CHAPTER XXIX.

Their pleasure in it now was as great as if they had never dwelt on it before. Lucie contemplated it with a feeling of delight mixed with despair at her inability to reproduce such beauty. Ada, stretched beside her, with her head on her sister's lap, looked at it dreamily, letting its loveliness soothe her with a sense of peace and rest; and Bessie stood behind, pausing in her occupation of preparing tea, at Lucie's earnestly spoken question, to let her glance rest upon it too.

"Do you think it looks more lovely than usual, Lulu?" she asked saucily, after a minute's silent admiration.

"It always has a fresh loveliness for me," Lucie answered, smiling. "And I believe you enjoy it just as much as Ada or myself."

"Of course I think it is much jollier living at Easton than in a poky old town," Bessie said jauntily. "But I don't go in for artistic tastes like you and Ada. For instance, the prospect of 'bliss' is a much pleasanter one to me than that prospect," she added merrily, jerking her chin toward the golden-shadowed sea.

"Bliss!" said Ada, sitting up eagerly and looking round Lucie's camp-stool toward her younger sister's preparations for tea. "Do you mean to say that we are to have 'bliss' for tea?"

Bessie nodded emphatically. "I do," she said.

"My eternal gratitude is yours," Ada rejoined, with a sigh of contempt, for the delicacy, composed of clefted cream and jam and cake, which Bessie in her childish days had called "bliss," because it was better than happiness, was a favorite dish of hers.

"What a blissful sight!" remarked Bessie demurely, intent upon trying to induce the little teatime upon the spirit-lamp to stand securely on its somewhat unsteady base.

"Bessie"—Ada sat up again, and looked at her sister with solemnly reproving eyes—"did I hear aright, or did my ears deceive me?"

"It was a very bad pun, Ada," said Lucie merrily, "so we will ignore it."

"There is one thing certain," Ada declared, settling herself comfortably once more—"if Dr. Johnson were still in existence and had chanced to pass this way, Mr. Easton's third daughter would not be alive at this present moment."

"Thank goodness he is not!" laughed Bessie. "We get enough of him in the dictionary. Hurrah! It is boiling at last! Ada, the supreme moment is approaching!"

"Something or someone else is approaching too," Ada said, laughing. "What a bore! Who can it be? Look Lucie—you are not near-sighted, as I am."

Lucie turned her head and looked for a moment steadily at a solitary

Radway's Ready Relief

Mrs. L. Dittmar, 719 E. 14th St., New York City, writes: "I caught a cold. I used one bottle of your Radway's Ready Relief with wonderful results. I have since found it gives me a charm for sore throat. I used it with great benefit for several ailments my children have had, and recommend it to my friends."

NEURALGIA

The Relief is the best counter-irritant known, and therefore the best combination that can be used in Neuralgia. It is on the part affected, and keeps the patient comforted with it, as the heat of the pain itself is obtained, which will usually be in the course of ten or fifteen minutes.

figure coming toward them across the beach, for the girls had encamped in the shadow of the cliff among some bowlders of rock which were a favorite resort. The sunshine did not touch the strip of shingle over which the solitary graceful woman's figure was advancing, and to Lucie's gentle eyes it seemed a very desolate and lonely one.

"I think it must be one of the grandees who have taken the 'Pack of Cards' for the summer months," said Bessie, looking also. "What a nuisance! I dislike languid fine ladies above all things."

"Having had so much experience," Ada put in slyly.

"I've read of them," said Bessie contemptuously—"fainting if they cut their fingers, and going into hysterics if they see a spider! Ever more said Lady Eastwell was horrid."

"I don't think our mother said that, Bessie," opposed Lucy gently, not removing her eyes from the slowly advancing figure, which she was watching with an intent gaze.

"Well, I am sure she did not like her manner," amended Bessie carelessly, "nor Mrs. Beaudesert."

"This is neither Mrs. Beaudesert nor Lady Eastwell," said Lucie, a little tender plying tone coming into her voice. "I think it is Lady Glynn."

"Lady Glynn!" Ada started up eagerly. "Is it, do you think? I do not think she is strong enough to walk so far. You know it was partly for her health that they came down here."

"It is she nevertheless," said Lucie quietly; and, as the slim, graceful figure came nearer with its slow languid step, Miss Grey went forward to meet it, forgetting entirely that Lady Glynn was one of the "great ladies" who had come to enjoy the Easton sea-breezes, in her tender pity for the pallor and weariness of the lovely face which she had seen once or twice at church and one in the vicarage drawing room, when Shirley had come on foot in her simple cambric dress, too delicately minded to exhibit her wealth before the poor clergyman's family, to call on the vicar's wife.

Shirley's face brightened suddenly and swiftly as her eyes met Lucie's; she had liked what little she had seen of the Greys so much that it gave her an unfeigned pleasure to meet the girls.

"Have you not walked a little to-day, Lady Glynn?" Lucie said gently. "It was not very prudent."

"The air was so pleasant and the afternoon so lovely that they tempted me," returned Lady Glynn smiling. "Besides, your fresh sea-breezes have done me a world of good, Miss Grey. But I fear," she added, with a glance at Bessie's preparations, "that I am intruding upon you."

"Oh, no—oh, no!" Ada said quickly, coming forward shyly. "We shall be so glad! We are going to have tea and—"

"Tea here? What a delightful idea!" said Shirley, as she held out her hand to Bessie, who stood a little apart, shy and blushing. "This is another of your sister's, Miss Grey? What lucky girls you are! I never had a sister."

"This is Bessie," said Lucie.

"I have seen her at church marshaling a demure little party of school-children," Shirley remarked, smiling. "Miss Bessie, I am very tired and thirsty. Will you bestow a cup of your tea on me?"

And then she sat down on one of the bowlders watching with gentle smiling eyes Bessie's primitive arrangements and looking so lovely in her delicate gray dress that Bessie declared afterward that she could have devoured her, "hat, dress, French boots, and all."

It was a very pleasant little tea-party under the shadow of the cliff, with the sea glittering in the distance, for the tide was low and the sun wrapping it in a golden haze.

The teapot was a black one and its lid was minus a handle, and the cups were nursery mugs with grotesque pictures and rhymes upon them, and the bowlders did not make very comfortable seats; but the tea itself was strong and fragrant, the clotted cream an excellent substitute for milk, and Lady Glynn crowned Bessie's satisfaction by declaring that "bliss" was delicious and well merited the name she had given it. Then, when tea was over it was quaint and pretty to see Bessie's pink fingers dipping the mugs into the little pools of sea-water which the receding tide had left between the bowlders, and to hear her merry laughter echoing in the quiet solitude of the rocks and cliffs; and Shirley, sitting on one great flat bowlder, leaned her pretty head against a larger one, which served as a support, and felt the calm of the place and hour stealing over her.

The vicar's daughters were very pleasant companions; they were well read, and although their education had been conducted on rather orthodox principles, it had been far more thorough than one obtained during a long sojourn at a fashionable boarding-school. They were, moreover, thoroughly unaffected, and Shirley had had too few acquaintances in her brilliant fashionable career not to appreciate these new ones very highly, and to find much pleasure in their pleasant, kindly chitchat.

Before long even Bessie had entirely forgotten that Shirley was a great lady far above them in rank and position; she looked so sweet and gentle, and was so pleasant and thoughtful, and so interested in their home duties and occupations; and entered so thoroughly into Lucie's wish to travel and see lovely scenery and Ada's desire for change and variety, that they soon felt at home with her.

"You could hardly have lovelier scenery than this," she told them, gazing over the sea with a dreamy far-away look in her beautiful sad eyes. "I often think it is a pity to rush abroad when there is so much beauty at home."

"You have been a great deal abroad, Lady Glynn?"

"Yes, all my girlhood was spent abroad," she answered, in the low voice, with its pathetic little thrill which Lucie thought so sweet. "I have a very sorrowful memory connected with the first night I spent in England. My dear mother died just at daybreak."

Lucie and Ada looked at her sympathetically, and Lucie's mouth trembled a little. What should they do if their mother were taken?

"Indeed, almost all my happy memories are connected with sunny France," she went on, with a little wistful smile; "and it will always be the dearest country in the world to me."

"Do you know Scotland, Lady Glynn?"

"I have been there."

"The Highlands are lovely, are they not?" said Ada, not seeing the yearning pain which deepened in the sweet eyes.

"Yes."

"Do you like Scotland, Lady Glynn?"

"No."

The tone was very calm and quiet; but something indefinable, and yet which all three girls felt, prevented any further questioning there was a little silence.

Nurse's Years of Experience

Proves Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills Best Treatment for Kidney and Stomach Troubles.

The trained nurse has even greater opportunities than the doctor himself to watch the action of medicine in specific cases.

For years the writer of this letter has been recommending the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills among her patients, and is firmly convinced that no treatment is so prompt and effective.

"This is the most valuable evidence obtainable, and we believe that all who know Mrs. Duffy will appreciate it to the full, knowing that she would not recommend anything in which she had not the fullest confidence."

Mrs. Duffy, nurse, 35 Lewis street, Toronto, writes: "I have used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills for years, and recommend them to my patients for all disorders of the kidneys, liver and stomach. In all my professional experience I have found nothing better." Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, one pill a dose, 25 cent's a box, all dealers or Edmansen, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

For cotton waists, the most favored materials are plain and fancy crepes, voile, lace and net; for silk, there are crepe de chine, chiffon, taffeta, China silk and satin.

The evening was drawing on; but the season was summer in all its beauty and warmth, so that there was no chilliness in the air to cause any discomfort. Lucie, however, gently forced Shirley to submit to be wrapped in a soft scarlet knitted shawl which they had brought, and Lady Glynn smiled and thanked her slyly; and, when Lucie sat down by her side, she took the girl's hand and held it between her little fingers—such frail, slender, almost shadowy fingers seemed as Lucie's firm hand closed over them caressingly.

"We want only some music to make this perfect," Shirley said slyly.

"Ada will sing us something," responded Lucie, smiling. "She is our nightingale, Lady Glynn. I should like you to hear her."

"I should like to hear her very much," Shirley said, in her pleasant kindly tones. "Please give me the pleasure, Miss Ada."

Ada flushed a little as she thought of singing before so critical an auditor as Lady Glynn would probably be; but she said smiling, that the little she could do was not worth asking for twice, and she began to sing in a voice clear and sweet as a silver bell, and so true that its lack of cultivation was not noticeable. The rich notes rose, sounding clearly in the soft summer twilight, and reaching the ears of a tall man in a tweed traveling-suit, who was coming swiftly and lightly down the cliff path, and who paused to listen, looking far away out to sea, as he stood midway between the sea and cliff brow, in a position which appeared perilous enough.

Takes Off Dandruff Hair Stops Falling

Girls! Try this! Makes hair thick, glossy, lustrous, beautiful—No more itching scalp.

Within ten minutes after an application of Danderine you cannot find a single trace of dandruff, or falling hair, and your scalp will not itch, but what will please you most will be after a few weeks' use, when you see new hair, fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—growing all over the scalp.

A little Danderine immediately doubles the beauty of your hair. No difference how dull, faded, brittle and scraggy, just moisten a cloth with Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair, taking one small strand at a time. The effect is amazing—your hair will be light, fluffy and wavy, and have an appearance of abundance—an incomparable lustre, softness and luxuriance.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store or toilet counter, and prove that your hair is as pretty and soft as any—that it has been neglected or injured by careless treatment—that all you surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it if you will just try a little Danderine.

Healthy and Unhealthy Lighting

Gas, it may be said, vitates the atmosphere. True. But it also helps to purify it. Its purifying power is greater than the vitating power. Electricity does not vitate, nor does it purify. Hear what three eminent men have said:

"Much evidence has lately been adduced to show that gas is more useful than the electric light in promoting efficient ventilation of air. It is for this, amongst other reasons, that gas is being frequently substituted for the electric light. The latest example is, perhaps, the Society of Medical Officers of Health, which has recently installed gas on its premises, after experience with the electric light.—Dr. Jameson B. Hurry.

He would merely add that no member who had experience of their meeting room under the old conditions could deny the improvement that had taken place since gas had been substituted for the electric light and the new system of heating and ventilation had been installed.—Dr. Reginald Duffield, before the Society of Medical Officers of Health.

I have in my mind's eye, at the moment, a hall which, in the old days, was lighted by gas, and in which a large audience could, with comfort, sit through an hour's lecture, or with pleasure through a three hours' dinner; but which, with the march of civilization, had its illumination changed from gas to electricity, the latter being employed, with all the latest refinements to effect the lighting under the best conditions, with the result that any large gathering within its walls leads to a state little short of asphyxiation.—Vivian B. Lewes, Professor of Chemistry at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich.—Nov. 14.

How to Make Children Mind.

By RUTH CAMERON.

We often wonder why one mother can control a big brood of children with apparent ease, while another is always arguing, scolding, protesting and punishing until it seems as if life must be a burden to both her and the youngsters.

Of course, there are innumerable factors which enter into each case, and yet I'm going to be bold enough to offer one suggestion (to my mind) valuable suggestion today.

A friend of mine who has a large boarding house brought his matter to my attention. She is an extremely fond of children and sometimes has several in her house at one time, as boarding houses where children are welcome are very scarce.

We were talking about a very obstreperous little boy whom she had finally been obliged to refuse to keep, and I asked her why his mother had so little control over him.

"Well, I'll tell you what I think the chief trouble is," she said. "It's that woman's voice. You know I've had a chance to watch a good many parents with their children, and I have come to believe that the one thing more important than any other in dealing with children is control of the voice and manner in speaking to them. Now this boy is a child with a good deal of that rare quality called common sense. He could easily have been trained into a delightful little boy by someone who cared to study his disposition, but his mother continually picked on him in a voice that often rose almost to a scream. I have sometimes seen the child shrink back and his face whiten when that rasping voice came ringing through the house. And there were frequent scenes of downright rebellion when my sympathies were all with the child. I felt that that voice would have made

Nelson at Trafalgar.

A blue book recently issued in London illustrates a curious trait in the English character. It is the report of a committee appointed by the Admiralty to investigate the tactics employed by Lord Nelson at the battle of Trafalgar, and the committee which consisted of two admirals, Sir Cyprian Bridge and Sir Reginald Custance, and an eminent historian, Professor C. F. Birt, has reported that the great seaman fought his last and greatest battle, not as a haphazard mele, but with superb intelligence and skill. In no other country would 138 years be allowed to pass before an official verdict of such a sort would be passed upon one of the great achievements of the nation. Yet until lately the opinion was general that the crowning mercy which saved England from the fear of invasion was a confused unsystematic, pell-mell affair, unmarked by any skill but that required by single combat. It is one more example of the "British pluck" legend, which carefully smothered all evidence of British capacity for intellectual powers and organizing ability. All of Nelson's earlier battles had been marked by conspicuous handling of his fleet as a whole. His strategy in the campaign which closed off Cape Trafalgar has been a theme of admiration ever since. It long has been known that he devoted much thought to the problem of how to manoeuvre his fleet when he found himself in Villeneuve's presence. And yet it has been declared for a century that when he saw the allied ships he flung his own upon them in a disorderly mob and won the battle by mere hard fighting. No theory could be wider of the facts. What happened was that Villeneuve's attack was not the formal advance of the drill-book, but the dash of a force which knew exactly what to do, which moved with such precision that it could disengage with grace exactness, and which fastened upon the enemy in such a way as to give every chance of victory. Nelson did not live to explain his plan; his associates took no pains to explain the manoeuvres in which they had borne a part, and a public even more ignorant of military science than that of today took the wrong view. Nelson during the weeks which preceded the battle had to contemplate leading into action no fewer than 40 ships of the line, and he expected Villeneuve to command 46, if he arranged his forty vessels in one line it would extend for several miles and be excessively awkward to manage in light winds, thick weather and the other accidents of navigation. So he formed the plan of working in two or three divisions and of bringing an overwhelming force to bear on one end of the enemy's line while the rest was kept immobilized. The second in command, Admiral Collingwood — was to throw upon twelve French and Spanish ships at one end of the allied line a division which would comprise from sixteen to twenty-four ships, with such disparity of force this isolated fragment of the enemy's line would soon be crushed. "The remainder of the enemy's fleet," wrote Nelson, "are to be left to the Management of the Commander-in-Chief, who will endeavour to take care that the movements of the Second in Command are as little interrupted as possible." Such was the plan. In the event Nelson fought the action with only 27 ships, for which some had been promised him and failed to join; one or two had returned home, and a squadron of five had been obliged at the last moment to go to Gibraltar for water, just as the ships, to-day, must replenish their stores of coal and oil. The enemy also had suffered diminutions of strength and had but 33 ships present. It is worth noting that these ships formed a single line nearly 6 land miles long. The Nelson plan was carried out. Collingwood with 15 ships gripped and destroyed Villeneuve's rear, of twelve or fifteen vessels, while Nelson, with the other 12 in his own magnificent phrase, took care that Collingwood's movements were not interrupted. "taking care" signified the furious struggle in which he fell. He had twelve ships with which to "contain" eighteen, and he so managed matters that five or six of the enemy in the van, the end of the Franco-Spanish line remote from that with which Collingwood was dealing had no enemy; hardly fired a shot, and could not get into action in time to cause it was to leeward while he struck furiously with his twelve ships the dozen or more ships of the allied centre. Thus Nelson with six fewer ships overpowered the part of the hostile fleet with superior force, matched another part with equal force, and left a third part unopposed and useless. That was as fine an example of tactics as could be desired. It was effected on a day when the wind was so light that the British ships could make only about one mile an hour. Had Nelson waited to form his two divisions and set down in regular line of battle, the day would have been far spent when he closed, and his opportunity might have slipped by. His subordinates knew what was wanted, and he sent them to the work. It was the rush of a well-drilled football team, not the drill advance of a platoon. Never was there a better example of art, of the freedom of movement which careful preliminary training gives. The result was that the people for whose security the battle was fought, misunderstood and believed that their greatest naval hero, after displaying superb skill all his life, on the greatest day of his career, committed his fleet to an unmitigated scrum. It was a singularly characteristic mistake, the English still believe that the Spanish Armada was defeated by hair-brained accidents, whereas it really failed because the English fleet was larger, had better ships, had more cannon, and had better trained men. The English have a strange and dangerous gift of undervaluing their own brain-power, and of concealing the intellectual element in their successes. Montreal Gazette.

Fashions and Fads.

Many new suits show the tunic skirt. There is a flare in all the new coats. The proper afternoon blouse is of white satin. All bodices effect vest, bolero or peasant lines. All bodices will be very loose fitting and bloused. Yokes are a feature of many of the new garmets. All gowns show an increasing fullness in the skirts. Novel and chic are hats of straw and colored cotton crepe. Smart women are wearing velvet hats in rich tones of red. Fashion promises a variety of silk cordings and braid ornaments. Young women are wearing scarfs and muffs of beaver and squirrel. Frocks of blue serge promise to be fashionable for early spring. In neckwear, the soft, simple, low-neck styles will predominate. Exceedingly fashionable are the drop ornaments of every variety. Very new are the hats of tan straw trimmed with a touch of fur. The girlish ends of evening gowns are finished with long bead tassels. The newest handbags are of silk and should match the suit in color. The jaunty outing hat is trimmed with broad, full feather quills. Baroque necklaces of colored beads and odd-shaped lozenges are a fad. The fashionable costume is adorned with a flat band of pearls or billiants. Blouses and dresses will be made of a wonderful white broche crepe that washes. Newest waists have the peplum, coat tails, and duffles showing outside the skirt. There is a notable absence of the all-black costume and the black-and-white hat. Jeweled lines are among the popular evening ornaments for day and evening wear. Printed materials will be very much used, not only in silks, such as crepe de chine, radium, and taffeta, but in cotton fabrics, including cotton crepes, voiles, ratines and various bayadere weaves.

Railway Loans Spent.

According to the statement tabled early in the week by the Minister of Finance, the Railway Loans have been expended. The loans of 1910 and 1912 realized $5,432,788. The contractor has been paid $4,273,636 on regular construction at the rate of $15,000 a mile, and $732,126 on account of extras. All told, the Government has paid the contractor on the certificate of the Engineer $5,005,762. There were, however, awards for right of way in connection with the five railway branches, which appear to have eaten up the balance. In answer to Mr. Kent's query as to the balance now to the credit of the loan, the Minister of Finance tabled this reply: "Both loans expended for Railway Construction on Certificate of Government Engineer and Railway Arbitration Awards as authorized under Railway Acts." All the money is gone, and the branch lines are far from finished.

An Empire Builder.

In the passing of Lord Strathcona, the Empire has lost one of its grand old men, whose figure loomed large in the Empire expansion of the Victorian epoch. He was born in 1820, when George III. was King, and served his King and Country under five Kings and one Queen. In his early days he was a factor of the Hudson Bay Company at Rigolet, on the Labrador, and later became a resident Governor of the Corporation and held that office when the territories were taken over by the Dominion. He also served his country in a legislative and administrative capacity for many years. For the past 17 or 18 years he represented the Dominion of Canada in London as High Commissioner. One of his most notable acts was the raising and maintaining of the Strathcona Horse during the South African War. His like we shall likely never see again.

At the House

When the session opened yesterday the adjourned debate on the Address in Reply was resumed. Following the disposal of the question papers, bills were introduced and read a first time as follows:—

A bill relating to the inspection of Goods in the city of St. John's.

A bill to amend the "Newfoundland Dental Act"; and a bill to amend the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals law.

Supply was granted to His Majesty, and on the morrow the House will go into Committee on the Estimates.

The Address in Reply was then taken up and a scathing and effective criticism made by MR. KENT. He opened his speech on the agricultural policy of the Government, which policy was proceeding in a retrograde way. He showed by statistics that the policy was mainly inaugurated to encourage our people to grow their own vegetables, raise their own crops and so reduce the importation. He fishery question. In a lucid manner he showed that the high price for fish was due in a large measure to the efforts of the Fishermen's Union. He emphasized that white good prices were got for fish now, there was a possibility that in the universal cry for lower goods, fish would also decrease proportionately. Mr. Kent then referred to the unwarranted reports of Socialism circulated in an attempt to injure the Opposition. He described Socialism as a bugaboo. Unionism meant the promotion of private interests of men. Socialism the very reverse. Mr. Kent then dealt with our bait fishes and referred to the imperative need for their protection. There were numerous occasions when the fishing grounds were toteming with fish and our fishermen were unable to catch them owing to lack of bait. He elucidated the necessity of the establishment of bait depots, and in further dealing with the fishery question pointed out that our conditions and the fishery generally would be best conserved by the appointment of Consular Agents abroad. Mr. Kent then discussed the coal question and the proposed visit of Pro. Dunsan, who was coming here in the very near future to look into our coal areas and see the possibilities of developing them. This was a useless expenditure, the speaker claimed, as the exploration stage had been passed and development should follow, as it had been demonstrated time and again that the coal existed there. He then referred to the vacant seats of Minister of Justice and Minister of Agriculture and Mines. He claimed that both these offices should be represented in the Assembly and that the Premier was establishing a precedent by not having them represented. Mr. Kent then moved an amendment to the Address that after the word Legislature the Address should read as follows:—

"We, however, regret that measures were not adopted, previous to the meeting of the Legislature, so that the Departments of Justice and Agriculture and Mines might be represented in the Legislative Assembly by their proper Ministers, responsible for the administration of these Departments, respectively, and they trust that the usual constitutional procedure will be adopted at once where they will be so represented during the remainder of the present session of the Legislature."

MR. DEVEREAUX, who has been a Commissioner of Agriculture for the past five years at a salary of $1,800 a year, besides other odds and ends in the way of pickings, then spoke and, of course, lauded the Government to the skies, which was a natural thing for him to do. He attempted to point out how unwise the establishment of a model farm would be and gave his reason that with the existence of a model farm the sons of the man of means would get all the benefit and nobody else would get anything. He went on to tell of all the improvements in agriculture that had taken place since the Government came in power first, but very conveniently omitted to say whether it was the many thousands he got since his appointment as Commissioner. He terminated his farrago of nonsense and untruths by telling that the policy of the Government was entirely non-political. This statement elicited some laughter and the Speaker had to call order.

MR. DWYER, the doughty member for St. John's East, followed in a clear and convincing speech, tearing to atoms the agricultural policy of the Government. Mr. Dwyer has been a practical farmer all his lifetime and consequently his discourse was a practical one. In simple yet comprehensive style Mr. Dwyer unravelled the remarks of the previous speaker, resulting in that hon. member being held up to laughter and ridicule.

Continuing he showed up in explicit form how we are paying more for the promotion and betterment of agriculture than they are paying in Canada, where wonders are being accomplished in the direction referred to, whereas here in St. John's we have political hooligans drawing fat salaries and no results whatever accomplished, and still it goes on. He referred to all the pamphlets and literature that had been issued by the Government and the useless expenditures connected therewith. In his opinion the proper way to teach agriculture was by object lessons and not by literature.

MR. DOWNEY, another Commissioner of Agriculture, and paid a big salary by the Government, then got on his feet. He got nervous and ashamed of himself at first, because it is a well known fact that this "agricultural expert" is most in evidence when he comes to draw his salary. He got off a lengthy prepared speech that was remarkable for all the words it contained, but was making the best of a bad defence. He did his best in so far as saying good things about the Government's agricultural policy was concerned. Both he and Devereaux are in the running for Minister of Agriculture, and opinions varied yesterday as to which of the two said the most nice things in connection with the agricultural cod.

Mr. Lloyd seconded Mr. Kent's amendment, and in so doing discounted the force and vim of the speeches of the Agricultural Commissioners, who had preceded him and who in reality were attacking the Government in reporting to the Colonial Office on the resources of Crown Colonies on the information already collected in these colonies. The benefit of Prof. Dunstan's visit would be in the collecting of Mr. Howley's reports and the transfer of them to the bulletins of the Imperial Institute, not in coal exploration and boring. He dwelt on the shortage in the revenue, the expenditure of the loan and the fact that the Government had practically exhausted the railway loan and had no cash worth while to go on with for railway construction this year, and this pointed to a loan, not forthcoming in the Speech from the Throne. After speaking forty minutes, the debate was adjourned and Mr. Lloyd will resume his criticisms on Thursday.

St. Andrew's "At Home."

At a recent meeting of St. Andrew's Society, at which Mr. J. Browning presided, it was decided to hold an "At Home" on the 26th inst. The affair will be held at the New Club Rooms in the Smallwood Building and will commemoate "Burns' Night" as well as the formal opening of the new quarters which have been splendidly furnished and are in every way up to date. The musical programme will be under the direction of Mr. A. G. Gibb, and a committee of lady friends of the Society will attend to the catering. A cordial welcome is extended to all Scotsmen and prospective members.

M.I.A. Debate.

A very interesting discussion took place at last night's meeting of the Mutual Improvement Association. The subject for debate was: "Do the St. John's Brigades provide the best training for our boys?" Mr. H. R. Brookes, the President of the Association acted as Chairman. The affirmative side was led by Messrs. Charles Brookes, W. T. Joyce and H. C. Hill; while Messrs. D. Watson, James Carmichael and W. Thomson supported the negative. When the votes were taken up, a large majority decided in favour of the negative.

When the young King, then Prince of Siam turned his back upon the beauties of the court and would have none of them, he established a record of celibacy unheard of in that far Eastern land.

Now marriage by a Siamese sovereign means not the simple taking of one life-partner, but the complicated and interesting absorption of a hundred of them.

The late King Chulalongkorn possessed three spouses when he was Crown Prince; this number he increased to five-score when he ascended the throne; his father before him had many hundreds of wives.

The action of the present young monarch is therefore all the more astounding to the Siamese mind.

And yet the Siamese ladies are among the most beautiful of women. They are pleasant companions, loyal and make ideal wives, and surely a hundred or even fifty of them combined ought to be able to satisfy even the most fastidious and exacting of husbands.

And still young King Vajiravudh refuses to wed! A feasible reason might be that he had formed some attachment, lawful or otherwise, while he was on travel and study Neither did any amatory episode come to light during his visits to Paris, Berlin, Madrid, Vienna and London, when he was at the most impressionable of ages.

Not a word during his trip through the United States.

Prince Vajiravudh, during his sojourn abroad, became deeply imbued with the Western idea of monogamy, and since he is to marry but one wife, he desires a very pearl among women as his only spouse. And if he acts towards her as he acts in all other matters pertaining to his country and to himself, he will make his queen the most envied bride in the country.

The lucky lady of his choice, by the way, will be the bride of a pleasant-looking young man of thirty-four, who graduated at Oxford and Heidelberg, is a delightful conversationalist, speaks and writes several European and Asiatic languages, has written well in prose and poetry, is a good horseman, fencer, and all-round sportsman.

Ever since the days of King Mongkut a very sociable and charming colony of Europeans and Americans has been established in the capital. There are half a dozen clubs within a few miles of the city, and this increasing social element needs a leader, and who so appropriate as the queen?

But the King of Siam looks for more than this in his white wife: he needs her help to carry out the stupendous ideas he holds for his country's and his people's welfare.

Already, in the three years he has set upon the throne, the King has shown what stuff he is made of. He has carried out the wishes of his father in affairs of state and religion; he has altered an entirely changed when he considered necessary; he has pressed many young men into new positions. Prince Paribatra, the present Ambassador at Washington, is only thirty, and also graduate of an English university.

At his coronation he in as many words declared to his Western friends: "Whatever I may have gained from the West I shall employ upon the East, but my people must remain essentially Siamese."

To help him to elevate his subjects is why Vajiravudh desires a white woman as his bride; to help him to make his nation recognized among the greater nations of the world as one of more than local and Eastern import only.

LADIES' CURLING.—Mrs. John Harvey won Mrs. Hush Baird's match yesterday. Mrs. Clift came second, and Mrs. C. Harvey, third. Mrs. Davidson won the junior prize presented by Miss Gwendolyn Mann.

DIED.
On January 21st, Mary Ann Mahan, relict of the late James Cochrane, leaving one son, four daughters and a sister to mourn her sad loss, passed away on Friday, at 2.30 p.m., from her residence, 28 Goodview Street.

Try a few Fine Tree Lozenges for that annoying itching in the throat. They'll quickly banish it. Price 25c. for box containing nearly fifty.

THE VENTURES.—The Adventure, Bonaventure and Bellaventure will each make a trip to Sydney for coal cargoes before being put in readiness for the sealfishery.

Five Big Pictures At the Crescent.

As a holiday bill the Crescent Picture Palace has made elaborate preparation, five pictures, all features in themselves, will be shown at the sessions this evening and night.
"Mental Suicide" a Rex drama entailing very interesting situations that most hold the attention of the patrons. "The Cook Question," a very satire. "Views of Cape Hateras," another very interesting picture. Following those is "The Range Deadline" a western story that promises much—one of the best stories of its kind ever illustrated in the city. Another picture, "A Passionish Bet," that is abundantly supplied with comedy, will be one that is sure to make a laugh.
Mr. David Parks, the pleasing baritone, is sustaining the popularity won by him since coming to Newfoundland. To-day he sings "Melody Chimes."
The Crescent will not depart from its usual sessions and prices, which are held every afternoon and night. Evenings, 2.30. Night, 7.15.

An Error of Trouters.

Boys who frequent the ponds daily skating and playing hockey should watch where they are going. Despite the fact that the ice generally is strong enough to bear a regiment of soldiers, there are certain spots or holes made in some of the ponds by trout, who, either through neglect or otherwise, forget to put a mark or signal over the opened places after finishing their day's fishing. This should not occur and the practice remedied.

Shipwrecked Crew

Of Ill-Fated Vessel Bantsee. The shipwrecked crew of the ill-fated schooner Bantsee, numbering seven, will, it is expected, arrive here about this day fortnight. The British steamer Cornishman, which took off the crew of the fish carrier, when the latter was abandoned in mid-ocean, will bring the men to Liverpool where the steamer was bound from Portland, Maine. She will, in all probability, reach Liverpool to-morrow. In that event it is more than likely that the crew will take passage by the Furness Line steamer, which is set down to leave Liverpool on Saturday next and should arrive here two weeks hence, from this date, as mentioned.

Train Service.

The railway service that was so seriously interrupted by the recent storm, is now in operation and it is expected that all the trains will be on schedule to-day.
The local train from Carbonear arrived at 5.20 p.m. yesterday, and the regular express went out at 6 p.m.
The Placentia and Trepansey lines are now in working order.

Yesterday gangs of men were employed, and plows were at work on all branches of the system and the road is now clear.

Varicose Veins and Itching Piles

Usually Arise From Same Cause—Relief and Cure Effected by Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Nearly everybody knows of Dr. Chase's Ointment as the most effective treatment for piles, or hemorrhoids, that medical science has been able to compound. So much suffering, and misery arises from this ailment that one is not long in telling his friends when he has found an actual cure. This accounts for the enormous sales of Dr. Chase's Ointment.
This letter tells of relief from the suffering of varicose veins by the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment. Many suffer from this trouble not knowing the comfort to be obtained by the use of this great soothing ointment.
Mrs. R. J. Evans, 187 Munro street, Toronto, writes: "We have used Dr. Chase's Ointment for years. I have been troubled with varicose veins, and find it the only thing that gives relief. For every purpose where a soothing, healing ointment is needed there is nothing so good as Dr. Chase's Ointment." 60 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanston, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

The Mayflower's Crew

Arrive at Fishguard. The brig, Mayflower, Capt. Halfyard, on the way to Bahia from this port was abandoned in mid-ocean on January 16th, and her crew were rescued by the Lusitania and brought to Fishguard, as will be seen by the public despatch elsewhere in this issue. The Mayflower was 43 years old and was engaged the whole time in the Newfoundland trade, being owned by E. Duder previous to her purchase by her late owners A. Goodridge and Sons. On the passage the sum of $1,700 was contributed by the passengers of the Lusitania to be divided amongst the rescuers and rescued. The vessel carried a crew of eight men, whose friends will learn with joy of their timely rescue.

Chicago Woman Court Fighter.

Holds Record of Eighty-Five Times in Court Last Year.

Chicago, Jan. 13.—What is believed to be a record for almost continuous appearance in court as a plaintiff or complaining witness. The police and lawyers of South Chicago are beginning to look upon her as a familiar figure in the courtroom and predict her record for 1914 will exceed that of last year.

On the last occasion Mrs. Kallawak was fined $5 and costs, making $13.50 in all, for attempting to collect rent from Mrs. Mary Pruck, No. 8347 Bond avenue, at the point of a revolver. A year ago Mrs. Kallawak was arrested for running a saloon without a license. Her husband had been in the saloon business, and the widow attempted to continue the business in her own name.

Later she was arrested for having a dog without a license, and in various other ways managed to take up the time of the court.

Mrs. Kallawak is forty-three years old and militant and declares that she will continue her legal fights against her enemies until justice has been meted out.

Each "Pape's Diapepsin" digests 2000 grains food, ending all stomach misery in five minutes.

Time! Pape's Diapepsin will digest anything you eat and overcome a sour, gassy or "out-of-order" stomach surely within five minutes.

If your meals don't fit comfortably, or what you eat lies like a lump of lead in your stomach, or if you have heartburn, that is a sign of indigestion.

Get from your Pharmacist a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and take a dose just as soon as you can. There will be no "sour" risings, no belching of undigested food mixed with acid, no stomach gas or heartburn, nausea, debilitating headaches, dizziness or intestinal griping. This will all go, and, besides, there will be no sour food left over in the stomach, so poison your breath with nauseous odors.

A Mammoth Telescope

The contract for the tube of the greatest telescope in the world has been let by the Canadian Government to the Warner and Swazey Company, of Cleveland, Ohio. It has been reported that the telescope was to be erected in Ottawa, but according to Professor McLeod, of the McGill University, the site has not yet been fixed. Mr. W. F. King, C.M.G., LL.D., chief astronomer of the Department of the Interior, and Superintendent of the Geodetic Survey of Canada, is investigating the matter, taking into consideration atmospheric and other conditions that bear upon the usefulness of the great instrument. It is said that a site in British Columbia is favored and that the telescope will be erected there. Eighteen months will be required to build the tube and complete it for installation in the observatory, which will have to be erected to house it. The Warner and Swazey Company built the Hale telescope, which was finished in 1887, the object glass of which is 36 inches in diameter, and in 1898 the Yerkes telescope, which is the largest in the world, was completed with an object glass of 40 inches. The new telescope for the Canadian Government will be just twice the size of the Hale, having an object glass with a diameter of 72 inches.—The Western.

Foremost Reporter Of Modern Times

Witness: No. 1, January 1914. In a lecture on "The Citizen and the Press," at Cornell University, Dr. Franklin Matthews, of the faculty staff of the Columbia University School of Journalism, characterized Captain Robert F. Scott, who lost his life in his Antarctic Polar expedition as the "foremost reporter of modern times."
Scott, said the speaker, was both a reporter and a discoverer, and though Scott and the world never realized it, Scott's message deserved from England as high a monument as Nelson's," he declared. Mr. Matthews quoted Scott's dying words: "These rough notes and our dead bodies must tell the tale of a true epitome of the spirit of modern journalism."

A Word

FOR THE KING GEORGE THE FIFTH INSTITUTE.

[For The Evening Telegram.] It is a very pleasant duty to me to say a word, through the columns of your popular journal, on behalf of this most useful institution, which so well merits the patronage of all classes in this community. For myself I may say that I have been a frequent visitor to the Institute during the past year, setting my meals there occasionally and in all cases the courteous manager and his able staff of assistants have commended themselves to the kindly feeling and best wishes of their numerous patrons. The building is an excellent structure, laid out in every respect to suit the purpose for which it was intended. The meals are very nicely prepared, and having due regard to costs and expenses, they are as good as any reasonable person can desire, and the waiters are all politeness and affability when attending to their respective duties. The building is sufficiently large for breathing space, and are all very airy and comfortable with a sufficiency of light and heat for all purposes. The Billiard Room is a splendid resort for young people and, to the credit of the management, it may be observed that there is a very remarkable absence of any annoyance or unpleasant feeling in this department. In fact it is not too much to say, in a general way, that the management of the Institute is faultless. It would be a somewhat significant thing to find the equal of Mr. Jones, who is an ideal manager, firm in his adhesion to the principles upon which the Institute is formed, never manifesting a dominant or overbearing disposition, but ruling with patience and forbearance without doing violence to the higher laws governing human conduct.

—R.P.

Winter Night.

When winter and wild weather, when we are all together, about the glowing fire! Let frost be ever so stinging, it can't disturb our singing, nor can the Storm King's ire. The winds may in a d d y mosey, they only make more cozy the home where we abide; the snow may drift in billows, but we have downy pillows, and good warm beds inside. The night indeed has terrors for lonely, lost wayfarers who for assistance call; who pray for lights to guide them—the lights that are denied them—may God protect them all! And to the poor who grovel in wretched hut and hovel, and feel its icy breath, who mark the long hours dragging their footsteps slow and lagging, the night seems kin to Death. For cheery homes be grateful, when Winter, fierce and fateful, comes shrieking in the night; for books and easy rockers, for larders filled and lockers, and all the warmth and light.

Poisoned Wife and Children.

Frankfort-On-Main, Jan. 13.—The plea of "not guilty" was entered, today by Carl Hopf, the local druggist, when brought up for trial charged with killing his two children, his father and his first wife, by administering poison, and with attempting to commit similar crimes on his second and third wives and another person. The accused admitted that he had given a poisonous drug to his three wives, ostensibly as a means of improving their looks. To his third wife he had also given fever germs, but she escaped death owing to the vigilance of the doctor. The three women had been insured by the prisoner for $5,000, $7,500 and $20,000, respectively, and each of them fell seriously ill within a year after her marriage to the accused. Hopf gave various explanations for the presence of the poison in the bodies of his victims. His wife, he said, had taken it as an ingredient in a beauty compound, and he had injected the drug into the bodies of his children in order partially to embalm them before burial. Among the germs found in possession of the prisoner were those of typhoid, cholera and tuberculosis.

Free Lunches in Church.

To the Congregational Church of Cincinnati, of which the Rev. Arthur Kelly is pastor, belongs the credit of establishing the first free lunch for worshippers. Soup, coffee, sandwiches, and cakes are followed by the sermon, and those without a lodging for the night may snooze for a few hours by day in the cozy plush pews. According to Mr. Kelly, the American churches can learn from the schools which give the scholars a free breakfast, and from the public-house keepers in the United States, who give free meals from mid-day till supper-time.

Mr. Kelly argues that the public-house keepers really know men, and a great many preachers do not. He believes that the majority of men, especially the poorest, go to the public house not so much to drink, but because they find warmth, cheer and food. "To compete with the public-house, I serve a better lunch," said Mr. Kelly.—Daily Telegraph.

Some Good Advice.

"Why do you go on suffering from the intolerable itching and general discomfort of that eczema you told me about; why don't you do as I did?" "What did you do?" "I went to my Druggist, and he recommended me to try Zylex, a new Ointment which he said had done remarkable work in the cure of Eczema. At any rate it cured me." "I'll try Zylex, then." Zylex is sold by all druggists at 50 cents a box. Zylex Soap, 25 cents a cake.—Jan 14, eod, tf

Fight It Out.

Does Destruction seem to lurk All about? Don't believe it! Go to work! Fight it out! Danger often turns and flies From a steady pair of eyes; Ruin always camps apart From an undefeatable heart. In the spirit there is much— Do not doubt— That the world can never touch— Fight it out! Do the portals of your brain Freedom lack? Never let them thus remain— Push them back! Do not give the efforts o'er, If they number half a score; When a hundred of them fall, Then a thousand might prevail. Germs beneath a cloud must lie, Ere they sprout; You may blossom, by-an-bye— Fight it out! Have you foemen come to stay? Never flinch; Make them win their little way, Inch by inch! Scan them well, and fight them fair. Give them honest blows to spare; There are meaner things possessed Than a first-class second-best. Time may come when you have turned— To a rout Every triumph they have earned— Fight it out! All the lessons of the time Teach us fair, 'Tis a blunder and a crime To despair! When we suffer, 'tis to bless Other moments with success; From our losses we may trace Something better in their place. Everything in earth and sky Seems to shout, Don't give up until you die— Fight it out!" —Will Carleton.

Is Geo. Chip Another Ketchell?

Sensational Career of Scranton Miner Recalls Deeds of Meteoric Middleweight Champion.

George Chip, the Scranton (Pa.) boxer who knocked out Frank Klaus twice in two months, is called the best middleweight since Stanley Ketchell. When Klaus was knocked out the first time by Chip he was considered the middleweight champion by virtue of his defeat of Billy Papke in Paris, for upon Papke's shoulders had fallen the title when Ketchell was killed. Chip fought his first ring battle in New Castle Pa. in 1909, knocked out George Gill in two rounds, and followed this by knocking out the next four men to face him, none of the fights going over four rounds. Since that day Chip has met every middleweight of any account, and Jack Dillon, of Indianapolis, is the only man who has bothered him to any extent. Dillon and Chip have had several victories and defeats as the result of these meetings, and it is doubtful if the Hoosier boxer was within the middleweight limit in his bouts with Chip.

One thing that recommends Chip to the fans is that he isn't running around claiming the title. He says he is ready to meet any man who will make 158 pounds and he will doubtless participate in the elimination contest to be staged by Uncle Tom Carey at Vernon, Cal., to produce a real middleweight champion.

Chip became a boxer as the result of violating a Pennsylvania law, which makes it a prison offense to assault a man under ground. Chip about eight years ago knocked out a mine boss while working as mule driver and fled from Scranton to New Castle to escape arrest. In New Castle he fell in with the veteran Jimmy Dime who brought him to his present fistic eminence. He was born in North Scranton in 1888. His father is George Chipulois, a Polish miner.

Chip stands five feet eight inches in height and his normal weight is 162, but he makes 158 with ease. He is not clever upon his feet; in fact, he is awkward, but Dime, realizing that the boy carried a knockout in either hand (and this is literally true), taught him to hit upon any position his hands or body happened to be in, and this ability compensates for the lack of footwork.

Chip has a peculiar punch, which has won several fights. He starts either hand for vulnerable point and stopping it suddenly, shoots the other hand, this "delayed punch" as it has been called, and incorrectly described heretofore, put Klaus to sleep twice and knocked out several other boxers.

To Make Men Behave.

Denver Women Start Crusade Against Expectorators and Mashers. Denver, Colorado, Jan. 12.—More men in Denver start the new year facing a lot of trouble as a result of a campaign that Mrs. Aime V. Lafferty has started. She is enlisting other club women in her crusade against expectorating, profanity, vulgar words, flirting, goo-goo eyes.

Mrs. Lafferty proposes to have the club women station themselves on downtown corners and "call" any man who is guilty of any one of these offences, and in more pronounced cases to have the offender arrested and appear against him in municipal court.

She proposes to see to it that a woman may walk the streets without her ears being shocked with vile language or her skirts soiled with tobacco juice.

Rough Trip.

The Furness Liner Durango, Capt. Chambers, arrived in port at 7 o'clock this morning from Halifax after one of the stormiest trips in the ship's experience. She was four and a half days on the passage. In the vicinity of Cape Race a N. E. hurricane raged. The Durango got the full force of it and received a bad drubbing, everything movable being swept from the decks. The weather was intensely cold and the crew were unable to get about, as usual owing to the decks being coated with ice. This morning when the ship arrived she was encased in ice. She brought a part cargo.

THE POSITION IN ULSTER--A WARNING

(By the Rt. Rev. C. F. D'Arcy, Bishop of Down.)

You ask me to give some impressions of the state of things here. I do so with some reluctance, as it has always been my rule to practise restraint in relation to political controversies. But, for us in Ulster, Home Rule is not an ordinary political question, and I feel that to decline such an invitation would be to shirk a very plain, and a very urgent, duty.

The district throughout which my work extends includes the city of Belfast and the adjacent counties of Down and Antrim. This territory is the very focus of the life of Ulster. It contains a population of 783,000 persons, of whom three out of every four are Protestants, and includes the principal industrial areas of Ireland. These people form a true democracy. The vast majority of them are of the working classes. They are keenly intelligent and very practical, great workers, and very shrewd and "canny." Their standard of education is the highest in Ireland, and their proportion of pauperism is the lowest. In this last respect the city of Belfast stands ahead of all other cities in the United Kingdom. Unlike the people of Southern Ireland, the Ulster folk are somewhat slow of speech, cautious, and sparing in emotion. They are not easily carried away, and generally say much less than they mean. But in character they are very strong, very dogged, very determined. My duties take me continually throughout the territory I have mentioned, and bring me constantly into close relationship with people of all classes. I may therefore venture to say that I have exceptional opportunities of forming an opinion as to the real mind of the community in which I live and work.

One Overmastering Idea.

Having said so much by way of explanation, let me hasten to add that the state of things here at the present time is such that it is impossible to convey any impression of it to the minds of people in England, where circumstances are so utterly different. What we have here at present is a people possessed by one overmastering idea, moved by one supreme determination. That determination is expressed in a simple phrase, uttered by the late Duke of Abercorn at the great Ulster Convention in 1893, and which has ever since been the watchword of Ulster: "We will not have Home Rule." Englishmen, accustomed to the continual efforts of politicians to create together. There can be no doubt that the volunteer movement has proved a great blessing in Ulster. Some fifteen months ago we felt as if we were living in the neighbourhood of a powder magazine which might blow up at any moment. Unhappily events which I need not recall more explicitly produced terribly strained feelings in the public mind. Every effort was made by all who possessed any influence or authority to calm the popular excitement. But we all realized that only the utmost self-control could avert awful disasters. Then came the signing of the Covenant and the work of quiet, steady organization which it involved. After the Covenant came the great volunteer movement. The whole constituted a long course of discipline. With discipline has come order and the sense of solidarity. In Ulster to-day there is the consciousness of union, and of the strength which union bestows. There is a growing appreciation of the mischief which would be wrought by riot or disorder of any kind. Hence the settled, quiet resolution which is restraining all extravagance in Ulster at the present moment.

No Slackening.

But let none imagine that this quietness means any slackening in determination. The many things said and done on the other side which are felt in Ulster to be bitter and provoking have all their full effect. But that effect is of quite another sort from what it would have been more than a year ago. Quite recently the Prime Minister made a speech which, rightly or wrongly, was regarded here as a challenge and a threat. Little was said, but thousands, who had before held aloof, rushed to enrol themselves as volunteers. Every unwise or unfair speech or action on the part of those who promote Home Rule is followed by a further development in the strength and efficiency of the Ulster forces. If ever a people were held together by a firm, unalterable determination, it is the people of Ulster at the present time.

Deepening Religious Conviction.

Further, it is a striking fact that this movement has not been accompanied by a real deepening of religious conviction. The churches are thronged. Huge congregations, in which men frequently outnumber women, attend Sunday after Sunday. A great mission in all the churches of Belfast came to an end last week. The missionaries were most careful to preserve its spiritual character and to avoid all allusion to the political situation. Yet it was widely felt that the remarkable success of the mission, and the deep feelings which it evoked, were closely connected with the solemn sense of responsibility pervading a people who have pledged themselves to risk all that they possess in maintaining a heritage which is dearer than life itself. When the Covenant was signed last year, the Home Rule newspapers were filled with ridicule of a proceeding which they derided as a solemn farce. But that Covenant is to-day, in the mind of every Ulsterman who signed it, a bond of the most solemn obligation. The enrolling of the volunteers, and the continual drilling and organizing, are but the natural and necessary consequence of the signing of the Covenant. It is too little realized in England that half a million Ulstermen and Ulsterwomen are bound by the Covenant to stand by one another in resisting Home Rule by every necessary means, and in refusing to recognize the authority of a Home Rule Parliament if it be forced upon Ulster. From that solemn undertaking there will be no going back. The pledges have been given by each to the others, and it unites the whole body in a bond of the strongest kind. There was a legend current in some English newspapers that this device of the Covenant was artfully sprung upon an excited people after they had been intoxicated by the eloquence of fiery orators, and that when wisdom came with cooler judgment the Covenant would be quietly dropped. No representation could be farther from the facts. The Covenant was most carefully considered by some of the calmest and most judicial brains in the kingdom; it was signed by great numbers of the most cautious men of affairs and of business (among others, by the late Lord Macnaghten, Senior Judge of the highest court in the land), and it was adopted by the mass of Ulster men and women, without excitement and without wavering, because it expressed their deepest convictions and their most firm determination.

Reasons for Strong Feeling.

Why, it may be asked, do Ulster people feel so strongly on this subject? To answer that question fully it would be necessary to go back to 1690. It must suffice to point out that in 1836, and again in 1893, the battle against Home Rule was fought and won. The conviction that to be ruled by a Dublin Parliament would be an intolerable evil is no new thing. It was strong in 1836, it was stronger in 1893, it is strongest of all to-day. In England it often happens that a proposal which is rejected at first as most mischievous is, after a long spell of agitation and consideration, accepted as inevitable—generally with some degree of compromise or adaptation. English people are inclined to say: "The agitation for Home Rule has been going on a long time; something must be done. Compromise and make the best of it." That attitude is impossible to Ulster in relation to Home Rule. The longer the agitation for Home Rule continues, the more inflexible becomes the determination of Ulster never to submit to it. And the reason is quite obvious. To us here, though Englishmen often fail to see it, Home Rule means the subjection of Ulster to a domination that Ulster people regard with the utmost antipathy. To anyone who knows the mind and character of the people here it is perfectly clear that, even if by some miracle Home Rule were established, and Ulster induced to profess submission, the arrangement could not possibly continue. The people of Ulster know this. By instinct and tradition, arising out of a long history, they know the impossibility of what is demanded of them. And they wonder at the blindness of their kinsmen in England and Scotland.

Danger of Civil War.

Is civil war within the bounds of possibility? Yes, most certainly, if an attempt is made to impose Home Rule on Ulster by force. And that is the only way in which it could be imposed. The danger of the present situation is that the Government may strain the patience of Ulster too far, and so precipitate a catastrophe. It is almost unthinkable that any modern Government should try to impose by force upon a population of a million industrious, law-abiding people a domination which they believe would be destructive of all that they hold dear. It cannot be possible that the present British Government have any such intention. But the strain may reach breaking-point before the people of England have been fully awakened to their danger. It is thus that civil wars always begin. Once begun, none can tell what the end may be. From every Ulster household, and in every Ulster church, heartfelt prayers are continually ascending that this most dreadful disaster may be averted. But it never occurs to any Ulsterman to sacrifice his principles and yield. That is unthinkable, impossible. The Church Family Newspaper.

Did Child Wake Up Cross Or Feverish

Look Mother! If tongue is coated give "California Syrup of Figs" to clean the bowels.

Mother! Your child isn't naturally cross and peevish. See if tongue is coated; this is a sure sign its little stomach, liver and bowels need a cleansing at once. When listless, pale, feverish, full of cold, breath bad, throat sore, doesn't eat, sleep or act naturally, has stomach-ache, diarrhoea, remember, a gentle liver and bowel cleansing should always be the first treatment given.

Nothing equals "California Syrup of Figs" for children's ills; give a teaspoonful, and in a few hours all the foul waste, sour bile and fermenting food which is clogged in the bowels passes out of the system, and you have a well and playful child again. All children love this harmless, delicious "fruit laxative," and it never fails to effect a good "inside" cleansing. Directions for babies; children of all ages and grown-ups are plainly on the bottle.

Keep it handy in your home. A little given to-day saves a sick child to-morrow, but get the genuine. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," then look and see that it is made by the "California Fig Syrup Company." Counterfeits are being sold here. Don't be fooled!

Children's colored wash dresses are of cotton crepe, voiles, satines and plain colored linens, chainstays and plaques. The longwaisted effect is as much favored as ever.

Eccentric Widows.

That a woman should voluntarily imprison herself in her home for fifty years, refusing to cross the threshold, and wear widow's weeds for half a century in memory of her husband, seems almost incredible. Such was the form of mourning, however, adopted by a lady living in the center of a Scotch provincial town.

Married when a little over twenty her husband suddenly expired on the wedding day, just after they had entered their home. The girl refused to pass out of the door through which she had entered as a bride, received no visitors, and the only place where she could be seen was in her garden. She tenanted the back rooms in the house, and anyone looking through the front windows could see only two tolerably-seized parlours exactly alike, with Turkey carpets in the middle of the floor, high-backed chairs all around, the fire-screens papered up on each side of the grate. In spite, however of her incarceration, she seems to have survived all her friends and relatives.

The story is told by Sir W. Robertson Nicoll, to "A Bookman's letter," and he supplements it with another concerning a home which had a still more remarkable tale attached to it. This house was tenanted by a widow whose husband when he married her kept her in close confinement in an upper room for over ten years. The husband, who was a scientific recluse, gave out that she was dead, married again, and actually told his second wife before he died that she married him she must submit to some disagreeable restrictions, as he had made up his mind never to leave the town in which he resided. There could not, therefore, be a bridal tour. The lady agreed, and she was treated with great kindness and allowed occasionally to leave home, though her husband never accompanied her in any of her excursions.

Ultimately the vault in which the remains of his first wife were supposed to be deposited was opened in consequence of some necessary repairs. It was then found that the supposed corpse was a wax figure, and in order to avoid the suspicion of murder the husband produced his first wife from the upper floor where he had kept her confined. The dread of consequence however, brought about his sudden death. The second wife quietly removed to the Continent with her children, while the first wife spent the remainder of her days in the house playing cards and gossiping.

Are Big Ships Unlucky?

AFTER READING THIS ARTICLE YOU WILL SAY "YES."

While the passenger prefers the biggest vessel he can get a berth in the case is quite the reverse with the seafaring man. Any old salt would sooner take a job on a five thousand ton than on a fifty thousand tonner.

This is rather odd, for, after all, bigness is only a relative quality. Our grandfathers would have looked on the five thousand ship with far more awe than we regard the Emperor, the big German liner, which caught fire only a few days ago; while our grandchildren will probably look back at the latter as a mere cockleshell.

Be that as it may, there is something to be said for the salt-water superstition that the big ships of their time are the unlucky ones. You may go right back to 1782, when the Royal George, the biggest unit of our Navy at that date, sunk at her moorings at Spithead, with a death roll of nearly a thousand.

Then there was the Great Eastern as notoriously unlucky a vessel as ever built. Brunel and Scott Russell planned her in 1852, but she was never finished till 1859. Then there was a terrible job to launch her.

She had hardly left the Thames when a steam pipe exploded killing seven, and injuring many others. She did not sail again till the following year, when she met a fearful gale in the Atlantic. Half her life she spent in dock, and, though she had cost £732,000, she was eventually sold for £26,000.

Drowned Her Designer. The Captain was the biggest rascal of her time. She was launched in 1869, and from the first there was trouble. In September, 1870, she was at last sent to join the channel fleet. She carried 490 people, including her designer and the son of the First Lord of the Admiralty. On the night of September the 7th she was caught in a gale and turned turtle, drowning all but eighteen of those aboard her.

The Danton, the largest of French Dreadnoughts, had a most extraordinary run of ill-luck. After her launch and before her trials she was moored with steel hawsers. Much difficulty was experienced in getting the engines to start, and when at last they did work they started so suddenly that the hawsers snapped, and she ran hard aground. This was her second mishap, for at the launching she had gone aground, and it took a month to get her off. Later, when they were getting her big guns aboard, she went aground for a third time, but even then her troubles were not over. When travelling in her roadstead at Brest at fifteen knots her engines suddenly broke down, and she could not be stopped until her bow was within thirty feet of the rocks. £100,000 Worth of Damage in a few Seconds.

The two White Star giants, Olympic and Titanic, both afforded justification for sailor's dislike of big ships. J. September, 1911, the Olympic collided with the Cruiser Hawke, doing £100,000 worth of damage within a few seconds. In the following February she lost a seven and a half ton propeller blade. Next month she went aground at Belfast, and in July 1912, grounded in New York Harbor. Last September she lost another propeller blade.

As for the Titanic, her tragic loss on her maiden voyage is too recent to need recalling to memory. The loss of life was 1,490 souls, the greatest ever known in any similar disaster.

Last but not least, we come to the unhappy record of the great German transatlantic liner the Emperor. The Emperor is a ship of fifty thousand tons, and is the largest vessel at present afloat.

On her trial trip down the Elbe she went hard aground, and as she took the bank at the top of the tide it was at first feared that she would not be got off. But eventually tugs did move her, and she proceeded to Cuxhaven.

On the way there was a terrible explosion of benzine in her boiler room. Eight men were injured, five fatally. After this came the news that diesel had developed in her turbines. Finally, there is the fire.

Where Clocks are Curiosities.

Clocks are regarded as curiosities by many of the Hindus, and for this reason half-a-dozen or more time-pieces are often found in the apartments of the wealthy Hindustani. They are not used as time-pieces, but simply for ornament, since the old fashioned way of telling the hour in India, by calculating the number of bamboo lengths the sun has travelled above the horizon, is entirely satisfactory to the natives.

It is said that in the country police-stations in India, where the European division of the hours is observed, time is measured by placing in a tub of water a copper pot in which a small hole has been bored. It is supposed that it will take one hour for the water to leak into the pot so as to fill it and sink it. When the policeman sees that the pot has disappeared he strikes the hour on a bell-like gong. If he is smoking or dozing the copper pot may have disappeared several minutes before he discovers the fact, but the hour is when he strikes the gong.

Mexico.

By GEORGE FITCH.

Author of "At Good Old Slashes"

Mexico is a state of affairs varying from chronic to acute, which begins at the Rio Grande river and extends southward to the more orderly regions of Honduras and Nicaragua. There are 767,000 square miles in Mexico, but practically everything else is crooked. The country is as thickly settled as the United States was in 1890, but most of the inhabitants are Indians or half-breeds. For many centuries the whites have labored earnestly to kill the Indians off, but owing to the reluctance of immigration to pour in upon the country, the job has been too big and there are several millions left. The Yaqui Indians are as hard to assimilate benevolently as the Tamiami tribe is politically.

Mexico begins just south of where the climate becomes unbearably hot and continues southward to a point where thermometers have to be encased in water jackets. However, the country is built on the two story system, being lavishly equipped with plateaus, thus giving the inhabitants their choice of temperatures. Some of Mexico sticks upward as high as 19,500 feet, but most of it lately has gone down considerably below the region explored so thoroughly by the late Mr. Dante.

Mexico has 15,000,000 people, of whom several are still peaceable, owing to the great difficulty in importing arms. The form of government is circular, attaining a speed at times of 17 revolutions per month. For the names of the president and cabinet see the latest newspaper bulletins. The chief occupations of the rebels, chasing government troops, chasing constitutionalists, chasing American citizens and chasing innocent bystanders. The general health of the nation is poor at present, among the most fatal diseases being patriotism, rebellion and neutrality.

Mexico is rich in gold, silver, petroleum and tropical fruits and would have gotten along better for the last 400 years without this wealth. It has had more troubles than any other nation. It was discovered by Cortez in 1519, having nowhere to hide and was ruled by Spain for 300 years without anaesthetics or any other form of relief. Mexico then became a republic, after which it was licked by Texas, captured by the United States, stolen by Diaz. Three years ago it revolted and has since been unable to shake off the habit.

Mexico is highly civilized architecturally and mechanically, but is not now explored by tourists as much as is the interior of Africa.

Dear Sir,—Answering your inquiry as to my experience with the "Ford," you will remember that it was quite late in the season before I got it on the road and as I was away for six weeks in the Fall, my total mileage was not a large one, only 900 miles. Our main roads are very rough and hilly, our side roads more so, but I did not have to spend a cent on repairs to car apart from ordinary tire troubles. I found the car a great time saver enabling me to get through my work earlier and giving me hours of leisure impossible when I used the horse.

I remain,
Yours,

Guns in Reply to Laughter.

Strassburg, Germany, January 7.—The readiness of Colonel Von Reuter, of the 99th Infantry Regiment, to reply to the laughter of the citizens from his machine guns, was demonstrated in the testimony given to-day before the court-martial sitting to try him and Lieut. Schad, a junior officer of his regiment, on charges of illegal assumption of authority.

District Commissioner Mueller, of Zabern, swore that when Col. Von Reuter was requested to withdraw the military patrols from the streets of the town, as they were merely irritating the populace he curtly refused even to discuss the subject, replying: "I am in command now."

Intended to Prevent the Standby About.

The Colonel was then reminded that the civilians were merely standing about, to which he responded: "I intend to prevent this standing about at any cost. I do not intend to let the people laugh in this way. If it continues, I shall order the troops to shoot."

Colonel Von Reuter in Court admitted twice that he had had machine guns brought out from the barracks into the streets of Zabern in readiness for use against the citizens.
