of that stream. COUNTER-OFFENSIVE

STANDARD DAIRY FEED FORMULA IS ALTERED

TORONTO, July 26.—Difficulties encountered in securing some of the concentrates required for the proposed standard dairy feed, which is being manufactured to alleviate the stock feed shortage next winter, have made it necessary to make slight changes in the formulas. The feed branch of the agricultural section of the Ontario Organization of Resources Committee met today to approve of the changes. The original formula of the standard swine feed stipulated that it should contain 20 per cent of either wheat or rye shorts. In view of the extreme difficulty of securing these proportions of shorts, however, the committee decided to permit 50 per cent of these amounts to be composed of finely ground wheat bran. The analysis of the feed will stand as before, Mr. Bailey said, namely, if 6 per cent crude protein, 4.4 per cent fat and not more than 6 per cent fibre.

General Petain, however, had prepared another plan which was presented to General Foch on July 12 and which was approved the following day.

The idea was to abandon advanced posts and hold the principal line of resistance with only the essential forces, and in the meantime, preparing a counter-offensive on the German flank when the enemy troops were fully engaged in the battle. Eastward of Rhelms the execution of Gen. Petain's plan was favored by strong old positions, but to the westward of that city the problem was complicated because the organization of the German ground held by the French had not been completed.

FOURTH YEAR OF CAMPAIGN, SO GLOOMY AT THE OUTSET, ENDS GLORIOUSLY FOR THE ALLIES

Kaiser Has Failed to Accomp lish What He Set Out To Do , When He Had Everything in His Favor at the Outset; His Time Is Nearly Spent; Tide Has Turned in Allies' Favor.

The fourth year of the world war for the western nations, the gloomiest of strikingly recalling the situation after the first battle of the Marne. If we have not brought the new Napoleonic edifice to the ruin of a Waterloo. there are signs that the recent defeat may prove in some degree suggestive of

The story of the fourth year of the struggle is measured by two major events; the collapse of Russia and the coming of the United States. When the year opened we were, all of us, still hoping against hope that the Russian operations in Galicia might prove the first sign of a renaissance of Russian military strength, and that the Russian republic might repeat the achievement of the first French republic and, in defending the liberty of the Slav world, contribute mightly to the salvation of contribute mightly to the salvation of Disaster Was Near.

two years Italian soldiers had been struggling to break through the gigantic Thermopylæ between the Julian Alps and the Adriatic, by which ran the road to Trieste and the Austrian capital far beyond, the road Napoleon had taken more than a century before in his brilliant campaign of 1787. By October the gate seemed, forced; Austrian recoil was general north and south, and Allied capitals, looking southward, saw in Italian success at least consolation for their own failures.

But in November Italy suffered her first great reverse of the war. Her population and her army, like those of the French nation, had been corrupted by enemy propaganda and by defeatist and pacifist efforts. The taint of Bolshevism was already beginning to do its work in Italy as it had in Russia. Suddenly, along the Upper Isonzo front, out of the mountains about Caporetto, a German army appeared and struck an Italian army holding the flank of Cadorna's main forces to the southward, and holding it carelessly and with little thought of danger.

In a few short hours this Italian army was destroyed in exactly the fashion Radko Dimitrieff's army had been destroyed at the Dunajec, and with consequences to other armies equally grievous. One day advancing and seemingly on the eve of decisive victory, Cardorna's armies on the Lower Isonzo and about Gorizia found themselves on the next with their rear and flank imperilled, condemned to a swift and costly rush backward, behind the Tagliamento and then behind the Piave. The invasion of Austria was over and the Hapsburgs once more occupied at least a wide sweep of their old province of Venetia, while it was the fate of Venice, not of Trieste, which was now in doubt.

Thanks to an Italian rally and to the rush of British and French troops to their stricken ally Venice was saved, and the retreat ended at the Piave and not at the Adige, but Italy had suffered Disaster for Italy.

stricken ally Venice was saved, and the retreat ended at the Piave and one of the great defeats of history and was henceforth condemned for long months to the defensive. She had, in fact, been on the edge of ruin; her escape had been by a slight margin, and at the moment the question of her future capacity to fight, brilliantly answered at the Piave the other day, was to give her allies grave concern.

Thus the calendar year and the campaign of 1917 ended amid the most gloomy of all possible circumstances. British successes in the early months had been dimmed by the failure, the bloody failure, in Flanders. The French army had not merely seen its hopes come to nothing at the Aisne, but had, for the first time, been shaken in its confidence and was only beginning to give signs of renewed constancy and efficiency. The Italian army had suffered one of the great disasters of the war. The minor efforts in the Balkans had been without even the smallest material benefit.

To swell the balance on the wrong side Russia was sinking to a hapless derelict and Rumania was obviously soon to quit the war. All hope of an offensive in 1918 had now to be surrendered. The Al'ied high command did not perceive that the defensive which was its role would be one beset with difficulties so great that disaster might impend, but it did recognize that there was no longer any chance of victory in 1918, nor at any other time until America should be able to replace Russia in the battle line.

German Outlook Bright.

As for the German, he could look fordays of the war.

Disaster Was Near.

The world, particularly the allied world, was slow in perceiving what were to be the consequences of the Russian collapse. When the full German storm broke in March of the present year it took the Allies by surprise and brought an unready coalition within measurable distance of one of the great disasters of human history. But when the March blow had fallen and the extent of the danger was perceived, then the war became a race between America and Germany, a race between our young troops, hurried across a submarine-infested many, a race between our young troops, nurried across a submarine-infested ocean, and the last flower of German veterans thrown upon the Allied lines in offensive after offensive, seeking a decision before America came.

As early as June of 1917, when Nivelle's Aisne offensive failed, it became clear that unless America came to the rescue the war would by lost to our Allies and Germany would win on the continent something recalling Naoleon's success against Austria in 1805, Prussia in 1806 and against Russia in 807. But what was not perceived at hat time was that it was going to be pairing previous errors, but henceforth, as he awaited the coming of the Americans to save a new Waterloo, Foch was hound to recall frequently the words of Wellington, the impatient longing for "night or Blucher."

The third German blow was in the larger sense even more terrifying than the first. Although two months had passed and the Allies had been allowed time to study the German method and prepare an answer, Ludendorff was able in late May to duplicate his March successes, and, sweeping across the Alsne and the Vesle, the victorious German troops reached the bank of the Marne once more, after nearly three years of absence. Nor was this all; the British positions in Picardy had lacked any dominating military strength, but the French positons at the Alsne were among the finest on the western front. And, as at the Somme, Ludendorff had in a week regained all the ground lost in the months of the British offensive of 1916, and the German retreat in the spring of 1917, he now in three days retook all the ground gained by Nivelle in his ill-starred offensive of 1917, and in addition drove south between Rheims and retook Soissons, French since September 12, 1914.

Defeat in Picardy.

Teh British defeat in Picardy was the

in addition drove south between Rheims and retook Soissons, French since September 12, 1914.

Defeat in Picardy.

Teh British defeat in Picardy was the greatest in British military history; the French reverse on the Aisne surpassed the disaster of the first days of the Verdun campaign. As a result of the two successes the German was once more within striking distance of Paris, and had thrust wedges forward toward the French capital down the Oise and the Marne valleys. June was only just come and America's forces were still too weak to exercise any decisive influence. There remained the relatively restricted tasks of eliminating the Complegne and Rheims salients, the one a menace to the continuity of his operative front between the Oise and the Marne, the other a threat to the rear of this front, and then he could undertake the final venture, a drive straight south upon Paris, which, even if it failed to take the city, might bring his heavy artillery within bombarding distance and enable him to destroy the city if it refused to surrender, and with this destruction he hoped French nerves and French spirit would at last break and the army, after the civil population, abandon a struggle which had cost France so much and still held out the threat of even worse suffering without any promise of ultimate victory.

It may be that this German success, which took the kaiser to the Marne, will prove the high-water mark of the present campaign; it may be that when the German troops returned to the Marne they were the advance of the Germans in the war. It is too early to prophesy, but in any event, when this June fighting was over Paris was plainly menaced, Allied fortunes were in a desperate state, German victory, so far as the European phase was concerned, seemed no longer impossible. At best the possibility of the loss of Paris and of a retirement to the south had to be considered.

Turning of the Tide.

phase was concerned, seemed no longer impossible. At best the possibility of the loss of Paris and of a retirement to the south had to be considered.

Turning of the Tide.

But before June was over the tide had changed. Seeking to sweep the French out of the Compiegne region, open up the lower valley of the Aisne, insure the continuity of the right wing of his operative front between Solssons and Montdidier by clearing the French out of strong ground and carrying their line into the open ground south of Senlis, Ludendorff launched a fourth blow between Montdidier and Noyon, between the Ayre and the Oise. This time there was no surprise, no collapse; the German machine ground its way forward for a short distance, cleared the Lassigny heights and some valuable ground along the Oise. But by the third day it was checked, and Mangin, the deliverer of Verdun, was striking a counter-blow on the German flank which paralyzed the offensive. Compiegne was not taken; at a staggering cost the German had gained a little ground, but his fourth venture had been a failure.

While Ludendorff prepared for the fifth stroke, his Austrian colleague, Borevic, struck on the Plave and sought by a supreme stroke, with the largest and finest Austrian army which had yet appeared in Italy under his command, to crush the troops who had been beaten so terribly at the Isonzo six months before. But the Austrian offensive failed dismally, a brief advance, a short, desperate period of days when Italian counter-attacks held up the advance, then floods and new Italian attacks, and the Austrians were driven in disorder across the Plave, losing a quarter of a million of men, innumerable guis and

LLOYD GEORGE AND LINCOLN.

HE DAYS of war are the days of oratory. In every land are heard the voices of those with a message, and to them men are turnng for reassurance, for guidance and for stimulus. It is a question if Lloyd George, with all his energy, his genius and his command of men could few extracts may be useful: have accomplished more than a fraction of what he has done if he had not joined to his other talents that great gift of the spoken word. This is sized by one of his recent biographers, who points seems to me a droll way to house the poor.' out that Mr. Lloyd George's oratorical skill has peen able to revive enthusiasm, to remind constantly of the origins and causes of the war, and the armies in the field and the people at home.

Those who have read the utterances of Britain's prime minister must have noticed how close to the common man he comes in his discourse. It is the same ability that stood him in such good stead in earlier years when he was fighting his way to the top and when Lloyd George on the towards the housing of the working classes, as if platform was an outstanding attraction at any political gathering. He has the ability to coin quickly the pungent phrase that seems to sum up measures. They are instrumental in creating a litional legal mind, goes straight to the point classes, utterly oblivious of that spirit of equality and sends in his blows like hail. "Belgium must inculcated by the motto of the French republic." be a people, not a protectorate," he declared on The "housing problem" is a new one in this bard must be Belgian, the sword must be Belgian, he soul must be Belgian." The whole issue of reason for caution. The clean slate the bishop Belgian independence could not be stated envied ought to be kept clean, and we ought not much more concisely nor more clearly than in to bring to this country, until absolutely necesand the Government. (7) The municipalities shall not charge against houses erected under proposed scheme more than 5 per cent either in respect of the money received by way of loan from the Government or money contrib-uted by the municipality.

Any scheme like the one proposed should be viewed liberally. The intention is good, and the result may be very little, if any, good. London is not one of the places mentioned where the housing problem is severely acute. The places named are Toronto, Sault Ste. Marie, Galt, Brantford, Welland, Sarnia, the border cities, Midland, back to Papa Wilhelm. He might get another Hawkesbury, Paris and Sudbury.

The reason why London does not suffer as other cities may be attributed to the fact that it is the second city in Canada as a loan company true. These companies have all contributed to make London a city of homes, and it is safe to say that few, of any, losses have been made on loans granted on workmen's homes. There is no safer class of loan, and at no time during more than fifty years has it been difficult to obtain any reasonable sum on a workman's home, not only in London, but any city in Western Ontario. London has been the centre of Western Ontario for loaning on mortgages, and many millions have been invested by its mortgage corporations. Splendid companies of the same kind have existed nearly as long in St. Thomas, Chatham, Sarnia, Stratford, Guelph and Brantford, and all have contributed to the common good.

Building since the war has become almost prohibitive. Material and labor have been so high that many who intended to build have abandoned the idea.

The housing problem is not a new one in older countries. Chapters thirteen and fourteen of a book entitled "Where and Why Public Ownership Has Failed," by Yves Guyot, former vicepresident of the municipal council of Paris, deputy of the French Government and minister of public works, etc., etc., deal with the housing problems in England and the European continent. These chapters should be read by everyone. A

THE WASHINGTON MIRROR.
By Louise Oliver.

For several days Mrs. Tilford had been distrait.

Mr. Tilford had noticed with uneasiness that she scarcely touched her meals, read listlessly as though her thoughts were a thousand miles away, started if spoken to, and acted generally as though life on this particular bit of terrain were not worth the effort.

"What's the matter, Elsie; don't you feel well?" he asked. "You look tired out?"

"'Oh, no, I'm all right," she answered in surprise. "Why?"
"You just don't seem to act right, that's all."
"I'm perfectly well," she repeated, and pretended to go on with her reading. and pretended to go on with her reading.

But after another day of "acting like a wet hen," as Mr. Tillord unsentimentally and unsympathetically put it to himself, he decided that something was wrong. Why else would she sit looking straight through him at something just beyond, sigh dejectedly every two minutes by the clock, and convey by every motion the idea that all her friends were dead and she was about to follow. "Aren't you happy, Eisie?" Mr. Tilford asked the next day. "Are you worried about something?"

"Worried? No. Why should I be worried? I'm perfectly happy, perfectly." And she sighed again.

Mr. Tilford scratched his head in perplexity as he resumed his paper. Women water cuere creatures.

"Elsie, we have an anniversary in a few days," he began tentatively. "Do you—is there anything you would like?"

"No, Henry, nothing, thank you."
He smiled.—He'd no idea that her training in economy had been so thorough. After all, war was a good thing in its way. It disciplined people. He could afford to be generous.

"Well, think it over, my dear. If you change your mind let me know and we'll see what we can do."

Then Mr. Tilford had an inspiration. He thought, delightedly. "Elsie's been cleaning house and doing over the hall and she wants that Washington mirror she's talked about all winter. I'll have to look it up."

For two days Mr. Tilford looked at colonial mirrors. He went to every store, art shop and antique bazaar in town, until he had seen enough mirrors to build the Crystal Palace. By that time he was so confused he didn't know what he wanted, so he determined to let price make the choice. If Elsie wanted a mirror she should have a good one, and so he decided on one at Gormley's for two hundred dollars, which they assured him was a genuine antique.

"Henry Tilford, you old dear! Did you really think of our anniversary? I was sure you'd forget after all; that's why I bought my own present. But, oh, Henry, how I've worried! You see, I sent the bill to you."

"It's all right, honey. Here's some roses, and if you'll just cheer up and not worry and stop sighing, I'll give you the four hundred dollars too. I guess I have been pretty tight with you lately."

"Then," said Mrs. Tilford promptly.

And Mr. Tilford was satisfied.

On the night of the fourteenth Mr. Tilford, carrying a box of roses, arrived home in high spirits. The mirror by this time had no doubt arrived and the cloud which had hovered over Mrs. Tilford for a week would be gone. How lucky he had thought of getting it.

What, then, was his surprise on entering to find Mrs. Tilford in the hall in a towering rage, and before her on the floor two Washington mirrors, identical from the eagle on top to the gold feston on the sides and bottom.

"They told me it was genuine antique, and then sent me two. Are they to be had like mouse traps, six for a nickel, that they're so common. I only bought one."

"One! You bought one?" said Mr. Tilford faintly.

THE COLOR LINE

Every woman has her own individual "color note." Some are in this respect so sensitive that different hues will exercise a powerful influence on their minds and feelings. The colors they wear may soothe, stimulate, depress or irritate them.

It is a new psychology, applied to clothing, but beyond question it is based on fact. The color chosen for a dress, say the women experts, should depend on the complexion, the color of her hair and eyes, the physique, and even the temperament of the wearer.

QUIT SINNING AND REPENTING.
Christ knows human nature, and the tendency which men have to yield to temptation and sin, and so he gives us the warning, and the instruction, not to break his commandments for, if we do so, it will be a sign that we do not love him. Men therefore, who live a life of sinning and repenting, may not give as an excuse for their vascillating actions, that the temptations were too as an excuse for their vascillating actions, that the temptations were too strong for them, nor that their weakness could not resist the evil influences, because that, itself, is a confession that they do not truly love Jesus Christ. Christ knew, and we all may know, that love in the heart is God in the heart, and that God can do what men cannot, and that if the love of Christ reigns and rules in our hearts we shall certainly keen his commandments.

stands out as the greatest feat of the 1918 season. The veteran was slow in starting, but once on his way, he became the irresistible force—the attacking power no pitcher could halt.

Along about June 1 when the great Tigor was about 25 notches removed from the top. and when all of our best little experts were hazarding the guess that "Cobb is through." it was ventured in this column:

"Cobb realizes he isn't as active as in his earlier youth and he is conserving his powers. He won't let out until warm weather comes to insure him against charley-horse. When the torrid spell does come watch Cobb climb."

The warm spell arrived early in June, and, influenced by its melting advent, the veteran began to cut loose. By clouting with demoniac fury the whirlwind southerner smashed his way upward and ever upward and—Ty Cobb, as king o'baseball's swatsmiths, has come back to his own.

Now Elizabeth had the childish notion that laws emanated from books, so she began to cut the unjust laws out of the law books in her father's library. Not until he explained carefully that her vengeance on books was fruitless and futile did she cease. But her rancor against the conditions which permitted such injustices to continue didn't abate. Why were laws made so unjust to women? Why didn't women have a voice in the making of laws? Why were women regarded as inferior?

Where Castle Makes the Country a Tramp's Paradise. It is difficult for those of us who know India only from the fascinating tories of fiction and the entertaining but nevertheless inadequate accounts if this land of many peoples, really to have even the barest of ideas of this remarkable country and its caste system. In India caste rules everything, even yery dealing of ordinary everyday life.

throw the thing away. If he himself should touch it he would also be polluted.

This gives an idea of how easte affects business. But this isn't all the story. Accidents sometimes do as much damage to business. For instance, if in passing a man of a certain caste, a man of a lower or even a white sahib should touch his robe, or should expectorate or unintentionally touch the robe with, let us say, a cigar he is throwing away, that man would be compelled to desert his business for days, if not for weeks. He would have to wear rags and sit in the street and pour ashes on his head and go often to the temple to purify himself.

These circumstances—the strangest of the world's superstitions—make it in one way difficult for tramps to pass through India. On the other hand, they have contrived to make India the tramp's paradise. For the rulers of India have found it best to establish a method of handling the tramp problem there.

The peninsula of India is divided into districts, each governed by a commissioner and his deputy. These officials are usually Englishmen, and the law provides that penniless Europeans shall upon application to them be provided free with a third-class railroad ticket to the next district, and with one rupee a day with which to buy food on the way.

Of course, the commissioners see to it that the tramps within the borders of India don't spend the rest of their days living on the country. They quickly be carefully trained in habits of thrift, and in coolness and discretion. The peninsula of India is divided into

And Elizabeth, to whom nothing seemed impossible, declared:

"Then I will be a boy!"

Her idea of the chief qualities of masculinity were a knowledge of Greek and of horsemanship, so she immediately placeded to perfect herself in both. The pastor who lived nearby taught her Greek, and for months she studied with him constantly. She learned to leap a ditch on horseback as well as any boy. When the good pastor called at the house she urged him to tell her father how fast she was progressing with her Greek, hoping against hope that some day her father would glance at her approvingly and say:

"Well well a girl is as good as a boy,

ovingly and say:
"Well, well, a girl is as good as a boy, after all!"

But the happy day never arrived. For all her working and yearning, for all the praise her father gave her unstintingly, he never yielded her more than Ah, Elizabeth, you should have

But Elizabeth Cady outgrew her childish desire for that particular meed of praise, though it stimulated her to action, and she kept up her eager study of law and horse taming. Her father would occasionally bring her a book of statutes and urge her to read it in order that she could engage in discussion over fine legal points with the various lights of the law who frequently visited his home. London, July 27.—The announcement last night of Premier Lloyd George that all workmen absent from factories on or after Monday will be deemed to have voluntarily placed themselves outside the munitions industry, and that they will become liable to military service, was issued too late to reach the bulk of the strikers last night. Consequently it was not generally known in the strike areas. It was, however, communicated to the strike leaders at some centres by newspapermen, to whom the leaders declared they were confident that the strikers would not be intimidated or driven to resume work by the Government's threat. The leaders added that such a possibility had been considered fully beforehand.

No reports reached London last night of an extension of the strike, and the great bulk of the workers still remain unaffected. Such apparent centres as London, Manchester, Leeds, Nottlingham and Huddersfield, for instance, remain cool.

APPEAL HAD EFFECT.
LONDON, July 26.—The appeal of the trades union advisory committee, urging the munitions strikers to return to work pending an inquiry, had a good effect, according to news received from Birmingham and Coventry this afternoon. At Coventry one of the largest works was enabled to resume operations, while is Birmingham the action of several unions, including the employees of the big power companies which supply the big munitions factories, in refusing to strike, had a good result, and it was reported this afternoon that there were less men on strike than yesterday.

Premier Lloyd George tonight announced in behalf of the Government that all men who are wilfully absent from work on or after Monday next will be deemed to have voluntarily placed themselves outside the munitions industries. Defiance to Government.

The action of the conference, at which delegates representing 300,000 workers were present, amounts to defiance of the Government's announcement that it will revoke the certificates of workers which exempt them from military duty.

A large number of men throughout the country are against the strike and earnestly hope for a settlement before the threat is executed on Tuesday, but a majority may act on the decision of the Leeds conference.

Telegrams to that effect have been received from Lincoln, Nottingham, Derby, Barrow and other centres. Meanwhile the labor leaders are exerting their influence to prevent a stoppage of work, which at the present juncture of the campaign in France, would be considered most serious.

in the guise of ripe fruit is explained as follows in the Scientific American by Arthur L. Dahl:

by Arthur L. Dahl:

"The pickling of olives requires from four to six weeks, depending upon the condition of the fruit when received. When the olives are first brought into the factory, they are graded and taken to the appropriate vats. They are first covered for two or three days with a light salt brine, before any lye is used.

eral days, a light solution of lye (about 2 per cent), is added, and the olives are kept in this solution for about nine hours. The lye water is then drawn off and the fruit is allowed to stand for 24 hours, after which clear water is added and the clives are stirred by means of compressed air introduced into the tanks. This is continued for six or seven days.

"Gosh!" cried Solomon.

"Ugh!" shuddered Louis the Fourteenth." What a horrid thought. Really, Euk, you make me feel like a very ordinary sort of a Bolshevik. But it can't be true, because there were not that many people in the world forty generations back."

"That may be," said Euclid, "but it only intensifies the probability that instead of being the descendant of a picked lot of forebears that you chose yourself, because you liked their looks you are in reality the final fruition of a sort of Universal Co-operation, which in turn accounts for the fact that when you cut your finger you discover that in spite of all your Royalty and Pride of Line your blood is not blue at all, but just plain red, like that of the chap who curry-combed your horse, or the yokel who blacked your boots."

"In never had the honor of their acquaintance," said Louis, haughtily.

"Be that as it may it is something for you to think about," said Euclid. "Take my good friend Charles the First—proud as Lucifier, because of his divine rights but somewhere back in the centuries past if he could only find him he would learn that he and Guy Fawkes had a common ancestor."

"Too bally common, I should say," growled Henry the Eighth.

"And as for Henry," smiled Euclid, "he too would come upon the interesting fact that in some remote, unrecorded, moment, the lineage of himself and that of Jonah were one and the same."

"Well, all I've got to say if all this is true, and it seems to be so, is that it's a low-down Dutch trick for us to blame Bill of Potsdam on Frederick the Great, and I'm goint, or tell him so," said Napoleon. "Hi Freddy!" he

The Value of Life Insurance

The family of a prudent parent does not need charity. Bacon truly said that the man who has a wife and children has given hostages unto fortune. It is equally true that the man who owns a life insurance policy holds a bond from fate. It is a security that is never absent. It is carried in a man's pocket. If thieves steal it they cannot cash it. Friends cannot borrow it it is free from care and is a sure inheritance. In short, a life policy is the anchor of the home.

AN IDEAL SUMMER OUTING.

The Provincial Government of Ontario earned the gratitude of all lovers of out-of-doors when it set apart, in 1893, nearly two million acres of heavily-timbered land starred with beautiful lakes and winding streams, as a preserve for the wild things and a recreation ground for the people. They called it Algonquin Park. Away up in the "Highlands of Ontario," 200 miles north of Toronto, 170 miles west of Ottawa, and two thousand feet above the level of the sea, this lovely region remains today unspoiled, a perfect refuge for the creatures of the forest, and an ideal camping ground for the sportsman and businessman. The Grand Trunk operate hotel and log cabin camps which offer first-class accommodation in this wild and rugged playground. Illustrated descriptive literature may be had for the asking. Write C. E.
