WHEN LOVE Came Too Late.

CHAPTER XXIX.

"God knows!" he said, reverently. "We are all in His hands. If you knew all—and you never will know, thank God!—you would understand; and you would say that if you had been in my place you would have done the same."

"You say that?" she asked, with an inscrutable expression in her eyes—"that I should do as you are doing; that I should take another person's crime upon my shoulders and suffer for him?"

"Yes," he said, and he met her gaze steadily. "I do say that; and you know that I would not speak untruthfully, even to persuade you to do what I want you to do."

"What is it?" she said, with a little pant.

"I want you to forget that such a person as Harold Faradeane ever existed; to erase from your life all memory of him, and—his misfortunes. Don't let me have to reproach myself with the thought that I have cast a shadow over the life of the only woman I ever—"

He stopped.

Her lips quivered, and her gaze fell for a moment, then she raised her eyes again.

"You ask me to do this?" she said. "I do with all my heart and soul," he responded.

"Then I tell you that if I were capable of such baseness, I should be as vile—as vile as the man who committed the murder—the man you are screening! No! You ask too much. The fate of the world may take your silence for guilt, but I will not accept it! I will not rest until I have discovered the truth you are concealing."

He uttered a cry of alarm, of dread.

"Olivia!"

"Yes!" she repeated, her eyes flashing, her lips trembling. "I am only a woman, but I will do what you would have done in my place—save my friend even in spite of himself!"

He grasped her arm, his face white and set, his eyes full of a terrible fear.

"If any words of mine, if any entreaty can stop you in this course—Believe me—believe me—it would be useless. The evidence is conclusive. No jury in England could fail to find me guilty. No one can stretch out a mered Bartley Bradstone; and he took the note to the other end of the room. It was only one line: I wish to see you.—F.

Bartley Bradstone stared at it, and bit at his lips nervously.

"Just say all right, will you?" he said to the policeman. "You—you can get something to drink in the servants' hall. Er—er—by the way, is Mr. McAndrew back yet?"

"No, sir," replied the man. "Not yet, sir. Rather strange his keeping away so long; but I suppose he's getting evidence in London. There's never any knowing what these big detectives are after."

When the policeman had gone, Bartley Bradstone dropped into a chair and bit his nails, glancing now and again at the peremptory summons.

"He—he orders me about like a dog," he muttered, with an oath. "Just like a dog! But I've got to go. Yes, though I'd rather give a thousand pounds than face him, I've got to go. He's got me, curse him! Got me tight! If there was any way out of it, any chance—"

He got up with a groan, and went to the sideboard for the familiar brandy, then put on his hat, and with a callous countenance as he could command, walked down to the prison.

Faradeane was pacing to and fro with a steady, thoughtful stride; and, as he faced his visitor, Bartley Bradstone started at the change which the close confinement—and the ordeal of Olivia's visit, though Bartley did not know that—had worked in the handsome face and stalwart figure.

"You—you sent for me," he said, unsteadily, and carefully avoiding Faradeane's stern, searching eyes.

"Yes; you were wise to come."

"Of course I should come," mumbled Bradstone. "If there is anything I can do—God knows I'm wretched and miserable enough," he broke off with a whine. "I feel as if I could shoot myself."

"I dare say," said Faradeane, not contemptuously, but with simple assent more biting than the most polished scorn. "But you cannot do that; it would reveal the truth, and cover her with the shame from which I—and you—have resolved to shield her at all cost. At all cost, do you hear me?"

"I hear," said Bartley Bradstone, leaning against the table and looking round the cell with a shudder. "I'll do anything. I said I would when—"

"I agreed to take your crime upon my hands and suffer for you," said Faradeane, grimly. "I have sent for you to tell you what you must do."

He looked up almost eagerly.

"What is it?"

"You must leave England," said Faradeane, slowly and deliberately, as if he were propounding a carefully considered scheme.

Bartley Bradstone's eagerness increased.

"I'll do it," he said. "I—I've thought all along it would be better for me to get away. There's no knowing what may turn up. This detective fellow from London, I don't like the look of him, and he covertly wiped the perspiration from his pallid forehead.

"He might find out—"

"What can he find out?" asked Faradeane, sternly, and with a searching look. "What had this woman done to you that you should shoot her?"

"I didn't mean to! I swear it!" exclaimed Bradstone, with a terrible oath. "I—I only meant to frighten her, and—and the cursed thing went off, and—"

He dashed his hands before his eyes and shuddered.

Faradeane turned away with a spasm of disgust.

"What hold had she on you?" he demanded.

Bartley Bradstone shot a suspicious cunning glance at him.

"She—she wanted me to marry her," he said, in a low voice.

"You—you cur!" he said, not angrily, but with infinite scorn.

"When—when she found I was married already she threatened to—go then and there to the Grange and blare out a scandal before—before Olivia."

Faradeane winced as the beloved name left the man's lips.

"And I—I couldn't stand it! It drove me mad! That's it! I was mad—mad! But I didn't mean to shoot her, only to frighten her."

Faradeane got as far from him as the small cell would permit, and, looking down at him, said, slowly and sternly:

"Take that paper and write as I tell you."

Bartley Bradstone looked up fearfully.

"What are you going to get me to do?" he whined. "Don't—don't be hard on me for—her sake."

Faradeane pointed to the paper.

"Let there be as few words as possible between us, if you please. Write as I tell you. Refuse, and I give you up here and now."

Trembling and shaking, the wretched man clutched the paper.

I, Bartley Bradstone, shot the woman called Bella-Bella in Harkwood Spinney.

"Sign it."

Bradstone lifted his aching face.

"Good God! You—you seem to mean to hang me, after all," he gasped. "After all your fine talk of saving her from trouble—"

"Silence!" said Faradeane, sternly. "Do as I bid you. There is no time for hesitation; the warden will be here in a very few minutes. If that is not written and you have not solemnly pledged yourself to carry out my scheme for your safety—for your safety, do you hear?—I send for Colonel Summerford and denounce you."

With a groan, Bartley Bradstone wrote the short confession. It was so feeble a scrawl, so twisted and broken as to be almost illegible.

Faradeane took it—and as he did so the real criminal noticed that he touched it as one touches some noxious thing—then folded it and put it in an envelope.

"Address it to Miss Van—to your wife," he said, grimly.

Bartley Bradstone started and clutched at the table.

"To Olivia! To her!" he gasped. "Is that your game? You—you know what she'd do. You know she'd hang me twice over, with joy, to save you."

Faradeane raised his hand, but let it fall to his side.

"Do not try me too hard," he said, hoarsely. "Address it."

With another groan, Bartley Bradstone obeyed. Faradeane took a sheet of paper from his breast-pocket and placed it before him.

Bartley Bradstone read it and uttered an exclamation, and staggered to his feet; then sank down again, as if too weak to stand. This is what Faradeane had written:

Your husband has left England forever. If, at any time, under any pretence, he should break the vow he has made to me, and attempt to claim you, open the enclosed envelope. While he refrains from troubling you, keep it sacred and inviolate, and if he should die, leaving you unmolested, burn it. You have spoken of your friendship; in the name of that friendship, with all the earnestness of a man over whom hangs the shadow of death, I leave you this charge. My honor is in your hands.

HAROLD FARADEANE.

Ladies' Coats,

FOR FALL AND WINTER NOW SHOWING AT

BLAIR'S

Our Values are Absolutely the Best Obtainable.

This year's style in Coats is distinctive. The Coat with the flare (or wide) skirt is the mode. Coats this year are either without belts or come with a half belt effect. This is quite different from last season's Military Coat, which had a belt all round and was much tighter in the skirt.

Despite increasing cost of Coats, through rising prices of materials, and the fashions demanding more cloth in each, we are enabled to offer you the NEWEST GOODS at the LOWEST PRICES. This we are enabled to do by our early contracts and also by our moderate margin of profit, which has built up such a successful coat business, as it is well known our values are the best. Our prices are—

$4.90, 5.90, 6.90, 7.90, 9.50 and upwards.

We are also busy opening a full selection of Bishop Bury Points Out The Great Possibilities of a Permanent Anglo-Russian Alliance—The Affinities of the Two Peoples.

The world is coming to see that there are strong spiritual affinities between the English and Russian peoples, and that in the future they should work together for the world's good.

Many of those who protested against an alliance with Russia overlooked this fact, and they should carefully read a striking article by Right Rev. Herbert Bury, the English Bishop of North and Central Europe, contributed to that most interesting review, Twentieth Century Russia (15).

In Russia, says Bishop Bury, "faith and wide is the conviction, already firmly held and steadily increasing, that there are no two people, notwithstanding their distinctive characters, more naturally adapted to agree together, and so support each other and bring their common interests into mutual confidence and interest."

The Coming Together.

The Russians are feeling every day more affectionately attracted towards ourselves, while the English people are feeling even more interested in all things Russian. We are both becoming true to our national characteristics in the progress—for I like to think there is progress—of our alliance. The Russians are putting their hearts into it, as led by their friendly dispositions and affectionate natures; while we, with our habitual caution and reserve, are learning all we can; and consulting and pondering how far we can trust and repose confidence; but the result is a sure and steady coming together of the two peoples.

"It was in Siberia that I first began to see the great possibilities of a permanent Anglo-Russian alliance, I learnt at the different mines where the proprietors and staff are British, and all those employed are Russian subjects, and excellent relations are maintained between the two, how well fitted we and they are to get on together and understand each other."

Notable Conversation.

"I remember also, when at Tsarsko Selo last, I was waiting for a few minutes until the Emperor was able to see me, and entered into conversation with a distinguished general in attendance, and expressed myself to this effect, he became quite excited as he said: 'Why, many of us have been saying that for years, and with the greatest conviction and expectation, and our own countrymen seem not to have any idea of it.'

"Later, also, when saying the same thing to one of our leading diplomats at home, who thoroughly knows

THE WAR

The war news... ing, both general in ticular, is of importance. The capture of it tells of further British and French on the capture of Comblès; the change of strategy and of forces by both sides in is clearly in preparation for struggle.

The British have taken the French Rancourt. Comblès quite untenable, being drawn long and ever narrower. The Germans appreciate the value of key positions and Comblès is not so dear. Thiepval is, but the last railway town before the brai-St. Quentin line is reached. It has of itself great defensive th. But it is now being, as the Germans would wish, rounded—a much less costly ing to the besiegers. The is apparently being attempted more important Thiepval, a little village (more correct, three hills that stand behind whole defence of the German northward rests. It was reality, that supported Hamel, which we know made it impregnable. We see the British shortly from Courcellette to Fleres more in behind Thiepval, in a great encircling manoeuvre is one of the features of the whole offensive may be treated by history years as the secret of Guilleumont, Ginchy and were taken in this saw-tooth and it is being applied, varying proportions, against Comblès, Peronne and Chateau this way the line can be behind Thiepval and established from Devion to Courcellette anything may happen, from the movement of the Arras salient Germans right up to the of France.

Both events and the thereon in the East conference of last week that Hine at once shown his hand troops are being rushed from of that there can be doubt. We are inclined to they are being sent to place of first importance, stiffening is apparent in places. Probably Hindenburg well the enormous power the Saloniki offensive (which yet begun) to take any be avoided, and will kept protected at all costs. For the severe check administered in Dobruja and successes south of Monastir come news of good augurs.

A FISHERMAN'S REPORT.
LONDON, Sept. 25.
A Danish fisherman reported having observed four Zeppelins yesterday travelling in a southeasterly direction, says a despatch from Copenhagen to the Exchange Telegraph Co. One Zeppelin was in a damaged condition and was being accompanied by torpedo boat destroyers.

ZEP LOSS AFFECT BERLIN.
NEW YORK, Sept. 25.
A News Agency despatch from Geneva to-day says that the loss of two Zeppelins in Saturday night's air raid on England has stunned the Berlin public. Swiss correspondents in the German capital telegraphed to-day: No recent reverse on the battlefield had such depressing effect on the German people. Correspondents reported that the two Zeppelins were understood to have been among the air craft turned out recently at the Friedrichshafen factory.

GERMAN TROOPS WORN OUT.
LONDON, Sept. 25.
A correspondent at British headquarters in France says that the recent British advances, in which they straightened out their line from Fiers to Courcellette on the Somme front, have shown that the German morale has been lowered. We are receiving abundant proof of the waning of German troops, he writes. The German prisoners ascribe these partly to the system of keeping the men in the trenches for long periods without relief, with the result that they are completely worn out. German officers who have been captured admit that their troops are incapable of prolonged resistance because of fatigue. Men of the German Thirteenth Corps repeatedly conceded the superiority of the British and French troops, and were particularly impressed with the extraordinary expenditure of ammunition by the Allies' artillery. German prisoners no longer emphasize the presence of strong German reserves behind the front. Though they will not admit that the Somme offensive really threatens to enable the Allies to break through, some agree that it will not be impossible. British su-priority in the air is admitted by the German prisoners, says the correspondent.

ENEMY ATTACKS REPULSED.
LONDON, Sept. 25.
South of the Ancre, says a British official to-day, the enemy attacked one of our posts east of Courcellette, but was repulsed. We blew up mines last night north of Neuve Chapelle and north of Hulluch. Much damage was done the enemy's work. The enemy's trenches were raided at several points on the battle front.

ESSEN BOMBED.
BERLIN, Sept. 25.
The General in command at Munster reports that on Sept. 21st at 3 p.m., several enemy airmen appeared over the suburbs of Essen, and for a minute over the town. They dropped several bombs most of which caused no damage. No fires occurred. The French War Office bulletin last night announced that two French aeroplanes that day had dropped 12 bombs on Essen where the great Krupp's armory plant is located and returned safely to their starting point after a flight of 500 miles.

THE GREEK SITUATION.
ATHENS, Sept. 25.
Sixty-nine out of eighty members of King Constantine's famous Creta Guard who disbanded the organization, leaving only eleven members, propose following Premier Venizelos to Salonika should he decide to go there, and join the revolutionary movement, according to advices from Crete. Armed Creteans to the number of 30,000 are now said to control the entire island on behalf of Venizelos. The insurgents have now entered Canca, where they took possession of the government buildings, turning out the Greek authorities. It is reported in political circles here that renewed efforts to learn from diplomatic representatives of the Entente what Greek ministerial changes would mollify the Entente, and enable negotiations to proceed more regularly, met with this unofficial suggestion. Unacceptable members of the cabinet know they are not acceptable without being told. If the Greek government be sincere it will clean its own house.

ITALIAN GAIN.
ROME, Sept. 25.
The War Office announced to-day that Italian troops had taken by storm another mountain top on the Trentino front, inflicting heavy losses on the Austrians.

NOTHING OF IMPORTANCE.
PETROGRAD, Sept. 25.
No event of importance has occurred on either the Western (Russian) or Caucasian front, the War Office announced to-day.

SHORTAGE OF BREAD IN VIENNA.
ZURICH, Sept. 25.
Despatches from Vienna say that there has been a bread famine there for several days owing to transportation difficulties. An official decree has been published, forbidding hotels and restaurants of Vienna and Lower Austria to supply bread to guests, who must bring their own. Railway service has been greatly dislocated since Roumania entered the war.

GREEK SITUATION SERIOUS.
LONDON, Sept. 25.
The situation in Greece is most serious, says a Reuter despatch from Athens. Former Premier Venizelos, accompanied by Rear-Admiral Condouriotis, Commander-in-Chief of the Greek Navy, and a number of superior officers, his supporters, left Athens early to-day. They are bound probably for Crete, whence they expected to go to Salonika. The revolutionary movement now in progress had its inception at Salonika, where there was set up a national defence committee, which, according to last reports, was exercising the functions of government in part of Greek Macedonia. It has been reported that Venizelos, leader of the Greek party which favors intervention in the war with the Entente Allies, intended to go to Salonika to put himself at the head of the temporary revolutionary government. On being asked last week about this report, he said he could not answer at that time; that he must wait and see what the government proposed to do before deciding on the best course to adopt.

ALL QUIET.
LONDON, Sept. 25.
An official to-day regarding the military situation in Macedonia, says: On the Struma front and the Doiran front there is nothing to report.

CANADIAN NATIONAL SERVICE.
OTTAWA, Sept. 25.
A Government memorandum explains the significance of the change in recruiting regulations, which makes it clear that arrangements for national service, in charge of Director General Sir Thos. Talbot, are not to be under the Militia Department, but directly under the Premier. Boards are to be named in various military districts to take stock of labor conditions in Canada, and arrange for the employment of women where possible to co-operate with the recruiting authorities and to consider the importance of the employment in which persons are engaged, and determine whether they would give greater service than if enlisted.

VON JAGOW TO RESIGN.
LONDON, Sept. 25.
The Amsterdam correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph Co. says it learns that the resignation of Von Jagow, German Foreign Minister, is imminent.

BRITISH CASUALTIES.
LONDON, Sept. 25.
In the past week British armies on all fronts lost 625 officers and men killed, of whom 48 were officers. The War Office announces the wounded and missing total 28,964, of whom 669 were officers.

ALFRED WARD DEAD.
LONDON, Sept. 25.
Alfred Ward, Chief Inspector, Scotland Yard, died this morning.

BELGIAN COAST BOMBED.
LONDON, Sept. 25.
British monitors and destroyers bombarded the Belgian coast on Sunday between Hayst and Brugles, according to a despatch from Flushing.

From the Novel "The Chalice of Courage."
By Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady, produced in six acts, presenting Myrtle Gonzales, William Duncan, George Holt and all the well known Vitagraph Stars. A very powerful dramatic tale of love and adventure production of that great director ROLLEN B. STURGEON.
Wednesday—"THE CLIMBERS," five acts; a beautiful social drama from the play of Clyde Fitch.
Coming—Robert Edeson in "MORTMAIN," five acts. Another great Vitagraph.

Major Ross Missing.

Mr. Joseph Ross, of the Nickel Theatre, received the following message yesterday from the Adjutant at Ottawa:—
"Sincerely regret to inform you Major John Alexander Ross, infantry, officially reported wounded, missing, September 17th, 1916. Will send further particulars when received."
Before the outbreak of the war Major Ross was Manager of Tooke's Bros. Factory in Canada. He is 31 years old and has another brother, James McKenzie Ross, a Boer War veteran, in a regiment now at the front. Both brothers have been in active service since 1914.

New Stamping Machine

A new electric date stamping machine was installed at the G. P. O. yesterday, similar to the one already in use. With both machines running, 600 letters can be dated and date stamped per minute, and during the busy season can perform the work of six men. When mails are being received and despatched at the same time each machine will be allotted its own work. They are property of the International Postal Supply Co., of Brooklyn, N.Y., and are rented to Post Offices throughout the world. Stamper Wm. Day, of the G. P. O., will operate the machines.
