THE TRANSFORMATION

The hotel is now the "Y.M.C.A. Soldiers' Club," one of the Young Men's Christian Association's long chain of clubs, marquees, huts and "dug-outs" extending from Vancouver to the firing line in France—those helpful sentinal-posts that safeguard our precious soldier men and boys wherever soldiers are congregated. To the Y.M.C.A. Canada owes a debt of gratitude she never can adequately repay.
Like New Brunswick, the Traffic in Ontario has the opportunity, after the war, of putting Prohibition to the test at the polls. But Prohibition in Ontario is being enforced, and the old strongholds of the Traffic—the long bars we mean—are one by one being turned to useful purposes. Many of the hotel buildings that depended for existence upon bar trade are now devoted to commercial enterprises—constructive instead of destructive.
Does New Brunswick want to return to the destructive license system, and again be a partner in the old firm of John Barleycorn and Company, Limited?
Or does New Brunswick want to maintain Prohibition for ever? If so, Enforcement must be province wide, must be both strict and effective.

On September 16th, 1916, Prohibition went into force in Ontario, and, of course, the bar lost its license. On the 16th of April, 1917, the old bar was busier than ever! But what an arresting, beautiful transformation! Would that you and your sons could have been there to see the sight. The old bar-room was a bivy of flowers. Fifty fair-ladies served refreshments to Toronto's most prominent citizens and their wives, and not one of them all but was proud to be seen in the old barroom.
The aching, worrying hearts of the army's mothers are relieved now when they see their sons enter this building—for the old bar is helping to save men now instead of ruining them.

Every man and woman in this province shares the responsibility for the proper enforcement of Prohibition—not the officers of the law alone. Your duty is clear.

THE TRANSFORMATION

The hotel is now the "Y.M.C.A. Soldiers' Club," one of the Young Men's Christian Association's long chain of clubs, marquees, huts and "dug-outs" extending from Vancouver to the firing line in France—those helpful sentinal-posts that safeguard our precious soldier men and boys wherever soldiers are congregated. To the Y.M.C.A. Canada owes a debt of gratitude she never can adequately repay.
Like New Brunswick, the Traffic in Ontario has the opportunity, after the war, of putting Prohibition to the test at the polls. But Prohibition in Ontario is being enforced, and the old strongholds of the Traffic—the long bars we mean—are one by one being turned to useful purposes. Many of the hotel buildings that depended for existence upon bar trade are now devoted to commercial enterprises—constructive instead of destructive.
Does New Brunswick want to return to the destructive license system, and again be a partner in the old firm of John Barleycorn and Company, Limited?
Or does New Brunswick want to maintain Prohibition for ever? If so, Enforcement must be province wide, must be both strict and effective.

On September 16th, 1916, Prohibition went into force in Ontario, and, of course, the bar lost its license. On the 16th of April, 1917, the old bar was busier than ever! But what an arresting, beautiful transformation! Would that you and your sons could have been there to see the sight. The old bar-room was a bivy of flowers. Fifty fair-ladies served refreshments to Toronto's most prominent citizens and their wives, and not one of them all but was proud to be seen in the old barroom.
The aching, worrying hearts of the army's mothers are relieved now when they see their sons enter this building—for the old bar is helping to save men now instead of ruining them.

Every man and woman in this province shares the responsibility for the proper enforcement of Prohibition—not the officers of the law alone. Your duty is clear.

MR. CARVELL, M. P., ON CONSCRIPTION

Ottawa, Ont., June 28.—Frank B. Carvell, of Carleton, N. B., was the man in the spotlight yesterday. He carries a well-earned reputation of being the hardest-headed, hardest-hitting fighter in the political arena. He has produced in these latter years. He has recognized neither conscription nor any other rules, but by rough and tumble methods has established a get-there record, and earned the respect, if not the reverence, of all opponents. Accordingly, members flocked to their seats to hear how he would range himself up alongside a Government he had fought so fiercely, to support conscription and give the necessary reinforcement to the Canadians in France.

He didn't keep them waiting long, nor did they have to lean forward to catch his words. He came not as a sinner to repentance. Standing erect in his place in the House, his tall figure carrying all its 40 message, no feature of his somewhat harsh face relaxing for an instant, he spoke in the clear, firm tones that have so often made every reporter in the gallery take a fresh grasp of his pencil and get busy. As usual, he went straight to the point.

For the past two years and a half, no man in the House of Commons has criticized the conduct of the Government in the management of this war to the same extent that I have done, was one of his earliest remarks. Then he told a few of the things he had criticized, and wound up in true Carvellian style: "I have no apology to make and take back nothing which I have said." Moreover, he told them that should circumstances warrant it, he would do it again.

Having thus made his position clear, the man from Carleton went on to show that he is a Canadian as well as a critic. And he did it well. Not that he orated or declaimed. Parts of his speech read as if they would lend themselves to flourish. But he didn't raise his voice or wave his hands. Even that menacing finger that was wont to make Sir Sam Hughes jump up out of his seat like a jack-in-the-box was strangely inactive.

He had a few things to tell the House, he told them, and that was all there was to it. But these few remarks were listened to with an interest and attention that eloquence seldom commands. This man was telling where he stood, and why he stood. He wasn't talking politics. And even those who didn't agree with him gave him their respect.

"I look upon what may take place in the future as of very much more importance than what has taken place in the past," he said, and he went on to state with what seriousness he had always viewed the war. On the declaration of war he had telegraphed his chief clerk, in his opinion, Sir Wilfrid should offer the Government his full support in everything that was necessary in order that Canada should do her full duty.

"The Prime Minister of this country declares we need more men," he continued. "Every responsible official, both civil and military, of the two great nations, France and England, who are really waging this war, from the 4th day of August down to the present time, have sent out the cry: 'We need men, and more men, and still more men.' That cry has gone forth the world over. It is going forth to-day in the United States, and all over the civilized world. The Prime Minister says he promised the allied Governments that Canada would send half a million men.

He regards that as a pledge. I do not so regard it, but I really believe that Canada stands pledged from the day this war began to the present time, and will stand pledged until the final conclusion of this great conflict, to send every man who can be possibly spared from the ordinary vocations of life."

Right here, Frank Carvell stated that party patronage had kept recruiting from having a fair show. He stated it not as a charge, but just as an incident that was not to interfere with his contention: "I do not know that the Premier says we must have a more forcible measure of obtaining men. When a man in his position says that, I have not the nerve to say that he is wrong. I put the burden on him, and I am willing to stand by him as far as it is possible for me to do so in order that he may get all the men he wants."

Mrs. Roberts Galley is seriously ill. On Sunday, July first, at the close of the morning service, the pastor, Rev. F. A. Currier, baptized four more of our young people, namely—Blanche Porter, Avis Seelye, Alden Seelye, and Dannie Seelye. In the evening a service was held in memory of the late Private Harry M. Tinker. The young man's picture, framed in black and draped in the flags he loved and gave his life for, was placed above the pulpit. The Church was beautifully decorated in white and purple lilacs. In his usual eloquent and impressive manner, Mr. Currier addressed one of the largest audiences ever seen in our Church, from the words, "Thou shalt not hide Thyself." Also, he read a letter from the officer in command of the regiment to which Harry belonged, speaking in the highest terms of his courage, of their love and respect for him, and their sincere regrets from the loss of their comrade, of which he was a member, marched in full regalia from the Hall to the Church. Relatives from across the country were present. Mrs. Richardson, Miss Daisy Richardson, and Ludlow and Basil Richardson, of Deer Island.

PROGRESS OF THE WAR

[June 28 to July 4] On the last day of the period under review the war entered the thirty-sixth month of its course.

The Russian campaign the British continued their pressure on Lens, which they more closely invested but did not succeed in taking.

The Russian campaign furnished the principal event of the week, the Russians resuming active hostilities in Galicia, where they had great success fifty miles southeast of Lemberg, the capital of Galicia.

PROHIBITION IN MAINE

To the Editor of the Evening Post: Sir: Noticing Cesare's cartoon in your publication concerning Boozing Wasting grain, I would like to ask him if he ever stealy Booze or any Americans. There is as much Booze here in this state as any State in the Union. The Writ was born in this State in 1857, and has lived in the State of Ohio for nearly twenty six years. I was employed as Supt. of Construction by the United States Steel Co. and hearing so much from the Public platform concerning Prohibition in Maine My Wife and I decided to sell our property in Ohio and Move to Maine as we supposed a second heaven. We Moved here and arrived in Portland on a Saturday noon, and we saw more drunks on that Saturday afternoon than we ever saw in Ohio in the 26 years we lived there. This Whiskey is manufactured right here it is rank Poison and is called Barbed wire. Any person drinking this whiskey is made Crazy drunk. There is over 200 Elze distills in Our County the Sheriff's Office of Cumberland County is as good a paying job as the Presidents of the United States is at the Church where I attended When a Young Man, 300 Was the usual Congregation there, last Sabbath Was 22, that was their largest Cong. in three years. No One here goes to Church, they stay at home to make this Poison and sell it. Their faces are a pitiful sight. Population has decreased in Every County nearby, this town in 1855, had a population of Three Thousand Four hundred, to-day it has Nineteen hundred and Twenty. Our State Prison in 1870 had One hundred and Eight inmates, to-day there are 251, and still growing, the insane asylum is crowded to overflowing and Every Jail and Workhouse is in the same condition. It seems that We have seen nothing but Rum and Crime Ever since We came back here. The writer does not use intoxicants or Tobacco in any form, is a member of the First Pres. Church in Tiffin, Ohio. The Political Machine in this State is run by Boozed Both parties, the One making the best promise gets Elected.

COIN-MAKING

In the melting branch of the Royal Mint the various coinage alloys are cast preparatory to rolling. The metals used are usually procured in the form of fine ingots, and are alloyed in the proportions shown in the following statement: Standard gold: 91.23 per cent. gold, 8.13 per cent. copper, Imperial silver: 92.5 per cent. silver, 7.5 per cent. copper. Coinage-bronze: 85 per cent. copper, 4 per cent. tin, 1 per cent. zinc. Cupro-nickel: 72 per cent. copper, 28 per cent. nickel. In addition to the fine ingots and alloy the average charge, to the extent of about one-third of the total, consists of scrap metal from the various processes of manufacture, returned for melting. The bars cast are about 2 feet long, but differ in width and thickness according to the denomination of coin desired. The width varies from 4 inches in the case of bars for bronze coins, to 14 inches in the case of the Mithras bar used by all the Mithras churches for all the Mithras bars to 3-8 inch for bars for bronze. The bars are rolled in another department to the thickness of the coin required. The average weight of the various classes of coinage metals cast annually during the last five years was about 2,000 tons, or a mean rate of a little over 7 tons (7000 kg) for the working day. In melting gold and silver for coinage work, according to an account given by Mr. W. J. Hocking at the Institute of Metals, great care must be taken to secure in result the correct proportions of metals in the alloys as they are legally prescribed. The limits of variation from exact fineness are narrow, and are specified in the Coinage Act of 1891 (54 and 5 Cta., c. 73) as two parts per thousand for gold and four parts per thousand for silver. The variations permitted in practice are much less than these, and the necessity that the bars cast should be uniform in composition tends to restrict the size of the charges. The volume of the charge is mainly determined by the convenience of stirring it when molten and before pouring. Gold and silver bars are isolated in their respective "pots" until they are reported by the assayer to be either suitable or unsuitable for coinage. The usual charge of standard gold is 2,000 ounces or 87 kg., and of silver 6,000 ounces or 187 kg. Two sets of furnaces are erected in separate rooms, the set of smaller furnaces being reserved exclusively for melting gold. The set of large furnaces is used for melting silver, bronze, and cupro-nickel, crucibles of the same size being used for all three metals. About 400 pounds, or 182 kg., is the weight of the charge of each of the two baser metals.—Engineering, London, Eng.

RECRUITING IN JUNE
Ottawa, July 4.—During the month of June just ended a total of 5,750 recruits were secured in the Dominion. The first two weeks of the month supplied 3,382, and the latter fortnight 2,368. Canada's total enlistment from the beginning of the war now stands at 423,869.
During the last two weeks of June the Toronto division headed the list with 620 recruits, Ottawa and Kingston coming next with 452. Other divisions and districts enlisted as follows: British Columbia, 298; Manitoba, 294; London, 222; Montreal, 198; Maritime Provinces, 157; Saskatchewan, 76; Alberta, 51; and Quebec district, 20.
The month's recruiting of 5,750 shows a slight falling off from that of the month of May, when 6,437 were raised.

GOLF CLUB GOVERNING RULES

Will the day ever arrive when each golf club has self-government as far as rules governing play are concerned?

There is not a club in existence but harbors at least a dozen men who are prepared to prove that the lawmakers are incapable; and to go further, no club exists but that 50 per cent of its members are not only ignorant of the rules, but play a round without breaking a law.

The member studies these and soon finds the method of procedure—what to do in the event of a raid, the position of the straight switch, and many other things for the upholding and furtherance of the club's interest.

But if a club framed its own rules, all this fear would be done away with. There would then need be no book for suggestions. Probably the first ruling which would be dropped from the category would be that relating to "striking opponent's caddy."

LOST BALL, LOST HOLE, LAW. The next to go would be the "lost ball, lost hole" law, in which the offender not only loses the sphere, but to make it more impressive and bring home the seriousness of the offence, the hole is lost, and should the unfortunate one be at the time all square and one to play, his temper plus the match goes also.

MAINTENANCE OF COURSES. It is safe to say that as regards the preparation and maintenance of all ground set apart for outdoor pastimes that devoted to golf occupies the attention of amateurs to a degree that has no counterpart in other realms of sport.

Given a committee having the welfare of their club at heart, they are likely to infuse into their work as much enthusiasm and energy as they might be expected to display in more personal matters.

Unless a club should be fortunate enough to number among its members an authority on course architecture, it is not advisable in the initial stages to depend entirely upon the ordinary committee. Such a policy, often undertaken from motives of economy, generally defeats its particular object. Errors are made which might have been avoided, and as a consequence, the funds are wasted, while there is also the danger of considerable dissension among the committee.

It is most necessary also that the amateur greenkeeper should study the composition of the soil on his course, in order that he may be in a position to advise as to the proper dressings to use, and unless the official has acquired a practical knowledge of the necessities mistakes may be made.

PROTECTION OF CROPS. Crop protection means crop production. Canada loses over one hundred million dollars worth of her staple crops every year through the depredations of insect pests.

INSECT PESTS are not usually noticed or reported until they have caused considerable damage. Therefore it is urged that the closest watch be kept on all crops for the first appearance of any insect pests or damage. Immediately such damage is observed steps should be taken to control the outbreak in its incipient stage.

AREA AND CONDITION OF WHEAT. It is estimated from the reports of correspondents that the total area sown to wheat for 1917 is 13,450,250 acres, as compared with 14,857,000 acres, the area sown, and with 12,900,000 acres, the area harvested in 1916.

per cent as compared with 90 per cent on May 31 last year and with 91 per cent the average condition on the corresponding date for the seven years ended 1916.

AREA AND CONDITION OF OTHER CROPS. The decrease in the area sown to wheat this year is partly due to the curtailment of the seeding season by the lateness of the spring, and efforts were therefore apparently directed towards an increase in the area sown to other crops.

THOREAU CENTENARY

A FINAL life of Thoreau from my hand, says F. B. Sanborn in his introduction to that new volume (Houghton Mifflin, $4 net), "has this particular claim on the reader's attention, that it includes memoirs of his ancestors not before given to the public; and also, in their complete form, many essays written in his early youth—all that the care of his kindred had preserved—besides what escaped from their research, verses, letters, and memoranda." One approaches this bulky volume with anticipations only partly pleasant. Good biographies have before this been overladen and thrown out of proportion by the inclusion of too much juvenilia and too many other manuscripts which are of interest only because belatedly discovered. Nor do these apprehensions prove altogether groundless. The numerous "College Essays" are by no means all interesting, and though very well written for a youth of from sixteen to nineteen, are not intrinsically striking in expression. On the other hand, very interesting indeed is the essay called "The Service," written in 1840, when Thoreau was twenty-three, and found in the portfolio of Emerson: so are some scraps of unpublished or little-known poetry, as "Our Country," which Margaret Fuller refused for the Dial; and so are fragments like the little paper on "Visitors in Walden Woods," written a few years after Thoreau's Staten Island experiences; and various letters. We are at no point called upon to revise our conception of Thoreau, but we have a certain amount of valuable new material illustrating old facts.

The first entries in Thoreau's "Journals" are dated 1837; his first volume appeared in 1849, recording the experiences of his boating trip of August, 1839, on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers. The earliest dated letter of Thoreau known is here quoted by Sanborn under date of July, 1836, and it is to a classmate in regard to the room the two were to occupy at Harvard during the coming year's senior-year. A good many of the early letters are boyishly rhetorical, and so are many of which belong even to his sophomore year. But in one of these essays, a paper on "The Literary Life," written in 1836, we find his principal intellectual bent already carefully indicated. "Innocent and easily procurable pleasures," wrote this future author of "Walden," "constitute man's most lasting happiness; these are such as literature and imagination are both able and willing to afford. That undefinable misery, that insupportable tediousness, the curse of those who have nothing to do, is inconsistent with that relief for literature and science which is a source of continual gratification to the mind. He who is dependent upon himself alone for his enjoyments—who finds all he wants within himself—is really independent."

Happy the man who is furnished with all the advantages of reliable solitude! In no other college paper do we find equal gusto or sincerity, and to match it we have to turn to a letter of the early autumn of 1837, hitherto unpublished, in which Thoreau wrote: "For a man to act himself he must be perfectly free; otherwise he is in danger of losing all sense of responsibility or self-respect. When such a state of things exists that the sacred opinions one advances in argument are apologized for by his friends, before his face, lest his hearers receive a wrong impression of the man, it is a disgrace for the grape that it is sour, or the thunder that it is noisy, or the lightning that it carries not. The 'Journals' were just being begun, and though the first volume has long since disappeared, enough survives to show that at this time Thoreau's observation of nature, and his philosophical musings upon it, were of much the same character as in later years.

The estrangement between Thoreau and Emerson Mr. Sanborn once tried to explain—in his recollections—as the result of their diverse heredity. To his Congregational forebears Emerson owed his marvellous propriety and decorum, his sobriety, and his often slightly stiff politeness. From his practical stock Thoreau inherited a rough individualism, careless of polite conventionalities. One of the college papers on Social Restraints, takes a sardonic fling at the man who is all suavity at a dinner and complains as soon as he gets outside of having been imprisoned three hours by his friend. Sanborn offers this note of Emerson's upon the essayist:

"My children think Henry rather strange. He said the Evening Herald did not flower in Concord till E. carried it to him, gathered near one of the paths in the park. Why is he never frank? That was an excellent saying of Elizabeth Hearst: 'I love Henry, but I can never like him.' What is so cheap as politeness? Never had I the least social pleasure with him, though often the best conversation; in which he goes along accumulating one thing upon another so thickly—when he is not pugnacious. Sanborn here attempts a showing that the hastiness of youth was responsible for

"See here, I'm told you called me a 'biting idiot.' I did not. 'Umpah! Bithering is an adjective I never use.'—Birmingham Age-Herald.

"Father likes you, Henry." "He ought to Geraldine. But after we are married he's going to find out that I'm not such a poor pinch-pole player as I have led him to believe I am."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

"Folks will say that you are marrying me for my money." "My dear, I'm sure they won't. Surely no one who knows you will even hint that money is your only charm."—Detroit Free Press.

"What is the precise significance of the phrase 'the incident is closed'?" "It's a polite way," answered Senator Sorghum, "of saying 'What are you going to do about it?'"—Washington Star.

THE ULTIMATE ARGUMENT

BEFORE the high court of King Lion the Strong the wily Hyena appeared with a throng of Jackals as witnesses, charging the Ass with wronging him foully by eating the grass.

"The ruler," the Hyena indignantly cried, "Without any warrant express or implied, Devours the herbage so luscious and sweet, And cruelly keeps the herbage from me to eat. I pray the Court, therefore, to grant me relief, Including permission to dine on the thief."

The Ass pleaded humbly, with down-hanging ears (Addressing a Jury composed of his peers): "Dear friends, that I graze in the meadow is true, But not without warrant. My course I pursue By right of a Document sealed with a Seal— King Solomon's firm grip which none may repeal."

"Ha!" snarled the Hyena; "but where is your proof?" "My warrant is writ," said the Ass, "on my hoof."

"Indeed!" sneered the Plaintiff; "then show it, I beg." "Look well!" brayed the Ass, as he drew up a leg. Close peeped the Hyena. The Ass gave a snort. And kicked the Comptroller clean out of court.

While Patience is prize-worthy, even in Cath. And Sweetness may possibly turn away Wrath, The mildest can have but one answer to give Oppressors who question their title to live.

THE JUBILEE OF CONFEDERATION 1867-1917

YOU will surely want to know much about the beginnings and history of Confederation at this time of national celebration. As a good Canadian, as a citizen, as one desiring to be well-informed about matters of deep concern and interest, you have your desire and your knowledge increased.

MACLEAN'S MAGAZINE for JULY
This magazine gives you the finest and most interesting survey of Confederation you will find in any periodical. You will find there: Portraits of the Fathers of Confederation; The statesman who launched Canada on her career of brilliant achievement; The story of Confederation—why it was necessary, and how it came about; The Taking Over of the North-West Territories from the Hudson's Bay Company—a stirring story told by James C. Lewis; The Story of the C. P. R.—told by C. N. Macdonald, a man who was intimately the man who planned, built and developed the Canadian Pacific Railway—the cord of Confederation; The Industrial and Business Development of the last 50 Years—by W. W. Craik; A wonderful story of progress; Conditions of Confederation Compared With Those of Today—by J. H. Macdonald. An enjoyable study of contrasts.

Beyond these special Confederation features of the July MACLEAN'S will be the customary provision of the short stories, and the departments which make MACLEAN'S MAGAZINE so enjoyable and valuable to good Canadians everywhere. Get the July MACLEAN'S, double size.
