PATON'S SUITS & OVERCOATS

THERE IS INDIVIDUALITY IN PATON'S CLOTHES FOR MEN

We do not mistake freakishness for individuality. But we do succeed in getting into the Suits and Overcoats that bear the Paton label a certain distinction that is a characteristic of the apparel of the best dressed man-and that is not commonly to be had in clothing bought ready-to-wear.

All of this clothing is made expressly for us, and made in special ways which we prescribe.

Choice of high grade and attractive fabrics; of cold shrunk canvas for inter lining; of the best grade of buttons, tapes and other tailor's "fixings" are the first step.

The Great Doctor and the Little Priest.

(Translated from the French o Nedar for the Catholic S andard and Times by E. B.) Baron Dapuytren, a famous French doctor in the latter years of Napoleou's reign, was for a long time surgeon-in-chief at the Hotel Dieu, the principal hospi al in Paris, prebably in the world, where every morning in the year a free consults.

French or foreigner. Wonderfully keen at diagnosis, extremely firm of nerve, remarkably ingenious in the invention of operating instruments for the allevia ion of human suffering, Dupuytren had the reputation of being babitually brusque and even unfeeling towards most of his numberless patients. Nevertheless the following story is told of him by one that kew him well.

Few men have had a life more busily occupied than Dopaytrer. Winter and summer be rose at five. at seven he was in the bospital. which he never left before eleven. He then made his appointed visits through the city, and on his return home usually found his office packed with patients that had come from all directions to consult the famous doctor. In spite of his unseemly haste in getting rid of most of them, they were often so numerous that it was long after nightfall when the last one was packed off.

One evening, when the consults. tion had lasted long beyond the customary bour, the doctor, baifdead with fatigue was retiring for a little rest, when the door of his office suddenly opened and a belated visitor appeared. He was of a small, stout figure, evidently advanced in years, but regarding his exact age you would have some difficulty in coming to a decided opinion. On a face resem-When a child he would have remi del can long rest with delighted satis faction. While looking at the calm. little old man you would have felt yourself almost becoming better, irristibly attracted towards him, and genius was breaking to bits like forced, as it were, to love bim. He held in his right hand a black raven headed cane, and his small body wore a small suit of clothes, com-erful bands. In that weak littlepletely black. While bowing in salutation to the doctor he revealed body he had recognized a heart a wide tonsure round his head. I was easy to see that the attractive lit'le man was a priest. Dunuvtren's eyes res'ed on bim with a cold, weary, almost forbidding look. "What is the matter with you?" he asked in a barsh voice.

"Doctor," replied the priest gently, "I must really ask your permission to take a seat, my limbs are already rather stiff and pretty weak. Two years ago I felt a swelling in the neck under the left jaw. The health offi er of our village-I am the cure of La Madelaine, near Nemours-told me at first that it was of no account. But it got go an operation," worse, and at the end of five months the gathering broke of itself. I kep in bed a long time, but without the trouble of ever getting better. Then I had to get up, because, you see, am the only priest to efficiate in four villiges, and"

"Not, doctor," continued the old man while dutifully obeying orders -" not that these g od people were unwilling to come together every Sunday, the whole four congregations to hear Mass in La Madelaine, But I know poor people work hard all the week; they are often sick themselver, and they have only San days for a quiet real. So I said to First Communions. Monsignen the Bishop certainly promised t wend me an assistant in a short time but the parishioners insisted on m coming at once to Paris to conspli you. I was pretty slow in deciding, because travelling costs a good bit of money and I have a good many really poor people in my parish. But, having to do as they wished, I took the trair, and here is my trouble, doctor," he concluded, showing his neck. Dapuytren looked at it long and fixedly. The neck showed a hole mearly an inch wide and very deep. It was a gathering of the gland o the under jaw, complicated by an ugly tumor of the ar'ery. The wound was already mortified in many places. It was indeed so serious a case that Dapuytren was profoundly amazed at the sufferer's indomitable fortitude in maintaining for any time a standing position. The dretor lost no time. He seperated at once the lips of the wound and touched the neighto it g parts with a pressure painful e ough

The examination over, Dapaytren, still holding the head with both bands, turned it roughly around so as to bring the face opposite to his own, and, lockng straight into the two eyes, said in a voice slow and of a sinister

"Well, Monsieur l'Abbe, with such a thing as that, the only certainty is death !"

The priest took up the cloths hat he had laid on the chair and wrapped them quietly round his neck without saying a word, Dapuytren eyeing him sharply the whole time. When the cloths were replaced and the knots carefully tied, the little priest took out of his pocket a five-franc piece wrapped in paper and laid it on the chimney .

"I am not rich, doctor," he said, with a timid smile, "and my poor people are very poor indeed, Excase me, then, if I cannot pay much better for a consulation with the celebrated Dictor Dapuytren. Dupuvtren remained standing in the room, mo ionless, but fall of thought. His iron soul was melting, his brilliant brittle glass before the simple words of the poor, old, miserable and dying man, whose head he had just now stronger than his own, a will more energetic than his own. He had found a being s ronger than bimfelf. He started quickly for the stairway, perhaps be was unwilling to acknowledge bimself defeated. He soon reached the little priest, who was slowly moving down, carefully clutching the banisters.

A few months afterwards Dupuytren, on a visit to the Hotel Dieu saw himself unexpectedly approached by the little priest, who had been wait ing for him in the Sain: Agnes Ward.
