The New York Herold devotes three columns to an account of Powers' trial and his connection with the Independent Catholic Church. Many residents of St. John will remember Powers' first appearance here in 1859. He had run away from his home (on the North Shore, we believe) and had come to St. John. He was then 14 or 15 years old, and a Catholic in religion. Here he complained that he had been ill-treated at home, that he had been ill-treated at home, that he had been ill-treated at home, that he had been beaten for reading the Bible, etc., etc. He quickly gained great notoriety, the late L. Jennie's Choice

A sinking sun. "Bang!" roared the old brass cannon on the long pier at Rockaway beach.

"Cast off the bow-line!" shouted the captain; and with the parting salute the beautiful steamer sped swiftly and merrily over the waters, carrying its load of pleasure-seekers towards their destination.

Two fine looking gentlemen were seated on the forward part of the deck, watching the droll antics of a quartette of peero minstrels who were trying to amuse the passengers.

"Marks," spoke the youngest of the two, "to-morrow I have a difficult case to attend to in the surgical line, and I need your assistance. Now promise, old fellow, that to-morrow morning, at half-past ten, sharp, I shall see you at North, lighting a cigar.
